CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY SEVENTH PARLIAMENT

15 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME IV, 1966

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY NINTH DAY OF MARCH, 1966, TO THE TWENTY SEVENTH DAY OF APRIL, 1966, INCLUSIVE.

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1966

23033—211½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 29, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO GIVE PRECEDENCE TO DEBATE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I should like once again, Mr. Speaker, to ask for unanimous consent to move for an order of the house that today order No. 66, under private members' notices of motion, should take precedence over both government orders and private members' orders until seven o'clock. I request unanimous consent for that motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent? The Chair could not hear the hon. member for York-Humber.

Mr. Cowan: I object to unanimous consent being granted.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REQUEST THAT FURTHER AID BE GIVEN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the announcement made over the week end by the President of the United States that further massive steps are going to be taken to provide economic aid to India because of the serious and constantly growing need of that country.

While there has been some increase in the amount of aid Canada has granted to India, has the government given consideration during the last few days to further assistance to meet a situation which, according to those who have been recently there, is serious? I discussed the matter with Mr. Stursberg, who has been in India for the last month or so, and he pointed out how serious the economic situation is, and how dangerous and potentially fearful is the situation brought about through the shortage of food.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I agree with the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that the situation in India, in the terms that he mentioned, is critical. We announced earlier this year a program to a total of $25 million. Last Friday or it may have been Thursday, I forget which, I announced a further assistance program to India in the amount of some $56 million. Therefore our total food assistance program in India, involving one million tons of wheat, will amount to a contribution of some $70 million for the current calendar year.

The High Commissioner for India told me within the last hour that this represents a very substantial form of assistance which his country gratefully acknowledges, and I think my right hon. friend will appreciate from the amounts I have mentioned that this does represent a very substantial contribution to this serious situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister mentioned that the assistance will consist, among other things, of one million tons of wheat. Will the freight on that wheat be paid by Canada? Because if it is not, the contribution will not be very helpful to India.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have noted this observation, and before giving a definite commitment perhaps I might look into the matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. Could I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the increased assistance to India announced last week was the result of any representations made by the government of the United States during the meetings which Canadian ministers had a short time ago with members of the United States cabinet?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, Canada's decision to make a further grant by way of assistance to India was announced in this house by the Prime Minister the day before the Canada-United States meeting. I may say that both Canada and the United States have been urging other potential donor countries to recognize the serious situation in India.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question. The minister did not answer my question. I am wondering if the minister would say whether the press reports are correct, indicating that the Canadian government only agreed to give increased aid to India as a result of pressure from the United States government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thought I had answered that question by indicating that before the meeting with the United States authorities, the Prime Minister of Canada had announced in this house Canada's intention to make available this further assistance. I may say categorically that it was not as a result of any pressure brought on Canada but was a recognition by Canada of its responsibilities to assist that commonwealth country.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs relative to food aid to India. As a long term solution will the government consider giving to India technical and financial assistance for population studies and control if the same is requested by the government of India?

Mr. Speaker: This seems to be a hypothetical question. It cannot be accepted.

Mr. Basford: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

TABLING OF AIDE MEMOIRE ON U.S. GUIDE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the text of our representations of January 14 to the United States government regarding the proposed S.E.C. regulations on securities traded over the counter in the United States, as they may affect Canadian companies.

Since then we have had further discussions with United States authorities on this matter. There was a thorough exchange of views on this question at the meeting of the joint Canada-United States ministerial committee earlier this month. On that occasion the United States secretaries assured us that the most careful consideration would be given to working out mutually satisfactory arrangements. In the meantime I understand that the United States authorities do not expect Canadian companies to register.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I should like to table the aide memoire, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table the document to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC—DEATHS ATTRIBUTED TO BEER DRINKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would he be in a position today to tell the house whether the federal government investigators have finally discovered what beer company or brewery is responsible for the deaths of hundreds of people in the cities of Quebec and Trois-Rivières?

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the investigation is still continuing into what is alleged to be the relationship between the consumption of beer and an obscure heart disorder. At present the investigation has been unable to establish a direct relationship between the consumption of the suspected beer and the cases of heart failure which have been established. Other factors not yet identified may be involved in these cases, and under these circumstances I should not be justified in directly associating these cases with the consumption of beer, and I should certainly not be justified in naming the firm responsible for the production of the suspected beer until further investigation is completed.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the minister. Will he inform the house as soon as he receives a report from his investigators who are now in Quebec?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a supplementary question? Could he tell us whether the inspectors of his department in Quebec city have ordered that the beer sold by that company be withdrawn from the market in order to prevent the tragedy from becoming more serious?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of any firm indication that there is this direct relationship it is an action that would not be taken by the food and drug directorate because there may be other factors not yet identified responsible for these cases.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—SUGGESTED INEFFECTIVENESS OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, arising out of certain reports that the Canadian contribution to the air lift into Zambia will be discontinued at the end of April because it is no longer required. The question I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs is this. If this has been an ineffective exercise, and if it is no longer required, why then do we keep it on until the end of April at a cost of $1½ million?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Because I do not think it has been as ineffective as my hon. friend suggests.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question in that connection. Is the minister now in a position to say whether the air lift is or is not effective? It is generally agreed that the possibility of bringing down the government of Rhodesia by economic sanctions has been postponed by at least six months.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be impossible to measure with precision the effectiveness of the sanctions. As the Prime Minister indicated the other day, their effectiveness has not been according to schedule. However, this does not mean that the sanctions program will not be effective. No one can speak with any certainty in matters of this sort, but it is sincerely to be hoped that the program supported by all the commonwealth countries, and by so many other countries, will be effective in bringing this illegal regime to an end.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that connection, was it not the view of the minister on behalf of the government of Canada that the sanctions would be so effective that by April 1 the government of Rhodesia would have been brought down. Was that view not expressed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely I have the right to ask whether the minister has changed his mind. I ask the right to ask certain questions.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked a question in a very specific form. He said, is it not the view of the minister that such and such is so, and whether that was his view some time ago. With respect, this is certainly not a proper question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked whether there had been a change in the viewpoint on the part of the government; and with great deference to you, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any reason why that question should not be allowed. Parliament was asked to give support to a plan on the basis of certain anticipations. It was on this ground that I asked my question.

Mr. Speaker: The question which the Leader of the Opposition now asks is different from the one he asked in the first instance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In answer to the right hon. gentleman I would say this. I do not think I said the sanctions program would become completely effective on April 1. My recollection is that I said it was hoped that by June the program would reach the kind of effectiveness which was anticipated, and that a sanctions committee had been established to examine and note the progress being made. I cannot believe the right hon. gentleman is correct in saying I said the program would definitely be effective on a particular date. If I did I was certainly in error.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Is the government planning any additional economic or perhaps military measures at the present time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government is not planning any military measures whatsoever. I clearly indicated our position with regard to the use of force during the course of our debate on this subject. And it would not be possible to plan any further economic measures, because our embargo is complete.

Mr. Olson: Has the Canadian government attempted to find out, or has it, in fact, ascertained how much oil is getting into Rhodesia from Mozambique, South Africa or any other sources?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister responded to a question of this kind the other day. He indicated that we were aware, as a result of information passed on to us, of the extent to which there were arrangements contrary to the economic sanctions which have been imposed.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the government planning any economic measures against Portugal or her possessions such as Mozambique and Angola, in view of the apparent lack of success of these economic sanctions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There are no such measures now under contemplation.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a further question with regard to the discontinuance of the air lift to Zambia. Was this decision taken on the recommendation of the commonwealth sanctions committee, and can the minister satisfy the house that the oil needs of Zambia will be met in some other way?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the decision to carry on the Zambian airlift was a Canadian decision. The decision was that it would be carried on until the end of April.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that in spite of the discontinuance of the airlift the oil needs of Zambia will be taken care of, or has some factor intervened which makes the airlift no longer necessary?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This whole question of course will be reviewed at the end of April. We will have to examine the situation.

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR CONSULTATIONS ON MANPOWER POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the eventual minister of manpower.

Is he acquainted with and does he accept the accusations made last night at Three Rivers by the Quebec Minister of Labour, to the effect that Ottawa does not acknowledge the special status of the Quebec labour force, that it proceeds unilaterally, and that before creating a federal department of manpower, a policy on federal-provincial consultations should be formulated?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe this question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Does the minister propose, before the Department of Manpower is set up to convene provincial Ministers of Labour to discuss the whole legislation pertaining to manpower?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the only new manpower policies adopted by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration were adopted after consultation with the provinces and during the federal-provincial conference held in January. There have been no others.

TELEVISION

QUEBEC—USE OF TELEPHONE COMPANY FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Has she received and, if so, does she propose to follow up immediately the offer made by Compagnie de téléphone du Nord du Québec Ltée to use its microwave network so as to provide television services to the people of Chibougamau-Chapais, from Rouyn or lake St. John?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss this matter later, at ten o'clock.

WINTER WORKS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Could he tell the house whether he has decided to extend the winter works program now in progress?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Could the minister tell us when he will be in a position to inform us about the government's policy in this matter?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, the government's policy in this regard is already known. If changes are made, they will be announced in due course.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to put a supplementary question to the minister.

Seeing that the government has, in the past, changed its attitude with respect to areas where the winter was severe, could the minister start even now to consider as was done in former years, extending the period allowed for winter works in those areas where the winter was particularly severe?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I believe that very same question was put to me last week; the answer is therefore the same.

The problem is constantly being reviewed. If a dangerous or unfair situation arises, we will attempt to remedy it and advise the house accordingly.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the petition which I presented to him, and the many letters and phone calls I am receiving, could the minister give the house any indication of when he can announce that there will be an inquiry into the Steven Truscott case?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, allow me to say I am deeply sensible of my duty in this matter, which is being diligently pursued, and I shall report as soon as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION—PROSECUTION OF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. I hope he will reply to this doctrinaire old firebrand who has not yet burned out. Has the minister anything to report to the house with regard to the examination of the documents seized from the Seafarers International Union by the R.C.M.P?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I have nothing further, Mr. Speaker, except to assure the member that it is being pursued vigorously.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO RE-ENLISTMENT BONUSES FOR PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister say whether the government is considering additional re-enlistment bonuses for pilots in the R.C.A.F.?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not re-enlistment bonuses, Mr. Speaker. The government has been giving consideration to the aircrew allowance, and I expect an announcement will be made in that regard shortly.

Mr. Chatterton: As a supplementary question, will this apply to all aircrew, if it is put into effect?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

DEMURRAGE COST OF SHIP WAITING TO BE LOADED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, particularly in view of the fact that this morning's paper advises us that the minister has his facts and figures at his finger tips. Could the minister tell the house what is the cost or charge for demurrage per day for a boat waiting in a Canadian port to be loaded with grain for export?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Noting that both Clay and Chuvalo are overweight and jumbo sized for their fight tonight, would the minister send them whatever pamphlets are available on physical fitness?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether, in preparation for his budget speech this evening, he has had an opportunity to read the latest book to be published by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon).

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure I would have benefited, as would all members of this house.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF APPLICATION PERIOD FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that a number of inshore fishermen are not aware of the program announced by the minister on December 3 and January 15, to provide assistance to those who experienced serious catch failures in 1965, would the minister ensure that the eligibility date for application for this assistance be extended to April 30?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, when the assistance program for fishermen was introduced in January it was not a matter of extending the time of payment but rather of setting a maximum amount of assistance to compensate fishermen who had failed to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. The assistance was set at $350 for married persons and $200 for persons without dependants, which is in line with the average amount received by fishermen as unemployment insurance benefit.

Mr. Keays: As a supplementary question, does the minister still insist that the final date for application be March 26?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, as the announcement was made early in January and was well advertised, it was hoped that all applications would be received before the end of March, and it would be very difficult at this time to extend the period.

[Translation]

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

POLICY RESPECTING COMMUTATION OF DEATH PENALTIES PENDING HOUSE VOTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put my question to the house leader, but in his absence—I am sorry I have not given notice of it—I might put it to the Prime Minister.

Since we are in a deadlock regarding the debate on capital punishment, would it be possible to work out a procedure so that the vote may be taken without delay? If it is not taken this year, will the commutation system be maintained by the government?

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Have you spoken?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have reached an impasse yet; at least I hope we have not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—WORKING CONDITIONS OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Having in mind the threatened work stoppage by air traffic controllers at Vancouver international airport, would the minister indicate whether he would give consideration to their request for an impartial inquiry into their working conditions, since these men have taken a strike poll which is 96 per cent in favour of strike action within the next few days?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the situation is as immediately alarming as the hon. gentleman's question would seem to suggest, but of course the minister will take into consideration any request of this nature.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GRAIN PRODUCTION GOALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. A week or ten days ago I asked the minister whether he would issue a statement regarding an outline of the goals for grain production in western Canada. Is the minister now prepared to do this?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question properly should go to the Minister of Finance, who is responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. However, I would point out that the farmers can be relied upon pretty well to make their own intelligent decisions in this regard. This I think is shown in the statement of planting intentions issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for March 16, which indicates that western farmers intend to seed 29.1 million acres of wheat in 1966 as compared to 27.7 million acres in 1965, together with an increase of 26 per cent in fertilizer used this year and a 6 per cent cut-back in summer fallow.

If weather conditions are suitable and these intentions are carried out I would expect that we should harvest a crop which would adequately meet our commercial as well as our aid requirements.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps the minister might have a reply of his own as well.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that during the election campaign the members of the government indicated they were going to provide such forecasts on which farmers would be able to base their estimates?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ROADS TO RESOURCES—RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, with reference to the statement he is reported to have made in Quebec city on Saturday. He is reported to have said that the federal government in the future will not opt into matters within the provincial jurisdiction. Will the Prime Minister say whether this means that the government does not intend to re-establish the roads to resources program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he could give some indication to the house as to how soon legislation will be brought forward to implement the Canada assistance plan.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is intended to introduce the legislation at the earliest possible moment when there is an indication of when it can be dealt with.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this matter is very important, would it not be advisable to put it on the order paper before Easter so we can study this legislation over the Easter recess?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will make every effort to provide an appropriate study period for this and other legislation, but I cannot give an assurance at the moment that it will be on the order paper before the Easter recess.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a supplementary request to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is there anything that we on this side of the house can do to assist him in bringing forward this legislation?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is yet in a position to answer my question of a few days as to whether the Canada assistance plan, pension legislation and medicare will be on the order paper before Easter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I said they would be on the order paper shortly.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister say whether it is the intention of the government to refer this legislation to a standing or special committee of the house.

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, but that possibility will be considered when the bill is before us.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—PRESERVATION OF INDIAN SHRINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. When I asked a question regarding the Mistaseni shrine and a meeting with the P.F.R.A., the minister said that he hoped to have an answer within a few days. I am wondering whether the few days which have passed have been sufficient to allow him to prepare an answer.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the question of the hon. member, I might point out that questions 172 and 576 on the order paper in this regard were answered on January 21 and February 10 respectively.

I might point out further—and I believe the right hon. Leader of the Opposition also is concerned in this matter—that there have been meetings between the P.F.R.A. officials and the concerned parties. One of the fears of the hon. member with regard to the time element in this matter is ill founded, in that this work can well be carried out next February, when at that time the water is lowered by the dam. So there is no imminent danger of flooding, precluding the work being done as the hon. member feared.

The P.F.R.A. officials and the local officials are working together to find some method whereby this very valuable and important shrine can be preserved at some reasonably economic cost. I think this is the problem.

SHIPBUILDING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SUBSIDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Now that the minister has had an opportunity to read Hansard for last Friday afternoon, when he was unavoidably absent, I wonder whether he is now in a position to announce a change in the shipbuilding subsidy program to include provincially owned ferry services.

[Mr. Chatterton.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Not at the moment, sir.

Mr. Basford: When does the minister expect to be in a position to answer?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hesitate to forecast, sir.

[Translation]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

POLYMER—SUGGESTED PICKETING OF OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Can the minister tell the house now when he will be in a position to picket the headquarters of the Polymer Corporation?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

McGILL UNIVERSITY RESEARCH PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask whether he has met recently with representatives of McGill University regarding the federal government contribution to the financing of the HARP project; and if he has, whether any decision has yet been made by the government on this matter.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, I have met with representatives of McGill University regarding the high altitude research project, at which meeting important supplemental information was obtained from the McGill University authorities. This is now being studied as a matter of urgency.

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

The Quebec Minister of Justice recently announced that he was considering setting up, alone if necessary, an investigation on organized crime. Has the minister considered joining the Quebec Minister of Justice to set up such an investigation during his holidays?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, Attorneys General were recently convened to discuss the matter of organized crime and, up to now, I personally see no reason why the invitation of the Quebec Minister of Justice should be accepted.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. I shall not refer in any way to his budget speech scheduled for tonight. It is about a question of mine which was made into an order for return in January 1965. I rose on a question of privilege concerning that order for return which sought to obtain all the names of those who received 1965 sets of Canadian coins when their requests, submitted before January 1965, were complied with within two days. Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting for those names for a year and a half. Can the minister assure me that he will inquire and tell me on approximately what date I can expect to get those names?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I shall be very happy to do so, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

STUDENT MEANS SURVEY—STATEMENT ON FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a question that was asked of me on March 17 by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Loney). The hon. member asked about the Canada student means survey. When the survey of student means now being conducted by the Canadian Union of Students has been completed, the federal government's direct and indirect contribution will have constituted more than half the total expenditures likely to be incurred by the C.U.S. The government has not been requested by this organization to make an additional contribution, and none is contemplated.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION INTO GASPÉ-MATAPEDIA SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister been successful in getting information as to the possibility of an inquiry into the passenger service on our go-go train in the Baie des Chaleurs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was discussing air service in the Gaspé rather than rail service.

Mr. Keays: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate that, but I think we should get back to natural things and get one train going.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COUNTING OF WARTIME SERVICE FOR PENSION PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence relating to a matter that was under discussion when the departmental estimates were before us a few weeks ago. Has a decision been made on the allowing of wartime service for pension purposes in the case of permanent force personnel?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether this decision will be made soon?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I think very soon, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has he had discussions in the past week with the Minister of Mines of the province of Quebec or with his officials on the gold mines of northwestern Quebec and what were the results of these discussions?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I have been away for four days and the minister of the provincial government to whom I phoned has not returned my call. Nevertheless, I shall try again this very afternoon.

[English]

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

REGINA, SASK.—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the hon. lady could indicate if a date has been finalized for the opening of a citizenship court in Regina.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. As my hon. friend realizes, I do not yet have formal responsibility for citizenship. I share this responsibility with my hon. friend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

YUKON ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDEMNITIES, TRAVELLING EXPENSES, ETC.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-147, to amend the Yukon Act.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That the house do now proceed to the order appearing under private members' notice of motion No. 66 on today's order paper, resuming debate on the private members' motion proposed by Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Gauthier.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I understand that this action is being taken under Standing Order No. 44, of course, and I can see no reason for detouring from Ottawa to the Yukon and then back in order to discuss a matter on the floor of this house. I believe Bill No. C-147 is worthy of consideration at this time and that we should proceed to the discussion of it.

An hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A motion has been made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith). While the hon. member may feel this way, if he opposes the motion he can vote against it. The motion is now before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, you have not indicated whether or not this motion was in order. I have no objection to a discussion on the death penalty, but I suggest we are now setting a dangerous precedent in this house. How is this motion in order?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If any hon. members feel there is some difficulty about the motion they can certainly bring it to the attention of the Chair, and I will be glad to take their views into consideration. The hon. member for Lapointe.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, once again, I have no objection to our discussing today and tomorrow that resolution about the abolition of the death penalty, but I find that we are creating a precedent by calling upon standing order 44 of the House of Commons which stipulates:

When a question is under debate, no motion is received unless to amend it; to postpone it to a day certain; for the previous question; for reading the orders of the day; for proceeding to another order—

It is under that standing order 44 that we are proceeding to another order and that we are asking to come back to that resolution dealing with the death penalty.

But, there is also standing order 18 which stipulates:

All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the Order Paper.

That is according to the respective priority assigned to them on the order paper.

If I refer to today's order paper, resolution No. 66 is at the bottom. In my copy of Hansard, there is a page missing; the pages are mixed. Mr. Speaker, I apologize but there are five pages missing in my copy of the order paper.

Today, resolution No. 66 is at the very bottom of the private members' notices of motions.

I am speaking here as a private member who, at any time, can have a motion under the private members' notices of motions. Today, I am not trying to avoid a dangerous precedent; it will be possible at any time, at five o'clock or at five to five, to act in such a way as to avoid discussing a notice of motion or a private member's public bill and disregard standing order 18 by having us study bills and notices of motions other than those which should be studied according to the said standing order.

Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Minister of Public Works is out of order, because if the minister wants to make us take up another item of the orders of the day, he must at that time refer us to the private member's notice of motion, and if all motions preceding the last, that is resolution No. 66, stand, we shall come to resolution No. 66. But we cannot just leap over the others because it would be contrary to Standing Order 18—

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now on a point of order.

Mr. Baldwin: I was about to ask if the hon. member was on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the hon. member is not debating the motion; it is not debatable. He is speaking to a point of order and suggesting that perhaps the motion could not be made at all.

Mr. Baldwin: This is the point I wanted cleared up, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, the minister sets aside standing order 18 which I read a moment ago and which says:

> All items standing on the orders of the day, except government orders, shall be taken up according to the precedence assigned to each on the order paper.

This means that, according to our standing orders, the intention was to protect the private members' business and avoid that the government or a minister could decide which of the private members' business will come first, second or last. The intention was to respect certain members' privileges, namely their right to discuss any of their public bills or notices of motion.

It is this privilege of members which is protected by Standing Order 18.

If the minister forgets it, or if you forget it, this would set a dangerous precedent, because one of the main privileges of the members would be affected and in the future, it would always be possible to deny under any circumstances, a member the right to present a motion or at least to have it considered, even if it stands at the top of the list, in order to discuss a motion moved by a minister, such as the one presented by the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Speaker, I say that if the minister finds a way for a discussion of capital punishment, well and good, but it must not be at the expense of the private member's privileges.

If you rule in favour of this motion, without any consideration for standing order 18, I say that the private members' privileges will be affected because, in the future, it will not be necessary to take into consideration their notices of motion or their public bills, and the discussion of the said bills and notices of motion could be set aside.

This is what must be avoided at all costs and the responsibility for the safeguard of private members privileges rests with the Speaker. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, aware of your sense of justice toward the private members, I should like to refer to this standing order and ask that you rule the motion moved by the Minister of Public Works out of order.

Obviously, if all members who have notices of motions on the order paper wish them to stand, we would then agree to discuss resolution No. 66, but not before such a request is made.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather novel procedure which the government has adopted under the circumstances. I share with many hon. members the desire to come to a conclusion on the question that was being discussed yesterday. However, I do not feel we should adopt something that is fundamentally wrong under our rules to extricate those directing this motion from the difficulty into which they got themselves by having a limited order which expired last night at ten o'clock and by not taking the precaution of putting a proper notice on Friday's Order Paper.

I agree entirely with what has been said by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) that we are put in perhaps a novel situation, but I support him totally in this instance because what is proposed by the government house leader is something that could work but which must also work in reverse. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, if this motion is deemed to be legal it makes utter nonsense of our Standing Orders and of our rules laying down the order of business. The rules could then be thrown into the wastebasket because all that would have to be done in the future would be for the Clerk of the house to call an order and then a member of the government could propose that we move to another item.

The item could be a private member's public bill, it could be a private member's notice of motion, it could be anything. Conversely, if that could be done it would be within the power of a member of the government to stand up during private members' hour and move that we return to an item of government business. This procedure would not be permissible under Standing Order 18 and would not be permissible under the traditions of this house. This procedure is not permissible under any number of the rules of this house, but I shall not go through the Standing Orders one by one.

Notwithstanding the circumstances of this case and the importance of the matter we had under discussion, I would say this procedure would create a terrible precedent if we were to accede to the illegality of such a motion as the one proposed by the government house leader and say it was in order. On those grounds I ask Your Honour to reject the motion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat amazed to find the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) arguing in effect that notwithstanding the legality of the motion Your Honour should rule it out of order. I am rather amazed at that position.

An hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. McIlraith: The motion is made under Standing Order 44 which reads as follows:

> When a question is under debate no motion is received unless to amend it;—

Then I leave out a few words and continue quoting:

> —for proceeding to another order;

Since this Standing Order was put in the rules it must surely have been intended for some purpose. Incidentally, this Standing Order received the attention of the house as late as June 11, 1965, and it has been used from time to time since. If it means anything, surely it means what it says, that when a question is under debate no motion is received unless—I leave out the other exceptions—for proceeding to another order.

• (3:30 p.m.)

It is quite true that Standing Orders 15 and 18 do set out the normal course of business. Standing Order 15 sets out the order in which the Order Paper is printed and Standing Order 18 sets out the right of the government to call government orders in any sequence it wishes. The resolution respecting capital punishment is not a government order and that is where the difficulty arises. When we request that government time be made available for private members' notices of motions—because that is what this is—we are prevented from using Standing Order 18.

There is a very good precedent which can be applied to the other order, namely, the case on January 13, 1881, when the then prime minister of Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald, used this same procedure. Different terminology was used in dealing with different parts of the Order Paper in that day, but he did precisely what we are doing here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Were the rules the same then? Was standing order 18 (1) one of the rules?

Mr. McIlraith: The point is the same and the rule has bearing on the point. Different terminology was used regarding the other rules setting up the Order Paper. In that case there was precisely the same point, and the motion of course carried.

Incidentally, it is interesting to note that Sir John A. Macdonald explained why he was using this procedure. The reason for taking this course was that it was of the very greatest importance that the matter be disposed of one way or the other without any delay. That is just an interesting sidelight.

Mr. Ricard: This all stems from one of your members.

Mr. McIlraith: The whole point is that Standing Order 44 must surely be taken to mean precisely what it says, particularly when we reinforce it with a precedent of such validity as this.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer you to two citations, one of which will support the contention of the house leader. The first is citation 88 (2) on page 82 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> All motions referring to the business of the house should be introduced by the leader of the house.

Second, may I refer to citation 189 to be found at page 160 of the same volume. This paragraph concerns the requirement of notice. It is interesting to note that the government house leader used the words "normal proceedings", and I think that is the key to the matter. We must be within the rules but we must have some flexibility.

It interests me, Mr. Speaker, that the country is wondering how this institution can adapt itself to the day by day proceedings which are before it. If we are to be frustrated by what I might refer to as wilful men with wilful opinions, then this institution can be validly criticized by the public who do not understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fairweather: I had better keep quiet, Mr. Speaker, and leave you with the rules which are clearly there to meet the situation which the house leader sees.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on this point. I believe weight should be given to the suggestion made by the house leader. Standing Order 44 is in the book and provides, in this circumstance, for a motion to proceed to another order. I recognize that any such motion should not run afoul of any other Standing Order, and I shall deal with that in just a moment.

First of all may I point out, as has the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather), that citation 189 of Beauchesne's fourth edition lists motions which can be made without notice. One of them is for proceeding to another order.

May I also draw attention to citation 195 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which deals at some length with superseding motions of various kinds. This paragraph is relevant and reads as follows:

> Dilatory motions are designed to dispose of the original question either for the time being or permanently. They are the following: "That consideration of the question be postponed to ..... (date)." "That the orders of the day be read." "That the house proceed to (name another order); or that the house proceed to the next business." "That the debate be now adjourned." "That this meeting be now adjourned." Adjourned motions are in this class because they may sometimes be used to stop a debate which will never be resumed.

I have read the whole paragraph, Mr. Speaker, but the relevant part indicates that there is provision for a motion to proceed to another order of business. The motion made by the government house leader is in those terms.

However, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has quite properly drawn our attention to Standing Order 18 (1) and he has been supported by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and perhaps by one or two others. I think one has to look carefully at Standing Order 18 (1). What Standing Order 18 (1) does is to provide the order of private members' business within private members' hour.

The hon. member for Lapointe is perfectly correct in drawing attention to this rule. If this were private members' hour, if we were now between six and seven o'clock, it certainly would not be in order to move and to decide by a majority vote that the first 65 items be passed by, whether or not their sponsors wanted them to be passed by, and that we take item No. 66. But we are not in private members' hour, Mr. Speaker; we are in government time.

I submit that if the government wishes through one of its own ministers to ask the house to supersede government business for a private member's motion, then that is quite a different story from seeking to sit one private member's motion against all the others within private members' time. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if this motion is accepted and passed it has effect only up until six o'clock. At six o'clock the question would then arise: What do we do in private members' hour? At that juncture I would support the point made by the hon. member for Lapointe, supported in turn by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

However, at this point it seems to me that we are in government time, and if the government wishes to make a proposal which does not infringe on private members' rights but in fact gives something which private members do not have then that is not in violation of Standing Order 18 (1). Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think consideration should be given to the legality of the motion moved by the house leader as being operative for the period from now until six o'clock.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I think this is a most unusual occurrence, Mr. Speaker, and has the danger of setting a very bad precedent. I suggest, sir, that the government is attempting to encroach upon the order of private members' business with no request on the part of private members. It is attempting to select from private members' orders a certain numbered motion which the government says must be discussed now. I think this encroachment should not be allowed.

If Your Honour declares that the motion is in order, then I suggest it would be subject to amendment. It would be proper for us to amend it by striking out "Order No. 66" and putting in "Order No. 1", which would put us back to supply and into the supplementary estimates with which we should be dealing today.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should like the government house leader to consider this point because it involves a concession of government time. Is he prepared to give government time for the discussion of private members' motions, including No. 66, up to the extent that it might be required by private members of the house? I doubt very much that he will find available government time for that purpose. Yet I am told that there are as many hon. members yet to speak on No. 66, the capital punishment debate, as have already spoken, which means that another three days would be taken up. I do not know whether it is advisable to try to squeeze them in now and attempt to reach a decision today. That means putting pressure on private members to refrain from making speeches which they were promised an opportunity to make, and it is taking unfair advantage of the house.

I conclude by saying that I think the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) deserves credit for drawing Standing Order 18 to the attention of the Chair and the house. I think it would take precedence over Standing Order 44. However, should Your Honour, on the contrary, incline to the view that the motion is in order I reserve the right to move an amendment such as I have suggested.

Mr. Lambert: I rise on a point of information, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister mention that the debate would continue until seven o'clock or until six o'clock?

An hon. Member: Seven.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I did not give any time. I shall read the motion again. I move:

> That the House do now proceed to the Order appearing under Private Members' Notices of Motion No. 66 on today's Order Paper, resuming debate on the Private Members' motion proposed by Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Gauthier.

Mr. Lambert: Until what time, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the house leader has authority under Standing Order 44 to make the motion he has made. I think you should take into consideration what is now being done under the provisions of Standing Order 44. I believe that the purpose is one for which it was never intended to be used. I say that, Mr. Speaker, with great sympathy for the problem the house leader has because of the procedural impasse we are in as a result of the manner in which the capital punishment resolution was brought before the house.

In so far as the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is concerned and his reference to citation 195 dealing with dilatory motions, I think he only took out of it that part which was useful in achieving the end he wants to achieve. The same paragraph says that dilatory motions are designed to dispose of the original question. If we are going to rely on that, then surely this procedure is designed to do away with the consideration of the bill to amend the Yukon Act. It would raise a problem in that regard.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat is accusing me of reading only part of a paragraph. Now he is reading only part of the sentence I quoted.

Mr. Olson: I am reading the rest of the paragraph which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not read.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I read the entire paragraph. The hon. member is now reading only part of a sentence taken out of that paragraph.

Mr. Olson: I am giving the proper weight to the words that precede the rest of the subclause where the words are in quotation marks. I think we should be very careful about this matter because if we set a precedent whereby the government can, at any time it feels it wants to, move a motion under Standing Order 44 to get away from ordinary government business and into private members' resolutions and bills and so on, we shall in fact be doing something that was never intended under Standing Order 44.

Standing Order 18 says very clearly in paragraph 2:

> Except as provided in Standing Order 56, government orders may be called in such sequence as the government may think fit.

I do not disagree with that. What we are now doing under the aegis of Standing Order 44 is to attempt to get around the hard and fast provisions of other Standing Orders, namely, Nos. 15 and 18. It is very clear in the Standing Orders that hon. members are entitled to notice of such a motion. This is for the protection of those members who want to be present when the matter covered by the motion is before the house.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that there can be unanimous consent to go on with the capital punishment debate and perhaps take the sense of the house on the question inasmuch as the debate has so far taken three days. I hope that may be done. However, Mr. Speaker, I am apprehensive about using Standing Order 44 to ride roughshod, if I may use such extreme words, over hard and fast provisions that protect hon. members against the government or anyone else. They protect hon. members from being faced with a subject matter of which they have had no notice.

I say that because I believe the government had some indication yesterday and even last Thursday that there was going to be a procedural problem in carrying on this debate with unanimous consent to its conclusion. What happened on Wednesday and Thursday of last week and on Monday of this week—I think no one denies this—was in fact done through an order of the house by unanimous consent. In doing that there was no superseding or circumventing of those Standing Orders that protect the rights of individual members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether any point can be served by going into the matter further. It seems to me that all possible arguments have been made for and against. I do not want to question the right of hon. members to contribute to the discussion on the point of order, but I can assure hon. members that I have heard enough. My mind is made up. Nothing that can now be said is going to change my mind.

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask a question of the house leader? It involves a matter that disturbs me and my inclination to support the motion depends on the answer. Has there been any suggestion that the motion is one which would place a limit on this debate, or is it intended to provide time so that all hon. members can have the opportunity to take part in the debate?

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I can answer that by saying that there is no intention on the part of the government to place a limit on the debate of the motion. There is every intention to find enough time so that the debate can proceed to a conclusion at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to say a word, Mr. Speaker, before you make your ruling. Having listened to the Prime Minister and having had assurance as to time, could it also be recognized that what we are doing here shall not constitute a precedent for the future? I think what the Prime Minister has said meets the situation generally. There is no endeavour on the part of the government, if that is what the answer means, to limit the discussion in the house. However, I think we should also have the further assurance I have requested. Having listened to the argument, I have my own idea about the matter and it would take quite a bit to convince me that I should accept a proposition such as the one before us as a precedent. However, in order to get on with the business and in view of the words just spoken by the Prime Minister, I suggest that the house agree that acceptance of this motion will not create a precedent.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, there has been a new development. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) asks that it be not a precedent—

Mr. Speaker: Order. A while ago I mentioned to the hon. member for Lapointe that, having heard the excellent arguments which he submitted to the Chair as well as those put forward by other hon. members, I am ready to give a ruling on the question raised by the hon. member for Lapointe.

[English]

I take into account, of course, the comment made by the Leader of the Opposition. What he is suggesting now is that once the point of order has been disposed of there may be a disposition on the part of the house to proceed by unanimous consent. This is something we can consider after the ruling is given.

We have before us a motion proposed by the Minister of Public Works under Standing Order 44. He proposes to us a superseding motion. The argument put forward by some hon. members is that if this Standing Order means anything it means that we can move from one area of business to another. My answer is that this type of motion is intended to enable the house to move from one order to another within the same type of order, from one order of private members' business to another order of private members' business or from one government order to another government order.

This Standing Order, as is the case with others, has to be read in the light of a number of Standing Orders dealing with the same subject. We have Standing Order 15 which sets out the daily order of business and Standing Order 18 which sets out the precedence of business. What we would be doing now by accepting this motion would to my mind be changing this precedence. We would in effect be acting in contravention of Standing Orders 15 and 18. It is a motion which attempts to suspend the normal course of business and in my view it is a substantive motion which requires notice.

I would call the attention of the house to Standing Order 32(1) referring to motions which are debatable. Standing Order 32(1)(m) refers to the management of the business of the house and the arrangement of its proceedings. Perhaps this motion might be classified as a disarrangement of the business of the house, if not an arrangement.

I would also refer hon. members to citation 10 of Beauchesne's fourth edition to the following effect:

> Standing Orders may be suspended for a particular case without prejudice to their continued validity, for the House possesses the inherent power to destroy the self-imposed barriers and fetters of its own regulations. It may even pass an order prescribing a course of procedure inconsistent with the Standing Orders. A motion for such temporary suspension requires notice under Standing Order 41—

For all these reasons I suggest to hon. members that there is no possible course open to the Chair but to refuse the motion as it has been presented by the Minister of Public Works.

To return to what I said at the outset, there may be a disposition on the part of the house to agree to a debate on this particular subject this afternoon. This, of course, would have to be by agreement, by unanimous consent of hon. members. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) rose but it was impossible for the Chair to know what he has in mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member refuses his consent.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the leader of the house a question? In view of what has happened, will the government consider placing the necessary notice on the Order Paper so that we can have time to debate this matter in the future without this kind of difficulty?

Mr. McIlraith: I will consider that suggestion carefully. It is becoming apparent that there would be lengthy debate on such a motion. We would have to consider the whole matter very thoroughly. Perhaps it would be better if I did not pursue this subject now because it is not before the house at the moment.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the hon. gentleman would call a meeting of the house leaders to see whether we can reach agreement.

Mr. McIlraith: The last one was 100 per cent unsuccessful, but I am always an optimist. I will consider another meeting this afternoon to see whether an agreement can be reached. It will be readily appreciated that all house leaders sometimes find difficulty in speaking for all the members of their parties.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise reluctantly to say at this point that after taking account of the mess the government has created with respect to this situation—we have wasted almost an hour and a half discussing it—I believe we should proceed with the business and pass the supplementary estimates and get the bills through before the afternoon runs out.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to call the attention of the house to the fact that there is before us now second reading of a bill moved by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. It was moved by Mr. Laing that Bill No. C-147, an act to amend the Yukon Act, be now read the second time.

Mr. McIlraith: In the light of what has transpired I am wondering whether the opposition house leader and the others leaders would agree that we adjourn the debate on the bill now before the house and proceed to consideration of the final supplementary estimates.

Mr. Starr: Would you repeat that, please?

Mr. McIlraith: I was suggesting that we should proceed immediately to consideration of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. Winch: Would the leader of the house check with the hon. member for York-Humber to see whether that is in order?

Mr. McIlraith: I am sorry if my remarks were not clear. I asked for unanimous consent to have the debate on the Yukon Act amendment adjourned in order that we might proceed to discuss final supplementary estimates.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent, agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1e. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $44,500.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to indulge in lengthy remarks on the final supplementary estimates at this stage. Coming from a constituency where the application of the Navigable Waters Protection Act is a matter of great concern, I have been quite interested in the problem raised by the hon. member for York-Humber with respect to certain developments on lake Ontario. The issues which he has raised are ones which go beyond the immediate area he has discussed and I feel we should have some clarification or statement from the government with respect to the act while this item is under consideration.

• (4:00 p.m.)

According to my recollection the hon. member for York-Humber raised this matter during earlier discussion of the estimates, but I do not recall any statement from the government dealing properly with the issues raised by him. He has stated that there has been a complete flaunting of the provisions of the act.

If the act is one which cannot be enforced, if it is something which can be defied at will by anyone who chooses to ignore it, then we should be so informed and told what steps are being taken either to repeal or amend it. The legislation falls within the jurisdiction of the federal government under the British North America Act. The federal government has the responsibility for controlling navigation on the navigable waters of Canada, both inland and coastal, and it must ensure proper control over structures that are erected in navigable waters so that they can be recorded and charted for the benefit of those navigating the waters.

I have no direct knowledge of the situation on lake Ontario but, so far as I am aware, up until now there seems to have been little objection on the part of my province of British Columbia to complying generally with the requirements of the act. But if the provisions of the act can be blindly ignored in one part of the country there will be a tendency to ignore them in other parts of the country, and thus it becomes an important national issue.

The only suggestion I have heard from B.C. that the act has been ignored has been in connection with the construction of a dam on the Peace river. Questions were asked whether an application was made under the act by the premier or government of B.C. Regardless of the status of any particular piece of property or any particular waterlot, I feel that the question raised by the hon. member for York-Humber is one which requires an answer so that all hon members may know what the situation is with respect to the act.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the practice in dealing with final supplementary estimates has been that not all of the ministers attend because usually there are only one or two items from each department involved and they are carried by the Minister of Finance or some other minister. I, of course, am not in a position to answer the specific questions raised by the hon. member for York-Humber, but what I can do is give him an assurance that I will draw to the attention of the Minister of Public Works everything he said in his learned presentation on Friday last and ask the minister to communicate directly with the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Under Public Works on page 15 there are two items for contributions toward the construction of schools in the Yukon Territory. Should not those items come under Northern Affairs, vote 45e on page 13, where there are three similar items for the construction of schools in the Yukon Territory?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I have an explanation for these particular items which may be satisfactory to the hon. member. Treasury Board Order No. 650428 dated February 3, 1966, authorized the payment of a grant toward the capital cost of territorial schools in the Yukon territory based on an amount equivalent to the percentage of pupils to be accommodated, who are children of departmental employees living in tax-exempt premises.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not questioning any thing except the possibility of a printing error or an error in the compilation of the supplementary estimates. I believe these two items on page 15 should not be under the Department of Public Works but under the Department of Northern Affairs as on page 13.

Mr. Benson: The explanation I was reading will cover this matter. Prior to the take-over of the North-west highway system by the Department of Public Works, capital contributions were made by Citizenship and Immigration, Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Department of National Defence. As a result of taking over the highway system the Department of Public Works became responsible for the commitment made by the Department of National Defence. Specifically the grants are to be made with respect to these particular schools, but it became a matter for the Department of Public Works following the take-over. These were commitments by the Department of National Defence with respect to the highway system and when the highway system was turned over to the Department of Public Works it assumed these responsibilities.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have listened on several occasions with a great deal of interest to the complaints of the hon. member for York-Humber regarding buildings on waterlots and I think there is a lot of merit in the case he has made. I believe he has told the committee an amazing tale.

In British Columbia the riparian owner or the person who has title to the land owns the land to the mean high water level or to the edge of vegetation. Then there can be waterlots from that point into a lake, which are used for mooring grounds, launching ramps and so on. In my experience I never remember the government of B.C. giving permission for the building of any structure on such lots without the prior approval of owners adjacent to it or without a properly drawn agreement. I can give an illustration.

• (4:10 p.m.)

On one occasion a lumber company in my constituency had applied for the right to erect certain piles or booming grounds and to do other work on such a lot. It became impatient waiting for a decision from Ottawa so it went ahead and erected the pilings, docks and things of that sort. Later they were ordered by Ottawa to take the pilings and booms down because they had no right to interfere with the riparian rights of the owners adjacent to the lake in question. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Public Works should allow this item to stand and obtain a legal opinion in respect of this matter. I can speak from my personal and quite lengthy experience with the development of foreshore property and water lots on rivers and lakes and on an international river in British Columbia. It seems to me that the minister should allow this item to stand so he can obtain a legal opinion before the item is carried by the house.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Benson: If I might interject, as I said, I heard the case put forward by the hon. member for York-Humber and I said I would see that the case was brought to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. However, I think we should remember we are not here considering the estimates of the department for the whole year but rather what we are considering at this particular time is permission for the government to complete the expenditures for the fiscal year 1965-66 which comes to an end tomorrow.

The money required in these supplementary estimates is to clear up these bills. There will be other supply motions and there will be a full consideration of the estimates for the whole of the coming year. I believe that the hon. member for York-Humber will have every opportunity to bring up this particular matter when the estimates are being considered by the house and, indeed, he could bring the matter up on a supply motion or on interim supply.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the circumstances, would the minister take action with regard to the holding up of this development at this point until the committee has an opportunity to examine the circumstances?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give such an undertaking because I really do not know what the circumstances are. I am not the Minister of Public Works and therefore do not know what the circumstances are in connection with the particular matter raised by the hon. member for York-Humber. All I know is what the hon. member for York-Humber has said. He certainly has every right to bring up this matter and pursue it to the fullest. All I am questioning is whether this is the point at which to do it when what we are trying to do is to get the final supplementary estimates through in order to pay our bills for the year.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened very carefully to the minister and I sympathize with him with relation to this matter.

When the hon. member started out he thought there really was no point in discussing this subject again as he had done so a number of times previously. This raises a matter which goes beyond this particular problem. I listened very carefully to the problem he raised. I think it was explained well enough and the departmental officials must have known about it for at least a year and perhaps longer because the hon. member brought up the matter on a number of occasions.

Personally I am of the opinion that the problem raised is one affecting an individual riding and therefore it is the hon. member's responsibility as a member to bring it up on behalf of his constituents. This is not something that should be put off; rather, a reasonable answer should be provided.

It may well be that the Navigable Waters Protection Act is out of date. I know it has not been applied in many cases where it should have been applied. I have read the act because I represent an area in which there is a large body of interprovincial water. Several other acts are involved including one going back to the time of Queen Victoria. I have read many of the sections and they are very specific in terms of building wharves, docks or obstructions of any type.

I had hoped the minister would say he would stand the item and ask the departmental officials to give some consideration to the argument made by the hon. member. I believe that it should not pass until a decision is made one way or another. I think we have an obligation and I feel I have an obligation to help the hon. member obtain some logical explanation in respect of the problem he has raised which concerns a large number of his constituents.

If we as individual members raise problems which affect our constituencies during the consideration of the estimates and cannot count on immediate attention by the departmental officials in respect of these problems, then I think it behooves other members to support any such member in seeking a decision. I do not wish to go into the ramifications of this particular member's problem. It is a very simple matter. He is raising a question in respect of building on waterlots, which obviously comes within the terms of the Navigable Waters Protection Act for which the Minister of Public Works is responsible. No decision has been made in this case. No permit was issued for the work, although the operation is taking place, nor was a permit refused on the ground that this type of work could not be done.

I do not know how the other members from Toronto feel about the matter but it seems to me that every member from the city of Toronto should be interested. I know Toronto to be a very homogeneous city where workers work in one section and live in another and the Toronto members represent a conglomeration of people. I would think there would be some joint responsibility for the waterfront of the city and that it would behoove all members from that city to take collective action in this matter which seems to affect not only Etobicoke but also Long Branch, Toronto Island Airport and many other areas on the waterfront.

I do not like to ask the Minister of National Revenue to make any commitment because I think he has made as much of a commitment as he can. He is not responsible for the department. However, I do know that the departmental officials are aware that in a very short time these accounts will appear in the public accounts but in the meantime they are going to be held up.

I would suggest it is in the interest of all members of the Department of Public works to clean up this matter. I suggest that this item is not going to pass today and so far as I am concerned it is not going to pass for some time. I am quite prepared to help the hon. member carry on a filibuster for a number of days if necessary to see that he gets an answer. This may be quite unreasonable, Mr. Chairman, but I have listened to the same argument a number of times and have heard no logical explanation why the Navigable Waters Protection Act has not been enforced and why an answer is not given.

Frankly I could not care much less whether we have changed the policy and are now going to allow the filling in of waterfront lots and thereby obtain new land. We are doing this in Montreal where we are building Expo on that type of site. As a matter of principle I am not objecting to the filling in of waterfront lots. But I do think the act is very specific in respect of the responsibility belonging to the Minister of Public Works, and to slough off the matter as has been done in a number of discussions is not in the interest of the operation of parliament and certainly is not giving a fair deal to the people of the riding concerned.

• (4:20 p.m.)

If estimates serve any purpose they serve the purpose of allowing the individual member to obtain a reasonable answer in regard to a problem he raises, particularly when the problem is directly related to his riding. For this reason I am of the opinion that an answer must be given before this item is passed. I think I speak for four of five members in my party who are also convinced that the Navigable Waters Protection Act is not being complied with in this case. The law is not being observed and people who are complaining about these things are not receiving adequate consideration. Until there is some indication why action has not been taken in this regard, this item will not be passed.

I suggest to the minister that he ask for the withdrawal of this item of the estimates of the Department of Public Works and that we go on with the other items. We intend to wait until a decision is reached with regard to this matter. If a decision is not made I am prepared to help to hold up also all the other estimates, and I do not think this would be in our interest.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I am endeavouring to obtain additional information on this question. I am not the Minister of Public Works and am not personally informed on this matter. Might I suggest to the committee that we stand this particular item? I have sent an inquiry concerning it to the Minister of Public Works. I would suggest that we proceed with other items and return to this one later.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I am quite prepared to stand this item after I have made some comments with regard to the illegal fill in lake Ontario. I regret that I was not able to complete my remarks on Friday afternoon. The facts that I gave the House of Commons last Friday are easily verifiable, and they are facts. I now come to the realm of plans and purposes in the Toronto area, which are unbelievable and unable to be grasped in a mental picture. If I ask a question of the Minister of the Minister of Public Works, who is not here now, he says, of course the Department of Public Works is seized of the facts. He immediately says, oh yes, he knows all about it and is giving the matter immediate consideration. But I wonder whether the federal government or the Minister of Public Works know what metropolitan Toronto is planning in this regard. They are planning to build a four-lane highway about 700 yards out in lake Ontario running from Scarborough clear over to Etobicoke Creek, a distance of about 20 miles. This is a plan that has been talked about in the Toronto papers and at public meetings for months and months and months.

I have in my hand a copy of the New Toronto Advertiser of recent date. It carries a heading that can be seen throughout the house. Right across the top is the heading "Waterfront Plan Rapped. Rats-Stench and Dead Fish". This paper is published in the riding of York West and circulates in York-Humber. It contains comments by various people along the Mimico shore with regard to the plans of metropolitan Toronto to build a highway out in lake Ontario a couple of hundred feet off the shore. The people are arguing: If they build a highway out in lake Ontario a couple of hundred feet in front of our landlots, we will have rats and the stench from dead fish caught in that channel. A meeting was held in New Toronto just a few weeks ago at which the people asked that the highway be built farther out in the lake.

In the name of heaven, does the Department of Public Works never consider what can or cannot be done under the Navigable Waters Protection Act? I took the matter up with a very highly placed official in metropolitan Toronto. I said to this engineering man—and I am prepared to call him a genius —"Have you ever had these plans for a highway out in the lake, off the shore from Etobicoke, Mimico, New Toronto and Long Branch, approved by the Department of Public Works?" He said, "Oh, we cannot submit the idea to the Department of Public Works until we have a plan to show them." They are spending tens of thousands of dollars on engineering details and plans to build a highway in Lake Ontario off the shore of metropolitan Toronto; yet nobody in the Department of Public Works is consulted and nobody in that department asks what the plans are.

The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys—I am very sorry he is not in his place—has made a number of speeches and I applaud him for so doing. He has said they are going to take every possible action against pollution. Oh yes, we are against pollution; we have to keep the water clear; we have to keep the water clean; we cannot stand for pollution. But does the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys know that in Toronto they are talking about building a great big dike enclosing 600 to 700 acres off the Scarborough shore in the east end and filling the area with garbage in order to save a long haul for Scarborough garbage disposal? They want to dump it behind a concrete dike out in lake Ontario off the shore of Scarborough. And that is not all; they want to do the same thing opposite Etobicoke and Long Branch.

You may think I am dreaming. I told you the mind of man could hardly conceive of the idea that these planners have in mind. What does the Department of Public Works know about it or, much less, do about it? I attended a meeting in the town of Mimico during the recess. This was in January before we were called back. I sat on the platform there with Mr. Bousfield. Mr. Bousfield is an engineer in the firm of Proctor, Redfern, Bousfield and Bacon, consulting engineers and town planners. I have in my hand the conceptual plan showing that they are going to build a four-lane highway, golf courses and public parks out in lake Ontario. What does the Navigable Waters Protection Act matter to these boys? They intend doing this in metropolitan Toronto, and somebody in the Department of Public Works is going to say that a golf course does not substantially interfere with navigation any more than two 18-storey apartment blocks interfere with navigation.

At that meeting Mr. Bousfield was asked a number of questions from the floor. I was a newspaper reporter for about eight years before I went into the business side of newspapers. When he was asked about building this highway and these islands out there, the golf course and all the other amenities of life with which they are trying to sell the idea to the lakefront property owners in my area, he said that the idea was based on a massive lake filling plan using all kinds of filling material. Mr. Bousfield said that "all kinds" included clean fill, refuse, hydro ash, and dredge material, from the bottom of the lake, I presume. In answer to a question, "How do you control pollution from the garbage fill", I wrote down that Mr. Bousfield said they would build dikes and—get this—would put sanitary fill there which would be covered nightly. He said there would be pumps behind the dikes to lift the liquids from the fill to keep them from leaking into lake Ontario and to pump the liquids from the fill up to the Mimico sewer system on the mainland.

This is what they are talking about. These are the plans they have drawn. And what does the Department of Public Works do about it? Not a thing. We have public meetings with 300 or 400 people in attendance in this area of Toronto where the people are protesting these plans. Meetings are held with the metropolitan Toronto planning committee. There are two advisory committees, the technical waterfront advisory committee and the lakefront advisory committee, I believe it is called.

I have here conceptual plan No. 2 dated in January. People are busy, nobody is stopping them working, but the Department of Public Works has no interest at all in this matter. I also have here conceptual plan No. 3. This one is for bigger golf courses, bigger highways, bigger playgrounds for children and bigger hotels. I also have here protests from the property owners in the town of Mimico who want to know whether anybody will stop the building of highways out in lake Ontario. Is there nothing that can be done to stop the filling in from the land side which will obstruct the properties of private land owners? These property owners are on a mile and a half of shore and they are protesting these plans.

What happens when people go to the public works department in Toronto? They are told, "We haven't a big enough staff to police the area or check it." In the name of heaven, haven't they men who can go down and see what I can see with my own eyes?

It is now half past four. Forty-eight hours ago I was walking over 70 acres of new fill in lake Ontario in my own riding of York-Humber, which was put into lake Ontario south of the shore without any permission from the Department of Public Works as required by the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I may say that I have been riding this horse for years and getting nowhere. The Minister of National Revenue, for whom I have nothing but the greatest affection and whom I hold in the highest regard, asks if I will be satisfied if he takes note of what I am saying and conveys it to the appropriate minister. Well, I have taken this matter up with all three ministers of public works since this party came into power. I have taken it up with other members of the cabinet. I have even gone to other ministers whom I would not like to mention now and told them about it. Still, nothing has been done.

I can say that no prior consent has been granted, and I quote Mr. G. Roy McWilliam, former parliamentary secretary to the former minister of public works, who on June 1, 1965, answered my question. I quote from page 1866 of Hansard:

Mr. Speaker, the question of the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) was raised during the oral question period last Thursday. He asked whether the minister could advise the house if any individual or company which has dumped thousands of tons of fill into Lake Ontario between the Humber River and Etobicoke Creek in the past few years received permission in advance as required by the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The short answer to this question is no, Mr. Speaker.

As recently as last July 19 I saw trucks dumping fill into lake Ontario off the shore of Etobicoke. I sent a wire to a certain cabinet minister in Ottawa and asked him if he would send me a wire informing me when permission had been granted to continue filling the lake because we had been told, under date of January 21, 1965, that one developer had to stop filling. I never got an answer to my telegram last July and I have not had an answer to that telegram to this day. I will admit that they stopped filling that afternoon.

I followed the trucks to ascertain where they were getting the fill. I thought that in this case they were getting the fill from the Toronto subway. I was interested to find a basement was being excavated for a Dominion store at the corner of Dufferin and King Streets. There was a line-up of trucks getting fill. They would go about two miles over to Etobicoke, dump the fill into lake Ontario without any permission from the Department of Public Works and return to the corner of Dufferin and King Streets. I followed these trucks in my own car so I know what I am talking about. I was interested in the fact that my wire stopped this procedure, but I have never received an answer to that wire.

What is going on up there is beyond belief. We have the case of Mr. McCallum, the solicitor for the firm that is trying to build the two twin towers, who says that the question of whether the fill is there or not is not of the greatest concern. The reeve of the village of Long Branch, Mr. Thomas Berry, wants this fill put in, and the reeve of this small village of 8,000 population says that the fill is in now and it will not be taken out. "Do not underestimate the power of the developers." This is the reeve of a small village in the province of Ontario advising the government how things are conducted in the village of Long Branch.

[Mr. Cowan.]

I should like to read you two different letters bearing on this matter. After considerable protest from the residents of Long Branch, Mimico, New Toronto, Etobicoke and on my own part, a letter was written by an engineer in the Toronto office of the federal Department of Public Works. I have sat across the desk from this man and talked to him on several occasions. Here is the letter under date of January 21, 1965:

The Director,
Millgate Investments,
2788 Bathurst Street,
Toronto, Ontario.

This department has on a number of occasions received complaints concerning filling operations carried out by you during the last two years at the above mentioned location. At the time these complaints were investigated and reported upon by our engineers, it was revealed that none of the complaints related to possible interference to navigation.

It has been brought to my attention recently that not only has this fill been placed without prior approval of the Department of Works, pursuant to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, but then in addition thereto the fill was left unprotected and consequently caused erosion under the wave action of the lake. I further understand that the eroded material has been deposited along the shore to such an extent that a storm sewer outfall adjacent to the fill is now 150 feet from the shore line, a true indication that the material is being deposited in navigable waters with a possible detrimental effect on navigation.

I was further informed that as of December 1, 1964, the fill extended 470 feet into Lake Ontario with an average width of 300 feet.

May I interject here to say that is about two and a half acres. This land has been valued at either $100,000 or $150,000 per acre and there are over 70 acres of filled land along the shore now. You can see that the people who are playing fast and loose with the Department of Public Works are playing a game worth millions of dollars. This fill extended 470 feet into Lake Ontario in December, 1964. I continue quoting from the letter:

Our engineers—

This is under date of January 21, 1965.

—recommend that adequate steps be taken immediately—

Remember that word "immediately" because I am going to show you how long immediately is.

—to remedy the existing situation to prevent erosion of the fill. It would be appreciated if you could inform us of the method you wish to take to prevent this erosion prior to carrying out this work.

As you are aware, Part I of the Navigable Waters Protection Act generally requires that approval by the Department of Public Works of any work that is to be built in navigable waters.

Furthermore, our engineers recommend that lights be installed at the outer ends of the filled area.

If they want to instal lights at the outer ends of the filled area, you know this is a menace to navigation.

Consequently, pursuant to Section 2(5) of the works in navigable waters regulations made by Order in Council P.C. 1956-1960 dated August 15, 1956, you are hereby required to provide and maintain lights at the outer ends of the filled area throughout the navigation season.

I like the next sentence.

On the assumption that you should immediately comply—

Can the government of this nation not state, you will comply? No, they write as follows:

On the assumption that you should immediately comply with the above instructions and requirements, you are requested pursuant to Section 5(2)(b) of the said act for the purpose of rendering the total existing fill lawful, to apply for approval of the said existing fill five years after its completion.

I cannot believe that any man in the employ of the Department of Public Works would write that sentence without having been told what to put in it. I want to read this five year clause. This earth has been dumped off Long Branch without the permission of the Department of Public Works. We just let it lie for five years and then apply for permission under the five year clause in the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Section 5, subsection 2, of the Navigable Waters Protection Act reads:

The minister may, subject to deposit and advertisement as in the case of a proposed work, approve of the plans and site of a work after construction thereof has commenced...

(b) if five years have elapsed since completion of construction of the work;

Now, notice the wording here:

The minister may, subject to deposit and advertisement as in the case of a proposed work, approve of the plans and site of a work after construction thereof has commenced...

(b) if five years have elapsed since completion of construction of the work;

The attention of the Department of Public Works was drawn to the fact that fill was being deposited. This thing had not been completed; they were working on it when these facts were drawn to the attention of the Department of Public Works. Then the devellopers are told, we will look on this as though it were completed five years ago and then we can give you approval under section 5 (2)(b) of the act. The letter says that for the purpose of rendering the total existing fill lawful they should apply for approval five years after its completion.

Let it lie in the lake; let the mud go up and down the shore under the wave action. Let the beaches that have been built up for generations be ruined. Then five years later we will say that it has been five years since you did that so we will give you permission. We could not give you permission now because you did not request permission in advance.

I continue quoting from the letter:

Should you fail to adhere to my instructions, consideration will be given for the complete removal of the fill, at your expense, pursuant to Section 5 of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Rest assured that it is not my desire to be forced to such radical measures as the forcible removal of the fill placed by you at your expense, and I should be pleased if you would co-operate with me by complying with the requirements outlined above at your earliest possible convenience.

District Engineer, H. & R.
Toronto, Ontario.

• (4:40 p.m.)

That was on January 21, 1965.

In March, 1965, at a public meeting in the village of Long Branch Mr. James McCallum, the solicitor for the firm of real estate developers, admitted that the letter of January 21 had never been brought to the attention of the directors of Millgate Investments until March 4. According to this copy of the New Toronto Advertiser which I hold in my hand, the letter was mislaid. The paper says:

Millgate director Sam Muller who attended the meeting said that he was unaware of the federal government's edict.

Reeve Tom Berry, Monday, read a letter written by Millgate counsel, J. F. McCallum, to Mr. Muller in which the lawyer assumed that the Ottawa warning had been passed on from Mr. Muller's "fellow directors" to Mr. Muller.

Mr. McCallum said it was his mistake that Mr. Muller was not informed about the Ottawa letter. The lawyer's letter was forwarded by Mr. Muller to the reeve, to explain why he was not aware of the Ottawa letter.

So the period from January 21 to March 4 elapsed. From January 21 to March 4 I can assure this house that fill kept on being dumped at the property. I saw that happening with my own eyes on numerous occasions. By March 4 the ground had been built level and was some 470 feet from the shoreline. That was why they wanted this fill put in right away. Then suddenly the letter dated January 21 is found on March 4.

I have here the New Toronto Advertiser for March 18, 1965, which says:

Lawyer McCallum advised Mr. Muller that Millgate will ask Ottawa for approval of the fill that was dumped and now sits on the lake.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Would the hon. member permit a question. Is he asserting by the suggestion he has made that Mr. McCallum deliberately withheld communication of that letter until that time?

Mr. Cowan: I am not responsible for the deductions any hon. members may make from facts which I put forward. I am reading from the New Toronto Advertiser, and this has never been denied.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I suggest that that is a slur against Mr. McCallum. My hon. friend should either make a specific charge or withdraw the slanderous insinuation he has just made. He should make that statement outside the house, not inside.

Mr. Cowan: My hon. friend is welcome to his own opinions. I should now like to read a letter, Mr. Chairman, dated June 28, 1965, sent by the Department of Public Works. The house was adjourned on June 30. This letter is with regard to fill going on the property of Millgate Park Investments. The Minister of Public Works writes regarding fill in lake Ontario to the secretary of the Long Branch Lakeshore Property Owners Association:

> I wish to acknowledge your letter of June 3, 1965, and also refer to your letter of June 7, 1965, addressed to the Prime Minister.
>
> I do realize what a vexing and frustrating problem you have in your area created by the dumping of fill into Lake Ontario, and the construction of high rise buildings which mar the skyline. I also realize that sympathy does not help to solve your problem.
>
> The construction of high rise buildings comes under the jurisdiction and is the responsibility of local government who issue the building permit and enforce local bylaws. The federal government has no authority in this particular field.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cowan: They never asked for that information; it was given to them gratuitously. The letter continues:

> The Department of Public Works, as administrator of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, can be concerned with Millgate Park Investments Limited proposed development only in so far as it relates to navigation. It is the opinion of the officials of this department that once Millgate Park Investments Limited construct a retaining wall to contain the fill and place navigation lights, the project will not substantially interfere with navigation.

You can see from the letter, Mr. Chairman, dated January 21 that an employee of the department is instructing them to take immediate steps to correct the situation and to report to him what they are doing or he will order removal of the fill at the expense of the people who put the fill in there. On June 28 the Minister of Public Works himself says:

> It is the opinion of the officials of this department that once Millgate Park Investments Limited construct a retaining wall to contain the fill and place navigation lights, the project will not substantially interefere with navigation.

Despite the fact that in answer to one of my questions one of the ministers said that this fill does not interfere with navigation, the minister turns around and under date of June 28 says they should put up lights. The letter continues:

> Millgate Park Investments Limited have requested a delay in submitting their plans for the retaining wall as the type of wall will depend on the kind of buildings to be constructed. This request has been granted.

I want you to note, Mr. Chairman, the word "immediately" in the letter under date of January 21, because in the letter under date of June 28 the minister himself writes:

> Millgate Park Investments Limited have requested a delay in submitting their plans for the retaining wall as the type of wall will depend on the kind of buildings to be constructed. This request has been granted.
>
> I understand that Millgate Park Investments Limited are negotiating at the present time with the local authorities as to the type of building to be constructed on their site.
>
> I wish to assure you that this department does not consider your problem to be a small one, and as requested you will be advised when a definite decision on the Millgate Park Investments Limited project is made by this department.

And now, Mr. Chairman, this problem of Millgate is further made interesting by the fact that the deed to the waterlot granted by the province of Ontario to a Mr. Thomas J. Wilkie in 1889 has in it a clause seldom found in a land grant from the Crown. This matter was discussed in detail with two of the highest officials in the Department of Lands and Forests of the province of Ontario, who were amazed to find a handwritten clause in the body of the deed. As I say, it is handwritten and says in the last paragraph:

> This grant is accepted by the grantee upon the condition and understanding that should any claim be made or preferred to the above premises or any part thereof by the government of Canada or its grantee, or otherwise as to the validity of this grant, the grantee hereof shall not be entitled to claim compensation from Her Majesty or the government of this Province by reason thereof.

The title to the land is in jeopardy, and it is so stated here on the title. But no effort has ever been made to prove title. It has been allowed to be transferred to Millgate Park Investments and they are filling in a waterlot which the ablest lawyers we have been able to engage—and they are able lawyers indeed —tell us cannot be filled in because waterlot privileges only exist for tying up of boats. In answer to my questions I was told that waterlots can be filled in, and that answer was given by the highest officials of the Department of Public Works.

I have in my hand a real estate development blueprint given me by the township of Etobicoke showing a waterlot granted in 1891 to Mr. C. Nurse, which takes in the mouth of the Humber river. Looking at this plan and realizing that waterlots used to be sold by the provincial Crown to men on the shore, it appears that the lots were purchased so boats could be tied up at night and at week ends. Mr. Nurse's waterlot is in the mouth of the Humber river and extends into lake Ontario. Depending on where the wind was, he could tie up his boats either in lake Ontario or in the Humber river, and he would not cause offence to anyone.

Now, according to the way the Department of Public Works administers the act, the man who gets legal title to Mr. Nurse's waterlot at the mouth of the Humber river can fill in the river if he wants. And nobody can stop him because the Department of Public Works say that you can fill in waterlots. That is why Millgate has been allowed to do this. That is why all these waterlots from the mouth of the Humber west toward New Toronto have been filled in.

If you can fill in waterlots, then the man who has the title to Mr. C. Nurse's waterlot granted in 1891 can fill in the mouth of the Humber river. I do not think the people of that part of Ontario will stand for that for one moment. Neither do I think the taxpayers of Canada will stand for having river mouths filled in by real estate developers, who build along the shores of lakes and look for places where they can build high rise apartments or hotels, knowing that the Department of Public Works will give them its blessing to build up this free land which, in the case of metropolitan Toronto, is worth as much as $150,000 an acre.

If a precedent of that sort is allowed to remain, then these lots will be extended from where I live along to the city of Hamilton and to the city of St. Catharines.

People say that the provinces do not sell waterlots any more, that their policy has changed. Policies change overnight. The province may not be selling waterlots today, but what is to stop the state of New York selling waterlots along the south shore out to the international border? Then the developers could put land fill in them. They would also be able to say that that does not interfere much with navigation. All a boat has to do is get in on the Canadian side of lake Ontario and get by the land fill projecting from the U.S. side.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It seems as if the province of Ontario can sell waterlots on the south shore of Norfolk county out to the international boundary. The waterlot owner could fill it in and if somebody complains that there is an interference with navigation, then they could be asked to go around to the American side to get around this land fill. The Department of Public Works rules that land fill, once the province has been persuaded to sell a waterlot, is all right. I submit that waterlots cannot be filled.

The hon. member for Timiskaming a moment ago used the word "filibuster". I regret that. I am not attempting anything like that. All I am asking is that the government direct a reference on this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada to determine what are the legal rights of the owners of waterlots in the Dominion of Canada. Can they fill them in and thereby cause an obstruction to navigation? The Navigable Waters Protection Act refers to navigation; it does not say substantial navigation, because navigation can be in a canoe. The act does not say that it applies to commercial navigation. As I say, a canoe can be included under the act. It does not say that it applies to the Queen Mary. In fact, it does not state the size of the ship. As much as anything else, under the act a canoe can be classified as navigation. It refers to anything that interferes in any way with navigation. I am again asking for about the tenth time for a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada as to what are the legal rights of owners of waterlots.

There are some who say, "Oh, yes. Surely the hon. member for York-Humber will ask the minister responsible to carry this inquiry to the cabinet; the cabinet will consider it, there will be a decision and then the minister will be in a position to answer him". By that time Millgate Investments will have completed its project. By that time it will be too late for the answer, "We have looked into this matter and we have decided it was not legal," to be effective.

I say, get the ruling now. I read a letter last Friday in which it was said that approval of the retaining wall is being held up during these discussions. I said then, why could the department not have written, "We are considering the request for a retaining wall?" I beg your pardon. The wording of the letter, as found on page 3218 of Hansard, is as follows:

Approval of this application is being delayed pending full investigation and report of complaints received against approval of the sea wall.

Millgate has submitted plans for a retaining wall consisting of eight by eight piles. What is interesting is that fill in the lake now is at the 470 foot mark. According to the letters of the Department of Public Works, the application to the Department of Public Works for the retaining wall shows in the plans that this will run out into the lake for 540 feet, not only containing the fill but also extending the area to 540 feet, with no restrictive action taken by the Department of Public Works.

When I brought this up first I was told to speak on the estimates. When I tried to speak on this question on the main estimates for the Department of Public Works for this year, I was jockeyed out of it while having supper. I do not want to make any comments, but I will not be jockeyed out the second time, I can tell you.

Then I was told, "Bring this matter up on the main estimates for 1966-67". I asked the Minister of Public Works when his 1966-67 estimates would be up and he informed me that the opposition chose the departments which would be referred to committees for study. I must say this: I am a dumb bunny from Toronto; I am not very smart; I am not a lawyer, but I know something. I know that it is not the opposition which chooses the estimates of the departments to be taken up in committee discussion. That is why I am speaking on the 1965-66 supplementary estimates and I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that I am looking for some satisfaction in this matter. I am looking for some satisfaction to find out who is persuading the federal government to turn two blind eyes on this matter. Land worth $150,000 an acre is being built in Lake Ontario, a public waterway which comes under the Navigable Waters Protection Act and even under the International Boundaries Treaty of 1909—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Cowan: I want action. I do not want more promises.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. Shall the item carry?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I believe we had an agreement with the minister to stand item 1 temporarily.

Mr. Benson: That was agreed, Mr. Chairman. It was agreed that we stand item 1 of the Department of Public Works so that the minister might comment on what the hon. member has said. I have been in touch with the minister to this end.

The Chairman: Order. Is it agreed that item 1e stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Item stands.

1967 World Exhibition—

57e. Toward federal government's share of the cost of construction of an ice control structure, $800,000.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this is an item seeking approval to spend $800,000 toward the federal government's share of the cost of construction of an ice control structure at Expo '67. Earlier, when the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were before the house, we were told it was estimated that the government of Canada or the public treasury of Canada would need to provide something in the neighbourhood of $60 million to balance the books of Expo '67 after it had wound up its affairs.

Here we have another $800,000 toward the cost of constructing an ice control structure which I assume arises out of the building of a superfluous island. I wonder whether the minister can tell me what is the total cost of the ice control structure, what is Canada's share, and whether the ice control structure was occasioned partly by the building of the additional island?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, in order to counteract the effect of the construction of the world fair site in the St. Lawrence River at Montreal it was necessary to construct an ice dam located upstream from the Champlain bridge in the Laprairie basin. The ice dam is required to protect efficiently the existing and proposed installations at the world fair site, to assist in the prevention of ice fields in the Verdun and Lachine areas, and to assist to maintain the proper water level in Montreal harbour.

The estimated cost is $16,308,000 of which expenditure $6,258,000 was previously approved in 1964-65. Provided in the main estimates of 1965-66 was $6,750,000. Montreal's share is $1,318,000. The balance required to complete the work is $1,182,000 and the amount which is still required to be voted is the $800,000 requested.

Mr. Howard: The figures came fast and furious and I am sure I have them incorrectly. Do I understand that the total cost of the structure is $16,308,000?

Mr. Benson: Correct.

Mr. Howard: And of this the city of Montreal contributes $1,318,000 and the government of Canada contributes the rest?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Howard: The taxpayer of Canada contributes the difference between $1,318,000 and $16,308,000? Is that correct?

Mr. Benson: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Howard: If this is correct, I must say that it is an extremely high price for Canada to have to pay merely for the statue of Mayor Drapeau of Montreal. If the engineers of Expo '67 in the first place had built on one of the islands already existing in the river instead of making this artificial one, perhaps we should not be searching for $15 million or $16 million to pay for the cost.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Public Works except for item 1e. The next item will be vote 15e of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian Affairs—

15e. Administration, operation and maintenance—to extend the purposes of citizenship and immigration vote 15 of the main estimates for 1965-66 to authorize special payments in respect of social assistance to persons other than Indians residing on Indian reserves and to authorize special payments in respect of the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children and to provide a further amount of, $1,000,000.

Mr. Baldwin: I have a brief observation to make about this item. Like subsequent items, it has to do with a program to make housing available to Indians.

Several months ago in my constituency there was a march by a number of Indians from the reserve in the Hay lakes area of Edmonton. The principal cause of their complaint was an acute shortage of any type of housing. I had been in the district a short time earlier. Winter was approaching and it was obvious that the Indians who had moved into this area to take advantage of school facilities would have to face a very difficult problem. Although I made some representations, nothing was done, and what happened was a natural consequence.

I cannot discuss this subject intelligently without making reference to the statement made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources the other day. I give the government full credit for the program which was announced at that time even though I believe it is not enough. I am not blaming this particular government, but I think this program has come 30 years too late. No doubt we shall have an opportunity in the standing committee to discuss this matter. I am afraid that the government and the officials of the department may well formulate a program without regard to some of the surrounding circumstances which are most important, especially in the far northern areas of our country.

In those areas difficulties connected with economic circumstances will have a lot to do with the selection of suitable housing sites. In earlier days, when housing was of a rude kind, it was all very well to establish settlements of a temporary nature. When economic conditions changed or education became an issue the Indians could move on. However, when the government establishes a community complete with plumbing and all the facilities we expect today in our part of the country, it sets up something much more permanent. At the present time in the north the patterns of social and economic advance are being established. One of the great difficulties encountered by Indian children is their inability to pursue a course of study in the later grades. They are unable to do their homework properly in the houses they occupy. This may seem a picayune matter, but one of the great problems facing the Indian people today is their lack of education which in turn prevents them from taking their place in society.

Before the officials of the Indian Affairs Branch proceed to establish these housing areas where communities are to be established it is important that they should obtain from those concerned, the Indian people who live in the areas, and from the provincial authorities complete information so that we do not create a situation where in four or five years many of these houses will be abandoned as the Indians move on to other places in search of economic advantage or schools for their children. The officials should proceed with the utmost caution so as to ensure that this plan will conform with the needs of the Indian people in the areas where the houses are to be built.

Mr. Barnett: Could the minister give us a little information about this item? As I read it, it is one of those legislative items inasmuch as its purpose, in addition to the provision of money for Indian education, is to extend the purposes of vote 15 of the main estimates in respect of certain payments of social assistance to persons other than Indians residing on Indian reserves, and also to make some provision for the education of non-Indian children in schools on the reserves. Is this part of reciprocal arrangements which are being worked out with the provinces in these fields of social assistance and education?

Mr. Benson: In brief, I can tell the hon. member this. A cabinet decision of January 5, 1966, authorized the Citizenship Branch to make annual grants to the Canadian Association for Adult Education and l'Institut Canadien d'Education des Adultes during the five year period from 1965-66 to 1970-71 in amounts equivalent to the lesser of $30,000 or one third of each agency's annual expenses exclusive of expenditures incurred for projects already subsidized by a federal agency. An amount of $10,000 had been included in the main estimates to provide for the annual grants to these organizations as in previous years. Total additional requirements amount to $40,000.

Mr. Barnett: I did not hear the beginning of the minister's remarks but I understand this item arises out of arrangements with the Canadian Association for Adult Education and the equivalent organization in Quebec. I have one other question and it concerns the $300,000 item for travel by Indian pupils. Why is this additional sum required? Is this an ancillary vote related to the other item for $700,000 which has to do with the education and maintenance of Indians? In other words, is it an additional travelling expense necessitated by placing an increasing number of Indian children in schools operated under the public school systems of the provinces or has it to do with additional travel by Indian pupils to and from their regular schools?

Mr. Benson: Perhaps I can read the explanation I have. The Auditor General in his report to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1965, questioned the authority of the branch to make education expenditures on behalf of non-Indians other than on a recoverable basis. Our legal adviser contends that the wording of vote 15, "grants, contributions and special payments, including those specified in the subvote titles in the estimates", authorizes us to make the expenditures. It is his opinion that while the payments in question are not specified in the subvote title in the estimates, the words "including those specified" indicate that the subvote titles are not exclusive and the "Mowat ruling" would be applicable in this instance and the payments would be properly made.

• (5:10 p.m.)

However, in order to obviate the necessity of further comments by the Auditor General it is proposed to change the vote wording and include the words "special payments in respect of the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children". The reason for including that is simply so that where there is someone else on a reserve, such as an Indian agent, his children may also go to school without a comment from the Auditor General. The amount of money which is required is $700,000 for the tuition and maintenance of Indians in non-federal schools and $300,000 for the travel of Indian children to and from schools.

Mr. Barnett: To and from non-federal schools?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Cowan: The minister read a very learned legal opinion on this Indian affairs matter and he got the opinion very quickly. Could the Department of Public Works not get a legal opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada that fast with regard to water lots?

Mr. Benson: It was not quite that fast. I have had this in my hand ever since the estimates were first submitted.

Item agreed to.

20e. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $500,000.

Mr. Barnett: Could the minister tell us whether this is in effect an advance appropriation under the program which the Minister of Northern Affairs announced recently with regard to the construction or acquisition of building, works and land? Is this in effect an initial payment in order to get that program under way?

Mr. Benson: I do not think this item is specifically attached to that program. There was an acceleration started last summer in the building of Indian residences and so on. One million dollars was provided in the previous estimates during the year for this purpose and this is the provision of an additional $500,000.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

5e. Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by Canada with the provinces, to assist in the development of roads leading to resources, $600,000.

Mr. Howard: This item deals with the so-called roads to resources program and because of the time element I want briefly to put in a plea once more for the Stewart-Cassiar road in British Columbia. During the time the Conservative government was in office it was originally agreed that this road would be financed on a 50-50 basis with the province of B.C. to the extent of a total of $15,000,000 over a period of five years, with a maximum of $1½ million contributed each year by each of the governments. Toward the end of the five year period, which I think was about 1963, the government of Canada admitted that it had made an error in calculation so far as the time element was concerned and agreed with the province of British Columbia to extend the time of the contract from five to ten years.

I submit that the government of Canada, because it entered into a commitment with the government of B.C. in 1958, should have admitted that it made another error, one with respect to the estimate of cost, and inasmuch as it agreed to revise the time factor within the contract from five to ten years it should also have agreed to extend the cost factor and continue its contributions on a 50-50 basis with the province until the completion of that all important north-south access highway. When the federal government decided not to make any further contribution once it had reached its maximum of $7½ million, construction of the highway stopped at the edge of a creek in the wilderness and the road was left not maintained and without any construction on it for a good two seasons. This was a shameful way to treat the hopes and aspirations of people in the north who looked forward so much toward the completion of the highway.

It is also true that the provincial government was at fault in the matter because it did not continue the construction program for those two seasons, but it has since embarked on the construction and completion of that highway on its own. However, it will take a longer period of time for the province to complete the highway by itself. I submit that the government of Canada has a moral obligation. It made a moral commitment in 1958. True, it was a government of a different political stripe from the one we have now but it made a moral commitment to the people of B.C. that it would assist in the financing of the construction of the Stewart-Cassiar road to its completion.

It made an error with respect to computing the time which was adjusted. It also made an error with respect to estimating the cost which was not adjusted. Once again I make an appeal on behalf of those people in B.C. who are vitally interested in the early completion of this road and on behalf of British Columbians generally that the government re-assess its position and reinstitute this roads to resources program so that we in B.C. can benefit to the extent promised in 1958.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, when the original estimates were before the committee I asked for a designation of the various projects going on in northern Ontario and the minister agreed to provide me with that. However, I have not received it yet. I suppose I could insist on the designation now, but if there are projects going on in northern Ontario I would appreciate it if a list were sent to my office.

Mr. Benson: I shall undertake to bring this to the minister's attention.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask the minister if we are also to approve the remaining items under Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

10e. Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by Canada with the provinces, of amounts equal to one-half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for campground and picnic area developments, $100,000.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: What is done by the federal government to check the work that is done by the provinces? I ask this question because on one occasion I became aware of an inventory agreement arranged with the government of B.C., and I may say I also know something about cruising timber. On that occasion I found out that the federal government had not made any check on the claim by the provincial government with respect to an inventory survey in a certain area. What is done to satisfy the federal government that this money is being expended properly as a result of the agreement?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I of course would have to take this up with the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to obtain a detailed answer. I would be glad to do so and before the money is paid I will undertake to obtain a memorandum from the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys concerning this item.

Item agreed to.

12e. Subventions under agreements entered into pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act in respect of electric power generated from eastern coal during the fiscal year 1965-66, $700,000.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, is this the total of the subventions we have paid under this item for the year?

Mr. Benson: No. The total amount required was $2,500,000 of which $1,800,000 had been provided in previous estimates. This is to provide for the balance.

Item agreed to.

45e. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1,400,001.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, there is an item of $18,600 here as a contribution to the Northwest Territories government toward the cost of construction of a water line to the Yellowknife jail. What is the total cost of constructing the water line and what is the federal government's contribution to it?

Mr. Benson: The total amount required from the federal government is $72,000 of which $53,400 had previously been provided. The sum of $18,600 is being provided in this particular item.

Mr. Howard: What is the total cost?

Mr. Benson: Again the reference I have is $72,000. I just do not have the information here. The lowest tender for the construction required a contribution of $72,000. An additional item of $18,600 is required to pay the territorial government for the balance of our contribution of $72,000. I do not have the total cost but I will be glad to supply the information to the hon. member.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Howard: It seems to me that a water line to the jail at Yellowknife costing a minimum of $72,000 must be quite a water line.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the supplementary estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. We will now consider the supplementary estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing—

17e. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the subvote titles listed in the details of the estimates, $42,439,500.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that everything happens at Skeena all at the same time. One thing happened in the last few days which I feel I must mention here under this item. It involves the proposal to build an addition to the grain elevator in the city of Prince Rupert. Initially the grain elevator was built in 1926 or thereabouts. At that time it was designed so that its structure could be duplicated on the other side, thus doubling the capacity of the elevator. For the last six years at least there has been a rather concerted campaign by interested organizations and groups in Prince Rupert and by myself to get the elevator extended, especially in view of the large grain shipments which are being made through western ports to China and we hope to other nations as well.

We were pleased when the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who presumably makes all announcements about things in British Columbia, announced that the government was going to proceed to construct the addition to the grain elevator, but we were not so pleased last Friday when a decision was made not to proceed with the construction because of what were claimed to be inordinately high tenders.

I would like to submit two points for consideration of the department. First, I think that the department itself or the Board of Grain Commissioners, whichever one did it, underestimated the potential cost of adding to the grain elevator. I believe that by underestimating they were able to look at the final bids which were submitted and say they were inordinately high and construction could not be proceeded with. If one looks casually at the estimated cost of the construction of the grain elevator, one will see that the estimated cost of the addition has been static for the last four or five years. Obviously no account has been taken of economic pressures and the increase in construction costs which has taken place.

The Minister of Agriculture answered a question of mine yesterday by saying that the government was going to wait until construction costs declined before building the extension to the grain elevator. This means in effect that the minister is not going to proceed at all with the construction of the elevator. Everyone, including the government itself, is predicting that costs will go higher and higher, is predicting an increase in the gross national product in the years ahead, and increase in the money supply in the years ahead and an increase in economic activity in the years ahead. All these things cannot take place without construction costs also being higher.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Agriculture is going to wait until construction costs decline before he proceeds with the addition to the grain elevator at Prince Rupert he is going to wait for a depression because that is the time when the costs might come down to a level which he might consider to be correct. We cannot afford to wait that length of time. I submit that we have waited long enough in Prince Rupert for a recommendation in respect of a new port and agreement from the government to the idea of the grain elevator being extended. It is very discouraging now to have the government say that they cannot carry out that proposal because of an underestimate in respect of the initial cost of the project on the part of the government and, second, its inability to see that when tenders were called they would result in higher bids than normally would be the case because of the expansion and the boom in the economy. I think this casts a very serious reflection upon the government.

The judgment of the Minister of Agriculture and the department, when they decided not to proceed with letting contracts for the construction of the grain elevator in Prince Rupert, is a slap in the face to the people of Prince Rupert. It means in so far as the government is concerned that it would rather, one way or the other, directly or indirectly, build up Canada's grain shipping facilities in the Vancouver area and continue to look on Prince Rupert as being sort of an orphan in respect of the shipment of grain in Canada.

I wish to put these ideas on the record now because of the decision made last Friday not to proceed with the construction of the grain elevator which I think was a grave error, and I urge the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider and look upon this matter with some favour.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, there are two items, $40,700,000 and $1,663,000 representing payments to the Agricultural Stabilization Board account and the Agricultural Products Board account. Could the minister tell the committee the total amount paid out during the year under these two items?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the $40,700,000 is the estimated amount required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the Agricultural Stabilization Board to March 31, 1966. To go through the individual items of payments would take a great deal of time. They involve payments on the purchase and sale of butter oil, for example.

Mr. Herridge: I would not ask the minister to do that now. I asked the question because I was not sure whether this was the total to cover the net loss.

Mr. Benson: Yes, it is.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the $40,700,000 to cover the operating loss of the Agricultural Stabilization Board, was that loss incurred in regard to deficiency payments on butter and cream or to what commodities does it apply?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I could show the hon. member the breakdown I have here. It involves a great many commodites including butter oil, butterfat, milk, wool, eggs and sugar beets, for example.

Mr. Rapp: The breakdown is available?

Mr. Benson: Yes, it is available and I would be pleased to show it to the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

Plant and plant products—

35e. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $20,900.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I notice there are only two grants enumerated here but I know other provinces, including the province of Ontario, have received grants in similar circumstances. The province of Quebec recently made available approximately $9 million in additional aid to the farmers of the Lake St. John area which had an excessive amount of rain in 1964 and 1965. Is the minister in a position to tell us whether that $9 million has been implemented under the 1964 program that is dealt with here or will it be included in the new estimates?

Mr. Benson: As I understand this particular item, the $550,000 is to finish up the payment with respect to the amount agreed to be paid to the province of Quebec. The federal government contributed on a 50-50 basis to payments made to farmers in drought areas. This is the balance to clear up those payments. A similar program was carried out in Ontario, as the hon. member will no doubt recall, and I think also in British Columbia.

Mr. Peters: I raised the question because in the Throne Speech in the legislature of the province of Quebec it was stated that an additional $9 million, I believe, would be made available for the Lake St. John farmers. I presume, and I am only guessing, that this payment will be made under the joint program under which the provincial government makes a contribution on a 50-50 basis with the federal government.

I raise this matter because the province of Ontario has been very lax in their agreements with regard to the farmers and the assistance they have provided to them. While it may not be the responsibility of the federal Minister of Agriculture to extend the program, I would point out that many farmers in northern Ontario have suffered several years of crop failure because of adverse weather conditions and are not receiving the degree of assistance that is apparently available elsewhere. I thought that perhaps the minister was aware from the figures which have been presented whether the additional $9 million being provided by the province of Quebec had already been applied or would be included in the forthcoming estimates.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I really am not familiar with the matter concerning this $9 million. I will bring the comments of the hon. member to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture who is very familiar with this program, and I will ask him to inform the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Peters.]

Health of Animals—

40e. Administration, operation and maintenance, $216,000.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether this $216,000 for the construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land is for the new veterinary college in Saskatchewan or is it for repairs or something of that sort?

Mr. Benson: This particular item of $216,000 represents the extra construction costs of the quarantine building at Grosse Ile, Quebec.

Mr. Rapp: Is it the intention of the government to go on with the construction of the new veterinary college which has been approved?

Mr. Benson: I would have to raise this matter with the Minister of Agriculture.

Item agreed to.

Farm Credit Corporation—

90e. Estimated amount required to provide for the operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, $1,160,000.

Mr. Herridge: I have just a brief question, Mr. Chairman. This item covers the estimated amount required to provide for the operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, and the amount is $1,160,000. We have always considered this to be a very sound operation. Could the minister explain why there was an operating loss shown for this corporation last year?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this supplementary estimate is to obtain a parliamentary appropriation to compensate the Farm Credit Corporation for its anticipated net operating loss for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, and thus enable the corporation to hold its reserve account of $1,644,527 as of March 31, 1965, as security against the risk of capital loss inherent in any credit corporation.

Item agreed to.

95e. Payment to the Farm Credit Corporation for carrying out the purposes of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, $75,000.

Mr. Rapp: I have a short question, Mr. Chairman. Is this $75,000 to cover the operating loss of the farm machinery syndicates under the Farm Credit Corporation or is it just an advance to establish farm machinery syndicates, which was approved last year under the previous minister of agriculture?

Mr. Benson: The Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act was proclaimed on December 11, 1964. At that time an advance of $50,000 was obtained by the Farm Credit Corporation under section 82 of the Financial Administration Act to provide current operating funds for the purpose of administering the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. Funds were appropriated to this end by parliament in the 1964-65 final supplementary estimates. A further advance of $75,000 was obtained in July, 1965. This advance was to be repaid at such times as parliament appropriates funds for such purposes. Here we are appropriating funds so they can repay the $75,000.

Mr. Rapp: It is not an operating loss?

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: No. I am told there are only estimated figures at this time with regard to the financial results for the entire year.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister have before him the figures for the amount that has been lent for farm machinery syndicates and the number of farmers involved?

Mr. Benson: I do not have the number of farmers involved but business for the 1966-67 fiscal year is forecast at $3 million.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Is the minister of the opinion that the farm machinery syndicates will continue to operate? According to reports last year and answers to questions I asked, it was not a success. Would the minister be able to tell us whether it will carry on in the coming year?

Mr. Benson: All I can say is that according to the notes I have been given by the Department of Agriculture it is forecast it will do $3 million worth of business in 1966-67 so presumably it is going to continue.

Mr. Alkenbrack: According to answers to questions I put on the Order Paper last autumn, about 75 per cent of these loans were going to the province of Alberta. Would the minister be able to clarify the reasons for that?

Mr. Benson: I really could not do that. I do not have an analysis of the operation, which is the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure that if the question is brought up when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are being considered either in the committee or in the house, which should be in the very near future, the minister will have the officials of the operation give a full explanation.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Could the minister forecast, now that the Minister of Agriculture comes from a different province than Alberta, that the loans might be more fairly distributed across the dominion than they were last year?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I could not really let that comment go without an answer. I sincerely believe that the fact the Minister of Agriculture was from Alberta would not in any way affect the granting of loans in Alberta, knowing the former minister as a person.

Mr. Kindt: In view of the fact that the question of loans in Alberta has been raised, it would be fine if the minister could obtain the amount of the loans made in Alberta. The minister has said this information is not available at the moment but I do not feel we should pass this item without an answer to that question.

Mr. Benson: As I mentioned previously, we are dealing here with the final supplementary estimates. We are not dealing with the main estimates for the year. I have undertaken to get the information. I do not have it here, I would have to get it from the Minister of Agriculture. The corporation is not going out of existence; it is going to continue. Hon. members will have every opportunity to question its operation fully, I am sure.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

11e. Reimbursement of Queen's Printer's advance account for the value of stores which have become obsolete or unserviceable, $44,477.

Mr. Irvine: I should like to ask the minister if he has information available on what stores of the Queen's Printer are covered by this particular item?

Mr. Benson: Yes, I have the details here. This is a reimbursement of the Queen's Printer's advance account for the value of stores which have become surplus, obsolete or unserviceable and were declared to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for disposal. The material is as follows: Equipment maintenance stores—this item consists of spare parts for letter press—surplus; miscellaneous maintenance supplies—surplus and obsolete; tools and component parts—surplus and obsolete; electrical supplies—obsolete; equipment parts—obsolete. This totals $24,941.98.

Printing materials—obsolete, $18,209.60; paper stock—obsolete due to damage, $167.15. Then there is residue dross metal from skimming melting pots. Metal which has impurities cannot be used in the composition process. It is skimmed from melting pots and salvaged, then declared surplus, priced at scrap value and sold as scrap metal. This amounts to $398.63.

Residue gold foil, $759.64; residue gold foil in inventory when the printing bureau ceased the gold foil bindery operation. It was declared surplus to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and sold by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to the Royal Canadian Mint. This makes a total of $44,477.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

1e. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, $474,100.

Mr. Herridge: I just have one question to ask. I have noticed that in recent years the government has been giving a free, all expense paid tour to the editors of the weekly newspapers in Canada. I think on one occasion they went to the United States and they are in Europe now. Can the minister inform the house which department pays for the expenses? Does it come under external affairs?

Mr. Benson: I am not familiar with the particular matter about which the hon. member is speaking. I do not believe it comes under external affairs. However, I will look into it and see if the government is paying for such tours and, if they are, which department is paying for them or which crown corporation if it is a crown corporation. I will supply my hon. friend with the information.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

15e. To provide that the amount appropriated by section 5(1) of the Area Development Incentives Act may be credited to the area development account from time to time as required; notwithstanding section 5(3) of the Act, to authorize payments out of the consolidated revenue fund up to the amounts credited to the account; and to authorize total commitments in respect of development grants under the act in the current and subsequent fiscal years not exceeding $100,000,000, $1.

[Mr. Benson.]

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: I have several hours of discussion I should like to undertake concerning the Department of Industry. I cannot think of any better place to undertake it than on this dollar item because I think that is about the value of the Department of Industry in the field about which I am concerned, namely, designated areas. As we are ending the fiscal year 1965-66 I feel I must raise this point owing to the many statements made in the recent election campaign by the Prime Minister, particularly in my area and in other points in northern Ontario, regarding the problem which has developed in terms of the area development incentive program.

We in northern Ontario were shocked, after the house had discussed for some time the criteria to be applied, to find that the criteria were being bastardized by the Prime Minister and the premiers of some provinces. I think members from British Columbia would be surprised to find that only one area has been designated in British Columbia and that is within the premier's own riding. This is also true in the province of Ontario where the riding of the Prime Minister has more designated areas than any other riding.

I suggest that this sort of designation takes no consideration of the terms of the criteria decided upon by the house. These designations were political manipulations by the premiers of the provinces in conjunction with the Prime Minister and were arrived at at the joint federal-provincial conference. I think it is a disgrace that such is the case, particularly in view of areas like mine which do not meet the criteria but are in a position to take immediate advantage of the opportunity offered if they were designated.

In my opinion this was a very worth-while program. It had the potential of helping many areas to help themselves in changing from primary industry to secondary industry as a result of the aid provided by the incentives. I think it is a shame that the result of the program has been far less promising than anticipated by all members of the house when the program was initially established.

The political implications of these designations are certainly not to be desired and in my opinion should not be extended. This program should be re-examined by the house. Particular consideration should be given to all of northern Ontario, though I speak only for the area I represent, and all districts in Ontario. It is not to our advantage to have a community situated in the Prime Minister's riding compete with other areas which have not been designated. Areas should be designated in a way which removes competition, in this case very unfair competition, so that full advantage can be taken of natural development in industrial areas.

One company in my area applied for designation under the old criteria and they were informed they would be considered as being adjacent to a designated area under the terms of the act. But that consideration has not been given. The community involved wished to apply to the Prime Minister personally and spend 15 to 20 minutes with him at a meeting he is going to hold in his own riding this coming week. The Prime Minister refused an invitation to communities who wished to be represented so they could discuss this problem, though they were invited to a social reception followed by a dance and party. As the reeve of my municipality indicated to me, he was very interested in meeting the Prime Minister to discuss this question but was not particularly interested in the social aspect of the occasion.

I do not intend to go into the matter now. To do so would be unfair to the minister who is really being abused by having to handle so many other departments in the absence of their ministers. It would also be unfair to my constituents, in fact to the people of northern Ontario in general. Regular meetings are being held by the northeastern development organizations, the northwestern organizations and the mayors and reeves of the municipalities in northern Ontario, all of whom have endorsed the idea of designating all of northern Ontario. All are aware that this is the only way to assist municipalities in northern Ontario.

We have received feelers from a number of companies interested in industrial development but we are awaiting the final decision of the government regarding the criteria and their implementation. Many areas in northern Ontario will never meet the unemployment criterion because in northern Ontario it only means transferring people to Toronto where employment is available and the problem is solved.

We are not really interested, Mr. Chairman, in relocating our population. We are interested in relocating industry and expanding secondary industry. This can only come about through a re-examination of the criteria and of those areas already designated, particularly those areas designated through a federal-provincial conference of the premiers and Prime Minister of this country.

This is only a $1 item and it is therefore statutory in effect. I presume that if I moved to remove this $1 item I might accomplish the removal of the whole program. If that were possible I would be prepared to so move because then we could start all over again and avoid many of the pitfalls we have experienced in the past. The minister of the department is very lax in his duty and has really not paid any attention to area development incentives. He has not given the leadership to the provinces he should have given, and in most areas of Canada the program has not got started. I hope there will be a change in this regard and that the act will be revitalized.

I am prepared if necessary, Mr. Chairman, to sponsor delegations from northern Ontario who wish to meet with officials of the department. However, I feel that the minister is aware of the wishes of the municipalities and the people of northern Ontario in regard to designation of their areas. He is also aware of the fact that so far in most areas designation has been totally unsuccessful. I know of only one case where it was highly successful, a case where in fact the area represented to the government that it did not want to be designated.

While I will not say anything more on this question I did not want the minister to think I would let this opportunity go by without saying something on the matter. I give him the assurance that I will pursue this question until a more favourable conclusion has been arrived at than has been the case in the past.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, just as a matter of interest may I point out one error in the remarks of the previous speaker concerning designated areas in British Columbia. In fact the areas designated in that province include at least three constituencies other than that of the premier. We would be very happy to see more such areas in British Columbia. If there were no such areas designated then this would be just one other federal program which stopped at the Rockies. In such an event I do not think the people of British Columbia would be very interested in bailing out northern Ontario a part of that wealthy Province, with no return at all to British Columbia.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I have only a word or two to say. Since I believe that the largest designated area west of the Great Lakes is in my constituency, the Crowsnest Pass area, I should like to know if the government will concentrate on the establishment of new industries there. There have been two or three which have gone into the Crowsnest Pass area purely as a result of my efforts during the last two or three years. The government in the last election claimed all the credit for the establishment of these industries and I had quite a job trying to tell the people how the industries actually got there. If the government in its efforts to get new industries into this area would leave politics out, the result would be a much better program.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order at this stage while we are still in committee. I had a couple of contributions to make in the course of the debate. Now I want to make a plea to the committee to proceed with the business before us, and I will explain why.

Today in the question period I participated in a series of questions. One of my contributions was an inquiry made of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in regard to the recipients of old age security. At that particular time the Prime Minister suggested to us that he would proceed with this measure if there was a little more activity in the business of the house. We know that some debate is redundant and while I agree in large part with what the hon. member for Timiskaming said about designated areas I suggest that the committee pass the balance of the supplementary estimates. I am sure that the government is interested in coming forth with legislation to increase old age security pensions. I would ask the co-operation of the committee at this stage to agree to pass the balance of the supplementary estimates so that we can get a little closer to that goal.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, about vote 15e.

To provide that the amount appropriated by section 5(1) of the Area Development Incentives Act may be credited to the area development account from time to time—

I wish to call the minister's attention to that vote. The region which I represent here, that of northwestern Quebec, urgently needs help, incentives to develop industry.

[Mr. Kindt.]

As a matter of fact, in Malartic and Val-d'Or, mines will have to close their doors eventually. Two or three have already done so in the last year and 1966 does not look much more promising for the gold mines in the region.

The time has come, I think, for the government and the department to offer an incentive to encourage secondary industries to settle in that region in order to protect our people and prevent them from moving to other regions or further north or east or anywhere else. We want to keep our people and our cities.

Cities like Malartic and Val-d'Or will have to face, in a few months, economic conditions that are absolutely intolerable.

I call the minister's attention to the fact that industries must be encouraged to settle in northwestern Quebec. That would stimulate not only our region's economy but the economy of the province of Quebec and the whole of Canada.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The estimates for the Department of Industry are now completed. We shall now take the Department of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Legal and Other Services—

1e. Administration, $35,500

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I do not object to what we are doing but I think it should be by understanding or arrangement and not by inadvertence. It is after six o'clock. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that we might finish the supplementary estimates, has merit, but should it not be understood that we will rise not later than seven o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Benson: If it is agreeable to the house I would request that we do this. The Minister of Public Works is here, as I have indicated. We can get through the other estimates and he may have something to say about item 1e of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Knowles: Is it clear, Mr. Chairman, that there is a house order that we suspend sitting between seven and eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed by hon. members that we do not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: But that we see it at seven o'clock?

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The estimates of the Department of Justice are concluded. Next we shall take legislation.

LEGISLATION

The Senate—

Vote 7e.—To deem, for the purpose of enabling the Governor in Council to grant an annuity under section 16 of an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, that Senator J. W. Comeau was, at the time of his death, a person who had been granted an annuity under section 15 of the said Act, $1.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very interesting item, Mr. Chairman. It reads:

—for the purpose of enabling the Governor in Council to grant an annuity under section 16 of an act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, that Senator J. W. Comeau was, at the time of his death, a person who had been granted an annuity under section 15 of the said act.

Could the minister explain that?

Mr. Benson: I shall be very pleased to explain it. Senator Comeau some two or three weeks before his death wrote a letter to the Clerk of the Senate saying that he was resigning. Unfortunately he was then informed that he could not resign by sending a letter to the Clerk of the Senate. The day before his death, when this information got back to him, he wrote a letter to the Governor General resigning as a senator. This could not be accepted by the time he died the next day. As his widow would have been deprived of the pension which is granted to retiring senators' wives, this item is to correct the very unfortunate situation which happened. The resignation was in the mail and had not been acted upon because he died the very day it arrived.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

House of Commons—

20e. General administration, $220,000.

Mr. Herridge: I have one comment. For certain aesthetic reasons, I am informed, the protective staff in the basement will not let anyone through the doors. What I really wish to say, Mr. Chairman, is that there is very little ventilation down there and it is a stuffy place. I understand that in the first instance six or seven years ago members of the protective staff were put there on a temporary basis. I ask the minister if he would not draw this to the attention of those concerned to see if the protective staff cannot be located in a more desirable place.

Mr. Benson: I should be very pleased to bring this to the attention of the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: When the minister deals with the matter just raised by the previous speaker, could he not inquire about a very small thing related to the messengers of the House of Commons who are located on the first floor also? The messengers do not even have a telephone to call home or outside the House of Commons and they cannot get telephone calls either. If someone falls sick at home, either their wives or a young child, it is impossible to reach the messenger concerned in the House of Commons. Could not the minister see to it that a telephone is installed in the messengers' office for their use?

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: It is amazing what one has to do to get estimates through the house. However, I will undertake to look into this situation.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We shall now proceed to the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Mining and Metallurgical Investigations and Research—

35e. Administration, operation and maintenance—to increase to $70,000 the grants in aid of mining and mineral processing research in Canadian universities, $1.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister explain this vote to me? I notice the amount is $1. There were grants in aid of mining and mineral processing research in the amount of $20,000 and there are funds available in the main estimates for 1965-66 to the extent of $19,999. These people engaged in research do not need just an extra dollar, do they?

Mr. Benson: As I understand it, this is merely a matter of changing the wording so that a grant can be made. There was approval by Treasury Board of a grant of $20,000 to Queen's University in aid of mining research. I am happy about that. This grant is to support the research side of Queen's participation in the tri-university project in mining engineering, a graduate program of teaching and research developed jointly by Queen's and Laval universities and the University of British Columbia to arrest the serious fall-off in availability to Canada of mining engineers and scientists.

The department had intended that the $20,000 grant to Queen's be charged to an item to be included in supplementary estimates E, 1965-66. It has now been found possible for the grant to be made from funds already available and for the relevant item in the supplementary estimates to be reduced to $1.

Mr. Howard: I see.

Mr. Fairweather: Would the minister do his best to see that the impossible word "fall-off" is not used again? It is gobbledegook.

Mr. McIlraith: Hear, hear.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the study of the supplementary estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. We shall now proceed to the estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Medical Services—

20e. Administration, operation and maintenance, $500,000.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to draw the minister's attention to a question having to do with the Canada Pension Plan. I have been told that Canadian employees of foreign embassies in Canada are not eligible for coverage under the Canada Pension Plan. One of these employees approached me to inquire why he and others like him could not enter the plan as self-employed persons paying the whole assessment. I am speaking of Canadians who are employed here in Canada in foreign embassies.

Mr. Benson: I believe this particular question was discussed during the committee hearings when the plan was considered, though I am not sure of this. However, my own department, the Department of National Revenue, which has to collect the funds for this pension plan, must act within the law as it stands. I doubt that we could deem somebody who is employed by someone else to be self-employed. I believe any change in the position of people working at the embassies would require a change in the statute rather than a ruling.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): The person who approached me was well aware that this would be the case. He asked me why a change could not be made so as to permit Canadians working for foreign embassies to enter the plan providing they paid the whole amount. Why could a change not be made in the statute to this effect?

Mr. Benson: I suppose any change to deem anyone to be anything could be made in the act as such. But the plan only came into effect on January 1 and in the initial period situations will doubless arise which will ultimately call for changes in the legislation. I would assure the hon. lady that the particular matter she has raised will be considered when amendments to the act are being prepared some time in the future.

Mr. Barnett: As the minister has said, this matter was considered when the plan was going through the house and the committee, but I am sure that not many members realized we were dealing with Canadian nationals employed at embassies—I did not—when we made provision that the act should not apply to these people. It was not our intention to make Canadians ineligible.

Mr. Benson: As I have said, I believe a change in the act would be necessary in order to include them now. However, I undertake to look into the matter and see whether there is anything that can be done by my department administratively under the law as it now stands.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister inform his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that the hon. member for Kootenay West wholeheartedly supports the request of the British Columbia Hospital Association for an increase in the federal grant from the present figure of $2,000 to an amount which would meet the increased cost of operation?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Barnett: I was looking into this matter just the other day in consequence of a letter I received from a hospital in my own area.

According to the investigation I carried out, the last statement on this subject was made by the Prime Minister who indicated that certain provinces were objecting to an increase in hospital construction grants. This was somewhat incomprehensible to me. He further indicated that this was a matter of discussion between the federal government and the provinces. Is there any later report which the minister can give the committee so that we may know where this question stands? The responsible minister in British Columbia told me he hoped we could look forward to an increase in this grant. Could the minister bring us up to date?

Mr. Benson: I am afraid I cannot do that. I would have to take this matter up with the Minister of National Health and Welfare within whose ambit it rests. I will undertake to do this and give the hon. member a reply as to the present situation.

Mr. Barnett: Since this is a matter of great interest to those concerned, would the hon. gentleman suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he make an early statement to the house on motions or in some other appropriate way?

Mr. Benson: I will be pleased to bring that suggestion to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Winkler: I want to say that I take serious and grave exception to the type of letter which is going out from supporters of the government with regard to the representations being made to members of the government for increases in old age security benefits. I have before me a copy of a letter from the hon. member for Peterborough who is blaming the opposition, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, for preventing the accomplishment of this object in legislative form. I take exception to this and ask that my protest be noted.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the supplementary estimates of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

• (6:20 p.m.)

PRIVY COUNCIL

15e. Expenses of the royal commissions listed in the details of the estimates, $150,000.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister give us some indication what is happening with respect to the royal commission investigating Post Office Department grievances?

Mr. Benson: This is the one with respect to conditions of employment and I believe the Postmaster General said in the house the other day that the report was expected by June 30.

Mr. Howard: Though the minister may not be able to answer this directly, I ask the question to indicate interest on our part and notice of our intention to proceed further with it. Many moons ago a royal commission on pilotage was appointed and we have been waiting with bated breath what presumably is going to be a voluminous and detailed report by that commission. Is that commission still in existence and when can we expect its report?

Mr. Benson: I know it is still in existence but I cannot indicate when it is expected to report. I can ask the Minister of Transport about it.

Mr. Howard: Then could this by-play between the minister and myself be taken as notice that I wish to follow this up with a question on Orders of the Day to the Minister of Transport?

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

1e. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $44,500.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, last Friday when these estimates were being discussed some questions were raised about the problem created by the practice of fill being put in waterlots along a long stretch of the shore of lake Ontario. The same matter was raised again today. I think I should explain where the responsibility of this parliament lies and how the situation is somewhat complicated by a division of jurisdiction.

The provinces own the land under the water, in other words, these waterlots, and it can be transferred by them to private owners, as is the case in the situation presently under discussion. When private owners acquire the waterlots the federal government cannot interfere with that in any way. Then the municipal affairs department of the province and the governments of the municipalities have jurisdiction in the ordinary way over building permits and that sort of thing. The federal authority has jurisdiction over the subject of navigation, and it is only in that connection that it is able to have any legislative responsibility and can take legislative action as set out in the Navigable Waters

Protection Act. The difficulty in this particular case—and I am very quick to admit it is a real difficulty—is that of a person owning the lot getting a building permit from the municipality in the usual way.

For the purposes of this discussion I think I shall limit my remarks to the particular waterlots mentioned, but I do not want to suggest that there are not other aspects of the problem with respect to other waters in other parts of the country. The difficulty in this particular case arose when the people concerned put the fill in the lake. The legislation provides for the Department of Public Works to grant a works permit when they put a superstructure on it. But that jurisdictional right only arises if there is interference with navigation and, in the ordinary sense, if this were carefully done there would not be interference with navigation because of the width of lake Ontario. You can argue a great deal about the matter of judgment with regard to whether of not the fill interferes with navigation and how much fill has to be put in before it interferes with navigation. That is the primary problem in this connection.

Again going from the general to the particular, as I think the hon. member who raised the matter intended to use it, for the purpose of demonstrating how the difficulty arose, in this particular case the people involved did not get approval to implement the proposed works. Indeed, there was a question whether putting the fill in was a work within the meaning of the act. There is a difficult problem there, but in any event they put in the large amount of fill to which reference has been made.

They did not take the usual steps to put in protection to contain the fill, protection that is normal or proper in such cases if a permit were granted. There was an erosion of the fill and undoubtedly other debris also came into the water. This created a hazard to navigation. Whatever the argument may be with regard to whether the federal authority had jurisdiction from then on because that was a clear hazard to navigation, something which could be well established.

Following that they filed their application for approval of the works project, together with the usual plans, and an examination has been made of them. These include the appropriate design steps for the containing or retaining wall and, in the view of the engineers and the other authorities concerned, that work will be satisfactory if carried out to its full completion in accordance with the plans filed. If that is done we propose to issue the permit indicated in the previous speeches in the ordinary way.

I admit at once that there is a very unsatisfactory situation arising out of the divided jurisdiction that exists between the federal, provincial and local authorities. Recognizing that, we have taken steps to start discussions with the Ontario provincial authorities in order to get an improved method of control, so that the action of one authority will be consistent with the actions of the other authorities. As it is now it is certainly confusing to the rest of the public, and it is unsatisfactory to have one authority granting one permit without reference to another authority, and so on.

• (6:30 p.m.)

That matter is under discussion at the present time between the federal and provincial authorities in an effort to establish a better procedure. Possibly in the light of the discussion and study further action can be taken to include the whole state of the law on this subject. I hope my remarks have answered at least some of the points raised in the earlier discussion. I have tried to make this relatively brief but also have tried to deal with the points raised.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, an analogous situation existed within the government service in the Department of Fisheries that may give some comfort and guidance to the Minister of Public Works in making a determination about this question of divided jurisdiction. As I recall it, when we raised the matter of local companies on the west coast dredging the gravel out of salmon spawning streams and using that gravel for road building purposes we pointed out that this was injurious to the salmon spawning grounds because it destroyed them and created havoc with the spawning beds.

We thought that the Department of Fisheries should be able to step in and prohibit logging companies, construction companies or anybody else digging up the river beds in salmon spawning streams and thus destroying the spawning beds. The representation made to us in response thereto was that there was a divided jurisdiction involved and that while it was correct that the federal government through the Department of Fisheries had jurisdiction over fisheries matters, the provincial government, by the constitution, had jurisdiction over the matter of land and the land at the bottom of the river in fact belonged to the province and therefore the federal Department of Fisheries could not issue any prohibition against the use of that area.

As I understand it, this matter was resolved by the legal officials—whether in the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Justice or where, I do not know—and it was determined that the federal government did have jurisdiction and that it could exercise its authority to protect and conserve fisheries and therefore had the jurisdiction to issue these prohibitions. I understand that is the situation which exists at the moment. While I may have oversimplified it, this is the understanding I have concerning the situation. If it is a correct understanding, then I think that the minister may find some guidance there in dealing with this matter in a way different from that which he has so far outlined.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I simply hope the Minister of Public Works likes the explanation he has given because certainly I do not. We are told that this is a very difficult question. I thought I had dealt with this matter last Friday but here we have it again on Tuesday and are told it is a difficult question.

Why is it that all the public bodies which are going to erect some project make application in advance and file plans with the department and the department considers them seriously and then may or may not grant permission to erect such structures as the ones I outlined such as the spits of rock being placed east of Toronto Island by the Toronto Harbour Commissioners in order to enlarge Toronto harbour; or why did the Ontario Hydro file detailed plans and ask for approval before erecting their coal unloading dock at Lakeview on the west side of Etobicoke Creek? This dock is a help to navigation. They should not have had to ask for a permit from the Department of Public Works because the dock would aid ships. But they were erecting something in a navigable stream and the lawyers of Ontario Hydro knew they had to file plans in advance and get prior approval before construction. Then I gave the case of the municipality of metropolitan Toronto with two million people. They filed plans in advance about a little bridge with hon. Mr. Deschatelets and the matter was given several months consideration before the plan finally was approved. Then metropolitan Toronto went ahead and built the bridge. But not the private developers. They back their trucks up to the lake, pull their pins, dump their loads and away they go. Nobody asks for prior consent there.

Is Ontario Hydro dumb; is the metropolitan Toronto council dumb? They know the law and they follow the letter of the law. Yet in the case of the private developers this is not so. I would appreciate it very much if the Minister of Public Works would name a couple of cases where a municipality has granted a building permit to build in a navigable stream before clearance was given by the Department of Public Works. I would like to have a couple of cases rather than simply the answer that municipalities have allowed firms to build in a navigable stream. It is not as simple as that. If this Millgate fill is not an interference with navigation, why are they instructed by the Department of Public Works to put navigation lights at the end of the spit of land during the navigation season? Nobody asks me to put navigation lights on my half mile of shorelines on Georgian Bay; but when Millgate runs a spit of land out 470 feet in length, which according to the Department of Public Works is not an obstruction to navigation, they are told to put navigation lights on it during the navigation season.

The application filed with the Department of Public Works states that they want to run the retaining wall out another 70 feet, 540 feet in all. According to the letter of the Department of Public Works of January 21, 1965 it is only filled for 470 feet. This application, the first which was put in, to have a retaining wall around the fill will carry it out 540 feet into the water. If they are putting navigation lights on a 470 foot spit of land and say it is not an obstruction to navigation, what will it be when it is 70 feet farther out? I say the inference is that it is a hazard to navigation. The minister says it is a hazard without a retaining wall but when they put a retaining wall around it it will not be a hazard. Some people will believe that stuff; it does not ring true to me, but I could be wrong.

I have asked the cabinet to refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada to have it clarified whether a patented waterlot can be filled by a private owner without the prior consent of the Department of Public Works which looks after the Navigable Waters Protection Act. In addition, I asked them to turn these lands off Mimico and Long Branch into national parks, which would be better for all the people in the city of Toronto and for hundreds of miles around.

I hate to use the word "ask"—it is not strong enough—but I would ask the department to withhold action on this matter concerning the proposed retaining wall until they have a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada, and I also ask that they make the land there now into a national park. I do not know who is speaking to the government on this matter but certainly it is quite apparent they have a lot more influence with the government than I have. I am only the elected representative for York-Humber.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he indicate what firms are making these representations?

Mr. Cowan: I can only say that I heard the name of a lawyer, Mr. James F. McCallum. I never met the gentleman. His name is mentioned in the New Toronto Advertiser week after week and his name is mentioned in the village of Long Branch and at the Mimico ratepayers' meetings. I only know that his name is James F. McCallum.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question. Is Mr. McCallum alone in this firm or has he some associates whom we might know?

Mr. Cowan: I know nothing about Mr. McCallum. I have never been in his office. I have never met the man. I am not a lawyer and do not circulate in legal circles in Toronto.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not have any desire nor do I feel I have the knowledge or competence to make any assessment of whether certain works or fills or what-not should be put along the shores of lake Ontario. But what concerned me very much as I listened to the presentation of the hon. member for York-Humber was the whole question of what I might call the violableness of the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

I tried to follow closely the statement made by the Minister of Public Works. He made particular reference to a certain type of waterlot and the sequence of events that involved provincial and municipal authorities in the granting of construction permits and so on. But what disturbs me is not only what the hon. member for York-Humber said but also the fact that from what the minister said obviously certain works were constructed out into lake Ontario, which as I understand it is certainly classified as a navigable water, without the Minister of Public Works of Canada, who is responsible for matters pertaining to the Navigable Waters Protection Act, having made a determination whether navigation interests were involved before the works were constructed.

If people can do that kind of thing and not be subject to some penalty, I submit there is something seriously wrong with the Navigable Waters Protection Act. The minister talked about negotiations and discussions with the province, which are probably useful, but one of the questions raised is: Who has been challenging the authority of the federal government in their control over navigation? I can think of a place in my constituency where fill was placed in navigable waters along the eastern coast of Vancouver Island. There is now a big shopping centre, hotel and many other buildings in this area which at one time was part of Discovery Passage. I remember that the person who was intitially promoting this venture came to Ottawa to see me and asked if I would arrange an appointment with the Minister of Public Works and the officials who administer the act in order to discuss this question. This was done long before any shovel or dredge was involved in actual work. This man also had to obtain approval from the provincial authorities for a waterlot and all the rest of it.

By his answer the minister has left open this important question: Can people flaunt with impunity the Navigable Waters Protection Act? I think this question goes beyond the immediate determination of the particular structures which have been outlined to the committee by the hon. member for York-Humber. I understood the minister to say that if these protective works are constructed according to plans he intends to approve them. I am not prepared to say whether he should approve them, but it seems to me it is a very poor state of affairs if developers or anyone else involved can in effect thumb their nose at the constitution, the federal government and the Minister of Public Works, build structures out into lake Ontario or anywhere else in this country where navigable waters are involved and ask for nothing more than the blessing of the Minister of Public Works after the event. It seems to me this question has not yet been answered and I believe we should have from the Minister of Public Works some indication of what he intends to do about this situation, which for all I know may have developed before he assumed his present office.

Mr. McIlraith: That is the fact, Mr. Chairman, but I do not plead it as any defence at all in the matter because I must assume responsibility for it. The situation is a little different. It becomes a question of fact whether they are doing anything that is in breach of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I sought to indicate to the committee that in the particular case to which I referred, and I did not mention the name of the case, it became quite clear that they were in breach of the act in that they had not made application. They then immediately made application. The whole difficulty arises because it has to be determined when they are in fact in breach of the act as it now stands. The question of divided jurisdiction enters into this matter. There is a real difficulty in determining the facts as well as the problems inherent in divided jurisdiction as it applies in these cases.

There is also the question—and we are considering this as well—of the draftmanship of the act as it exists. I indicated what we are doing on the question of divided jurisdiction and I should add that we are also considering the act with a view to improving it within the jurisdiction that is admittedly federal, because I think it is fair comment that the act as it stands is not satisfactory.

With regard to the other point about public bodies taking care to make application in advance, I think the answer is very simple. When there is a question of divided jurisdiction public bodies always follow the precautionary course of applying whether or not they need to apply. They do this in order not to be put in the position of having appeared to break the law in the event that it is decided they should have applied. I believe this happens with regard to most public bodies. In spite of the reference to lawyers, I believe that any lawyer acting for a public body would advise them that if there is any question of doubt at all they should apply. In any event I am very happy to see that there is so much concern about some people not applying as promptly as they should. I do not think there is anything more I can usefully add on this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the explanation given by the minister to the question raised by the member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is rather confused.

The member mentioned earlier the name of a lawyer, Mr. James F. McCallum, who is greatly interested in this fill in lake Ontario, in the Mimico area or on the other side, in Long Branch. When we asked the member for York-Humber whether Mr. McCallum had any associates to help him in his transactions there, he said he was not aware of it and that he did not know Mr. McCallum.

However, I find that in the Canada Legal Directory, which contains the names of law firms or offices in Canada, under No. 123, appears the name of the law office "Cameron, Brewin, McCallum & Scott, 372 Bay Street". Now, I wonder whether Mr. A. J. P. Cameron could not add "M.P." to his name and whether Mr. F. A. Brewin would not also be a member of the New Democratic Party; I do not think Mr. Scott is a member of parliament, nor Mr. Joseph Lemire either. There it is, the law office of Messrs. Cameron, Brewin, McCallum and Scott.

If there are any members of parliament in that law office, I wonder whether it is against the regulations to transact business as is now being done on the shores of lake Ontario, and more specifically in the constituency of the member for York-Humber.

At any rate, I think the minister is not giving us much information about the procedure being followed. I noted myself that the member for York-Humber is bringing pressure to bear and is asking the minister for information. He wrote to him personally before raising the matter in the house and the answers he got were always non-committal. The matter is staying up in the air, in short, an attempt is made to ignore as far as possible the problem existing over there.

I think the minister should be more specific and state, on behalf of the department and the government, that action will be taken accordingly, so that the residents of Toronto and the shores of lake Ontario will be treated fairly and that some individuals or a few persons will not be granted privileges which clearly belong to the people of Toronto and vicinity.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: I know, Mr. Chairman, that we want to finish these estimates but I am not satisfied with the answer the minister has given. My friend says he has not given any, but he has given an over-all answer to a specific problem. If we look deeply into the Navigable Waters Protection Act we will find it is a major piece of legislation which is not applied as extensively now as it has been in the past. I think the minister is wrong in saying that the act does not give his department power to request people to apply for approval before an obstruction is put into a navigable water.

In my own area I know that if one wants to build a small wharf in Lake Timiskaming the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company can remove the dock. They can hook onto it with a tug and remove it if the people have not applied for permission to put in these facilities. They have been known to haul these docks away and court cases have resulted, but the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company has been in the right because they have this power under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

In my opinion the request was not made by the hon. member alone but was made by a number of people in the city of Toronto who are interested in maintaining the waterfront. They are not in favour of the waterfront being changed in the manner in which it is and for the purpose for which it is being changed. I think the minister is wrong in saying this company had any justification for putting any type of structure there without the prior permission of the department.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not believe the hon. member should misquote me. I did not say they put any type of structure there without the permission of the department. I was careful to point out that they had not done that.

Mr. Peters: Then I stand corrected, but that is not the way I understood it. I understood the company had put in fill.

Mr. McIlraith: They did put in fill, but no structure. This is a difficult legal problem to decide what we can enforce against them.

Mr. Peters: If you put an earth dam across a river you have effectively stopped navigation on that river. We are quibbling if we call dumping fill into the water no hazard and yet a wooden wharf is a hazard. That is quibbling.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member should not misrepresent what I said. If he takes a load of earth and puts it in a lake 60 miles wide, is that a "work" within the meaning of the act in a navigable water or is it not? It is a very nice question of law. I have tried my best to get opinions on which we can rely. The problem here is to determine when it did become a breach of the act, and admittedly it did at a point. However, presuming to prejudge the case as the hon. member has done is something that I did not do and I am not willing to do.

Mr. Peters: This is exactly what I agree happened; the case was prejudged. In my opinion it does not matter if you dump a wheelbarrow full of mud into a small opening or a large amount of fill into a big opening. It becomes an obstruction. It is only a matter of degree. One wheelbarrow full of refuse dumped on the shore is an obstruction for certain purposes under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. These obstructions do not relate only to the sailing of ships but to other matters.

I think this question should be referred to the law officers of the Crown. I know the minister has the right, if he wishes, to state a case to the Supreme Court for a ruling. I am not concerned about the question as it affects this case only but I am concerned about other areas. This question has been a factor and is still a factor in connection with Lake St. Clair. It is a factor in the Georgian Bay tourist area. It is a factor in the area of my own lake. I did not know until this discussion arose that it was not legal for me to put fill into a lake. I had intended to reclaim a certain amount of the lake but I know now that there are restrictions in the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

In my opinion this matter should be decided by a stated case to the Supreme Court. I think the minister is in a very weak position if he argues the question of degree in this case. I am quite prepared to say that a thousand foot wharf in lake Ontario in the Etobicoke area is not necessarily an obstruction to seaway traffic. However, I am of the opinion that a thousand foot wharf in Lake Ontario is an obstruction to motor boats. I think this piece of land would be difficult to cross on water skis and therefore it would be an obstruction.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question, because I fear he does not understand the two parts of the Navigable Waters Protection Act? If something is there and has become an obstruction, then there is a right not to grant a permit under certain terms and conditions. They must make application, and they have made application. It is a matter of assessing and examining all the facts and deciding whether or not a permit should be granted.

Mr. Peters: As I understand it, originally they did not make an application. If I recall the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Humber, this application was made later and this obstruction has been there for some period of time. My point, Mr. Chairman, is that the minister did not make any decision before the obstruction was there. The minister has the responsibility, not these people building the new land. The minister and his officials have a responsibility to decide whether or not this project is going to be an obstruction, whether or not it meets the terms of the act.

Mr. McIlraith: That is precisely the decision they took.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Am I now being informed that it has now been decided what they will do in this particular instance?

Mr. McIlraith: It was decided that they had to take out this fill, or file an application to come within the terms of the act.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): After the original violation?

Mr. McIlraith: Certainly.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister indicated there had been a violation prior to the application.

Mr. McIlraith: Exactly. That is why it was taken out.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Just one question. Did the minister receive any representation from the Mr. Cameron and the Mr. Brewin who have been mentioned in this case?

Mr. McIlraith: None whatever. May I just qualify that answer by saying that I came to the department only on July 8 of last year. There may have been some correspondence since then and I would have to check the file, but I have no recollection of any correspondence.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think he means before that.

Mr. McIlraith: There may have been some correspondence before that and I would have to check the files to see whether there was. Certainly none has come to me, and representations on this matter have been made by only one member, the member for York-Humber.

Mr. Cowan: The former hon. member for York West, Mr. Kelly, made several representations as well, when he was a member of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I was not Minister of Public Works when Mr. Kelly was a member of the house.

Mr. Cowan: I did not say you were.

Mr. Peters: I am thoroughly confused, frankly, with these answers. I had thought I understood the problem. If this matter has been solved to the satisfaction of everybody, then certainly I would not object; but I should like to ask the minister whether he is giving any consideration to policing the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act, particularly in areas such as these under discussion at the present time, in order to see that none of these structures are built until permission has been granted by the department.

I believe we have prior claim to making decisions in federal matters. If structures are built and permission is received, this may satisfy the situation; but it does seem to me that the minister, before he gives approval, has the right to set down certain conditions under which protection is provided, such as construction of waterbreaks and other necessary structures to contain whatever works are undertaken. He would obviously have to cooperate with the municipalities to see that this was in their interests.

Mr. McIlraith: The whole scheme of legislation envisages an application being made before construction of any project, if I may call it that. We are concerned with this quite valuable land, if you wish to refer to it in that way, fronting Lake Ontario. We have been dealing with the province to see whether we can improve our policing technique so that we are given advance notice of proposed structures on waterlots. We are right in the midst of trying to do our best to deal with what is a very difficult and complex problem.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister made a very technical point. He tried to draw a distinction between a structure on a reclamation project, if I can call it that, and land fill. He drew a very narrow distinction, and as the hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out there is no difference between a structure and fill under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

The hon. member also indicated that there had been a violation prior to the application made under the act, such as it is. Therefore I would ask whether the government took any steps to penalize these people who violated the act. I would further ask the minister whether the firm that was mentioned of McCallum, Brewin, Scott and Cameron has any connection with the hon. members for High Park, Danforth and Greenwood.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, not the hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. McIlraith: I assume that it does, though I do not think it is connected with the hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): But is it connected with the hon. member for High Park?

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member for York-Humber told me that it was, so I assume it is; but I do not know. In any event, neither hon. member made any representations to me.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister indicate the penalties which were imposed, if any?

Mr. McIlraith: I should want to check the files of the department further. I may say that it was the legal officers who raised the question about the definition used in the act. I think the word "works" was the word which caused the trouble.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1966. Shall I rise, report certain resolutions, and request that the committee be granted leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Mr. Benson moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, the sum of $270,207,367, be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Benson thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-159, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I just want the assurance of the Minister of National Revenue who is piloting this bill through that this is the standard type of appropriation bill.

Mr. Benson: This is a standard type of appropriation bill. Clause 5 is necessary in order that bills may be paid in April out of these funds. It is for expenses incurred at March 31.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time.

Mr. Benson: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale); technical and vocational training—request for subsidization of teacher training programs; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); the Canadian economy—effect on pensioners of increasing cost of living; the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays), northern affairs—construction of replica of Grande Hermine for Expo '67.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that tonight is the presentation night of the budget by the Minister of Finance, and to enable time to be available for reply by the opposition critic to the minister, I wonder if there is any provision that these questions not be taken up at ten o'clock, but postponed to some other time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The three questions to be taken up on proceedings under the adjournment motion can be suspended by unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: It is understood that they are simply to be deferred, and will hold their order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the understanding that the house will dispense with these questions on tonight's adjournment proceedings.

I should point out to the house that since the hour for private members was not taken up, that this hour also was deferred, and is not to be counted.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The sittings of this house are suspended until eight o'clock, pursuant to a special order made on Monday, March 28, 1966.

At 7.15 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a year ago my predecessor in office, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), reported to the house that there had been a great and encouraging improvement in the economic situation. I am happy to say that this trend continued in 1965. The fiscal policies he initiated have resulted in further rapid economic growth.

[English]

Royal Commission on Taxation

For all those concerned with fiscal affairs and economic policy generally, 1966 will be a busy and important year. We expect to receive and publish within the next two months the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation which was appointed in 1962 to review the whole of our federal tax system.

It is clearly desirable that following the publication of the report sufficient time be made available for people to study it and make known their views on it. I found on taking office that it would not be possible to take action on the report in the Budget this year. To avoid any uncertainty about it I made clear in January that this budget would not reflect the proposals of the Royal Commission and such is the case.

When the Royal Commission was asked to make a comprehensive review of our tax system it was given a difficult task, to which the Commissioners and many experienced advisers have devoted much thought and work. We in turn will be faced with a difficult and controversial task when we come to reform our tax laws in the light of its report. Naturally we will not be able to consider the Royal Commission's recommendations in isolation. We shall have to take into account the issues we are discussing with the provinces concerning federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. Our reform of the tax system will be governed by two principles: equity and efficiency. Governments are going to need increasing revenues to meet the social and economic requirements of a nation determined to abolish poverty—and I personally share this determination. I believe Canadians generally are willing to play their part in this endeavour, but they must be satisfied that what is asked of them is fair and that the fiscal system does not stand in the way of work and enterprise.

Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements

This will be the crucial year for the Federal-Provincial Tax Structure Committee which, as the House knows, is conducting a broad review of the fiscal relationships between the federal and provincial governments. One of the important elements underlying these discussions is the rapid increase in the expenditures of the provincial governments and their municipalities. Many of the major social requirements of Canadians today fall within the sphere of provincial responsibility, and provincial expenditures naturally reflect this trend. I have in mind chiefly education, health, a variety of welfare requirements, and highways. The trends in federal expenditure on the one hand appear to be increasing roughly in line with the Gross National Product. The requirements of the provincial governments and their municipalities on the other hand appear to be growing at a higher rate. The Provincial Treasurer of Ontario said in his Budget Speech last month, "It is becoming increasingly clear that the combined total of provincial and municipal expenditures will continue to grow at a much more rapid rate than the corresponding federal commitments."

• (8:10 p.m.)

In our federal system there are three lines of approach to ensuring that the provinces will be able to provide an adequate level of public services. First, the provinces must have access to an appropriate share of the sources of available revenue. This is the tax sharing problem. I have reached the conclusion that it will be possible both to ensure that the provinces have access to sufficient revenues to finance their responsibilities and to ensure that the Federal Government will have sufficient scope to make effective use of fiscal policy for economic purposes. In the second place, there has to be a system of equalization payments made by Parliament to underwrite the ability of the less wealthy provinces to provide adequate services. The present equalization formula is not entirely satisfactory. We would like to develop a formula that would take into account a wider concept of fiscal capacity based on a comprehensive range of provincial revenues. The third element comprises the conditional grants made by the Federal Government to specific provincial programmes.

Here, and this is the central problem, we must find a balance between two important considerations: on the one hand the responsibility we feel here in parliament, and I feel here in parliament as one of its members, to give leadership on matters of national importance, and on the other hand the need to respect provincial responsibilities and provincial judgments about matters within their jurisdiction.

This will be no easy task but, given sufficient imagination and good will, I have no doubt whatever that we can find workable solutions.

Tariffs

In international economic affairs too this will be an important year. The Kennedy round of tariff negotiations sponsored by the members of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade must come to a head later this year if the negotiations are to be completed on time. In mid 1967 the powers accorded to the U.S. Government by the Trade Expansion Act expire. It would be a tragic waste if the world trading community failed to make effective use of that imaginative legislation which was one of President Kennedy's great achievements.

For our part, and I believe I speak not only on behalf of the government of Canada but on behalf of all of us in this house, we shall do our utmost to ensure the success of these negotiations.

Tonight I shall be proposing very few changes in the Customs Tariff. They are set forth in the resolution. We have received a great many suggestions and requests for tariff changes.

I am glad to see, as a former minister of trade and commerce and as one who believes in liberal trade, that the great majority are suggestions for decreases rather than increases. Many of these have considerable merit.

But at a time when we are engaged in one of the largest international tariff negotiations in our history I think the House will appreciate the desirability of using whatever tariff reductions we contemplate to help us obtain better access to foreign markets for our own exports.

International Monetary Co-operation

We are also playing an active part in the international consideration of methods for improving the international monetary system. Supplies of traditional forms of reserves such as gold and the reserve currencies are not likely to be adequate in the future to meet the needs of a growing volume of world trade and payments. We would like to see machinery established which would enable some conscious action to be taken in the future to create international reserve assets much as a central bank influences the growth of the money supply within an individual country. We also want to see improvements in the process whereby countries adjust imbalances in their international position quickly and with the least damage to their trading partners.

In these discussions the Canadian Government has urged that a new reserve asset should be created through the joint action of a group of countries which are able to contribute strong backing for such a new asset and which have had considerable experience of co-operation together in monetary matters. We believe the decisions concerning issues of the new asset should be made within the general framework of the International Monetary Fund, and that all members of the Fund should be entitled to hold and to use the new asset. It is too early to say what the outcome of these discussions will be.

As many people in this house who follow these matters know, there are still differences of opinion among the countries involved as to the need for any new arrangements at this time and as to the form which such arrangements might take. However, Canada is making every effort to achieve as wide an area of agreement as possible, consistent with the sound evolution of the international monetary system.

Economic Situation and Outlook

In 1965 the dollar value of the nation's output of goods and services was about 9½ per cent higher than in 1964. In terms of volume the increase in Gross National Product was about 6½ per cent.

This growth in the economy was broadly based and brought benefits to people in all walks of life and in all parts of the country. Capital investment by governments and by private business was up very sharply; consumers spent substantially more than in 1964. Employment rose rapidly by just over a quarter of a million workers. By the end of 1965 not only had another 208,000 workers been added to our labour force, but by the end of the year the rate of unemployment had been reduced to 3½ per cent. The expansion in the economy, which has now lasted five years, is the most sustained in Canada's history and it shows no signs of slackening.

In recent months indeed it has become evident that the rate of increase in expenditures is becoming too rapid and that we Canadians are trying to take on a bit more than we can handle. In this respect our position is quite different from what it was a few years ago. As late as 1963 the economy, although already expanding, was still operating well below its potential. The rate of unemployment then was much higher, our industries were operating well below capacity, and supplies of resources of all kinds were readily available. In short, even as late as 1963 there was considerable slack in the economy.

This is not the case today. Despite substantial additions to plant and equipment throughout the economy in the last few years and an unusually large growth in the labour force, most sectors of the economy today and most regions of the country are working at or close to capacity. Shortages of skilled labour have become widespread, shortages of other labour have appeared, and unit labour costs have been rising. Our task this year must be to maintain a reasonable balance between the increases in production which are physically possible and the increase in the demands we place on our resources. Since there is no appreciable slack in the economy to take up this year, we cannot look for as large an expansion of output as was achieved in 1965.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The capacity of the economy at any point in time is limited by the availability of manpower in the right places with the right training, and by our stock of industrial plant and equipment. With the labour force growing and with high annual rates of capital investment, our capacity increases year by year. But to achieve the full potential of our economy, as projected for example by the Economic Council for the year 1970, more than this is needed. We have to improve the quality of our resources and improve our methods of using them. We have to improve the skills of our labour force and organize the labour market more effectively so that people can move readily into the jobs for which they are suited. We have to improve our industrial organization, increase research and development, and ensure that we are using the most modern techniques in industry. The Government has adopted a variety of policies and programs along these lines to help bring our capacity up to our full potential Even so, these will need some years to take full effect. In these terms to speak of a margin between our present performance and our potential may be useful as a guide to assessing and as a spur to developing our longer-term capabilities. But there is no such margin between our present performance and our present capacity.

Our capacity will of course grow in 1966. The labour force will increase by a further 220,000 workers, although not all of them will be located where there are jobs available, nor will they all have the needed skills. There are pockets of unemployment in some regions which will be drawn on more effectively as our manpower programs and area development measures make themselves felt.

During the coming months, with new plant and equipment coming into production, we should be able to achieve higher levels of output per man-hour in many industries. For the nation as a whole, an expansion in the order of 5 per cent in the volume of output over 1965 levels should be within our reach.

However, even this rate of expansion may well be insufficient to meet the additional demands that appear likely to be made on the economy during the current year. Governments at all levels have already indicated that they intend to increase their total capital outlays in 1966 substantially above those of 1965. Growing requirements for schools, universities, hospitals and roads bulk heavily in provincial and municipal budgets. Other forms of government expenditures are almost certain to rise. The latest survey of the investment intentions of private business firms points to a continuation of the present investment boom. In manufacturing for example the business firms apparently intend to increase their capital investment by 20 per cent in 1966 following a similar increase last year. Substantial increases in private investment outside of the manufacturing sector are also expected. With continued high levels of employment and rising rates of wages and salaries, consumers will have more money to spend. Finally we can expect further increases in our exports during the current there is a growing demand for our goods in year. Prospects for wheat sales are good and many markets, particularly in the United States where the economic expansion appears to be accelerating. Indeed, Mr. Speaker—and I would like to emphasize this point—the change in the outlook in the United States in the past three months is an important influence on our present situation, and necessarily upon the policies which we must follow.

All of this being so, 1966 presents a great challenge to Canadians. We have been successful during these past few years in stimulating the economy until it is now operating close to capacity. Are we now prepared to exercise the moderation—as well as the enterprise—needed to keep the economy operating at full capacity not only in 1966 but in the years to come? In other words can we now pace and prolong our prosperity? That is the question we have to face as a people. If Canadians try to achieve more than is physically possible the result can only be severe strains on key industries, shortages of materials, and rising costs and prices; productivity would be adversely affected and our competitive position would deteriorate. Moreover imports would be drawn in at a rate that would bring about a substantially larger deficit in our balance of payments on current account. In recent months imports have been increasing more rapidly than exports; this was reflected in the increase in our current account deficit in 1965, and is likely to result in a further increase in 1966. This is not unreasonable in present circumstances, but we must keep it within sensible bounds.

Balance of Payments

It has been customary for Canada's external deficit on current account to increase during periods of economic expansion. As the domestic demands on our resources approach the limits of our capacity a larger import surplus makes available additional resources. The additional supplies of machinery, industrial products and consumer goods that we thus obtain from other countries help to avert shortages in Canada and help to avoid increases in prices and costs. They enable us to produce more and to consume more. Thus import surpluses help to alleviate pressures on the economy when it is operating at full capacity. By contrast large import surpluses several years ago, when the Canadian economy was running well below capacity, aggravated our own underemployment.

While there are short-term advantages in having a large current account deficit when the economy is at full stretch, we should not blind ourselves to the disadvantages of running such a deficit year after year. The deficit enables us, through borrowing, to use resources today which, as a nation, we have not yet earned and which will have to be repaid out of future earnings. There are dangers in trying to enjoy, through borrowing, a standard of living over the years that is higher than our own productivity allows. Borrowing from abroad at a time when we are undertaking a large investment program is justifiable; but relying on borrowed external capital to sustain a high and rising rate of consumption can be as dangerous a temptation for a nation as for an individual.

From 1962 until our economic expansion gained greater momentum last year we made good progress in reducing our current account deficit. Even in 1965, during a period of rapid expansion, the deficit was much less than in 1959, which was a year of considerable slack. The trend therefore seems to be in the right direction but in the years ahead we must make further progress in reducing this deficit. We have preserved our access to the United States capital market with the cooperation of the United States Government, which recognizes the fact that Canada does not contribute to the United States balance of payments problem. But in the longer run, with the whole world hungry for capital, we cannot assume that it will always be feasible for Canada to import such large amounts of capital as we have in the past. This is not an immediate problem to be solved this year or next. It is a matter of developing a long-term balance of payments policy consistent with our international position as an open economy in an increasingly competitive world. Our basic approach is two-fold: first, through industrial, commercial and manpower policies, to adapt the structure of the Canadian economy to exploit effectively the most rapidly growing markets at home and abroad; and second, to develop and encourage the growth and use of Canadian savings. Canadians should be prepared to forgo some of the apparent advantages of immediate expenditures in order to invest in the expansion and productivity of their own economy.

Economic Council

Mr. Speaker, it is very useful to me as Minister of Finance to have had the opportunity of reading and studying the reports of the Economic Council of Canada. In its last report the Economic Council of Canada pointed out that the recent rate of expansion of investment spending is clearly not sustainable on a long-term basis. Our economy will grow more if the rate of expansion of investment keeps broadly in line with our longer-term potential requirements instead of fluctuating on the basis of the short-term outlook. We need to plan now to maintain our growth in the years beyond 1966. Investments by governments as well as by private business that can be postponed to a later time will help then to maintain stability and growth.

We have all, in government, in business and in labour circles, received much useful information and advice from our Economic Council on how to make our efforts, our labour and resources more productive; and on the proper choice of priorities.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I find myself generally in agreement with the substance of much that the Council has said in both its First and Second Reviews. I have taken to heart the concern that it expresses and implies about the way time lags can impair the effectiveness of fiscal measures and its concern that we must not lose sight of our longer-term goals in dealing with immediate problems. On the other hand I consider unduly pessimistic its opinion that fiscal measures should not be used to deal with what it calls "shorter term cyclical instability" and I do not share its view that fiscal policy can and should be reduced to an arithmetical formula. Appraisal, judgment and flexibility must have their place if we are to succeed.

While our present situation clearly calls for restraint on the increases in spending, rather than stimulus, this could change fairly quickly. Our objective is a steady and sustained rate of growth. Our intention is to keep our fiscal policies flexible, and readily adaptable to changing circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, if we do not by one means or another succeed in moderating the increase in aggregate expenditures this year the most immediate penalty we shall suffer is an inflationary increase in prices. Public and indeed parliamentary concern over this danger is already evident. It was only a few days ago that we were debating this very issue. As a practical matter in our society this danger cannot be avoided by trying to regulate prices and wages. We must deal with the basic issue which is at the present time an excess of spending power over what is available to meet demands. It is this excess which causes rising prices, costs and profits and which harms those in our society whose economic power and bargaining position are weak.

The Out-turn of Last Year's Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to turn now to a review of our government accounts. The outcome of the Government's accounts over the past year has been laid before you in detail in Part 2 of the White Paper. I propose simply to note a few highlights.

Budgetary revenues in the fiscal year now ending are estimated to have been $7,673 million. You may recall that my predecessor in office expected, nearly a year ago, that revenues would rise by some 5½ per cent in the absence of any tax changes, and that he proposed to reduce this growth to just over 3 per cent by a reduction in personal income tax, which took effect last July. These revenue forecasts were based on an expected increase in the value of the Gross National Product of about 7½ per cent. In the event, our rate of economic expansion was such that the value of the GNP rose by about 9½ per cent; and revenues rose as a consequence, in spite of the tax cut, by $493 million, or 7 per cent. This is telling evidence of the considerable momentum which the expansion acquired during the course of 1965.

Expenditures within the framework of the budgetary accounts in the year now at an end are estimated at $7,707 million. This is only three-quarters of one per cent higher than was forecast in last year's budget.

I should like to congratulate my predecessor in office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Indeed, I should like to congratulate him again because the resulting budgetary deficit of $34 million was the lowest since the fiscal year which ended on March 31, 1957, nine years ago. To all intents and purposes therefore the budget was in balance this year.

Federal revenues and expenditures on the national economic accounts basis, which takes in non-budgetary government transactions affecting the incomes of individuals and businesses, are again explained and reconciled with the budgetary presentation in Part I of the White Paper. I should like to point out to the house, however, that there was a surplus on the National Accounts basis of some $494 million, compared with the surplus of $279 million in the previous fiscal year. In terms of the impact of the Federal Government's total receipts and payments upon the incomes of the rest of the community, this healthy federal surplus of nearly half a billion dollars was no more than was needed to absorb a substantial volume of potential private demand which would otherwise have largely been translated into higher prices and a larger deficit on current account in the balance of payments.

The Outlook for Revenue and Expenditure in the Coming Year.

I have described our economic situation and prospects and have reviewed the outcome of Federal Government transactions in the fiscal year now ending. Let me now move ahead to discuss the outlook for the new fiscal year.

First of all, without taking into account the effects of this Budget my advisers would now expect another increase of rather more than 9 per cent in the Gross National Product in 1966. Of this, a little more than 5 per cent would be in volume and 4 per cent in price. That is the prediction my advisers made without taking into account any of the proposals that I shall make subsequently. Part of the expected price increase is attributable directly to contributions under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and to the recently announced increase in the Ontario provincial sales tax, both of which reflect improvements in public and social services.

On the basis of present taxes and this increase in Gross National Product I would expect our budgetary revenues to be about $8,220 million in the coming fiscal year, an increase of 7 per cent. There are special reasons why this increase in revenue will be less than would normally result from such a large increase in Gross National Product. First of all, the income tax cut of 1965 applied only from July 1 last. In a full fiscal year the cost would be considerably more. In the second place, in 1966 there is a further abatement of three percentage points of basic income tax in favour of the provinces. In the third place, contributions by individuals and employers to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan, which commenced at the beginning of this year, are deductible for personal and corporation income tax purposes. Finally, corporation income tax receipts in 1965-66 included some extra revenue in respect of the movement forward of the payment period for this tax which we will not have this coming year.

I am forecasting budgetary expenditures for the coming fiscal year at $8,450 million representing an increase of nearly 10 per cent above the previous year's level. This takes into account not only the Main Estimates which have already been tabled but the expenditures normally made from supplementary estimates. It also takes account of new legislation and programs that have been announced. It reflects as well the efforts to which I shall refer in a moment that my colleagues and I have recently made to defer capital expenditures previously planned for this coming fiscal year.

On the basis of these forecasts, before taking into account my following proposals, we would have a deficit of $230 million in our budgetary accounts. In terms of the national economic accounts there would be a surplus of $370 million.

Policy and Proposals—General

I turn now to the policies and proposals for dealing with the economic and budgetary situation I have been describing. I take this occasion to express my thanks to the numerous Canadians who, in response to my invitation, sent me their recommendations for this Budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: I received a great variety of suggestions, some of them quite unorthodox, which I may reveal at some time, but many of them, indeed a very large number, were constructive. If I may be pardoned a parenthetical remark, a great many of the letters said either expressly or implicitly, "I did not know you were interested in my views."

Mr. Fulton: They will find out later that you weren't.

Mr. Sharp: However, I have never regretted having sent out this general invitation.

It is clear that action should be taken promptly to moderate the present boom and to maintain a steady and sustainable rate of growth in our economy. We must avoid the kind of boom that will lead to a bust.

In seeking this major objective we wish also to protect and enhance our productivity and our ability to compete in trade with other nations. We also want to restrain the increase in our balance of payments deficit.

To achieve these aims we must moderate the increase in the total of demands being placed on the Canadian economy this year and next year. These demands include those of governments, of business, of consumers, and of those who buy our exports. We do not want to restrain export demands—we need the proceeds of exports to pay for imports and meet our very heavy obligations in respect of interest and dividends payable outside Canada.

We should restrain in some degree the increase in all the other demands this year on Canada's production.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Government Expenditures

First, in regard to our own government substantially higher this new fiscal year than in the one just closing—higher by some $743 millions, or 9½ per cent. Since last August we have been reviewing our construction programs and deferring a number of projects —both those announced at the time and others that came up subsequently for decision.

Now that we are better able to appraise the total economic situation this year, and our part in it, the Government believes it should exercise further restraint upon its own expenditures, particularly in the field of construction, during this coming fiscal year.

As a consequence the Government has made several decisions. First, that it will not undertake any substantial new programs or projects requiring expenditures in 1966-67 that are not already provided for in the Estimates or are already announced, except for what are clearly unforeseen emergencies. This will mean deferring a number of plans that have been under consideration, or which we have been requested to undertake by the provinces or others.

Second, we will limit our departmental construction programs this year to a total that will be 10 per cent less, in terms of expenditures in 1966-67, than the total figure of $348 million submitted in the Main Estimates now before the House. This will require deferment of a number of projects already included in the Estimates or otherwise announced. We have already decided to defer or re-schedule a number of specific projects which we think can and should be deferred or re-scheduled at this time, among which the following are examples:

(a) a grain elevator at Prince Rupert that we had intended to proceed with immediately but on which the tenders for construction came in at figures much higher than we thought were necessary;

(b) the proposed new Taxation Building in Ottawa, the National Museum, the National Research Council Structures Laboratory, and the commencement of buildings on the Satellite Experimental Farm;

(c) some less urgent work at airports in various parts of the country;

(d) a readjustment of the timetable for the next phase of the Northumberland Causeway project in order to minimize the pressures on the peak summertime employment market and maximize winter employment possibilities;

(e) some harbour and marine works in coastal areas where there is serious pressure on the construction industry;

(f) some smaller public buildings in Ontario and British Columbia.

I regret, and I am sure everyone in this house regrets, that it is necessary to defer these projects and others as well to which I have not referred, but I feel that it is essential to do so if we are to avoid an unreasonable level of demand on the economy this year. I hope that the provincial governments, whose construction programs have apparently increased even more than ours this year, will be able to contribute to this desirable restraint upon aggregate demand by holding back until a later year some of the projects they have scheduled for this year. I recognize that some of their requirements—particularly for schools and universities—are urgent, but there are others—for example some highway building—that could be delayed at some inconvenience but without serious economic or social consequences.

In order to permit deferment of projects, we have already agreed with the provincial governments to place before you amendments to some of our legislation to extend the deadlines for federal grants for various construction programmes. May I say to hon. members of the house that I know that this policy that I am announcing will be acceptable to most provincial governments across this country who are just as concerned as we on this side with the excessive demands that may be placed upon the construction industry this year. This was announced last August 2. We are now prepared to agree to delaying completion of centennial projects to which we are contributing, so that there will be no arbitrary pressure on this score in seeking to complete them by 1967. As a practical matter there is nothing we can do to reduce the abnormal pressure to complete work on many projects in Montreal that are part of Expo '67 or related to it. We are asking our Crown corporations to exercise restraint in respect of any of their projected building plans which can be deferred, as the Bank of Canada has done.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Income Tax

Turning now from expeditures to revenues, I shall lay before you a number of proposals affecting taxation. In the main these are designed to moderate the increase in demand of private individuals and business firms.

Let me begin with the Income Tax, the keystone of our tax system. It is the fairest of our taxes. It must be reformed, however, and made fully effective if it is to be really equitable. I believe it should be used by both Parliament and the provincial legislatures.

I should recall here some remarks I made in answer to press inquiries following the Budget Speech of the Provincial Treasurer of Ontario. He had announced Ontario's decision to increase its personal income tax for the purpose of financing its growing expenditures, a decision which has recently been embodied in a Bill placed before the Ontario Legislature. He made clear that Ontario would need to take such action whether or not there was an additional abatement of the federal tax. I said: "Any province is quite free to increase its income tax under its present arrangements with us—and I hope it will be just as free to do so under the new arrangements we will be working out this year. I think there should be as little suggestion as possible in our new arrangements that the provinces are entitled to use only a specified portion of the income tax and that in going beyond it they are somehow indulging in double taxation . . . It is of course the right of a provincial government to decide what is the right combination of taxes for it to use, having in mind both equity and economics. We and they should both take into account as best we can what one another is doing." I regard what Mr. Allan has said and done as being quite consistent with what I am proposing tonight.

[Translation]

We will discuss these matters in the Tax Structure Committee this year and no doubt in a full federal-provincial conference of Prime Ministers and Premiers as well. I hope we shall be able to come to understand each others' views on the use of the personal income tax by both levels of government, and that each will accept responsibility for the extent to which it uses this tax, knowing the others' views. I would hope, moreover, that the provinces will be prepared to continue to follow our lead in regard to the various detailed provisions of the law in order to minimize the trouble to which taxpayers may be subject in preparing their returns.

[English]

Last year Parliament reduced the income tax by 10 per cent of the basic tax with an upper limit of $600. This was done on the basis of the Government's appraisal of the economic situation at that time and the desirability of stimulating the expansion and growth of the economy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: It is quite clear, Mr. Speaker, from what I have been saying that this stimulus served to make 1965-66 the most prosperous year in Canada's history.

The stimulus has served its purpose and is no longer appropriate. As a consequence I feel we should now withdraw most of last year's tax cut.

In making the change I feel that we should, however, lighten the load upon those with the lowest incomes. I do so having considered the total tax load being imposed by all governments in all forms.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Accordingly I now propose that effective June 1 we reduce the present limit on the tax cut from $600 per annum to $20 per annum. At the same time I propose that the rate of the tax cut, now 10 per cent, be changed to 20 per cent. With the new limit of $20 only the lowest brackets will benefit from this change in the rate. The result of these changes will be that those with average or better than average incomes will revert to tax levels slightly below the levels that prevailed in 1964. Those with lower than average incomes will pay less tax than they did at that time and less than they are now paying. This new rate of tax will prevail after June 1 this year and will be reflected in the deductions then made. The tax liability for the year 1966 will be a blend of what was enacted in 1965 to be in effect this year and the revised rates proposed to apply after June 1. I would ask permission at this point to insert in Hansard tables to illustrate the effect of these changes.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables referred to above are as follows:]

TABLE 1

TO ILLUSTRATE PROPOSED PERSONAL INCOME TAX CHANGE

Single Taxpayers—no dependants

Income	Net Federal tax for 1966 if no change made	1965 tax cut to be cancelled	New tax cut for a full year	Change in tax for a full year		Net Federal tax for 1966
$	$	$	$	$	%	$
1,300	15	2	4	− 2	− 15	13
1,500	29	4	9	− 4	− 15	26
2,000	65	10	20	− 10	− 15	59
2,500	110	17	20	− 3	− 3	108
3,000	156	24	20	+ 4	+ 2	158
5,000	390	59	20	+ 39	+ 10	414
7,500	762	115	20	+ 95	+ 13	819
10,000	1,214	184	20	+164	+ 14	1,313
15,000	2,396	363	20	+343	+ 14	2,602
25,000	5,537	600	20	+580	+ 11	5,885
50,000	15,333	600	20	+580	+ 4	15,741

The amounts shown above as net Federal tax are after deducting an abatement of 24% in accordance with current federal-provincial arrangements. The Federal tax in Quebec is lower because of additional abatements but the amount of tax cut is the same in each case. The amounts shown do not include provincial income tax or the old age security tax. It was assumed that taxpayers take the optional standard deduction of $100.

For 1966 the "1965 tax cut" will remain in effect for the first 4/10ths of the year and the "new tax cut" will be in effect for the remainder of the year. The "Net Federal tax for 1966" is after deducting a blend of these two tax adjustments.

TABLE 2

TO ILLUSTRATE PROPOSED PERSONAL INCOME TAX CHANGE

Married Taxpayer—no dependants

Income	Net Federal tax for 1966 if no change made	1965 tax cut to be cancelled	New tax cut for a full year	Change in tax for a full year		Net Federal tax for 1966
$	$	$	$	$	%	$
2,300	14	2	4	− 2	− 15	13
2,500	29	4	9	− 4	− 15	26
3,000	65	10	20	− 10	− 15	59
4,000	156	24	20	+ 4	+ 2	158
5,000	266	40	20	+ 20	+ 7	278
7,500	606	92	20	+ 72	+ 12	649
10,000	1,019	154	20	+134	+ 13	1,100
15,000	2,132	323	20	+303	+ 14	2,314
25,000	5,195	600	20	+580	+ 11	5,543
50,000	14,915	600	20	+580	+ 4	15,263

The amounts shown above as net Federal tax are after deducting an abatement of 24% in accordance with current federal-provincial arrangements. The Federal tax in Quebec is lower because of additional abatements but the amount of tax cut is the same in each case. The amounts shown do not include provincial income tax or the old age security tax. It was assumed that taxpayers take the optional standard deduction of $100.

For 1966 the "1965 tax cut" will remain in effect for the first 4/10ths of the year and the "new tax cut" will be in effect for the remainder of the year. The "Net Federal tax for 1966" is after deducting a blend of these two tax adjustments.

TABLE 3

TO ILLUSTRATE PROPOSED PERSONAL INCOME TAX CHANGE

Married Taxpayer—2 dependent children eligible for family allowance

Income	Net Federal tax for 1966 if no change made	1965 tax cut to be cancelled	New tax cut for a full year	Change in tax for a full year		Net Federal tax for 1966
$	$	$	$	$	%	$
3,000	22	3	7	− 3	− 15	20
3,500	58	9	18	− 9	− 15	53
4,000	100	15	20	− 5	− 5	97
5,000	199	30	20	+ 10	+ 5	205
7,500	519	79	20	+ 59	+ 11	554
10,000	916	139	20	+119	+ 13	987
15,000	1,973	299	20	+279	+ 14	2,141
25,000	4,986	600	20	+580	+ 12	5,334
50,000	14,665	600	20	+580	+ 4	15,012

The amounts shown above as net Federal tax are after deducting an abatement of 24% in accordance with current federal-provincial arrangements. The Federal tax in Quebec is lower because of additional abatements but the amount of tax cut is the same in each case. The amounts shown do not include provincial income tax or the old age security tax. It was assumed that taxpayers take the optional standard deduction of $100.

For 1966 the "1965 tax cut" will remain in effect for the first 4/10ths of the year and the "new tax cut" will be in effect for the remainder of the year. The "Net Federal tax for 1966" is after deducting a blend of these two tax adjustments.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the Department of Finance estimates that this change in the income tax will increase our revenues at a rate of approximately $210 million per annum. The direct effect in the fiscal year 1966-67 should be about $140 million. It is designed to reduce moderately the rate of increase of consumer expenditures.

I am proposing a few technical changes in the Income Tax Act.

The first is to make more clearcut and specific arrangements in regard to charitable donations. All charitable organizations will be asked to register and to file annual returns of information. Only donations to such registered charitable organizations will be permitted as deductions from income in future years. This will not however affect the existing provision whereby a taxpayer may deduct up to $100 for charitable contributions or medical expenses without submitting receipts. In addition, donations to certain specified classes of charitable organizations outside Canada will be allowed as deductions. The essential points are given in the resolution and the Minister of National Revenue can explain the plans regarding registration when the resolution is under consideration.

Like all Ministers of Finance, I am concerned about the loopholes that remain in the law despite the vigilance of all my predecessors, and I am proposing a number of provisions on this score.

I should like to draw attention to some of them. In recent months there has been evidence of increasing abuse of the section of the Act providing special tax treatment for deferred profit sharing plans. In 1960 and 1961 my predecessor, then the hon. member for Eglinton, with the worthiest of motives, introduced a section in the Act to provide for these plans, which he described as an important piece of social legislation. Since then various businessmen and their professional advisers have exploited this well-intended but vulnerable section in various ways. Essentially what happens in typical cases is that contributions of profits from a business, made deductible in computing income for tax purpose and held in a tax free fund, which were intended to benefit the employees of the business generally are being diverted to benefit a few key people, chief shareholders or their relatives or heirs. The Minister of National Revenue will not accept any more deferred profit sharing plans for registration until we deal with the matter by a revision of the Act. There is a fairly general paragraph in the Resolution covering the essential points, which would apply to existing plans as well as new ones.

In the income tax regulation there are a number of special rates of capital cost allowances that have been granted for limited periods as inducements to action of one kind or another. These will be allowed to expire at the dates now specified, with one exception, namely the special rate on property acquired for the prevention of water pollution. This will be extended until the end of December 1967. Some of these special capital cost allowances are being replaced by grants, which in our view represent a more effective and fairer method of encouraging investment in designated areas, and industrial research and development.

The Resolution includes a paragraph to extend from April 1967 until April 1968 the deadline for the commencement of production for manufacturing projects in designated areas, on which construction has already started, if they are to qualify for the three-year exemption from income tax. Some of these projects are being delayed by events beyond the control of the companies concerned. The purpose of this action is to reduce the pressure that now exists to compete strenuously for equipment, materials and skilled labour which are in short supply. This is similar in principle to the proposed extension of the deadlines in the incentives offered provinces and municipalities to undertake certain types of construction work.

We also propose to extend the three-year tax exemption for new mines to wells for extracting potash by the solution method.

Withholding Tax

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to a major change affecting the sale of Canadian bonds to foreign buyers. The 15 per cent non-resident withholding tax on interest now constitutes in some measure an impediment to the sale of Canadian bonds in the United States and Europe.

In order to improve the market for such securities I propose that interest on bonds and debentures dated after April 15, 1966, issued by the federal or provincial governments or their agencies guaranteed by those governments, or issued by municipalities, or by hospitals and educational institutions guaranteed by a province, shall be exempt from this withholding tax. I have given consideration to whether this exemption should be extended to bonds and similar obligations issued by businesses or individuals in Canada but I have concluded that I should not come to a decision on this point pending the general review and revision of the Income Tax Act.

This new exemption from the withholding tax will not reduce our revenue from outstanding issues, interest on which is already subject to the tax and will remain subject to it. It will eliminate our revenue from new issues that we would otherwise have expected to yield a tax, and this may cost the Treasury two or three million dollars in 1966-7. There should on the other hand be some saving to provinces and municipalities in what it is necessary to pay in interest to foreign lenders. I hope it will enable some borrowing to be done in Europe, despite the high cost of borrowing there.

I have described the steps to be taken to moderate the growth of government expenditure and consumer spending. I am going to propose three important measures affecting private capital investment. These are complementary, and taken together, should in my judgment effect a reasonable but not excessive degree of restraint on the rate of increase in investment demand.

Sales Tax and Excise taxes

First, the sales tax. I intend to review it thoroughly in the light of the Royal Commission report, our experience with the Tax and the criticisms we have received. Meanwhile several changes should be enacted now.

Beginning in 1963 the house will recall that the exemption from sales tax of building materials and of production machinery and equipment was withdrawn in several stages. The revenue that accrued from this step made a vital contribution to the improvement of the financial position of the Federal Government and the restoration of confidence in our fiscal capacity. It has not stood in the way of a rapid increase in capital investment, and indeed in the past few months has probably assisted in moderating an excessively rapid rate of increase. For a country such as Canada, however, where the ability to compete internationally is so important and where we must maintain a high rate of investment in modern machinery and equipment in order to achieve the increases in productivity which we all want, we should not have a sales tax on—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that we should not have a sales tax on production machinery and equipment as a permanent feature of our system.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: On the other hand, the immediate removal of the tax on the whole of this category at the present time would only tend to exaggerate the capital investment boom now in progress.

• (9:00 p.m.)

There is, however, a certain type of machinery and equipment with very short lifetime, expenditures on which are really part of the current costs of production and which bear significantly upon our export trade and upon production that competes with imports. I refer to dies, jigs, fixtures and moulds, and tools for use in production machinery for shaping and working materials. I have come to the conclusion that these should be made exempt from sales tax forthwith. This is covered in the resolutions that I am placing before you and will go into effect provisionally at midnight tonight.

I next propose that Parliament legislate now to provide for the future restoration of the exemption for the remaining categories of production machinery and equipment. I propose that the exemption be restored partially a year hence, at the beginning of April 1967, by a reduction in the rate then by 5 percentage points, and that it be restored fully a year later, at the first of April 1968. Should the economic circumstances change in the meantime and make an earlier removal of this tax on machinery and equipment economically desirable, I will not hesitate to recomment to parliament in my next Budget that the remaining tax be removed at an earlier date.

The advance enactment of this exemption is proposed deliberately so that businesses can take it into account in their planning. It will constitute some inducement to defer the acquisition of machinery and equipment at a time when the expenditures on these categories seem likely to be exceedingly high, if not in fact excessive, judging from the figures that have just been published in the survey of intentions for private and public capital expenditures this year.

I am not convinced that the exemption from the sales tax for building materials should be restored. The arguments for this are not as strong as those that apply to machinery and equipment, and I am reserving judgment on it until I am able to review our tax system as a whole.

I am also recommending a few minor revisions in the sales tax which will be found set forth in the resolutions and can best be explained and discussed when they are under consideration.

I renew the undertaking given last year by my predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), that if the considerations of the Special Committee of the House on Food and Drugs lead it to recommend that drugs should be exempt from sales tax as part of a comprehensive and effective programme to reduce the prices of drugs, then the Government would be prepared to recommend such action by means of a special statute covering all the measures required to give effect to such a program.

I have considered the various special excise taxes that are imposed on a number of commodities under the Excise Tax Act. I cannot afford any wholesale revision of these until it can be done in the light of a general program of reform. I am proposing a minor simplification of the excise tax on electronic tubes and cigarette lighters.

The reduction in revenue consequent upon the actions I have proposed for immediate application in regard to the Excise Tax Act would be $21 million in the coming fiscal year. The cost of the first reduction in the present rate of sales tax on production machinery and equipment is estimated to be an additional $63 million in the fiscal year 1967-68. Given the present economic and budgetary outlook, this prospective reduction in revenue and the further reduction in the following year will have to be replaced, when the time comes, by increases in other tax revenues.

Special Temporary Measures

The proposal to provide now for the future reduction and later elimination of the sales tax on production machinery and equipment is the first of my three proposals designed to encourage the postponement of some private investment. I now wish to propose two temporary measures with the same objective.

In designing these measures I have been especially concerned to avoid tax increases of a kind that would get built into production costs and impair our future competitive position. After reviewing measures we have taken in the past, such as the deferred depreciation rules of 1951 and 1952 with which I was closely concerned as an official, and the well known Swedish tax free reserve plan, and several other possibilities put forward by the Department, I have selected two which I think are appropriate to our present Canadian circumstances. They can be brought quickly into effect, they will provide prompt pressures upon and inducements for business to defer capital expenditures, they will not add to the costs of production, and they will help business to maintain capital expenditures in future years. Each can be terminated on short notice without serious effects, should our economic circumstances change substantially.

The first measure has been put into effect by the government in an amendment to the Income Tax Regulations that comes into effect tonight. It reduces the capital cost allowances that may be claimed for various classes of capital assets acquired during the period between now and October 1, 1967—about 18 months. This appears to me the period over which special inducements to postpone business capital expenditures are likely to be necessary, though of course this is a difficult matter to forecast. As I have said, these are the kinds of measures that can be changed quickly, and without any long delays.

This measure will restrict capital cost allowances for certain classes of assets during the three-year period following acquisition, by applying the normal rates to part only of the capital cost of the assets. It will apply to the classes that include most kinds of buildings, machinery and equipment, but not to heavy construction equipment, pipelines or the generating and distributing equipment of public utilities.

For those who need to know more precisely what is affected I should make it clear that the classes involved are numbers 3, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 16. The effect of this measure is approximately the same as if we had reduced the rates for classes 3, 6 and 8 by one half, and for the other classes by ten percentage points. The exact details can be found in the Regulations which I will ask leave to table at the end of my speech.

It will not apply to property acquired under written contracts which can be shown to have existed tonight, to assets which have been used before tonight, nor to assets which are acquired for installation and use in designated areas, or those covered by the special temporary classes established as incentives.

We have for many years used increased rates of capital cost allowances as inducements for accelerating business investment. Indeed we have been using them recently. It is logical that we should now use reductions in these allowances to induce business to defer a part of its investment.

The other temporary measure is designed to divert and immobilize temporarily a modest portion of the flow of funds that is the chief source of finance for the increasing capital expenditure of businesses. I am proposing a wholly new device—a refundable tax on cash profits. It would be payable by all corporations not exempt from tax under Section 62 of the Income Tax Act, and by certain types of trusts on specified types of income. The base for the tax would be the taxable income of the company for the current year, less the income tax payable thereon, plus capital cost allowances deducted in determining income, plus depletion allowances and certain other items that are specified in the Resolution. In determining the tax base we would deduct from this adjusted net taxable income principal payments due and made on the debt of the company which had an original term of three years or longer under written loan contracts existing tonight. This is more precisely described in the Resolution. There will be a general deduction of $30,000 which should be adequate to mitigate the impact of the tax on smaller businesses which do not have ready recourse to the capital market. The appropriate rate of tax has involved a difficult judgment but I have decided on 5 per cent bearing in mind the many items added and deducted in establishing the base. Further details are given in the Resolution, and the measure itself will be incorporated as a separate temporary part added to the Income Tax Act.

This refundable tax would be payable monthly commencing in May this year for a period of 18 months. The monthly payments would be made on an estimated tax base computed by reference to the present or immediately preceding tax year subject to adjustment at the end of the period.

The amounts received under this new measure would be repaid, with interest at 5 per cent, after an interval of 18 to 36 months after receipt. The specific period within this range would be determined by the Government in the light of the economic prospects as assessed late in 1967.

There will of course be problems to be solved in working out the details of a novel measure of this kind, and I shall welcome constructive suggestions from those affected by it or those expert in tax matters or economics as to how we can best accomplish the essential purpose of this measure with the least amount of unnecessary disruption. Some changes in investment plans should result, of course, since this is the purpose of the measure. I would appreciate receiving such suggestions first in writing, or in the House during the debate on the Budget itself, so I can take them into account as early as possible, in the framing of the legislation.

• (9:10 p.m.)

It is difficult to assess with any accuracy the quantitative effects of these new measures relating to capital expenditures. The temporary reduction in capital cost allowances below normal levels will act in the right direction in bringing about some postponement of capital expenditures. It will also increase our corporate tax revenues. The prospect of the reduction and later elimination of the sales tax on machinery and equipment will be a more powerful incentive to postpone capital expenditures. The refundable tax on cash profits should yield I would think something of the order of a quarter of a billion dollars in a full year. All in all, I would think it reasonable to expect that these three measures taken as a whole might result directly and indirectly in a reduction by a third of a billion dollars this year of the intended increase in business investment expenditure.

That increase—not the total; just the increase itself—was estimated at about one and one quarter billion dollars in the Public and Private Investment Outlook for 1966. This reduction in the rate of increase would be only a moderate one, but should serve to bring the total increase much closer into line with the increase in our capacity to produce what is demanded taking into account that there is some spare capacity available in designated areas. Similarly it should restrain the increase that would otherwise occur in the current account deficit of our balance of payments. The aftermath of these deferments should help to maintain a high level of business investment in future years and thus contribute to sustained growth, because the house will have noticed that all these measures have a very stimulating effect, eventually, on the level of construction, and thus help to stretch out our business prosperity.

Resulting Budgetary and Cash Position

Drawing together the effects upon our revenues and budget position of the results of these various measures requires consideration of the effect of them on total expenditures and incomes and thus on our revenues from existing taxes. The department estimates that the budget measures as a whole should restrain the increase in Gross National Product to something over 8½ per cent instead of over 9 per cent as I mentioned before the tax changes. One must recognize that many imponderables must be assessed in any such calculation. We hope and expect that most of this reduction would consist of a smaller increase in costs and prices.

Taking this reduction in Gross National Product into account I estimate that our budgetary revenues, after the tax changes will be $8,300 million. This excludes the yield of the refundable tax which cannot properly be included in revenues for accounting purposes, though it has similar economic effects and I am assuming the statisticians will include it in revenues for the purpose of the national economic accounts.

With the consent of the House I would like to place on Hansard here a table summarizing our expected revenues from various sources making up this total of $8,300 million, and the tax revenues which go into the Old Age Security Fund. I am including for comparison our preliminary figures for revenues in the current fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: The table is as follows:

[Editor's Note: The table above referred to is as follows:]

Table 4

Budgetary and Old Age Security Fund Revenues

	1965-66 Preliminary $ million	1966-67 Forecast after Tax Changes $ million
Personal Income Tax	2,150	2,378
Corporation Income Tax	1,610	1,731
Non-resident withholding tax	170	177
Estate tax	107	101
Customs duties	676	749
Sales tax	1,385	1,475
Other duties and taxes	734	773
Total taxes	6,832	7,384
Non-tax revenues	841	916
Budgetary revenues	7,673	8,300
Old age security fund revenues	1,163	1,277
Total revenues	8,836	9,577

Setting these revenues against our budgetary expenditures of $8,450 millions leaves us with a budgetary deficit of $150 million for the new fiscal year—again disregarding the yield of the refundable tax. In terms of the national economic accounts, where I am including as revenue the yield of this refundable tax, I am forecasting a surplus of about $615 million, compared with $494 million in the year now closing. These figures do not include the accumulation of funds in the Canada Pension Plan, which will be shown separately in the statistics. Such accumulation will be an additional source of national savings, as will be the corresponding item for the Quebec plan. I shall include with the budget papers as an appendix to Hansard if the House will agree, tables giving these national economic accounts figures and their reconciliation with the budgetary accounts.

We have of course many substantial transactions outside our budgetary accounts which must be taken note of in assessing our overall position. Our loans and investments will be higher this coming year than in the year now closing, chiefly because of Expo 1967 whose cash requirements will be at a peak this year. Another large factor will be our disbursements of Municipal Development Loans which will be high as projects are completed and interim financing is refunded by drawing upon the loans we have approved. On the other hand our non-budgetary receipts, apart from public debt transactions, will be down modestly, apart from the refundable tax—which I would leave out of account for the present, as well as any change in the level of our exchange reserves. The net balance of non-budgetary items on this basis I would expect to be a requirement of about $350 million compared with $163 million last year. Adding this to the budget deficit would give a total requirement for cash of about $500 million this year compared to $187 million shown in the White Paper for the year now closing.

I do not propose that we should disburse the funds we receive from the refundable tax as we do normal revenue. Instead I would plan to hold it as an addition to whatever cash balances we would otherwise hold, unless economic circumstances change and make it economically desirable for us to borrow less and ease the pressure on the capital market.

I should also recall that in our balance of payments arrangements with the United States the government has agreed that it would aim to reduce its exchange reserves to a range that would centre around $2,600 million. This would involve a reduction of an order of magnitude of about $200 million from the figure at the beginning of this month. However, the Government of Canada may either have to purchase Canadian securities held in the United States or itself borrow in the United States, depending on the requirements of our balance of payments and the borrowing which others do outside Canada. Consequently I believe we should not try at this time to forecast the effect of these prospective changes in our reserves and related transactions upon our requirements for cash in Canada.

Our cash balances now, very near to the beginning of the year for which we are budgeting, are reasonably high. The extent to which we should draw them down rather than borrow to meet our cash requirements will be a matter to be decided upon from time to time during the year depending upon the state of the capital market, monetary policy and other economic circumstances. In this new fiscal year it is evident that our debt management decisions and operations will have an important role to play in our general economic policy.

I should point out that the accumulation and investment of funds under the Canada Pension Plan, though large, will have little bearing upon our accounts or financing since we lend all these funds, except working balances, to the provincial governments or their agencies in accordance with the Canada Pension Plan act.

Concluding Remarks

Before concluding I should like to make two points briefly. The Economic Council for Canada in its first Annual Review, in describing the conditions and policies which it considered necessary to reach our economic goals —as indicated in the Act establishing the Council—called for "Responsible restraint in both wage demands and business pricing policies, with clearer recognition that failure to maintain reasonable price and cost stability will frustrate the attainment of other basic economic objectives, such as balance of payments viability and high employment, while also comprising our capacity to achieve steadily advancing living standards for the Canadian people, reasonable profitability of business, and the maintenance of purchasing power of pensions and savings." This is a time when all Canadians should observe such restraint, in our own long term interest, and resist the temptation to exploit the bargaining positions which the present boom presents to many in the country.

Second, we need more saving on the part of Canadians, and more investment in the capital assets of Canada's economy—private and public. We need it now more than ever before in normal peacetime. A modest increase in saving at the cost of reducing personal expenditure in boom times is a means by which Canadians, as individuals, can contribute to the success of national economic policy. The poor that remain among us cannot be expected to save more this way—but those of average incomes and better can.

[Translation]

I need hardly say that as a new Minister of Finance I would have preferred the main features of my first Budget to be proposals to reduce taxation. But we can all take satisfaction from the fact that our problems are no longer the problems of overcoming slackness or stagnation but those of managing growth and prosperity. Our task is to sustain the longest economic expansion in Canadian history.

[English]

I want to take this opportunity to express my warm appreciation of the contribution to this expansion that was made by the policies of my predecessor the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon).

• (9:20 p.m.)

I believe the measures I have proposed tonight will serve to moderate but by no means eliminate the increase in demand on our economy this year. Our situation calls for some restraint in expansion; it does not call for deflation. As a nation we should ease up our foot on the gas pedal, not slam on the brakes. We want growth, but sustained growth, not erratic fluctuations. The keynote of this budget is moderation. This is what is needed today if we are to guide our economy toward successive years of expansion and continued prosperity.

23033—215½

RESOLUTIONS

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 945–1, 7905–1, 20925–1, 21045–1, 23505–1, 23705–1, 24100–1, 26325–1, 41105–1, 42205–1, 44043–1, 44047–1, 44125–1, 70500–1, 70505–1 and 84805–1, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
945–1	Feeds for use exclusively in the feeding of trout	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c. on and after July 1, 1968	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c. (on and after July 1, 1966)	25 p.c.
7905–1	Carnation cuttings in their first year of introduction	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
					12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	30 p.c.
20925–1	Potassium chloride (Applicable to December 31, 1967)	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free (Applicable to December 31, 1966)	25 p.c.
21045–1	Sodium hypochlorite in solution (Applicable to December 31, 1967)	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c. (Applicable to December 31, 1966)	30 p.c.
23505–1	Liquorice blocks, granules, paste or powder, not sweetened	Free	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	17½ p.c.
					Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
23705–1	Deuterium oxide or heavy water; uranium in the form of pigs, ingots, billets or bars	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c. on and after July 1, 1968	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c. (on and after July 1, 1966)	25 p.c.
24100–1	Litharge and mixtures or combinations of litharge with other materials, such mixtures or combinations to contain not less than 50 per cent by weight of litharge, for use exclusively in the manufacture of storage battery plates	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
					15 p.c.	20 p.c.	25 p.c.
26325–1	Compounds of tetramethyl lead, in which tetramethyl lead is the preponderant constituent by weight (Applicable to December 31, 1967)	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	25 p.c.	12½ p.c.	12½ p.c. (Applicable to December 31, 1966)	25 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
41105-1	Machines, logging cars, cranes, captive balloons having a volume of 150,000 cubic feet or more, blocks and tackle, wire rope, but not including wire rope to be used for guy ropes or in braking logs going down grade, and parts of all the foregoing, for use exclusively in the operation of logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier.	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	20 p.c	10 p.c 25 p.c. 20 p.c	12½ p.c. 25 p.c. 27½ p.c.	20 p.c. 35 p.c. 50 p.c.
42205-1	Concrete road-paving machines, self-propelling, end loading type, with a capacity of 21 cubic feet of wet concrete or more; concrete and asphalt road finishing machines; form graders; sub-graders; combination excavating and transporting scraper units; concrete mixers, transit type; dump wagons or trailers, having a capacity of 10 cubic yards or over, not self-propelled; back-filling machines and equipment, mounted on self-propelling wheels or crawling traction, semi- or full-revolving boom and scraper type; steam or air driven pile hammers or extractors; truck turntables; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, parts thereof.....	Free	7½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free Various	7½ p.c. Various	12½ p.c. Various
	Aircraft, not including engines, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:
44043-1	When of types or sizes not made in Canada..... on and after July 1, 1967	Free Free	Free 15 p.c.	27½ p.c. 27½ p.c.	Free Free	Free 15 p.c. (on and after July 1, 1966)	27½ p.c. 27½ p.c.
	Aircraft engines, when imported for use in the equipment of aircraft:
44047-1	When of types or sizes not made in Canada..... on and after July 1, 1967	Free Free	Free 15 p.c.	27½ p.c. 27½ p.c.	Free Free	Free 15 p.c. (on and after July 1, 1966)	27½ p.c. 27½ p.c.
44125-1	Guns and rifles of a class or kind not made in Canada; parts thereof.....	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free 10 p.c. 15 p.c.	7½ p.c. 22½ p.c. 20 p.c.	30 p.c. 35 p.c. 30 p.c.

44725–1	Well points, well screens, well strainers, pitless well heads; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, parts thereof	Free	7½ p.c.	12½ p.c.	Free 10 p.c.	7½ p.c. 22½ p.c.	12½ p.c. 35 p.c.
57210–1	Oriental rugs or carpets with pile hooked or knotted by hand	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	40 p.c.	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	40 p.c.
	and, per square foot		5 cts.	20 cts.		5 cts.	20 cts.
70505–1	Goods, as defined by regulations made by the Minister, imported by a settler for his household or personal use, if actually owned by the settler and in his possession and use before his removal to Canada, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various
	Any goods imported under this tariff item which are sold or otherwise disposed of within twelve months after importation are subject to the duties and taxes otherwise prescribed.
84805–1	Machines and apparatus and parts thereof (including motive power) of a class or kind not made in Canada and drilling mud, for use in the exploration, discovery, development and operation of potash and rock salt mines or for use in the production of crushed and screened rock salt	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. Resolved, that Schedule B to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out item 97052-1 and the enumeration of goods and the rate of drawback of duty set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following item, enumeration of goods and rate of drawback of duty:

Item No.	Goods	When Subject to Drawback	Portion of Duty (not including Special Duty or Dumping Duty) Payable as Drawback
97052-1	Machines; precision instruments and apparatus for heat treating, welding, sorting, testing, inspecting or correcting; control panels for use with the aforementioned machines and precision instruments and apparatus; all of the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada; accessories and attachments for use with the aforementioned machines and precision instruments and apparatus; parts of all the foregoing, not including consumable tools.	When used in the plants of manufacturers of automobiles and motor vehicles or of automobile or motor vehicle parts for the manufacture of automobiles and motor vehicles or of automobile or motor vehicle parts; or when used for the manufacture of dies, jigs, fixtures or moulds which are used in the production of automobile or motor vehicle parts	99 p.c.

3. Resolved, that Schedule C to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out item 99219-1 and the enumeration of goods set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following item and enumeration of goods:

99219-1	Used or second-hand mattresses or materials therefrom: This item does not affect in any manner: (a) mattresses imported under traiff items 70405-1, 70410-1, 70505-1, 70600-1, 70700-1, 70800-1, or under tourists' or travellers' vehicle permits; (b) materials from used or second-hand mattresses, when imported after having been cleaned and fumigated, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe, accompanied by such certificates as he may designate.

4. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the 30th day of March, 1966, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

INCOME TAX ACT RESOLUTION

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That for the 1967 and subsequent taxation years the deduction from individual income tax equal to the lesser of 10 per cent of basic tax or $600, described in subsection (4) of section 33 of the said Act, be replaced by a deduction equal to the lesser of 20 per cent of basic tax or $20, and that for the 1966 taxation year the deduction be equal to the aggregate of

(a) 4 per cent of basic tax or $240, whichever is the lesser, and

(b) 12 per cent of basic tax or $12, whichever is the lesser.

2. That for the 1967 and subsequent taxation years,

(a) a gift made to a charitable organization in Canada exempt from tax by paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 62 or to a corporation or trust resident in Canada exempt from tax by paragraph (f) or (g) of that subsection may be deducted in computing taxable income for the year only if the donee is a registered Canadian charitable organization, and for this purpose a registered Canadian charitable organization shall mean

(i) a charitable organization in Canada exempt from tax by paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 62 or a corporation or trust resident in Canada exempt from tax by paragraph (f) or (g) of that subsection, or

(ii) a branch, section, parish, congregation or other division of an organization described in (i) that receives donations on its own behalf, that has been registered in a prescribed manner with the Minister of National Revenue and has filed a return in prescribed form; and

(b) the aggregate of gifts that a taxpayer may deduct in computing his taxable income for a taxation year by virtue of paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 27 of the Act may include a gift made

(i) to the United Nations or any agency thereof,

(ii) to a university outside Canada prescribed to be a university the student body of which ordinarily includes students from Canada, or

(iii) to a charitable organization outside Canada to which Her Majesty in right of Canada has made a gift during the calendar year coinciding with or ending in the taxation year.

3. That with respect to bonds or other obligations issued after April 15, 1966, interest on such bonds or other obligations

(a) of or guaranteed by the Government of Canada,

(b) of the government of a province,

(c) of an agent of a province, an educational institution or a hospital, where repayment of the principal amount thereof and payment of the interest thereon is guaranteed by the government of the province, or

(d) of a municipal or local government established under provincial law, be exempt from the 15% non-resident withholding tax.

4. That with respect to taxation years ending after March 29, 1966, a corporation whose principal business during the year after that date was trading or dealing in bonds, shares or debentures will not be eligible to pay tax at the special 15 per cent rate of tax provided by section 70 of the said Act.

5. That with respect to dividends received after March 29, 1966, a non-resident-owned investment corporation may not deduct from its income in computing its taxable income a dividend received by it from another non-resident-owned investment corporation other than a dividend paid by a non-resident-owned investment corporation that had previous to the payment of the dividend, and at a time when it was taxable as a non-resident-owned investment corporation, paid dividends (other than dividends on which no tax was payable under the said Act) the aggregate amount of which is not less than the corporation's surplus determined in the manner prescribed for purposes of subsection (1a) of section 106 of the said Act for taxation years for which it was not taxable as a non-resident-owned investment corporation.

6. That for the 1966 and subsequent taxation years an employee may not deduct in computing his income an amount in respect of tuition fees paid on his behalf by his employer in excess of the amount included in his income in respect of the said fees.

7. That with respect to a benefit received after March 29, 1966 by virtue of a plan under which a corporation agrees to sell or issue shares to its employees, the rules described in subsection (2) of section 85A of the said Act that an employee may elect to use to calculate the amount of tax on the said benefit be amended so that the 20 per cent of the amount of the benefit referred to in subparagraph (ii) of paragraph (b) of the said subsection will not exceed $200, but that this amendment shall not apply if the right to acquire shares was given to the employee before 1965 and the benefit is received before January 1, 1967.

8. That it be declared for greater certainty that the expression "in Canada" in the said Act includes and has always included the sea bed and sub-soil of the submarine areas adjacent to the coasts of Canada in respect of which grants are issued, by the Government of Canada or of a province, of a right, license or privilege to explore for, drill for or take any materials or substances.

9. That with respect to operations that come into commercial production after March 29, 1966, the definition of a mine be amended so that all wells, the material that is extracted from sylvite deposits by means of which is sent to a single plant for processing, be deemed to be one mine, and that where an operation that would qualify as a mine by reason of an enactment based on this resolution came into commercial production within the three years preceding March 29, 1966, that part of the income of the operator thereof that is attributable to commercial production therefrom in the part of the first 36 months of such operation that falls after March 29, 1966, shall be deemed to be income from the operation of a mine.

10. That the date before which a new manufacturing or processing business must have commenced manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities in a designated area in order to qualify for an exemption from tax on its income from such operations for 36 months after the commencement of operations be changed from April 1, 1967 to April 1, 1968 in the case of a manufacturing or processing business where evidence satisfactory to the Minister of Industry is furnished to establish that:

(a) the facilities to be used in the said business were in the process of being constructed, installed or assembled on the site of the proposed business premises on March 29, 1966, and

(b) the said business is unable to commence manufacturing or processing in reasonable commercial quantities before April 1, 1967, by reason of an event beyond the control of the said business.

[Mr. Sharp.]

11. That the provisions of section 79C of the said Act dealing with deferred profit sharing plans be revised and in particular that the said provisions:

(a) authorize the Governor in Council to make regulations to define the property in which funds of a trust governed by a plan may be invested,

(b) require that property of a trust governed by a plan be vested in the employees who are beneficiaries under the plan, and

(c) provide rules for taxing amounts reallocated when employees who are beneficiaries under a plan cease to be beneficiaries under the plan.

12. That paragraph (u) of subsection (1) of section 11 be amended to provide that the deduction from income provided thereunder shall not apply with respect to amounts paid after March 29, 1966, to a trustee under a deferred profit sharing plan.

13. That section 79A of the Act, dealing with supplementary unemployment benefit plans, be amended to provide for the registration of such plans for the purposes of the said Act and to authorize the making of regulations governing the qualifications required of such plans for registration.

14. That with respect to each taxation year included in whole or in part in the period commencing May 1, 1966, and ending October 31, 1967, a special refundable tax at the rate of 5 per cent shall be payable by all corporations that are not exempt from tax under the said Act by virtue of section 62 thereof and by all trusts (other than trusts arising on death) calculated, in the case of a corporation, on a tax base (hereinafter called the corporate tax base) comprising the aggregate of

(a) its taxable income or loss,

(b) amounts deducted under paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 11 in computing its income,

(c) amounts deducted under paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 11 in computing its income,

(d) business losses sustained in other years that are deducted in computing its taxable income,

(e) the amount by which any amounts deducted under section 83A of the said Act in computing its income exceed any expenses described in that section actually incurred by it in the year,

(f) dividends received from corporations described in paragraphs (d) and (e) of subsection (1) of section 28 of the said Act that are deducted in computing its taxable income, and

(g) income from the operation of a mine not included in computing its income by virtue of subsection (5) of section 83 of the said Act, minus the aggregate of

(h) $30,000, but where the corporation is associated with one or more other corporations in the year, than 30-35ths of the amount allocated to it for the year under subsection (3) or (3a) of section 39 of the said Act,

(i) the aggregate of the payments made in the year by the corporation (not exceeding the aggregate of the amounts specified in sub-paragraphs (b) and (e)) each of which was a payment as or on account of principal made in retirement of a debt owed by the corporation or made into a sinking fund that under an agreement in writing entered into before March 30, 1966 was required to be established for the purpose of the retirement of a debt owed by the corporation, if

(i) the original term for full repayment of the debt was three years or longer,

(ii) the payment was required to be made in the year under an agreement in writing entered into before March 30, 1966, and

(iii) the payment was made to a person with whom the corporation was dealing at arm's length,

(j) payments made in the year by the corporation to redeem shares of its capital stock where such redemption was authorized by or on behalf of the corporation before March 30, 1966, or required by an agreement in writing entered into before that day, and

(k) the following taxes payable by the corporation in respect of the year, namely

(i) income tax payable to Her Majesty in right of Canada,

(ii) income tax and logging tax payable to Her Majesty in right of a province, and

(iii) income and profits taxes payable to the government of a country other than Canada, and in the case of a trust, on a tax base (hereinafter called the trust tax base) comprising the aggregate of

(l) its income or loss from all businesses carried on by it,

(m) its rental income not included in computing the amount determined under subparagraph (l),

(n) amounts deducted under paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 11 in computing the amounts specified in subparagraphs (l) and (m), and

(o) amounts deducted under paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 11 in computing the amounts specified in subparagraphs (l) and (m), minus the aggregate of

(p) $30,000,

(q) the aggregate of the payments made in the year by the trust (not exceeding the amount specified in subparagraph (n) each of which was a payment as or on account of principal made in retirement of a debt owed by the trust, if

(i) the original term for full repayment of the debt was three years or longer,

(ii) the payment was required to be made in the year under an agreement in writing entered into before March 30, 1966, and

(iii) the payment was made to a person with whom the trust was dealing at arm's length, and

(r) income and profits taxes payable in respect of the year to the government of a country other than Canada.

15. That for the purposes of the special refundable tax, the corporate tax base and trust tax base for any taxation year part of which is before May 1, 1966 or after October 31, 1967, shall be that proportion of the said tax base that the number of days in the taxation year that are after April 30, 1966 or before November 1, 1967, as the case may be, is of the total number of days in the taxation year.

16. That payment of the special refundable tax shall be made,

(A) in the case of a corporation, in monthly instalments on the last day of each month commencing with May 31, 1966, and ending with October 31, 1967, with each instalment calculated by reference to the corporate tax base for the same taxation year of the corporation as is used in computing or estimating the corporation tax payment that is due on the same day, and

(B) in the case of a trust, in equal instalments on June 30, September 30 and December 31, 1966, and in equal instalments on March 31, June 30 and September 30, 1967, calculated by reference to the trust tax base for the preceding taxation year or the estimated trust tax base for the taxation year in which the instalments are paid.

17. That each instalment of special refundable tax shall be,

(a) in the case of a corporation, that proportion of the tax calculated or estimated to be payable for the taxation year, that one is of the number of instalment payment dates in the taxation year that are after April 30, 1966, and before November 1, 1967, and

(b) in the case of a trust, one third of the tax calculated or estimated to be payable for the taxation year, and that

(c) the final adjusting payment, if any, shall be due, in respect of each taxation year, three months after the end of the taxation year, and

(d) a return in prescribed form shall be filed by a corporation within six months from the end of each taxation year, and by a trust within 90 days from the end of each taxation year.

18. That the special refundable tax shall be refunded together with interest at 5% per annum to taxpayers at such time or times as may be prescribed but not less than 18 months nor more than 36 months after the later of

(a) the day on which the payment of tax to be refunded was due; or

(b) the day on which the payment of tax to be refunded was paid.

EXCISE TAX ACT RESOLUTION

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That effective March 30, 1966,

(a) dies, jigs, fixtures and moulds,

(b) patterns for dies, jigs, fixtures and moulds, and

(c) tools for use in or attachment to production machinery that are for working materials by turning, milling, grinding, polishing, drilling, punching, boring, shaping, shearing, pressing or planing, when for use by manufacturers or producers directly in the manufacture or production of goods, be exempt from sales tax.

2. That the combined rate of tax under the said Act and the Old Age Security Act on the following goods (other than goods described in paragraph 1) shall, effective April 1, 1967, be reduced to 6 per cent and effective April 1, 1968, be reduced to zero, namely:

(a) machinery and apparatus sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them directly in the manufacture or production of goods,

[Mr. Sharp.]

(b) equipment sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them for exhausting dust and noxious fumes produced by their manufacturing or producing operations,

(c) safety devices and equipment sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them in the prevention of accidents in the manufacture or production of goods,

(d) equipment sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them in carrying refuse or waste from machinery and apparatus used by them directly in the manufacture or production of goods,

(e) gasoline-powered and diesel powered self-propelled trucks mounted on rubber-tired wheels for off-highway use exclusively at mines and quarries,

(f) internal combustion tractors, other than highway truck tractors, for use exclusively in the operation of logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier,

(g) logging wagons and logging sleds,

(h) machinery, logging cars, cranes, captive balloons having a volume of 150,000 cubic feet or more, blocks and tackle and wire rope; all the foregoing for use exclusively in the operation of logging, such operation to include the removal of the log from stump to skidway, log dump, or common or other carrier,

(i) pipes or tubes commonly known as "oil-country goods", being casing or tubing and fittings, couplings, thread protectors and nipples therefor; drill pipe; all of the foregoing for use in connection with natural gas or oil wells,

(j) machinery and apparatus, including drillings bits and seismic shot-hole casing, for use in exploration for or discovery or development of petroleum, natural gas or minerals,

(k) repair and maintenance equipment sold to or imported by manufacturers or producers for use by them in servicing goods described in subparagraphs (a) to (j) that are used by them,

(l) parts for goods described in sub-paragraphs (a) to (k),

(m) drilling mud and additives therefor,

(n) geophysical surveying precision instruments and equipment for use exclusively in prospecting for, or in the exploration and development of, petroleum, natural gas, water wells and minerals, or for geophysical studies for engineering projects, including the following: magnetometers; gravity meters and other instruments designed to measure the elements, variations and distortions of the natural gravitational force; field potentiometers, meggers, non-polarizing electrodes, and electrical equipment for making measurements in drill holes; instruments and equipment for seismic prospecting; geiger muller counters and other instruments for radioactive methods of geophysical prospecting; electrical and electronic amplifying devices and electrical thermostats designed to be used with any of the foregoing; repair parts, tripods and fitted carrying cases for any of the foregoing, and

(o) articles and materials for use in the manufacture of goods described in sub-paragraphs (a) to (n) but not including:

(p) goods for use by persons exempt from payment of consumption or sales tax under subsection (2) of section 34 of the said Act,

(q) office equipment or

(r) motor vehicles except those described in sub-paragraphs (e) and (h).

3. That effective March 30, 1966, the consumption or sales tax on goods described in paragraph 2 that are produced or manufactured in Canada shall be imposed, levied and collected at the rate of tax in effect at the time when the goods are delivered to the purchaser and shall be payable at the time or times provided in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 30 of the said Act.

4. That effective March 30, 1966, stained glass windows of handmade or hand rolled glass technically called antique glass and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

5. That effective March 30, 1966, natural gas be exempt from sales tax.

6. That effective March 30, 1966, fuel oil for use in the generation of electricity be exempt from sales tax.

7. That effective March 30, 1966, a person engaged in the business of retreading tires be deemed to be a producer or manufacturer.

8. That effective March 30, 1966, prepared surgical skin closure devices, plastic surgical drapes for use during surgical operations, artificial teeth and articles and materials for use in the manufacture of the foregoing be exempt from sales tax.

9. That effective March 30, 1966, the present exemption from sales tax for lobster pots, lobster traps, and materials to be used in the manufacture thereof be extended to include crab or shrimp pots, crab or shrimp traps, and materials to be used in the manufacture thereof.

10. That effective March 30, 1966, the present exemption from sales tax for steel pens and complete parts thereof for farm animals be extended to include steel stalls and complete parts thereof for farm animals.

11. That effective March 30, 1966, tobacco dryers, not including buildings, for use on the farm for farm purposes only, parts therefor and articles and materials for use in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

12. That effective March 30, 1966, vegetarian food products manufactured from vegetable and mineral ingredients to simulate meat products and materials for use in their manufacture be exempt from sales tax.

13. That effective July 1, 1966,

(a) dressers and dyers of furs shall be subject to sales tax on the aggregate of the current market value of raw furs dressed or dressed and dyed by them and the dressing or the dressing and dyeing charge, and

(b) dyers of furs who dye tax-paid dressed furs shall be subject to sales tax on the dyeing charge only, and that for the purpose of the said Act, dressed or dressed and dyed furs shall be deemed not to be partly manufactured goods and shall be deemed to be sold at the time they are delivered out of the possession of the dresser or dyer.

14. That effective July 1, 1966, where tax-paid dressed or dressed and dyed furs are delivered to a producer or manufacturer to be incorporated by him into articles on which sales tax is payable, a deduction from tax payable shall be allowed to such producer or manufacturer equal to the tax paid on the dressed or dressed and dyed furs less the amount of any deduction previously allowed in respect of such tax.

15. That effective March 30, 1966, where by the said Act or An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act, Chapter 12 of the Statutes of Canada 1963, a deduction from or refund of tax is provided for or a payment by the Minister in an amount equal to tax paid is provided for, and circumstances exist which render it difficult to determine the exact amount of such deduction, refund or payment by the Minister, the Minister may, with the consent of the person entitled to such deduction, refund or payment, grant a deduction or refund or pay an amount determined, in such manner as the Governor in Council may by regulation prescribe, to be the correct deduction, refund or amount.

16. That effective March 30, 1966, the tax imposed under section 5 of Schedule I of the said Act on electron tubes, not including cathode ray tubes, the duty-paid value or the sale price of which, as the case may be, does not exceed five dollars per tube, be changed from "fifteen per cent, but not less than ten cents per tube", to "ten cents per tube".

17. That effective March 30, 1966, the tax imposed under section 3 of Schedule I of the said Act on devices commonly known as lighters be changed from "ten per cent but not less than ten cents per device" to "ten cents per device".

18. That effective March 30, 1966, in calculating the sale price of goods manufactured in Canada for the purpose of determining the excise tax payable under Part IV of the said Act, there shall not be included the amount charged as price for or in respect of any other goods contained in or attached to the wrapper, package, box, bottle or other container in which the goods are contained.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE ON NATIONAL ACCOUNTS BASIS

	1964–65	1965–66 estimate	1966–67 forecast after tax changes
	(millions of dollars)
A. Revenue
1. Direct taxes, persons	2,630	2,758	3,045
2. Direct taxes, corporations[1]	1,477	1,624	1,770
3. Refundable tax	—	—	160
4. Withholding taxes	147	170	178
5. Indirect taxes	2,920	3,341	3,564
6. Investment income	571	630	758
7. Insurance and pension funds	580	607	662
8. Total revenue	8,325	9,130	10,137
B. Expenditure
1. Goods and services: defence	1,589	1,565	1,634
2. Goods and services: other	1,500	1,794	1,944
3. Transfers to persons	2,263	2,345	2,553
4. Interest on public debt	1,012	1,057	1,174
5. Subsidies	260	325	347
6. Capital Assistance	82	84	69
7. Transfers to other levels of government	1,340	1,466	1,801
8. Total expenditure	8,046	8,636	9,522
C. Surplus (+) or deficit (−)	+279	+494	+615

[1] Excludes taxes on government business enterprises. These taxes are included with government investment income.

[Mr. Sharp.]

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUE RECONCILIATION OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS PRESENTATIONS

	1964–65	1965–66 estimate	1966–67 forecast after tax changes
	(millions of dollars)
1. Budgetary revenue	7,180	7,673	8,300
2. Supplementary period adjustment[1]	−42	+44	+8
3. Extra-budgetary revenues
Old age security tax collections	959	1,170	1,276
Unemployment insurance employer-employee contributions	310	328	343
Government pension funds, employer-employee contributions	270	279	319
Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy	10	10	10
Interest receipts of social insurance and pension accounts	158	180	205
4. Corporate income tax[2]: excess (+) of accruals over collections	−162	−114	−109
5. Refundable tax	—	—	160
6. Profits before taxes (net of losses) of government business enterprises	226	247	299
7. Interest on loans, advances and investments	187	203	254
8. Less: Budgetary return on investments	−382	−477	−498
9. Less: Postal revenue	−231	−236	−245
10. Budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditures[3]	−125	−132	−147
11. All other adjustments to budgetary revenue[4]	− 33	− 45	− 38
12. Total revenue, National Accounts basis	8,325	9,130	10,137

[1] In the national accounts, revenues in the supplementary period are shifted to the following fiscal year.
[2] Taxes on government business enterprises are excluded from this item and included in item 6.
[3] See also line 8, expenditure reconciliation.
[4] These adjustments are largely revenue items not relevant for the national accounts such as proceeds from sales of existing assets.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE: RECONCILIATION OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS PRESENTATIONS

	1964–65	1965–66 estimate	1966–67 forecast after tax changes
	(millions of dollars)
1. Budgetary expenditure	7,218	7,707	8,450
2. Supplementary period adjustment[1]	− 53	+ 58	− 7
3. Expenditures of extra-budgetary funds
Old age security fund payments	885	929	1,035
Unemployment insurance benefits	335	306	310
Government pension fund payments	101	115	132
Prairie farm assistance payments	11	10	10
4. Transfers to extra-budgetary funds	− 63	− 65	− 67
5. Adjustment to place other government funds and Crown agencies on a disbursement basis[2]	33	11	57
6. Budgetary expenditures offset against income of government business enterprises—
Post Office expenditures	−211	−235	−253
Deficits of government business enterprises	− 92	−126	− 88
7. Reserves and write-offs	−43	− 35	− 26
8. Budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditure[3]	−125	−132	−147
9. Other adjustments to budgetary expenditure	50	93	116
10. Total expenditure, National Accounts basis	8,046	8,636	9,522
11. Surplus or deficit, National Accounts basis	+279	+494	+615
12. Surplus or deficit, budgetary basis	(− 38)	(− 34)	(−150)
13. Total, national accounts basis	8,325	9,130	10,137

[1] In the national accounts, expenditures on goods and services in the supplementary period are split evenly between adjacent fiscal years. Other expenditure items are shifted entirely to the next fiscal year.

[2] This adjustment replaces budgetary appropriations to various funds and agencies by the outlays actually made by these funds and agencies.

[3] The largest component of this item consists of revenue from sales of goods and services by the government sector. These sales appear as final expenditure of the private sector and are deducted to avoid double counting.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to participate in this debate tonight my thoughts, as I am sure do those of all hon. members, go back to those occasions when another member of the Progressive Conservative party so ably responded to the presentation of the budget. His easy ability to deal with a situation such as this is well remembered. I refer, of course, to the late Hon. George Nowlan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: His presence in the house is missed by all of us.

In delivering his budget tonight I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was trying to enact a suggestion he made earlier, that he did not want to put his foot on the brake, but to ease up on the accelerator. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it matters at all if you happen to have a jack under the back wheels.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Monteith: This budget tonight could be labelled several things. I think one might start out by calling it a procrastination budget. It is full of postponing, staggering all over the place. It is an innocuous budget. It is a dead end budget. I think this was fully appreciated by hon. members on the government side by their marked lack of applause. I noticed the greatest applause came when upon two occasions the minister congratulated and paid his respects to actions of the former minister of finance.

I do not know just what this all means. I do not know how far this is going to be carried. One hears rumours about what goes on in caucus, about arguments here and there. Who is going to win the battle, I am not too sure, but the applause gives one some cause for thought.

The most serious condition that exists today in the minds of all Canadians is concern about the ever spiralling increase in the cost of living. Canadians have been looking forward to some relief. They have been looking forward to leadership from the government. They have been looking forward to determined action from the government.

That leadership and determined action by the government are not just forthcoming. The picture that we see right now is the highest expenditure in Canadian history, the highest taxes in Canadian history, the highest cost of living in Canadian history, and there is nothing being done about that picture. I would like to ask this question: what do Canadians face right now in 1966? They face Canada Pension Plan deductions for the first time. They face higher provincial taxes. They face much increased municipal taxes, almost without exception and this, Sir, has been proven only today where, according to the Ottawa papers, this municipality has increased its mill rate by more than four mills. This is common across the country. My own municipality of Stratford is faced with an increase. Other cities are facing other great increases.

What is this going to do to the little man? The municipalities have to have these additional revenues. Take home pay has been reduced by the Canada Pension Plan. The individual must face higher provincial and municipal taxes, and tonight he is faced with increased federal taxes.

As an easement in this respect the minister should have accepted the suggestion of the Progress Conservative party to allow up to $500 municipal tax reduction for income tax purposes. This would have offered some relief to the heavy burden of the home owner. But instead there is no alleviation whatsoever, no determined action by the government. The people want action. The people want help, they are being taxed out of their homes. Incidentally, we need more homes, but how can people build them under today's tight money conditions?

Right now is when Canadians need help. The minister has suggested taking off the 11 per cent sales tax on machinery and equipment. I agree this is a step in the right direction. This will assist in exports. It will assist, I hope, in lowering somewhat the costs of production. We in Canada must be able to meet competition, but the minister has not done anything about decreasing the 11 per cent sales tax on building supplies and materials. Here again the average Canadian is hit. The government has been very lax in not acting before this. Think of the pensioners and those on fixed incomes.

I refer to last Thursday's Ottawa Journal, Mr. Speaker, to an article by Ken Smith, pointing out the increases over the past year right across Canada. For instance, he mentioned as a final item that in Newfoundland—and I am sure the Minister of Transport should be concerned about this—a dozen eggs cost 88 cents as compared with 66 cents a year ago. That is common across the country. This is what the housewife knows when she goes into a store to buy something for the table.

The Conservative Associations of Canada put this in a nutshell when they said—I think extremely modestly as the understatement of the year—that consumers are extremely concerned. I agree completely, and they should be concerned, Mr. Speaker.

The minister suggests that price increases are going to continue for another year. I ask, how can Canadians stand this inaction by government? There is nothing in tonight's budget for the old age pensioner. The Minister of Finance admits that prices are going to keep going up during 1966, but he does nothing for the old age pensioner.

In 1963 the old age pension was increased to $75 a month. In the meantime, due to the jumping cost of living, the value of that pension has dropped by nearly $5. In 1963 terms, old age pensioners are receiving only in the neighbourhood of $70. One cannot live today on $70 a month. One year from today, with the projected increase in the cost of living, which the minister admits is going to take place, that pension will be even less, but the government is doing nothing about it. It is not stopping inflation and it is not increasing the pension.

• (9:30 p.m.)

There are some income tax changes. We thought we were in for a decrease under the former minister a short while ago. The present minister comes in and we find that most of that decrease in taxes is taken away. I admit, however, there was an election in between. This is not the first time this sort of thing has happened. Whatever decrease in taxes was given to the people of Canada in the first place, a lot of that has been taken away of course by the Canada Pension Plan deductions. Now we are beginning to see the cost of the Pension Plan. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is safe to say at this stage at least that the government is not planning on another early election.

I can not see where there has been any vision exercised in the production of this budget. Canada has need of a creative budget. As I said earlier, it reveals the largest expenditure in Canada's history, the largest tax revenue in Canada's history and the highest cost of living in Canada's history. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, where this can lead.

There have been, as suggested by the minister, possibly some minor moves aimed at inflation. Probably the budget has made a few nudges on the international payments problem. What has it done to help those in need, like our old age pensioners, to provide the incentives for people to work, for industry to modernize, and for businessmen to get out and sell more around the world? What has it done to straighten out some of the relations with the provinces?

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this budget states a small view of Canada. We believe in courageous leadership, the development of this land and its resources; we believe in selling, selling hard—a hard sell—around the world. We have no second rate bunch of people in Canada. Let us get out and do something; let us open markets around the world; let us get more people into Canada; let us move ahead into the second century.

The budget is going to be scrutinized very carefully between now and when it comes up for debate in the House of Commons. There will be more said at that time. I cannot, however, but repeat that this has been a laissez faire budget. The minister has reversed quite a few of his predecessor's policies.

I was interested, Mr. Speaker, in an article in the Financial Post of March 26. It contains the opinions of some ten economists, lawyers, investment counsellors, businessmen, research directors and so on. I was particularly impressed by the remarks of one H. A. Hampson, vice president of the Power Corporation of Canada, former secretary to the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, and I understand at one time an employee in the treasury department. He makes some worthy suggestions. I will admit there are ten conflicting opinions. I think there are ten opinions and ten conflicting ones; it is hard to follow them all.

I was interested in three items in this article by Mr. H. A. Hampson. He starts out by saying that——the basic budget question as always is one of political leadership.

Mr. Speaker, that has been a lack. There is another sentence which I think is rather entertaining in some respects:

Sharp should remind his colleagues as forcibly as he can that soft soap—no matter how well-coated in Mother Martin's political marmalade—

[Mr. Monteith.]

And I am looking at the Secretary of State for External Affairs when I say this:

—still tastes to most voters suspiciously like super-suds.

Then after several suggestions by Mr. Hampson, he has this to say:

If Sharp does all these things, he might be the next Prime Minister.

I interpolate, without having to go to Quebec city last week end. But I am afraid he is never going to make it after this budget tonight.

Mr. Speaker, may I adjourn the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a long standing practice that the debate should be adjourned at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that we were going to proceed tomorrow with item No. 40 on the order paper, a measure to amend the Judges Act.

On motion of Mr. Favreau the house adjourned at 9.40 p.m.

[The following items were passed in Committee of Supply this day:]

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Citizenship—

5e. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions for language instruction and citizenship promotion, $40,000.

Indian affairs—

20e. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $500,000.

15e. Administration, operation and maintenance—To extend the purposes of Citizenship and Immigration Vote 15 of the main estimates for 1965-66 to authorize special payments in respect of social assistance to persons other than Indians residing on Indian Reserves and to authorize special payments in respect of the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children and to provide a further amount of $1,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Administration and general—

5e. Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by Canada with the provinces, to assist in the development of roads leading to resources, $600,000.

10e. Contributions to the provinces, pursuant to agreements entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by Canada with the provinces, of amounts equal to one half of the amounts confirmed by the provinces as having been spent by them for campground and picnic area developments, $100,000.

12e. Subventions under agreements entered into pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act in respect of electric power generated from eastern coal during the fiscal year 1965-66, $700,000.

Northern administration—

45e. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, $1.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

A—Department 1967 World Exhibition—

57e. Toward federal government's share of the cost of construction of an ice control structure, $800,000.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production and marketing—

Administration—

17e. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of the estimates, $42,439,500.

Plant and plant products—

35e. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $20,900.

Health of animals—

40e. Administration, operation and maintenance, $216,000.

45e. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $8,800.

Farm Credit Corporation—

90e. Estimated amount required to provide for the operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, $1,160,000.

95e. Payment to the Farm Credit Corporation for carrying out the purposes of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, $75,000.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

1e. Salaries and contingencies of the commission, $202,000.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

A—Department—accommodation services—

5e. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, acquisition of furniture and furnishings for government departments, $3,700,000.

15e. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings (including expenditures on works on other than federal property); provided that no contract may be entered into for new construction with an estimated total cost of $50,000 or more unless the project is individually listed in the details of estimates, $1.

Harbours and rivers engineering services—

30e. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, harbour and river works (including expenditures on works on other than federal property); provided that no contract may be entered into for new construction with an estimated total cost of $50,000 or more unless the project is individually listed in the details of estimates, $360,000.

Roads, bridges and other engineering services—

40e. Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of and plans and sites for roads, bridges and other engineering works—To extend the purposes of Vote 40 of the main estimates for 1965-66 to provide for the construction of a causeway and associated structures across Northumberland Strait, $1.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

A—Department—

11e. Reimbursement of the Queen's Printer's advance account for the value of stores which have become obsolete or unserviceable, $44,477.

Loans, Investments and Advances—

Defence Production—

L18e. To authorize the operation, in accordance with section 58 of the Financial Administration Act, of a revolving fund, (a) for the purpose of acquiring and managing stores, for manufacturing, producing, processing or dealing in stores or materials, and (b) for the purchase and supply of repair services for office furniture and equipment, and for freight services, for federal government departments and agencies; the balance of the revolving fund at any time shall, notwithstanding section 58, be determined after deducting therefrom all amounts due at such time by federal government departments and agencies; the amount to be charged to the revolving fund at any time not to exceed, $10,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

A—Department—

1e. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, $474,100.

5e. Representation abroad—operational, $96,000.

15e. Contributions to international multilateral economic and special aid programs as detailed in the estimates, $3,515,000.

External aid office—

35e. Economic, technical, educational, and other assistance as detailed in the estimates—To extend the purposes of External Affairs Vote 35 of the main estimates for 1965-66 to include authority for crediting the amount of the sub-vote for international development assistance to the special amount in the consolidated revenue fund established by External Affairs Vote 33d of Appropriation Act No. 2, 1965, $1.

B—International joint commission—

40e. Salaries and expenses of the commission and Canada's share of expenses of studies, surveys and investigations of the Commission, $76,200.

Supply—Items Passed

Loans, Investments and Advances—

External Affairs—

L22e. Addtional advance to the working capital fund of the food and agriculture organization in an amount of $83,900 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1966, which is, $90,600.

L23e. Additional advance to the working capital fund of the interim commission for the International Trade Organization in an amount of $6,278 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1966, which is, $6,750.

L96e. Additional advance to the working capital fund of the United Nations Organization in an amount of $53,561 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1966, which is, $57,900.

L97e. Additional advance to the working capital fund of the Intergovernmental Maritime Consultative Organization in an amount of $500 U.S., notwithstanding that payment may exceed or fall short of the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of February, 1966, which is, $540.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Fisheries management and development—

15e. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the subvote titles listed in the details of estimates, $150,000.

Special—

17e. Estimated amount required to recoup the fishing vessel indemnity account and the lobster trap indemnity account established under Vote 540 of the Appropriation Act No. 5, 1955 and Vote 527 of the Appropriation Act No. 6, 1956, to cover the net operating losses in the said accounts as at March 31, 1966, $56,000.

DEPARTMENT OF FORESTRY

5e. Contributions to the provinces in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the details of estimates, $150,000.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

15e. To provide that the amount appropriated by section 5(1) of the Area Development Incentives Act may be credited to the area development account from time to time as required; notwithstanding section 5(3) of the Act, to authorize payments out of the consolidated revenue fund up to the amounts credited to the account; and to authorize total commitments in respect of development grants under the Act in the current and subsequent fiscal years not exceeding $100,000,000, $1.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, INCLUDING THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

10e. Scholarships and grants in aid of research, $3,000,000.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Legal and other services—

1e. Administration, $35,500.

LEGISLATION

The Senate—

5e. General administration, $79,200.

7e. To deem, for the purpose of enabling the Governor in Council to grant an annuity under section 16 of an Act to make provision for the retirement of members of the Senate, that Senator J. W. Comeau was, at the time of his death, a person who had been granted an annuity under section 15 of the said Act, $1.

House of Commons—

20e. General administration, $220,000.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

A—Department—

Marine surveys and research—

15e. Administration, operation and maintenance, $100,000.

Mining and metallurgical investigations and research—

35e. Administration, operation and maintenance—To increase to $70,000 the grants in aid of mining and mineral processing research in Canadian universities, $1.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Medical services—

20e. Administration, operation and maintenance, $500,000.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1e. Postal services, $780,000.

PRIVY COUNCIL

10e. General administration, $37,000.

15e. Expenses of the royal commissions listed in the details of estimates, $150,000.

DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE

A—Department—

5e. Companies and corporations branch, $9,500.

Loans, investments and advances—

National Film Board—

L35e. To increase to $2,000,000 the amount by which expenditures that may be charged at any time to the National Film Board operating account established by section 18 of the National Film Act may exceed receipts shown in the said account; additional amount required, $850,000.

Public Printing and Stationery—

L65e. To amend Vote L33a of the Appropriation Act No. 10, 1964, by providing that, notwithstanding section 58 of the Financial Administration Act, the balance of the revolving fund at any time shall be determined after deducting therefrom all amounts due at such time by federal government departments and agencies, $1.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

A—Department—

General administration—

5e. Trade commissioner service—Administration, operation, and maintenance, $207,000.

10e. Exhibitions branch, $244,200.

15e. Canadian Government Travel Bureau, $251,000.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Treatment services—

30e. Operation and maintenance, $300,000.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

A—Department—

1e. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $44,500.

BUDGET PAPERS

presented by the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, M.P.,

Minister of Finance

for the information of Parliament in connection with the Budget of 1966-1967

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

1. to present a general economic review of 1965, bringing together in one place and in convenient form some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies, together with brief comments;

2. to present a preliminary review of the Government Accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

PART I
ECONOMIC WHITE PAPER FOR 1966

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
The Canadian Economy—Retrospect and Prospect	3412
Summary review of 1965	3412
Outlook for 1966	3425
Manpower in the Canadian Economy	3430
The labour force	3430
Employment	3435
Regional developments	3437
Output, Employment and Capital	3442
Output by industry	3442
Employment and output	3444
Physical capital and output capacity	3446
Incomes, Costs and Prices	3450
Labour income	3450
Corporation profits	3452
Production costs	3454
Price trends	3456
Demand	3462
Public and private investment	3462
Government expenditures	3466
Personal expenditure	3467
Exports of goods and services	3468
Changes in inventories	3470
The Government Sector	3471
Current position	3471
Trends in revenues and expenditures of governments	3475
Analysis by function	3477
The Balance of Payments	3484
Current account	3484
Capital account	3491
Source and Disposition of Saving	3499
Capital Markets	3501

The tables and charts in this Budget Paper are based upon estimates provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the Bank of Canada and other Government Agencies. Some of the figures appear for the first time; others have been published elsewhere. All 1965 estimates are preliminary and subject to revision.

ECONOMIC REVIEW FOR 1965

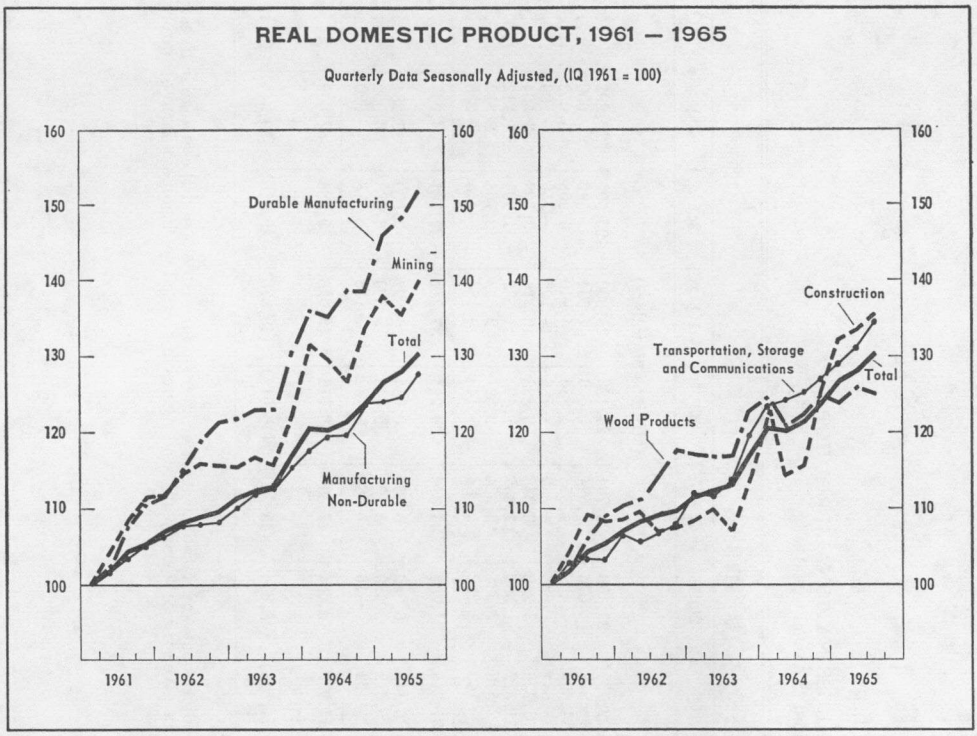
THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT

The Canadian Gross National Product in 1965 rose by rather more than nine per cent. The volume of output of goods and services was about six and a half per cent higher than in 1964, while prices rose by about three per cent. The 1965 advance in output was a continuation of the expansion which began in early 1961 and which has become the longest in Canadian history.

There have been three chief dynamic elements contributing to this strong and sustained expansion. Private investment, following a serious decline after 1957, began to recover strongly by 1964 and has now reached boom proportions. Exports have risen considerably since 1961. Government spending on both current and capital account has also increased substantially. Incomes and employment have risen accordingly and the number of unemployed has fallen; unemployment in the closing months of the year averaged well below four per cent of the labour force. Shortages of skilled labour developed during the period of peak activity in many areas of the country.

The increase in incomes was accompanied by further large gains in consumer expenditures on goods and services of all kinds. In conjunction with the investment programme and the high level of demand there was a sharp rise in imports in 1965. Despite the higher level of exports, there was a rise in the balance of payments deficit on current account.

Incomes



Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income rose more rapidly in 1965 than in any previous year of the current expansion. This was due to the sharp gains in employment achieved during the year, as well as the more rapid rise in average earnings, as hourly wage rates rose in many sectors. Among the different industries, labour income rose most rapidly in construction, where both employment and wage rates rose very rapidly. Sharp increases were also recorded in the service and trade sectors, and in manufacturing.

Profits continued to rise in 1965. The rate of advance appeared about the same as that of labour income, but was somewhat below that achieved in 1964. This rather slower rate of gain in 1965 was associated with higher costs, including wage costs, in many sectors. This development is typical of the more mature stages of the normal business cycle, and was observed in many manufacturing industries and some of the service industries. Other industries in the service group, however, recorded higher profits in 1965.

Net farm income as estimated in Gross National Product for the first three quarters showed a gain of about eight per cent over the same period in 1964. Farm cash receipts in the first three quarters of 1965, at $2,659 million, were up by over five per cent from the 1964 nine-month total. Receipts from sale of wheat, including participation payments, were down slightly, but receipts from sale of livestock were up very substantially.

Net income of non-farm unincorporated business, which rose by nearly six per cent in the nine months, was affected largely by improved net income in retail trade. Other changes were small and to some extent offsetting. Investment income also rose moderately during the nine months.

CHART 1

Expenditures

The major contributions to the increase in expenditures in 1965 came from the rise in consumer expenditures, investment outlays and government spending. Exports, after the sharp gains of 1964, expanded more slowly in 1965.

Purchases of goods and services for private consumption rose by around seven and a half per cent in 1965. Expenditures on durable goods rose less rapidly than they had done in 1964, while the rise in expenditures on services was well maintained and purchases of non-durables accelerated. Price increases account for some part in these changes, especially in the area of services and non-durable goods.

Public and private investment expenditures rose very rapidly in 1965, for the second year in succession. In particular, new investment in manufacturing plant and equipment increased by over 30 per cent in 1964 and 20 per cent in 1965, with some of the commercial services recording gains of almost equal magnitude. Housing and social capital expenditures were also a major feature in the 1965 capital programme, with both the needs of industrial expansion and the needs of continued population growth pressing upon available resources in many areas. As the year wore on, the ability of the construction industry to meet the demands placed upon it became strained in many areas, and the later months of the year saw a decline in new apartment starts as the competition for mortgage funds intensified.

TABLE 1

NATIONAL INCOME AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

(Seasonally adjusted at annual rates)

	1964				1965
	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
1. Wages, salaries, and supplementary labour income	22,732	23,100	23,704	24,128	25,000	25,592	26,292	.....
2. Military pay and allowances	572	576	584	600	604	592	600	.....
3. Corporation profits before taxes	4,596	4,468	4,376	4,880	4,940	4,908	5,052	.....
4. Deduct: Dividends paid to non-residents[1]	−684	−588	−680	−788	−708	−756	−796	.....
5. Rent, interest, and miscellaneous investment income	3,220	3,252	3,248	3,388	3,416	3,508	3,504	.....
6. Accrued net income of farm operators from farm production[2]	1,372	1,680	1,432	1,404	1,532	1,564	1,712	.....
7. Net income of non-farm unincorporated business[3]	2,548	2,584	2,624	2,592	2,632	2,764	2,812	.....
8. Inventory valuation adjustment	−140	−292	88	−140	−184	−448	−236	.....
9. National Income	34,216	34,780	35,376	36,064	37,232	37,724	38,940	.....
10. Indirect taxes less subsidies	6,140	6,340	6,500	6,344	6,892	7,060	7,284	.....
11. Capital consumption allowances and miscellaneous valuation adjustments	5,512	5,580	5,596	5,740	5,900	6,088	6,052	.....
12. Residual error of estimate	52	−16	−80	−132	−116	8	−220	.....
13. Gross National Product at Market Prices	45,920	46,684	47,392	48,016	49,908	50,880	52,056	.....
14. (Gross national product at market prices excluding accrued net income of farm operators)	(44,548)	(45,004)	(45,960)	(46,612)	(48,376)	(49,316)	(50,344)	.....

[1]Includes the withholding taxes applicable to this item.

[2]Includes an arbitrary smoothing of crop production and standard seasonal adjustments for withdrawals of grain from farm stocks and the change in livestock items. Because of the arbitrary elements, too precise an interpretation should not be given the seasonally adjusted figures of accrued net income of farm operators.

[3]Includes net income of independent professional practitioners.

SOURCE: DBS The National Accounts.

TABLE 2

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
(Seasonally adjusted at annual rates)

	1964				1965
	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
1. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services	28,852	29,040	29,684	30,148	30,512	31,344	32,120	.....
2. Government expenditure on goods and services	8,564	8,524	8,544	8,796	9,120	9,412	9,596	.....
3. Business gross fixed capital formation[1]	8,944	8,828	8,720	9,380	10,052	10,236	10,776	.....
New residential construction	2,176	1,908	1,872	2,128	2,156	2,144	2,160	.....
New non-residential construction	3,164	3,244	3,376	3,588	3,948	4,040	4,348	.....
New machinery and equipment	3,604	3,676	3,472	3,664	3,948	4,052	4,268	.....
4. Value of physical change in inventories—total[2]	452	448	388	232	1,076	936	436	.....
Non-farm business inventories	572	616	804	48	944	768	700	.....
Farm inventories and grain in commercial channels	−120	−168	−416	184	132	168	−264	.....
5. Exports of goods and services[3]	9,996	10,604	10,756	10,404	10,552	10,892	11,244	.....
6. Imports of goods and services[3]	−10,840	−10,772	−10,784	− 11,076	−11,520	−11,932	−12,336	.....
7. Residual error of estimate	−48	12	84	132	116	−8	220	.....
8. Gross National Expenditure at Market Prices	45,920	46,684	47,392	48,016	49,908	50,880	52,056	.....

[1] Includes private businesses and institutions, and publicly owned business enterprises.

[2] The book value of inventories is deflated to remove the effect of price changes and the derived "physical" change is then valued at average prices of the current period to obtain the value of physical change. The difference between this value of physical change and the change in book value is called the inventory valuation adjustment.

[3] Minor adjustments have been made to the figures of current receipts and payments shown in Table 37 to achieve consistency with the other component series.

SOURCE: DBS The National Accounts.

TABLE 3

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE IN CONSTANT (1957) DOLLARS

(Seasonally adjusted at annual rates)

	1964				1965
	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
1. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services	26,252	26,316	26,812	27,156	27,384	27,904	28,496	.....
2. Government expenditure on goods and services	7,140	7,076	6,996	7,184	7,372	7,516	7,608	.....
3. Business gross fixed capital formation	7,684	7,476	7,360	7,848	8,248	8,288	8,696	.....
New residential construction	1,796	1,552	1,504	1,692	1,692	1,656	1,664	.....
New non-residential construction	2,764	2,808	2,904	3,048	3,288	3,292	3,516	.....
New machinery and equipment	3,124	3,116	2,952	3,108	3,268	3,340	3,516	.....
4. Value of physical change in inventories—total	444	424	336	208	1,012	896	396	.....
Non-farm business inventories	568	596	744	32	896	728	660	.....
Farm inventories and grain in commercial channels	−124	−172	−408	176	116	168	−264	.....
5. Exports of goods and services	9,128	9,648	9,672	9,404	9,584	9,832	10,020	.....
6. Imports of goods and services	−9,472	−9,364	−9,436	−9,740	−10,068	−10,452	−10,776	.....
7. Residual error of estimate	−44	12	76	116	100	−8	188	.....
8. Gross National Expenditure at Market Prices	41,132	41,588	41,816	42,176	43,632	43,976	44,628	.....

SOURCE: DBS The National Accounts.

TABLE 4

PER CENT CHANGES IN MAJOR EXPENDITURE COMPONENTS[1]

	3Q 1964 to 4Q 1964	4Q 1964 to 1Q 1965	1Q 1965 to 2Q 1965	2Q 1965 to 3Q 1965	9 months 1964 / 9 months 1963	9 months 1965 / 9 months 1964
Personal expenditure	1.6	1.2	2.7	2.5	7.4	7.3
Non-Durables	2.5	−0.6	3.6	1.7	5.7	6.8
Durables	−6.6	7.0	2.7	8.0	13.9	8.1
Services	2.9	1.8	1.6	1.7	7.8	7.7
Government expenditure	2.9	3.7	3.2	2.0	6.9	9.7
Federal	−0.7	7.3	−1.0	5.4	3.8	6.4
Provincial-Municipal	4.9	1.8	5.5	0.2	8.7	11.6
Investment expenditure	7.6	7.2	1.8	5.3	18.6	17.3
Residential	13.7	1.3	−0.6	0.7	19.2	8.5
Non-residential	6.3	10.0	2.3	7.6	16.7	26.1
Machinery and equipment	5.5	7.8	2.6	5.3	20.1	14.1
Exports	−3.3	1.4	3.2	3.2	18.0	4.2
Inventories: total $m	−156	+844	−140	−500	−35	+387
farm $m	+600	−52	+36	−432	−599	+247
non-farm $m	−756	+896	−176	−68	+564	+140
Total final demand	1.5	4.0	2.5	2.2	10.6	9.3
Total final demand ex. inventories	1.8	2.6	2.7	3.0	10.8	8.7
Total domestic demand	2.6	4.5	2.3	1.9	9.1	10.4
Total domestic demand ex. inventories	2.9	2.8	2.6	2.9	9.3	9.6

[1]Quarterly magnitudes seasonally adjusted.

The Budget—Appendix

CHART 2

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE AND SELECTED COMPONENTS IN CURRENT DOLLARS[1] BY QUARTERS, 1953 — 1965

(1) Seasonally Adjusted and at Annual Rates

Government purchases of goods and services in 1965 rose by about ten per cent from the 1964 level. Spending by provincial governments and municipalities increased more than this, while total spending on goods and services by the

TABLE 5

CHANGES IN COMPONENTS OF GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE OVER THREE POSTWAR EXPANSIONS

—	1954–1956	1958–1960	1961–1965
	Annual compound growth rate over period of expansion
	10 Quarters after 2Q 1954 trough	8 Quarters after 1Q 1958 trough	18 Quarters after 1Q 1961 trough
Personal expenditure	7.6	5.4	6.8
Non-durables	6.0	3.8	6.0
Durables	9.6	4.6	10.8
Services	8.8	8.0	6.4
Government expenditure on goods and services	9.6	6.1	7.2
Federal	5.6	−1.3	3.6
Provincial-Municipal	13.6	12.2	9.2
New residential construction	8.8	−1.0	9.6
New non-residential construction	22.4	−4.2	12.0
New machinery and equipment	15.2	5.4	12.0
Non-farm business inventories	(+$454 m)	(+$806 m)	(+$ 87 m)
Farm and grain inventories	(+$222 m)	(+$ 86 m)	(+$ 15 m)
Exports of goods and services	9.2	7.3	9.6
Imports of goods and services	14.0	6.9	8.8
Gross National Expenditure at Market Prices	10.4	6.7	8.0
Final Demand (ex inventories)	9.6	4.9	8.0
GNE in Constant (1957) Dollars	8.0	4.3	6.4
Real Non-Agricultural Gross Domestic Product	8.0	4.6	6.0
Per Capita GNE in Constant (1957) Dollars	5.2	2.0	4.4

federal government rose somewhat less. Spending on non-defence items rose substantially at the federal level, while defence spending was relatively stable. Outlays on capital goods by all levels of government combined increased sharply.

Exports rose less rapidly in 1965 than they did in 1964. This was partly a reflection of the timing of wheat shipments under special contracts, which caused total 1964 exports to rise steeply from 1963 levels, and thus affected the 1965 record by reducing its rate of advance. Non-farm exports rose by some ten per cent in 1965, slightly exceeding the rate of gain in Gross National Product. Exports to the United States in 1965 rose by about thirteen per cent. In the entire current period of expansion, exports have contributed relatively heavily to the total growth. Relative rates of growth in the various demand sectors are shown in Tables 4 and 5, and are illustrated in Chart 2.

TABLE 6

PER CENT CONTRIBUTION OF GNE COMPONENTS TO TOTAL CHANGE IN GNE—THREE POSTWAR EXPANSIONS

—	2Q 1954 to 4Q 1956 (10 quarters after trough)	1Q 1958 to 1Q 1960 (8 quarters after trough)	1Q 1961 to 3Q 1965 (18 quarters after trough)
Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services	43.6	48.9	53.2
Non-durable goods	18.8	17.6	23.4
Durable goods	7.0	4.8	10.0
Services	17.8	26.5	19.8
Government expenditure on goods and services	15.6	15.5	16.7
Federal	4.7	−1.5	3.2
Provincial and Municipal	10.9	17.0	13.5
Business gross fixed capital formation	31.6	0.1	27.7
New residential construction	3.7	−0.7	4.9
New non-residential construction	16.1	−4.9	11.6
New machinery and equipment	11.8	5.7	11.2
Non-farm business inventories	15.1	33.8	2.5
Farm inventories and grain in commercial channels	7.4	3.6	0.4
Exports of goods and services	17.6	19.9	25.2
Imports of goods and services (−)	−31.0	−21.8	−25.8
GNE (ex error)	100.0	100.0	100.0

Agriculture

The achievements of the agricultural sector in 1965 were significant. Last year's weather was, on the whole, favourable. In addition to this, however, it may be noted that the long-term improvement in agricultural skills has been sustained, with the improvement in livestock and plant varieties resulting from continued active research also contributing to the rise in real output from the farms. Prairie grain acreage was very slightly higher than in 1964 and the crop yield, in bushels per acre, was high. Conditions were not uniformly favourable for all crops in all areas, and production of vegetables and dairy products in the eastern part of the country in the first half of the year was reduced by severe drought. Despite this, however, and despite an accelerated flow of workers out of the farm sector into non-agricultural industries, agricultural output rose by six per cent in the year, from a 1964 level which was itself good in terms of the average of the preceding ten years.

Costs and Prices

Wage rates on the whole advanced more rapidly in 1965 than in the previous year. This trend reflected the growing maturity of the present period of expansion and accompanied the generally higher level of utilization of resources achieved during the course of the year. In manufacturing as a whole, average hourly earnings[1] were 5.0 per cent higher than they were in 1964. The advance a year earlier had been 3.6 per cent. The acceleration was slightly more marked in durable than non-durable goods production. In construction, the advance in 1965 was 8.5 per cent, compared to a 5.1 per cent gain the previous year. Productivity gains in general were below these levels, so that labour costs per unit of output rose across a wide selection of goods-producing industries.

Some other producers' costs also rose in 1965. In some cases, this was directly related to increased federal sales taxes on construction materials and production equipment. In other cases, raw material and semi-manufactured component prices advanced due to other factors, as indicated in the various industry selling price indexes, which exclude taxes. Some of these changes are summarized in Table 7, and the changes recorded in all major items in the indexes are shown on Chart 3. Bought-in services such as truck transportation and insurance showed some price advances. Some of these higher costs led to

TABLE 7

SELECTED INDUSTRY SELLING PRICE INDEXES 1961 TO 1965
(1956=100)

	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Slaughtering and meat packing	113.5	119.4	115.4	111.1	120.8
Men's clothing	103.8	106.2	109.3	111.0	113.8
Sash, door and planing mills	100.4	100.3	101.9	104.6	107.9
Pulp mills	93.7	96.4	96.8	100.1	102.7
Steel ingots	121.1	120.0	119.8	120.3	122.2
Motor vehicles	116.8	119.1	119.8	120.2	119.1
Cement	106.5	108.4	110.8	112.3	115.4
Soaps	113.7	113.6	113.9	114.9	117.6

	1962/1961	1963/1962	1964/1963	1965/1964
Per cent changes:
Slaughtering and meat packing	+5.2	−3.4	−3.7	+8.7
Men's clothing	+2.3	+2.9	+1.6	+2.5
Sash, door and planing mills	−0.1	+1.6	+2.6	+3.2
Pulp mills	+2.9	+0.4	+3.4	+2.6
Steel ingots	−0.9	−0.2	+0.4	+1.6
Motor vehicles	+2.0	+0.6	+0.3	−1.0
Cement	+1.8	+2.2	+1.4	+2.8
Soaps	−0.1	+0.3	+0.9	+2.3

SOURCE: DBS Prices and Price Indexes.

price adjustments in final product markets, as was the case in construction, where tender prices during the latter half of the year were substantially higher than originally estimated in some parts of the country. In other cases, these cost trends were reflected in lower profit margins than those recorded during earlier years of the present expansion.

[1]These figures are based on data collected from establishments employing 15 persons or more, and do not necessarily reflect changes in earnings in industries, such as construction, where smaller establishments or sub-contracting account for a significant part of total employed.

The Budget—Appendix

CHART 3

Consumer prices moved up during the year, partly in response to identifiable causes. The consumer price index for the year as a whole stood at 138.7 (1949=100), having advanced by 2.4 per cent over 1964. Table 8 shows the movement of the index and its components, and gives an indication of the areas in which the rise was most marked. Food prices in the early part of the year were affected by drought conditions in the eastern part of Canada and the United States, which led to higher prices for many vegetables. From mid-year

TABLE 8

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, 1961-1965

(1949=100)

—	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
All items	129.2	130.7	133.0	135.4	138.7
Food	124.0	126.2	130.3	132.4	135.9
Housing	133.2	134.8	136.2	138.4	140.9
Clothing	112.5	113.5	116.3	119.2	121.4
Transportation	140.6	140.4	140.4	142.0	147.3
Health and personal care	155.3	158.3	162.4	167.8	175.5
Recreation and reading	146.1	147.3	149.3	151.8	154.3
Tobacco and alcohol	116.3	117.8	118.1	120.2	122.3
All commodities	120.0	121.0	123.1	124.7	126.7
Durables	116.1	115.3	115.5	114.5	114.6
Non-durables	120.7	122.1	124.6	126.7	129.2
Non-durables excluding food	118.3	119.1	120.3	122.4	124.1
Services	155.4	157.6	159.8	163.8	170.6

SOURCE: DBS Prices and Price Indexes

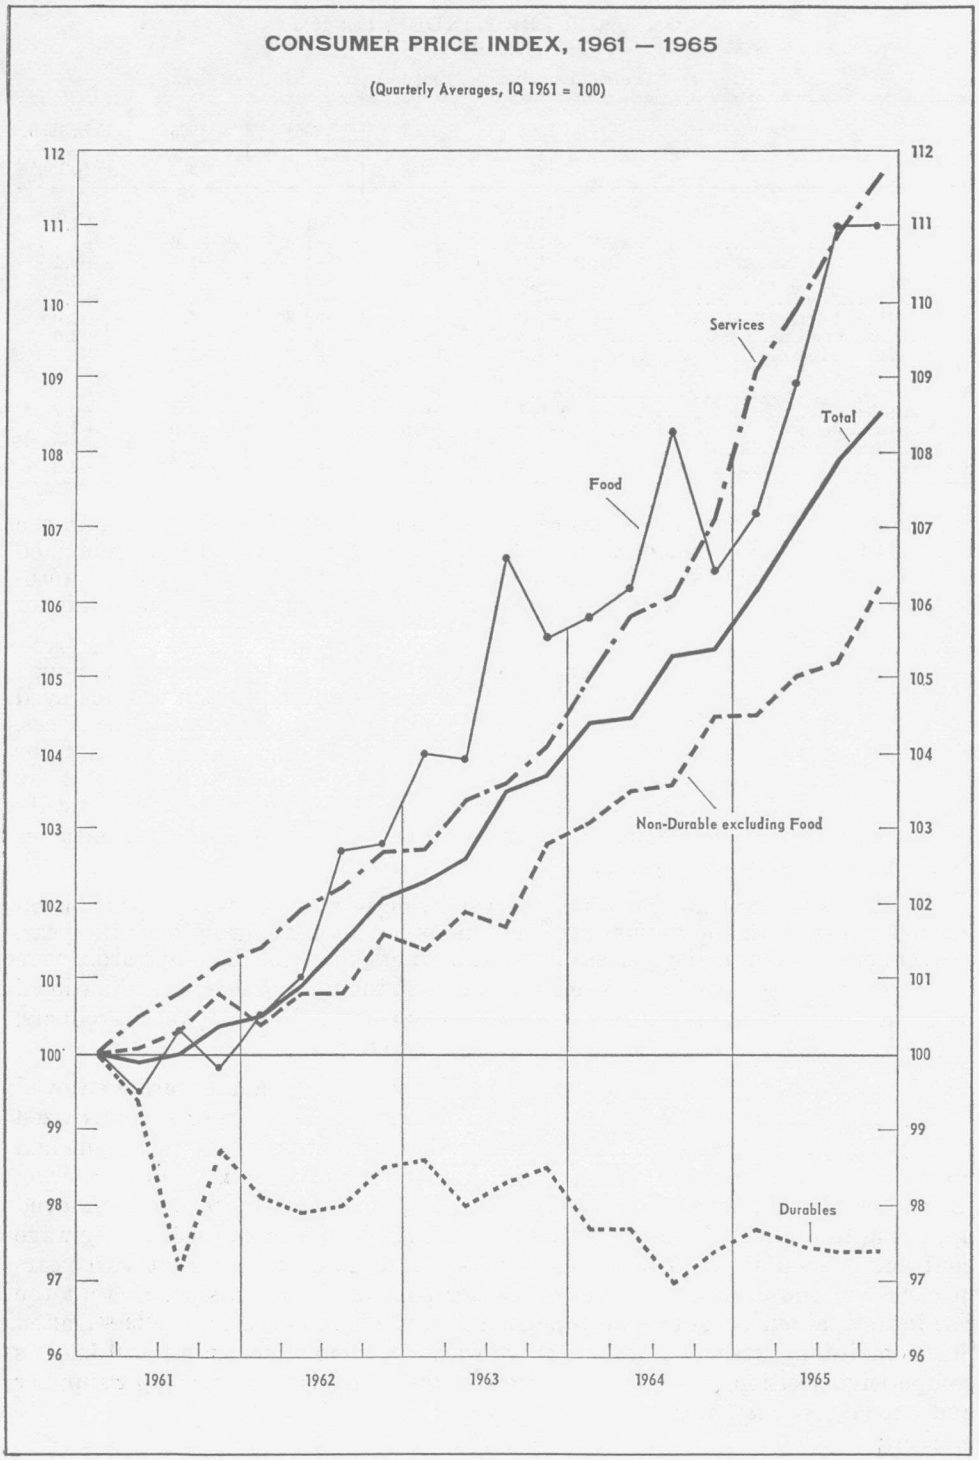
TABLE 9

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, 1961-1965
(1949=100)

(Percentage changes, year to year)

	1962 / 1961	1963 / 1962	1964 / 1963	1965 / 1964	Feb. 1966 / Feb. 1965
All items	+1.2	+1.8	+1.8	+2.4	+3.6
Food	+1.8	+3.2	+1.6	+2.6	+7.1
Housing	+1.2	+1.0	+1.6	+1.8	+2.1
Clothing	+0.9	+2.5	+2.5	+1.8	+3.2
Transportation	−0.1	–	+1.1	+3.7	+2.5
Health and personal care	+1.9	+2.6	+3.3	+4.6	+2.0
Recreation and reading	+0.8	+1.4	+1.7	+1.6	+2.0
Tobacco and alcohol	+1.3	+0.3	+1.8	+1.7	+1.3
All commodities	+0.8	+1.7	+1.3	+1.6	+3.5
Durables	−0.7	+0.2	−0.9	+0.1	−0.7
Non-durables	+1.2	+2.0	+1.7	+2.0	+4.2
Non-durables excluding food	+0.7	+1.0	+1.7	+1.4	+2.0
Services	+1.4	+1.4	+2.5	+4.2	+3.2



on, however, the major pressures came from a shortage of meat supplies in the United States, as a result of which meat prices rose sharply and have remained high. Other specific price gains included medical insurance premiums and automobile insurance rates, the latter reflecting higher accident rates and higher average claims.

In addition to this, however, the services component of the index moved upward, as the approach towards full utilization of resources which was achieved in 1965 was accompanied by continued upward movement of prices of services. This is an area in which the labour content of output is high, productivity gains are more difficult to achieve, or even to measure, and gains in wage rates are more directly reflected in prices. Price changes in this sector characteristically lag others in the cyclical context. Chart 4 illustrates the trends in the consumer price index during recent years.

Changes in the components of the wholesale price index reflected the trend in food prices, with the animal products index advancing sharply over the year. Movements of commodity prices on world markets, many of them upwards, were also reflected in the wholesale price index due to the importance of international trade in these commodities in the Canadian economy. Prices of wood products, affected by both the construction boom and tax changes, also moved up.

Until 1965, Canadian prices and unit labour costs in manufacturing enjoyed a relatively favourable record compared to that of many other industrialized countries. Only in the United States, where labour costs per unit of output had been stable since mid-1961, was the performance better than in Canada. During the course of 1965, however, Canadian unit labour costs in manufacturing moved up, rising to a level 2.3 per cent higher than they had been in 1964. Many wage contracts signed in 1965 provided for wage rate gains in the next two years in excess of those negotiated in the earlier part of the expansion, so that the rise in unit labour costs may well persist. If this were to occur, while the United States maintains greater stability, there would develop a worsening of Canada's competitive position vis-à-vis the United States, which is both our major supplier and our largest customer.

CHART 4

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX, 1961 — 1965
(Quarterly Averages, IQ 1961 = 100)
112
111
110
109
108
107
106
105
104
103
102
101
100
99
98
97
96
Services
Total
Food
Non-Durable excluding Food
Durables
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965

Outlook for 1966

The economic climate changed during 1965, from one of moderate expansion in the early part of the year, to one of boom at present. This change was brought about by the rapidly rising level of public and private investment superimposed on rising demands by consumers, governments and from exports. Renewed expectations of continued expansion in the United States at this time represent a dramatic shift from the spring months, when there was a widespread belief that the expansion might be slowing down. As the year came to a close, a basic question in both countries was whether production could expand fast enough to meet the anticipated rapid increase in aggregate demand, so that economic stability would continue to be maintained.

In Canada, where the rate of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, was down to 3½ per cent in the latter months of 1965, and where the actual rate of unemployment was well below that level in many areas, it was evident that slack resources in a position to be used economically by expanding general demand had all but disappeared. Markets showed signs of tightness. In these circumstances the emphasis in economic policy shifted from one of bringing unemployed resources into production through expansion of general demand, to one of ensuring that the long expansion would be sustained in accordance with the growth of capacity to produce. A higher rate of growth depends on improving the capacity and productivity of labour and capital. In the earlier stages of the upswing, the authorities had been able to bring into use unemployed resources through broad expansionary measures. The success of these measures in taking up slack means that the economy is now faced with problems of sustaining growth and economic stability by avoiding excesses rather than with problems of cyclical expansion.

The recent survey of public and private investment intentions in the Canadian economy indicates that plans have been made for a further substantial increase in fixed capital outlays by both government and business in 1966, similar to the increases of the preceding two years. In addition, there will be continued increases in other public expenditures on current account by the federal, provincial and municipal governments. With sustained increases in income, personal expenditures on durable goods, non-durable goods and services should rise considerably. Exports can be expected to increase further. This will reflect the continued rapid expansion foreseen in the United States, where a very large part of total Canadian production is sold, as well as the favourable world markets for Canadian wheat. The rate of increase in exports to the United States is expected to be substantially greater than that to the United Kingdom, Japan and other countries. Wheat sales to Russia and China and high levels of livestock production will continue to stimulate the farm economy, which will thereby be enabled to maintain its contribution to the general prosperity.

Taken together, these expenditures represent a total of final demand, in current prices, which is expected to exceed 1965 demands by about as much as those of 1965 exceeded those of 1964. The productive facilities of the Canadian economy are now close to their maximum rate of utilization, and the present and anticipated rate of expansion in demand appears likely to strain the resources currently available to meet it.

In circumstances such as this, additions to demand beyond this point serve to raise prices or draw imports from abroad, rather than adding much to domestic economic activity. Expansion and growth become more dependent on measures which improve the supply capabilities of the economy, through increases in mobility, reductions in bottlenecks and a general upgrading of the quality of labour and capital.

The assessment of the outlook for the various sectors contained in these pages represents an appraisal and projection of existing trends, on the basis of the statistical and other survey evidence available at the present time.

Public and Private Investment Intentions

The investment intentions for 1966 currently reported indicate a continued expansion in both public and private outlays. On the basis of these reports, which are here discussed without making any allowance for any adjustments or shortfalls that may occur during 1966, it appears that demand for new housing construction will not be greatly changed, capital spending by governments, especially by provinces and their agencies, will again rise in response to growing needs, and the business sector will continue its present sharp expansion.

In the public and semi-public areas, the main outlays will be for universities, schools, hospitals, roads and highways. In addition, publicly-owned water and power utilities and other enterprises, as well as other provincial and municipal facilities, are responding to growing requirements by further expansion and new development.

In the business area, the remarkable expansion in investment in manufacturing continues unabated. In broad terms, the present expansion in capacity in manufacturing differs from that of 1955 to 1957, in that it appears less heavily oriented to processing raw materials, while placing somewhat more emphasis on advanced processing. Manufacturing investment is still based to a considerable degree on the resources which are Canada's natural endowment, but the degree of processing is now more advanced. Industries such as petro-chemicals, synthetic textiles, communications equipment, secondary iron and steel products, transportation equipment and appliances, have come to play a larger role. Basic industries such as mining, pulp and paper, and primary iron and steel products will also continue to expand their facilities in the current year.

In total, the rate of expansion of new facilities in manufacturing is expected to amount to 20 per cent in 1966. There was some shortfall in the achievement of planned outlays in 1965, and efforts will be made to make good this shortfall in the current year.

Substantial increases in new investment are also expected to take place in private power and gas utilities, retail trade and financial and commercial services. These and other developments are reviewed more fully in the recently tabled "Public and Private Investment Outlook, 1966".

It is worthy of note that a substantial part of business investment, consisting of machinery and equipment required to expand productive facilities in Canada, is not produced by domestic manufacturing resources. This equipment must therefore be imported. These imports, while contributing to Canada's economic growth and development, serve to absorb expenditures which would otherwise add to domestic demand pressures. At the same time, these expenditures add to the deficit on the Canadian balance of international payments.

The Second Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada referred to the high capital requirements implicit in the particular industrial structure of Canada, which is heavily oriented towards mining, electric power, certain kinds of manufacturing, and rail and air transportation. These industries all are highly capital intensive in nature. This distinctive feature of Canada's industrial structure shows up in one of the highest overall ratios of the stock of capital to the volume of production that is found anywhere. The new investments planned for 1966 should increase the stock of capital at about the same rate as the volume of output can be expected to increase. Accordingly, very high rates of utilization of the existing capital equipment will continue to be required.

The construction industry experienced a more rapid increase in output and employment than any other during the past year and is probably operating at close to its maximum capacity. The demands indicated by the investment intentions survey imply a further large increase in output of construction in the coming year.

Residential construction has already levelled off and may be expected to continue at its present rate in 1966. There will likely be a small increase in the value of construction put in place, but the volume of work is expected to remain about unchanged from that of 1965. A shortage of new mortgage funds made itself felt in the late months of 1965. The N.H.A. interest rate on residential mortgages was increased in January, 1966, in an effort to attract more funds in the current year. It is expected that this action will arrest the decline in housing starts which was taking place within 1965. Conventional mortgages are expected to provide about the same amount of financing as last year.

Consumer Demands

In the projected circumstances of high-level employment and earnings, consumers appear likely to increase their purchases of durable and non-durable goods and services in 1966 at approximately the same rate as in the past year. Personal expenditures on durable goods will probably not advance quite as rapidly as in 1965, since spending on the furniture and appliances which go into new houses will be affected by the level rate of residential construction now expected for 1966. Manufacturers expect that the present high rate of automobile purchases will continue in 1966. There has been a continuous increase in number of cars per family and a reduction in the average age of the stock of cars on the road, for a number of years. In addition, the large number of new entrants to the labour force makes increased car ownership possible.

Non-durables purchases, such as food and clothing, should advance at much the same rate as in the past year. The volume of consumer purchases of services has continued to rise, while prices of many of these items have increased substantially. These prices are expected to continue to rise in the months ahead. No diminution in the rate of increase of consumer expenditure on services therefore seems likely in 1966 and the outlook generally is for an advance of much the same order as that recorded in 1965.

Foreign Trade and the Balance of Payments

The prospect of increased export sales in 1966 is encouraging. This is particularly the case with respect to exports to the United States. Current official forecasts in that country present a picture of very buoyant economic conditions in the coming year, and these conditions will involve a substantial increase in Canadian exports. On the past record, an increase in industrial production in the United States has been accompanied by a more than proportionate increase in their requirements for Canadian raw materials and fabricated products. There is no reason to expect that these past relationships between the United States' economic conditions and Canada's export sales will alter in 1966. In addition to these exports, the wheat sales to the U.S.S.R. and to mainland China will add to total exports in 1966. These developments will be supplemented by some increase in sales to other overseas countries. Taking all of these factors into account, export sales may be expected to increase at a higher rate in 1966 than they did in 1965.

Import requirements are expected to continue to increase as a result of the augmented demands for both consumption and investment goods. The near-balance on commodity trade recorded in 1965 is not expected to change by much. The traditionally negative balance on the current account for non-commodity items can be expected to grow in 1966.

Government Expenditures

The anticipated increases in capital outlays, particularly by provincial and municipal governments, has already been noted. The current or non-capital outlays of these governments, as well as those of the federal government, are expected to increase in 1966 at a rate in excess of that of 1965. Some of this will, of course, represent an increase in costs to government of labour and materials.

On the basis of current projections and current tax rates, (i.e. before any budgetary changes), it appears likely that the federal government will remain in a position of surplus on a national accounts basis, although the surplus will be reduced somewhat from 1965 levels. All of the information is not yet available, but present evidence suggests that the large increases in expenditures, both current and capital, by provincial and municipal governments may be approximately matched by increases in revenues from higher levels of economic activity and from some increases in tax rates. On balance, one might not expect much change in the combined deficit of provincial and municipal governments from the position in 1965. At the same time, the accumulations in the new government Pension Plans represent additional saving that will serve to offset the trend toward dissaving of all levels of government combined. In connection with the funds made available from the new Pension Plans, some provincial authorities have announced that they will be used to finance capital outlays beyond those of government departments, for example, schools and universities.

Government expenditures on goods and services, together with consumer spending, business capital formation, inventory increases and exports, constitute the total demand on Canadian productive resources. Almost three-fifths of total expenditures by government are spent on goods and services, and last year these expenditures absorbed 18½ per cent of the nation's output. Since government expenditures on goods and services will probably increase more rapidly than output in 1966, this ratio will increase fractionally. This rate of advance in government demands for goods and services in 1966 is expected to be greater than the rise in consumer demands and probably close to the rate of increase expected in exports. An even greater demand on our productive resources is expected to result from the increase in business capital formation. It is the conjuncture of these added demands that would give rise to the strains that may develop in 1966.

Capabilities of Supply

The emergence of this combination of consumer, business, government and export demands, after five years of continued expansion, will probably strain available sources of supply in 1966. While some part of this strain will be taken up, as already noted, by imports, a large part of the total increase in demand will fall upon Canadian sources of supply. Any assessment of the likely course of events in 1966 therefore calls for a review of probable developments in the labour force, the capital facilities of the nation, and the gains in productivity which might be achieved in the current situation.

Over time, improvements in productivity can be expected to take place. In the short run, however, a number of rigidities can be expected to have an important effect on developments. During the past year, there have been substantial additions to the labour force and to the stock of capital facilities. There have been continued advances in productivity, but not as large as those achieved in the first three or four years of expansion. It is a common feature of most business cycles that productivity advances are more rapid in the early stages of an expansion, when resources are abundant, than in the later stages of expansion, when all available resources are pressed into use, and various shortages and bottlenecks appear. Of course the situation varies from industry to industry, from occupation to occupation and from region to region. Efforts are under way to improve productivity through various public and private efforts, but these require time to make their maximum contribution.

Looking forward in 1966, a continuation of recent broad trends in labour supply, capital facilities and economic productivity is expected. The domestic labour supply is likely to be augmented by a flow of immigrants at least as large as in the past year. The inflow of young adults and of married women into the labour force is expected to continue at the same rate as in the past year, or perhaps even a little more rapidly. A reduction of unemployment below the 1965 average of 3.9 per cent may be expected, since the rate in the later months of the past year was below that. There will be a larger number of part-time workers, particularly among married women, and among those who were previously retired or voluntarily idle. The increasing amount of part-time work is expected to continue to reduce average hours of work, at the same rate as in the past year. Taking all of these factors into account, it should be possible to increase substantially the total amount of manhours available for production. However, further substantial advances in manhour productivity cannot be counted upon in the present circumstances. Therefore, the increase in aggregate output of goods and services in the economy (apart from the crop prospects) will be hard pressed to equal the gains of the past year, when part of the increased output came out of the existence of a considerable amount of economic slack.

Capital facilities have been augmented by the massive investment programme of 1965, but the present rates of capacity utilization appear very high (insofar as available measurements permit an inference). The high utilization rates themselves suggest one reason why current investments are increasing rapidly and why construction activity and machinery and equipment purchases are at such a high level.

Taking into account all of the increases in supply which can be expected in 1966, the increase in volume of output cannot be expected to reach that of 1965, and it seems likely that the increase attained will be the maximum possible within the limitations imposed by physical supply.

Prices

The forces currently bearing upon the determination of prices are of such complexity that firm conclusions on probable price trends cannot be drawn from a broad review of total supply and demand. In assessing the likely course of price developments in 1966, the relationships between projected demand and projected supply, however, will have important consequences. It is clear from the factors reviewed in these pages that current upward price trends could well persist, unless significant productivity improvements emerge to add to the supply capability of the economy, or unless the rate of increase in demand should turn out to be notably lower than currently expected. Some prices which affect the indexes fairly heavily, such as those of food, are governed by the vagaries of nature and prediction is difficult. Other factors also, having no direct relationship to supply or demand forces, may also contribute to the movement of prices. (One such factor is the commencement in January 1966 of payment of contributions to the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, which will add somewhat to costs.) All of these factors, in the context of conditions in the early months of 1966, suggest that it would not be prudent to assume a rate of price increase any less than that recorded in 1965.

MANPOWER IN THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

The Canadian labour force[1] in 1965 increased by 3.0 per cent over 1964. This growth was remarkably rapid by recent standards and also in comparison with the experience of other major industrialized nations. It reflected natural increase, higher immigration, and a rise in the rates of participation of the population in the labour force. Increased participation, in turn, was associated with the buoyancy of employment opportunities in most parts of the country. For the same reason, the movement out of agriculture into non-farm jobs accelerated in 1965. Major developments in the labour force, employment and unemployment are summarized in Table 10.

[1]Labour force and employment data analysed in this section are taken from The Labour Force, published monthly by DBS and the Department of Labour.

TABLE 10

LABOUR FORCE, EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT, CANADA
1957 to 1965

Thousands of Persons

—	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Labour Force	6,008	6,137	6,242	6,411	6,521	6,615	6,748	6,933	7,141
Employed	5,731	5,706	5,870	5,965	6,055	6,225	6,375	6,609	6,862
Unemployed	278	432	372	446	466	390	374	324	280
	Year-to-year change, per cent
Labour Force	..	2.1	1.7	2.7	1.7	1.4	2.0	2.7	3.0
Employed	..	−0.4	2.9	1.6	1.5	2.8	2.4	3.7	3.8
	Average of monthly rates
Unemployment rate[1]	4.6	7.0	6.0	7.0	7.1	5.9	5.5	4.7	3.9

[1] Unemployed as a per cent of the labour force.

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Labour, The Labour Force.

Total employment grew more rapidly than the labour force, rising by 3.8 per cent. Non-agricultural employment rose even more rapidly, by 4.8 per cent. Contributing to this were sharp gains in the employment of women and young people. The seasonally-adjusted unemployment rate in 1965 averaged 3.9 per cent, and was in the region of 3.5 per cent during the final quarter of the year.

Regional developments generally reflected the national pattern. In all regions, employment grew more rapidly than labour force, and non-agricultural employment grew more rapidly than total employment. The movement out of agriculture was most marked in the Atlantic region, but the percentage gain in employment was greatest in British Columbia. The unemployment rate for the year was highest in the Atlantic region and lowest in Ontario. The regional situation for 1965 is summarized in Table 11.

TABLE 11

LABOUR FORCE, EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT BY REGIONS, 1965

Thousands of Persons

—	Atlantic	Quebec	Ontario	Prairie	British Columbia
Labour Force	611	2,022	2,614	1,228	666
Employed	566	1,912	2,548	1,196	639
Unemployed	45	110	66	32	27
Unemployment rate (per cent)	7.4	5.4	2.5	2.6	4.1
Per cent growth in labour force	3.9	3.6	2.3	2.4	4.2
Per cent growth in employment	4.4	4.7	3.0	2.9	5.6
Per cent growth in non-agricultural employment	5.8	4.8	3.6	6.8	5.8

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Labour, The Labour Force.

These developments are discussed in detail in the following pages

CHART 5

LABOUR FORCE, TOTAL EMPLOYMENT AND MALE EMPLOYMENT 1961 TO 1965

The Labour Force

The Canadian labour force was larger by 208,000 persons, or 3.0 per cent, in 1965 than in 1964. Table 12 summarizes the changes which have occurred in recent years. From this table, it may be seen that the rate of increase of women in the labour force was far higher than that of men. The number of women in the labour force grew in 1965 by 104,000, exactly matching the increase in the number of men, while the increase relative to the number of women in the 1964 labour force was 5.3 per cent. A review of the trend since 1957 (shown in the table) reveals a consistently higher year-to-year growth rate in the female labour force than that of the labour force as a whole.

TABLE 12

THE CANADIAN LABOUR FORCE

1957 to 1965

Thousands of Persons

—	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Labour force—
Total	6,008	6,137	6,242	6,411	6,521	6,615	6,748	6,933	7,141
Agricultural	755	731	712	697	698	675	662	641	602
Non-agricultural	5,253	5,406	5,530	5,714	5,823	5,940	6,086	6,292	6,540
Men	4,573	4,641	4,687	4,754	4,782	4,819	4,879	4,961	5,065
Women	1,435	1,496	1,554	1,657	1,739	1,797	1,870	1,972	2,076
Age 14–19 years	587	591	603	627	630	648	672	700	738
Per cent change, year to year—
Total	.....	2.1	1.7	2.7	1.7	1.4	2.0	2.7	3.0
Agricultural	.....	−3.2	−2.6	−2.1	0.1	−3.3	−1.9	−3.2	−6.1
Non-agricultural	.....	2.9	2.3	3.3	1.9	2.0	2.5	3.4	3.9
Men	.....	1.5	1.0	1.4	0.6	0.8	1.2	1.7	2.1
Women	.....	4.3	3.9	6.6	4.9	3.3	4.1	5.5	5.3
Age 14–19 years	.....	0.7	2.0	4.0	0.5	2.9	3.7	4.2	5.4

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Labour, The Labour Force.

The growth of the 14 to 19-year age group in the labour force, by 38,000 persons or 5.4 per cent, was mainly a reflection of demographic trends, and continued the acceleration which has been in evidence since 1962. In 1961, young people formed 9.7 per cent of the labour force, while in 1965 they represented 10.3 per cent. In part, however, it also reflected an upturn in participation rates in this age-group, reversing the trend of recent years. In turn, this was largely accounted for by a greater proportion of 18 and 19 year olds in this age group than has recently been the case.

PARTICIPATION RATES, POPULATION 14–19 YEARS

(Labour force as a per cent of population)

—	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Men	42.8	40.3	39.6	39.2	38.3	38.7
Women	32.6	32.3	30.9	29.9	29.9	30.2

The male labour force, affected in part by the influx of teenagers, also grew more rapidly than in any recent year. The 55 to 64 age group continued the modest rise in its participation rate which first became evident in 1964. Other age groups maintained the characteristic stability of their labour force participation.

Immigration contributed to the labour force increase, with the number of immigrants destined for the labour force in the first three quarters, at 56,000, being almost 30 per cent larger than the number a year earlier. The majority of these were adult males.

A major feature of the labour force scene in 1965 was the acceleration in the movement out of agriculture. The agricultural labour force declined by 6.1 per cent, compared to a fall of 3.2 per cent in 1964. The shift from agriculture into non-agricultural occupations caused the non-farm labour force to rise by 3.9 per cent, compared with the 3.0 per cent increase recorded for the total labour force.

This accelerated shift, together with the uptrend in participation rates, the substantial increase in the female labour force, and the higher immigration were largely accounted for by the growth in employment opportunities in non-agricultural industries. A response of this nature to increases in the demand for labour has become a familiar feature of the Canadian economy in the postwar period, indicating the existence of a high degree of elasticity in the supply of labour. At the same time, there were proportionately fewer workers with experience in modern Canadian industry among those obtaining jobs in 1965, as the pool of experienced unemployed shrank, while there were proportionately more workers entering employment direct from the home, from school, from abroad, or from the farm sector. Many of the women who took jobs in 1965 worked only on a part-time basis. These developments had an important bearing upon the measured rate of overall productivity improvement in 1965, as discussed below.

The contribution made by the skills of new entrants to the labour force, and by the upgrading or more efficient use of the skills of those already at work, cannot be precisely measured. Some indication of the situation and prospects, however, is given by the record of enrolments and completions in the various technical and vocational institutes and schools now established in all regions of Canada. The numbers completing courses at the vocational high schools in 1965 are estimated to have been substantially higher than the 32,000 recorded a year earlier; the number of students in these courses has almost doubled in recent years. Graduations from two-year courses at the institutes of technology in 1965 were 3,100, but some 22,000 students are now enrolled and graduations will increase sharply. Enrolments in courses for retraining the unemployed, at 60,000, are currently 20 per cent higher than they were in 1964-65. Enrolments in these and other courses, all of which are primarily under provincial administration, but which have been made available through federal-provincial co-operation and federal financial assistance, have been rising sharply in recent years. These trends may be expected to contribute more to the raising of levels of skill in future years, both as the number of graduates increases and as they acquire experience in applying their new training.

The numbers of professional and skilled immigrants have of course risen as immigration has risen. The distribution among the various kinds of skill and occupation has not, however, changed to any marked extent in recent years.

IMMIGRANTS DESTINED TO THE LABOUR FORCE
DISTRIBUTION BY SKILLS AND OCCUPATION
(Per cent)

—	9 months 1962	9 months 1963	9 months 1964	9 months 1965
Managerial, professional and clerical	38.2	36.9	37.3	38.0
Other skilled and semi-skilled	47.4	50.4	48.7	49.2
Labourers and agriculture	14.4	12.7	14.0	12.8
	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

Employment

The number of people in employment in 1965 was higher by 253,000, or 3.8 per cent, than it was in 1964. Non-agricultural employment rose by 4.8 per cent, while the number of young people with jobs rose by 7.2 per cent. The major developments of recent years in employment are summarized in Table 13.

TABLE 13

EMPLOYMENT, CANADA

1957 to 1965

Thousands of Persons

—	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Employment—
Total	5,731	5,706	5,870	5,965	6,055	6,225	6,375	6,609	6,862
Agricultural	748	718	700	683	681	660	649	630	594
Non-agricultural	4,983	4,988	5,170	5,282	5,374	5,565	5,726	5,979	6,268
Men	4,329	4,263	4,363	4,368	4,381	4,488	4,567	4,698	4,842
Women	1,402	1,442	1,507	1,597	1,674	1,737	1,808	1,911	2,020
Age 14–19 years	537	515	536	545	548	573	596	628	673
Per cent change, year to year—
Total	.....	−0.4	2.9	1.6	1.5	2.8	2.4	3.7	3.8
Agricultural	.....	−4.0	−2.5	−2.4	−0.3	−3.1	−1.7	−2.9	−5.7
Non-agricultural	.....	0.1	3.6	2.2	1.7	3.6	2.9	4.4	4.8
Men	.....	−1.5	2.3	0.1	0.3	2.4	1.8	2.9	3.1
Women	.....	2.9	4.5	6.0	4.8	3.8	4.1	5.7	5.7
Age 14–19 years	.....	−4.1	4.1	1.7	0.6	4.6	4.0	5.4	7.2

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Labour, The Labour Force.

This table indicates the vulnerability of the teen-age group, with its relative lack of skills and experience, to fluctuations in the growth of employment opportunities. In 1958, for example, a fractional decline in total employment from the very high 1957 levels was accompanied by a very much greater than proportional drop in the number of young people with jobs. In the same way, the percentage gain in teen-age employment in 1965 was almost double that recorded for total employment.

TABLE 14

LABOUR FORCE AND EMPLOYMENT

GROWTH RATES, 1949 TO 1965 AND 1961 TO 1965

	Per cent per year compound rate
	1949 to 1965	1961 to 1965
Labour Force:
Total	2.2	2.3
Agricultural	−3.6	−3.6
Non-agricultural	3.1	2.9
Men	1.5	1.4
Women	4.1	4.5
Age 14–19 years	1.6	4.0
Employment:
Total	2.1	3.2
Agricultural	−3.6	−3.4
Non-agricultural	3.1	3.9
Men	1.4	2.5
Women	4.1	4.8
Age 14–19 years	1.4	5.3

The Budget—Appendix

The number of women with jobs has revealed a very high year-to-year growth record in recent years. The annual rate of growth between 1961 and 1965 was 4.5 per cent, rather greater than the 4.1 per cent annual growth rate recorded over the entire 1949 to 1965 postwar period. Table 14 sets out the growth rates of the labour force and of employment over these periods, for purposes of comparison, and Charts 5 and 6 show these comparisons graphically. Women now represent 29 per cent of the employed labour force, compared to 22 per cent in 1949. It is of interest to note that the increase in employment of adult women has been heavily concentrated among those 35 years of age and above, while the number of employed women in the age group 25 to 34 years has changed to a much lesser extent.

CHART 6

LABOUR FORCE, TOTAL EMPLOYMENT AND FEMALE EMPLOYMENT 1961 TO 1965

EMPLOYMENT OF ADULT WOMEN

Year	Age Group
	25 to 34	35 to 44	45 to 54	55 to 64
	(Thousands of persons)
1965	361	417	367	188
1956	292	248	185	87
Increase 1956 to 1965	69	169	182	101

As a result of the continued growth of job opportunities in 1965, the number of unemployed declined again from the previous year's level. The unemployment rate for the year as a whole was 3.9 per cent, and the rate towards the end of the year averaged around 3.5 per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis. The 1965 unemployment rate was the lowest since 1956, when it was 3.4 per cent. Unemployment levels varied greatly among the different regions of Canada, as discussed in some detail below, and in some areas there were shortages of many kinds of skilled labour.

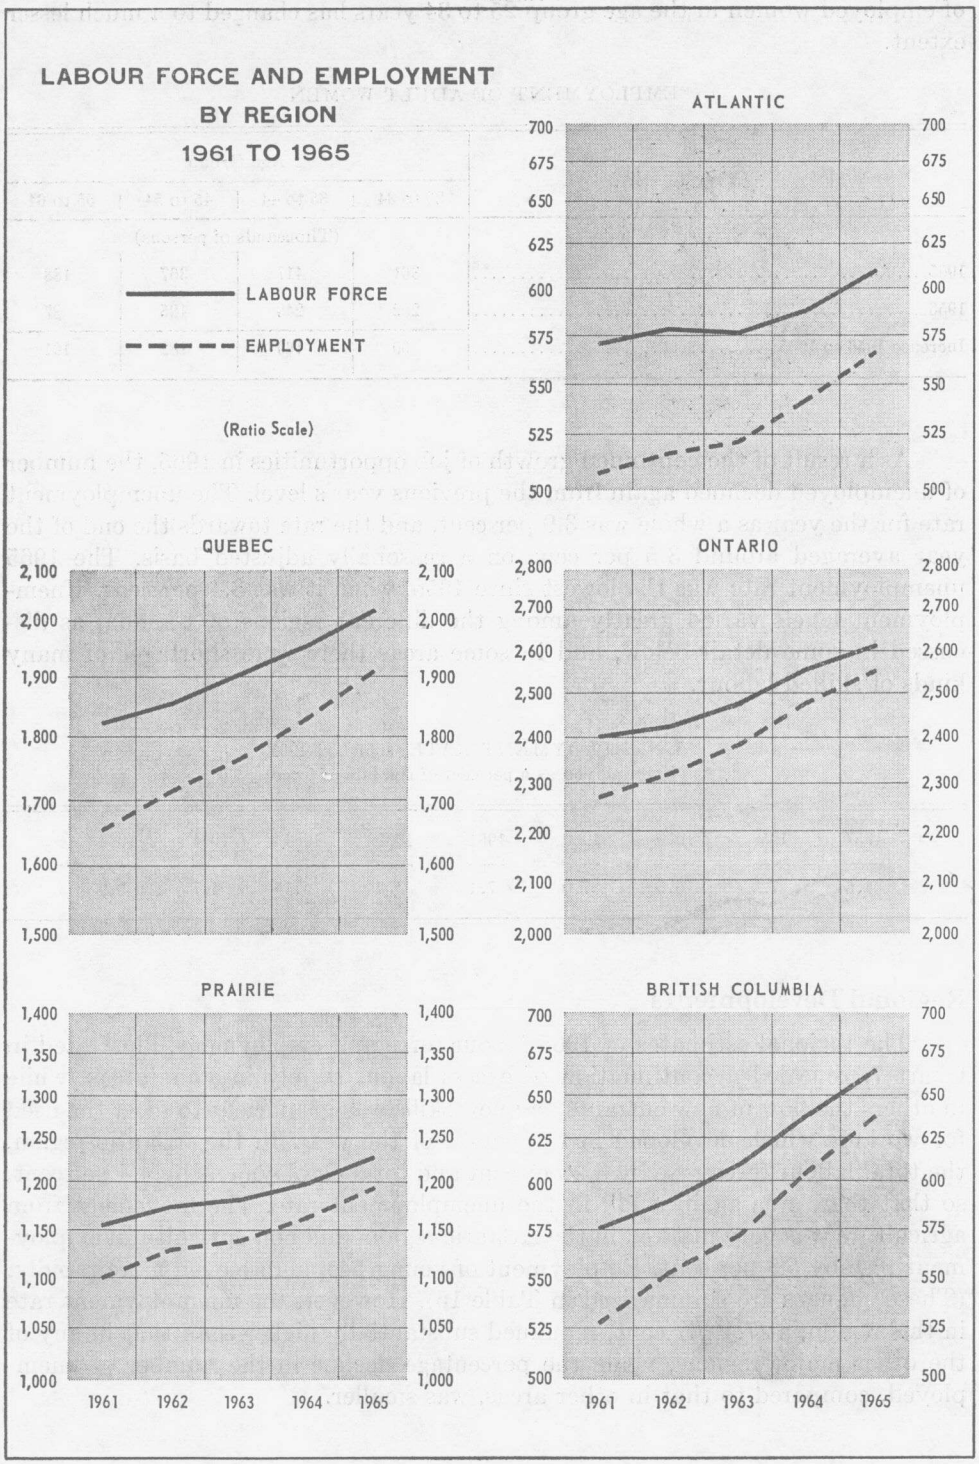
UNEMPLOYMENT RATE, 1957 TO 1965
(Unemployed as a per cent of the labour force)

1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
4.6	7.0	6.0	7.0	7.1	5.9	5.5	4.7	3.9

Regional Developments

The regional estimates of 1965 labour force and employment, illustrated in Chart 7, revealed a continuation of excess labour supply in some areas, while in others the flow of new entrants and new skills was insufficient to meet the need for workers which developed in the course of the year. In the Atlantic region, the total labour force rose by 3.9 per cent and total employment by 4.4 per cent, so that there was again a fall in the unemployment rate. The movement from agriculture was very marked in the Atlantic region, and non-agricultural employment rose by 5.8 per cent. Employment of young people rose even more rapidly. (These changes are summarized in Table 15). However, the unemployment rate in this region, at 7.4 per cent, remained substantially higher than that in any of the other major regions, while the percentage decline in the number of unemployed, compared to that in other areas, was smaller.

CHART 7



LABOUR FORCE AND EMPLOYMENT
BY REGION
1961 TO 1965
LABOUR FORCE
EMPLOYMENT
(Ratio Scale)
ATLANTIC
QUEBEC
ONTARIO
PRAIRIE
BRITISH COLUMBIA
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965

TABLE 15

LABOUR FORCE, EMPLOYMENT AND UNEMPLOYMENT BY REGIONS,
1964 and 1965

—	1964	1965	Change Per cent
	Thousands of Persons
Atlantic Region
Labour Force:
Total	588	611	3.9
Non-agricultural	548	577	5.3
Employment:
Total	542	566	4.4
Non-agricultural	504	533	5.8
Age 14–19 years	57	62	8.8
Unemployed	46	45	−2.2
Quebec Region
Labour Force:
Total	1,951	2,022	3.6
Non-agricultural	1,832	1,903	3.9
Employment:
Total	1,827	1,912	4.7
Non-agricultural	1,713	1,796	4.8
Age 14–19 years	190	204	7.4
Unemployed	124	110	−11.3
Ontario Region
Labour Force:
Total	2,556	2,614	2.3
Non-agricultural	2,394	2,461	2.8
Employment:
Total	2,473	2,548	3.0
Non-agricultural	2,314	2,397	3.6
Age 14–19 years	211	224	6.2
Unemployed	83	66	−20.5
Prairie Region
Labour Force:
Total	1,199	1,228	2.4
Non-agricultural	901	955	6.0
Employment:
Total	1,162	1,196	2.9
Non-agricultural	866	925	6.8
Age 14–19 years	120	128	6.7
Unemployed	37	32	−13.5
British Columbia
Labour Force:
Total	639	666	4.2
Non-agricultural	616	644	4.5
Employment:
Total	605	639	5.6
Non-agricultural	583	617	5.8
Age 14–19 years	50	55	10.0
Unemployed	34	27	−20.6

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Labour, The Labour Force.

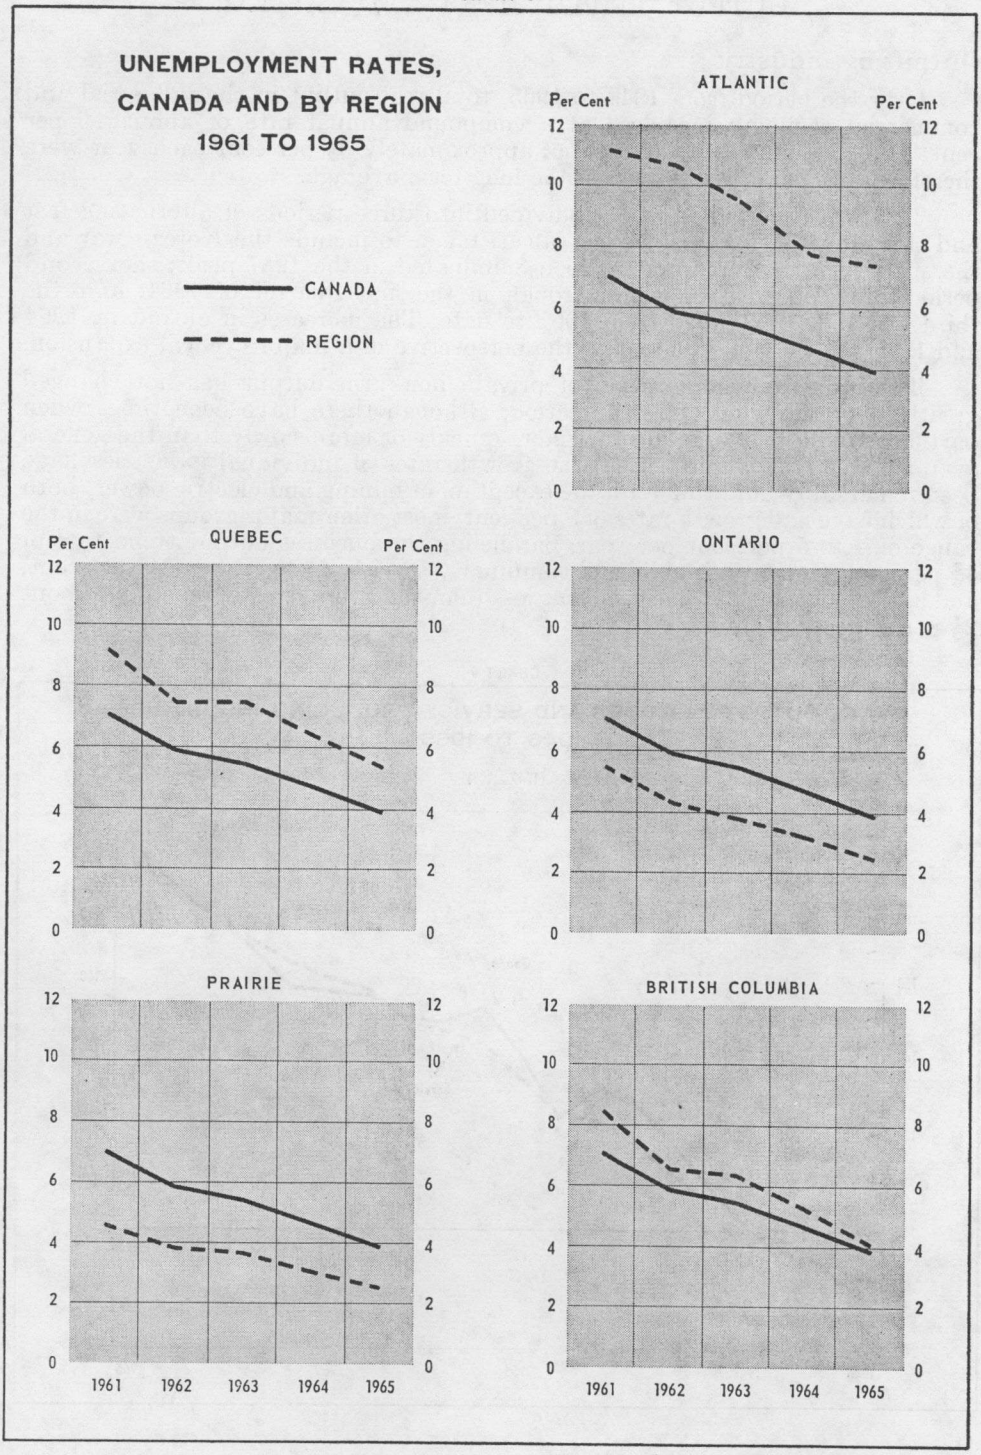
The Quebec region continued to experience above-average unemployment in the eastern areas, while conditions were much tighter in the western part of the province. In contrast to other areas, employment in agriculture in Quebec rose slightly. The total labour force rose by 3.6 per cent and total employment by 4.7 per cent. Employment of young people rose by 7.4 per cent. The unemployment rate for the year as a whole averaged 5.4 per cent, which (as Table 16 indicates) was below that of the Atlantic region but higher than that in any other region.

TABLE 16

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES BY REGION
1957 to 1965



(Unemployed as a per cent of the Labour Force)

Region	1957	1958	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Atlantic	8.4	12.5	10.9	10.7	11.2	10.7	9.5	7.8	7.4
Quebec	6.0	8.8	7.8	9.1	9.2	7.5	7.5	6.4	5.4
Ontario	3.4	5.4	4.5	5.4	5.5	4.3	3.8	3.2	2.5
Prairie	2.6	4.1	3.2	4.2	4.6	3.9	3.7	3.1	2.6
British Columbia	5.0	8.6	6.5	8.5	8.5	6.6	6.4	5.3	4.1
Canada	4.6	7.0	6.0	7.0	7.1	5.9	5.5	4.7	3.9

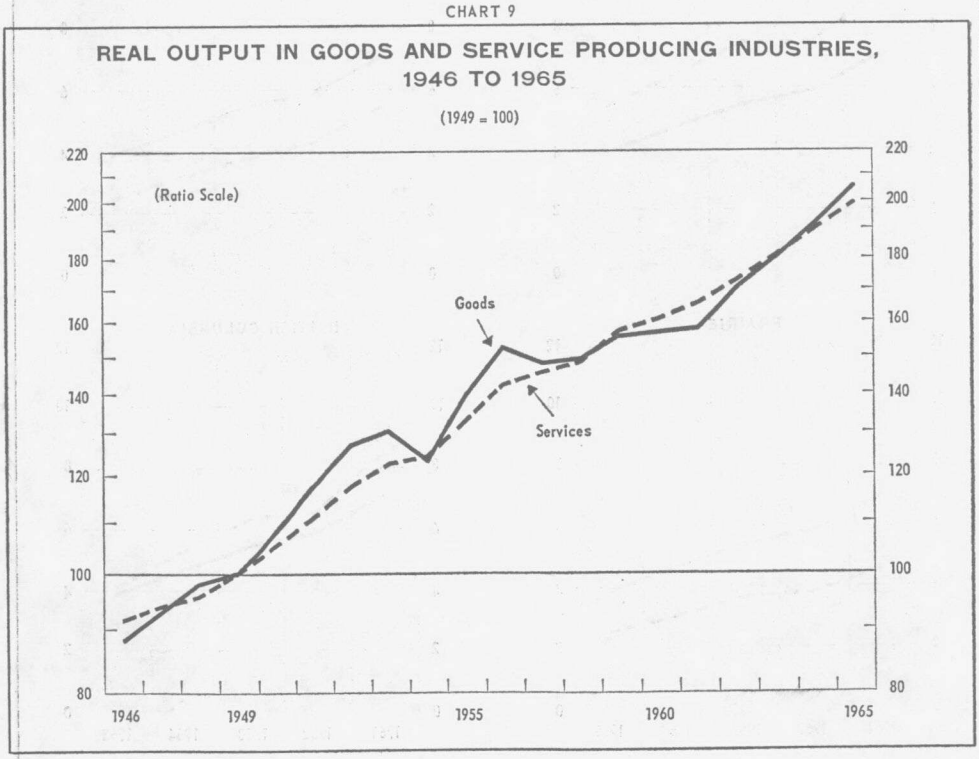
In Ontario, the increase in the labour force, at 2.3 per cent, was the lowest in Canada. The number of unemployed fell by over 20 per cent during the year, and the unemployment rate averaged 2.5 per cent for the year. The Prairie region, which also started the year at high employment levels, similarly experienced a relatively small increase in total labour force, namely, 2.4 per cent. In this region, however, the non-agricultural labour force rose by 6.0 per cent, with approximately one-half of the increase arising from a movement out of agriculture. Employment rose by 2.9 per cent and the unemployment rate fell to 2.6 per cent from the 3.1 per cent of the year before.

The labour force in British Columbia rose by 4.2 per cent, which was the highest rate recorded in any region. Total employment, rising by 5.6 per cent, was also a regional record. There was no net movement out of agriculture in this region, so that all of the net gain in non-farm employment came from natural increase, higher participation rates, and immigration from other provinces or from outside Canada. The 14–19 age group made particularly marked employment gains in this region in 1965.

CHART 8

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES,
CANADA AND BY REGION
1961 TO 1965
CANADA
REGION
ATLANTIC
QUEBEC
ONTARIO
PRAIRIE
BRITISH COLUMBIA
Per Cent
0
2
4
6
8
10
12
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965

OUTPUT, EMPLOYMENT AND CAPITAL



Output by Industry

Over the period from 1949 to 1965, total real output in the industrial and commercial economy increased at a compound annual rate of about $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. The 1964 and 1965 increases of approximately $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent each year were therefore considerably in excess of the long term average.

This whole period can be subdivided into three periods of alternating fast and slow growth. The first period can be taken to include the Korean war and the subsequent resource boom which culminated in the 1957 peak; the second period extended to the cyclical trough in the first quarter of 1961, and the third period has extended from 1961 to date. The increases in output in 1964 and 1965 can therefore be seen in the perspective of a major cyclical expansion.

The industrial composition of private non-farm output has not changed greatly over the whole postwar period, although there have been times when particular industries were growing more quickly or more slowly than the general average. Over the whole period, the growth rates of individual industries have been remarkably uniform. With the exception of mining and electric power, both of which have had growth rates of 8 per cent, most other major groups were in the range of 4 to 5 per cent per year, paralleling the business output trend rate of $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. Output in public and community services has grown at $4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent, and agricultural output has grown at less than the average rate, recording about $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per year.

CHART 9

In terms of current dollar values, the service industries as a group have expanded more rapidly than the goods-producing industries. In terms of the volume of output, production of services in real terms has shown a parallel growth to that of goods, as Chart 9 illustrates. Output of services related to commodity distribution, such as trade and much of transportation, has, as expected, displayed growth rates and, more recently, cyclical patterns very similar to those of commodity production. Output of other services, such as finance, insurance and real estate, also indicate long term trends generally parallel to those of aggregate business product.

Within these broad aggregates, there were of course many spectacular developments in individual industries. The resource-based industries such as petroleum and natural gas, non-ferrous metal mining and processing, pulp and paper products, and electric power, had very rapid expansion rates in the earlier period to 1957, and many of them have recently experienced a new round of expansion of output and investment. Electric power and gas utilities expanded their output steadily, at nearly twice the average rate of all industries, throughout the postwar period. All of these industries are highly capital-intensive, so that contemplated expansions in output have been of necessity accompanied by large fixed capital expenditures on construction, machinery and equipment. A degree of over-capacity was in fact created in the period prior to 1957, leading to a subsequent major investment downturn; by 1963, however, following increases in output, the rate of new investment had again begun to expand rapidly.

The most recent cyclical expansion of output has been characterized by developments in secondary manufacturing which are in many ways an extension and refinement of the primary resource boom described above. The resurgence of manufacturing in the past five years is in no small part due to advanced processing in petro-chemicals, synthetic textiles, a variety of iron and steel products, telecommunications equipment, aircraft, automobiles, refrigerators and appliances and many other highly processed manufactures. Durable goods manufacturing has advanced more rapidly than non-durables in the current period of

TABLE 17

GROWTH RATES AND RECENT CHANGES IN BUSINESS PRODUCT

(Per cent per year)

	1949 to 1965	1961 to 1965	1964 to 1965[1]
Forestry	3.1	5.6	2.2
Mining	8.1	6.7	6.0
Manufacturing	4.5	7.1	7.0
Construction	4.8	5.9	11.2
Transportation, storage and communication	5.1	6.7	6.5
Electric power, gas and water utilities	7.8	7.7	8.3
Trade	4.3	5.4	6.3
Finance, insurance and real estate	4.8	4.7	4.1
Other commercial industries	3.3	5.9	3.4
TOTAL, BUSINESS PRODUCT	4.8	6.3	6.4
Agriculture	2.5	6.4	6.0
Public administration, defence and community services	4.2	1.0	2.2
TOTAL, DOMESTIC PRODUCT	4.5	5.8	6.1

[1]1965 estimated on the basis of nine months' data. Agricultural and total output in 1965 estimated by Department of Finance. Data in this and the following table will be revised by DBS during coming months.

expansion. Durable goods consist of consumer items such as automobiles, appliances and furniture, together with producers' goods such as machinery, agricultural implements and structural steel, and primary products such as iron and steel, sheet metal and saw mill products, many items of which are related to fixed capital formation. Production of consumer non-durables such as food, textiles and clothing advanced at a more moderate rate both throughout the longer-run postwar period and throughout the course of the current period of rapid growth. These developments are summarized in Table 17.

Employment and Output

Over the postwar years, substantial gains in total output have been accompanied by smaller increases in employment in the economy as a whole. The difference between these two growth rates is the material evidence of growth in overall productivity. In 1965, the gain in labour productivity was at a lower rate than both the longer postwar average and the average of recent years. Output per manhour typically shows some retardation of growth as full employment is approached,[1] when it becomes increasingly difficult to maintain continued rapid productivity increases.

In order to obtain a good measurement of labour productivity, it is necessary to remove from the total output certain areas in which the value of the output is conventionally measured only in terms of the value of the wage bill. These areas consist mainly of public administration and defence, and community services such as schools and hospitals and domestic service. Further, the conventional measure of real output in these areas is labour input, and the volume of output is therefore represented by the volume of employment. Consequently, productivity is necessarily defined as being constant and unvarying in these areas. For analytical purposes, agricultural output is also removed, because weather and crop variations can cause substantial fluctuations in aggregate output which are not related specifically to changes in agricultural employment. After these adjustments are made, the resulting measures of employment and output refer exclusively to the business economy. The term "business product", as used in this discussion, is synonymous with "commercial non-agricultural output" as used in official publications[2].

Business product in 1965 increased by 6.4 per cent, while the corresponding increase in employment amounted to 4.9 per cent. This implies an increment of 1.5 per cent in output per man. These figures refer to both output and employment of all groups, that is, employers, self-employed and paid workers. The latter are numerically the most important, amounting to 85 per cent of all employed persons.

Over the postwar period, as in recent years, there has been a continuing and substantial inflow to the paid worker category of the labour force, and an outflow from the self-employed, so that year-to-year changes in paid worker employment are larger than changes in total employment. Accordingly, the measurement of labour productivity is strongly affected by the measure of employment being used. At the same time, however, it is not possible to apportion the volume of output in most industries as between the various categories of paid workers,

---

[1]Economic Council of Canada, Second Annual Review, Ottawa, 1965, p. 35.
Hultgren, Thor, Costs, Prices and Profits: Their Cyclical Relations, N.B.E.R., New York, 1965, p. 155.

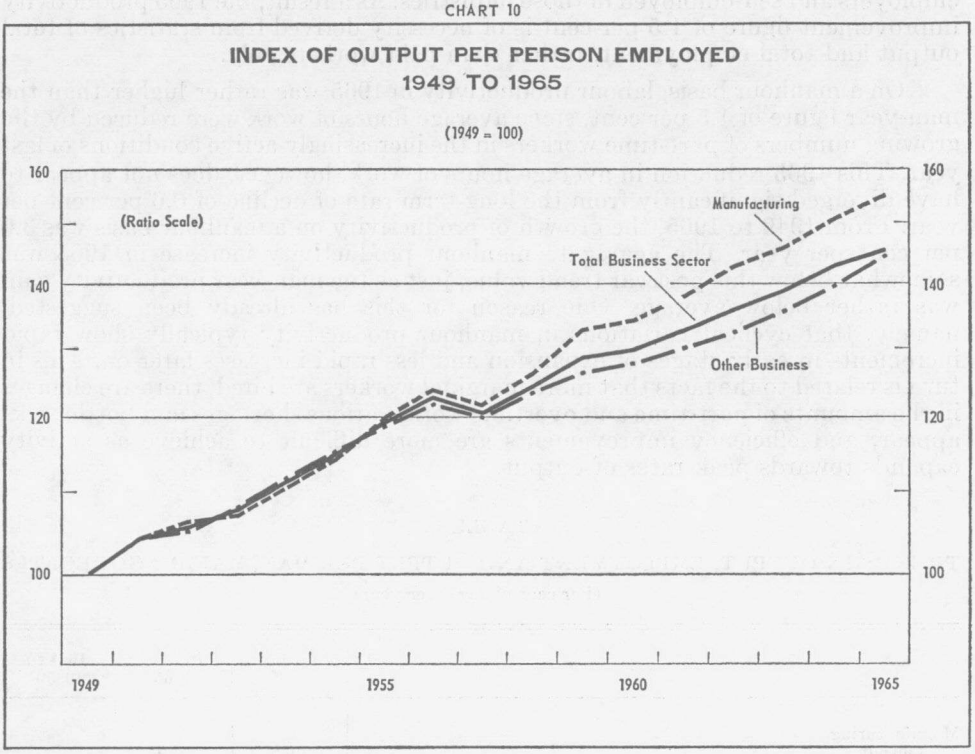
[2]The official statistics are entitled "Indexes of Output per Person Employed and per Manhour in Canada, Commercial Non-agricultural Industries, 1947–63". DBS Cat. No. 14-501 and Daily Bulletin, Oct. 12, 1965. These official statistics now cover the period 1946–64. Estimates for the year 1965 have been made by the Department of Finance, using the "Monthly Estimates of Employees by Province and Industry", DBS Cat. No. 72-008. These estimates have been reconciled to the labour force statistics obtained from the monthly labour force survey.

employers and self-employed in those industries. As a result, the 1965 productivity improvement figure of 1.5 per cent is of necessity derived from statistics of total output and total employment, rather than paid workers only.

On a manhour basis, labour productivity in 1965 was rather higher than the man-year figure of 1.5 per cent, since average hours of work were reduced by the growing numbers of part-time workers in the increasingly active conditions of last year. This 1965 reduction in average hours of work, however, does not appear to have diverged significantly from the long term rate of decline of 0.6 per cent per year. From 1949 to 1965, the growth of productivity on a manhour basis was 3.0 per cent per year. The aggregate manhour productivity increase in 1965 was somewhat below this postwar trend value, just as the man-year productivity gain was rather below average. One reason for this has already been suggested, namely, that cyclical variations in manhour productivity typically show rapid increments in early stages of expansion and less rapid increases later on. This in turn is related to the facts that more marginal workers are hired, there are changes in the amounts of part-time and overtime work, various shortages and bottlenecks appear, and efficiency improvements are more difficult to achieve as activity expands towards peak rates of output.

TABLE 18

TRENDS IN OUTPUT, EMPLOYMENT AND OUTPUT PER MAN, MAJOR AGGREGATES



(Per cent changes per year)

—	1949 to 1965	1961 to 1965	1964 to 1965[1]
Manufacturing
Output	4.5	7.1	7.0
Employment	1.7	4.2	4.9
Output per man	2.8	2.7	2.0
Non-manufacturing
Output	4.9	5.9	6.2
Employment	2.6	3.5	4.9
Output per man	2.2	2.4	1.3
Total, Business Product
Output	4.8	6.3	6.4
Employment	2.3	3.7	4.9
Output per man	2.4	2.5	1.5
Agriculture
Output	2.5	6.4	6.0
Employment	−3.6	−2.9	−5.7
Output per man	6.5	10.1	12.5
Total Business Product and Agriculture
Output	4.5	6.2	6.4
Employment	1.3	2.8	3.6
Output per man	3.2	3.4	2.7

[1]1965 estimates by Department of Finance.

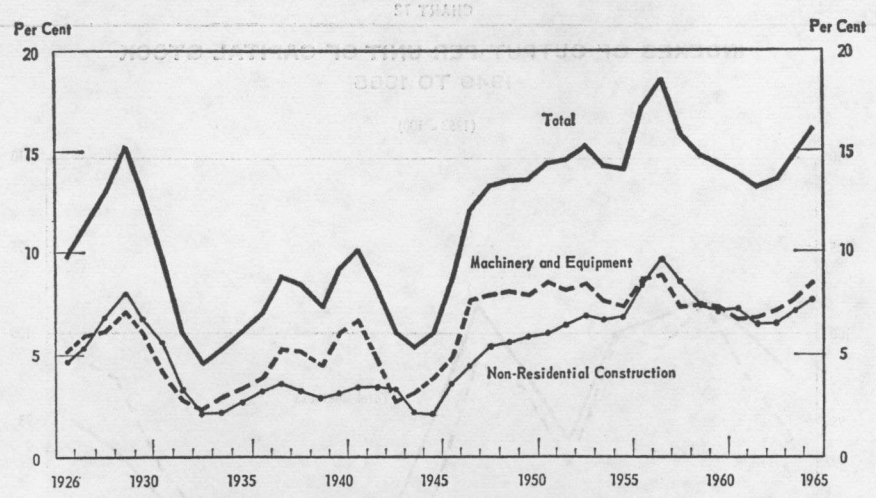
Manufacturing output per person employed has had a postwar growth rate of 2.8 per cent per year, as Table 18 indicates. This 2.8 per cent rate per man-year was not maintained in 1965, when it fell to 2.0 per cent, although the manufacturing rate remained higher than the 1.5 per cent average gain in output per man in all industries. A comparison of trends in manufacturing and non-manufacturing output per person employed is shown on Chart 10.

CHART 10

Physical Capital and Output Capacity

During the past two years, the upsurge in new investment undertakings has resulted in net additions to the stock of business plant and equipment. There are also indications from the recent survey of business investment intentions that these additions will continue at a high rate during the current year.

In considering the broad question of economic growth, additions to the stock of physical capital in the business sector are of fundamental importance. They represent extra capabilities of supply, they supplement the growth of the labour force, and they add to economic productivity. The relationship between the existing capital stock in the business sector and current pressure of demand in the economy at large bears upon business sector planning for future investment activity. Estimates of the capital stock published in recent years[1] now make it possible to consider these various relationships within a broad statistical framework.



---

[1]Such estimates have been published by DBS, covering the period 1946 to 1960, and by the Economic Council of Canada, covering the period 1935 to 1963. The capital stock estimates given below have been obtained by multiplying published capital-output ratios by published output statistics. The ratios for the period 1935 to 1963 are given in Economic Council of Canada, Staff Study No. 5, Business Investment to 1970 by D. A. White, pp 84–89. The output data are published by DBS (Cat. No. 61-505 and No. 61-005). The present discussion is confined to physical capital in the business sector. The business portion of capital and its related output excludes residential construction, agriculture and non-commercial services such as schools and hospitals.

Chart 11, which illustrates the relationship between investment and gross national product, indicates that there have been substantial variations in the proportion of business investment to GNP over the past forty years. The peaks correspond to the expansions of the late twenties and of the mid-fifties. There was very little expansion of business capital during the depression of the thirties and during World War II, but there followed a long period of rapid and sustained expansion, which was heightened by the Korean war and the resource development of the mid-fifties. This series of historical events culminated in the 1957 peak investment ratio, as described above. Thereafter, the ratio of business investment to GNP declined, to reach a postwar low in 1962 and 1963. Output recovered earlier than this, in 1961, and as the expansions in output and employment got under way, their increases were accompanied by an increase in capital investment. Thus the ratio of investment to GNP once again recovered, and at the present time it appears to be approaching the high levels of previous expansions.

CHART 11

COMPONENTS OF BUSINESS FIXED INVESTMENT AS PERCENTAGES OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT 1926 TO 1965

Although the annual quantities of new investment are highly variable from year to year and during major cyclical episodes, they accumulate over a long span of years into a sizeable stock which grows at a relatively stable rate. By analogy with the labour force, which has new entrants and retiring persons, the capital stock has new additions and retirements or discards of old and obsolescent buildings and equipment. Estimates of the capital stock are obtained by accumulating new additions over long periods of time, while at the same time writing-off the discards of obsolete equipment and buildings at the ends of their useful lives[1].

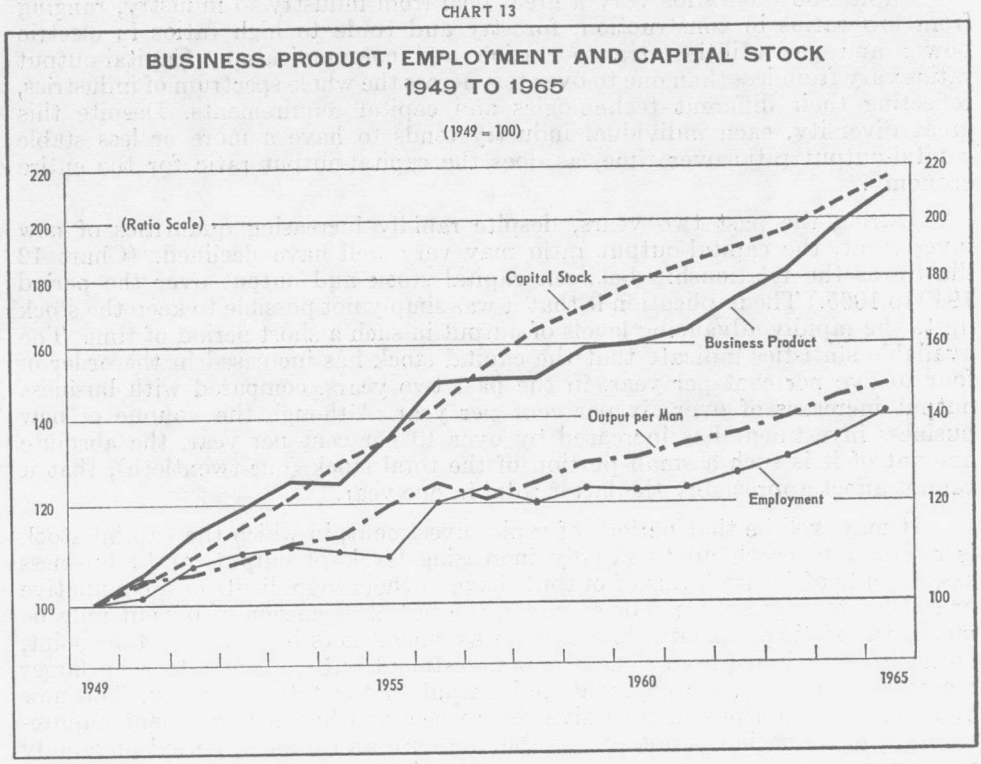
The estimates of the capital stock made by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and by the Economic Council of Canada suggest that the existing stock of plant and equipment is almost three times the size of the real output which it produces. Machinery and equipment is one and one-eighth times the annual output, and buildings and structures are one and five-eighths the annual output. Their total is two and three quarters times as large as the annual business product. This number is technically known as a capital-output ratio.

The relation of new investment to the stock may be summarized as follows. New investment in business plant and equipment in 1965 was one-fifth of business output. Output in turn was one-third of the stock. Therefore, the ratio of new investment to the stock, in 1965, was in the neighbourhood of one-fifteenth or 7 per cent. New investment, less the discards of obsolete plant and equipment, was even smaller than this, probably in the order of 5 per cent of the stock. It is apparent that it takes a great deal of new investment to change the stock appreciably, and thus to add to productive capabilities.

[1]This is known as the perpetual inventory method of arriving at estimates of the gross stock of buildings and equipment. The available estimates are handicapped by lack of knowledge regarding asset lives and rates of obsolescence. However, it is not essential for the present discussion to have an exact measure of the stock, but rather an approximation of its magnitude relative to investment.

CHART 12

Capital-output ratios vary a great deal from industry to industry, ranging from low ratios in construction, forestry and trade to high ratios in electric power and gas utilities, transportation and communication. Capital-output ratios vary from less than one to over ten, across the whole spectrum of industries, reflecting their different technologies and capital requirements. Despite this great diversity, each individual industry tends to have a more or less stable capital-output ratio over time, as does the capital-output ratio for the entire economy.



During the past two years, despite rapidly increasing quantities of new investment, the capital-output ratio may very well have declined. (Chart 12 illustrates the relationship between capital stock and output over the period 1949 to 1965.) The implication is that it was simply not possible to keep the stock up to the rapidly advancing levels of output in such a short period of time. The available statistics indicate that the capital stock has increased in the order of four to five per cent per year, in the past two years, compared with business output increases of over six per cent per year. Although the volume of new business investment has increased by over 10 per cent per year, the absolute amount of it is such a small portion of the total stock (one-twentieth), that it cannot affect appreciably the latter total in one year.

It may well be that periods of rapid investment, in which the capital stock is required to catch up to rapidly increasing levels of output, or to business assessments of future levels of output, have in them ingredients of a cumulative or self-reinforcing nature. For example, the initial expansion of output may be met with existing capacity, but as soon as output gets beyond a certain point, more capacity is required. These new investment outlays generate even larger increases in income, employment and output in the total economy. The new higher levels of output in turn give rise to new and higher investment requirements. This situation is not sustainable, because an extended period of rapidly increasing investment activity eventually brings about a state of affairs in which the stock of capital is growing more rapidly than total output, and conditions of excess capacity emerge. This, in itself, would lead to a declining rate of investment. In addition, investment plans may be based on the expansion of markets as represented by the growth in demand and output. In the earlier stages of a business upswing, the rate of increase in output is necessarily faster than in later stages, since increases in output result from both underlying growth factors as well as unemployed resources being brought into use. Accordingly, investment plans based upon the rapid growth in demand in the earlier stages of an upswing may not appear justified when seen later against the relatively slower growth of demand based upon more underlying factors. When this becomes apparent, the rapid increases in investment fall off, creating instability and unemployment in the capital goods industries and in the economy generally. The remedy for this type of situation may rest primarily in prevention rather than cure, by stretching out the period of rapid investment in order to approach the probable long-run position as smoothly as possible.

During periods of rapid expansion, when it is difficult to increase the capital stock beyond a certain limit in the short run, the economy of necessity responds by employing the available stock at very high rates of utilization.

The degree to which capital is utilized is shown to be quite flexible in the short run, as seen in Chart 12. In the long run, however, as already noted, the capital-output ratio appears to have some degree of stability, as there is time for various forms of adjustment to take place. Chart 13 illustrates some major trends in output, employment, capital stock and output per man.

CHART 13

INCOMES, COSTS AND PRICES

Labour Income

The increase in wages, salaries and supplementary labour income in the first nine months of 1965, shown in Table 19, was greater than that achieved during any previous comparable period or in any calendar year since 1961. It has been observed elsewhere in this review that there has been a continued movement of workers from a self-employed to employee status, which contributed to this rise in labour income. The general increase in employment recorded in the discussion of manpower developments also added to the total. A rise in hourly earnings in many industries made an important contribution, and the total was also influenced by a degree of movement out of lower-income industries, such as agriculture, into employee status in higher-paid industries, such as construction.

The breakdown of labour income increases as between higher average earnings and higher employment is shown in Table 20, for selected industries. Thus, the 1965 increase in income in mining was accounted for about equally by higher employment and higher average earnings. This was true also in wholesale and retail trade. In manufacturing, the increase in average incomes was a little more significant than the gain in employment, and in construction the emphasis lay more heavily on average earnings. The increases in employment and average earnings in construction were the highest among all major industries.

TABLE 19

LABOUR INCOME AND PROFITS 1961 TO 1965

—	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965[1]
	(Millions of dollars)
Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income	18,996	20,233	21,546	23,416	25,628
Corporation profits before taxes and before dividends paid to non-residents	3,427	3,750	3,996	4,580	4,967
	(Per cent change)
Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income	.....	+6.5	+6.5	+8.7	+10.6
Corporation profits before taxes and before dividends paid to non-residents	.....	+9.4	+6.6	+14.6	+11.0

[1]Average of 3 quarters, seasonally adjusted at annual rates.

TABLE 20

LABOUR INCOME, EMPLOYED PERSONS AND AVERAGE INCOME
1963 to 1965

SELECTED INDUSTRIES

—	Per cent increase in
	Labour Income		Employed Persons		Average Income
	1964/1963	1965[1]/1964	1964/1963	1965[1]/1964	1964/1963	1965[1]/1964
Mining	4.9	13.0	0.8	6.3	4.1	6.3
Manufacturing	8.6	10.2	4.8	5.6	3.6	4.4
Construction	11.5	23.7	5.3	10.0	5.9	12.5
Trade	8.6	10.5	4.0	5.0	4.4	5.2
Finance, insurance and real estate	9.2	8.4	5.2	5.4	3.8	2.8
Total all industries	8.7	10.9	3.7	5.4	4.8	5.2

[1]1965 preliminary estimates by Department of Finance.

SOURCE: Estimates of Employees by Province and Industry, Occ. Paper, DBS Cat. 72-503; Ibid, monthly, DBS Cat. 72-008; The National Accounts; The Labour Force Survey; Department of Finance estimates.

Weekly wages and salaries[1] in these same industries in 1965 amounted to $111.39 in mining, $94.03 in manufacturing, $103.27 in construction, $76.47 in trade, and $88.23 in finance, insurance and real estate. Thus, the industry in which employment expanded most rapidly, namely construction, was one in which average weekly wages were relatively high. In the case of mining, employment also rose more rapidly than the average, and here also average weekly wages and salaries were high. In the finance, insurance and real estate group, where weekly wages and salaries are relatively lower, the increase in employment was about average.

[1]SOURCE: DBS, Employment and Payrolls, Cat. 72-002. The data employed here refer to establishments employing 15 persons or more, and in certain respects are not strictly comparable to National Accounts and other data.

The movement of workers into construction employment from other industries was an important element in the increase in total labour income. Some of the additional workers in construction were drawn from the mining industry, although despite this the mining sector increased employment in 1965. Most of these additional construction workers, however, came from industries in which average weekly wages and salaries were lower than in construction. Some skilled workers were drawn from the manufacturing and trade sectors, but a large number came in from agriculture. Many of those who came from agriculture had been self-employed, and as wage earners in industry added to the increase in labour income.

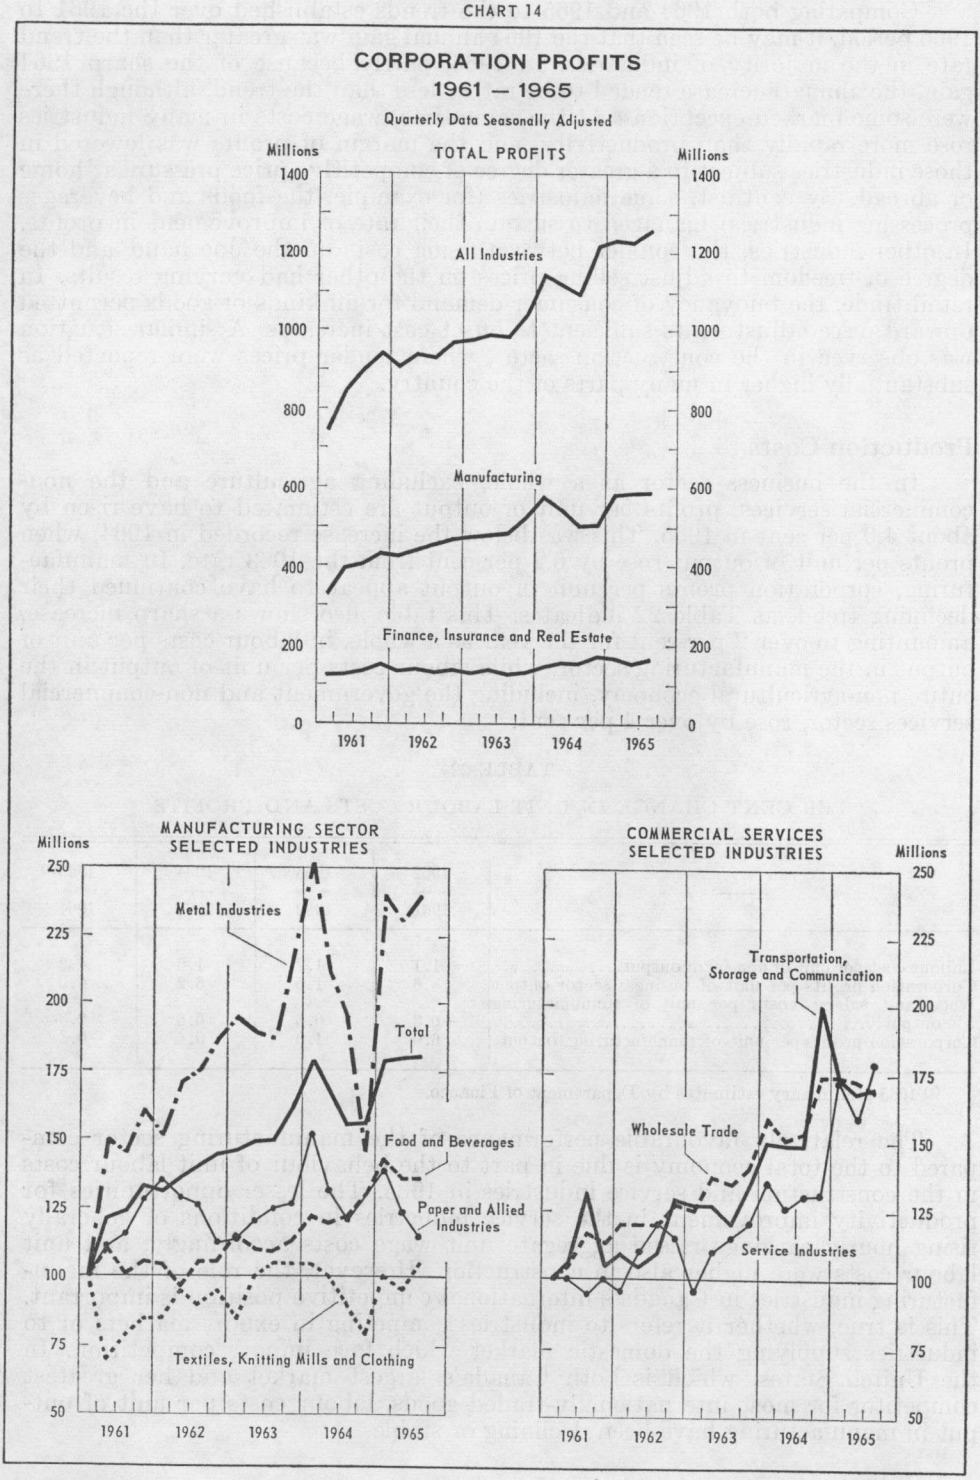
Corporation Profits

The changes in corporation profits before taxes and before dividends paid to non-residents, which were presented in summary form in the introductory section of this review, are set out in greater detail in Table 21, and shown in Chart 14.

This table indicates that the rate of growth in profits was less in 1965 than 1964 in a large number of industries. (These comparisons are derived from Department of Finance preliminary estimates). Actual declines in profits occurred in the paper industries and textiles, knitting mills and clothing. The rate of growth in profits was higher than in 1964 in the utilities group, the service industries, food and beverages, and retail trade.

TABLE 21

PROFITS BY INDUSTRY



1963 to 1965

—	Per cent increase
	1965[1] / 1964	1964 / 1963	1965[1][2] / 1961
Mining, Quarrying and Oil Wells	12.0	32.9	14.7
Total, Manufacturing Industries	7.6	8.6	10.2
Food and Beverages	10.9	10.3	7.0
Paper	−16.3	10.3	−0.3
Textiles	− 1.3	−5.1	2.5
Metal Industries	18.7	1.3	14.4
Electrical Products	12.9	27.8	29.0
Petroleum and Coal Products	7.8	14.3	6.1
Chemicals	7.5	13.3	16.3
Transportation, Storage and Communication	23.4	25.7	15.8
Electric Power and Gas Utilities	24.3	−1.3	1.4
Wholesale Trade	11.7	18.2	13.1
Retail Trade	16.5	6.1	9.2
Finance, Insurance, Real Estate	4.6	19.2	5.3
Service Industries	35.0	19.0	15.8
Total	11.0	14.5	10.3

(1) 1965 preliminary estimates by Department of Finance.

(2) Expressed as annual compound rate of increase.

CHART 14

CORPORATION PROFITS
1961 — 1965
Quarterly Data Seasonally Adjusted
TOTAL PROFITS
Millions
All Industries
Manufacturing
Finance, Insurance and Real Estate
MANUFACTURING SECTOR
SELECTED INDUSTRIES
Metal Industries
Total
Food and Beverages
Paper and Allied Industries
Textiles, Knitting Mills and Clothing
COMMERCIAL SERVICES
SELECTED INDUSTRIES
Transportation, Storage and Communication
Wholesale Trade
Service Industries
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965

Comparing both 1964 and 1965 to the trends established over the 1961 to 1965 period, it may be seen that the 1964 annual gain was greater than the trend rate in the majority of industries. In 1965, partly because of the sharp 1964 gain, the annual increase tended to be rather less than the trend, although there were some marked exceptions. At the same time, wage costs in many industries rose more rapidly than productivity, and the margin of profits was lowered in those industries subject to a greater degree of competitive price pressure at home or abroad. By contrast, some industries (for example, the foods and beverages processing industries) managed to sustain their rate of improvement in profits. In other industries, the conflict between rising costs on the one hand and the degree of freedom to adjust selling prices on the other had varying results. In retail trade, the buoyancy of consumer demand for all kinds of goods permitted upward price adjustments sufficient to offset cost increases. A similar situation was observed in the construction sector, where tender prices were reported as substantially higher in many parts of the country.

Production Costs

In the business sector as a whole, excluding agriculture and the non-commercial services, profits per unit of output are estimated to have risen by about 4.0 per cent in 1965. This was below the increase recorded in 1964, when profits per unit of output rose by 6.2 per cent from the 1963 rate. In manufacturing, corporation profits per unit of output appear to have continued their declining trend, as Table 22 indicates. This table also shows a sharp increase, amounting to over 2 per cent for the year as a whole, in labour costs per unit of output in the manufacturing sector, while labour costs per unit of output in the entire non-agricultural economy, including the government and non-commercial services sector, rose by over 4 per cent.

TABLE 22

PER CENT CHANGE IN UNIT LABOUR COSTS AND PROFITS

—	1962/1961	1963/1962	1964/1963	1965[1]/1964
Labour cost per unit of non-farm output	1.1	1.7	1.6	4.2
Corporation profits per unit of business sector output	3.6	1.5	6.2	4.0
Wage and salary costs per unit of manufacturing output	−0.3	0.6	0.6	2.3
Corporation profits per unit of manufacturing output	6.9	4.0	0.4	−0.3

[1] 1965 preliminary estimates by Department of Finance.

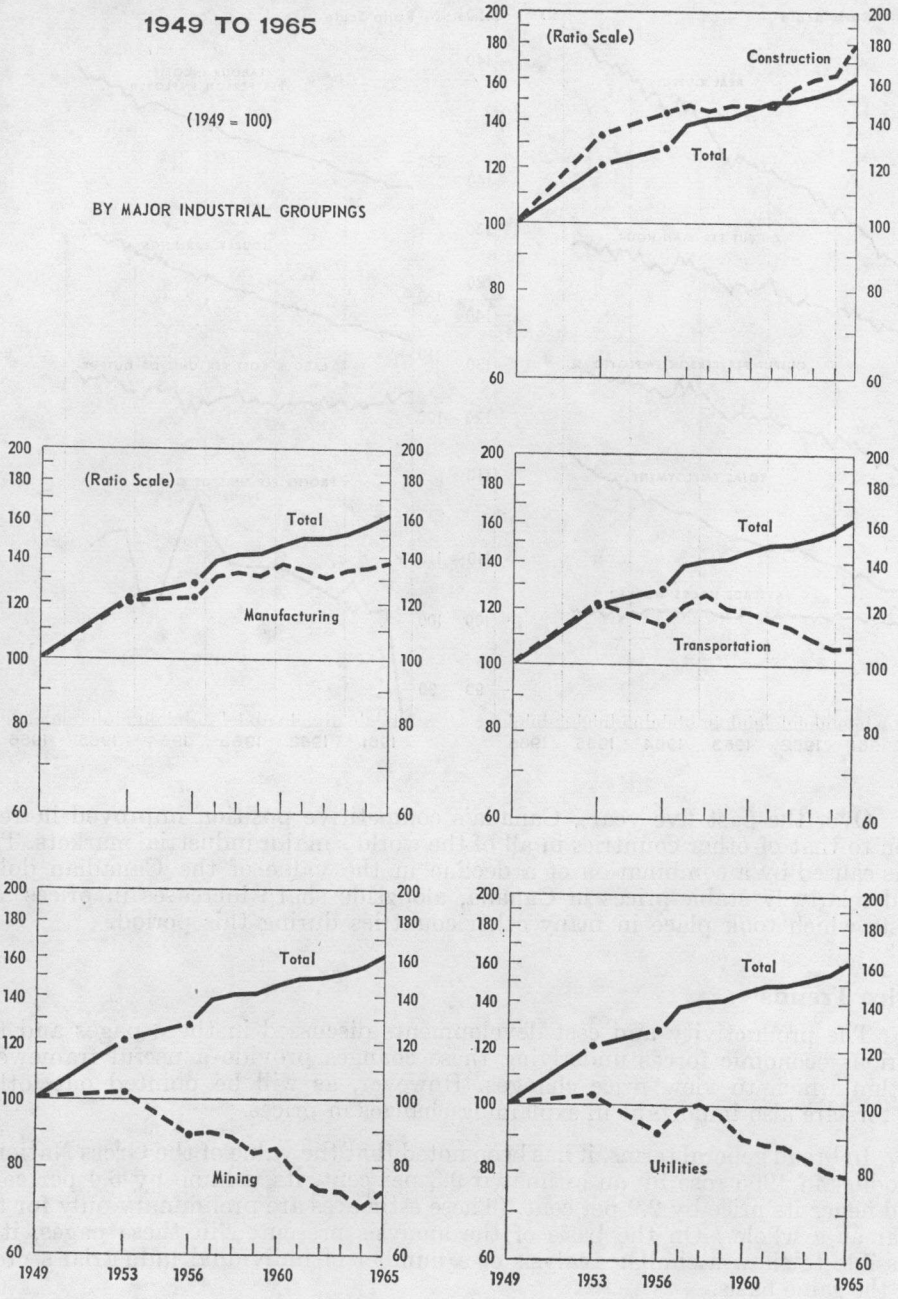
The relatively favourable performance of the manufacturing sector compared to the total economy is due in part to the behaviour of unit labour costs in the construction and service industries in 1965. The lesser opportunities for productivity improvement in the service industries in conditions of generally rising hourly earnings raised aggregate unit wage costs accordingly, and unit labour costs were higher also in construction. However, the role of the manufacturing industries in Canada's international competitive position is important. This is true, whether it refers to industries competing in export markets or to industries supplying the domestic market which face import competition. In the United States, which is both Canada's largest market and her greatest competitor for most internationally-traded goods, labour costs per unit of output in manufacturing have been declining or stable.

CHART 15

WAGE COSTS PER UNIT OF OUTPUT 1949 TO 1965

(1949 = 100)

BY MAJOR INDUSTRIAL GROUPINGS



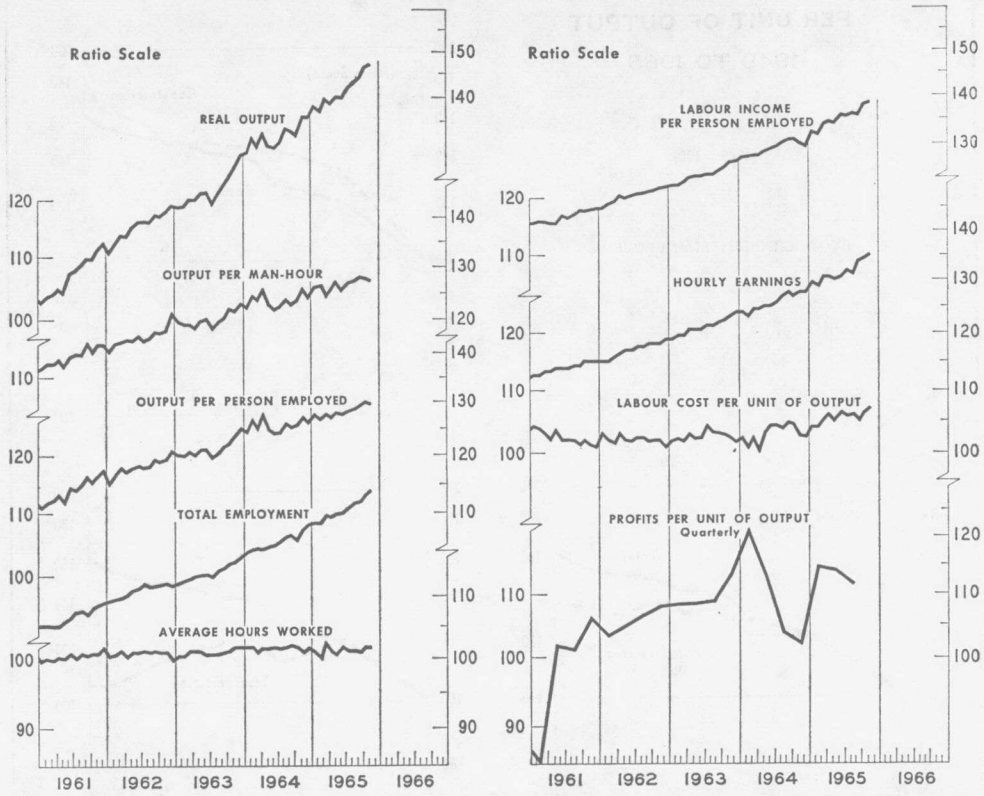


CHART 16

PRODUCTIVITY, LABOUR COSTS AND PROFITS IN MANUFACTURING

Monthly - Index 1957=100

Over the past five years, Canada's competitive position improved in relation to that of other countries in all of the world's major industrial markets. This was caused by a combination of a decline in the value of the Canadian dollar and relatively stable prices in Canada, alongside sharp increases in prices and costs which took place in many other countries during this period.

Price Trends

The productivity and cost developments discussed in these pages and the various economic forces underlying these changes provide a useful framework within which to view price changes. However, as will be pointed out, other factors are also important in explaining changes in prices.

In broad general terms, it has been noted that the value of the Gross National Product in 1965 rose by an estimated 9.3 per cent, its volume by 6.4 per cent, and hence its price by 2.9 per cent. (These estimates are preliminary only for the year as a whole.) On the basis of the analysis presented in these pages, it is possible to show a similar analysis of a number of individual industrial sectors on the same basis.

The value of the total product on an industry basis is the sum of the payments to the factors of production (e.g., wages, rent, interest and profits) directly employed by each industry. The volume of output represents the real amount of production on an industry basis and is analogous to constant dollar GNP[1]. The ratio of the value over the volume of output by industry is an indicator of "price" or "cost" changes by industry. Such "prices" are not real in the sense that they are quoted on commodity exchanges. However, they have a real economic sense in that they reflect the relationship between the dollar costs of adding value to goods and services through the use of productive factors and the efficiency with which these factors of production are employed.

Any individual industry has selling prices which are influenced by the costs of production in that industry as well as by the costs of materials and services purchased from other industries. Since we are concerned with the "prices" of value added in particular industries, the prices of purchases from other industries must be removed[2]. The difference between gross sales and gross purchases, called value added, consists of returns to labour and capital. In turn, the wage bill can be subdivided into the number of employees and their average earnings, (or manhours and wage rates). Similarly, the non-wage incomes, such as profits and unincorporated net income, can be subdivided into the capital stock and the rate of return on that stock. The wage rate may be seen as the "price" of labour and the rate of return as the "price" of capital. Similarly, the volume of production may be seen as the quantity of labour and capital input times their productivity. Accordingly, the total "price" charged by each industry can be seen to consist of labour and capital costs, or simply unit costs of the factors of production. Obviously, productivity gains reduce such costs.

Table 23 indicates that annual average increases in the value, volume and "price" components of business product over the whole postwar period amounted to 7.4 per cent, 4.8 per cent and 2.5 per cent respectively. In the business expansion from 1961 to date, there was much less price pressure than previously, since business product prices increased by only $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per year. There was, however, a renewal of price increases in 1965 of the same order of magnitude as those of the postwar average, amounting to about $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in that year.

Earlier comments on the components of the National Accounts deflators point out that some of these components, by convention, do not allow for changes in productivity, and hence do not accurately reflect cost developments in the economy as a whole. The removal of these elements of price from GNP results in a more accurate portrayal of the effects of demand and supply pressures on real resources in the business area. As already observed, the price increase in business product was about $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent and the volume increase was about $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent in 1965.

An examination of the industrial breakdown of business product over the whole postwar period (Column 1 in Table 23) indicates lower than average price increases for mining, manufacturing (particularly durables), transportation and communication and electric power, gas and water utilities. These are high capital intensity industries. They have also had the highest productivity gains in the postwar period. Wage rate increases granted in these industries were apparently

---

[1]See "Indexes of Real Domestic Product by Industry of Origin", DBS Catalogue No. 61-505.

[2]In effect, the "price" of value added in an industry may be represented as follows:

$$\text{"Price" of value added by industry} = \frac{\text{Current value of sales}}{\text{Constant value of sales}} - \frac{\text{Current value of purchases}}{\text{Constant value of purchases}}$$

$$= \text{selling price} - \text{buying price}$$

TABLE 23

VALUE, VOLUME AND PRICE COMPONENTS OF GDP BY INDUSTRY[1]

(Per cent changes per year)

	1949 to 1965	1961 to 1965	1964 to 1965
Forestry
Value	3.6	5.8	2.4
Volume	3.1	5.6	2.2
Price	0.5	0.2	0.2
Mining
Value	8.1	7.1	11.2
Volume	8.1	6.7	6.0
Price	—	0.4	4.9
Manufacturing
Value	6.5	8.5	8.7
Volume	4.5	7.1	7.0
Price	1.9	1.3	1.6
Construction
Value	7.9	10.0	18.8
Volume	4.8	5.9	11.2
Price	2.9	3.9	6.9
Transportation, storage and communication
Value	7.3	6.5	7.3
Volume	5.1	6.7	6.5
Price	2.0	−0.2	0.7
Electric power, gas and water utilities
Value	9.6	6.6	9.9
Volume	7.8	7.7	8.3
Price	1.7	−1.0	1.5
Trade
Value	6.7	7.3	9.5
Volume	4.3	5.4	6.3
Price	2.4	1.7	3.0
Finance, insurance and real estate
Value	9.1	7.1	7.3
Volume	4.8	4.7	4.1
Price	4.1	2.2	3.1
Other commercial industries[2]
Value	9.0	8.7	7.8
Volume	3.3	5.9	3.4
Price	5.5	2.5	4.2
TOTAL, BUSINESS PRODUCT
Value	7.4	7.7	8.8
Volume	4.8	6.3	6.4
Price	2.5	1.4	2.2
Agriculture
Value	2.4	10.1	9.0
Volume	2.5	6.4	6.0
Price	—	3.5	2.8
Public admin., defence and community services[3]
Value	—	—	—
Volume	4.2	1.0	2.2
Price	—	—	—
TOTAL DOMESTIC PRODUCT
Value	7.2	7.8	8.8
Volume	4.5	5.8	6.1
Price	2.5	1.9	2.6

[1] Gross Domestic Product is equal to GNP plus net outpayments of interest and dividends minus indirect taxes less subsidies.

[2] Includes recreation, personal and business services.

[3] Includes schools, hospitals and health services, religious and other community services.

SOURCE: DBS National Accounts, annual issues, Table 21 and DBS Indexes of Real Domestic Product by Industry of Origin (Cat. No. 61-505 and 61-005). Value Estimate for 1965 made by Department of Finance.

absorbed by rising productivity, with consequent reduction of the upward pressure on prices. These long term trends toward greater productivity and lower-than-average price increases have by and large continued through the current expansion. Mining recorded substantial increases in price in 1965; this was probably due to conditions in external markets for mineral products.

In contrast to the relatively low price trend in terms of value added in the above group of industries, the construction, trade, and broad service groups had greater than average price increases throughout the postwar period, and again in 1965.

The construction industry, according to these measures, increased its value of output by 8 per cent per year over the whole period, representing a volume increase of 5 per cent and a price increase of 3 per cent per year. In the current expansion, from 1961 to date, the available measures show that construction value, volume and price increased by 10 per cent, 6 per cent and 4 per cent respectively. These increases accelerated in 1965, as shown in the last column of Table 23. It should, however, be noted that there are some serious difficulties of price measurement in this industry.

Price increases in the value added by wholesale and retail trade over the whole postwar period amounted to 2.4 per cent per year. They amounted to 1.7 per cent in the period 1961 to 1965, but rose to 3.0 per cent in 1965. The volume of output in trade was similar to that of total business product.

In finance, insurance, real estate and other commercial services, increases in the price of value added were above average throughout the postwar period, but statistical difficulties prohibit any real inference to be drawn from this type of measurement. The financial and commercial industries round out the industrial coverage of business product, in which they have 25 per cent of the total weight. Any inaccuracy in the measurement of the price of value added in these industries would have a corresponding effect on the price component of total business product.

Summarizing the evidence, it may be said that the goods-producing industries, plus transportation and electric power, gas and water utilities, have generally contributed much less to overall cost increase in the postwar period and in the most recent expansion, than have the distributive trades and financial and commercial services. There are difficulties of price measurement in the latter areas, and in the construction industry. Nevertheless, it is in these areas that the increases in 1965 in the price of value added appear to be most prominent.

Turning to more commonly used price indexes (for example, the consumer price index and the general wholesale price index), it is worthwhile noting that each index is designed for specific purposes, and its use as a general, overall indicator of economic trends may be subject to limitations. Thus, the Consumer Price Index cannot be regarded as a sensitive indicator of cyclical cost developments, although consumer prices reflect, sooner or later, the cost developments discussed in these pages. The Consumer Price Index is primarily intended to serve as a measure of changes in the prices of consumer goods and services, including those purchased from abroad. In conjunction with data on earnings, it can be used to derive an approximation to real wages. In this connection, the following table is of interest, since it draws attention to the general importance of productivity improvement in raising real wages over time.

The Budget—Appendix

REAL EARNINGS AND PRODUCTIVITY, BUSINESS SECTOR

—	Per cent change over preceding year
	Average Compensation Paid Per Hour[1]	Consumer Price Index	"Real" Hourly Earnings	Manhour Productivity
1961	6.1	0.9	5.2	4.2
1962	2.5	1.2	1.3	1.6
1963	4.4	1.8	2.6	3.0
1964	3.6	1.8	1.8	2.6
1965	5.8	2.4	3.4	1.8
5-year average	4.5	1.6	2.9	2.7

[1]Total compensation paid divided by total hours worked. Includes effects of changes in rates, overtime and inter-industry and occupational shifts.

Details of the changes in the Consumer Price Index are set out in Table 8. In 1965, the effect of severe drought, not only in some parts of Canada but throughout most of the eastern United States, was sufficient to raise the price of some staple food products, particularly potatoes, very sharply. While improved conditions during the summer permitted these prices to decline, new pressure arose as a general shortage of meat supplies developed in the United States Strong prices in cattle and meat markets therefore emerged in the United States, and this in turn forced Canadian prices to rise as Canadian producers sought their most advantageous returns.

Rising standards of living also have had their impact on the Consumer Price Index. Larger numbers of cars on the roads, and the growing preference for bigger and more expensive models, have resulted not only in more insurance claims, but also in larger claims. Accordingly, there have been increases in car insurance rates which caused the index to rise in 1965. Higher standards of public service have also been associated with higher property taxes and higher sales taxes in many areas, as modern living calls for continuing improvement in highways, schools, hospital care and social services generally. While much of this represents higher standards of consumption, a great deal of it is reflected in the record in the form of higher prices to consumers.

A second common measure of price changes in the Canadian economy (and one which excludes changes in the cost of imports) is the price index ("deflator") used in constructing the National Accounts constant-dollar tables. This measure, which rose by about 3 per cent in 1965, reflects not only the changes in prices but also the changes in the pattern of purchases. The greater relative importance of construction in the 1965 expenditure pattern therefore affected the movement of the total index fairly strongly, insofar as the index for construction outlays rose rather more than the index for some other forms of expenditure. Movements in the GNE "deflators" are set out in detail in Table 24.

23033—220

TABLE 24

IMPLICIT PRICE INDEXES

SEASONALLY ADJUSTED GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE AND COMPONENTS

(1957=100)

	Personal Expenditure on Consumer Goods and Services	Non-Durable Goods	Durable Goods	Services	Government Expenditure on Goods and Services	Business Gross Fixed Capital Formation	New Residential Construction	New Non-Residential Construction	New Machinery and Equipment	Exports of Goods and Services	Imports of Goods and Services	Gross National Expenditure
1962 1Q...	106.7	104.4	100.8	111.4	112.2	110.0	111.6	109.2	110.0	105.7	108.2	107.6
2Q...	107.1	105.0	100.7	112.2	112.9	110.9	112.5	110.0	110.9	106.5	109.4	108.1
3Q...	107.4	105.2	100.9	112.6	114.0	111.4	113.3	109.8	111.7	107.1	109.7	108.7
4Q...	107.9	106.0	100.9	112.8	114.8	112.0	114.1	110.9	112.0	106.9	110.1	109.2
Year	107.3	105.2	100.8	112.3	113.5	111.1	112.9	110.0	111.2	106.6	109.3	108.4
1963 1Q...	108.2	106.2	101.3	113.2	116.5	112.7	114.7	111.9	112.5	107.3	111.1	109.6
2Q...	108.6	106.6	101.1	114.0	117.6	113.4	115.8	112.2	113.2	107.4	111.6	110.1
3Q...	109.2	107.3	101.5	114.2	118.4	114.5	117.0	113.2	114.3	107.7	113.3	110.4
4Q...	109.4	107.8	100.9	114.5	119.7	115.3	119.6	114.0	114.3	108.9	113.6	111.1
Year	108.9	107.0	101.2	114.0	118.1	114.0	116.8	112.9	113.6	107.8	112.5	110.3
1964 1Q...	109.9	108.3	100.7	115.4	119.9	116.4	121.2	114.5	115.4	109.5	114.4	111.6
2Q...	110.4	108.7	100.5	116.0	120.5	118.1	122.9	115.5	118.0	109.9	115.0	112.3
3Q...	110.7	109.2	99.8	116.9	122.1	118.5	124.5	116.3	117.6	111.2	114.3	113.3
4Q...	111.0	109.1	99.6	117.5	122.4	119.5	125.8	117.7	117.9	110.6	113.7	113.8
Year	110.5	108.8	100.1	116.5	121.2	118.1	123.5	116.0	117.2	110.3	114.4	112.8
1965 1Q...	111.4	109.3	99.9	118.4	123.7	121.9	127.4	120.1	120.8	110.1	114.4	114.4
2Q...	112.3	110.6	100.2	119.1	125.2	123.5	129.5	122.7	121.3	110.8	114.2	115.7
3Q...	112.7	110.9	99.9	120.2	126.1	123.9	129.8	123.7	121.4	112.2	114.5	116.6
4Q...

SOURCE: DBS

The Gross National Expenditure price index reflects a number of other special factors apart from the change in composition of expenditure. In particular, it includes the influence of indirect taxes; this was again a factor in 1965, as the prices of construction materials and machinery went up following the removal of the final part of their exemption from sales tax on January 1. It also is affected by the growing emphasis on government and community services in the consumption pattern, as these are activities in which wage increases are reflected immediately in the price measurement. As noted earlier, this reflects the convention of not measuring productivity changes for these services. Higher export prices have also been a feature of the GNE deflators in 1965, as some world commodity prices have been higher.

The Industry Selling Price Indexes, referred to briefly in the introductory section of this review, are a helpful indicator of cyclical and cost developments. These indexes report price changes excluding tax changes, and are also designed to exclude such factors as insurance or freight costs incurred in transporting merchandise from the factory to the customer. They cover a large part of the manufacturing sector, but are not comprehensive.

A selection of industry selling price indexes was shown in Table 7 and their recent movement was illustrated in Chart 3. The effect both of special factors and of some advancing cost pressures can be seen in this table, with the meat shortage having a particularly powerful impact on the meat packing industry. The cyclical trend in steel ingot prices in this table is shown by the downward movement into 1963, and the reversal in 1964 and 1965. Construction demand affected the 1965 movement of cement prices and sash, door and planing mills, while the downward movement of motor vehicle prices is also apparent.

It may be observed that many of the well-known wholesale price indexes are of value as an indication of costs of materials to users in certain sectors. In particular, the residential and non-residential building materials indexes are of help in revealing the trend in prices builders must pay for their materials. In 1965, the residential materials index (1949 = 100) rose from 149.5 in January to 151.3 in November, and the non-residential index rose from 145.5 to 148.5. These changes provide additional evidence that the rise in construction costs in 1965 was associated more with higher labour costs (including sub-trades costs) than with higher materials prices.

DEMAND

Public and Private Investment

The current investment expansion in both public and private sectors accounted for one-third of the total increase in demand strengths in the past year. Total public and private investment expenditures rose by about $1,850 million, while total demand from all other sectors combined—consumers, governments with respect to their current outlays, exports and change in inventories—amounted to some $3,800 million. A considerable part of the investment expansion, particularly that which took the form of machinery and equipment, was met by importing such items from abroad. However, there remained a substantial portion of the total investment programme which competed for domestic supplies of labour and materials, and which had important but less direct effects (multiplier effects) in adding to incomes and expenditures in the other parts of the Canadian economy.

This was the second successive year of rapid expansion in total public and private investment. The rates of increase amounted to over 15 per cent per year in both 1964 and 1965, exceeding the increases of about 9 per cent per year recorded in gross national expenditure in each of those two years. Thus, the share of investment in total expenditure increased in both years, to reach a level, in current prices, not far short of the two previous peaks, in 1957 and 1929. In contrast to the 1955–57 investment expansion, which was concentrated on electric power, oil and gas and other primary resource industries, the present expansion is notable for relatively greater emphasis on manufacturing, commercial and institutional construction (schools and hospitals) and service industries in general. Within manufacturing, resource-related industries such as paper products and primary metals continued to account for a large part of the new investments, but secondary products such as textiles, chemicals and transportation equipment played a much more prominent role. New manufacturing plant and equipment expenditures increased over 20 per cent in both years, and amounted to nearly one-fifth of total public and private capital expenditure. By 1965 they exceeded their 1957 percentage share in total investment.

Trade, finance and commercial services increased their investment outlays by approximately 20 per cent in both years, and were an important contributor to the overall investment increase in 1965. This present expansion thus appears to be related to continued urbanization and the development of secondary processing and services industries, to a much greater extent than previously. Further industrial detail is given in Table 25.

TABLE 25

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

—	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966
	(Millions of dollars)
Agriculture and fishing	576	663	762	836	928	975
Forestry	50	54	60	88	102	102
Mining, quarrying and oil wells	449	480	521	632	687	936
Manufacturing	1,085	1,269	1,358	1,831	2,238	2,696
Electric power, gas and water works	706	720	763	888	1,129	1,282
Transportation, storage and communications	992	881	1,008	1,171	1,289	1,381
Construction industry	136	109	135	197	235	248
Trade, finance and commercial services	847	860	918	1,042	1,218	1,464
Institutions	617	834	873	771	1,009	1,261
Housing	1,467	1,587	1,713	2,028	2,133	2,216
Government departments	1,247	1,258	1,282	1,460	1,830	1,985
Total Capital Expenditure	8,172	8,715	9,393	10,944	12,798	14,546
Total Capital Expenditure as a percentage of Gross National Expenditure	21.8	21.5	21.8	23.3	24.9
Index of total Capital Expenditure in constant dollars (1957=100)	89.5	93.1	97.0	108.7	121.0

SOURCE: DBS and Department of Trade and Commerce.

Housing and social capital outlays in 1965 were also large, and were of course associated in some degree with this business investment activity. However, social capital expenditures are also directly related to the population developments discussed in the Economic Review of 1964. The construction of primary schools, then high schools, now universities, has accompanied the postwar population surge throughout its various stages. In addition, there have been rapid urban expansions involving all of the needs of local supply, such as water, electricity, sanitation, road and highway construction and the building and equipping of hospitals and many other municipal facilities.

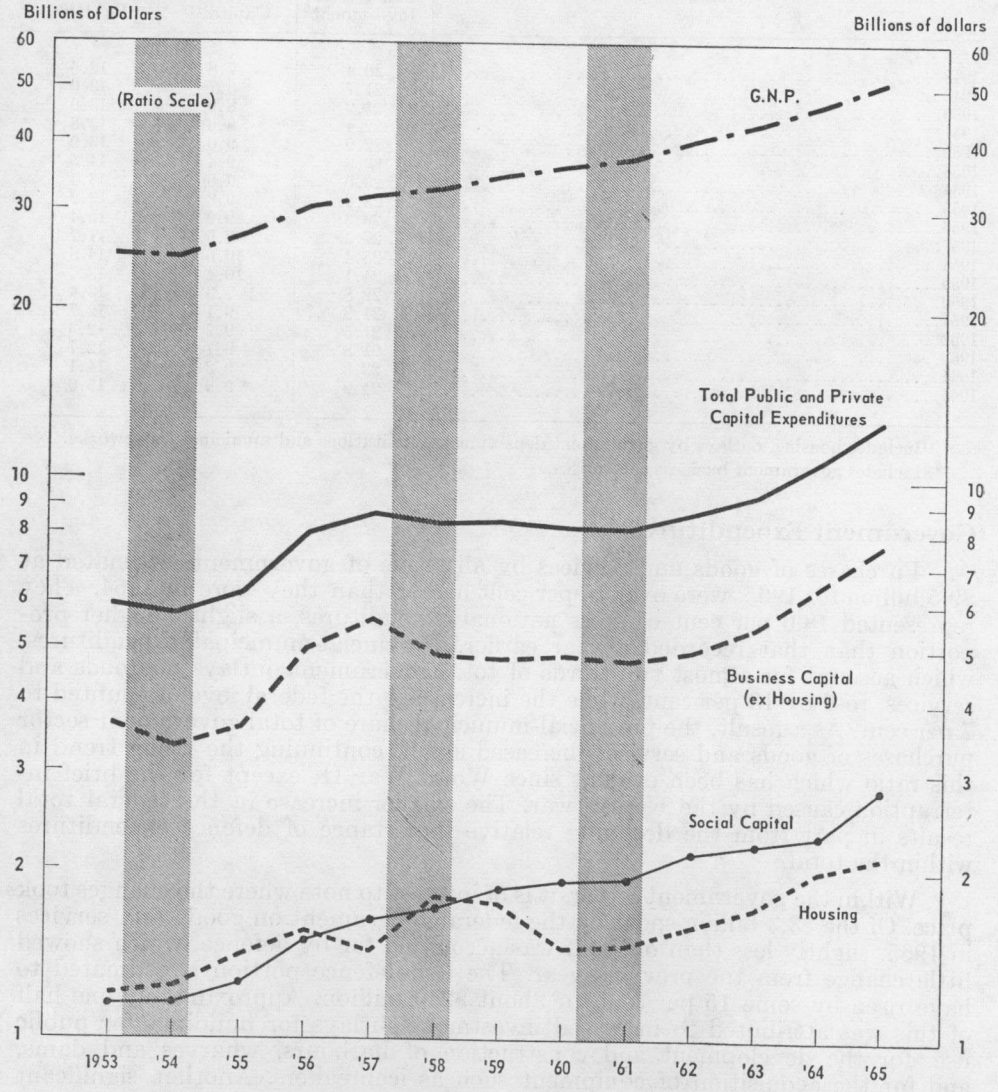
TABLE 26

RECONCILIATION WITH NATIONAL ACCOUNTS INVESTMENT

—	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966
	(Millions of dollars)
Private and Public Capital Expenditure, Table 25...	8,172	8,715	9,393	10,944	12,798	14,546
Deduct:
New residential construction by governments...	9	10	6	7	9	8
New non-residential construction by governments	1,368	1,562	1,609	1,618	2,113	2,379
New machinery and equipment outlays by governments.....	160	183	187	216	252	294
Business Gross Fixed Capital Formation in Housing, Plant and Equipment—National Accounts definition.....	6,635	6,960	7,591	9,103	10,424	11,865

These developments are reflected in the following table, which shows that business investment accounted for an increase of $1,100 million, social capital an increase of $650 million, and housing an increase of $100 million, in the year 1965. The classification below is according to that used in Public and Private Investment, rather than that of the National Accounts.

MAIN COMPONENTS OF INVESTMENT DEMAND



($ million)

	1964	1965	Increase from 1964 to 1965
Business capital.....	6,617	7,719	1,102
Housing.....	2,028	2,133	105
Social capital.....	2,299	2,946	647
Total Public and Private.....	10,944	12,798	1,854

These main components of public and private investment are compared with Gross National Product in Chart 17. Here it can be seen that business capital has traditionally fluctuated much more than Gross National Product, while social capital outlays have followed a steadier course, except in the past year. Housing expenditures have shown a variety of movements. However, the chart suggests that, in the past, they have frequently changed direction in advance of general business conditions, turning downward a year in advance of the general business peaks and moving up from their cyclically lowest points well before the general business troughs are reached. Over the past ten years, expenditures on social capital appear to have been advancing much more rapidly than housing outlays, and may also have exceeded the rate of growth of business capital, although the large fluctuations make it difficult to pick terminal years or to fit trends for such a comparison.

CHART 17

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT 1953 TO 1965

TABLE 27

INVESTMENT AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
1948 to 1965

—	Total Private and Public Investment	Housing and Social Capital(1)	Business Investment Private and Public(2)
1948	20.4	7.8	12.6
1949	21.7	8.7	13.0
1950	21.9	8.9	13.0
1951	22.4	8.6	13.8
1952	22.9	9.0	13.9
1953	23.9	9.4	14.5
1954	23.0	9.6	13.4
1955	23.0	9.8	13.2
1956	26.3	9.9	16.4
1957	27.3	9.6	17.7
1958	25.4	10.6	14.8
1959	24.1	10.4	13.7
1960	22.8	9.3	13.4
1961	21.8	9.1	12.7
1962	21.5	9.2	12.3
1963	21.8	9.1	12.7
1964	23.3	9.2	14.1
1965	24.9	9.9	15.0

(1)Includes housing, outlays by government departments, institutions and municipal waterworks.
(2)Includes government business enterprises.

Government Expenditures

Purchases of goods and services by all levels of government, estimated at $9.5 billion for 1965, were over 10 per cent higher than they were in 1964. They represented 18.6 per cent of gross national expenditures, a slightly higher proportion than that recorded a year earlier. Provincial-municipal expenditures, which account for almost two-thirds of total government outlays on goods and services, rose by 13 per cent, while the increase at the federal level amounted to 7 per cent. As a result, the provincial-municipal share of total government sector purchases of goods and services increased again, continuing the rising trend in this ratio which has been evident since World War II, except for the brief interruption caused by the Korean war. The smaller increase in the federal total results in part from the declining relative importance of defence expenditures within the total.

Within the government sector, it is of interest to note where the changes took place. Of the $3.3 billion spent by the federal government on goods and services in 1965, slightly less than one-half was accounted for by defence, which showed little change from the previous year. The non-defence portion is estimated to have risen by some 15 per cent, or about $240 million. Approximately one half of this was attributed to increased investment outlays for buildings for public use, for the development and construction of harbours, wharves and dams, and for the acquisition of equipment such as icebreakers. Another significant increase, amounting to almost a quarter of the total non-defence advance in expenditures at the federal level, resulted from increased labour costs, including those retroactive payments to a large number of government employees which were paid in September. Much of the balance can be explained by lower net liquidation of inventories held by government commodity agencies, and by increased payments for international aid.

The provincial and municipal governments, taken together, increased their demand for goods and services by over $700 million, to a level of $6.3 billion in 1965. One-half of this 1965 gain occurred at the provincial level, although in the aggregate provinces account for a little more than a third of overall provincial-municipal spending on goods and services. A substantial part of the increase in spending by departments of provincial governments was for construction, primarily of roads, bridges and highways. The balance of the provincial increase can be attributed to higher wage and salary payments, which rose by about 10 per cent over the year.

Labour costs account also for the major part of the increase at the municipal level. This is especially the case in the field of education, where salaries and wages have shown annual increments of about 10 per cent for several years, reflecting not only rising standards and rising salary levels, but also the continued increase necessary in staff and facilities as the number of young people in schools and training establishments continues to increase.

Personal Expenditure

Consumer expenditure remained an important sustaining force in 1965, rising by over 7 per cent and accounting for about two-fifths of the rise in total demand. Personal expenditures on durables in the first nine months of the year were just over 8 per cent above the level recorded during the same months of 1964. These purchases were strongly concentrated in new and used cars, and spending on home furnishings was also higher. This 8 per cent rate of increase was in keeping with the long-term rate for the period 1949 to 1965, and was below the rates of increase which occurred in both 1963 and 1964.

Purchases of non-durable goods in 1965 rose by just under 7 per cent. This movement reflected not only a larger volume of purchases, but also the sharp increase in the price of some food products during the course of the year. Purchases of services by consumers also rose substantially, and here again a significant rise in some prices contributed measurably to the overall increase. Table 28 compares the various growth rates, in both current and constant dollars, of the components of consumer expenditure in the postwar period.

TABLE 28

COMPONENTS OF PERSONAL EXPENDITURE

ANNUAL GROWTH RATES

Per cent

	1949 to 1965		1961 to 1965		1964 to 1965
	$ current	$ constant	$ current	$ constant	$ current	$ constant
Non-durables	5.5	4.0	5.6	4.1	6.8	5.2
Durables	7.9	7.0	9.3	9.6	8.1	8.7
Services	8.4	4.6	6.4	4.3	7.7	4.9
Total	6.8	4.6	6.4	4.8	7.3	5.6

The aggregate increase in personal expenditure in 1965 reflected both the increase in employment and incomes and also the changing age-structure of the population. The sharp rise in the number of young people earning money was an important factor. Purchases of used cars, clothing, some foods and beverages and many kinds of personal consumer services all increased substantially, in part as young people entered the market for consumer goods and services. On a per capita basis, consumer expenditures in constant dollars rose by about 3.0 per cent per year between 1961 and 1965, but the rate of advance in 1965 alone was in the region of 3.7 per cent.

It is of interest to compare the growth pattern in consumer expenditures over recent years and over the longer term, as they are set out in Table 28. While personal consumption patterns are, of course, influenced strongly by relative price movements, the constant-dollar trend comparisons over the longer term give some insight into the changing economic structure (as it is reflected in final consumption patterns) and changing standards of living in Canada. The period from 1949 to 1965 shows an annual rise in total consumption of 4.6 per cent. Population during this period has risen by 2.4 per cent per year, so that real consumption has risen by more than 2 per cent per year. As the table shows, purchases of durables of all kinds—cars, furniture and home appliances—have shown the most rapid rate of growth, while purchases of services has risen at about the same rate as total purchases. In many ways, these trends have reflected the rapid modernization, the growth of the cities and the move to the suburbs which characterized these years. The rise in expenditures on non-durable items, although lower than the others, is still above the rate of growth of population, indicating that living standards have been rising even apart from the urbanization developments.

The constant-dollar increases of 1965 were above the trends established both for the longer term and for the more recent 1961 to 1965 period, and were related to the high levels of employment and income.

Exports of Goods and Services

In 1965, the rise of 10.0 per cent in the value of non-farm merchandise exports more than matched the increase of 9.2 per cent in non-farm GNP at market prices. Largely as a result of the phasing of wheat shipments under special contracts, farm exports were lower than in 1964, bringing the growth in total merchandise exports down to 5.6 per cent. The position regarding wheat in 1965 is typical of a number of special factors which can, and do, affect the level of Canadian exports from time to time; apart from these, there also appears to have been some slowing-down in 1965 in the very high rate of growth of exports which had prevailed since 1962.

An important question for the Canadian economy is the extent to which this slowing-down was accounted for by less buoyant conditions in Canada's foreign markets in 1965, or by any change in the Canadian share in those markets. By far the greater part of the overall rise in Canadian exports in 1965 was accounted for by a 13.4 per cent increase in sales to the United States, which was about the same as the rise in U.S. merchandise imports from all sources. Although total United Kingdom imports rose a little in 1965, Canadian exports to Britain fell slightly, despite the fact that the weight of foodstuffs and industrial raw materials in those exports makes it unlikely that the impact of the emergency U.K. surcharge upon them was greater than the average for all U.K. imports. It is probable, however, that U.K. industry was running down its inventories of those raw materials which figure so prominently in Canadian exports, in response to fiscal and monetary measures other than the surcharge taken by the United Kingdom to deal with its balance of payments problem. In the case of the United States, two major elements in the growth of U.S. imports in 1965 were coffee and steel; Canadian capacity in the one case, needless to say, is non-existent and in the other was heavily committed in 1965 to meeting domestic Canadian demand.

The case of exports to the rest of the world in 1965 is rather different. It may seem a little paradoxical that a year which saw the signing of a second very large contract to sell wheat to the Soviet Union, and of another with China which only the sale to Russia surpasses, should have seen an actual fall of $100 million in total exports to countries other than the United States and the United Kingdom. The drop as such was entirely accounted for by the phasing of the wheat shipments; that is to say, by the fact that about $300 million-worth was shipped

TABLE 29

CANADIAN COMMODITY EXPORTS
1964 and 1965

(Domestic and re-export, millions of dollars)

	1964	1965	% Change
To: United States	4,437.0	5,030.9	+13.4
United Kingdom	1,207.1	1,185.4	− 1.8
Other Commonwealth and Preferential	503.4	512.7	+ 1.8
All other countries	2,156.1	2,035.5	− 5.6
Total	8,303.5	8,764.5	+ 5.6

SOURCE: DBS

in 1964 under the first contract with the Soviet Union, but only about $200 million-worth in 1965 under the second contract. The larger part of the second contract, and the beginning of shipments under the new contract with China, fall in 1966. Although the drop is explicable in terms of wheat, non-farm exports to countries other than the United States and the United Kingdom nevertheless showed no significant rise, remaining on the plateau reached in 1964. The Communist countries are negligible markets for the Canadian minerals, chemicals and manufactured goods concerned, and the less developed countries take comparatively modest quantities; Canada evidently succeeded in maintaining sales at about their 1964 level in the markets of Western Europe and Japan. The growth of demand in some of these countries was affected by stabilization measures designed to reduce inflationary pressures or improve the balance of payments. Some of these measures may have had a significant effect on the inventories of commodities which Canada normally exports to these countries.

While Canadian exports to overseas markets did not show much change, the rise in Canadian sales below the border was substantial. Under the stimulus of the new Automotive Free Trade Agreement with the United States, total Canadian exports of automobiles and parts increased by no less than 90 per cent, and this in the first year of the Agreement, during which the rationalization and enlargement of production runs at which it is aimed can only have begun to get under way. (It should be added that imports rose by only a quarter, although by an absolutely greater value.) Offsetting this striking growth to some extent was a rather lower total of exports of aircraft and parts, under production-sharing arrangements, than in the exceptional year 1964, when they rose by 130 per cent.

The Budget—Appendix

Increases in 1965 in exports of the crude and semi-processed materials which account for the majority of Canadian non-farm exports tended to range fairly narrowly about the global average of 5½ per cent. Two exceptions to this were soft-wood lumber, exports of which increased by 1.0 per cent, and aluminum and its alloys, which recorded an export gain of 12.4 per cent.

The breakdown of Canadian merchandise exports by major commodity groups in Table 29 is presented for 1965 in terms of the twelve-month period ending on September 30. Data for the calendar year are not yet available, but the period shown has in any case the advantage of eliminating most of the effect of both the first and second major wheat contracts with the Soviet Union and thus representing fairly accurately the change which has taken place in the basic composition of Canadian export trade since 1961. For two or three years to come, at least, major special wheat sales are likely to raise the share of total exports accounted for by farm and fish products above 20 per cent again; and the development of potash exports should progressively raise both the share accounted for

TABLE 30

MERCHANDISE EXPORTS BY COMMODITY GROUPS

1961 and 1965

—	Farm and Fish Products	Forest Products	Metals and Minerals	Chemicals and Fertilizers	Other Manufactured and Miscellaneous	Re-Exports	Total
1961 million dollars	1,301	1,623	1,861	251	719	140	5,896
% of total	22.1	27.5	31.6	4.3	12.2	2.4	100.0
1965 million dollars	1,542	2,071	2,623	324	1,589	229	8,378
% of total (year ending Sept. 30)	18.4	24.7	31.3	3.9	19.0	2.7	100.0
% Increase 1965 over 1961	18.5	27.6	40.9	29.1	121.0	63.6	42.1

by chemicals and fertilizers, and the comparatively lower rate of growth in such exports. But the general pattern has become quite clearly established, with growth in exports of manufactured goods some three times as high as that for the next most dynamic sector of domestic exports, metals and minerals. Growth in entrepôt trade has also been well above the average, but involves comparatively small values.

Exports of services (to which, by statistical convention, a proportion of domestic production of gold and the receipt of interest and dividends on Canadian investments abroad are attributed), rose by 8.0 per cent between 1964 and 1965. Although gold production has been declining slowly for a number of years, there were increases in receipts on all other non-merchandise accounts, and particularly in the cases of travel and inheritances and migrants' funds. In total, however, such receipts are heavily outweighed by corresponding payments for imports of services, and are best considered in terms of the net payments which result, as in the later section dealing with the balance of payments as such.

Changes in Inventories

Changes in business inventories usually accompany large swings in fixed investment, accentuating both expansions and contractions, although with somewhat different timing. Minor business cycles have frequently been identified with inventory changes, which have on such occasions shown the largest swings in demand. In the present substantial and protracted expansion, however, fixed investment has become the driving force, and inventories have played a much lesser role.

In the past year, the increases in retail and wholesale sales appear to have drained off the additional supplies of goods as soon as they were produced, and producers have not accumulated large stocks. This was especially the case with automobiles, sales of which have continued at a high rate in most recent months.

The following table shows the latest available data on business inventories.

CHANGE IN NON-FARM BUSINESS INVENTORIES
(Seasonally adjusted at annual rates)

	1965
	1st Q.	2nd Q.	3rd Q.
	(Millions of dollars)
Manufacturing	540	308	256
Durables	(308)	(300)	(240)
Non-durables	(232)	(8)	(16)
Wholesale Trade	84	148	92
Retail Trade	204	216	332
"Other" Industries	116	96	20
Total	944	768	700

Inventory-sales ratios have been declining for several years, as computer techniques and other modern methods of inventory management have permitted improved control over flows and stocks. At the same time, relative price stability and ready availability of goods have meant that buyers have not needed or wanted to carry excessive stocks. In all of manufacturing, there is at present two months' supply on hand. Raw materials and goods in process increased somewhat more rapidly than finished goods in the past year, but in neither case were the increases very rapid. The relatively low level of finished goods inventories was reflected in a high level of unfilled orders at the end of 1965. At that time, new orders being received by manufacturers were running ahead of shipments, so that no early change in manufacturers' inventory positions was indicated.

GOVERNMENT SECTOR

Current Position

On a national accounts basis, combined revenue of all governments rose by more than 12 per cent in 1965 over the preceding year while expenditures increased by 10 per cent (on the basis of preliminary estimates). On balance, revenues rose faster in 1965 than expenditures, so that governments ran a surplus of about one-quarter of a billion dollars, compared with a deficit of about $100 million in 1964. The change to an overall surplus arose from an increase in the federal surplus to $535 million, and a smaller increase in provincial governments' surplus to almost $300 million. Municipalities combined ran a deficit of about $575 million, virtually unchanged from 1964.

The Budget—Appendix

REVENUES, EXPENDITURES AND FISCAL POSITION, BY LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT
(National accounts basis)

—	1953	1964	1965[1]
	(Millions of dollars)
Federal—Revenue	4,726	8,132	8,940
Expenditure	4,584	7,886	8,405
Surplus (+) or deficit (−)	+142	+246	+535
Provincial—Revenue	1,612	5,403	6,374
Expenditure	1,409	5,299	6,084
Surplus (+) or deficit (−)	+203	+104	+290
Municipal—Revenue	1,119	3,594	3,945
Expenditure	1,289	4,046	4,519
Surplus (+) or deficit (−)	−170	−452	−574
All Governments—Revenue[2]	7,457	17,129	19,259
Expenditure[2][3]	7,282	17,231	19,008
Surplus (+) or Deficit (−)	+175	−102	+251

[1] Department of Finance estimates based on preliminary DBS data.

[2] Includes intergovernmental transfers.

[3] Capital assistance is now included in government expenditure on a national accounts basis; in the past it has been omitted.

At the federal level, for which more detailed data are available, the surplus in 1965 more than doubled from the level of $246 million in 1964. Federal revenue rose by more than three quarters of a billion dollars, mainly on account of increased taxation revenue. However, the percentage increase in taxes in 1965 was lower than the gain of 14.7 per cent recorded from 1963 to 1964, since tax adjustments took place in the course of the year. Despite the strong upward trend in labour income during the year, federal personal direct taxes rose less rapidly than in 1964, reflecting the reduction of 10 per cent in the basic personal income tax rate beginning July 1, 1965, and the higher abatements to the provinces effective the beginning of 1965. Corporate tax liabilities also increased somewhat less than in 1964, associated with the lower gain in corporate profits. The largest part of the increased taxation revenues in 1965 was accounted for by a 14 per cent rise in indirect taxes to a level of $3,245 million, partly associated with the rise from 8 to 11 per cent in the sales tax on building materials and construction equipment as well as with the rapid increase in personal expenditures and the higher level of fixed capital formation.

In contrast to revenue, which showed a sharper increase in 1964 than last year, federal government expenditure on a national accounts basis rose more rapidly in 1965 than in 1964, from a level of $7,886 million in 1964 to over $8,400 million in 1965, a gain of 7 per cent. Outlays on non-defence goods and services rose by almost 15 per cent with substantial gains in capital outlays and higher wages and salaries, while expenditure on goods and services for defence increased only marginally over the year. Transfers from the federal to other levels of governments increased by about 14 per cent, to a level of almost $1,430 million. Higher equalization payments and payments to the provinces under the various shared-cost programmes more than offset the effect of one province opting out from a number of shared-cost programmes. Outlays for the Trans-Canada Highway and for technical and vocational training were up substantially from their 1964 levels. Transfers to persons showed a larger increase than in the previous year with increased family allowances, veterans' pensions and old age security

TABLE 31

GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS ON A NATIONAL ACCOUNTS BASIS

—	1962	1963	1964	1965[1]
				1Q	2Q	3Q
	(Millions of dollars)
GOVERNMENT REVENUE
Direct taxes—persons	2,730	2,911	3,407	3,772	3,872	3,916
Federal	2,088	2,193	2,558	2,724	2,760	2,628
Provincial and Municipal	642	718	849	1,048	1,112	1,288
Direct taxes—corporations	1,702	1,821	1,989	2,068	2,120	2,148
Federal	1,271	1,356	1,482	1,548	1,580	1,600
Provincial	431	465	507	520	540	548
Withholding taxes—Federal	125	127	140	160	176	160
Indirect taxes	5,565	5,879	6,648	7,096	7,300	7,540
Federal	2,401	2,451	2,847	3,000	3,144	3,344
Provincial and Municipal	3,164	3,428	3,801	4,096	4,156	4,196
Investment income	1,257	1,376	1,519	1,584	1,644	1,636
Federal	448	502	547	556	580	580
Provincial and Municipal	809	874	972	1,028	1,064	1,056
Employer and employee contributions to social insurance and government pension funds	812	847	892	908	952	948
Federal	518	534	558	572	604	584
Provincial and Municipal	294	313	334	336	348	364
Transfers from federal governments—
Provincial and Municipal	1,134	1,169	1,254	1,516	1,448	1,308
Total Revenue	13,325	14,130	15,849	17,104	17,512	17,656
Federal	6,851	7,163	8,132	8,560	8,844	8,896
Provincial and Municipal	6,474	6,967	7,717	8,544	8,668	8,760

[1] Seasonally adjusted at annual rates.

SOURCE: DBS The National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, Quarterly.

—	1962	1963	1964	1965(1) 1Q	1965(1) 2Q	1965(1) 3Q
	(Millions of dollars)
GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE
Goods and services	7,710	8,024	8,607	9,120	9,412	9,596
Federal—Defence	1,678	1,576	1,552	1,648	1,556	1,572
Non-defence	1,345	1,363	1,490	1,568	1,628	1,784
Provincial and Municipal	4,687	5,085	5,565	5,904	6,228	6,240
Transfer payments to persons	3,729	3,838	4,159	4,520	4,396	4,628
Federal	2,112	2,137	2,235	2,364	2,320	2,332
Provincial and Municipal	1,617	1,701	1,924	2,156	2,076	2,296
Interest on the public debt	1,302	1,420	1,532	1,604	1,628	1,644
Federal	866	935	995	1,052	1,036	1,040
Provincial and Municipal	436	485	537	552	592	604
Subsidies	292	311	317	204	240	256
Federal	260	275	278	164	200	216
Provincial	32	36	39	40	40	40
Capital Assistance—Federal(2)	27	61	82	80	84	84
Transfers to Provincial and Municipal governments—Federal	1,134	1,169	1,254	1,516	1,448	1,308
Total Expenditure	14,194	14,823	15,951	17,044	17,208	17,516
Federal	7,422	7,516	7,886	8,392	8,272	8,336
Provincial and Municipal	6,772	7,307	8,065	8,652	8,936	9,180
Surplus (+) or Deficit (−)	−869	−693	−102	+ 60	+304	+140
Federal	−571	−353	+246	+168	+572	+560
Provincial and Municipal	−298	−340	−348	−108	−268	−420

(1) Seasonally adjusted at annual rates.

(2) This item is now included in government expenditure on a national accounts basis; in the past in has been omitted.

SOURCE: DBS, The National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, Quarterly.

payments more than offsetting a decline in unemployment insurance benefit payments. It will be recalled also that youth allowances were paid to 16- and 17-year-olds attending school, beginning in the fall of 1964.

The combined provincial-municipal deficit, on a national accounts basis, is estimated to have been somewhat lower in 1965 than in 1964. As noted above, the reduction represented some increase in the provincial surplus, while the municipal deficit was larger. For both levels of government combined, there was improvement through the year, with the exception of the second quarter.

Provincial-municipal expenditures continued to increase steadily during each quarter of the year, and for the year as a whole were up by about 13 per cent. The provinces increased their spending at a more rapid rate than their municipalities, as outlays on both capital goods and current expenditure rose substantially. More comment on trends in expenditure is given in following pages.

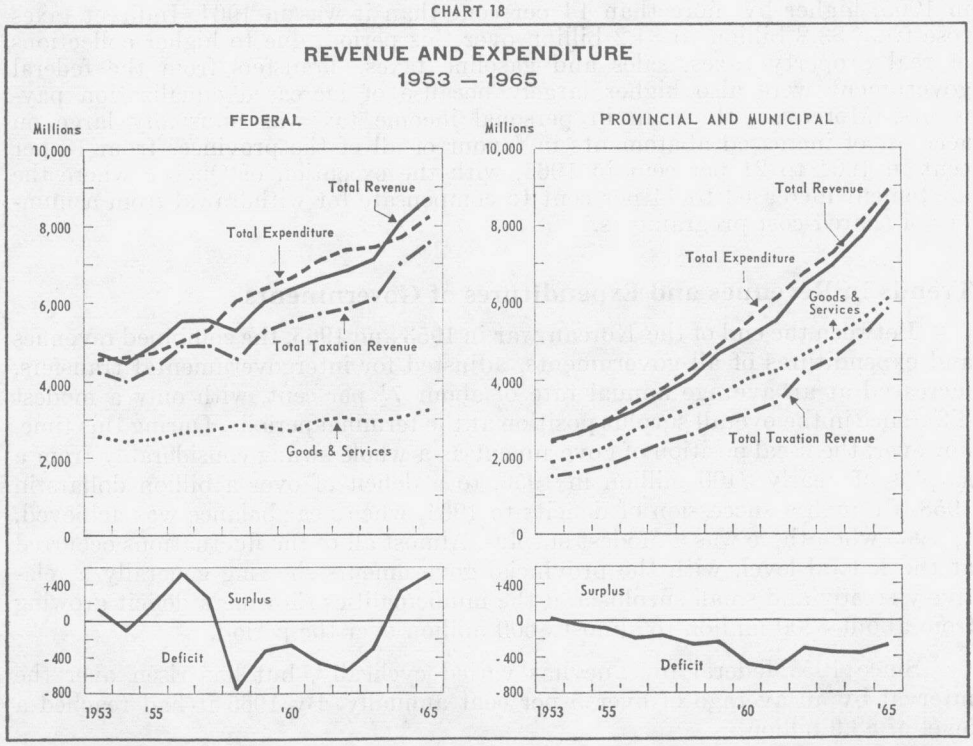
Revenue of provinces and municipalities, which rose very sharply in the first quarter partly because of the final settlement of fiscal 1963–64 federal-provincial fiscal arrangements and partly because of the increase in the federal abatement of personal income tax, moved up at a somewhat slower pace in the succeeding quarters.

Total provincial-municipal revenue is estimated to have been $8.9 billion in 1965, higher by more than 14 per cent than it was in 1964. Indirect taxes rose from $3.8 billion to $4.2 billion over this period, due to higher collections of real property taxes, sales and gasoline taxes. Transfers from the federal government were also higher largely because of increased equalization payments. Moreover, the gain in personal income tax was unusually large on account of increased abatements in favour of all of the provinces from 18 per cent in 1964 to 21 per cent in 1965, with the exception of Quebec where the abatement increased to 44 per cent to compensate for withdrawal from a number of shared-cost programmes.

Trends in Revenues and Expenditures of Governments

Between the end of the Korean war in 1953 and 1965, the combined revenues and expenditures of all governments, adjusted for intergovernmental transfers, increased at an average annual rate of about 7½ per cent, with only a modest difference in the overall surplus position at the terminal periods. During this time, however, the fiscal position of government as a whole swung considerably from a surplus of nearly $400 million in 1956, to a deficit of over a billion dollars in 1958, through a succession of deficits to 1964, when near balance was achieved, to 1965 when there was a modest surplus. Almost all of the fluctuations occurred at the federal level, with the provincial governments showing generally a relatively steady and small surplus and the municipalities showing a deficit growing from about $200 million to almost $600 million over the period.

Since 1953 federal revenue has varied cyclically, but has risen over the interval by an average of over 5 per cent annually. By 1965 it had reached a level of $8.9 billion.



Revenues from personal direct taxes more than doubled in the twelve year period and their share in total federal revenue increased from 28 to 30 per cent. This happened despite the considerable abatements of this tax in favour of the provinces, who were able to raise their share of total revenues from this source from 4 to 18 per cent. Changes in tax rates apart, it is known that personal direct taxes are highly elastic to income changes, increasing proportionately more over time.

Indirect taxes, which form a major source of federal revenues, increased by 5.5 per cent annually and showed little change in their relative proportion to total revenue; this rate of increase includes the effects of recent tax changes. Taxes on corporate income have shown the least growth since 1953. Income from investments and from employer and employee contributions to social insurance and government pension funds formed 10.6 per cent of federal revenues in 1953. By 1965, their ratio had increased to over 13 per cent.

Total federal expenditures on goods and services have grown by about 2 per cent annually since the end of the Korean war. However, outlays on goods and services for non-defence purposes rose by more than 150 per cent over this twelve year period, for an average annual gain of more than 8 per cent. Defence expenditures declined from a level of $1.9 billion in 1953 to less than $1.6 billion in 1965. Transfers to persons increased more rapidly than total federal outlays, and formed some 28 per cent of federal expenditures in 1965 compared to less than 23 per cent in 1953. This increase resulted mainly from higher payments for family allowances, unemployment insurance and old age security. Interest payments on the public debt also rose very rapidly.

CHART 18

Transfers from federal to provincial-municipal governments, which rose from 9 per cent of federal outlays in 1953 to about 17 per cent in 1965, increased more rapidly than any other component of federal expenditure. Despite additional abatements to the provinces in the field of taxation and increased provincial reliance on direct sources of revenue, these transfers have risen to an annual rate of more than $1.4 billion in the current period. They include the introduction of payments under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act and for unemployment assistance; increased emphasis for highway construction and technical and vocational training programmes; and unconditional statutory grants and equalization payments.

Since 1953, the share of provincial-municipal income and outlays has increased markedly in the combined governments' revenue and expenditure. Provincial-municipal revenue has more than tripled; this increase has been almost entirely related to the growth in their taxation revenue and transfer receipts. Apart from transfer receipts from the federal government, the most rapid increase in provincial-municipal revenue has taken place in personal direct taxes as a result of changes which took place in the tax-sharing arrangements between the different levels of government. Receipts from indirect taxes, the main source of provincial and municipal revenue, have also increased rapidly. Real property taxes remain by far the largest single revenue source, although receipts from the retail sales tax (excluding gasoline tax but including taxes on liquor and tobacco) have continued to increase rapidly, so that revenue from this source is now equivalent to almost one-half of that obtained from the municipal real property tax. Transfers from the federal government have expanded by 11 per cent, approximately the same rate as total provincial-municipal revenue. It is of interest to note that the transfers from the federal government to the provinces are roughly equal in size to the transfers from the provinces to their municipalities.

Provincial-municipal expenditures on goods and services have been expanding at a distinctly faster rate than federal outlays, with sharp expansion in fixed capital formation, wages and salaries and other expenditures on goods and services, primarily for education. As would be inferred from the relatively unchanging fiscal position of provinces and municipalities, these increases in expenditures have about matched the increases in revenues brought about by a higher tax base, higher rates, and abatements and transfers from the federal government.

As a proportion of gross national expenditure, provincial-municipal spending on goods and services rose from 7.5 per cent in 1953 to 12 per cent in 1965. Transfers to persons, mostly in the form of pensions and other social expenditures, as well as grants to hospitals and other non-commercial institutions, increased almost five times over that period. Interest on the public debt and subsidy payments also increased very rapidly.

Analysis by Function

Apart from a national accounts framework, there are other ways of measuring the transactions of government, such as the system used in the Public Accounts and the DBS classifications of revenues by source and expenditure by function.

Federal transactions on a public accounts basis are discussed in considerable detail in Part II of this document and therefore the analysis is not repeated here. Perhaps some background should be given for the analysis by function.

As is well known, the raison d'être of government is the collective provision of services. Some of these services such as the keeping of order within a nation, protection from outside attack and the regulation of economic affairs in the general interest can only be provided by government. Similarly, basic services needed for community living, such as refuse disposal, sanitation, fire protection,

TABLE 32

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION BY FUNCTION OF NET GENERAL EXPENDITURE OF GOVERNMENTS

(After elimination of inter-government transfers)

For the Fiscal Year Ended Nearest to December 31

—	Federal			Provincial-Municipal			Total
	1952	1962	1964	1952	1962	1964	1952	1962	1964
	(per cent)
Defence services and mutual aid	45.7	23.3	21.0	—	—	—	30.5	12.6	10.6
Veterans' pensions and other benefits	5.6	4.9	4.6	—	—	—	3.7	2.7	2.3
Health	1.1	6.2	7.0	11.6	12.5	12.0	4.6	9.1	9.6
Sanitation and waste removal	—	—	—	2.4	3.0	3.0	0.9	1.4	1.4
Social welfare	17.8	22.8	24.0	5.8	5.8	5.0	13.8	15.0	14.7
Education	0.5	4.0	3.1	27.2	31.9	31.0	9.4	16.9	16.8
Transportation and communications	3.4	6.3	6.8	23.9	18.7	22.0	10.2	12.0	14.3
Natural resources and primary industries	3.9	5.2	5.0	4.5	3.3	3.0	4.1	4.3	4.2
Debt charges (excluding debt retirement)	9.5	11.0	11.0	4.6	4.8	5.5	7.9	8.1	8.2
General government	4.0	4.2	4.5	5.3	5.3	5.0	4.4	4.7	4.7
Protection of persons and property	1.1	1.4	1.9	8.1	7.6	7.0	3.4	4.2	4.4
Other	7.4	10.6	11.1	6.5	7.1	6.5	7.1	9.0	8.8
Total Net General Expenditure	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0

SOURCE: see footnote table 34.

roads, etc., which are of benefit to all rather than to a particular industry or class within the community, are generally provided through governmental channels.

TABLE 33

PERCENTAGE DISTRIBUTION OF FUNCTIONAL NET GENERAL EXPENDITURE BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

(After elimination of inter-government transfers)

For the Fiscal Year Ended Nearest to December 31

Function	1952		1962		1964
	Federal	Provincial-Municipal	Federal	Provincial-Municipal	Federal	Provincial-Municipal
	(per cent)
Defence services and mutual aid	100.0	—	100.0	—	100.0	—
Veterans' pensions and other benefits	100.0	—	100.0	—	100.0	—
Health	16.0	84.0	36.9	63.1	37.0	63.0
Sanitation and waste removal	—	100.0	—	100.0	—	100.0
Social welfare	86.0	14.0	82.2	17.8	83.0	17.0
Education	3.2	96.8	12.8	87.2	9.0	91.0
Transportation and communications	22.0	78.0	28.5	71.5	24.0	76.0
Natural resources and primary industries	63.3	36.7	65.0	35.0	61.0	39.0
Debt charges (excluding debt retirement)	80.6	19.4	72.9	27.1	68.0	32.0
General government	60.4	39.6	48.3	51.7	49.0	51.0
Protection of persons and property	20.9	79.1	17.7	82.3	21.0	79.0
Other	69.5	30.5	63.6	36.4	64.0	36.0
Total Net General Expenditure	66.7	33.3	54.0	46.0	51.0	49.0

SOURCE: see footnote table 34.

The type of services provided by governments can be analytically classified according to the broad purposes or functions for which these are created. These functions are analogous to industry classification used for identifying types of production. Tables 32 and 33 give an indication of the percentage breakdown of net general expenditure of governments and the share of expenditure, by function, carried out by the different levels of government. However, consolidation of these figures leads to certain technical statistical problems and these have been treated as follows: a) Grants-in-aid and shared-cost contributions between governments have been included in the expenditures of the paying government and are excluded from the expenditures of the receiving government. b) General grants and subsidies and payments made under fiscal and tax-sharing arrangements are eliminated from the expenditure of the paying government only. c) Ordinary expenditures of municipal utilities and enterprises, hospitals, libraries and certain special areas are not included nor are capital expenditures of utilities and enterprises.

Several points are apparent from the functional comparisons by level of government.[1] The percentages indicate that the federal government bears the major share in the provision of services related to social welfare, natural resources and primary industries and debt charges exclusive of debt retirement, along with, of course, the total cost of defence and veterans' pensions and benefits. These items account for two-thirds of federal net general expenditure.

[1]It might be noted that there are some differences between the functional classification used by DBS and the Public Accounts series discussed in Part II.

TABLE 34

CHANGES BY FUNCTION IN NET GENERAL EXPENDITURE OF ALL GOVERNMENTS—
ANNUAL COMPOUND RATE BETWEEN FISCAL YEARS
ENDING CLOSEST TO DECEMBER 31

(after elimination of inter-government transfers)

	1952–1957			1957–1962			1962–1964
	Federal	Provincial-Municipal	Total	Federal	Provincial-Municipal	Total	Federal	Provincial-Municipal	Total
1. Defence services and mutual aid	−2.3	—	−2.3	−1.3	—	−1.3	−0.5	—	−0.5
2. Veterans' pensions and other benefits	4.3	—	4.3	3.2	—	3.2	1.8	—	1.8
3. Health	6.2	9.6	9.1	47.0	13.7	21.0	11.7	11.2	11.4
4. Sanitation and waste removal	—	18.5	18.5	—	8.8	8.8	—	6.0	6.0
5. Social welfare	7.0	10.6	7.5	8.4	11.1	8.8	7.5	6.0	7.2
6. Education	39.0	12.2	13.5	23.0	13.0	14.0	−8.5	10.3	8.1
7. Transportation and communications	14.9	12.0	12.7	9.1	4.3	5.5	8.3	22.0	18.5
8. Natural resources and primary industries	2.5	9.4	5.2	14.3	5.5	10.7	3.2	11.8	6.3
9. Debt charges (excluding debt retirement)	4.6	8.3	5.3	8.6	14.4	10.0	4.8	19.5	9.0
10. General government	12.2	11.6	12.0	−0.7	10.2	4.1	8.5	7.6	8.0
11. Protection of persons and property	7.6	10.5	9.9	7.9	9.5	9.2	21.0	8.6	11.0
12. Other	11.1	14.5	12.2	6.6	9.1	7.5	7.4	7.0	7.3
Total Net General Expenditure	3.8	11.6	6.7	6.3	10.0	7.9	4.9	12.4	8.4

SOURCE: 1952 to 1962 based on DBS publication Historical Review—Financial Statistics of Governments in Canada 1952–62, catalogue No. 68-503 occasional. 1962–64 comparison estimated by Deparment of Finance.

TABLE 35

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES
PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND NATIONAL ACCOUNTS RECONCILIATION

—	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66	1964				1965
				1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
1. Budgetary revenue	6,253	7,180	7,673	1,688	1,772	1,721	1,835	1,852	1,918	1,862	1,944
2. Supplementary period adjustment[1]	−21	−42	44	−146	146	—	—	−188	188	—	—
3. Extra-budgetary revenues
Old Age Security tax collections	747	959	1,170	202	247	214	220	278	300	272	279
Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy	9	10	10	2	2	4	2	2	1	5	2
Unemployment insurance employer-employee contributions	297	310	328	77	71	78	79	82	74	84	84
Government pension funds—employer-employee contributions	244	270	279	65	69	67	68	66	70	70	72
Interest receipts of social insurance and government pension funds	142	158	180	37	37	39	39	43	43	45	46
4. Corporate income tax[2]: excess (+) of accruals over collections	+ 40	−162	−114	− 10	−128	− 8	+ 6	− 32	−139	+ 2	+44
5. Profits before taxes (net of losses) of government business enterprises	205	226	247	42	43	61	86	36	59	55	98
6. Interest on loans, advances and investments	184	187	203	43	43	43	57	44	51	45	53
7. Less: Budgetary return on investments	−391	−382	−477	−112	−102	− 60	− 95	−125	−138	−120	−93
8. Less: Postal revenue	−201	−231	−236	− 52	− 53	− 49	− 70	− 59	− 57	− 49	−73
9. Budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditures[3]	−109	−125	−132	− 28	− 30	− 31	− 32	− 32	− 33	− 33	−33
10. All other adjustments to budgetary revenue[4]	− 43	− 33	− 45	− 35	− 9	− 12	10	− 22	− 13	− 6	16
11. Total Revenue, National Accounts Basis[5]	7,356	8,325	9,130	1,773	2,108	2,067	2,205	1,945	2,324	2,232	2,439

[1] In the National Accounts, revenues in the supplementary period are shifted to the following fiscal year.

[2] Taxes on government business enterprises are excluded from this item and included in item 5.

[3] See also line 8 expenditure reconciliation.

[4] These adjustments are largely revenue items not relevant for the National Accounts such as proceeds from sales of existing assets.

[5] Department of Finance estimates based on preliminary DBS data.

TABLE 35—Concluded

	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66	1964				1965
				1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
1. Budgetary expenditure	6,872	7,218	7,707	2,265	1,420	1,675	1,809	2,314	1,492	1,785	1,915
2. Supplementary period adjustment[1]	− 32	− 53	+ 58	−408	408	—	—	−461	461	—	—
3. Expenditures of extra-budgetary funds
Old Age Security Fund payments	808	885	929	218	220	221	222	222	224	226	228
Unemployment Insurance benefits	366	335	306	150	102	40	52	141	91	36	44
Government Pension Fund payments	86	101	115	24	24	25	26	26	27	28	28
Prairie Farm Assistance payments	11	11	10	7	—	—	2	9	2	—	1
4. Transfers to extra-budgetary funds	− 66	− 63	− 65	− 15	− 16	− 15	− 16	− 16	− 16	− 17	− 17
5. Adjustment to place other government funds and crown agencies on a disbursement basis[2]	8	33	11	− 15	− 92	40	− 17	102	−100	32	23
6. Budgetary expenditures offset against income of government business enterprises
Post Office expenditures	−206	−211	−235	− 53	− 51	− 50	− 54	− 56	− 54	− 61	− 63
Deficits of government business enterprises	− 73	− 92	−126	− 5	− 59	− 10	− 12	− 11	− 84	− 8	− 4
7. Reserves and write-offs	−152	− 43	− 35	− 87	− 11	− 10	− 11	− 11	− 32	− 9	− 7
8. Budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditure[3]	−109	−125	−132	− 28	− 30	− 31	− 32	− 32	− 33	− 33	− 33
9. All other adjustments to budgetary expenditure	79	50	93	− 25	62	32	—	− 44	86	73	− 9
10. Total Expenditure, National Accounts Basis[4]	7,592	8,046	8,636	2,028	1,977	1,917	1,969	2,183	2,064	2,052	2,106
11. Surplus (+) or deficit (−), National Accounts basis[4]	−236	+279	+494	−255	+131	+150	+236	−238	+260	+180	+333
12. Surplus (+) or deficit (−), budgetary basis	−619	− 38	− 34	−577	+352	+ 46	+ 26	−462	+426	+ 77	+ 29
13. Total, National Accounts basis	7,356	8,325	9,130	1,773	2,108	2,067	2,205	1,945	2,324	2,232	2,439

[1] In the National Accounts, expenditures on goods and services in the supplementary period are split evenly between adjacent fiscal years. Most other expenditure items are shifted entirely to the next fiscal year.

[2] This adjustment replaces budgetary appropriations to various funds and agencies by the outlays actually made by these funds and agencies.

[3] The largest component of this item consists of revenue from sales of goods and services by the government. These sales appear as final expenditure of the private sector and are deducted to avoid double counting.

[4] Department of Finance revised estimates based on preliminary DBS data. There are some minor differences between these revised estimates and those appearing in Table 31.

The provinces provide the major share of health services and share with municipalities the cost of education. At the provincial level, outlays connected with education, health, and roads, highways and bridges absorb 70% of their spending.

Sanitation and waste removal costs are borne exclusively by municipalities but this forms only about 7% of their spending. The major share of their expenditure is on schools, roads and streets, and recreational facilities, the latter being included in the item "other".

Four functions—defence, social welfare, education, and transportation facilities and the "other" category which includes recreational and cultural facilities and trade development—account for about two-thirds of total net general expenditures of all levels of government combined.

The trend in services provided by governments is also of considerable analytical interest. Table 34 shows the average annual rate of change from 1952 through to 1964. This time span has been broken into three intervals, to show the rate at which particular services have speeded up or declined as between one period and another. Because the allocation of responsibility between the provinces and municipalities may shift over time, these two levels of government have been combined for these comparisons.

These time comparisons indicate that the average rate of growth in total government net general expenditures has speeded up from 7.9% per year between 1957 and 1962 to 8.4% per year in the more recent period. The rate at the federal level abated between these years, but it has been more than offset by the acceleration at the provincial-municipal levels. Two areas—streets, roads and bridges, and debt charges—share the sharpest increase in the recent period. This is related to the demands for infrastructure facilities arising from urban growth in the recent expansion. Most of those capital facilities at the municipal level seem to be financed by borrowing, as indicated by the increasing debt charges.

The sharp increase in federal expenditures on health shown in the 1957–62 period was caused by the introduction of the hospital insurance programme, while the apparent decline in education outlays between 1962 and 1964 was related to unusually high payments in 1962 for the federal government's share of the cost of building technical and vocational schools.

The Budget—Appendix

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

The year 1965 saw marked changes both in particular sectors and in the overall pattern of Canada's payments relationship with the rest of the world. There was some increase in the total of official reserve assets, despite the fact that the deficit on current account more than doubled. The current account position reflected rising pressure of demand in the domestic economy, offset by special circumstances on the trading account to a lesser extent than in 1963 and 1964. The movements in the capital account in 1965 were, on the other hand, affected by special factors. The inflow of funds which occurred was exceptional in its composition. Having opened with changes in the pattern of Canadian payments as a result of one U.S. programme of balance of payments guidelines, the year closed with further U.S. measures, and with the extension of specific arrangements between Canada and the United States to take account of their interdependence in this field.

TABLE 36

SUMMARY OF BALANCE OF PAYMENTS

(not seasonally adjusted)

	1964				1965
	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
Merchandise trade balance	+ 35	+150	+354	+161	− 42	− 28	+155	+ 16
Deficit on non-merchandise transactions	−373	−298	−140	−322	−359	−339	−145	−394
Current account balance	−338	−148	+214	−161	−401	−367	+ 10	−378
Capital movements (+ inflow) (− outflow)
Long-term forms	− 15	+152	+223	+493	+121	+ 90	+214	+183
Short-term forms	+311	+ 64	−281	−151	+208	+278	+ 2	+197
	− 42	+ 68	+156	+181	− 72	+ 1	+226	+ 2
Change in official holdings of gold and foreign exchange expressed in Canadian dollars (+ increase) (− decrease)	−127	+ 62	+ 97	+ 54	−118	− 92	+144	+ 55
Net International Monetary Fund position	+ 85	+ 6	+ 59	+127	+ 46	+ 93	+ 82	− 53
	− 42	+ 68	+156	+181	− 72	+ 1	+226	+ 2

The Current Account

The simple fact that the deficit on current trade in goods and services rose from $433 million in 1964 to $1,136 million in 1965 suggests a more rapid widening of Canada's deficit on current international transactions than might otherwise have been expected. But a balance struck for a year as a whole does not fully reflect the underlying trend in the Canadian economy's requirement for external resources, which was already rising towards the end of 1964.

The higher rates of economic growth, and of business investment in particular, to which the economy moved in 1963, have reversed for the time being the trend of delining current account deficits which set in after 1959. It is typical of the Canadian economy that, as it approaches the limits of its own resources, the incentive for drawing in resources from abroad is increased. As far as the current account is concerned, this will be reflected in practice in increased imports, not only of capital equipment, but also of consumer goods.

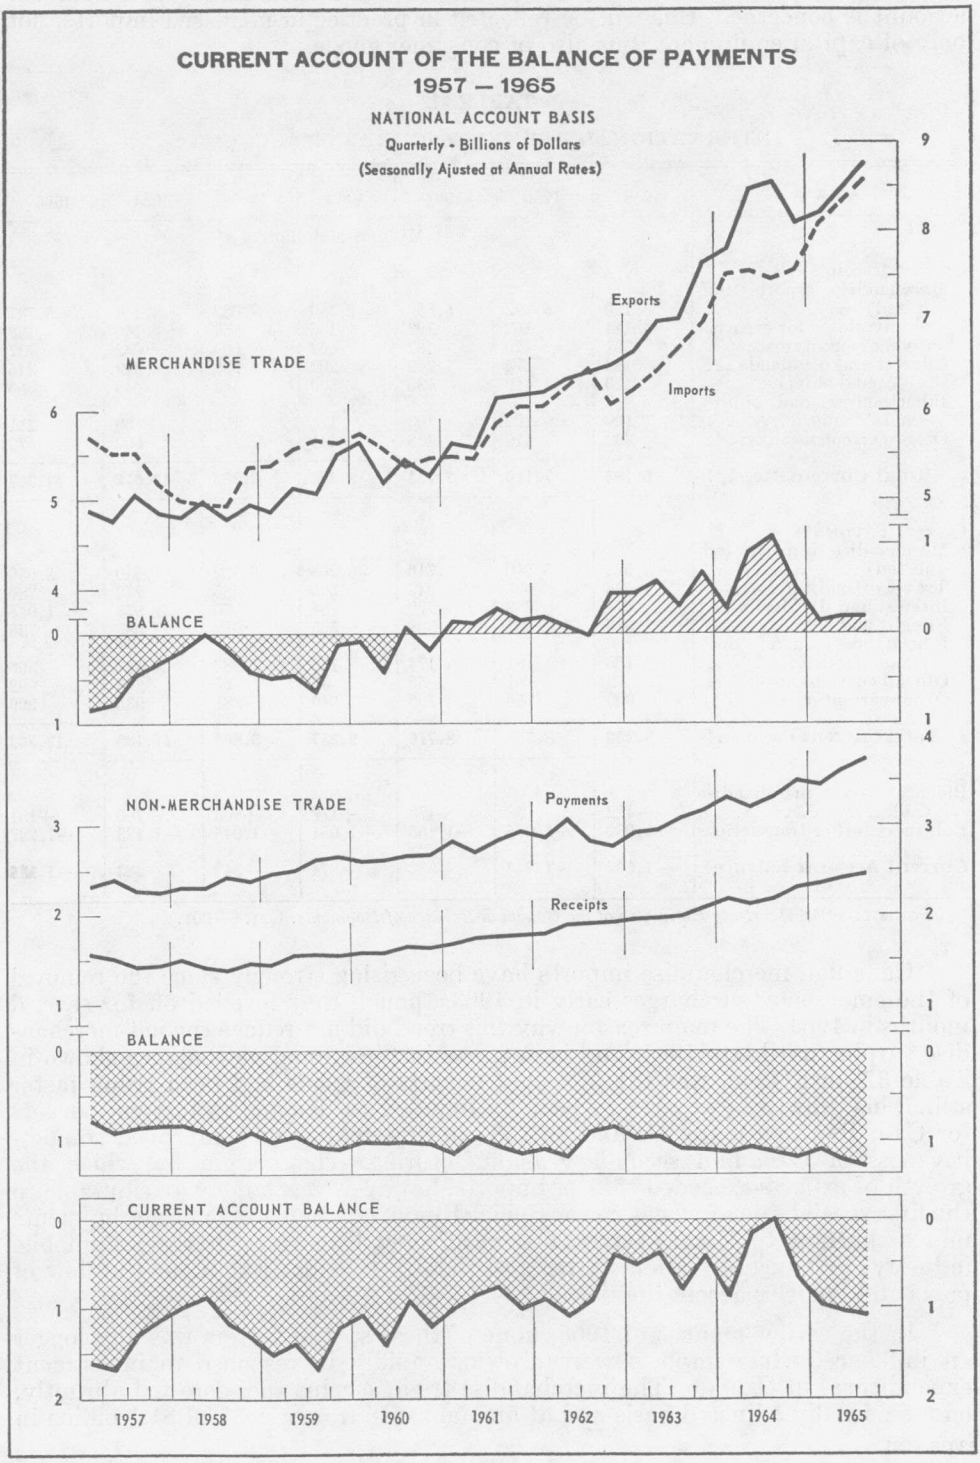
TABLE 37

INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS: CURRENT ACCOUNT



—	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
	(Millions of dollars)
Current Receipts—
Merchandise exports (adjusted)	5,150	5,392	5,889	6,380	7,082	8,240	8,737
Gold available for export	148	162	162	155	154	145	138
Travel expenditures	391	420	482	562	609	662	737
Interest and dividends	182	173	209	202	230	313	315
Freight and shipping	420	442	486	509	563	645	656
Inheritances and immigrants' funds	109	102	103	124	151	169	211
Other current receipts	392	419	403	451	473	502	573
Total Current Receipts	6,792	7,110	7,734	8,383	9,262	10,676	11,367
Current Payments—
Merchandise imports (adjusted)	5,572	5,540	5,716	6,203	6,579	7,540	8,636
Travel expenditures	598	627	642	605	585	712	786
Interest and dividends	671	653	770	794	860	978	1,048
Freight and shipping	525	533	568	595	648	685	736
Inheritances and emigrants' funds	165	181	174	175	186	190	206
Official contributions	72	61	56	36	65	69	92
Other current payments	693	758	790	849	881	935	999
Total Current Payments	8,296	8,353	8,716	9,257	9,804	11,109	12,503
Balance on merchandise trade	−422	−148	+173	+177	+503	+700	+101
Balance on other transactions	−1,082	−1,095	−1,155	−1,051	−1,045	−1,133	−1,237
Current Account Balance	−1,504	−1,243	−982	−874	−542	−433	−1,136

SOURCE: DBS Quarterly Estimates of the Canadian Balance of Payments, Cat. 67-001.

Canadian merchandise imports have been rising strongly since the removal of the emergency surcharges early in 1963, though they levelled off for several months in 1964. The main reason why this trend did not reduce the net merchandise surplus until late 1964, and is not seen in the annual net balance shown in Table 37 until 1965, was the fact that exports of goods had been rising faster still. This growth in exports was solidly founded on demand in foreign markets for Canadian raw materials and on the growing volume and improved competitiveness of Canadian secondary manufacturing. The margin by which the growth of exports exceeded that of imports, however, was largely attributable to the first special sale of wheat to the Soviet Union, combined with large shipments under contract to China; imports were affected by strikes in the automobile industry, first in the United States and then in Canada, which cut the flow of parts and vehicles across the border.

In the earlier months of 1965, none of these special factors was any longer an influence, while imports were growing rapidly in response to investment expenditures in Canada. The merchandise trade surplus therefore fell abruptly, on a seasonally adjusted basis and at annual rates, from a peak of $1.1 billion in

CHART 19

CURRENT ACCOUNT OF THE BALANCE OF PAYMENTS
1957 — 1965
NATIONAL ACCOUNT BASIS
Quarterly - Billions of Dollars
(Seasonally Ajusted at Annual Rates)
MERCHANDISE TRADE
Exports
Imports
BALANCE
NON-MERCHANDISE TRADE
Payments
Receipts
BALANCE
CURRENT ACCOUNT BALANCE
1957
1958
1959
1960
1961
1962
1963
1964
1965

the third quarter of 1964, through $0.5 billion in the fourth, to a low point of just over $100 million in the first quarter of 1965. From this it rose slightly in both the second and third quarters of 1965, but disappeared in the fourth quarter, even though shipments of wheat under the second major contract with the Soviet Union got under way during that period.

On non-merchandise account, the smallest deficit in recent years, on a seasonally adjusted basis and at an annual rate, was that of about $850 million recorded in the last quarter of 1962, when the impact of the devaluation and emergency measures effected earlier that year was at its height, especially on the travel account. The deficit has grown again fairly slowly and steadily ever since, with some acceleration in the rate of growth in the second half of 1965.

This increase in the deficit on invisible trade pushed the overall current account deficit a little higher in each succeeding quarter of 1965; on a seasonally adjusted basis and at annual rates, the deficit rose from just under $1 billion in the first quarter to just over this figure in the second, nearly $1.1 billion in the third, and over $1.5 billion in the fourth quarter, to give a deficit for the year as a whole of $1,141 million, or $1,136 million on a Balance of Payments basis.[1]

Merchandise exports have been reviewed in an earlier section. Adjusted for balance of payments purposes, they rose by 6.0 per cent in 1965. Merchandise imports as recorded in Customs returns are also adjusted for balance of payments purposes; the total of $8,636 million estimated for 1965 represented an increase of 14.5 per cent, with the resultant narrowing of the net merchandise surplus from $700 million to $101 million which largely contributed to the rise in the overall deficit on current account for the year as a whole.

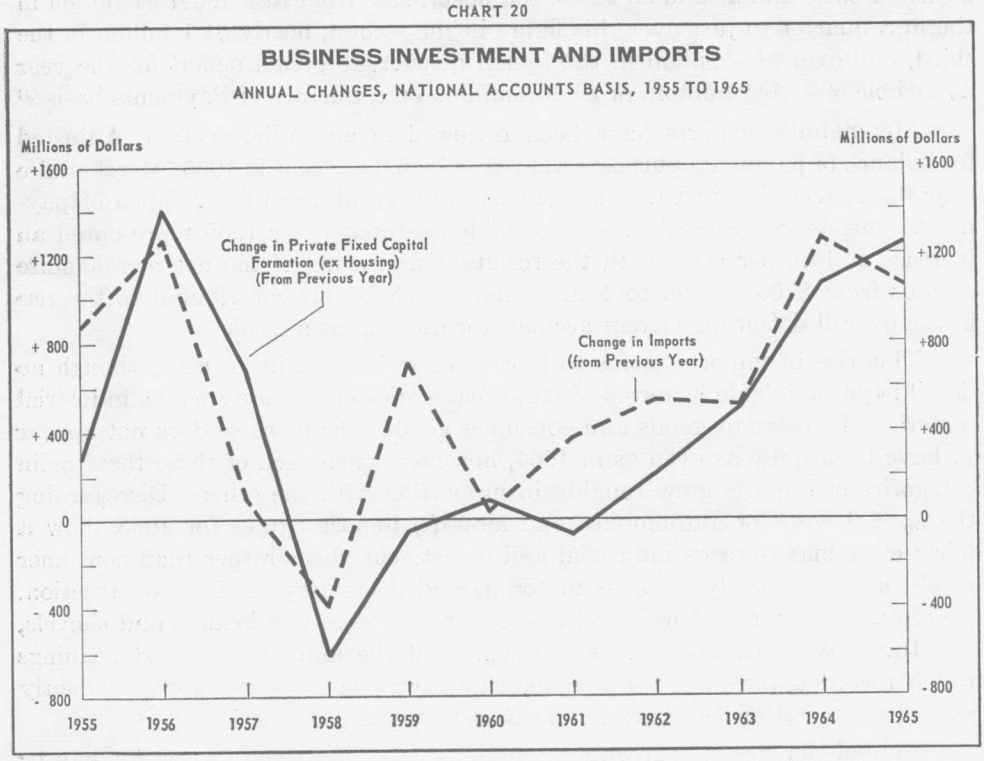
This rise in imports seems to have been quite broadly based, although no detail is yet available in terms of major categories of end-use such as industrial materials, investment goods and consumer goods. The increase does not appear to have been quite as even as in 1964, however, when each of these three main categories of imports grew roughly in proportion with the others. Disregarding the special cases of automobiles and aircraft, import figures for 1965 show a fairly clear bias towards industrial and investment goods rather than consumer goods, and specifically towards materials and machinery used in construction. Reinforcing bars, structural steel shapes, cranes, front-end loaders and shovels, and track-laying tractors: these are typical of the individual import headings which recorded the most striking increases between 1964 and 1965, evidently as a direct result of the sharp rise in investment in construction.

Annual changes in aggregate imports, as chart 20 demonstrates, tend to be very much in line with changes in the aggregate of business investment (private gross fixed capital formation other than housing). This is not inconsistent with

---

[1]The above review in terms of seasonally adjusted figures and chart 19 which illustrates it are based on the National Accounts concept of the current external balance; this differs from Balance of Payments definitions only in that inheritances and migrants' funds are excluded. Since that particular account has been very close to balance in the past two years, the effect of this distinction is not important in a general analysis. Both concepts, whether or not subject to adjustment for seasonal factors, differ from Trade of Canada figures of merchandise trade, which are not adjusted for the timing of wheat shipments or for progress payments on ships, aircraft, and defence goods; but detailed analysis is only possible on the basis of the basic Trade of Canada commodity figures.

The Budget—Appendix



the slow long-term decline in the import content of Gross National Expenditure which has been taking place at least since the Korean war; but the sharp increase in investment in 1965 did raise the ratio of expenditure on imported goods to GNE: on a quarterly and seasonally adjusted basis, it rose to a peak of about 17.5 per cent of GNE in the fourth quarter, the highest level since the recession of 1957–58, but still below the ratios of 20.7 and 18.5 per cent recorded in 1951 and 1956 respectively.

RATIO OF IMPORT OF GOODS TO GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
(seasonally adjusted, per cent)

1964 1Q	16.4	1965 1Q	16.2
2Q	16.2	2Q	16.3
3Q	15.8	3Q	16.5
4Q	15.8	4Q	17.5(1)

(1) Preliminary estimate.

CHART 20

The effect upon the net merchandise balance of these trends in exports and imports has already been described: on a year-to-year basis, the surplus fell from $700 million in 1964 to $101 million in 1965. Taking into account the special sale of wheat in each figure, the underlying merchandise account can be said to have swung from a surplus of about $400 million to a deficit of some $150 million (always subject to the qualification that other exports and imports would not necessarily have been the same in the absence of the special wheat sale).

TABLE 38

NON-MERCHANDISE ACCOUNT
(Seasonally adjusted at annual rates)
(National accounts basis)

	Receipts	Payments	Balance
	(Millions of dollars)
1964—
1Q	2,192	3,312	−1,120
2Q	2,124	3,200	−1,076
3Q	2,184	3,308	−1,124
4Q	2,308	3,500	−1,192
1965—
1Q	2,348	3,452	−1,104
2Q	2,404	3,620	−1,216
3Q	2,460	3,736	−1,276
4Q	n.a.	n.a.	−1,428[1]

[1] Department of Finance estimate.
n.a.—not available.
SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

From the quarterly and seasonally adjusted figures in Table 38, it will be seen that the rise in the non-merchandise deficit proceeded throughout the year, and was particularly marked in the fourth quarter. The jump from the third to the fourth quarter is largely attributable to a sharply higher rate of outpayment of dividends towards the end of the year. Until the fourth quarter, relatively high receipts from Canadian investments abroad had kept the net deficit on this account from rising as fast as in some recent years.

MAJOR ITEMS IN THE BALANCE ON NON-MERCHANDISE TRANSACTIONS
(Net receipts or payments, millions of dollars)

—	1959	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Gold production available for export	+148	+162	+162	+155	+154	+145	+138
Travel expenditures	−207	−207	−160	− 43	+ 24	− 50	− 49
Interest and dividends	−489	−480	−561	−592	−630	−665	−733
Freight and shipping	−105	− 91	− 82	− 86	− 85	− 40	− 80
Inheritances and migrants' funds	− 56	− 79	− 71	− 51	− 35	− 21	+ 5
Official contributions	− 72	− 61	− 56	− 36	− 65	− 69	− 92
All other non-merchandise transactions	−301	−339	−387	−398	−408	−433	−426
Balance on non-merchandise account	−1,082	−1,095	−1,155	−1,051	−1,045	−1,133	−1,237

The increased physical volume of merchandise trade resulted in some addition to net outpayments in respect of freight and shipping; official contributions of aid made directly and through international organizations were more than a third as high again as in 1964; and gold production was again a smaller credit item than in the previous year. On the three other main service accounts the net outpayments in 1965 were lower than in 1964. The marked rise in immigration since 1962, possibly coupled with some increase in the average value of the assets brought into the country by immigrants, has brought this account back into small surplus for the first time since 1953. The deficit on the residual category of non-merchandise transactions, (which cover chiefly business services but also government expenditures, personal remittances and a certain proportion of debt interest and other income) has grown rather unevenly over the postwar period but has moved within a narrow range since 1961.

The deficit on travel account declined a little in 1965. It is not possible to deduce from this a structural improvement; but the swing back into deficit which occurred in 1964, as the immediate effect of the 1962 devaluation and limitation of tourist purchases wore off, seems to have been contained for the time being. A major factor in this is evidently the reduced cost of trans-Atlantic air travel: in 1964 this seemed to be chiefly acting upon travel by Canadians to Europe, but in 1965, as Table 39 indicates, lower fares appear to have been effective also in stimulating travel to Canada from Europe.

TABLE 39

BALANCE ON TRAVEL ACCOUNT

All Countries

	Receipts			Payments			Balance
	U.S.	Rest of World	Total	U.S.	Rest of World	Total	U.S.	Rest of World	Total
	(Millions of dollars)
1953	282	20	302	307	58	365	− 25	− 38	− 63
1954	283	22	305	320	69	389	− 37	− 47	− 84
1955	303	25	328	363	86	449	− 60	− 61	−121
1956	309	28	337	391	107	498	− 82	− 79	−161
1957	325	38	363	403	122	525	− 78	− 84	−162
1958	309	40	349	413	129	542	−104	− 89	−193
1959	351	40	391	448	150	598	− 97	−110	−207
1960	375	45	420	462	165	627	− 87	−120	−207
1961	435	47	482	459	183	642	− 24	−136	−160
1962	512	50	562	419	186	605	+ 93	−136	− 43
1963	549	60	609	388	197	585	+161	−137	+ 24
1964	590	72	662	481	231	712	+109	−159	− 50
1965	650	87	737	531	255	786	+119	−168	− 49

SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

TABLE 40

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF MERCHANDISE AND NON-MERCHANDISE BALANCES

	United States		United Kingdom		Other Countries		All Countries
	1964	1965	1964	1965	1964	1965	1964	1965
			(Millions of dollars)
Merchandise Exports (adjusted)	4,396	4,986	1,219	1,184	2,625	2,567	8,240	8,737
Merchandise Imports (adjusted)	5,207	6,042	584	625	1,749	1,969	7,540	8,636
Trade balance	−811	−1,056	+635	+559	+876	+598	+700	+101
Non-merchandise receipts	1,621	1,764	385	359	430	507	2,436	2,630
Non-merchandise payments	2,465	2,639	413	422	691	806	3,569	3,867
Non-merchandise balance	−844	−875	−28	−63	−261	−299	−1,133	−1,237
Total current receipts	6,017	6,750	1,604	1,543	3,055	3,074	10,676	11,367
Total current payments	7,672	8,681	997	1,047	2,440	2,775	11,109	12,503
Current account balance	−1,655	−1,931	+607	+496	+615	+299	−433	−1,136

SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

The geographical pattern of Canada's current external account in 1965 was chiefly influenced by the substantial reduction in the merchandise surplus with overseas countries other than the United Kingdom, resulting from lower wheat shipments, and by further increases in the deficits on both merchandise and non-merchandise accounts with the United States. The overall current deficit with the United States, which is considered in more detail below, is raised from the figure of $1,931 million shown in Table 40 to $2,069 million when Canadian gold production is considered as a financing item rather than, as here, an item on the current account which is conventionally attributed to the United States.

TABLE 41

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS ON CURRENT ACCOUNT: MERCHANDISE AND NON-MERCHANDISE BALANCE, 1946 TO 1965

	Merchandise Trade	Non-Merchandise Trade	Current Account Balance
	(Millions of dollars)
1946	+571	−208	+363
1947	+188	−139	+ 49
1948	+432	+ 19	+451
1949	+293	−116	+177
1950	+ 10	−344	−334
1951	−147	−370	−517
1952	+489	−325	+164
1953	− 58	−385	−443
1954	+ 13	−445	−432
1955	−211	−487	−698
1956	−728	−638	−1,366
1957	−594	−861	−1,455
1958	−179	−952	−1,131
1959	−422	−1,082	−1,504
1960	−148	−1,095	−1,243
1961	+173	−1,155	−982
1962	+177	−1,051	−874
1963	+503	−1,045	−542
1964	+700	−1,133	−433
1965	+101	−1,237	−1,136

SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

The Capital Account

The financing of the current account deficit was subject to abnormal features and certain distortions in 1965. In broad outline, the net inflow of long-term capital, which in recent decades has largely originated in the United States, was at a lower level than usual. The deficit was made up by a net inflow of short-term capital and there was some gain in official reserve assets. The really exceptional feature of this flow of short-term capital was that it was the net of very substantial flows into Canada from overseas and from Canada to the United States, in a comparatively abrupt reversal of movements which had been taking place in the opposite direction over a number of years, and particularly in 1964.

The reduction in the relative importance of long-term capital in the financing of the current deficit in 1965 occurred despite the maintenance of a fairly high rate of long-term new borrowing abroad.

In that part of the U.S. balance of payments programme introduced in February which was directed at U.S. non-financial corporations, direct investment abroad by such corporations was covered by a request that they should collectively improve their global balance of payments position, taking physical trade, income and capital investment all into account. Canada, however, was specifically exempted from this guideline.

Direct investment in Canada by non-residents in fact rose in 1965 from the particularly low levels recorded in 1963 and 1964, though at $390 million it remained well below the level of at least a half-billion dollars which was typical of most of the previous decade. Direct investment abroad by Canadian residents was again at the relatively high annual level of $100 million or so which has been recorded since 1962.

New guidelines for U.S. non-financial corporations were announced in December 1965. In these, a global target was again specified, but direct investment was also singled out for limitation by each corporation, in 1965 and 1966 taken together, to 90 per cent of the total for the three preceding years on a basis inclusive of retained earnings. The geographic basis upon which this was to be achieved was again left to the discretion of individual corporations, but the specific exemption of Canada was withdrawn.

Despite the fact that they are subject to the U.S. Interest Equalization Tax, net sales abroad of outstanding Canadian bonds and debentures continued at a relatively high level. However, as Table 44 shows, they were heavily outweighed by the repatriation of some $240 million of outstanding Canadian common and preference stocks, a reflux of such securities (in other words, an outflow of capital) which was roughly twice as large as any previously recorded. This, then, was one major offset to the capital inflow from new issues. Another was the continued high level of capital outflows for the retirement of securities in the hands of non-residents, which have now exceeded $300 million in each year since 1961. There was also a net outflow of long-term capital through net purchases by Canadians of foreign securities.

Repayment of both interest and principal on the postwar loan to the United Kingdom was waived for the second year running (although there was a small receipt of interest in respect of the deferment itself, which cannot be waived under the terms of the loan). As against the first receipt of U.S. $50 million in 1964, the second capital receipt arising from the Columbia River Treaty was U.S. $30 million. This was the proceeds upon maturity on November 1, 1965, of a medium-term non-marketable U.S. government security, the first of six annual maturities to this value, followed by a final maturity of U.S. $23.9 million in 1971; these securities were purchased by the Minister of Finance in 1964 with the majority of the funds representing payment by the United States for its share of the first thirty years of downstream benefits from development of the Columbia River. A final offset to the inflow from long-term new issues was a substantial debit for the residual category of long-term capital, in large part associated with the extension of export credits.

The issue abroad by Canadian residents of new, long-term securities in 1965 was, as usual, largely accounted for by bonds and largely directed at the United States market. The total capital inflow from new issues shown in Table 42 was $1,127 million, of which $1,075 million is accounted for in Table 46 by deliveries of bonds to United States residents.

So much had occurred to disrupt, without actually restricting, access by Canadian borrowers to this market, that the third quarter of 1965 saw quite heavy offerings of new long-term Canadian securities in the New York market. When this heavy traffic persisted into the fourth quarter, the U.S. authorities requested Canadian co-operation in smoothing out the flow involved. The Minister of Finance requested major Canadian borrowers wherever possible to defer delivery of the securities concerned until after the turn of the year. Canadian borrowers co-operated by suspending some $140 million of deliveries in this way.

TABLE 42

INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS: CAPITAL MOVEMENTS

—	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
	(Millions of dollars)
Direct investment in Canada	+ 520	+ 495	+ 280	+ 255	+ 390
Direct investment abroad	− 75	− 109	− 135	− 140	− 115
Canadian securities—
Trade in outstanding bonds and debentures	+ 61	+ 64	+ 39	+ 77	+ 64
Trade in outstanding common and preference stocks	+ 39	− 116	− 179	− 97	− 241
New issues	+ 538	+ 728	+ 784	+1,123	+ 1,127
Retirements	− 300	− 320	− 404	− 358	− 373
Foreign securities (total)	− 34	− 65	+ 22	− 63	− 74
Loans and capital subscriptions by Government of Canada—
Advances, etc.	− 8	− 22	− 18	− 10	− 16
Repayments to Canada	+ 37	+ 129	+ 25	+ 9	+ 10
Columbia River Treaty, net[1]	—	—	—	+ 54	+ 32
Long-term capital transactions not included elsewhere	+ 132	− 116	+ 14	+ 3	− 196
Change in certain Canadian assets of foreigners—
Canadian dollar deposits	+ 34	− 13	+ 43	+ 28	+ 30
Government of Canada demand liabilities[2]	− 2	− 4	+ 1	—	− 2
Canadian treasury bills	− 58	+ 4	− 27	− 16	− 12
Canadian commercial paper	+ 100	+ 133	− 23	− 11	+ 11
Canadian finance paper			+ 93	+ 176	− 179
Canadian finance company obligations not included elsewhere			+ 35	+ 49	+ 205
Bank balances and other short-term funds abroad	+ 140	+ 93	− 258	− 524	− 136
All other transactions	+ 148	+ 148	+ 187	+ 241	+ 468
Net Capital Movements excluding monetary items shown below	+1,272	+1,029	+ 688	+ 796	+ 1,293
Official monetary movements in the form of:
Change in official holdings of gold and foreign exchange	+ 229	+ 537	+ 60	+ 68	− 11
Change in net International Monetary Fund position	+ 61	− 378	+ 86	+ 277	+ 168
Other special international financial assistance	—	− 4	—	—	—

[1] See reference to Columbia River Treaty on page 81.

[2] Demand notes of international investment agencies other than the International Monetary Fund, Trust and Deposit Account of U.S. Government with Government of Canada.

SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

TABLE 43
INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS: QUARTERLY CAPITAL MOVEMENTS

—	1964				1965
	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q	1Q	2Q	3Q	4Q
	(Millions of dollars)
Direct investment in Canada	+ 69	+ 44	+ 52	+ 90	+ 70	+120	+100	+100
Direct investment abroad	− 44	− 68	− 3	− 25	− 35	− 5	− 50	− 25
Canadian securities—
Trade in outstanding bonds and debentures	+ 4	+ 14	+ 37	+ 22	+ 3	+ 17	+ 38	+ 6
Trade in outstanding common and preference stocks	− 44	− 8	− 5	− 40	− 83	− 84	− 28	− 46
New issues	+138	+318	+117	+550	+273	+306	+298	+250
Retirements	−109	−100	− 57	− 92	− 66	−176	− 57	− 74
Foreign securities (total)	− 7	− 38	− 7	− 11	− 35	− 5	− 22	− 12
Loans and capital subscriptions by Government of Canada
Advances, etc.	− 2	—	—	− 8	—	—	—	− 16
Repayments to Canada	+ 4	+ 2	+ 1	+ 2	+ 5	+ 2	+ 1	+ 2
Columbia River Treaty net[1]	—	—	+ 54	—	—	—	—	+ 32
Long-term cap tal transactions not included elsewhere	− 24	− 12	+ 34	+ 5	− 11	− 85	− 66	− 34
Change in certain Canadian assets of foreigners:
Canadian dollar deposits	+ 20	− 9	− 36	+ 53	+ 38	− 37	− 19	+ 48
Government of Canada demand liabilities[2]	—	− 3	—	+ 3	− 1	− 4	− 5	+ 12
Canadian treasury bills	+ 4	+ 14	− 16	− 18	+ 27	− 10	− 2	− 3
Canadian commercial paper	+ 27	− 19	− 18	− 1	—	+ 7	+ 4	—
Canadian finance paper	+107	+102	+ 4	− 17	− 38	− 7	− 65	− 69
Canadian finance company obligations not included elsewhere	− 2	+ 1	+ 16	+ 37	+ 25	+ 99	+ 89	− 8
Bank balances and other short-term funds abroad	+150	−127	−164	−385	+170	+140	− 73	−101
All other transactions	+ 5	+105	− 67	+177	− 13	+ 90	+ 73	+318
Net Capital Movement excluding monetary items shown below	+296	+216	− 58	+342	+329	+368	+216	+380
Official monetary movements in the form of:
Change in official holdings of gold and foreign exchange	−127	+ 62	+ 97	+ 54	−118	− 92	+144	+ 55
Change in net International Monetary Fund position	+ 85	+ 6	+ 59	+127	+ 46	+ 93	+ 82	− 53

[1] See reference to Columbia River Treaty on page 81.
[2] Demand notes of international investment agencies other than the International Monetary Fund, Trust and Deposit Account of U.S. Government with Government of Canada.
SOURCE: DBS

TABLE 44

TRADE IN OUTSTANDING CANADIAN SECURITIES BETWEEN CANADA AND ALL COUNTRIES

(Millions of dollars)

Period	Canadian Bonds and Debentures			Canadian Common and Preference Stocks			Total
	Sales to	Purchases from	Net	Sales to	Purchases from	Net	Sales to	Purchases from	Net
1963—
1Q	67	44	+23	124	181	−57	191	225	−34
2Q	86	59	+27	131	175	−44	217	234	−17
3Q	39	46	− 7	75	102	−27	114	148	−34
4Q	47	51	− 4	86	128	−42	133	179	−46
1964—
1Q	38	34	+ 4	107	151	−44	145	185	−40
2Q	62	48	+14	164	172	− 8	226	220	+ 6
3Q	58	21	+37	137	142	− 5	195	163	+32
4Q	69	47	+22	127	167	−40	196	214	−18
1965—
1Q	53	50	+ 3	127	210	−83	180	260	−80
2Q	43	26	+17	110	194	−84	153	220	−67
3Q	65	27	+38	75	103	−28	140	130	+10
4Q	42	36	+ 6	131	177	−46	173	213	−40

+capital inflow
−capital outflow
SOURCE: DBS Ibid

TABLE 45

TRADE IN OUTSTANDING FOREIGN SECURITIES BETWEEN CANADA AND ALL COUNTRIES

Period	Sales to	Purchases from	Net
	(Millions of dollars)
1963—
1Q	82	77	+ 5
2Q	134	113	+21
3Q	90	94	− 4
4Q	128	110	+18
1964—
1Q	124	129	− 5
2Q	151	182	−31
3Q	122	126	− 4
4Q	128	134	− 6
1965—
1Q	135	146	−11
2Q	157	170	−13
3Q	137	153	−16
4Q	212	214	− 2

+ capital inflow
− capital outflow
SOURCE: DBS Ibid

The Budget—Appendix

In December 1965, the state of uncertainty which had affected the market was resolved by a new arrangement arrived at between Canada and the United States, at the time of the announcement of further restrictions by the United States upon the outflow of both short and long-term capital. In effect, the exemption of new Canadian long-term issues from the Interest Equalization Tax was extended to include the exemption of such issues from a new quantitative limitation on the acquisition of long-term securities by U.S. non-bank financial institutions. In return for this assurance of access for Canadian borrowers to the U.S. long-term market, the Canadian government undertook that it would purchase Canadian securities in the U.S. market, if this proves necessary, in

TABLE 46

NEW ISSUES OF CANADIAN BONDS SOLD TO UNITED STATES RESIDENTS

Period	Offerings	Deliveries	Undelivered[1]
	(Millions of dollars)
1964—
1Q	91	125	88
2Q	238	294	32
3Q	309	103	238
4Q	345	532	51
1965—
1Q	339	255	135
2Q	265	298	102
3Q	378	290	190
4Q	344	232	302

[1]At end of period.
SOURCE: DBS Ibid.

TABLE 47

FINANCING OF CANADA'S BILATERAL ACCOUNT WITH THE UNITED STATES

	1962	1963	1964	1965
	(Millions of dollars)
Transactions with U.S. (excluding international financial agencies)
Current account deficit (exc. gold)	−1,277	−1,316	−1,800	−2,069
Capital inflow from U.S.	+1,091	+ 850	+1,755	+ 468
Net amount to be financed by other transactions	− 186	− 466	− 45	−1,601
Other transactions
Current account surplus with rest of world	+248	+620	+1,222	+795
Net capital movement from (+) or to (−) rest of world	− 62	−162	− 959	+825
New gold production available for export	+155	+154	+ 145	+138
Increase (−) in Canadian holdings of gold and foreign exchange	−533	− 60	− 86	+ 11
Change in Canada's position with the International Monetary Fund[1]	+378	− 86	− 277	−168
Total financing	+186	+466	+ 45	+1,601

[1]Improvement (−) in Canadian position represents net provision of resources by Canada to the I.M.F.

order to ensure that the net flow of capital funds to Canada is not in excess of the amount required to meet the needs of the current account in the balance of payments and to keep Canada's reserves within an appropriate range.

The basis for the exemption of long-term Canadian new issues in this way is the recognition on the part of the U.S. authorities of the fact that U.S. current account earnings in Canada almost invariably exceed U.S. capital outflows to Canada. It will be seen from Table 47 that this pattern was strikingly confirmed in 1965, when a U.S. current account surplus with Canada of over $2 billion was only financed to the extent of less than $500 million by U.S. capital.

In 1964, a substantial outflow of short-term U.S. capital to Canada, much of it destined ultimately for the Eurodollar market, had been added to the long-term flow to produce a total flow to Canada which nearly, though still not quite, equalled the U.S. current account surplus with Canada. This flow continued into the first quarter of 1965; but in February new balance of payments guidelines were issued to all U.S. banks by the U.S. government which had the objective of limiting new short-term outflows from the United States in 1965 to a small proportion of the total outstanding at the end of 1964. In order to provide assurance that the foreign currency operations of Canadian banks would not be inconsistent with the aims of these guidelines, the Canadian government requested all chartered banks to conduct their foreign currency operations in such a way that the net position of their head offices and Canadian branches vis-à-vis

TABLE 48

OFFICIAL HOLDINGS OF GOLD AND FOREIGN EXCHANGE

End of Period	Gold	U.S. Dollars	Total
	(Millions of U.S. dollars)
1964—January	836.7	1,745.7	2,582.4
February	849.7	1,692.6	2,542.3
March	871.0	1,594.5	2,465.5
April	892.2	1,588.9	2,481.1
May	910.1	1,599.3	2,509.4
June	931.3	1,602.6	2,533.9
July	948.8	1,585.1	2,533.9
August	969.0	1,606.9	2,575.9
September	989.6	1,634.9	2,624.5
October	1,001.1	1,685.5	2,686.6
November	1,007.4	1,736.0	2,743.4
December	1,025.7	1,648.6	2,674.3
1965—January	1,036.0	1,632.2	2,668.2
February	1,040.6	1,608.1	2,648.7
March	1,044.1	1,510.0	2,554.1
April	1,044.7	1,521.8	2,566.5
May	1,081.4	1,417.3	2,498.7
June	1,089.1	1,391.0	2,480.1
July	1,096.3	1,395.2	2,491.5
August	1,104.0	1,494.0	2,598.0
September	1,111.9	1,502.2	2,614.1
October	1,123.7	1,520.1	2,643.8
November	1,137.5	1,543.6	2,681.1
December	1,150.8	1,513.7	2,664.5
1966—January	1,112.8	1,449.6	2,562.4
February	1,076.5	1,471.1	2,547.6

SOURCE: Department of Finance.

residents of the United States was not reduced below the position which existed on December 31, 1964. The Canadian banks in fact increased their net asset position vis-à-vis U.S. residents during the year. Moreover, they so drew down their assets and increased their liabilities elsewhere in the world that a net credit of over $400 million accrued to the Canadian balance on capital account as well. This very substantial reversal of earlier movements of short-term funds occurred mainly in the first and second quarters of 1965, after which flows were on a more modest scale.

Two other events which occurred in 1965 had marked effects upon capital flows into and out of Canada. The first was the collapse, in June, of a Canadian finance company whose notes were quite widely held in the United States. A withdrawal by U.S. investors from Canadian finance paper, which had been in progress on a small scale for some months already, was accelerated by this default and continued for the rest of the year, though Canadian finance companies continued to obtain funds abroad in other forms. In August, the announcement of a second major wheat contract with the Soviet Union, to a value of some $450 million, brought an immediate influx of short-term capital in connection with anticipatory exchange transactions by grain houses; as Table 48 shows, this resulted in strengthening of the reserves, which rose by U.S. $123 million in that month and the next, and in the exchange rate for the Canadian dollar. This had reached a low point of about 92 U.S. cents in July, but recovered to a high of around 93 U.S. cents in October, remaining in the neighbourhood of this level until the end of the year.

While official holdings of gold and foreign exchange were virtually unchanged over the year as a whole, having decreased by less than U.S. $10 million, Canada's net creditor position with the International Monetary Fund improved by U.S. $156 million. Other countries drew the equivalent of U.S. $183.4 million net in Canadian dollars of which the Fund obtained $27.5 million by the sale of gold to Canada. Canada also made resources equivalent to U.S. $35.0 million available through the Fund under the General Arrangements to Borrow.

TABLE 49

CHANGES IN IMF HOLDINGS OF CANADIAN DOLLARS DURING 1965

				U.S. $ Million
IMF holdings of Canadian dollars at the end of 1964				367.5
(minus)	Repurchases by Canada (net)	—
	Drawings of Canadian dollars by other countries (net)	183.4	183.4
(plus)	Gold sales to Canada by IMF	27.5
	Borrowings from Canada under the General Arrangements to Borrow	35.0	62.5
	Net change during 1965			120.9
IMF holdings at the end of 1965				246.6

SOURCE: DBS Quarterly Estimates of The Canadian Balance of International Payments. Cat. 67–001.

SOURCE AND DISPOSITION OF SAVING

The national saving and investment account offers in capsule form a summary of the net position of the personal, government, business and foreign sectors discussed in detail in foregoing sections of this review. The revenue and expenditures of each of these main sectors can be reduced to a single figure of net income or saving. Each saving estimate is a residual. Disposable personal income minus personal expenditure equals personal saving; business receipts minus business outlays equals business gross saving; revenues and expenditures of governments on the national accounts basis are reduced to a single surplus or deficit figure; and the difference between exports and imports of goods and services is shown as the net foreign balance on current account. The latter can be regarded either as an additional source of real resources (that is, foreign savings) as shown in Table 50, or as part of national investment. The table also shows the elements of savings and investment in 1965, compared with the preceding year. Finally, the table offers a connecting link between the National Accounts analysis upon which most of the earlier discussion has been based and the discussion of capital markets which follows.

TABLE 50

SOURCES OF SAVING

(Millions of dollars)

—	1964	1965
Personal Saving	2,181	3,098
Business Gross Saving, Total	7,051	7,454
(a) Undistributed corporation profits	1,252	1,466
(b) Capital consumption allowances and miscellaneous valuation adjustments	5,607	6,085
(c) Adjustments on grain transactions	110	− 97
(d) Capital assistance	82	84
Inventory Valuation Adjustment	−121	−330
Government surplus (+) or deficit (−)	−102	+251
Federal	+246	+535
Provincial and Municipal	−348	−284
Deficit on current account with non-residents	+428	+1,141
Residual error	− 45	−183
Total	9,392	11,431

DISPOSITION OF SAVING

(Millions of dollars)

—	1964	1965
Business gross fixed capital formation[1]	8,968	10,424
Value of physical change in inventories	380	824
Residual error	+44	+183
Total	9,392	11,431

[1]Based on unrevised National Accounts data for 1964 and Public and Private Investment Survey for 1965. For revised data in both years, see Table 26.

SOURCE: DBS The National Accounts, 1964, and Department of Finance estimates for 1965.

In 1965, total sources of saving, including savings from abroad (that is, resources drawn from abroad in the form of the current account deficit), increased by about $2 billion, sufficient on balance to finance a similar increase in business fixed capital formation and inventories. The principal components of the saving increase, in order of their contribution to the total change in sources of funds, were as follows: a personal saving increase of $900 million; an increase in the use of foreign savings of $700 million; a change from a deficit to a surplus on government transactions, amounting to $350 million; and an increase in business gross saving (including the inventory valuation adjustment) of about $200 million.

While total national saving has been increasing rapidly since the first quarter of 1961, there has been a considerable difference in behaviour of the several components. Personal saving has doubled in the past five years, reaching a level of over $3,000 million in 1965 compared to $1,545 million in 1961, and giving rise to a high saving ratio of nine per cent of disposable income. Part of the increase was due to a higher level of farm incomes resulting from a succession of good crops and exceptional wheat marketings. Some increase in the savings ratio often occurs in periods of rapidly advancing incomes, due to the lag of expenditure behind changes in income. This factor may also account for some of the increased saving in more recent quarters, following upon the personal income tax reduction of mid-1965.

Business saving has two principal components: capital cost allowances and net retained earnings after payment of dividends and taxes. Capital cost allowances, as reported in taxation statistics, show a long term upward trend, as the size of the capital stock increases, as well as some short term variation which causes them to increase more rapidly in cyclical expansions. These allowances have increased by approximately $400 million per year in the past few years. Retained earnings are subject to a great deal of cyclical variation, having quadrupled from a low figure of $400 million (at seasonally adjusted annual rates) in the first quarter of 1961, to a high figure of $1,500 million in the first quarter of 1965. Since then they have been relatively stable. Total business saving, or retained cash flow, increased from $4,900 million in the first quarter of 1961 (seasonally adjusted annual rate), to nearly $7,600 million in the third quarter of 1965. The five year increase averaged over $500 million per year, and continued at approximately the same rate into 1965, as capital cost allowances continued to rise. An offsetting inventory valuation adjustment is made against business gross saving in order to make allowance for that part of recorded business profits which arises from the effect of rising prices on inventory values. The 1965 increase in the inventory valuation adjustment was $200 million.

The government sector position improved in each one of the past five years, slowly at first and then with increasing momentum as total income and expenditure in the remainder of the economy increased. Some tax changes occurred, and the elasticity of certain revenue sources brought increases in revenues which were relatively greater than income changes. At the same time, government costs were increasing, in the forms of wages and materials, and new programmes were being undertaken, as described in the discussions of the government sector and public and private investment. The net result of all of these changes in the government sector was a swing from a combined deficit position of $1,000 million in 1961 to a combined surplus position, presently estimated on the National Accounts basis at $251 million in 1965. The Government of Canada had a surplus of over $500 million in calendar 1965 on this basis, while provincial and municipal governments had a combined deficit approaching $300 million on the same basis. The swing from a combined government deficit to a combined surplus position in the past year therefore contributed to the supply of national saving. It permitted governments to have less recourse to capital markets, at the time that private businesses were making greater demands on the markets to finance a higher level of investment.

It will be noted that increased business investments considerably exceeded the increases in the retained cash flow of the business sector. Business capital formation was financed to a greater extent by savings from abroad. As already stated, the net current account deficit increased by approximately $700 million in 1965. This development in 1965 contrasts with the continued reduction of foreign deficits which had taken place from 1959 to 1964.

CAPITAL MARKETS

The preceding section on sources and disposition of saving indicates that approximately $2 billion more savings were available for Canadian business investment in 1965 than in 1964. About $700 million of this increase was attributable to foreign savings, as reflected in the widening of Canada's current account deficit in the balance of payments, and over $1.4 billion to domestic saving. In contrast to 1964, when the total increase in domestic saving was supplied by businesses and governments, the major part of the 1965 increase came from personal saving. Despite this substantial increase in total saving, it did not keep pace with increasing demands for investment funds. The high rate of economic expansion recorded in 1965 brought with it heavy demands for credit and, in contrast to 1964 when stable credit conditions prevailed, gave rise to higher interest rates and more selective lending policies.

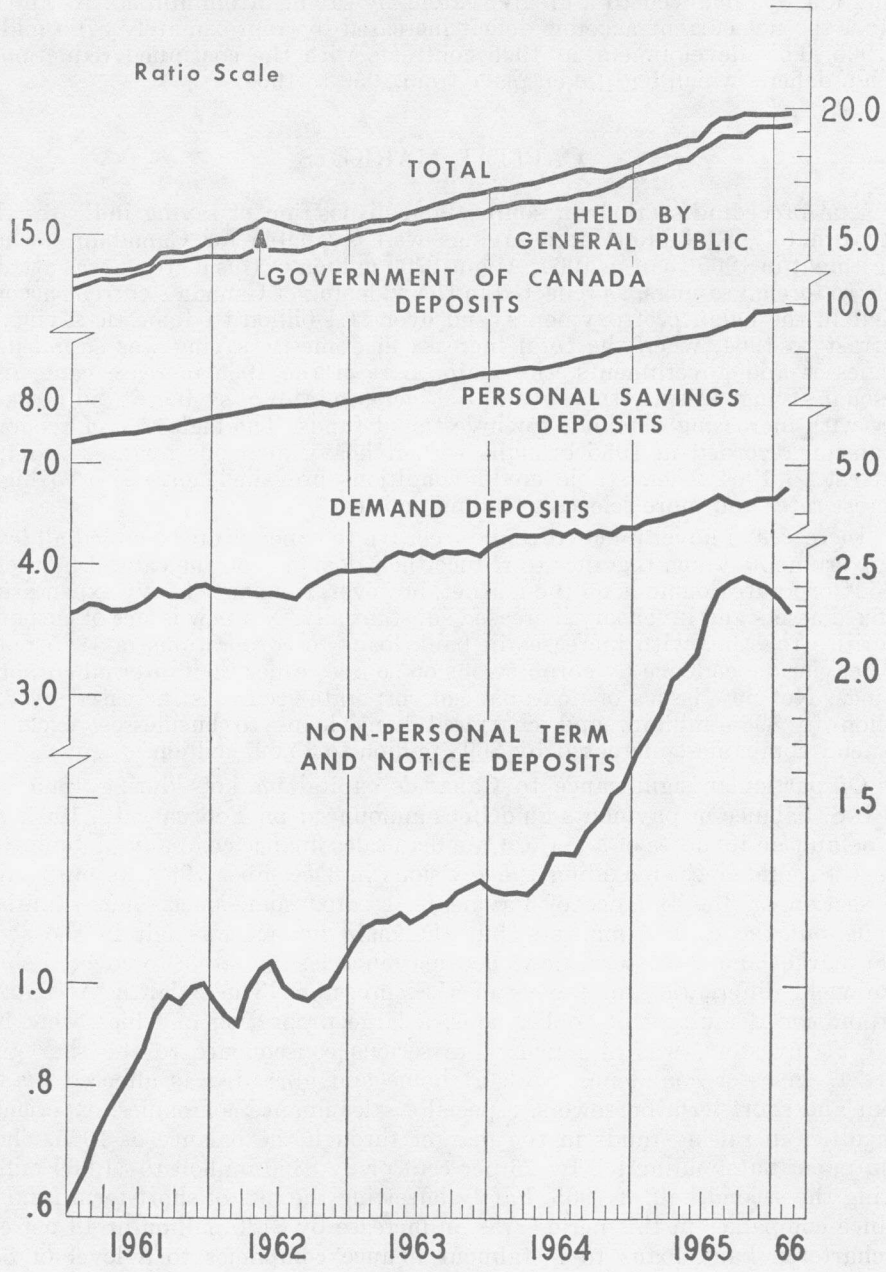
Increases in government revenues relative to expenditures enabled all levels of governments taken together to reduce their demands on the capital market in 1965. Corporate demands on the market, however, to finance heavy expenditures on fixed assets and inventory increased substantially. Net new issues of corporate securities together with increases in bank loans to corporations in 1965 reflect the heavier dependence by corporations on sources other than internal corporate savings. Net new issues of non-financial corporate securities increased by $264 million to $988 million, and chartered bank loans to businesses, excluding financial companies, increased by $698 million to $5,627 million.

Of particular significance to Canada's capital markets during 1965 were the U.S. balance of payments guidelines announced on February 10, 1965, and the default on its notes of a major Canadian sales finance company in June 1965. The U.S. guidelines, including the revisions in December 1965, as outlined in the section on the Balance of Payments, created some uncertainties initially throughout the capital markets, but the main impact was felt in the short-term market and short-term flows became much less sensitive to covered short-term yield differentials in favour of U.S. investors. The Atlantic Acceptance Corporation default on its obligations, a large proportion of which were held by U.S. investors, was of much more serious consequence to the short-term market. Investor confidence, both at home and abroad, was affected by this event and short-term borrowers, especially sales finance companies, experienced difficulties in raising funds in the market through the balance of 1965. Short-term paper outstanding fell by 25 per cent or by $350 million to $1,069 million during the second half of 1965. Partly offsetting the loss of short-term funds to finance companies in this period was an increase by $170 million or 48 per cent in chartered bank loans to instalment finance companies to a level of $527

CHART 21

CURRENCY OUTSIDE BANKS AND CHARTERED BANK DEPOSITS

Seasonally Adjusted
Average of Wednesdays - Billions of Dollars



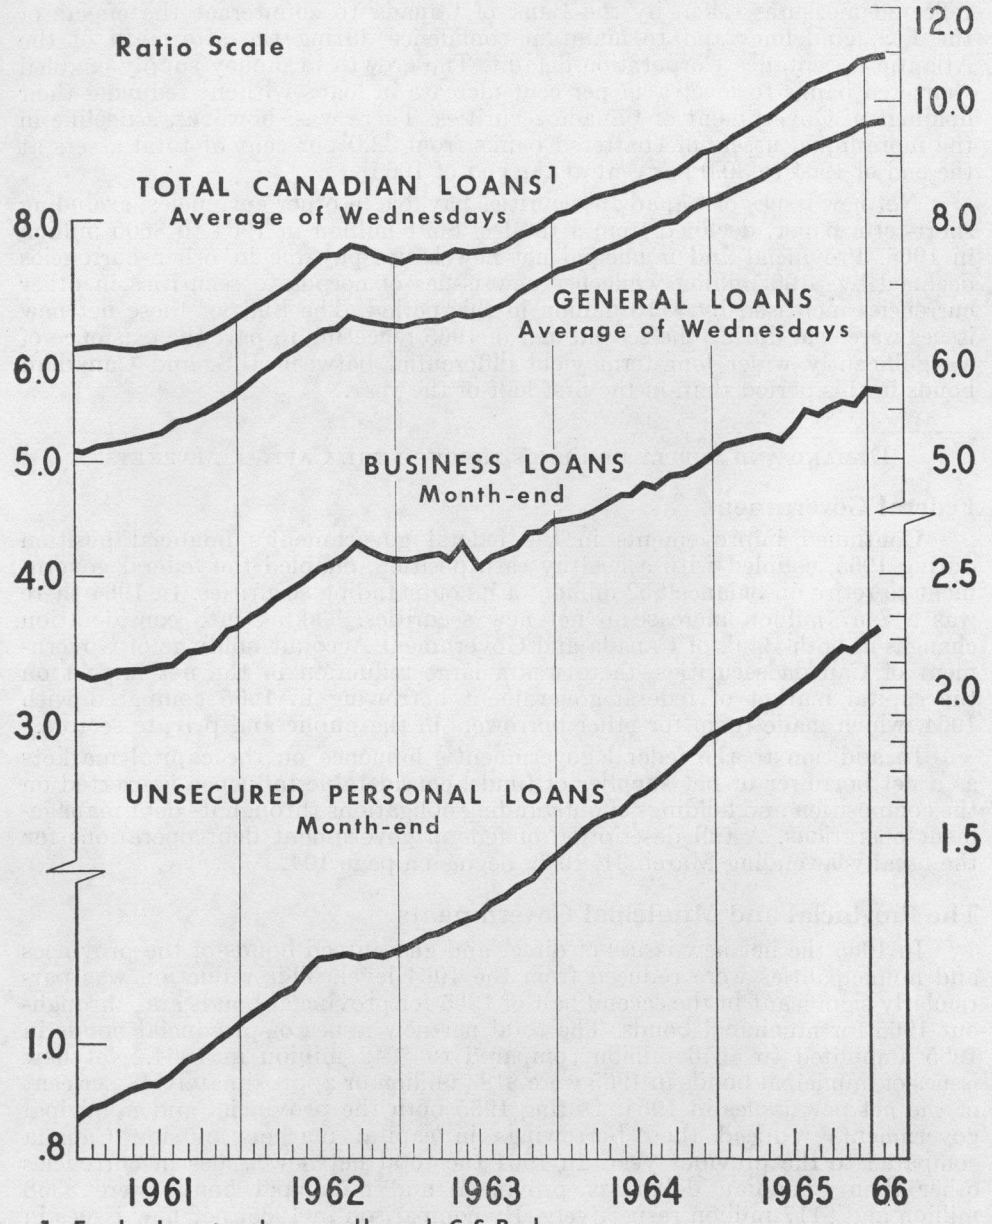


CHART 22

CHARTERED BANK LOANS

Seasonally Adjusted
Monthly - Billions of Dollars

1. Excl. day-to-day, call and C.S.B. loans million. Net new issues of securities by financial corporations in the last six months of 1965 amounted to $243 million compared with $197 million in the same period of 1964.

During 1965 money supply, defined as total currency and chartered bank deposits, increased by 12 per cent compared with a 6 per cent increase in 1964. While this increase in money supply reflected strong demands for credit it also reflected measures taken by the Bank of Canada to counteract the effects of the U.S. guidelines and to maintain confidence during the aftermath of the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation default. The growth in money supply enabled chartered banks to meet a 17 per cent increase in loans without reducing their holdings of Government of Canada securities. There was, however, a decline in the more liquid assets of chartered banks from 32.0 per cent of total assets at the end of 1964 to 30.0 per cent at the end of 1965.

Net new issues of Canadian securities payable in other currencies, excluding short-term paper, declined from a total of $691 million in 1964 to $606 million in 1965. Provincial and municipal net new issues payable in other currencies declined by $196 million while net new issues of corporate securities in other currencies increased by $110 million in this period. The bulk of these net new issues were sold during the second half of 1965 reflecting in part the existence of a significantly wider long-term yield differential between U.S. and Canadian bonds in this period than in the first half of the year.

Demand and Supply of Funds through the Capital Markets

Federal Government

Continued improvements in the federal government's financial position during 1965, coupled with a healthy cash position, enabled the federal government to retire on balance $52 million of its outstanding securities. In 1964 there was a $457 million increase in net new securities. Taking into consideration changes in both Bank of Canada and Government Account holdings of Government of Canada securities, there was a large reduction in the net impact on the capital market of federal government borrowing in 1965 compared with 1964, which made room for other borrowers in the public and private sectors.

In addition to the federal government's influence on the capital markets as a net borrower or net supplier of funds, considerable influence is exerted on the composition and holdings of outstanding obligations through its debt management operations. A full description of federal government debt operations for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, begins on page 104.

The Provincial and Municipal Governments

In 1965 the net new issues of direct and guaranteed bonds of the provinces and municipalities were reduced from the 1964 level. This reduction was particularly significant in the second half of 1965 for provincial bonds and throughout 1965 for municipal bonds. The total net new issues of provincial bonds in 1965 amounted to $646 million compared to $942 million in 1964. Net new issues of municipal bonds in 1965 were $183 million or approximately 48 per cent of the net new issues in 1964. During 1965 both the provincial and municipal governments reduced their borrowings in capital markets outside Canada compared to the previous year. In 1964 the total net new issues in currencies other than Canadian dollars of provincial and municipal bonds were $358 million and $117 million respectively. By comparison in 1965, net new issues in foreign currencies had been reduced to $252 million and $25 million respectively for the provinces and municipalities.

TABLE 51

NET CHANGES IN SECURITIES[1] AND BANK LOANS[2] OUTSTANDING FOR CALENDAR YEARS
(Millions of dollars)

	1962	1963	1964	1965	1964		1965
					1st half	2nd half	1st half	2nd half
Government of Canada securities	801	827	457	−52	−289	746	−529	477
Provincial governments
Securities[3]	709	899	941	646	560	382	499	147
Bank loans	−16	18	−18	29	−20	2	−17	46
Sub-total	693	917	923	675	540	384	482	193
Municipal governments
Securities	243	302	395	183	228	167	77	106
Bank loans	−3	57	62	158	1	61	42	116
Sub-total	240	359	457	341	229	228	119	222
Total Governments	1,734	2,103	1,837	964	480	1,358	72	892
Private Canadian borrowers
Corporate bonds	424	583	745	1,068	334	411	559	509
Other bonds	8	29	11	40	10	1	18	22
Corporate stocks	336	−54	328	376	134	194	213	162
Commercial paper	237	144	339	−297	400	−63	61	−359
Bank loans to business and instalment finance companies	526	334	572	925	452	120	581	344
Call and day-to-day loans	138	−84	5	56	−78	83	−36	92
Other bank loans	225	234	417	661	161	256	417	244
Total Private	1,894	1,186	2,417	2,827	1,413	1,002	1,813	1,014
Grand Total	3,628	3,289	4,254	3,793	1,893	2,360	1,885	1,906

[1] Includes foreign pay issues.
[2] Excludes foreign bank loans.
[3] Includes securities guaranteed by provinces.
[4] Includes loans to grain dealers, personal loans, loans to farmers, loans to institutions, loans for insured mortgages and for Canada Savings Bonds.

SOURCE: Bank of Canada.

CHART 23

NET NEW ISSUES OF SECURITIES

Billions of Dollars

On the other hand, there was during 1965 an increase in bank loans to both the provincial and municipal governments. Bank loans to the provinces increased from $30 million at the end of 1964 to $59 million by the end of 1965. At the same time bank loans to the municipalities increased from $363 million to $521 million by the end of 1965. A significant portion of this municipal borrowing was in anticipation of loans from the Municipal Development and Loans Board.

Corporations

A more rapid increase in business investment outlays than in business savings during 1965 caused businesses to rely more heavily on other sources of funds than in the previous year. As shown in Table 50 business gross fixed capital formation reached about $10.4 billion in 1965, an increase of $1.4 billion over the 1964 level, while business gross saving increased by about $400 million. Within the business sector, corporate savings (retained earnings after tax plus corporate capital cost allowances) increased by approximately $500 million, from $4.4 billion in 1964 to an estimated $4.9 billion in 1965, which is equal to about one third of the increase in corporate investment outlays during 1965. A significant increase in the level of non-farm inventories over 1964 levels had the effect of adding further strain on corporate financial resources.

Additional sources of funds tapped by corporations during the year were mainly increases in net new issues of securities and bank loans. In Table 51 net new issues of corporate bonds and stocks by corporations in 1965 amounted to $1,444 million compared with $1,068 million in 1964, which is equal to a 35 per cent increase over that year. A $325 million or 44 per cent increase in net new issues of corporate bonds from $743 million in 1964 to $1,068 million in 1965 was responsible for the largest proportion of the overall increase in net new corporate securities. About 30 per cent of the net new corporate bond issues were in other currencies compared with 28 per cent in 1964, reflecting a somewhat higher volume of net new corporate bond issue sales abroad. An increase of $48 million or about 15 per cent in net new issues of equity securities, preferred and common stock, took place in 1965.

As a result of the U.S. guidelines and the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation default on its obligations, all corporations, and particularly financial corporations, were forced to rely less on the money market for short-term funds in 1965 than in 1964. Offsetting this, and providing additional funds was the substantial increase in chartered bank business loans to corporations and to finance companies. By the end of 1965 these two categories of loans had increased by 14 per cent and 76 per cent respectively to $5,627 million and $527 million.

Mortgage Credit

Lending institutions, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and private, committed $3,015 million on mortgages for new and existing residences and other property in 1965. The increase in total commitments was 12 per cent, less than half the 26 per cent increase in each of the two preceding years. (See Table 52.) There was a deceleration in the commitment of funds to the housing sector in the second half of 1965. This reflected, amongst several factors, the very high rate of conventional mortgage approvals a year ago, physical shortages in the construction field, stiffening financial conditions following the mid-year disturbances in Canadian financial markets and the rise in interest rates in North America in the latter half of the year.

The Budget—Appendix

The winter housebuilding incentive scheme, accompanied by the provision of mortgage funds through CMHC, was successfully repeated in the winter of 1965-66. CMHC once again temporarily relaxed existing policy by making direct loans available to merchant builders without the requirement that the houses must have been pre-sold. Preliminary information indicates that applications received under the 1965-66 programme are 2 per cent down from the corresponding total of last winter. Applications approved in 1964-65 totalled 33,579 dwelling units.

Reflecting the general uptrend in interest rates in North America, Canadian conventional mortgage rates on prime property rose from 6¾–7 per cent early in 1965 to 7½–8 per cent, and in some cases higher, by the end of the year. Early in 1966 the NHA rate was raised from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent.

TABLE 52

MORTGAGE LOAN COMMITMENTS BY CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION AND PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS

	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
	(Millions of dollars)
Mortgage Loans Approved under National Housing Act
CMHC direct
Single detached	225	152	253	312	367
Apartments and other	46	20	49	65	95[1]
Sub-total	271	172	302	377	462
Approved Lenders
Single detached	321	316	281	178	129
Apartments and other	132	96	104	175	191
Sub-total	453	412	385	353	320
Total	724	584	687	730	782
Conventional Mortgage Approvals
New residences
Single detached	174	187	250	294	356
Apartments and other	158	264	402	518	547
Existing residences
Single detached	215	256	306	443	539
Apartments and other	85	102	124	197	210
Commercial and other	298	311	373	507	581
Total conventional	930	1,120	1,455	1,959	2,233
Grand Total	1,654	1,704	2,142	2,689	3,015
of which:
Single residences new	720	655	784	784	852
Apartment residences, etc. new	336	380	555	758	833
Total residential new	1,056	1,035	1,339	1,542	1,685

[1]In addition to direct CMHC loans which refer only to new construction, CMHC also made rental loans for $22 million for existing multiple dwellings.

SOURCE: Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Consumer Credit

Last year, buoyed by a 9.6 per cent increase in personal income after taxes from the corresponding first nine months of calendar year 1964, personal spending on goods and services rose by 7.3 per cent. There was also a substantial gain in personal holdings of financial assets. In an environment of confidence about future prospects, persons increased their short-term liabilities in 1965 to a level 13.9 per cent above that of a year earlier.

Through most of 1964 consumer credit expanded at an annual rate between 14.5 and 16.5 per cent. In the first half of 1965 it decelerated slightly, then rose again to an annual rate of 16.1 per cent in the third quarter.

TABLE 53

CONSUMER CREDIT

Amount outstanding seasonally adjusted	1964				1965
	March	June	Sept.	Dec.	March	June	Sept.	Dec.
	(Millions of dollars)
Chartered banks	1,497	1,672	1,736	1,793	1,848	2,064	2,150	2,186
Sales finance companies	886	996	1,038	1,035	1,023	1,099	1,136	1,140
Consumer loan companies	796	837	866	904	925	975	994	1,029
Quebec Savings Banks	14	14	15	15	17	18	17	16
Life insurance companies	388	392	396	398	400	402	405	407
Retail dealers[1]	620	626	643	727	668	667	696	794
Sub-total	4,201	4,537	4,694	4,872	4,881	5,225	5,398	5,572
Other retail[2]	426	435	445	479	430	438	457	482
Credit unions and caisses	n.a.	n.a.	n.a.	840	n.a.	n.a.	n.a.	n.a.

n.a. not available.

[1]Includes department stores, furniture and appliance dealers and the instalment credit of motor vehicle dealers.

[2]Includes oil companies credit cards.

SOURCES: Bank of Canada, Department of Insurance, Department of Finance, DBS, and Department of Agriculture.

Sources and Application of Funds—Private Financial Institutions

A consolidation of the assets and liabilities of deposit-accepting institutions is shown in Tables 54 and 55, and the percentage distribution of these assets and liabilities in Tables 56 and 57. The deposit-accepting institutions covered are the chartered banks, Québec savings banks, trust companies and mortgage loan companies; caisses populaires and credit unions are excluded only because quarterly data on their operations is not available. Term liabilities of deposit-accepting institutions grew rapidly in 1965, in continuation of a trend which was apparent in 1964. In particular, the total of non-chequable, term and notice deposits and debentures and certificates rose much faster than the total of notes and chequable deposits. As a result, "other deposits and deposit-type liabilities" were 21.1 per cent of total liabilities at the end of 1965 as compared with 18.5 per cent and 16.1 per cent at December 31, 1964 and December 31, 1963 respectively.

This increase in term liabilities enabled deposit-accepting institutions to meet strong demands for loans and mortgages. Their loans and holdings of mortgages expanded by $1,972 million and $983 million respectively in 1965, as compared with corresponding increases of $1,056 million and $589 million in 1964. Because of these changes, the proportion of their assets held in the form of loans and mortgages rose to 50.1 per cent in 1963, to 54.1 per cent in 1964 and to 58.3 per cent in 1965. The highest rate of growth occurred in holdings of mortgages, which rose from 15.4 per cent of total assets at December 31, 1964 to 17.1 per cent at the end of 1965; this increase reflected both the high demand for mortgages and the attraction for deposit-accepting institutions of the high rates of interest on mortgages.

To finance the expansion of their loans and holdings of mortgages, deposit-accepting institutions used the additional funds made available by depositors and purchasers of their certificates and debentures; they also refrained from making any substantial additions to their holdings of government bonds even though net new issues of federal, provincial and municipal bonds totalled $775 million for the year. As a result, government bonds fell from 33.5 per cent to 30.1 per cent of their total assets during 1965. In this regard, deposit-accepting institutions were continuing a trend already in force in 1964 when their holdings of government bonds showed little change and when the proportion of such bonds fell from 36.1 to 33.5 per cent of total assets.

With the increase in the proportions of their assets held in the form of loans and mortgages to over 55 per cent and the decline in their holdings of government bonds to 30.1 per cent, deposit-accepting institutions during 1965 approached a point where further extensions in their loans and holdings of mortgages had become more dependent upon the expansion of their deposits and other deposit-type liabilities. To some extent, this higher proportion of assets held in loans and mortgages had been made possible because of the increases in the proportion of their liabilities accounted for by term and notice deposits. This proportion cannot, however, be increased indefinitely without affecting the cash flows and liquidity of these institutions.

Table 54 indicates that the institutions covered by this analysis increased their loans to governments, businesses and individuals by approximately $2 billion in 1965 and their loans against mortgages by approximately $1 billion. Holdings of treasury bills, bonds, equities and other securities remained virtually unchanged at the end of the year.

The main private financial institutions not covered by the above analysis are the insurance companies and pension funds. These institutions are mainly concerned with gathering savings on a contractual basis and are among the most important investors in long-term securities and other longer term obligations in Canada. Life insurance companies and trusteed pension funds account for the bulk of the total assets in this group.

During 1965, the Canadian assets of sixteen life insurance companies[1], which account for about 84 per cent of total net premium income in Canada, increased by about $600 million. Funds financing this increase arose mainly out of insurance operations in Canada (net premium income) together with about $44 million transferred from earnings abroad. The sixteen life insurance companies were net sellers of government securities during 1965. Portfolio investments in Government of Canada bonds were reduced by $77 million and holdings of provincial and municipal bonds were reduced by $16 million and $4 million respectively. Funds obtained from disinvestment in these securities helped in part to finance the increase in holdings of other securities. Insurance companies, like the deposit-accepting institutions analyzed above, have been increasing the proportion of their assets held in the form of mortgage loans and sales agreements. In 1965 the net increase in assets held in this form totalled $390 million. Net investment in corporate bonds amounted to $191 million and net investment in corporate stocks amounted to $48 million.

[1]Statistical data up to the end of June 1965 are based upon cash transactions by 12 insurance companies representing about 74 per cent of net premium income for all companies and thereafter the data relate to 16 insurance companies representing about 84 per cent of such net premium income. The figures quoted will therefore tend to understate asset increases.

TABLE 54

ASSETS OF DEPOSIT-ACCEPTING INSTITUTIONS[1]

(In millions of dollars)

	1963	1964				1965
	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December[2]
Loans:
Canadian day to day loans	253	163	193	258	253	167	213	265	251
Call and short loans	145	93	127	120	150	165	154	203	208
To instalment finance companies	302	279	295	243	299	288	357	425	527
To other businesses	5,186	5,329	5,658	5,734	5,762	6,058	6,480	6,624	6,850
To individuals	2,254	2,228	2,381	2,408	2,660	2,710	2,869	2,924	3,050
To non-profit institutions	234	232	241	247	262	246	268	269	285
To provinces	48	33	28	54	30	14	13	35	59
To municipalities	301	374	302	303	363	465	405	446	521
	8,723	8,731	9,225	9,367	9,779	10,113	10,759	11,191	11,751
Mortgages	3,302	3,421	3,573	3,725	3,891	4,094	4,344	4,619	4,874
Government bonds
Govt. of Canada treasury bills	1,778	1,719	1,662	1,725	1,756	1,797	1,747	1,824	1,880
Govt. of Canada bonds	5,655	5,651	5,553	5,467	5,562	5,532	5,687	5,581	5,580
Provincial bonds	653	666	655	630	655	677	675	636	625
Municipal bonds	445	473	489	482	480	506	502	488	500
	8,531	8,509	8,359	8,304	8,435	8,512	8,611	8,529	8,585
Other securities
Short term notes[3]	112	240	267	236	159	315	343	260	250
Industrial Development Bank debentures and stock	184	187	194	200	213	219	226	229	240
Other corporate bonds	709	738	750	757	753	761	795	815	830
Stocks	117	119	125	121	124	124	138	135	140
	1,122	1,284	1,336	1,314	1,249	1,419	1,502	1,439	1,460
Assets abroad (net)	102	73	−9	−20	101	168	30	3	75
All other assets	1,854	1,815	1,622	1,572	1,796	1,724	1,775	1,737	1,795
Total	23,634	23,833	24,106	24,262	25,269	26,030	27,021	27,518	28,540

[1] Excluding credit unions and caisses populaires.
[2] Estimated.
[3] Of sales finance and other companies.
SOURCE: DBS, and Bank of Canada.

TABLE 55

LIABILITIES OF DEPOSIT-ACCEPTING INSTITUTIONS[1]

(In millions of dollars)

	1963	1964				1965
	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December[2]
Bank of Canada Notes	1,886	1,845	1,916	1,920	2,026	1,938	2,053	2,071	2,153
Chequable deposits of:
Government of Canada	969	833	829	430	773	683	674	518	804
Provincial governments[3]	183	224	208	170	204	267	360	344	344
Other financial institutions	88	112	103	108	122	120	143	156	165
Other Canadian residents[4]	14,405	14,290	14,408	14,692	14,913	14,937	15,371	15,763	16,125
Total Chequable Deposits	15,645	15,459	15,548	15,400	16,012	16,007	16,548	16,781	17,438
Other deposits and deposit-type liabilities:
Non-chequable demand deposits	489	579	609	642	710	733	767	748	760
Term deposits, G.I.C.'s, debentures and instalment certificates	2,124	2,267	2,367	2,396	2,458	2,723	2,832	2,925	3,015
Other notice deposits	1,191	1,224	1,369	1,445	1,505	1,818	2,031	2,186	2,044
Total Non-Chequable and Time Deposits	3,804	4,070	4,345	4,483	4,673	5,274	5,630	5,859	6,019
Deposit and deposit-type liabilities to non-residents	231	287	211	227	221	233	215	196	200
Total deposit and deposit-type liabilities	21,566	21,661	22,020	22,030	22,932	23,452	24,446	24,907	25,810
Shareholders' equity	1,613	1,651	1,658	1,679	1,708	1,743	1,761	1,799	1,880
All other liabilities	455	521	428	553	629	835	814	812	850
Total	23,634	23,833	24,106	24,262	25,269	26,030	27,021	27,518	28,540

[1] Excluding credit unions and caisses populaires.

[2] Estimated.

[3] Includes non-chequable deposits.

[4] Includes demand and savings deposits at chartered banks and chequable demand deposits at trust and loan companies.

SOURCE: DBS, and Bank of Canada.

TABLE 56

ASSETS OF DEPOSIT-ACCEPTING INSTITUTIONS

(Percentage distribution)

—	1963	1964				1965
	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December
Loans:
Canadian day-to-day loans	1.07	0.68	0.80	1.06	1.00	0.64	0.79	0.96	0.88
Call and short loans	0.61	0.39	0.53	0.49	0.59	0.63	0.57	0.74	0.73
To Instalment Finance Companies	1.28	1.17	1.22	1.00	1.18	1.11	1.32	1.54	1.85
To other businesses	21.94	22.36	23.47	23.63	22.80	23.27	23.98	24.07	24.00
To individuals	9.54	9.35	9.88	9.92	10.53	10.41	10.62	10.63	10.67
To non-profit institutions	0.99	0.97	1.00	1.02	1.04	0.95	0.99	0.98	1.00
To provinces	0.20	0.14	0.12	0.22	0.12	0.05	0.05	0.13	0.21
To municipalities	1.27	1.57	1.25	1.25	1.44	1.79	1.50	1.62	1.83
	36.91	36.63	38.27	38.61	38.70	38.85	39.82	40.67	41.17
Mortgages	13.97	14.35	14.82	15.35	15.40	15.73	16.08	16.79	17.08
Government bonds
Government of Canada treasury bills	7.52	7.21	6.89	7.11	6.95	6.90	6.47	6.63	6.59
Government of Canada bonds	23.93	23.71	23.04	22.53	22.01	21.25	21.05	20.28	19.55
Provincial bonds	2.76	2.79	2.72	2.60	2.51	2.60	2.50	2.31	2.19
Municipal bonds	1.88	1.98	2.03	1.99	1.90	1.94	1.86	1.77	1.75
	36.10	35.70	34.68	34.23	33.45	32.70	31.87	30.99	30.08
Other securities
Short-term notes	0.47	1.01	1.11	0.97	0.63	1.21	1.27	0.94	0.88
Industrial Development Bank debentures and stock	0.78	0.78	0.80	0.82	0.84	0.84	0.84	0.83	0.84
Other corporate bonds	3.00	3.10	3.11	3.12	2.98	2.92	2.94	2.96	2.91
Stocks	0.50	0.50	0.52	0.50	0.49	0.48	0.51	0.49	0.49
	4.75	5.39	5.54	5.41	4.94	5.45	5.22	5.23	5.12
Assets abroad (net)	0.43	0.31	−0.04	−0.08	0.40	0.65	0.11	0.01	0.26
All other assets	7.84	7.62	6.73	6.48	7.11	6.62	6.57	6.31	6.29
Total	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00

SOURCE: DBS, and Bank of Canada.

TABLE 57

LIABILITIES OF DEPOSIT-ACCEPTING INSTITUTIONS[1]

(Percentage distribution)

	1963	1964				1965
	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December	31st March	30th June	30th September	31st December
Bank of Canada Notes	7.98	7.74	7.95	7.91	8.02	7.45	7.60	7.53	7.54
Chequable deposits of:
Government of Canada	4.10	3.50	3.44	1.77	3.06	2.62	2.49	1.88	2.82
Provincial Governments	.77	.94	.86	.70	.81	1.03	1.33	1.25	1.21
Other Financial Institutions	.37	.47	.43	.45	.48	.46	.53	.57	.58
Other Canadian residents	60.95	59.96	59.77	60.56	59.02	57.38	56.89	57.28	56.50
Total Chequable Deposits	66.20	64.86	64.50	63.48	63.37	61.49	61.24	60.98	61.11
Other deposits and deposit-type liabilities:
Non-chequable demand deposits	2.07	2.43	2.53	2.65	2.81	2.82	2.84	2.72	2.66
Term deposits, G.I.C.'s, debentures and instalment certificates	8.99	9.51	9.82	9.88	9.73	10.46	10.48	10.63	11.27
Other notice deposits	5.04	5.14	5.68	5.96	5.96	6.98	7.52	7.94	7.16
Total Non-chequable and Time Deposits	16.10	17.08	18.02	18.48	18.50	20.26	20.84	21.29	21.09
Deposits and deposit-type liabilities to non-residents	.98	1.20	.88	.94	.87	.90	.80	.71	.70
Total deposit and deposit-type liabilities	91.25	90.89	91.35	90.80	90.75	90.10	90.47	90.51	90.44
Shareholders' Equity	6.82	6.93	6.88	6.92	6.76	6.70	6.52	6.54	6.58
All Other Liabilities	1.93	2.19	1.64	2.28	2.49	3.20	3.01	2.95	2.98
Total	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00	100.00

[1]See footnotes Table 55.

SOURCE: DBS, and Bank of Canada.

Federal Government Debt Operations

(Fiscal year ending March 31, 1966)

In the budget speech of April 26, 1965, a budgetary deficit of $300 million, a non-budgetary deficit of $225 million assuming no Exchange Fund charges, and total cash requirements of $525 million were forecast. Government of Canada marketable securities, excluding regular weekly issues of three month and six month treasury bills, scheduled to mature within the fiscal year 1965–66 amounted to $1,705 million.

As a result of a higher rate of economic expansion than had been anticipated, federal government budgetary revenues are now expected to exceed the original forecast by almost $300 million while budgetary expenditures are expected to remain close to original estimates. The resulting net decrease in the budgetary deficit is partially offset by a significant increase in the original non-budgetary deficit estimate. Part of this increase has resulted from Exchange Fund transactions. Total cash requirements, before debt changes, are expected to be about $100 million lower than the original estimate made in the April 1965 budget.

There were several changes in the federal government's unmatured debt during the past fiscal year, the net effect of which produced an increase in such debt amounting to $160 million. The bulk of this increase as shown in Table 58 came from net sales of Canada Savings Bonds which amounted to $205 million. Outstanding marketable securities, excluding Treasury Bills, declined by $155 million. The increase in cash provided by the net increase in unmatured debt helped to meet a good portion of the federal government's cash requirements. A decline in the federal government's cash balance from $681 million at the end of March, 1965, to about $600 million at the end of March, 1966, will finance the balance of the federal government's cash requirements.

TABLE 58

SUMMARY OF PROJECTED CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT SECURITIES OUTSTANDING FOR THE YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1966.

	(Millions of dollars)
	Increase	Decrease
Treasury Bills—weekly	10
Canada Savings Bonds	205
Unemployment Insurance Fund	100
Marketable Securities	.....	155
	315	155
	−155
	160

Federal government cash balances throughout the 1965–66 fiscal year have generally been high enough to allow considerable flexibility in formulating debt management policies. The overriding consideration in debt management during this period has been the desire to complement monetary and fiscal policies. Subordinated to this consideration but nevertheless playing important roles in determining the size and frequency of issues, maturity lengths, coupon rates and prices have been the general debt management aims of achieving a broader market, of extending maturity lengths when possible, and of providing greater flexibility in future debt management operations.

The Budget—Appendix

During the first quarter of calendar 1965, Canada's bond and money markets became unsettled. The United States' balance of payments programme, introduced on February 10, 1965, which asked U.S. banks, financial institutions and other businesses to reduce voluntarily their foreign lending and investment activities, had a particularly unsettling effect on Canada's bond and money markets. Also having a bearing on general market conditions at this time was the build-up of a heavy calendar of new corporate and provincial bond issues. On April 1, 1965 $200 million Government of Canada 4¼ per cent bonds matured. It was decided to refund $175 million only of the maturing issue. The refunding issue had a maturity length of 2 years 6 months and was an addition to the outstanding 3¾ per cent bonds due October 1, 1967. Details of this and other new Government of Canada bond issues floated during the fiscal year are shown in Table 59.

In the weeks following the April 1 refunding issue, upward pressures on short-term rates became increasingly evident, reflecting in part the effects of the U.S. guidelines. Upward adjustments in long-term yields also occurred when the previously anticipated heavy calendar of new provincial and corporate bond issues began to materialize. $400 million Government of Canada 3½ per cent bonds matured on July 1, 1965. This issue was refunded in part by a new $325 million bond issue in three tranches, ranging in maturity length from ten months to five years and open as to amount in each maturity.

In the intervening period between the July 1 bond issue and the September 1 issue a sequence of events brought about a further change in monetary conditions. A major disturbance occurred on June 14, 1965, when Atlantic Acceptance Corporation defaulted on its obligations. This event had a severe impact on the financial system in general and on Canada's rapidly growing money market in particular. Despite the sizeable increases in money supply which occurred as a result of Bank of Canada attempts to meet the situation in the money market, upward pressures on interest rates developed. The mid-year review of capital spending intentions indicated an 18.6 per cent increase over 1964 expenditures instead of the original 13.7 per cent estimate. It was recognized that realization of these capital spending intentions could create strains on the economy and lead to a further widening in the balance of payments deficit on current account. Cost pressures began to appear in the construction industry. An announcement was made by the Prime Minister at the beginning of August to the effect that the Government was deferring certain construction projects in order to alleviate pressures of demand on the construction industry. Heavy demands for funds were mainly responsible for the further increase in yields which occurred during this period.

On September 1, 1965, $450 million 3¾ per cent Government of Canada bonds were due to mature. The full amount of $450 million was refunded. As shown in Table 59, the new refunding issue was in three tranches including the first long-term maturity of the year—$100 million 5¼ per cent bonds due May 1, 1990 and having a maturity length of 24 years 8 months.

The outlook for the Canadian economy changed little over the remaining months of the year. Consumer and business opinion continued to be decisively optimistic. In choosing refunding issues to meet $325 million 3½ per cent bonds due December 1, 1965 and $330 million 3½ per cent bonds due February 1, 1966, however, several other important factors also had to be considered. In the three week period immediately preceding the announcement of the December 1 refunding a substantial upward adjustment in Canadian bond yields took place in all maturities. Increasing concern that Canadian exemption from the U.S. Interest Equalization Tax and her special position under the U.S. guidelines were endangered, a weaker U.S. bond market and a relatively poor response to

TABLE 59

DETAILS OF NEW ISSUES AND RETIREMENTS OF GOVERNMENT OF CANADA
DIRECT AND GUARANTEED BONDS FROM JANUARY 1, 1965 TO MARCH 31, 1966

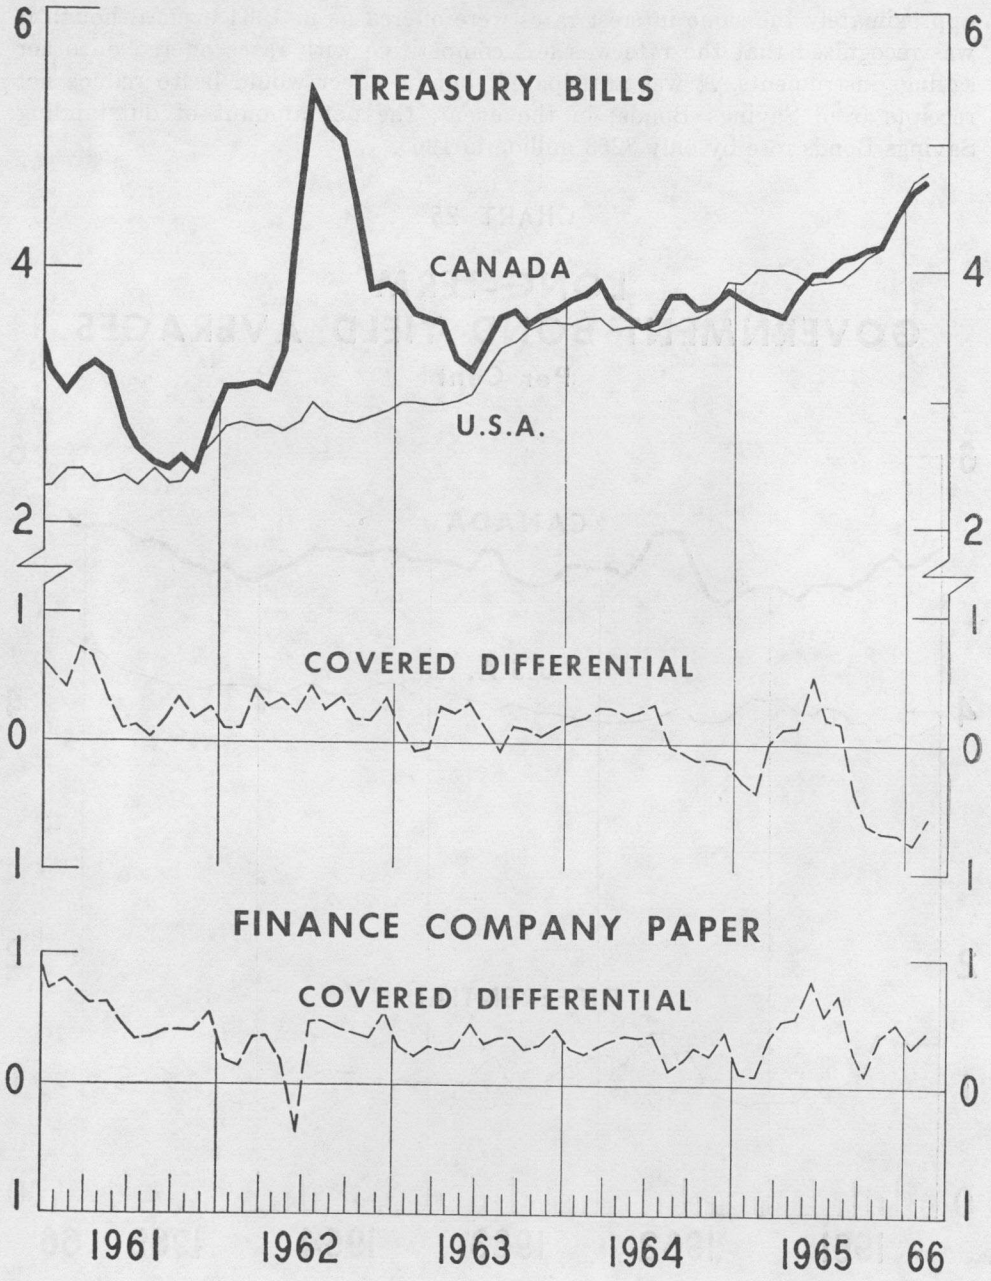
Date of Issue	Maturing Bonds	Amount ($ millions par value)	New Bonds	Amount ($ millions par value)	Net Change in Amount Outstanding	Term of New Bonds	Price at Issue (%)	Yield at Issue (%)
1965
Jan. 29	3¾% Sept. 1, 1965	175	—	—	−175
Feb. 1	3½% Feb. 1, 1965	415	3½% May 1, 1966	175	+ 35	1 yr. 3 mos.	99.20	4.16
			5% Oct. 1, 1973	275		8 yrs. 8 mos.	100.00	5.00
Mar. 25	3¾% Sept. 1, 1965	125	—		−125
April 1	4¼% April 1, 1965	200	3¾% Oct. 1, 1967	175	− 25	2 yrs. 6 mos.	98.55	4.37
April 15	5% Oct. 15, 1987[1]	3	—		− 3
July 1	3½% July 1, 1965	400	3½% May 1, 1966	150		1 yr. 10 mos.	99.33	4.32
			4¼% June 1, 1967	50	− 75	1 yr. 11 mos.	99.50	4.52
			5% July 1, 1970	125		5 years	99.75	5.06
Sept. 1	3¾% Sept. 1, 1965	450	3¾% Sept. 1, 1966	205		1 year	99.00	4.79
			5½% Oct. 1, 1969	145	0	4 yrs. 1 mo.	100.75	5.29
			5¼% May 1, 1990	100		24 yrs. 8 mos.	98.50	5.36
Oct. 15	5% Oct. 15, 1987[1]	3	—		− 3
Dec. 1	3½% Dec. 1, 1965	325	4% Dec. 15, 1966	150		1 yr. ½ mo.	98.85	5.15
			5½% April 1, 1969	100	− 25	3 yrs. 4 mos.	100.25	5.41
			5½% Oct. 1, 1975	50		9 yrs. 10 mos.	100.00	5.50
	Totals (Calendar 1965)	2,095		1,700	−396
1966
Jan. 3	C.N.R. 3% Jan. 3, 1966	35			− 35
Feb. 1	3½% Feb. 1, 1966	330	4% April 1, 1967	170		1 yr. 2 mos.	98.70	5.16
			5% July 1, 1970	50	− 30	4 yrs. 5 mos.	98.50	5.38
			5½% Aug. 1, 1980	80		14 yrs. 6 mos.	100.00	5.50
Totals (Fiscal year 1965–66)		1,745		1,550	−195

[1] This issue was made in New York and bonds of this issue are subject to partial redemption at par for the sinking fund on each interest payment date, commencing with April 15, 1965, in a principal amount equal to U.S. $2,500,000.

new provincial, municipal and corporate bond issues brought to the market in this period all contributed to the widespread expectations that higher bond yields were in the offing. In the light of these developments it was considered desirable to avoid adding to market difficulties. Thus, only $300 million of the maturing $325 million 3½ per cent bonds due December 1, 1965 was refunded and the Bank of Canada agreed to subscribe for a minimum of $100 million of the new issue. Also, investors were offered the choice of three maturities—two short-term and one medium-term, as described in Table 59. The issue was priced on the market to maintain market stability.

Shortly after the December 1, 1965 refunding issue, a revised Balance of Payments programme was announced by the U.S. Government which set out guidelines to non-financial U.S. corporations with respect to their direct investments abroad, including those in Canada. It was reaffirmed, however, that Canadian borrowers would continue to have unlimited access, exempt from the Interest Equalization Tax, to the U.S. market for new issues of long-term securities. Early in December the U.S. Federal Reserve Board approved an increase in the discount rate from 4 per cent to 4½ per cent. The Bank of Canada also increased its Bank Rate from 4¼ per cent to 4¾ per cent and announced that the policy of the Bank would continue to be directed to making provision for the overall credit needs of sound economic growth.

The reaction in the Canadian bond market to these developments was small, in part because of the strong technical position which had emerged over the preceding weeks' bearish atmosphere, and in part because unlimited access by Canadian borrowers to the U.S. long-term market was to continue. A somewhat sharper reaction to the U.S. Federal Reserve Board's announcement took place in the U.S. bond market.

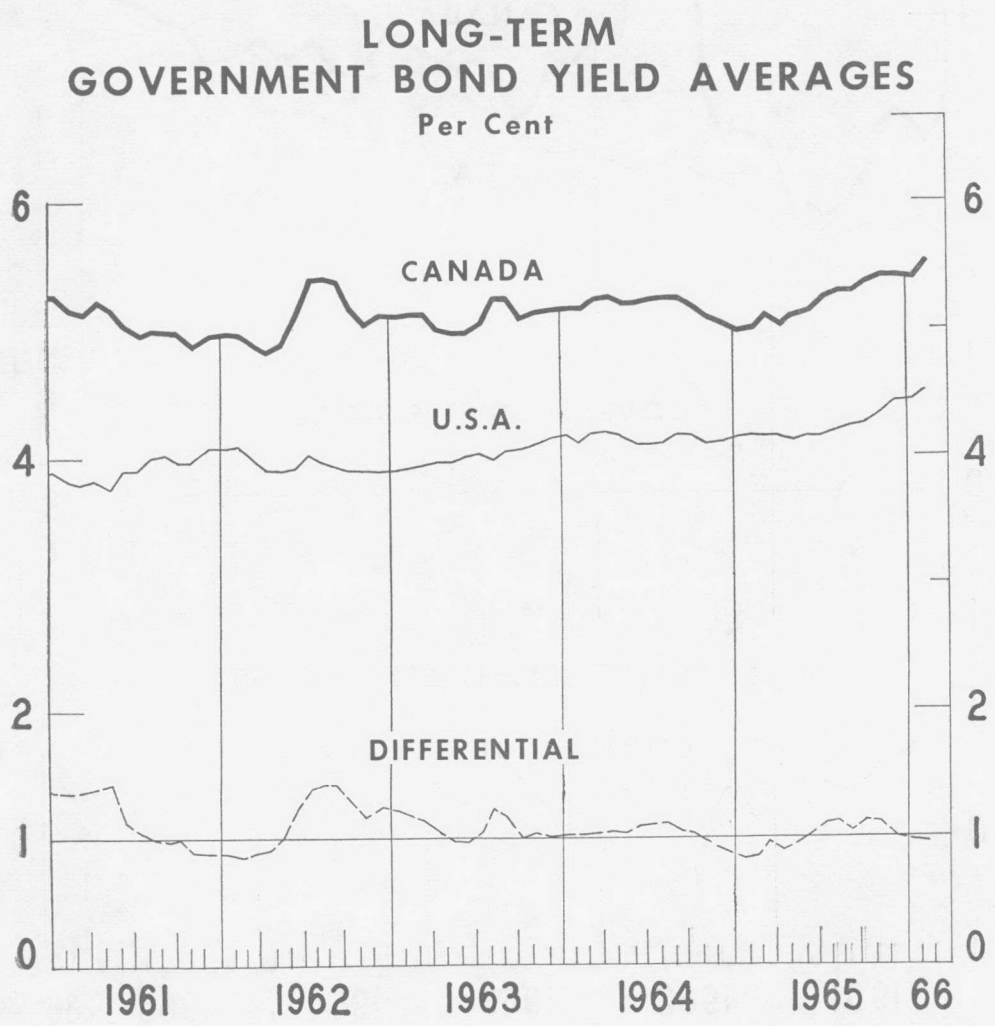


On February 1, 1966, $330 million 3½ per cent bonds were due to mature. Not wishing to upset the relatively delicate stability in Canadian interest rates, which in the face of declining U.S. bond prices was bringing about a narrowing of the yield differential between U.S. and Canadian bonds at a time when first quarter capital inflows were expected to be at a relatively high level, priority was given to designing an issue having a minimum impact on market prices. It was decided to refund $300 million only of the maturing $330 million 3½ per cent bonds due February 1, 1966 and to offer investors a wide choice of maturities. A refunding issue was offered with three maturities, described more fully in Table 59, open as to amount in each maturity and priced close to prevailing market levels. In addition, the Bank of Canada offered to primary distributors $25 million in each of 5 per cent Government of Canada bonds due October 1, 1973 and 5¼ per cent Government of Canada bonds due May 1, 1990 out of its own portfolio in exchange for the new issue. This had the effect of making available an even wider choice to Canadian investors and, since these bonds offered by the Bank of Canada were not exempt from U.S. Interest Equalization Tax, U.S. investor interest was kept to a minimum.

As in previous years, outstanding issues were added to where possible during the fiscal year 1965–66 in order to provide a broader market and to provide greater flexibility in future debt management operations. Of the thirteen new issues during 1965–1966, nine were additions to existing issues and four new maturity dates were opened. In the circumstances, it was not possible to achieve any lengthening of maturity during this period, and the average term to maturity of Government of Canada marketable securities, excluding perpetual bonds, declined from 7 years 11 months to 7 years 9 months.

CHART 24

SELECTED 3 MONTH INTEREST RATES



Monthly Averages - Per Cent

The Budget—Appendix

The Canada Savings Bond campaign of 1964 offered an initial interest rate of 4½ per cent and a yield to maturity of 5 per cent per annum. These rates were competitive with those available elsewhere to the general public and the amount of Savings Bonds outstanding increased by $480 million during 1964 to a total of $5,613 million at the end of the year. In planning the 1965 campaign, approximately the same interest rates were offered as in 1964 even although it was recognized that the rate was less competitive with rates offered on other savings instruments. It was anticipated that its effect would be to reduce net receipts from Savings Bonds; in the event, the net amount of outstanding Savings Bonds rose by only $253 million in 1965.

CHART 25

Interest Rates

Table 60 indicates the quarter by quarter changes in interest rates of a broad representative list of investments. The most significant changes which took place in 1965 were the continuous upward adjustments in the general level of interest rates after the first quarter and a flattening of the yield curve associated with the relatively greater increase in short-term rates than in long-term rates.

The upward adjustments in the general level of interest rates reflect the heavier demands for credit associated with the high rate of economic growth achieved in 1965 and a tighter monetary policy posture. In addition to these general developments were two events of particular significance to the short-term market, namely, the U.S. guidelines announced in February and the default of Atlantic Acceptance Corporation in June, which helped to bring about a relatively greater increase in short-term rates of under one year maturity than in the rest of the maturity range. While finance companies were particularly hard pressed to raise funds in the short-term market after June, the undermining of investor confidence brought about by the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation default caused other financial corporations to experience difficulties also. From March 31 to the end of 1965 short-term rates, as represented by prime finance and commercial paper, increased by about 160 basis points while long-term Government of Canada bonds increased by about 40 basis points in yield.

TABLE 60

INTEREST RATES IN 1965

Period to Maturity	Issuer	Investment	1964	1965				Changes in each quarter of 1965				Total Change in 1965
			Dec.	March	June	Sept.	Dec.	1st	2nd	3rd	4th
30 days	Grain Companies	Grain Paper	4.19	4.19	4.44	4.75	5.13	Nil	+0.25	+0.31	+0.38	+0.94
	Corporations	Bankers' Acceptances	4.38	4.13	4.63	4.88	4.95	−0.25	+0.50	+0.25	+0.07	+0.57
	Finance Companies	Prime Finance Paper:
		Low	4.14	3.89	4.27	4.87	5.75	−0.25	+0.38	+0.60	+0.88	+1.61
		High	4.39	4.14	4.52	5.02	6.00	−0.25	+0.38	+0.50	+0.98	+1.61
	Corporations	Prime Commerical Paper	4.38	4.13	4.63	4.88	6.00	−0.25	+0.50	+0.25	+1.12	+1.62
	Chartered Banks	Term Deposits	3.63	3.88	4.13	4.25	5.25	+0.25	+0.25	+0.12	+1.00	+1.62
	Trust Companies	G.I.C.'s	3.92	3.92	4.50	4.63	5.38	Nil	+0.58	+0.13	+0.75	+1.46
		Term Deposits	4.00	4.00	4.13	4.75	5.50	Nil	+0.13	+0.62	+0.75	+1.50
90 days	Govt. of Canada	Treasury Bills	3.82	3.62	3.93	4.13	4.56	−0.20	+0.31	+0.20	+0.43	+0.74
	Corporations	Bankers' Acceptances	4.20	3.95	4.15	4.63	5.05	−0.25	+0.20	+0.48	+0.42	+0.85
	Finance Companies	Prime Finance Paper:
		Low	4.55	4.42	4.81	5.06	5.88	−0.13	+0.39	+0.25	+0.82	+1.33
		High	4.68	4.55	4.93	5.32	6.13	−0.13	+0.38	+0.39	+0.81	+1.45
	Corporations	Prime Commercial Paper	4.63	4.50	4.88	5.13	6.00	−0.13	+0.38	+0.25	+0.87	+1.37
	Chartered Banks	Term Deposits	4.00	4.25	4.37	4.50	5.63	+0.25	+0.12	+0.13	+1.13	+1.63
	Trust Companies	G.I.C.'s	4.25	4.21	4.57	4.76	5.56	−0.04	+0.36	+0.19	+0.80	+1.31
		Term Deposits	4.38	4.38	4.50	4.88	5.75	Nil	+0.12	+0.38	+0.87	+1.37
180 days	Govt. of Canada	Treasury Bills	3.96	3.73	4.04	4.35	4.78	−0.23	+0.31	+0.31	+0.43	+0.82
	Chartered Banks	Term Deposits	4.13	4.38	4.50	4.63	5.63	+0.25	+0.12	+0.13	+1.00	+1.50
	Trust Companies	G.I.C.'s	4.46	4.34	4.69	4.94	5.58	−0.12	+0.35	+0.25	+0.64	+1.12
		Term Deposits	4.50	4.50	4.63	5.00	5.75	Nil	+0.13	+0.37	+0.75	+1.25
One Year	Chartered Banks	Term Deposits	4.75	4.75	5.00	5.00	5.63	Nil	+0.25	Nil	+0.63	+0.88
	Trust Companies	G.I.C.'s	4.83	4.83	5.00	5.20	5.76	Nil	+0.17	+0.20	+0.56	+0.93
		Term Deposits	5.00	4.88	5.00	5.25	5.75	−0.12	+0.12	+0.25	+0.50	+0.75
1 to 2 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	4.15	4.04	4.32	4.93	5.14	−0.11	+0.28	+0.61	+0.21	+0.99
2 to 3 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	4.30	4.33	4.43	5.01	5.11	+0.03	+0.10	+0.58	+0.10	+0.81
3 to 5 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	4.56	4.57	4.84	5.09	5.25	+0.01	+0.27	+0.25	+0.16	+0.69
5 to 10 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	4.83	4.85	5.10	5.21	5.42	+0.02	+0.25	+0.11	+0.21	+0.59
10 to 15 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	4.97	5.05	5.19	5.32	5.41	+0.08	+0.14	+0.13	+0.09	+0.44
15 to 30 Years	Govt. of Canada	Bonds	5.07	5.09	5.16	5.36	5.45	+0.02	+0.07	+0.20	+0.09	+0.38
Long Term	Provinces	Bonds	5.41	5.41	5.50	5.76	5.90	Nil	+0.09	+0.26	+0.14	+0.49
Long Term	Municipalities	Bonds	5.57	5.55	5.69	5.96	6.03	−0.02	+0.14	+0.27	+0.07	+0.46
Long Term	Public Utilities	Bonds	5.48	5.46	5.63	5.84	6.01	−0.02	+0.17	+0.21	+0.17	+0.53
Long Term	Industrial corporations	Bonds	5.47	5.50	5.64	5.83	6.05	+0.03	+0.14	+0.19	+0.22	+0.58

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1965-66

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
Introduction	3524
Highlights of the government's financial operations during 1965-66	3524
Budgetary accounts	3527
Revenue	3528
Expenditure	3536
Assets and liabilities as at March 31, 1966	3566
Summary	3566
Liability accounts	3567
Asset accounts	3576
Net debt	3586
The cash position	3586
The public debt	3589
Supplementary detailed tables	3595

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1965-66

INTRODUCTION

This Part of the Budget Papers presents in summary form a review of the accounts of the Government of Canada for the fiscal year 1965–66. The fiscal year of the government ends on March 31, but under the provisions of section 35 of the Financial Administration Act, for thirty days after the end of each fiscal year, payments for the discharge of debts properly applicable to the old year may be made and charged to that year. Consequently the books must remain open for some time after the fiscal year-end to take into account these payments and to record various adjusting entries. The figures used in this report are based on ten months actual and two months estimated. The final figures when they become available next July or August will vary to some extent from those given in the following pages.

Previous year figures have been adjusted to reflect transfers of duties pursuant to the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE GOVERNMENT'S FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1965–66

This section outlines the financial operations of the government giving a brief summary of the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions, the unmatured debt transactions and the changes in the cash position and the debt position during 1965–66. More detailed explanations of these transactions are given in subsequent sections of this Part.

The following table summarizes the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for 1965–66 with comparative figures for 1964–65 and indicates how these transactions affect the government's cash balances:

TABLE 1

(in millions of dollars)

Summary of Budgetary and Non-Budgetary Transactions and Changes in Cash Position	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)		1965
Budgetary transactions—
Revenue—
Tax	6,832		6,367
Non-tax	841		813
	7,673		7,180
Expenditure—
Defence	1,585		1,586
Non-defence	6,122		5,632
	7,707		7,218
Deficit (−)		−34		−38
Non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions)—
Receipts and credits—
Repayment of temporary loans to old age security fund	25		75
Repayment of other loans, investments and advances	51		65
Net annuity, insurance and pension account receipts	705		545
Other	289		149
	1,070		834
Disbursements and charges—
Advances to exchange fund	51		20
Redemption of non-interest-bearing notes payable on demand	108		219
Other loans, investments and advances	896		700
Other	168		279
	1,223		1,218
Net amount available from or required for (−) non-budgetary transactions		−153		−384
Overall cash requirements to be financed by increase in unmatured debt or decrease in cash balances		−187		−422
Net increase in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public		147		275
Net increase or decrease (−) in Receiver General bank balances		−40		−147

Budgetary transactions

The budgetary revenue, expenditure and deficit as forecast in the budget speech of April 26, 1965 and the figures as now estimated for the fiscal year 1965–66 are shown in the following table:

TABLE 2

(in millions of dollars)

Budgetary Transactions for Fiscal Year 1965–66	Budget forecast April 26, 1965	Actual (estimated)	Increase or decrease (−) compared with April 26, 1965 forecast
			Amount	Per cent
Revenue	7,350	7,673	323	4.39
Expenditure	7,650	7,707	57	0.75
Deficit	300	34	−266

Revenue

Budgetary revenue of the government in the fiscal year 1965–66 is estimated at $7,673 million. This is $323 million or approximately 4½ per cent more than the April 26, 1965 budget forecast and $493 million or 7 per cent more than the total of $7,180 million collected in 1964–65.

Tax revenue accounts for $465 million and non-tax revenue for $28 million of the increase over 1964–65 receipts.

The yield from personal income tax, corporation income tax and the tax on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad is $159 million more than collections in 1964–65 and receipts from the sales tax are $180 million more.

Expenditure

Budgetary expenditure of the government in 1965–66 is estimated at $7,707 million, $57 million or approximately one per cent higher than forecast and $489 million or 7 per cent higher than expenditures in 1964–65.

Defence expenditure at $1,585 million is 21 per cent of total budgetary expenditure, compared with $1,586 million or 22 per cent in 1964–65 and is again the largest category.

Civil or non-defence expenditure at $6,122 million compares with $5,632 million in 1964–65, an increase of $490 million. The main changes are an increase of $115 million in fiscal, subsidy and other payments to provinces and a decrease of $120 million in contributions to provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act due to the fact that Quebec opted out of the program.

Deficit

Expenditure of $7,707 million exceeds revenue of $7,673 million resulting in a deficit of $34 million compared with a deficit of $300 million as forecast on April 26, 1965 and the deficit of $38 million in 1964–65.

Non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions)

Non-budgetary transactions are those which increase or decrease the government's asset and liability accounts and do not enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit.

In 1965–66 estimated net disbursements and charges of $1,223 million exceed net receipts and credits of $1,070 million resulting in a net requirement of $153 million. In 1964–65 net receipts and credits totalled $834 million, net disbursements and charges totalled $1,218 million, resulting in a net requirement of $384 million.

Old age security fund

Receipts by the fund during 1965–66 are estimated at $1,163 million and exceed estimated payments of $923 million from the fund by $240 million. In 1964–65 receipts were $960 million and payments were $885 million.

The excess of $240 million of receipts over payments resulted in the liquidation of the $25 million in outstanding temporary loans by the Minister of Finance and a credit balance of $215 million in the old age security fund.

The transactions in the account during 1965–66 compared with those for 1964–65 are as follows:

	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)	1965
	(in millions of dollars)
Tax receipts	1,163	960
Pension payments	923	885
Excess of receipts over payments	240	75
Temporary loans by the Minister of Finance carried forward	−25	−100
Balance in old age security fund	215	−25

Unmatured debt transactions

Unmatured debt transactions in 1965–66 reflect an increase of $147 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public compared with an increase of $275 million in 1964–65.

Cash position

Receiver General bank balances are expected to be $642 million at March 31, 1966, a decrease of $40 million from the March 31, 1965 total. (Cash received after March 31 is recorded in the subsequent fiscal year bank accounts.) The decrease in cash balances is the result of the non-budgetary requirements of $153 million plus the budgetary deficit of $34 million partly offset by the increase of $147 million in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public.

Debt position

As a result of these budgetary and non-budgetary transactions the gross public debt increased by $1,044 million to $27,617 million, net recorded assets by $1,010 million to $12,079 million and net debt by $34 million to $15,538 million at March 31, 1966. The increase in net debt reflects the budgetary deficit of $34 million.

THE BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Estimated total revenue at $7,673 million for 1965–66 is $493 million more than the total for the previous fiscal year. Estimated total expenditure of $7,707 million is $489 million more than the total for 1964–65. The estimated deficit is $34 million compared with $38 million for the previous fiscal year.

The Budget—Appendix

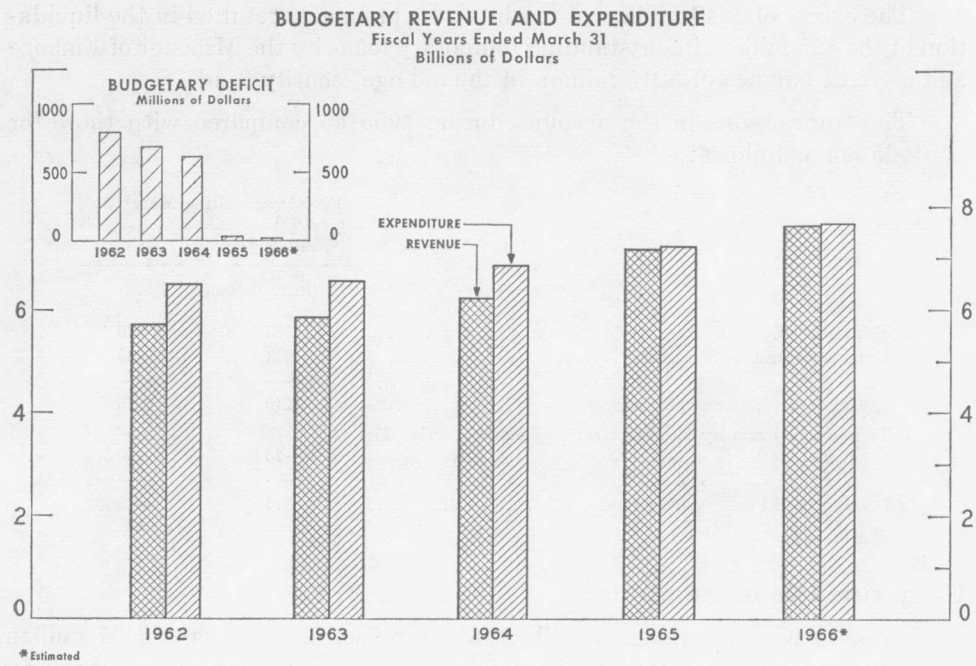

TABLE 3

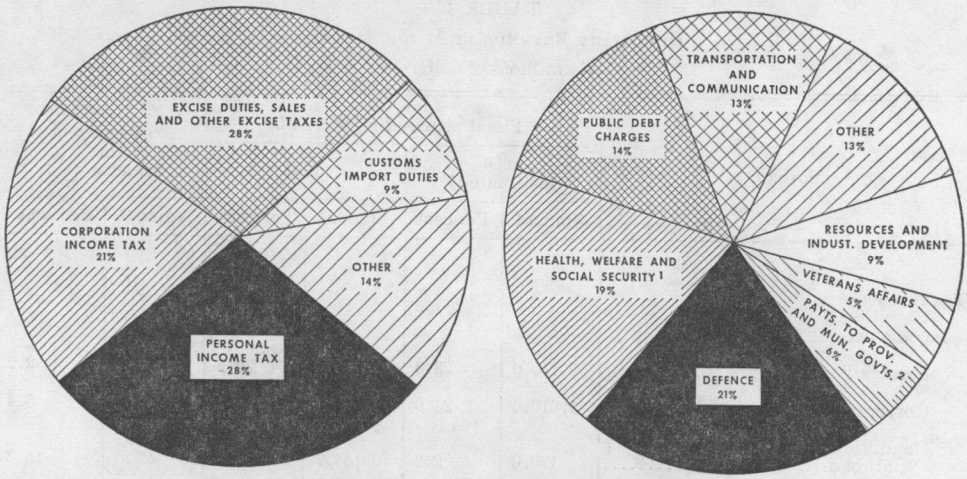
BUDGETARY REVENUE, EXPENDITURE AND DEFICIT
(in millions of dollars)

FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31	Budgetary revenue	Budgetary expenditure	Surplus or deficit (−)
1957	5,106.5	4,849.0	257.5
1958	5,048.8	5,087.4	−38.6
1959	4,754.7	5,364.0	−609.3
1960	5,289.8	5,702.9	−413.1
1961	5,617.7	5,958.1	−340.4
1962	5,729.6	6,520.6	−791.0
1963	5,878.7	6,570.3	−691.6
1964	6,253.2	6,872.4	−619.2
1965	7,180.3	7,218.3	−38.0
1966 (estimated)	7,673.0	7,707.0	−34.0

REVENUE

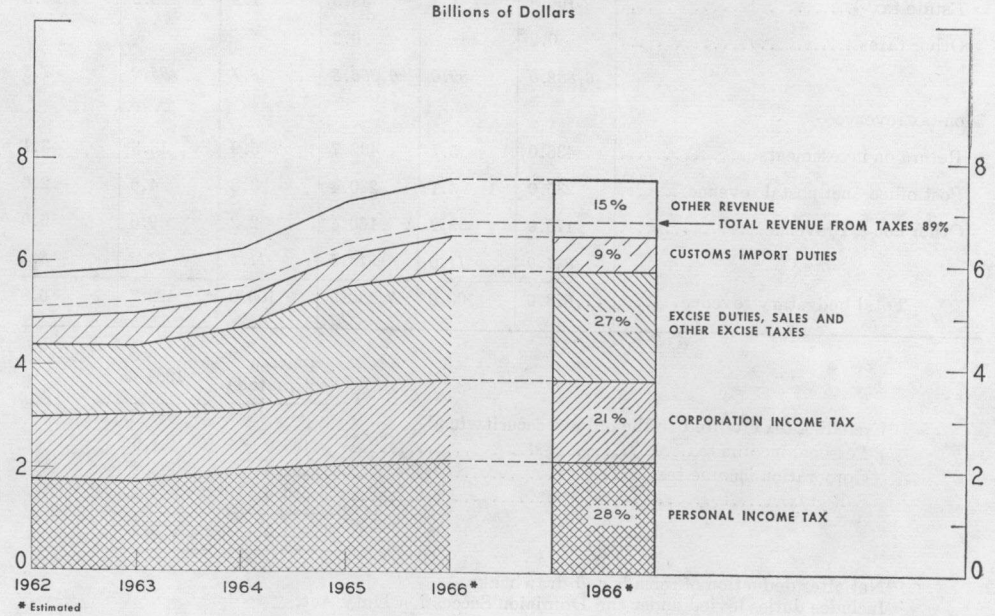


Budgetary revenue in 1965–66 is estimated at $7,673 million, $493 million or 7 per cent over the total of $7,180 million received in 1964–65. Tax revenue at $6,832 million accounts for 89 per cent of the total revenue for the fiscal year and non-tax revenue at $841 million accounts for 11 per cent.

The Budget—Appendix

BUDGETARY REVENUE BY MAJOR SOURCE

BUDGETARY EXPENDITURE BY MAJOR FUNCTION



For Fiscal Year Ended March 31, 1966
Estimated

1. Does not include payments out of old age security fund.
2. Does not include those payments made to provincial and municipal governments for specific purposes.

BUDGETARY REVENUE BY SOURCE

Fiscal Years Ended March 31
Billions of Dollars

* Estimated

The more important items are increases of $47 million in personal income tax collections, $86 million in corporation income tax collections, $180 million in sales tax receipts and $54 million in customs import duties.

TABLE 4

BUDGETARY REVENUE BY MAJOR SOURCES

(in millions of dollars)

SOURCE	Fiscal year ending March 31				Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)		1965
	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent
Tax revenue—
Income tax—
Personal[1]	2,150.0	28.0	2,103.3	29.3	46.7	2.2
Corporation[1]	1,610.0	21.0	1,523.8	21.2	86.2	5.4
On dividends, interest, etc., going abroad	170.0	2.2	143.7	2.0	26.3	18.3
Excise taxes—
Sales[1][2]	1,385.0	18.1	1,204.6	16.8	180.4	15.0
Other	295.0	3.8	269.1	3.8	25.9	9.6
Customs import duties	676.0	8.8	622.1	8.7	53.9	8.7
Excise duties	439.0	5.7	411.4	5.7	27.6	6.7
Estate tax[3]	106.8	1.4	88.6	1.2	18.2	20.5
Other taxes	0.2		0.2
	6,832.0	89.0	6,366.8	88.7	465.2	7.3
Non-tax revenue—
Return on investments	436.0	5.7	422.7	5.9	13.3	3.1
Post office—net postal revenue	235.0	3.1	230.4	3.2	4.6	2.0
Other non-tax revenue	170.0	2.2	160.4	2.2	9.6	6.0
	841.0	11.0	813.5	11.3	27.5	3.4
Total budgetary revenue	7,673.0	100.0	7,180.3	100.0	492.7	6.9

	1965–66 (estimated)	1964–65
[1]Excluding tax credited to the old age security fund—
Personal income tax	496.0	431.9
Corporation income tax	151.0	145.2
Sales tax	516.0	383.2
	1,163.0	960.3

[2]Net after deduction of refunds and drawbacks.

[3]Includes duties levied under the Dominion Succession Duty Act.

Federal-provincial fiscal arrangements

Under fiscal arrangements, that became operative in 1962, the federal government withdrew in part from the field of direct taxation and left the vacated area to the provinces. The federal government offered to collect the provincial income taxes without charge provided that provincial personal income tax was expressed as a percentage of federal personal income tax otherwise payable and provincial corporation income tax applied to taxable income calculated in the same way as for federal income tax purposes. To allow for the imposition of the provincial income taxes, the Income Tax Act was amended to abate the federal income tax otherwise payable by individuals in all provinces by 16 per cent in 1962, 17 per cent in 1963, 18 per cent in 1964, 21 per cent in 1965 and 24 per cent in 1966. For 1965 and 1966, the Province of Quebec obtained an additional 23 percentage points of the federal income tax otherwise payable in that province in compensation of the fact that the payment of youth allowances and the full cost of certain programs which are supported jointly by federal and provincial governments in the other provinces have been assumed by that province. The personal income tax abatement rates for Quebec in 1965 and 1966 are thus 44 per cent and 47 per cent respectively. For the period 1962–67 the federal corporation income tax rates are abated by 9 percentage points for taxable income earned in a province other than Quebec and by 10 percentage points for taxable income earned in Quebec. The additional one percentage point for Quebec is in compensation of the payment by that province of university grants which in the other provinces are made by the federal government. The federal government has entered into tax-collection agreements under which it collects the provincial personal income taxes for all provinces except Quebec and the provincial corporation income taxes for all provinces except Ontario and Quebec.

Under these collection agreements, payments are made monthly to each province based on an estimate of that province's tax revenue. When the actual amounts of assessed returns are established, usually in the month of December following the end of the fiscal year, adjustments are made with the provinces.

Under the 1962–67 fiscal arrangements, the federal government agreed to abate its estate tax by 50 per cent in the fiscal years 1962–63 and 1963–64, and by 75 per cent in the fiscal years 1964–65, 1965–66 and 1966–67 in any province that imposed its own succession duties. To a province that did not wish to re-enter the succession duty field the federal government agreed to pay 50 per cent of the federal estate tax revenue in 1962–63 and 1963–64 and 75 per cent in 1964–65, 1965–66 and 1966–67. During 1962–63, Quebec and Ontario collected their own succession duties while the other provinces received a payment in lieu of imposing duties. Starting in 1963–64 British Columbia joined Ontario and Quebec in imposing its own succession duties. When the abatement was raised to 75 per cent in 1964–65, British Columbia increased its rates accordingly but Quebec and Ontario accepted in lieu of the extra abatement a payment equivalent to 25 per cent of the federal estate tax in those provinces.

Tax on personal income

In 1965–66 the largest source of government revenue is again the personal income tax. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $2,150 million or 28 per cent of all budgetary revenue. The increase of $47 million or 2 per cent over 1964–65 collections is due principally to the higher level of personal incomes during the year partly offset by higher provincial abatements and a federal tax reduction effective July 1, 1965. In addition to the federal revenue, $357 million was allocated to the provincial tax collection agreements account under the terms of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. In 1964–65 federal revenue from this source was $2,103 million and in addition $369 million was allocated to the provincial tax collection agreements account.

The tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act and credited to the old age security fund is $496 million compared with $432 million in 1964–65.

Corporation income tax

The corporation income tax is the second largest source of government revenue. The yield (excluding the old age security tax) is $1,610 million or 21 per cent of all budgetary revenue. The increase of $86 million or 5 per cent over the 1964–65 collections is due mainly to the continuous growth of corporation profits in recent years. In addition to the federal revenue, $118 million was allocated to the provincial tax collection agreements account under terms of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. In 1964–65 federal revenue from this source was $1,524 million and in addition $135 million was allocated to the provincial tax collection agreements account.

The tax on incomes of corporations levied under the Old Age Security Act and credited to the old age security fund is $151 million compared with $145 million in 1964–65.

Taxes on dividends, interest, etc., going abroad

Revenue in this category is derived from taxes withheld on payments of dividends, interest, rents, royalties, alimony and income from estates and trusts paid to non-residents. Collections for 1965–66 are $170 million, an increase of $26 million or 18 per cent over the 1964–65 total.

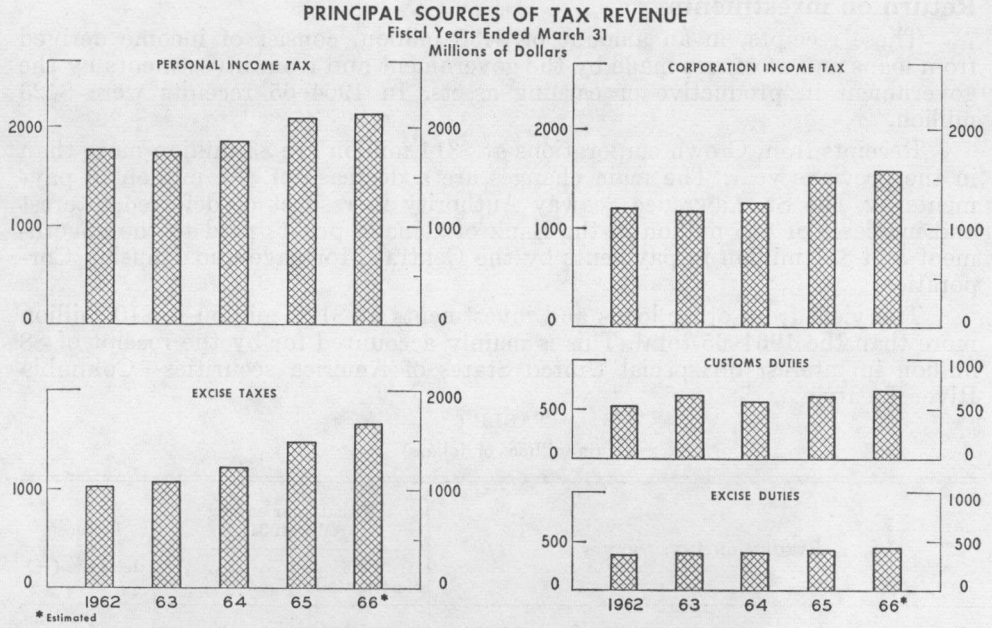
Excise taxes

Revenue under this heading is from the general sales tax and other excise taxes.

From a revenue standpoint the general sales tax is the most important tax levied under the Excise Tax Act. Receipts (excluding the old age security tax) are $1,385 million or 15 per cent higher than in the previous fiscal year.

The tax on sales levied under the Old Age Security Act and credited to the old age security fund is $516 million.

The yield from excise taxes levied under the Excise Tax Act, other than the general sales tax, at $295 million is $26 million more than in 1964–65.



Customs import duties

Receipts from this source are $676 million compared with $622 million in 1964–65. The increase of $54 million or 9 per cent reflects the greater volume and value of imports during 1965–66.

Excise duties

Excise duties are levied on alcoholic beverages (other than wines) and tobacco products. (Additional taxes on tobacco products are levied under the Excise Tax Act.) Net receipts in 1965–66 are $439 million compared with $411 million in 1964–65.

Gross receipts of $261 million from duties on alcoholic beverages ($155 million in respect of spirits and $106 million in respect of beer) and $184 million from duties on tobacco products have been reduced by refunds and drawbacks of $6 million. In 1964–65 gross receipts of $240 million from duties on alcoholic beverages ($135 million in respect of spirits and $105 million in respect of beer) and $177 million from duties on tobacco products were reduced by refunds and drawbacks of $6 million.

Estate tax

Revenue in this category is derived under the Estate Tax Act. Net receipts of $107 million are $18 million more than in 1964–65.

Other taxes

Revenue under this heading during the fiscal year is $200 thousand, the same as in the previous year.

NON-TAX REVENUE

Non-tax revenue is $841 million, an increase of $28 million over the 1964–65 total.

TABLE 5

(in millions of dollars)

Non-Tax Revenue	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965	Amount	Per cent
Return on investments	436.0	422.7	13.3	3.1
Post office—net postal revenue	235.0	230.4	4.6	2.0
Refunds of previous years' expenditure	16.0	20.5	−4.5	−22.0
Services and service fees	64.0	60.9	3.1	5.1
Proceeds from sales	25.0	24.3	0.7	2.9
Privileges, licences and permits	39.0	30.8	8.2	26.6
Bullion and coinage	12.0	12.3	−0.3	−2.4
Other	14.0	11.6	2.4	17.1
	841.0	813.5	27.5	3.4

The Budget—Appendix

Return on investments

These receipts, in an amount of $436 million, consist of income derived from loans and advances made by the government and from investments by the government in productive or earning assets. In 1964–65 receipts were $423 million.

Receipts from Crown corporations at $314 million are $3 million more than in the previous year. The main changes are a decrease of $34 million in payments by The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority in respect of deferred interest and increases of $15 million in the Bank of Canada profits paid to the government and $11 million in payments by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The yield from other loans and investments at $122 million is $10 million more than the 1964–65 total. This is mainly accounted for by the receipt of $8 million in interest on special United States of America securities—Columbia River Treaty.

TABLE 6

(in millions of dollars)

Return on Investments	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations—
Bank of Canada—profits	143.1	128.3	14.8
Canadian National Railways	11.3	11.6	−0.3
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation	2.6	2.7	−0.1
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	104.4	93.3	11.1
Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited	1.5	1.5
Export Credits Insurance Corporation	5.6	3.0	2.6
Farm Credit Corporation	21.0	13.9	7.1
National Capital Commission	3.3	2.9	0.4
National Harbours Board	4.1	3.4	0.7
Northern Canada Power Commission	2.5	2.1	0.4
Polymer Corporation Limited	4.0	4.0
The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	9.4	43.1	−33.7
Miscellaneous	1.3	1.4	−0.1
	314.1	311.2	2.9
Other loans and investments—
United Kingdom	1.9	1.2	0.7
Other national governments	5.0	5.2	−0.2
Provincial governments	1.0	1.1	−0.1
Exchange fund account	62.8	63.6	−0.8
Interest-bearing deposits with chartered banks	20.5	19.6	0.9
Profit on bond exchange		0.9	−0.9
Securities investment account	2.0	5.6	−3.6
Sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured debt	0.3		0.3
Soldier and general land settlement loans and veterans land act advances	9.6	8.3	1.3
Special United States of America securities—Columbia River Treaty	9.2	1.1	8.1
Unemployment Insurance Commission		0.2	−0.2
Miscellaneous	9.6	4.7	4.9
	121.9	111.5	10.4
	436.0	422.7	13.3

Post office revenue

Gross post office receipts are $272 million but authorized disbursements from revenue for salaries and rent allowances, other allowances and commissions at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through and delivered in foreign countries, etc. in the amount of $37 million, brings net revenue to $235 million. In the previous fiscal year gross revenue was $264 million, authorized disbursements were $33 million and net revenue was $231 million.

TABLE 7
(in millions of dollars)

Post Office Revenue	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Postage—
In Canada	254.8	246.6	8.2
From foreign countries	4.0	4.3	−0.3
Commission on money orders	9.2	9.0	0.2
Rental of post office boxes	2.4	2.2	0.2
Other	1.6	1.6
	272.0	263.7	8.3
Less—
Salaries and allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices	−32.5	−28.8	−3.7
Transit charges on foreign correspondence	−1.3	−1.3
Other	−3.2	−3.2
	−37.0	−33.3	−3.7
	235.0	230.4	4.6

Net costs of operating the Post Office Department during 1965–66 (excluding the $37 million charged to revenue) of $239 million exceeds net revenue by $4 million. However, in making this comparison, it should be noted that the total shown for post office revenue does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for certain miscellaneous services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Refunds of previous years' expenditure

Refunds in 1965–66 of expenditures made in prior years are $16 million, a decrease of $5 million from the comparable total for 1964–65.

The Department of National Defence received $7 million of which $4 million was due to contract re-negotiations and the Department of Veterans Affairs received $3 million in refunds of veterans pensions, allowances and re-establishment credits.

Services and service fees

Revenue at $64 million during 1965–66 is $3 million more than in the previous fiscal year.

The Department of Transport received $20 million including aircraft landing fees of $11 million, marine steamers earnings of $3 million, harbour dues and wharfage of $2 million and air-ground radio service fees of $1 million; the Royal Canadian Mounted Police received $16 million for police services mainly to provinces and municipalities; the Department of Agriculture received $9 million of which $6 million is for services in connection with the inspection, weighing, storage and elevation of grain and $2 million for race track supervision; the Department of Finance received $5 million derived from the issuance of coin sets by the Royal Canadian Mint; the Department of National Health and Welfare received $5 million including a $3 million reimbursement by the provinces for treatment of Indians in federal government hospitals; and the Department of Trade and Commerce received $3 million, mainly from weights and measures and electricity and gas inspection fees.

Proceeds from sales

Receipts of $25 million from this source are $1 million more than the total for 1964–65.

The Department of Defence Production received $10 million mainly from the sale of surplus Crown assets and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation received $5 million from the sales of properties.

Privileges, licences and permits

Revenue from this category totals $39 million for 1965–66, $8 million more than receipts of $31 million in 1964–65.

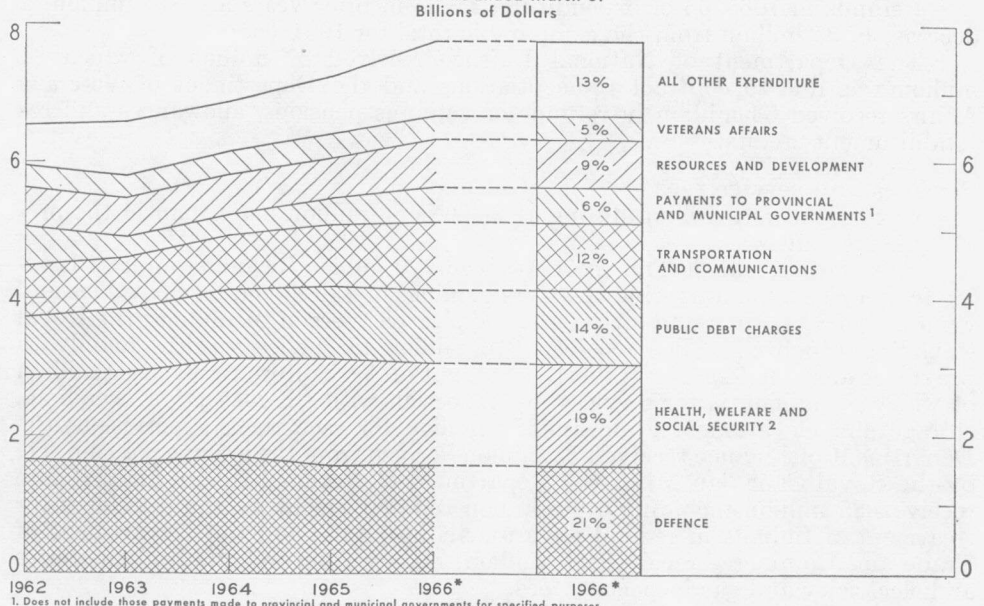
The Department of Transport received $15 million mainly from rentals, concessions and radio licence fees; the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources received $10 million of which $6 million was in respect of oil and gas and $1 million from transient motor vehicle licences; and the Department of Public Works received $4 million for rental of public buildings and sites.

Bullion and coinage

Revenue of $12 million derived from the operations of the Royal Canadian Mint consists mainly of a net gain on coinage. Small amounts are also obtained from gold refining charges, handling charges and gain on gold refining. In 1964–65 revenue from this source was $12 million. In addition $5 million has been received from the issuance of coin sets and reported under services and service fees.

Other non-tax revenue

Other non-tax revenue in the amount of $14 million is $2 million more than in 1964–65.



Expenditure

Budgetary expenditure is estimated at $7,707 million for 1965–66, $489 million or 7 per cent higher than in 1964–65.

BUDGETARY EXPENDITURE, CLASSIFIED BY FUNCTION

Fiscal Years Ended March 31

Billions of Dollars

1. Does not include those payments made to provincial and municipal governments for specified purposes.
2. Does not include pension payments out of the old age security fund not charged to budgetary expenditure in the year in which they were paid.

* Estimated

TABLE 8

STATEMENT OF BUDGETARY EXPENDITURE BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CLASSIFICATIONS
(in millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal year ending March 31				Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)		1965
	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent
Defence expenditure—
National Defence	1,536.7	20.0	1,537.8	21.3	−1.1	−0.1
Defence Production[1]	14.6	0.2	19.7	0.3	−5.1	−25.9
Emergency Measures Organization	8.4	0.1	7.7	0.1	0.7	9.1
Industry[1]	25.0	0.3	20.5	0.3	4.5	22.0
	1,584.7	20.6	1,585.7	22.0	−1.0	−0.1
Non-defence expenditure—
Agriculture	197.6	2.5	165.7	2.3	31.9	19.2
Atlantic Development Board	22.9	0.3	4.3	0.1	18.6	432.6
Atomic Energy	53.6	0.7	46.6	0.6	7.0	15.0
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	99.4	1.3	88.0	1.2	11.4	13.0
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	19.4	0.3	15.0	0.2	4.4	29.3
Citizenship and Immigration	203.7	2.6	179.7	2.5	24.0	13.4
External Affairs	153.7	2.0	131.2	1.8	22.5	17.1
Finance—
Public debt charges	1,085.0	14.1	1,051.3	14.5	33.7	3.2
Fiscal, subsidy and other payments to provinces	473.3	6.1	358.4	5.0	114.9	32.0
Government's contribution to the public service superannuation account	58.0	0.7	55.6	0.8	2.4	4.3
Other	213.7	2.8	157.4	2.2	56.3	35.8
	1,830.0	23.7	1,622.7	22.5	207.3	12.8
Fisheries	35.4	0.5	25.6	0.3	9.8	38.3
Forestry	59.2	0.8	49.8	0.7	9.4	18.9
Justice	11.8	0.2	10.9	0.1	0.9	8.3
Labour	24.4	0.3	24.3	0.4	0.1	4.1
Unemployment Insurance Act administration and government's contribution	98.6	1.3	95.2	1.3	3.4	3.6
	123.0	1.6	119.5	1.7	3.5	2.9
Legislation	14.9	0.2	14.2	0.2	0.7	4.9
Mines and Technical Surveys	108.6	1.4	94.2	1.3	14.4	15.3
National Capital Commission	18.6	0.2	10.4	0.1	8.2	78.8
National Health and Welfare—
Family allowances	552.0	7.2	545.8	7.6	6.2	1.1
Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act	314.0	4.1	433.9	6.0	−119.9	−27.6
Other	312.4	4.0	321.4	4.4	−9.0	−2.8
	1,178.4	15.3	1,301.1	18.0	−122.7	−9.4
National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council	74.1	1.0	56.6	0.8	17.5	30.9
National Revenue	95.2	1.2	86.9	1.2	8.3	9.6
Northern Affairs and National Resources	71.7	0.9	62.6	0.9	9.1	14.5
Indian affairs branch	81.5	1.1	64.8	0.9	16.7	24.1
	153.2	2.0	127.4	1.8	25.8	20.2
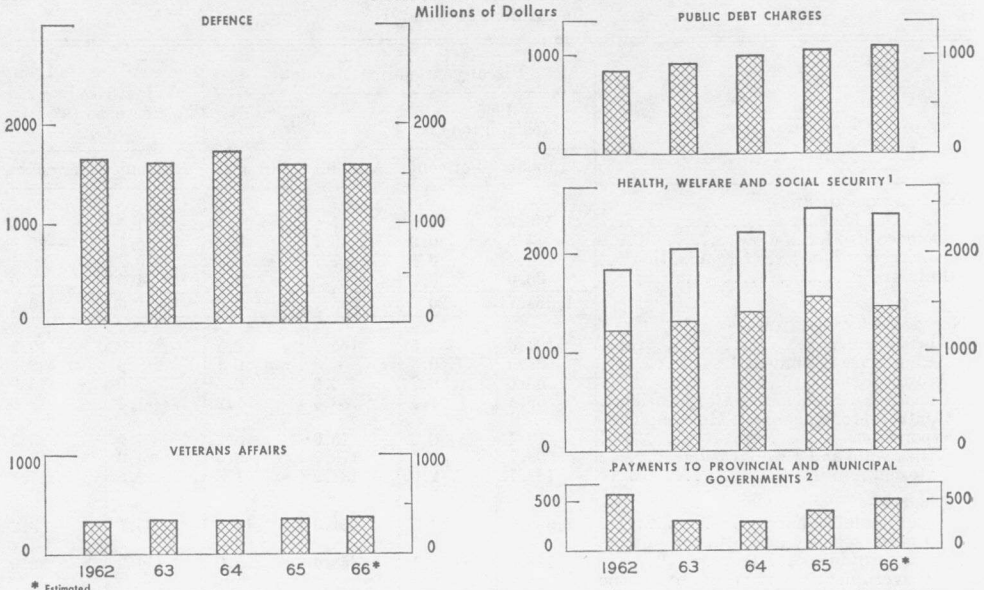
Post Office	239.2	3.1	210.5	2.9	28.7	13.6
Public Works	259.4	3.4	224.0	3.1	35.4	15.8
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	82.0	1.1	76.2	1.1	5.8	7.6
Secretary of State	25.8	0.3	21.9	0.3	3.9	17.8
Office of the Solicitor General	57.3	0.7	39.0	0.5	18.3	46.9
Trade and Commerce	46.8	0.6	54.7	0.8	−7.9	−14.4
Transport	523.8	6.8	466.4	6.5	57.4	12.3
Veterans Affairs	370.0	4.8	351.6	4.9	18.4	5.2
All Other Departments	65.3	0.8	38.5	0.5	26.8	69.6
	6,122.3	79.4	5,632.6	78.0	489.7	8.7
Total budgetary expenditure	7,707.0	100.0	7,218.3	100.0	488.7	6.8



[1] Does not include non-defence expenditure which is included in "All Other Departments".

The Budget—Appendix

PRINCIPAL CLASSES OF BUDGETARY EXPENDITURE

Fiscal Years Ended March 31

Millions of Dollars

* Estimated

1. The unshaded areas of the columns in the chart for health, welfare and social security represent pension payments out of old age security fund not charged to budgetary expenditure in the year in which they were paid.
2. Does not include those payments made to provincial and municipal governments for specific purposes.

DEFENCE EXPENDITURE

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence and the Emergency Measures Organization and defence expenditures of the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry are again the largest category of government expenditure. The total of $1,585 million for 1965-66 is 21 per cent of the aggregate budgetary expenditure of the government for the year and is $1 million less than the total of $1,586 million for 1964–65 when it was 22 per cent of total expenditure.

National Defence

Expenditures of the Department of National Defence are $1,537 million compared with $1,538 million in 1964–65, a decrease of $1 million.

Expenditures for air services are $620 million compared with $656 million in the previous fiscal year, for army services $460 million compared with $434 million, for naval services $266 million compared with $272 million and for inspection services $7 million, approximately the same as in the previous year.

The government's contribution to the Canadian forces superannuation account, of an amount equal to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions of permanent services personnel, is $59 million, the same as in the previous year. A further amount of $17 million, equal to one fifth of the actuarial deficiency arising out of pay increases, has been charged to budgetary expenditure in 1965–66.

Defence research and development costs are $73 million compared with $55 million in 1964–65, an increase of $18 million.

TABLE 9

(in millions of dollars)

Defence Expenditure	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Department of National Defence—
Naval services	266.3	272.5	−6.2
Army services	459.6	433.6	26.0
Air services	620.2	656.0	−35.8
Inspection services	7.3	7.1	0.2
	1,353.4	1,369.2	−15.8
Canadian forces superannuation account—
Government's contribution	58.8	58.8
Amortization of deferred charges	16.8	13.4	3.4
Defence research and development	73.0	54.5	18.5
Mutual aid to NATO countries including contributions towards military costs of NATO	18.6	27.5	−8.9
Defence Construction (1951) Limited	2.1	2.2	−0.1
Administration and general	14.0	12.2	1.8
	1,536.7	1,537.8	−1.1
Department of Industry[1]—
Technological capability	25.0	20.5	4.5
Department of Defence Production[1]—
Canadian Arsenals Limited	1.8	4.6	−2.8
Production capacity and capital assistance	2.4	0.7	1.7
Administration and general	10.4	14.4	−4.0
	14.6	19.7	−5.1
Emergency Measures Organization	8.4	7.7	0.7
	1,584.7	1,585.7	−1.0

[1]See also under "All Other Departments" at the end of this section.

Mutual aid to NATO countries including contributions towards military costs of NATO at $19 million are $9 million less than the total of $28 million in 1964–65.

Emergency Measures Organization

Expenditures of the Emergency Measures Organization amount to $8 million, $1 million more than in the previous fiscal year.

Defence Production

Defence expenditures of the Department of Defence Production including those for Canadian Arsenals Limited total $15 million compared with $20 million in 1964–65.

Industry

Defence expenditures of the Department of Industry are $25 million, an increase of $5 million over the previous year. The increase is due to higher outlays in connection with the government program instituted in 1959–60 of supporting selected defence development programs in order to sustain technological capability in Canada's industry.

The Budget—Appendix

Cash outlays for defence

In addition to these budgetary expenditures for defence, there are other cash outlays which must be considered in arriving at the cost of Canada's defence program.

TABLE 10

(in millions of dollars)

Cash Outlays for Defence	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Budgetary expenditures—
Department of National Defence	1,536.7	1,537.8	−1.1
Department of Defence Production[1]	14.6	19.7	−5.1
Emergency Measures Organization	8.4	7.7	0.7
Department of Industry[1]	25.0	20.5	4.5
	1,584.7	1,585.7	−1.0
Disbursements for—
Defence production revolving fund (net)	−3.4	2.4	−5.8
Replacement of materiel account—sec. 11, National Defence Act (net)	−0.1	0.4	−0.5
	−3.5	2.8	−6.3
Net cash outlay for defence	1,581.2	1,588.5	−7.3

[1]See also under "All Other Departments" at the end of this section.

Section 11 of the National Defence Act provides that materiel, not immediately required for the use of the Canadian defence forces or the Defence Research Board, may be sold to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of such sales are credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of materiel. In 1965–66 credits to, and cash outlays from, the account are each $1 million. The balance in the account at March 31, 1966 is $1 million, approximately the same as at the previous fiscal year-end.

The Department of Defence Production also makes cash disbursements for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment which are not recorded as budgetary expenditures. For purposes of accounting and control, these amounts are charged to the defence production revolving fund and are treated as assets on the books of the government until they are charged to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. During 1965–66 proceeds from sales of $49 million exceeded purchases of $46 million, resulting in a balance in the account as at March 31, 1966 of $27 million.

NON-DEFENCE EXPENDITURE

Agriculture

Expenditures of the Department of Agriculture amount to $198 million, an increase of $32 million over the total for 1964–65.

Outlays for production and marketing are $61 million, an increase of $33 million over 1964–65 expenditures. The increase is due mainly to payments of $21 million to eligible producers for manufacturing milk and cream delivered to plants during the 1964–65 production year in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the Governor in Council (for which there was no comparable amount in 1964–65) and an increase of $11 million in respect of plant and plant products due mainly to payments to compensate certain agricultural producers for crop losses incurred in the 1964 and 1965 crop years.

The operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board is $41 million compared with $57 million in the previous fiscal year, a decrease of $16 million.

Expenditures for land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects total $32 million, an increase of $6 million over the total of $26 million for 1964–65.

Research expenditures are $33 million compared with $29 million in the previous fiscal year.

TABLE 11

(in millions of dollars)

Agriculture	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Production and marketing—
Animal and animal products	19.1	17.7	1.4
Grants, contributions and subsidies to milk producers	21.0		21.0
Plant and plant products	18.8	7.7	11.1
Administration and general	2.4	2.6	−0.2
	61.3	28.0	33.3
Agricultural stabilization board—net operating loss	40.7	57.1	−16.4
Land rehabilitation, irrigation and water storage projects	32.3	26.4	5.9
Research	32.5	28.8	3.7
Health of animals	15.4	13.5	1.9
Farm Credit Corporation—net operating loss	1.2	0.5	0.7
Board of grain commissioners	7.4	6.6	0.8
Agricultural products board—net operating loss	1.7	0.3	1.4
Administration and general	5.1	4.5	0.6
	197.6	165.7	31.9

Atlantic Development Board

Expenditures in respect of the Atlantic Development Board total $23 million compared with $4 million in 1964–65. Progress payments are made from time to time on projects which have been approved by the Board.

TABLE 12

(in millions of dollars)

Atlantic Development Board	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Payments to the Atlantic Development Board	20.0	3.6	16.4
Federal share of the cost of a trunk highway program	2.0		2.0
Administration and operation	0.9	0.7	0.2
	22.9	4.3	18.6

The Budget—Appendix

Atomic Energy

Expenditures by the government in respect of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the Atomic Energy Control Board are $54 million compared with $47 million in 1964–65.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited received $52 million in respect of its research program, of which $40 million is for operation and maintenance and $12 million for construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment. In 1964–65 the company received $45 million of which $35 million was for operation and maintenance and $10 million for construction or acquisition.

The Atomic Energy Control Board received $2 million ($1 million in 1964–65) mainly for grants for researches and investigations.

TABLE 13
(in millions of dollars)

Atomic Energy	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—
Research program—
Current operation and maintenance	39.5	34.9	4.6
Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment	12.3	10.3	2.0
	51.8	45.2	6.6
Atomic Energy Control Board—
Grants for researches and investigations with respect to atomic energy	1.6	1.2	0.4
Administration	0.2	0.2
	1.8	1.4	0.4
	53.6	46.6	7.0

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Payments of $99 million by the government to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and charged to budgetary expenditures are $11 million more than the total of $88 million in 1964–65.

Grants for net operating requirements in respect of the national broadcasting service are $97 million, $11 million more than in 1964–65. There are no grants for capital requirements charged to budgetary expenditure in 1965–66.

In addition loans to the corporation for capital expenditure amount to $14 million in 1965–66.

TABLE 14
(in millions of dollars)

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Grants in respect of the national broadcasting service—
Net operating requirements	97.0	85.9	11.1
International broadcasting service	2.4	2.1	0.3
	99.4	88.0	11.4

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

Budgetary expenditures of the government in respect of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at $19 million are $4 million more than the total of $15 million in 1964–65.

Loans in the amount of $10 million, originally made to municipalities and municipal sewerage corporations, were forgiven by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation pursuant to section 36G of the National Housing Act and written off to budgetary expenditure.

Contributions of $5 million to provinces or municipalities for urban renewal are approximately the same as in 1964–65.

TABLE 15

(in millions of dollars)

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Loans forgiven by the corporation	10.3	7.0	3.3
Contributions to provinces or municipalities for urban renewal	4.9	4.8	0.1
Losses sustained—
Federal-provincial projects	2.0	1.5	0.5
Sale of mortgages	0.7	0.4	0.3
	2.7	1.9	0.8
Housing research and community planning	1.5	1.3	0.2
	19.4	15.0	4.4

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration are $204 million in 1965–66 compared with $180 million in the previous year.

Expenditures of the Indian affairs branch, which in previous years were included in the expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, are now included in expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and expenditures in respect of the national employment service, civilian rehabilitation branch, technical and vocational training branch, manpower consultative service and such parts of branches as relate to manpower, which in previous years were included in expenditures of the Department of Labour, are now included in expenditures of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Payments of $119 million to provinces under the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, from which the Province of Quebec has opted out in part, are $22 million more than the 1964–65 total, payments of $40 million under the municipal winter works incentive program to provinces and in respect of Indian bands are $2 million less, outlays of $23 million in respect of the national employment service are $2 million more and immigration expenditures of $15 million are $3 million higher.

The Budget—Appendix

TABLE 16

(in millions of dollars)

Citizenship and Immigration	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act—
Payments to provinces	119.0	97.3	21.7
Administration and general	1.2	0.6	0.6
	120.2	97.9	22.3
Payments to provinces under the municipal winter works incentive program	40.4	42.8	−2.4
National employment service—
Administration	22.3	21.2	1.1
Manpower mobility	0.5		0.5
	22.8	21.2	1.6
Immigration	15.0	12.2	2.8
Citizenship	2.1	1.8	0.3
Administration and general	3.2	3.8	−0.6
	203.7	179.7	24.0

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs are $154 million for 1965–66, $23 million more than the total for the previous year.

TABLE 17

(in millions of dollars)

External Affairs	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
External aid office—
Economic, technical, education and other assistance—
International food aid program	34.3	20.6	13.7
International development assistance	48.5	48.5
Contribution to the Indus Basin development fund	1.7	6.4	−4.7
Other	0.1	5.1	−5.0
Administration	1.1	0.8	0.3
	85.7	81.4	4.3
Representation abroad	19.6	17.0	2.6
Contributions to international multilateral economic and special aid programs	18.1	9.8	8.3
Assessments for membership in the international (including commonwealth) organizations	10.3	9.0	1.3
Other payments to international organizations and programs	5.4	1.3	4.1
Administration and general	14.6	12.7	1.9
	153.7	131.2	22.5

Outlays of $86 million by the external aid office are $4 million more than in 1964–65. There is a decrease of $5 million in contributions to the Indus Basin development fund and an increase of $14 million for the international food aid program.

Costs of representation abroad at $20 million are $3 million higher than in 1964–65, contributions to international multilateral economic and special aid programs at $18 million are $8 million higher, assessments for membership in the international (including commonwealth) organizations at $10 million are $1 million higher and other payments to international organizations and programs at $5 million are $4 million higher.

Finance

Expenditures of the Department of Finance are $1,830 million for 1965–66 $207 million more than the previous year's total due mainly to increases of $115 million in payments to provinces, $34 million in public debt charges and $27 million in respect of forgiveness of indebtedness under the Municipal Development and Loan Act.

TABLE 18

(in millions of dollars)

Finance	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Public debt charges	1,085.0	1,051.3	33.7
Fiscal, subsidy and other payments to provinces	473.3	358.4	114.9
Public service superannuation account—
Government's contribution	58.0	55.6	2.4
Amortization of deferred charges	25.6	10.0	15.6
	83.6	65.6	18.0
Canadian Wheat Board—
Carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves	37.5	34.0	3.5
Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act	0.5	0.6	−0.1
	38.0	34.6	3.4
Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property	36.9	35.7	1.2
Forgiveness of indebtedness—municipal development and loan board	30.0	2.6	27.4
Grants to universities—
Payments to the Canadian Universities Foundation	27.8	27.3	0.5
Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury	25.0	24.9	0.1
Government's share of surgical-medical insurance premiums	9.7	9.3	0.4
Government's contribution as an employer to the unemployment insurance fund	1.1	0.9	0.2
Administration and general	19.6	12.1	7.5
	1,830.0	1,622.7	207.3

Public debt charges

Public debt charges are again the third largest item of budgetary expenditure, exceeded only by those for defence and those for health, welfare and social security.

Public debt charges consist of interest on the public debt, the annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions, the cost of issuing new loans and other costs incurred in servicing the public debt. These charges are $1,085 million for 1965–66 or 14 per cent of all budgetary expenditure compared with $1,051 million or 14 per cent for 1964–65.

Interest on public debt amounts to $1,052 million of which $823 million is in respect of unmatured debt and $229 million in respect of other liabilities. In 1964–65 total interest was $1,012 million of which $803 million was for unmatured debt and $209 million for other liabilities.

The increase of $20 million in interest on unmatured debt reflects higher interest rates and an increase in unmatured debt. The increase in interest on other liabilities is due mainly to increases of $7 million in respect of the public service superannuation account and $11 million in respect of the Canadian forces superannuation account.

Other public debt charges at $33 million are $6 million less than in 1964–65, attributable to lower expenditures in respect of annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions.

TABLE 19
(in millions of dollars)

Interest and Other Public Debt Charges	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Interest on public debt—
Unmatured debt including treasury bills—
Payable in Canada	806.8	786.2	20.6
Payable in New York	16.3	16.4	−0.1
	823.1	802.6	20.5
Other liabilities—
Annuity, insurance and pension accounts	225.7	206.3	19.4
Deposit and trust accounts	3.2	3.2
	228.9	209.5	19.4
Total interest on public debt	1,052.0	1,012.1	39.9
Other public debt charges—
Annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions.	30.2	36.4	−6.2
Cost of issuing new loans	1.8	1.8
Servicing of public debt	1.0	1.0
	33.0	39.2	−6.2
	1,085.0	1,051.3	33.7

When considering the magnitude of these public debt charges and the burden they place upon the public treasury, it must be borne in mind that a substantial portion of the debt is attributable to, or is invested in, productive or earning assets. Therefore, in calculating the net burden of the government's annual interest charges, the income derived from loans, investments and other productive assets must be taken into account. For 1965–66 this income totals $436 million as shown in the non-tax revenue section under the heading "return on investments". This amount deducted from the gross total of $1,052 million for interest as shown in the table leaves a net amount of $616 million compared with a net of $589 million in 1964–65. Measured as a percentage of the net debt the burden of the net annual interest charges is 3.96 per cent in 1965–66 compared with 3.80 per cent in 1964–65.

TABLE 20
(in millions of dollars)

Net Burden of Annual Interest Charges	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Total interest on public debt	1,052.0	1,012.1	39.9
Less return on investments	−436.0	−422.7	−13.3
Net interest cost	616.0	589.4	26.6
Net interest cost as a percentage of net debt	3.96	3.80

Fiscal, subsidy and other payments to provinces

Payments to provinces in the amount of $473 million are $115 million higher than in 1964–65.

However, in addition to the above payments, $475 million in provincial income taxes collected by the federal government on behalf of the provinces has been allocated to the provincial tax collection agreements account under the terms of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. A more detailed explanation of these arrangements is given in the tax revenue section of this Part.

TABLE 21

(in millions of dollars)

Fiscal, Subsidy and Other Payments to Provinces	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Payments under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act (youth allowances)	351.2	321.3	29.9
Payments under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act [1]	86.7		86.7
Statutory subsidies	23.6	23.6
Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts	8.4	9.7	−1.3
Crown Corporations (Provincial Taxes and Fees) Act		3.8	−3.8
Payments under the Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements Act	3.4		3.4
	473.3	358.4	114.9

[1] Payments made to the Province of Quebec in respect of opting out agreements.

A summary of payments, by provinces, during 1965–66 is given in the following table:

TABLE 22

(in millions of dollars)

Fiscal, Subsidy and Other Payments to Provinces	Fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 (estimated)
	Payments under fiscal arrangements	Payments under Interim Arrangements Act	Statutory subsidies	Payments under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act (youth allowances)	Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts	Payments under Federal-Provincial Tax Sharing Arrangements Act	Total
Newfoundland	41.6		1.7		0.2	0.3	43.8
Prince Edward Island	9.7		0.7		0.1	[1]	10.5
Nova Scotia	47.3		2.1		0.8	0.4	50.6
New Brunswick	42.8		1.7		0.1	0.3	44.9
Quebec	[2] 136.1	86.7	4.0	4.9 Cr.	2.2	0.1 Cr.	224.0
Ontario	16.8		4.6		1.1		22.5
Manitoba	27.8		2.1		0.1	0.5	30.5
Saskatchewan	28.7		2.1		[1]	0.4	31.2
Alberta	5.3		2.9		3.1	0.7	12.0
British Columbia			1.7		0.7	0.9	3.3
	356.1	86.7	23.6	4.9 Cr.	8.4	3.4	473.3

[1] Less than $50,000.

[2] The credit of $4.9 million under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act (youth allowances) will be recovered from this amount.

Public service superannuation account

The government's contribution to the public service superannuation account, in an amount equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1964–65, is $58 million in 1965–66. In the previous fiscal year the government's contribution was $56 million.

A further amount of $26 million, equal to one fifth of the actuarial deficiency arising out of pay increases, has been charged to budgetary expenditure in 1965–66.

Canadian Wheat Board

Expenditures of the Canadian Wheat Board which were included under the Department of Trade and Commerce in 1964–65 are now included under the Department of Finance.

Expenditures during 1965–66 amount to $38 million compared with $35 million in the previous year and are mainly in respect of carrying costs of temporary wheat reserves.

Grants to municipalities

Payments to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property amount to $37 million, $1 million more than in 1964–65.

Forgiveness of indebtedness, the municipal development and loan board

Under the Municipal Development and Loan Act, advances are made to the municipal development and loan board to provide financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to augment or accelerate capital works programs. The act also provides that the board shall, under certain conditions, forgive payment by the municipality of 25 per cent of the principal amount of the loan. During 1965–66 charges amount to $30 million compared with $3 million in the previous year.

Fisheries

Expenditures of the Department of Fisheries are $35 million in 1965–66, an increase of $10 million over the 1964–65 total, due mainly to outlays in respect of fisheries management and development.

TABLE 23
(in millions of dollars)

Fisheries	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Fisheries management and development—
Conservation and development service	11.3	8.3	3.0
Grants, contributions and subsidies	4.0	1.5	2.5
Industrial development service	3.1	1.3	1.8
Inspection service	2.6	2.3	0.3
Canadian share of the expenses of international commissions	1.5	1.2	0.3
Other	2.3	2.3
	24.8	16.9	7.9
Fisheries Research Board of Canada	9.2	7.4	1.8
Administration and general	1.4	1.3	0.1
	35.4	25.6	9.8

Forestry

Expenditures of the Department of Forestry amount to $59 million compared with $50 million in the previous fiscal year.

The increase is due mainly to higher expenditures in respect of programs for rural development under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act and the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act of $16 million compared with $10 million in 1964–65.

Freight assistance and grain storage costs on western feed grains at $21 million are $2 million higher than in 1964–65, outlays for forestry at $11 million are $1 million higher and contributions to provinces for assistance in forest inventory, reforestation, forest fire protection, forest stand improvement and forest access road construction at $8 million are $1 million less.

TABLE 24
(in millions of dollars)

Forestry	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Freight assistance and grain storage costs on western feed grains	21.0	19.1	1.9
Rural development—
Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act	15.0	9.4	5.6
Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act	1.0	0.6	0.4
	16.0	10.0	6.0
Forestry—
Forest research	8.1	6.8	1.3
Forest products research	1.6	1.7	−0.1
Administration	1.2	1.0	0.2
	10.9	9.5	1.4
Contributions to the provinces—
Assistance in forest inventory, reforestation, forest fire protection and forest stand improvement	5.9	5.7	0.2
Forest access road construction	2.0	2.8	−0.8
	7.9	8.5	−0.6
Administration and general	3.4	2.7	0.7
	59.2	49.8	9.4

Justice

Expenditures of the Department of Justice at $12 million, of which $9 million is for judges' salaries, travelling allowances and pensions and $3 million for administration, are $1 million more than in 1964–65.

TABLE 25
(in millions of dollars)

Justice	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Legal and other services—
Judges' salaries, travelling allowances and pensions	9.0	8.7	0.3
Administration and general	2.8	2.2	0.6
	11.8	10.9	0.9

The Budget—Appendix

Expenditures for correctional services, which previously were shown under the Department of Justice, are now shown under the Office of the Solicitor General and expenditures for the patent division, copyright and industrial designs division and the trade marks office are now shown under Privy Council.

Labour

Expenditures of the Department of Labour, including the Unemployment Insurance Commission, total $123 million compared with $119 million in 1964–65.

Expenditures in respect of the national employment service, civilian rehabilitation branch, technical and vocational training branch, manpower consultative service and such parts of branches as relate to manpower, which in previous years were shown under the Department of Labour, are now shown under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

TABLE 26
(in millions of dollars)

Labour	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Unemployment Insurance Commission—
Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act	33.1	33.1
Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund	65.5	62.1	3.4
	98.6	95.2	3.4
Winter house building program	14.4	16.3	−1.9
Payments under the Government Employees Compensation Act	2.9	2.5	0.4
Administration and general	7.1	5.5	1.6
	123.0	119.5	3.5

Unemployment Insurance Commission

Expenditures for the commission amount to $99 million including the government's contribution of $65 million to the fund. In 1964–65 expenditures were $95 million of which $62 million was the government's contribution to the fund.

Unemployment benefit payments are not charged to budgetary expenditure but are paid from the fund which is financed by equal contributions from employees and employers, by interest earned on investments and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one fifth of the combined employee-employer contributions. Further information about the fund is given under the liability category "annuity, insurance and pension accounts".

Winter house building program

Under the winter house building program payments are made, in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, of $500 per dwelling unit substantially built during the periods November 15, 1964 to March 31, 1965 and November 15, 1965 to April 15, 1966. In 1965–66 payments amount to $14 million compared with $16 million in the previous fiscal year.

Legislation

Costs of Legislation are $15 million compared with $14 million in 1964–65.

TABLE 27
(in millions of dollars)

Legislation	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
House of Commons	11.7	11.1	0.6
The Senate	2.7	2.7
Library of Parliament	0.5	0.4	0.1
	14.9	14.2	0.7

Mines and Technical Surveys

Expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys are $109 million compared with $94 million in the previous fiscal year.

The increase of $14 million was due mainly to $3 million for subventions in respect of electric power generated from eastern coal, for which there was no comparable expenditure in 1964–65, and to increases of $3 million for marine surveys and research and $3 million for research in astronomy and geophysics.

Expenditures of the water resources branch and the resource development branch, but excluding those parts of the said branches concerned with the administration of resources on Indian lands, contributions to provinces to assist in the development of roads leading to resources and expenditures made under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which previously were shown under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and expenditures of the National Energy Board, which previously were shown under the Department of Trade and Commerce, are now shown under the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

TABLE 28
(in millions of dollars)

Mines and Technical Surveys	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Dominion coal board	23.4	23.2	0.2
Emergency gold mining assistance	14.3	15.7	−1.4
Water resources	13.7	12.1	1.6
Marine surveys and research	12.2	9.0	3.2
Field and air surveys, mapping and aeronautical charting	8.3	6.9	1.4
Geological research	7.9	6.9	1.0
Mining and metallurgical investigations and research	7.0	5.7	1.3
Contributions to provinces to assist in the development of roads leading to resources	6.7	6.1	0.6
Research in astronomy and geophysics	5.7	2.9	2.8
Subventions pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act in respect of electric power generated from eastern coal	2.5		2.5
Polar continental shelf	1.5	1.5
Geographical surveys and research	0.9	0.7	0.2
National energy board	0.9	0.7	0.2
Administration and general	3.6	2.8	0.8
	108.6	94.2	14.4

The Budget—Appendix

National Capital Commission

Expenditures of the National Capital Commission are $18 million compared with $10 million in 1964–65.

Payments into the national capital fund amount to $12 million, an increase of $8 million over the previous year. Outlays for the operation and maintenance of parks, parkways, etc. at $5 million are $1 million more and interest charges of $2 million are $1 million less than in the previous fiscal year.

TABLE 29
(in millions of dollars)

National Capital Commission	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Operation and maintenance	4.6	3.4	1.2
Interest charges (net)	1.9	2.5	−0.6
	6.5	5.9	0.6
Payment to the national capital fund	12.1	4.5	7.6
	18.6	10.4	8.2

National Health and Welfare

Expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare at $1,178 million are $123 million less than the previous year's total of $1,301 million, due mainly to a decrease of $120 million in the government's contribution under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act as a result of the Province of Quebec opting out of this program under a federal-provincial agreement.

TABLE 30
(in millions of dollars)

National Health and Welfare	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Welfare services—
Family allowances	552.0	545.8	6.2
Youth allowances	46.5	26.9	19.6
Old age assistance	27.0	45.0	−18.0
Blind persons allowances	3.6	5.6	−2.0
Disabled persons allowances	14.8	23.4	−8.6
Unemployment assistance	104.6	107.5	−2.9
Fitness and amateur sport	2.0	2.0
Family assistance	2.8	2.1	0.7
Other	7.0	6.3	0.7
	760.3	764.6	−4.3
Health services—
Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act	314.0	433.9	−119.9
Grants to provinces—
General health	32.0	35.2	−3.2
Hospital construction	20.0	21.5	−1.5
Other	7.0	6.8	0.2
	373.0	497.4	−124.4
Medical services	37.5	32.5	5.0
Food and drug services	5.3	4.3	1.0
Administration and general	2.3	2.3
	1,178.4	1,301.1	−122.7

Welfare services account for $760 million, $4 million less than in 1964–65, health services account for $373 million compared with $497 million and medical services account for $37 million compared with $32 million in the previous fiscal year.

Family allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen years of age, resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who must reside in Canada one year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $6 if the child is under 10 years of age and $8 in the age group 10 to 15. Children of immigrants receive family assistance at the same rates during their first year of residence in Canada. As family assistance in 1964–65 was paid from a Department of Citizenship and Immigration vote the 1964–65 figures in the previous table have been adjusted accordingly.

In 1965–66 payments of $552 million account for 7 per cent of all budgetary expenditure compared with $546 million and 8 per cent in 1964–65. The increase of $6 million reflects the increase in the number of children in the eligible age groups.

TABLE 31

(in millions of dollars)

Family Allowances Payments	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Newfoundland	16.5	16.9	−0.4
Nova Scotia	21.6	21.8	−0.2
Prince Edward Island	3.2	3.3	−0.1
New Brunswick	18.9	19.1	−0.2
Quebec	166.1	163.9	2.2
Ontario	182.4	179.0	3.4
Manitoba	25.9	25.9
Saskatchewan	26.9	26.9
Alberta	42.3	42.0	0.3
British Columbia	47.0	45.7	1.3
Northwest and Yukon Territories	1.2	1.3	−0.1
	552.0	545.8	6.2

Youth allowances

Under the Youth Allowances Act which was given Royal Assent on July 16, 1964, payments were effective from September 1964. Under provisions of this act payments of $10 per month are payable in respect of persons resident in Canada, other than those resident in the Province of Quebec, who have attained the age of 16 years and have not attained the age of 18 years who are in full time attendance at a school or university or are by reason of mental or physical infirmity precluded from attending school or university. During 1965–66 payments amount to $47 million compared with $27 million in 1964–65.

TABLE 32
(in millions of dollars)

Youth Allowances Payments	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Newfoundland	1.5	0.9	0.6
Nova Scotia	2.6	1.6	1.0
Prince Edward Island	0.3	0.2	0.1
New Brunswick	2.3	1.4	0.9
Ontario	21.8	12.7	9.1
Manitoba	3.3	1.9	1.4
Saskatchewan	3.4	2.0	1.4
Alberta	4.8	2.8	2.0
British Columbia	5.9	3.4	2.5
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0.6	(1)	0.6
	46.5	26.9	19.6

(1) Less than $50,000.

Old age assistance, disabled persons allowances, blind persons allowances and unemployment assistance

Under the Old Age Assistance Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $75 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who are in the age group 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons who satisfy the residence requirements of the act may receive a pension of $75 per month from the federal government out of the old age security fund provided that no pension is paid in any month before January 1966 in which the person had not attained 70 years of age, the age limit being reduced by one in each subsequent year until 1970.) Similarly, the federal government reimburses the provinces under the Blind Persons Act for allowances of not more than $75 per month to blind persons in need 18 years of age or over by paying 75 per cent of the total payments, and under the Disabled Persons Act by paying 50 per

TABLE 33
(in millions of dollars)

Federal Share of Old Age Assistance, Disabled Persons Allowances, Blind Persons Allowances and Unemployment Assistance	Fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 (estimated)
	Old age assistance	Disabled persons allowances	Blind persons allowances	Unemployment assistance
Newfoundland	2.0	0.8	0.2	4.6
Nova Scotia	2.2	1.5	0.5	1.5
Prince Edward Island	0.4	0.4	0.1	0.2
New Brunswick	2.2	1.3	0.4	1.5
Quebec				24.8
Ontario	10.9	7.3	1.2	28.1
Manitoba	2.2	0.7	0.3	5.5
Saskatchewan	2.2	0.9	0.2	5.4
Alberta	2.4	0.9	0.3	12.2
British Columbia	2.4	1.0	0.4	20.6
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0.1	(1)	(1)	0.2
	27.0	14.8	3.6	104.6

(1) Less than $50,000.

cent of not more than $75 per month for allowances to disabled persons in need 18 years of age or over. In 1965–66 payments for old age assistance amount to $27 million, for disabled persons allowances $15 million and for blind persons allowances $4 million. In 1964–65 payments were $45 million for old age assistance, $23 million for disabled persons allowances and $6 million for blind persons allowances. The decreases are due to the opting out of these programs by the Province of Quebec under federal-provincial agreement.

Under the Unemployment Assistance Act, the Minister may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into an agreement with any province for the payment by Canada to the province of contributions not exceeding 50 per cent of unemployment assistance costs in the province. Contributions in 1965–66 are $105 million compared with $108 million in 1964–65. The decrease is due to the opting out of a portion of this program by the Province of Quebec under federal-provincial agreement.

The following table presents a distribution of these payments to provinces for 1965–66:

Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act

Contributions of $314 million to the provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act are $120 million less than the 1964–65 total of $434 million, due mainly to the Province of Quebec opting out of this program.

TABLE 34
(in millions of dollars)

Government's Contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Newfoundland	9.7	9.6	0.1
Nova Scotia	18.4	15.9	2.5
Prince Edward Island	2.0	2.1	−0.1
New Brunswick	11.6	13.8	−2.2
Quebec		128.2	−128.2
Ontario	159.4	151.5	7.9
Manitoba	20.3	20.9	−0.6
Saskatchewan	23.3	23.5	−0.2
Alberta	32.5	31.4	1.1
British Columbia	36.0	36.1	−0.1
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0.8	0.9	−0.1
	314.0	433.9	−119.9

General health grants and hospital construction grants to provinces

Grants to provinces for general health services total $32 million and for hospital construction $20 million compared with $35 million and $22 million respectively in 1964–65. The decrease is partially due to the opting out of a portion of this program by the Province of Quebec under federal-provincial agreement.

TABLE 35

(in millions of dollars)

General Health Grants and Hospital Construction Grants	Fiscal year ending March 31, 1966 (estimated)
	General health grants	Hospital construction grants	Total
Newfoundland	1.1	0.6	1.7
Nova Scotia	1.8	0.7	2.5
Prince Edward Island	0.4	(1)	0.4
New Brunswick	1.5	0.7	2.2
Quebec	3.3	5.7	9.0
Ontario	12.0	7.0	19.0
Manitoba	2.6	1.0	3.6
Saskatchewan	2.5	1.0	3.5
Alberta	2.9	2.3	5.2
British Columbia	3.7	1.0	4.7
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0.2	(1)	0.2
	32.0	20.0	52.0

(1)Less than $50,000.

National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council

Expenditures of the National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council, are $74 million, an increase of $17 million over the previous year's total.

Outlays of $33 million in respect of scholarships and grants in aid of research account for $10 million of the increase and higher outlays of $32 million for administration account for $5 million.

TABLE 36

(in millions of dollars)

National Research Council, including the Medical Research Council	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Scholarships and grants in aid of research	33.3	23.3	10.0
Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment	5.9	4.5	1.4
Assistance towards research in industry	3.4	2.2	1.2
Administration and general	31.5	26.6	4.9
	74.1	56.6	17.5

National Revenue

Expenditures of the Department of National Revenue amount to $95 million, an increase of $8 million over the 1964–65 total of $87 million.

TABLE 37
(in millions of dollars)

National Revenue	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Customs and excise	48.2	44.2	4.0
Taxation	46.7	42.4	4.3
Income tax appeal board	0.3	0.3
	95.2	86.9	8.3

Northern Affairs and National Resources

Expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, including the Indian affairs branch, are $153 million compared with $127 million in the previous year.

Expenditures of the Indian affairs branch, which in previous years were included under the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, are now included in expenditures of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Expenditures pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act and expenditures in respect of water resources and resource development (excluding those parts concerned with the administration of resources on Indian lands) which in previous years were included under the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources are now included in expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

TABLE 38
(in millions of dollars)

Northern Affairs and National Resources	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Indian affairs—
Education	40.7	35.7	5.0
Social programs	25.0	16.7	8.3
Indian agencies	7.7	6.5	1.2
Economic development	4.5	2.4	2.1
Community employment program	1.4	1.7	−0.3
Administration and general	2.2	1.8	0.4
	81.5	64.8	16.7
Northern administration	40.1	35.8	4.3
National parks	29.5	25.1	4.4
Administration and general	2.1	1.7	0.4
	153.2	127.4	25.8

Indian affairs expenditures are $82 million, an increase of $17 million over the previous year's total. There are increases of $8 million in respect of social programs, $5 million for education, $2 million for economic development and $1 million for Indian agencies.

Outlays of $40 million in respect of northern administration are $4 million more than in 1964–65 and outlays of $29 million in respect of national parks are $4 million more than in the previous fiscal year.

Post Office

Costs of the Post Office Department charged to budgetary expenditure at $239 million are $29 million more than in 1964–65 due mainly to normal staff growth and to salary increases.

TABLE 39
(in millions of dollars)

Post Office	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Charged to budgetary expenditure—
Operations—salaries and other expenses of staff post offices, district offices and railway mail services; and supplies and equipment and other items for revenue post offices	159.5	135.4	24.1
Transportation—movement of mail by land, air and water	72.7	69.1	3.6
Financial services	3.6	3.4	0.2
Administration and general	3.4	2.6	0.8
	239.2	210.5	28.7
Charged to revenue—
Operations—salaries of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices, commissions paid at sub-offices and other disbursements	37.0	33.3	3.7
	276.2	243.8	32.4

Costs of operations at $160 million are $24 million more than in the previous fiscal year and costs of movement of mail at $73 million are $4 million more.

Remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices and certain other authorized disbursements are paid from revenue. These payments at $37 million ($4 million more than in 1964–65) bring gross post office expenditures to $276 million in 1965–66.

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works amount to $259 million, $35 million more than in 1964–65.

Accommodation services

Expenditures for these services are $109 million, $21 million higher than the 1964–65 total.

Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds at $72 million are $17 million higher and construction or acquisition of buildings, etc. at $35 million are $5 million higher than in 1964–65.

Harbours and rivers engineering services

Expenditures for these services total $36 million, $6 million higher than in 1964–65 due mainly to an increase in outlays for construction or acquisition, etc. of harbour and river works which are $28 million compared with $23 million in the previous fiscal year.

Roads, bridges and other engineering services

Expenditures for these services total $89 million, $2 million higher than in 1964–65. Contributions of $80 million to provinces in respect of the trans-Canada highway are $4 million higher.

TABLE 40
(in millions of dollars)

Public Works	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Accommodation services—
Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds—
Ottawa and Hull	27.8	20.2	7.6
Other than Ottawa and Hull	41.3	33.2	8.1
Office furniture and furnishings	3.2	2.3	0.9
Acquisition of equipment and furnishings other than office furnishings	1.3	1.5	−0.2
Construction, acquisition, major repairs, etc. of public buildings—
Ottawa	17.5	15.1	2.4
Other than Ottawa	17.6	15.1	2.5
	108.7	87.4	21.3
Harbours and rivers engineering services—
Operation and maintenance	7.9	7.0	0.9
Construction or acquisition of equipment	0.5	0.7	−0.2
Construction, acquisition, major repairs, etc. of harbour and river works	27.5	22.5	5.0
Dry dock subsidies	0.2	0.1	0.1
	36.1	30.3	5.8
Roads, bridges and other engineering services—
Operation and maintenance	5.2	9.0	−3.8
Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, roads, bridges and other engineering works	3.9	2.4	1.5
Trans-Canada highway—
Contributions to provinces under terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act	80.0	76.1	3.9
Construction through national parks	0.3	0.2	0.1
	89.4	87.7	1.7
Testing laboratories	1.1	1.0	0.1
Federal share of an ice control structure	8.9	5.8	3.1
Administration and general	15.2	11.8	3.4
	259.4	224.0	35.4

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are $82 million compared with $76 million in the previous fiscal year. Receipts of $16 million, arising

TABLE 41
(in millions of dollars)

Royal Canadian Mounted Police	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Land, air and training divisions	59.4	55.9	3.5
Headquarters administration and national police services	10.7	9.8	0.9
Pensions and other benefits—
Pensions	4.5	4.1	0.4
Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account—
Government's contribution	3.9	3.2	0.7
Amortization of deferred charges	1.1	1.0	0.1
Other	0.2	0.2
	9.7	8.5	1.2
Marine services	2.2	2.0	0.2
	82.0	76.2	5.8

out of expenditures for policing certain provinces, territories and municipalities, are credited to revenue. In 1964–65 receipts of $16 million were credited to revenue.

Secretary of State

Expenditures of the Department of the Secretary of State amount to $26 million, an increase of $4 million over the previous fiscal year's total.

Centennial Commission expenditures of $20 million are $13 million higher than in 1964–65 due mainly to increases of $7 million in outlays for programs and projects of national significance and $5 million in payments to the centennial of confederation fund to enable grants to be made to the provinces for local projects of a lasting nature.

Outlays of $3 million in respect of the translation bureau and $2 million in respect of the National Museum of Canada are both slightly higher than in 1964–65.

There is no comparable expenditure in 1965–66 to the special grant of $10 million made in 1964–65 under the Canada Council Act.

TABLE 42
(in millions of dollars)

Secretary of State	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Centennial Commission—
Programs and projects of national significance	9.0	2.5	6.5
Payment to the centennial of confederation fund	9.0	4.0	5.0
General administration	2.0	0.8	1.2
	20.0	7.3	12.7
Translation Bureau	2.8	2.2	0.6
National Museum of Canada	1.8	1.4	0.4
Special grants—Canada Council Act		10.0	−10.0
Administration and general	1.2	1.0	0.2
	25.8	21.9	3.9

Office of the Solicitor General

Expenditures of the Office of the Solicitor General amount to $57 million compared with $39 million in the previous fiscal year.

The increase of $18 million is due mainly to increases of $15 million in outlays for construction or acquisition of buildings, etc. and $3 million in outlays for operation and maintenance of penitentiaries.

Correctional services expenditures which in previous years were shown under the Department of Justice are now shown under the Office of the Solicitor General

TABLE 43

(in millions of dollars)

Office of the Solicitor General	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Correctional services—
Administration of the Canadian penitentiaries service	0.9	0.8	0.1
Operation and maintenance of penitentiaries	27.1	23.8	3.3
Parole Act administration	0.8	0.8
Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment	28.4	13.6	14.8
Other	0.1		0.1
	57.3	39.0	18.3

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures of the Department of Trade and Commerce at $47 million are $8 million less than in 1964–65.

Outlays of $5 million in respect of the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition compare with $20 million in 1964–65. The decrease is due mainly to the fact that no payment is being made to the corporation in 1965–66 comparable to the payment of $19 million in 1964–65, pursuant to sec. 11 of the Canadian Corporation for the World Exhibition Act, partly offset by an increase of of $4 million for Canadian government participation in the exhibition.

Outlays of $16 million in respect of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics are $2 million higher than in 1964–65 and outlays of $6 million for the Canadian government travel bureau are $2 million higher.

Expenditures of the Canadian Wheat Board and of the National Energy Board, which in previous years were included in expenditures of the Department of Trade and Commerce are now included in expenditures of the Departments of Finance and Mines and Technical Surveys, respectively.

TABLE 44

(in millions of dollars)

Trade and Commerce	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Dominion Bureau of Statistics	15.8	13.5	2.3
Trade commissioner service	7.6	6.8	0.8
Canadian government travel bureau	6.4	4.9	1.5
Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition—
Canadian government participation	5.0	0.8	4.2
Payment to the corporation		18.6	−18.6
Acquisition of land		0.1	−0.1
	5.0	19.5	−14.5
Standards branch	3.6	3.3	0.3
Administration and general	8.4	6.7	1.7
	46.8	54.7	−7.9

The Budget—Appendix

Transport

Expenditures of the Department of Transport are $524 million compared with $466 million in 1964–65.

TABLE 45

(in millions of dollars)

Transport	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Air services—
Airports and other ground services	50.0	46.8	3.2
Radio aids to air and marine navigation	40.2	36.5	3.7
Meteorological services	22.0	21.8	0.2
Air traffic control	10.0	9.4	0.6
Control of civil aviation	6.3	6.7	−0.4
Radio Act and Regulations	4.1	3.5	0.6
Administration and general	8.6	6.7	1.9
	141.2	131.4	9.8
Railways and steamships—
Construction or acquisition	26.6	10.2	16.4
Maritime Freight Rates Act—
Difference between tariffs and normal tolls	15.3	14.7	0.6
Railway to Great Slave Lake	12.0	24.1	−12.1
Victoria Bridge	0.8	0.9	−0.1
Deficits—
Canadian National Railways	33.4	38.7	−5.3
Newfoundland ferry and terminals	12.7	11.1	1.6
Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals	4.1	4.0	0.1
Yarmouth, N.S.—Bar Harbour, Maine, U.S.A. ferry service		0.1	−0.1
Other	1.0	0.2	0.8
	105.9	104.0	1.9
Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—
Payments to the railways for the maintenance of the rates of freight traffic	95.2	68.7	26.5
Maintenance of trackage	7.0	7.0
Contributions to the railway grade crossing fund	14.0	5.1	8.9
Administration and general	1.6	1.5	0.1
	117.8	82.3	35.5
Marine services—
Canadian coast guard	50.0	38.0	12.0
Aids to navigation	14.9	10.9	4.0
Canals	9.6	7.0	2.6
Marine hydraulics including the St. Lawrence and Saguenay Rivers ship channels	6.1	3.0	3.1
Marine regulations	5.0	4.4	0.6
Administration and general	1.6	1.2	0.4
	87.2	64.5	22.7
Canadian Maritime Commission	49.8	40.6	9.2
Canals and works entrusted to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority—
Welland Canal deficit 1965	8.3		8.3
Welland Canal deficit 1959–64		27.1	−27.1
Other operating deficit and capital requirements	2.2	1.9	0.3
	10.5	29.0	−18.5
National Harbours Board	5.1	7.6	−2.5
Administration and general	6.3	7.0	−0.7
	523.8	466.4	57.4

Air services

Outlays for air services at $141 million are $10 million higher than the 1964–65 total due mainly to an increase of $3 million in respect of airports and other ground services and an increase of $4 million for radio aids to air and marine navigation.

Railways and steamships

Expenditures for these services are $106 million compared with $104 million in 1964–65.

Costs of construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land, etc. are $27 million, $16 million higher than 1964–65 costs due mainly to improvements of the facilities, terminals, ships, etc., in the Port-aux-Basques—North Sydney ferry service; payments under the Maritime Freight Rates Act are $15 million, $1 million higher; and the subsidy of $12 million in respect of a railway to Great Slave Lake is $12 million less.

The charge of $33 million to budgetary expenditure in 1965–66 to cover the 1965 operating deficit of the Canadian National Railways is $5 million less than the charge of $38 million in 1964–65 to cover the railway's 1964 operating deficit.

Board of Transport Commissioners

Expenditures in respect of the board amount to $118 million compared with $82 million in 1964–65.

Included are $95 million in payments to the railways for the maintenance of the rates of freight traffic compared with $69 million in 1964–65, $7 million in each year in payments to the railways for maintenance of trackage in northern Ontario and $14 million in contributions to the railway grade crossing fund compared with $5 million in the previous year.

Marine services

Expenditures of $87 million for marine services are $23 million more than in 1964–65. Included in these expenditures are $50 million in respect of the Canadian coast guard, $12 million higher than in 1964–65 and $15 million in respect of aids to navigation, $4 million more than in the previous fiscal year. The aggregate increase is due to increased outlays for capital works.

Canadian Maritime Commission

Expenditures of the commission in the amount of $50 million are $9 million higher than in 1964–65 due mainly to increased outlays in respect of capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels.

Canals and works entrusted to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority

Expenditures of $11 million are $18 million less than in 1964–65, due mainly to the fact that the 1964–65 total included a payment of $27 million covering the accumulated Welland Canal deficit for 1959–64 whereas the 1965–66 total includes a payment of $8 million for the Welland Canal deficit for 1965.

National Harbours Board

Non-active advances to the board total $5 million and include $4 million to cover expenditures in connection with the 1967 World Exhibition. In 1964–65 non-active advances totalled $8 million and included $6 million to cover expenditures in connection with the 1967 World Exhibition.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of Veterans Affairs are $370 million, an increase of $18 million over the 1964–65 total.

War veterans allowances and civilian allowances at $100 million are $7 million higher, pensions for disability and death at $186 million are $5 million higher and costs of $50 million for treatment services are $4 million higher than in 1964–65.

TABLE 46
(in millions of dollars)

Veterans Affairs	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Pensions—
Disability and death	185.5	180.3	5.2
Administration and general	2.9	2.8	0.1
	188.4	183.1	5.3
Welfare services, allowances and other benefits—
War veterans allowances and civilian allowances	100.2	92.8	7.4
Assistance under provisions of the Assistance Fund (War Veterans Allowances) Regulations	5.8	4.0	1.8
Veterans welfare services	4.0	3.8	0.2
Treatment and related allowances	2.7	2.7
Administration and general	3.4	3.5	−0.1
	116.1	106.8	9.3
Treatment services	50.1	46.4	3.7
Soldier settlement and veterans land act—
Provision for reserve for conditional benefits	3.0	3.1	−0.1
Administration and general	4.6	4.5	0.1
	7.6	7.6
Administration and general	7.8	7.7	0.1
	370.0	351.6	18.4

All Other Departments

Expenditures of the departments not dealt with individually amount to $65 million, an increase of $27 million over the total for 1964–65.

Expenditures under the Combines Investigation Act in respect of the restrictive trade practices commission and the office of investigation and research and expenditures of the patent division, copyright and industrial designs division and the trade marks office, which were included previously under expenditures of the Department of Justice, are now included in expenditures of the Privy Council.

The main changes are an increase of $13 million in respect of the Office of the Chief Electoral Officer due to the general election in 1965–66 and an increase of $6 million in non-defence expenditures of the Department of Defence Production as a result of three new services (supply, purchasing and repair) coming into operation.

TABLE 47
(in millions of dollars)

All Other Departments	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Auditor General's Office	1.7	1.6	0.1
Board of Broadcast Governors	0.4	0.4
Office of the Chief Electoral Officer	13.1	0.6	12.5
Civil Service Commission	8.2	6.2	2.0
Defence Production[1]	[2]9.0	3.3	5.7
Economic Council	1.1	0.8	0.3
Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors	0.7	0.6	0.1
Industry[1]	6.0	3.3	2.7
Insurance	1.5	1.4	0.1
National Film Board	6.9	6.4	0.5
National Gallery of Canada	1.9	1.3	0.6
Privy Council	9.1	8.2	0.9
Public Archives and National Library	1.9	1.5	0.4
Public Printing and Stationery	3.0	2.7	0.3
Office of the Representation Commissioner	0.8	0.2	0.6
	65.3	38.5	26.8

[1] See also under defence expenditure at the beginning of this section.

[2] The Canadian government supply service, Canadian government purchasing service and the Canadian government repair service came into operation substantially in 1965–66 and are the cause of the large increase in non-defence expenditure.

The Budget—Appendix

ASSET AND LIABILITY ACCOUNTS

The estimated assets and liabilities of the Government of Canada as at March 31, 1966, the comparable balances at March 31, 1965 and the changes in each category during 1965–66, are shown in condensed form in the following table.

TABLE 48

SUMMARY OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES OF CANADA

(in millions of dollars)

	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
LIABILITIES
Current and demand liabilities	1,467.2	1,432.6	34.6
Deposit and trust accounts	394.6	272.3	122.3
Annuity, insurance and pension accounts	6,381.2	5,675.9	705.3
Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts	87.6	95.7	−8.1
Deferred credits	136.1	113.2	22.9
Suspense accounts	13.8	5.5	8.3
Unmatured debt	19,136.6	18,978.2	158.4
Total liabilities	27,617.1	26,573.4	1,043.7
ASSETS
Current assets	1,291.1	1,302.0	−10.9
Advances to the exchange fund account	2,672.0	2,621.0	51.0
Investments in special United States of America securities—
Columbia River Treaty	187.2	219.5	−32.3
Sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured debt		5.4	−5.4
Canada pension plan investment account	34.0		34.0
Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations	5,535.2	4,914.5	620.7
Loans to national governments	1,343.8	1,288.4	55.4
Other loans and investments	1,036.9	908.1	128.8
Securities held in trust	171.9	53.1	118.8
Deferred charges—
Unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies—
Canadian forces superannuation account	54.0	53.8	0.2
Public service superannuation account	92.5	39.9	52.6
Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account	3.8	4.2	−0.4
Unamortized loan flotation costs	107.9	110.7	−2.8
	258.2	208.6	49.6
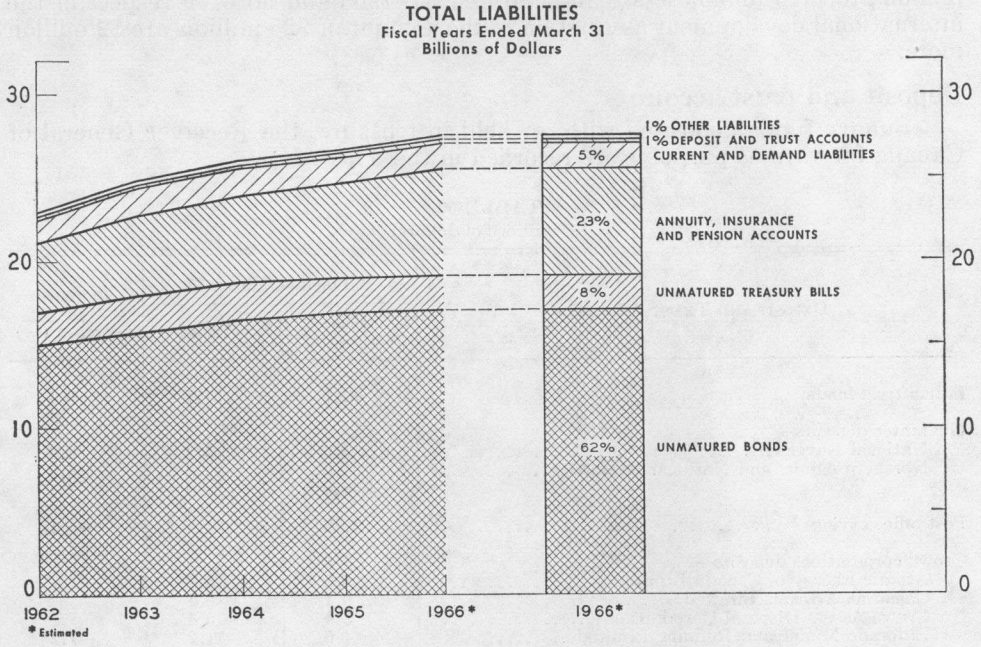
Capital assets	(1)	(1)
Inactive loans and investments	94.8	94.8
Total recorded assets	12,625.1	11,615.4	1,009.7
Less reserve for losses on realization of assets	−546.4	−546.4
Net recorded assets	12,078.7	11,069.0	1,009.7
Net debt, represented by excess of liabilities over net recorded assets	15,538.4	15,504.4	(2)34.0

(1) Shown at nominal value of $1.



(2) Reflecting the budgetary deficit of $34 million.

SUMMARY

The gross liabilities of the government are estimated at $27,617 million as at March 31, 1966 compared with $26,573 million at March 31, 1965. The main changes are increases of $705 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts, $158 million in unmatured debt and $122 million in deposit and trust accounts.

Net recorded assets are estimated at $12,079 million as at March 31, 1966 compared with $11,069 million at March 31, 1965. The main changes are increases of $621 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations, $144 million in securities held in trust and $129 million in other loans and investments.

The net debt of Canada, or the excess of liabilities over net recorded assets, at $15,538 million is $34 million higher than the net debt of $15,504 million at March 31, 1965, reflecting the 1965–66 budgetary deficit of $34 million.

LIABILITY ACCOUNTS

Current and demand liabilities

These liabilities, which consist of obligations of the government payable currently or on demand, in the amount of $1,467 million are $35 million more than the total at March 31, 1965.

TABLE 49
(in millions of dollars)

CURRENT AND DEMAND LIABILITIES	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Outstanding treasury cheques	352.9	315.1	37.8
Accounts payable	412.9	363.9	49.0
Non-interest-bearing notes payable to—
The international development association	25.0	22.9	2.1
The international monetary fund	235.0	345.0	−110.0
	260.0	367.9	−107.9
Matured debt outstanding	23.5	19.1	4.4
Interest due and outstanding	117.0	102.0	15.0
Interest accrued	267.6	231.2	36.4
Post office—outstanding money orders	26.4	26.6	−0.2
Outstanding letter of credit cheques	6.0	6.0
Other current liabilities	0.9	0.8	0.1
	1,467.2	1,432.6	34.6

The Budget—Appendix

The main changes during 1965–66 are a decrease of $108 million in non-interest-bearing notes payable on demand and increases of $38 million in outstanding treasury cheques, $49 million in accounts payable and $36 million in accrued interest.

Non-interest-bearing notes represent those portions of Canada's equities in the capital of certain international agencies which are not covered by cash or gold. Notes in respect of the international monetary fund in the amount of $235 million are $110 million less than at March 31, 1965 and notes in respect of the international development association in the amount of $25 million are $2 million more.

Deposit and trust accounts

Sundry funds deposited with, or held in trust by, the Receiver General of Canada for various purposes are recorded in these accounts.

TABLE 50
(in millions of dollars)

Deposit and Trust Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Indian trust funds	31.5	31.1	0.4
Guarantee deposits—
National Revenue	5.6	5.3	0.3
Northern Affairs and National Resources	30.0	29.2	0.8
	35.6	34.5	1.1
Post office savings bank	22.2	23.3	−1.1
Crown corporations deposits—
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	5.0	5.0
Canadian Arsenals Limited	0.1	0.1
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	0.4	0.4
Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited	4.0	11.2	−7.2
Export Credits Insurance Corporation	14.0	10.0	4.0
	23.5	26.7	−3.2
Canadian Pension Commission—administration trust fund	15.2	14.5	0.7
National Harbours Board—special accounts	18.4	13.5	4.9
Instalment purchase of bonds, public service	12.9	13.2	−0.3
Contractors holdbacks	9.1	8.8	0.3
Contractors securities—sundry departments—
Bonds	2.5	4.2	−1.7
Cash	1.3	1.6	−0.3
Certified cheques	0.2	0.2
	4.0	6.0	−2.0
Army benevolent fund	5.2	5.6	−0.4
Canadian Arsenals Limited pension fund	1.0	1.0
Canadian vessel construction assistance	6.7		6.7
Common school funds—Ontario and Quebec	2.7	2.7
Emergency gold mining assistance—holdbacks	2.2	2.3	−0.1
Immigration guarantee fund	1.5	1.3	0.2
National Research Council—special fund	2.3	2.3
Northwest Territories revenue account	3.0	2.7	0.3
Permanent services deferred pay	3.3	3.4	−0.1
Provincial tax collection agreements account	50.7	48.8	1.9
Royal Canadian Mint—prepayments	0.5	3.1	−2.6
Municipal development and loan board—security deposits	124.4	9.4	115.0
Veterans land act trust account—general	5.4	4.5	0.9
United States of America	1.2	1.6	−0.4
Veterans care trust fund	2.9	2.7	0.2
Other	9.2	9.3	−0.1
	394.6	272.3	122.3

There was a net increase of $122 million during 1965–66 bringing the total to $395 million at March 31, 1966 due mainly to an increase of $115 million in the municipal development and loan board—security deposits account.

Annuity, insurance and pension accounts

Recorded herein are moneys held in the consolidated revenue fund to the credit of various annuity, insurance and pension accounts.

During 1965–66 an increase of $705 million brings the total to $6,381 million as at March 31, 1966. The main changes are increases of $224 million in the public service superannuation account, $163 million in the Canadian forces superannuation account, $215 million in the old age security fund and a new account for the Canada pension plan which has a balance of $80 million at March 31, 1966.

TABLE 51
(in millions of dollars)

Annuity, Insurance and Pension Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Unemployment insurance fund	159.0	58.3	100.7
Less investment in bonds and accrued interest	−147.5	−44.0	−103.5
Uninvested funds on deposit with the government	11.5	14.3	−2.8
Superannuation accounts—
Public service	2,385.8	2,161.8	224.0
Canadian forces	2,191.1	2,028.1	163.0
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	65.7	57.7	8.0
	4,642.6	4,247.6	395.0
Canada pension plan account	80.0		80.0
Government annuities	1,320.5	1,303.2	17.3
Old age security fund	215.0		215.0
Other	111.6	110.8	0.8
	6,381.2	5,675.9	705.3

Unemployment insurance fund

The balance in the fund at March 31, 1966 is $159 million (of which $22 million represents a liability for unredeemed warrants and deposits from employers) and consists of $147 million invested in special government bonds (including accrued interest) and $12 million on deposit with the Receiver General. The balance in the fund at March 31, 1965 was $58 million (of which $18 million represented a liability for unredeemed warrants and deposits from employers) consisting of $44 million invested in special government bonds (including accrued interest) and $14 million on deposit with the government.

Receipts of $395 million during the fiscal year include employee and employer contributions of $325 million, the government's contribution of $65 million and $5 million in interest from investments. As benefit payments total $302 million, receipts exceed payments from the fund by $93 million during 1965–66. Receipts during 1964–65 totalled $375 million and included employee and employer contributions of $311 million, the government's contribution of $62 million and $2 million in income from investments. Benefit payments during 1964–65 totalled $335 million.

The Budget—Appendix

TABLE 52
(in millions of dollars)

Unemployment Insurance Fund	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966 (estimated)
Revenue—
Contributions—
Employee and employer[1]	277.8	286.4	296.6	310.8	325.4
Government[2]	55.5	57.3	59.3	62.1	65.5
Net income from investments	6.2	2.5	1.1	1.8	4.6
Other income	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.1	0.1
	339.6	346.3	357.1	374.8	395.6
Expenditure—
Benefit payments	−454.7	−403.2	−365.7	−335.0	−301.9
Interest on loans	−3.0		−0.2	−0.2
Excess of revenue over expenditure or expenditure over revenue (−)	−118.1	−56.9	−8.8	39.6	93.7
Balance at credit of fund at fiscal year-end	66.6	9.7	0.9	40.5	136.8
Unredeemed benefit warrants and deposits from employers	11.6	16.7	15.9	17.8	22.2
	78.2	26.4	16.8	58.3	159.0
Investment in bonds and accrued interest	−63.6	−11.8		−44.0	−147.5
Balance on deposit with the government	14.6	14.6	16.8	14.3	11.5

[1] Contributions by employees and employers are on an equal basis.

[2] Government contribution is equal to 20 per cent of the combined employee-employer contributions.

Public service superannuation account

The balance of $2,386 million in this account is $224 million higher than the balance at the end of the previous fiscal year.

Receipts of $290 million during the year consist of credits of $78 million in respect of a salary revision made in 1965–66, contributions of $65 million by individuals, a contribution of $58 million by the government, contributions of $3 million by certain Crown corporations and interest of $86 million credited to the account by the government. Contributions by the government and Crown corporations are equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1964–65. Interest at 4 per cent per annum is credited to the account quarterly and is computed quarterly on the outstanding balance at the end of the previous quarter.

Disbursements total $66 million and include $55 million in annuities and $11 million in withdrawals of contributions.

In 1964–65 receipts totalled $369 million and disbursements totalled $64 million.

Canadian forces superannuation account

The balance of $2,191 million at March 31, 1966 reflects an increase of $163 million during the fiscal year.

Receipts of $198 million include $36 million in contributions by personnel, $59 million in regular government contributions, $86 million in interest credited by the government and a credit of $17 million in respect of additional liabilities due to increased rates of pay for certain ranks. Regular government contributions are made at the rate of one and two-thirds times the current and prior service contributions by personnel. Interest at 4 per cent per annum is credited to the account quarterly and is computed quarterly on the outstanding balance at the end of the previous quarter.

Disbursements of $35 million include $25 million in pensions and retiring allowances and $10 million in cash termination allowances and return of contributions.

In 1964–65 receipts were $237 million and disbursements were $30 million

Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account

The balance of $66 million in this account as at March 31, 1966 is $8 million more than the previous fiscal year-end balance of $58 million.

Receipts during the year of $9 million consist of $2 million in contributions by personnel, $3 million in interest credited to the account and $4 million in contributions by the government.

Disbursements of $1 million consist mainly of annuities and allowances, cash termination allowances and return of contributions.

In 1964–65 receipts were $12 million and disbursements were $1 million.

Canada pension plan account

This is a new account to record contributions and payments as authorized by the Canada Pension Plan Act which became effective January 1, 1966.

Government annuities account

The balance in this account of $1,321 million is $17 million higher than the balance at March 31, 1965. Receipts of $79 million include $29 million from premiums and $50 million in interest from the government. Disbursements of $62 million consist mainly of vested annuity and commuted value payments and refunds of premiums. In 1964–65 receipts amounted to $79 million and disbursements were $60 million.

Old age security fund

Under the Old Age Security Act, as amended, all persons who satisfy the residence requirements of the act may receive a pension of $75 per month from the federal government out of the old age security fund provided that no pension is paid in any month before January 1966 in which the person had not attained 70 years of age, the age limit being reduced by one in each subsequent year until 1970.

Receipts of $1,163 million in 1965–66 exceed pension payments of $923 million by $240 million. Temporary loans by the Minister of Finance of $25 million were repaid leaving a balance in the fund of $215 million as at March 31, 1966.

In 1964–65 receipts of $960 million exceeded pension payments of $885 million by $75 million which resulted in temporary loans of $100 million as at March 31, 1964 being reduced to $25 million as at March 31, 1965.

The Budget—Appendix

TABLE 53

(in millions of dollars)

Old Age Security Fund	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966 (estimated)
Tax receipts—
Sales tax	284.9	302.2	331.8	383.2	516.0
Personal income tax	259.0	273.7	302.6	431.9	496.0
Corporation income tax	100.1	115.2	115.7	145.2	151.0
Total tax receipts	644.0	691.1	750.1	960.3	1,163.0
Pension payments	−625.1	−734.4	−808.4	−885.3	−923.0
Excess of receipts over payments	18.9	−43.3	−58.3	75.0	240.0
Temporary loans brought forward	−17.3		−41.7	−100.0	−25.0
Balance in fund brought forward		1.6
Temporary loans by the Minister of Finance to cover deficit in fund		41.7	100.0	25.0
Balance in fund	1.6				215.0

A distribution by provinces of pension payments from the old age security fund for the last two years is shown in the following table:

TABLE 54

(in millions of dollars)

Old Age Security Payments	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Newfoundland	17.6	16.8	0.8
Nova Scotia	42.0	40.4	1.6
Prince Edward Island	8.1	7.1	1.0
New Brunswick	31.6	29.8	1.8
Quebec	198.0	189.7	8.3
Ontario	332.1	321.1	11.0
Manitoba	55.8	53.4	2.4
Saskatchewan	57.1	55.1	2.0
Alberta	63.7	60.0	3.7
British Columbia	116.2	111.3	4.9
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0.8	0.6	0.2
	923.0	885.3	37.7

Undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts

These special accounts record the undisbursed balances of appropriations for which moneys have been appropriated by parliament and from which disbursements may be made for authorized purposes in periods subsequent to that in which the appropriation was made. The balance of $88 million is $8 million less than the balance at March 31, 1965.

TABLE 55
(in millions of dollars)

Undisbursed Balances of Appropriations to Special Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
International assistance account	68.5	82.3	−13.8
Railway grade crossing fund	10.4	6.9	3.5
Centennial of confederation fund	8.5	6.0	2.5
National capital fund	0.1	0.4	−0.3
Other	0.1	0.1
	87.6	95.7	−8.1

The balance of $69 million in the international assistance account is $14 million less than the balance at March 31, 1965. Disbursements of $41 million from the fund are partly offset by a credit of $27 million, which amount is the unexpended balance of External Affairs Vote 35 as set out in the sub-vote for international development assistance.

The balance of $10 million in the railway grade crossing fund is $3 million higher than the balance at the previous fiscal year-end. The increase of $3 million is due to an amount of $14 million credited to the fund and charged to budgetary expenditure and to disbursements of $11 million from the fund.

The balance of $9 million in the centennial of confederation fund is $3 million more than the balance at March 31, 1965. The amount of $9 million credited to the fund and charged to budgetary expenditure is offset by disbursements of $6 million from the fund during the year.

Deferred credits

Recorded in these accounts are amounts due the government in respect of which payment is deferred. These are contra accounts to corresponding items under the following asset categories: "loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations", "loans to national governments" and "other loans and investments". The balance of $136 million is $23 million more than the balance at March 31, 1965.

TABLE 56
(in millions of dollars)

Deferred Credits	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Deferred interest—
The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	45.3	38.7	6.6
United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	83.0	63.8	19.2
Northern Canada Power Commission	2.2	2.2
	130.5	104.7	25.8
Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets	1.4	3.0	−1.6
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation—government equity	3.1	5.5	−2.4
Unamortized premium on loan	1.1		1.1
	136.1	113.2	22.9

The Budget—Appendix

There is an increase of $26 million in deferred interest during the year bringing the balance to $131 million as at March 31, 1966.

Deferred interest in respect of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, which is a contra account to a corresponding item in "loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations", increased by $7 million during the year bringing the balance at March 31, 1966 to $45 million. See the asset account for explanation of increase.

Deferred interest in respect of the loan under the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, which is a contra account to a corresponding item in "loans to national governments", increased by $19 million during the year bringing the balance at March 31, 1966 to $83 million. See the asset account for explanation of increase.

Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets are contra accounts to corresponding items under the asset category "other loans and investments". During the year payments of $2 million leave an outstanding balance of $1 million at March 31, 1966. There were no new agreements of sale during the year.

The government equity in the agency account of Crown assets disposal corporation is a contra account to a corresponding asset account under "other loans and investments". The balance in the account of $3 million is $2 million less than the total at the end of the previous fiscal year.

Suspense accounts

These consist of balances where some uncertainty as to disposition exists.

There is a net increase of $8 million during 1965-66 bringing the outstanding balances to $14 million as at March 31, 1966.

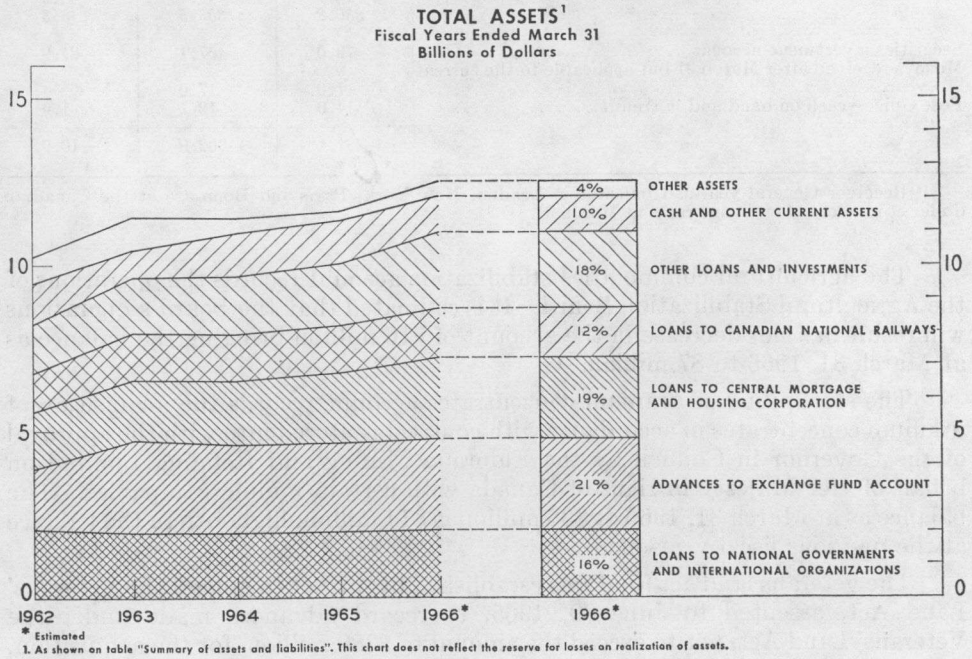
The replacement of materiel account, which was established by section 11 of the National Defence Act, is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries. The account is debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for procurement of replacement materiel. During 1965-66 credits to and disbursements from the account are approximately $1 million each, resulting in a balance of approximately $1 million.

The surplus Crown assets account, which is a new account established by Vote 48 of the Department of National Defence 1965-66 Estimates, is credited with all revenue received during the current and subsequent fiscal years from the sale of surplus materials, supplies and equipment and from the sale during the current fiscal year of surplus buildings, works and land. The account is debited with expenditures, subject to the approval of Treasury Board, for any of the purposes of the Department of National Defence. The balance of $8 million consists of credits to the account during the year. There were no disbursements.

TABLE 57
(in millions of dollars)

Suspense Accounts	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Replacement of materiel, sec. 11, National Defence Act	0.7	0.6	0.1
Surplus Crown assets	7.8		7.8
Unclaimed cheques	1.3	1.3
Other	4.0	3.6	0.4
	13.8	5.5	8.3

Unmatured debt



The unmatured debt of Canada in the amount of $19,137 million is $158 million more than the previous fiscal year-end total. Obligations payable in Canada are $18,766 million and those payable in New York are $371 million compared with $18,602 million and $376 million respectively at March 31, 1965.

TABLE 58
(in millions of dollars)

Unmatured Debt	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Payable in Canada—
Marketable bonds	10,711.5	10,866.4	−154.9
Non-marketable bonds—
Canada savings bonds	5,757.1	5,552.4	204.7
Unemployment Insurance Commission	147.0	43.0	104.0
	16,615.6	16,461.8	153.8
Treasury bills	2,150.0	2,140.0	10.0
	18,765.6	18,601.8	163.8
Payable in New York[1]	[2]371.0	[2]376.4	−5.4
	19,136.6	18,978.2	158.4

[1] Marketable bonds.
[2] Converted at the official parity rate of $1 U.S. = $1.08108 Canadian.

Details of the various loan issues, maturities and redemptions resulting in the net increase are described more fully in the section "The Public Debt".

ASSET ACCOUNTS

Current assets

These accounts consist of working capital advances and revolving funds, the securities investment account and various cash accounts.

Total current assets at $1,291 million reflect a decrease of $11 million during the year. The main changes are decreases of $40 million in cash in current and special deposits, $10 million in cash in hands of collectors and in transit and increases of $22 million in the securities investment account and $15 million in departmental working capital advances and revolving funds.

TABLE 59
(in millions of dollars)

CURRENT ASSETS	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Cash in current and special deposits[1]	642.3	682.3	−40.0
Cash in hands of collectors and in transit	158.0	168.0	−10.0
Departmental working capital advances and revolving funds—
Agricultural commodities stabilization account	7.0	23.2	−16.2
Defence production revolving fund	26.8	30.2	−3.4
Royal Canadian Mint	16.7	18.7	−2.0
Miscellaneous departmental imprest and advance accounts	19.5	18.6	0.9
Stockpiling of uranium concentrates	37.9	24.4	13.5
Veterans land act fund	280.0	255.6	24.4
Less reserve for conditional benefits—Veterans Land Act	−22.3	−24.3	2.0
Other	15.2	19.1	−3.9
	380.8	365.5	15.3
Securities investment account	79.0	57.1	21.9
Moneys received after March 31 but applicable to the current year	17.0	17.0
Post Office—cash on hand and in transit	14.0	12.1	1.9
	1,291.1	1,302.0	−10.9

[1] Receiver General year-end balances in London, New York, Paris and Bonn are at the Canadian dollar equivalent of exchange rates at March 31.

The agricultural commodities stabilization account records the operations of the Agricultural Stabilization Board. It is estimated that the board's operations will result in a net decrease in the account of $16 million bringing the balance as at March 31, 1966 to $7 million.

The stockpiling of uranium concentrates account records the acquisition of uranium concentrates in accordance with contracts entered into with the approval of the Governor in Council by the Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada with certain mining companies. The balance as at March 31, 1966 at $38 million is $14 million higher than the balance at the previous fiscal year-end.

The veterans land act fund was established by an Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act, assented to June 30, 1965, to record advances made under the Veterans' Land Act, not to exceed the amount of $380 million, for the acquisition, by the Director, of properties, buildings, materials, livestock, farm equipment and commercial fishing equipment for purposes of the act, for sale to qualified veterans of world war 2 and Korea under sales agreements which carry specified conditional benefits if the terms of such agreements are adhered to by the veterans, and for progress payments to veterans during construction of housing. The outstanding balances in the veterans land act advances and reserve for conditional benefits under the category "other loans and investments" and the veterans land act housing account under the category "departmental working capital advances and revolving funds" were transferred to the new account. Advances during the year of $64 million and repayments of $40 million bring outstanding advances at March 31, 1966 to $280 million. This is partly offset by a reserve for conditional benefits amounting to $22 million, resulting in a balance in this account of $258 million at the fiscal year-end.

Advances to the exchange fund account

Advances during the year to finance the purchase of gold and foreign exchange amount to $947 million and repayments to $896 million, an increase of $51 million bringing the outstanding advances to $2,672 million at March 31, 1966.

During 1964–65 advances were $699 million and repayments totalled $679 million resulting in a balance of $2,621 million at March 31, 1965.

Investments in special United States of America securities—Columbia River Treaty

This account records the special securities issued by the Government of the United States of America and purchased by Canada pursuant to agreements made to carry out the Columbia River Treaty between the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada. During 1965–66 securities in the amount of $32 million were redeemed leaving a balance of $187 million as at March 31, 1966.

Sinking fund and other investments held for the retirement of unmatured debt

The holdings of $5 million in this account at March 31, 1965 were transferred to the securities investment account during the fiscal year leaving a nil balance in the account.

Canada pension plan investment fund

The Canada pension plan investment fund is a new account to record securities purchased under the Canada Pension Plan Act and the sale of these securities. The amount by which the operating balance of the Canada pension plan account in any month exceeds the estimated amount required to meet all payments in the following three month period is available for the purchase of securities of participating provinces. Securities of Canada shall be purchased with the excess remaining after purchasing securities of each province as required. It is estimated that holdings at March 31, 1966 will total $34 million in provincial securities.

The Budget—Appendix

Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations

Loans and investments in this category total $5,535 million, an increase of $621 million over the total at March 31, 1965.

TABLE 60
(in millions of dollars)

Loans to, and Investments in, Crown Corporations	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	77.6	65.7	11.9
Bank of Canada	5.9	5.9
Canadian Arsenals Limited	5.0	7.5	−2.5
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	3.0	3.0
Canadian Commercial Corporation	7.5	3.5	4.0
Canadian National Railways	1,489.3	1,430.6	58.7
Air Canada	6.0	3.6	2.4
	1,495.3	1,434.2	61.1
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation	57.8	55.1	2.7
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	2,437.8	2,137.8	300.0
Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited	8.2	8.2
Export Credits Insurance Corporation	10.0	10.0
Farm Credit Corporation	591.3	441.3	150.0
National Capital Commission	33.4	26.1	7.3
National Harbours Board	203.5	199.8	3.7
Northern Canada Power Commission	30.7	27.8	2.9
Polymer Corporation Limited	30.0	30.0
The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority—
Loans	326.5	326.5
Deferred interest	45.3	38.7	6.6
Interest-free loans	63.0	44.0	19.0
	434.8	409.2	25.6
Recovery likely to require parliamentary appropriations—
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	28.3	14.3	14.0
Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition	37.0		37.0
National Capital Commission—Greenbelt	36.8	33.8	3.0
	102.1	48.1	54.0
Other Crown Corporations	1.3	1.3
	5,535.2	4,914.5	620.7

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

There is no change in the advance for working capital during 1965–66, the balance remaining at $3 million as at March 31, 1966. During the year advances to the corporation for the purpose of capital expenditures amounted to $14 million, bringing the total of advances to $28 million at the fiscal year-end. Recovery of these advances is likely to require parliamentary appropriations in subsequent fiscal years.

Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition

This is a new account authorized in the amount of $80 million by Department of Finance Vote L26b to record the acquisition of securities issued by the corporation in accordance with the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act. The balance as at March 31, 1966 is estimated at $37 million. Recovery of these advances is likely to require parliamentary appropriations in subsequent fiscal years.

Canadian National Railways (including Air Canada)

Outstanding advances to the Canadian National Railways at March 31, 1966 of $1,495 million are $61 million more than the balance of $1,434 million at the previous fiscal year-end.

TABLE 61
(in millions of dollars)

Advances to the Canadian National Railways	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Capital Revision Act, 1952—
Preferred stock	1,043.9	1,020.2	23.7
Twenty-year obligation	100.0	100.0
Financing and Guarantee Act, 1960	27.0	27.0
Financing and Guarantee Act, 1961	28.4	28.4
Refunding Act, 1955	273.0	238.0	35.0
Canadian Government Railways	17.0	17.0
Air Canada	6.0	3.6	2.4
	1,495.3	1,434.2	61.1

During the 1965-66 fiscal year the government made available to the company $100 million and received repayments of $39 million. In 1964-65 advances were $68 million and repayments were $45 million.

TABLE 62
(in millions of dollars)

Advances to, and Repayments by, the Canadian National Railways	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Advances—
For the refunding of debt	35.0		35.0
For interim financing of income deficits—
Canadian National Railways	33.4	38.7	−5.3
Air Canada	7.7	4.6	3.1
Total advances	76.1	43.3	32.8
Purchase of 4 per cent preferred stock (C.N.R. Capital Revision Act, 1952)	23.7	24.7	−1.0
	99.8	68.0	31.8
Repayments—
Advances for interim financing of income deficits—
Canadian National Railways	−33.4	−38.7	5.3
Air Canada	−5.3	−6.0	0.7
	−38.7	−44.7	6.0
Net increase or decrease (−) during the fiscal year	61.1	23.3	37.8

In 1965-66 the government advanced to the company $35 million for the refunding of debt in the hands of the public.

To assist the company to finance further capital expenditure during the year, the government will have purchased $24 million of the 4 per cent preferred stock of the company. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, in an amount equal to 3 per cent of the gross revenue of the company.

The government also provided the company with temporary loans of $33 million in respect of its 1965 deficit which will be repaid when the company's income deficit is charged against 1965-66 budgetary expenditures.

At March 31, 1965 temporary loans of $3 million were outstanding to Air Canada in respect of its 1965 operations. An additional $2 million was advanced during the year for its 1965 operations. These have been repaid by the company during 1965-66. However, additional loans of $6 million have been made during 1965-66 in respect of the company's 1966 operations.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

The balance of $2,438 million in this account at March 31, 1966 is $300 million higher than at March 31, 1965, and comprises the Crown's investment of $25 million in the capital of the corporation and $2,413 million in loans and advances.

Loans and advances to the corporation are $490 million in 1965-66 and repayments are $190 million. In 1964-65 advances were $314 million and repayments were $92 million.

Advances comprise $372 million for direct lending and limited dividend housing, $7 million for federal-provincial projects for housing, $35 million for the loan and mortgage purchase fund, $36 million in respect of municipal sewage treatment and $40 million for university housing.

Repayments of $190 million are comprised of $155 million for direct lending and limited dividend housing, $3 million for housing, $15 million for the loan and mortgage purchase fund, $13 million for municipal sewage treatment and $4 million in respect of acquisition or construction of real estate.

TABLE 63
(in millions of dollars)

Advances to, and Repayments by, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	Fiscal year ending March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Advances—
Direct lending and limited dividend housing	371.9	248.5	123.4
Federal-provincial projects—housing	7.5	10.0	−2.5
Loan and mortgage purchase fund	34.9		34.9
Municipal sewage treatment	36.0	28.5	7.5
University housing	40.0	26.5	13.5
	490.3	313.5	176.8
Repayments—
Direct lending and limited dividend housing	−155.5	−74.9	−80.6
Federal-provincial projects—housing	−3.3	−4.8	1.5
Loan and mortgage purchase fund	−14.9		−14.9
Municipal sewage treatment	−12.8	−8.4	−4.4
University housing	−0.3	−0.2	−0.1
Acquisition or construction of real estate	−3.5	−3.5
	−190.3	−91.8	−98.5
Net increase during the fiscal year	300.0	221.7	78.3

Farm Credit Corporation

The government provides loans to the corporation which makes loans on farm property. The balance of $591 million in the account at March 31, 1966 consists of the Crown's investment of $22 million in the capital of the corporation and $569 million in loans and advances. At March 31, 1965 the balance was $441 million consisting of capital investment of $17 million and loans and advances of $424 million.

During 1965-66 the transactions in the account consist of additional subscriptions by the government of $5 million to the capital of the corporation, loans and advances of $165 million and repayments by the corporation of $20 million.

National Capital Commission

Loans to acquire property in the "Greenbelt" area increased by $3 million during the year bringing the balance to $37 million. Recovery of these loans is likely to require parliamentary appropriation in subsequent fiscal years.

Loans to acquire property excluding the "Greenbelt" area increased by $7 million to $33 million at March 31, 1966.

The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority

Outstanding loans in this account at March 31, 1966 amount to $390 million, an increase of $19 million over the previous fiscal year-end balance of $371 million. There are no repayments.

Deferred interest increased by $7 million during the fiscal year bringing the balance at March 31, 1966 to $45 million.

Other Crown Corporations

Loans to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited are estimated to increase by $12 million during 1965–66, loans to Canadian Commercial Corporation by $4 million, loans to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation by $3 million, loans to the National Harbours Board by $4 million, loans to the Northern Canada Power Commission by $3 million and loans to Canadian Arsenals Limited to decrease by $2 million.

Loans to national governments

There is a net increase of $55 million in this category bringing total balances to $1,344 million at March 31, 1966.

The Government of the United Kingdom deferred the payment of principal and interest due December 31, 1965 on the $1,185 million loan made under the $1,250 million credit authorized by the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, the principal outstanding at the close of the year remaining at $995 million and deferred interest increasing by $19 million to $83 million. The deferment of principal and interest is by an agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United Kingdom that was approved by a 1957 Act to amend the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946. The agreement, which became effective April 29, 1957, permits the United Kingdom in lieu of any right of waiver hitherto existing to defer after December 31, 1956, seven instalments of principal and interest under certain conditions. Interest at 2 per cent is payable on deferred instalments of both principal and interest.

Advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act to Belgium, France and The Netherlands to assist them in the purchasing of goods in Canada were reduced by a repayment of $2 million, bringing the balance at March 31, 1966 to $125 million. The decrease of $2 million is the regular annual payment by the Government of Belgium. There are no repayments by the Governments of France and The Netherlands as each of these countries had made advance payments in 1962–63 covering instalments up to and including the 1969 instalment.

Loans under the Export Credits Insurance Act, sec. 21A amount to $121 million, an increase of $39 million over the March 31, 1965 total.

Special loans by Canada to Colombo plan countries to finance the purchase of wheat and flour from Canada amount to $7 million, a decrease of $5 million from the previous fiscal year-end balance.

Loans to India for the purchase in Canada of aircraft and associated parts at $7 million are $2 million less than at March 31, 1965.

Special loan assistance—developing countries account is a new account which records loans, not to exceed $50 million, which are subject to terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may approve, for the purpose of undertaking agreed upon economic, educational and technical projects. The balance in the account as at March 31, 1966 is estimated to be $6 million.

TABLE 64

(in millions of dollars)

Loans to National Governments	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Loans to United Kingdom—
The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	995.1	995.1
Deferred interest	83.0	63.8	19.2
	1,078.1	1,058.9	19.2
Loans under the Export Credits Insurance Act, Part II—
Belgium	25.4	27.7	−2.3
France	67.0	67.0
The Netherlands	32.1	32.1
	124.5	126.8	−2.3
Loans under the Export Credits Insurance Act, sec. 21A	120.8	81.8	39.0
Special loans to Colombo plan countries to finance the purchase of wheat from Canada—
Ceylon	0.6	0.8	−0.2
India	6.4	10.7	−4.3
	7.0	11.5	−4.5
Miscellaneous loans and advances—
India—loan for purchase in Canada of aircraft and associated spare parts	6.5	8.6	−2.1
France—interim credit—consolidated interest	0.7	0.7
Special loan assistance—developing countries	6.1		6.1
Other	0.1	0.1
	13.4	9.4	4.0
	1,343.8	1,288.4	55.4

Other loans and investments

Balances in these accounts total $1,037 million at March 31, 1966, $129 million more than at the end of the previous fiscal year.

Canada's subscriptions to the capital of international organizations are $15 million higher due to additional subscriptions of $15 millon to the international development association. Working capital advances and loans to international organizations at $8 million are the same amount as at the previous fiscal year-end.

TABLE 65
(in millions of dollars)

Other Loans and Investments	Balance at March 31		Increase or decrease (−)
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Subscriptions to capital of, and working capital advances and loans to, international organizations—
Canada's subscriptions to capital of—
International bank for reconstruction and development	80.5	80.5
International development association	55.7	40.7	15.0
International finance corporation	3.5	3.5
International monetary fund	577.3	577.3
Working capital advances and loans to international organizations	7.8	7.8
	724.8	709.8	15.0
Loans to provincial governments—
Alberta	5.9	6.3	−0.4
British Columbia	13.2	12.5	0.7
Manitoba	10.5	10.7	−0.2
New Brunswick	33.8	32.8	1.0
Newfoundland	6.5	0.5	6.0
Nova Scotia	21.7	7.1	14.6
Saskatchewan	29.5	28.5	1.0
	121.1	98.4	22.7
Municipal development and loan board advances	124.4	9.4	115.0
Less reserve for forgiveness of indebtedness	−7.0	−1.8	−5.2
	117.4	7.6	109.8
Miscellaneous—
Assisted passage scheme (section 69, Immigration Act, R.S. 1952)	5.0	3.7	1.3
Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets	2.4	4.2	−1.8
City of Montreal—
Atwater tunnel	1.8	1.9	−0.1
St. Remi tunnel		1.0	−1.0
City of Whitehorse	1.9	2.0	−0.1
Construction of dock and rail facilities for Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited	0.9	1.1	−0.2
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation—
Government equity in agency account	8.1	5.5	2.6
Dominion Coal Company Limited	4.5	4.5
Hamilton Harbour Commissioners	1.7	1.7
Housing projects for Canadian forces	20.9	20.4	0.5
Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938	0.8	0.9	−0.1
New Westminster Harbour Commission	1.3	1.4	−0.1
Northwest Territories	7.1	3.9	3.2
Old age security fund—temporary loans		25.0	−25.0
Ottawa civil service recreational association re: W. Clifford Clark Memorial Recreational Centre	1.1	1.0	0.1
Town of Oromocto Development Corporation	1.1	1.2	−0.1
Yukon Territory	6.6	4.9	1.7
Recovery likely to require parliamentary appropriations, Town of Oromocto, New Brunswick	3.8	3.8
Other	4.6	4.2	0.4
	73.6	92.3	−18.7
	1,036.9	908.1	128.8

Loans to provincial governments are estimated to increase by $23 million due mainly to additional advances of $15 million to Nova Scotia and $6 million to Newfoundland made pursuant to the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act.

Under the Municipal Development and Loan Act advances are made to the Municipal Development and Loan Board to provide financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to augment or accelerate municipal capital works programs. Where the municipal project in respect of which a loan is made is completed on or before September 30, 1966, the board shall forgive payment to the municipality of 25 per cent of the principal amount of the loan. If a project is not completed as at September 30, 1966, the board shall forgive 25 per cent of that portion of the loan that has been advanced to the municipality as of September 30, 1966. Advances of $124 million at March 31, 1966 are partly offset by a reserve of $7 million for forgiveness of indebtedness. At March 31, 1965 advances were $10 million, partly offset by a reserve of $2 million.

Miscellaneous loans and investments totalling $74 million reflect a net decrease of $19 million from the March 31, 1965 total. The decrease is due mainly to the repayment out of the old age security fund of temporary loans of $25 million which were outstanding at the previous fiscal year-end.

Securities held in trust

Recorded herein are the security holdings of various deposit and trust accounts and annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Bonds and certified cheques held in connection with contractors' securities included in the deposit and trust category are also recorded under this heading. The balance at March 31, 1966 of $172 million is $119 million more than the previous fiscal year-end balance due mainly to an increase of $115 million in holdings under the Municipal Development and Loan Act.

Deferred charges

The balance of $258 million in this account is $50 million more than at March 31, 1965, reflecting an increase in the unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies in the superannuation accounts and a decrease of $3 million in unamortized loan flotation costs.

Unamortized portions of actuarial deficiencies

These accounts record the unamortized portions of the actuarial deficiencies in the Canadian forces, the public service and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation accounts which are set up as deferred charges.

Due to salary revisions in 1965–66 additional amounts were credited to the superannuation accounts to cover the estimated actuarial liability and recorded as deferred charges. Consistent with established policy these amounts are amortized over a five year period. The current adjustments for the additional liability were $17 million in respect of the Canadian forces superannuation account, $78 million in respect of the public service superannuation account and $1 million in respect of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account.

Credited to these accounts and charged to budgetary expenditure for current and prior actuarial adjustments were $17 million in respect of the Canadian forces superannuation account resulting in a balance of $54 million, $26 million in respect of the public service superannuation account resulting in a balance of $93 million and $1 million in respect of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police superannuation account resulting in a balance of $4 million.

Unamortized loan flotation costs

This account records the residual balances of discounts, commissions, redemption bonuses and conversion premiums on loan flotations that have not been charged to budgetary expenditures. The balance of $108 million is $3 million less than the previous fiscal year-end balance.

TABLE 66
(in millions of dollars)

Unamortized Loan Flotation Costs	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Balance of account at beginning of fiscal year	110.7	123.7
New flotation costs to be amortized—
4¼% loan July 1, 1965—June 1, 1967	0.3
5% loan July 1, 1965—July 1, 1970	1.4
3¾% loan Sept. 1, 1965—Sept. 1, 1966	2.2
5½% loan Sept. 1, 1965—Oct. 1, 1969	0.1
4% loan Dec. 1, 1965—Dec. 15, 1966	1.8
5½% loan Dec. 1, 1965—Apr. 1, 1969	0.1
5½% loan Dec. 1, 1965—Oct. 1, 1975	0.2
4% loan Feb. 1, 1966—Apr. 1, 1967	2.3
5½% loan Feb. 1, 1966—Aug. 1, 1980	0.4
Adjustments[1]	5.9	−0.7
Treasury bills discount	16.5	13.2
Canada savings bonds—adjustment of previous issues	1.0	0.9
Canada savings bonds—new issue	9.0	8.8
3½% loan May 1, 1964—July 1, 1965		3.9
5% loan May 1, 1964—July 1, 1969		0.3
5¼% loan May 1, 1964—May 1, 1990		2.4
3½% loan Oct. 1, 1964—Dec. 1, 1965		3.6
3¾% loan Oct. 1, 1964—Oct. 1, 1967		2.1
5% loan Dec. 1, 1964—June 1, 1971		0.6
3½% loan Feb. 1, 1965—May 1, 1966		1.6
5% loan Feb. 1, 1965—Oct. 1, 1973		0.5
	41.2	37.2
Less—
Amortization applicable to fiscal year—
Canada savings bonds and general loans	−30.8	−36.4
Discount on treasury bills charged to interest on public debt	−13.2	−13.8
	−44.0	−50.2
Increase or decrease (−) during the year	−2.8	−13.0
Balance of account at end of fiscal year	107.9	110.7

[1] Adjustments due to additional issues of existing loans.

Cost of new loans issued during 1965-66 and charged to the account amounts to $41 million, of which $16 million is in respect of treasury bills discounts which will be charged to interest on public debt in 1966-67. Credits to the account are $44 million, of which $31 million is a charge to the budgetary item "annual amortization costs" and $13 million (representing discount applicable to 1965-66 on treasury bills sold in 1964-65) is a charge to the budgetary item "interest on public debt".

Capital assets

Assets of the government such as land, buildings, works and equipment, etc., that are charged to budgetary expenditure at the time of acquisition or construction, are included in this category and are shown on the statement of assets and liabilities at a nominal value of $1.

Inactive loans and investments

Loans and investments which are not currently revenue-producing or realizable are recorded herein. Included are the loan of $49 million to China under the Export Credits Insurance Act, loans of $24 million and $7 million made to Roumania and Greece in 1919-20 and 1920-21 respectively and advances of $15 million in respect of the implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited).

Reserve for losses on realization of assets

The balance of this account at March 31, 1966 was $546 million, unchanged from the end of the previous fiscal year.

Net Debt

The net debt of Canada, or the excess of liabilities over net recorded assets, is expected to be $15,538 million at March 31, 1966, $34 million higher than at March 31, 1965 reflecting the estimated 1965-66 budgetary deficit of $34 million.

THE CASH POSITION

The government's cash account represents balances of current and special deposits to the credit of the Receiver General of Canada in the Bank of Canada, chartered banks in Canada and certain banks in London, Paris and Bonn. These balances are expected to total $642 million at March 31, 1966 compared with $682 million at March 31, 1965, a decrease of $40 million.

The cash position of the government is affected not only by budgetary transactions but also by changes in the government's unmatured debt and other non-budgetary transactions. Non-budgetary transactions are those which affect the government's asset and liability accounts and must be taken into account when considering the full scope of the government's financial operations and their effect on the economy of the country.

On the assets side, the non-budgetary transactions consist, for the most part, of loans and advances to, and repayments by, Crown corporations and other government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), national, provincial and municipal governments, international organizations, veterans and other borrowers. On the liability side they relate mainly to receipts and payments in connection with the many deposit and trust accounts, and annuity, insurance and pension accounts held or administered by the government.

The following statement summarizes both the budgetary and non-budgetary transactions for 1965–66 and indicates their effect on the government's cash position. For purposes of comparison the corresponding figures for 1964–65 are also shown.

TABLE 67

(in millions of dollars)

Changes in Cash Position	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)		1965
Budgetary transactions—
Revenue	7,673.0		7,180.3
Expenditure	−7,707.0		−7,218.3
Deficit		−34.0		−38.0
Non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions)—
Receipts and credits (net)—
Repayments of loans, investments and advances	76.0		−103.7
Annuity, insurance and pension accounts	705.3		544.8
Other	288.5		88.7
	1,069.8		529.8
Disbursements and charges (net)—
Loans, investments and advances	−946.8		−476.2
Other	−276.3		−437.8
	−1,223.1		−914.0
Net amount received from, or required for (−), non-budgetary transactions		−153.3		−384.2
Overall cash requirement (−) to be financed by increase in unmatured debt or decrease in cash balances		−187.3		−422.2
Net increase in unmatured debt outstanding in the hands of the public—
Unmatured debt—
Canada savings bonds	204.7		460.1
Market issues	−154.9		−175.0
Treasury bills	10.0		−90.0
Special issues to the Unemployment Insurance Commission	104.0		43.0
	163.8		238.1
Securities investment account	−21.9		42.8
Sinking fund and other investments	5.4		−5.4
		147.3		275.5
Net increase or decrease (−) in Receiver General cash balances		−40.0		−146.7

The Budget—Appendix

In 1965–66 a deficit of $34 million and net requirements of $153 million for non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions) result in an overall net requirement of $187 million and as there is an increase of $147 million in outstanding unmatured debt there is a reduction of $40 million in Receiver General bank balances. In 1964–65 a budgetary deficit of $38 million and net disbursements of $384 million for non-budgetary transactions (excluding unmatured debt transactions) resulted in a net cash requirement of $422 million and as outstanding unmatured debt increased by $275 million, Receiver General bank balances decreased by $147 million.

Non-budgetary receipts and credits (excluding unmatured debt transactions)

As shown in the previous table, non-budgetary receipts and credits total $1,070 million in 1965–66. Further details are presented in the following table:

TABLE 68
(in millions of dollars)

Non-Budgetary Receipts and Credits (Net)	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Repayments of loans, investments and advances—
Agricultural commodities stabilization account	16.2	40.8
Canadian Arsenals Limited	2.5
Special United States of America securities (Columbia River Treaty)	32.3	−219.5
Old age security fund	25.0	75.0
	76.0	−103.7
Annuity, insurance and pension accounts—
Public service superannuation account	224.0	305.4
Canadian forces superannuation account	163.0	206.6
Old age security fund	215.0
Canada pension plan account	80.0
Other	23.3	32.8
	705.3	544.8
Other receipts and credits—
Outstanding treasury cheques	37.8	—4.5
Accounts payable	49.0	21.2
Cash in hands of collectors and in transit	10.0	−12.4
Interest due and outstanding	15.0	10.1
Interest accrued	36.4	15.2
Provincial tax collection agreements account	1.9	59.2
Security deposits—Municipal Development and Loan Board	115.0	9.5
Deferred credits	22.9	−6.2
Other	0.5	−3.4
	288.5	88.7
	1,069.8	529.8

Non-budgetary disbursements and charges (excluding unmatured debt transactions)

As already indicated, non-budgetary disbursements and charges are $1,223 million in 1965–66. Further details are presented in the following table:

TABLE 69

(in millions of dollars)

Non-Budgetary Disbursements and Charges (Net)	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)	1965
Loans, investments and advances—
Veterans Land Act advances	26.4	14.3
Exchange fund	51.0	20.0
Canada pension plan investment account	34.0
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	11.9	12.0
Canadian Commercial Corporation	4.0	−2.0
Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition	37.0
Canadian National Railways (including Air Canada)	61.1	23.3
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation	2.7	−0.4
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	300.0	221.7
Farm Credit Corporation	150.0	102.4
National Capital Commission	10.3	6.9
National Harbours Board	3.7	1.7
Northern Canada Power Commission	2.9	5.4
The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	25.6	−6.5
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	14.0	14.3
National governments	55.4	44.3
International Development Association (subscription)	15.0	7.9
Provincial governments	22.7	−4.8
Municipal Development and Loan Board (net)	109.8	7.6
Other	9.3	8.1
	946.8	476.2
Other disbursements and charges—
Deferred charges	49.6	204.5
Securities held in trust	118.8	14.2
Redemption of non-interest-bearing notes payable on demand	107.9	219.1
	276.3	437.8
	1,223.1	914.0

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and net debt

The gross debt of Canada, or the total of liabilities as recorded on the statement of assets and liabilities, is estimated at $27,617 million as at March 31, 1966, an increase of $1,044 million over the total at March 31, 1965. The main changes are increases of $705 million in annuity, insurance and pension accounts, $158 million in unmatured debt and $122 million in deposit and trust accounts. Unmatured debt at $19,137 million represents 70 per cent of the total and annuity, insurance and pension accounts at $6,381 million represent 23 per cent. At March 31, 1965 unmatured debt was $18,978 million or 71 per cent and annuity, insurance and pension accounts totalled $5,676 million or 21 per cent.

The government's net recorded assets are estimated at $12,079 million as at March 31, 1966 an increase of $1,010 million over the total at March 31, 1965. The main changes are increases of $621 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations, $119 million in securities held in trust and $129 million in other loans and investments. Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations represent 46 per cent of the total and advances to the exchange fund represent 22 per cent. At March 31, 1965 loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations were $4,915 million or 44 per cent and advances to the exchange fund were $2,621 million or 24 per cent.

The net debt of Canada is estimated at $15,538 million as at March 31, 1966 reflecting an increase of $34 million, equivalent to the 1965–66 budgetary deficit.

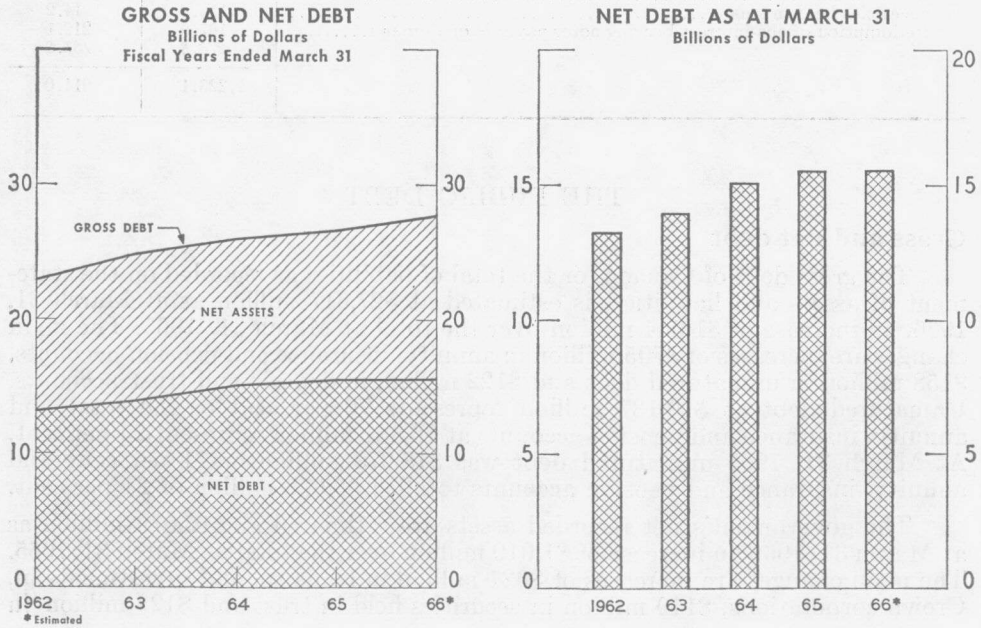

TABLE 70

STATEMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT, UNMATURED DEBT, NET RECORDED ASSETS AND NET DEBT OF CANADA
(in millions of dollars)

As at March 31	Gross Public Debt			Less net recorded assets	Net debt	Increase in net debt during fiscal year
	Unmatured debt	Other liabilities	Total
1962	16,945.7	5,962.1	22,907.8	9,679.7	13,228.1	791.0
1963	17,961.8	6,837.4	24,799.2	10,879.5	13,919.7	691.6
1964	18,740.1	7,183.3	25,923.4	10,853.3	15,070.1	1,150.4
1965	18,978.2	7,595.2	26,573.4	11,069.0	15,504.4	434.3
1966 (estimated)	19,136.6	8,480.5	27,617.1	12,078.7	15,538.4	34.0

Unmatured debt

Total unmatured debt of $19,137 million is $158 million more than the balance at March 31, 1965.

The government's holdings of its own securities as at March 31, 1966 is comprised of $79 million in the securities investment account (of which $31 million is in respect of the employees instalment purchase plan). This is an increase of $17 million over the previous fiscal year-end total when holdings were $57 million in the securities investment account (of which $31 million was in respect of the employees instalment purchase plan) and $5 million in the sinking fund and other investments account.

Of the total unmatured debt, $18,766 million is payable in Canada and $371 million in New York. Securities payable in New York have been valued at the official parity rate of $1 U.S. = $1.08108 Canadian.

TABLE 71

(in millions of dollars)

Unmatured Debt Transactions	Fiscal year ending March 31
	1966 (estimated)		1965
Balance at beginning of year		18,978		18,740
New issues—
For cash—
Canada savings bonds series 18			99
Canada savings bonds series 19	89		1,011
Canada savings bonds series 20 (net)	879
Marketable bonds	1,550		1,975
Non-marketable bonds (Unemployment Insurance Commission)	144		87
Weekly treasury bills (net)	10		10
	2,672		3,182
By renewals and conversions—
Marketable bonds			250
Total new issues	2,672		3,432
Less—
Matured marketable bonds	−1,705		−1,850
Redeemed non-marketable bonds (Unemployment Insurance Commission)	−40		−44
Conversions			−250
Canada savings bonds redeemed or matured	−763		−650
One-year treasury bills (net)			−100
	−2,508		−2,894
Unmatured marketable bonds (redeemed or cancelled)	−5		−300
	−2,513		−3,194
Increase in unmatured debt		159		238
Balance at end of year		19,137		18,978

Summary of security issues, maturities and redemptions

Excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature weekly, the government has issued securities of $2,672 million and redemptions and maturities total $2,513 million.

Net sales of Canada savings bonds series 20 are $879 million and additional sales of series 19 are $89 million. Redemptions and maturities of series 8 to 19 total $763 million. The net increase for all series is $205 million bringing the total of outstanding Canada savings bonds to $5,757 million.

The Budget—Appendix

Treasury bills in the amount of $2,150 million consist of $1,370 million in three-month bills and $780 million in six-month bills.

TABLE 72

DEBT MATURED OR CONVERTED DURING THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1966

(in millions of dollars)

—	Matured	Redeemed	Total
Marketable bonds—
4¼% 1962–65.....AT 15	110.0		110.0
4¼% 1963–65.....CT 2	90.0		90.0
3½% 1964–65.....CT 10	400.0		400.0
3¾% 1958–65.....T 27	449.9		449.9
3½% 1964–65.....CT 13	325.0		325.0
3½% 1963–66.....AT 19	225.0		225.0
3½% 1964–66.....CT 7	105.0		105.0
5% 1962–87 (N.Y. loan).....		5.4	5.4
	1,704.9	5.4	1,710.3
Non-marketable bonds—
Canada savings bonds S 8.....	43.1		43.1
Canada savings bonds S 8–19.....		719.8	719.8
Unemployment Insurance Commission, 4⅛%.....		40.0	40.0
	1,748.0	765.2	2,513.2

TABLE 73

NEW SECURITIES ISSUED DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1966

(in millions of dollars)

—	Price to government	Yield at price to government	Total amount issued	Amount issued for cash
		per cent
Marketable bonds—
3½% 1965–66.....CT 16	99.33	4.32	150.0	150.0
3¾% 1964/65–67.....CT 14	98.55	4.37	175.0	175.0
3¾% 1965–66.....CT 20	99.00	4.79	205.0	205.0
4% 1965–66.....CT 22	98.85	5.15	150.0	150.0
4% 1966–67.....CT 25	98.70	5.16	170.0	170.0
4¼% 1965–67.....CT 18	99.50	4.52	50.0	50.0
5½% 1965–69.....CT 23	100.25	5.41	100.0	100.0
5% 1965–70.....CT 19	99.75	5.06	125.0	125.0
5% 1966–70.....CT 19	98.50	5.38	50.0	50.0
5½% 1965–75.....CT 24	100.00	5.50	50.0	50.0
5½% 1966–80.....CT 26	100.00	5.50	80.0	80.0
5½% 1965–69.....CT 21	100.75	5.29	145.0	145.0
5¼% 1964/65–90.....CT 12	98.50	5.36	100.0	100.0
			1,550.0	1,550.0
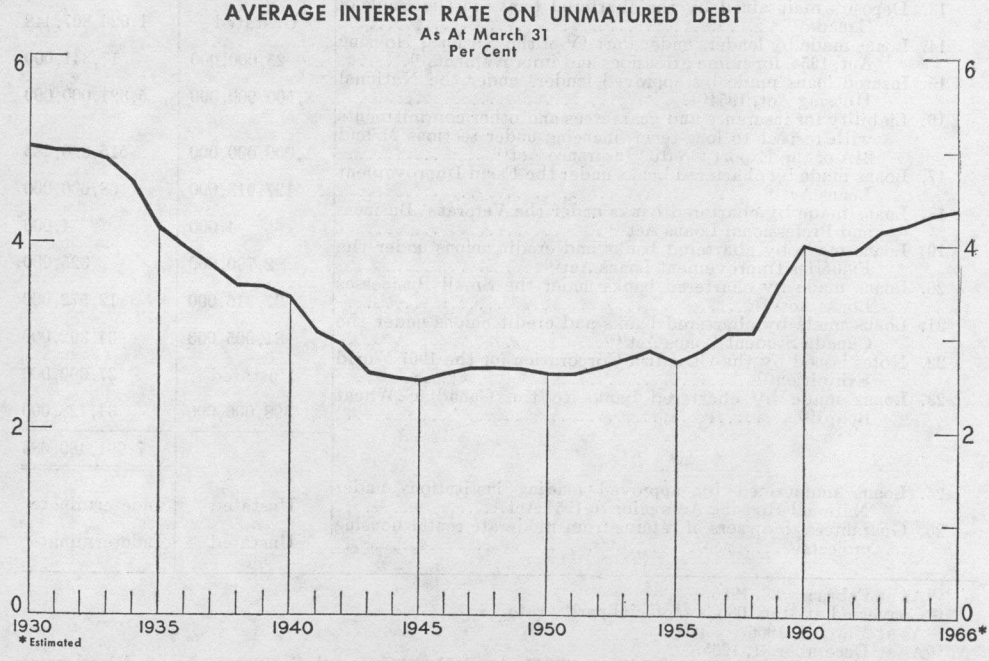
Non-marketable bonds—
Unemployment Insurance Commission—
4½%.....	100.00	4.50	80.5	80.5
4⅞%.....	100.00	4.875	63.5	63.5
Canada savings bonds—
Nov. 1, 1964—Nov. 1, 1974
4½–5½%.....S 19	100.00	5.00	89.1	89.1
Nov. 1, 1965—Nov. 1, 1975
4½–5½% (net).....S 20	100.00	5.03	878.6	878.6
Weekly treasury bills (net).....			10.0	10.0
			2,671.7	2,671.7

Interest rates

The average interest rate on the government's unmatured debt rose to 4.43 per cent during the fiscal year from 4.32 per cent at March 31, 1965.

The yield on three-month treasury bills which was 3.62 per cent at tender on March 25, 1965 was 4.92 per cent at tender on March 17, 1966.

The yield on six-month treasury bills which was 3.73 per cent at tender on March 25, 1965 was 5.15 per cent at tender on March 17, 1966.



The following table shows the high and low yields together with the yield on the latest issues for the fiscal years 1961-62 to 1965–66 inclusive:

TABLE 74

TREASURY BILL YIELDS AT TENDER

Fiscal year ending March 31	High	Low	Last issue
	per cent	per cent	per cent
Three-month bills—
1962	3.34	2.26	3.12
1963	5.51	3.04	3.62
1964	3.90	3.19	3.88
1965	3.87	3.53	3.62
1966	4.92	3.61	[1]4.92
Six-month bills—
1962	3.49	2.53	3.29
1963	5.74	3.19	3.74
1964	4.06	3.30	4.04
1965	4.06	3.69	3.73
1966	5.15	3.70	[1]5.15

[1]At tender on March 17, 1966.

Indirect debt or contingent liabilities

In addition to the direct debt as set out in the statement of assets and liabilities, the government has assumed certain indirect or contingent liabilities. These consist of securities of the Canadian National Railways, guaranteed as to principal and interest, the guarantees of insured loans made by chartered banks and other approved lending institutions under the National Housing Act, deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada, advances under the Export Credits Insurance Act and bank loans under a number of Federal Statutes.

TABLE 75

SUMMARY OF INDIRECT DEBT OR CONTINGENT LIABILITIES (estimated)

—	Amount of guarantee	Amount outstanding
	$	$
Railway securities guaranteed as to principal and interest[1]—
1. Canadian National 2¼% due January 2, 1967	50,000,000	50,000,000
2. Canadian National 4½% due April 1, 1967	72,300,000	72,300,000
3. Canadian National 5% due May 15, 1968	55,800,000	55,800,000
4. Canadian National 2¼% due September 15, 1969	70,000,000	70,000,000
5. Canadian National 2¾% due January 16, 1971	40,000,000	40,000,000
6. Canadian National 5½% due December 15, 1971	190,561,500	190,561,500
7. Canadian National 3¾% due February 1, 1974	200,000,000	200,000,000
8. Canadian National 2¾% due June 15, 1975, U.S. $6,000,000[2]	6,486,486	6,486,486
9. Canadian National 5% due May 15, 1977	84,150,000	84,150,000
10. Canadian National 4% due February 1, 1981	300,000,000	300,000,000
11. Canadian National 5¼% due January 1, 1985	99,500,000	99,500,000
12. Canadian National 5% due October 1, 1987	162,750,000	162,750,000
	1,331,547,986	1,331,547,986
Other outstanding guarantees and contingent liabilities—
13. Deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada[3]	Unstated	1,020,807,448
14. Loans made by lenders under Part IV of the National Housing Act, 1954, for home extensions and improvements[4]	25,000,000	17,341,000
15. Insured loans made by approved lenders under the National Housing Act, 1954[5]	8,500,000,000	5,321,000,000
16. Liability for insurance and guarantees and other commitments with respect to long-term financing under sections 21 and 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act[4]	1,000,000,000	515,320,235
17. Loans made by chartered banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act[4]	127,913,000	68,600,000
18. Loans made by chartered banks under the Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act[4]	4,000	4,000
19. Loans made by chartered banks and credit unions under the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act[4]	2,700,000	325,000
20. Loans made by chartered banks under the Small Businesses Loans Act[4]	37,316,000	12,572,000
21. Loans made by chartered banks and credit unions under the Canada Student Loans Act[6]	81,995,000	64,392,000
22. Notes issued by the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition[7]	Unstated	37,000,000
23. Loans made by chartered banks to the Canadian Wheat Board[8]	398,000,000	34,128,000
		7,091,489,683
24. Loans maintained by approved lending institutions under National Housing Acts prior to 1954 Act	Unstated	Indeterminate
25. Guarantees to owners of returns from moderate rental housing projects[9]	Unstated	Indeterminate

[1] As at February 28, 1966.
[2] Converted at $1.08108 Can. official parity rate.
[3] As at March 2, 1966.
[4] As at December 31, 1965.
[5] As reported (in accordance with sec. 45, National Housing Regulations) by approved lenders at December 31, 1965.
[6] As at December 31, 1965. Includes contingent liability in respect of alternative payments to non-participating province.
[7] As at March 7, 1966.
[8] As at January 31, 1966.
[9] Funds totalling $3,957,495 are held by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purpose of settling claims. In 1965 rental guarantee contracts totalled $13,876,000.

SUPPLEMENTARY DETAILED TABLES

REVENUE

EXPENDITURE

ANNUAL CHANGES IN LOANS AND INVESTMENTS

UNMATURED DEBT

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF REVENUE FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(in millions of dollars)

—	1961–62	1962–63	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66 (estimated)
TAX REVENUE—
Income tax—
Personal[1]	1,792.7	1,744.6	1,865.1	2,103.3	2,150.0
Corporation[1]	1,202.0	1,182.8	1,259.0	1,523.8	1,610.0
On dividends, interest, etc., going abroad	112.3	129.2	124.5	143.7	170.0
	3,107.0	3,056.6	3,248.6	3,770.8	3,930.0
Excise taxes—
Sales tax[1][2]	759.7	806.0	946.1	1,204.6	1,385.0
Other taxes—
Automobiles	25.3	[3]	[3]	[3]
Cigarettes, tobacco and cigars	207.6	217.8	226.9	218.3	237.0
Electric power export	1.0	0.5	0.1	[3]
Jewellery, watches, ornaments, etc.	5.6	5.8	6.4	6.9	7.9
Matches and lighters	1.1	1.2	1.3	1.2	1.3
Television sets, radios and phonographs	18.4	19.9	22.0	23.5	27.7
Toilet preparations	9.4	10.2	11.1	12.8	14.2
Wines	3.3	3.7	3.8	4.1	4.3
Sundry commodities	1.1	1.2	1.3	1.4	1.4
Interest and penalties	0.7	0.5	0.8	1.2	1.6
Less refunds	−11.0	−0.4	−0.3	−0.3	−0.4
	262.5	260.4	273.4	269.1	295.0
Customs import duties	534.5	645.0	581.4	622.1	676.0
Excise duties—
Spirits	114.1	122.1	129.4	134.7	155.0
Beer	92.7	98.2	102.9	105.4	106.0
Cigarettes, tobacco and cigars	160.5	166.5	165.7	177.2	184.0
Licences	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]	[3]
Less refunds	−4.5	−4.9	−4.7	−5.9	−6.0
	362.8	381.9	393.3	411.4	439.0
Estate tax[4]	84.6	87.1	90.6	88.6	106.8
Miscellaneous tax revenue	0.1	[3]	0.1	0.2	0.2
Total tax revenue	5,111.2	5,237.0	5,533.5	6,366.8	6,832.0
NON-TAX REVENUE—
Return on investments	307.5	311.9	366.4	422.7	436.0
Post office—net postal revenue	183.7	192.8	200.7	230.4	235.0
Other	127.2	137.0	152.6	160.4	170.0
Total non-tax revenue	618.4	641.7	719.7	813.5	841.0
Total revenue	5,729.6	5,878.7	6,253.2	7,180.3	7,673.0

[1]Excluding tax credit to the old age security fund—

	1961–62	1962–63	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66 (estimated)
Personal income tax	259.0	273.7	302.6	431.9	496.0
Corporation income tax	100.1	115.2	115.7	145.2	151.0
Sales tax	284.9	302.2	331.8	383.2	516.0

[2]Net after deduction of refunds and drawbacks as well as transfers to the old age security fund.

[3]Less than $50,000.

[4]Includes duties levied under the Dominion Succession Duty Act.

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(in millions of dollars)

—	1961-62	1962-63	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66 (estimated)
AGRICULTURE—
Administration and general	4.1	3.3	3.8	4.1	5.1
Agricultural commodities stabilization account—net operating loss	22.0	71.8	122.2	57.1	40.7
Agricultural products board account—net operating loss	4.9	0.9	1.0	0.3	1.7
Board of Grain Commissioners	6.5	6.2	6.7	6.6	7.4
Farm Credit Corporation—net operating loss			1.1	0.5	1.2
Prairie farm emergency fund—deficit	47.7	7.3	1.1	0.4
Production and marketing	41.5	39.0	38.5	41.5	76.7
Payments to western grain producers	40.1	0.1
Rehabilitation and reclamation projects	25.1	27.8	23.7	26.4	32.3
Research	26.8	27.0	27.6	28.8	32.5
	218.7	183.4	225.7	165.7	197.6
ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD		(1)	0.2	4.3	22.9
ATOMIC ENERGY	34.7	63.2	45.9	46.6	53.6
AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE	1.1	1.2	1.3	1.6	1.7
BOARD OF BROADCAST GOVERNORS	0.3	0.4	0.3	0.4	0.4
CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—
Grants in respect of the net operating requirements of the national broadcasting service	76.5	79.0	85.7	85.9	97.0
International service	1.7	1.8	1.9	2.1	2.4
	78.2	80.8	87.6	88.0	99.4
CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION	5.8	8.7	13.5	15.0	19.4
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF ELECTORAL OFFICER	0.4	11.8	11.9	0.6	13.1
CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION—
Administration and general	3.6	3.9	4.6	5.6	5.3
Immigration	10.7	10.8	11.4	12.2	15.0
Municipal winter works incentive program		0.9	26.7	42.8	40.4
National employment service	17.9	18.8	19.0	21.2	22.8
Technical and vocational training assistance payments to provinces	35.7	208.0	136.4	97.9	120.2
	67.9	242.4	198.1	179.7	203.7
CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION	4.7	4.8	5.2	6.2	8.2
DEFENCE PRODUCTION—
Defence expenditure	16.1	17.8	18.1	19.7	14.6
Non-defence expenditure	2.1	1.9	1.9	3.3	9.0
	18.2	19.7	20.0	23.0	23.6
ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA			0.2	0.8	1.1
EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION	5.1	6.4	6.9	7.7	8.4
EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—
Administration and general	28.9	23.7	28.8	32.8	48.4
External aid	53.9	46.5	51.7	81.4	85.7
Representation abroad	12.8	15.0	16.5	17.0	19.6
	95.6	85.2	97.0	131.2	153.7
FINANCE—
Administration and general	19.4	32.3	23.1	22.9	30.9
Assistance re storage costs of grain	48.8	35.2	39.6	34.0	37.5

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(in millions of dollars)

—	1961-62	1962-63	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66 (estimated)
FINANCE—Concluded
Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury	22.0	23.3	23.8	24.9	25.0
Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property	24.7	29.2	31.5	35.7	36.9
Grants to universities	19.4	26.3	26.8	27.3	27.8
Municipal Development and Loan Board			0.1	2.6	30.0
Public service superannuation account—
Government's contribution	46.9	51.1	54.0	55.6	58.0
Amortization of deferred charges				10.0	25.6
Fiscal, subsidy and other payments to provinces	541.2	275.3	254.3	358.4	473.3
Public debt charges—
Interest on public debt	802.9	881.6	954.5	1,012.1	1,052.0
Cost of issuing new loans and annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions	35.3	34.6	38.2	38.2	32.0
Servicing of public debt	0.8	1.6	1.0	1.0	1.0
	1,561.4	1,390.5	1,446.9	1,622.7	1,830.0
FISHERIES	23.1	23.3	23.7	25.6	35.4
FORESTRY—
Administration and general	14.8	16.2	18.5	20.7	22.2
Freight assistance and grain storage costs	17.5	14.4	18.7	19.1	21.0
Rehabilitation and reclamation projects	1.0	1.2	4.6	10.0	16.0
	33.3	31.8	41.8	49.8	59.2
GOVERNOR GENERAL AND LIEUTENANT-GOVERNORS	0.5	0.5	0.5	0.6	0.7
INDUSTRY—
Defence	4.4	8.0	19.0	20.5	25.0
Non-defence	0.1	0.4	0.7	3.3	6.0
	4.5	8.4	19.7	23.8	31.0
INSURANCE	1.4	1.4	1.4	1.4	1.5
JUSTICE	8.2	8.4	9.9	10.9	11.8
LABOUR	30.7	32.8	7.3	24.3	24.4
Unemployment Insurance Commission—
Administration and general	28.0	29.3	29.8	33.1	33.1
Government's contribution	55.6	57.3	59.3	62.1	65.5
	114.3	119.4	96.4	119.5	123.0
LEGISLATION—
House of Commons	6.2	5.9	10.1	11.1	11.7
Senate	1.9	1.8	2.5	2.7	2.7
Library of Parliament	0.3	0.4	0.3	0.4	0.5
	8.4	8.1	12.9	14.2	14.9
MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS—
Administration and general	49.1	47.2	40.7	42.5	56.3
Dominion Coal Board	19.9	20.4	20.6	23.2	23.4
Emergency gold mining assistance	12.4	15.2	15.0	15.7	14.3
National Energy Board	0.4	0.5	0.6	0.7	0.9
Water resources branch	2.4	5.5	10.3	12.1	13.7
	84.2	88.8	87.2	94.2	108.6
NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION	8.7	13.0	12.2	10.4	18.6

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(in millions of dollars)

—	1961–62	1962–63	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66 (estimated)
NATIONAL DEFENCE—
Defence forces, army, naval and air services	1,504.3	1,435.4	1,460.6	1,369.2	1,353.4
Defence research and development	40.4	41.1	46.1	54.5	73.0
Canadian forces superannuation account—
Government's contribution	56.0	58.1	59.7	58.8	58.8
Special government contribution			76.5
Amortization of deferred charges				13.4	16.8
Mutual aid to NATO countries	11.1	25.0	28.9	27.5	18.6
Pensions—payments under Defence Services Pension Act	7.3	7.5	7.9	8.1	9.0
Other	7.4	7.2	6.3	6.3	7.1
	1,626.5	1,574.3	1,686.0	1,537.8	1,536.7
NATIONAL FILM BOARD	5.1	5.6	5.8	6.4	6.9
NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA	1.0	1.0	1.1	1.3	1.9
NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE—
Administration and general	1.8	1.9	2.0	2.3	2.3
Health services—
General health grants and hospital construction grants	49.0	50.3	53.0	56.7	52.0
Government's contributions under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act	283.9	336.7	392.2	433.9	314.0
Other	6.3	6.6	6.9	6.8	7.0
Welfare services—
Family allowances	520.8	531.6	538.3	545.8	552.0
Youth allowances				26.9	46.5
Fitness and amateur sport payments	0.2	1.1	1.6	2.0	2.0
Old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons allowances	51.4	62.7	64.4	74.0	45.4
Unemployment assistance	92.0	96.5	107.4	107.5	104.6
Other	5.4	5.9	6.9	8.4	9.8
Medical services	28.1	28.9	30.6	32.5	37.5
Food and drug services	2.5	2.8	3.4	4.3	5.3
	1,041.4	1,125.0	1,206.7	1,301.1	1,178.4
NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, INCLUDING THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL	38.8	40.6	47.3	56.6	74.1
NATIONAL REVENUE	75.3	78.6	83.0	86.9	95.2
NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES—
Administration and general	62.2	69.2	58.5	62.6	71.7
Indian affairs	50.4	51.0	55.6	64.8	81.5
	112.6	120.2	114.1	127.4	153.2
POST OFFICE	185.0	189.4	206.9	210.5	239.2
PRIVY COUNCIL, INCLUDING PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE	6.8	5.2	6.1	8.2	9.1
PUBLIC ARCHIVES AND NATIONAL LIBRARY	1.0	1.1	1.1	1.5	1.9
PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY—
Publications	1.9	2.0	2.2	2.7	3.0
PUBLIC WORKS—
Administration and general	15.5	15.7	15.6	30.2	34.6
Accommodation services	81.4	71.6	74.3	87.4	108.7
Harbours and rivers engineering services	35.8	29.4	23.6	30.3	36.1
Trans-Canada highway contributions	41.6	33.0	41.3	76.1	80.0
	174.3	149.7	154.8	224.0	259.4

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURE BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Concluded

(in millions of dollars)

—	1961–62	1962–63	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66 (estimated)
Office of the Representation Commissioner			(1)	0.2	0.8
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	60.5	65.4	66.9	76.2	82.0
Secretary of State	3.2	4.8	7.6	21.9	25.8
Solicitor General—
Correctional services	23.9	25.5	27.9	39.0	57.3
Trade and Commerce—
Administration and general	14.3	14.0	15.0	16.8	19.6
Canadian government travel bureau	3.0	3.4	3.9	4.9	6.4
Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition		0.3	1.2	19.5	5.0
Dominion Bureau of Statistics	24.6	11.9	12.3	13.5	15.8
	41.9	29.6	32.4	54.7	46.8
Transport—
Administration and general	5.8	5.9	4.7	7.0	6.3
Air services	150.0	136.9	121.1	131.4	141.2
Canadian Maritime Commission	10.2	31.0	49.8	40.6	49.8
Marine services	48.6	57.8	64.1	64.5	87.2
Non-active assets—
National Harbours Board	4.9	5.2	0.3	7.6	5.1
Railways and steamships	4.6	14.6	30.2	35.4	40.4
Maritime Freight Rates Act	12.2	12.9	13.4	14.7	15.3
Deficits—
Canadian National Railways	67.3	48.9	43.0	38.7	33.4
Newfoundland ferry and terminals	7.3	8.2	8.6	11.1	12.7
Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals	3.0	3.3	3.3	4.0	4.1
Yarmouth—Bar Harbour ferry service	0.1	0.2	0.2	0.1
Board of Transport Commissioners	1.3	1.3	1.4	1.5	1.6
Freight Rates Reduction Act	19.0	20.6
Payments to railways for the maintenance of the rates of freight traffic	50.0	50.0	68.1	68.7	95.2
Maintenance of trackage	7.0	7.0	7.0	7.0	7.0
Contributions to the railway grade crossing fund	10.0	5.8	5.1	5.1	14.0
Air Canada—deficit	6.5	3.5
Canals and works entrusted to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	2.6	2.9	3.0	29.0	10.5
	410.4	416.0	423.3	466.4	523.8
Veterans Affairs—
Administration and general	10.4	10.3	10.0	10.5	10.7
Pensions	177.9	175.9	173.2	180.3	185.5
Provision for reserve for conditional benefits	3.3	3.2	3.2	3.1	3.0
Soldier settlement and veterans land acts	4.6	4.6	4.5	4.5	4.6
Treatment services	47.0	45.3	45.5	46.4	50.1
Welfare services, allowances and other benefits	89.1	95.4	96.4	106.8	116.1
	332.3	334.7	332.8	351.6	370.0
Total Expenditure	6,520.6	6,570.3	6,872.4	7,218.3	7,707.0

Where transfers have taken place during the current fiscal year, pursuant to the Public Services Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act, necessitating the transfer of part votes, such changes as required have been made in 1964–65, but not in prior years.

(1) Less than $50,000.

The Budget—Appendix

ANNUAL CHANGES IN LOANS AND INVESTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(in millions of dollars)

——	1961–62	1962–63	1963–64	1964–65	1965–66 (estimated)
Loans to, and investments in, Crown corporations—
Air Canada	0.2	−0.4	0.4	−1.4	2.4
Atomic Energy of Canada Limited	4.9	−12.5	0.4	12.0	11.9
Canadian Arsenals Limited					−2.5
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation				14.3	14.0
Canadian Commercial Corporation	3.0	−0.5	−4.0	−2.0	4.0
Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition					37.0
Canadian National Railways	72.2	274.7	−28.8	24.7	58.7
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited	−0.7	−0.6
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation	6.2	11.4	6.2	−0.4	2.7
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	190.3	101.8	113.3	221.7	300.0
Farm Credit Corporation	54.2	59.0	69.9	102.4	150.0
National Capital Commission	6.2	9.4	12.1	6.9	10.3
National Harbours Board	6.0	13.8	5.5	1.7	3.7
Northern Canada Power Commission	−0.3	−7.2	3.4	5.4	2.9
Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation	−4.7	−8.4	−110.6
The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority	(1)28.3	(1)22.7	(1)24.9	(1)−6.5	(1)25.6
Other				−0.1
	365.8	463.2	92.7	378.7	620.7
Loans to national governments—
United Kingdom—
The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	−17.1	−17.5	−17.8	(2)19.6	(2)19.2
Export Credit Insurance Act	−15.3	−105.9	−2.3	−2.3	−2.3
Export Credits Insurance Corporation, sec. 21A	5.3	19.6	23.4	33.4	39.0
Special loans to Colombo plan countries to finance the purchase of wheat and flour from Canada	−5.0	−5.0	−5.0	−5.0	−4.5
Loan to India for the purchase in Canada of aircraft and associated spare parts and equipment			10.0	−1.4	−2.1
Special loan assistance—developing countries					6.1
Other	−1.0	−0.6
	−33.1	−109.4	8.3	44.3	55.4
Other loans and investments—
Subscriptions to capital of, working capital advances and loans to, international organizations—
Canada's subscription to capital of—
International monetary fund	21.0	12.6
International bank for reconstruction and development		6.8
International development association	7.9	8.5	7.9	7.9	15.0
Working capital advances and loans to international organizations	−0.1	6.2	0.2	−0.2
Loans to provincial governments	−0.5	5.8	−0.5	−4.8	22.7
Municipal development and loan board				7.6	109.8
Provincial tax collection agreements—advances		13.1	−2.7	−10.4
Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets	−1.5	−2.3	−2.3	−1.8	−1.8
Housing projects for Canadian forces	1.9	6.1	5.4	2.5	0.5
Old age security fund	−17.3	41.7	58.3	−75.0	−25.0
Unemployment Insurance Commission	−67.0
Other	2.5	−0.3	−0.2	1.5	7.6
	−53.1	98.2	66.1	−72.7	128.8
Net total of changes in loans and investments	279.6	452.0	167.1	350.3	804.9

(1) Includes deferred interest.
(2) Deferred interest.

The Budget—Appendix

UNMATURED DEBT INCLUDING TREASURY BILLS AS AT MARCH 31, 1966 AND THE ANNUAL INTEREST THEREON (estimated)

—	Date of maturity	Rate per cent	Amount of loan	Annual interest
			$	$
Payable in Canada—
Loan of 1965 CT 16	1966 May 1	3½	325,000,000	11,375,000
Ninth victory loan P 7	Sept. 1	3	245,202,200	7,356,066
Loan of 1965 CT 20	Sept. 1	3¾	205,000,000	7,687,500
Canada savings bonds 1954 S 9	Nov. 1	3¼	(1)23,320,700	757,923
Loan of 1961 AT 6	Dec. 15	4½	175,000,000	7,875,000
Loan of 1963 and 1964 CT 5	Dec. 15	4½	125,000,000	5,625,000
Loan of 1965 CT 22	Dec. 15	4	150,000,000	6,000,000
Loan of 1966 CT 25	1967 Apr. 1	4	170,000,000	6,800,000
Loan of 1961 and 1963 AT 9	June 1	4¼	275,000,000	11,687,500
Loan of 1965 CT 18	June 1	4¼	50,000,000	2,125,000
Loan of 1962 AT 12	Oct. 1	3¾	100,000,000	3,750,000
Loan of 1964 and 1965 CT 14	Oct. 1	3¾	250,000,000	9,375,000
Canada savings bonds 1955 S 10	Nov. 1	3¼	(1)22,538,600	732,504
Loan of 1962 AT 11	1968 Jan. 15	4¼	250,000,000	10,625,000
Loan of 1964 CT 8	Jan. 15	4¼	130,000,000	5,525,000
Refunding loan 1950 P 9	June 15	2¾	308,581,000	8,485,978
Loan of 1963 and 1964 CT 3	Oct. 1	5	441,000,000	22,050,000
Canada savings bonds 1959 S 14	Nov. 1	5	(1)851,797,350	42,589,867
Loan of 1960 T 39	1969 Apr. 1	5½	80,000,000	4,400,000
Loan of 1965 CT 23	Apr. 1	5½	100,000,000	5,500,000
Loan of 1962 AT 16	Apr. 1	5½	100,000,000	5,500,000
Canada savings bonds 1956 S 11	May 1	4	(1)41,105,600	1,644,224
Loan of 1964 CT 11	July 1	5	325,000,000	16,250,000
Loan of 1962 AT 13	Oct. 1	5½	80,000,000	4,400,000
Loan of 1965 CT 21	Oct. 1	5½	145,000,000	7,975,000
Loan of 1958 T 24	1970 May 1	3½	200,000,000	7,000,000
Loan of 1965 and 1966 CT 19	July 1	5	175,000,000	8,750,000
Canada savings bonds 1957 S 12	Nov. 1	4¾	(1)336,301,350	15,974,314
Canada savings bonds 1960 S 15	Nov. 1	5	(1)375,117,950	18,755,897
Loan of 1964 CT 15	1971 June 1	5	350,000,000	17,500,000
Canada savings bonds 1961 S 16	Nov. 1	4½	(1)293,177,450	13,192,985
Conversion loan 1958 T 28	1972 Sept. 1	4¼	1,267,203,100	53,856,132
Loan of 1965 CT 17	1973 Oct. 1	5	275,000,000	13,750,000
Canada savings bonds 1958 S 13	Nov. 1	4¼	(1)90,017,600	3,825,748
Canada savings bonds 1964 S 19	1974 Nov. 1	4½	(1)851,848,550	38,333,185
Loan of 1959 T 36	1975 Oct. 1	5½	310,361,000	17,069,855
Loan of 1965 CT 24	Oct. 1	5½	50,000,000	2,750,000
Canada savings bonds 1963 S 18	Nov. 1	5	(1)818,813,300	40,940,665
Loan of 1960 T 38	1976 Apr. 1	5½	436,198,000	23,990,890
Loan of 1954 T 11	June 1	3¼	247,046,500	8,029,011
Canada savings bonds 1962 S 17	Nov. 1	5	(1)1,174,623,450	58,731,173
Canada savings bonds 1965 S 20	1977 Nov. 1	4½	(1)878,484,750	39,536,314
Loan of 1953 and 1958 T 5	1978 Jan. 15	3¾	207,911,500	7,796,681
Loan of 1954 T 13	1979 Oct. 1	3¼	343,246,500	11,155,511
Loan of 1962 AT 14	1980 Aug. 1	5½	120,000,000	6,600,000
Loan of 1966 CT 26	Aug. 1	5½	80,000,000	4,400,000
Conversion loan 1958 T 29	1983 Sept. 1	4½	1,992,679,450	89,670,575
Loan of 1963 AT 21	1988 June 1	5	100,000,000	5,000,000
Loan of 1964 CT 9	June 1	5	50,000,000	2,500,000
Loan of 1964 CT 12	1990 May 1	5¼	225,000,000	11,812,500
Conversion loan 1956 T 15	1998 Mar. 15	3¾	197,045,000	7,389,188
Loan of 1936 P 1	Perpetual	3	55,000,000	1,650,000
Three-month treasury bills		(2)4.92	1,370,000,000	49,594,000
Six-month treasury bills		(2)5.15	780,000,000	29,094,000
Special non-marketable bonds (U.I.C.)		4⅝	3,000,000	138,750
Special non-marketable bonds (U.I.C.)		4½	80,500,000	3,622,500
Special non-marketable bonds (U.I.C.)		4⅞	63,500,000	3,095,625
			18,765,620,900	831,597,061
Payable in New York—
Loan of 1949	1974 Sept. 1	2¾	(3)65,087,502	1,789,906
Loan of 1950	1975 Sept. 15	2¾	(3)41,047,527	1,128,807
Loan of 1962	1987 Oct. 15	5	(3)264,864,600	13,243,230
			370,999,629	16,161,943
			19,136,620,529	847,759,004

The interest shown is a projection for one year at the annual rates on principal amounts outstanding at March 31, 1966. Where various rates of interest are applicable during the term of a loan the interest rate in effect at March 31, 1966 has been used.

(1)Estimated.

(2)Rate of discount at tender on March 17, 1966.

(3)Conversion rate $1 U.S.=$1.08108 Canadian.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 30, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS (MÉGANTIC)—AUDITING OF WINTER WORKS PAYMENTS

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of privilege following information I received from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and future Minister of Manpower (Mr. Marchand) and also following a question bearing no. 1,024 on the order paper and in the light of information given in sworn statements by some taxpayers living in two parishes among others which took advantage of the Winter Works Act to complete works paid for with money which the federal government had allocated for that purpose.

From 1961 to 1966 inclusive—the cost of works this year will reach approximately $194,000—complaints have been made to the effect that the municipalities were using funds supplied by the federal government —those which appear in the reply to the question whose number I have already given —to other purposes, so that it constituted a misappropriation of funds and even embezzlement.

Here is how it is done: cheques are given to people who have never worked; they are forced to endorse them and the municipal council takes them back. The individual has not worked but is registered in the books of the municipality as having worked at the rate prevailing in the region under the winter works program.

The same thing happened last year with regard to the construction of the new post office. It happened also with regard to the building materials. Some figures in the books are false according to affidavits to that effect.

In view of the answer given to my question where the last two paragraphs read as follows:

> What are the names of the persons so employed during each of these winter seasons?
>
> What amount has each individual received for the work performed each season during which he was employed?

• (2:40 p.m.)

In view of the fact that, as a private member it is impossible to obtain that information—these are figures which appear in the books of the municipalities—I ask the government to audit the books of those municipalities or to send auditors to check all those facts.

Mr. Speaker, I would like—

Mr. Speaker: Order. For the information of the Chair, has the hon. member mentioned or stated the question of privilege he is planning to raise?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is to the effect that government funds are now used for purposes other than those for which they were allocated, through fraud and misrepresentations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must say right now that the hon. member gave me notice of the question of privilege he has just raised. Unfortunately, he failed to allow for the full hour required by the rules. However, I am ready to overlook that irregularity, since it is only a matter of a few minutes. However, I think I should consider the question of privilege on its merits. The hon. member is raising a point which, I think, is neither affecting the privileges of the House of Commons nor the privileges of the hon. member as such.

I would refer him to page 303 of Bourinot's fourth edition which I will quote in English as follows:

[English]

> In the Canadian house, questions of privilege take a wide range, but it may be stated in general terms that they refer to all matters affecting the rights and immunities of the house collectively, or to the position and conduct of members in their representative character.

[Translation]

As the hon. member knows, according to the practice of the house and under standing orders, the Speaker shall, after hearing the question of privilege of an hon. member, determine whether there really is a prima facie question of privilege.

I would refer the hon. member for Mégantic to section 104, subsection (5) of Beauchesne's fourth edition which reads as lows:

As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

I am not sure whether this question is being raised at the earliest opportunity and, under the circumstances, this is difficult to ascertain.

In this particular case I do not see any breach of the hon. member's privileges or any breach of the house's privileges. That is why, under the circumstances, I cannot accept the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I accept your ruling and reserve the right to put the question later on in a way that will be acceptable.

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF HONG KONG REPORT

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the result of a number of requests from veteran members of the house it has been decided to refer the Hong Kong report to the standing committee on veterans affairs. If I may obtain unanimous consent of the house I am prepared to move the necessary motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Teillet moved:

That the subject matter of the report of a study of disabilities and problems of Hong Kong veterans, 1964-65, laid before this house on February 11, 1966, be referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs.

Motion agreed to.

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that the Agricultural Stabilization Board has been authorized to support the price of eggs by a deficiency payment program for the current twelve month period ending September 30, 1966. The support level is at the national average price of 34 cents per dozen for the first 4,000 dozen and 31 cents per dozen for the next 6,000 dozen grade A extra large, large and medium eggs with a minimum eligibility for support set at 500 dozen, grade A extra large, large, or medium eggs.

The above support levels represent 96.2 per cent and 87.7 per cent, respectively, of the national base price or ten year average. Last year the single support level of 34 cents per dozen, limited to 4,000 dozen, was 94.1 per cent of the base price.

Producers must be registered with the board and must have marketed their eggs through registered grading stations or have sold their eggs to retail outlets as producer-graders to be eligible for deficiency payments.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, the statement the minister has just made focuses attention upon a serious failure in government agricultural policy, one which has been the subject of criticism by farmers across this nation. Here we have a statement at the very end of March setting out the government's intentions for the current year which ends in September. As is so often the case, farm producers wish that these announcements of the government's intentions could be made prior to their year commencing so they could make their own plans and decide whether or not to produce the commodity in question. When such announcements are delayed until their plans have been made, there is little farmers can do to change.

I noticed the statement contained no reference to making this subsidy available on a quarterly basis, as was done in the case of the dairy subsidy, though this is something for which farmers have been agitating for some time. It is true that the price of 34 cents per dozen is the same as was paid last year, and the addition of the 31 cents per dozen stabilization price for the extra 6,000 dozen will be welcome news to the producers.

The one prime fact in this announcement which will be unwelcome news to thousands of farmers across Canada is this requirement setting minimum eligibility for support at 500 dozen before a farmer may receive any subsidy at all. Anyone connected with the poultry industry today knows that it is the small farmers across this nation who are in dire circumstances as far as egg production is concerned. Hundreds of family producers are going out of business, and the policy the minister has announced today does nothing to help these small producers who find themselves in dire economic circumstances.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): I wish to subscribe to the concluding remarks made by the previous speaker, and I wish to do this with all the emphasis I can command. I am sure the minister and the officials of his department are fully aware that it is particularly on the small scale producer that the cost price squeeze is impinging most heavily. It is therefore to be hoped that as soon as possible the board and the government will see fit to reduce the minimum for eligibility for this deficiency payment. I also hope the government and the board are keeping under active consideration the feasibility of including for support grade B, or the lower grades of egg production.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

STUDY OF RIDEAU CANAL DOCKING FACILITIES

Question No. 193—Mr. Hopkins:

In light of current traffic in the Rideau canal, has the government conducted any study of dockage or mooring facilities at (a) Westport (b) Portland, and (c) Smiths Falls?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): (a) Yes, an investigation has been made and the extension of the public wharf at Westport is now under consideration (b) A contract for wharf reconstruction at Portland, Ont., was awarded by the Department of Public Works on March 14, 1966 (c) An investigation is to be undertaken shortly by the Department of Public Works into the request for the construction of a launching ramp at Smiths Falls.

R.C.M.P. MUSICAL RIDE

Question No. 712—Mr. Enns:

1. How is the R.C.M.P. musical ride financed when appearing in Canada?

2. Do the same conditions apply if the musical ride is invited outside of the country?

3. Do local fairs and exhibitions pay for any portion of the cost of the performance?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Expenses for an appearance by the musical ride are assumed by the sponsor(s) commencing from the time it leaves its training centre. Included are the cost of meals, accommodation, transportation and dry cleaning, if necessary, for the members, and feed, stabling, transportation and veterinary care for the horses. The sponsor(s) continue to pay these costs until the musical ride returns to its training base.

2. Yes.

3. Yes. Local fairs and exhibitions pay all of the expenses outlined in No. 1. They are also responsible for providing musical accompaniment to the ride performance.

REPRESENTATIONS BY TRUCKING ASSOCIATION

Question No. 715—Mr. Mongrain:

1. Since November 8, 1965, has the Minister of Transport received any delegation or written submission from the Canadian Trucking Association Inc?

2. Since that date or during the preceding months, has the minister learned that the above mentioned association is opposed to subsidies being paid by the government to the railways to compensate salary increases?

3. Is it the intention of the minister to discuss with the provinces the question of standardizing legislation governing interprovincial transport?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. Yes: the Canadian Trucking Association has made representations questioning the payment of certain subsidies to the railways.

3. Policy in this matter will be determined in due course.

TOURIST FACILITIES, KANANASKIS FOREST RESERVE

Question No. 724—Mr. Ballard:

1. Has the Minister of Forestry considered the construction of additional camp ground sites for the use of tourists and visitors, and the improvement of existing camping facilities in the Kananaskis forest reserve and, if not, will the minister give this consideration?

2. Has the minister considered the granting of permission for the leasing of sites for additional summer cottages on the shoreline of the Kananaskis Lakes and, if not, will the minister give this consideration?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1 and 2. The federal Department of Forestry operates a forest experiment station within the larger area known as the Kananaskis forest reserve; however, apart from the experiment station, the reserve is not under the jurisdiction of the federal Department of Forestry. Since the experiment station is operated for research purposes, consideration has not been given to its use for other purposes such as camp sites or cottages for tourist use.

Questions

REDEVELOPMENT OF LEBRETON FLATS, OTTAWA

Question No. 795—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

Referring to part I of the sixty-fifth report of the National Capital Commission at page 13, what proposals and recommendations have been made for the redevelopment of the LeBreton flats area in the city of Ottawa?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Proposals and recommendations that have been made with respect to the redevelopment of the LeBreton Flats area are that:

In order to improve the foreground to Parliament Hill, the area which can be generally described as consisting of those lands bounded by Wellington Street, Bronson Avenue extended northerly, Nepean Bay, the Ottawa river and Bronson channel, is to be used to provide sites for the construction of government buildings which need to be located in the central part of Ottawa. It is planned that the first government building to be located in the area will be the new headquarters for the Department of National Defence.

In addition to providing sites for government buildings, part of the area will be used to provide the connection of the Ottawa river parkway to Wellington street. Part of the area will be required to provide rights of way for new internal streets and traffic arteries necessary to provide suitable access for the large number of employees that will eventually work in the LeBreton Flats area. These will also serve the central part of the national capital and the internal streets will provide better access to the proposed historic park on Victoria island.

Other uses, such as a small commercial area, office buildings and some apartment or similar residential uses are being studied.

It is proposed that the development of LeBreton Flats be carried out so that the buildings and other works are constructed in a landscaped setting while at the same time making economical use of the land.

CONSTRUCTION OF R.C.M.P. HEADQUARTERS, BRANDON, MANITOBA

Question No. 812—Mr. Dinsdale:

Does the government intend to proceed with the construction of an R.C.M.P. headquarters in Brandon, Manitoba, this year?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): No. The Department of Public Works will however, negotiate on behalf of the R.C.M. Police to have a new R.C.M.P. subdivision headquarters constructed at Brandon, Manitoba, by private enterprise for long term lease to the crown. It is anticipated construction will proceed in 1966-67.

INTER-AMERICAN BANK

Question No. 828—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

1. What sums has the government made available under the agreement to participate in the work of the Inter-American bank?

2. To what countries have the loans been made?

3. What Canadian goods have been purchased by these countries?

4. What Canadian firms have benefited under section 4 of the agreement?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Under the agreement between the government of Canada and the Inter-American Development Bank (concluded on December 4, 1964) $20 million in development loan funds have been allocated for use through the bank for economic, technical and educational assistance.

2. The Inter-American Development Bank has sought and received the approval of the Canadian government for loans to El Salvador and Ecuador. Other loans are expected to be announced shortly.

3. The bank's project preparation has not yet reached the stage where contracts can be let for Canadian goods and services.

4. See answer to question 3 above.

CONSTRUCTION OF R.C.M.P. QUARTERS, GRAND RAPIDS, MAN.

Question No. 839—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the government plans to construct R.C.M.P. detachment quarters at Grand Rapids, Manitoba and, if so, have tenders been called and what is the completion date for this?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): No. The R.C.M. Police is however negotiating with private enterprise to have new detachment quarters constructed at Grand Rapids in 1966-67 for long-term lease to the force.

DUFFERIN-SIMCOE—EFFECT OF TELEVISION TRANSMISSION ON CHANNEL 5

Question No. 932—Mr. Madill:

1. Will a television station transmitting on channel 5 from lot 9, concession 12, Medonte township (approximately ten miles northwest of Orillia) affect the reception of television transmissions from channel 6 Toronto (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Toronto outlet) in that area of Ontario comprising the present electoral district of Dufferin-Simcoe?

2. Would the answer to the above be different if channel 6 were transmitting in colour television?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, in parts thereof.

2. No.

SIMCOE EAST—EFFECT OF TELEVISION TRANSMISSION ON CHANNEL 5

Question No. 933—Mr. Rynard:

1. Will a television station transmitting on channel 5 from lot 9, concession 12, Medonte township (approximately ten miles northwest of Orillia) affect the reception of television transmissions from channel 6 Toronto (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Toronto outlet) in that area of Ontario comprising the present electoral district of Simcoe East?

2. Would the answer to the above be different if channel 6 were transmitting in colour television?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The electoral district of Simcoe East is outside what is considered to be the normal service area of channel 6 Toronto.

2. No.

PARRY SOUND-MUSKOKA—EFFECT OF TELEVISION TRANSMISSION ON CHANNEL 5

Question No. 934—Mr. Aiken:

1. Will a television station transmitting on channel 5 from lot 9, concession 12, Medonte township (approximately ten miles northwest of Orillia) affect the reception of television transmissions from channel 6 Toronto (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Toronto outlet) in that area of Ontario comprising the present electoral district of Parry Sound-Muskoka?

2. Would the answer to the above be different if channel 6 were transmitting in colour television?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The electoral district of Parry Sound-Muskoka is outside what is considered to be the normal service area of channel 6 Toronto.

2. No.

SIMCOE NORTH—EFFECT OF TELEVISION TRANSMISSION ON CHANNEL 5

Question No. 935—Mr. Smith:

1. Will a television station transmitting on channel 5 from lot 9, concession 12, Medonte township (approximately ten miles northwest of Orillia) affect the reception of television transmissions from channel 6 Toronto (Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Toronto outlet) in that area of Ontario comprising the present electoral district of Simcoe North?

2. Would the answer to the above be different if channel 6 were transmitting in colour television?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The electoral district of Simcoe North is outside what is considered to be the normal service area of channel 6 Toronto.

2. No.

R.C.M.P. DETACHMENTS, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 946—Mr. McLelland:

1. How many R.C.M.P. detachments are there in the province of Saskatchewan?

2. Where is each detachment located?

3. How many law enforcement officers are assigned to each detachment?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. 109.

2 and 3.

Detachment Location	No. of Law Enforcement Officers	Detachment Location	No. of Law Enforcement Officers
Cutknife	2	Milestone	2
Hafford	2	North Portal	1
Lloydminster	13	Radville	3
Maidstone	2	Torquay	1
North Battleford	8	Weyburn	13
Radisson	2	Biggar	5
Unity	2	Elbow	2
Wilkie	3	Eston	3
Glaslyn	2	Kerrobert	2
Goodsoil	2	Kindersley	8
Green Lake	1	Kyle	2

Detachment Location	No. of Law Enforcement Officers	Detachment Location	No. of Law Enforcement Officers
Loon Lake	2	Outlook	6
Meadow Lake	7	Rosetown	8
Onion Lake	2	Colonsay	2
Pierceland	1	Craik	4
Spiritwood	2	Hanley	2
St. Walbur	2	Humboldt	10
Turtleford	1	Imperial	2
Big River	3	Lanigan	2
Blaine Lake	2	Naicam	2
Buffalo Narrows	1	Saskatoon	16
Cumberland House	2	Vonda	1
Ile a la Crosse	4	Watrous	4
Island Falls	1	Assiniboia	8
La Ronge	3	Cabri	1
Prince Albert	14	Climax	1
Shellbrook	4	Consul	1
Stony Rapids	2	Gravelbourg	5
Uranium City	5	Gull Lake	2
Carrot River	3	Leader	3
Hudson Bay	5	Mankota	1
Melfort	8	Maple Creek	8
Nipawin	3	Morse	4
Porcupine Plain	2	Mossbank	1
Rosthern	3	Ponteix	2
Smeaton	2	Shaunavon	4
Tisdale	10	Swift Current	6
Wakaw	3	Val Marie	1
Waskesiu	1	Willow Bunch	2
Avonlea	2	Balcarres	3
Broadview	8	Esterhazy	2
Fort Qu'Appelle	4	Foam Lake	4
Indian Head	6	Ituna	2
Kipling	1	Langenburg	2
Lumsden	1	Melville	11
Montmartre	1	Punnichy	4
Moose Jaw	12	Yorkton	19
Moosomin	4	Canora	6
Regina	19	Kamsack	9
Strasbourg	2	Kelvington	2
Bengough	2	Pelly	2
Carlyle	5	Rose Valley	2
Carnduff	2	Sturgis	2
Estevan	7	Wadena	5
Fillmore	1

ARDA PROJECTS APPROVED, MANITOBA

Question No. 966—Mr. Stefanson:

1. To date how many projects have been approved in the province of Manitoba under the ARDA agreement, and what is the estimated total cost of these and how is the cost shared?

2. To date, how much money has the federal government actually paid out towards these projects?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. To November 30, 1965, 75 projects have been approved for the province of Manitoba under the federal provincial rural development agreement. The total estimated cost figure of these projects is not available. However, the federal contribution totals $3,832,660 and in the majority of cases, cost shared is on a 50/50 basis.

2. To November 30, 1965, the total expenditures by the federal government amount to $1,803,927.

*CAUSEWAY BETWEEN CHRISTIAN ISLAND AND MAINLAND

Question No. 997—Mr. Rynard:

Will the government give consideration to a review and reassessment of proceeding with a causeway joining Christian Island in Georgian Bay to the mainland?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes. The Department of Public Works has been asked to make a technical study to determine the cost of constructing a causeway or bridge to service this community.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, BARSS CORNERS, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,041—Mr. Crouse:

Were tenders called for a new post office in Barss Corners, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia, in 1965 and, if so, (a) how many bids were received (b) what are the names of all persons or firms who tendered on this contract (c) what was the amount of each bid (d) what is the name of the successful tenderer (e) when will construction be started?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, (a) One. (b) E. K. Potter Ltd., Plympton, N.S. (c) $37,689. (d) and (e) project cancelled due to high cost.

WHARF AND BREAKWATER MAINTENANCE, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,042—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What is the dollar value of wharf and breakwater construction and repairs to be carried out in the fiscal year 1966-67 in the province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Approximately $3,500,000.

WAGE BRIEF, H.M.C. "DOCKYARD"

Question No. 1,043—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Was a brief presented to the Department of National Defence or to any government department last fall by the Trades and Labour Council of H.M.C. Dockyard, Halifax, outlining a five-year schedule of pay increases designed to bring about orderly achievement of wage parity with dockyard employees on the west coast?

2. If so, was the brief and its contents considered by the government?

3. Was a reply made to this brief and, if so (a) by whom (b) what was the content of the reply?

4. Is further action under study by any department of government with respect to this brief and, if so, when will a decision in this regard be made?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. A letter dated November 5, 1965 was received from the trades and labour council of H.M.C. Dockyard, Halifax, containing this request.

2. The request was referred to the Treasury Board.

3. The Treasury Board considered this matter and, in a letter dated December 14, 1965, confirmed the continued use of the seven shipyard formula for pay determination purposes in Halifax Dockyard. This information was forwarded to the council by the director general of civilian personnel on December 17, 1965.

4. No.

RAILWAY CAR EMERGENCY TOOLS

Question No. 1,050—Mr. Thompson:

Has consideration been given to replacing the emergency tools in railroad cars with ones more suited to the problems which might arise in the event of an accident in the new all-metal cars?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada advise as follows:

The board's regulations require emergency tools consisting of a sledge, axe and saw, to be kept easy of access in case of need. The saw in use, following introduction of steel passenger cars, is a universal steel and wood cutting saw capable of cutting light steel sections. It would hardly be possible to carry hand tools that would be capable of cutting through major structural parts of a passenger car, but the tools carried could be used to break out windows and doors or an interior partition blocking exit and cut light steel obstruction. If there were no tools to break out windows, etc., the lack of them in an emergency would undoubtedly be criticized. The board has received no recommendations from the railways or any source that the equipment for emergency tools should be dispensed with or varied.

R.C.M.P. RESIDENCE CONSTRUCTION, WINNIPEGOSIS, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,052—Mr. Forbes:

1. Does the government intend to proceed with the construction of an R.C.M.P. residence and cell in Winnipegosis this year?

2. Has the government purchased any property for this purpose and, if so (a) how much was paid for the property (b) from whom was the purchase made?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. No. The R.C.M. Police is, however, negotiating with private enterprise to have new detachment quarters constructed at Winnipegosis in 1966-67 for long term lease to the force.

2. No.

IMPORTS OF U.S. COAL

Question No. 1,057—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What was the total tonnage of United States coal imported into Canada, annually, for each year from 1957 to 1965 inclusive?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The total tonnage of coal imported into Canada from the United States, annually, for each year from 1957 to 1965 is as follows:

Year	Quantity '000 Tons
1957	19,419
1958	14,468
1959	14,164
1960	13,515
1961	12,263
1962	12,591
1963	13,347
1964	14,991
Jan.-Oct. (latest figures available)
1965	13,212

DREDGING, MACDONALD'S POND, N.S.

Question No. 1,058—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What are the plans of the government for further necessary dredging at MacDonald's Pond, Indian Brook, Victoria county, N.S.?

2. How soon will this work be carried out?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. No decision has yet been reached on this matter.

TIMMINS—CLEARING OF MATTAGAMI RIVER

Question No. 1,075—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

1. Has any decision been made relative to the clearing of the Mattagami river in Timmins?

2. Have tenders been called for such clearing or will they be called in the near future?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1 and 2. No. However, the need for cleaning the river will be investigated this coming summer when lower water levels will enable such investigation.

MAINTENANCE TENDERS, C.M.H.C. HOUSES, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,091—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the various tenders for electrical, plumbing and heating maintenance work on 69 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation single rental houses at New Glasgow, N.S., Stellarton, N.S., and Trenton, N.S.?

2. To whom will the contract or contracts be awarded?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1.

Type of Contract & Contractor	Skilled Labour (per hour)	Unskilled Labour (per hour)	Materials	Mark-Up on Materials
Electrical Maintenance Work
Lightning Electric Company	$3.00	$2.00	Manufacturer's list price	Plus 20 %
Andrew Marks	3.00	2.00	Wholesale	Plus 33⅓%
C. E. MacCarthy Ltd.	4.00	2.00	Wholesale	Plus 15 %
Plumbing & Heating Maintenance Work
Hayman's Plumbing & Heating	3.28	1.55	Retail	Less 12 %

2. The award of the contract is to be made to the low bidder. In the case of the electrical work it will be awarded to either Lightning Electric Company or Andrew Marks after clarification of material price structure is obtained. In the case of the plumbing and heating contract it will be awarded to the only bidder, Hayman's Plumbing and Heating.

*DOCTORS AND MEDICAL STUDENTS

Question No. 1,105—Mr. Grafftey:

Has any department or agency of the federal government information indicating (a) the number of practicing medical doctors and surgeons in Canada in 1955 (b) the number of practicing medical doctors and surgeons in Canada in 1965 (c) the number of medical students admitted to and the number of doctors who graduated from Canadian medical schools in 1955 (d) the number of medical students admitted to and the number of doctors who graduated from Canadian medical schools in 1965?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The estimated number of "active civilian physicians" in Canada in 1955 was 17,221 according to the Report of the Royal Commission on Health Services. In 1961, the number was 21,290 according to the Census of Canada. Information is not available for the year 1965.

In connection with parts (c) and (d) the number of medical students enrolled in Canadian medical schools in the school year 1954-55 was 968, and the number of doctors graduating in the 1954-55 school year was 950. In the 1964-65 school year, the number of students admitted to medical schools in Canada was 1,135 and the number of doctors graduating was 1,034.

[English]

FERRY SERVICE, P.E.I.—CAPE BRETON ISLAND

Question No. 1,108—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the government studied the question of the establishment of an automobile ferry service between Prince Edward Island and western Cape Breton island?

2. If not, is the government giving consideration to such a study and when will it be carried out?

3. If a study has been conducted, what are the results thereof?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1, 2 and 3. No detailed study of this project has been made, but preliminary review of the costs of vessel and terminals and costs and conditions of operation compared with probable benefits indicated that such a service would not be feasible.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

TREATIES BETWEEN INDIANS AND QUEEN

Question No. 181—Mr. Howard:

Do any treaties exist between Indian people in the Province of British Columbia and the Government of Canada or Her Majesty in right of Canada, and if so, what is with respect to each such treaty (a) its name (b) its date of commencement (c) the signatories thereto (d) the name or names of each Indian tribe or band covered thereby?

Return tabled.

WELLAND CANAL IMPROVEMENT CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,015—Mr. Loney:

1. How many contracts have been awarded by the St. Lawrence seaway Authority in connection with the Welland canal improvement and twinning project to date?

2. On what dates were each of said contracts awarded, to whom, in what amounts, and for what purpose in each case?

3. Which of said contracts, if any, were awarded to firms which were not the lowest tenderers?

4. In each of said contracts so awarded, what firm or individual made the lowest tender, and how much was such tender below the amount of the successful tenderer?

Return tabled.

SHIPS "FORT LAUZON" AND "FORT RAMEZAY"

Question No. 1,122—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1965, has Agence Maritime Inc. of Quebec City, operated the two ships Fort Lauzon and Fort Ramezay?

2. What is the gross tonnage of each of these ships?

MASTERS OF SHIPS "FORT LAUZON" AND "FORT RAMEZAY"

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Howard:

1. From January 1, 1965, to date, was the master of each of the two ships Fort Lauzon and Fort Ramezay duly certificated pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and at all times in possession of such a certificate and, if so, what is (a) the name of each master (b) the grade of certificate which he holds (c) the date upon which it was issued?

2. From January 1, 1965, to date, was each of the mates of each of these ships duly certificated pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and at all times in possession of such a certificate and, if so, what is (a) the name of each mate (b) his rank (c) the grade of certificate which each holds (d) the date upon which each such certificate was issued?

Orders for Returns

3. From January 1, 1965, to date, was each of the engineers of each of these ships duly certificated pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and at all times in possession of such a certificate and, if so, what is (a) the name of each engineer (b) his grade or class (c) the entitlement granted each such engineer by the said certificate (d) the date upon which each such certificate was issued?

OFFICERS OF SHIPS "FORT LAUZON" AND "FORT RAMEZAY"

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Howard:

From January 1, 1966, to date, was the master, each of the mates and each of the engineers of the two ships Fort Lauzon and Fort Ramezay at any time not in possession of a certificate of competency pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and, if so, with respect to each such person by name, what was (a) the period or periods which each was not so in possession of such a certificate (b) the period or periods during which each such person was employed aboard each such ship, and (c) the authority which permitted such persons to sail or operate the ship, and if such authority existed (i) by whom was it granted (ii) upon what dates was it granted?

CHARLES E. LANGLOIS-JACQUES SIMARD—SHIPPING ACT CERTIFICATES

Question No. 1,125—Mr. Howard:

Since January 1, 1966, was either Charles Emile Langlois or Jacques Simard granted any certificate of competency of any kind pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act and, if so, with respect to each such person, what was (a) the nature of the certificate of competency (b) the date upon which each was granted (c) the authority for so granting the certificates?

SHIPS "FORT LAUZON" AND "FORT RAMEZAY"—EXEMPTIONS

Question No. 1,126—Mr. Howard:

On how many occasions, upon what dates and for what periods of time, since January 1, 1964 has each of the ships Fort Lauzon and Fort Ramezay been granted an exemption pursuant to section 137 of the Canada Shipping Act, and for what reasons in each case?

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I would like to mention that I have been anxiously awaiting the calling of question No. 48, which has been on the order paper since January 18. It is a question that should be very easily answered, and I think I should have an answer as the alleged 60 days of decision are long past.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Speaker, on a similar point of order I have had questions Nos. 103, 109 and 112 on the order paper since January 18, and I would point out, sir, that other questions of mine which required much more detailed answers than these have been answered in the meantime. I think it is time some consideration was given to these questions.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Crouse: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, on January 19 I placed question No. 143 on the order paper. While I realize it calls for a lot of information, I do believe it should be answered, because the question was asked in the hope that we could get some idea of the expenditures in the various provinces. I would ask the government to endeavour to give me an answer to this question as soon as possible.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, although I can understand some questions on the order paper require time and extensive research, I do believe questions Nos. 484 and 510, standing in my name, do not require too much research, and I wonder if I can have answers to them?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, last week three of my questions were made orders for returns. At that time I asked the parliamentary secretary to indicate when I might get the information I requested. As yet I have had no explanation in this regard.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Minister of Justice when he was going to answer question No. 577, and he said "Today or tomorrow." He still has not answered it.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, my point of order goes back to ancient times, to question No. 167 which was placed on the order paper on January 21.

Mr. Starr: Get to work and answer the questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, may I say to hon. members how happy I am that most of them are satisfied with the service they have received, and to those who have expressed their dissatisfaction I can only say we will do our best to comply as quickly as possible.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 97 and 103 are acceptable to the government.

I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

ONTARIO LAWYERS SENTENCED TO PENITENTIARY

Motion No. 97—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence between any organization or persons in the province of Ontario and the federal Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General or the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with respect to all members of the legal profession, resident in the province of Ontario, who have been convicted of fraudulent practices and sentenced to penitentiary from January 1, 1963 to January 1, 1966.

Motion agreed to.

TROIS-RIVIÈRES, QUE.—VIEILLES FORGES RECONSTRUCTION

Motion No. 103—Mr. Mongrain:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Board of Trade of Trois-Rivières, or its Vieilles Forges blast furnaces reconstruction committee, the Quebec Minister of Cultural Affairs, and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or any other department, with regard to the reconstruction project of Vieilles Forges (Mauricie) within the boundaries of the city of Trois-Rivières.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DIRECTOR GENERAL OF FAO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the fact that sitting in the Speakers' gallery is a distinguished international public servant, Mr. B. R. Sen, the director general of FAO. I am sure we all welcome him to this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REPORTED STATEMENTS BY COMMONWEALTH SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of reports of a press interview given by Secretary General Arnold Smith of the commonwealth committee to the effect that Rhodesia's action in breaking away from Britain is comparable to Japanese action in Manchuria in 1931 and Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia, and furthermore that a continuation of the Rhodesian situation would probably cause an even more hostile attitude by China toward the west than exists today. Has the attention of the government been drawn to these extraordinary statements, and does the government of Canada agree therewith?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to take a look at the full text of the statement attributed to the secretary general of the commonwealth. I am sure I will find that the full context warrants reading.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I could not be more in agreement, that it warrants reading; but an answer from the government regarding this statement is also warranted.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, so there will be no misunderstanding, when I said it would warrant reading I had in mind that anything Mr. Smith might say would deserve very serious study, because we all regard him as one who has distinguished himself in the performance of his responsibilities as a foreign service diplomat and, by virtue of the office he now holds in the commonwealth, we would want to attach to what he says the consideration which his utterances deserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CONCLUSION OF DEBATE ON MOTION FOR ABOLITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement contained in the Speech from the Throne to the effect that "arrangements will be made for a decision on the issue of capital punishment at an early date," can the Prime Minister assure the house that necessary arrangements will be made so that a decision can be reached by the house on the motion which has been introduced for the abolition of capital punishment?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, steps will be taken during the day, which I hope will be satisfactory to the house, in order that an early decision can be made on this matter and yet provide an opportunity for all those who wish to speak to do so.

[Later:]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam regarding the debate on capital punishment, and I ask it without provocation. Will the Prime Minister indicate whether he thinks this debate will continue before Easter?

Mr. Pearson: I am not sure about that, Mr. Speaker, but I am quite sure that hon. members will be glad to give up some of the days they might otherwise have had during the Easter holiday to debate this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

AUDITING OF BOOKS OF MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and also in his capacity as future minister of manpower? I think the minister is well aware of the question I wish to ask him with regard to the question of privilege I raised earlier.

Does the minister intend to launch an investigation or send inspectors to audit the records of the said municipalities, so as to determine the seriousness of the accusations made against them?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the auditing of municipal records is done by the provincial government. If the member for Mégantic is aware of a case which seems to point to irregularities, I would be grateful if he would bring it to my attention in writing, and I shall have an inquiry conducted.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

EGGS—REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture based on the statement he made to the house earlier today. I should like to ask him whether the government is considering making these deficiency payments for eggs on a semi-annual rather than an annual basis.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to take that suggestion under consideration, but I do believe there are technical impediments to making these payments more often than annually.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Would the minister tell us what was the minimum quantity eligible for price support last year?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The significance of the question is not particularly clear.

[Translation]

It seems to me that this is not a question. The hon. member asked a question requiring statistical data and figures. I do not feel it is appropriate to ask such a question, at least in those terms and in that fashion.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question was not clear. Here is the question. The minister has announced that, this year, the minimum number of dozens of eggs eligible for price support will be 500 dozens. I am asking the minister what was the minimum number of dozens eligible last year?

[English]

Mr. Greene: What is so urgent about that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: He has not got the answer written out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has heard the ruling.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the minister also consider the suggestion that these payments be made on a regional basis, in view of the fact that in the three prairie provinces the producers receive no deficiency payments unless they are made on a regional basis?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a suggestion which I assume will be taken into consideration by the Minister of Agriculture. It seems to me that hon. members are now trying to enter into a debate, or an exchange of views about the announcement made by the minister during motions. The hon. member's question can not be accepted.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—MEETING WITH CHRYSLER CORPORATION PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Industry. Is he in a position to say whether the ministers' conference which was held yesterday, I believe, with the president of the Chrysler Corporation of Canada and other senior officials of that company, resulted in any improvement of the position of the Canadian auto parts manufacturers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that the position of the Canadian auto parts manufacturers is improving daily, but this subject was not discussed at our conference.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the minister successful in infusing a better sense of public responsibility toward Canada into the attitude of the Chrysler Corporation during this meeting?

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Canada-U.S. car treaty was implemented to improve Canada's balance of trade, and in view of the answer given to a question asked by the hon. member for Wellington-Huron in which it is stated that the imports of United States cars into Canada from January 1, 1965 to November 31, 1965, exceeded our exports to the extent of $27.2 million, can the minister indicate what steps he intends to take to improve this situation?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there is a resolution on the order paper calling for a debate on this whole question, which I hope we will be able to begin in an orderly way in the not too distant future. At that time I will be glad to give detailed answers to the hon. members' questions.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Would the Prime Minister tell the house whether the C.B.C. building in Montreal is among the constructions which are being postponed as a result of the austerity program declared last night by the Minister of Finance?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this question should be asked at this time, and I suggest that the hon. member place it on the order paper or discuss it on the adjournment motion.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

REQUEST FOR SUPPLEMENTARY GRANTS TO COMPLETE PROVINCIAL PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the government give consideration to the provision of supplementary centennial grants to the provinces to compensate for the increased building costs now being encountered in completing centennial projects; and I refer to projects such as the auditorium at Saskatoon?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the government allowed or provided for supplementary expenditures in connection with the increased costs arising out of Expo '67, our centennial exhibition, at Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the supplementary question should be considered in the same light as the original question, and both might be placed on the order paper.

HATE LITERATURE

INQUIRY AS TO COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. On Monday, March 21 I asked him a question which I drew to his attention again on Wednesday, March 23, one week ago, with regard to the report of the Maxwell Cohen committee relating to possible amendments to the Criminal Code with respect to hate literature. Last Wednesday the right hon. gentleman said he would answer the next day or the day after. Could he give us the answer now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I apologize to my hon. friend. I should have told him the day after that the report is now ready and printed in English. It will be printed in French tomorrow, I think, March 31, and we hope to be able to table it at the beginning of next week.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CORRECTION OF STATEMENT BY GOVERNMENT HOUSE LEADER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the government house leader, who unfortunately is absent. However, I think I should record this question because it is of some urgency. Yesterday the house leader gave us a reference to January 12, 1881 when he said that Sir John A. Macdonald used the procedure the house leader was attempting to use yesterday. I have just now checked Hansard of that date, and there is no such motion made by Sir John A. Macdonald.

PROTECTIVE STAFF—REPORTED UNSATISFACTORY ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, knowing the compassionate nature of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I am going to appeal to her to remedy a deplorable situation. My question is based on the fact that some 70 members of our protective staff are required to eat, rest, dress and undress in two locker rooms, which are cockroach infested and contain a little over 1500 feet of space. These rooms are without windows and the ventilation has to come from the basement. This intolerable situation has been worsened recently by an order from their chief that the door must remain closed for certain aesthetic reasons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the parliamentary secretary will be pleased to look into the matter.

[Mr. Lewis.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUESTIONING OF DRAFT DODGERS IN CANADA BY F.B.I.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know whether the Prime Minister is in a position to answer this question, but since it covers two departments I direct it to him. Have any arrangements been made with the United States of America whereby agents of the federal bureau of investigation of the United States may enter Canadian homes for the purpose of questioning alleged draft dodgers without the presence of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the consent of that body?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I know of no such arrangements. I will be glad to check into the matter and confirm that answer.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR REPLY TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to page 3257 of Hansard for last Monday, where he is reported as saying he would be tabling an answer to question No. 577 on that day or yesterday.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): I would have been ready to answer the question during the debate. Unfortunately the debate was interrupted. Last Monday I was ready to have the question answered, and as a matter of fact I referred it to the Secretary of State. It should have been answered today.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government intends to initiate any programs that will offset the effects of the budget on the economy of the Atlantic area?

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION DATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, but since he is not here I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance, in his budget statement last night, suggested there will be a readjustment of the timetable for the construction of the Northumberland causeway, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Public Works said in the house about three or four weeks ago there would be no delay in the construction of the causeway, what new date is now envisaged for the completion of this project?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This government which initiated the causeway will certainly bring it to completion. The statement the minister made in his budget is designed to maximize employment during the winter season.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DESIGNATED AREAS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF INCENTIVE PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): My question is for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister consider the advisability of extending the expiry date of legislation with respect to incentive grants and tax holidays for industries established in designated areas?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to look into that question.

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF FREEZE ON APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Since the Secretary of State is in such an agreeable mood today, I wonder if I could ask her when it is the intention of the government to remove the freeze on television applications.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In the fullness of time, Mr. Speaker.

AIRPORTS

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he can inform the house whether construction at the Vancouver international airport will continue or will be cut back in accordance with the plans announced last night.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It is expected to proceed in an orderly way with the construction of the terminal at Vancouver.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO CONFERENCE ON TRAINING OF TECHNICIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): On March 17 I addressed a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration about the appointment of representatives from his department's technical and vocational training branch to the Canadian delegation to the forthcoming commonwealth conference on the education and training of technicians. His reply was that a decision had not yet been made. I believe the composition of this delegation and the inclusion of representatives from the technical and vocational training branch is still an urgent matter. I should like to ask the minister if he is yet able to advise the house of his decision on this matter.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): There will be one representative of the department at the commonwealth conference on training.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

A few minutes ago I directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to the construction of a C.B.C. building in Montreal. My question was ruled out of order while a similar question put by my colleague from Vancouver regarding the Vancouver harbour was ruled in order.

Mr. Speaker: I think that the point raised by the hon. member is certainly valid and I shall allow him to put his question now.

Mr. Ricard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if the construction project of a C.B.C building, in Montreal, is among the 10 per cent which have been postponed as a result of the austerity program declared last night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is the government's intention to proceed with this building in an orderly way.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the earlier questions about the C.B.C. building in Montreal and Vancouver international airport, I wonder whether the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport could say whether they are going to proceed at half speed, three quarter speed or full speed with these two projects. What does "orderly" mean?

BANK ACT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): In the absence of the Minister of Finance may I direct this question to the Prime Minister, since I am sure it relates to a decision of council. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance indicated he would be putting the motion on the order paper with regard to the revision of the Bank Act after he had delivered his budget speech, is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate when we may see that motion as well as the revised terms of the Bank Act?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope that resolution will be on the order paper before long. I cannot give any assurance when we will reach the discussion of the resolution or the bill based upon it. This will depend on the progress we make with other matters.

FREIGHT RATES

LUMBER—APPLICATION FOR INCREASE ON SHIPMENTS FROM NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that some six months ago the Board of Transport Commissioners deferred for a period of six months their ruling on granting permission to the railways to increase freight rates on lumber shipments from northwestern Ontario to eastern Canada, and in view of the fact such a decision is imminent and will be important to the economy of northwestern Ontario, can the minister tell us where this matter stands now?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I had inquiries made quite recently about the matter, and I think a decision can be expected very shortly. However, I shall try to advise the hon. gentleman in more detail later.

[Mr. Pearson.]

TRADE

COPPER—APPLICATIONS FOR EXPORT OF NEWFOUNDLAND CONCENTRATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I regret not having given him notice of the question, but I am sure he has all the information at his finger tips. Due to the world shortage of copper, and restrictions on exports, can the minister advise whether any requests have been received for export permits for Newfoundland produced copper concentrates?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE BY U.S. OF F-5 FIGHTER PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the report true that the United States government has reversed its stand and will buy the Northrop F-5 fighter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there have been press reports to indicate that this may happen, but this is a decision which would be for the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has some reservations about the question that has been asked. The hon. member asked whether the report was true. It cannot be a question of urgency, certainly, in the way it was asked.

[Translation]

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

POSSIBLE DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF CULTURAL CENTRES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Could she tell the house, with regard to the budget presented last night, whether the construction of our cultural centres in order to celebrate the Centennial of Confederation, will be postponed?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the concern being felt and expressed by old age pensioners following last night's budget, can the Prime Minister be any more precise as to when government legislation respecting pensions will be on the order paper?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect that the resolution with regard to the Canada Assistance Plan will be on the order paper early next week.

AGRICULTURE

NOVA SCOTIA—JET PLANES ENDANGERING RAISING OF MINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I would ask the minister whether he has received any protests from western Nova Scotia re jet planes, reputedly from bases in Maine, breaking the sound barrier over Digby and Yarmouth counties where mink raising is an important industry, and where the ranch developing the world famous jet black mink is situated? If so, has he or have any of his colleagues in the cabinet been able to make arrangements so that during the early days of April, when the mink kittens are being born, the sonic booms will be avoided? The mink, a very nervous animal at any time, is particularly so at the birthing period and disturbances such as sonic booms can cause the mothers to eat their young.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made his representations, which I trust will be taken into account by the minister responsible.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to provide salaries for two additional judges of the Supreme Court of Ontario, three additional judges of the Superior Court of Quebec, one additional judge of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, one additional judge of the County Court of Ontario, and one additional judge of the District Court of Alberta.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, this resolution is preliminary to authorizing the provision of salaries for eight additional judges in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Alberta pursuant to requests received from the authorities of the provinces concerned.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether the appropriate legislation has been passed by each of the provinces concerned?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Chairman, the judicature legislation has been passed by all of the provinces except Quebec and I understand that Quebec will pass the legislation during the course of this week.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All except Quebec have in fact enacted the legislation?

Mr. Cardin: That is correct.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I happen to know about the situation in New Brunswick where another judge is urgently required. I have been a member of this house now for just four years and each year we seem to make amendments to the Judges Act in a rather piecemeal fashion in order to add judges to various jurisdictions. Never in my memory have we considered the fundamental problem raised by the provision of extra judges.

I have a question on the order paper which deals with the number of judges who have been involved in various boards and commissions. I am thinking now mainly of provincial boards, but such boards are also appointed in the federal domain.

I am also wondering what steps are being taken by the government to do something about the salaries of judges. I realize that the Minister of Justice and the President of the Privy Council have had what has been said to be a very worthwhile meeting—I do not know whether you would call it a meeting with a trade union on the grand scale but let me refer to it as an association of judges—as a result of which certain changes were recommended in salaries, retirement benefits, income tax and so on.

I think it is also time that we as a parliament faced the problem of judges who retire and then return to practice. I know my hon. colleague from Carleton has a resolution on the order paper about this question. I do not think I am being partisan when I say that many members of the profession deplore the fact that retired judges do return to practice before, in many instances, the very courts of which they were members.

I think this is a situation which must be faced up to by the government and the department. Now that judges' retirement benefits are more in line with those of the rest of the community, I personally deplore the fact that any retired judge should go back to private practice. I think this is a very delicate problem involving ethics and one which judges should not have to face. It is also one which the legal profession should not have to consider either.

I want to change the subject for a minute and recall to the committee the case of the present Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, who was a distinguished premier of that province. He became Chief Justice of the province, and on the day he became 75 he retired and had to drop his title, becoming plain "Mr." again until such time as the government saw fit to honour him by making him Lieutenant Governor of the province.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I think that retired judges should carry the title "honourable" for the end of their days. I also think that retired judges should not plead before any court in Canada. If that means that we have to raise the retirement annuities, then this country should face this fact. I think it is time that we faced the matter of judges' salaries, privileges and so on. Each time some of us have spoken about this we have been told, "Oh, well, they need a judge in New Brunswick, and one in Alberta. Perhaps next year this can be considered." I think what I raise ought to be considered now. I should like to see a fundamental revision of the Judges Act. If it were provided that judges should carry their full emoluments until death I would be in favour of that. Let us make some fundamental decision with respect to our judiciary so that they can carry their duties with the dignity they ought to be endowed with. Judges are part of the process of government.

In spite of sniping attacks made occasionally against judges I think we in Canada can be very proud of the fact that our judiciary is of a very high standard. I think we have an obligation to continue that high standard by making such that for such things as salaries and other emoluments, titles and so on, judges do not have to attend upon the minister with submissions.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the house will give ready agreement to this resolution, and to the bill which will follow concerning the appointment of additional judges. They are undoubtedly required. As the volume of business in this country grows and as the population grows more and more cases are heard in court, and certainly we do need more judges. In addition to judges who sit in court there are those who are employed on royal commissions and judicial inquiries of various kinds which adds to the requirement for people on the bench.

I do not know if what I am about to say will be considered by the hon. member for Royal as a sniping attack on the judiciary but I intend to make reference to the judiciary of this country. I imagine that the men who will be appointed to the bench following the passage of the bill to come before the house will be appointed in the usual fashion. They will be supporters of the government in power and there is very little likelihood that anybody else but such supporters will be appointed.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Prittie: I think I hear a joker among hon. members across the way. What I have referred to constitutes a very real problem in Canada. This is not to say that we have not had excellent judges in this country as a result of this system of appointment. We have had good judges. However, recent events, and I do not mean in the last few months but in the last three or four years, have provided evidence that persons not fitted to be appointed have been appointed to the bench. This is not a problem simply because I bring it up. It has been faced by a number of the provincial bar associations and I am surprised that the hon. member for Royal has not said something about that.

The hon. member for Royal has had a good deal of legal experience. He is something of a reforming Tory, and I thought he might have turned his attention to the particular problem of judicial appointment. I say that the principle of appointments under the present system is entirely wrong. The principle that only supporters of the government will be appointed to the bench is wrong. I know I shall probably hear somebody say, "You are just jealous." Personally I am not jealous. I am not eligible for such an appointment in any event. What I do say is that the present practice in Canada results in many intelligent persons who are supporters of other political parties than that of the government in power being precluded from these appointments.

The men who are to fill these judicial appointments should be of the very highest calibre. They are men who will deal with the lives of people, with important questions of property and with large amounts of money. We ought to do everything we possibly can to get the very best lawyers in this country when these appointments are made.

If anybody thinks that my remarks constitute severe criticism of the present system, let me point out some other criticisms which have been made in this connection. I should like to refer to an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on May 19 of last year. The article is headed: "Professor Assails System of 'Party Hacks' Naming Judges". The dateline is Calgary and the article reads as follows:

> Judicial appointments in Canada are a national disgrace because crass poltical patronage prevails over merit and ability, a University of Alberta law professor said here yesterday.
>
> In a scathing attack on Canada's system of appointing judges of the superior, district and county courts, Professor William H. Angus of Edmonton declared that persons of political persuasions other than that of the party in power, as well as independents who do not actively engage in politics, are almost automatically eliminated.
>
> Because the federal government makes the appointment, it is compelled to rely on the advice of the party organization in the province, he said.
>
> "As a consequence, party hacks are in a position to exert the strongest influence when an opening on the bench appears. The result is a truly disgusting performance of influence peddling, furtive lobbying and political machination of the lowest order as the carpetbaggers vie for favor."

The article continues:

> Canadians, he said, generally look down on election of judges—as is done in some parts of the United States—as carrying democracy too far. But seldom do we stop to consider that Canadian judges are very often candidates who have been rejected by the electorate."
>
> The gravest deficiency of the Canadian method of appointing judges is its harmful effect on the administration of justice. "Today in Canada it is not an exaggeration to say that the proper administration of justice is threatened by judicial mediocracy and incompetence."

Others than Professor Angus have pointed out this problem. A number of bar associations have also pointed it out, and I am sorry that I do not have their resolutions in front of me. It seems to me that recently the Bar Association of Ontario made some useful suggestions in this connection. I believe the bar association resolutions are all of a similar type. They suggest that the government consult a committee of the bar association of the particular province in which the appointment is to be made and select from nominees of the association in the making of appointments to the bench. This is not to say that persons who are supporters of the government in power should not be considered; certainly they should be. Some of the best people in this country are engaged in politics. I have to say that because I am surrounded by them.

One thing is true. We have to look beyond the rather narrow field of supporters of the political party in power for appointments to the bench. As I have said, events in this country during the last few years do raise questions about the efficacy of our method of appointing members to the bench.

I realize that the government is not going to abandon the old system simply because I have said a few words on this subject. Many people in the past have spoken about it. Starting in 1963, some four years ago, there was a great deal of talk about the new politics. The new politics have never been defined. Appointments to the bench, as one of my colleagues has said, have not shown any evidence of the new type of politics. But let us hope that we can get to the point where appointments to the bench and to other bodies of a judicial or administrative nature will be based upon competence. Let us get away from the old Canadian way of simply doing it on a political basis.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in a few words, that the resolution now before the house will be quite welcome in the province of Quebec. Indeed, I understand that its purpose is the appointment of an additional judge, in the Montreal district, who will specialize in bankruptcy cases.

I suggest that this initiative will be highly commended by the Montreal lawyers, because of the numerous technical problems involved in this practice. It is desirable that we have judges who specialize in such a field, in view of technical difficulties which may arise, sometimes in a very special way.

I also want to say a few words about the appointment of an additional judge in the judicial district of Trois-Rivières. According to recent statistics, the number of cases heard from 1961-62 to 1964-65 increased by more than 20 per cent, while the number of judges decreased from three to two. This legislation will bring back the necessary balance in the judicial district of Trois-Rivières, and the general public will be most pleased with this measure, for there has been a considerable delay in the hearing of civil cases in the last few years.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) for this initiative which will be well received by the people in the judicial district of Trois-Rivières, and will give them justice.

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lambert: There is one minor question I should like to direct to the Minister of Justice. The resolution refers to the appointment of one additional judge to the district court of Alberta. I find some difficulty in identifying that jurisdiction precisely. It had been my belief that so far as the province of Alberta is concerned the district court was composed of two judicial districts, one for northern Alberta and one for southern Alberta, that appointment to one of these two district courts was exclusive of the other and that an appointment to the District Court of Southern Alberta had no application whatsoever to the District Court of Northern Alberta.

I do not wish to appear niggling, but if my thinking is correct the resolution would need to be more specific concerning whether it is dealing with southern or northern Alberta.

Mr. Cardin: Perhaps I can answer that question quickly. The additional judge is for the district of northern Alberta and in particular for the city of Edmonton.

Mr. Lambert: The appointment is to the whole of northern Alberta; there is no particular locality. I thank the minister for his information.

[Translation]

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a few words about the resolution now under consideration.

Needless to say that this resolution will be welcomed by the bar of the province of Quebec, but I wish to point out to the minister that there is still a shortage of judges in the district of Quebec.

In fact, in the judicial district of Saguenay, where I practise, as in the district of Haute-Rive, there are about 800 or 900 civil cases pending and that is a source of great prejudice to ordinary men.

There are automobile accident cases which date back four years. They have been on the docket for that length of time and, in the interval, witnesses often disappear. Consequently, when those witnesses cannot be heard, the parties are compelled to arrive at a settlement because the witnesses are dead.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that because the number of judges is too small in the district of Quebec, great prejudice is done to our taxpayers, and I would call the minister's attention to that point.

I am also of the opinion that the minister should study the advisability of lightening the docket, in order to help our people. In my opinion, he should appoint three new judges in the region of Quebec, which would greatly help to solve our problems.

Mr. Chairman, it has too often been said in this house that the political appointment of our judges in the superior courts or courts of appeal was questionable. As a member of the bar, I wish to protest against that tendency to let the people think that the political appointment of judges is not a good thing.

In my humble opinion, and by experience, when judges are appointed to the superior court or to the court of appeal, in short, to any court, they retain, I am happy to say, that feeling of impartiality about the ordinary man. Just because a man is appointed by a Liberal government or a Conservative government or any other, it does not mean that he does not assume his responsibilities when he becomes a judge.

I once heard a member of the house say that the method of appointing judges should be changed, because the present method is unreliable. I challenge that position and more especially, I protest against leaving the public with the impression that the appointment of a new judge is often unsatisfactory.

I think our governments appoint judges mainly because of the appointee's experience and legal knowledge. I also believe that in addition to that knowledge, a judge must equally be aware of the problems facing our taxpayers. He must have been in touch with the people and, in my opinion, a former member of parliament and government member surely has greater competence, because in addition to his awareness of the people's problems, he knows the problems of the parties involved, which would prove useful to him when called upon to administer justice.

I am not suggesting that the government should not intervene when certain judges behave in a manner derogatory to their profession or their status. But nevertheless, I do want to point out that if we were always to select judges outside the political field, our appointments would not necessarily be excellent, because besides being a theorician, a judge must also be a practitioner and know at first hand the problems of the people.

I also wish to point out to the minister that he might consider the possibility of changing the method of removing a judge from office.

At the present time, the act provides that, to dismiss a judge, a petition has to be approved unanimously by both houses, that is, the House of Commons and the Senate. Now, such a procedure is extremely difficult and complicated. I do not think it has been used very often in the political history of our country. As a matter of fact, if I am not mistaken, it was only used once.

Therefore, I would ask the minister to consider the possibility of amending the removal procedure, because the government is sometimes faced with a grave problem when a judge repeatedly commits acts that are not in keeping with his functions. In such a case, the government must submit a petition to both houses, in order to dismiss the judge. I should like to see the act amended so that the bar of a province could present to the governor in council a petition, signed by the majority of its members, for the removal of a judge who had committed acts not in keeping with his functions and so that the governor in council could be empowered to deal with such a petition.

I would like it to be possible for the governor in council to be called upon, once a serious inquiry has been made with the Bar of each province, to issue an order in council to remove the judge concerned from office.

Mr. Chairman, that resolution is well looked upon and will be welcomed by the Bar of the province of Quebec. I would like the minister to take into account my remarks about the appointment of judges to our various courts.

[English]

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks with regard to this resolution. In so doing it seems to me I shall disagree with my hon. friend from Charlevoix and agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I have spoken to many members of the bar across Canada and particularly in my province and many of them have expressed to me a desire to see something done about appointing judges on the basis of merit rather than on the basis of political allegiance. They feel, and I believe honestly, that this would not interfere with those active in politics because naturally the good ones would be appointed anyway, and it was never intended by members of the bar to suggest that there was anything radically wrong with the judges we have today. We have many fine ones, but those of us who are not members of the legal profession look very strangely on a system by which appointments are not made on the basis of merit. I feel it may be a good idea, even though it would be closing the stable door after the horse is stolen, as suggested by my colleague from Charlevoix, to make it easier to remove a bad judge if one should come along. This deserves some thought on the part of the minister.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I may say I am expressing some of the views expressed to me by members of the legal profession who thought it better that they should be uttered by someone not in that profession and who could not be appointed to the bench in this manner. I hope the Minister of Justice will give consideration to the many resolutions that have been passed by bar associations and others regarding what I believe to be a very important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a few words. I am quite willing to admit the principle. Besides, I think that is the one we have always been looking for. In fact, the competence of the candidate for the judiciary must be considered rather than his affiliation to any political party.

However, while I admit that principle, I would hesitate, just like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), to apply it fully. I would not like it if, by acting in such a way, it could be said that anyone who has been very active in politics has become incapable or incompetent and cannot be a serious or objective judge.

I think that, for many years, generally speaking, not many mistakes have been made as a whole in the choice of judges but I want to point out here that the Bar of the province of Quebec, for one, has been asking for a long time to be consulted when it comes to appointing judges. I think that the general council of the Bar, in Quebec as well as in Ontario and the other provinces, feels that it has a general idea not only of the competence, but also of the ability of the candidates to do the work well.

It has often been said, and the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) mentioned it a little earlier, that in several judicial districts of the province the calendar is several years behind.

I wish to point out the number of judges coming under the exclusive provincial jurisdiction. I should like particular attention to be given to this problem, in order to avoid the almost continuous appointment of judges to royal commissions, which relieves them of the obligation to hear and judge cases, so that during periods of six months, a year, or even several years, a judge cannot sit and perform the duties to which he was appointed. These are the comments I wished to make.

I also wish to add that, on the whole, the public has a great respect for the judiciary, and I respectfully submit that the recently created superior council of the Judiciary, without usurping any authority, could be very helpful to the hon. Minister of Justice in choosing candidates who will have the extremely serious and important task of handing down justice.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in support of the position taken by my colleague from Burnaby-Richmond and by other members in all parties. I had thought the minister might have risen and responded to the pleas of hon. members. What we are doing is trying to raise a problem which has given a great deal of concern to members of the bar in all parties and in all provinces, and I believe we can do so without casting aspersions in any way on the persons who are now part of the judiciary.

As the minister knows, the whole method of appointing judges, though it does produce excellent members of the judiciary, has always seemed to put them on the bench under a cloud because the method of appointment is such that it is easily open to the criticism of political partisanship. Even though we do manage to choose excellent people to put on the bench, by following this procedure we start them out under a cloud of political partisanship. That to me seems unfair because I am sure the objective of the Minister of Justice and of all hon. members is to get the highest possible calibre of people on the bench and to divorce them as much as possible from any suggestion of partisanship so that their reputation for impartiality will be unchallenged.

I hope the minister will realize we are quite serious about this problem. He might indicate to us before passage of this bill whether or not his tenure as Minister of Justice will be marked by a departure from the old system and the introduction of another method which will meet those fears respecting a cloud surrounding the judiciary because of the method of appointment.

As the minister knows, the Canadian Bar Association has passed resolutions on two or three occasions recommending that appointments to the bench be made on the basis of merit only without any political consideration being involved. This started as far back as 1949 when the annual meeting of the association in Banff suggested to the then minister of justice that the government consult with a committee to consist of the chief justice of the province, the chief justice of the trial division and representatives of the benchers of the law society in the province before making any appointment to the bench of that province.

In 1965 the Canadian Bar Journal carried an editorial suggesting the appointment of an independant body to which the minister might refer in connection with judicial appointments. Of course, such a committe could not dictate to the minister. No one would suggest that, but some consultation should take place.

In 1965 the Canadian Law Teachers Association undertook as one of their principal concerns a study of the whole question of the administration of justice with particular reference to the appointment of judges. My colleague from Burnaby-Richmond has already mentioned an article by Professor Angus, which was framed in pretty colourful language but which raised serious concern on all sides and, of course, those great organs of journalistic authenticity, the Toronto Star and the Toronto Telegram, have carried numerous articles and editorials dealing with the problem.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I suggest to the minister that he devise a formula whereby in each province a committee can be established, composed of the vice president of the bar association, the treasurer and some other member of the law society, the chief justice of the province and the chief justice of the trial division of the Supreme Court of the province, and that the minister might consult with such a committee in private and in confidence about appointments. After the appointments were made the committee could then comment favourably upon them. It seems to me that the advantage in such an arrangement would be the general knowledge in the profession that consultation was taking place and that appointments were being made without regard to political affiliation. In addition, of course, it would relieve the minister of press criticism with regard to the political aspect and also the result sometimes obtained in that appointees turn out to be somewhat less than the ultimate in the carrying out of their duties.

It seems to me that this is something which can be handled in a purely non-political way. All of us have the same objective, to surround the bench with the greatest possible degree of protection and independence. A real contribution could be made by the Minister of Justice during his term of office by departing from the old way and bringing in this new method of appointing people to the bench. I think this would be a great step forward. It would be a tremendous credit to the minister and it woud be a real memento of his term as Minister of Justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take long, because I do not want to delay unduly the passing of this resolution. As already mentioned, the appointment of three new judges to the superior court of the province of Quebec will certainly be most welcome, first of all by the bar, and especially by the people who, for several years now, have been asking that the number of judges of the Quebec superior court be increased. The number of judges has certainly not grown, in the last few years, in keeping with the increase of population.

In rural districts, especially, the situation has been abnormal; indeed, when two and even two and a half years elapse before a case is heard, it can rightly be said that justice is being denied, and this does not encourage the population to respect the administration of justice in the land.

I remember how, in 1963, I had the opportunity to congratulate the then minister of justice who had attended to the appointment of another judge in the St. François de Bedford district. I wish to point out to the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) that, since we have appointed another judge, delays before bringing a case before a court, formerly from two to two and a half years, were reduced to less than a year. The appointment of one additional judge made that much of an improvement.

The main cause for those delays was a shortage of judges in the province of Quebec. I know that the number of judges and their districts, are based on the province of Quebec, by virtue of the constitution, and that they are appointed and remunerated by the federal government.

I trust that the Minister of Justice will urge his colleagues in the province of Quebec to request a greater number of judges for their province.

Mr. Chairman, we have discussed the appointment of judges. For my part, I wish to congratulate both the present Minister of Justice and his predecessor for the appointments in the province of Quebec. I have heard only praise from the legal profession as to the appointments made by the present Minister of Justice and his predecessor. They were experienced lawyers, respected and trusted by the legal profession, their colleagues and the general public. If such appointments continue to be made, I think there will be no basis for the fears expressed earlier by the hon. members.

I only wish to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice that the salaries of judges were last increased in 1963. To attract competent lawyers who will be a credit to the high calling of presiding over our courts, the salary will definitely have to be raised so as to entice the best lawyers to leave their private practice and to sit on the brench as a service to society.

I would also ask the Minister of Justice to look after the amendment of the Judges Act so as to improve the pensions for the widows and children of deceased judges.

Mr. Chairman, these are the only comments I wish to make at this stage.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has seen fit to put on record in the house an article by Professor Angus which I venture to suggest constitutes a reflection upon the whole judiciary of Canada. I say to you, sir, that this article is so irresponsible and immoderate in its tone that it really deserves no answer. However, I wish to put to the committee that it is totally devoid of reality. The article suggests that judicial appointments in Canada are a national disgrace. I say that the very contrary is the truth. Judicial appointments in Canada are a credit to our nation. Any professor who seeks to denigrate the judiciary of this nation is doing a grave national disservice.

I say to you, sir, that the independence, the impartiality, and the ability of the judiciary of this nation compare exceedingly favourably with the judiciary of any other nation. I know of no other place in the world where you will find a better judiciary than we have here in Canada. When that article speaks about the harmful effect upon the administration of justice, I assert there is not one tittle of evidence that there are any harmful effects upon the administration of justice. That is totally irresponsible conduct on the part of this professor and I regret that the hon. gentleman has given some respectability to his statement by putting it on the records of the house.

I want to add that I never have believed a man should be disqualified from any office because he engages in public service, and I say there is no higher degree of public service than service to a political party because service to a political party is the bedrock of our democracy. If you do not have people of ability who are prepared to serve in our political parties and give a spirit of enthusiasm to political parties, then we will not have democracy in this country.

I think the last thing in the world we should have is the elimination from appointment to the bench of men and women who have sought to give public service through our political parties. At many bar conventions I have engaged in discussion concerning what might be done to improve the technique of appointment. I believe successive ministers of justice have tried very earnestly to make their appointments on the most conscientous basis possible. Undoubtedly the occasional mistake is made. But I submit there are fewer mistakes made in the appointment of the judiciary of this nation than are made in the election of members to this House of Commons or in appointments to a lot of other places.

I wish to express my full disapproval of the outrageous reflection upon the judiciary of Canada by this professor.

Mr. Leboe: I rise, Mr. Chairman, for only a moment to take part in the discussion this afternoon. First, may I say that I am in full support of the position taken by members who have spoken in support of keeping appointments to the judiciary outside of politics.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

I take exception to the statement made a moment ago by the hon. member for Carleton to the effect that this would mean that people known to have political leanings would be denied appointment to the judiciary. This is not the case and that was not the suggestion. The suggestion is that judges, regardless of their political affiliation, be appointed on the basis of their capability and merit. On reflection I think the judges themselves would be the first to suggest to us that appointments be made outside of politics because once put on the bench appointees would be free of being accused of being a Liberal, a Conservative, a New Democratic Party supporter, a Social Crediter or what have you.

• (4:10 p.m.)

It is very important and essential that we give consideration to this point. I had intended to place a motion along these lines on the Order Paper as well as a similar motion in connection with the appointment of individuals to the Senate. When I learned I could only place one motion on the order paper at a time I decided to frame a motion with regard to Senate appointments and that motion still stands on the Order Paper.

I feel that the judiciary can be better served if appointments of judges are made in such a way that after their appointments they can be satisfied that their positions are completely independent, which is not the case when appointments are made on a political basis.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Leboe: Just one moment.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not true.

Mr. Leboe: I am not a judge nor am I a lawyer. I will never be a judge because I have no intention of becoming a lawyer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Leboe: The fact remains that on the basis of plain commonsense and logic the judiciary is going to be in a better position if appointments are made outside of politics. The hon. member for Carleton suggested that it was a good thing to be of service to a political party, and that is true. The undertone of his remarks might suggest that someone who has been of service in political circles would make a better judge. I do not believe that is true.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would take the same position in respect of the appointment of directors to the boards of directors, of provincial banks?

Mr. Leboe: That is a completely different matter. The directors of provincial banks are chosen because of the interest they have in a particular bank. The situation is the same as in any other business and no comparison with the appointments now under discussion exists.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the proposition now before the committee should be accepted. There is tremendous backlog of cases in all our courts as a result of which injustices are caused by delays. With regard to the question of appointing extra judges to the bench I feel that the number proposed is the minimum requirement and that it should be doubled so that cases can be concluded and judgments delivered.

Having regard to the question of the advisability of making appointments outside of politics, I cannot understand what the argument is. We cannot operate in a vacuum. Every single corner of public life is affected by politics and I am one who likes to believe that politics attracts the highest type of public servant. I fail to see why an association with politics should disqualify any man from any position anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. member when he heard anyone in this house suggest that because someone had belonged to a political party he should be disqualified for appointment as a judge?

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member thinks the hat fits he should wear it. I am trying to put forward an argument against any suggestion that the appointment of judges should be removed from politics. I do not understand how any decision of moment in Canada can be taken outside of politics. I think politics demands individuals of the highest character and ability from every segment of our population and in my opinion it is patently ridiculous to suggest that because a man sat for two weeks in the House of Commons he should be prevented from ever taking a position of authority on the bench.

If one took this suggestion to its logical conclusion I suppose it would mean that all individuals associated with politics would be unqualified for any civil service position or to be members of the R.C.M.P. or the armed forces. I should like to think that the experience gained by individuals as members of this house, the highest court in the land, if they had the other qualifications required, would help to qualify them even for the position of judge of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that this small but not unimportant measure should arouse so much intellectual shot and shell in this chamber. However, I appreciate both the motive and the point of the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. At the same time I should add that I must support the proposition eloquently advanced by the hon. member for Carleton.

I respectfully point out that the standard of the judiciary in the United Kingdom is unsurpassed anywhere. There, the Lord Chancellor, who is the holder of a political office, from time immemorial has dealt with appointments to the courts. I respectfully direct the attention of the house to the fact that the Attorney General in the United Kingdom invariably succeeds to the office of Chief Justice if a vacancy occurs during his tenure of office as Attorney General. It is generally regarded in England that active participation in politics is beneficial to the qualities of a judge.

In conclusion let me say that during my 20 years at the bar I have never heard the slightest suggestion that the prior political activities of a judge in any way influenced his judgment. I say this at the same time recognizing the point made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I respectfully commend this resolution to the committee.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General? Is it not a fact that appointments to the bench in the United Kingdom by the Attorney General do cross party lines, which is something that does not happen in this country?

Mr. Pennell: In reply to the hon. member let me say that as I understand the situation appointments are made by the Lord Chancellor and frequently do cross party lines. Such appointments happen occasionally in this country, and I use the word "occasionally" candidly, but I would point out that the Lord Chancellor selects members of the House of Commons frequently in making these appointments.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether it is true that in England the Lord Chancellor, although he makes the appointments, does have a committee outside politics to advise him which he consults prior to making such appointments?

Mr. Pennell: I am not familiar with everything which leads the Lord Chancellor to a decision but I know he is unfettered in his discretion. Lord Hewart, the Lord Chief Justice, was actively engaged in the office of Attorney General when a vacancy occurred in Great Britain and he was acclaimed by members of the bar when he was elevated to the office of Chief Justice. The same was true of Lord Birkett who was a member of parliament when appointed to the high court. I point out that it is generally regarded in Great Britain that active participation in politics is beneficial to the quality of a judge.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a lot of straw men are being knocked down this afternoon. No one has said that judges are influenced by politics or make political decisions. We are complaining about the fact that at any one time judges in Canada are picked almost exclusively from one political party. No one suggests that their decisions are not impartial from a political point of view. Let us be clear about that. It appears to me that the hon. member for Carleton was rather selective in what he listened to because I said that many of the best people in this country have been involved in political life and should be considered for appointment. My suggestion was that we should consider them all and not exclusively those from a particular group. Let us consider many other people who have not been active in politics but who would make excellent appointments to the judiciary. I think some hon. members have misinterpreted the remarks I made this afternoon.

The hon. member for Carleton has taken exception to an article by Professor Angus to which I referred. On another occasion I will quote from a great many more articles on this subject, because his is not the only one that complains about the system of appointing judges in Canada. In fact, there is a whole bibliography on the subject. In presenting a bill on this subject I will cite some of those complaints.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Let us be clear about one or two other things. People who have taken part in political life should be eligible for appointment to the bench. When I said that in recent years there had been complaints made about the appointment of judges I was not referring just to newspaper stories we have read about the troubles some judges have got into. I am referring to the fact that there are judges who are much less competent than they should be. I say this as a result of speaking to a good many lawyers in the different political parties. I was rather shocked when I first heard a group of lawyers talking about some judges and saying that one should try to get a case on the list in such and such a court rather than have it heard by such and such a judge in another court. Here was a plain case of incompetence without regard to the person's political affiliation.

We should try to have the best lawyers appointed to the bench. From what I have heard from lawyers from the different provinces there are a great many people who are not capable of doing the kind of job they should be doing on the bench. They do not get into trouble but the fact is they are not the most able people in the profession. This is the point. We want the most able people in the profession appointed to the bench.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I would not have participated in the debate again except for the intervention of the hon. member for Carleton. He, with his impassioned oratory, managed to shed a good deal more heat than light on the subject under discussion this afternoon. He has suggested that the position we are advancing is in some way an attack upon the judicial system. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. member permit me to say that I did not suggest anything that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond or the hon. member now speaking personally, said was an attack upon the judicial system. In my opinion, however, the article which was read into the record was a serious reflection upon the judiciary. I refer to the article by Professor Angus who suggested that the judicial appointments in this country were a national disgrace. I say it would be a grave national disservice to allow that article to appear on the record of this house without being challenged.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Naturally I accept that correction and I am glad to have the position clarified. As I listened to the hon. member's speech I took the other interpretation from it which turned out to be a misinterpretation. Naturally we accept the hon. gentleman's word. However, he did make a suggestion which I feel should be corrected. He seemed to say that by taking the position we have this afternoon we are somehow suggesting that people who have been active in politics should be disqualified or not be available for appointment to the bench. This is the reverse of what we are suggesting. The point we are trying to make is that the present system is in effect injurious to the judiciary in some ways because it starts judges out in their job with a cloud of political partisanship surrounding them. No one is saying we do not have good judges. No one is saying that people who have been active in politics should not be appointed to the bench. In fact, I am not even convinced that they should be lawyers. Someone has said that if we could make a lawyer into a Minister of Agriculture why could we not make a farmer into a judge or a Solicitor General?

Mr. Pennell: Agreed.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): All we are trying to say is that we all have the same objective, to have the strongest possible judiciary free from any connotation of political partisanship. It is more than coincidental that appointments to the bench, even though they may be good men, always happen to be supporters of the ruling party. All we are trying to suggest to the minister is that for once he take a courageous step and remove the judiciary from this cloud of partisanship. He should devise a system of appointments that will free judges once and for all from the cloud of political partisanship. This is in no way an attack upon judges themselves or upon the integrity or impartiality of those who are appointed to the bench. It is merely a suggestion that we get rid of the cloud that has always been attached to the judiciary in Canada and that we start judges out free and clear of any charge of political partisanship in connection with the method of their appointment.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we have fully aired the problem with regard to the appointment of judges. I should like to direct the mind of the Minister of Justice to the problem of training judges. I was very happy to have the Solicitor General refer to England as an example of a country in which people of the highest calibre are appointed to the bench. In Canada since confederation we have never had any training of the members of the legal profession who have been elevated to the bench. You may rightly say that this does not happen in England either, but the situation is different in England. In that country the High Court of Justice is divided into different branches. We have the Queen's Bench Branch, Chancery, Probate Division, Admiralty and so forth. Each division deals with a different branch of the law. When a person is appointed he generally concentrates on that particular branch of the law.

In England we also do not have the county courts possessing jurisdiction over criminal matters. The civil courts there do not have the same wide jurisdiction that some of our civil courts have. A more important feature, Mr. Chairman, is the division between barrister and solicitor in England. It is only the barristers in that country who are eligible for appointment to the bench. In Canada 99 per cent of our lawyers are both barristers and solicitors. It would be fair to say that not more than 5 per cent of lawyers specialize in counsel work. Therein lies the big problem. When a person is appointed to the bench, in all probability he has been a solicitor and has had very little counsel work. He is not familiar with the law.

The question arises, just how do we train these men to assume their duties? It has been suggested that once a person is appointed to the bench he should, before he assumes his full duties, sit with a judge in a criminal court for a period of time and then he should sit with another judge in a civil court for an allotted time. The reason suggested for this is that he would become familiar with the different branches of the law. If he were to sit on a criminal case, a murder case, in the high court he would get the feeling of the procedure and the feeling of the law. If he were to shift to a civil court he would get experience in contracts, negligence law and so forth. If he were to do that for approximately six months, perhaps he could then take a short course conducted by the senior judges in the provinces with regard to particular branches of the law. In this way I think most of the difficulties that are present today would be overcome because many who are appointed have not had a broad experience in the field. I ask the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General to give some thought to this aspect of the question of appointments.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-160, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Judges Act

● (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cardin moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) is prepared to respond to the representations we have been making this afternoon regarding the setting up of some consultative machinery for the appointment of people to the bench. I would have risen earlier but I had asssumed that the minister would respond.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should point out to the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first, I should like to thank hon. members who took part in this debate which I found most interesting because suggestions were made that will prove quite useful to me, in my capacity as Minister of Justice, and could make my task easier.

I do not think that there is much difference of opinion about increasing the number of judges in this country. The increase in our population naturally requires that we have a greater number of judges than we have now and that they be in a position to administer justice efficiently throughout the different provinces.

[English]

I do not think there has been too much difference of opinion, Mr. Speaker, on the basic point in the bill before the house, which is to increase the number of judges in the different provinces concerned. As hon. members realize, there have been delays in the hearing of cases and delays in bringing down judgments for no other reason than that there has been an insufficient number of judges able to perform this important work in the provinces concerned.

However, I think it should be noted, though most hon. members do realize this, that the number of judges in any province is determined by the provincial authorities, not by the federal authorities. So far as the government and the Department of Justice are concerned, we are always willing to increase the number of judges requested by the various provinces.

[Mr. Cardin.]

One problem which has arisen and is causing some difficulty to the Chief Justices and the Attorneys General of the different provinces is the increasing number of inquiries and commissions which require the presence of sitting judges. This disorganizes the arrangement of the work by the Chief Justices for the different court terms. I and my predecessors have in the past been trying to work with the Chief Justices and Attorneys General in order to work out a plan whereby these inquiries can be carried out without disrupting too much the work organized and planned by the Chief Justices, and these arrangements are working out fairly well.

I was rather surprised that more stress was not placed by hon. members on the salaries of judges. Every one who has spoken has mentioned the need for the best possible calibre of judge available and I think that the salaries of judges are one important aspect which members of the house should consider.

It is true, as has been mentioned, that there have been representations made by the Chief Justices of the different provinces to the Minister of Justice regarding an increase in the salaries of judges so that they may be able to have that standard of living and prestige which we as Canadian citizens would wish them to have. I may say that very serious study has been given and is being given to adopting a system whereby an increase in the salaries of these judges will be favourably considered.

One of the burning questions which has been brought up concerns the appointment of judges. As hon. members can easily see for themselves, there are two different schools of thought on this matter. I do not agree that in the past the judiciary has been affected by the method of appointment which has been followed. I do not agree that the judges are not independent. Some hon. members said that you only have to ask a judge to find out whether or not he would rather be named independently but those to whom I have spoken, and I have spoken to a good many, are completely independent of any political party and their judgments on the bench have likewise been independent.

Nor do I think that we have to be ashamed of our judiciary or of our method of appointing judges. Our record in this country has been as good as, if not better than, any other country in the world so far as the judiciary is concerned. I am not saying it is perfect. What I am saying is that it has been good and that we can be well proud of it.

Personally, and I think I can say this very sincerely, I have been very much concerned about the appointment of judges. I have very carefully read the briefs prepared by the Canadian Bar Association and many other organizations which have spoken about the method of appointing judges. I have also spoken to my colleagues about it and many of them have had long discussions on the whole problem of appointing judges.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Suggestions have been made by hon. members today and I have heard suggestions by some of my own colleagues respecting appointments, but no suggestion that I have so far heard is one that would ensure that better judges would be selected under the proposed system than have been appointed under the system that has been followed until now. There is a constitutional responsibility upon the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General and the government to name the judges. It is a responsibility which should not easily be thrown away. I have not closed my mind to any further suggestions as to other methods of appointing judges and of trying to be sure that the government is given the best possible legal minds in this field, but I must say that most suggestions and recommendations I have heard have not convinced me that by the utilization of any of these suggested methods we would in fact have better judges.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to tell hon. members that this is a question which has been very much on my mind and in the minds of my colleagues. We are very sensitive about it. We want to have, as all members want to have, a judiciary of which we can be proud. We, as all governments that have administered Canada, can be proud of the record of our judiciary.

I want to thank all hon. members who have taken part in this debate. I will take into account the suggestions which have been made and I hope that it will be possible to put some of them into effect.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 3 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 4—

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, did I understand the minister to say that the government is giving consideration, whether active or not, to the salaries of the judges?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, what I did say was that the government was considering the revision of the judges' salaries but not necessarily in this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question to the Minister of Justice?

Could he tell us for which judicial district the three judges will be appointed? Would there be one for Montreal to deal especially with cases of bankruptcy?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, among the three judges to be appointed in the province of Quebec, one will deal with bankruptcies in the district of Montreal, another will sit in the district of Trois-Rivières and a third one will sit on the board of appeal of the Canada pension plan, in which the province of Quebec is participating.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cardin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ADMIRALTY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING DEPUTY JUDGES, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Admiralty Act to authorize the appointment of not more than three deputy judges for each admiralty district and to provide for a certain change in the administration of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Cardin: The statement will be very short indeed. I simply wish to say that the purpose of the legislation is to authorize the appointment of not more than three deputy judges for each admiralty district. As hon. members may know, representations have been made to them and have been made to me that there has been an increase in admiralty work, particularly in areas such as British Columbia, Toronto and Quebec city. It is for these areas particularly, that deputy judges in admiralty districts are proposed. The bill generally covers all admiralty districts, although it is not necessary to name the deputy judges immediately.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the minister how many admiralty districts we now have?

An hon. Member: I think it is six.

Mr. Cardin: I wonder whether I could answer that later?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think there are eight districts now. What we are doing here through this measure is authorizing the appointment of 24 deputy judges. My understanding is that the present situation is that for each of the admiralty districts there is a district judge and that the district judge now has the right, where the necessity arises, to himself nominate a deputy judge.

I assume that this legislation is taking that authority away from the district judge and vesting it in the Governor in Council. Perhaps the minister would be prepared to indicate how many of the 24 judges now being authorized for appointment it is intended in fact to appoint, what the anticipated salaries of those deputy judges will be and whether it will be a fixed annual stipend or will be in accordance with the work which they may do from time to time.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I suggest it is not correct to say that this legislation is taking away from the district judge in admiralty the capacity of naming a deputy judge. This power remains with the district judge in admiralty. The power the district judge now has is to appoint one deputy judge. What we are trying to do is to give him power to name two but not more than three judges in areas where that is necessary, which as I have indicated would particularly include British Columbia, Toronto and Quebec city. So far as the remuneration of these deputy judges is concerned, may I point out that deputy judges are not remunerated by the government but usually are paid fees, as I understand it.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Can the minister explain what is involved in the portion of the resolution which states that a certain change is proposed in the administration of the act? This seems to involve more than the authorization to appoint additional judges. Can the minister give us some idea of what is intended?

Mr. Cardin: I suggest we might do better to wait until the bill is before us before considering this point.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-161, to amend the Admiralty Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. Cardin moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I raised a question while we were on the resolution stage and the minister suggested we might consider it when we had the bill before us. We have given the bill first reading and a motion for second reading has been made but I have yet to see the bill. I am wondering where I can get a copy.

Mr. Turner: The copies are here.

Mr. Barnett: I now have the bill before me. This completes my remarks on second reading.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Appointment of Deputy Judges.

Mr. Barnett: Would the minister care to explain now what is involved in these administrative changes?

Mr. Cardin: They are very minor changes. Under the present act the district judge in an Admiralty Court can nominate one deputy judge. The present bill contemplates giving him permission to nominate two or not more than three deputy judges so as to enable better progress to be made with this type of work which has increased in certain areas of the country, particularly British Columbia, Toronto and Quebec city. That is the purpose of clause 1.

So far as clause 2 is concerned, the sheriffs of the various districts and counties are also marshals of the Admiralty Court. Under the present law they have jurisdiction within the judicial district in which they serve as sheriffs. It is now contemplated that each sheriff or marshal should have jurisdiction in the whole of the admiralty district so that, for example, if a ship goes from one district to another a marshal may nevertheless have authority to serve a writ or do whatever is required.

Mr. Barnett: I take it then that the sheriff of the county of Nanaimo, for example, could in a case which involved a ship exercise authority outside Nanaimo just for the purposes of the Admiralty Act.

Mr. Cardin: That is correct. He would be able to act within the Admiralty district which is wider than the normal judicial county or district.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Cardin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

REFERENCE OF CERTAIN BILLS AND NOTICES OF MOTIONS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have leave to make two motions referring the subject matter of certain bills and certain motions to a standing committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member requesting that we revert to motions? Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty):

That the subject matter of the following private members' bills, now on the order paper, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs: C-26, C-49, C-87 and C-118.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. McNulty):

That the subject matter of the following private members' notices of motions, now on the order paper, be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs: Motion No. 26 in the name of the hon. member for New Westminster and motion No. 31 in the name of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE NEGOTIATION OF TECHNICAL CHANGES—SUGGESTED AMENDMENT

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act to provide that an employer shall not introduce or implement any technological innovation, development, or change which would materially and adversely affect the working conditions of his employees until after he has negotiated the matter with the bargaining agent of his employees, and that if no agreement is reached, the matter shall be referred to a conciliation board as provided by section 22(2) of the act, and that if the employer introduces or implements the proposed changes without such negotiation and conciliation, his employees shall have the right to strike immediately as if the collective agreement had expired and all other statutory requirements had been met.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the report I hold in my hand has a longwinded title, "Report of Industrial Inquiry Commission on Canadian National Railways 'Run Throughs' ". When it was published in November 1965, it quickly became known as the Freedman report, after Justice Samuel Freedman of Winnipeg who was commissioner of the inquiry.

Most important, it was immediately hailed by labour as the great document of this age on the problem of automation and the anticipation of adjustment to technological change. Part of the quality of the Freedman report's impact stemmed from its literate, analytical exposition but much more from the recommendations on how labour, management and government should meet the future. My motion, although it does not acknowledge it in words, is inspired by the Freedman report.

I am a railroader, a long service employee of the Canadian National Railways, a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, a witness before the Freedman Inquiry, and a participant in the strike of October, 1964, which led to the inquiry. In presenting this motion I am continuing a tradition begun by present and previous colleagues of my party who have insisted for a decade that much more protection and planning should be given to smooth the transition of technological change and the damaging social consequences which flow from it.

My motion zeros in upon one aspect of the general problem. It appears to everyone to be good sense that neither government nor its agencies such as boards and bureaus, nor a host of complex formulae, should get in the way of direct dealing between management and labour. So many critics, hostile to labour, imagine that labour clamours for government interference because of some principle. This is not true. An intelligent union man knows that the ideal situation is where management and labour settle differences at the bargaining table by themselves. Much of the vociferous lobbying of government by labour is to seek a fair chance at the bargaining table. In essence this is the purpose of my motion. When management always has the initiative so that it can introduce or implement any substantial technological change which materially affects the conditions the workers face, without any right of the worker to negotiate regarding the change, then the worker is really at the mercy of management.

Railway labour in its relations with railway management is a model of the problems created by technological change. Railway unions have held contracts for most work on the railways for five generations and have an honourable history of good, responsible relationships with management and with the federal labour agencies which have the jurisdiction in this field. They are even more a model because their membership spreads from sea to sea.

Not long after the second world war railway management, led by the government owned C.N.R. and supported by huge sums from the federal treasury, began both to modernize and innovate. The process was centred on the switch from coal burning to diesel locomotives, the switch to a form of central traffic control based on electronics, and to maintenance and rolling stock changes which emphasized machine operations, much longer trains, faster schedules and remarkable improvements in telecommunications.

Regrettably, the railways in taking these bold incentives for change retained and expanded the implicit theory of unlimited managerial rights. In a nutshell this theory, known as the residual rights theory, permits management to make drastic changes in working conditions during the closed period of a contract. Unless a union has been able to get restrictions of a specific kind written into the contract, it has been defenceless.

Management has not needed to negotiate the changes. It has unilateral power. Any of you who know the history of railway union negotiations in Canada know that management, supported by quasi-judicial opinions of conciliation board judges, has accepted this theory.

As Judge Freedman puts it on page 86:

> There is a deceptive allure about the doctrine. It appears to be eminently sane and reasonable. Since the property and plant belonged to management who else but management should run it and make decisions? True enough, if management by its agreement has surrendered a part of its managerial function, that part is lost to it; but the residue remains. Could anything be more logical?
>
> In confession to certain doubts and misgivings about the adequacy of the doctrine for the contemporary industrial scene, the commission must in fairness record that these doubts and misgivings do not appear to have been shared by the great majority of people who have been called upon to deal with it in an official way. A study of decisions in labour arbitration cases shows a distinct numerical preponderance in favour of the validity of the doctrine. To the extent that this body of jurisprudence may be taken as having settled the law it undoubtedly furnishes impressive support for those who hold the theory as correct. None the less—

I beg hon. members to note this.

> —the commission still has reservations about the doctrine. It seems to treat too lightly the changes in labour-management relations which have been wrought by collective bargaining.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Before I return to the question of residual rights which Mr. Justice Freedman said "lies at the heart of this inquiry", I want to tell you something about the crisis which led to the Freedman inquiry. What a story it reveals about obdurate management, a complacent government with its ears blocked and its eyes blinded, and a discontented labour force seething and desperate with a common cause for grievance even though it was scattered in dozens of separate locales from Vancouver to Moncton.

Let me emphasize this. Repeatedly the government was warned by parliamentarians and by union leaders who were frankly somewhat frightened at the surging militancy of their membership. The recommendations of a committee of this house were ignored by the Minister of Labour and by a succession of Ministers of Transport, including the incumbent. The House Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines in 1963, with great unanimity, had recommended, after considering a private member's public bill, that the government so legislate that material changes must be either negotiated or take place within a regulatory framework which set out some formulae for compensation, retraining and adjustment.

Why was the committee so convinced that it gave what is so rare in parliamentary history, approval to a private member's bill? The arguments that convinced them were the arguments that convinced Justice Freedman. As early as 1960 delegations had come to Ottawa from unions and from community representatives of railway towns to protest the casual and unplanned consequences of railway management's innovations springing from the residual rights theory.

Let there be no mistake about it, gentlemen. There were warnings. The wildcat national walkout of October, 1964 in its nature was spontaneous. It had no official leadership; it streaked like wildfire across this nation; it tied up one major railway and it would have tied up another if the government had not guaranteed an inquiry. A lot of pumpkin-wise guys, especially those who write editorials for newspapers, were astounded and shocked at this illegal event. Why did railway labour have to be dragged screaming into the mid-20th century? Could they not see that their archaic practices, their featherbedding, their resistance to change were impeding the orderly development of an improved system? Well, my friend, railway workers, like their brothers in most of the world, are neither stupid nor conservative but they wanted and want a fair shake.

Canadian National management's most publicized invokement of residual rights was in their institution of run-throughs. A run-through is a trip or assignment which requires crews to run through a recognized terminal or turn around point where crews normally change off and the incoming crew books off duty for rest. Run-throughs double the mileage and time on duty of the crews for a single trip.

Obviously the C.N.R. had a policy to introduce run-throughs from coast to coast. Put cleverly, their plans were introduced piecemeal and without much notice. From the first the union officials objected at all levels. Despite their protests run-throughs were instituted in certain places beginning in 1958. By the time the C.N.R. was ready with its second round in 1960, more coherent objections had been formed. I remember coming to Ottawa to protest one run-through planned in my home area. The minister of labour did not listen. He did not intervene to establish a board of conciliation. It took the threat of a wildcat strike to head off these run-throughs. The railway went on with its plans. Demoralizing rumours about changes, about the coming death of railway towns like Nakina and Wainwright, rippled across the railway system.

At negotiation time the railways refused to bargain on the issue or to let any protection be placed within the contract. Management had the initiative, government was deaf and blind, and the men seethed. There were more and more delegations from across the country. Sometimes it would be union leaders, sometimes regional and local union officers, sometimes mayors and community delegations. They came to Ottawa, they told their story, they pleaded for protection, they asked for changes in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and in the Railway Act but to no avail. Thus, when the C.N.R. management announced plans in the late summer of 1964 to introduce run-throughs in late October, 1964 which would decimate both work and community life in Biggar, Saskatchewan, and Nakina, Ontario, the balloon went up. Again there were delegations and representations to Ottawa. The Ministers of Labour and Transport listened and did nothing. And so the strike came and then the inquiry and then the Freedman recommendations. I am going to quote parts of the recommendations at pages 91 and 92 of the report of Mr. Justice Freedman:

> The commission must accordingly conclude that on the basis of the law as it exists today the company does have the right, as it contends, to institute run-throughs. That conclusion at once poses a question: Should it continue to have that right? The commission is satisfied that it must be answered only in one way. The institution of run-throughs should be a matter for negotiation. To treat it as an unfettered management prerogative will only promote unrest, undermine morale, and drive the parties farther and farther apart. In that direction lies disorder and danger. By placing run-throughs, on the other hand, within the realm of negotiation a long step will be taken towards the goal of industrial peace. More than that. Such a course will help to provide safeguards against the undue dislocation and hardship that often result from technological change.

Then, at page 93 of his report:

Run-throughs should be negotiated. It is worth noting that in the United States they are negotiated. That conditions in the United States are not parallel with those on Canadian National may well be the case. The fact remains, however, that American railways are quite able to function under a system in which, voluntarily or otherwise, they negotiate the issue of interdivisional runs. No doubt they would prefer to have unlimited freedom to establish such runs at their own discretion, since no manager welcomes with enthusiasm any restriction upon his sphere of action. The point of significance is, however, that they manage to carry on despite the necessity of negotiation—which suggests that fears conjured up by management about the dire consequences that would result from any interference with its unilateral right to institute run-throughs are largely groundless.

At page 94 the report states:

Non-reviewable discretion to establish interdivisional service is essentially what Canadian National now has, and what it should not have.

Then, at pages 95 and 96 of the report:

In advocating the negotiation of run-throughs the commission has in mind something more than mere discussion. At Nakina and Wainwright the scope of permissible discussion was very much restricted, as the commission has already found. What is required, if the men are not to feel that they are victims of a plan instead of participants in it, is negotiation on a basis of parity. Mr. N. J. MacMillan in the course of his testimony said that negotiation necessarily carries with it a right of veto. The commission has little doubt that Mr. MacMillan was here sounding a warning or alarm. Duly warned though it is, the commission is not greatly alarmed by the prospect of run-throughs being made a subject of negotiation. A power of veto is not necessarily and inherently a vicious thing. It is the irresponsible abuse of that power which is vicious and should be condemned. The term "veto" may have a sinister connotation in an international setting dominated by a cold war. But after all, is it not something which is encountered every day whenever two contracting parties sit down to arrive at an acceptable meeting of minds?

Then, at page 96:

A second reason for taking the risk of negotiation derives from considerations of self-interest. It is surely important to the brotherhoods that the railway undertaking if which they are a part should be viable and progressive. In its economic well-being they have a personal stake. Enlightened self-interest accordingly demands that they should not stand in the way of its development and progress.

Page 97:

There is yet another reason why the commission recommends the taking of the risk. The alternative is worse. If run-throughs are allowed to remain as a managerial prerogative the men will simply continue to feel that they are victims of technology, inert instruments in a process beyond their control. Such a situation is fraught with danger. A mood of rebellion already confronted in Nakina and Wainwright, may arise again. No one wants to see the law flouted. Wildcat strikes are at once a defiance of law and a threat to industrial peace. As such they are to be condemned, and the commission does condemn them. But how is their recurrence to be avoided? Surely not by turning one's back on something which has proved to be a contributing factor in their development and pretending it does not exist.

A change from unilateral control to negotiation would bring it advantages of a positive kind. It would lessen the possibility that the benefits from a run-through program would fall largely on one side and its disadvantages largely on the other.

• (5:20 p.m.)

It would strengthen the operation aspects of the run-through actually put into effect, since the men who are daily concerned with the running of trains would be able, through their representatives, to contribute ideas and suggestions to the common pool. And it would improve the climate of labour-management relations and boost morale by the mere process of acknowledging the dignity of the individual worker and according to him a voice in decisions affecting the conditions under which he is to work.

At page 100 Mr. Justice Freedman continues as follows:

Here then is the commission's recommendation in the matter. Run-throughs, as already stated, should be negotiated. But in the course of those negotiations either party should have the right to refer to an arbitrator the quesion whether the proposed run-through falls in the former class or the latter. If the arbitrator should conclude that it is in the latter class—that is to say, that its effect is so relatively slight that it cannot fairly be described as causing a material change in working conditions—the company would at once be entitled to put its run-through plan into effect.

If, on the other hand, the arbitrator should decide that the impact of the suggested run-through would indeed cause a material change in working conditions, the company would be obliged (unless it could secure brotherhood consent) to withdraw its plan until the next open period. At that open period negotiation could proceed subject to the legally available sanction of the strike and lockout. Incidentally, a run-through plan which is being established in periodic instalments would have to be assessed on the basis of its total effect rather than in terms of its individual stages considered separately.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this point very emphatically. The Freedman inquiry was very comprehensive in its extent. It was costly and time consuming.

Surely in the light of these factors, plus the genuine faith and confidence that was placed in the ability and honesty of this eminent jurist, it is incumbent on all hon. members to sustain his recommendations which in essence are embodied in my motion.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, while I agree with the spirit and terms of this resolution I do not feel it goes far enough, nor do I feel it deals adequately with the problems to which it refers. If we are going to amend the law to deal with the problems of technological innovation or automation—if I may I will use that word to include all types of technological change or innovation—we should do so in a way which will take into consideration the entire problem and provide for a more comprehensive solution. We should consider not only railroading but all industries and commerce where automation is probable.

More specifically, I do not feel that the present resolution is adequate for the following reasons. It does not contemplate action at an early enough stage really to prevent disputes concerning automation. If dislocations resulting from automation are to be properly handled they must be considered when the possible innovation is first studied. If consideration is left until a new contract comes up for bargaining it may be too late to make the proper adjustments.

There is also a feeling by many people that these problems could be more adequately dealt with away from the bargaining table and that collective bargaining is often too much beset by pressures, delays and multiple cross-currents. There is also the fact that the vast majority of the workers affected by automation are not organized for collective bargaining, and something must be done for them.

I should like to refer to an address given by Walter Reuther to a committee of the 86th Congress of the United States on automation. Mr. Reuther said that while collective bargaining has an essential role to play in meeting the problems raised by automation it cannot provide all the answers. He said that negotiated programs must function side by side with public programs, that negotiated retraining programs, for example, cannot meet the needs of all workers who require retraining. Nor can negotiated relocation programs help the employees of a firm which has gone out of business. Mr. Reuther also suggested that in addition programs similar to those negotiated through collective bargaining will have to be provided for the millions of workers still unorganized.

If we are to have a complete, balanced and co-ordinated program then it is necessary that the measures suggested in this resolution be considered in conjunction with other measures, especially those which entail direct government action. To begin with, we must recognize that automation is a good thing for society. In that same address by Walter Reuther to which I referred earlier, he foresaw a rate of growth in the United States of 5 per cent per annum as the result of the introduction of automation and he pointed out that this increased production could lead to many good things such as the elimination of poverty, improved standards of living, improved standards of health, the elimination of slums and increased assistance to underdeveloped countries. But at the same time we must also recognize that automation creates difficulty. It leads to many problems and often leads to labour displacement. It leads to decreases in manufacturing employment, increases in white collar and service employment, industrial concentration, commercial amalgamation, centralization and the desertion of many towns and communities.

Mr. Justice Freedman in his report, which was referred to by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett), made some suggestions about the implementation of technological innovation. I consider the report of Mr. Justice Freedman to be outstanding and progressive. It contains a lot of very good information regarding the changes in society brought about by technological change and automation. Mr. Justice Freedman stated that implementation of technological innovation places a responsibility on all parties—government, labour and management. I should like to refer to a few of his statements, the first of which appears at page 84 of his report:

> The old concept of labour as a commodity simply will not suffice; it is at once wrong and dangerous. Hence there is a responsibility upon the entrepreneur who introduces technological change to see that it is not effected at the expense of his working force. That is the human aspect of the technological challenge, and it must not be ignored.

Later he states on the same page:

> There are responsibilities upon labour as well. Perhaps chief among them is not to use its organized strength in blind and wilful resistance to technological advances. Labour must recognize the constructive role of technology in the general welfare and economic strength of the nation.

With respect to the government he says at page 82 of his report:

> It is only when the economy is sluggish and when government action has been inadequate or ineffective to strengthen it that technological innovations bring unfortunate consequences to individuals.

What then are the other measures which should be considered in introducing legislation of this nature in order to deal with the entire problem? First of all, I would suggest that the government should expand the scope of the manpower consultative service so that it can intervene at the earliest stages to assist in working out solutions to these problems. In the United States the government has established committees representing government, labour and management to work out the problems related to technological innovations. As a result of this automation has been introduced in some cases without the loss of a single job. Some workers have been retrained, some reassigned and some upgraded. This was possible because they considered the problems at an early enough stage.

These committees have found that the introduction of automation can be a human as well as a technical success if certain guide lines are followed. In this regard I should like to refer to a report made by Arthur Goldberg, former Secretary of Labour in the United States, as reported in the New York Times on April 2, 1961. He was referring to the guide lines that are necessary in the introduction of technological change. Mr. Goldberg says that there must be an adequate lead time between the decision to automate and the actual changeover and that there must be sufficient consultation between labour and management concerning employee displacement and job changes. He says there must be a general and honest report to the people directly affected and, most important of all, the time of the change must coincide with a period of employment or market expansion.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In addition to the formation of these tripartite committees the government could also assist in several other ways. I am thinking of worker retraining and mobility. It is true that the government has already taken action on these matters under its manpower program and is also attempting to provide more co-ordination by establishing a manpower department. I feel that this is a tremendous step forward. Many of us will be watching to see the effect of this measure.

[Mr. Allmand.]

The government, Mr. Speaker, must extend and co-ordinate its war on poverty program to assist those areas particularly affected by industrial innovation and change. If the government were to intervene before the changeover and early enough in the process it could possibly take steps to prevent the abandonment of towns with its accompanying uprooting of families and social disorders. Through government assistance it may be possible to keep industries and employment in some of these towns. This may be done by providing better transportation, technical schools and in other ways.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the mover of this resolution. My only criticism is that this problem should not be considered in isolation but along with other measures which are being introduced and which can be introduced in this same area.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I was particularly interested, Mr. Speaker, to find that the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett) is a fellow member who served his initiation in the labour movement amongst the unions which dominate, quite properly, the railways of Canada. While the hon. member for Nickel Belt is a product of the running trades, I am one of those unfortunates who served a five year apprenticeship in what was referred to in those days as "the shops". Perhaps more tragically I am also a victim, if one wants to use that word, of a decision made by Canadian National Railways at the outset of the war in 1939 or 1940 arbitrarily to close what was known in those days as the St. Malo shop, with which I am sure the hon. member for Nickel Belt is familiar. Hundreds of families in Quebec city were uprooted with very little prior notice and told to reestablish themselves in Montreal to work in the Pointe St. Charles shop.

I can remember quite vividly, Mr. Speaker, the emotional impact such a move had upon those families in 1940. We were emerging from the depression years. Jobs were still fairly scarce. We were uprooted from our familiar surroundings and transferred into an area of hostility. The hostility came from the workers at the Pointe St. Charles shop. It was quite normal because our arrival by the hundreds on the local scene created a tremendous disruption in such fundamental things as seniority rights, the dovetailing of this and that job and so on. The fact that my own father died within months of the transfer has always left me with the impression, which I still hold but not in any feeling of bitterness, that one of the contributing factors to his death at the age of 56 after serving 42 years with the railway was the very dictatorial manner in which we were transferred from Quebec to Montreal.

This took place 25 years ago. I like to think we have come a long way from that very bleak day in my life. I am not so sure, of course, that we have. I remained active in the labour movement of Canadian National for many years, as recently as 1952. Like the hon. member for Nickel Belt, I hold that the Freedman report is one of the most progressive reports that has ever been brought before the labour movement in Canada. I feel that in time the impact of the Freedman report will be as great or even greater than the report made by another courageous man not so many years ago, Mr. Justice Rand.

I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to say this before my time runs out, to be attached to the Department of Labour and to serve under a minister who has on several occasions openly stated his respect and admiration for the Freedman report. I say this not because the minister is here. If he did not share this point of view I would not want to be his parliamentary secretary. He knows I am independent enough to resign if at any time I felt he was not working in the best interests of labour.

Those of you who had the privilege of listening to the presentation of the annual brief from the Canadian Labour Congress will realize that a certain portion of the brief was based upon recommendations in the Freedman report. I do not want to read too extensively from the contribution of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) when he replied to the brief, but I quote briefly from a transcript of the proceedings:

> In the same connection might I refer to two other things. The first is your reference to the Freedman report, which I think is an admirable thought-provoking document. Some people criticize it as having gone too far beyond the terms of reference, but I must say I think the commissioner, Mr. Justice Freedman, is to be commended for having brought this problem so much into the open. It has brought it into the light, and it is something that I know my colleagues in government and the officials of my department and the manpower department are all studying very carefully.
>
> In that Mr. Justice Freedman says that the most important thing and the first step should be for the employees concerned and the management of the railway concerned to get together and see if they cannot find, and bring about a solution; I am happy to tell you that, having had meetings with representatives of the railway union—some of whom are here today—and with representatives of management of the railway, encouraging steps are already being taken along that line.

Addressing the Canadian Labour Congress manpower training conference in Ottawa on Wednesday, February 23, 1966, the minister also said:

> During the past few years we have seen some very unfortunate examples of what can happen when technology and automation are allowed to progress faster than the human element can keep pace. We have also seen what can happen when technological decisions are made without due consideration for all those people about to be or who think they might be affected. Not only is there likely to be some hardship for those immediately involved, but like the proverbial pebble in a pool, waves of worry and apprehension ripple across the entire community, the entire district, the entire country.

In his speech the minister also talked about co-operation and said:

> Such co-operation, in my opinion, involves sitting down with someone else, with the desire and sincere intention to work out your mutual problems together. It is the principle of fully and frankly exchanging ideas on subjects which were once considered outside the realms of joint discussions.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I think, Mr. Speaker, the minister made two very important points. First, he stressed in his remarks the very strong impact of these decisions on any community which depends upon railways for its existence. He was talking in a much broader sense and of the very fact that we had no alternative in this country but to introduce, through legislation or by other means, complete co-operation between labour and management. The day has come, if we are to maintain our competitive place in a free society, when management and labour in this country must co-operate before and not after decisions are taken.

Unlike the experience I had 25 years ago, the day has long passed when the voice of labour must be considered as something to be heard after decisions are taken. It is to the disadvantage of management, employers, industries and of Canada that far reaching decisions affecting the lives, the wages and the future of Canadians from the labour class are reached by an autocratic body making a unilateral decision without prior consultation.

I think the present Minister of Labour, with the vast experience he has had in the executive field with Polymer and other corporations, understands this fact, and I am proud that he has said so quite openly in public. I have read into his remarks—I am sure I am reading properly—an indication on his part of a realization that the Freedman report and its implications go beyond the limited scope of railways and railway negotiations. The time must come when the Freedman report is extended to the complete field of labour-management relations, not only relations between the railways and their unions but relations between all companies and their employees.

There is, of course, implied in the Freedman report, and properly so, a sense of responsibility which must lie with labour. There are times when labour must realize the fact that in many instances technological changes render a particular source of employment in a small community no longer capable of competing with other firms and businesses willing to change and to do things in a more modern manner.

There must be placed at the disposal of management and labour certain steps. I hope, if I may indulge in some idealistic thinking, that all the changes in the future which will protect labour, prevent disruption and protect small communities can be arrived at by the simple expedient of sitting down and showing some good will and co-operative planning. Unfortunately this has not been the experience of the past between management and labour, and in this type of atmosphere somebody suffers, in most cases labour.

That is why I think the Freedman report should be required reading on the part of everybody interested in the future of this nation. I am particularly referring to the fact that if Canada is to survive and maintain its present standard of living it must compete more and more for the markets of the world. More and more as we compete the natural aims and ambitions of labour and management become the same. The day has passed when labour and management can make unilateral decisions, because in effect their destiny is one and the same.

I think the government realizes the importance of the Freedman report. I think that its implications and its impact upon labour relationships and industrial disputes are self-apparent. I think the minister and his department are prepared to give and are at this very moment giving full study to this report so that in the very near future they can bring before the house recommendations along the lines envisaged by Judge Freedman.

Perhaps the Freedman report treats of more than just the rights of labour and management. It treats of the rights of the third element in the community—the storekeepers, the shopkeepers and the little businessmen who live in a community which is so dependent on one or two industries or, in the case of the run-through, on the railways exclusively. These people too have rights.

I think that the thinking of all enlightened people today indicates that management and labour do have a common destiny, that they must not go their merry way alone. It is imperative that labour understands that today management is not something designed strictly to take complete, cold and callous advantage of labour. On the other hand, I think that management must understand that the labour force is a partner which is needed very badly, that good will and harmony is to the mutual advantage of both and that strikes and lockouts benefit nobody, least of all the Canadian people.

Mr. Alkenbrack: May I ask the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) a question? I followed his remarks with considerable agreement and with great interest, but in his comments about small industry and small communities, particularly the small towns of Canada, was he predicting the demise of small industry? I ask that question having in mind particularly the tariff policy which this government is contemplating.

Mr. Mackasey: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I am also presuming that an industry in a small community which hires 35 people and turns out a product it is finding harder and harder to sell owing to the activities of a similar industry situated 100 or even 50 miles away in another community, an industry which has seen fit to start from scratch with new methods of production and with a new approach to the problem, will have no choice but to modernize itself, perhaps at the expense of reducing its staff from 35 to 12 or 15 employees. This it must do if it wants to stay in business, and it is one of the vexing problems facing small industry.

What does an industry do in this case? Does it try to go along with 35 employees and produce something it cannot sell in a competitive market? Or does it face reality and modernize its shop even if it means reducing its staff from 35 to 12? At least these 12 people would have a future. It is at this time that the fate of the 23 people left out has to be considered, long before the changeover is made to modern methods.

Consideration must be given to the impact of this step on the lives of these 23 families and also the economic impact of the move on the community itself in which the industry is situated. This must all be taken into consideration well in advance of the change.

What I am advocating is that management should not decide to modernize on a Friday and notify labour on Monday about a fait accompli involving the dismissal of workers after 15 to 20 years service. What I am advocating is complete and early co-operation before decisions such as this are taken in the more realistic light of a modern day, competitive spirit.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett) is an expert railroader for whom all of us have a very high regard. He is probably destined to make a contribution to this house and to the public service of Canada along with some other very distinguished employees of Canadian railway companies. I have found through my associations that members of the Committee on Transport and Communications are broadminded, fairminded and certainly well acquainted with the problems of the employees of the railway industry.

I must say that the Freedman report is a far reaching document. It is regrettable, however, that the terms of reference of the commission only allowed the tribunal to deal with a specific question. It is regrettable that he could not have gone farther and made this report in such a way that it would have been applicable throughout all industry. It is significant that this report deals with the railway problem. As a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications I am somewhat dismayed at the distance between management and labour. As was indicated by the witnesses appearing before that committee, it seems that labour is under the impression that whatever management endeavours to do is done in such a way as to ignore completely the employee as such. There does not seem to be the meeting of minds that is characteristic of a more compact industry such as manufacturing and even mining, I believe. That is perhaps because the railway employees are spread right across the country and there is not the opportunity for closer relationships and discussions with top management that there is in more compact industries.

I said earlier that I am amazed that this situation exists to the extent it does, and for that reason something obviously needs to be done in respect of labour-management relations in both of our great national railways. There is a danger, however, it seems to me, of the government interfering in such a way as to bring in legislation which may have the effect of hampering the development of technological changes such as automation to a greater extent than those changes are now hampered by human antipathy against change of any kind.

For instance, if in 1950 the railways had been required to enter into negotiations with the unions to determine whether it was in the best interests of the railways and of the employees to introduce the diesel locomotive, perhaps this matter could have been rationalized at that level at an early date. However, I fear that this would have led to quite prolonged negotiations because it would have had to be stated at that point that some employees necessarily were going to be displaced. Otherwise there would be no point to the technological improvement brought about by the introduction of diesel locomotives.

If I may be permitted to refer to evidence before the committee, it was early in 1950 that the Canadian Pacific Railway began its studies of the development of their train, the Canadian. That meant that concurrently, of course, there had to be the development of the diesel locomotive. If my memory serves me correctly, it was not until 1955 that the Canadian was established as the C.P.R.'s number one transcontinental passenger service. During that time surely there could have been ample arrangements made to discuss what was going to be the ultimate division of labour along the route both with respect to the Canadian and with respect to the much longer freight trains with several locomotive units being operated by two or three men in the front cab.

If the companies had not been free to study the technology of railway operations without having first received the sanction of the employees, I wonder where railroading would be today. Some time ago I discussed with a railroader why it was that the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National had not adopted earlier two or three-deck flatcars for transporting automobiles. He said that because of the fly ash which came from the steam locomotives of the day it was impossible to have automobiles transported in that fashion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the proceedings but the time allotted for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

Mr. Knowles: You gave it the fine axe.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the business for tomorrow will be item 8 on today's Order Paper, house in committee of the whole on Bill C-145 dealing with commercial fisheries in Canada; item 9 on today's Order Paper, second reading of Bill C-153, to amend the Aeronautics Act; item 5, second reading of Bill C-151, to establish a fund for economic and social development; item 6, second reading of Bill C-152, to amend the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act; item 26, house in committee on Bill S-14, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act; item 12, second reading of Bill C-146, to amend the Northwest Territories Act; item 13, second reading of Bill C-147, to amend the Yukon Act; item 42, the resolution to introduce a measure for the construction of a railway in the province of Ontario, and item 39, second reading of Bill C-154, to implement an agreement respecting taxes.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: What are we going to do in the evening?

Mr. McIlraith: We will take the Science Council bill.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the leader of the house could go farther and give us the business beyond Thursday.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I would be glad to. On Friday we will begin the budget debate and continue it on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. I should perhaps point out to hon. members, in case this has been overlooked by anyone, that this would mean a vote on Monday and again on Wednesday.

An hon. Member: At what times?

Mr. McIlraith: I have forgotten the hour. It is set out in Standing Order 58.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 31, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 31, 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 31st March, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

• (2:40 p.m.)

INDUSTRY

GUIDE LINES FOR CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF FOREIGN COMPANIES

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Hon. members will recall that in dealing with questions asked during consideration of departmental estimates, I indicated my intention to formulate appropriate guidance to help subsidiaries of foreign companies conduct their affairs as good corporate citizens of Canada.

Much attention has been given in recent years to the role of subsidiaries of foreign companies in the Canadian economy and to the difficulties which can arise from the responsibilities of subsidiaries both to their parent companies and to the community in which they operate. Many views have been expressed on this important subject. In recent weeks I have had helpful consultations with chief executive officers of many Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies located in various countries. I have concluded that a statement of what is expected of subsidiary companies as regards their responsibilities in the Canadian community would be welcomed and would be of benefit to all concerned.

Accordingly I am writing to the heads of subsidiaries of foreign companies in Canada setting forth some guiding principles of good corporate behaviour. In the letter I also indicate my intention to ask the larger subsidiary companies to provide periodically, on a confidential basis, information on certain aspects of their operations and financing.

I beg leave to table a copy of this letter, and ask permission to have it printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table this letter and have it printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of letter referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Winters: Hon. members will observe from a reading of the letter that the principles emphasize above all the need for subsidiary companies to strive for maximum realization of their potential and for full participation in, and identification with, the life of the Canadian community. While these principles have been formulated with regard to the particular circumstances pertaining to the operations in Canada of foreign affiliated companies, the underlying objective sought is equally applicable to all Canadian companies.

I trust that this statement of the basic essentials of good corporate citizenship will contribute to a better understanding of the role of subsidiaries of foreign companies in our economy, and will encourage and facilitate their full participation in our growth and development in line with Canada's trade, economic and social needs.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker I had hoped to have been able to see a copy of the letter, but that has not been possible, so any observations I make will therefore be of a general character.

There has been nothing more conducive to disagreement between Canada and the United States than the adoption of a certain attitude on the part of the administration in Washington in the exercise of authority over Canadian corporations which are, in effect, subsidiaries of United States corporations.

The guide lines recently enunciated were of such a nature as to constitute a derogation of Canadian sovereignty. It was for that reason we took the strongest possible objection to several portions thereof.

I recall very well the arguments we had on this question during the days we were in office. One of the most striking was at the time we entered into arrangements to sell wheat to communist China. The then U.S. administration was opposed to any policy of dealing with communist countries, in non-strategic materials as well as in strategic ones, and did nothing which would allow Canada to carry out her policies.

Indeed, the only wheat loaders available were those manufactured by a Canadian subsidiary of a United States corporation, and almost at the last moment word was received that we were not going to be able to secure those loaders.

I saw the then President of the United States and, as reference has been made in one or two books to the events of that time, I go no further than to say that I made it perfectly clear that if that attitude were not altered Canada would have to take the strongest possible action. That was interpreted as anti-Americanism. In fact, it was pro-Canadianism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say to the minister that he will have widespread approval for the announcement he has made. The stand he has taken is one we have long advocated, and which we carried out when in office. I realize that in the stand he has taken, with the wide knowledge he has of corporate business, he places Canadian interests first and foremost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is and has been our attitude, and will continue to be our attitude. We welcome American investment, but we ask that American and other foreign investment in Canada shall so conduct itself as to merit the description that he used, namely good Canadian citizenship.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to commend the minister for these economic guide lines which are being sent out to the subsidiaries of United States corporations in this country. I think this is a great—

Mr. Winters: May I interrupt to say not only United States but all foreign subsidiaries.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Douglas: But as I understood the minister and from reading his letter, it is primarily directed to United States subsidiaries in this country. This is a long way from the position the government was taking in December, when the American guide lines were being described by ministers of the crown as an economic political windfall. I think in his letter to the various corporations in Canada the minister has put his finger on the real problem, and that is that we in Canada do not object to—on the contrary we welcome—companies coming into this country which bring capital, technical know-how and research capacity which in many cases we have not got here.

The real problem, as the minister has pointed out in his letter, is that the decision-making power may be located outside Canada. That decision-making power may be used not in the interests of Canada but in the interests of some other country. I hope the minister's letter, and the questionnaire he is sending out, will enable him to get information that will permit the government to formulate a policy, but I want to point out that the real nub of the question is contained in No. 3 of the guide lines, which says:

> Maximum development of market opportunities in other countries as well as in Canada.

I think the government will have to spell this out a lot more specifically if we are not to have a repetition of the situation which obtained last summer when three milling companies in this country, subsidiaries of United States corporations, refused to mill wheat into flour because it was being sold to the Soviet Union for transshipment to Cuba.

The Canadian government has to make it clear, both to the United States authorities and the United States subsidiaries in this country, that once a corporation is domiciled in Canada, registers under the laws of this country, uses the resources and labour capacity of this country, it is subject to the laws and the policies of the government of Canada.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I think this will have to be spelled out much more specifically than has been done in the letter. I believe it will have to be made clear to the United States government that they had better get over the idea that United States subsidiaries in this country are subject to United States legislation, particularly having regard to trading with the enemy legislation, which has been used in the past to exercise control over United States subsidiaries in this country, which control has often been exercised to the disadvantage of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like, first of all, to thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) who sent us, a few minutes before the house met this afternoon, the letter addressed to Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies. I thank him also for sending us that statement written in good French, and I feel that he deserves congratulations for that.

Mr. Speaker, I analysed the guiding principles of good behaviour prepared by the minister for subsidiaries of foreign companies and I feel that, if those principles are put in practice, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will succeed in solving a lot of problems.

The minister recommends to Canadian subsidiaries to get their raw materials in Canada and I think that, if all the Canadian subsidiaries of foreign companies did that, it could help the economic situation in Canada.

Among the objectives sought, the minister states:

> Where applicable, to extend processing of natural resource products to the extent practicable on an economic basis.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the minister will never stress too much the importance of processing right here in Canada the natural resources which we have to such a large extent in our country.

The minister also asks the officials of Canadian subsidiaries of American companies to use Canadian technicians and personnel as much as possible. I feel that is a most commendable step and that the American companies operating in Canada should take it without delay.

The minister also recommends to give Canadians more opportunities to become part of the financial structure of those companies.

Mr. Speaker, another important thing is guiding principle No. 3 which reads as follows:

> Maximum development of market opportunities in other countries as well as in Canada.

The minister is asking Canadian subsidiaries of American or foreign corporations to try and increase their exports. I think that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) should profit by that recommendation.

If you were to assign those Canadian companies the objective of exporting for an amount equal to that which they send in other countries in the form of dividends, profits and interest, then the Canadian balance of payments would no longer be a burden for our people and it would stop being unfavourable to us and upsetting for the Canadian economy.

One of the main recommendations the Minister of Trade and Commerce should make to those Canadian companies is to assign them the objective of having their exports equal the amount of money they are sending to foreign countries in the form of interest, dividends and profits.

Mr. Speaker, before I conclude my remarks, I do want to join with the Leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Douglas) in stating that all foreign companies located in Canada and using our labour force, our natural resources, in short, our capacities, should behave like Canadian corporations, having in mind, first and foremost the interests of the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, very briefly I should like to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to be commended for setting out these initial guide lines as far as foreign subsidiaries in Canada are concerned. This is only a first step, because I think the success of these guide lines will depend upon the degree and depth of the co-operation he receives from the subsidiaries and their parent companies which control them.

There is one point I suggest the minister might have made more specific in regard to this original set of guide lines, and this is something that should be watched carefully. I refer to the situation which often exists when subsidiaries of foreign companies are restricted by their parent companies in competing for and supplying goods in competition with their parent companies so far as foreign business is concerned. Certainly this restriction hampers our own Canadian subsidiaries and affects our own trade pattern, and is a very important factor in regard to the difficulties we have with our balance of payments.

Again I commend the minister for this step in the right direction, the success of which will be seen as this is further developed.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN ORDER ANNOUNCED FOR THIS DAY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I want to take advantage of this opportunity, if I may, to indicate a slight change in the business of the house for today. I indicated last night that Bill C-145, dealing with commercial fisheries, would be the first item of business today, but we will not be able to take this bill today.

Further, I indicated the sequence for consideration of two bills standing in the name of the Minister of Forestry, Bill C-151 and C-152, in that order. We now propose to call Bill C-152 first, as we feel that this arrangement will lend itself to a more orderly discussion of these two bills.

TRADE

CHEESE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN U.S. GLOBAL QUOTA

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the United States import restrictions on Canadian cheddar cheese were among the specific trade matters discussed at the meeting of the joint Canada-United States committee on trade and economic affairs held in Washington earlier this month.

I am pleased to be able to inform hon. members that the United States has today announced an increase of over 900,000 pounds in the U.S. global import quota on cheddar cheese for the balance of the current quota year, which ends June 30.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winters: Further, consideration is being given by the United States to increasing the over-all U.S. import quota on cheddar cheese in the net quota year by as much as 5.5 million pounds, and to establishing a supplementary quota of 1.2 million pounds specifically for aged cheddar. This would give a total global cheddar cheese quota of over 9.5 million pounds annually, as compared to the present quota of about 2.8 million pounds.

Under the existing quota Canada is restricted in its sales to the U.S. market to a total of 614,000 pounds annually. This amount will be immediately increased by Canada's share of the supplementary quota for the current year, some 200,000 pounds.

In future years, under the new proposal, Canada might expect to obtain access for as much as 1.8 million pounds of cheddar cheese annually. In addition, the special quota of 1.2 million pounds on aged cheddar cheese will be of particular interest to Canada as the world's premier producer of specialty aged cheddar. Canadian producers have won for themselves on the U.S. market a wide acceptance of this premium product.

These relaxation measures are a most welcome step forward in opening up the United States market for Canadian cheddar.

Mr. Speaker, I understand this announcement is being made simultaneously in Washington.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the announcement today of the increase in the quota on cheese going into the United States is, I hope, the end of a long debate between the two countries. In my view the imposition of quotas by the United States on cheese going into that country was a definite infringement of the GATT principle. After long years of negotiation they have finally accepted the idea that our share should be increased.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The second point I want to make in regard to the quota on cheddar cheese is this. When the turkey problem arose in Canada some years ago the Americans protested on the ground that this was in breach of GATT. The question that comes to my mind is, does this mean that the two countries are beginning to get rid of all those breaches of GATT which have accumulated between us, or is this just an isolated policy?

NATIONAL FRUIT OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR DESIGNATION OF McINTOSH APPLE

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-162, respecting the national fruit of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harley: Mr. Speaker, this bill would name the McIntosh apple the national fruit of Canada. This fruit is a native product of Canada, and it is suitable that it receive this recognition.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—RESOLUTION RESPECTING POSSIBLE DELAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether he has yet received the resolution passed unanimously yesterday by the Prince Edward Island legislature protesting the announced readjustment of the timetable for the next phase of the Prince Edward Island causeway, and what does the government propose to do about the protest?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received the resolution, though I have heard from the Leader of the Opposition about it. We will consider the resolution as soon as we receive it.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COURT DECISION RESPECTING PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, a week ago today the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that either on Friday or the following Monday he would give me the government's decision with respect to supplying health services to the native Indian population, as a result of the decision of the Appeal Court of Saskatchewan on the medicine chest case. Since a week has elapsed, I wonder whether the minister could tell us what decision has been arrived at.

Hon. A. J. McEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend I should explain that upon later examination it was concluded that this was a matter more within the competence and jurisdiction of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and I presume, but I would be glad to check, that he is dealing with the matter.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources whether any decision has been reached. As I pointed out in the question I asked a week ago today, the native Indians must decide fairly soon whether to register an appeal against the decision of the Saskatchewan appeal court, and it is therefore a matter of urgency.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, but the whole matter is under review.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether I could ask the minister to speed up his review because of the importance of the time limitation attendant upon the possibility of an appeal.

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

AIR CANADA

LACK OF FRENCH SPEAKING MEMBERS OF STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that we have just received the latest annual report of Air Canada and there is no French speaking Canadian among its executive directors, is the minister ready to go in front of that company's headquarters, together with the Minister of Immigration—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: No, because the first one was ruled out of order.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REMOVAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government of Canada received any communication from the government of France regarding the decision of President de Gaulle to require the removal of Canadian NATO troops from French soil by April 1, 1967? If so, what is the reaction of the government to such a request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the house has already been informed of the aide memoire of March 10 in which the government of France informed the Canadian government of its intention to withdraw from NATO's integrated defence program, and to require that Canadian and United States forces assigned to NATO be either withdrawn from France or transferred to French command.

I should like to inform the house that we have now received a further aide memoire, dated March 29 but delivered only late yesterday, setting out the views of the government of France on the timetable which it considers might be followed.

We are now studying this further communication. For the present I would only say that the press reports concerning the dates the French government has in mind appear generally consistent with the information in the aide memoire which we have received. Our understanding with the French authorities is that the text of this communication will be made public on April 1, which is tomorrow. I will therefore table the aide memoire tomorrow.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): With further reference to that question, Mr. Speaker, is the date April 1, 1967, enumerated in the second aide memoire as the date designated for the removal of Canadian troops from Metz and Marville? When the minister is giving his reply will he say, in view of the report that the United States are contemplating the removal of nuclear arms from French forces in Germany, whether the Canadian government has been consulted in this regard, and what is the attitude of the minister in this connection?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With regard to the reported decision of the government of the United States, I am not in a position to comment on the validity of that report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any consultation?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have no information on that question, Mr. Speaker, other than what I have seen in the newspapers, although there has been consultation among the 14 governments in the NATO council on the position taken by France.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister whether it is correct that April 1, 1967, has been the deadline stated by the French government in this aide memoire.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It has been agreed with the government of France that the aide memoire will be tabled tomorrow, and I would prefer not to take issue in any way with the agreement that we have made.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Minister of National Defence whether Canada will be making arrangements to move these troops to bases elsewhere in Europe, or is it the intention to bring them home to Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. This is a question which is under consideration by the government at the present time and it will be subject to consultation. When the policy is decided it will be announced in the normal course.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the minister's reply. The hon. member in his question mentioned bringing these troops home to Canada. Is that also under consideration?

Mr. Hellyer: I should think that in the consideration is included all the possibilities and options which are available to the government, of which that is one.

RHODESIA—REPORTED STATEMENTS BY COMMONWEALTH SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is based on one asked yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to certain statements made by Mr. Arnold Smith, secretary general of the commonwealth association, concerning Rhodesia.

Has the minister now had an opportunity of examining the remarks allegedly made by Mr. Smith and, if so, is the Canadian government in agreement with those observations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it must be noted first of all that Mr. Smith is at the present time not officially responsible in the same context that he was when he was a Canadian public servant, to the government of Canada. I have had a transcript made of the remarks of Mr. Smith and these are now being studied. I will be glad to see that my hon. friend gets a copy of them. I have also arranged to send a copy to the Leader of the Opposition, who raised this matter yesterday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I asked the question yesterday it was, does the government of Canada agree with these extraordinary statements which are purported to have been made by the secretary general, or is this just the view of the secretary general without regard to Canada's views or the views of other commonwealth countries?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when my right hon. friend sees the transcript I am sending him he will observe that the transcript does not correspond in precise terms with my right hon. friend's interpretation of yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I suggest that the minister read the quotations in the press reports. All three press reports are to the effect that I quoted yesterday.

TRADE

POSSIBLE REPRISALS AGAINST CANADIAN COMPANIES IN U.S. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in view of the guide lines laid down in the letter to foreign subsidiaries in Canada. Has the minister heard of any cases of Canadian companies which have large sales in the United States hesitating to deal with the six countries on the forbidden list under the United States act because of fear of retaliation by the United States government regarding Canadian goods entering the United States.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—ABILITY OF PRODUCERS TO FILL U.S. QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question based on the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does Canada have enough cheddar cheese to fill the increased quotas announced to the United States, or should Canadian dairy farmers be encouraged to produce more of this excellent product?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am inclined to consider this question, though very important, one which should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would allow me to make a plea asking you to reconsider your ruling and permit me to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question for the following reason; that new, substantial additional markets have opened up for Canadian cheese, and farmers would like to know about this because the major producing season is just before us.

Mr. Speaker: To help the farmers I shall allow the Minister of Agriculture to answer.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): To help the farmers, Mr. Speaker, I am willing even to transgress the sacred rules of this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: I assure my hon. friend that production now is extremely good, and I feel certain that the farmers of Canada will be able to fill all needs for domestic as well as for foreign markets.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since the question just asked was ruled out of order and then permitted, and as my question was ruled out of order, might I be permitted to put it again? I was ruled out of order on a question with respect to workers. I wonder if the minister might be allowed to reply to my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POWER

NELSON RIVER—FEDERAL AGENCY TO CARRY ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. I wonder whether the minister could inform the house whether a federal organization has yet been set up to finalize arrangements between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba pertaining to the Nelson river power development.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Atomic Energy of Canada has been selected by the government to be the agency responsible in these negotiations and in the implementation of the agreement. The proper authority will be delegated to Atomic Energy of Canada for that purpose.

May I underline the fact that it was highly desirable to select an agency which has the competence and the organization to handle a project of this type and magnitude.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

GUELPH, ONT.—HOME OF LATE COLONEL JOHN McCREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Would the minister give consideration to making the home in Guelph of the late Colonel John McCrea, the immortal poet who wrote "In Flanders Fields", a national historic site?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE WORK STOPPAGE BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether he has anything to report to the house concerning the possibility of a work stoppage by the air traffic controllers at Vancouver international airport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It has been decided—and the decision was taken before the suggestion was received from the headquarters of the union, though it is in accord with the ideas they have expressed to us—that a group of senior officials of the department should go to Vancouver to look at this situation and attempt to iron out the grievances there. This is being done immediately.

[Translation]

MONTREAL—PROTEST AGAINST DECISION OF LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Labour?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Is the minister or a cabinet committee on which he sits prepared to meet the representatives of the C.N.T.U. in connection with the conflict between unions at the C.B.C.?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated that he will designate a cabinet group to receive representations from the C.N.T.U., the C.L.C., railway brotherhoods and other interested groups, and then recommend a course of action. Unfortunately these meetings cannot take place until after Easter, but all the unions and the brotherhoods involved have been notified that such meetings will take place at the earliest convenient date in April.

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—JOB PREFERENCE FOR EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence, whom I always find most co-operative. May I ask the minister whether he is aware that according to complaints made to me in the form of a telegram from the National Defence Employees Association at Point Edward Naval base, tradesmen are being brought from the Halifax dockyard to close out this base, and that it is the request of the association that qualified personnel now employed there be retained and receive employment in this closing out procedure? May I also ask the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): —whether he would use his good offices to investigate this alleged situation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot read a telegram or a message of this nature in the course of asking a question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with all due deference to Your Honour I did not quote from the telegram. I read from notes of the question I posed. I just wanted the minister to see that I did have a telegram.

[Later:]

May I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him whether he will investigate the alleged discrimination against workers at Point Edward naval base?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yes, sir.

FREIGHT RATES

LUMBER—APPLICATION FOR INCREASE ON SHIPMENTS FROM NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, could I complete an incomplete answer which I gave the hon. member for Port Arthur yesterday. The hon. member asked me about the imminence of an increase in freight rates on lumber shipments from northwestern Ontario and I did not have all the information.

I have now been advised that the railways have not yet filed their tariffs with the Board of Transport Commissioners. Thirty days will be required, if they do, before the tariffs can come into operation, and during that time anyone who wishes to take objection to them will be free to do so.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON EQUALIZATION FORMULA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister in a position to indicate when he will elaborate on the government's intentions with regard to the equalization formula, especially as it applies to the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a major part of the negotiations with the provinces which are now going on within the tax structure committee. When we have proceeded with those discussions to a sufficient point, and when the premiers have met and ratified the results of the discussions of the ministers of finance, the government will then be in a position to announce their findings.

AIR TRANSPORT

TORONTO-CHICAGO—SERVICE BY TWO CANADIAN CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has Canada recently been given the right to put two Canadian air carriers on the Toronto-Chicago run under the Canada-U.S. air agreement and, if so, will Canadian Pacific Air Lines and Air Canada each be allotted one of these runs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Toronto-Chicago run the hon. gentleman will no doubt recollect that Air Canada has been flying that route for a long time. The new route is the Montreal-Chicago route.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: I should like to direct another question to the Minister of Transport now that he has had an opportunity to read the report which appeared in the newpapers this morning dealing with the remarks made yesterday by Mr. J. C. Gilmer, president of Canadian Pacific Air Lines, dealing with the Toronto-Chicago run. Would the minister be prepared now to make any comment on the remarks Mr. J. C. Gilmer is reported to have made yesterday on this matter?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the only remark I could usefully make at this moment is that the government's present intentions were announced the day before yesterday, and I should be glad to send the hon. gentleman a copy of that announcement. I do not think it would be wise at this stage of our proceedings to enter into speculation.

WATER RESOURCES

REPORTED MEETING BETWEEN BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALASKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a meeting between representatives of the government of British Columbia and representatives of the state of Alaska with respect to the joint development of two large hydroelectric projects in our north? If so, has the minister any comment to make with respect to this meeting between representatives of the province and a foreign state when our government is giving consideration to the question of a national water policy?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since receiving notice of my hon. friend's question I have made some inquiries, and I know of no such meeting.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. As it is nearly one year since the initial announcement was made with regard to the Company of Young Canadians; since we are fast approaching the time when young people will be considering involvement in this endeavour for the beginning of the term of September, 1966, I wonder whether we could have some indication from the Prime Minister as to when some legislation with respect to the Company of Young Canadians might be placed before this house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should be very happy indeed if we could get this legislation before the house, but how soon that will be after the Easter recess will depend, of course, on the progress we make in regard to other legislation. The interim director of the company and the interim board are holding meetings over the week end, and I hope to be able to make a statement next week, before the Easter recess.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUESTIONING OF DRAFT DODGERS IN CANADA BY F.B.I.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): While I am on my feet I might answer a question asked yesterday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, as to whether any arrangement has been made with the authorities of the United States whereby agents of the federal bureau of investigation may enter Canadian homes for the purpose of questioning alleged draft dodgers, without the presence of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or without the consent of that body.

I have checked into this matter, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to confirm that there are no such arrangements.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a question arising out of the answer made by the right hon. gentleman. Has the Prime Minister not received any complaints from at least two places across Canada that investigations are being carried on by F.B.I. agents or representatives of the United States who, unaccompanied by the R.C.M.P., have been making searches in Canada?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have received such complaints, and I am informed that inquiries in Canada requested by the federal bureau of investigation are normally conducted, when they are required to be conducted, by the R.C.M. Police, or the police force having local authority.

The hon. gentleman may recall that there is on the order paper question 1151 of March 24, dealing with certain specific complaints. There will be a reply to that question either next Monday or at the latest next Wednesday, going into the matter in greater detail.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP

REGINA, SASK.—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the announcement in today's press of the appointment of a judge to the citizenship court in Sudbury, can the minister tell the house when a similar announcement will be made about Regina?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Very shortly, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, or in his absence it may be addressed to the acting minister. On March 21 in reply to a question the minister stated that the inquiry into the procedures and organization of the Canadian Pension Commission being conducted by Mr. Justice Wood would complete its hearings either late this month or early next month.

Would the minister inform the house whether the inquiry has completed its hearings? If so, when does he expect the report will be available?

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise as to when the amendments to the pension legislation, which the minister promised in 1964, will be brought before the house?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DESIGNATED AREAS—CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS UNDER ARDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): I should like to direct a question to the minister in charge of the ARDA program, Mr. Speaker, and ask the minister if the government is contemplating the building of factories or industrial plants in designated areas under the ARDA program?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that this is the type of question which should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Webb: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The answer given to my question by the minister just now was "no". However, this past week I was informed by two members of the crown that these factories are being built under the ARDA program.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe that is a question of privilege.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ASSISTANCE TO LOCAL SCHOOL BOARDS ACCEPTING INDIAN CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister tell the house what funds the government provides for local school boards which accept Indian children in their elementary schools, to help them provide the necessary funds for their classrooms and other operating costs.

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the order paper.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I should like to direct an inquiry to the Secretary of State. I would ask the hon. lady if she will make inquiries and take appropriate action to lay on the table of the house papers called for in motions Nos. 41 and 42, which were agreed to by the house on February 2. These have to do with ship operating and shipbuilding subsidies in British Columbia, and are a matter of urgent concern.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I should be glad to undertake to do that.

INTERPRETATION ACT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask the Minister of Justice whether it is the intention of the government this session to introduce any legislation dealing with amendments to the Interpretation Act of Canada, and if so, whether these amendments can be brought before parliament at the earliest possible opportunity because of the wide range of legislation any such amendments would affect.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we are contemplating amendments to the Interpretation Act, but I can give no commitment as to when that legislation may be brought in.

[Later:]

Mr. Cardin: May I take this opportunity of adding to the answer I gave to the hon. member for Yukon. I can inform him that the amendments to the Interpretation Act are now before the banking and commerce committee of the Senate.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Following the recent appearance of strange and mysterious objects flying over Toronto and elsewhere, does the minister intend to institute an inquiry to find out whether this is not a violation of national sovereignty?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: That question might be placed on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC—DEATHS ATTRIBUTED TO BEER DRINKING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I am about to ask a question that has no personal connotation. I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the federal Department of National Health and Welfare has completed its investigation into the series of fatalities in the province of Quebec following the alleged consumption of beer. Has any indication of contamination such as botulism been found as a result of the examination?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare was informed by a physician in Quebec city on March 19 that there was a hypothetical possibility of a casual relationship between beer drinking and a new form of primary cardiomyopathy. Cardiomyopathy is a subacute or chronic disorder of the heart muscle of unknown or obscure etiology.

The patients involved were reported to be in the habit of consuming large amounts of beer, in all instances not less than eight quarts per day.

An investigation was immediately launched by officers of the food and drug directorate of the department in close collaboration with the Quebec Department of Health. The physician who reported these cases has been interviewed, as well as other persons associated with the problem. The information available to the Department of National Health and Welfare indicates that there had been approximately 40 suspected cases reported over a period of a few months, with 16 to 18 deaths.

The plant producing the suspected beer was thoroughly investigated and all relevant records examined by officers of the food and drug directorate with the full co-operation of the brewing company involved. No evidence was found of any major change in the method of manufacture or the composition of the beer. Samples of all ingredients as well as the finished product were obtained, and these are now being examined in the laboratories of the food and drug directorate.

I am informed that tests have been conducted under the direction of the Quebec Department of Health for a number of metals in the finished product. Similar tests were carried out on two other brands of beer. The levels found in all cases were within the normal range.

All the alleged cases have been in the Quebec city area. The investigation is being pursued with the utmost vigour in close co-operation with the Quebec Department of Health and municipal officers of Quebec city. Hospitals and physicians responsible for the care of these patients have given all possible assistance. I have been informed that on the suggestion of the deputy minister of health for the province of Quebec, a committee has been established by the pathologists of the teaching hospitals affiliated with Laval University. One of the senior members of this committee has been charged with the responsibility of pursuing a detailed pathological study of the cases involved.

No direct relationship between the consumption of the suspected beer and the cases of heart failure has been established. Other factors not yet identified may be involved in these cases.

However, the brewery involved has informed the Department of National Health and Welfare that as a precautionary measure they intend to withdraw from the market and destroy under government supervision all existing stocks of beer produced in their Quebec city plant. This is a voluntary action taken on the initiative of the company but with the full knowledge and agreement of the Quebec Department of Health and the Department of National Health and Welfare.

I thank the house for its indulgence in allowing me to give this rather detailed answer to the important question which was raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Greene: May I point out that there are never any such problems with milk.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): I should like to ask the minister whether his department is giving serious consideration to looking into the effects of the drinking of alcohol on public health in Canada. Is he putting money aside to look into the effects of drinking on health?

Mr. Ricard: Also tobacco.

Mr. Keays: Can the minister tell us whether it was bottled beer or canned beer?

Mr. MacEachen: I understand that the investigation has not fully disclosed the exact source, whether it was bottled, canned or draft beer, or a combination of all three.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): A brief supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister say whether there are samples of this beer still available to his department for any additional tests which may be required?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Of a scientific character, of course.

Mr. MacEachen: My information is that a large number of cases of this beer have been taken over by officers of the department, and it is understood the investigation will be a long term one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So there may be no mistake, I raised the question, and I dissociate myself from any implications in the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

FARM MACHINERY

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING TIED SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): My question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask whether there is any intention of introducing legislation this session in connection with a recent report of the restrictive trade practices commission, particularly with regard to the prohibiting of so-called tied sales in the farm implement industry.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): I will take the question as notice and bring it to the attention of the President of the Privy Council.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR CHEESE FACTORY AMALGAMATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings South): After the kind comment by the Minister of Agriculture a few minutes ago comparing milk with something else, I should like to ask the hon. gentleman a question on another subject. Now that the cheese export market seems to be enlarging—and I am glad about that—will the minister impress on Treasury Board the need for some assistance to cheese factory amalgamations for which applications have been made?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I will certainly give consideration to that suggestion.

AERONAUTICS ACT

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-153, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced in almost its present form two or three years ago. The object is to amend the Aeronautics Act so as to permit the making of regulations concerning fees and other matters calculated to enhance the safety of air travel and so as to enable changes to be made in the composition of the Air Transport Board and to consolidate the powers of the board.

The amendments are in the main intended to clarify existing legislation and to consolidate some of it. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I will review some of the questions which appeared to be contentious on the last occasion the bill was introduced.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The proposals with regard to charges for facilities and services provided by the Department of Transport will not basically change the present system of tariffs which the department has imposed under the Financial Administration Act. I think that is important because the charges contemplated by the Aeronautics Act are already allowed under section 18 of the Financial Administration Act. However, as a result of consultation with the Department of Justice it has been decided that it would be desirable to have the authority for these charges placed in the Aeronautics Act, where it more properly belongs.

The department at the present time makes various charges in connection with its airports and various facilities. They vary from collecting landing fees from aircraft to charges for communication services which may be provided, land and building rentals, and so on. This bill provides that these may henceforth be assessed under the Aeronautics Act on the basis of regulations approved by the Governor in Council, and the charges may be made either in relation to the use of the facilities or to the general provision of a service required by aviation, in other words, not only the use of a facility or service but the availability of a service or facility as well. It is necessary to embody both concepts because in some cases the charge may be related to the actual use of a facility but in other cases the air lines may require a facility to be provided which can be more easily provided on the basis of general availability.

I can give the house two brief examples. Our airport landing fee is a charge for the specific use of the landing facilities. Our terminal service charge is for the use of facilities of a joint nature such as joint baggage handling areas and passenger marshalling areas. The provision of a new type of radio aid to navigation might require a charge, but it would be impossible to tell in the course of any year on how many specific occasions any one aircraft might use this facility.

The objective of a system of charges for air facilities is to make our airports self-sustaining, and in fact this objective is already being achieved at our largest airports. Progress toward this objective must be gradual and charges cannot be imposed in a manner or at a rate which make it impossible for aviation and for the aviation industry, commercial and non-commercial, to grow. On the other hand, it is reasonable that the users of these facilities should make some payment toward them rather than expect the total cost to be borne by the general taxpayer.

I should now like to make one or two short comments relating to international aviation. At an earlier stage, when this bill was introduced three years ago, it was felt that the government should have the right to levy charges for these services on aircraft operating outside Canada where, nevertheless, such aircraft were depending in the course of flight on the availability of facilities and services provided by the Canadian government in Canada. That would relate to overflights, international flights over Canada that neither began nor terminated on Canadian soil. This was a source of concern to the international air lines which felt it might become a dangerous precedent for other countries, and in addition there would be the question of the levying of the charges and the relationship between the charges and the costs.

As a result of extensive consultation between the Department of Transport and the international air lines, as represented by the International Air Transport Association, it has been concluded that this particular provision should be withdrawn so that the present legislation will apply only in respect of operations within Canada. This is reflected in clause 1 of the bill. I would be prepared, Mr. Speaker, to deal with specific questions as they come up either on second reading or in the committee stage.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, when this measure was last before parliament in the form of Bill C-117 I made fairly extensive criticisms of it, chief among which were criticisms with respect to the two deletions which the minister has mentioned. This bill, if the minister will permit me to differ with him, is not in almost the same form as the bill presented in 1963. It is in quite a different form.

Two of the main objections which were taken at the time of its first introduction were with respect, first, to the inclusion of the provision that any charge authorized by the bill would constitute a debt due and owing to the Crown. In that respect this bill is not almost the same. As a member of his profession the minister well knows that the original provision meant that all the government had to do was to render an account to an international air line and that would immediately constitute a debt due and owing to the Crown, with all that that implies.

Without requiring to go to court the government could obtain a writ of extent from the Exchequer Court, close the offices of all the international air lines and seize all their aircraft that might be in Canada at the time on the basis of such a writ of extent. I can only say that we in this party are very happy that the government has seen the light and has removed that extremely objectionable feature from the bill. I had hoped the minister might have made reference to the strong representations made from this side of the house when the bill was debated in 1963 in addition to his reference to IATA.

The second objection which was taken was with respect to the inclusion in Bill C-117 of the right of Canada to make charges for the use of facilities outside Canada, and I would point out to the minister that a strong case was made from this side of the house on that feature in addition to the representations on behalf of international air lines.

This very objectionable feature has also been removed from the bill, although it is not yet clear so far as the new bill, C-153, is concerned whether Canada will have the right to impose the intended charges in the Gander control area, which is Canada's responsibility with respect to international air commitments but still lies outside of Canada's sovereignty. The minister knows that we maintain facilities in the Gander control area which lie outside Canadian jurisdiction and I ask him, is it the intention of the government to impose charges with respect to these facilities? That is a question that requires to be answered.

The minister has stated that the proposed amendments do not make any change in the system of charges now imposed under the Financial Administration Act. I recall that during the debate on the previous bill, and since then during discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport, I asked several questions which went unanswered with respect to the charges that had been made in the past under the Financial Administration Act and which I assume the Department of Justice finally recognized were illegal charges.

As the minister knows, there were accounts rendered to several international air lines. I asked how the government arrived at the amounts upon which these accounts were rendered and whether it had to ask the accountants' offices of the international air lines concerned before it even knew the amount of the bill to be rendered.

The minister has said with respect to charges imposed for the use and the availability of facilities and services offered by the Department of Transport that there should be, and there was, justification for a specific charge against users and that this was the principle upon which the bill was proceeding. This, I suggest to the minister, is a wrong principle. I suggest there is no fundamental difference between the obligation on the Canadian taxpayer to supply facilities for the users of our air highways and the obligation to provide highways on the ground for those who drive automobiles. The introduction of the principle of making charges for these facilities is, I think, a wrong one. Perhaps I may be standing alone in that view. I have a somewhat closer interest than most. Incidentally, I might assure the minister that my recent arrears in landing fees have been brought up to date. I might, however, draw that analogy to the minister's attention and ask him what other countries which are signatories to the International Civil Aviation Agreement have imposed such charges? I think this question has to be answered.

• (3:50 p.m.)

There is another objectionable feature which I will point out now and then wait for the minister's reply before proceeding further with it. It appears in the bill and is the principle contained in subsection 2 of the new section 3A. This subsection reads:

> Any regulations made under subsection (1) may authorize the minister to make orders or directions with respect to such matters coming within this section as the regulations may prescribe.

In Bill C-117 you will find that the power to make regulations was confined to the Governor in Council. I am one of those who take strong objection to any increasing encroachment on legislative powers by the Governor in Council. However, I think this is taking matters to the extreme in that not only has the Governor in Council the power to make regulations but the Governor in Council now has the power simply to pass one regulation which in effect will say that the minister will have all the powers of regulating which by this amending section he is purported to be given.

It is wrong in principle to allow the minister to do everything in the way of making regulations that this section would empower him to do. I think that is an objectionable feature and it should be removed from the bill. For the minister's information, the provision to which I referred, subsection 2, was not in the last bill, Bill C-117.

I have some general comments to make. Section 3A, as you will note, is divided into two subsections, the first subsection being again subdivided. I do not think any objection can be raised to the parliamentary intent set forth in paragraph (a) (i). The government is being empowered by this paragraph to prescribe charges or fees for services rendered by the Department of Transport to aircraft which in effect request the information or the service which is provided. This type of charge would be based in law on the principle of contract, since the aircraft has requested the information which is being supplied to it or the service that is being rendered.

Similarly, under the same subsection charges will be imposed, as the minister has pointed out, for the use by any aircraft of airports maintained by the Department of Transport. During his introductory remarks the minister mentioned that it was desirable to see airports administered by the Department of Transport self-supporting. I am wondering and I have wondered, since I have travelled long distances frequently and used the Department of Transport facilities, whether there is any great contribution being made to the federal treasury by these ten cent turnstiles which permit travellers to view the activities on the airports across the country. An even more pertinent observation can be made with regard to the obligation of the travelling public in the use of the public washrooms maintained by the Department of Transport. I can see perhaps a scintilla of argument here in respect of men's washrooms, but I am afraid I cannot draw a parallel as to the need in respect of the functioning of women's washrooms. It would be interesting to know just what the revenue is from these ten cent contributions at airports across the country.

Here again, in respect of the use of the airports maintained by the Department of Transport I would suggest to the minister that the charge is based on the law of contract and therefore is subject to one reservation. No objection can be taken to the intent expressed in subsection 1. The charges levied under subsection 1 will apply to both Canadian and international or foreign aircraft. My reservation, however, relates to the value of the wording used in subsection 1, and it arises from the fact that parliament would not be imposing a specific charge for any services rendered, nor is there any maximum charge limit with regard to the provisions.

I am going to refer to the Chicago convention of 1944 to which Canada was a signatory and in which it was stated that when imposing charges against aircraft there cannot be discrimination between Canadian registered and foreign aircraft. I suggest to the minister that that discrimination exists here.

You will find in article 15 of that convention, page 37, the following wording in respect of the imposition of these charges:

> Any charges that may be imposed or permitted to be imposed by a contracting state—

And Canada is one.

> —for the use of such airports and air navigation facilities by the aircraft of any other contracting state shall not be higher . . .
>
> (b) as to aircraft engaged in scheduled international air services, than those that would be paid by its national aircraft engaged in similar international air services.

At the same time, under the Air Canada Act the Department of Transport is prohibited from charging Air Canada aircraft for such services at rates that are higher than those levied against competitive aircraft by the United States government. This statutory restrictive provision has existed since the inception of this particular statute in 1937, and was commented on in the recent report of the royal commission on government organization, the Glassco report, volume 3.

• (4:00 p.m.)

There is a further authoritative study of Air Canada which refers to the same restrictive provisions. It is entitled "The First Twenty-Five Years—A Study of Trans-Canada Air Lines", as it was known, by Mr. Ashley, published in 1963. At pages 5 and 6 of this study the author has summarized the main provisions of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act by quoting extensively from the first annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines. This point was dealt with in that report in exactly the same way and I want to quote what he said:

> The government is responsible for the operation and maintenance of emergency landing fields, lights and radio beams, and the furnishing of weather reports, without charge to the corporation; provided that when the revenues of the corporation in the opinion of the minister will permit, charges may be imposed such as are charged for other similar competing coast to coast services in North America.

Professor A. W. Currie, one of Canada's foremost authorities on the economics of transportation, wrote a very learned article entitled "Some Economic Aspects Of Air Transport" in 1941. He commented in that report about the same limiting factor, and these are his words:

> The government is to provide landing facilities, beam and meteorological services without charge until the revenues of the corporation permit a charge, not exceeding charges levied in the United States to be made . . . A perusal of the main features of the act indicates clearly that Trans-Canada is to be operated with constant reference to United States lines.

I take that quotation from the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, 1941, No. 1, page 13, at line 20.

This limiting factor against the imposition of charges by the Department of Transport for services provided still exists in the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act. If the minister has followed this argument, the nub of the point is, therefore, that under subsection 1 of section 3A, as worded in Bill C-153, parliament has no control over whether the charges imposed by the Department of Transport are within the limitation as to amount required under the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act. This is an important point since it is generally considered that to date the scale of charges imposed by the United States government for similar services is quite low.

Subject to this one reservation relating to subsection (1), the objections of the international air lines, as I understand them, concern the wording of what is now subsection (2) of section 1. It is submitted that this subsection in its present form is far too wide and far too arbitary in character.

I will now relate the particular objections to subsection (2). The criterion, and here is where I differ with the minister, with respect to the use of the word "availability" in this legislation has been established that the basis in law for these charges is the availability of a government service. It is submitted that this is much too vague and is therefore wrong in principle. This is all the more so since this subsection at one time attempted to make foreign air lines liable to user charges while they were flying beyond the territorial limits of Canada. This feature has now been removed.

Mr. Turner: With respect, Mr. Speaker, it does not apply to flights beyond the territorial limits of Canada. It only applies to flights within Canada, not on the high seas.

Mr. Nielsen: As I read the legislation it does not make it clear that international carriers would not be responsible for paying charges for the use of facilities when flying over Canada because, as I understand it, Canada has territorial jurisdiction from the ground up in law.

There is an even more fundamental objection to the principle upon which this subsection is based, and that objection springs from the ordinary canons of tax law. This is a field in which the minister has more experience than most having regard to his background in the profession. I think he will agree with me that under ordinary canons of taxation a tax must be certain and must be equitable.

Mr. Turner: This is not a tax; it is a charge.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says this is not a tax but it is a form of a tax. This is the imposition of charges for the use of facilities.

Mr. Turner: It is a charge for services rendered.

Mr. Nielsen: It is a charge particularly for the use of radio facilities on the basis of availability, and it is only that point I am dealing with now. I am not dealing with the availability of airports or charges for the rental of space, buildings or hangars at airports. I am only dealing with the availability of services which may or may not be used by any aircraft using Canada's air space and which are simply there by virtue of the fact that they permeate the very atmosphere.

I do not think it can be said that a tax in the form of a user charge is certain if liability is based upon the vague criterion of the availability of some government service. Who is going to determine in a given instance whether a service is available? I direct this question to the minister. The minister knows as well as I that a service, particularly those provided in the field of electronics by way of navigational aids to aircraft using Canadian air space, may or may not be available at any given time. How are you going to establish whether it is available at a given time? Even if it can be ascertained that a service is available, why should a charge be imposed if the user has no need of it? Is it the intention of the minister to make a regulation imposing a standard charge on all aircraft using Canadian air space simply because a service is available and whether or not the aircraft using that air space wants to use the facility? It seems to me that that would be wrong in principle.

I believe this is particularly so since the Department of Transport has attempted to impose such user charges under the Financial Administration Act because they did not have any specific legislation before under which they could impose these charges. They tried to use the vehicle of the Financial Administration Act for that imposition of charges, which was an illegal use of that act. They called them radio facility fees and charged $64 a flight as far back as January of 1960. These charges were levied against flights of international air lines which at all times were well beyond the territorial jurisdiction of Canada.

Such radio facility fees were based on the criterion of availability and that criterion has been carried over into this bill. As examples, one can cite the Pan-American flight from New York to Bermuda, the S.A.S. polar flights from Europe to Alaska and Japan passing over the Russian side of the north pole and the Swissair flights from Switzerland to New York, diverted toward the Canadian coast because of the holding of military air exercises. This is another interesting consideration in respect of the imposition of these charges. What about the flight from Toronto to Chicago partly using Canadian air space and partly using United States air space?

• (4:10 p.m.)

I understand that the United States has not imposed any similar charges for the use of facilities provided over their country. What happens in this instance with respect to the international carrier on the one hand and the domestic carrier on the other? I could in this respect mention the newly inaugurated flight from Montreal to Chicago.

Mr. Turner: It does not apply to this kind of flight. It applies to flights over Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister says it does not apply to this kind of flight. This is the kind of thing that has to be made clear. The minister will recall that when the 1963 session was prorogued the announcement was made that a Canada-United States agreement had been concluded for the purpose of providing greater safety at times of peak air traffic. Under the agreement that was concluded it was stated that air traffic control centres in either country would be extended to 50 miles beyond the border of the country concerned whenever conditions warranted.

I suggest to the minister that at such times it would be possible for Canadian authorities exercising air traffic control, which Canada would, in that 50-mile strip south of the United States border to route all United States air traffic within the 50-mile limit inside the Canadian border. The minister shakes his head, but it is possible under that agreement. The minister knows that when aircraft are using Canadian air space they are under the control of air traffic control and do what they are told. As a safety measure this seems perfectly acceptable and indeed desirable; nevertheless it does throw that possibility into the field of discussion of this bill.

It is my submission that the international air lines recognize that the services Canada provides cost money. These services cost a national government money and must be paid for as far as possible. At the same time, the cost of such services to each international air line must have some direct bearing on the value of the service to the aircraft in question. This result cannot be achieved if the availability of a service is the only test whether there will be a liability. Perhaps a better, fairer and more appropriate criterion for determining liability would be need of a service by a foreign aircraft resulting from a contract.

If this cannot be achieved with efficiency perhaps the better alternative would be to come to an international arrangement under the auspices of ICAO. Perhaps that would be the better solution. The minister might inform the house whether the provisions in this bill have been discussed with any international air organization such as ICAO, IATA or any other.

There was an objection with regard to clause 2 of this bill when it appeared in the form of clause 2 of Bill No. C-117 and empowered the governor in council to make regulations. The clause in Bill No. C-117 stated that the Governor in Council could, if it so desired, make regulations imposing a user charge upon foreign aircraft. Undoubtedly it would have to be admitted that such a user charge would represent a form of tax imposed against the owner of the said aircraft. As clause 2 was drafted, parliament had delegated the right to impose a specific tax of this kind to the Governor in Council. It is even worse now, because the delegation by parliament has gone beyond the Governor in Council and that power has been delegated to the minister himself.

I believe this is an infringement on the taxation jurisdiction which parliament should not be asked to accept unless it is the intention to spell out in the bill itself the limitation intended to apply to such a tax. The minister says it is not a tax, but it is a form of tax particularly when it has reference not to the rental of buildings but to the use of facilities. It would be different if there were a contractual relationship whereby foreign or domestic carriers had agreed that they would pay a specified sum over a specified time for the use of a specified facility, but when the criterion is based on the general availability of any service it is no longer based on contract but is in the form of a tax. There is quite a distinction, which I do not believe the minister will accept, but I am not merely splitting hairs here. There is a very valid distinction between the imposition of a charge for the general availability of services and the charging of rent for the use of specific property. So I suggest that this principle in the bill is objectionable.

I shall leave the remaining clauses of the bill until we reach them, because I have specific comments with respect to other clauses. Before concluding my remarks, however, I make the general observation to the minister that the government these days appears to be—I say this with all respect to the dedication of the officials of the Department of Transport with respect to the direction they are taking and the objectives they wish to achieve—overwhelmingly concerned, almost to the exclusion of general aviation, with commercial aviation in this country. There is really an overabundant concern with commercial aviation and almost a neglect to foster and encourage the growth of general aviation in this country, particularly with regard to the north. In the north private companies and individuals have gone to the extent of establishing radio facilities at their own expense because it was said there was no need for such facilities or they were too costly. There are two instances in the Northwest Territories where this has occurred and private companies at their own expense have established facilities so they would not have to fly long hauls of 500 and 600 miles with nothing whatsoever to aid them in navigating from point to point.

It would be outside the scope of this bill but I could discuss a good many gaps in the encouragement of general aviation in the north. I shall not do so. But it is certainly reasonable to expect the department to look a little more enlighteningly at the question of general aviation across the country and the atrocious charges that are made in the way of landing fees and hangar rentals. Here I perhaps have another vested interest, but I am not going to bring the matter to the point of a vote or anything like that. However, it is pertinent to point out that the charge of $17 a month for parking a light aircraft outside in the winter is just outlandish. To move that light aircraft into an unheated hangar costs the user on the average between $50 and $60 a month. That is the charge just to use hangar space which is not even heated. This is absolutely ridiculous. You are not going to encourage people to own and fly aircraft, which I suggest is a desirable thing in this country, a pioneer in the aviation field, with this kind of approach. I believe it is time that the personnel in the department took a second look at this question. We all know that these bills are not the brainchild of the minister, whoever may be holding the transport portfolio. These bills are the brainchild of the Department of Transport itself.

• (4:20 p.m.)

So, Mr. Speaker, through the minister I should like to make this plea on behalf of general aviation in Canada because the bill does touch on charges to the user of facilities and services provided by the Department of Transport. I am not going to propose any amendments at this stage; I cannot in any event. But I would suggest to the minister that one which should be made is that the word "availability" in the proposed section 3A (1) (b) should be deleted and that the word "user" should be substituted in place thereof.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in opening the discussion on second reading the minister mentioned the fact that many of the regulations under debate relate specifically to safety. In my brief remarks this afternoon I want to address my words to the question of safety regulations.

Mr. Turner: Safety in the air.

Mr. Grafftey: Safety in the air. While I think that most aeronautical experts will agree that the situation is not perfect at the present time and that there is much progress to be made, I think most Canadians and most citizens of the United States of America owe a great vote of gratitude to the air industry with respect to safety measures. The record of the air industry in relation to safety has been truly little short of magnificent, even though I have already stated, Mr. Speaker, that there is much progress which can be made.

For example, what has happened in the United States during the year 1965? If I put some statistics before the house this afternoon we need only divide them by ten to ascertain the situation in Canada. While 55,000 people died on the highways of the United States in 1965 only 1,000 people died during the course of commercial airline flights. I think I am correct in stating that actually more millions of man miles were flown in the air than millions of man miles were driven on the highways. If we divide those figures by ten, then generally speaking we have the Canadian situation.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that this afternoon the minister is able to discuss in the house some pretty sophisticated safety regulations both with regard to navigation—

Mr. Turner: It is a question of jurisdiction. We have primary jurisdiction.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, that is right. That is a good point and I was going to get down to it. I am putting the question rhetorically, as the minister will see.

Why is it that we can discuss sophisticated regulations at the present time? Why do we have very good safety regulations for aircraft today? It is simply because millions and millions and millions of dollars have been spent on safety research regarding air navigation and aircraft. In fact, the department for which the minister is speaking this afternoon very kindly furnished me with a memorandum in the last week or two which sets out the federal control over the production of ships, aircraft and rolling stock on the railways with specific relation to safety measures.

We find in the Aeronautics Act—frankly, Mr. Speaker, I may be getting away from the specific act now but the minister can put me straight—which is administered by the Department of Transport that aircraft are licensed only if they reach certain standards of airworthiness and safety. The same is true of trains and ships.

I should like to make brief mention of another subject though still staying on the point I have raised on second reading of this bill. Let us just see what happened regarding the unfortunate air crash at Ste. Thérèse just over two years ago. I have made brief mention of this matter before in the house. Over 100 people were killed in that unfortunate crash. The federal government through the Department of Transport commenced to reassemble the aircraft at the scene of the accident piece by piece. The operation was continued at Dorval airport. A judicial inquiry was held. I have made some very general investigations, Mr. Speaker, but I think I am correct in saying that when you look at the costs incurred by the National Research Council and the Department of Transport you will find approximately $5 million was spent on research into the cause of this accident.

I do not think I will be out of order if I say in passing that every week in Canada over 100 people die on our highways. After the ambulance or morgue wagon has removed the bodies the wrecks are towed away. But not one single cent is spent on research into the cause of highway deaths and injuries.

In closing may I say that we owe a great debt of thanks to government officials and to the aircraft industry for the wonderful safety record they have had up to now. Though I have said that we can expect much progress in the future, the fact is that they have a great safety record. But it is only great because of the millions and millions of dollars which have been spent on research, thus enabling the minister to talk of safety regulations in the manner he has this afternoon.

It has been pointed out this afternoon that aircraft come under the rule of law. We shall probably be discussing during this session the fact that ships are under the rule of law just as in a matter of weeks we will be discussing the fact that rolling stock on our railways are under the rule of law. It is my hope that the day is not too far distant when millions and millions of dollars will be spent on research into deaths and injuries caused by highway accidents. I hope that in the same way as we are discussing safety in relation to aircraft we will be discussing safety regulations relating to federal control over the production of automobiles and obligation upon manufacturers to incorporate scientifically proven safety features in automobiles at the production level.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we cannot do this today because we have not established jurisdiction. We have not even prepared any findings in this regard because nothing has yet been spent on research into the problem. Again I return to the fact, which I have probably repeated two or three times this afternoon, that we are only able to enter into a discussion of safety with the minister today on second reading of this bill because over many years we have acted federally in a positive way in regard to this matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to keep the house from hearing the minister but there are one or two observations I intended to make. While realizing that we do not discuss the various sections, on second reading nonetheless I feel that during the course of my remarks I must make reference to a couple of matters that were dealt with by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I express the hope that the minister will have been impressed with these arguments and will make the necessary changes to meet the criticisms advanced by the hon. member for Yukon.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I must say that I am impressed with some portions of these amendments, particularly those that deal with the establishment of a board of inquiry to investigate the situation respecting any accident involving an aircraft. While in the past there have been investigations, the lack of power in the holding of an investigation was apparent on more than one occasion, and I think this new provision is an admirable advance. However, there is one section to which I take the strongest possible objection. We must not as a parliament advance the rights of ministers to the point of actually making laws. That is what we are doing in this case. The Governor in Council, of course, must have the power to make regulations. This is incidental to the exercise of the necessary authority to carry out the general principle inherent in the legislation, and it is always so. But I cannot conceive what reason impels the government to ask for the power that any regulations made may authorize the minister to make orders or directions with respect to such matters coming within this section as the regulations may prescribe.

This is a power that is not needed. We have dealt with this point on more than one occasion. We must resist the continuing invasion of the legislative rights of parliament by an administrative bureaucracy that finds it easier to make regulations than to provide legislation to cover eventualities that must necessarily arise in the carrying out of legislation. I impress on the minister, and I do not want to see a division on this, that this is a subsection which ought to be removed.

One could go back over the years and read all the various criticisms which have been made of the continuing advance of those who establish a form of administrative lawlessness whereby parliament in the exercise of the need of assuring that legislation will be carried out in detail grants extraordinary rights to the Governor in Council to make regulations. There is no reason why the minister should have the right to make regulations. The Governor in Council must necessarily have that right; otherwise the act could not be made effective. I object in the strongest possible way to parliament giving to a minister the right to make orders with respect to matters that come within the purview of the Governor in Council's power.

This is something that has been strongly objected to by political scientists everywhere. My mind goes back to the first serious attack made by one occupying a high position in the United Kingdom. Lord Justice Hewart, in his book "The New Despotism", with which members of the house are fully acquainted with, in which he points out the danger.

I am not one who takes objection to the Governor in Council having the power provided parliament has given that power. But I do object to and can see no reason for the Governor in Council in turn giving to the minister the right to make regulations. This is a denial of the general principle of law, Delegatus non potest delegare—authority to delegate is not given to those who are delegated.

Listening to the arguments advanced I have been impressed with the lack of requisite need for the minister to have that power, and I am going to appeal to him in this regard. If he would sooner have a vote on this matter, that is for him to say. But I do take the strongest possible objection, not because I have any minister in mind, not at all —what I say is not said in that spirit—to this shortcut that will enable the Governor in Council to sublet the right to make regulations to the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: In a taxing bill it is even worse.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not looked into the nature of the powers sought in this regard, but the hon. member for Yukon has raised a strong argument that this would enable the minister to impose in fact an impost which has all the attributes of taxation. Whether or not that be so, and I must say that I was impressed with the argument, I would ask the minister this question. Why do you need that power? This is an extra, decorative acquisition of power on the part of the minister which he ought not to have.

I do not want to appear as objecting to needful authority being given to make regulations. But this goes too far. I hope that the minister will feel constrained to look into this. It is not needed. The Governor in Council can give this authority. Why then must it rest in the minister?

I can place a great deal more trust in the passage of Orders in Council that have the authority of the Governor in Council than I can in having the authority vested in the minister. That is the situation in the United Kingdom. Over there they have taken the strongest possible objection to this sort of thing. The parliament of the United Kingdom has existed for a long time. It has taken the strongest possible objection to the invasions in these areas of power that have taken place under successive governments by the bureaucracy which likes shortcuts in the interests of efficiency and immediate effectiveness.

It would not take the minister long to place the matter I have suggested before the Governor in Council. It might be that those who have not sat in cabinet might consider that such a course would take a long time. As a matter of fact, it does not take any time at all. One accepts in cabinet the recommendations of the minister regarding the Orders in Council that are necessary. That is his responsibility to the whole field of cabinet authority and it makes possible the acceptance of his recommendations. That is so unless in fact there is something so extraordinary in what the minister recommends as to shock the collective conscience of the executive.

I suggest to the minister, and I say this in a spirit of co-operation and desiring to assure that we shall not take these preliminary steps to get away from the Governor in Council, that we should not give the minister the authority to be a lawmaker. If parliament once embodies such authority in one case the pathway of today can become the highway of tomorrow. We would create a dangerous precedent. I am sure the minister will give every consideration to this suggestion. It in no way weakens the amendments but it does maintain the strength of the parliamentary system in the exercise of the authority to make regulations.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I turn to one other matter, the proposed increase in the number of members of the Air Transport Board. From my own experience I am inclined to agree that an increase is necessary. The Air Transport Board has a tremendous field of responsibility and the various areas of Canada each have their own needs and requirements. There are, I think, four or five such areas across this nation, each having a different set of problems, and I think an increase in the size of the board is a step in the right deirection.

However, I have known in the past—the minister shakes his head. He already knows what I am going to bring up. It shows he has the power of apperception even before communication is made—

An hon. Member: Extrasensory perception.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, in a philosophic sense I suppose we call it extrasensory perception. It is very valuable. But it has been known upon occasion that when boards are increased in numbers those who had occupied positions thereon lose their appointments. I am sure the minister does not have this in mind. There are three members on the Air Transport Board today in respect of whom I should like to have the hon. gentleman's assurance that not only will they be entitled to reappointment, as stated in the bill, but that they will be reappointed and that this proposal in no way constitutes a form of circumlocution whose purpose is to bring about the removal of any member of this board.

The views I have expressed are placed before the house in the most co-operative spirit. I think they are reasonable and fair and they are based upon the experience which was mine when I headed a government. I believe them to be valid in the national interest and I hope the minister will give consideration to them.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak on a matter which concerns the safety and the comfort of air passengers. Today, more and more of our older people are flying. Also, included among the younger people who fly are a great many who suffer from coronary weaknesses and other chronic diseases. They, like other passengers, are often obliged to walk long distances and climb flights of stairs before boarding or after leaving their planes. I have noticed that sometimes they have to stop to take medication to help them on their way. I think we should provide, in close proximity to the airfield itself, sheltered places—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member when he is discussing a matter of such importance but I must remind him that our discussion now should be limited as far as possible to the principles of this bill to amend the Aeronautics Act. I have glanced rapidly at the measure before us and I see no reference in it at all to what the hon. member for Simcoe East is now saying.

Mr. Rynard: I will rapidly draw my remarks to a conclusion. Before you assumed the Chair, Mr. Speaker, hon. members were talking about safety. I am concerned about the safety of the passengers who use these planes. Though many of these men and women are quite able to carry on their affairs in a normal way, unusual exertion could be dangerous to them and I should like to ask the minister whether he will undertake to do something to reduce the distances which must be walked at our airports and thus make things easier for the people to whom I have referred.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I wish first to deal with two points raised by the Leader of the Opposition. The right hon. gentleman took exception—and I can understand his doing so—to the terms of clause 1 of the amendment relating to the new section 3A(2). This type of delegation of powers already exists in the Aeronautics Act. Section 4(2) of the present act reads as follows:

> Any regulation made under subsection (1) may authorize the minister to make orders or directions with respect to such matters coming within this section as the regulations may prescribe.

In other words, this is a power within the scope of the present act which authorizes the Governor in Council to make a regulation giving power to the minister to make orders or give directions. I use those two words advisedly. He is not given power to make new regulations but to make orders or directions with respect to such matters as come within the section.

This section has come into play in a number of emergency situations. For instance, section 4(1)(a) of the present act refers to regulations governing the licensing of pilots and others engaged in the navigation of aircraft and provides for the suspension or revocation of such licences. I am sure hon. members can readily contemplate that in certain circumstances quick action is needed and that the minister should have authority under the regulations to make an order or direction for the suspension or revocation of a licence.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister not agree that this is a vastly different situation from the kind of power which is being sought in the amendment in the bill before us?

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Turner: Yes it is, but I want to explain to hon. members how it was that this particular clause was inserted in the amendments. I should imagine it was inserted there on the advice of the law officers of the Crown in furtherance of the existing section in the statute. In other words, it is not a novel situation to have a form of subdelegation within the Aeronautics Act. I will get to the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon in just a moment.

Section 4(1)(d) of the present statute concerns regulations with respect to the conditions under which aircraft may be used and operated, and again I think hon. members would recognize that the minister must have immediate power to make orders or give directions affecting that sort of matter. Within the amendment as proposed the subclause, with respect, does not confer upon the minister the subdelegated power to make regulations but only to make orders or give directions. In other words, the subdelegation is narrower than envisaged by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). However, having consulted with the officials of the department I am advised that they can live with the elimination of this particular subclause.

As a matter of fact, I may advise the house that when we get into committee on this particular subclause we would be prepared to have it dropped, and I want to thank the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Yukon for drawing it to the attention of the house. I do not think that within its scope it is nearly as dangerous as the hon. member for Yukon wished to portray it, but I do recognize the principle involved.

I should now like to go into the other matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition. As a matter of courtesy to him may I say that his fears, of which I had a certain extrasensory perception, are in no way justified. I am advised that the clause does not invalidate the terms of the present three members. In passing may I say that someone in the chamber asked me who the members of the Air Transport Board are. They are J. L. G. Morisset, chairman, J. R. Belcher and G. R. Boucher, Q.C. I am sure I can give the undertaking that their appointments will in no way be affected by this amendment.

The hon. member for Yukon mentioned a number of arguments which, with the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with in turn. I am well aware of the hon. member's own prowess and experience in the air, having flown with him on many occasions throughout his own constituency, and if that is not a pioneering spirit I want to know what is, Mr. Speaker. It was one of the most adventurous tours I ever made while serving as a member of this house and I pay full tribute to his skill at the controls.

The bill refers to flights within Canada. It does not contemplate jurisdiction for charges for availability of services over the high seas. Therefore it is my understanding that the Gander control area would not be affected. But lest I misled the house by inadvertence in my initial statement may I say it would include that part of an international flight over Canadian territory.

The hon. member for Yukon suggested that because we are now incorporating these charges under the authority of the Aeronautics Act their legality was in some doubt or subject to question while depending on the authority of the Financial Administration Act. Let me read section 18 of that act:

> Where a service is provided by Her Majesty to any person and the Governor in Council is of opinion that the whole or part of the cost of the service should be borne by the person to whom it is provided, the Governor in Council may, subject to the provisions of any act relating to that service, by regulation prescribe the fee that may be charged for the service.

Therefore we can justify landing fees, telecommunications fees, hangar storage charges, aircraft parking charges, goods storage charges and aircraft moving charges. The present bill to amend the Aeronautics Act would authorize all of these charges to be assigned pursuant to the Aeronautics Act.

The hon. member's point was whether the Financial Administration Act constituted authority for charges for the availability of services. Without entering into a legal interpretation let me just say in reply to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that the present amendment would remove any doubt that there might have been as to the justification for this.

Mr. Nielsen: At this point may I ask the minister if there are any actions still pending over the right of the government to collect the charges levied under section 18 of the Financial Administration Act?

Mr. Turner: I cannot give an answer to that question. I merely cite the principle that no act is retroactive under common law and no matter what this bill achieves it will not affect retroactively the validity of any charge made previously.

Mr. Nielsen: The charges were not paid before and actions were brought, as the minister knows.

Mr. Turner: Well, if the charge was invalid then it will not be validated by this particular amendment. I was asked how the charges are calculated. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon is aware of the manual information circular as to the present fees and charges and I would assume that the method of calculation would remain the same under this amendment.

Mr. Nielsen: No. That document does not cover the point of availability of electronic navigable aids and the charges made therefor.

Mr. Turner: Now we are talking about the availability charges, and I will deal with that in due course.

Mr. Nielsen: I might say I do not agree with the charge.

Mr. Turner: I would now like to deal briefly with the philosophical argument introduced by the hon. member for Yukon that because the highways are free to the users thereof, subject to licence charges and gasoline tax, then the use of facilities available to non-commercial pilots should involve the same rights and privileges. I quite realize that he would not object to hangar charges or to the gasoline tax.

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. Nielsen: Just the amount.

Mr. Turner: He says merely the amount, but then we all have that particular problem. Let me say that much as I want to encourage an increase in the flying business and the pursuit of flying in this country, I do not think the day has yet arrived where the number of pilots and private planes involved justifies the self-supporting, no-charge treatment that the millions of users of our highways now enjoy.

I am sure that day will come. I look forward to the encouragement of the opening up of this country by way of commercial and non-commercial private air travel as much as does the hon. member. Let me say too that what we are talking about, within the present regulations in any event, is somewhat narrower than would appear at first blush because, for example, under the present regulations no fee or charge is payable in respect of a landing at an airport, other than Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, of an aircraft not based at the airport which is owned and operated by a flying club or an aircraft over 5,000 lbs, not based at the airport, and owned and based at a flying school. The fourth exemption is a private aircraft not weighing over 5,000 lbs. Therefore the extent of these fees and charges is not as wide as the hon. member would have us believe.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: I know the minister would wish me to point out that this is a recent change and that these charges at other airports are now included in the gasoline taxes. They were imposed at most of the Department of Transport airports.

Mr. Turner: I will interpret that as a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker. Let me say also that the department is in constant touch and negotiation with the various private flying associations, and I would hope they would continue to do so in order that the objectives sought by the hon. member will be achieved and eventually there will be no distinction between commercial and non-commercial use of our airways and landing facilities. I would contemplate this over the years.

Let me say also that I am advised in respect of the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act that these charges contemplated and already imposed under that act in no way are higher than they are in the United States. I would point out to the hon. member that there is no single United States level because their airports vary under municipal control. The additional federal levies, such as the transportation tax and many other United States charges, are much higher than ours and they have types of charges which we do not have. On the other hand, other United States charges I do concede are lower.

Turning now to the substance of the hon. member's argument about charges for the availability of services, let me say first of all that these charges do not constitute a tax. A charge for a service rendered or a service which may be rendered is not the imposition of a tax so far as I am concerned under any definition of the common or statute law. What we contemplate here by available services are such things as weather information, use of radio ranges, beacons, other navigational items and the electronic aids with which I know the hon. member is familiar.

I should like to submit to the house that there is no contractual relationship here. These services are held available for the safety of our air lines. I was glad to see the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) stress that aspect of these regulations. They are understandable services in the case of need. They may be voluntarily required. They may be required under times of stress or for the furnishing of needed information.

Let me put this to the hon. member. These charges are no different in effect from the pilotage charge imposed upon an owner or master of a vessel coming up a ship channel where the pilotage charge is compulsory. For the use of the owner, and in the interest of safety, we impose upon the owner and master of a vessel the obligation to take a pilot aboard. Let me say also to the hon. member, who shares the same profession I do, that it is quite customary for lawyers or other consultants to operate on retaining fees, the basis of the retainer being that the lawyer, accountant or management consultant should be available in terms of service no matter whether he actually renders a service during any calendar year. I know that the retainer fee is a contemplated and quite usual form of professional conduct and in no way could be considered as a tax by the person who is rendering or who is available to render the service.

I wish to say to the hon. member that the concept of these charges for facilities available for flights within Canada has been discussed with the international air lines. In my earlier statement I mentioned that the International Air Transport Association had been consulted. It also was a subject of consultation with all or most international air lines both through meetings and by letter. The air lines did not object to the principle of availability once the departmental officials had limited it to Canadian air space only. All they objected to before as I am sure the hon. member knows, was the extraterritorial implication in the earlier bill. They asked the assurance of the Department of Transport that the charges would be reasonable in relation to the cost of providing these services. The department gave the international air lines the assurance that they would be consulted before the department passed regulations in respect of any charge of this particular type. I am led to believe, Mr. Speaker, that they have accepted this undertaking on behalf of the departmental officials. I feel I have covered all the points raised by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). Perhaps he can correct me when we get to the particular clauses. In closing may I say that I sympathize very much with the remarks made by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) because we in Montreal particularly have a walk of at least a quarter of a mile from some of the international flights to the main body of the airport. I certainly will draw this matter to the attention of the officials, many of whom are sitting in the official gallery.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Regulations.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, in accordance with my undertaking I recommend to the committee that clause 1 be amended by the deletion of subsection 2 of the new section 3A.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister whether subsection 1 would not go as well since there are only two paragraphs in 3A?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Turner: I do not follow that.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe what the hon. member for Halifax meant to say was that you would have to refer to the wording of the previous bill, C-117, and section 3A would be divided only into two basic subsections. We have in the present bill subparagraphs (i) and (ii). You are now deleting subsection 2 of the proposed new act so that (a) would become 1 and (b) would become 2.

Mr. Turner: I am sure the numbering will take care of itself. The only deletion is in respect of the present subsection 2 of the new section.

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members have heard the proposed amendment. Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I raised one other point having regard to availability. The minister dealt quite adequately with facilities and services provided but he has not satisfied me regarding the levy of a charge for availability of facilities. He drew the example of retainers in the professional field as an analogy but I suggest there is no analogy there. Even if there were, in that case there is a service being offered to the one who pays the retainer, that service being the agreement of the one retained not to act against the one who pays the retainer.

As another example the minister used the field of pilotage regarding ships using our navigable waters. In my submission this also is not a good analogy because as he knows these pilotage fees are only payable when the ships are in fact using the pilotage services or when they are compelled to use them. In this case you are dealing with facilities which no one is compelled to use. These electronic navigational aids are available to the general air space users without compulsion.

During the second reading stage I posed a specific question which the minister might answer. Does any other country which is a signatory to the international air agreement make any charges for the availability of electronic navigational facilities? I hope Canada is not seeking to establish a precedent in this field because the international agreement itself covers this very point.

As I pointed out before, Canada is a signatory to the international air agreement which at page 29 sets forth the following:

> Each member state undertakes, so far as it may find practicable, to make available such radio facilities, such meteorological services, and such other air navigation facilities as may from time to time be required for the operation of safe and efficient scheduled international air services under the provisions of this agreement.

There is in any event an obligation upon Canada to provide the kind of facilities in respect of which it is being sought to levy a charge because of the mere availability of them.

The minister made a further point regarding my analogy in connection with highways to the effect that we have not yet reached the position where, because of the number of aircraft and users of these facilities, we can afford to pay the cost of erecting and maintaining them. May I point out to the minister that before this bill was proposed no such charges were made for electronic navigational aids in Canada. We are now breaking entirely new ground.

Mr. Turner: The industry is moving forward.

Mr. Nielsen: As I have pointed out, Canada has been a pioneer in the promotion of the growth of aviation.

Mr. Turner: Perhaps this is a pioneering change.

Mr. Nielsen: We do not want to stifle that growth by the imposition of an unacceptable precedent. I believe there are valid analogies, which the minister tried to draw but failed, on the other side of the coin and I want to point out one or two.

A good example of parliament's attitude toward the kind of tax I suggest this is is demonstrated by the export duty on electricity which was imposed until the 1963 federal budget which time it was repealed. For many years the authority to levy an export duty on electricity was established under the Exportation of Electricity and Fluids Act and later the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act. Under both those statutes it was enacted that the Governor in Council could make regulations imposing export duties not exceeding $10 per horsepower per annum on power exported from Canada.

At this point it will be observed that in each of those two power statutes there was a delegation from parliament to the executive of the right to impose a tax but with the notable exception that in these power statutes, and this was the point I was trying to get across during second reading, a maximum tax was established by parliament. That is not the case in respect of this proposal. In this case no maximum rate is established anywhere in the bill. Even in the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, as the minister well knows, there was a maximum rate of $64 established. Here there is no such expression of limitation.

As recently as 1959 the government of that day decided as a matter of policy that the discretionary authority given to the executive to establish and export duty on power, within a statutory maximum, should be removed and the entire right restored to parliament. This was achieved by placing this power tax under the Excise Tax Act where it is today in section 8. The exact rate of tax was spelled out.

Certain things were said by the minister of finance of that day and if the present minister wishes to find his words they appear in Hansard of May 19, 1959, at page 3820 as well as in the Senate Hansard of June 17, 1959, at page 839.

The user charge provided in this bill would clearly have a bearing on the revenue of the federal government and therefore it would be a taxation provision. This being so, I submit that the better parliamentary practice requires that the imposition of such a tax should be established by parliament and not by an Order in Council of the executive.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I could cite further authority for the minister but I will not hold up the proceedings of the committee. I suggest to him once again that the idea of imposing a charge for the mere availability of a service has no precedent whatsoever. The analogies he has drawn are poor ones and they cannot be compared with the situation which is being created by this bill. I suggest it would be cured by the removal of the word "availability" and simply leaving the matter on the basis of use.

There is one further, minor suggestion I would make to the minister. When he speaks later perhaps he will explain why this suggestion should not be adopted. I can see no reason for including in paragraph (b) in the second line the words "wherever resident". It seems to me that if use and availability are to be the criteria—and I suggest that the latter would be an improper criterion to use—it makes little difference whether these words are there at all because the criterion is an aircraft that is using the service and it makes no difference where the owner or operator might be resident.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into an argument on whether it is a charge or a tax. I simply restate the submission I made to the house during second reading, namely, that this is a proper charge and there is ample precedent for giving the Governor in Council the power to make regulations in respect of such charge for the use of services. With regard to charges for services that may be held available, this provision has become necessary because of the development of the air industry and new means of safety control involving weather information, radar, radio and electronic control. In the interests of safety in the air these services must be held available and it is in the interests of this country to impose a charge commensurate with the cost of providing these services for the benefit of air lines both domestic and international. It is in the interests of safety in the air that the air lines bear a share of these charges.

This type of charge is accepted as legal by the International Civil Aviation Organization. I am advised that the United States is considering an additional transportation charge for this very purpose. President Johnson recently made a request to Congress for this type of charge, using a different means but having the same goal. I am also led to understand that the United Kingdom is considering a systems charge for approaches. Australia has imposed a charge which we believe is similar to the availability charge but our officials do not have the details readily available.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is ample precedent in that the major air nations of the world are moving, in accordance with the development of civil aviation everywhere, toward imposing this kind of charge to reimburse partially the cost of these services which are provided along the great air highways and byways of the world. They are doing this to ensure that safety requirements are kept intact and well above the minimum. That is the basis for it. We have to move ahead with the times. I can assure the hon. member that these charges will not be imposed without consultation with the air lines concerned and we have already given them our undertaking that the charges will be reasonable.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, the minister has just added a further argument to my case. He has not directly answered the question: Is there any other country that is imposing a charge for the availability of electronic navigational aids? The answer to that question is no. I think the minister will find that is so. Canada is breaking new ground here. Nobody is attempting to stop Canada moving ahead but I think this is one area in which the government is advancing on a wrong basis.

The minister says that in the United States additional transportation charges are now being considered in order to cover this kind of installation and maintenance in that country. That is vastly different from charging on the basis of availability every aircraft that uses Canadian air space. This is precisely, apart from general taxation that goes to the support of our highways, the principle upon which our highways system in Canada works. In other words, the provision of air safety in a country, like highway safety or any other public service, is an obligation of the general population. It is an obligation of the general ratepayer and not an obligation of the specific user, because the air lines themselves and other air users are not the only ones to benefit by the establishment and maintenance of these facilities.

The people who benefit from the establishment and maintenance of superior navigational aids are the general population in this country, everyone who uses the air lines. It would seem to me from what the minister has said that the United States is considering the imposition of an additional charge to passengers, in other words, the general public who are using air lines facilities in the United States. This is quite different from what this government is attempting to do by imposing a charge for the general availability of navigational aids in this country, and we are the first country to do such a thing.

Mr. Turner: The charge will eventually be reflected in the charge to passengers. The United States is doing it directly. This would be an indirect charge. Every nation in the world will have to insist on this type of charge for the availability of traffic control services.

Mr. Nielsen: Precisely; and it should be a matter of general taxation just as it is in the establishment and maintenance of highways in this country. Do the passengers using the public ground transportation facilities in this country have to pay a special kind of fee for using the buses and other means of transportation that travel on these systems? The more the minister considers this matter, the more he will agree with me, I am sure, that the principle of establishing safe airways and the maintenance of radio and navigational facilities in the functioning of those airways is an obligation that lies on the shoulders of every citizen of the country and not just on the users of those facilities in the form of air lines or aircraft owners and fliers. The general populace should be called upon to maintain this kind of service in the country. It is on this basis that I am pleading with the minister to reconsider the inclusion of the word "availability" in this paragraph. "Use", yes, but "availability" is much too vague and operates on a wrong principle entirely.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Yukon, and I remember the hon. member raising a similar issue earlier. I have also listened carefully to the remarks which the minister made in reply to the hon. member's points. It seems to me that on the face of it the hon. member for Yukon had the better of the argument, particularly when he drew a parallel with our highways. At an earlier stage in our history when the people who made use of the roads were a relatively small segment of the population the custom of applying tolls on road users was a fairly common one, but as we reached the point where virtually everyone used the roads the idea of charging tolls disappeared.

The minister advanced the argument that because of the growth of air travel these charges were becoming necessary. On the other hand, if I understood him correctly, the hon. member for Yukon was arguing that because of the general use being made of air services now by perhaps not everyone but at one time or another by virtually everyone in the country, the parallel situation in respect of the use of our highways was a reversal of the argument put forward by the minister.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I have not pursued this question to the extent the hon. member for Yukon has, but I would make that observation to the minister. I know that the argument he is advancing on this particular point is one which appears to be, shall I say, a creeping philosophy within the Department of Transport. It is an argument which undoubtedly will have to be the subject matter of debate on quite a number of occasions. The question of principle involved is of great concern on the west coast of British Columbia at the present time in regard to the use of facilities provided to those who use the sea lanes rather than the air lanes which are involved in this particular discussion.

I just wanted to let the minister know that I do have some interest in this question and that on balance, as the matter stands at the moment, the hon. member for Yukon seems to have the better argument in this particular case, at least in my judgment.

Mr. Turner: Might I interject for a moment, Mr. Chairman? I had the advantage of reading the speech which the hon. member made three years ago in which he took the position I have taken this afternoon. I was hoping I would have him on my side.

May I refer him to page 5438 of Hansard for December 4, 1963. At the point in his speech where he was taking issue with the hon. member for Yukon for advancing the very argument he has advanced this afternoon, which is why I thought I would have the hon. member on my side when I saw him rise, the hon. member said:

> I really do not think an analogy can be drawn between the situation of a plane owner and of an automobile owner in our present society. As the owner and driver of an automobile I certainly feel I contribute substantially in the course of a year toward the operation of public facilities which enable me to drive around the country. I do not feel that an unduly high levy should be exacted from plane operators, but I feel there is some reason why they should be required to pay a reasonable amount to defray the cost of facilities provided out of public funds.

His reasons were convincing then.

Mr. Barnett: I am quite aware of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that my initial reaction to the point which has been raised again by the hon. member for Yukon was along the lines quoted by the minister. I readily admit that it is quite largely a matter of assessment and judgment. I think that one of the functions of sitting in this house is to listen to arguments which are presented and perhaps reaching a somewhat different assessment of situations as we give further thought to them. The particular emphasis placed by the hon. member for Yukon in his presentation on the question of availability has something to do, I think, with my suggestion that it is a question to which some serious thought should be given. Undoubtedly air line operators as such should and do pay taxes analogous to the kind of taxes we pay when we buy gasoline for our cars. Perhaps there is a case for some of the charges being made for the use of landing facilities and other facilities provided through the Department of Transport.

I am not dogmatic in my own mind on this question. I merely say that on balance, after having listened to this renewal of the discussion, the hon. member for Yukon has the edge on the minister so far as this argument is concerned. However, I do not intend to pursue the question at great length because I do have one or two other matters I should like to discuss on clause 1. One of them has to do with clause 2 of the bill and I hope to propose a minor amendment to that clause. If I refer to it now the minister might be able to give it some consideration and perhaps accept it.

Clause 2 is an extension of the present section 4 of the act which provides as follows:

> Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the minister may make regulations to control and regulate air navigation over Canada—

Then it lists a number of items in detail.

The proposal is to amend that clause by adding a number of other additional fields in which the minister may make such regulations. The one at the head of the amending clause, paragraph (k), establishes the authority to make regulations concerning the maximum hours of work and other working conditions for pilots, co-pilots, navigators and flight engineers.

I realize that in part that is a consolidation of an existing power provided in another section of the act, but the point I should like to raise with the minister is this. Since the Aeronautics Act was passed by the house there have been developments regarding maximum hours of work and other work conditions. I refer in particular to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code which parliament passed last year.

It seems to me, particularly when we are dealing with amending legislation, that we should take steps to make it clear that any authority conferred upon the Governor in Council, or in this case on the minister with the approval of the Governor in Council, to make regulations in this field should be clearly subject to the over-riding authority of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. I believe this should be made clear in paragraph (k) of clause 2.

I think it is likely that the regulations in connection with the maximum hours of work of pilots which will actually be enacted may be somewhat more favourable, shall we say, than the maximum provided by the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, but nevertheless it does seem to me that the principle involved here is one which warrants consideration.

I would suggest a simple amendment to the proposed clause 2 by inserting at the beginning of it such words as these: "Subject to the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code." Then the clause would continue with the words, "the maximum hours of work", and so on.

• (5:40 p.m.)

This would make it quite clear that regulations could not be made under the authority of this section of the act which would in any way be less favourable than those which are set out as standards in the Canada Labour Code. I should like the minister to consider that idea. Perhaps he may agree when we come to clause 2 of the bill to accept an amendment along the lines I have proposed.

There is one other reference I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, which I may as well make now while I am on my feet. I am pleased to see included in the proposed amendments certain provisions in regard to appeals to the minister from decisions of the Air Transport Board. I do not know whether the minister who is piloting this bill through the house will recall the matter, but a couple of years ago I raised a matter of serious concern in my area of the country involving the fact that other air lines or interveners, as I believe they are called here, might be dissatisfied with a decision of the Air Transport Board and would not have the same right of appeal as the air line which was making the application for a licence or to amend its licence. I am glad to see that the bill we have before us now does take care, as I understand it, of what at the time I argued was a quite serious omission in the provisions of the Aeronautics Act.

Mr. Leboe: Would the minister tell us approximately how much money is expected to be derived from these charges that we have been talking about? What amount will be available to the government? I am reminded that at some airports there are machines into which you can put money and get almost anything although to get a shave you have to go to the kitchen and plug in your razor. I am wondering just how far we are going to go with collecting these small amounts of money. How far are we going to go with the operation of these machines in the aeronautics business of Canada? Could the minister tell us approximately how much money is involved in this tax or charge?

Mr. Turner: I will get an estimate on that, Mr. Chairman. It is a little hard to estimate because it depends on the amount of traffic contemplated.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, if the minister could get the amount I think it would be of some use to the committee. I suspect that not a great deal of money is involved. If not very much money is going to be involved there must be some other way in which the amount of tax, or whatever you want to call it, can be collected so that the amount of revenue can remain approximately the same.

There is a principle involved here. I agree with the hon. member for Yukon who says that we should not be operating on this basis at all. I think, as he does, that the principle is wrong.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, let me say that I have given the undertaking that the charge will not be unreasonable in relation to the cost. I want to recall to hon. members that the analogy of compulsory pilotage is not too farfetched. There are areas in international and domestic waters where compulsory pilotage is required whether needed or not, and in terms of marine safety it is well known that this is justified. In terms of the expanding areas of stand-by charges, in the light of modern methods this charge, although it might be considered novel, is certainly not unusual in the light of the expansion and development of the industry.

A good proportion of the charges for the available services will be made to international air lines flying over Canadian territory and taking advantage of the safety measures that we have by way of electronic devices and things of that sort. The people of Canada would really be subsidizing a great proportion of the world's air traffic over the pole if we did not have the power to make a charge for these available services. In effect Canada will be providing the safety measures for a good part of the world's air traffic but limited to jurisdiction over Canadian territory.

I want to bring to the attention of hon. members that while this new charge is not unusual in terms of modern safety it is only adopted because of the expanding nature and the insistent requirements of safety in the air. Canada will be responsible for a good proportion of the world's air traffic over its territory. These charges will not be unreasonable having regard to the cost that Canada will be incurring to provide these measures.

Mr. Leboe: Will these charges apply to small aircraft flying in and out of a particular home airport? I refer to an airport such as Montreal. Will there be any charge for aircraft based there? Will there be any charges in connection with chartered aircraft that might be using these facilities?

Mr. Turner: In reply, the words of the bill are:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations . . . imposing upon the owners or operators of aircraft, wherever resident, in respect of flights within Canada, charges—

These charges, of course, will be geared to the size and equipment of the aircraft. That is the only answer I can give the hon. member on that question.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister referred to the analogy of pilotage. He is trying to show that there is an analogy on the basis of shipping in national and international waters being required to carry pilots whether or not the services are needed. That in no way is common ground with what is being attempted in this bill, which is an attempt to impose a charge for the mere availability of services which may or may not be required to be used. There is a great deal of difference between the two.

Perhaps I might mention here something referred to by the hon. member for Cariboo with respect to these charges. I have before me a table of the revenues collected from landing fees and aviation fuel and oil concessions at airports operated by the Department of Transport for the period of May 1, 1963, to October 31, 1963, some six months. The table covers all airports in the provinces and territories of Canada.

The table shows that fees charged to domestic users amounted in that period to $1,972,841.45; for transoceanic users the fees amounted to $1,916,980.47; for test flights the charges were $9,202.00; international transborder fees were $488,263.59, and fees charged by way of fuel and aviation tax at 1 cent per gallon on fuel and 5 cents per gallon on oil were $1,083,752.18.

We are not speaking about small amounts. We are speaking of the kind of charges to which I have referred. Perhaps what I say might be merged in the minister's reply to the question by the hon. member for Cariboo. It is no longer international flights that are subject to a charge or to a tax, as I call it, under this clause. Affected is the owner or user of every aircraft using the electronic navigational aids provided by the Department of Transport in this country whether he is operating a private aircraft, whether he is operating a commercial non-scheduled charter service—and goodness knows we must not do anything in my view to stifle the growth of this kind of service in the northern part of the country—or whether the operator is an international carrier.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I should have no objection whatsoever if the government wished to impose a charge for the use of this kind of facility. My objection rests solely on the inclusion in the legislation of the particular word "availability". It is functioning on a wrong principle to impose a charge on every aircraft owner in this country, or even give the authority for it, on the vague basis that the service is available and whether or not you use it you have to pay me a charge. That is like my saying to the minister: I have an empty garage at home; you have to pay me $50 a month for it whether or not you use it. That principle is wrong, and the use of the word "availability" in this legislation would allow that to happen.

Many aircraft used on non-scheduled work and, indeed, on commercial scheduled work do not contain the sophisticated electronic equipment which is capable of using the kind of facilities provided in Canada. For instance, OMNI is used extensively in the southern part of Canada but in the northern part we have not got it, and for us in the north to be charged for the use of a facility like that when it does not assist us would be wrong.

Progress reported.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that with the consent of the house we adjourn after royal assent until eight o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest that this should be considered when we return from the other place.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 39A the following matters will be discussed at ten o'clock this evening: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), The Canadian Economy—effect on pensioners of increasing cost of living; the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays), Northern Affairs —construction of replica of "Grande Hermine" for Expo '67; the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Grills), Income Tax—allowance of municipal taxation on farm homes.

Motions for Papers

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

An act to incorporate Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated.

An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River between the Province of New Brunswick and the State of Maine.

An act to amend the Judges Act.

An act to amend the Admiralty Act.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1966.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I made the suggestion that we might be well advised to adjourn for a supper hour and return at eight o'clock, with consent. Do we have that consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: It being after six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

NORRIS COMMISSION

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Orlikow:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all the working papers prepared for the Norris commission by the chartered accountants hired by the commission and deposited by Mr. Justice Norris with the Department of Labour.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on the last occasion the house was discussing the question of the production of papers respecting the Norris commission it was suggested that the house did not have the authority to order such papers tabled by virtue of the legislation itself, which is quite true. It was pointed out by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) that the commission was set up under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and that section 56 (5) states specifically with reference to section 33 of that act:

—the information so obtained from such documents shall not, except as the Conciliation Board deems expedient, be made public.

Hon. members will recall that Justice Norris made a full and complete report which ran to two volumes, and I am sure that he made public all relevant matters which he determined to be in the public's interest. Surely to assume otherwise would be to doubt the competency of the Justice himself.

If this motion were to pass it seems to me that the department would have no alternative but to make a nil return. However, since the matter has been discussed at length by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and other members on this side of the house I will not ask you to make a ruling at this time.

One can only wonder what is behind the determination on the part of the New Democratic Party to reveal all the working papers which formed part of the study of Mr. Justice Norris. It seems to me that this involves a continuing harassment of independent unions not affiliated with the larger bodies, most of whom are making regular contributions to the N.D.P.

In the opening remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North he said certain things which I feel would justify the assumption that he felt that because donations had been made by the Seafarers' International Union to certain candidates running for parliament there was some sinister motive in the union's action. It was also suggested that because the Seafarers' International Union had made contributions to Liberal candidates it was made much easier for Hal Banks to carry on his nefarious undertakings. At one point, as reported at page 1027 of Hansard of February 10, 1966, the hon. member for Winnipeg North said:

I think it is important to establish certain facts.

He then continued to establish certain facts and said, as reported on page 1027:

I do not have to tell members of this house what Mr. Justice Norris found. I do not have to tell members of this house that he found that the S.I.U., headed by Mr. Banks, had been guilty of acts of violence, beatings, arson and other illegal actions. It was then that the house was asked to vote—

He was referring to the legislation brought in to establish the board of trustees which is now administering the affairs of certain maritime unions.

The hon. member states further:

Mr. Banks is probably as bad as everything that has been said about him and possibly worse, but he could not have done those things unless he had received the co-operation of very influential and important organizations outside the labour movement.

Further on he said:

I pointed out the connections which he had with other organizations and which he must have certainly had with political figures in the areas in which his union operated.

As found on page 1028 the hon. member for Winnipeg North quoted extensively from a newspaper article which appeared in the Toronto Star in which the reporter, Robert Reguly, implied that he had seen certain documents held by the Department of Labour and that in those documents there was reference to certain cheques having been issued to certain candidates in the Montreal area. I was the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour for some time and this charge did not sufficiently concern me to investigate it because I was not interested in what was or was not contained in those papers. I do know there were no cheques issued to me but had there been I should not have felt any embarrassment in that fact being made public.

The implication being made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North is that, because these contributions were made, in some way or another these political figures were able to conspire to allow Mr. Banks to get away with these acts of violence. He is suggesting guilt by inference or guilt by association. If what the hon. member is saying is true, then of course these members would be as guilty as Mr. Banks himself.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I am sure that if Mr. Banks did make any contributions in 1962 they were probably for the favour he received in being brought into this country in the first place. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) will recall, as will many other members of this house, that Mr. Banks was brought into this country many years ago by some people in government, business and elsewhere who had the mistaken impression that he could do a "bang-up" job of ridding the Canadian maritime unions of Communists.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Byrne: Yes, indeed.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member referred to those who had mistaken ideas of what Mr. Banks could do. Would he include certain leaders of the labour movement?

Mr. Byrne: Indeed. I am glad the hon. member brought that matter to my attention. At that time it was the Canadian Labour Congress.

An hon. Member: And the C.N.T.U.

Mr. Byrne: Perhaps the C.N.T.U. also. I do not recall that but I am sure it was the industrial organization of the time, namely, the Canadian Labour Congress, which held this mistaken impression.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: These people found there are worse things in unions than Communists which could cause even more damage. I wonder whether members of the New Democratic Party would mind my taking a few moments to show that all the gangsters, all the wrongdoers in the labour movement, are not in those unions outside the C.L.C. and that indeed there have been extreme acts of violence perpetrated by the Steelworkers close to where we are at this moment, namely, the province of Quebec in the Gaspé peninsula.

Before doing so I wish to establish the fact—it is a known fact but should be put on the record—that the Steelworkers Union, to which I shall refer later, makes contributions to the New Democratic Party and in return, of course, demands that members of the New Democratic Party perform as they suggest. I am not—

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Byrne: —suggesting that all those hon. members comply with their demands, but the union asks that certain things be done. The hon. member for Kootenay West is getting quite agitated. I shall refer to him in a moment. Perhaps you would allow me, Mr. Speaker, to read in support of my remarks an editorial gem from the "Miners' Voice", the Steelworkers regular weekly, or perhaps it is monthly, paper. It is headed, "What's With The N.D.P.?" I shall not read the whole article but among other things it says:

> Steelworker full-time staff representatives contribute generously to the party's coffers by way of salary check-off. Thousands of rank and file steelworkers are party members and workers. The union is the party's largest Canadian labour affiliate.
>
> One takes for granted that the party's politicians reciprocate this solid support. One would at least expect that they would not ignore, dismiss or condone malicious attacks on the steelworkers by the union's opponents. Not so.

The second last paragraph of the editorial is the one in which they make reference to the hon. member for Kootenay West who, by the way, is an honorary member of the Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers Union.

Mr. Herridge: And proud of it.

Mr. Byrne: It is a union of which, I am happy to say, I was a long-time member and am now an honorary life member. This paragraph of the editorial says:

> Two such Mine Mill apologists come to mind. They are Leonard Mahoney,—

This is not Bill Mahoney, by the way.

> —reeve of Mountjoy Township and the baron of the Kootenays, H. W. Herridge, M.P.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Byrne: The article continues:

> Mahoney, a member of Mine Mill's paper Local 241 in Timmins is actively sabotaging the Steelworkers' bid to weld—

This is the Steelworkers sophisticated way of saying "raiding".

> —one powerful mine union.

Then it says:

> Herridge graces Mine Mill's table and sings its praises for the agitprop boys' propaganda mill.

I think I should read the last paragraph:

> For some years, we have suffered these antics in silence. We think the time has come when responsible N.D.P. leaders and members had better declare themselves. We want to know where they sit!

Mr. Herridge: I know where I stand.

Mr. Byrne: I said earlier that I am not going to presume guilt by association. I know there are many members of the New Democratic Party who would not condone receiving donations from a union which would perpetrate such acts of violence as are recorded in this little book called "The Rule of Law," and more specifically and in more detail in the unofficial translation of the judgment of Mr. Justice Antoine Lacourcière who heard the case against the Steelworkers brought by the Gaspé Copper Mining Company. The exact name is not important.

An hon. Member: Noranda.

Mr. Byrne: Gaspé Copper Mines, Limited. As I said, I am not implying that members are dishonest because of this, but the inference was certainly made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) respecting Liberal members.

Mr. Scott: Filibuster.

Mr. Byrne: I should like to cite just a few gems from this judgment. First the judge says:

> This strike was absolutely illegal, in flagrant contravention of article 24 of the Labour Relations Act of the province of Quebec, which forbids any strike so long as an employees' association has not been recognized as representing the group of employees in question.

Mr. Scott: Question.

Mr. Byrne: I quote further from the report of the judgment:

> From the beginning of the strike, force was paramount; in the first place the blockade of the plant, a blockade which, in its first nine days was so effective that it was impossible to get provisions to those workers held captive in the plant.

Another paragraph reads:

> We know by the testimony...that a violence committee, baptized the Hi-Fi, had been formed by Bedard—

He is a Steelworkers' official.

> —with the specific aim of stopping production of copper through acts of sabotage.

I continue to read from the report of the judgment:

> It was on July 12, 1957, that...(three strikers)... went to dynamite the tailings line, and in this expedition...(one of them)...was killed, and...(the other two)...were very seriously injured.

Being a miner I know the dangers of explosives and as I hold a certificate as a shift boss I would not allow one dynamite cap, one detonator, to be set off in or about a mine without having set guards at all possible entries. Here we have three Steelworkers—

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have been listening very carefully to the remarks made by the hon. member. I am quite sure he is acquainted with the narrow limits of debate on a motion for the production of papers. I would have to say at the beginning that he is getting beyond that. May I refer him to a statement made by Mr. Speaker Michener on February 8, 1962, as reported at page 682 of Hansard for that year:

> Order. Before the hon. member proceeds further with that line of argument I think I should say to him that my view of the scope of the motion is that it is limited to the desirability of the production of the documents. The motion is one calling on the government to produce the documents referred to in the motion. The question in issue is whether or not they should be produced.

Later, on November 22, 1962, Mr. Speaker Lambert made the following observation which is reported at page 1911 of Hansard:

> I think the hon. member will recognize the rather narrow confines of the debate in this regard. These have been referred to quite definitely by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George who cited the decisions of my predecessor to the effect that what is, in fact, the issue of this motion is not what is behind the documents, or what is their substance, but whether they should be produced or not.

Mr. Speaker Lambert then went on to say:

> I think the hon. member will, on reflection, see he is going a little beyond that.

I have further citations here which I could give the hon. member but I think I have said sufficient for the house to realize the narrow limits within which the debate on a motion for the production of papers must be confined. I hope hon. members will confine themselves within those limits.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order you have raised, I must say with great respect that in the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, part of which I have quoted, the hon. member made the argument that it was in the public interest that these papers be produced because a labour union had made contributions to a political party for special favour, in this case the Liberal Party. It turned out that one or two of the officials of this union acted in such a way as to be brought to court and sentenced to do time in prison. On the other hand, no action was taken to recover damages and so on. My argument now is to show that this is not necessarily correct.

Simply because a union makes contributions to a political party, it does not mean that the political party is tarred with the same brush as some irresponsible officers of the union. I am certainly not implying that any of the members of the N.D.P. are tarred with the brush of the Bedards to whom I have referred as having been implicated in acts of violence much greater and more damaging than any wrongdoing in connection with the S.I.U. I was about to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this affair might have cost the lives of 10, 15, 20 or any number of workers. One worker was in fact killed. So these acts of violence were much greater than anything that was perpetrated on the Great Lakes. I think the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North falls to the ground in flames when this is understood.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I now have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Byrne: Is it not true, Mr. Speaker, that I lost about five minutes on the point of orders?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Speaker was very careful to note the time he commenced referring to citations, which occupied about three minutes. Those three minutes were added to the hon. gentleman's time.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) suggested that this resolution was placed on the order paper to harass an independent union because it did not belong to the Canadian Congress of Labour or supply funds to our party. I think he is quite mistaken in this respect. The resolution was placed on the order paper with a view to getting the information contained in these documents and making this information public.

Quite frankly, let me say that I am an honorary member of Mine, Mill and I have no love for the Steelworkers Union and have no hesitation in saying so. I do not believe in splitting the working class and causing disunity in communities and the harassment of unions which have a good record of service over the years.

Mr. Byrne: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he make reference to the plans of the Steelworkers to rig Mine, Mill at Trail, British Columbia, starting this year? They have already announced that intention. Would he make reference to this fact when speaking about the Steelworkers and Mine, Mill?

Mr. Herridge: I think I am in order, Mr. Speaker. If this unfortunate development does occur then all I can say is that without any question I shall be lined up alongside Mine, Mill. I can tell the Steelworkers officers right now that they are in for a hot time if they come into the Kootenays.

Having said that regarding the hon. member's remarks about his labour affiliations and other views, may I say that the members of this caucus support certain political principles and political programs. But if by any chance we differ from our political brothers over certain concrete matters coming before this house or with regard to our belonging to a certain union, the rule of our caucus is that we are always allowed to exercise our conscience on such occasions and act as we see fit. That has been recognized as our practice in this house for a good many years.

For example, we took that stand when Mr. Woodsworth opposed Canada's entry into the second world war. We recognized that principle when Mr. Coldwell supported German rearmament, and it has been recognized on numerous occasions. Therefore I make these observations only because I thought the hon. member's inference that this resolution was introduced just to harass an independent union was somewhat unfair.

Mr. Byrne: I did not say that entirely. I said it was also to harass members of parliament.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question before he resumes his seat? Is he fairly characterized by the appellation, "the baron of the Kootenays"?

Mr. Herridge: That, Mr. Speaker is a pressman's nightmare. I much prefer to be known as "the hillybilly from the Arrow Lakes".

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Before beginning my remarks on this motion, Mr. Speaker, I believe I should recall to the house an occasion in the 1962 Parliament when I had the temerity to refer to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) as "the baron of the Kootenays". After I had referred to the thousands of acres which I understood he owned in that area, he leaped up and said that he was only a trustee pending the revolution. I do not know into which of the programs of his party that comment fitted, and it may come as a surprise to some people in some of the urban areas of the country who supported his party. I am certainly not unwilling to accord to the hon. member that point of view because it is part of the freedom which we should have in this great country of ours.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, after reviewing the notice of motion and in particular the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who presented the motion, that he made a very unusual argument in support of it. I hope I am summarizing his argument fairly, but I understood him to say that because a reporter for a Toronto newspaper was alleged to have somehow or other gotten a glance at certain working papers of the Norris Commission, it is now perfectly correct and proper for this house to adopt a motion forcing the production of these documents in their entirety in this house. Perhaps it could be said that there would be some form of merit in this argument if the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, to which reference has already been made, were not in existence.

It seems to me that since these provisions are in existence then it must be these provisions that govern. It has been stated on several occasions in this house that the provisions of section 33 of the act make information contained in documents produced for the use of a conciliation board confidential unless the conciliation board deems it expedient to make that information public. Of course, section 56 of the act, which permits the creation of industrial inquiries, demands the application of this section with regard to conciliation boards to the work of industrial inquiry commissions.

It would seem to me that if this parliament deemed it proper for these documents to be produced for its use and for the use of the public generally, then the proper and lawful step would be to pass an amendment to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act permitting documents of this type to be made public. This could then be done through a resolution of the house or some other method. More particularly, the amendment might specifically permit the production of the documents now sought by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. Unless this step is taken I say it is quite improper, if not contrary to law, to have these documents produced in this house.

The matter has a much wider ambit than the narrow question before us in this resolution. What I say now is an attempt to urge the members of this house, when the time comes, to vote against the production of the documents requested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I suggest that what we have in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is analagous to the requirements in the income tax legislation making documents filed under that legislation completely confidential even though the contents of those documents might be of interest to individual members of parliament or parliament as a whole.

What the hon. member for Winnipeg North seems to be attempting to say in his motion is that the mere fact that through some inadvertence, or perhaps even by some design, a reporter for a Toronto newspaper was able to see these documents, then the clear provisions of a law passed by this parliament can be disregarded merely by passing a resolution in this house. If this principle is correct, then the following situation could happen: If someone left an income tax return lying on a desk in plain sight in some district taxation office and a member of the public happened to take a look at it and, not knowing the requirements of the law or perhaps knowing the requirements and ignoring them, referred to the contents publicly in the press or on radio or television, then it would be possible, according to the hon. member for Winnipeg North, to have the entire return produced in this house simply by the passage of a resolution.

I think there are many precedents in the Journals of this house which make it clear it is not proper, at the request of a member or at the request of the house itself, for the government to produce confidential information or information deemed to be confidential under the income tax law. I suggest that the situation is no different here. If this were not the case, as I have said, a very difficult and trouble-fraught situation could arise very easily. It would be possible, as I have attempted to suggest, to have confidential income tax information produced through the simple expedient of leaving an income tax return lying on a desk so that through inadvertence or design some member of the public could take a look at it.

Then a person could drop a few hints to the press, the information would be published and it would be perfectly proper, according to the principle which the hon. member for Winnipeg North is attempting to suggest, to have the entire income tax return brought before this house. Surely no one would agree this is the correct procedure. Surely no one would agree that we should adopt a principle, by means of the passage of this motion, which would lend credence to a very dangerous argument. There would be no point in this parliament passing a law which said certain information shall be confidential if that law could be swept away by the simple passage of a resolution of this house rather than through formal amendment of the legislation just because some member of the public happened to get a glance at some confidential document. I find this argument difficult to accept.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North is not here but if he were in the house I should like to ask him this question. If someone through inadvertence happened to get a glance at his income tax return and published the details in a Toronto or Winnipeg newspaper, would he say it would be proper for me as a member of this house to move a motion requesting that his entire return be made public? The hon. member for Winnipeg North is reported on page 1029 of Hansard for February 10 to have said:

> I do not ask for any special rights for myself or any other member of parliament but surely members of parliament are entitled to the same rights and privileges as are given to anybody else.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Would he apply that same argument if someone saw his income tax return through inadvertence? I doubt it very much. Therefore I suggest that on grounds of logic, law and common sense what he has attempted to argue in his remarks is equally lacking in validity when applied to the documents in which he is interested in having filed in this house through this notice of motion.

It may well be that a member of the public should not have more rights than a member of parliament has or that a member of parliament in many circumstances should not have more rights than a member of the public, but where parliament through a formal expression in the passage of a law has said that certain documents are confidential unless certain things happen, then even though a member of the public through some inadvertence or similar reason gets a look at a document of a certain sort that certainly does not create a whole set of rights on the part of this parliament to disregard the legislation in question and have the entire document produced.

It could well be that if the Norris Commission were still in existence Mr. Justice Norris as the commissioner could direct the production of these documents. I think this is implied in the words of the statute. This does not give very much support to the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North because the Norris Commission has made its final report, and I would gather that under the law it has gone out of existence. The only body that has the power under the present law to have these documents produced no longer exists.

The only step, as I have suggested, which would properly permit this body to bring about the production of these documents is an amendment to the legislation which makes them confidential. Because of the very dangerous principle that seems to be involved in the notice of motion which the hon. member for Winnipeg North has presented to us, it would seem to me that the motion should be withdrawn.

It is no reflection on him that he is not here today to speak on this point. It may well be that he has other urgent business to attend to. Had he been here he might well have risen in his place to agree that this notice of motion be withdrawn. It may well be that other members of his party who are here would be authorized to call for the withdrawal of this motion to avoid creating a precedent which would be dangerous to the rights of individuals generally who have reason to feel and believe that because of legislation passed by parliament documents and information produced by them under the command of such legislation would remain confidential until the legislation is amended.

It might be said: Well, does this mean that nothing will happen if someone gets a look at the document in question? I say that the legislation itself contains its own remedy where it permits the application of penalties to people who are proven to have contravened that law. I am not suggesting that this is necessarily the case here. The fact is that the legislation does contain its own remedy if somebody can be proven to have acted improperly in taking a look at the documents in question. For the reasons I have presented to you, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the house reject this notice of motion.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) has presented a very clear and concise case for the rejection of the motion before the house. I should like to make a few comments about it.

In making my remarks in public I wish to point out that I am as concerned as many people are about the Canadian position of keeping some things private. However, I am not sure that the policy on production of papers generally in the House of Commons is as clear as it ought to be. Perhaps at some future date this matter can be dealt with more thoroughly.

We do know that in England all such documents as are raised by the motion are deemed private unless specifically designated as public in a statute. Sweden has the reverse approach. But in this country we have a long tradition of a more or less in between position. I would think that this particular motion in the way it is brought is not the way to bring about a change in our system.

It may well be that the hon. member acknowledges that this motion falls short of being acceptable. It may be that he wishes to indicate that the present system respecting confidential documents is in need of change. I do not think it would be advisable for us to go about changing anything in this indirect fashion. The law as set out in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is quite clear and I think it would be wrong for us to fly in the face of that law and to circumvent it by the back door, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

I believe there would be many undesirable reactions to changing the law in this way. If this motion were to pass I feel that the government as a matter of principle would probably have to refer this whole matter to the Supreme Court of Canada for a decision.

We may not agree with the system that exists in Canada today but I think it would be most undesirable for us to change it in this particular fashion. May I also say that to do it in this way might involve other things. The hon. member for Essex West has pointed out the example of income tax. There are very good reasons why, if this motion were allowed to pass, this same reasoning could be used in respect of income tax documents or other private documents.

I would also suggest that while our law stands as it is it would not do to appoint a commissioner or committee to look into something with respect to the law and then say: This is the law but at some time in a rather surreptitious way parliament may undermine your position. This would put any judge or commissioner in an untenable position. I think we should be clear and straightforward.

If we do not like the law I think we ought to try to bring about ways and means to change it but I do not think it ought to be done in this surreptitious way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being seven o'clock the house will return to the business interrupted by private members' hour.

AERONAUTICS ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-153, to amend the Aeronautics Act—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Turner moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, an amendment has been incorporated in the bill, and I think it is usual when that happens that it should not be read a third time straight away, unless there is something urgent about it.

Motion stands.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Minister of Forestry) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-152, to amend the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the government would have provided the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) to make an opening statement.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I understand the minister is on his way down. We did not anticipate the immediate co-operation we got on the last measure. If hon. members wish to speak on second reading I can guarantee that the minister will be in his place.

Mr. Jorgenson: It would have been helpful if the minister had been here to make a statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Perhaps we might pause for a moment until the minister comes down.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, at the time the resolution preceding the bill was introduced a full statement was made by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), on behalf of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) who was then recovering from pneumonia, and if hon. members direct their attention to the declaration made at that time they would be able to gather the general import of the bill. Perhaps if hon. members are willing to speak on the bill until the minister arrives we can expedite the business of the house. Meantime I ask the indulgence of the house.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, can we have some information as to the time we may have to wait? It seems that the government is in a hurry to get working but we cannot work without the necessary implements.

Mr. Turner: In any event I understand the minister was not planning to make a statement at the beginning and preferred to make a concluding statement in which he would give consideration to the points raised by hon. members in the debate.

Mr. Jorgenson: I find this a rather unusual situation. It is understandable that the minister was ill when the resolution was introduced. We accept that. We find no quarrel with the fact that he was unable to be here then and had some other minister move the resolution for him. But since he is the minister responsible, I am sure the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) recognizes it is quite customary, on second reading, for such a minister to make a statement, outlining in greater detail the proposals contained in a particular bill. But if the minister is not to be found, and the government finds itself in its usual bind—it is not unusual to have confusion on the other side and this evening is a typical example of the organization within the Liberal party—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I should bring to the attention of hon. members that we have a bill before the house and I would invite them to participate in discussion of the bill.

Mr. Jorgenson: This I propose to do, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure you recognize it would have been very helpful to have the minister make an opening statement so that my remarks could be based on it.

However, since the minister is not here I shall go ahead in order to expedite the business of the house. We can only go by the statement that was made by the Minister of Fisheries when introducing the legislation, and by the contents of the bill, which are self-explanatory. I am glad to see that the minister and the government have come to recognize the value of this legislation. I recall that at the time of second reading of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act in 1961 the then minister of agriculture was also absent, and it fell upon me as his parliamentary secretary to make the opening statement on that occasion.

I also recall numerous comments were made by members of the then opposition to the effect that the scope of the measure was so large and so broad that it would encompass almost anything the government proposed to do. In fact there was some reference to the possibility of building a subway in Montreal and in Toronto under the terms of the legislation. But now we find the present minister introducing amendments which he says will greatly expand and broaden the scope of the legislation. That is a contradiction, because at the time it was introduced they said it gave the government too many powers.

Following passage of the legislation, during the period that the administration of ARDA was being set up, there was relatively little that could be done except to carry out certain surveys and undertake the administrative work necessary to make the legislation operative. Then, following the election of 1963, there was a change of government and the former member for Calgary South, who became minister of agriculture, was responsible for the administration of the act.

• (7:10 p.m.)

We all recall the difficulties that the government were in at that time in respect of who was going to be responsible for the administration of this act. Finally it fell upon the Minister of Forestry to assume responsibility. I say quite frankly he has applied himself with diligence and sincerity in making this legislation the type of legislation that was envisaged by the former ministry. Again I am sure hon. members opposite will forgive me if I go back and remind them of the criticism they levelled at the minister at that time, stating that he was visionary. But he had seen much further ahead than they could, at that time. Today they are reaping the benefits of that vision, because this legislation is doing precisely what the minister at that time intended it should do. Mind you, it does require a great deal of co-operation on the part of the provincial governments, it requires a great deal of initiative on the part of the people in the communities in which the act is to apply, and it requires some direction on the part of the minister. I am quite pleased that the minister is providing leadership in that direction.

It is ironical, of course, to have to point out that the legislation they criticized as being too visionary in 1961 now is the type of legislation which they see will do a great deal to help them implement their so-called war on poverty. The bill intends to do several things. First of all, it intends to appoint an advisory committee and provide for the payment of the members of that committee, whereas in the original legislation the bill provided only for their travelling expenses. I have no objection to this, if it is used in the context in which it is intended to be used; but we have had experiences on the part of this government where positions constantly were being created for former or defeated Liberal candidates and friends of the Liberal party.

I hope the purpose of this legislation is to provide for the expenses of an advisory committee that truly is an advisory committee, and not just a committee for defeated remnants of the Liberal Party. The government will do well to ensure that the persons appointed to this advisory committee do have some experience.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order just to make sure we know what is before us. We are on Bill C-152, and I think it is in the other bill, C-151, that the advisory committee is provided for.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I believe, because of the fact that the minister is not here we should not draw the inference that he wishes to put a limitation on discussion of this bill, although really the purpose of the bill is only to change the name of ARDA. It surely is in order to discuss all the problems of ARDA, because the minister himself has not seen fit to be here to limit it.

Mr. Jorgenson: If the hon. member will look at the proposed new section 6 in Bill C-152 he will notice there is provision for an advisory committee, and to pay "such amount for each day he attends any meeting of the committee and is entitled to be paid reasonable travelling and living expenses while absent from his ordinary place of residence in the course of his duties". That is part and parcel of the bill. I presume the hon. member had not read the bill thoroughly and was not aware of this. This certainly is part of the bill.

Mr. Turner: I think the parliamentary secretary is very familiar with the terms of the bill.

Mr. Stewart: I was not criticizing the hon. member. I merely wanted to make it clear to the house that we were dealing with Bill C-152, and that he was referring to this particular passage in this particular bill rather than to the much more obvious provision in the other very closely related bill.

Mr. Jorgenson: I assure the hon. member I was dealing with this particular bill. I do not intend to deal with it clause by clause. I was making a reference to this clause because it is in the bill and I wanted to include it in my general remarks. The clause by clause consideration will come up eventually.

I notice finally they have located the minister. I wonder whether he would care to go ahead with his remarks at this time and perhaps I could follow him later, if I could be given permission to do so. I am sure the minister would wish to make a statement.

Mr. Turner: It will be without prejudice to the hon. member's right to continue his speech.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Forestry.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. members will excuse me. I was here until 5.30 and I thought my bill would only be called a little later on. Please accept my apologies.

This bill was read the first time on March 18, when the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) was kind enough to replace me here. As the hon. members know, I was then recovering from an illness and could not be here, although I would have liked to tell them what I shall now make clear to them.

We had no intention whatever of bringing forward an amendment to the act known as ARDA. It was the Department of Justice which, some time last year, thought that the act passed in 1961 restricted to rural areas, where agriculture was possible, projects submitted by provincial governments and approved by the federal government. And doubts were raised in the Department of Justice about the legality of certain projects submitted to us by some of the provinces and which, while they concerned rural areas, were not meant for a region where agriculture was possible. I am thinking especially of Newfoundland and certain areas of the province of Quebec.

• (7:20 p.m.)

It is only after long discussions with the Department of Justice that we decided to introduce an amendment to the act passed in 1961. Had there not been that insistence from the Department of Justice or that interpretation of the 1961 legislation, Bill C-152 now before the house would serve no purpose.

Therefore, I wish to reassure all hon. members of this house and say that we have no intention of removing from the statute books this act known as ARDA. On the contrary I will have the pleasure, in a few minutes, to move an amendment to section 2 (1), which will definitely establish the ARDA abbreviation.

If the hon. members of this house refer to chapter 30, 9-10 Elizabeth II, an act to provide for the rehabilitation of agricultural lands and the development of rural areas in Canada, assented to on June 22, 1961, they will notice that the short title of the act makes no reference to the ARDA abbreviation, neither in English nor in French. And I think that because of the importance of this act, which was passed unanimously by the house on May 31, 1961, after a stirring address by the minister of agriculture of the day, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), it is important to establish in the facts and in the act the ARDA abbreviation.

This, I think will reassure all hon. members and, had there been no obligation for us to amend the act, we would have continued using this abbreviation, which as yet is not part of the act.

It will be recalled that it was on December 15, 1960 that the minister of agriculture of the day, now the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, moved the resolution introducing this act in the house of commons. He had been minister of agriculture since October 11, 1960, and it is his predecessor, the hon. member for Calgary North—I believe it is not known generally in the house—who had taken the initiative in proposing to the then government the act now known under the name of ARDA. The hon. member for Calgary North was therefore closely associated with the preparation of this act which, I am sure, is still endorsed by all members of this house. As I said earlier, this piece of legislaion was passed unanimously, which happens very seldom nowadays, and I hope that at the end of our discussions, today if possible, hon. members will agree to pass unanimously the proposed amendment or amendments.

We only propose striking out from certain sections of the act the word "agricultural" and, in some cases, substituting for it the word "rural". We also suggest an explanation about advisory committees, namely in subsection (6), section 7 of the present bill.

At the time of its implementation, this act had three main purposes: first, the subsidiary use of lands or the efficient use and economic development of submarginal agricultural lands; second, the development of rural areas and, third, soil and water conservation.

I think that since its implementation and approval in June 1961, this act has achieved its purposes. It resulted from the work of a Senate committee, known as the special committee on land use, set up by the previous government and sponsored by the then prime minister, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

In 1960 the committee presented a report and the government of the day, headed by right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) had agreed to the report and introduced the bill I have mentioned.

Since 1962 many achievements have occurred under ARDA. I feel it would be of interest to make a brief survey of what has happened so that the honourable members of this house may realize that in spite of the fact that my immediate predecessor, the minister of agriculture Mr. Hays or the hon. member for Qu'Appelle have not given much publicity to the legislation or to its achievements, a lot of work has been done.

I should like to quote just a few figures to indicate how seriously the members of the previous administration and of the present one have all mightily laboured together to improve living conditions in rural communities.

Often during my speeches in and out of this house, I have recalled the important part the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has played with respect to this legislation and again tonight, although he is absent from this house, I should like to point out the admiration which his work as minister responsible for ARDA has aroused. His work has been an inspiration for me, and I am sure if he returns to the house he will support the bill I am moving tonight on behalf of the government.

In 1962-63, during the fiscal year ending March 31, 108 projects were approved at a total cost of $2 million as the federal government's share.

In 1963-64, the provincial governments having become initiated to the method of operations of ARDA, and the federal government being more familiar with the plan, the number of projects increased to 292 for a federal government contribution of nearly $10 million.

During the fiscal year 1964-65, ending March 31, 1965, the number of programs increased to 352 for a federal commitment of $21 million.

Between April 1 and November 30, 216 programs were approved representing a total commitment of $15 million.

I would not want to give a long account of the amounts received by each province. Suffice it to say that Quebec followed by Saskatchewan and Manitoba, are the provinces which have most availed themselves of the advantages of that act; moreover, they are pursuing their efforts along the lines they had adopted earlier.

On April 1, 1965, a new agreement entitled the "Federal-provincial agreement on rural development" became operative. This new agreement, to apply for five years, that is, till March 31, 1970, was the fruit of the experience gained in the first three years and of the co-operation between ARDA federal authorities and each one of the ten provincial governments.

When the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) asked me on March 4, 1964 to take over the administration of that act, I immediately undertook to meet the ministers responsible for the application of ARDA in each of the provinces. I visited every province and discussed the matter with provincial authorities and this led, after numerous discussions, not only with the provincial governments but also with various associations and organizations, to the series of proposals we sent all Canadian provinces early in October 1964.

Those proposals were discussed at a federal-provincial conference at the end of November 1964.

One word about that conference: in my opinion, it expressed concretely new administrative concepts in the field of federal-provincial relations, concepts which consist, once the objective to be reached has been set, once the provinces have been consulted one after the other or in groups in order to establish what their aspirations are, in getting them together with a view to reaching an agreement. That is what happened in the case of the new agreement, and all the provinces signed it in the first six months of 1965.

The text, which I now hold in hand was published in French and English, and it is available. As a matter of fact, it was distributed to all the members of parliament when it first came out in August.

What were the main differences between the first agreements signed in 1962 and the one signed early in 1965?

• (7:30 p.m.)

[English]

The old agreement was for the duration of two and a half years from 1962 to March 31, 1965. The new federal-provincial rural development agreement is for five years. The first agreement was implemented through a general agreement and a number of program agreements. The new one which I have in my hands is implemented through a single rural development agreement, and is thus much less cumbersome administratively.

In the first agreement there were no formal arrangements provided for continual consultation on programs. Under this new agreement there are formal administrative arrangements through joint advisory committees and new regional administrations to provide for continual joint consultation. Under the first agreement the maximum federal expenditure in one year was $20 million, for a total maximum contribution over two and a half years of $50 million. Under the second agreement the maximum federal contribution is $25 million per year, with a total federal contribution over five years of $125 million.

Under the first agreement programs for land use adjustment put less emphasis on programs to re-establish people affected. Under the new agreement there is a large increase in emphasis on programs to assist rural people to re-establish on new farms through farm consolidation or in new employment in areas where opportunities may be better.

Under the first agreement there was no co-ordinated approach to resource development by areas, although considerable studies were undertaken in areas which could lead to such programs. Under the new agreement there is new emphasis on the alleviation of poverty in rural areas by means of a global approach embracing all the resources of disadvantaged rural areas in an effort to provide new income opportunities and raise standards of living.

Under the first agreement there was a system of individual project audits by the federal administration as provinces submitted them. Under the new agreement there will be a new system for the administration of joint ARDA programs whereby the federal government and the province agree jointly on an entire program for a year or more and the entire program is considered.

This is a point which I am sure would have pleased the previous hon. member for Port Arthur. Under the first agreement Indian lands and Indian people were not excluded but were not particularly provided for. Under the new agreement there is special provision for the inclusion of Indian lands and Indian people under the ARDA program.

Under the old agreement there was provision for the establishment of rural development officers in the field and special training for such officers. Under the new agreement there is much greater attention paid to the training and establishment of rural development officers and the provision of facilities to carry out such training.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the new spirit of the federal agreement on the economic rehabilitation of rural areas emphasizes the rural communities' human resources and on their physical resources as a whole. It can be said that it deals mainly with a rural labour program. Although we were not the first in that field, the new agreement was signed and negotiated before the manpower act was introduced last year. The agreement provides for a series of procedures to co-ordinate the new policy with that of the new department of Manpower. Second, the new agreement provides for the enlargement and consolidation of farms, which seems to us one of the major problems of the farming world in the rural areas. Third, it is an innovation in a way. On page 21 of the French text, the agreement provides for a special program for rural development areas. On page 22, it provides for the special rural development areas, that is to say that we are introducing for the first time a concept of planning at the regional level, a planning set up by co-ordinating the efforts of the provincial and federal governments.

It is an innovation in the field of administration in Canada. I would say that it concretizes for the first time the acceptance by the federal and provincial governments of the need for economic planning to eliminate in some areas of the country the concentration of low-income families and to eradicate unemployment and underemployment to improve the standard of living.

Not only have we innovated with that new agreement, but we have also improved our working methods. In each province, there is and there can be a joint provincial committee to set up the program for the coming years, as explained on page 10 of the document I mentioned a little earlier. I quote:

It will be possible to set up joint advisory committees made up of five high officials of which three, including the chairman, will be appointed by the provincial minister and two by the federal minister.

Thus co-operation is being established at the beginning of the fiscal year before the programs for the whole year are elaborated at the provincial level.

In addition, we have organized and we are still organizing special meetings that enable us to take the initiative I referred to during the debate on the departmental estimates and also make the provinces aware of the importance of certain innovations in rural areas.

I shall not give you the list of all the meetings that took place recently. But let me tell you only that in the month of January we had—and I think I have the report with me—a meeting on land development and consolidation, so the provinces might benefit from part two of the agreement I mentioned earlier.

In co-operation with the provinces, we have designated rural development areas under part five of the new agreement.

• (7:40 p.m.)

[English]

Programs of resource development in low-income areas are provided for in this part of the agreement. The primary objective is to increase income and employment opportunities in rural areas where one half or more of rural families had an estimated income of less than $3,000 in 1961.

The areas have been jointly recognized by provinces in Canada as development areas and are as follows.

There then follows the Atlantic provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the prairie provinces and so on.

[Translation]

But, to me, in spite of everything, the most interesting among the innovations I referred to earlier is surely the establishment of special rural development areas. That concept is fully explained at pages 21-22 of the federal-provincial rural development agreement.

Until now, there was an agreement between the government of Canada and the provinces for the designation of such rural regions: Interlake, in Manitoba; the lower St. Lawrence valley and Gaspé, in Quebec; northern New Brunswick, Gloucester and Restigouche, in New Brunswick, and also the Mactaquac region; Cape Breton and the northern area, in Nova Scotia; finally, the whole of Prince Edward Island.

This new concept is related to the second bill listed under the department for the setting up of an economic development fund. It allows the federal government to move in massively in those areas in Canada where there is unemployment and economic stagnation. We believe that in this way, the federal, in co-operation with the provinces, will contribute efficiently toward the solution of chronic problems in certain parts of the country.

I trust that, within the next few days, if not within the next few weeks, I shall have the pleasure, of informing the house that two agreements have been signed with the New Brunswick government, one dealing with the northern part of the province, and the other, with Mactaquac.

Hon. members will be pleased to see that, thanks to co-operation between the federal government and the government of New Brunswick, we are fighting off poverty efficiently in rural areas. Speaking of the war against poverty, there, Mr. Speaker, are concrete examples of what can be done when the federal and provincial governments co-operate.

I should have liked, this evening, had the agreement been signed, to give an overall view of the project to hon. members. However, I must limit myself to mentioning it only, but I am sure that within the next few weeks the house will be pleased to become acquainted with it.

Not only did we innovate in the general sense advocated by the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) when he was minister in charge of that act, but we went even a bit further and set up what had been intended in the original act and which is the subject of an amendment in Bill C-152, namely a Canadian Rural Development Council.

The Council is composed of representatives of rural associations concerned with the problems which come under ARDA and of persons whose experience can be useful in the development of ARDA programs and projects.

When the Minister of Fisheries introduced the proposed resolution, I think there was some confusion in the minds of some hon. members. In Bill C-152, to amend the ARDA act, reference is made to that National Rural Development Council whose membership I outlined previously, although the ARDA agreements provide for committees at both the provincial and local levels. But in this bill, we do not talk about the same type of committees.

Besides I will be able to give specific answers to hon. members who are interested in asking questions in that connection.

Therefore, in addition to what I have just said, we have in essence, almost continuous consultation with the provinces, meetings and exchanges and, at the end of April, I will be visiting the ministers of the four western provinces with ARDA officials. We will go and meet them in their own provinces, in their capitals, to discuss with their officials the application of the new agreement which came into force on April 1, 1965.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be too long. I hope I have been able, in those few minutes, to indicate to hon. members that we are amending this act only because we have to and, second, that we have no intention whatsoever of taking credit for this legislation away from anybody.

Later on I will move an amendment to this bill to link it definitively to the initials ARDA. When the time comes, I hope hon. members will be so kind as to allow me to move that amendment.

I hope at the end of the day, we will be able, as we were in 1961, to pass unanimously the amendments set forth in Bill C-152.

I thank the house for its undivided attention.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, would the minister explain now how he intends to move this motion?

Mr. Sauvé: As soon as we reach clause 2 I will move that the act be cited as the Rural Development (ARDA) Act, so that it will incorporate once and for all "ARDA", as was not the case before. But I will do that when we are in committee.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister one question. If this bill is not now passed, is it the expectation of the minister that all that he has outlined cannot be accomplished?

Mr. Sauvé: That is so. The Department of Justice has given us written notice that unless this bill is passed we cannot go on entertaining projects in certain rural areas which have no agriculture. I mentioned earlier that this applied to outport regions in Newfoundland and certain parts of northern Saskatchewan and Alberta where there are no possibilities for agriculture. It would be impossible for us to accept any projects unless the bill is passed, which means that we would be restricting the aims of the act. I am sure that originally, if this ruling had been made by the Department of Justice, the act would have been amended.

• (7:50 p.m.)

If you will recall, there was a resources for tomorrow conference some time ago and at that conference there was a proposal to amend the act by deleting the word "agriculture". In 1961, people attending the resources for tomorrow conference were aware of the fact that the act was limited to projects in rural areas and it was impossible to undertake a number of other projects.

Mr. Peters: Is the minister prepared to table the legal document that warrants this confusion?

Mr. Sauvé: I do not believe—

Mr. Jorgenson: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I feel these questions could well be asked at the committee stage of this bill.

Mr. Peters: Speaking to the point of order, I may say it has been the practice to ask questions, if the member speaking will accept those questions before resuming his seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is the hon. member for Medicine Hat rising on a point of order or a question?

Mr. Olson: No, I thought you had recognized me to speak on this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): If the hon. member wishes to speak on this motion, he will have an opportunity to do so later. I understand, as the result of an exchange of views at the commencement of the debate, that the Chair would recognize the hon. member for Provencher.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): I am sure the members of the house were pleased to hear the statement made by the minister. This is the first time, since the government took office, that a comprehensive statement has been made on ARDA and the activities of this particular branch of the department. We recognized when the legislation was introduced, while we were the government, that it was a very important piece of legislation which was going to provide the means of assisting a good many areas in this country. The statement just made by the minister has confirmed, to a large extent, this belief that we had at that time.

I was quite pleased to note the attitude of the minister. When he began to speak on this subject, I think he was a little embarrassed by the fact he was not here when he should have been. We can forgive him for that because I do not believe any of us expected the other bill to go through quite so quickly. I noted that as he warmed to his subject he made his remarks with more and more enthusiasm, indeed the same kind of enthusiasm the former minister had when he introduced the legislation and when he attempted to convince members how useful it could be in assisting rural development.

We are pleased to note that the minister has been imbued with this kind of enthusiasm and energy. I do not wish to offer any carping criticism of his activities in this particular field. There are, however, a few comments I should like to make in addition to those I have already made. When we introduced the legislation in 1961 there was a great deal of criticism because this was long-term legislation. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) was one of those who offered that criticism at great length, as if the legislation could have been introduced any earlier. If the legislation is long range in nature, it has to start somewhere. I am glad to note the government has finally accepted the fact that this long term legislation was designed to do the very job the former minister of agriculture intended it should do.

I am pleased to note also that the minister has not fallen into that old habit of criticizing the former minister of agriculture for his activities. Indeed, I want to thank him for the kind words he used when referring to the former minister who introduced this legislation, and the enthusiasm with which he followed that up. This is a bad habit into which the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has fallen and into which the former minister of agriculture, the former member for Calgary South, also fell. They seemed to feel their positions could be enhanced by criticising former ministers.

In so far as the proposed amendment of the act to change the name is concerned, I would have thought that if the minister were sincere, and I have every reason to believe he is, he could have accepted the suggestion that was made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) when the resolution was before this house. He suggested that the legislation be entitled the agriculture and rural development act, which would have in no way changed the initials of the act, which have become a household word across Canada.

If the intentions of the government in this regard were purely political, if they honestly thought they required an amendment to the act for political reasons or because it was such a greatly expanded act, they could have called it the greatly expanded rural development act, and this would have resulted in a typically Liberal set of initials. There would have been no question, then, that it was their legislation.

I am glad to see the minister has made provision for the development of this legislation in conjunction with the department of manpower. If results are to be achieved through this legislation, then it will be necessary to do this very thing and I want to congratulate him upon making this provision. I hope that in providing leadership for this legislation he is not going to take away the initiative of the local communities, which will be so necessary if the legislation is to be successful. I am sure those of us who have read about the experience of the United States in this particular field will remember that in the study by the Senate and the House committee it was pointed out that the government could well provide the direction, but if too much paternalism were offered, then in almost every case the rural development programs in the United States were doomed to failure.

You must insist that there is some direction, some leadership, but in the final analysis the initiative has to be taken by the local people. I hope the minister has not overlooked this very important aspect of rural development. I note that in outlining the new agreements that have been entered into with the provinces, he is providing the changes in line with the experience we have had with ARDA in the past few years. These changes are necessary.

• (8:00 p.m.)

I notice there has been an ever increasing number of press releases emanating from the minister's office dealing with agreements being entered into with the provinces. It is interesting to note the wide variety of those agreements. In entering into these agreements I am sure the minister has discovered that the original type of agreement first entered into was somewhat different from what is necessary today. Largely I think this is the result of the many surveys which have been made. Again, I congratulate the minister in providing for most members of the house so comprehensive a report on the results of these surveys and the type of work that is being contemplated, and which is being effected throughout Canada.

We believe today as we did in 1961 that this legislation is broad enough to carry on the type of work that is required in order to assist the rural areas of Canada. We are grateful that the minister shows the type of enthusiasm, the type of drive and the type of initiative which is necessary in a minister in order to carry on the work of this legislation, and to do the work it was intended to do.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to find that the minister has had some advice as to why this act should be changed. I am one of those who was under the impression that the only reason this act was being changed was so that the house would agree to eliminate a Conservative bill and supplant it with a Liberal bill. I am not interested in doing that, as it does not seem to accomplish anything. I was interested to note that the minister made a very good explanation of some of the things that are taking place. As much as the previous speaker, I am interested in the policies which have been engaged in. I am, however, of the opinion that without the legal interpretation that the department may have given to the legislation under which we are operating under, this bill does absolutely nothing one way or another.

I listened to the minister's speech—I am always pleased to hear his speeches— and I was interested to note that in that speech he used almost the same wording he used in the speech of December, 1964—that this is not a new problem. There was an argument as to whether what is contemplated comes under agricultural development or the human resources problem in rural areas. As I say, it is interesting to note that these topics were discussed before, and it is also interesting to note that the topics he referred to were in the interpretation as it originally related to the ARDA program.

The projects that were then alluded to include such things as are reported in the magazine Western Canada Reclamation of June, 1963, including such things as study of resource use and development opportunities—and I might say that there is no text. Headings only are used. Also such things are mentioned as rural sociology—which I imagine is a fairly broad subject covering almost anything in terms of human resources in rural areas. Also mentioned are agricultural economics, including marketing—

Mr. Vincent: Also school buses.

Mr. Peters: Yes. Probably even school buses. Also mentioned is the program of employment. It refers to "Employment, labour, underemployment and vocational training needs." Lastly it lists farm employment and industrial development opportunities, which I assume covers the whole problem of employment not only in rural areas, but in some others.

I am not suggesting that all these thing are the same as were originally provided under the ARDA program. I think it is true that the Department of Agriculture of the Alberta government, which is negotiating at least half the contracts in that province, was under the impression that all these things could be negotiated under the act.

The minister in the January and February issue of Bulletin, which is a magazine of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, discussed this matter of the expansion into the manpower field in the rural economy, and indicated, as I understand, that there are no limitations to the ways in which the program could be implemented. The article on page 7 says:

> Mr. Sauvé reported that there are now close to 1,000 ARDA projects under way. In order to provide concrete illustrations of the ARDA program at work, he selected for presentation an outline of projects which are typical of each of the five major regions of Canada.

The minister then went on to cover most of the subjects that were set out originally in the act.

I do not intend to cover the whole ARDA program, Mr. Speaker. We are not interested necessarily in going over what has been done in ARDA, nor what has been done in each particular region of Canada under ARDA. We are interested in seeing here that the whole program of ARDA be extended as widely as possible to all parts of Canada, and that it be expanded in all fields where it is necessary, and where it is possible.

However, I do not think that this bill does anything one way or another. In my opinion it is just a waste of time. If there were a major legal requirement that we have to go through this procedure, then why not be honest about it?

I did not participate at the resolution stage, but I have read the discussions and I know the minister will be happy about the act. I hope he will be as happy as his colleague, the Minister of Fisheries was, when he kept referring in that particular discussion to the fact that the ARDA program was going to be maintained.

Frankly, from anything that is in the bill that we have before us, I do not see that it is going to be maintained. The minister has dispelled the idea that all this is being done as a way to change the act, so that this might go on one side of the ledger rather than on the other side. I am speaking of the political ledger, which really has two pages. I am not on either one of the pages.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The problem in ARDA, as I see it, has been the lack of emphasis by the government, to date, with respect to the fields of research and statistics. It is not true that these have been included here. If you read the bulletin put out by ARDA in January of 1965, in Wildlife and Rural Development, you will find that there was considerable planning and investigation as to the potentials of it. Other publications have indicated examination and surveying that has been done in some areas of Canada. I believe ARDA is now in a position to assess the needs on a long term basis with respect to what can be done and in which fields it should be done.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the minister mentioned a second bill dealing with, as I interpret it, much broader regions, relating directly to large, low income areas in a special category. I can think of one in my own area, the Abitibi-Timiskaming region, and the area south of Restigouche in New Brunswick. There are a number of these areas which should be specifically named for additional help, apart from that provided through municipal, provincial and federal agreements implemented to date. If this is true I expect most hon. members will support the second bill; but since we are amending the ARDA act I think we should incorporate a separate section in it to include these areas in which I hope the federal government will give leadership, rather than counting on agreements to be made with the provinces.

Some hon. members are worried that under the second bill we will be setting up new boards and entering into new agreements, so that we will have more personnel and staff than projects. The labour costs of advisory boards will be extremely high, but I think the purposes of the second bill could be incorporated in this one. I have read the second bill and seen nothing in it contrary to ARDA, except that it places emphasis on larger regions rather than on separate projects.

We now have an attractive motif for ARDA; but ARDA is somewhat like political parties which in the course of time are known by their initials rather than their names, with people tending to forget their real names. This is true of ARDA. Many people understand the implications of ARDA in their own communities, but do not care what its initials stand for. For this reason I hope its full name will be retained.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I must first congratulate the minister who is here tonight. We regretted his absence when the resolution was introduced. His speech tonight, and especially his enthusiastic delivery, seemed made to entice us to accept his arguments more readily.

There was some good in what he said tonight, but there were also things which we cannot support without reservation. On the whole, however, I believe it marks another step ahead for ARDA.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said earlier that the minister seemed to be repeating the speech he made in 1964. I think the hon. member for Timiskaming has forgotten that the subject was agriculture and that land is ploughed anew every year, each time yielding a new harvest.

Listening to the minister, I thought he merely wanted to inject some local colour in his beloved ARDA program for which he works so hard. That is why tonight, although he already knows my views on certain aspects of ARDA, I wish to congratulate him on his good work and especially on his sincerity. He cannot supervise every aspect of ARDA —perhaps he would do even better then—but as his own duties take up all his time, he can certainly not be blamed for all the sins of administration.

I reacted somewhat like the other members with regard to the bill introduced tonight to have the name of the act changed. Before listening to the minister's explanation, I wondered why the change in name was being requested, since the first act implemented in 1961 was known as ARDA or the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, and it is now wished to call it the Rural Development Act. I did wonder what was involved in the change.

The minister explained that the purpose is to cover certain fields of agriculture. But in my opinion, the previous act covered all fields of agriculture and all agricultural areas. In the past, this act has not only been applied to agricultural lands in designated areas, but even to crown lands and here and there.

That is why it seems to me, at first sight, that if it were only to extend the act, the original one had ample scope. But if it is for another reason, as the minister mentioned—justice—then I do not have to wonder any longer about the why and wherefore of this piece of legislation. But I do not think this is done with a view to playing politics and taking up the time of the house merely for a change in name. That is why we accept, on principle, these changes of name particularly if the abbreviation ARDA is retained because—the minister is well aware of this—the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act is never mentioned in our area, only ARDA. It is known under that name and I am very happy that the minister should have moved an amendment to retain this abbreviation.

I have noted something else in this bill, and I should like to bring this to the attention of the minister tonight.

A very close perusal of the amended legislation reveals that something apparently very simple is being presented, but this may affect the provinces and affect them disastrously.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I remember discussing with the minister and putting questions to him on the administration of the former ARDA legislation. I was always told the provinces made the decisions and brought forth the projects. In fact, the provinces were supplying the spark. Unless they went along, ARDA could not be implemented in any province. Is that still the case?

What surprises me is that the bill says:

The minister may cause to be prepared and undertaken, directly—

The "to be undertaken directly" scares me.

I heard that this also existed in the past. You always keep a little of the federative spirit. The minister attended the last conference in Quebec where co-operative federalism was discussed and I think, or rather I am afraid—I do not want to make any rash judgment—he came back with this spirit of federalism which is always used against the provinces, especially the province of Quebec.

The former act took away from the provinces any autonomy they had in the field of agriculture. Now the Quebec autonomy will no longer be protected.

When the minister takes the floor, I will deal with this matter which is most treacherous. When the federal government is empowered to impose something on a province, I do not know if you call it co-operative-federalism, but I call it centralization. And we are against centralization. That is what I wanted to point out to the minister.

Some hon. members may laugh, but I believe that under this section the federal minister could take action without the consent of the provinces.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Where?

Mr. Gauthier: Under ARDA. Look at section 2 (2).

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Keep on reading.

Mr. Gauthier:

(2) the minister may cause to be prepared or undertaken, directly or in co-operation—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): What can he cause to be undertaken?

Mr. Gauthier:

—with the government of any province—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): What can he cause to be undertaken?

Mr. Gauthier:

—with the government of any province or agency thereof, programmes of research and investigation respecting the more effective use and economic development of rural lands in that province.

He may cause to be undertaken various works and studies.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Research programs.

Mr. Gauthier: This is the very point to which I want to draw your attention. First they take an inch of land, then a foot, a mile, two miles. If programs of research and investigation are to be undertaken, as they were in Gaspé, the decision is taken by the federal government. That is precisely what we do not want.

If there is research to be done, let the provinces come to an agreement with the minister on the joint programs.

My fear may be unfounded. I put the case to the minister; I am sure he has explanations to give us. But if we do not speak out, things will remain as they are and everyone will remain in the dark.

At first glance and in its present form I think the bill constitutes an infringement. I know it is comprehensive and written in good French. Research programs are a beginning and more will follow.

The provinces must have their say concerning those research programs. It seems very logical to me that the provinces should discuss the programs of research and investigation with the federal government, so as to maintain that spirit of co-ordination and discussion and so as not to leave the people of Quebec under the impression that the federal government is always imposing its wishes on the province.

That is precisely what the province of Quebec does not like, because it is related to research, to studies. Indeed, education belongs to Quebec. And then, it seems to me Quebec technicians and educators should also be able to meet the federal government technicians with regard to joint programs. Why should we not discuss educational programs in the same way?

That is all Quebec wants in order to protect itself. I wish to point out to the minister that not only should the provinces have a word to say about the matter, but they should also suggest what program they want implemented. In short, let them draw up the plans and present them to the federal government just as they do in the case of agricultural, drainage, or soil recovery programs. Then, no one could complain.

As for the advisory committees the minister mentioned, I believe it would be a good thing for each province to have one. But there again, the provincial advisory committee should not be made up of people imposed by the federal government, or subjected to its control directly or indirectly. It should be a truly provincial advisory committee.

I shall not dwell on the matter any longer for, as everyone else, I want the bill to pass as soon as possible. I may have a few questions about certain sections but, all in all, we are pleased. We are pleased because we do not shy away from progress, and we feel that this is a step forward for the ARDA program.

I hope the minister will adapt all those amendments, as was done in the past, when ARDA was passed, and that the rights and autonomy of the province of Quebec will be respected.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, when the resolution was before the house a few days ago I had the opportunity of saying a few words about our opinion in respect of the amendments contained in Bill C-152. At that time I queried the change of the name from the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act to the rural development act, because it appeared that there was no useful purpose to this change except, as I suggested then, it made it a Liberal rather than a Conservative act. I objected to this because the name ARDA has become a household word across Canada. I objected to taking up the time of this house for the purpose of doing something as unnecessary as that.

The minister has now promised that he intends to move an amendment to clause 2 as soon as we reach consideration of it. As far as I am concerned, such an amendment will satisfy in large measure the objection I voiced when I spoke before. Let me say also that I admire the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) for the good job he did in answering the questions we put to him at that time, in view of the fact that this act does not fall within the purview of his department.

We were pleased to hear the minister make his promise to move an amendment because the contents of this bill as it now stands are certainly not in keeping with the statements made over and over again by the Minister of Fisheries. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said on at least five occasions that the name ARDA was going to be retained. Some of us were very unhappy in our attempts to reconcile that threat with the contents of this bill. However, apparently that difficulty will be resolved when we reach our consideration in committee of clause 2 as a result of the promised amendment.

The hon. member for Timiskaming referred to the Western Canada Reclamation Association and said he did not know what it was, but he then proceeded to read some of the contents of its publication. I think the contents of that publication represent a clear manifestation of the very wide horizons and farsightedness that association has regarding the reclamation and conservation of soil and water. That association receives far too little recognition in Canada when one considers the useful work it performs. It is constantly concerning itself with long-range policies in an attempt to make sure that our soil and water resources are both conserved and utilized beneficially, not only for the immediate future but on a long-range basis. Perhaps the minister recognizes the value of some of the studies carried out from time to time by that association, but let me say that in my opinion it is a useful organization which receives little recognition for the many contributions it has made.

We will have time to discuss this bill in greater detail when we reach the committee stage of consideration, but there is one other matter I should like to discuss. In one of the last clauses of Bill C-152 there is reference made to advisory committees which I would more broadly term local committees. The minister is making a mistake if these advisory committees are to be confined to consideration on the basis of provincial advisory committees. It is my opinion that local committees could be very useful and could perhaps be the key to the initiation of development programs which will be most useful to communities. We should not be reluctant to give a great deal of recognition to these committees. If the members of such committees spend time away from home, working in an advisory capacity to provincial committees, consideration should be given to the paying of their expenses through the ARDA administration. The work that they will be doing will in fact be of assistance to the communities.

Possibly the best suggestions that can be made will be made by local committees. As the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Jorgenson) has said, if this kind of program is to be a success, it is essential that local feelings be taken into consideration. He also said that the experience in the United States has been that wherever there has been too much paternal activity with respect to the negotiation and development of programs there has been failure, and that the most successful programs have been those which were initiated at the local level by men and women who were completely familiar with the local problems of the community.

It seems to me there is sufficient authority in this bill to allow the minister to recognize these local committees and make arrangements for payment of their out-of-pocket expenses. I hope there will be no difficulty regarding the payment of these expenses so that these people will feel a little more free to devote their time, energy and talent to the discovery of the kind of programs that will be most beneficial to their local communities.

Rural Development

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of what the minister has said, I should like to make a very brief comment. While I did not hear all of his remarks, I should like to congratulate him for the very reasonable attitude he has taken. As a minister with the support of the new wing from Quebec, I think he has given us an example of how he is now able to undertake his responsibilities in a more flexible manner, and we are very appreciative of that fact.

• (8:40 p.m.)

However, I think there is more in the question of a name than has been said. I understand that the minister indicated he had received a legal opinion suggesting that in order for the intentions and actions of the government to conform with the name of the legislation, there must be this change. But I would point out to him, because of the precedent that might be established, that the Parliament of Canada does have the right under the British North America Act to legislate with regard to matters of agriculture. It has no right to legislate initially with regard to matters of rural development.

I suppose the minister in the legal opinion he received was referred to section 95 of the British North America Act which says:

> In each province the legislature may make laws in relation to agriculture in the province, and to immigration into the province; and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to agriculture in all or any of the provinces, and to immigration into all or any of the provinces; and any law of the legislature of a province relative to agriculture or to immigration shall have effect in and for the province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any act of the Parliament of Canada.

In other words, initially the Parliament of Canada can legislate with regard to matters of agriculture. It cannot legislate other than by parliament authorizing the government to enter into an agreement with the province. For this reason and in order that the name and intent of the legislation shall conform with the British North America Act—and of course I believe we are all very anxious to make sure this is done—we should not delete from the legislation the word "agriculture".

I leave it at that, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me the minister is quite aware of my views. I believe they are based on sound constitutional practice, and a departure therefrom might not be as acceptable to the provincial governments as the change that is proposed by our party.

Rural Development

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the minister, in opening the discussion on second reading of this bill, with regard to what I might refer to as the non-agricultural activities under the ARDA program and some of the reasons for the introduction of the bill, with particular reference to the ruling he suggested had been provided by officers of the Department of Justice. In the light of the minister's remarks I suppose I should describe this news release dated March 25, 1966, by the Department of Forestry as one of his illegal press releases. I should like to refer to it. The release states:

Expansion of the ARDA sponsored fisheries development program in the Port au Port Peninsula area of Newfoundland has been announced jointly by federal forestry minister Maurice Sauvé and Premier Smallwood in his capacity as provincial economic development minister.

On a federal-provincial cost-sharing basis, approval has been given to an ARDA expenditure of $60,000 for the provision of three 37-foot multi-purpose, heavy powered wooden boats to be used to demonstrate improved fishing techniques.

Then it goes on to describe this project in somewhat greater detail. I believe this is probably the latest of a number of such projects which have been undertaken particularly in the province of Newfoundland as I recall various bulletins that have been issued under the authority of the minister. My particular interest in this question—and I would like the minister when he replies to give the house some explanation on this point—is the relationship between this type of activity under the ARDA program and the activity that is proposed under Bill No. C-145 which is now before the house for consideration. Clause 3 of Bill No. C-145 has this to say:

The Minister—

That is referring to the Minister of Fisheries.

—may undertake projects,

(a) for the more efficient exploitation of fishery resources and for the exploration for and development of new fishery resources and new fisheries;

(b) for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new types of fishing vessels and fishing equipment and of new fishing techiques; and

(c) for the development of new fishery products and for the improvement of the handling, processing and distribution of fishery products.

Then in clause 5 of Bill No. C-145 it is proposed that the minister shall be authorized to enter into agreements with the provinces and other agencies for the construction and equipment of fishing vessels. To me at least this raises a question whether there is to be a duplication of activities between the Minister of Forestry under the ARDA program and the Minister of Fisheries under the proposed act for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada.

I am wondering whether in this particular field there may have developed an area of competition between these two departments and whether we may have something of a jurisdictional battle that will determine if there will later be a transfer of duties in which the Department of Fisheries will be amalgamated under the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In this connection I would mention that the fishermen's union in British Columbia in its recent convention passed, I believe, a resolution suggesting that we should have an eastern Minister of Fisheries and a western Minister of Fisheries. I am not at all sure that the present Minister of Forestry could qualify in their minds for the position of western Minister of Fisheries. Nevertheless, in the light of certain other discussions in the field of agriculture with regard to dividing jurisdiction I am wondering whether this may be the direction in which we are headed.

Apart from that matter, Mr. Speaker, I think we should have clarification on whether, assuming parliament approves a new commercial fisheries development act, the Minister of Forestry anticipates turning over this sort of project to the Department of Fisheries; and if not, what means or methods will be followed to determine what type of activity will be under his jurisdiction and what type of activity will come within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Fisheries?

I may say that apart from the general interest in this matter that arises out of the situation in Newfoundland—and I certainly have not quarrelled in my own mind with the fact that the ARDA program was engaging in this area of activity in Newfoundland, with its limited agricultural areas—I have been rather puzzled as to the authority under which ARDA, as I understand it—and my understanding has not been too detailed or extensive—enters into agreements of this type, which have no reference whatever to agricultural activity.

I also feel and have felt for some time that there may be real possibilities of combined land use development, perhaps in certain areas of my own constituency, where the combination of an ARDA-type program for land development, with participation by the Department of Fisheries in the improvement of salmon spawning, might be developed. If the minister can give us some indication how this multiple land use in areas of this kind will work out under the proposed amendments to the Agricultural, Rehabilitation and Development Act and in the light of the proposed new commercial fisheries development act, it might be very useful not only in our consideration of this bill but also in our later discussion of Bill No. C-145.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on this particular bill. I was pleased to hear the minister's statement tonight, although it was pretty well based on the new five-year agreement. To start with I want to say that I am opposed to the change in name of this particular act as proposed in clause 2 of the bill, which would change the name of the act to the Rural Development Act. I think the original name was very fitting.

The original act was divided into three parts. It specifies the various types of projects and in section 2 deals with alternate uses of land. Section 3 provides for rural development projects, while section 4 provides for soil and water conservation projects. I believe that under those three headings almost any type of agricultural or rural development can be undertaken. Therefore I think the renaming of the act is quite unnecessary and very unfair, because ARDA has become a byword in Canada.

In the minister's brochure entitled "Federal-provincial rural development agreement, 1965-70", the introduction refers to ARDA a dozen times, which indicates how important is the expression ARDA and the emphasis that is placed on that particular expression. Therefore I hope that, whatever the minister does, he will keep that term.

In the brochure published by the Department of Agriculture in the fall of 1963 entitled "ARDA—a program geared to problems, possibilities and progress in the development of natural resources and income and employment opportunities", the general objectives of the program are set out on page 4, as follows:

> All of ARDA's primary objectives fall within the general area of conservation, comprehensive resource development, and community development. Possible projects under ARDA fall into four broad categories:
>
> 1. Projects for alternative uses of land,
> 2. Projects for soil and water conservation,
> 3. Rural development projects—assistance to rural communities to develop and diversify their resources and to create income and employment opportunities,
> 4. A wide range of research projects—particularly social and economic research, to uncover avenues to improving conditions in rural areas.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that under those four headings you can undertake almost any type of project, certainly in rural Manitoba.

I have great faith in the original act and in what it will do for a great many rural areas in Canada. The minister referred to the Interlake area of Manitoba, which is in my riding and is a designated area. It was declared a test area on March 15, 1963 and later that year was declared a designated area. There has been considerable development in that area. The minister has been out there so I know he is familiar with the Interlake area of Manitoba.

I just want to show some of the projects which have been approved in Manitoba under that particular program, Mr. Speaker, and there are a wide variety of them. For instance, there was a project to appraise the commercial fishery, to determine the economic benefits which could be derived by the rural people of the Interlake area. Another project was a study of ethnic group values in the Interlake region to determine the basic values of ethnic groups with respect to receptiveness, adjustment and change. Then a general economic survey was made of the Interlake region to take inventory of and to analyse regional resources. Another project was a study of the feasibility of establishing industries that are suited to the Interlake region. A very large variety of projects have been approved, and I feel that the old act is wide enough to undertake any type of project in rural Manitoba.

I should just like to refer to the new agreement. The minister referred to section 4, which reads as follows:

> The national contribution of Canada shall be:
>
> (a) an amount of $125 million to be allotted to the provinces, the expenditure of Canada not to exceed $25 million in any one fiscal year;—

The minister pointed out that this was a great increase over the original agreement, and rightly so.

> (b) a Special Fund for Rural Economic Development of $50 million, as described in Section 37 of this Agreement.

I take it that this $50 million is the $50 million referred to in Bill No. C-151. I had hoped that that provision would be incorporated in the bill presently before us, because I think it would certainly fit in with this bill. The $50 million is designed to help designated areas, and I would take it that an area like the Interlake area of Manitoba would fit into that particular category, if they qualified for assistance under that act.

I just wanted to let the minister know that I am very interested in this particular program and I am glad that he is taking a real interest in it. However, I would certainly prefer to see the phrase "ARDA" perpetuated.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I think it only fit and proper to say a few words on this bill and the proposed changes to the act in view of the fact that some of us put in a tremendous amount of work in the initial stages in bringing this act into being. I have followed it with great interest during the past few years and I certainly intend to continue following the success of ARDA.

I should say to the minister, since he has chosen to rename the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act so that it would be known as the Rural Development Act, that I see no purpose in the move. Would a rose smell as sweet by any other name? Actually, I think he now has a title which will not fit.

The ARDA program with respect to projects, is divided into two parts. One section has to do with area rehabilitation and the other with individual farm rehabilitation. Area rehabilitation is primarily carried on under contracts with the individual provinces, but this requires a program. I should like to have the attention of the minister while I am taking to him, if he does not mind.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Farm rehabilitation is a different matter. You cannot rehabilitate farmers by some broad, over-all program; you have to get down to the level of the farmer and co-operate with him. You need a man who is trained in farm management, who can sit down with the farmer and work out a plan. You may have to buy adjacent land to make an economic unit. Then perhaps loans will be needed. The cost is tremendous, but it is worthwhile. You have to undertake a farm management study of the individual farm. You must give personal attention, supervised attention to this plan for the individual farm. As yet, I have seen no indication that such a program has been in operation or that the minister intends to put such a plan into operation. I have not seen any indication he intends to adopt a program for the rehabilitation of the farm in Quebec or elsewhere.

There has been no attempt to try to get agricultural graduates or university trained men in farm management to handle these programs. The minister has not brought forward any plan to take care of the individual farm. He has been looking at the area as a whole. I would be happy if the minister could show me any attempt whatsoever to solve the problem of the individual farm in the programs adopted since he became minister.

Let me say that the word marginal has been used in this bill. I should like to ask the minister what he means by marginal. Marginal may mean one thing in Quebec and it will certainly mean another thing in Ontario. Out west, marginal will mean still another thing. This definition may depend on what you can raise on that land or the income you derive from it. Where do you get the word marginal; marginal to what?

Then, the minister has gone a step further and has referred to lands which are submarinal. If you do not know what marginal means, how can you tell what submarginal means? I would defy the minister to give me a definition of marginal lands in such a broad act. He cannot do it. He is not an economist, and I am. I am telling him, for his own benefit, that he cannot define the word marginal in a broad act such as you have here. I hope the minister gets along all right with this provision, but he is going to be in trouble when he goes out on the hustings. He is going to be asked what marginal land is, and he had better be ready to answer the question.

Let me say a word about soil conservation. This is an important aspect of an agricultural program. I was hoping that this minister, and this government, would undertake such a program in co-operation with the provinces. I was hoping such a program, in turn, would have particular application to raising the productivity of various agricultural lands. If such a program were carried out as it was in the United States, it could be tied into other types of programs by which the pattern of land use could be changed. Soil conservation programs have been tied in to programs to restrict certain crops. I do not know whether the minister's ideas have progressed to that point or whether he has that sort of thing in mind. I doubt if he has. However, if he is going to get into the field of conservation, and if he is going to get the co-operation of the farmers, he will have to get into such things as contour plowing, in order to prevent land from being washed down into the creeks and rivers. Farmers will have to plant soil conserving crops and the minister will have to encourage them to do so. These soil conserving crops may need to be plowed under in order to conserve moisture.

Is the minister going to get into conservation programs which will offer payments to the farmers to do that sort of thing? It has been done elsewhere. It has been done in the United States. Are you going to go about these things on an individual farm basis or are you going to put conservation into effect in an area generally? Is the minister simply thinking of conservation on the basis of spreading some commercial fertilizer that may be required by a particular farm?

I understand that the minister is a lawyer from Montreal and perhaps does not know too much about farming—I am sorry, the Magdalen Islands, I stand corrected. I say to him that he should go across Canada. He should come out to Alberta, where my riding is, and I will show him the things about which I am talking. I will show him some of the work we want done by ARDA. This idea of concentrating on one part of Canada or one corner of Canada, is not good because ARDA was developed to have a broad application to the whole country. We would like to see the minister come out and become familiar with our problems. I will rest the argument at that point, sir, provided the minister will explain what he means by marginal.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like to intervene briefly in this debate to speak about the change in name of the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. If the minister thought it over, Mr. Speaker, perhaps he would be happier if the agricultural part of the name were left; and if his amendment were to the effect that the legislation should be called the agriculture and rural development act. Certainly in British Columbia the name of the act is not yet a household term. There has been a feeling in that province that projects have been approved very slowly and rather rarely. I believe this situation is changing. It certainly has changed in the constituency I represent. We have 37 major projects under way now, having to do particularly with irrigation.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Vernon News of February 28 announced an extensive rebuilding of the Vernon irrigation system at a cost of $6 million. This project is a most worth-while one. Then again on March 24 two smaller projects were approved, again in the north Okanagan. There was the Woods lake improvement district irrigation system and the Grandview irrigation system. The local newspaper, in reporting this development, does not use the abbreviation but refers to the act in its full, although cumbersome name, Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. This may be just a wish on the part of this very fine newspaper to be extremely exact and proper. Also, I think it is an indication that ARDA had not been until recently sufficiently involved in the Okanagan area, or at least, it may be an indication that it had not been involved there as much as it may have been in other parts of Canada.

I think, were the word "agricultural" to remain in the name of the act, it would be a good idea, because it would provide emphasis on the practical as well as the theoretical aspect.

I should think in agricultural development, as in irrigation projects that I have outlined, you always have the assurance that this is of immediate benefit to the district, and the name would make it immediately obvious.

The announcements of agricultural development can be hailed by anyone interested in the welfare of the districts involved, and what is then obvious is that the whole concept of rural development benefits by having a very close relationship to agricultural tradition and agricultural enterprise in Canada.

The efforts that will be projected and undertaken that are solely rural development and that have no direct connection with agriculture will, I think, not necessarily always but very frequently, be of a more controversial nature.

We have had various projects outlined, some of which have been criticized this evening as being altogether too nebulous for an organization, or for an act such as this to be considering. What has been outlined in this house today justifies that these measures should be taken. In fact, I think the act should be administered so as to involve enterprises that are daring, that are original, and that are unusual for agricultural development across the country. I think it is absolutely essential that the whole thing remain as imaginative as possible, to that end.

At the same time I believe that ARDA should retain its strong and practical agricultural base that is now being so well administered in the north Okanagan region. I think that the minister would be well advised not just to tack ARDA on the end of the name, but to include the word "agricultural" in the very title of the act itself.

I think there might be danger in future of people being critical of some things that are planned to be undertaken. They might wonder what had happened to the act they knew as ARDA, when really, it would still be around. I think it would be a good thing for the people who will be concerned to know that there is continuing development going on under this most worth-while agricultural enterprise.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I cannot resist saying a few words on this type of legislation. All members of our group support the principle and purpose of this type of legislation. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I rise to speak this evening as a rancher, as a tree farmer and as a man interested in rural development, and particularly as a man interested in the welfare of our small communities; also, as president of the Canadian Tree Farmers Association. What more can I say?

An hon. Member: A wealthy farmer.

Mr. Herridge: This legislation has the support of large numbers of organizations in this country. It has the support of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the farmers unions, the Western Reclamation Association, many conservation groups, many community organizations, the Christmas tree farmers and the Canadian Tree Farmers Association.

At this point I might say that we held our annual meeting last Saturday in Ottawa. The minister sent a very nice message to the meeting, and the members present asked me to convey their best wishes to him, also their congratulations, and to wish him well in all he undertakes in the administration of this act.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman opposite never opens his mouth without subtracting from the sum total of human wisdom.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit a question? May I ask the hon. gentleman, if he agrees that the principles of this legislation are so good, will he not let the bill pass the house so that the people of Canada may have the advantage of it.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: The principles of application are excellent, but I question the administration. There have been excellent agreements signed with various provinces. Personally I was very pleased that the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) referred to the agreements signed with the government of B.C. for the renewal of irrigation projects in southeastern B.C., and in particular in the Okanagan district. This is appreciated by the fruit growers, the local farmers and the communities directly concerned, but I believe this type of thing cannot be undertaken on the basis of a crash program. The legislation has got to be developed as the result of experience, research, planning, and the participation of a large number of people.

I should now like to draw to the minister's attention a few of the suggestions we discussed at the meeting we held last Saturday. We are very much in favour of combining agricultural activities and forestry activities of this type under one department, as they were formerly. In European countries, in Sweden, Norway and Great Britain they found a very close relationship between the development of agriculture and the development of wood lot ownership, or forestry of this type, in relation to the rehabilitation of rural communities, and their maintenance and improvement. There is a sort of joint objective in that respect. In passing may I say we were very pleased to see that both these subjects are going to be discussed by the same committee of the House of Commons at this session.

Next, there has to be a great deal of co-operative research undertaken by the federal and provincial governments, by the universities and other organizations. In this connection I say to the minister, do not overlook the contribution that the average, shall I say, intellectual rural observer may make to rural administration. There is many a man who does not have a college degree, who does not belong to the intellectual elite, but who can offer very sound suggestions to those who have had those opportunities. We should encourage in every way possible the smaller communities to participate on an administration basis with respect to the operations of this act.

There must be a great deal of planning over a long period of time. It is not a question of a crash program. We have to develop this program as the result of experience and by carefully approaching the planning on a regional and community basis, after agreement has been reached in principle in the agreements signed with the provincial governments.

We also discussed the question of the advisory committees, and I might inform the minister that our organization is intending to co-operate with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in offering any advice the minister would welcome from these organizations in the administration of this act and in relation to particular circumstances in any particular community.

In addition, we have to have much wider publicity and better public relations. We have to get a larger number of people understanding the principles of co-operation and their application to an act of this kind. That is going to require improved public relations on the part of the minister's department. In some respects we have fallen down in that direction.

I would suggest that not only is it necessary for the minister and his officials to address bodies of national organizations but, so far as possible, to get their men out in the field in the various provinces so that the presence of the federal government in the application of the act is felt right in the rural communities.

As I said before, there is much room for research on a regional community basis; and I have one other suggestion to make before I sit down which, as a matter of fact, comes from the organization the presidency of which I have been entrusted with for another two years. It has been endorsed by that organization and by several members of the faculties of universities throughout Canada. In short, there is a need for a college of conservation.

I see that this idea has almost been started in Quebec by some summer school. I do not know whether it receives a grant from the provincial government or not, but it is a summer school to teach the principles of conservation in relation to the development of the rural community.

I am not suggesting any large expenditure of money, but I do suggest there is a place in Canada for a college of conservation, erected under the correct circumstances, with the right environment, with provision for the teaching of, say, 50 students, including overseas students in Canada, and which might have a skeleton staff of not more than 10—maybe less; maybe five—I do not know. Such a college could ask the co-operation of universities across Canada for guest speakers to attend on the basis of lectures to be given for a week or 10 days on particular subjects. In my opinion this would be inexpensive.

In the first instance we have the material. We have the personnel in the various universities and organizations interested in the development of this act and its administration. In fact, it might be possible to offer some sort of diploma, or associate diploma, for study extending over a year, 18 months or two years. I am not clear at the moment as to the length of the course, but it should be something that could be given to young men and women interested in the development of rural rehabilitation in this country. This would provide an opportunity for a large number of young men, who are not concerned with going to universities and having academic qualifications, but who are interested in the problem and who would be able to take advantage of this, more or less, vocational training.

It would also serve the purpose of giving overseas students an idea of our approach to the principles of conservation. It would give an opportunity to many young Canadians to serve Canada and their own communities, and to serve them according to the principles of conservation and co-operation in the administration of the act itself. With those few words I resume my seat trusting that hon. members opposite realize I have not trespassed too much on the time of the house.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a few words about this measure. Coming from a province which, as the minister well knows, has taken a great interest and done much research, and launched many studies in this field, a province the land of which is perhaps more fully utilized for agricultural purposes than any other portion of the country, I could not but be interested in this measure. I would like to say in passing that, so far as I have been able to observe, the minister has shown an interest in the problems concerned, and I wish him well in his endeavours.

I am not quite content with the word rural. I do not want to elaborate on my views at this stage of the discussion, but I wonder if it might not in certain areas be a bit exclusive in a sociological sense.

The reason I rise is to commend an initiative in this very important field of ARDA, as we have called it up until now and probably will continue to call it. It is a most imaginative piece of legislation which some of us have long felt has been languishing, and if a change of name will bring it greater fame and emphasis, I will go along with that.

Of all the things that were brought before the house in the years when our party was in power, this was one of our finest contributions, and if the present administration wishes to change the name in order to make it a more imaginative and attractive policy, that is fine, although I do have reservations on the word rural.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am happy that here in legislation we have underscored what is a Dominion initiative in agriculture. I am speaking in the broad sense of agricultural jurisdiction, which is a concurrent jurisdiction; and here we have underscored, in section after section, a dominion initiative, with the dominion co-operating with the provinces. This is very important and most welcome. If there is anything I have noted in recent days that has disturbed me, it was the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), as reported in the press a few days ago, that the problem of opting out would be no longer very important because the Dominion would not be opting in. In this country, with its great diversity, especially in economic fields, the initiative of a dedicated, concerned, and informed Dominion government is of the essence.

If there is anything we can do to support the minister in making this legislation more meaningful, in making the Dominion initiative more meaningful and in supporting his efforts to elicit the co-operation of the provinces, I am sure we are all for it. We do not want to see the Dominion opting out of programs which are of benefit to the whole country. To the extent that this legislation reflects the Dominion's desire to stay in, to pioneer, to initiate, then I commend it, and commend the minister, and will support him on the suggested amendments.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I will not take up very much of the time of the house this evening. However, I wish to express my interest in this act and the purpose for which it was founded several years ago by the former Conservative administration. I, of course, was not a member of this house at that time; but we looked on it with interest and favour, especially in our part of the country, because at that time I happened to be the mayor of the town of Napanee when we were faced with a very acute water shortage, and just such a scheme as this was put into effect by the federal, provincial and municipal partnership. This turned our dearth of water into a plentiful supply, the most important thing that mankind needs.

I have a clipping here from the Napanee Beaver which I thought I would have time to bring to the attention of the minister because I know he would be interested in this illustration of what can be done when three authorities unite in such a scheme as this to increase a municipal water supply and to reforest these watersheds, of which we have many across Canada, which are in a condition which is a detriment to our country today. Development is needed in these areas. What a wonderful opportunity we have now. I speak from experience, because I am one of the political fathers of the Second Depot Lake dam in the upper reaches of the Napanee River which is living proof that ARDA and conservation will work and that our country's resources which have long been latent can be developed.

Let us all get together and make this work. I have a few more remarks, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to see the government attempting to change the name of this act. ARDA is a byword across the country already, because it did make significant progress under the other administration. It probably has been marking time since then, but I hope in due course it will make as much progress as it started out to do.

The letters ARDA represent what one might term a mellisonant acronym. I ask the minister, why now change that acronym, that handy term ARDA. I do not know any reason for change. Some say it is retaliatory action on the part of the government. This reminds me of the great rivalry between Rome and Carthage that we learned about in ancient history. The Romans hated the Carthaginians and their policies so bitterly that by the time they did overthrow them they tore every building down in Carthage and then plowed the ground, so that never again would there be any identity with the name Carthage. It looks to me as though that is what the Liberal government is attempting to do here; that is, to eradicate all that stands of the title of the good legislation which was put through in the period from 1957 to 1962.

Again I reiterate my profound and active interest in this act and what it will do. Of course, primarily it is rural assistance. I have here a letter from a farmer who was hard pressed, like thousands of other farmers in Canada today. I should like to quote two lines, where he says:

> We don't want to be able to borrow a lot of money from the government to live on; we want to be able to earn it.

This is what we should get from this legislation, an opportunity for the farmers and the working people to earn, so that they do not have to sign huge mortgages and commit themselves for the rest of their lives to debt. All they want is just a little help. Every rural area, with help from ARDA perhaps can turn the tide economically for these farmers. This man also says:

> Most farmers I know wouldn't be able to pay interest on $30,000 or $40,000, let alone paying on principal.

That of course is true. He says:

> In our community a large percentage of farmers or their wives are working off the farm because they can't survive on the income the farm brings; however they are still producing milk, beef and pork and they are doing it at a loss because they don't depend on the farm any more for a living.

So much for the case in respect of ARDA, and for the speedy going ahead with what is meant by the words of this act. From my observation of the areas adjacent to my own area, I know that rural Canada needs development of our watersheds for the conservation of water. Not so far away from Ottawa where the minister, I hope can go and see it at first hand is the development of the Napanee valley. The Napanee river, of course, is a river which runs mostly in the counties of Frontenac and Lennox and into the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario. I am sure the minister knows where it is.

Rural Canada needs, first, development of all our watersheds for the conservation of water; second, reforestation of adaptable forest lands in a productive manner to ensure continuous annual production of timber and wood products after a certain long-term growth period; third, in the areas of these watersheds where soil is suitable for agriculture, clearing and restoration of the old fields must take place; fourth, grants for the use of heavy machinery for land clearing, such as clearing of principally scrub brush, must be available, and also for tile drainage of these cleared fields where this type of drainage is necessary.

In addition grants, then, in turn, are needed for fertilizer and any other services necessary to put these lands into production. Fifth, in turning these regions of our country into productive lands, which now are unproductive or close to being a non-productive liability, we need the advice and services of our top engineers, agricultural scientists and silviculturists. The members of the house can see how this will create a tremendous amount of employment, prefessional employment of a very high calibre, because very high calibre of people are required to help us plant and take care of these plantations. With the type of management which is envisaged, perhaps the farmers will go on farming as they never farmed before on rejuvenated land. Deeds to the land quite properly could be retained by the rural population. There is no advantage to uprooting all the farm population and sending the people to the cities where probably they would have a lower level of living than in the country. They would be able to stay where they are and make a living off land which would be more productive than it formerly was.

Then there is the responsibility of the government, through the ARDA directorates and co-ordinating communities, to render scientific soil and crop adaptability studies, and even marketing adaptability studies, to make sure that the right varieties and species of crops are grown on this rehabilitated land. We are about to celebrate our first centennial, and this ARDA proposition is a long term project; it will take at least half a century to put it into full operation. It made a good start under the Conservative administration. We need not waste time or energy changing the title of the act. Let us go to work and make this proposition develop.

There is also a recreational aspect of ARDA. Already we have recreational interests which are anxious to obtain loans in the Laurentian area. In my office now I have a letter from persons who are interested in starting a skiing establishment on land that is not worth very much now. It is proposed to have ski jumps, trails, mechanical lifts and so on. This is in an area in Renfrew county on marginal land and in a beautiful hilly location. I have referred this suggestion to the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) and the hon. member for Renfrew North (Mr. Hopkins). I hope this type of scheme can come under the scope of this new act and be placed early on the agenda of things that can be done. The operation of these kinds of resorts is an industry which provides employment and can certainly be of assistance to these remote undeveloped regions of our country.

• (9:40 p.m.)

There are many other points we could refer to, but we hope to have an opportunity to discuss them at another time. I thank the hon. members of this house for the courtesy they have shown in listening to the points I have put to them. In conclusion, I again say, let us get on with the job of making ARDA work as a measure increasing the prosperity of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: It has been moved by Mr. Turner for Mr. Sauvé, seconded by Mr. Côté (Longueuil) that Bill C-152, an act to amend the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act—

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to interrupt on a point of order and ask the minister whether he intends to answer some of the questions we have posed? There still is time for him to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether at this time, the question having been put to some extent, the minister should be allowed to speak.

Mr. Kindt: I was up before the question was put, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should allow the minister to speak, but if he does he will close the debate.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to answer hon. members' questions when we reach consideration on item 1 at the committee stage, but if hon. members prefer that I do so now I will be pleased to comply.

It must be clear from what I said in opening the debate this evening that Bill C-152 is strictly of an administrative nature. Had it not been for an interpretation given by the Department of Justice regarding the restrictive nature of the original bill we should not be considering the bill now before us. I trust hon. members understand clearly that that is the only purpose of this bill. This will be apparent from a reading of the explanatory notes in the bill, which are in part as follows:

> The general purpose of these amendments is to extend the application of the act to all rural areas in Canada where projects of the nature provided for under the act can be advantageously undertaken whether or not the area in question is in whole or in part an agricultural area.
>
> This amendment removes the reference to agricultural lands from the long title and eliminates the preamble which is considered to restrict the application of the act.

The underlining of the words in the bill clearly indicate where the amendments are to be made. At the risk of being repetitious, let me say again that the purpose of this bill is purely administrative. There is no intention at all to amend this very beneficial legislation which was passed in 1961 under the previous administration.

In my opening remarks I paid tribute not only to the minister of agriculture originally responsible for this act, but also to the minister before him who introduced this legislation by way of a report to a cabinet committee. I refer to the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness). We have proposed this bill in order to comply with a request from the Department of Justice.

Having regard to the word ARDA, which in French we call SIGLE, after discussion on March 18 when the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) introduced the resolution and the remarks of hon. members of parliament at that time, we decided definitely to retain that name. On March 18 the Minister of Fisheries said, as recorded at page 2886 of Hansard for that date:

> It is proposed that the term "ARDA" continue to be used to refer to the Act and the program—

We originally proposed to the drafters of this bill that the name ARDA should be included in the new title but we were informed that this was not necessary. However, because of the remarks of hon. members on March 18, as I said earlier I propose to move an amendment to clause 2 in the bill in order that the name ARDA will remain.

I hope that all hon. members will accept my explanation that the only purpose of this bill is an administrative one. I thank all hon. members for their interest in this bill, most of whom have referred to the continued use of ARDA. Perhaps I may be allowed to reply first to the remarks of the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

May I point out to the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) that the constitution itself justifies the federal government to intervene in the field of agriculture. Indeed, section 95 of the constitution authorizes the intervention of the federal government in rural matters.

But what is more important, in my opinion, and what has escaped the attention of the hon. member, is the fact that Bill C-152 does not add anything to the original bill. What he now blames us for undertaking already existed in the original bill and we have not taken any new initiative.

Besides, it is strictly in the field of research and inquiries that the federal minister can have programs and projects prepared and undertaken directly or in co-operation with the government of any province. That is strictly limited to inquiries.

If the hon. member for Roberval would read over the federal-provincial agreement on the economic rehabilitation of agricultural areas, he would see at once that all projects are to be undertaken jointly and must essentially originate from the provinces.

As far as the advisory committee is concerned, we have established ours at the federal level and the provinces can very well institute theirs.

The advisory committee which we have instituted at a federal level, is made up of about 30 people, and I shall list them because I think it is important to show that we never lost sight of the need to include in that Canadian Rural Development Council the best elements in the field, people who as a result of their functions in organizations or by their reputation, can best contribute to improve the legislation and its administration.

And I should not want anyone to think that when we consulted the organizations or when we made those appointments, we had any other concern but that of the good and the administration of the ARDA legislation.

I am going to give the names and hon. members will be able to see for themselves: the president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture; the president of the National Farmers Union; the director of research of the Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada; the director of research of the Canadian Welfare Council; the vice president of the Canadian Forestry Association; the editor in chief of the newspaper La Ferme; the president of the Canadian Wildlife Federation; the manager of the South East Kelowna Irrigation district, Western Canada Reclamation; the manager of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce; the director of the Co-operative Union of Canada; the director of research of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council; the chairman of the Indian-Eskimo Association; the general director of the Confederation of National Trade Unions.

Some hon. Members: Carried, carried.

Mr. Sauvé: A representative of the Fisheries Council of Canada; a lady representative of the National Council of Women of Canada; a representative of the Fédération des caisses populaires—

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Sauvé: And so on. I see that my hon. friends have regained confidence and that we may now, with leave of the house, proceed to the committee stage.

However—

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

I should like to give a definition to the hon. member for MacLeod (Mr. Kindt). I wish to give him a definition of marginal land and submarginal land, although I would tell him immediately that we are not using these words any more and have replaced them by the words "more efficient use and economic development of rural lands". However, under the old jargon marginal land for agriculture is land that will not give adequate returns to labour and capital invested in it for agriculture, and submarginal land is clearly not economic in agriculture. Those are the definitions and I hope they satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat I wonder whether he would answer a short question. If he does, it will perhaps not be necessary to ask it on clause 1 in committee. Would the minister in very short terms give the house some indication of the projects that are non-agricultural, to which he referred. I believe he spoke of Newfoundland, the maritimes and northern Saskatchewan in this connection. I think the house would be interested to know the type of project which could be classified as non-agricultural.

Mr. Sauvé: There was development in certain outports of Newfoundland, in which there is clearly no agriculture at all. They were limited to fisheries development projects and programs. I referred to specific cases of that nature.

Rural Development

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister before resuming his seat could answer the question I raised about overlapping jurisdiction in the area of fisheries.

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) raised problems in connection with the overlapping of various departments. Hon. members will notice that Bill No. C-145 is now being introduced, so this kind of program did not exist before. This is why we have entertained such programs. In any case, we never accept a project from any province unless it is approved by the federal department or departments involved. We cannot accept projects if a federal department thinks the province can do it better. In most instances these projects under ARDA are implemented by the provinces themselves, which means that the federal government does not have to set up the machinery to implement them. But there can be no overlapping because we do not accept any project unless it is approved by the federal department or departments concerned.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was opposed to this bill, and still am, for the very simple reason that I do not believe it is at all necessary. I am concerned about two matters. I have just received a copy of the French version of the bill. The French version has absolutely no relationship to the English version, no matter what we do with the terminology. I cannot read what it says in French so I shall not attempt to do so.

An hon. Member: The initials are different, too.

Mr. Peters: I hope it means the same thing, although as far as the initials are concerned I suppose it was very difficult to get "ARDA" out of the original bill in French and the minister has indicated that in the province of Quebec they call it something else.

If the Department of Justice advised the minister that the bill had to be amended in this way, I think the minister has an obligation to explain to us why the Department of Justice allow the building of fishing boats under the program we call ARDA, when fishing was not even mentioned in the original bill. There is no legitimate connection between fishing and rural development and agriculture. I have no objection to this program dealing with fishing. However, I have read the catalogue for the past six months and am very surprised to learn that most of the research in the province of Newfoundland as well as in several other provinces has been in connection with the fishing industry. They have even dealt with the construction of fishing vessels, the purchase of gear, the establishment of co-operatives and other matters that are concerned with the fishing industry.

I am opposed to making this change because we have not been given a satisfactory explanation of the advice given regarding the name of the previous act being in contravention of the law. The legal officers of the Department of Justice have apparently advised the minister that we would be in a better position if the name were changed, but I really do not understand the reason for this advice being given. I am very satisfied with the minister's explanation, but I do not understand why we were in contravention of the law in regard to the previous act and how our position is improved by making this change. Perhaps there is not an explanation. It is probably a highly technical, legal explanation.

A number of sections of ARDA involve almost completely unrelated things at the present time. There are the federal-provincial shared programs concerned with the development of a particular aspect of ARDA. Another section of the act refers to research which can be undertaken, initiated, financed and operated by the federal government. In view of this, Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the minister is opposed to including Bill No. C-151 as another clause of this bill.

Mr. Sauvé: Precisely for the reason dealt with by many members on the other side of the chamber. We do not want to alter the original act except by changing the word "agricultural" to "rural". We wanted to keep the same act because we felt it was a good act, and we were introducing a new measure for some other purposes, although they are related to the ARDA administration. We never had any intention of changing the original act, and that is why we presented amendments strictly in accordance with the request of the Department of Justice. I give my word that otherwise there would have been no amendment. As the minister concerned, I have no intention at all of changing the act.

• (10:00 p.m.)

It is true some of the projects were accepted, but the cabinet undertook to present these amendments. Otherwise we would not have carried the projects mentioned by the hon. member. It was only when we as a government undertook to present amendments to the act that those projects could be accepted, and that was the only reason.

Mr. Peters: Now that the minister is amending the act, is he not of the opinion that Bill No. C-151 is only an extension of the principle, though into a slightly different field? There really should not be objection to adding this additional section.

Mr. Sauvé: Under the agreements which have been signed and which are an extension to the act, the usual method of contribution is 50-50. Under the rural development fund there is no such limitation. We have more initiative under Bill No. C-151 than we would normally have under this federal-provincial rural development agreement. This is one of the reasons we are presenting Bill No. C-151, though there are a number of other reasons I shall give when we reach that bill.

Mr. Peters: Is it not true that these agreements which have been mentioned under the program are only one section of the act? The financial arrangements are entirely the responsibility of the federal government. There is really no argument against adding this section because of the similarity. I am not suggesting you include the section dealing with the 50-50 arrangements, but the other sections provide for a different type of arrangement entirely.

Mr. Sauvé: Because of the method of financing under the special fund which was created, which can be replenished when exhausted, we felt that we should use the formula used by the Atlantic Development Board.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, in his explanations, at the beginning of his remarks, the minister said that certain projects cannot or could not be accepted. Can the minister give an example of this?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I explained to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that they were, among others, projects for certain areas of Newfoundland where no farming is being carried out.

[English]

Mr. Kindt: As the minister has said, the term "ARDA" has been used for a number of years. In western Canada it is known by that name and has been popularized. It has also been explained that the municipalities and everybody concerned with the act are familiar with that term. There is no need whatever to change the name of the act. I think the minister will have to make an amendment to the bill to bring in the term "ARDA", so that there will be no misunderstanding in the other nine provinces of Canada.

Mr. Sauvé: I already announced that, Mr. Chairman, when I introduced the bill this evening. I said I was going to present an amendment—I have the text here—which will clearly incorporate the expression "ARDA".

Mr. Kindt: One other point. I do not like the word rural because it does not fit in with the types of projects carried out under ARDA in western Canada, or for that matter in all parts of Canada. The word is misleading. I think you should take another look at the word rural, to see if you cannot get rid of it, too.

Mr. Sauvé: I do not understand the hon. member, because the act which was passed by parliament was entitled, "An Act to provide for the rehabilitation of agricultural land and development of rural areas in Canada." It was good then, and it must be good now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. He has just said that the reason for the change in the name given is that Newfoundland has no farming industry. But I would ask him whether the fisheries act which was applied to other provinces would not have been adequate for Newfoundland also. Does Newfoundland have fisheries like other provinces?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I gave the example of Newfoundland. There were some cases in the province of Quebec, in Saskatchewan and in Alberta, where there was no farming or possibilities for agriculture. At that time, the Department of Justice informed us that we could not, unless we undertook to change the act, accept such projects.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that ARDA enabled a well-located farmer to benefit from ARDA in certain areas.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, such was also our interpretation of the act, at ARDA. The Department of Justice ruled otherwise, and we accepted its decision. That is why we must introduce this bill today.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: In the light of the earlier remarks I addressed to the minister concerning the relationship between ARDA programs and the proposed fisheries development bill, I should like to ask him if he envisages the possibility of certain projects being developed with provinces in which there might be joint participation by the Department of Fisheries and also by ARDA, and which might involve both fisheries development and certain other aspects of rural development. Does the minister foresee the possibility of this kind of development taking place in provinces such as Newfoundland or, for that matter, in any provinces in which a proper case could be made for such a project?

Mr. Sauvé: It is quite conceivable.

Mr. Webb: I posed a question to the minister earlier in which I referred to the fact that ARDA was supposed to be prepared to assist industry, or the building of factories in designated areas. I have been unable to find any mention of industry or factories in the act, so I should like to ask the minister if such projects come under ARDA?

Mr. Sauvé: I was sorry that this afternoon when the hon. member asked me the question I could not answer it because the question was declared out of order. The answer is yes, and it is done under the federal-provincial rural development agreements. There is no mention of this in the act. It is under the agreements that we have entered into such projects in certain regions, under certain conditions. It becomes very technical.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Grills: May I ask a question? Does the assistance under the new projects apply to cheese factories, and enterprises such as that?

Mr. Sauvé: I hesitate to say yes or no. It depends under what part of the agreement this comes and what the conditions are. Perhaps I could study this and give a written answer. I would not want to commit myself on the floor without going into more detail on the particular case.

Mr. Grills: I was thinking of the amalgamation of old cheese factories into one factory. Could that be set up?

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Sauvé: I think this is covered by another program of the Department of Agriculture. I would not want to give a definitive assurance until I have had a chance to study the particular case.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the minister on the same subject.

Does this ARDA program also include the building of slaughter-houses in various locations or various counties?

Mr. Sauvé: It is possible if it is done, for instance, in designated areas or areas termed by us as special rural development areas.

[English]

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), seconded by the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté), will move the following amendment:

[English]

That Bill C-152, An Act to Provide for the Rehabilitation and Development of Rural Areas in Canada, be amended by striking out Section 2 and substituting therefore:

"2. Section 1 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"1. This Act may be cited as the Rural Development (ARDA) Act."

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Can we have some understanding as to what we are doing at this time of night. I have no objection to sitting a short time if we are getting somewhere, but if we have half a dozen speeches to come, we should not go on.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I am rising on this amendment. I think the government and the opposition in the wording of clause 2 section 1 are too far apart. I myself proposed on behalf of the party I represent an amendment to the clause. I wonder if the minister would consider incorporating in his amendment the idea which we intended to embody in ours. If the minister would like to read it, I will furnish him with a copy.

Some hon. Members: Read it.

Mr. Danforth: It is as follows:

That section 2 of Bill C-152 be amended in line 11 thereof by adding the words "Agricultural and" immediately after the word "the".

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, before this is carried I would like to ask the minister—

[Translation]

—how to draft the amendment in French, because I think it is very important that we should have both in order to determine whether the amendment meets the requirements?

Mr. Sauvé: In French, line 11 would read as follows: this act may be cited as the Rural Development Act (ARDA), because in the province of Quebec it is known under that name.

The title here is:

The Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.

In the province of Quebec it is called: Aménagement Rural et Développement Agricole, which gives the acronym ARDA.

[English]

Mr. Olson: When the minister is considering all these amendments, would he take into consideration—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It has been proposed to the Chair that we consider a subamendment. I think we should decide on the amendment before deciding on the subamendment.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Sauvé: On a point of order, there has been no subamendment. It is just a proposal by the hon. member to see if I would be agreeable to change my amendment, or the amendment of the Minister of Public Works about the title. Would hon. members think it satisfactory if we included ARDA in parenthesis, so that it is clearly included?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Danforth: The purport of the bill is to separate agricultural from rural development, but by making the short title read "Agricultural and Rural Development" that would be satisfactory to both sides of the house.

Mr. Olson: To get over all the criticisms that have been made I would like to suggest that we call it the General Economic and Rural Development Act, so that in short it could be referred to as GERDA.

Mr. Vincent: You are too late; that was referred to a few minutes ago.

Mr. Peters: I do not think there is any great difference of opinion about this matter. The minister has said that he anticipates maintaining the title ARDA. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), is a proper one and does not change the legal interpretation. It still provides the initials ARDA. We in this party would strongly recommend that the minister accept this proposition.

Mr. Sauvé: Well, if the mover and seconder are agreeable to this proposal, it does not matter at all to me so long as we keep it ARDA, and I hope there will be no problems with the Department of Justice. I will accept "Agricultural and Rural Development Act" if this is agreeable to the mover and seconder.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the Chair understand that the minister is withdrawing his amendment?

Mr. Churchill: No, he is inserting "Agricultural and".

Mr. Sauvé: It is to read:

This act may be cited as the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA).

So that we keep ARDA, and have ARDA in parenthesis, so that we have it twice.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: In order to be perfectly clear on this, you are substituting the word "rural" for "rehabilitation".

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Kindt: That is all; so it is quite all right with me. So long as you are retaining the word "ARDA" and leaving it so that "A" is for agriculture, "R" is for rural, "D" is for development, and "A" is for act—ARDA—that is all right.

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask the minister whether he is withdrawing the amendment he originally proposed?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: I move:

That clause 2 of Bill C-152 be amended in line 11 by adding the words "agricultural and" immediately after the word "the".

Mr. Sauvé: In line 11 the new line would read, under the heading "Short title":

This act may be cited as the Agricultural and Rural Development Act (ARDA).

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Business of the House

On clause 4—Agreements for alternative land use projects authorized.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, about section 4, I should like to ask the minister whether, with regard to research the minister will be authorized under that section to undertake a program himself in any province. It is said:

The minister may cause to be prepared and undertaken directly—

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, this applies exclusively to programs of research and investigation and not to development programs.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, but it is precisely with regard to research. Will the minister have the power to authorize research directly in a given province without even asking the consent of the province?

Mr. Sauvé: It was already in the former act, nothing was added or changed, but it is hardly ever applied. Agreements were entered into with each province whereby, in principle, the federal government could cause to be undertaken research programs if it wanted to. But usually it always obtains the consent of the provinces.

Mr Gauthier: It was done by force of habit, I think, under the former act where it was not specified as clearly as it is now.

Mr. Sauvé: If you look at the explanatory notes, on pages two and three, on the right-hand side, you will see that the former version read as follows:

(2) The Minister may cause to be prepared and undertaken, directly or in co-operation with the government of any province or any agency thereof, programs of research and investigation—

The text has not been changed.

[English]

Clauses 4 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE CONCERNING DEBATE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—EASTER RECESS

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, last night in announcing the business of the house for the rest of this week and next I indicated that on Friday we would begin the budget debate, to be continued on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Since that time we have had satisfactory discussions with the house leaders of other parties, with the result that there will be placed on the order paper tomorrow a notice of motion providing government time on Monday and Tuesday of next week for the debate on capital punishment, with suitable provision for a vote on amendments on Monday and Tuesday evenings, and a final vote on all remaining questions on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday instead of reverting to the budget debate we will consider other items of business on the order paper.

We will also place a motion on the order paper providing for the house to rise on Wednesday night, April 6, and reconvene on Tuesday, April 19.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to acknowledge the co-operation of all party house leaders throughout today in working out something which I hope will be completely satisfactory to all members. If hon. members are interested, I will indicate the form of the notice at this time.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would put it on the record.

Mr. McIlraith: The notice is:

That on Monday and Tuesday, April 4 and 5, 1966, the order for resuming debate on private members motion No. 66 and on any amendment thereto shall take precedence of all orders of the day, both government orders and private members business, and

That consideration of the said resolution shall be deemed at all times to be the business of private members and that section (2) of standing order 31 shall apply thereto, and

That on Monday, April 4, if an amendment be under consideration at 8 o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the amendment then before the house, and

That on Tuesday, April 5, if any further amendment be under consideration at 5.45 o'clock p.m., Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the amendment then before the house, and

That on Tuesday, April 5, at 9.30 o'clock p.m., unless the said debate be concluded previously, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put every question necessary to dispose of the main motion.

If there is unanimous consent I will be glad to have the notice made an order of the house at this time. If there is not, it will appear as a notice of motion in the ordinary way.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, may I say that the proposition which has been outlined by the government house leader is satisfactory to us. We are ready to proceed on the basis of the schedule outlined. May I say at this time that I think all members of this house appreciate very much the fact that the government has set aside five days for this very important debate on this private members' resolution. This government time could be used for government business, but because of the importance of this resolution it will be devoted to this resolution, and I am sure all hon. members appreciate this fact.

Speaking for the members of this party, in order to expedite matters, and so as not to encroach upon the time on Monday which will be allotted to this debate, we are prepared by unanimous agreement to pass the proposal tonight as an order of the house. In this way there will be no encroachment on the time of members who wish to participate in this important debate on Monday and Tuesday.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I join with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) in confirming what the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) has said. May I also join in expressing satisfaction that the government by these various arrangements has provided for a total of five days of government time for the question of capital punishment and its abolition. We think the question deserves this much time but realize it could not have been attained unless the government had been willing to co-operate.

I join with the other house leaders in saying that we feel we have worked out an arrangement that should be satisfactory to all concerned, and the text the Minister of Public Works has read is the consensus of all of us who met as house leaders yesterday and today. I believe the hon. member for Ontario has made an appeal that should be listened to. If this arrangement has been agreed to by the representatives of all parties, as it has, surely it is just going through a formality to leave it to Monday to be voted on. Would it not be better for all of us in this house and for the country to know now what is going to happen in this regard. On that basis I hope there will be unanimous consent for this agreement to be put through tonight as an order of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the house, also agree with the suggestion made by the minister tonight that two additional days on the capital punishment resolution would be sufficient to allow all hon. members who wish to express their views on the matter to do so.

A moment ago, the minister made an announcement about the Easter recess. I want to thank him for having selected my birthday as the date on which the house reconvenes after Easter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I think this is an example of what can be accomplished when representatives of parties meet together in a spirit of good will. I believe it also indicates that in a matter such as this which is not one of political partisanship we can reach agreement in order to facilitate its handling. Therefore we support wholeheartedly the proposal that has been made and would be very happy to give agreement to its passage tonight rather than having a vote on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree unanimously to adopt as an order of the house the proposal put forward by the Minister of Public Works?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—EFFECT ON PENSIONERS OF INCREASING COST OF LIVING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I put to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) one of the shortest questions I have ever asked on the orders of the day. It is to be found at page 3257 of Hansard and reads as follows:

> In view of the statement in the budget papers tabled on Friday last by the Minister of Finance, to the effect that the cost of living will continue to go up this year, what are pensioners to do?

Perhaps because the question was so short the Prime Minister did not seem to be ready with an answer. At that moment the Chair suggested that it was not a question to be put at that stage of our proceedings and I therefore suggested it was a question that might be raised at ten o'clock.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I repeat my question, Mr. Speaker, and I do so in the light of the budget speech of Tuesday night, in which the Minister of Finance confirmed what had been set out in the budget papers, namely that the cost of living can be expected to rise during 1966.

When one realizes that pensioners are not now able to get by on the $75, for example, that they now have under old age security, what are they to do when the cost of living goes up still further? I hope that any answer that is made on behalf of the government tonight will face up to the seriousness of the question. It is not going to be good enough to say that the budget which was brought down on Tuesday night is somehow going to prevent the cost of living from going higher than it would otherwise have gone. The fact is that that same budget was presented by a minister who said that the cost of living would be going up.

I submit that the difficulty facing our older people in this situation is a very serious one. On every hand we are told that this is an affluent age, that we are living in a period of great prosperity. The Minister of Finance told us this the other night; we hear it from commentators on radio and television; we read it in the press. The number of cars is increasing and the price of everything is going up. We are told that many wages and salaries are going up.

That is all very fine for the few in our society who may be experiencing this, Mr. Speaker, but it is not much comfort to those who are not experiencing it. I suggest that it is downright suffering for those whose incomes are fixed, particularly fixed at a low level and for whom there is no chance to make ends meet, let alone to cope with the rising cost of living.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the only possible answer the government can make to the question which I put the other day is to come through with an increase in the old age security pension.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the hon. gentleman whether he does not agree that this applies particularly to the civil service pensioners, the group in whom he and I have had more interest than any other?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, seven minutes is hardly time to answer questions along the way, but that was a rhetorical question and the hon. member knows that my answer, like his, is "Yes".

[Mr. Knowles.]

However, may I point out that in the budget papers which the Minister of Finance tabled we are told that at the end of the current fiscal year there is in the old age security fund a surplus of $215 million. That in itself is sufficient money to increase the old age security pension for 12 months to the extent of about $18 a month for all those on the roll. Therefore I would suggest that this continuing suggestion of the government that it cannot now increase our old age security pension is not good enough and is no answer to the problem our elderly people face in trying to keep alive.

I have in my hand an interesting report entitled "Minimum Financial Needs Investigation". It was published by the Age and Opportunity Bureau at Winnipeg in January of this year. It includes a well worked out budget for older people, and without going into the detail of this well documented budget I may say that the suggestion made at Winnipeg is that the minimum on which an old person can get along is $111.75 per month.

I also have a clipping from the Toronto Globe and Mail for Friday, January 28, 1966, which is a report of the Canadian conference on aging which met in Toronto at that time. Two or three figures are quoted—one of $118 per month, one of $126 per month and another well worked out figure of $138.96 per month—as minimum amounts an elderly person needs just to get along.

• (10:40 p.m.)

If these are the amounts of money that many social workers feel is required for existence on the part of our older people, and when one realizes that many of them have only the $75 old age security pension or other combinations which still amount to less than this, I submit that the increase in the cost of living which the Minister of Finance has predicted poses a problem which we simply cannot leave to the older people themselves. The old people were the forgotten group in the budget that was presented the other night. They have been forgotten by this government since the time of the last election. I think it is time we had a clearcut answer as to what they are to do.

I repeat the question I put to the Prime Minister on Monday, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement in the budget papers that the cost of living will continue to go up this year, what are pensioners to do?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the debate this evening shows the importance of the measures presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) in his budget. If this year we allow the pressures of demand to outstrip our productive capacity, prices will rise alarmingly for pensioners and all those with fixed incomes.

Perhaps I could remind the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) of the comments which the Minister of Finance made on this subject in his budget speech.

[English]

If we do not, by one means or another, succeed in moderating the increase in aggregate expenditures this year the most immediate penalty we shall suffer is an inflationary increase in prices. Public concern over this danger is already evident. But as a practical matter in our society this danger cannot be avoided by trying to regulate prices and wages. We must deal with the basic issue which is an excess of spending over what is available to meet demands. It is this excess which causes rising prices, costs and profits and which harms those in our society whose economic power and bargaining positions are weak.

[Translation]

Needless to say that every piece of legislation intended to improve the well-being of our senior citizens is a matter of government policy which will be announced through regular channels. It cannot be announced in the Budget speech. The hon. member is well aware that the party in office right now is very well known for its long tradition of being in the forefront in matters of social security.

[English]

Mr. Bell (Carleton): What has the hon. gentleman been talking about?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please; the hon. member for Carleton is not invited to participate in the debate. The rules provide for one speaker to speak seven minutes and a reply from the minister or his representative on the topic before the house.

Mr. Knowles: But that was no reply.

INCOME TAX—ALLOWANCE OF MUNICIPAL TAXATION ON FARM HOMES

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, my question the other day was based on a letter I received from someone in my area. I quote from this letter, which is written by a chartered accountant:

Recently an assessor from the Department of National Revenue Taxation Division had occasion to review the affairs of one of my clients. This client is a farmer, who has farmed the same farm all of his life and is on the same land as his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him and is living in the same house that was built by the latter in 1837. The house is substantially the same as it was then except for the addition of central heating, electricity, and inside plumbing.

As you know, in order to increase revenues, municipalities and other taxing authorities have increased assessment as well as mill rates. Not being able to increase land assessments, the burden of such increase has been placed on the buildings located on the farms.

In the past, it has been the policy of the Department of National Revenue to allow in their entirety, as a deduction from income, the municipal taxes paid by a farmer. However, as a result of the abovementioned review of my client's affairs, the assessor concerned has proposed to add back to income 75 per cent of the portion of taxes applicable to his farm home. . . My client has been assured by the assessor that he is not being singled out for re-assessment and that other farmers are being re-assessed on a similar basis. The assessor also proposes to re-open at least one previous year for re-assessment on the same basis.

• (10:50 p.m.)

Further, he says that the requirements from the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance, confirm this change in government policy.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of National Revenue realizes what the farm home means to the farmer. The average farmer we have heard about must have a home to conduct a successful farm operation. He also needs a helpful wife. The successful farm operation needs all the facilities available that are a part of that farm home. Surely any consideration that has been given to the farm home in the past should not be cut off at this time.

I think about the lot in life of the farmer's wife who, compared with her lady friend in town, has to work much harder. She is not allowed any extra consideration with respect to income. No consideration is given to that aspect in any way.

I might say that the farm home serves as an office to conduct farm business. It serves as a workshop, as a place to wash milk pails and milk cans as a place to grade eggs, to dress poultry, and as a place in which many things of that sort are performed. It also serves as a laundry where dirty work clothes that are soiled by farm work are made clean. That sort of thing does not occur in many other forms of endeavour. It also serves as a boarding house to board help working on the farm that is far removed from town, or from any restaurant.

These are some of the uses of the farm home. It is important to keep the farm home going to keep the farm successful. After the very flowery report of the Minister of Finance the other night, I cannot understand why there should be this change in policy. Surely the government is not going to look to this source to balance the budget. This matter is of considerable concern to farm people throughout the country, and I should be interested in hearing an explanation.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we all realize the limitations imposed by this period of three minutes in which to reply. The question the hon. member asked was: "Is it the intention of the government and the minister's department to not allow municipal taxes on the farmers' home as a farm expense against farmers' income tax?"

I always hesitate to say that this is the answer, but an answer is this: I am advised that section 12(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act does not permit the deduction of an expense except to the extent that it has been incurred for the purpose of gaining or producing income from property or a business of the taxpayer.

If the home of the farmer is located on his farm and can be shown to have been used to earn farm income, a deduction will be allowed for municipal taxes in the amount up to one quarter of the taxes, depending on the business use made of the home building. It is not usual to allow any part of the municipal taxes on the home, if the home is located off the farm.

This was the answer from the department, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether the accountant referred to has taken the particular case up with the tax department, but this is the general answer to a general question raised by the hon. member.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.52 p.m.

APPENDIX

LETTER TO CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF FOREIGN COMPANIES

Ottawa, Ontario, March 31, 1966.

Dear Mr.—

The government has been giving a good deal of attention to the need for the best possible performance from the Canadian economy and to the contribution in this regard of the many Canadian companies which are subsidiaries of foreign parents or are largely foreign owned. Such companies have responsibilites both to their parent companies and to the country in which they operate.

I have concluded that a statement of what is expected of subsidiary companies as regards their responsibilities to the Canadian community would be of benefit to all concerned.

To fulfil its responsibilities as a good citizen, a company seeks to perfect its performance through the vigorous pursuit of available market opportunities and the efficient use of its resources and, in so doing, contributes to the sound development of the community in which it operates.

In the pursuit of this end, subsidiaries of foreign companies enjoy the backing of their parent companies through the provision of financial, managerial, technological and research assistance, along with other forms of support which might not otherwise be available. At the same time, the fact of foreign control leaves the subsidiaries open to external influences which may not always be consistent with their own best interests and those of the Canadian community at large. Such a company may lack the decision-making authority to pursue policies in line with the opportunities afforded within the growing national community and otherwise to develop the full potential of the Canadian operation.

Subsidiaries of foreign companies occupy a prominent position in the Canadian economy. They have contributed greatly to Canada's development in the past and their role in the future is no less challenging. In a more interdependent world, companies with foreign affiliates have an increasingly important role in the international exchange of goods, services, technology and ideas.

The Canadian government is desirous that subsidiaries be free to develop their full potential within the Canadian community. In this regard it is most important that subsidiaries should not have restrictive limitations placed upon their sound development by their parent organizations.

This objective can be made more difficult if foreign governments introduce measures which affect the financial or commercial policy of parent companies or seek to influence them in their relations with their foreign subsidiaries.

In the case of the United States balance of payments program, the authorities in that country have made quite clear, as indicated in the communique of the recent meeting of the joint United States-Canadian committee on trade and economic affairs, that the "United States government was not requesting United States corporations to induce their Canadian subsidiaries to act in any ways that differed from their normal business practices as regards the repatriation of earnings, purchasing and sales policies, or their other financial and commercial activities". The United States authorities have, in fact, reemphasized the view that "United States subsidiaries abroad should behave as good citizens of the country where they are located".

I am confident that this also would be the view of the governments of other countries whose companies have subsidiaries in Canada.

I believe it timely and useful therefore to set forth, particularly for the benefit of subsidiary companies, some basic principles of good corporate citizenship in Canada. I trust that these principles will be regarded as helpful by your company.

Some guiding principles of good corporate behaviour for subsidiaries in Canada of Foreign Companies

Desirable objectives include the following:—

(1) Pursuit of sound growth and full realization of the company's productive potential thereby sharing the national objective of full and effective use of the nation's resources.

(2) Realization of Maximum competitiveness through the most effective use of the company's own resources, recognizing the desirability of progressively achieving appropriate specialization of productive operations within the internationally affiliated group of companies.

(3) Maximum development of market opportunities in other countries as well as in Canada.

(4) Where applicable, to extend processing of natural resource products to the extent practicable on an economic basis.

(5) Pursuit of a pricing policy designed to assure a fair and reasonable return to the company and to Canada for all goods and services sold abroad, including sales to the parent company and other foreign affiliates.

(6) In matters of procurement, to search out and develop economic sources of supply in Canada.

(7) To develop as an integral part of the Canadian operation wherever practicable, the technological research and design capability necessary to enable the company to pursue appropriate product development programs so as to take full advantage of market opportunities domestically and abroad.

(8) Retention of a sufficient share of earnings to give appropriate financial support to the growth requirements of the Canadian operation, having in mind a fair return to shareholders on capital invested.

(9) To work toward a Canadian outlook within management, through purposeful training programs, promotion of qualified Canadian personnel and inclusion of a major proportion of Canadian citizens on its board of directors.

(10) To have the objective of a financial structure which provides opportunity for equity participation in the Canadian enterprise by the Canadian public.

(11) Periodically to publish information on the financial position and operations of the company.

(12) To give appropriate attention and support to recognized national objectives and established government programs designed to further Canada's economic development and to encourage and support Canadian institutions directed toward the intellectual, social and cultural advancement of the community.

In setting forth the foregoing principles of good corporate behaviour, I recognize that there is already widespread adherence to such principles among subsidiary companies in Canada both in spirit and in deed. However, to the extent that these principles are not already applied, subsidiary companies are urged to work purposefully and constructively toward their application, as circumstances permit.

I would like also to tell you of my intention to seek the co-operation of large and medium sized subsidiary companies in providing periodically information, on a confidential basis, relating to certain aspects of their operations and financing. In this way the government will gain a clearer insight into the contribution of Canadian subsidiaries to the Canadian economy.

Questionnaire forms providing a full explanation of the information being sought will be circulated within the next few weeks. I hope that prompt and careful attention will be given this request for information.

Thank you for your co-operation.

Yours sincerely,
Robert H. Winters.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 1, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

CONSUMER CREDIT

First report of special joint committee on consumer credit—Mr. Basford.

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—TABLING OF AIDE MEMOIRE FROM FRANCE

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I wish to table a copy of an aide memoire from the government of France to the government of Canada dated March 29. This copy is in French. The English translation will be tabled before one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document to which he has referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

CANADA CORPORATION ACT

FILING OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS BY SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. COMPANIES

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-163, to amend the Canada Corporations Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, the statements made yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) on Canada subsidiaries of American firms were in perfect accord with the spirit of this bill which had been put on the order paper of the house last Wednesday.

This bill was prompted by the effects of the American guide lines on the Canadian economy. Its purpose is to amend the Canada Corporations Act and to require Canadian subsidiaries of American firms to submit a financial report annually, which report will be examined and will show their financial operations.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—SUGGESTED INEFFECTIVENESS OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to report on the discussions he had yesterday with our high commissioner to the United Kingdom, and whether there is any basis in fact for the report which came over television that as far as the embargo against Rhodesia is concerned it has proven to be only 50 per cent effective, and that if there is to be any effective action further steps will have to be taken.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in discussing this matter with the high commissioner we naturally went into the effectiveness of the economic measures against Rhodesia. The high commissioner is chairman of the economic sanctions committee which was set up at Lagos, and that committee is to meet in London next week. But we have no information which would justify any percentage figure of effectiveness.

We did not discuss any further steps to be taken. That will have to be considered by the committee itself and by the governments concerned, although we did mention the possibility of United Nations action in the security council, under chapter 7, because that has been indicated by one or two members of the commonwealth as being the next step if the economic measures now being taken are not satisfactory.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there any basis in fact for the reports that have come out that so far as the present embargos are concerned they have not been effective in achieving the objectives that were in mind at the time they were imposed?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, they certainly have not been effective as of this moment, but we should not accept the conclusion that they will not be ultimately effective to accomplish the purposes we had in mind at the Lagos conference.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

CYPRUS—ARREST OF FOUR CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would the minister tell us whether it is true that four Canadians have been arrested in Cyprus and whether the Canadian government has investigated or will investigate in this connection?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are looking into the matter at present and I might have something to say Monday or Tuesday at the committee on external affairs.

[English]

TRADE

CONTINUED FREE ENTRY OF CANADIAN GOODS INTO U.K. MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the re-election of the Labour government in Great Britain, about which I hope the Prime Minister has sent congratulations to Prime Minister Wilson, and in view of the fact that General de Gaulle has apparently removed France's objections to Britain making an application for entry into the European common market, I want to ask the Prime Minister if the Canadian government is making any strong representation to Great Britain in order to safeguard Canada's traditional free entry into the British market for wheat and other primary products, prior to Great Britain beginning negotiations for entry into the common market.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. We have not made what my hon. friend calls any strong representations to the British government on this matter in one way or another, because I do not feel there has been any change in the European situation which would require representations on our part, although no doubt we will be discussing this matter with Prime Minister Wilson and his new middle of the road government from time to time.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, has the Prime Minister given any thought to having the Minister of Trade and Commerce visit Great Britain prior to the beginning of any negotiations for entry into the European common market, in order to protect Canada's interests in the event of that happening?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if there were any negotiations of that kind in the offing certainly we would wish to make our views known to the governments concerned, the United Kingdom and other governments, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be a very good minister for that purpose.

FINANCE

DECREASE IN MONEY SUPPLY BY BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Does the announcement yesterday that the Bank of Canada decreased the total money supply in Canada by $62 million for the past week indicate the policy of the government to deal with the inflationary tendency, which the minister emphasized so much in his budget presentation?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the house that the policies being followed by the Bank of Canada and by the government of Canada are thoroughly consistent with each other.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC—REQUEST TO BREWERIES TO DESTROY BEER STOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Following representations, would the minister inform the house whether the government or his department intends to request other breweries in the Quebec area to dump existing stocks of beer?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, the report to that effect is without foundation. There is no intention to ask any other brewery to take that course of action.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—CONSTRUCTION OF HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he inform the house on what date the excavating work of the Cité des Ondes in Montreal will start?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Before long, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us also when work will start on the C.B.C. building in Montreal?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will be able to say something about this before the Easter adjournment.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CHANGE DESIGNATION OF SHORE ESTABLISHMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister advise the house whether the government now is planning to drop from such great shore establishments as Stadacona and Shearwater the prefix "HMCS" and replace it with "CFB", and if so when this might take place.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

EXPO '67

USE BY CITY OF EDMONTON OF "KLONDIKE" THEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as the minister responsible for the development of northern resources. Will the minister make immediate representations to prevent Expo '67 aiding and abetting the immoral if not unlawful use by the city of Edmonton of the Klondike theme, a resource of the Yukon?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper, if it is acceptable as a question.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I reword the question. Will the minister request his officials and those in the Department of Justice to consider the feasibility of immediately commencing legal proceedings against the city of Edmonton in order to prevent that city's continued larcenous exploitation of that Yukon resource?

Mr. Speaker: As reworded, the question might be acceptable on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TURKEY—REPORTED RELIGIOUS HARASSMENT OF GREEKS IN CONSTANTINOPLE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on behalf of Canadians of Greek origin throughout the country. Would the government bring to the attention of the President and government of Turkey the serious concern of the Canadian government in respect of the mounting evidence of harassment by Turkey against the ecumenical patriarchate of Constantinople and the forbidding of the archbishop to carry on religious services in the patriarchal church in the city of Constantinople, which in itself would appear to be a serious contravention of the United Nations charter in several decrees and in respect of several agreements which have been arrived at.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussions about this matter already, and in view of the question which my right hon. friend has put this morning I will give consideration to whether it is necessary to take additional measures.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, what are the measures that have been taken so far by the minister? Has there been a protest against the interference with freedom of religion which is an integral part of the declaration of human freedoms of the United Nations? Has there been a complaint by Canada, or what is the nature of the action taken so far?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have had discussions with representatives of the government of Turkey on a number of matters including purported violations of religious freedoms. I have just had handed to me the telegram in question. I will examine it and if I feel the discussions we have already had have not gone as far as the suggestions in the requests now being made, I shall give consideration to further action.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour, asking him whether he can tell us what progress, if any, is being made in the resumed negotiations between the parties to the trucking strike.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I received a report just before I came into the house to the effect that the parties put in a long work day together yesterday but have nothing really to report except some progress.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN GROUND SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in relation to his responsibilities with the Department of Transport. In view of the substantial profit just reported by Air Canada, will he make immediate representations to Air Canada for improvements to ground services?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a question of a general nature which should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Grafftey: My question, I know, was out of order and I am not going to reword it. However, I think it would be unfortunate if I left the wrong impression. The general import of my question related to an improvement in the ground services, namely telephone reservations, baggage service and that sort of thing. I do not want to be responsible for confusion by having a general question of that nature remaining on the record. I will put my question on the order paper.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

PROPOSED MOVE OF OFFICE FROM MONCTON TO HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the proposed minister of the new manpower department in respect of this matter of the relocation of manpower offices in Halifax rather than Moncton, as announced the other day. When is a decision going to be made in this regard, will every opportunity be given for representations, and will the minister make certain that all plans in Halifax are held in abeyance while this matter is being reconsidered?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no decision will be reached until after the Easter holiday, and I hope during that time everyone will have an opportunity to make representations.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I thank the minister for his answer. Will he also make sure that the bilingual nature of this office and what that means to the entire New Brunswick Acadian community is taken into consideration?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we shall try to take all elements involved in this problem into consideration.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): May I ask a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert. Having been born in Moncton and having moved to Halifax at the earliest possible date, when I was ten days old, will the minister take into account the superior advantages of Halifax for a regional office? There are substantial numbers in Nova Scotia who speak other languages besides English.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister will take these representations into consideration.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORT ON DOCUMENTS SEIZED FROM SEAFARERS' UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that Inspector E. Carriere of the R.C.M.P. in Montreal advises that the investigation of the documents seized from the Seafarers' International Union was completed over ten days ago and a report forwarded to Commissioner McLelland of the R.C.M.P. in Ottawa, will the minister inform the house when he expects to be able to announce the cabinet decision in respect of this report?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I neither confirm nor deny the assertations made by the hon. member. I am sure he understands that investigations frequently involve something more than an investigation of documents.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

HAMILTON—ASSISTANCE TO FORMER STUDEBAKER EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Willian Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as minister of manpower. Is the government prepared to give any financial assistance to the more than 300 men still unemployed as a result of the closing of the Studebaker plant at Hamilton?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think those unemployed men from the Studebaker plant are entitled to supplementary unemployment benefits under the SUB plan. We have reached no decision as far as TAB is concerned, but this matter has been submitted to the appropriate committee. We are not yet certain whether this assistance can be provided under the regulations of TAB.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is something going to be done fairly soon to help these men?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to help these men at this time through our N.E.S. What they need mainly are jobs, and that is what we are trying to accomplish.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT RESPECTING BREATHALIZER TESTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Justice. On January 27 I asked him the following question:

> Would the government give consideration to amending the Criminal Code so that breathalizer tests can be made mandatory?

I now ask the minister whether he would indicate to the house if this decision will be reached in time to be made public at the Canadian Highway Safety Council convention which is meeting in Calgary during the first week of May.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member that assurance.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED DELETION OF "ROYAL" FROM TITLE OF BASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister and ask whether steps are now being taken to change the name of Royal Canadian Air Force bases to something which will not contain the word "royal".

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC WORKS

EFFECT ON LOCAL PROJECTS OF BUDGET CUT-BACK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the cut-back in government projects announced in the budget, when are members likely to know the fate of planned local projects of the department?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I would hope, Mr. Speaker, in the next few days. I shall try to do it before the Easter recess.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INVITATION TO PRINCE CHARLES TO PRESIDE OVER YOUTH PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. On January 31 he said he would look into this matter. Can he now advise the house of the progress of discussions or arrangements regarding the very desirable possibility of Prince Charles opening the centennial youth parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not having previously informed my hon. friend of the results of my looking into this matter. I am still looking into it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—JOB PREFERENCE FOR EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask whether he is in a position today to provide any information with regard to the question I posed yesterday.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do appreciate and share the concern of the hon. member in regard to this matter, but I have to remind him that we have now reached the last stage of the closing down of the naval supply depot at Sydney. As of today the establishment ceases to exist. We must now dispose of the material in use by the staff. For this purpose the Commodore Superintendent, Atlantic coast is sending to Sydney from Halifax 12 hand picked men to perform the operation. They will assume custody of the material, remove it to Halifax, transfer the accounts, later close the accounts, submit final reports and be available to answer to the auditors. I hope this answer is satisfactory to the hon. member.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister realize that the answer he has given is the original question?

Mr. Benson: No, it is not.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COURT DECISION RESPECTING PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE

On the orders of the day.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Skeena asked a question with reference to the Indian Walter Johnson and the medicine chest case. I may tell them that I have instructed my officers to get in touch with Mr. Johnson and ask him whether he is desirous of taking an appeal to the Supreme Court, and if so we will finance that appeal as we have in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question following the answer the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources gave a moment ago. I thank him for his assurance that his department is prepared to underwrite an appeal if the native Indians desire to make it. May I ask the minister, are we to take this decision by his department as meaning that they have decided not to supply health services to the native Indian population, or is the minister merely offering to meet these appeal costs while a decision is being arrived at?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how to answer that question, because I think the effect of a decision in favour of Walter Johnson in Saskatchewan would have put a requirement upon the provincial government rather than ourselves. I should like, if I may, to take the hon. member's question as notice, and I might give a reply on Monday.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ARREST OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEE IN CONNECTION WITH HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the arrest this morning by the R.C.M.P of an employee of the federal government on charges of illegally accepting some $33,000 in connection with securing hospital construction grants, I wonder whether the minister could tell us if any others are involved in this particular case and whether this situation is now under control.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that this is not the type of question that should be asked at this time.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I think will be in order, but you can watch me carefully to see that it is. I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the fact that charges were laid today is indicative of a wider investigation into the awarding of hospital grants.

Mr. Speaker: It would be difficult to allow the second question after having refused the first.

[Later:]

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether any investigation is under way in his department in respect to the improper acceptance of moneys for the improper activities of employees in the awarding of hospital construction grants.

Mr. MacEachen: This matter is being investigated in the proper way.

Mr. Nielsen: I am not raising the issue that is before the court. I am asking the minister if any investigation is under way in his department in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to prevent the minister from answering that question, but it seems to me it was answered the first time the hon. member asked the question.

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Mr. Speaker—I will not sit down at the behest of hon. members opposite. This is a question on which I believe all members are entitled to information. It is a very simple question. Would the minister inform us whether there is in fact an investigation under way in his department with respect to the matters I referred to? Yes, or no.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I said earlier that an investigation had been undertaken some time ago in the proper way, which resulted in the action that is being taken in the courts, which has resulted in removing any possibility that similar incidents can occur in the future.

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CORRECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): On Monday last I addressed a question to the Solicitor General about the prospects of speeding up the work of the committee on corrections so that we could undertake a review and reform of the Criminal Code. Now that he has met with the committee, I wonder if we could have a date when we might expect this report to be forthcoming.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): As promised, Mr. Speaker, I did raise the matter referred to by the hon. member with the chairman of the committee. Another meeting is scheduled for April 14, when the matter will be discussed again.

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

INSTRUCTIONS TO BANKS TO REFUSE LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance a question of which I gave him notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could he tell us if directives were issued by his department to chartered banks asking them to refuse to grant loans to municipalities for winter works?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, would the future minister of manpower make an investigation to find out if the chartered banks took that decision themselves or if they received order to that effect from a federal or provincial authority?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot see what kind of authority in that field the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration could have on banks.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, it is about the winter works that the banks are now refusing to grant loans to complete or extend—

[English]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE AND AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is any basis for the view generally held that a dominion-provincial conference is to be called for June. Have any indications gone out? Would the Prime Minister say what particular matters he has in mind at the moment for consideration at the conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): At the last federal-provincial conference it was agreed informally that the next conference would be held early in June of this year in Victoria, British Columbia. We are in the process now of exchanging views as to the exact date. It will probably be within the first fortnight of June, and it is too early to say what the agenda will be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the date June 2, and has there been any indication by the Prime Minister of the particular subject matters considered to be of pre-eminent importance at this conference?

Mr. Pearson: June 2 was one date suggested, and if that is agreeable to all provincial premiers it would be agreeable to the federal government. I am not in a position now to indicate any particular subject, but perhaps I will be before long.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us if the project of a royal commission on organized crime in Canada will be discussed at that federal-provincial conference?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: I should think that might be one of the subjects, unless there is a meeting of provincial attorneys general with the federal Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General beforehand.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—PROVISION OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL AND HOSPITAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what progress he has made in supplying medical and hospital services for South Viet Nam, either for the participants in the war or for the civilian population. What is the extent of that assistance?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the government's interest in providing assistance for the civilian population, which of course would be our interest as my hon. friend knows, there are two projects in being. The project under the direction of Dr. Gingras has not yet been effective because the authorities in South Viet Nam have not yet, in answer to our urgent requests, put at our disposal the facilities which would be essential for the program.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, considering the recent proposals of the Canadian Association for Adult Education, and in particular the recent announcement of a forthcoming provincial conference on education, is the government contemplating the establishment of a federal office of education?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a question relating to general policy which cannot be considered urgent to the extent that the question should be allowed at this time.

[Mr. Pearson.]

[Later:]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government in the full spirit of co-operative federalism has received an invitation for representatives from any federal departments to attend the interprovincial conference announced by the education ministers of Ontario and Quebec, and if so, what federal departments will be represented at the conference?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that. I do not think such invitation has been received, though I do recall the Minister of Education of the province of Ontario indicating that federal representation would be useful at that conference. I shall be glad to look into this.

Mr. Stanbury: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If such an invitation is forthcoming, will the government seek at that conference, or at the federal provincial conference in June, appreciation of the need for a federal office of education—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanbury: —which does not interfere with but assists the provinces in attainments of national objectives in education?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second part of the question is hypothetical.

FOOD AND DRUGS

INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the very important question of the high cost of drugs is being referred to a special committee on food and drugs, can he say whether that committee will be formally organized before the Easter recess?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is my expectation that an organizational meeting might be held next week.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in order to comply with the traditional spirit of this day, and in view of the fact that this is related to foreign affairs, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is there any truth in the rumour that there is a movement on foot in the Liberal caucus to trade the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) for the hon. member for Kootenay West?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that any party in this house would give careful and due consideration to such a transfer.

COMBINES

NEWSPRINT—INVESTIGATION INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Several weeks ago I asked if his department was looking into the uniform and large increase in the price of newsprint announced by all plants. He said he would look into the question. I asked him whether this was within the province of the anti-combines legislation. I wonder if he has any report to make.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have referred the question to the director of investigation and research. I must make the same answer as has previously been made in these cases; that I am not in a position to say whether or not an investigation is going on. I may assure the hon. member that if the director reached the conclusion that the facts were such that an investigation was warranted, he would carry out his responsibilities.

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

DISPUTE RESPECTING RESEARCH WORKERS WITHIN COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) based on the program "Aujourd'hui" broadcast by the C.B.C. last night

Is the Prime Minister aware of the major dispute between the researchers of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and the discrimination practised against French Canadian researchers and would he agree to have an inquiry made in that connection?

Mr. Speaker: Once again, this is a rather general question which hardly seems urgent, and I would suggest that the hon. member put it on the order paper.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Two weeks ago yesterday the Secretary of State for External Affairs who was Acting Prime Minister for that day, in response to a question of mine said we could expect the legislation respecting collective bargaining in the federal civil service soon. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the legislation will be on the order paper before Easter? If not, how soon may we expect it?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be a resolution on the order paper before the Easter recess, and I hope this will be legislation which we can reach very quickly after that Easter recess.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT CONVENTION OF COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give the house the assurance that he would have a representative of the government attend the Canadian Highway Safety Council convention in Calgary in the first week in May?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think, Mr. Speaker, at a conference of this importance there should be an official representative from the government. I think there will be. No doubt the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) will want to be there too.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of

Inquiries of the Ministry

National Health and Welfare arising out of a short discussion that took place when we were considering the final supplementary estimates of his department. I raised the matter of an increase in the level of hospital construction grants, and I asked the minister to give us some information on this question. I wonder if the minister is in a position to give the house any information as to where this matter stands at the present time.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the conference of health ministers last January I announced that the hospital construction grants would be continued at the present levels for an additional two years, until 1970. It is not the intention of the government to recommend an increase in the level, although the period has been extended for an additional two years.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DUTY ON CAR MADE IN CANADA, BOUGHT IN U.S. AND RETURNED TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask him whether an order or directive has been issued in his department to the effect that a Canadian car produced in Canada and shipped to the United States by reason of the automobile agreement, then purchased in the United States by a Canadian and brought back to Canada is not subject to tariff in any way?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is not the case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is not the case?

Mr. Benson: Automobiles imported from the United States by individual Canadians, regardless of their source of manufacture, would be dutiable on coming into Canada. Individuals may not import new cars without paying duty. Also there is an absolute prohibition against the importing of used cars except in very special circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am talking about new cars.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not the case that in this regard Canada is the only country imposing a duty on goods manufactured in this country?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is not in order.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Duty is paid on goods made in Canada which are shipped to the United States and brought back to Canada.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, March 29, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp, (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday evening I called the presentation of the Minister of Finance, which we are again debating today, a dead end budget. I repeat that, Mr. Speaker. It has no goals or directions.

This budget does little to control inflation. It virtually ignores the country's international payments deficit. It leaves many injustices uncorrected. It does nothing for the forgotten pensioners. It maintains mountains of paper work for the bureaucracy. It will reduce incentives, and it does nothing to develop the long term goals of the country's destiny.

This is a bureaucratic budget which is confusing, full of paper forms and even paper clips, one might say. It starts with the assumption that you can get away with anything if you confuse the people and if you confuse business enough. In other words, Mr. Speaker, and I am only interjecting this in a facetious manner, you can play any tune on the piano if you hum loudly enough.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have to have a piano.

Mr. Monteith: Sir, I believe this is a budget involving economic myopia. Only a few short months ago we were in an election campaign. We heard many promises from the present leaders on the government benches. They said "Give us a majority and we shall do wonders".

I would remind these hon. gentlemen of a few of those promises. I would ask the Minister of Finance what provision has been made for the skating rink in Vancouver. What about the $1 million for Digby harbour, or the millions more promised for housing? What provision has been made for the causeways, or I suppose now one might say "pause ways"? What about the $25 million for Cape Breton coal, the dams which have been promised all over the country, the undertaking to provide home mail delivery in small towns, the study of fish which was to be made in Newfoundland, or the $100 million promised for road building in the Yukon—a promise which, incidentally, did not have the effect desired by the government on election day? These are all things which were promised but for which I see no provision made.

• (11:50 a.m.)

I would be lax in my duty, I feel, if I did not congratulate the minister on his success in the dumping of his predecessor's budget items and the complete reversal of earlier policies both good and bad. "Troubled Canada", Mr. Gordon wrote. "Troubled Walter", Mr. Sharp says. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) lowered income taxes. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) raised them. The hon. member for Davenport put an 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery. The Minister of Finance is timidly removing it. The hon. member for Davenport made much of his billion dollar Canada Development Corporation, which was to have done wonders. The Minister of Finance has forgotten all about it. In fact I suggest Mr. Sharp has forgotten all about Mr. Gordon. In less than a year we have seen a complete switch-round in Liberal direction. We are substituting for the 60 days of decision the present minister's stiletto and 365 days of incision.

I should like to put on record a few extracts to show what sections of the press think about this budget. First I would quote from an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of March 30:

> Mr. Sharp's budget is a shotgun affair which applies to the whole country without regard to regional differences. It ignores the fact that while some regions, such as Ontario have been experiencing a boom verging on inflation, the good times have hardly touched the maritimes and eastern Quebec, where unemployment rates remain far higher than in central Canada. In these depressed areas, the anti-inflation budget could be a recession one.

Then I would quote one or two passages from Le Devoir by Mr. Claude Ryan. I do not think I should burden the house with my French; I have had the passages translated into English and I will read them in English.

> While there should be no hesitation in accepting Mr. Sharp's basic outlook in this connection we may well ask ourselves, however, if he has indeed chosen the proper means for the realization of his purposes.

In the case of the federal government we should have been able to contemplate a severe reduction not only of spending in respect of construction, but also of the entire spending estimates. Instead of that Mr. Sharp was content to announce a very inconsequential 10 per cent cut in Ottawa's building program. A reduction of approximately $35 millions in total expenses totalling nearly $9 billion is obviously but a drop in the ocean. It may well be wondered what actual effect such a timid move will have on the decisions of other governments as well as on the actual performance of the economy generally. If the federal government really had wanted to set an example it has proceeded very timidly indeed.

Again:

> They take no account whatever either of the variety of capital investment problems as they apply to various types of industry nor of the different levels of industrial development as achieved by one area as opposed to another.

And here is an interesting passage:

> A year ago the floodgates had been thrown wide open to allow for free play of individual initiative. Since the people were to be called upon to vote they had to be treated as pleasantly as possible. One year later we find ourselves, once again, in the position in which we were before Mr. Gordon's election budget. Whatever Mr. Sharp may say, this is a difference which cannot be explained away entirely by changes in economic circumstances. Its explanation must be looked for, to some extent, in the opportunism of the party in power. If we are now returning to soundly based austerity it is simply because there is no fear of early elections.

Incidentally I think I should put on record the concluding sentence in this editorial:

> Unfortunately, nobody thought of encouraging Canadians to invest in their own future, which is perhaps driving short term caution a little far.

These two editorials give a concise picture of how inept this budget really is. I claim it is leading Canada down the proverbial garden path. I would commend the minister on accepting at least a few elements of the Progressive Conservative party's program. Naturally it is heartening to any political party to find its opponents adopting some of its "policies for people." I refer to the announcement by the Minister of Agriculture offering $4 per hundredweight for industrial milk, which of course was in our program. I refer also to the decision to treat potash solution mining in the same way as any other type of mining for tax purposes. This too was one of our policies. But why did it take so long? Now that parliament has a new senator from that province the government will be able to keep in touch with the needs of the people out there. This is an important decision for Saskatchewan.

The 11 per cent sales tax has now been removed from certain production machinery, jigs and moulds, and notice has been given that in one or two years from now it will be reduced and finally eliminated in respect of all production machinery. We hope the minister lives up to this budget undertaking better than his party has lived up to its campaign promises. We deplore the fact that the minister has not gone further in this direction, as our party has suggested.

The president of the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association of Canada emphasized the seriousness of this tax in a statement reported in yesterday's Globe and Mail. His industry is being told to compete with the United States giants which are not required to pay a comparable sales tax. Not only do Canadian firms have to meet competition from these bigger, low cost United States firms, but they have to pay an 11 per cent tax as well. The Minister of Industry told them "Have courage to expand." The manufacturers wanted to know why the Minister of Industry had not talked to the Minister of Finance. As the president of the manufacturers association said in the Globe and Mail: "When a government advocates free trade and then does something like this, you just wonder where the brains are."

• (12:00 noon)

We have pressed for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building machinery, supplies and materials. In fact, we were firmly against it from its inception. The minister has said that in the course of a year or two this tax will be wiped out so far as machinery and equipment are concerned. I ask, why not now? His answer, of course, may be twofold, first, that he needs the money and, second, that he is seeking to delay orders for machinery and equipment for a period of time until demand slackens.

I believe the minister and the government have gone about this whole thing backwards. How in the world can the demand be satisfied if the means of producing for that demand are going to be delayed and delayed? I feel encouragement should be given to industry to provide the required facilities to produce so that the demand can be satisfied. I do not believe that the required production facilities needed across Canada should be delayed. We do not want to set this country back. We want to see the demand satisfied.

The minister has been trying to squeeze down the demand and ignores the fact that the government should be encouraging production on the supply side of things. The Minister has pretended that he has been dealing with inflation while he has only been monkeying around with the economy, which in turn will be self-defeating.

Let me now turn to the items in the budget which are prominent by their absence. Why did the minister not discuss the auto parts agreement when his predecessor boasted so proudly of it only last year?

Mr. Sharp: Because it is on the Order Paper.

Mr. Monteith: We welcome the jobs the agreement may provide but we are concerned that a weak government here in Ottawa will do nothing to stand up for this country's interests. How much of that $50 million in tariff reductions have Canadians received in lower car prices? How are our parts manufacturers getting along? Why are we not told? There is plenty to be discussed in the auto agreement but I think the government does not want to discuss it.

This is quite a different song from last October and November when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and various other ministers were falling all over themselves with boastful praises. We have heard the good part but now we are hearing the other side. There are many things the government should have done. We had hoped for something for our old age pensioners, and I suggest that the government's flippancy in this respect is a shame and a disgrace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: Recently the Senate report on aging said that a minimum of $1,260 annually is what is required for a single person to subsist. We asked for $100 monthly. As I mentioned the other day, the spiralling inflation makes the old age pension of $75 worth around $70 now and it will be worth a lot less a year from now.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised that more would be paid but that there would be strings attached. On October 15 he said in a C.B.C. broadcast:

> Anybody who has only $75 from the state, and no other source of income, and needs more, even if it's $125—more than $100—should be in a position to get it . . . . They will get it, and this will be done through a national assistance program worked out by the federal government with the provinces.

I would remind the house that this involves returning to the means test, but nevertheless the government has done nothing. Nothing has been done in this budget and, just as the auto parts manufacturers asked the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) to talk to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), I suggest that the Prime Minister talk to the Minister of Finance. The older people of this land are still waiting. Does the government care? I say no, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are only four ministers in the house now.

Mr. Monteith: Then there are other items like the sales tax on drugs. We promised to remove it. Last year the former minister of finance said he was not acting on it because the Special Committee on Food and Drugs was studying the situation. This year the present minister says that the committee is still studying it but if the committee recommends removal of the tax the government will act. I have never heard such nonsense, Mr. Speaker, asking the committee to make a recommendation and telling it beforehand the effect of anything it might say. We wish the minister would follow the same policy with respect to the Economic Council's program for greater productivity.

There are some temporary measures in the budget. There are the changes in the capital cost allowances but they really mean very little in the over-all picture. They are going to frustrate and confuse immeasurably the plans of the small businessman. I know, having been an auditor for this type of client for many years.

They are also going to hurt the farmer. Yet over all they will do little to change the direction of the economy. Capital cost allowance changes are not going to affect the expansion plans of several large corporations. I think I should mention one or two such as the Steel Company of Canada, General Motors, and MacMillan Bloedell and Powell River. This type of corporation is not going to let depreciation changes affect its plans for the future. If there is any curtailment we believe that it will merely put off still further the day when consumer demand can be met.

The income tax changes mean greater taxes for many Canadians, probably the best proof we have that the government is not going to try for a majority this year. Last year was rather obvious—taxes down, an election. Then the Canada Pension Plan came in and wiped out the difference. Now taxes are up—certainly no election.

To me the income tax changes are meaningless. They do assist the minister in his financing but the amounts involved are not going to mean anything. Those who are gaining some minor benefits are going to spend the extra few cents a week, which is all it is going to amount to. Those who are receiving $25,000 and over are not going to let an extra $580 in tax deter them from buying a new car or anything else they may wish. In fact, the $580 could well be savings that would have been reinvested in Canada's future by people in this category. A married person with two children, earning $10,000 a year is going to pay something like $119 extra tax. Here again this is not really going to affect inflation, but we wonder why wage earners making $5,000 and up are being forced to pay more.

There is only one method to meet the problem of inflation and that is to increase supply to meet the demand. Mr. Speaker, if you really want to find something to challenge the willing, scare the daring and frighten the weak, you must try the minister's refundable tax on cash profits. It is not what it looks like; it looks like what it is not. I suggest the minister must have been reading Abe Lincoln when he thought that one up and he got carried away. Lincoln said:

> Towering genius disdains a beaten path. It seeks regions hitherto unexplored.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, we see bureaucracy at work. The government is presuming to decide what is good for business and thinks it can do it better than business can decide for itself. I do not believe this is the case.

Let us just examine this 5 per cent refundable tax. Just what does this gimmick mean? I claim it is useless, impractical, unfair and unlikely to achieve the desired results. It is really nothing more than a forced loan to the government so that it can borrow money at 5 per cent, below the current market rate.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Inflation is expected to continue this year and the tax, therefore, is really a partial confiscation of capital, taken from business now and to be paid back when the dollars are worth less. It will be imposed on companies with no capital spending programs, and it is even possible to doubt that its real purpose is as an anti-inflationary measure. It will apply to any taxpaying corporation including banks, trust companies and companies in the service industry which have virtually no capital spending program. Therefore the tax cannot possibly curtail capital spending so far as these particular companies are concerned. It means an unfair burden on companies engaged in the exploration for natural resources as it includes depletion allowances in its tax base. This certainly is a field of endeavour which we do not want to curtail.

The minister said that this tax would affect only some 20 per cent of the major companies. I should like to quote from an article in the Financial Post of April 2, this week's issue. It is by Clyde Baxter and reads:

> Sharp and his officials are confident most companies are already so advanced in their 1966 planning, and even in many cases for the next year, too, that the great majority will go ahead despite the new regulations.

I think that quotation sets out the whole thing in a nutshell. It is a personal opinion, but I would agree with Mr. Baxter. Most companies of any size have made plans for one, two, three, or more years in advance. Does the minister think for one minute that these large corporations from which he is going to take this refundable tax are going to cease their modernizing plans because of this tax? Surely the minister realizes that large corporations cannot operate that way. Just what is going to happen? Their own money in the form of this tax is going to lie dormant in the minister's hands while they go out to borrow funds to complete their modernizing requirements. It is going to cost them more; they are going to pay more than the five per cent which the minister is going to pay them. Who is going to pay the cost of that extra interest? Naturally, the consumer. It is going to increase the cost of living. It is going to be reflected right down to the consumer level. This again is one of those things that is going to make our industry and particularly our larger industry less competitive both in our foreign markets and in our domestic market.

International companies are going to be tempted to leave funds overseas rather than repatriate them. I could mention a few such as Hiram Walker, Distillers Corporation, Seagram Limited, Moore Corporation, and Massey-Ferguson. The only funds they may wish to bring back to Canada are those sufficient to pay dividends. Why would they bring home funds only to have to pay five per cent of them to the government and receive only five per cent interest? I might point out at this stage that the minister is going to get needed funds at five per cent interest and only yesterday he sold government of Canada treasury bills at a long time high interest rate. June 30 maturities averaged 5.06 per cent and one year ago they were at 3.62 per cent; September 30 maturities cost the government 5.30 per cent and a year ago they were 3.73 per cent. This shows how our money is going; it is becoming more expensive. Here is an opportunity for the minister to get money from these companies at five per cent when on the current market he is paying considerably more. These are forced loans that he is going to impose on quite a few of these larger corporations.

[Mr. Monteith.]

I know of one company which has a capital expenditure program of over $100 million which was decided upon two years ago. It is engaged largely in export. Will this move by the minister stop it from completing this program? Will it help them to know that in 1968 there will be no 11 per cent tax on machinery and equipment? Will it help the company to take five per cent of their surplus cash and force them into the market to borrow? The minister is keeping the production costs of this company higher than is necessary in two ways. They are going to have to pay the tax on their new machinery and equipment because they cannot stop in midstream. They are also going to have to pay to the department their five per cent refundable tax and probably borrow at a higher rate of interest to complete their expansion program. This can only increase their cost of production.

Let us look at the consequences of the increased cost of production, namely, increased prices and an increased cost of living to the average Canadian. Let us look at what the government is itself doing. It is reducing its expenditures by something like $35 million. Note that, Mr. Speaker, $35 million out of approximately $9 billion in total federal spending, an infinitesimal percentage. If it believes seriously that it wants to delay construction and expansion in industry, why does it not act more forcibly in its own sphere of activity? The government should take a hard line in curtailing its own spending. Why does it not reduce these budgetary figures? Goodness knows, there are enough areas. I suggest we could wipe out the entire Department of Industry. The government is suggesting that private industry should reduce expenditures but certainly it is not acting responsibly itself in this respect. It is failing to restrain expenditure as it expects the private sectors of our economy to do. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is typical bureaucratic mentality as exemplified by this Liberal government.

The minister has paid lip service to the Economic Council of Canada. He did this on more than one occasion in his budget speech but then proceeded to act contrary to their advice. He admits this himself. I would like to refer to one sentence in a column by Mr. Fraser Robertson in the Globe and Mail of March 31:

> But Mr. Sharp's opinion of the Economic Council is only so-so. He takes from its report the parts he likes, rejects what he does not like, in the manner of a child fussing with its dinner.

I should like to quote a few words from the report of the Bank of Canada. The minister answered a question this morning. I am paraphrasing but I think it was to the effect that the Bank of Canada and the minister are in accord on policies. I do not think this can be accepted.

Mr. Sharp: Not like the old days.

Mr. Churchill: There is nobody here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All the minister's colleagues have left.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to read one or two passages from the report of the Bank of Canada for the year 1965. I think I should start by reading the first sentence:

> As the economy moved toward the completion of its fifth year of expansion,—

Even the minister is agreeing that the expansion did commence back in the days of the previous government. He is admitting that too. On the hustings during the last election campaign you never would have heard these words out of the mouths of the ministers of the government.

• (12:20 p.m.)

I think the following paragraph from page 3 of the Bank of Canada annual report for the year 1965 is very important. It states:

> The output of the economy in 1965 could have been even higher if our productivity performance had been better. The productivity gains which accompanied the reduction in the margin of unused resources over the past year or so have been disappointing.

This next sentence is important.

> This underlines the need for emphasis on policies bearing on "the supply side" of the economy which enhance our ability to produce. It is also the case that unemployment is still high in some areas, and output would be greater if the remaining pockets of unused resources were drawn into employment.

At page 11 of the same report the following is stated:

> While we must continue to make the best arrangements we can for access to foreign capital to protect ourselves against the possible need for difficult and concentrated adjustments, I believe that we should be aiming at a pattern of economic growth which, while providing for full utilization of our resources, involves reduced dependence on net capital inflows. This does not mean that we should adopt inward-looking attitudes. On the contrary it means that we must attach great importance to increasing our ability to compete effectively with foreign producers both in other countries and in Canada. It means that we should be increasingly concerned with maximizing our productivity and industrial efficiency, with up-grading our labour and management skills, and with keeping our costs and prices in line.

This can only be done by concentrating our efforts on satisfying the demand and by concentrating on the supply side, as the governor of the Bank of Canada has said.

I should also like to quote from a pamphlet entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada, Outlook 1966" published by the authority of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters). There are one or two statements of interest in this pamphlet. I should like to quote from page 7:

> Within the goods producing industries the greatest additional strength appears in the resource based forest and minerals industries where outlays are expected to increase by one-third compared with the 14 per cent rise recorded last year. Of particular significance are the programs currently planned by the mining industry. These involve a doubling of expenditures in iron mines and a similar increase in outlays for potash mines. In addition, spending for facilities for non-ferrous metal mines is expected to rise by about 50 per cent. The added strength in the forest based industries is entirely the result of a further substantial expansion of investment for pulp and paper mills, involving outlays some $120 million greater than those of 1965.

Does the minister want to stop this? These industries help our foreign exchange position; they provide employment and expansion. Expansion means efficiency which in turn means that these companies will then be able to compete in world markets. Surely we want our export industries to be able to compete efficiently in order that we can keep our costs down, which in turn will help our own citizens.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has pointed out that new construction will increase by 12 per cent to reach a level of $9.2 billion and that expenditures for the acquisition of new machinery and equipment will increase by 17 per cent to reach a level of $5.4 billion. If the Minister of Finance wants to lower costs and wants to put the brake on inflation he should remove the 11 per cent tax now so that these companies will not have to pay the 11 per cent on new equipment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: The 11 per cent tax will only increase the cost of production, and the consumer will have to pay that increase.

In British Columbia a further rapid advance in capital spending for new pulp and paper projects and power development is anticipated. Incidentally, I should point out also that outlays for repair of existing machinery and the purchase of new equipment are expected to amount in total to $7.5 billion. Most of this repair work will be subject to the 11 per cent tax and repairs cannot be held up until its removal. If we take off that tax now the cost of production can be held down.

In Quebec the major advances in capital spending will occur in the manufacturing and commercial services sectors. Within the manufacturing group the major developments contributing strength are large increases in outlays in the pulp and paper and the primary metals industries.

I suggest we want to create supply to satisfy demand. One can only curtail inflation in this way. This is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has to say in this regard:

> While in the short run adding to the strong demand and cost pressures already present in the economy, larger capital spending programs, once completed, will substantially increase Canada's productive capacity.

That can be found at page 9 of the pamphlet to which I have referred. That is exactly what we want and that is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggests will happen. He states:

> —larger capital spending programs, once completed, will substantially increase Canada's productive capacity.

The Minister of Finance is attempting to put on the brakes and I do not think this should be done. We think our choice is simple. We want to stop the cost of living from rising any further. We think the 11 per cent sales tax on machinery and equipment and building materials increases costs and hurts productivity. We think the refundable tax program is nonsense.

We suggest that we should approach our problems by expanding production, by increasing supply and not by sitting on demand. We do not want our old people to be told that there is something evil about wanting a decent pension or our young people to be told that they must not seek a better education. We do not want our wage earners to be told that they have no right to good wages or our industrialists to be told that they should shudder at the sight of their own shadows.

It is higher productivity that will put some power back into the wage earners pay envelopes, that will permit industry to pay higher wages, that will keep prices from rising and that will make Canada competitive in world markets. Increasing supply is the road to a higher standard of living and a greater wealth for all Canadians. The governor of the Bank of Canada has said this, the Economic Council has said this and the Department of Trade and Commerce has said this. Why does the Minister of Finance not realize that this is the fact?

We have no confidence in this budget, Mr. Speaker, in that we do not believe it will meet the needs of Canada and its people. Therefore I move:

> That all the words after 'that' be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
>
> That the policies of this government have failed to deal constructively and effectively with major national problems facing Canada which require action now to provide policies for adequate incentives to increase productivity, stimulate export trade, to meet the serious and increasing imbalance of international payments, to maintain price stability, and to promote orderly and equitable development and expansion in all areas in the nation.

Mr. Speaker, we are tired of the "little Canada" approach. This is a big land crying out for development. We will never have it if we are afraid.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member accept a question? Is there at least one good thing in the budget?

Mr. Monteith: Yes, taking off the tax on the potash mines.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The member who asked the question does not know what potash is.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my recollection our present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is the sixth Minister of Finance whose budget I have had occasion to deal with in this chamber. Ministers of this government seem to have a rather short, if not merry, life, a sort of mayfly life, and we must make the most of this minister while we have him. I have always found that budgets are revealing not merely of the government's policies but also of the outlook on life and society of the minister. I hope the present minister will not take it amiss when I suggest that I find this budget rather grey and cautious, imbued with the spirit of ca'canny which one might expect from someone of his ancestry.

In this budget there is none of that rather engaging, shall I say, "zany" quality of bold improvisation which characterized the budget of one of his predecessors, a budget that was presented with considerable panache. I suppose at this particular juncture in the world's history the question is which of these two courses is the better. In a world which is changing like a kaleidoscope, is it better to mount the steed of enthusiasm and ride off in all directions at once or ride one which stands almost still and hardly moves in any direction? At least we can be sure that the present Minister of Finance will not ride for a fall. His danger is that he will petrify into an equestrian statue.

In light of the minister's personality, shall I say, his outlook on life, it is understandable that in the welter of conflicting advice which he no doubt has received, particularly in regard to the question of inflation or no inflation, inflationary pressures or no inflationary pressures, he should steer a careful, middle course between the bland, qualified optimism of Dr. Deutsch and the worried pessimism of Mr. Rasminsky. I have noticed that the minister seems to have come down pretty well on the side of the dangers of inflationary pressures.

I have been a bit disturbed by some voices, not particularly bright and rather simple-minded, that have been raised recently which equate the rise in the cost of living index with inflation. It is true enough that rising prices may be an indication of a general inflationary situation, but that is not necessarily so. There are indeed many other circumstances in our economy which will lead to a rise in prices rather than a general inflationary situation. We have such things, for instance, as administered prices which are set by corporations in monopoly and near-monopoly positions without very much regard to costs and with hardly any more concern than what the traffic will bear.

It is very often said that increased wages are the cause of price rises, and of course on occasion this is true; only a fool would deny it. But this is only part of the story. Very often, sir, increased wages impel the employer to adopt much more efficient methods of production and cause a drop in the unit cost of production which does not justify price increases but nevertheless causes price increases.

In my own province of British Columbia, in the principal industry of that province it is notorious that all wage increases are recouped by the employer with an additional 10 per cent or 15 per cent. It has happened repeatedly year after year, and more often than not the increase in price has taken place before the wage increase. When an employee tries to obtain an increase in wages he is really demanding a larger share of the wealth which he produces, and when employers refuse to grant him that larger share, which they do by maintaining their own profit position by increasing prices, then we get, stemming I suppose, from the wage increase a price increase.

However, Mr. Speaker, at this point there comes the question that we in this party have raised several times this session, namely, the necessity of taking some action with regard to spiralling prices. We have suggested that in co-operation with the provinces there should be a prices review board which could examine these increases, particularly in basic prices, to see whether they were justifiable. I suspect that all that would be required in many instances would be public exposure of the actual situation in any particular industry.

Of course, our minister does not take such a simpleminded view. He presents to us a much more sophisticated approach to the problem of inflation or inflationary pressures and tells us in effect that we are approaching the full utilization of our resources and consequently the danger of inflationary pressures becomes extremely severe.

There are roughly three sections of our resources. One is our natural resources; the second is the industrial plant by which those resources can be transformed into commodities, and the third is our human resources. To the best of my knowledge, neither the minister nor anyone else can tell us what our natural resources are. For one thing, they have not all been explored and for another, of course, their economic utility will depend on changing economic circumstances both in Canada and abroad.

It may be that our industrial equipment is working at full capacity or near full capacity today, but no one has suggested that it is necessarily working in the most efficient manner possible. Indeed, the minister himself in parts of his budget address made suggestions as to means of increasing productivity in our industry, which would indicate that he himself has some doubts whether Canadian industry is as productive as it should be. But there can be no question about the status of our human resources. When the minister tells us that we are approaching the full utilization of all our resources and consequently must be very concerned about the danger of inflation, he blandly ignores our 356,000 unemployed. These are the latest figures I could obtain, as at February 19, seasonally adjusted. Three and a half per cent of our total labour force are unemployed.

It would appear that the minister is prepared to dismiss this particular part of our resources, perhaps justifiably. Perhaps he takes the position that these unemployed are useless as factors of production. It may well be that because of defective education, lack of technical skills or poor physical health arising from long continued poverty, these 356,000 unemployed are actually not capable of being part of our productive force at the present time, that there is no place for them within our industrial economy, that they are in fact a burden upon the rest. To say this may very well be true. Admittedly, it is a very cold-blooded approach to regard human beings in this manner. I shall have something to say later, Mr. Speaker, about this social philosophy that impels us to so regard human beings, a social ethos which narrows man's potentiality, which confines him to the role of a producing and consuming animal. However, this is the way which, in the context of the minister's Budget, we must consider these 356,000 unemployed. We must consider them as people who are at present not valuable assets in the productive forces of our country.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Now, the minister implies this when he ignores this situation and at the same time tells us we are approaching the limit of utilization of our resources. In fact, he discards them as defective parts of the machine which, as I say, they may very well be. But, sir, I would point out that even if we set aside moral and humane considerations with regard to those who are dismissed from our active society, and I do not think we should do that, this is still a shocking, wasteful extravagance from an economic point of view and one that is simply unsupportable.

If the unemployed are unfit for the purposes of industrial society, and as I say there may very well be a case to be made out for that, the fact we have had a hard core of unemployment lasting year after year which we are apparently unable to shrink to any appreciable extent would indicate that we have this large corps of people who cannot be fitted into the industrial machinery of our modern society. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then it seems to me that obviously our task is, before we speak of the full utilization of resources, to sharpen, to polish and reshape these defective parts of our human resources so that they can be fitted into the production machine and become assets instead of remaining liabilities.

What do we find in the minister's budget? What do we find his policies portend for this reshaping process? Obviously, the most important thing in reshaping, repolishing and retooling our human resources is a vastly increased public investment in education and in technical training in order to prepare these people so that they may play their part in society, a vast public investment that would remove at least some of the conditions of abject poverty which make the possibility of these people being able to absorb an education very remote.

What do we find our government doing? The minister tells us he is going to cut his own government's spending. He is going to urge provincial and municipal governments to curtail their spending. He does this by means of exhortation and by leaving them in a rather difficult position to fulfil those functions which are largely provincial and municipal functions, education and training. For instance, he is not prepared to remove the 11 per cent sales tax to encourage and enable municipalities or school boards to increase their social capital as a basis for reshaping these presently defective units of our popultaion.

He tells us of the need for higher productivity and almost in the next breath he tells us of two steps he is taking which appear to be in the opposite direction. The minister says he is not going on with the development of the structures laboratory at the National Research Council. In the light of the tragic accident that occurred on Elgin Street yesterday I would think the folly of this type of curtailment would be underlined. In the next paragraph the minister says he is going to curtail investment in the experimental farm stations. Again, one would presume this project was designated to increase productivity.

These are two comparatively minor instances which illustrate the minister's reversal of his position. He says we need higher productivity and then takes steps to curtail our ability to achieve it. These are sins of commission, rather minor ones perhaps and not significant, but they are nothing like the sins of omission which must have much wider effect than the two small sins of commission I have mentioned. He ignores the existence of this large proportion of our labour force, 3.5 per cent, and blandly tells us that despite that we are near the end of the full utilization of our resources. We are faced with this fact, Mr. Speaker, that he possibly had to take this position because of past negligence on the part of this and former governments. As a result of this, he would not now be in a very good position to inaugurate any policy to reshape or retool these defective parts of our population.

To the best of my knowledge there has been no survey made by this government or previous governments as to the skills that will be required in the rapidly changing economy in which we live today. There has been no survey to find out what skills will be called for by the vast technological changes that are taking place continually. There has been no research, no surveys to the best of my knowledge with regard to the skills, capacities or qualities of those who are presently unemployed. We do not know, therefore, what we need from them.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order to ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Speaker: This is not a point of order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: A point of privilege then?

Mr. Speaker: It is not a question of privilege. The hon. member may seek the permission of another hon. member who has the floor to ask a question, which permission may be granted or refused.

Mr. Alkenbrack: May I?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, if I have time I do not mind.

No survey has been made at all and consequently the government has tied its own hands when it comes to launching an effective program in the war against poverty. There is no doubt the recent war against poverty has become a byword in this country for a piece of government whitewashing. We do not know what skills are needed. We do not know what capacities the unemployed have. No survey has been made, so what do we do? We sweep them under the rug. We do not include them in our potential resources utilization of which the minister tells us is reaching very close to the limit.

Of course, we have a new department recently appointed to achieve this, and I refer to the proposed ministry of manpower. I wonder how this new department will work when it comes up against the brick wall of some of the other policies of the minister? I have noticed in the minister's budget that he appears to be determined to accentuate a trend in investment in Canada which has created this situation and which, if continued much longer, must inevitably be disastrous. For the last five years at least there has been a growing disparity between investment in social capital and investment in private business capital. In 1961, 41.7 per cent of our total investment went into social capital and 58.3 per cent into business capital. By 1965 it had reached the point that 39.7 per cent was in social capital and 60.3 per cent in business capital. In the forecast produced by the Department of Trade and Commerce for 1966 we find that it is estimated that for the ensuing year the investment in social capital will have dropped to 38.4 per cent and the estimate of business investment will have risen to 62 per cent.

This, I suggest, sir, is a shocking and dangerous trend when we have reports on all hands of the failures and inadequacies of our educational system, when we have reports on all hands of the failure to provide adequate health services for the Canadian people to maintain them in the state of health that is required to sustain them as useful members of our society, when continually both business and government bewail the fact that we have a shortage of skilled personnel, when we have disgraceful slums in every city of the country, when we have poverty which is the breeding ground of crime and delinquency, and the non-utility of human beings as productive organisms.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Knowing this, what do we find? We find that the government is determined to allow this disparity in investment to continue. The government is determined to allow the shortages in social capital from which we suffer today to remain. The government does not wish to take steps at all to correct this imbalance that might start us at least on the path toward solving the problem of the usefulness of human beings in modern society.

It is true, I acknowledge, that the minister is proposing to place a curb on business investment. I would imagine the minister took one hesitating, rather timid look at what they are doing in Sweden and that he felt he had to do something of the same sort. Of course, the difference is so great that it is not merely a difference in degree but a difference in kind between what the minister is suggesting and what the Swedish authorities have instituted for several years past. In that connection let me say, Mr. Speaker, that while I think the 5 per cent refundable tax is a very faltering step, if it is the forerunner of more decisive action in this field it is to be welcomed.

I noted with interest the position of the spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party when he protested against business having to relinquish $250 million, on which it is going to draw 5 per cent, without a word being said about the $140 million that is going to be taken out of the taxpayers' pockets for which they will get no return and no interest.

An hon. Member: It has to be paid.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It has to be paid. I thought that what the spokesman for the Progressive Conservatives said was very interesting because it indicates clearly the concern of the Official Opposition with a certain section of our society. To take money from business is, of course, the ultimate sin for Conservatives.

Let us compare what the minister is doing with what they are doing in Sweden. I have here a copy of the Harvard Business Review, which outlines the Swedish program. We find there that any Swedish corporation may allocate, at its own discretion and with no necessity for government permission, up to 40 per cent of its pre-tax income to an investment reserve for economic stabilization. The amount so set aside is a deduction from income for purposes of income tax. In every case 40 per cent of the amount allocated to the investment reserve must be sterilized by deposit to the corporation's credit with the Riksbank, the Swedish central bank. There is no sterilization of the remaining 60 per cent of the investment reserve. It must be charged on the books as a reserve but it remains in the corporation's hands as part of its working capital, similar to a reserve for depreciation or for bad debts.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

The important part is this: While no government permission is required to allocate funds to the reserve, control over the taxpayers' reserve is largely in the hands of the government. Control is not exercised by the revenue administration but by the Labour Market Board, a government agency, whose primary duty is to combat unemployment. I would assume, Mr. Speaker, that that board has before it the results of the sort of survey that this government has never done. I would imagine that the Labour Market Board of Sweden has a very clear idea of the skills required in every part of their society, most of which they have today achieved.

In our own instance what do we have? We have a 5 per cent refundable tax on which we are going to pay 5 per cent interest. It is not going to have any flexibility as to the time of release. The minister must release the money at the end of 18 or 36 months regardless of the state of the economy. In fact, as a weapon for stabilizing investment it would seem to me to be of very minor effect and of minor use.

It may be, as I say, that it is one first, faltering step in the direction of rational control of investment programs and policies of Canada. If so, it is a very timid one. I suggest to the minister that he should perhaps borrow from his predecessor some of his rashness, some of his panache, and I suggest that he take bolder steps in that direction.

I have noticed that the minister has boasted, not merely on this occasion but on other occasions, that we are enjoying the longest period of economic expansion in our history. No doubt we have almost reached the new millenium. Perhaps we have. If that is the case, then we have a grim outlook before us.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We have a grim outlook before us when in a period of unexampled and unprecedented economic expansion, 25 per cent of the people still are categorized as living on the borderline of poverty, when we have still 365,000 unemployed persons, when the old age pensioner is receiving $75 a month. A retired civil servant telephoned me today to tell me of the plight of a friend of hers, also a retired civil servant, whom she found living on shredded wheat for a week waiting for the pension cheque to come. If this is what the longest unprecedented sustained period of economic expansion gives us, then I say the outlook is extremely grim, and I say that we should take another look at the policies which have created this longest unprecedented spell of economic expansion.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member has three minutes only left for his speech. I wonder whether hon. members would wish the hon. member to complete his speech?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I plan to move a subamendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, pursuant to the provisions of the resolution adopted in this house on January 21 I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As I said before the luncheon recess, Mr. Speaker, I propose to move a subamendment to the amendment placed before the house by the official opposition. I do so now. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and to meet the needs of taxpayers by changing the income tax structure so that single persons up to $1500 and married persons up to $3000 will not be required to pay income tax, or to meet the needs of Canadians whose incomes are below the income tax exemption levels by providing a guaranteed annual income."

The problem to which the subamendment calls attention is connected closely with what I was saying earlier in the debate. It is further proof of the inability of an unplanned market economy to distribute the fruits of expansion. Not only are we unable to distribute the fruits of our production but we place a levy on those in our society who can least afford to contribute to the operation of our economy.

I was speaking earlier of the curious manner in which the Minister of Finance had dismissed the 365,000 unemployed by making no mention of them and by suggesting at the same time that we had nearly full employment of all our resources. I suggest this is a situation which will continue to get worse. There can be no doubt that if those presently unemployed, as appears to be the case, are unfit to perform a productive function in our society, the level of unfitness will continue to rise in line with the technological development which is taking place today, and more and more people will find themselves in this category of being unused and unuseful members of our society.

The level of usefulness, if I can use that term, is bound to climb and much more drastic steps will be required to cope with the situation than either the minister or the government have indicated up to the present. This is one of the big paradoxes of our present method of operating our society. It is the dilemma of the unplanned market economy that not only does it fail to distribute the fruits of production in an equitable manner but that it is similarly unable to allocate resources in a socially desirable way, since the only consideration affecting the allocation of those resources is that of profit. The curious thing is that the richer we become, the more quickly we approach the full use of our economic, natural and human resources, the more difficult it is for us to make sure that those who need it most are able to share in the new wealth production. This, I submit, will always be the case as long as we continue to operate on an unplanned market economic basis.

I believe the almost obsessive concern with the rate of economic growth is actually an escape mechanism to enable us to avoid this problem of equitable distribution. It stems from a social philosophy which regards organized society as merely a productive and consumptive machine and human beings as being merely an attachment to that machine.

It is true we must have growth in order to keep pace with the rising population. But it may very well be that a better allocation of our resources and a better distribution of the fruits of our society would be sufficient to provide us with decent and satisfactory lives instead of our present course which is a mad scramble to use up resources, destroy our environment, exploit the capacities of human beings and keep the machine going at any cost.

We are confronted today with a foretaste of what will be done to us in more acute form by the automation and cybernation which awaits us. The time is fast approaching when we shall be obliged to take a hard look at the philosophy of human purpose which we now have, and at the philosophy of organizing ourselves for the production and distribution of resources. I have always felt that in a modern state the goal of civilized state should be that of developing as far as possible an egalitarian society. I am not suggesting, here, any counsel of perfection; indeed, if that were possible, it might not be desirable.

We still have an immense number who are incentives. We have heard a lot about that this morning from the Official Opposition. I agree there must be incentives which will induce people to undertake the rigorous and lengthy training and education required to fill the most skilled positions in our society. But incentives used merely to encourage people to seek the most profitable places for investment land us in the state in which we find ourselves today where, in spite of the long and unprecedented economic growth, 25 per cent of our people are still living near poverty level.

• (2:40 p.m.)

We still have an immense number who are living in stringent circumstances and on whom, apparently, we must impose taxes. We still have old people, retired civil servants and disabled people living at substandard levels, and we still have a totally defective educational machine in this country incapable of producing the very productive force that the Minister of Finance tells us we must have.

Therefore I suggest we should not look merely at statistics. Statistics do not give us the real picture of our egalitarian society. We hear no mention of all the extra income acquired by those who happen to be in a position of prosperity. We hear no mention of the man who has a $50,000 home and who draws considerable income from the fact that he lives in this home and enjoys its amenities. He does not get taxed on that. I suggest that until some future government recognizes that we must divorce the idea of livelihood from that of a piece of machinery in a large productive machine we are going to have this continual trouble. We are going to continue to the point of expanding our economy and then being told that, because we are in an inflationary position, we cannot provide larger pensions for old people, and provide education as it should be provided, and cannot reduce income tax levels because we need the revenues.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

This is because the whole of our society is geared to the production of profits, to the maldistribution of wealth in order that those who own and operate the productive forces of society may draw their first tribute from it and leave us the rest. If this continues we are going to have more throw-outs because of technological changes, but somehow we will have to achieve some means of distributing the wealth that automation and cybernation have made possible. This is one of the great opportunities for mankind, but if we are going to have the sort of program presented by the Minister of Finance in his budget we are going to lose that opportunity and from our wealth possibilities we are going to create more and more misery for more and more people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The question is on the subamendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, the night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) brought down his budget I could not help but note that the most wonderful progress there was in that budget speech was the one made by the minister in his manner of expressing himself in French. That was the greatest improvement, and I think the Liberal members will agree with me. As a matter of fact, to me, it was the only improvement because, apart from that, the speech was rather disappointing and fairly rough.

In a certain way, the Minister of Finance reminded me of some finance minister in a country where people are complaining about a shortage of hats due to an increase in population. So, they consult their economists. The first one replies; well, we shall build factories and they will manufacture hats. No, says the second one, we shall cut off heads and then there will be enough hats. That is exactly what our Minister of Finance has done in his 1966 budget. He cut off heads, he cut down the number of public works, and he asked the provinces to do as much. He also asked the industrial and manufacturing interests to cut down on their investments.

Everything is in progress, but man no longer knows what to do with progress. There are too many heads? Let us cut them off. Too much progress? Let us try and restrict it.

That is not the way to develop a country, Mr. Speaker. One never develops the economy of a country or the country itself by trying to limit its growth but by encouraging it.

We noticed also that the Minister of Finance overlooked one of the important problems he will have to face. He talked about budgetary revenue but he did not mention his budgetary expenditures, on the last page of Hansard for Tuesday, March 29, because they would be for him a source of great difficulties. What I will say is not mentioned anywhere in the budget of the Minister of Finance. It is not shown at all in his calculations.

He forgot to tell us that on May 1, 1966, that is in a month from today, a loan of 325 million dollars will come to maturity.

Where will he get the money? There is no mention of it anywhere.

And that costs in interests, for this year alone, $11,375,000. If only that was all for this year.

But no, another loan, in the amount of $245,202,200, will fall due on September 1 and another one, in the amount of $205 million, will also fall due on that date. Again in 1966, a $23,320,000-loan will fall due on November 1. On December 15, three other loans will fall due: one, in the amount of $175 million, another of $125 million, and still another of $150 million, making a grand total of $1,248,522,900 in loans falling due in 1966.

The Minister of Finance did not say how he would go about paying back all that money. Will he tell us—and I would like him to answer this question—that Canada is not paying its debts? Will he borrow to pay that debt? He will have to borrow to pay back all the loans falling due this year.

But here is what will happen then. As those loans were made a long time ago, when interest rates were low: 3½, 3¾, 4, 4¼ and 4½ per cent, any new loans he makes will bear a higher interest rate of 5¼, 5½ or 6 per cent. There will be fees to pay brokers who will issue new securities to face the $1,238 million debt falling due in 1966. And as we will see in next year's budget, if this amount has not been paid, interest rates will have gone up.

Could the Minister of Finance tell us where he will get the money to pay back those loans? Why did he not speak about this in his budget speech? Has he decided not to pay back Canada's debts? Has he decided to go bankrupt? This would be the time to do it—

Mr. Béchard: There is the Bank of Canada.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Grégoire: Has he decided to go bankrupt?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: May I assure the hon. gentleman that is not my intention, Mr. Speaker.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance tells us that that is not his intention, but could he tell us where he will find the money to repay this amount of $1,200 million? Can he tell us? Is he not able to answer? Is he not?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I might say that had he read my budget speech correctly he would have seen that we took all these matters into account in order to meet the needs of the government. Also, there was some intimation in the White Paper and elsewhere that we intend to repay these loans and otherwise keep the finances of this country in good shape and maintain confidence in Canada and in the currency.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A businessman who would give such an answer would no longer be considered as a businessman, because since confederation, the Canadian government has never paid off one cent of its debts without borrowing elsewhere.

So this year, next year and the following years, we shall have to borrow in order to repay debts incurred in 1867 and even before. This means, Mr. Speaker, that the money spent by Canada to buy red coats for its soldiers who defended our country against the United States in 1812, has been repaid 25 to 30 times over in interest and that more money is being borrowed to pay off the capital.

And he will tell me that this is the proper way to manage a country. We have paid 30 times over; they no longer exist, but we still owe that amount and we will borrow again to pay what we still owe.

And that, Mr. Speaker, is not all the borrowings. In 1967, another amount of $867 million will become due. In 1968, debts in the amount of $1,981 million will mature. Every year, the government will have to borrow anew to pay off its previous loans and each time it borrows, service charges have to be paid. It has to kowtow to finance in the United States, Great Britain, Europe or elsewhere. And the cost of refinancing comes high. Interest rates are going up all the time.

If, this year, the Minister of Finance obtains $1,248 million to refinance the national debt of Canada, which will not help the country in any way, that will mean $1,248 million less in savings to invest in the development of our natural resources and of our industries, in short, the development of Canada.

The Minister of Finance seems to take that stoically. It is quite simple, we borrow to pay what we owe and we have been doing that for a hundred years.

I cannot understand why not a single minister of finance has had enough imagination in his noggin—

An hon. Member: His what?

Mr. Grégoire:—to find the way of making this country run with debt-free money. I wonder if the minister was here when his colleagues voted for that.

Mr. Béchard: That was not what we voted for.

Mr. Grégoire: I think he was about to rise and say he was not here, thereby blaming his old colleagues for having voted in favour of that.

But, Mr. Speaker, when a country is sovereign and autonomous, when it is really the master of its own destiny, it should not be compelled to do business with private financial institutions. It ought to set up, as a non-profit government body, a public development bank that would finance without interest public expenditures and public development.

This, Mr. Speaker, should be the goal of any sovereign and independent country. But Canada is still controlled by financial interests.

Mr. Speaker, there are in fact two problems facing the country today, or so it seems according to the speech made by the minister.

First, there is the increase in the cost of living. Second, our balance of payments shows a deficit.

The increase in the cost of living, where does it come from and for what reason? Almost everyone tries to hide it from himself and the hon. Minister of Finance especially refuses to see it. But the reason for the increased cost of living during the last year or two is mostly the increase in taxes.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

When a province increases taxes by 2 per cent, prices go up 2 per cent. When there is a 1.8 per cent or 1.9 per cent tax increase, as there was last year, prices go up. When the employer is also forced to pay 1.8 or 1.9 per cent more, prices rise. When an 11 per cent tax is charged on building materials, prices inevitably go up.

Through the creation of all sorts of new taxes, we have come to the point where the businessman, simply to make his reports to the government on pensions, health unemployment insurance, income tax for his employees, deductions at the source, taxes on profits, personal income tax, etc., has to hire a whole staff of accountants, secretaries and assistants to figure out all those things and divide everything according to each department. You can imagine that this increases production costs for industrialists and manufacturers contributes to increase prices.

Taxes are the main factor of the rise in the cost of living at this time. The minister complains that the cost of living is on the rise. But he is the first one responsible, for it is not the opposition which raises taxes, but rather the Minister of Finance who decides such things. And as this is the primary cause of inflation, the man responsible for inflation in Canada is the Minister of Finance every time he makes a decision to increase taxes.

Today whether you want it or not, there is 47 cents worth of tax in everything you buy. Every dollar's worth of products includes 47 cents in various taxes, either income, municipal, provincial, school or other tax. In every dollar's worth of production, there are 47 cents in taxes.

The minister wonders what inflation stems from. It stems from taxes or levies, which are higher here in Canada than anywhere else.

The second problem the country has to face is that of the balance of payments. Let us note this however: if we have a deficit, it is not that our exports are inferior to our imports. On the contrary, they are greater than our imports, but over and above that, huge amounts of money go out of the country in dividends, profits and interests paid to foreign companies. That is what causes the deficit in our balance of payments because, as a matter of fact, if we consider only the value of products we ship outside this country and those we bring in, our exports exceed our imports, but we have to pay the tax on money sent to foreign investors who develop our natural resources because we never had a government that could do it.

That is why, each year, we send $1.2 billion, I believe—at least, that was the figure two years ago—abroad in the form of dividends, profits and interest.

What does the minister say about that? In his budget speech, he says:

> We do not want to restrain export demands—we need the proceeds of exports to pay for imports and meet our very heavy obligations in respect of interest and dividends payable outside Canada.

There you have the heavy obligations: interest and dividends payable outside Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question: if the United States had enough money to develop their own country, their natural resources, their industries and their trade and if, in addition, they had enough to go and develop natural resources and industries in South America, Africa, Europe, Asia and Canada, can the minister tell us why we Canadians should not be able to find the credit required to develop our own natural resources, our own industries and our own trade like the Americans have done?

• (3:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is he suggesting that the people of the United States have been converted by his eloquence and are following the policies he has been advocating?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my eloquence did not win them over. They were converted before that and before the advent of the present Minister of Finance. The United States succeeded in the last hundred years or so, with their own capital and their own credit, in developing their country. Why were we unable to do the same thing and did we have to borrow their capital and credit? The minister is unable to answer. Are we less intelligent or is their Minister of Finance more intelligent? The Americans can do it, not only for themselves, but for South America, Africa, Canada and the countries of Europe. How is it that they have capital to invest throughout the world? Why?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman again whether he is suggesting that the United States should follow Social Credit policies in its administration?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I am not suggesting that at all, Mr. Speaker. Far from it, but I claim, for instance, that the Americans put into practice at least part of the philosophy of social credit in the sense that they are capable of finding capital and credit to develop their resources, their industries and ours also, whereas we are unable to develop ours. Seventy eight per cent of our natural resources and our industries were developed with American capital. Where did it come from? Could we not have capital to develop our resources, not theirs, or those of Africa or South America, but our own. The Minister of Finance should ask himself how it is that other countries did it and why we were unable to do it, except for 22 per cent, and Americans for 78 per cent. How is it that the United States could do it by themselves? The minister never asked himself that question. He never asked himself why we could never do it alone.

Now, the Minister of Finance is at the complete mercy of the United States or other foreign countries, for they control 78 per cent of our natural resources and industries.

Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because we have not developed our own sources of capital to invest in our natural resources that we must now face heavy obligations related to interest and dividends payable outside Canada. This is interest on capital invested here by Americans and dividends from such capital. We must face our heavy obligations. The phrase is not mine. It was used by the Minister of Finance.

We have our obligations to the United States, while they have none to Canada. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should give special consideration in this matter in order to consider the desirability for Canada to develop its own sources of capital and credit. It can use the Bank of Canada for this purpose, so that, in the future, we will no longer need Americans, Englishmen or Europeans to develop our country.

The second problem facing Canada is its balance of payments which will then no longer be a problem but an asset, for Canada is an exporting rather than an importing country, and a comparison between our exports and imports will prove it. When this problem of interests, dividends and profits is solved, our balance of payments will be in our favour.

Mr. Speaker, a third point—

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. member? As the hon. member has shown, the social credit doctrine has not, up to now, been beneficial to him or his predecessors. Has he never considered preaching it in other countries to find out whether it would be accepted?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, had I known the hon. member would have asked such a stupid question, I would not have resumed my seat so as to allow him to do so.

The propagation of ideas through preaching does not always bring results. Often one is preaching in the wilderness, to deaf ears, as in the case of the hon. member who just put this question. Wheat seldom grows on stone or rocky soil.

On page 11 of his budget speech, the Minister of Finance spoke about government expenditures and, among other things, said this:

> Now that we are better able to appraise the total economic situation this year, and our part in it, the government believes it should exercise further restraint upon its own expenditures, particularly in the field of construction, during this coming fiscal year.

• (3:10 p.m.)

In the following paragraph, he adds:

> This will mean deferring a number of plans that have been under consideration, or which we have been requested to undertake by the provinces or others.

Cuts in the field of construction, cuts in the projects under consideration, cuts in the field of public works. That reminds me of the economist who suggested to cut off heads because there were not enough hats, instead of making more hats. Because our country is expanding, the minister wants to slow down that growth.

Since when has it been a wise policy to slow down progress? There is not a single businessman in Canada who would say: "My industry is growing too rapidly, I must cut sales, I must reduce production, I must turn customers down." Not a single industrialist or merchant or businessman would say that.

But, the Minister of Finance wants to curtail works; moreover, he also asks the provinces to curtail their projects. He says:

> I hope that the provincial governments, whose construction programs have apparently increased even more than ours this year, will be able to contribute to this desirable restraint upon aggregate demand by holding back until a later year some of the projects they have scheduled for this year.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

There are not enough hospitals in the province of Quebec; sick people wait two or three weeks before being admitted to the hospital, and the Minister of Finance is suggesting that the construction of hospitals be stopped. There are not enough classrooms in our schools, colleges, universities and technical schools, and the minister is suggesting that the construction of hospitals, roads, bridges, leges, be stopped. There are not enough roads. We have the asphalt, the lands, the manpower, the unemployed to build them. Is the minister suggesting that we should stop building roads? Is he suggesting also that we should stop building bridges? That is progress. And we would put a stop to that. Fortunately, I hope that the provinces will not listen to that suggestion or recommendation of the federal Minister of Finance, because it would be a disaster to put a stop to the construction of hospitals, roads, bridges, colleges, universities, in short to stop building so that the country can grow. I hope that the provinces will disregard the suggestion of the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance suggests moderation, not only in the public field, but also, and I quote from the budget speech:

> It is clear that action should be taken promptly to moderate the present boom and to maintain a steady and sustainable rate of growth in our economy. We must avoid the kind of boom that will lead to a bust.

"Action should be taken promptly to moderate the present boom and to maintain a steady . . . rate of growth." Since when should a boom be moderated? When a country goes through a period where it seeks to grow the government on the contrary must help that expansion, because, by attempting to slow it down, it reduces development at the risk of stopping it.

The Minister of Finance also suggests that private expansion be cut down when he says:

> The first measure . . . . reduces the capital cost allowances that may be claimed for various classes of capital assets acquired during the period between now and October 1, 1967—about 18 months. This appears—

Take note, Mr. Speaker, these are strong words...

> —to me the period over which special inducements to postpone business capital expenditures are likely to be necessary, though of course this is a difficult matter to forecast.

These are 1930 methods. During the last depression, or economic recession, the government offered $2 for the piglets whose birth the farmers prevented.

Fifty cents were paid in New Brunswick for every apple-tree that was cut down. And the Minister of Finance says he will provide special incentives to business to defer capital investments.

I am warning the Minister of Finance that I intend to defer some business investments I expected to make next year; I shall only make them 25 years from now. Then the minister can give me those special incentives. This reminds me of the farmer who wrote the minister of finance 30 years ago and told him: You offer $2 for each piglet which is prevented from being born. Inasmuch as 3,000 piglets have not been born on my farm this year, please send me $6,000. That is the way things were being done during the depression years. Incentives were provided to stave off production, when people were starving to death. Now, the minister is coming back with the same old proposal, providing special incentives to defer business investments, to encourage people to stop producing and investing.

Mr. Speaker, it is a return to medieval, obsolete methods.

How much will the Minister of Finance pay? He did not say. Will he provide a sizeable incentive to prevent investments? Can he tell us what will be those special incentives to prevent us from investing? The minister might tell us what kind of special incentives he will provide or better still, what kind of bonus those who will cut down production or refrain from expanding industry may expect.

As things stand, Mr. Speaker, one wonders whether our Minister of Finance believes he is living in the 17th or 18th century. You know, those backward economists remind me of the farmer who was driving his ox-cart loaded with two or three cords of wood. Arriving in town, he saw a sign saying: Speed—30 mph. He said to his ox: "Let's get out of here, we cannot go that fast." Some economists are like that, Mr. Speaker, and in this century, they cannot keep up with progress.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but since speeches on the budget are limited to 30 minutes, under the rules, I must advise him that his time is up.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I was interrupted once or twice, may I be given a minute to finish my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regard, I must say to the hon. member that the chair, the deputies, and the officials of the house without mentioning the three clocks around us, have noted the time taken by the Minister of Finance while he interrupted the hon. member two or three times.

I may ask if it is the pleasure of the house to allow the hon. member to continue his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

An hon. Member: Let him speak of federal matters.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. gentleman might at least finish his story.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. Do I understand that the hon. members agree to allow the hon. member for Lapointe to finish his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall only take two or three minutes, since the Minister of Finance wanted me to finish my story and I have done so.

All economists today are incapable of adapting themselves to progress and to the age of automation in which we live. If the Minister of Finance really wanted to be progressive, he would devise a system other than the present one and would stop offering incentives to cut down production; on the contrary, he would give special encouragement to producers.

That is why I can only blame him for offering special incentives to delay the business worlds' capital expenditures.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about the receipts for charitable donations which the minister mentioned in his speech when he said:

> All charitable organizations will be asked to register and to file annual returns of information. Only donations to such registered charitable organizations will be permitted as deduction from income in future years.

I should like the minister to enlighten us on this subject. All charitable organizations will be asked to register; does this mean that all priests will have to register or will the cardinal of the Montreal diocese be able to register in the name of all the priests of Montreal? Does it mean that the Department of National Revenue will have records for every rectory? Will rectories have to obtain a special licence to hand out receipts? Will they have to hire accountants to present their annual returns of information to the government?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance should enlighten us on the subject. In any case, I wish to say that the Department of National Revenue has no business to ask vicars and curates to register with the department. Parish priests and curates should not have to submit reports to the Department of National Revenue. They cannot be ordered around like employees of the federal government; they have their own flocks to attend to.

The Minister of Finance should find a new method with regard to this question of receipts for charitable donations and he should not try to regiment and enlist parish priests and curates as he tries to do now.

Mr. Speaker, we are disappointed with this budget. There is no tax reduction; on the contrary, we find an increase in the income tax, at least taxes that were lowered last year were increased once more. There is no mention of increasing family allowances and old age pensions, or of raising tax deductions to $1,500 or $3,000, as was suggested by our colleagues of the New Democratic Party. We find their amendment is satisfactory and we are going to vote for it.

As for the Conservative amendment, it seems to us satisfactory at first sight. I did not have the opportunity to consider it thoroughly, but at first glance it seems satisfactory and, as far as we are concerned, we shall also vote for it.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say to the minister that we sympathize with him greatly in so far as his problems are concerned. We do not agree with what he has offered but we certainly sympathize with him in so far as the problems of taxation which he faces are concerned. In his opening remarks the minister referred to the Royal Commission on Taxation. If one were to summarize what he was saying, one would say that he was presenting a stopgap Budget while waiting for more information. I do not feel this is too much out of the way.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

However, I take strong exception to the position the minister is taking regarding the boom in Canada. I do not believe that the boom about which he is talking is prevalent all over Canada. I think that the problem he and the country face is the proper distribution of goods and services. This is where I feel the real problem lies. He has said we must retard the vehicle, that we should ease up on the gas a bit because we are getting into a position where it is not physically possible for Canadians to go any farther.

I should like to remind the minister that it should be our duty in this parliament to assist the provinces to increase production and make more goods available. If there are inflationary pressures, it is not our duty to impede the provinces and put stumbling blocks in the way of provincial growth. After all, capital investment must precede production. If we are going to cut down on capital investment, then surely what we are saying in no uncertain terms is that we are going to cut down on the growth of production because without capital investment we cannot have the type of production we need.

If we believe what the minister says, then it simply means that we have too much money chasing too few goods. The provincial governments are playing a very extensive role in Canadian life. As time goes on the role played by the provincial governments is going to become larger in relation to the position of the federal government in Ottawa. History shows that this is taking place. We realize that this must be the case. The budgets of provincial governments are becoming more important, as are the budgets of the municipalities. At this stage in our political history it is a good thing we are fortunate enough to have strong, stable, provincial administrations. The confusion we have had in the federal field has convinced me that this has been one of the redeeming features of our system of government in Canada.

The minister has said that we must provide ample provincial revenues. I do not like repeating myself, but I must ask the minister why his department does not do some real research into the possibilities of a municipal bank? A municipal bank would reach down into the grass roots of our provincial needs. Everyone in this chamber knows that the needs of municipalities are greater than the needs of any other level of government in Canada today. The minister himself mentioned the initial responsibilities of municipalities such as education, sewers, water and so on. These responsibilities of the municipalities could be taken care of by a municipal bank that would operate as a child of the Bank of Canada.

As I have said before, we could rent facilities from the chartered banks in order to make sure we would get the type of credit that is needed into the hands of the municipalities at cost. The first point in the minister's speech related to provincial revenues. The second point he mentioned was equalization payments. Here again, a municipal bank would assist in eliminating much of the stress on equalization payments because the need could be governed at the very root of the problem, the financing of services generally. I am sure this is where a start should be made and could be made.

The third point the minister mentioned was conditional grants. Here again, the case for such a bank would be very much in the forefront. Conditional grants would be tied in with equalization payments and provincial revenues. This would mean that our whole provincial policy would be much more flexible.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I come now, Mr. Speaker, to what I think is a very important point in the minister's speech. I refer to the International Monetary Fund. I hope I misunderstood the minister in this regard but in reading his Budget speech it seems to me he is stating we must have machinery on a world level to enable the International Monetary Fund to create money. I feel this would be a dangerous precedent. It would mean we would be doing away with a certain amount of our sovereignty. In the final analysis I think it would do away with the country known as Canada, as well as many other countries. I cannot help but sound a warning in connection with the matter of the International Monetary Fund and the minister's reference to its ability to create money. In that connection I should like to read from a little booklet called "Money Facts" put out by the 88th Congress of the United States. It was the report of the subcommittee on domestic finance, of the Committee on Banking and Currency in the United States.

The question here asked is, "Where does the federal reserve get the money with which to create bank reserves?" The answer is:

> It doesn't "get" the money, it creates it. When the federal reserve writes a check, it is creating money. This can result in an increase in bank reserves—a demand deposit—or in cash; if the customer prefers cash, he can demand federal reserve notes, and the federal reserve will have the treasury department print them. The federal reserve is a total moneymaking machine. It can issue money or checks. And it never has a problem of making its checks good because it can obtain the $5 and $10 bills necessary to cover its check simply by asking the treasury department's bureau of engraving to print them.

This is the report of the subcommittee on finance in the United States, issued one year ago last September.

If we are going to find ourselves in a position where the International Monetary Fund is going to be given the right and the privilege to create money, we can, in my view, say that we are surrendering our sovereignty in a way that would not be contemplated by even the most foolish people. I believe that we should take a very close look at this situation. I am not saying that we should not help anybody, that we should not make a fund available to do any good that it is necessary to do in the world. I am not saying that we should not help starving people, or that we should not help in the development of underdeveloped countries. But surely, Mr. Speaker, we should never be put in the position of creating money for other countries that can create money for their own uses. This would be monstrous. This would be similar to the problem raised by the C.B.C. program, where a wild plant grew up and gobbled up everybody that came near it. We have to be sure that this International Monetary Fund is backed by a 100 per cent reserve basis.

Mr. Speaker, I was happy to note that the minister has captured in his speech another Social Credit phrase. He has captured the fourth point in the Social Credit program: that that which is physically possible can and must be made financially possible. I noticed that twice in his speech he mentioned our physical capabilities, in reference to production.

I say to the minister that it is nice to see him moving along the path, as did his predecessor, when his predecessor admitted that the federal government is actually practising, to a degree, the Social Credit monetary reform policy. I hope that this may be extended, Mr. Speaker. I believe it was raised on August 7, 1964, originally, but I regret that I forget the page number in Hansard.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, we are making progress, even though there are only five of us here, from this party. We each have our own job, and perhaps that is the nicest way to have it.

If I understand the minister's speech, it is that we must increase our productivity. Yet he is telling us that we must tax the businesses of the country so that they will not have so much money to spend. I should like to know how we are going to increase our productivity without spending money, when capital account is to come before production? It seems to me that in this we are slipping backwards. I do not know the real thinking of the minister, but I suppose that before the debate is over some of his colleagues will have enlightened us on some of his thinking.

One remark the minister made in his statement struck me as being very much to the point under discussion. He mentioned the subject of borrowing for social services. I think nothing can be more destructive to any country or to any province than borrowing money for social services.

Another statement that interested me very much I should like to quote. It appears on page 3379 of Hansard for March 29, 1966:

> But in the longer run, with the whole world hungry for capital, we cannot assume that it will always be feasible for Canada to import such large amounts of capital as we have in the past.

This brings me to the point I wish to discuss. Why is the whole world hungry for capital? The whole world has its own resources. We have the means of creating money. I read into the record how the United States creates money. I need not tell the Minister of Finance how the banks create money, or how the Bank of Canada creates money, because he knows this. Why in the world should we allow foreign countries with their own banking systems to monetize our assets so that they can collect interest and dividends from their investments, when we have the capability of creating our own money here in Canada. I cannot see the common sense of letting foreign institutions create money on our assets.

By way of illustration, on a blackboard I used to draw a stump, then I would draw a factory, and people, and I would explain what this meant. When people watching asked me what this was all about, I said, "The people in the drawing are the people of Canada. These are the resources to which they apply their labour, in order to build a factory." Then when I was asked what the stump was for, I said, "That is for the foreign investor to sit on. When we finish working on our own resources, and build a factory, he owns it." That is just about how inept we are in the handling of our finances.

I see no reason why foreign money making institutions should make the money that we can make, on our own assets. Foreign institutions are not going to raise money unless they have something with which to back it. In a little time I shall go back to the minister's statement with respect to that.

Another thing about the minister's attitude that puzzles me is his suggestion that we can have consumers without having money in the hands of the people. I do not follow this line of thinking. It seems to me that we cannot have domestic markets unless we have people who have money to buy the goods on that market. In this connection I should like him to take a look at the possibilities that exist with relation to the tight money policy, and with relation to the finance corporations in this country. I am sure that the minister could go to any bank in this country and find out that a tight money policy exists, and that as a result we cannot borrow money, no matter how well situated he is.

However, finance corporations, when they know that tight money is coming in, go to the chartered banks to raise their line of credit as high as possible. Then, when tight money is brought in they will be able to get the credit from the banks that you and I ought to have.

You can go to the bank today and not get a dime. Then you can go down to a finance company and get money on which they will charge 24 per cent interest. The finance company has obtained the money because of the line of credit it has from the bank. You and I should have had that money in the first place. That is exactly the situation.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should like to deal with the tight money policy as it relates to exports and imports. It seems to me that a blanket tight money policy is going to hurt the primary producers of this country before it hurts anybody else. These are the people who are generally at the top of their lines of credit at all times. If any restrictions are imposed they have no room to move. Who are the greatest exporters in this country? The primary producers. The minister is crying for exports, yet he slaps a blanket tight money policy across the country, affecting our primary producers most. This is one more of the contradictions we find in the present budget.

I said I would have something more to say about interest and dividends being paid outside Canada. I appreciate the minister's statement in this regard because it emphasizes one thing which has been denied in some circles, namely that the public debt of Canada is owned by Canadians. The minister has told us that one of the problems here is the heavy obligation with respect to interest on dividends payable outside Canada. But he also went to great lengths to explain that the provinces, municipalities and government agencies should have the right to go to foreign markets to borrow money. I fail to see why they should do this when they are all going to use our assets in Canada to back these new funds which are being created.

I turn now to the situation produced by the government's decision to restrict parts of its construction program. I notice that first on the list of projects to be eliminated is the provision of grain storage facilities at Prince Rupert, British Columbia. I am sure that if the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had spoken before me, one of the first things he would have mentioned would have been the decision taken with regard to these facilities. The minister talks about wanting to increase our exports. We are all aware of the bottleneck which slows down our efforts to get wheat out of Canada. Now he says we are not to build new terminals in Prince Rupert. The other day I read in the paper the number of box cars filled with grain which are scattered all the way from Golden to the coast, waiting to be unloaded—some 1300, held up because there are no facilities at the coast for handling them. Yet first on the list of projects to be eliminated are these facilities at Prince Rupert.

I hope that when he gives consideration to this matter the minister will not forget that an airport terminal at Prince George is very sorely needed. Maybe he could fly up to Prince George on a Sunday and see whether he can find a place to set his suitcase down there. I am sure he would be happy to recommend the expenditure of some money by the Department of Transport to make sure that the facilities are improved as quickly as possible.

The minister has admitted there are pockets of unemployment in this country. Surely we must devise some way of applying a tight money policy only in areas where there are inflationary tendencies while making sure that credit is available where it is needed. Some hon. members have spoken about the causeway over to Prince Edward Island. I have been in this house for nine years and during that time all I have heard has been speeches about the poverty of the maritimes. This being the situation, why in the world should we postpone the construction of such a causeway?

We hear a lot about equalization payments to the poorer provinces. This was mentioned in the budget speech. The province from which I come is one of the richer provinces. It is a matter of development and of looking after natural resources. All the provinces have this ability, provided they use the right policies.

I was a little surprised that the minister should have advocated more borrowing in the course of his speech. This vexes me. It seems wrong to me that we in this country should continually be borrowing money from outside and using our own assets to back up these loans. The minister says:

> There should on the other hand be some saving to provinces and municipalities in what it is necessary to pay in interest to foreign lenders. I hope it will enable some borrowing to be done in Europe, despite the high cost of borrowing there.

When we have our own facilities in Canada, why in the world should we have to pay through the nose in order to borrow in Europe? It does not make sense to me.

I sympathize with the minister in his efforts to meet the situation caused by too many people spending too much money. In this connection I would remind the hon. gentleman to look again at the activities of the finance corporations which spend huge sums advertising for persons to enter their doors and get money. Once these people receive it it is a different story—24 per cent interest on the amount borrowed.

The minister tells us we are faced with a lack of skilled labour. This affects one area in which the provinces have no jurisdiction —control over immigration. If the minister really believes that more skilled labour is needed, let him get his colleagues together and make sure Canada receives the type of immigrants capable of filling these vacant positions, so that we can build up production, provide more goods and avoid too much money chasing too few things.

I agree with the minister in his attitude toward the protection, if one can call it that, of those in the lower income brackets as far as income tax changes are concerned. I think this is good. It is good that the minister has seen the light and promised to change the sales tax situation. I hope he goes all the way and removes this tax on production entirely.

I have described this budget as a stopgap budget and I am sure the people of Canada agree. But it is a budget which contains many contradictions. On one hand the minister tells us to spend. In the next breath, he says: Don't spend. He calls for exports, yet he restricts credit to the primary producers who do most of the exporting. He tells us to save, yet he reduces the reasons for saving.

In conclusion, I would say this: While pension plans of various kinds are excellent, the minister must recognize that these developments in our society create a psychological effect in the minds of the individuals concerned. If they are to be taken care of in their senior years they will not worry about spending too much money today.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Davenport): As this is the first time I have spoken during the present session I should like to begin by congratulating Your Honour, and the Deputy Speaker, on your new and important posts. I would also like to congratulate all hon. members on their choice of a Speaker for this house. In the way he has directed our proceedings, especially during some regrettably stormy periods, the Speaker has given clear evidence that our choice was an exceedingly happy one. We respect his decisiveness and quick firmness, and we appreciate his good humour and his pleasant smile when he delivers his rulings. I am sure all hon. members will agree when I say we are grateful to the Speaker for what he has done, and will do for us, but more importantly for what he is doing for the institution of parliament.

Some hon. members know that when I resigned from the government I resolved to make no speeches in or out of the house for a period of six months. I still have about a month to go but I am breaking my self-imposed vow of silence today, and only for today, in order to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on his appointment as my successor, and to compliment him on his budget.

It seems to me the debate has opened on a rather high note and I congratulate the previous speakers, particularly the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), both of whom made excellent speeches this morning from somewhat different points of view. My mischievous friend, the mellowing firebrand from Vancouver Island, has a caustic wit that is always refreshing, and sometimes he says some intelligent things that are worth listening to. But I had a little trouble following him this morning when he referred to my panache, which my particular dictionary refers to as a plume of feathers, especially a headdress. If by inference he was inviting me to join his particular band of fighting Indians, I shall think the matter over carefully, but I seem to remember that when I was a minister I felt that he and his band of Indians would have preferred to have eaten me if they had not thought I was too old and tough.

[Mr. Leboe.]

Mr. Speaker, the present minister for several years was a senior member of the staff of the Department of Finance and it must have given him great pleasure to return to head his old department. The job has its difficulties, at times, but also its satisfactions, and I am sure he will find the work is fascinating.

The minister has an excellent staff to help him. The deputy minister is the dean of the Canadian civil service. He is a wise and imaginative man who has served successive governments with loyalty, integrity, and complete discretion. Mr. Bryce is surrounded by a well-knit team of keen and able people who are competent to grapple with extremely complex issues, and I wish all of them, and their minister, the very best of luck.

It must have given the minister some feeling of relief, as well as of pleasure, to have presented his first budget. As one who has had some experience with a first budget I wish to say to him that if he is satisfied that his proposals are sensible in the light of present conditions he should not become overly disturbed if he receives a few criticisms.

After all, his critics, and he is bound to have a few, may not have the same facilities as are available to the Minister of Finance to assess the current situation, which puts them at something of a disadvantage. And I doubt if very many of them would have given as much concentrated thought over the last three or four months to the kind of policies that are called for in present circumstances, as did the minister.

I do not wish to suggest that the minister's critics will necessarily be all wrong, or that the minister will necessarily be all right in all of his points of view. There are no absolutes in this business.

Mr. Bigg: Are you still remembering your first budget?

Mr. Gordon: There is that old voice again. It sounds like the cracked record I remember so well. I can only suggest that one of these days somebody should buy him a new one.

We shall have a better idea a year or so from now about the present budget, because it is really only in retrospect that one can properly assess the wisdom of any particular budget. In the meantime I wish the minister every success and a calm, quiet, but interesting life.

Before discussing some of the matters dealt with in the budget I should like to remark how very fortunate we are in Canada, at the present time at least, compared with people in other countries. It is now five years since the current upswing began. Unemployment is down, on a seasonally adjusted basis, to about 3½ per cent of the working force. It is still higher than this in the Atlantic region and in the eastern part of Quebec, but in some parts of Canada there is virtually no unemployment. This a matter for great rejoicing.

Most people are busy, and most people are prospering. It is quite true the cost of living has risen, but compared with the experience in other countries prices in Canada over the last few years have been relatively stable. Certainly the standard of living of most Canadians has increased at a much faster rate than the cost of living.

Consumer prices increased sharply after world war II and again after the Korean war. Since then, that is in the following 14 years, consumer prices increased by about 1½ per cent per annum, and I suggest that this record should be examined in the light of two factors in particular. The first is that the price indices do not reflect accurately or completely all the changes in quality and service that are now included in the things we buy. There has been a real increase in the cost of living over the past 14 years, but it has been less than the indices purport to show.

The second factor to remember is that prices have gone up much faster in every other country, with the exception of the United States, than they have in Canada. Our economy, as we know, is one of the most open in the world. We import a substantial proportion of our needs, and so it follows that some of the effects of price increases in other countries are bound to be reflected in the cost of the goods we import. I suggest that when these factors are taken into account we can claim that our record over the past 14 years has been a good one, relatively speaking.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Last year, that is in 1965, the consumer price index went up by 2.4 per cent. This is higher than normal. This increase was due partly to increases in food prices caused by drought conditions at the beginning of the year and partly due to shortages of meat products in the United States which pushed prices up. It also was due in part to increases in automobile and health insurance premiums; this contributed to the over-all increase in the indices in 1965. But what is of concern now is the rate at which some prices are increasing at the present time. This especially is true in the construction industry and in some sections of the manufacturing industry where the demand has been exceeding the available supply.

The minister has proposed a series of measures which are designed to restrain moderately the present rate of capital spending, especially in the private sector. He has proposed a form of forced savings for corporations, through a special tax of 5 per cent, on adjusted net profits, which is to be refunded with interest some time during a period of 18 to 36 months after the time of payment. I believe this is a novel and interesting idea.

I was somewhat amused that both the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) criticized this policy, the one because it is a new idea and therefore suspect, and the other because it is not exactly the same as the measures followed in Sweden. Hence it does not quite fit the views of all good socialists who, after all, venerate Sweden almost with idolatry at times, despite the fact that both the character of that country and the nature of its economy are quite different from that of Canada.

The minister also has proposed fairly stiff reductions in the rates of capital cost allowances. The previous rates were designed to amortize the cost of capital assets over their useful lives and at the same time provide what in effect was a subsidy to businesses in financing their capital expansion programs. Under present conditions, especially if we think these conditions are likely to continue for some time, it is reasonable to withdraw or reduce the subsidy element in the existing capital cost allowance rates for many companies.

There are, however, three points which the minister may wish to consider and possibly enlarge upon at the appropriate time. The first is that most large companies are in a position to raise money for expansion purposes in the capital markets when this seems necessary or desirable. Canadian subsidiaries of foreign concerns normally can look to their foreign parents for capital when they need it, although this may be a little less easy for some of them to do under the United States guide lines policy. Neither of these courses is available to small or medium sized Canadian owned businesses. The inherent disadvantage, under which the moderate sized and small Canadian owned companies operate vis-à-vis their much larger competitors, or vis-à-vis Canadian subsidiaries of foreign concerns might, I suggest, be taken into account and compensated for when the new regulations are being drafted. At the same time consideration might be given to the position of the independent automobile parts manufacturers who must expand their facilities under the United States-Canada automobile agreement, if they are to stay in business.

My third point under this heading is to point out to hon. members that the minister reminded us and the public that the special rates of capital cost allowances, for manufacturing companies with a degree of Canadian ownership, which have been in effect for the last three years are due to expire at the end of this year or April 1967, as the case may be. It might be helpful, I think, if the minister were to state that when the present threat of inflation is over and the old rates of capital cost allowances are restored, the principle of granting a subsidy to assist the financing of new capital expansion—because that is what a rate of capital cost allowance in excess of the so-called engineering life of a piece of equipment essentially is—will be continued for Canadian companies and companies with a degree of Canadian ownership. This would be consistent with government policy expressed yesterday in the guide lines for Canadian subsidiaries announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters). I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government on yesterday's announcement; I thought it was an excellent announcement as I am sure all hon. members will agree. At the same time I would urge the government to take whatever steps are necessary to see that these guide lines are realized in practice. Exhortations and guide lines are fine, but they need to be enforced.

To revert back to the budget, in so far as the public sector is concerned the 10 per cent deferment or stretch-out of capital expenditures by the federal government is a logical move in present circumstances. We know however that capital expenditures by provincial and municipal governments at the present time are much higher than those contemplated by the federal authorities. It will be important therefore to urge provincial and municipal governments to adopt a similar policy of deferring or stretching out their capital expenditure programs, except in those regions of the country where there is still an appreciable amount of unemployment.

I believe the minister should be commended for his efforts to restrain inflation. He is in a position to reverse these measures quickly when and if it should appear that the present business up-swing may be coming to a close. On the other hand, if the present measures should prove to be inadequate, I am sure he will not hesitate to bring in additional proposals to supplement those outlined in the present budget.

I am sure all hon. members will be particularly pleased that the minister has found it possible to grant an immediate exemption from sales tax for production tools, jigs, dies, and so on, and to eliminate over a two year period the sales tax on production machinery and equipment. I have said often that I agreed with hon. members opposite that this was not a good tax, and it is one which I am delighted to see the end of.

Mr. Pugh: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gordon: I had a feeling that if you would keep quiet for a little bit you would have a chance to cheer.

I also wish to congratulate the minister on his decision not to impose the 15 per cent withholding tax on interest payments to non residents on new government bond issues after April 15. This will reduce the cost of borrowing in New York and is to be welcomed for that reason.

I have been watching the clock a bit, and there is not time for me today to comment on all of the other budget proposals, but I shall look forward to further participation later and in more detail when the various budget bills are brought forward. However, at this point, I would like to digress for a few minutes on another slightly different topic.

• (4:10 p.m.)

It seems to me that some times Canadians become too preoccupied with their particular problems, and I should just like to mention four of them. Only a few years ago we were worried about the state of our national finances. That problem was tackled in a forthright fashion and has now been satisfactorily resolved.

At the moment a lot of people are worried about inflation, and some people are getting almost panicky about it. Certainly this is not a danger that can ever be ignored, but the minister has presented policies for dealing with it. If they are not successful we can assume, as I have said, that other supplementary measures will be promulgated. In other words, when something needs to be done, we should be prepared to act, not just sit around wringing our hands and crying about it. The minister has shown that he is quite capable of acting.

I should now like to mention another problem about which Canadians are concerned. For 100 years or more we have been worrying about the difficulty of holding our country together. In the last few years these worries have been increased. I believe we are getting closer to an appreciation of the changes in relationships that are needed to meet the changing conditions and the changing viewpoints of our times. I suggest that it is vitally important that French and English speaking Canadians try to understand each other better, be more appreciative and sympathetic of each other's gifts and aspirations and less critical of each other's shortcomings.

We should and must all work to reduce tensions, not exacerbate them. If we do, and if we approach this fundamental problem reasonably and with a determination to be fair, I believe we shall be successful and that Canada will not only hold together but will become much stronger in the process. Every hon. member of this house has a direct and personal responsibility in this matter. It is up to us, every one of us, to do everything within our power to promote unity and understanding. It is up to us—every one of us—not to do anything or say anything that would have the opposite effect.

We are still worried, and properly so I think, about the annual deficits on current account in our balance of payments. These deficits were reduced substantially in 1963 and 1964, but increased last year to about $1,100 million. If nothing were done the deficit on current account this year would be considerably higher. This is a problem that we should face up to, and if we do so it also can be resolved.

One of our difficulties in this country is that so much of our industry is controlled abroad. We have gained a great deal in the past from foreign investment and the scientific, technological and managerial know-how that has come with it, and in many cases, the assurance of markets. This has helped to develop our economy faster than otherwise would have been possible.

But the trend to absentee control of Canadian resources and Canadian businesses has gone too far. This is related to our balance of payments difficulties, as the recent United States guide lines have made perfectly clear to everyone. I believe that we must take positive steps to reverse the trend toward ever increasing foreign control over the Canadian economy. I have views about how this could be accomplished, but this is not the time to put them forward. Apart from anything else, I have just finished writing a book, as some hon. members may know, and I do not want to scoop myself today.

Mr. Douglas: Let's have no commercials.

Mr. Gordon: All I wish to say about this subject now is that, while it is a problem—and I believe a serious problem—we can resolve it if, having understood its implications, we tackle it head on.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman a question? Who is publishing his book and at what price will it be sold?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I also ask whether it is fiction or history?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I may answer one question at a time. I can assure the hon. minister that he will receive an advance copy, free of charge.

Mr. Vincent: What about other members of parliament?

Mr. Gordon: That depends on which side of the house they are located, but I will be glad to send you a copy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is going to be a one-sided presentation.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, it never occurred to me that the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) would show or express interest in anything that I might put forward, but I certainly shall send him a free copy of my book.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I should like to say I have read everything he has ever produced and I will be looking forward to his new book. I read both for profit and for amusement.

Mr. Gordon: On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I think he will gain some profit from it.

I have been talking about some of our problems, and I suggest that Canadians should examine their problems in perspective. If they do, they will not seem too stupendous. We should remind ourselves that the total net output of the Canadian economy, after eliminating price changes, has more than doubled in the 20 years since the war. Following the period of post-war readjustment, that is to say, since 1949, the net output per capita in real terms, after eliminating price changes, has gone up by an impressive 40 per cent. The average income of Canadians has been increasing rapidly and our standard of living is improving all the time.

The potential of this country is simply enormous, which means that if we manage our affairs with reasonable skill, which I am happy to say I believe we are doing, our standard of living should continue to improve at a rapid rate. We are, or we should be, the envy of the people of every other country in the world, and I even include the people of the United States when I say that.

It was my privilege about ten years ago to preside over a royal commission that made some educated guesses or forecasts about the future prospects of our country. Many people at the time thought our conclusions were wildly optimistic. They became convinced of this shortly afterwards when there was a recession and the pace of Canada's development was slowed. However, now, after four years of rapid growth, I believe the royal commission was too cautious in its forecasts.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Gordon: I am grateful to hon. members, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not delay them for more than a minute or two.

[Mr. Gordon.]

The prospects for this country are tremendous. We must not set our sights too low. I think it is perfectly all right to plan for the short term with reasonable caution, provided we are prepared to revise our estimates upward as we go along and provided we keep our minds and policies flexible and are prepared to change them as conditions change. It is in this spirit that I would urge all hon. members to support the budget that was presented to the house last Tuesday.

One day—and I hope it will be many, many years from now—Chief Justice Ilsley, Mr. Justice Abbott, Walter Harris, Donald Fleming and I, if we are still extant, will welcome the minister to the select circle of ex-Ministers of Finance. In the meantime, I wish him good health, pleasure in his work and every success in his endeavours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my first words will not be addressed to the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) but to the ex-minister of finance. As I listened to his speech today I felt that I was hearing the swansong of a man who has ambitions for quieter and higher things. I could not help but be impressed by his tendency to try and point out to Canadians some of the objectives we should have. I believe the house will join with me in saying to the hon. member that in his resignation last November he created a niche for himself in the history of this country because, regardless of the reasons for his resignation, we felt that here was a man of principle making a decision on the basis of his own ethics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: I want to be honest and say that I never disapproved of the hon. member's purposes and objectives in finance policy, but I honestly believed, and still do, that his techniques and methods were those of the previous century.

My comments on the present Minister of Finance will be slightly different. As I read and re-read the budget speech of last Tuesday my thought went to a motion picture called "The Senator was Indiscreet". In this motion picture a senator, who wanted to be a candidate for his party in the presidential race, realized that he had to put forward policies that were pleasant to all groups in the forthcoming convention, so he put forward his slogan as being against inflation, against deflation, and for flation. This was my impression of the budget. In effect, the minister's proposals seemed to be lacking in that desire to take the firm action which was a characteristic, rightly or wrongly, of the previous minister of finance.

I recall, too, that in speaking in the budget debate last year I had some fun—at least it was amusing to me—in saying that the then minister of finance was riding high and the future minister of finance was downgraded. I recall vividly how the then minister of finance went over, put his arm around the then minister of trade and commerce and showed that fellowship which can only be achieved in the House of Commons. Continuing the next day, I think it was, the then minister of trade and commerce spoke in the debate and said he would stand or fall with his colleague the minister of finance.

Well, Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday night at least he was standing in the same place and I cannot help but comment on the little by-play that we saw at that time. If the previous minister of finance was following nationalistic policies that are 60 years out of date, I think it can be said of the present Minister of Finance that he is only 25 years out of date. If, for instance, he thinks the idea of enforced savings—a policy we used during the war—can be implemented in peacetime, I say it is of some doubtful validity. I shall deal with that subject later.

Last year the minister supported his predecessor's proposals. Last year the minister and his predecessor ignored the clear and present warnings which we on this side of the house gave about inflation. Last year the Minister of Finance indicated that he would stand or fall with his colleague. This year I think one can say he has done nothing in particular, and has done it very well.

I was moved during the budget debate last year, which has been referred to as the election budget, to observe that the then minister of finance was sincere. I still hold that view, and I believe that the present Minister of Finance is equally sincere. It is just that there is something lacking in the sense of taking dynamic action. I know that the minister's failure will come as a disappointment to one member of this house, a Liberal member whom I shall not mention by name. This man is loyal to his colleagues; he is a man who believed that the last election was necessary and wrote to his supporters with a forthrightness which one can only admire. I should like the minister to hear what this loyal, dedicated Liberal wrote to his supporters in a letter dated September 13 last:

> To my friends . . .:
>
> An election has been called for November 8th. I am pleased that the Prime Minister has decided to hold one.
>
> Canada faces some critical and difficult problems in the next year and I believe that it must have a government with a clear mandate and a working majority to deal with them. The present minority government has achieved much in two and one half years. The country is very prosperous. Many people, including some editorial writers, generally believe that we should have carried on, but I have lived and worked in this parliament and I believe that an election now is in the interests of this country.
>
> It is vital that Canada have a government that can act in the general interest of the country as a whole with the confidence that it won't be defeated tomorrow on some unimportant issue or by accident.
>
> I am particularly concerned about the tough, hard decisions which must be taken to preserve national unity and ensure steady economic progress. These decisions must be taken without more delay or Canada will suffer. To be specific:—
>
> • (4:30 p.m.)
>
> The government at Ottawa needs a working majority to deal effectively with the provinces—all of which, like Ontario and Quebec, have majority governments. Continuing and difficult negotiations will have to be carried on with the provinces in the years ahead. No government can defend the national interest on the vital problems facing confederation—and on which decisions are being made now—unless it has a clear mandate from all parts of the country.
>
> There is an urgent need to reform our tax structure. Canada's railway system badly needs modernization. Our banking laws are urgently in need of improvement. Decisions in these fields require firm, confident handling, backed by a mandate from the people and a solid backing in the House of Commons.
>
> None of these matters can be put off. We must face them now. If we don't Canada will suffer.
>
> I will again be presenting myself to the Liberal nominating convention as your candidate. I have deeply appreciated your support in the past and I ask for your help in the days ahead.

Then, the signature follows. This letter was not written by the ex-minister of finance. This letter was written by a Liberal, appealing for nomination, who would tackle these hard problems with bold decision and in dynamic fashion.

The tragedy of this budget, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister has not faced up to the fundamental decision which confronts Canada, and that is how to utilize the human and material resources of Canada so that the economy can operate closer to its essential capacity. The minister's policy would leave these human and material resources for ever and ever untapped at a time when consumer demand is there.

The minister is like King Canute; he has ordained that consumer demand should stand still and wait for two or three years, instead of courageously attacking the problem industry by industry, region by region. The minister allowed himself to be seduced by a false god, the cult of the gross national product. This doctrine, which is resurrected from time to time, is like the old fashioned mother who, when one of the children is sick, gives everybody in the family castor oil. The quarrel which one must have with the minister is that he has accepted from his advisers the blunderbuss which the Department of Finance steadily loads and hands to the minister whenever there might be what is described as a financial hunting season. Only this time, I wish that some friendly person had printed the words "cow" or "horse" on some of the animals that were shot by mistake.

There were three inflationary pressures in 1965, all of which I tried to outline carefully in my speech during the budget debate last year. It was obvious the money supply had been expanded too rapidly. Now, of course, the inevitable over-correction has followed. It was obvious last year that the plan envisaged was inadequate for certain key industries. It was also obvious that skilled manpower was in short supply in several of our large metropolitan areas. The so-called election budget of 1965 was not directed at any of these problems. As we raised the income tax the other evening, the minister remarked that the 1965 cuts had served their purpose. His budget proposals fell on industries where there is under-capacity, and fell on industries where there is over-capacity, in a blind disregard of existing economic factors in those industries.

It is obvious, for example, that the capacity of the iron and steel industry in this country must be increased. It is obvious that we must expand our capacity in petrochemicals, particularly fertilizers. It is obvious from measures already taken by this government, even before this budget, that something has to be done about the construction industry. It is suffering from under-capacity if it is to meet the demands placed on it by the economy. The minister's proposal, to dampen—that is using his word—the expansion of this industry is merely ensuring a continuing build-up of inflationary pressures for the next year or so. The minister has reduced the demand on the construction industry, quite correctly I believe, but he has failed to outline positive policies to increase the supply of skilled manpower which this industry requires.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I want to make three points about the budget for 1966. First, the minister has rejected the concept of a regionally balanced economic development. The Second Annual Review of the Economic Council places great emphasis on the "relative disparity at average levels of income, as they presently exist, among these regions". This report argues that to get full national output "there must be the fullest and most efficient use of human and material resources available in the regions".

Then, too, the minister has rejected the principle of selectivity in industries. During the period of Mr. Howe we had the rise of the aggregate theory. In essence, it was that if the gross national product had risen, everything was all right in the country, and in every part. This was particularly noticeable to us in the tight money period before 1957. There was a rapid expansion in the industrial area; but the tight money policies were applied to every segment of the economy. No wonder those on fixed incomes, the farmers, the fishermen, rejected that philosophy in the elections of 1957 and 1958. Now, the minister is repeating that same mistake, the castor oil treatment.

With the exception of this new forced loan proposal, the minister has rejected new approaches to meet the economic needs of Canada at this particular moment in our development. Before I suggest any new policies to meet this present need, I should like to discuss two points. These two points are regional and selective policies. According to the Economic Council, and I am referring to page 9 of the Second Annual Review, the total economy is still not working at full capacity. If I may quote just the figures for 1965, the actual output of Canada as a percentage of potential was put at 97 per cent in 1965. Six times in the last 20 years Canada has reached 100 per cent or better, and yet we have this castor oil treatment all across the country when we have not even reached our full potential of material and human resources.

• (4:40 p.m.)

However, this percentage, though it is a national one, does not tell the real story or the whole story. There are regions in Canada with tremendous amounts of unused capacity and with tremendous amounts of unused human resources. These are mentioned and may be examined in the 40-odd pages of the Second Annual Review, in Chapter 5.

My conception of one Canada is where each segment of the economy and each area of Canada can have reasonable opportunity to share in the growth of the nation. At present, in certain areas and in certain industries there are inflationary pressures. I warned the government of these pressures last year, but my warnings were ignored. The government last year introduced a general expansionist budget that had no regard for region or industry. The heating up of the economy in 1965 in certain areas has become alarming. The rise in prices to those who have low or marginal incomes is a disaster.

During the last year the Bank of Canada reacted to the inflationary situation by imposing tighter money restrictions. The government at that time put some slight restrictions on some construction. This budget, however, adds several dampers to the economy. In some sections of the country and in some segments of the economy this is helpful. In other areas where we should be encouraging expansion to fully mobilize the nation's resources, it will not be helpful. Checks in these areas have also been imposed.

Let me illustrate some examples. Last year I warned of the danger of lack of plant capacity in the steel complex, in the petrochemical industry and in the pulp and paper industry. During the last year tremendous efforts by private enterprise have been made in the industries to get that extra capacity. I think that today, the first of April, 1966, we can say that the pulp and paper industry has gone over the hump. But there still remains a weakness in the petrochemical industry with respect to fertilizers, despite tremendous efforts this past year to create new plant capacity.

When the world needs our food producing capacity, Mr. Speaker, we are held back by lack of fertilizers. It causes Canadians no joy to know that we may have to import butter; that by 1969 we may have to import beef; to know that perhaps we may not be able to get all our wheat and cheese out to markets. This is a matter of great national loss, and not just a loss to the farming industry. Yet, under the present restrictions, it is going to be hard to get money for the expansion of port facilities, and for the increase of fertilizer production.

Steel, Mr. Speaker, is the heart of our industrial growth. Not many Canadians know how this industry has expanded in the last ten years or so. I do not want to quote the whole table, but I can quote some figures, particularly from 1954. Our production of steel in Canada has risen from 3 million tons in 1954 to 10 million tons in 1965. That can only be described as fantastic growth.

As we increased our production, with the help of a devalued dollar, our imports of steel began to decline from the high point of 2.9 million tons to 1 million tons. Likewise, as we increased our production, our exports began to climb, from 73,000 tons, to 1½ million tons. When one thinks of going from 73,000 tons to 1½ million tons in the period between 1954 and 1964, he can see the tremendous effort undertaken by the industry to compete.

Look at what has happened in the last two or three years. Our production is still rising, and the steel plants are increasing their capacity, but our imports have also begun to rise again. They had reached a high figure of 2.9 million tons, and had gone down to a low of 1 million tons. In the last three years they have climbed from 1 million to 3 million tons. Also, our exports which were climbing, stopped in 1965, and have dropped from 1½ million tons approximately to 1 million tons.

I know a little about the problems of the industry. All I can say is that these figures indicate to me that there are pressures of an inflationary sort. With the dampening effect of the new budget there will be no encouragement to the industry to expand. The result will be that this will cause higher prices in future, because it is well known that the production of the steel complex is basic to the whole pricing system.

The construction industry is a special case, and I shall not have time to deal with it unless I go a little faster. What has happened, Mr. Speaker, indicates to me that the minister is making the same mistake that previous ministers have made, namely the application of tight money, and also the placing of restrictions on all industries and on all areas, regardless of the need to do so. This is the castor oil type of program that defeated the government of 1957, and that may well bring the present government down to defeat.

I should like to conclude with mentioning some new policies which may be helpful. First, I ask why does the government not use the restrictive items of the budget on a selective basis, industry by industry, and region by region? For example, if it is agreed that the steel industry needs more expansion, why not exempt that industry from forced loans, new capital cost allowances permit cost allowances, etc., in order to stimulate it? Also, if it is agreed that we need more fertilizer plants, why not exempt that type of industry until the necessary changes are made, or until the necessary expansion has taken place. If it is agreed that we urgently need more facilities at our ports in order to export our wheat, our potash, coal, paper, copper as well as other manufactured products, why not exempt the expansion of those facilities until the proper point is reached? It is agreed that in any region or subregion there are unused material resources, or unused manpower resources, why not exempt expansion in those areas? Those are just some of the examples of what I call applying restrictions on a basis of selectivity by region, and by industry.

Second, I should like to propose temporary manpower policies, or, as I like to call them, peaking policies for labour. It is clear to me that, as an inflationary pressure, the single greatest shortage we have today is the shortage of skilled workers in our large metropolitan areas, and in some remote areas. Long-range policies involving education, immigration, retraining of workers, and so on, must go forward. In the meantime let us utilize the reserves of manpower available, which manpower may not be now used, for elementary reasons.

Let me give an example. There is a shortage of nurses in the service field. Yet there are thousands of trained nurses out of the work force, who stay out for various reasons. The obvious reason is that they are married, and must stay at home to look after their children. Surely there could be arrangements made whereby older persons go into the homes of nurses to look after the children, and the homes, so that the nurses may be released for their own work. If a nurse has to go out she has to pay someone to look after her home, her children, and that means paying an experienced housewife. Surely a voluntary registration made under the aegis of the National Employment Service would come up with the fact that many people would be willing to go into nurses' homes to relieve them, and relieve the situation.

The program could be started or stopped at will. That is why I refer to it as a peaking policy to be used at times of pressure on manpower resources.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Any program that is started having regard to nurses can be started in relation to other fields. Another example could be the employees who are needed to work in factories. In some union contracts workers are required to retire at a certain age, and they cannot work after that. Surely we should ask the unions to join with the provincial governments, with management and, yes, with the federal tax collector, to work out some temporary arrangement to bring back these older skilled workers, to allow them to fill in for sick employees, to fill in during holidays, and even during periods of shortage of labour. By this means, productivity could be increased at no great cost and there would be a consequent reduction in the threat of inflation. I could give other examples. Let me conclude by saying that in the United States 40 per cent of the women between 25 and 45 are in the labour force. The Canadian figure is 34 per cent. Here is a reserve of available human resources, people who would like to help if they were asked to do so.

Another point I wish to make in a positive policy has to do with a policy on saving. I have figures to show that Canada is the most saving nation in the world: Yet we are short of capital. We have forced people to buy retirement pensions; we have given them incentives to buy retirement pensions. Is it not about time we gave incentives to people to own property and equity shares in the industries of this country? Suppose there were exemptions from income tax in the amount of $200, $300 or $500 in respect of investment in equity ownership. Think what relief from inflationary pressure the additional investment would bring and what a help it would be to people to have a type of savings which would grow with the country and help offset rising costs.

Perhaps we could go further and say that succession duty should not apply to that part of an estate which involves equity ownership, so as to encourage people to invest in this nation's growth. I believe the government would be surprised to learn how many individuals there are who do not like these high prices and who wish to play a part in helping the nation. I believe they would enter into a voluntary savings program if they were given some encouragement. I think their numbers would come as a surprise to those in the Department of Finance and elsewhere who say our people will not save.

We underestimate continually the willingness of the people to participate in the affairs of this nation. I have many other things I should like to say, but I see I have used up my time and I shall only—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the house might give consent to allowing the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) to continue until five o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton: Thank you. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) suggested it was about time we brought the Gordon Royal Commission report up to date. It is out of date. I had hoped that as a result of the amendments ot the Combines Investigation Act and as a result of the budget provision in 1961 by which 150 per cent write-off provisions were made available to industry for research, that the great companies of Canada would have joined together to keep the Gordon report up to date as a service to the country and to themselves.

One of my personal disappointments was that we did not follow through and complete what we tried to do between 1957 and 1961 when we spent four years getting ready for the Resources for Tomorrow conference, which laid down the direction in which governments and private enterprise should move in making maximum use of renewable resources. The next step was to hold a conference on human resources. We have wasted these past five years. Had we held such a conference we would now have before us clear guidance as to the means of utilizing the capacity of those thousands of people who are today willing to serve our country, and who lack only the leadership to bring them into the work force where they can serve usefully.

The idea that people are handicapped or useless when they are over 65 years of age is altogether wrong. Their potential usefulness is tremendous. If we could employ these people in trouble spots to help us meet the shortage of skilled labour there would be no need to employ the restrictive devices which are used in the present budget. As I say, I think the country would have been well served had this conference on human resources been held. We made it a commitment in 1962. I hope somebody will take up this request and carry it forward, because we do need to marshall all our human resources, so that they are ready to help this nation at any time necessary.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): I am sure the Minister of Finance was gratified the other night to hear the enthusiastic applause from the opposition benches as various measures were brought forward in his budget for this coming year. I should like to join in this applause from the government side of the house and congratulate the minister on his excellent presentation.

Mr. Churchill: We applauded only one thing.

Mr. Walker: It was very good. When further measures come up, I suggest the applause will be even more sustained, as a realization of what the budget actually means seeps through.

We all understand that at this time in Canada's economic life firmness, control and a sense of confidence in the management of the country is something for which the people are looking, and something they have found in this budget.

I have other matters to discuss and I shall certainly not cover them by five o'clock. May I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MacINNIS—REJECTIONS OF QUESTIONS FOR ORDER PAPER

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege occasioned by a note which was delivered to my office and in which your advice was given?

Today I placed before the Clerk of the House two questions for the order paper. In order to explain my question of privilege I should like to read those questions. The first was as follows:

1. Did the present Minister of National Health and Welfare make a public statement prior to November 8, 1965, to the effect (a) that a new wharf would be constructed at St. Peters to facilitate the loading of pulpwood and (b) that an item would be included in the 1966-67 estimates for this purpose?

2. Did the minister make a similar statement to the Richmond municipal council in February?

3. Why has such an item not been included in the 1966-67 estimates?

4. When does the government anticipate tenders will be called for this project?

The second question is as follows:

1. Did the present Minister of National Health and/or the Minister of Fisheries make a public statement or announcement prior to November 8, 1965, to the effect that a $150,000.00 expansion would be under way at the Lindloff Fish Hatchery, Richmond County, Nova Scotia, during the spring and summer of 1966?

2. If so, has work on this project begun? If not, when will it begin?

● (5:00 p.m.)

My question of privilege arises from correspondence just delivered by hand to my office, and the particular letter I refer to reads as follows:

April 1st, 1966.

Dear Mr. MacInnis:

I regret the necessity of returning the two attached questions for the Order Paper which you handed to me this afternoon.

I have discussed both these questions with His Honour, the Speaker, and I have been instructed by Mr. Lamoureux to indicate to you that it is his opinion that they contravene recent rulings made in the house with respect to the form in which questions should be placed.

It is His Honour's opinion that it is not in order to make inquiries of a minister in areas other than those covered by his administrative responsibilities.

My question of privilege arises out of a long standing practice that ministers, unless they designate otherwise, in speaking outside the House of Commons are speaking for the government. It is directly related to the ministers to whom the questions were addressed, namely the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud).

I would direct your attention, Sir, to the second question I placed on record, where I said, "the Minister of National Health and Welfare and/or the Minister of Fisheries" pertaining to a matter directly under the responsibility and jurisdiction of the Minister of Fisheries. My questions have now been ruled out of order by the same process by which questions I asked during orders of the day over the last several weeks were ruled out of order, namely that it is not the minister's responsibility.

Apparently, sir, I have been labouring under a misapprehension because seemingly government ministers can go outside the house and make any or all statements they wish without accepting responsibility. However, I do not think I have been wrong in interpreting government responsibility and ministerial responsibility in these cases.

Therefore I firmly suggest, with all due respect to you, sir, that the rulings on the particular questions I put forward today give me a bona fide question of privilege to press for answers from the ministers who made these statements, since the statements were made without any indication that they were not speaking on behalf of the government, and especially with respect to the second question where I stipulated, "and/or the Minister of Fisheries" who is directly responsible in this particular field.

The ruling that has been given today is a carryover from questions asked on orders of the day, and I say to you, sir, it is not in keeping with the practice that has been followed throughout the years that ministers making statements outside the house should be held responsible for them.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) that I do not want to discriminate in any way against him. The questions that he sought to place on the order paper were perhaps borderline to some extent, but I did feel they were an attempt, bona fide I am sure, to contravene the ruling which I made a few days ago, in which I firmly believe, and in which I believe I have been reinforced by the studies I have made in recent days of the situation in past months, and, I should say, in past years.

I realize that ministers should be held accountable in some way for statements they make outside the house, but my understanding of the rules and the practice—and there are a number of precedents on this—is that the Prime Minister can be asked whether a statement of policy made outside the house by a cabinet minister does in fact reflect the policy of the government. In this way the minister can be held accountable for a statement of policy which he makes outside, or indeed inside, the house.

I still feel today just as strongly as I did a few days ago that it should not be the policy in the house that ministers be asked to answer questions, whether written questions or verbal questions, in any capacity other than in their official capacities. While considering this matter in recent days it was brought to my attention—and I must say I understood this—that in some instances certain ministers are given areas of responsibility. For example, I might say that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) in the present government is given, by acknowledgement on the part of the government, that portion of government responsibility in the realm of transport, is asked questions in that regard, and is expected to answer questions about the Department of Transport although he is not the Minister of Transport.

What I fear is that if we were to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, which may have been followed in some instances—I appreciate that—we would have questions asked perhaps every day of ministers of the Crown, say, of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) in his capacity as minister for eastern Ontario—

Mr. Knowles: For Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker:—and that he would answer a question on agriculture in his capacity as minister of agriculture for eastern Ontario; and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) might be asked a question on external affairs in his capacity as minister from British Columbia. If that were done it seems to me we would be reaching a situation which would make it impossible to determine with any kind of logic, how questions would be put, whom they would be addressed to, and who would be responsible for answering.

When there is any doubt about who is responsible, I suggest to hon. members that questions in such instances should be directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), who has a general responsibility. This is what I said at the outset of my remarks, that if there is any statement of policy made outside the house by a cabinet minister, an hon. member who is dissatisfied with the statement and wants to seek additional information, should direct his query to the Prime Minister.

I regret very much that in so far as the particular questions to which the hon. member refers are concerned, I cannot really accept the contention that he has placed before me in his question of privilege, and I assure him that any particular question he places to the Chair, or that he wishes to put through the Chair, will be looked at individually. I can assure him I shall study them as objectively as I can without prejudice of objectively as I can without prejudice of any type or any nature.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, if I might, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a misapprehension here about the nature of these questions and the interpretation that you are placing on them. If ministers can go abroad and make promises and give undertakings, they do so under the principle that the cabinet is responsible for the statements made. Surely there is no way in which a minister can be held responsible for making effusive utterances for political purposes, and promises that are not intended to be carried into effect, unless questions are asked later, else they are given an aura of responsibility to which they are not entitled.

I suggest, sir, you review this matter because otherwise a minister can make any statement, any promise, so long as he is not making it for his own department, and then be above questioning in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: I am in agreement with the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). I do not want to take a hard and fast position on this. I realize that in some instances some of these questions can be borderline, and I feel whenever there is any doubt an hon. member should be given the benefit of the doubt and allowed to ask these questions. In all such instances members should be given the benefit of the doubt and be allowed to ask their questions. I am quite prepared to review the general situation, and in particular the questions to which the hon. member for Cape Breton South has referred. But I would like to restate my position so far as the general principle is concerned, and I shall review the situation over the week end.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have one further word, Mr. Speaker, in connection with your remarks in respect to the questions I placed before the Clerk of the House this afternoon. The remarks you have made quite possibly could apply to the first question if we were to follow the rulings that had been given. However, I would call your attention to the fact that the second question was directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and/or the Minister of Fisheries, and under no circumstances could this particular question be ruled out, unless there was something particularly wrong with the wording.

Mr. Speaker: This is where virtue may come in allowing one and refusing the other; but I shall certainly look into the matter and I appreciate the hon. member's concern about the situation. I can assure him I shall give his representations, and those which have been made by the Leader of the Opposition, every possible consideration.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I just want to go back for a moment and review precedents in the house—

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can assure the hon. member that, with the assistance of the Clerk at the table, I already have had an opportunity to look into a great number of precedents. I am sure I am aware of the precedents which the hon. member might wish to bring to my attention, and at the time of making my decision I will take those into account.

It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on todays' order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH THE SENATE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-15, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (abolition of the Senate).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to abolish the Senate. I realized, when I was given the opportunity to do this in private members' hour today, that it might be difficult to achieve this object in 60 minutes. I now find we have only about 47 minutes, so it will be that much more difficult.

The bill itself, Mr. Speaker, is one which most hon. members have seen on previous occasions, because this is not the first time I have introduced it. Indeed, my arguing for the abolition of the Senate goes back over a period of many years.

The terms of the bill are such that they would amend the British North America Act by striking out those sections which establish the Senate and all those sections which refer to it. However, there are one or two places in the British North America Act where we would need to retain some mention of the Senate, because of certain cross-references. The most notable instance of this is the section in the British North America Act which provides that no province of Canada is to have fewer members in the House of Commons than it has members in the Senate. My bill takes care of this by providing that in future no province would have in the House of Commons fewer members than it had in the Senate just prior to the abolition of the upper house.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill is not being presented in the context of recent appointments to the other place. Public opinion about those appointments already has expressed itself in various ways. It is not presented out of special concern over the amount of money which it costs to maintain the upper house; neither is it presented in relation to anything the Senate has done or failed to do in recent months. I present it, if I may do so, in an academic sense; I present it on the basis of an appeal to the common sense of Canadians.

May I put it this way: If we in this House of Commons, or we as Canadians who happen to be here in this House of Commons, were called upon to draft a constitution for democratic government for the people of Canada, I do not know the details of the constitution we might produce, but I am reasonably certain we would start with the principle of democracy. I am reasonably certain we would stick with that principle; we would say that the main thing we should provide would be that the people who would govern the country would be elected by the people themselves.

I submit that, if we worked out provisions for election machinery, somehow bringing together in this capital city 200 or 300 members to represent the people, formulate their laws and provide for their government, having done so we would not then take the further step of providing for some one man to appoint a body of another 100 people, non-elected, who would have the authority to veto the decisions of the elected representatives. Is that not precisely what we have in the kind of parliament we have now?

We have this body, the House of Commons, elected by the people of Canada. Not only are we elected by them, but we are responsible back to them. We are here for only a limited period, following which we have to go back to the people who sent us here. On the basis of that authority—on the basis of our having been elected to act—we have the right to make the laws for the people of this country, to speak for them, and to provide, by our support or otherwise of the executive, for the government of this country. Yet we have as part of our constitution a provision for up to 102 men and women, not elected but appointed by the Prime Minister, who have practically all the authority or powers we have and, indeed, have the power to veto the decisions made in this house.

Mr. Leboe: None of them would be elected.

Mr. Knowles: I say, Mr. Speaker, apart from the kind of interest that mention of the Senate always produces, as has been reflected by the interjection of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe), that this does not reflect common sense, it does not reflect responsible government and it does not reflect the principles of democracy. I think we should take a good hard look at the fact of our parliament's including a body which is not elected by the people of Canada.

I know in this country we tend to take the Senate for granted; it is part of our life. We have snow in the winter and taxes in the spring, and they have rain in Vancouver; these are just facts of Canadian life. So, the Senate is taken that way. However, I say, if we look at it in terms of political theory and in terms of common sense, in my view there just is not any place for a body that is part of parliament, which has all the powers we have, and yet is not responsible to the people of Canada. When a person is put in the Senate he may make mistakes, as members elected to this house may make mistakes; but if a member here makes a mistake he has to go back to his people in the next election.

On the other hand, if you make a mistake in the other place, you stay there—previously it was for life—until age 75. If you go there at age 35 or 40 you have a good many years in which to make mistakes, without any responsibility back to the people of this country. So it is on this basis, namely that common sense makes no provision for such an institution, that I think we should take steps to abolish it and provide for a parliament of Canada consisting, as the principal clause of my bill suggests of the Queen and the House of Commons.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Some members may ask how we are to achieve this objective if it is a worthy one, as I think it is. I recognize that problems are involved. To do this I think we have to achieve an amendment to the British North America Act, but I believe under section 91 (1) we do have the power in the Parliament of Canada to amend the B.N.A. Act in respect of matters that are federal.

I recognize that to get such a bill passed by parliament, as it is now constituted, would require the approval of this house and the approval of the other place as well. If we pass this bill between now and six o'clock I do not imagine the senators will, with any expedition, set out to approve of our action. This is going to take time, but it seems to me that the time can and will come when, the House of Commons in the name of the people having asked for the abolition of that body that is not elected, that other body will have to take a pretty good look at itself. It may turn us down the first time, but if the House of Commons has taken this stand and goes back to the people, making it one of the issues of an election, and the people vote for the return of the government of the parliament that wants to abolish the Senate, then I think that moral and legal authority would prevail, and that the House of Commons would be able to take action along this line.

As a matter of fact, this has been made very easy for us by the government on the other side of the house as the result of the attitude taken toward Mr. Lesage's request regarding the upper house in Quebec, although I understand that matter is still in the works. However, I am freely admitting that there is a legal and constitutional problem, while at the same time I am suggesting that this can be done and that common sense calls for us to face up to this problem and do something about it at an early date.

May I now just briefly—because I do want to leave time for others to support this bill—deal with two or three of the arguments that are advanced in favour of our having a Senate. There are those who say we need it so it can give sober second thought to the things that are done in the House of Commons, so that it can review our legislation and check hastily passed or ill-conceived measures. In all frankness, Mr. Speaker, I must ask this question: Why should another body of non-elected people, responsible to no one, have the right to throw out things that we pass in this House of Commons? If we make mistakes, the people to whom we are answerable are not 102 individuals who are not responsible to anybody, but rather to the electors at the next election.

I think this whole idea of a body of non-elected elder statesmen—they are not all elder statesmen now; some are a bit younger, but they are still in the same category of non-elected people—having the right to throw out what we have done in this house is politically and morally wrong.

Another argument advanced in favour of the other place is that it is needed to protect minorities. I do not know what minorities have been protected by the other place, provincial, ethnic or otherwise. I suggest that the place where minorities in this country get their best protection is in the courts or right here in the House of Commons, where you have people who, as I say, have to go back to those same minorities and win their seats at the next election.

Another argument advanced for the retention of the Senate is that it sets up committees that do good work. I quite agree that it has set up a number of committees in recent years that have worked hard on various subjects and have produced some good reports. It is a good idea for us to have people to whom we can assign the job of making surveys, carrying out studies and performing research, but we should do this by setting up commissions or committees to do specific jobs. There is no reason why the people to whom we assign these jobs should be at the same time fully paid on a year-round, lifetime or up to age 75 basis, who have the same legislative authority that we have, in the right to veto the things which are passed in this House of Commons.

There is a place for royal commissions, for research and for inquiries into specific subjects, but let us appoint experts to do that kind of job, and let their appointments be in respect of specific jobs. I do not think these people should at the same time, along with their right to investigate subjects, have the right to veto what we do in the House of Commons.

I know some members will ask why I keep referring to the use of the veto since the Senate does not use it very often. The number of times in history that the Senate has rejected something from this house can be counted on the fingers of one hand, but the power to do so is there and this is a power in excess of the power of the House of Lords in Great Britain, and it is a power in excess of the power of either house against the other in a set-up like that at Washington. The power is there and the Senate can use it year in and year out to veto a piece of legislation that we might pass.

Another argument which is advanced is that it is desirable in a country such as ours to have some means of bestowing honour upon people who have served during their day and rendered particular service to their country. I think there is a place for this, but the Senate is hardly used for that in any discriminating fashion.

Mr. Churchill: Such as services performed during an election campaign?

Mr. Knowles: That seems to be one of the services for which you receive the honour of being appointed to the Senate.

I believe our universities do a better job of honouring people when they bestow honorary degrees. There are other areas of our life where honours are much more appropriately given, so this is not a good argument for the retention of the Senate.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I have tried to discuss this question today, not in the context of some of the feelings which exist about the Senate. If I had brought down my file of letters, which I have received regarding the Senate, particularly in the last few weeks since certain appointments have been made, this would have produced interesting reading but a different kind of debate. I am asking members to look at this issue, not out of any feeling against any particular Senator over there, or any particular prime minister for the kind of appointments he has made, but in light of what is good for a political democracy and for representative government, which we believe we ought to have in this country.

There are those who suggest that the Senate should be reformed. That has been the cry since 1867. Every prime minister who has tried to reform it has failed, and the methods of reform we have had lately have hardly improved it. I think we should look squarely at it as something not to be reformed, but to be done away with entirely.

There are those who say we should elect our Senators. I suppose that would be better than having them appointed; but I submit that parliamentary government has got along just as well in Manitoba and Nova Scotia without the upper houses that those provinces had at the beginning of their histories. I submit that with all of the strains that we now have in Canada between the federal parliament and the provincial legislatures, between and among our various provinces, it would be just a little too much to have one more strain, namely a conflict between two elected houses which would have, in some sense, equal moral authority, which does not obtain at the present moment.

If the Senate were an elected body, I think it would be in the nature of a fifth wheel, adding nothing to our governmental or parliamentary machinery. For these reasons I believe that we should look seriously at the whole question of whether or not we should keep the other house. It is in this spirit that I have presented this bill today. I have tried not to indulge in personalities or in some of those things we say when we talk about the other place. I ask everyone to look at this bill in terms of what is good for representative parliamentary democracy.

In my opinion it would be better if all those who have a say in the laws which are passed in this country were themselves elected representatives, as they are in this House of Commons. For that reason I ask members to support this proposal for the abolition of the other place.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder whether the hon. member will permit me to ask a question, without indicating that I am for or against this bill? Has he considered whether or not the power which resides in the Senate might usefully be used for the protection of the rights of the people, if the growing power of the executive in this country were used to the disadvantage of the liberties of the people?

Mr. Knowles: I recognize the problem my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has raised, namely the contest between the executive and parliament. I think the place for the contest to be resolved is right here, between the executive and the elected House of Commons. I think we will have even more problems if, as against the authority of the members of parliament speaking for the people, we have two bodies, namely the executive here and the Senate over in the other place. I recognize the problem he has raised, but I think the use of the Senate to resolve that problem would be futile.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to discuss this evening the matter of our political institutions. As we know, in recent months—in fact, in recent years—the political institutions of this country have come in for some severe criticism. I must say, although I suppose it casts a reflection on some of those who are observers of our political institutions, there has been a noticeable lack of any in-depth analysis of the political institutions of this country. I believe this is unfortunate because I feel that those outside parliament could do more than they are doing to shape and inform public opinion on this very important matter.

We are discussing specifically this evening one aspect of our political institutions, namely the Senate. I think however that in this discussion we ought to bear in mind that our political institutions generally were taken 100 years ago from England. The ideals of parliamentary democracy in England and as they have been developed here are indeed very laudable. I believe however that one is not at all unpatriotic in saying that there may be some serious questions which Canadians ought to be asking about the function of our parliamentary institutions. After all, these institutions in our country were formulated and devised in a unitary state and have been adopted in a federal state which has great regional diversity, and the further complication of being bilingual. Perhaps one of the major weaknesses of our political institutions is that they do not permit an ample and proper reflection of this regional diversity in our country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about the reform or abolition of one segment of our political institutions, really the more serious and pressing question is their analysis in depth. There are two reasons for my finding it difficult to agree with the hon. member who has introduced this bill. One is that if we are to do what he asks today, I think we would not be accomplishing very much in terms of what needs to be accomplished in reforming and re-examining our whole parliamentary institution.

While this particular matter may be distasteful and offend the principles of democracy as espoused by the hon. member, I believe it is an academic question. I recognize the importance of his arguments but nevertheless feel that because of other practical difficulties, if we allow his distaste to linger a little longer, a man with his knowledge of the rules of this house, his love for parliament and perhaps his agitation in this matter, may be helpful to those on all sides of the house who would like to see reform in a more meaningful sense in our partiamentary institutions. This is one of the main reasons I find it difficult to support the hon. member's bill.

I shall deal with that matter a little later, but I would point out that one feature of the hon. member's bill makes it impossible for me to give it my support. However, Mr. Speaker, I will return to that subject in a moment because it is a very important matter that I do not believe has been discussed. Perhaps I may mention it now. One of the arguments that is used—and I have read the debate that occurred on April 6 two years ago on this matter—was the constitutional guarantees given to the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia in relation to the number of members they shall have in this house. I would inform the house, for those who are not aware of the situation, that in my view this is no longer a practical matter because some very serious anomalies are apt to develop, particularly in regard to members of parliament from the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and particularly Newfoundland.

At the present time the province of New Brunswick is guaranteed 10 members because that is equal to the number it has in the other place. The province of New Brunswick has not been one of our more rapidly growing provinces in terms of population. The province of Newfoundland, which has been one of our more rapidly growing provinces in terms of population, is guaranteed seven members. However, Mr. Speaker—and I have given this matter some study—it is probable that in the next census the growth rate of this province will be fourth in Canada, and consequently it will lose a seat in the House of Commons and will have only six members.

At the same time, in relation to the province of New Brunswick, its population will have increased to such a point that on the basis of the actual population in the province, applying the same divisor as to the province of Newfoundland, it will be entitled to eight members. I believe this is a terrible inequity and I am surprised that the learned member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not realize this when he introduced that clause in his bill. For this reason I cannot support the hon. member's bill and I suppose no Newfoundland or Manitoba member could support it, because the province of Manitoba would find itself in a very embarrassing position if this bill were passed.

I am glad the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is here when I oppose his bill because I would not want any member of my party to be able to go into his province and say about this man who can do so much for parliamentary reform, "You have less members in the House of Commons today because of a bill introduced and passed in that house by your own esteemed member." I assure you, Mr. Speaker, this is my sincere motivation in opposing this bill.

The rate of growth of Manitoba's population is at the present time much the same as the province of Newfoundland. What will happen? Perhaps it will take two censuses to establish this pattern, but Manitoba will begin to lose members in this house at a time when they may have a population almost twice as great as that of New Brunswick. I think this would be a terrible situation.

I believe I have illustrated this great weakness in the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and hope that at some future date when the bill is re-introduced he will have redrafted it. In doing so he would perhaps be performing a service if he could find a formula to remove the inequity that I suggest would occur with regard to the growth patterns of this great country.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cashin: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member willing to enlist the services of his colleague the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) and others in drafting an appropriate amendment?

Mr. Cashin: With regard to anything that will be for the good of Newfoundland and Manitoba—because they are both notorious provinces in regard to their members—I would enlist the support of any member of this house to help the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in drafting a bill. I was not aware that he needed such help because I believed that was an oversight on his part. However, Mr. Speaker, if there is one man who can give the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sound advice, it is the very distinguished member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As I have mentioned, this is a very serious weakness in the bill. We should consider the reasons for instituting the other place as they were enumerated in 1867. Perhaps one reason—it is not the most prominent one but I am sure it was in the minds of the legislators at that time—was the idea that we should have the same kind of system in Canada as they had in the United Kingdom. It is a pity that we, in Canada, have not been able to bring about the changes in our system that they have been able to bring about in the United Kingdom. One of the changes brought about in the House of Lords has been referred to, but they have also brought about some meaningful changes in the House of Commons, far beyond anything we have been able to accomplish here.

This is another reason for my opposition to this bill. I should like to see the energies of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) devoted to this more important problem. There is another reason to which reference has been made by the hon. member, and that is the protection of minorities, the sort of guarantee of territorial equality for the maritimes or Upper and Lower Canada. If these guarantees of territorial equality had not been given at the time of confederaion, then it is quite probable the maritimes and Lower Canada would not have federated.

I have just illustrated, I think, that these guarantees are no longer practical today. While they may, in effect, give guarantees to certain provinces of Canada they do so to the jeopardy of the smaller provinces. It is understood by some of the smaller provinces that, in relation to Ontario and Quebec as well as other larger provinces, they should have less members, but this is distateful to Manitoba and Newfoundland. In that sense, if this reason for territorial equality no longer exists, then before we do anything about Senate reform we should get that particular clause amended.

There has been a discussion over a period of years, off and on, of the suggestion that we ought to have reform of the other place. It seems to me that reform of the other place would not now be very attractive to hon. members of this house, nor indeed would it be attractive to the country generally because of the fact, as was pointed out by the hon. member, the other place possesses such powers. I suggest, therefore, to hon. members that since we do have the situation in which the other place possesses a great deal of power which it does not use, our only interest in taking the drastic step of abolishing the other place is really of academic interest. If we were to pass this bill today, we would find we have a lot of things to work out.

I do not believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has really thought through this problem. I see the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) in the house. I am sure that in any discussion of reform of the other place we would have the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart) crossing party lines and tackling both myself and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We would have questions of regional interest, the interests of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, which would of course be predominant over the political interests of these two distinguished gentlemen. So, too, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I would be allied on the other side of the question.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I ask a question in order to assist the hon. gentleman? Was Newfoundland aware of this disparity when she came into confederation?

Mr. Cashin: I think at the time Newfoundland came into confederation, this was not an issue. Perhaps the first time it has really been made an issue in Canadian politics, in a formal sense, has been in the introduction of this bill.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a queston? Does he not realize that the clause in my bill about which he is talking is merely carrying forward something that has been in the British North America Act for 50 years? It is not something which is being introduced today.

Mr. Cashin: Yes, but it is a situation with which I do not agree. I do not believe any Newfoundlander or Manitoban could agree with it. I am quite serious about this. At the next redistribution, we are going to make an issue of it.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit one more question? Has he not put his finger on the point? The major purpose of this bill is to get rid of the Senate, but the matter with which my friend is dealing relates to distribution and may be dealt with at the next redistribution.

Mr. Cashin: Whether or not the hon. gentleman is getting rid of the Senate, I think he is perpetuating an unpleasant situation. I think his bill could be drafted in a much better way.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I think his time is just about up, but I want to ask him this question. It is sometimes suggested that one of the better purposes performed by the Senate is that it permits a prime minister a good deal of flexibility in reshaping his cabinet. I can ask this question of the hon. member for St. John's West without, I hope, inviting too political an answer. I thought of addressing the question to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but I did not dare to do so. Is there some validity in this argument?

Mr. Cashin: Perhaps in certain instances; but I do not think it is of such prime importance, at least to the hon. member for St. John's West, as to be dealt with further at this time.

In conclusion, I should like to say, as I said at the beginning, that I like the opportunity to talk about our institutions. I appreciate the sincere interest of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in reform generally. While there are indeed some anomalies in the other place, I really do not see that any purpose would be accomplished by reform at the present time. So long as it exists in its present form, particularly at a time when there is a great deal of criticism of parliament generally, we could serve a better purpose by having a discussion of some of the fundamentals.

I recall some views of my colleague, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough, when he referred to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as holding some congressional-like views. I think, in this case, the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough is being a bit of a traditionalist. However, this could be the subject of debate on another day. In such a debate I would find myself agreeing with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit just one more question? Does he favour the abolition or the retention of the Senate?

Mr. Cashin: I favour a thorough-going reform of parliamentary institutions. I think that we cannot approach part of the problem without looking at the over-all problem. If we are prepared to have a meaningful and in-depth analysis of our institutions, then I am prepared to examine all points of view. I think there is a very good case to be made out for the statement that our institutions in this country are not as effective at this time as they should be. I decry much of the criticism of our institutions which deals in personalities. I think that this is superficial. I do feel that we really have not gone into these matters in depth, and I would welcome the opportunity of doing that and listening to the views of one of the more informed members of the house, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to support the bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) because long before I came to the house, I felt that if a referendum were held throughout the country, 95 per cent of the people would be in favour of abolishing the Senate. That is the question of the day. We are no longer in 1887 but in 1966 and we should get in step with the modern world.

I understand that today this body is not suited to take a vote. On the other hand, a vote should be taken on that bill and I wish most of the young members were here and the older ones, who keep hoping to go to that dormitory for a rest, could be put aside. I wish the young members were here to discuss frankly our modern government.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the great majority of the young members would be in favour of abolishing the Senate completely.

It would be one of the main reforms to make in our parliamentary system because, especially in view of the way appointments are made today, we have always considered the Senate a little as a cemetery of fossils. If only members who worked hard in politics, who devoted themselves to politics, were sent there, or even better, instead of being sent there, they should be paid a good pension and allowed to end their days among their family. But we force them to sit there. Old people of 75, 78, and 80 years old can be seen there. It is inhuman to keep old people there. Let us give them their pension and send them to rest quietly at home.

Today, more than that is done. Among the appointees are political organizers who never sat in this house, small politicians, not old but in the prime of life. They are sent to sit there and that is the greatest scandal of modern times, especially if you consider the appointments which have just been made and how they were received by the people. The public is disgusted.

Admittedly, an old man could be sent there to rest but sending a man in the prime of life there to sleep is to sacrifice him. And if he lived to be 80? That is why we support the complete abolition of that body.

The previous speaker said that it was an academic question. When I look at this, it is much more than an academic question. It is an economic question. We should not consider it only from an academic standpoint but ask ourselves how much we could save by abolishing that place, and that would be quite an amount.

Now, if only the legislation governing the Senate were improved so that senators would have to be elected by the people, like it is done in some countries.

If they want to look after public affairs and continue to legislate for the people, then they should go before the people.

For all those reasons and many others—this is such an interesting subject that it would take at least 15 days of discussion to say all we have to say—we shall vote for this bill.

When I see an hon. member who is getting on in years, I respect him. He has marvellous ideas. One always thinks of one's last resting place. But when I see a young one like the previous speaker arguing for the retention of the Senate, I am wondering if he does not have somebody to switch him there, if you will pardon the expression.

Mr. Speaker, even if someone wanted to send me there, I would not go, because I am too active in life. I want to keep my freedom and, at the age of 55 or 60, I want to be home, peacefully watching over my business; that is all. I do not want to lose valuable time in the Senate.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I strongly support Bill C-18, like all members of my party.

I do not wish to speak any longer, because I realize we have only three minutes left and I ask all hon. members to take the vote on this bill.

[English]

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity of talking out this bill this evening because had I not risen in my place to see this bill through six o'clock, the Senate I am sure would no longer have existed on the morrow. I certainly hope that my party and my Prime Minister will see fit to reward me for this service to the other place in a way in which they would not otherwise be able to reward me had I chosen to stay in my place.

I want to say that the argument of my hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was ably presented in this house, but being an abolitionist, it appears he also wishes to abolish the Senate. I commend to him that he look again at the old institution, so that when this bill is again reached in the order of public bills, we can debate this question perhaps a little differently.

Also, there are in the library some good books about the Senate. I commend to the hon. member the use of the library. I see him there often. I commend to him a book entitled: "The Modern Senate of Canada", by F. A. Kunz, published by the University of Toronto Press. I commend to him page 368 particularly. Also, in that book he will find many anecdotes, incidents and references respecting the old members of the old C.C.F. and New Democratic Party which have sat in the house over the course of the years. In the book are given pages of Hansard.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deachman: Had I been going to speak longer on the subject I should have brought with me stories going back to 1926 with which to regale the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour for consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 4, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HATE LITERATURE

TABLING OF REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I wish to table the report, in English and French, of the special committee on hate propaganda in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to table the document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT OF DEFAMATORY LIBEL DEFINITION TO INCLUDE HATE LITERATURE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford) moved leave to introduce Bill No. C-164, to amend the Criminal Code (group defamatory libel).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to enlarge the definition of defamatory libel, as it appears in the Criminal Code, to include hate literature. Because such literature is in many cases the expression of a sick mind, the bill further proposes that any person charged or convicted of publishing such a libel shall be placed under mental observation to determine whether he is mentally ill.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada Assistance Plan, to establish a program for sharing with the provinces in the cost of assistance, including health care and welfare services, provided to or in respect of persons in need, including mothers and children, older persons, disabled persons and unemployed persons who are in need, and in the cost of developing and improving assistance and welfare services programs including child and youth welfare programs throughout Canada; to provide for the making of arrangements for extending provincial welfare programs, with the approval of Indian bands, to Indians with reserve status, and for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of so extending those programs; to provide for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of specialized projects for assisting and rehabilitating persons in need or likely to become persons in need who have unusual difficulty in obtaining or holding employment; to provide for amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act, and the Unemployment Assistance Act that are incidental to or consequential on the introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan; and to provide further for the extension of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

NATIONAL DEFENCE EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCES

Question No. 35—Mr. Allard:

During the fiscal years 1964-65 and 1965-66, excluding the amounts assigned to armament programs, what have been, by provinces, the expenses of the Department of National Defence, including salaries paid to the armed forces and civilian personnel, travelling expenses, food supplies, heating, clothing and other similar items?

[Translation]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

[English]

FEDERAL REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES BY PROVINCES

Question No. 350—Mr. Davis:

1. Taking into account, as between the federal government and the government of British Columbia, all the revenue received by the federal government (including direct taxes, indirect taxes and other revenue) and all expenditures on British Columbia's behalf (including conditional and unconditional grants to institutions and to individuals and expenditures incurred for public works and other purposes and by crown corporations in that province), for the fiscal year 1963-64, how much more, or less, did the federal government spend than it collected in the said province?

Questions

2. What are the comparative figures for each of the remaining provinces in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 432—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many bankruptcies were registered during the years 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965 in (a) Canada (b) Quebec, and (c) in the county of Chapleau?

2. For the same years, what were (a) the total value, and (b) the average value of bankruptcies registered (i) in Canada (ii) in Quebec, and (iii) in the county of Chapleau?

3. Did the government lose a considerable sum of money during these years, on account of loopholes in the Bankruptcy Act and, if so, how much in its opinion has it lost since 1960, and what action is it planning to take in order to remedy this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): 1 and 2:

BANKRUPTCIES REPORTED
CANADA

	Cases Reported	Assets	Liabilities Million $	Deficiency	Average Deficiency $
1960	3,641	79	147	68	18,700
1961	3,511	56	120	64	18,200
1962	4,297	68	138	70	16,300
1963	5,199	92	201	109	21,000
1964	5,562	107	211	104	18,700
	22,210	402	817	415	18,700
1965	5,003
	27,213		Not yet available

BANKRUPTCIES REPORTED
QUEBEC

1960	2,305	30	66	36	15,700
1961	2,044	23	52	29	14,200
1962	2,360	34	81	47	19,900
1963	2,716	44	93	49	18,000
1964	2,832	53	106	53	18,700
	12,257	184	398	214	17,500
1965	2,524		Not yet available
	14,781

Notes: (1) Amounts are shown in millions of dollars as reported by debtors. (2) No separate statistics are available for the electoral district of Chapleau.

3. We have no information to indicate that any money was lost on account of loopholes in the Bankruptcy Act.

[Mr. Davis.]

[English]

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCIES

Question No. 433—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since 1960, how many fraudulent bankruptcies have been discovered annually in (a) Canada (b) Quebec, and (c) the county of Chapleau?

2. What was the amount in dollars each year of these fraudulent bankruptcies in (a) Canada (b) Quebec, and (c) the county of Chapleau?

3. On a per capita average at the national level, how much has each citizen theoretically lost every year since 1960 in connection with these fraudulent bankruptcies?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): 1, 2 and 3. The investigation and the prosecution of offences of a criminal nature that have taken place prior to a bankruptcy are a provincial responsibility within the field of the administration of criminal justice. There are no federal statistics available as to the number of investigations or prosecutions initiated by the provincial authorities and connected with estates in bankruptcy or as to how these estates could have been affected by the offences that might have been uncovered by the provincial authorities.

[English]

CONTRIBUTIONS BY CORPORATIONS TO PORT FACILITIES COST

Question No. 510—Mr. Keays:

1. Since 1956, has the government built wharves or other port facilities at Dalhousie, N.B., Baie Comeau, P.Q., Mont-Louis, P.Q., Black Cape, P.Q., to which public or private corporations have contributed?

2. If so, what were the total costs of the projects?

3. When were the jobs completed and what were the amounts contributed by the corporations?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1, 2 and 3.

Project	Total final cost	Date completed	Amount contributed by corporation
Dalhousie, N.B.
Dredging	$ 20,240.55	1957	50 per cent of cost or $10,120.28 by New Brunswick International Paper Co.
Dredging	14,638.87	1960	50 per cent of cost or $7,219.48 by New Brunswick International Paper Co.
Dredging	25,455.03	1962	50 per cent of cost of dredging Area B, value $18,210.29. New Brunswick International Paper Co. share amounted to $9,105.95.
Harbour facilities	831,995.00	1960	International Paper Co. will pay $100,000 in ten annual payments commencing in 1958.
Harbour improvements	464,711.36	1965	The crown spent $464,711.36 on wharf improvements and $170,891 on dredging. The New Brunswick Mining and Smelting Corporation did not contribute toward the construction of the wharf or dredging. The corporation have advised that they expended on fill area, trackage, car dumper and ship loader an amount of $1,928,000.
Dredging	170,891.00	1963
Baie Comeau, Que.
Dredging	$ 656,656.00	1957	The Canadian British Aluminum Co. Ltd. contributed $328,408.00.
Dredging	621,088.00	1959	The Cargill Grain Company contributed $310,544.00.
Dredging	324,864.00	1961	The Quebec Hydro Electric Commission contributed $143,375.00.
Breakwater	2,014,308.00	1963	The Quebec North Shore Paper Co. contributed $400,000 and the Quebec Department of Lands and Forests contributed $920,000.00.
Extension	215,000.00
Mont Louis, Que.
Wharf	$ 839,619.00	1956-57	In 1957 Gaspe Copper paid the crown the sum of $115,021.22 and agreed to pay the crown the sum of $42,420.50 annually until 1995.
Black Cape, Que.
Wharf	$ 807,679.25 Expenditure to date.	1965	The Bathurst Pulp and Paper Co. agreed to pay 50 per cent of the capital cost of the extension portion of the improvement. An amount of $256,827.59 has been paid by the Bathurst Pulp and Paper Co. to date.

Questions

DELIVERY IN OTTAWA OF WESTERN NEWSPAPERS

Question No. 541—Mr. Pascoe:

1. Is the cancellation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Dominion responsible for the late arrival in Ottawa of western daily newspapers?

2. Can faster mail service for these western newspapers be provided?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. No. The postal service being provided for the delivery of western daily newspapers in Ottawa is at least the equal of that provided when mail was carried on the Dominion.

2. The Post Office Department is now making the best possible use of the existing transportation services.

SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS AND MACHINERY

Question No. 615—Mr. Madill:

1. Would a contract signed June 10, 1963, be subject to the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery which was established on June 13, 1963?

2. By what firms and individuals is this tax remitted to the Department of National Revenue?

3. How does the Department of National Revenue make certain that this sales tax has been applied on building materials and that the tax has been remitted to the department?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Section 10 of the 1963 amendments to the Excise Tax Act makes provision for sales tax relief where a vendor in Canada of building materials and production machinery exempt from sales tax before June 14, 1963, has, prior to that date, entered into a fixed price contract that does not permit him to add the sales tax.

2. Sales tax is remitted on taxable goods manufactured or produced in Canada by licensed manufacturers or licensed wholesalers.

3. Licensed manufacturers and licensed wholesalers are subject to periodic audit by excise tax auditors at which time it is ascertained that the correct amount of sales tax has been remitted to the department on taxable sales of building materials, production machinery and all other taxable products.

*ESCAPE OF PRISONERS FROM COLLINS' BAY PENITENTIARY

Question No. 654—Mr. Alkenbrack:

Has there been a special inquiry into the factors and/or persons contributing to the prison break of three dangerous prisoners from Collins' Bay penitentiary on Wednesday, February 9, 1966, who were later captured near St. Catharines and, if so, will the government report to the house the findings resulting from this inquiry?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is: Pursuant to Section 13 of the Penitentiary Act, the commissioner of penitentiaries has appointed his Honour Judge Harry R. Deyman, county court judge of Peterborough, Ontario, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances surrounding the escape of four inmates from the Collin's Bay penitentiary, in the province of Ontario, on February 9, 1966.

The answer to part 2 is yes.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR FLEUR DE LIS DRIVE, N.S.

Question No. 659—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has the atlantic development board discussed the question of financial assistance to the province of Nova Scotia in the construction of the Fleur de Lis drive and, if so, on what dates was this subject discussed?

2. Has consideration been given by the atlantic development board to the granting of financial assistance to the construction of the Fleur de Lis drive?

3. Has a decision been reached by the Atlantic Development Board to grant assistance for the construction of the Fleur de Lis drive and, if so, how much financial assistance is to be granted?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. Yes, July 5th-7th, 1965; September 30th, 1965.

2. Yes, but only within the context of a possible program of tourist road development in the whole Atlantic region.

3. No.

INCOME TAX DIRECTOR, ROUYN, QUE.

Question No. 729—Mr. Caouette:

1. Who has been director of the income tax office in Rouyn from 1960 to date?

2. Has this person been transferred to another area and, if so, where?

3. Who was appointed to replace him in Rouyn?

4. Is French the mother tongue of the new director?

5. Is he bilingual?

6. Had the civil service among its ranks a French Canadian to head an income tax office covering an area with 9 per cent French speaking population?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Mr. L. T. Merleau.

2. Yes. Quebec city.

3. Mr. T. E. Weldon.

4. No.

5. Yes.

6. The position was filled through the competitive process open to all employees of the taxation division who could speak French.

CHINESE AMNESTY PROGRAM

Question No. 747—Mr. Wahn:

As at December 31, 1965, how many persons have lost their status as Canadian citizens as a result of filing adjustment statements pursuant to the Chinese amnesty program?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): None.

Persons who entered Canada as immigrants, who subsequently were granted citizenship and whose amended particulars were accepted under the adjustment statement program did not lose their status. They were simply issued with replacement citizenship certificates bearing the accepted particulars.

Persons who entered Canada claiming to have status under the Canadian Citizenship Act or previous naturalization acts, who had been issued proof of such status in the form of a certificate and who, by their own admission, were subsequently found not to have such status did not lose their status as Canadian citizens because they had none to lose. Their certificates have been withdrawn and, as a result of the acceptance of their adjustment statements, cancelled. Statistics have not been maintained on the number of persons in this position. They are entitled to apply for Canadian citizenship five years from the date of landing as established under the adjustment statement program.

TRAINING OF PRISON GUARDS

Question No. 765—Mr. Thompson:

What type of in-service training is given to guards at federal prisons, particularly in the fields of (a) self defence (b) weapons training and marksmanship (c) general academic education (d) psychology?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): (a) Self Defence: (i) At Staff Colleges: 32 hours of formal training consisting in theoretical and practical periods and exercises on the following: a. Breakfalls; b. Throws; c. Restraints; d. Come-alongs; e. Defences against assault without weapons; f. Defences against assault with weapons. (ii) At Institutions: Approximately 10 hours a year of refresher training.

(b) Weapons Training and Marksmanship: (i) At Staff Colleges: 35 hours of formal training consisting in theoretical and practical periods on the following: a. Rifle: 14 hours: Parts and handling; Care and cleaning; Loading and unloading; Positions; Aiming; Range procedure and grouping; Range practice; b. Revolver: 8 hours: Care and cleaning; Loading and unloading; Holding, aiming and firing; Range procedure and grouping; Range practice; c. Riot Gun: 4 hours: Care and cleaning; Loading and unloading; Holding and shooting; Shooting practice; d. Gas: 9 hours: Classification and use of gas; Tear agents; Protective measures; Gas chamber experience; Riot control drill.

NOTE: All of the above training is followed by a performance test.

(ii) All Institutions: Range practice tests and annual classification.

(c) General Academic Education: No formal academic education is provided on an in-service training basis for personnel of federal penitentiaries. However, D.V.A. correspondence courses are offered and other correspondence or evening courses are encouraged for personnel development.

(d) Psychology: (i) At Staff Colleges: 20 hours of formal training in the fundamentals of human behavioural sciences. (ii) At Institutions: Follow-up training conducted by psychiatrists and psychologists according to the needs at each institution. (iii) University training is encouraged through the reimbursement of 50 per cent of tuition fees to the members of the Service who are employed in inmate guidance and counselling or who form part of the institutional inmate classification teams.

*PARKING INSTRUCTIONS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 769—Mr. Rynard:

Would the government give consideration to a request to the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to post constables at all entrances to the grounds of parliament and particularly at the western exit at the foot of the hill in order to instruct drivers of cars and chartered buses where they may park, especially during the summer season?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that within the limits of manpower available to the R.C.M. Police, every effort will be made to instruct drivers of cars and chartered buses where they may park.

*R.C.M.P. REPORT ON CAR EXPLOSION

Question No. 776—Mr. Choquette:

Have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police submitted a report giving information on the explosion which wrecked the car of the former member for Trois-Rivières, Hon. Léon Balcer, in 1964?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows. Reports were submitted to the R.C.M. P. headquarters, Ottawa, by members of the R.C.M.P. at Trois-Rivières, Quebec, in connection with the burning of Mr. Balcer's car in the early morning of October 17, 1964.

*R.C.M.P. INVESTIGATION INTO QUEBEC FIRE

Question No. 777—Mr. Choquette:

Are the Royal Canadian Mounted Police now investigating the fire which devastated the residence of the Lieutenant Governor of the province of Quebec, and have they any clues indicating that this fire was due to terrorist activities on the part of revolutionary separatists?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to both part 1 and part 2 of this question is no.

FEDERAL PROPOSALS RESPECTING GARIBALDI PARK

Question No. 780—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the federal government made any proposal to the government of British Columbia to establish Garibaldi Park in British Columbia as a national park?

2. If so, when was such an offer made?

3. Did the federal government make any proposals as to the amount of money the federal government would consider spending for development purposes if Garibaldi park became a national park?

4. If so, what were those proposals?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes.

2, 3, 4. Formal and informal offers have been made by successive governments for at least the past 10 years. The present government first formally renewed the proposal on June 13, 1963. Subsequent proposals envisioned initial development expenditures of approximately $10,000,000. The most specific development proposals were contained in a statement of November 4, 1965, outlining plans to: (a) Negotiate suitable boundaries for the park which would exclude areas of resource conflicts. (b) Provide suitable low elevation areas for public camping facilities and other visitor services. (c) Identify prime natural features and major scenic attractions. (d) Zone the park to ensure for preservation of key areas. (e) Prepare a master plan to guide long term development which would probably include: (i) Road access via a scenic alpine drive to the Diamond Head area. (ii) Campgrounds, picnic areas, trails, shelters, and a scenic view lodge. (iii) Park interpretive facilities, nature exhibits and nature trails. (iv) Improvement of the existing jeep road to provide bus access to the icefields. (v) A high level trail system connecting to the Whistler mountain ski area. (vi) The preservation of the alpine meadows in the Black Tusk area. (vii) Boating facilities on Garibaldi and Cheakamus lakes.

WAR VETERANS BENEFITS

Question No. 806—Mr. Caouette:

1. What criteria are applicable for the granting of a pension of a war veteran?

2. What criteria are applied to refuse a pension to a war veteran?

3. Does a war veteran who has served overseas enjoy certain benefits which are denied to one who has stayed in Canada?

4. What are these benefits?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1 and 2. War disability pensions are paid under the provisions of the Pension Act R.S.C. 1952, c. 207 as amended from time to time.

3. Yes.

4. (1) Eligibility for benefits for veterans who had active service during world war I or world war II, or who served in Korea, and where overseas service is one of the qualifying factors, is set forth in the relevant legislation as follows: (a) Civil Service Act: section 40, section 41. (b) Department of Veterans Affairs Act: (i) Veterans treatment regulations; section 2(1)(j); sections 12; 13; 29, (ii) Last Post fund regulations; section 2(e), (iii) Veterans Burial regulations; section 4(b). (c) Pension Act: sections 2(v); 13(1)(c); 4(g); 14(4); 15; 28(3)(a). (d) Soldier Settlement Act: section 2(s). (e) Veterans Benefit Act, 1954: section 2(c), and remaining sections applicable to other acts in world war II veterans charter. (f) Veterans' Land Act: sections 2(1)(d); 10; 46. (g) War Service Grants Act: sections 2(j) and 2(m); 3; 8. (h) War Veterans Allowance Act; sections 2(1)(k); 3; 5; 30. (i) Assistance fund (WVA) regulations: section 7.

(2) Persons who served overseas in certain non-military organizations were made eligible for a number of benefits under the following legislation: (a) Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. (b) Fire Fighters War Service Benefits Act. (c) Special Operators War Service Benefits Act. (d) Supervisors War Service Benefits Act. (e) Women's Royal Naval Services and the South African Military Nursing Service (Benefits) Act.

EXPENDITURES BY VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 829—Mr. Caouette

What was for each of the following departments, for the last three years (a) the total expenditure (b) the amounts spent in each province (c) the breakdown of these expenditures: Post Office Department, Department of Trade and Commerce, Department of National Health and Welfare, Department of Justice, Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Department of Transport, Department of National Defence, Department of Labour, Department of Secretary of State, Department of Forestry, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, Department of Industry and Defence Production, Department of Veterans Affairs, Department of Public Works, Department of Fisheries, Department of Agriculture, Department of Citizenship and Immigration?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Information is not now available to provide an accurate answer to this question and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information.

REVISION OF STATUTES

Question No. 847—Mr. Caouette:

1. Is the government revising the statutes of Canada at the present time?

2. When approximately does the government expect to have the revision of the statutes of Canada completed?

3. When approximately does the government expect the new revised statutes of Canada to be published, so as to be available to the public?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): 1. Yes.

2. An attempt is being made to include the 1967 legislation in the revision so that the new Revised Statutes of Canada can be related to Canada's centennial year.

3. Publication of the revised statutes will follow the consolidation therein of 1967 legislation, which may require publication to be in 1968.

23033—239

[English]

SUMMER EMPLOYEES, NORTHERN AFFAIRS

Question No. 861—Mr. Caron:

1. How many extra employees were hired for summer positions by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources (a) at the head office (b) elsewhere in Canada, during the summer of 1965?

2. Who recommended these employees?

3. Do they have relatives—father, mother, brothers, sisters, uncles and aunts—who work for the department?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. (a) 18; (b) 740.

2. No records are maintained to indicate source of recommendation. The persons employed were selected by the Civil Service Commission or on the basis of applications to the department or on referral by the National Employment Service.

3. This information is not available.

CONTRIBUTION TO SHIPYARD CONSTRUCTION, MARYSTOWN, NFLD.

Question No. 961—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Has the Atlantic Development Board contributed, or will the Atlantic Development Board be contributing, to the construction of a shipyard at Marystown, Newfoundland?

2. If so, what will be the amount of the contribution?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. No.

2. N/A.

CO-OPERATION IN INDUSTRY DEVELOPMENT, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 986—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Atlantic Development Board ever co-operated with Nova Scotia's Industrial Estates in the development or establishment of industry in that province?

2. If it has, on what projects?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) With financial assistance—general purpose building and extension of water system to serve the industrial park at Stellarton;

(b) With good offices—the heavy water plant in Glace Bay; the proposed C.M.I. automobile plant at Point Edward.

Questions

DIRECT DEVELOPMENT BOARD GRANTS TO INDUSTRY, N.S.

Question No. 987—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Atlantic Development Board ever been asked by the province of Nova Scotia to make direct grants to industry in that province?

2. If so, what was (a) the Atlantic Development Board's reply (b) the government's position?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) The board informed the premier of Nova Scotia that it was prepared to indicate to the minister that it endorsed the principle of direct grants but the application of this principle should be subject to arrangements being made which would be acceptable to both the federal and provincial governments. (b) It would not be desirable for the Atlantic Development Board to enter the field of direct grants, since the federal government was considering the desirability of amending the Area Development Incentives Act to include direct grants, and to extend the geographical area of the program.

CAPITAL GRANTS TO INDUSTRY, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 990—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the Atlantic Development Board at any time recommended to the government the advisability of special forms of capital grants to industry through existing instruments of the provincial government of Nova Scotia?

2. If so, what was the government's reply?

3. If so, when was such a request made?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. No.

2. N/A.

3. N/A.

BUILDING COLLAPSE, NORTH VANCOUVER

Question No. 996—Mr. Winch:

1. Was there a partial roof collapse, caused by a heavy snowfall in January, 1965, on a building or buildings at the North Lynn Marine Properties (North Vancouver)?

2. Was the cause of the collapse alleged to have been lack of sufficient shear reinforcement in concrete beams?

3. What firm originally held the contract for the construction of the buildings?

4. What firms tendered on the roof reconstruction at the North Lynn Marine Properties and what were the respective tender bids?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

5. Was the bid of Fort Construction (1962) Ltd. higher than that of others who tendered and, if so, for what reason were they awarded the contract?

6. Was it the National Harbours Board (Ottawa) that let this contract?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbors Board advises as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. British Columbia Bridge and Dredging Co. Ltd.

4. Tenderer and amount: Reynolds & Pigeon Holdings Ltd., Richmond, $380,000; Steel-Bilt Contractors Ltd., Port Coquitlam, $473,010; Humphrey Construction Ltd., North Vancouver, $488,768; Fort Construction (1962) Ltd., North Vancouver, $499,800; Burns & Dutton Construction (1962) Ltd., Richmond, $565,000; Western Building Limited, Richmond, $599,829.

5. The three lower tenders were not submitted in accordance with the specifications and were therefore not acceptable. The fourth low tender, that of Fort Construction (1962) Ltd., was the lowest tender submitted in accordance with the requirements of the specifications and the contract was awarded to this company.

6. Yes.

POTASH SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

Question No. 1,022—Mr. Korchinski:

1. During 1965, to which countries was potash exported and what was the volume in each case?

2. Through which port was the potash shipped in each case?

3. Has any potash been shipped through the port of Churchill and, if so, what was the destination and tonnage?

4. Are there any plans for the extension of potash shipment through the port of Churchill?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Transport as follows:

1 and 2. Information requested is not available as export statistics of potash are not recorded separately.

3. No.

4. Not to our knowledge, although inquiries have been received as to available facilities at Churchill harbour for the handling of potash.

ADVICE ON INCOME TAX FORMS

Question No. 1,026—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Is the Department of National Revenue offering free advice in the completing of income tax forms and, if so, is this offer being advertised?

2. If there are such advertisements, in which cities and places in Canada do they appear, and in which communications media?

3. What will be the total cost to the government of these advertisements?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. As in former years, the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue is offering free advice to taxpayers on the completion of income tax forms. Each of the 29 district taxation offices across Canada contains an information counter where this service is made available during business hours. Temporary offices are opened during the filing season to serve taxpayers unable to visit the regular offices. Notice of these facilities is given in advertisements.

2. Advertisements were placed with newspapers and radio stations in the following centres: St. John's, Charlottetown, Summerside, Sydney, Halifax, Wolfville, Kentville, Truro, Antigonish, New Glasgow, St. John, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, Montreal, Rouyn, Ottawa, Kingston, Belleville, Penticton, Victoria, Courtenay, Campbell River, Peterborough, Toronto, Barrie, Brampton, Huntsville, Orillia, Oshawa, Midland, Collingwood, Hamilton, Oakville, Brantford, Simcoe, St. Catharines, Kitchener, Stratford, Guelph, Galt, Nanaimo, Duncan, Port Alberni, Owen Sound, Hanover, London, Sarnia, St. Thomas, Windsor, Sudbury, Fort William, Fort Francis, Kenora, Winnipeg, Brandon, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Prince George, Whitehorse.

3. The total cost to the government of these advertisements will be approximately $25,000.

INDUSTRIAL ESTATES LTD.—ASSISTANCE FROM ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Question No. 1,031—Mr. Cashin:

1. Has the Atlantic Development Board given any assistance, financial or otherwise, to Industrial Estates Limited of Nova Scotia or to any company to which Industrial Estates itself has given assistance?

2. If so, who are the members of the board of directors of Industrial Estates Limited?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Industrial Estates Limited reports that the following persons are now on the board of directors: J. C. MacKeen, Chairman of the board; F. H. Sobey, President of I.E.L.; S. W. Kenney, Vice President of I.E.L.; S. G. Allen, Director of I.E.L.; D. F. Archibald, Director of I.E.L.; R. M. Black, Director of I.E.L.; H. J. Egan, Director of I.E.L.; J. W. Gillis, Director of I.E.L.; W. S. K. Jones, Director of I.E.L.; C. G. MacLennan, Director of I.E.L.; R. G. Urquhart, Director of I.E.L.; B. J. Waters, Director of I.E.L.

SHIP REPAIR SLIPWAY, MARYSTOWN, NFLD.

Question No. 1,033—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is a ship repair slipway under construction at Marystown, Newfoundland?

2. If so, is there a financial contribution thereto by the federal government and in what amount?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Not yet.

2. The federal government plans to provide haul-out facilities estimated to cost $1,600,000 as part of an over-all arrangement with the province which provides also for the development of shipyard facilities at this point. Because no haul-out facilities exist in that area and haul-out facilities are required for steamship hull inspections, the federal government is making a contribution for the haul-out only.

GRANT TO WESTERN CANADA RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION

Question No. 1,038—Mr. Hamilton:

1. Has the government received a request from the western Canada reclamation association for a grant to aid its educational work on water?

2. Has any decision been made by the government to assist this association?

3. If so, what is the decision?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. The request was declined.

HAY CUTTING, WIARTON AIRPORT

Question No. 1,061—Mr. Loney:

1. Who was the successful tenderer for the cutting and removal of 24 acres of hay, Wiarton airport, June 14, 1965?

2. What was the amount of the tender bid?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No bids were received on department's call for public tenders.

Questions

2. The airport manager was subsequently authorized to dispose of the hay crop by whatever means he considered practical. The hay crop was sold to Mr. Morgan Nixon for the sum of $20.

PROCEDURE FOR SUMMONING PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,066—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Is an instrument of advice now used as the technique of advising the Governor General in respect of the summoning of parliament?

2. If so, when was this technique first used?

3. Have all sessions of parliament since that time been summoned as a result of advice tendered by this technique to the Governor General?

4. What was the technique or procedure previously used?

5. Why was the change made?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Yes.

2. October 7, 1953 for the summoning of parliament on November 12, 1953.

3. Yes.

4. Minute of council.

5. The minute of council was considered inappropriate as a means of advising the Governor General on those matters on which the tendering of advice is the responsibility of the Prime Minister alone and not of the committee of the Privy Council.

PROCEDURE FOR DISSOLVING PARLIAMENT

Question No. 1,067—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Is an instrument of advice now used as the technique of advising the Governor General to dissolve parliament?

2. If so, when was this technique first used?

3. In what dissolutions of parliament has the technique been used?

4. What was the technique or procedure previously used?

5. Why was the change made?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Yes.

2. April 12, 1957.

3. April 12, 1957, February 1, 1958, April 19, 1962, February 6, 1963, September 8, 1965.

4. Minute of council.

5. The minute of council was considered inappropriate as a means of advising the Governor General on those matters on which the tendering of advice is the responsibility of the Prime Minister alone and not of the Committee of the Privy Council.

[Mr. Byrne.]

REVISION IN BACON PACKAGES

Question No. 1,076—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. Has the Consumers' Association of Canada, since 1959, been asking for a package that will allow consumers to see one whole slice of bacon and the distribution of fat and lean at the time of purchase?

2. Did the government in February, 1965, ask meat packers to revise their packages by January 1, 1966, to remove any element of deception and, if so, was the deadline extended to May 1, 1966 and for what reason?

3. Will the government on May 1 insist on a paskage that will permit consumers to see one whole slice of bacon at the time of purchase?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. The deadline was extended when it was learned that it was not possible for the packaging industry to supply sufficient new bacon packages by January 1, 1966.

3. On and after May 1, 1966, the Department of National Health and Welfare will insist that all bacon shipped by meat packers is contained in packages which are not deceptive. It is considered that the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act will be met if the window area is at least two thirds of the length of the package, permits the consumer to see the full width of a slice of bacon and the package is not deceptive in any other way.

MEMBERS OF EASTER ISLAND EXPEDITION

Question No. 1,081—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What were the names and official positions of every person who comprised the Easter Island expedition, other than members of the Canadian forces?

2. Did any person or persons join the expedition in South America and, if so, in what capacity and under whose authority?

3. What was the cost, approximately, of this expedition?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. Dr. Stanley C. Skoryna, Expedition leader; Dr. Morton E. Alpert, Epidemiology; Dr. Peter Beighton, Medical examinations; Dr. Armand Boudreault, Virology; Dr. Garry S. Brody, Medical examinations; Dr. John L. Cutler, Epidemiology; John A. Easton, Air Vice-Marshal (Retired), Deputy director in charge of physical plant; Mrs. Anna Maria Eccles, Interpretation; Dr. Ian E. Efford, Biology and ecology; Dr. Bjorn T. Ekblom, Physiology; Dr. Harold C. Gibbs, Parasitology; Dr. Einer T. Gjessing, Physiology; Dr. T. Colin Gillingham, Catering; Mrs. Isabel Griffiths, Interpretation; Miss Carlotta Hacker, Research assistance; Dr. John Mathias, Biology; Dr. Robert J. Meier, Anthropology; Mrs. Cleopatra Montandon, Sociology; Dr. Denys Montandon, Medication examination; Dr. David A. Murphy, Medical examination, veterinary medicine; Mr. James H. Nielsen, Physiology; Dr. Georges Nogrady, Bacteriology; Dr. Helen E. Reid, Medical examination (paediatrics); Dr. Maureen Roberts, Medical examination (paediatrics); Mr. Archibald Wilkinson, Radiography; Mr. Carl Mydams, "Life" photographer; Mr. R. Williams, CBC Halifax; Mr. H. J. Lemieux, CBC New York.

2. Six of the above members of the expedition joined it at San Juan. 1 Chilean scientist joined at Balboa and 2 Chilean medical students joined at Callao. A McGill University information officer joined it at Balboa on the return trip to assist in preparing the expedition's report.

3. As this expedition was not sponsored by the Department of National Defence, the cost is not available to us.

PERMISSION TO TABLE CORRESPONDENCE ON HEALTH SERVICES CONFERENCE

Question No. 1,084—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government of Saskatchewan asked permission from the government of Canada to table in the Saskatchewan legislature all correspondence between the government of Saskatchewan and the government of Canada since June 1, 1964, regarding a federal-provincial conference on health services?

2. If so, on what date was the request made?

3. Has approval for the tabling of this correspondence been granted by the federal government?

4. If so, on what date was approval granted?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, for certain stated correspondence.

2. February 22, 1965.

3. Yes, except that permission was not granted for tabling of confidential notes and an interim report.

4. March 1, 1965.

PERMISSION TO TABLE CORRESPONDENCE ON LIGNITE COAL STUDY

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government of Saskatchewan asked permission from the government of Canada to table in the Saskatchewan legislature all correspondence between the premier of Saskatchewan or any minister and the government of Canada since May 22, 1964, regarding a joint study of the utilization of Saskatchewan lignite coal?

2. If so, on what date was the request made?

3. Has approval for the tabling of this correspondence been granted by the federal government?

4. If so, on what date was approval granted?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. Permission was requested for the tabling of the following two letters: (a) Letter of July 24th, 1964, from the Prime Minister to the premier of Saskatchewan concerning a proposed meeting of federal and Saskatchewan officials to discuss the developing and marketing of electrical energy from lignite coal. (b) Letter of September 16th, 1964, from F. A. Milligan, assistant secretary to the cabinet, to Dr. J. J. Moore in the office of the premier of Saskatchewan, concerning a proposed deferment of the meeting of officials.

2. February 7, 1966.

3. Yes.

4. February 9, 1966.

ACCESS ROADS PROGRAM, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,092—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since the start of the joint program for the construction of access roads to resources, what projects have been undertaken and completed in Chapleau county?

2. What access roads to resources are being constructed at the present time and when will these projects be completed in each case?

3. Are there any projects under study at the present time and if so, what are they?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. (a) Amos-Matagami road, 118 miles—commencing at the town of Amos and travelling in a northerly direction to Matagami lake and the New Hosco mine. 54 miles completed. (b) Lac Waconichi-Lac Albanel road, 97 miles—commencing at the southerly tip of Lac Waconichi to a point a few miles north of the 51st parallel on the eastern shore of Lac Albanel. 88 miles completed. (c) Chapais-Desmaraisville road, 30 miles—commencing at a point 14.6 miles east of Desmaraisville to a point approximately 27 miles west of Chapais. 30 miles completed.

2. Amos-Matagami road and Lac Waconichi-Lac Albanel road are being constructed at the present time. Completion date determined by provincial schedule. Roads to resources agreement with province expires March 31, 1966.

3. There are no projects under study at the present time.

Questions

DISABILITY PENSION FOR WAR SERVICE INJURIES

Question No. 1,102—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to increasing the current disability pensioners' compensation for war service injuries?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): This question refers to a matter of policy and cannot be answered until a decision has been taken.

FEDERAL GRANT IN LIEU OF TAXES, SOUTHAMPTON, ONT.

Question No. 1,103—Mr. Loney:

What amount of grant in lieu of taxes on federal property was paid to the municipality of Southampton, Ontario, for the year 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Town of Southampton, Ontario—1965: $3,044.

CHAMPLAIN MONUMENT, QUE.

Question No. 1,113—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Does the government of Canada have responsibility for the Champlain monument in Quebec city?

2. Was it destroyed by separatist sabotage?

3. Has it been restored?

4. If so, were any changes made in (a) motif (b) wording?

5. If changes were made, what were the reasons for the changes and who authorized them?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. No, the city of Quebec owns and is responsible for the monument.

2. No.

3, 4 and 5. N/A.

LOANS FOR RESIDENCE CONSTRUCTION, RYERSON INSTITUTE

Question No. 1,171—Mr. Scott (Danforth):

1. Has the government received representations from students and/or officials of the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute in Toronto, with respect to making that institute eligible for N.H.A. loans for the construction of student residence buildings?

2. If so, what was the nature of the representations, and what was the nature of the government's response?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1. Yes.

2. In the representations made on behalf of extending the facilities of the N.H.A. to cover the financing of residence for students attending Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, the following points were made:

[Mr. Pepin.]

(a) it is becoming increasingly difficult to find suitable accommodation for students in the immediate area;

(b) it is expected that the student body will more than double within the next five years and;

(c) the courses offered by Ryerson play an important role in preparing young people to meet their responsibilities in our technical society and, therefore, similar financing should be available as in the case of universities.

The reply to these representations was that the financing could not be offered under present legislation, but that careful consideration would be given to the recommendations that the act be amended.

POTATO WAREHOUSE STORAGE ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 1,175—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. Has the potato warehouse storage assistance act been discontinued and, if so, when?

2. Was the program reinstated and, if so (a) on what date (b) how many loans have been granted since its reinstatement (c) to whom were these loans made?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1 and 2. The program of assistance in the construction of potato warehouses was discontinued in July, 1962 and has not been reinstated. Commitments made prior to that date have been honoured.

SALES TAX ON ELECTRIC FENCE CONTROLLERS

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Godin:

Are electric fence controllers manufactured in Canada subject to the 11 per cent sales tax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Yes.

TAX AND DUTY ON FARM ITEMS

Question No. 1,190—Mr. Godin:

1. Are the following items subject to the 11 per cent sales tax (a) galvanized trade wire (b) annealed trade wire (c) oiled and annealed trade wire (d) hay baling wire (e) electrical fence wire (f) barbed wire (g) welded mesh fencing (h) farm fencing (i) chain link netting (j) steel fence posts (k) steel farm gates?

2. If the above items are imported, are they subject to the 22 per cent duty?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. (a) (b) (c) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k)—Yes. (d)—No.

The most favoured nation tariff rates of duty (ad valorem) applying to the articles in question are as follows:

Description	Tariff Item	Rate of Duty
(a) Galvanized trade wire	40105-1	20%
(b) Annealed trade wire	40107-1	15%
(c) Oiled and annealed trade wire	40107-1	15%
(d) Wire for hay baling	40922-1	Free
(e) Electrical fence wire—bare	40107-1	15%
galvanized	40105-1	20%
(f) Barbed wire	40101-1	10%
(g) Welded mesh fencing, depending on size of wire from which manufactured	40200-1 or 40205-2	12½% 20%
(h) Farm fencing, depending on size of wire from which manufactured	40200-1 or 40205-2	12½% 20%
(i) Chain link netting	40205-3	25%
(j) Steel fence posts	44603-1	22½%
(k) Steel farm gates	44603-1	22½%

CONSTRUCTION OF CUSTOMS OFFICE, VILLE SAINT-PAMPHILE, QUE.

Question No. 1,200—Mr. Berger:

Does the government intend to carry out, this summer, a project for the construction of a customs office at the Canada-U.S.A. border at Ville Saint-Pamphile, Quebec and, if so, when will tenders be called?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Yes. It is anticipated that tenders for this project will be called within the next two months.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

AUDITING OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 137—Mr. Caouette:

1. Which crown corporations are not required to have their financial activities audited by the Auditor General of Canada?

2. What are the names of private auditors, of each of the crown corporations since their creation?

3. What was the remuneration of these auditors?

4. Is it the government's intention to have the financial operations of all crown corporations audited by the Auditor General in the future and, if not, for what reasons?

Return tabled.

SUBSIDIES TO ATLANTIC COAST SHIPS

Question No. 552—Mr. Barnett:

1. What, listed by official number, name and terminal and principal ports of call on its schedule of runs, and grouped by owner, managing owner and address, is each of the ships on the Atlantic coasts of Canada, including the St. Lawrence river system from and below the port of Montreal, for the operation of which subsidies are currently being paid through the Canadian Maritime Commission?

2. What, shown as an annual rate, is the amount being paid to each owner or operator for each service or schedule of runs for which he is receiving a subsidy?

3. On which of these ships are motor vehicles transported (a) by being hoisted on and off (b) by being driven on and off?

Return tabled.

BANKRUPTCY SUPERINTENDENT AND TRUSTEES

Question No. 577—Mr. Nielsen:

1. (a) What is the name of the person appointed under the provisions of S.3(1) of the Bankruptcy Act as the superintendent of bankruptcy and when was he appointed (b) what is the name of the previous superintendent of bankruptcy, and between what dates did he hold the office and why did he cease to hold office?

Orders for Returns

2. (a) What are the names of those licensed as trustees under the provisions of S.3(3)(a) of the Bankruptcy Act in the following areas: Vancouver, B.C.; Edmonton, Alberta; Montreal, Quebec; Toronto, Ontario; Hamilton, Ontario; (b) when were the trustees appointed in the foregoing instances and, in each case, has a guaranty bond been deposited under the provisions of S.3(3)(c) of the Bankruptcy Act and in what amount?

3. (a) What complaints and by whom have such been made with respect to estates in each of the areas in 2(a) above during the term of the license of each of the foregoing trustees (b) what was the nature of each such complaint (c) by and to whom was each such complaint made (d) when was each such complaint made (e) in each case what action, if any, was taken on such complaint?

4. (a) In the event investigations were conducted in any of the cases in 3 above, when was each investigation commenced and when was each concluded (b) in each case what was the result and the action taken, if any?

Return tabled.

C.N.R. PENSION PLANS

Question No. 846—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What contribution has the C.N.R. made every year to each of the C.N.R. pension plans since the plans began and what was the actual date that each contribution was made?

2. What contributions have C.N.R. employees made every year to each of the C.N.R. pension plans since the plans began?

3. What were the total benefits paid out by the C.N.R. pension plans by year and by plan?

4. What amounts were borrowed from the C.N.R. pension plan funds by the company, what was the actual date of these loans, on what dates were these repaid, and what interest was paid on these loans in percentage figures and in actual dollars?

5. Where are the pension funds invested, what amounts are invested, what dates were these investments made, what earnings have these investments made in each year as shown by percentage figures and actual dollars, and on what dates were these investments liquidated?

6. How much money is in the C.N.R. pension fund and where is this money—in cash, investments, loans to the C.N.R., or elsewhere, specifically?

7. Does the new C.N.R. pension plan provide a reduction in the contribution rate of C.N.R. employees and, if so, by how much?

8. Does the new C.N.R. pension plan provide for reduced benefit rates for future C.N.R. pensioners and, if so, by how much?

9. Will this new plan mean that a surplus will be generated in the C.N.R. pension fund when the plan stabilizes and if this happens, is it proposed to raise the rate of benefits at that time without a simultaneous increase in contributions?

Return tabled.

WHARFAGE CHARGES

Question No. 912—Mr. Keays:

1. What are the wharfage charges at present in force in Canada?

2. What were they prior to the last increase?

Return tabled.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

RADIO OPERATORS, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 971—Mr. Lambert:

1. How many radio operators of all categories are presently in the employ of the Department of Transport in field positions?

2. Does this number meet establishment requirements and, if not, what have been the annual deficiencies in the years 1963, 1964, 1965 and at the present?

3. What has been the annual turnover of radio operators in the years 1963, 1964, and 1965?

4. What is the scale of pay for the various classifications of radio operators?

5. What are some comparable positions in the public service in so far as pay scales are concerned?

6. What efforts have been made in the last two years to upgrade the position of radio operator, and with what results?

Return tabled.

*EXPANSION OF PARK FACILITIES

Question No. 977—Mr. Dinsdale:

Since 1963, what programs have been launched by the government of Canada to expand park facilities to meet the urgent recreational needs of (a) the Canadian population in a day of increasing leisure time (b) a rapidly growing number of visitors to Canada who are making a vital contribution to our booming tourist industry (c) the influx of visitors for Canada's centennial?

Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REPORTED INTENTION TO DELIVER OIL BY TANKER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the house what attitude the government of Canada has taken regarding the Greek tanker which apparently intends to make oil available for transmission to Rhodesia? Has the government of Canada communicated with the Greek ambassador in this connection; is there any foundation for the suggestion that in mid ocean the registry of this ship was changed from Greek to Panamanian, and were any representations made to the Panamanian government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are aspects of this matter which we are now examining, and I prefer to wait until that examination is complete, perhaps some time tomorrow, before giving an answer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REPORTED DECISION TO PROCEED NEXT YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Press reports indicate that the cabinet has made a decision to go ahead with medicare next year regardless of how many provinces have accepted the federal government's offer. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the cabinet has made a decision to that effect, and is the Prime Minister able to announce it at this time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot at this time make an announcement of policy on this matter, nor give an answer in respect of the aspect referred to by my hon. friend, but I hope to be able to do so very shortly.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. In view of the increased sightings of unidentified flying objects which are now getting past the point of being funny—a young citizen in my riding is nursing a burn on his hand after touching the antenna of one of these objects, and there are dozens of other reports in southern Ontario—can the minister say whether his department is doing anything about investigating these reports; and would he be prepared to set up a special committee for this purpose in order to satisfy public curiosity?

Mr. Fairweather: Ralph Cowan should be the chairman.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In spite of the preamble to the question, I suggest it should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW PAY SCALE FOR AIR FORCE PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the government put into effect a new pay scale which provides increases of from $300 to $3,000 for defence department aircraft pilots?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harkness: I have a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that this is causing very unfavourable reaction among other flying personnel and servicemen generally, who believe it will decrease the effectiveness of the forces and further greatly decrease morale, thus accelerating the decline in the strength of the forces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe the question as posed can be considered at this time.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the substantial pay increases for pilots announced Friday last, is the minister considering similar increases for air crew navigators, radio operators and technical officers who will receive nothing extra according to that announcement?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that the demand for skilled pilots in the civilian economy has so outstripped the demand for other trades that in order to compete and keep in the armed forces the number of skilled pilots we require we have to bring their emoluments closer in line with those of the civilian industry. Other categories referred to by my hon. friend will be considered in the cyclical pay increases which will come into effect on October 1.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether he really expects that an increase in pay of $3 million accompanied by a decrease of $8 million will in fact keep pilots in the armed forces happy, or should we characterize this as one of the neatest tricks of the week?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking an argumentative question.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware of the violent reaction to the abandonment of the principle of equal pay for equal rank, and is anything being done to alleviate this abandonment of a long standing principle?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of it. It is a principle that had to be abandoned because it is no longer viable.

Mr. Churchill: Your program has broken down.

Mr. Hellyer: It would not help in the future, in any event. There have been certain exceptions in the past. We pay more to doctors and dentists than we do to others holding the same rank. This is because they can command larger remuneration in the civilian economy. The same thing is true of pilots. In making the decision to increase the pilots' pay at this time we reluctantly but knowingly abandoned the principle of equal pay for equal rank because in the technological age in which we live we realize that we have to do this.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether this action is intended to atone for the short-sighted action in letting 500 pilots go?

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that a number of supplementary and further supplementary questions have been asked. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that there are many ramifications in this change of policy, but this is the last supplementary question I shall ask at this time. Is any consideration being given by the minister to incorporating into their pensions the flying allowance paid to airmen who have not received the basic pay increase, so that despite all the other problems the flying crew will receive pension benefits which include the flying allowance?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming in the nature of a debate and I suggest that no further supplementary questions should be allowed at this time.

Mr. Hellyer: Could I answer that question, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. Nowlan: A further question concerning our air force. Since there has been a change in basic pay policy, is the minister considering any change in flying allowances for air crew?

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Hellyer: There have been considerable changes in policy. I could send the hon. member a copy of the press release which would give him a summation of the changes which have taken place. Some of the other questions he has raised are being considered throughout the summer months in conjunction with the cyclical pay review.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—APPLICATION OF STRETCH-OUT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I think should be directed to the Minister of Finance, or possibly the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say whether, in the light of the unanimous resolution of the Prince Edward Island legislature, the government has decided to remove the Northumberland causeway from the list of public works projects which the Minister of Finance announced would be deferred, and whether in fact they will move toward acceleration of this important development?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was very clear in my statement that the Northumberland causeway was being rescheduled, not deferred.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, directed to the Prime Minister. On Thursday of last week the Prime Minister informed the house that he had received word on this matter from the leader of the opposition in Prince Edward Island. I wonder whether he has also been contacted by the leader of the opposition in New Brunswick on this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but I received the resolution in question from the premier of Prince Edward Island about an hour ago.

[Later:]

Mr. Macquarrie: I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works, in the light of the 10 per cent reduction in expenditure and the minimization of labour useage in the summer, by what magical formula he can predict that the Northumberland causeway will be completed in time.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is argumentative.

HATE LITERATURE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. He tabled the report of the commission on hate literature, which report has been before the government for some time, I understand. Is the Solicitor General now in a position to advise that legislation based upon whatever recommendations are in the report will in fact be brought in?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I am not in a position to give that undertaking, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure the house that this matter is being given very serious study and I am hopeful that we shall be able to make an announcement in due course.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—CONSTRUCTION OF HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether he received, over the week-end, a request from 40 Montreal ecclesiasts that construction be started without delay on the C.B.C. building? Is the Prime Minister in a position to make a statement on the matter?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to that question and a similar one raised by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot and the hon. member for Saint-Jacques, who has been camping on my doorstep for some weeks on this matter.

I should like to say that the plans for consolidation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation offices in Montreal, by the erection of a building on Dorchester Boulevard East as approved in the C.B.C. capital budget last November will be proceeded with. These plans are not affected by last week's budget statement. It is expected that excavation work will begin this year, 1966, with construction following in 1967, in accordance with the plans.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister say at this time whether the cabinet has decided to provide a sufficient sum of money for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to extend service to areas now unserviced, as recommended in the last annual report of the corporation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is another subject.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I suggest this is not a question which should be asked at this time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WEARING OF HAT BY MEMBER FOR ATHABASKA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps at this time the hon. member for Athabaska would want me to bring to the attention of hon. members the hat he is now wearing. I think, according to tradition, possibly hon. members have the right to wear a hat, but I doubt whether that privilege extends to tuques.

An hon. Member: Take your hat off.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabaska): I hope that I have not offended the house by drawing to hon. members' attention the fact that this refers to a centennial project of St. Paul, the foremost town in Canada as far as centennial projects are concerned.

PROTECTIVE STAFF—REPORTED UNSATISFACTORY ACCOMMODATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister inform the house whether the provisions of the Department of National Health and Welfare Act or the provisions of the Public Works Health Act are utilized to protect the health of those persons employed in the centre block of the parliament buildings?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Herridge: Then may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's reply, will he inspect the quarters now occupied by the protective services of this house?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say that I missed the first question. However, in view of the supplementary I gather that perhaps the question answered by the minister was out of order. I assume that the representations made by the hon. member will be considered by the officials responsible for the situation which he has just mentioned.

[Translation]

HARBOURS

MONTREAL—REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO HANDLE FOREIGN GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Following the meeting he had this morning with other members of the cabinet, representatives of the Harbours Board of Montreal and the president of the executive council of the city of Montreal, could the minister tell us if restrictions with regard to the handling of grain in the port of Montreal have been removed?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said, I had the pleasure of presiding at a meeting this morning at which were present representatives from Montreal as well as some of my colleagues and the heads of government agencies. We had a very frank discussion of the complaints that had been made by the representatives of the port of Montreal. The chairman of the board of grain commissioners was present, and both the Minister of Agriculture, who has responsibility for the board of grain commissioners, and the chairman himself gave assurances that these representations would receive most careful consideration, looking ahead to the future.

My recollection is also that the chairman of the board promised there would be a further meeting at which these representations could be renewed before a decision was made affecting the restrictions.

Mr. Ricard: Perhaps the minister will recall that last year the same assurance was given but subsequently no decision was taken. My question was whether these restrictions would be lifted, and whether the minister could assure us they will be lifted because they are not to the advantage of the port of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Herridge.]

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance?

At this morning's meeting was there any question of giving its autonomy back to the port of Montreal?

[English]

EXPO '67

USE BY EDMONTON OF "KLONDIKE" THEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is the minister aware of the representations which have been made to the government of the province of Alberta by the Yukon legislative council? If so, does the minister intend to take any action on behalf of the government of the Yukon Territory to enforce the right of that government and the people of the Yukon to the exclusive use of the historical and present resources of the Klondike?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have received a very great number of wires from the Yukon, some in sulphurous language, concerning the accusation that a theft has been made of the use of the word "Klondike". I must say that I regret the fact that an attempt is being made in Edmonton to use the word "Klondike", but I am reminded that when the Klondike was settled they called part of it Monte Carlo, and that Dawson called itself the San Francisco of the north.

I do not know what we can do in this matter, but I think an appeal has been made by the city of Edmonton to Expo '67 to incorporate something with a Klondike character. I have had the assurance of the Expo '67 people that representations will be heard from the Yukon before any such application is accepted.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister responsible for resource development in the north, does the Minister and his department intend to take any action in support of the government of the Yukon territory in this regard?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, we may be making certain representations to the city of Edmonton.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Last Monday, in this the nation's supposedly bicultural capital, British "pop" singer Petula Clark, appearing at the Capitol theatre, sang the first half of her program all in French, and a great many of her audience walked out in protest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Couldn't you get in?

Mr. Kindt: Espousing bilingualism as he does, what punishment does the Prime Minister propose to teach these naughty English Canadians to mind their bicultural manners?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is it more than coincidence that the increase in living costs has been referred to as a "Sharp" rise in prices?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grafftey: That is proof we need a holiday.

BREAD

INVESTIGATION UNDER COMBINES ACT INTO PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister whether the government intended to take any action relative to what I described as steep increases in the price of bread. In certain parts of the country the first price increase was 2 cents to cover an allegedly additional cost, and there was a further 2 cents. The Prime Minister said that he would give a full report to the house at an early date. Is he now in a position to do so?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my right hon. friend knows, a matter of this kind is submitted by the government, when a submission is required, to the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act. That official, as has been the case in the past, examines the matter, and if he feels that his investigation is required he takes the necessary steps. He is still examining the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How recently was the matter placed before the commissioner of the combines branch, and when was the report made to the government that the matter is still being given consideration?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it was put before the director after my right hon. friend, and I think others, raised the question in the first instance.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister when he expects to get the report from the Economic Council regarding the matter of prices, which was referred to the council by the Prime Minister last year?

Mr. Pearson: Not for some time, Mr. Speaker. I have had a report from the council itself as to the nature of the investigations which are being conducted, and I will be glad to send a copy of the information I have received to my hon. friend or to make a statement in the house about it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—PEACE NEGOTIATIONS BY INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the apparently deteriorating situation in South Viet Nam particularly in the Da Nang area, would the minister inform the house what progress, if any, is now being made in getting the control commission to start some negotiations aimed at bringing about peace in that part of the world?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend would look at the statement which I made this morning in the external affairs committee which dealt with this matter. I was reporting, to the extent to which under the circumstances I am able, on the future role of the commission.

The Canadian government feels very strongly that there is a role for the commission, and our discussions with the two other state members of the commission reveal a continuing interest on their part as well.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate there may be some things which the minister cannot say, but can he inform the house and the country whether any progress at all is being made in getting the commission into a position where some useful steps may be taken toward a conference?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My answer to that is, yes sir.

FISHERIES

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—LIMITATION ON LENGTH OF SCALLOP RAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a short question for the Minister of Fisheries on a matter of great importance in the Northumberland strait area, something of which the minister has knowledge. Has the hon. gentleman yet reached a decision on the possible limitation on the length of scallop rakes in the Northumberland strait area?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): No, Mr. Speaker, although this question is under very active study at the present time.

Mr. MacEwan: The minister advised me in correspondence that he hoped to be able to make an announcement in this regard early in March. Could he give us an idea when a decision on this question might now be expected?

Mr. Robichaud: There are still a few weeks left before the season opens. An announcement will be made before then.

SHIPPING

USE OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY BY RUSSIAN SHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it true that Russian vessels are now prohibited from sailing up the St. Lawrence seaway for cargoes of grain and other commodities?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I know of no such prohibition, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Solicitor General. Has a decision yet been reached with respect to the request for an inquiry into the case of Steven Truscott?

[Mr. Lewis.]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, but I expect to be reporting to the Prime Minister very shortly.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO FORMATION OF FARM SAFETY BODY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture. Did the minister receive a delegation from the National Safety League with respect to the founding of a national farm safety body in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the question should not be submitted to the minister in its present form. Perhaps the hon. member would like to rephrase it.

Mr. Noble: I have given the minister notice, and I think he is prepared to make a reply.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree, I am sure, that it is not in order for a member to ask whether a minister has received a delegation or has received representations about certain matters.

[Later:]

Mr. Noble: Perhaps I can rephrase my earlier question. Can the Minister of Agriculture make a statement to the house with respect to his attitude toward farm safety in Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I am all in favour of farm safety, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL PARKS

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING OPERATION OF NEW POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Having received further representations from the residents of the area of Jasper, can the minister tell us whether the inquiry promised both by himself and by the Prime Minister will be set up to hear representations on national parks policy, and if so when?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I am sure the Prime Minister can speak for himself, but as far as I am concerned no inquiry was ever promised. I did say, and I think the Prime Minister said too, that the residents of Jasper and Banff would have every opportunity of placing their case before the government prior to the introduction of legislation.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): When will they get that opportunity?

Mr. Laing: As the house progresses with its work and we get along to the legislation, there will be an opportunity then.

SHIPBUILDING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—APPLICATION OF SUBSIDY TO PROVINCIAL FERRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Transport arising out of the exclusion of British Columbia vessels from the benefit of the shipbuilding subsidies. In view of the fact that the British Columbia legislature with, I understand, the vociferous support of the Liberal leader there, has unanimously passed a motion requesting that this decision be reversed, I should like to ask whether the minister's heart has been hardened or softened by this action.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my heart continues to be soft.

Mr. Barnett: Then may I ask when the minister's head is likely to become hard enough to take a fair look at this question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope a fair look at this question will be taken soon.

INDUSTRY

STUDEBAKER CORPORATION—CESSATION OF OPERATIONS WITHOUT CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the serious economic and employment problems resulting from the overnight announcement of the Studebaker Corporation that it was ceasing its motor car operation, without any consultation with any level of government—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should not put his question in this form. I suggest the preamble he is now using is out of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Then I will put the question. Would the minister give consideration to adding another point to his 12 point code of good corporation behaviour expected from Canadian subsidiaries which would read as follows: "To give all levels of government at least three months' notice—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question cannot be accepted.

TRANSPORT

SECOND FERRY BETWEEN NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received the Margeson report on a second New England-Nova Scotia ferry service? If so, what action is being taken to provide a more comprehensive service?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): This is a question which I do not think I can answer effectively on the orders of the day.

Mr. MacEwan: Nor at any other time.

POSSIBLE FARE INCREASE ON N.B.-P.E.I. FERRY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether there is to be any increase, as I understand may be the case, in the fares charged by the C.N.R. on the New Brunswick-Prince Edward Island ferry service?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether he has taken note of the question I raised on March 31 concerning an inquiry into the procedure and organization of the Canada Pension Commission by Mr. Justice Wells. Can the hon.

gentleman now inform the house whether the inquiry has been completed and, if so, when the report will be available?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): First, a correction. I am sure the slip was not intended by the hon. member, but the chairman of the committee is Mr. Justice Wood. I do not have a recent report, but I believe the hearings are completed. However, I will inquire and inform the hon. member at a later date.

AIR TRANSPORT

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS RESPECTING AIR CORRIDORS ACROSS ATLANTIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Can the soft hearted minister inform the house whether he has yet received a report of the unanimous vote of the International Federation of Airline Pilots' Associations to reject the recent narrowing of the north Atlantic air corridors from 120 to 90 nautical miles. If so, can he tell the house whether the government intends to take any action in support of this unanimous objection by all the pilots of the non-communist world?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am aware of the representations, but I am not in a position to make any announcement about the attitude of the government.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON CIVIL AVIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister yet received the Wheatcroft report on civil aviation in Canada, and has this report been made public?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I have received from Mr. Wheatcroft the advice which I asked him to give me some time ago. As to whether it would be desirable to make this document public, I shall have to think about it.

Mr. Knowles: Are the terms of this report playing any part in the thinking of the government regarding Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines flying on transcontinental routes?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, that was the subject matter of the report.

[Mr. Loney.]

EDUCATION

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government decided to appoint a royal commission on higher education?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question was for the minister of mines but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. May I ask whether, when the Donald report is received, it will be made public?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Acting Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I will take that question as notice.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PAROLE SYSTEM REVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wish to ask the Solicitor General a question. A week or more ago I asked the hon. gentleman about a statement promised by his predecessor with regard to government policy on probation and changes in other such fields. In reply he told us this question would be answered during the course of the debate on capital punishment. Does this undertaking still hold, and will a statement be made?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): If I recollect correctly I stated that the points raised during the debate would be met. The debate is continuing, and if these points are directed to my attention I will undertake to deal with them, to the best of my ability.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED WORDING OF ROAD SIGNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister make inquiries to find out whether the well printed signs along the sides of the trans-Canada highway from one end of Newfoundland to the other reading "Thank you, Mr. Pearson, for this highway" were paid for by the rest of the taxpayers of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

COURT DECISION RESPECTING PROVISION OF MEDICAL CARE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I asked a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources which he promised to take as notice. I asked at that time whether any decision had been made with respect to supplying health services to the Indian native population of this country.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member if he would give us another day.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—REPORT OF INQUIRY RESPECTING MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has yet received the report of the Thompson inquiry with regard to the air base at Winnipeg and, if so, when the report will be tabled.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the report is being translated and printed, and it will not be presented formally to His Excellency until that procedure has been completed. I hope it will be quite soon.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT REGARDING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The house resumed, from Monday, March 28, consideration of the motion of Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the Governor in Council.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Gauthier.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or some minister representing the government would have placed before the house and the country the views of the government regarding the abolition of capital punishment.

Mr. Pearson: It is not a government matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a responsibility of the government constitutionally even though the vote is to be a free vote.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am surprised that the Prime Minister takes such an attitude. Apparently he has not looked up the constitutional position which places upon the government of Canada now in office the responsibility of stating to parliament the views of the government.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. gentleman a question on that point at the beginning of his remarks? Did he put the views of his government on record when the McGee capital punishment bill was being discussed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the Prime Minister has not looked up the constitutional proprieties again.

Mr. Pearson: When did you speak on it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: His interruption seems to indicate that he can get along all right while he is making up his mind but where he gets into trouble is when he finally makes it up.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister says that it is not the responsibility of the government, so I begin at once by pointing out to him the fact that constitutionally it is required of the government to make clear its position even though the vote is a free vote. I can understand the difficulty of the Prime Minister because already we have had two ministers participate, one taking one side and one taking the other, not an unusual circumstance in a government that apparently does not recognize the principle of cabinet solidarity.

I go back to 1956 when this question was before the United Kingdom parliament by means of a private member's bill, with the government allotting time for its discussion, and I point out that on July 9, 1956, the then Lord Chancellor, Lord Kilmuir, stated:

> Her Majesty's Government are clearly and unequivocally of the view that capital punishment must be retained. I endorse fully today what my right hon. and gallant friend the Home Secretary has said in another place about the dangers of this bill. However, I have said that this will be a free vote and I do not withdraw from that statement in any way. The government do not expect or wish that any noble lord should speak or vote against this bill out of a sense of loyalty to the government and least of all from party feeling. At the same time—

Here is the constitutional practice in the mother of parliaments, the constitutional practice which we follow here under the British North America Act:

> —no government with any sense of responsibility could abstain from expressing their view on such an important matter.

Then also there is the reference to what was said in 1956, when the matter was before the House of Lords, by the Marquis of Salisbury:

> Of course, the government have their own view and I think it is right they should have their own view. That view was stated to Your Lordships yesterday by my noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor. That was the position in another place and that is the position here.

In other words, there must be a declaration by the government as to its attitude regarding a bill of this importance even though there is a free vote. That was the course followed in the previous presentations in the British parliament.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the matter came up for the first time in recent years in 1948 when a British House of Commons which had a Labour majority passed through all its stages a bill to abolish capital punishment. At that time it was done against the advice of the government. The government made its stand very clear in 1948 in that even though there was going to be a free vote the Labour government of that day was opposed to abolition.

The same thing happened under the Conservative administration in 1956. A predominantly Conservative British House of Commons passed through all its stages a bill to abolish capital punishment, and in the house at that time it was made clear by the government, through the intervention of the Home Secretary—who had the responsibility for considering the death penalty and recommending to the Crown whether or not there should be a reprieve—that the government's attitude was against abolition. That was the attitude of the Home Secretary in particular, who was responsible for the protection of the public.

We in the Canadian parliament are in a strange quandary in this matter. Constitutionally the government should make its view clear and it has not done so. It has put forward two ministers, each of whom has expressed diametrically opposing views, instead of following the constitutional practice whereby the government decides on its views collectively and then follow those views.

The Prime Minister may say, "Well, I have made my view very clear." In that connection one has only to go back to what happened on May 24, 1961. At that time, on third reading of the motion by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) for amendment of the Criminal Code on the question of capital and non-capital murder, the Prime Minister of today did not vote. The only time he voted was on an amendment proposed by one of the opposition members to the effect that the matter should be referred to a special committee for the purpose of further study and examination and that such select committee should have the power to send for persons, papers and things. On that occasion the present Prime Minister, then leader of the opposition, voted in favour of the question being submitted to a committee, and when it came to third reading on June 6 he did not vote.

To begin with I point out there can be no question that constitutionally the government should have made its position clear on this matter.

Having said that, I now come to deal with the matter that has been before parliament on a number of occasions. I say to those who sponsored this resolution that they individually and collectively have made a worthy contribution to a problem that is of transcendent significance.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I recall my college days when we debated this question at the university. We had a mock parliament which dealt with the question. It had come before parliament eight or nine days earlier and in those days Hansard apparently was not produced within a matter of 15 hours. We dealt with this question because it was being dealt with in parliament. In every generation there are leaders in the thinking of a nation who take stands which are not always popular. I find that the greatest exponent of all throughout the years was a Liberal member from Montreal, the late Robert Bickerdike who represented Montreal-St. Lawrence. He brought bills before the House of Commons on three occasions, first in 1914, again in 1915 and finally in 1917.

In his day Mr. Bickerdike was a leader in support of a matter which to him was one of conscience. He did not receive widespread support. It is interesting in retrospect to review the attitude taken by the then leader of the opposition, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who did not give support to Mr. Bickerdike's claim that capital punishment should not apply to women and children. It is also interesting to note that a man who was to become prime minister of Canada, Arthur Meighen, expressed himself as believing that even though a certain convicted murderer was only 16 years of age—and I now quote his words—"it might well be that the case would show there should be no restriction in its application merely on account of age". In other words, the thinking of the individuals and the thinking of the leaders in parliament has greatly changed in a period of 50 years.

The debate has been a worthy one. We are not here for the purpose of converting anyone. I speak not as Leader of the Conservative party; I speak here as an individual expressing conscientous views which have become intensified with the passing years in reference to this problem. It has been an excellent debate; there has been an expression of the feelings of individuals in respect of a problem which has exercised the minds of men for many generations.

I do not intend to speak in an emotional way. When I look over the law reports I find there are six reported cases in the Supreme Court and in the various appeal courts in which I appeared. I have appeared as counsel for the accused in twice that number and more. When I was prime minister about 62 cases came before the cabinet which were given consideration.

I wish to give the house and the country some indication of my reaction both in my capacity as a counsel in the courts and also as one who had the responsibility of administration. All of us realize the awful problem we face; all of us have reasons for making clear our individual views. Mine, in summary, were expressed many years ago by John Donne when he said, "Any man's death diminishes me because I am involved in mankind".

Every generation has looked forward to the day when the killing of mankind in war would be done away with. It is a strange commentary on man when it is realized there are only two species on the earth that wage organized war, men and ants. So far as the ants are concerned, anthropologists say they cannot be changed. Man always has hoped that the message of Nazareth would become the embodiment of principle for all mankind.

We have war. We also have the taking of human lives by individuals. I said that the thinking of people has changed. I have read every debate which has taken place in the British parliament from the days when Sir Samuel Romilly in 1810 introduced his motion on the subject of capital punishment. I have read the several reports of the various commissions. I have read the literature of the last ten or 12 years on this subject. I have seen the change in the thinking of men and women everywhere. Can you imagine in 1810 the Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom or the Lord Chief Justice coming out for abolition of capital punishment? The Lord Chancellor spoke and said it was necessary to maintain capital punishment for the theft of five shillings or more to preserve property. He said: If we ever abolish executions for theft, we will have destroyed the right of human beings to acquire and add to their wealth. In 1965 the Lord High Chancellor of the United Kingdom, Lord Gardiner, came out unequivocally for abolition.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Lord Parker, the Lord Chief Justice and one of the great counsels of Britain, came out in favour of abolition with one proviso, that life imprisonment be in fact interpreted in its literal sense. The Lord Chancellor said:

—when Samuel Romilly started this he did not know what the result of abolishing capital punishment was going to be, here or elsewhere, because it had not been done, and he never used more than two arguments—namely, first, "You think crime will increase if you abolish it, but it will not, because, you see, the great deterrent to crime is not severity of punishment but certainty of conviction, and you will find the conviction rate will go up". Second, he said, "We all underrate the effect of the example set by the State". I have always been convinced that he was right, and I have agreed with John Bright when he said, "A deep reverence for human life is worth more than a thousand executions in the prevention of murder. And it is in fact the great security of human life. The law of capital punishment, while pretending to support this reverence, does in fact tend to destroy it.

That quotation is taken from the Parliamentary Debates of the House of Lords, July 20, 1965.

When anyone says that he who expresses that view has not an appreciation of history, let me remind him that the Lord Chancellor of the United Kingdom, with his vast experience and having behind him the tradition of hundreds of years in the administration of justice, the cornerstone of which in the United Kingdom has been the capital sentence, has taken that view. One begins to realize the change that has taken place.

I start with certain basic principles. Society must be protected. From earliest history that has been the view, and I intend to review for a moment something of the awfulness of the punishments which have been exacted for generations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the right hon. Leader of the Opposition launches into the main part of his address, perhaps I should seek the agreement of the house to allow the right hon. gentleman to continue beyond his allotted time.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: From earliest history there has been an acceptance of the principle that the objective is to protect society, to which we have added in modern criminology the objective of rehabilitating offenders. I am not going to rely on statistics because statistics in relation to a subject such as this do not take into consideration the relative differences that exist between regions and individuals.

I am not going to bring out personal matters except to say this. I have followed the tradition of the British bar. In this tradition, in notorious and widely publicized cases great counsel have appeared in the United Kingdom. In this tradition Maxwell Fyffe, finally Lord Kilmuir, the Lord Chancellor, appeared in a frightful, bloodthirsty murder case in the United Kingdom—the "Vampire Murders". The accused was Heath. The tradition in the United Kingdom is that no member of the bar turns down a retainer, however poor the individual may be, provided he is not otherwise engaged.

Some quote Scripture and say it is difficult for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. A cynic would ask whether a rich man, leaving aside the kingdom of heaven, is not virtually secured against a meeting with the hangman on the gallows? It is because of that fact that counsel have followed the course of appearing for the defence. There is no reward in a monetary sense. There is a feeling of satisfaction in the case of a person alone, facing death in the dock, the evidence mounting against him, when, as the evidence unfolds, justice is done.

I do not like personal references. I have followed the stand that poverty must not provide a one-way ticket to the gallows. I do not belong to the school that would permit that it should. No call was ever denied. In 1940, in the middle of an election, I undertook the defence of an Irish woman charged with the murder of her husband, allegedly the leader of a German-American bund. She was acquitted. An appeal was taken by the Crown. Her acquittal was reversed. Again she came back to trial and again she was acquitted.

Do not let anyone tell me that confessions are always to be believed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I remember once a confession placed before me by counsel which I regarded as final and complete. This man confessed that he had killed a young girl after attacking her. I was called in and spoke with him and he said, "I never did it". I said, "There is your confession in detail. You admit attacking her and you admit killing her. You made the statement freely when you were arrested outside the province of Saskatchewan". He said, "I am not guilty". Everyone knows what one's answer would be in this set of circumstances. However, his picture appeared in the press. A farmer living between Regina and Saskatoon had employed him for several days prior to and several days after the day in question. He got in touch with me and I in turn with the solicitor of record. This farmer said, "That man cannot be guilty. The crime took place 250 miles away and he could not have gone there and committed the crime. He was working for me not only on that day but for several days before and after."

• (3:50 p.m.)

The crime was committed on a certain date after four in the afternoon when the youngster was returning from school. I saw the accused and he said, "You will not get me involved like this". He said, "You are going to get me in trouble". Do you know what he was afraid of? When he was picked up in Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, he had admitted to this crime because he had stolen $10 from his employer when he left. He said, "If I get into this business I am going to go to jail for theft". I said, "If you don't, you are going elsewhere". The Crown immediately withdrew the charge. He had been committed for trial. He did not stand any chance of acquittal because there was a complete confession. I mention this because so many say there is certainty in confessions. We have an example of this in the United Kingdom. I refer to the Evans case which has been mentioned by one of my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party. I am not going into that case because it is now before a judge for consideration.

From my experience at the bar I say that anyone who says an innocent man cannot go to the gallows is wrong, because I know differently. It is a frightful thing when a man you believe to be innocent and whose attitude is, Don't worry about me, God will not allow it, walks to the gallows and months later the truth comes out. These are the things that exercise the mind and heart of those who from time to time without remuneration act for the defence.

Sir, it is said that the punishment must be in keeping with the offence. Let me go back over the years. Ordinarily I would not take advantage of the consideration of the house in allowing me extra time but I hope on this occasion I may be permitted to deal with these matters. They say we must follow the course of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a life for a life. Do they read the rest of Exodus, which made a variety of offences punishable by death? Read Exodus and you will find out. In my opinion horrible punishments do not deter. In Anglo-Saxon England the punishment was boiling in oil. They changed that because oil was costly. Under Alfred the Great they brought in hanging. Women were drowned because it was felt that hanging was indecent in exposing the feet and lower limbs.

The first great abolitionist was William the Conqueror. He was opposed to the death sentence. He said he did not believe in the death sentence and substituted maiming, the removal of arms, legs, eyes and ears. His reasoning was that the trunk must remain alive as a witness of its crimes. We think of Henry VIII and his multiplicity of conjugal murders but do not recall that 72,000 were hanged for stealing during his reign. This did not reduce the number of thefts. Elizabeth, in the name of humanity, said, "I have to bring about a change in the death sentence". There were two varieties of the death sentence in those days. You were either executed on the gibbet by being put in chains and hung up and left until your soul went to its Maker or you went to the scaffold. There you suffocated. Elizabeth said that in the name of humanity a change had to be made and people could not be hung in chains unless strangled beforehand. They said this was necessary. They quoted Scripture.

Sir, these are things that must be looked at in the light of events. They burned people at the stake for the commonest offences. Until the first ten years of the 19th century this was the penalty for treason and in 1812 seven people were sentenced in the following way:

> That you and each of you, be taken to the place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, where you shall be hanged by the neck, not till you are dead; that you be severally taken down, while yet alive, and your bowels be taken out and burnt before your faces—that your heads be then cut off, and your bodies cut into four quarters, to be at the King's disposal. And God have mercy on your souls.

Did that stop criminal offences? Were those who opposed this type of sentence and brought about a change soft-headed? The trend in history has been more and more to emphasize the punitive and retributive nature of punishment, aside from the question of reform. Now we think of reform. I am trying to cover what has not been dealt with specifically during this debate. How many of us realize that from 1838 to 1858 in Upper and Lower Canada the death penalty was not exacted? For 20 years there was no death penalty. The reason for that was Laurnt and Mathews were hanged in Upper Canada and many more were hanged in Lower Canada following the rebellion and what took place so shocked the public conscience that Queen Victoria refused for 20 years to allow any executions to take place.

Everything was done to get around the difficulty of harsh punishment. In earlier times there was the benefit of clergy. Anyone in holy orders or a clerk did not have to pay the ultimate penalty. It was surprising the number who said they were in holy orders or were clerks. They could not sort them out.

But they finally found a way. It was called the "neck verse" test. Anyone that claimed the benefit of clergy was asked whether they could read Psalm 51, verse 1. If they could not read it and did not have enough education, they were not accorded the benefit of clergy. It was surprising the number who learned how to memorize that verse in trying to get away from the harshness of the law. At one time they tried branding on the left cheek. In 1699 parliament had to decide on this question which was submitted to them:

> The said punishment of burning on the cheek hath not had its desired effect, by deterring such offenders from the further committing such crimes and offences, but on the contrary, such offenders being rendered thereby unfit to be intrusted in any service or employment to get their livelihood in any honest and lawful way, become the more desperate.

• (4:00 p.m.)

They decided branding was not the thing. There were 200 varieties of offences for which you could be executed up to 1810 or 1815. In 1688 there were 50; George II added 30 more; George III added 60 and by 1819 there were 223 capital crimes. Do you know why they did it, Mr. Speaker? They said, if we make the punishment hard enough there will be no offences committed. They had public executions. A gala day was had and everybody came. Everybody enjoyed the festivities.

In Ontario many years ago, they hanged a boy of 16 for picking pockets. While the hanging went on, four people in the audience had their pockets picked. The argument is that hanging is a deterrent, but history does not support that argument. Will anybody say that it was because of weakness that these horrible punishments were changed? The reason was that juries began to seek reasons to acquit. About 150 years ago the theft of five shillings was punishable by death. Many said this punishment was salutary, that it was punitive and above all a deterrent.

I come back to the various royal commissions and I only mention those which have not been placed in Hansard. The head of one royal commission, whose views have already been placed before the house, was Sir Ernest Gowers. He spent three years of hard work on this subject in the 1950's. He said that he was a retentionist when he started this study. Read what he says in, "A Life For A Life". He changed his mind. I quote:

> Before serving on the royal commission I, like most other people, had given no great thought to this problem. If I had been asked for my opinion, I should probably have said I was in favour of the death penalty, and disposed to regard abolitionists as people whose hearts were bigger than their heads. Four years of close study of this subject gradually dispelled that feeling and in the end I became convinced the abolitionists were right in their conclusions; though I could not agree with all their arguments, and that so far from the sentimental approach leading into their camp, and the rational one into that of the supporters, it was the other way about.

He changed his opinion. There were three Home Secretaries in a row who changed their opinions, two of whom had been strongly in favour of capital punishment. They changed their views between 1946 and 1956. I refer, of course, to Lord Chuter Ede and Heward Brooke, as well as the incumbent Home Secretary in 1965 these men have studied the problem not on the basis of emotion but on the basis of experience.

What are the arguments? I have read the speeches. One of those who indicated the attitude of many judges was the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in his description of what his father went through. I have known other judges who have had the same experience. If it is a deterrent, Mr. Speaker, why not have public executions? They used to have them. Read the descriptions of Dickens and Thackeray. These things were abolished about 1860. My great grandfather used to speak of attending executions held near Aurora north of Toronto. Everybody went.

Have you ever lived in a small town or a small city in which there has been an execution? Prince Albert today is a place of about 26,000 or 27,000 but for many years the population was around 9,000 or 10,000. On the day of an execution the people are silent. They are filled with awe and are relieved when they see the black flag go up. If execution is a deterrent, let us make it public. It has not deterred in the past.

The arguments for capital punishment as I read them are as follows: First, it is based on the Scriptures. Second, it operates as a deterrent. The third argument is that police forces and custodial workers require its continuance for their protection. The fourth is that some time in the future abolition will be appropriate but not now when crime is on the increase. The fifth is that murder having been committed there is no hope of rehabilitation or redemption for murderers. To me, to you, sir, and to all of us, the Christian religion is a religion of redemption, of compassion and of mercy. I have no sympathy for murder. I do not forget that an innocent person has been obliterated by the wrongful action of another.

When they come to quote scripture to me I ask them, where do you begin and where do you end? A moment ago I mentioned the Judaic principle in Exodus where the following are capital crimes: striking or cursing one's parents, slave procurement, a fatal attack by an ox, witchcraft and sacrifice to any god other than Jahweh. Then Leviticus added adultery and Deuteronomy added criminal assault in a city, a rebellious son and an unchaste bride.

In the southern United States from 1830 to 1860 my religious denomination argued that slavery was necessary and that it had received the inspiration of divine scripture. In the argument in the book entitled "The Death Penalty" this appears:

> The issue of slavery will serve as a clarifying illustration. By a proof text method, there is no direct Biblical warrant for the abolition of slavery. It is clear to us when we take the position that we are striking back at the spirit, and slavery is unjust and evil.

Canadians conceal their pride in their country. We do not boast about it. How many of us pridefully point out that it was here in Canada that slavery was abolished for the first time in all the western world in 1803? It is an amazing record. It was 40 years before it was abolished in the United Kingdom and many more years before it was abolished in the United States. The argument that slavery was divinely appointed was still used in the days of Webster, Choate, and the other giants of the 1830's and 1840's.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Let me deal now with these various arguments, Mr. Speaker. So far as the religious argument is concerned, I am not going to get into a theological discussion at all; I am not qualified to do that. I also realize what are the consequences of a lawyer trying to interpret the Scriptures. We lawyers recall very well some of the descriptions of us in the New Testament. But I say that the doctrine of an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth and a life for a life, if carried out literally, would mean that nobody would have eyes to see with; and there would be nobody with teeth. That was the view expressed by one of the Lord Chancellors of the United Kingdom.

Is capital punishment a deterrent? There is a strong feeling widely held that it is, though there is no proof in any statistics I have ever read. It has been argued that if capital punishment is abolished there will be an increase in the number of murders. The United Nations report of 1962 came to the conclusion that there has been no notable rise in the number of murders.

May I interpolate at this time that one of the best pieces of work ever produced on this subject since I have been in parliament is the recent White Paper on capital punishment. Whoever prepared it gave both sides in a way that could not but be beneficial to all of us.

If capital punishment is a deterrent, Mr. Speaker, then why is it that since 1956, when the United Kingdom divided homicide into capital and non-capital murder, there has not been a percentage increase in either category? Their system of dividing murder into capital and non-capital murder has produced some of the most extraordinary anomalies that could be imagined.

For example, if an old woman is criminally assaulted and during the course of the assault is killed, the assailant would be charged with non-capital murder. If a little girl is criminally attacked and she dies, that would be non-capital murder. But if her assailant picked up a sixpence which she had dropped the crime would then become capital murder. That is the danger of dividing.

We also introduced a division in 1961 when the hon. member for Kamloops as minister of justice introduced legislation to provide for a division between capital and non-capital murder. Some say that this division has not had a fair chance to work. It certainly brought about a decrease in the number of capital cases. But the other day I was amazed to read that a Supreme Court Justice in Ontario—his name I am not going to mention—trying a case of capital murder, when told the accused would like to plead guilty to non-capital murder, said he was not going to waste time trying him on a capital murder charge because he would be reprieved in any case by the present government.

When I asked at the beginning what was the stand of the government on this issue I did so in regard to the constitutional responsibility. I now say that the manner in which there has been a disregard of the law in the last three years by the executive has brought about the abolition of capital punishment in this country by executive order. There is no other conclusion. I say that Her Majesty's ministers ought not to break the law. They ought not to have authority to override it, except where the exercise of mercy becomes appropriate, any more than the Supreme Court of Canada or any of its judges have jurisdiction over what happens in parliament or over discretion exercised by a government of Canada or any of the ministers of that government in their decisions.

I argued the only case ever argued, Mr. Speaker, on a question of mandamus against a minister of the crown in 1940 in order to compel a minister of the crown to carry out the law. The citation is Stewart and Swain and it is the only case on the point in the Commonwealth except for one in India. I went all the way, Mr. Speaker, in that case. You as a lawyer know that the time to win is the last time, and I lost in the Supreme Court of Canada on a division of the court. When I make the statement as to the power of a Supreme Court Justice or the Supreme Court over parliament, I make it advisedly from the constitutional standpoint.

The Lord Chancellor of England, Lord Gardiner, examined very carefully the question whether or not dividing murder into capital or non-capital murder made any difference. We know who commits murder—the insane, the emotionally disturbed, those filled with narcotics or alcohol.

There are two other classes. Those who want to be in the news are one. I have talked to them. "Am I in the papers", they ask. They have a strange complex which politicians understand possibly better than others; but frequently in the mind of the person who commits homicide is an abiding desire to have a status of his own.

Mr. Nielsen: To be in the noose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, to be in the noose. The second class is the professional criminal. With regard to those who are insane or emotionally disturbed through alcohol or narcotics, I cannot see any deterrence in capital punishment. As far as the other two categories are concerned—professional criminals and those seeking recognition—I have never acted for them but I am told that they believe they can win. And they have some reason to believe this because only one out of 16 murderers ever goes to the gallows. That is the experience in the United States and Canada over a period of 40 years.

I said a moment ago that if capital punishment is a deterrent the deterrent should be public. I am not going to read the words of the authors to whom I referred earlier, but I do intend to read what has been said in the United Kingdom in regard to the deterrent effect of the death penalty in respect of those offences which are still capital offences. This is the conclusion arrived at by one speaker in the House of Lords debate:

> In the period from January 1, 1952 to March 20, 1957, when the Homicide Act came into force—

Up to that time the penalty for both capital and non-capital murder was death.

> —the annual average percentage of murders that would have been non-capital if the Act had been in force was 85.6 per cent; the corresponding percentage for the period from March 21, 1957, up to the end of last year is 86.5 per cent.

So I ask, Mr. Speaker, where is the deterrence? Murder was divided into capital and non-capital murder, yet the percentage remains almost the same. That was the view taken not only by those to whom I have already made reference but also by the Gowers Commission. The Lord Chancellor summed it up in this way:

> I do not see in those figures support for the argument that the death penalty operates as a deterrent.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Statistics do not prove it. Experience does not prove it. Because we accept ourselves as being rational persons, all of us would feel frightened. Nobody commits murder if he possesses the mentality which you and I have at the moment.

The next argument is that we must protect police officials and custodial officials. I believe this. Does the death sentence protect them? Let us look at the record. Professor Sellin has been quoted several times and was recognized as an authority by the Royal Commission in the United Kingdom. The only place where he was not recognized was here in Canada by a committee of this parliament on the question of lotteries and the like. He made a survey of a large number of states in the United States to ascertain whether the existence of the death penalty made any difference in the number of criminals prepared to use lethal weapons against the police. He took all the cities in the six abolitionist states, and the number of attacks was 1.2 fatal attacks per 100,000 of the population. In the 11 death penalty states the rate was 1.3 per 100,000. So there is nothing in that.

In the British Parliament these statistics were placed on the record by Lord Ray. Since 1919 slightly fewer municipal policemen were killed in the abolitionist states than in those states which retained the death penalty. In the case of all the states there was a high rate from the early 20's to the mid-30's and a lower one thereafter. In a recorded total of 77 killings of state policemen in 24 states only six occurred in the six abolitionist states, and four of these latter states did not record a single killing.

If I felt there should be an exception, if anywhere there were statistics to support it, then much as I would regret doing so I would support an amendment to take into account the danger to police and custodians. In the United States they found out in the course of their examination that the municipal police of 240 cities, 75 per cent from the death penalty states, did not believe there was any connection between the death penalty and the use of lethal weapons by criminals. Finally, when this exception was moved in the United Kingdom it was turned down by both houses of parliament, as all hon. members know.

Let us examine the record. Who would you think would be able to give the best evidence in this connection? Who but the wardens of these institutions in which executions take place? I refer to page 242 of "The Death Penalty In America", reporting the results when the wardens are asked specifically to determine the effect of the death penalty so far as police or custodial officials are concerned. Would hon. members not think that these people who have the responsibility for executions and for the custody of individuals who have been reprieved would hold strong opinions? The official views presented and analysed were collected. The responses to inquiries mailed to all state prison wardens and four federal prison wardens in the United States—a total of 55—were analysed. What was the answer? The attitude was that the death penalty was not a deterrent, and this answer was an overwhelming one. The percentages clearly showed that those in the abolitionist states had gone as far as to contend that their police officers and custodial officers were in less danger than those in states where there was a death penalty.

This was the finding of the select committee of 1928. Those were the views which were expressed when they stated that no evidence had been received showing that the abolition of capital punishment in other countries had in fact led to the consequences apprehended by the police.

Certainly in the United Kingdom unarmed police officers have a reputation for fairness and integrity which our own have to the same extent, and they would not have abolished the death penalty if they or any of them, including outstanding leaders such as the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, had not concluded that there was no basis for the fears which had been expressed.

What does the Lord Chancellor say? At column 703 of the House of Lords' debates of July 20 last he is reported as stating:

> It is said: Ought we not to protect the police and prison officers? Well, of course we should. Abolitionists are very used to being told they do not think of the police and they do not think of the victims. That is really quite untrue as I know from my own experience.

The Lord Chancellor went on to say that in his own opinion, based on his own experience at the bar and as Lord Chancellor, there was no basis in fact for this fear.

We come now to the next question, the tremendous increase in crimes of violence. The increase that is taking place in Britain, in Canada and in the United States is almost incredible. Everyone has an explanation. I do not say mine is any better than anyone else's. But I know that as a boy, if we got hold of a little paperback about Jesse James—it would not be looked at by a boy today—we would creep under the barn to read it. Today, hour after hour on television pictures of terror and murder, firearms and rapine are seen. No one wants censorship. But there should be a censorship of reason within those institutions. There can be no other embracing explanation for the tremendous increase in violent crime. Guns, weapons, terror—psychologists say they do not greatly influence the minds of the young. It may not influence the minds of the young but, to echo Lord Wellington's description of his troops, "they scare the hell out of me" when I see some of these things. I am using an expression of Wellington's and it is therefore appropriate for parliament.

• (4:30 p.m.)

What is the increase in crime? The increase is so large that it seems almost incredible, some 70 per cent in the United States in a period of 13 years. What about our own country? I have not been able to secure the figures for 1964 and 1965. My staff endeavoured to get them today from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics but they are not prepared yet.

I do not want to read all this into Hansard, but I have a statement here compiled by D.B.S. and I am going to ask leave to put on the record the portions that are not in ink. The inked parts were placed on it by my office, but I shall give the figures in round numbers.

In 1945, not taking in Newfoundland where crime is always at a very low percentage and in any event it was not in Confederation at that time and therefore was not part of the picture, there were 41,965 convictions for indictable offences in Canada. That was the last year of the war. In 1946 they increased to 46,939. The next high point is 1954 when there were 47,981. The next high point is 1958 when there were 62,839. In 1961 there were 71,262, in 1962 there were 71,517 and in 1963 there were 78,518. Can you conceive of an increase in the rate of conviction per 100,000 population from 493 in 1945 to 647 in 1963?

Make allowance for the increase in population and what do we find? Each year, almost without exception, there was a tremendous increase. In 1963 the increase was 9.8 per cent over 1962. In 1961 the percentage increase was 10.1; in 1960 there was an increase of 10.2 per cent; in 1959 there was a decline of 6.6 per cent; in 1958 there was an increase of 14.5 per cent and in 1957 an increase of 19.6 per cent, a frightening increase in indictable offences.

Does that mean an increase in murders? This is an interesting fact. The Lord Chancellor in the United Kingdom stressed that he found, as a result of careful examination of all the statistics in the United Kingdom and elsewhere, that the increase in violent crime is not reflected in any increase in murder. Why? The situation in the United Kingdom has become so serious that more than a known 1,000,000 indictable offences are being committed annually compared with 500,000 ten years ago, but there is no percentage increase in murder. This is a particularly striking circumstance when you hear it argued that now is not the time to abolish capital punishment because we are in a crime wave. I repeat that the Lord Chancellor concluded that in no way did this vast increase in violent crimes translate itself into homicide increases.

I have reviewed the picture from a somewhat different angle from that used by other hon. members, all of whom, as I say, have made really worth-while contributions to this very difficult problem. The next question is, when should the House of Commons act? There will always be those who argue that the death penalty should be progressively abolished and ultimately completely abolished but the time is not now. That argument has been advanced over and over again against all changes or reforms in every generation. That was the argument that was used when the question arose whether the death penalty for the theft of five shillings should be abolished.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

I have here a record of the debate that took place in May, 1810, when Romilly introduced his motion to abolish capital punishment in certain particulars, including the stealing of goods valued up to five shillings. Mr. Herbert, M.P., a very outstanding man, said:

> We have got to stop people from stealing goods.

Then he used these words:

> If punishments in use are not to be retained what will be substituted for them? Will they introduce the knout from Russia which is, according to the evidence of those who had witnessed its infliction, more horrible than death itself? Or will they revive the practice of nailing ears to the pillory?

Mr. Giddy, M.P., said that he thought sheep stealing was very properly punished with death because:

> —considering the manner in which sheep are fed upon extensive downs, the exposure to depredation and the difficulty of detection, such a severe punishment is necessary for the sake of preserving a vast quantity of wholesome food and warm raiment for human use.

Those were the arguments that were used in 1810. It is well to get the Hansard in question because those arguments are being used today for another purpose. I think it was my hon. friend from York South who referred to Chief Justice Ellenborough, and I recall that Lord Eldon, the Lord Chancellor, had this to say:

> I am proud that I left for execution a prisoner who was convicted before me of stealing a horse worth seven shillings as he had a prison record as a regular horse stealer.

Then this was said:

> It was indispensably necessary that offences highly injurious to the community should be punished with forfeiture of life.

Those are some of the views that were held then and which are being advanced again today. When Queen Victoria came to the throne the number of hanging crimes dwindled from hundreds to 15, including wrecking, arson, serious sexual crimes, rioting and robbery with violence. It took 20 years for the remaining capital offences to be reduced to four, and again the argument is being advanced that this is not the time to abolish capital punishment. Let me answer it.

The basis of the argument is that crime is increasing, that we need to maintain capital punishment even though the increase in violent crime does not extend to an increase in murder. On the other hand, if crime were going down those who argue against abolition would say that the reason crime is decreasing is capital punishment and it is not appropriate to abolish it now. That is both sides of the argument that has been advanced over the years.

As I said earlier, how terrible it is to realize the finality of execution when an innocent man goes to the gallows. It is a dreadful experience. It happens. There have been 73 known wrongful convictions for homicide in the United States since 1893.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mention was made by one hon. member to my left of the Truscott case. I am not going to deal with that. Let me say at once that had he been 20 years of age he would have been executed. We did not give reprieves for that type of offence. There was not recommendation for mercy. It was a violent offence. It is not for me to say whether he is or is not innocent; I am unable to conclude that. However, I would point out that if perchance he had been 20 years of age and if he is now found innocent he would already have joined that group that marches from innocence to an appointment with the scaffold.

There have been cases in the United Kingdom. There was the James Hanratty case in 1961. I have read the book by Lord Russell on the strong case made in respect of this man's innocence. But he is gone. What about Lord Shawcross, a man with a tremendous capacity as counsel? He was at the Nuremberg trials and at that time, as I recall he was Attorney General. Speaking in the House of Lords he said that he knew of at least one case and possibly two in his experience where it was felt that a man was wrongfully executed.

What about mistakes? There was a mistake in the province of Quebec. I mention that because the matter now is before the people as a whole. I think of Bernard Chartier, a man who was earning $18,000 a year and a good citizen. Chartier was arrested. I have his wife's statement here. He was picked up at his office on September 2, 1965, and the alleged offence was committed in July. He was released after 30 hours of intensive questioning. He was handcuffed wherever he went. On October 22 the Montreal Star carried this item:

> Chartier Charged in Death.
>
> Bernard Chartier, 45-year old insurance agent, was arraigned in Criminal Court today on a charge of manslaughter arising from the death of a St. Lambert man following a punch on the head last July.

He lost his job. He was as innocent as you or I. The coroner's jury found that he was not responsible. The Montreal Gazette of November 6, 1965 states:

> Crown Admits Error In Manslaughter Case.
>
> The Crown admitted yesterday that it had made a terrible mistake in wrongfully accusing south shore insurance man Bernard Chartier of manslaughter.
>
> The manslaughter charge pending against the 45-year old Chartier was promptly dismissed at preliminary hearing before Judge John O'Mara. The Crown said it had no evidence to offer.

Had this been a capital offence and had he been tried and convicted, what would have happened? His job is gone. He has no recourse; he has no right of action.

By this time, Mr. Speaker, you will have suspected or concluded that I am opposed to capital punishment. It is not from sentiment. I hate murder but I oppose on the other hand the perpetuation of capital punishment unless it operates as a deterrent. The matter has been argued in every generation. If you ask me why I have this view I can do no better than quote the words of the religious denomination to which I belong. The American Baptist convention adopted the following resolution:

> Because the Christian believes in the inherent worth of human personality and in the unceasing availability of God's mercy, forgiveness, and redemptive power, and
>
> Because the Christian wholeheartedly supports the emphasis in modern penology upon the process of creative, redemptive rehabilitation rather than on punitive and primitive retribution, and
>
> Because the deterrent effects of capital punishment are not supported by available evidence, and
>
> Because the death penalty tends to brutalize the human spirit and the society which condones it, and
>
> Because human agencies of legal justice are fallible, permitting the possibility of the executing of the innocent,
>
> We, therefore, recommend the abolition of capital punishment and the re-evaluation of the parole system relative to such cases.

Similar resolutions have been passed in our own country by the United Church. In the United Kingdom the clergy in the Anglican Church regularly in the past supported capital punishment, but they have changed. Many outstanding Roman Catholic leaders have come out in opposition. I want to see this further step taken. We made changes when I was in office, as I have said already. Properly enforced I think those changes represented a tremendous step forward. The house has been generous to me today as always. If you say to me, have you any suggestions, I would reply: so far as the crime problem we now face is concerned, what we need is a national crusade. We need Canadians to be aroused. The crime rate is increasing six times faster in the United States and very little less in Canada than the population growth.

We need improvement in the methods of crime detection and improved police training. We need a national royal commission on crime. I would like to see a national crime information centre such as has been established in the United States which would have computers to compile data. All the police would have to do would be to ask the machine. I would like to see a system such as has been established in Chicago, called the Citizen Stop Crime card system. More than half a million of these cards have been distributed, and if a citizen sees a crime being committed he calls a number. In two years a great number of crimes have been stopped.

Why are we not taking action? I am not pointing at the government in this regard. Why do Canadians and the parliament of Canada not control the deadly weapons which can be picked up with the greatest of ease? Why do we not take action to prevent these falling into the hands of potential delinquents and the mentally disturbed? How can we meet the upsurge in crime if our police officers are occupied with traffic violations and their time is taken up there? They are chasing parking tickets when they should be chasing criminals.

Sir, what is the alternative? I do not offer the course taken in the United Kingdom of having exceptions made. I already have mentioned those—except a person who murders a prison guard, except a person who murders in the course of furtherance of theft and except any person who murders by shooting or causing an explosion.

• (4:50 p.m.)

All those exceptions were considered in the United Kingdom but were not accepted. I think we have been too lax in letting convicted murderers out of penitentiaries. Some say the average time spent in prison is nine years. I remember one individual who was convicted and spent 18 years behind bars and there certainly was not very much of a case against him. I came into that case after the man had been convicted. He had a low mentality and was not let out at the usual time.

We will have to build safeguards if we abolish capital punishment. Perhaps we should try it for a period of five years. At the same time, our judges should be empowered to recommend a minimum number of years imprisonment at the time of a murder conviction. I know this is a harsh thing to say, but society must be protected. I think there have been about four cases in Canada in the last 20 years where murderers have repeated the crime of murder.

There was a Manitoba case in which a man was convicted of murder. He was finally released after ten years and then he murdered again. There was another case here in Ottawa involving a man by the name of Bertrand who allegedly killed one wife and then killed a second wife before his life came to an end. There was another case in Saskatchewan of a man by the name of Carter who was convicted of murder, released from prison and went to the United Kingdom and there committed another murder. Another case which has been drawn to my attention involved a strangler by the name of Nelson, from Winnipeg who allegedly committed a similar offence in the United States.

I believe that the government should consider providing that following a life imprisonment conviction for murder, a sentence must be at least 20 years. One might consider that as being a denial of reformation but no one can tell me there can be no reformation in a sentence of 20 years.

I once defended a man who was charged with killing his father. I will not mention his name because today he is one of Canada's good citizens. He ended up with a life sentence. He went into prison in 1929 with an I.Q. of about 81. He had only completed grade 3 but while he was in prison he completed grade 12 and became the main operator of the commissariat in a Saskatchewan penitentiary, thereby saving the Canadian Government many thousands of dollars.

After he had been in prison for about 13 years he expressed the desire to join the armed forces. One night during the time we used to sit in opposition indefinitely in this house I went across the chamber and spoke with Mr. St. Laurent about this case. Within a few days he came to me and said that he would have to explain the circumstances. He told me that this man was of low mentality. However, he was examined and he joined the army and rose to the rank of sergeant.

When the war was over he returned, and I will never forget his arrival home in 1946. I went to the doorway and he was standing there. We had some friends in that evening including a judge and a sheriff. This fine chap came in and helped to serve tea and so on and as he left he said, "You have always treated me like a father". I said, "Do not carry that too far". In any event, he occupies a worth-while position in this country today.

Murderers are not the most dangerous people to custodial and police officers. The most dangerous so far as they are concerned are the mentally afflicted who have been imprisoned for life. We do not hang them even though they are of great and ever-increasing danger to the custodial officers.

I think a life sentence should be at least 20 years imprisonment and that no person should be pardoned or have his sentence commuted until he has served whatever term is believed to be appropriate. If we adopt that attitude I think we will meet with those who have, as honestly as I, expressed the contrary opinion. I am asking the house to give this suggestion a trial. The authorities in Britain do not act in the administration of justice without their eyes wide open. The method of abolishing capital punishment and setting a minimum time for a life sentence is becoming the trend.

In common with every member of the house, as I have already said, I hate the odious, contemptible and awful crime of murder. My feeling toward capital punishment, on the basis of many years' experience at the bar and as a result of having occupied the position as head of the government with the awful responsibility that rests on government in the exercise of mercy, compels me to the view that the bill introduced by these four hon. members deserves the support of this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that if we think we are sitting in judgment on capital punishment we are deluding ourselves. Social and moral progress, symbolized by this resolution, are standing in judgment on each member of this twenty seventh parliament. As the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has expressed so eloquently on March 28, the ultimate decision must be made by each one of us in the loneliness of his own conscience.

I deem it a privilege to follow the address we have just heard by the right hon. gentleman who expressed his views, the result of many years of keen, devoted interest to this important subject. He made reference to a quotation from John Donne:

Any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind.

We can currently pick up a book entitled "The Phenomenon of Man" written by Teilhard de Chardin, wherein he speaks of man's feeling for society and social equality. He says in his book:

For love to be possible there must be co-existence.

We belong to the caring generation. We cannot discuss capital punishment in the impersonal or abstract, for in the impersonal and abstract love dies.

That is why I cannot understand the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) who asks, "What is civilization?—I cannot find it in my heart to equate the abolition of capital punishment with such things as the discovery of America or the invention of the wheel". Nor can I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), who in the course of an address referred to capital punishment as "a lighthouse on a rock". Personally, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe this analogy will prove acceptable to our generation of young Canadians.

• (5:00 p.m.)

As the right hon. gentleman said when summarizing many of the points that were so ably presented in the course of this debate, society has gone a long way. In the past society tried to correct many of its ills by killing off certain of its members. This is the action of the animal kingdom, the natural reaction to a threat. It is a stage in evolution which we see, hopefully, drawing to a close. In the stage of evolution we are entering we attack root causes—I think this was the burden of the conclusion of the right hon. gentleman's address—not the victims of social ills. That, I think, is the real significance of this debate.

It is a fact that as late as 1786, in front of Newgate prison with 20,000 spectators, Phoebe Harris was burned. In 1777 a 14-year old girl was burned for hiding some whitewashed farthings at the instigation of her master. James Cook, a 24-year old bookbinder, was gibbeted in 1832 at Leicester with 32,000 people witnessing his execution. If you look at some of the paragraphs of Blackstone's Commentary you will find that the great Coke—and any lawyer in this chamber will respect his authority—at that time approved, with many appropriate Biblical quotations, the processes of execution for high treason, drawing to the gallows, hanging by the neck, cutting down alive, removal of the bowels, burning of the bowels in the live presence of the convicted, cutting off the head and quartering the body.

We have moved so far and so rapidly since that time. Looking at the statistics of deaths by homicide in Canada for the period 1926 to 1962 we discover that in the 1930's we felt it necessary to execute a good many people. In 1931, 25 men were executed. This was at the height of the depression when we had a population of about 10 million. We have had no executions since 1962 but in that year, with a population of 18½ million people, only two persons were executed. In 1965, with a population of 20 million people, there were no executions.

What do we find with respect to recent statistics? In my opinion this is significant, and I concur in the comments of the right hon. gentleman that his administration moved clearly and deliberately along a course which I believe is an inevitable one. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River when he said the other day:

> Can anyone really doubt that the end result of these proceedings will be, as in other civilized states, the abolition of the death penalty? Why then should Canada be among the last to act in its abolition?

Those concluding words of the hon. member could well be the last words in this debate. I personally rejoice in the fact that this motion has been moved in the manner it has, attracting support from various parts of the house. I think it is important and imperative that the cabinet and the ministry be free individually to exercise their views on the basis of conscience, as many of them have. I cannot possibly understand the proposition that this should have been a government motion.

The right hon. gentleman during his administration gave leadership in the direction of reform. He points particularly to the year 1961 when murder was redefined. In that year there was no great outcry for a committee; it was a decision taken by the government. But I think, as the right hon. gentleman has said, that a further step forward is appropriate now as a result of our experience in the past.

I was somewhat disappointed by the address of the able and experienced hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), the former minister of justice. One had the feeling that, having participated with enthusiasm in a first round of reforms, he was now holding back. I believe his final sentence pretty well sets out the doubt in his own mind:

> I shall vote against the motion, although with great reluctance and with a great deal of uncertainty—

The right hon. gentleman before me has spoken with clarity, conviction and emotion which is the result of certainty. In this connection I think one should look at the history of the previous administration in regard to commutations. In the period between June 21, 1957, and April 22, 1963, a step forward was taken in a certain, clear, positive direction. In that period of time there were actually 66 convictions for murder, with 52 commutations. In 24 of those cases there was no recommendation for mercy from either judge or jury.

During the current administration commencing June 22, 1963, to the present time there have been a total of 20 convictions for murder. In all these cases the death sentence has been commuted, and there was no recommendation for mercy in the case of six. It is true that in the past three years there have been no executions, but I make the comparison that there were six commutations with no recommendation for mercy whereas in the previous administration on 24 occasions there was commutation with no recommendation for mercy from either judge or jury. I do not criticize the previous administration. I say all power to them; they were moving in the direction of such people as La Fayette, Romilly, Koestler, Manz, Simons, Bouzot, Richard, Silverman, Gowers, Voltaire, Rousseau, Camus—

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to complete my remarks. I shall be glad to answer any questions at the end of my speech. The previous administration was moving in the direction of such outstanding American jurists as Clarence Darrow, such historical figures as Victor Hugo, Savigny and Kelsen of Germany, Hume and Bentham of England, Franklin and Payne of the United States.

In our own country there are former members of this house whose views we should respect—I spoke to one of them yesterday—Hon. Frank McGee, who has given positive leadership in this field, Arthur Maloney, Q.C.; G. Arthur Martin, Q.C., and John Robinette, Q.C. These are some of the outstanding experts in Canada. These people have unanimously, without any qualification, refuted the deterrent value of this ultimate penalty. Dr. Thorsten Sellin speaks of capital punishment in these terms:

> It is an archaic custom of primitive origin that has disappeared in most civilized countries and is withering away in the rest.

Arthur Martin, who started out as a retentionist, adopts the views of Richard A. McGee of the United States when he says:

> I believe that punishment for punishment's sake is and should be repugnant to modern civilized man. Punishment, whether it be the ultimate or the most minor penalty, should be a by-product of society's systems of control and not its central purpose. In this context capital punishment is both unnecessary and irrational.

In 1960 Maxwell Cohen, who has made so many great contributions to Canada and at the present time serves as Dean of McGill University Law School, told us that the arguments for the elimination of the death penalty are statistical, ethical, administrative and broadly human. He said:

• (5:10 p.m.)

> It is not enough to leave the matter to the burdened conscience of a cabinet, a jury or a judge. The law should and can speak for all of us with clarity and compulsion. We have a virtual suspension of the death penalty today in Canada. Let us legalize our convictions.

I am convinced of this nor can I agree with some of the comments I have heard during the course of the debate about how easy it is for some life prisoners to get out. Many serve 20, 30 or 40 years or die in prison. I have made a study of this during the past years, partly because I was fortunate enough to acquire three books of clippings of Robert Bickerdike, a former member of this house who was referred to by the right hon. gentleman. This subject was the preoccupation of Mr. Bickerdike's life in parliament. He was supported by Hon. George P. Graham, formerly of Brockville. These two men made a lifetime study of this matter and gathered together a great deal of valuable material that is only now being supported in a truly scientific way by the research of such people as Sellin, Savitz and Campion. These authorities, Savitz, a sociologist, and Campion and Sellin have produced material that is available to all of us here in parliament but is unfortunately not available to our constituents. Their research puts the case clearly and positively.

Dr. Savitz made a special study of the deterrent effect of capital punishment in Philadelphia. He writes in the Journal of Criminal Law, Criminology and Police Science:

> If capital punishment does indeed deter—deterrents should be most in evidence in the days immediately following the execution and in the locality where the crimes were committed and where the criminal is known.

And as a result of extensive study what does he find?

> We must conclude from the data at hand that there was no significant decrease or increase in the murder rate following the imposition of the death penalty—

Therefore there emerges no pattern that would indicate deterrence.

Donald R. Campion particularly studied the question of danger to police officers throughout the United States with respect to the obolition of capital punishment. He came to this conclusion:

> In summary, therefore, we conclude that the data available to us do not lend empirical support to the claim that the existence of the death penalty provides a greater protection to the police than exists in states where that penalty has been abolished.

I am heartened with the approach that the right hon. gentleman took in this debate. In my opinion it is consistent with some of the wisest comments we have heard in the course of the debate and with the historical approach of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier), who made a serious and idealistic speech, and the scholarly contribution from the member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) as well as others. He ended up essentially on a moral or theological note. In my opinion this cannot be overstressed. Mr. Reinhold Niebuhr complains:

> A community may believe, as it usually does, that reverence for life is a basic moral attitude, and yet rob a criminal of this life in order to deter others from taking life.

The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) speaking on March 28th said that there were some crimes, some kinds of murder which "cry out" for the ultimate penalty. The hon. lady was particularly concerned about the effect on children. I am a father and I have quite a few children. I can well picture my feelings if anything came to blight my Wendy or Jill. However, I believe, having spoken to several psychiatrists and psychologists on this subject, that if a man is convicted of some vicious crime against a child the most sensible, logical and reasonable thing we can do with that man is to send him to a penitentiary institution where he will remain under supervision, under close psychiatric study, where electro-encephalograms and drug therapy will be available. In this way, by fundamental research we will learn a little more about this kind of menace and we might save some other little girl.

I read in the Brockville Recorder and Times this heading: "Cowan Would Hang Marcotte In His Santa Suit". I quote from that article:

> Ralph Cowan, Liberal member of parliament for the suburban Toronto riding of York-Humber, says he would have hanged "Santa Claus" murderer Georges Marcotte "on the anniversary of his murder and in his Santa Claus suit."

He speaks for the retentionists. I believe there is no recent case more deserving of hanging than that of this man Marcotte. One obvious fact is that the hon. member for York Humber (Mr. Cowan) does not mind speaking out strongly and forcefully in favour of vengeance. In my opinion this is just not adequate. I do not believe I am unduly squeamish about killing. I do not feel like my deskmate does about boxing or wrestling or violent sports. In fact, if there is a killing in the ring this is one of those things that may happen. I participated in a good deal of killing for a time in the First Division and I saw the victims of my own gunfire. I hated the idea and I have had moments since when, like some of my friends who were bomber pilots, there was a powerful sense of personal revulsion. I do not believe anybody can take pleasure in killing.

It is a cowardly picture I get, when I read the books of Robert Bickerdike, of society taking some creature, deliberately manacling him and bringing him up the stairs to his doom. This is an act which does not dignify our civilization. I think what characterizes the second half of the twentieth century is the universal search for human dignity. Mr. Bickerdike said that if it is wrong for an individual, during a period of mental aberration, to take away the life of a fellow being, what must be said of the state which in cold blood, in calm deliberation and with elaborate preparation, hangs a man on the gallows?

Hon. George P. Graham of Brockville was one of Mr. Bickerdike's keenest supporters. Rev. Mr. Benoit of Montreal put it this way:

> If a man is not fit to live he is not ready to die, and we have no authority for continuing this relic of barbarism.

If we look back only 25 years we will find the finest exemplar of capital punishment who ever lived in the world, and his name was Adolf Hitler. He not only killed people who murdered, raped and pillaged. He also used this convenient device to get rid of all sorts of troublesome people such as those who had from his viewpoint tainted blood and who were not politically acceptable. In my opinion, this is completely contrary to the spirit of religion in its broadest and best terms. I earnestly hope that we may follow the moving injunction of the right hon. gentleman who spoke so earnestly as we move into holy week. I hope we follow the course which I think is the unmistakable course of progress, and will say that this is not acceptable because we respect human life too much.

The degradation of this punishment, Mr. Speaker, is clear, I think, when we look at what it has done to a number of people who have participated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was given permission to continue. He spoke for one hour and forty-five minutes. If the hon. member intends to continue for several minutes, I object to giving him the right to do so.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Leeds requires time to complete his remarks I think he should make that request of the Chair.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

Mr. Matheson: I do not consider myself in any way an authority like the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member requesting extra time to complete his remarks?

Mr. Matheson: If I may.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to grant the time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I object. Leave was refused the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean). It has also been refused other speakers. However, if the hon. member for Leeds wishes to speak for only a few more minutes I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Matheson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I put this on the record as a matter of interest. I discovered this extract on reading Robert Bickerdike's diary:

> A warrant was sworn out today by Edith Grimsdale, wife of Arthur Ellis, Dominion hangman, who charges that Ellis committed an aggravated assault upon her by strangling and striking her upon the face. Ellis was also charged in the warrant with threatening to shoot her.

That report was contained in the Montreal Herald of July 13, 1922.

Another hangman, one Radcliffe, served as Dominion executioner for 21 years, officiating at 132 hangings. At last his nerves gave way and he became a person who was a menace to himself, his family and society.

According to some of the material which has recently been examined we find that the state of Delaware abolished the death penalty and on December 28, 1961, ten days after restoration of the death penalty, Detective Sergeant William J. Mulrine, white and 49 years of age, killed his wife with a single revolver shot. He was immediately charged with first degree murder. Detective Mulrine had had 20 years service in the police force, and in a discussion with a prominent local minister a few weeks before the murder had expounded at great length his reasons for favouring restoration of the death penalty. It was, he said, a real deterrent and murderers ought to be punished. He said that many members of the police force believed as he did, and he became the first candidate for hanging in that state. I think that substantiates precisely the conclusions of the right hon. gentleman and I must say I completely endorse his conclusion that capital punishment is no real deterrent.

Mr. Monteith: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Would he not agree that the change in 1961, which made it obligatory for the presiding judge to ask the jury whether or not they wished to recommend mercy, puts in somewhat different light the figures which he put on the record earlier in his speech?

Mr. Matheson: I think it alters the question, and for the better. I quite agree with the point my hon. friend makes.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member who has just taken his seat will forgive me if instead of commenting on his speech I say a word or two about the speech which was made just before he took the floor.

As hon. members are aware, I have had frequent occasion to disagree with the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). I have had occasion to speak critically of some of the things he has done. But I should like to give him my wholehearted commendation on the speech that he made in this House of Commons today. The Leader of the Opposition has demonstrated leadership which I hope will have its effect in all parts of this house.

His clear statement that he is for the abolition of capital punishment is one that I believe the country will welcome. I also welcome his statement that if we are going to abolish capital punishment we should do so, and should not make for any exceptions. At the same time, I think there is merit to his suggestion that if there are some members who feel uncertain about taking this step as yet, it might be in order for the house to consider, perhaps on a unanimous basis, the provision that the abolition be for a five-year or ten-year trial period. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I welcome the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition and I hope it will be studied very carefully during the remaining hours of this debate.

I have had the feeling throughout this debate, Mr. Speaker, that in one sense it has been wrongly described. It has been referred to in the house and in the press as a debate on the abolition of capital punishment. It seems to me that the very opposite is the case. At the present time no hangings are taking place in this country. On a de facto basis capital punishment has been done away with. The previous government, the government under the direction of the present Leader of the Opposition, found itself, if I may put it in this way, commuting as many death sentences as it could, with the result that the number of hangings taking place during its term of office was greatly decreased.

Mr. Vincent: What is the position now? There are none.

Mr. Knowles: Since that time the government which came into office in 1963 has commuted or deferred decision on all death sentences. The result is that we have not had a hanging in Canada since the latter part of 1962. My point is that for about three and a half years capital punishment has on a de facto basis been abolished in Canada.

I offer no criticism of the previous administration in regard to the extent to which it used the royal prerogative of mercy, and I likewise offer no criticism of the present administration for having used that royal prerogative, if that is what it has done, in every case. The result has been that for all practical purposes capital punishment does not exist in Canada at the present time.

I know provision is still made for capital punishment in the Criminal Code. It is still part of the law. Technically what this debate may be about is whether or not we should take this provision out of the Criminal Code. But I suggest that in practical terms what this debate is about is whether or not Canada should return to the practice of capital punishment, and I earnestly hope that this will not be the decision of this House of Commons. I plead, and in doing so I think I am expressing the view of abolitionists generally in this house, that we not take a backward step.

I realize there are some who might think it is unfair for me to argue by the use of words that we should not take a backward step. But I call as my chief witnesses in support of the proposition that abolishing capital punishment is a forward step remarks which have been made in practically every speech delivered by the retentionists in this debate. Practically every person who has spoken against the abolition of capital punishment has said that perhaps some day we will abolish it. Perhaps this will some day be the ideal state to reach, but they say we have not yet reached that state. In other words, those who support the retention of capital punishment admit, indeed assert, that in the long run it is something we should get rid of.

As the Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, every reform which is proposed is met with the argument that now is not the time. This seems to be the argument between the two sides in this debate—whether now is the time to abolish capital punishment or whether the time is at some date in the future.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I would urge upon this house the point that not only is now the time to take the death penalty out of the Criminal Code and out of the law of this country, but I press the point that if the main resolution now before the house is voted down it will be a case of parliament saying to the government: We want you to go back to the use of the death penalty; We want you to go back to the proctice of capital punishment. In my view this would be a retrograde step. In my view Canadians can stand with their heads held higher if we are not among the nations of the world which are practising capital punishment. I hope the result of this debate will be to confirm the present position and not to go back to the position which was in effect a number of years ago.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I should like to say that in my view this is a question which has to be dealt with, when we come to the various votes, by every member on the basis of what he feels he must do in the light of his own conscience. I am glad that proper arrangements have been made so that the votes to be taken will be completely free. I have seen other attempts over the years to provide for free votes in parliament. Most of them have been unsuccessful, but I believe in this case we have managed to provide a situation in which the vote will be completely free and no member will be committed because of the position which his party may take.

At the same time I believe this issue is so important that it does call for leadership. In the few notes I have in my hand—obviously they were made earlier today—I have two names. I was about to call for leadership on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). As I have already said, I welcome the leadership which has been given today by the Leader of the Opposition and I feel, as he does, that the Prime Minister does have a responsibility to indicate to this house, not only by his vote when the end of the debate comes but during the course of the debate itself, where he stands on this issue as the responsible head of the government.

I can see this situation developing in a very unhappy way. If by chance the main resolution is defeated—I hope it will not be and I daresay that after the speech made today by the Leader of the Opposition its chances of success are even better—if by chance it is defeated I suspect that the majority of the members on the other side of the house will have voted for it and that the majority of the members of the cabinet will have voted for it.

Will not the government of this country be in a most invidious and difficult position if it finds it is faced with a decision of parliament contrary to the point of view of the cabinet and of the majority of the party which supports the administration? I submit that before a situation of this kind is allowed to develop the government, through the Prime Minister, should indicate where it stands. Even after the Prime Minister had spoken I would defend the right of the members of his party to vote contrary to his position as I would defend the right of members of the Conservative party to vote contrary to the position taken by their leader. I welcome the fact that arrangements for a free vote are complete and satisfactory. But I suggest also that we do need leadership from those who normally give leadership in this house and I hope that before the first vote is taken tonight the Prime Minister will drop his vow of silence and make known his views on this important question.

With respect to the issue of capital punishment itself, it seems to me that while the statistics are interesting—they have been quoted at length and put on the record a good many times—they do not in themselves provide a basis for the decision which each member must make for himself in his own heart and mind. It seems to me one can argue either way and that the tendency is to use the figures to produce arguments springing from one's basic position. I feel the same about the argument that capital punishment is a method of prevention, that it prevents this kind of crime happening because you take out of the way the person who commits it. I do not think these arguments settle the issue one way or the other. By the same token I agree with the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) and others who have pointed out that you cannot solve this question by referring to Scriptural texts. You can open the Bible at various pages and get texts which contradict each other. In any case there are a great many of us in this country who have respect for the Bible but who feel it should be presented not in terms of literal texts but in terms of its basic message.

Again, the Leader of the Oposition expressed my view this afternoon when he said that if the religious view means anything it argues for the quality of mercy and for the redeemability of mankind. I think that in spirit and in essence religion has to be taken as being on the side of the abolition of capital punishment.

I feel too that we must give tremendous weight to the fact that mistakes have been made and can still be made. The only person convicted of murder with whom I have talked in recent times is a young man who, so far as I am concerned, could not have committed the crime for which he has been convicted. I welcome the fact that this young man was not hanged. But if a miscarriage of justice did take place, if a mistake was made, here is an example before my very eyes where this horrible mistake might have been made. So it seems to me that all the arguments about deterrence and so on can be used either way. After you have gone through them all you come down to the basic proposition: Is it right or is it wrong for the state—and that means you and me—to take a human life especially in the light of our belief that people can be rehabilitated?

I believe it is not our right to kill and I welcome the statement by the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Sherman) that every time a hanging takes place all of us are involved in that act. I contend that we have no such right, and because it is wrong I want the chance to vote against capital punishment.

I have one more argument I should like to press. I have a deep feeling that capital punishment, like some other forms of punishment which we mete out, represents a counsel of despair. It is a case of the human race saying: Here is a problem we cannot solve. We do not take this view in the face of certain other problems. When people suffer from illnesses we try to cure the illness by medication or surgery or some other action. When people lack training we train them. When people are ignorant we give them education. When people suffer from incapacities we try to rehabilitate them. But when we come to criminals we suddenly say: There is nothing we can do about this human problem; we shall lock these people up or put them out of the way by applying the death penalty.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a counsel of despair. It is an admission that we do not know what to do about the problem of criminal behaviour. I submit that because we have the wit and the ability to cope with other human problems we should also cope with the problem of crime and criminal tendencies, and think not in terms of putting people out of the way or in terms of vengeance but in terms of reform and rehabilitation.

Look at the tremendous things we are doing in our society today. We have split the atom. We have got hold of sources of energy far beyond any imagination we had a few years ago. We are about to put a man on the moon, maybe quite a few of them. We are able to devise computers that can do our work for us and perhaps raise our standard of living. We are having a tremendous explosion of knowledge in the scientific field, in the humanities, in all areas of life.

This is a tremendous age. Sometimes it is pointed out that more is being discovered in our lifetime in terms of scientific knowledge and know-how than was achieved through all the eons of time since people came on this planet. Yet in the face of this explosion of knowledge, in the face of the tremendous capacity which the human race is developing, we say if we have a criminal in our midst all we can do is lock him up or if we have a murderer in our midst all we can do is get rid of him by the application of the death penalty.

I submit that this is not good enough for the human race in this day and age and this counsel of despair is a terrible indictment of our whole approach to the problem. So, Mr. Speaker, I take my stand with those who have come out unequivocally for the abolition of capital punishment. Like the Leader of the Opposition I feel there should be no exceptions but I am willing, and I suspect there are many who will agree with me, to try abolition for a five or ten-year period.

In actual practice we abolished capital punishment three and a half years ago and Canada's name is better because we have done so. If a trial period would make it a little easier I am sure there would be support for such an amendment. But if I may I should like to return to the statement I opened with by pointing out that for three and a half years we have had no hangings in Canada and in the years immediately prior to that we had very few.

The status quo in Canada is one in which capital punishment is just about abolished. This is not a debate to abolish capital punishment. This debate is on the question of whether or not we should go back to it. I submit that the onus of proof is not on the so-called abolitionists but on those who want us to go back to a barbaric practice. I hope in the light of all this we will realize that we have a chance to keep Canada moving forward, and it is for this reason I urge support for the motion for abolition.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of the resolution before us is very controversial. It has produced a long and heated discussion in which the participants have expressed divergent views.

When the time comes to put to a vote the resolution and the amendments, each hon. member will have to take his responsibilities, because the vote will be free. As for me, I want to start by saying that I am in favour of retaining the death penalty as prescribed by the Criminal Code.

Those who advocate the abolition of capital punishment bring forth various arguments, but I wish to consider only a few.

The first one is that the death penalty does not deter anybody from committing murder or has but a slight deterrent effect and that life imprisonment is just as effective.

In our society, Mr. Speaker, opinions are divided as to the deterrent value of capital punishment concerning murders. I do not think statistics can be used as an argument for or against.

Statistics lend themselves to various interpretations and cannot be depended upon. It is almost impossible to establish a useful comparison between countries because of differences in the legal definition of crimes, practices laid down in public administrations and the courts, methods for compiling criminal statistics, standards of morality and behaviour and finally political, economic and social conditions.

It is impossible to determine the number of people who are prevented from committing a crime by the fear of being hanged. They are careful not to admit it. In any case, such a confession would be suspect. Those are data which do not lend themselves to a valid evaluation. The severe application of the death penalty does not prevent of course the commission of all deliberate murders. That is because murderers count on their cleverness to escape either the police or a conviction because of insufficient evidence. That explains, Mr. Speaker, the trouble they go to not to be recognized. Caught red-handed, they kill the police officers who want to arrest them. In anticipation of criminal proceedings, they do not hesitate to murder witnesses who could have them convicted. That shows that they are terribly afraid of the death penalty.

The arguments which I found most conclusive come from the wishes expressed by most provincial attorneys general and by several authorities responsible for the enforcement of the law, by police officers and jail guards. They almost all agree that the death penalty is an important and very necessary means of deterring criminals and that it effectively deters from crime; imprisonment or other forms of punishment could not have the same result.

Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unrealistic to say that a sentence to life imprisonment or to a long period of confinement is a sufficient deterrent because, in practice, life imprisonment will not really exist. There will be a tenency to shorten the sentence; people do not remain angry long enough.

Mr. Speaker, we had evidence of that in the case of the prisoner Leopold Dion. I am told that the judge who presided at Dion's first trial had recommended that that prisoner never be paroled. But the authorities deemed it advisable to parole him and you know what happened: four young people and a guard lost their lives.

• (5:50 p.m.)

As I said, people do not remain angry long enough to insist on true life imprisonment or on very long sentences. When a murderer has served a sentence for, let us say 9 or 10 years, people begin to look at the other side of the question, that is the hardship such long confinement has been for the prisoner, and to admit more easily that that man is now a different person from a mental as well as a spiritual point of view and that he should be given the opportunity to return to society.

The second argument I would like to deal with is to the effect that the death penalty is irrevocable. There is no doubt that the hanged man will not recover the life he lost. By definition, any penal sanction is irreparable. Whoever is sentenced to imprisonment will not recover the freedom of which he will be deprived by that sentence. Should all punishments be abolished for that reason? What is meant probably is that the death penalty is too harsh and final. In that case, it is only a matter of degree. How can that degree be established? Is it the rule that the harshness of the penalty must not exceed the seriousness of the crime? Now, the greatest crime of all is to deny one's fellowman voluntarily, and I insist on the word voluntarily, of the priceless gift of life. He therefore deserves the ultimate penalty, death.

Third, that capital punishment might result from a judicial error and an innocent person might be executed. That is a possibility, Mr. Speaker, but very remote and doubtful. It is difficult to give conclusive cases, for it is not enough for someone to accuse himself of a crime for which another was punished to conclude that the latter was innocent. To wit, the Coffin case. Had Simpson been killed, either murdered or in an accident, before recanting his confession, it is easy to imagine what use abolitionists would have made of it. No one would have dared express any doubt about Coffin's innocence. And in spite of Simpson's recanting, are there not some who still believe Coffin innocent?

This is what the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on capital punishment had to say about the possibility of error, on June 27, 1965, as reported on page 63, article 60 of the White Paper on capital punishment:

> Considerable emphasis was put on the risk of irrevocable error in capital convictions. The fact that there was no known Canadian instance of the execution of an innocent person indicated the effectiveness of present procedures by way of trial and executive review and this suggests that the risk of error does not present a reasonable argument for abolition in Canada.

And even when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) pointed out that there had been judicial error, he mentioned the United States and England, but did not point out a single case in Canada. The alleged mistake can only occur when society performs a duty made imperative by the common weal. Individuals and social groups are unable to perform this duty. Therefore, public authorities have no other alternative. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the manner in which the law is applied in Canada in murder cases provides the required safeguards to prevent an innocent person from being put to death.

In 1961, an amendment to the Criminal Code divided murder into capital and non-capital murder. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, when the vote was taken on those amendments, I was one of the 17 members who voted against them.

And I too feel, like the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), that since 1961, nothing has been changed in the rehabilitation procedures and other methods used to reform prospective criminals to prompt me to change the opinion I had in 1961 about those amendments.

Capital murder is a planned and deliberate murder committed directly by the accused or on his advice during the perpetration of certain crimes with violence, directly by the accused or on his advice, and when the victim is a police officer or a jail guard in the performance of his duties, otherwise, it is non-capital murder.

Mr. Speaker, even abolitionists say that only one out of seven persons accused of murder is sentenced to death.

Fourth, that capital punishment is an act of revenge. Mr. Speaker, capital punishment is a just and proper penalty for murder. More than any other penalty, it expresses the revulsion and horror society feels for the most odious of crimes. As retribution, capital punishment must not be based upon a thirst for revenge but it is reproof by society for the odious crime of murder. With time, as a result of capital punishment, a deep feeling of aversion has developed toward murder.

If imprisonment actually consisted of solitary confinement for life, it would be more cruel than death; life imprisonment leaves no hope to the criminal nor is it an inducement to repentance, as is the immediate prospect of the supreme penalty.

Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that no one is interested in a murderer as long as he is at large: it is a police matter. Only when he is brought to justice is sympathy or antipathy felt for him, according to individual dispositions. If an abolitionist were asked why the difference, I think his answer would be: obviously, one cannot feel anything for someone one does not know. I would say this is a good answer. In such a case, how can the lawmaker feel vengeful against future murderers he does not know and probably never will?

As a matter of fact, the question is much simpler. Faced with a wilful murderer, society is in the position of a surgeon before a gangrenous limb. Distressing, cruel though it may be, amputation is required. It would, however, be sheer insanity to claim that the surgeon is seeking revenge against the amputated limb. Society does not seek vengeance; it is simply performing a strict duty to protect its worthy members and to provide for its own security.

While it is true that many would like to do away with capital punishment, many more are in favour of it and accept it. This support reflect the aversion of the public for murder, the "crime of crimes". Likewise, the aversion of the public for murder admittedly reflects a traditional attitude resulting from the fact that this punishment is particularly reserved for this crime. The abolition of a punishment traditionally accepted as a just and effective deterrent could only be recommended if there was definite proof that the ordinary citizen thinks this punishment decidedly ineffective. The experience of other authorities indicates that the abolition of capital punishment when the public is strongly in favour of its retention may lead to doubt and confusion, which is harmful to the administration of justice.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when the state has a long way to go in its fight against crime, more thought should be given to the protection of society than the criminal. There are reasons to think that capital punishment is a deterrent against armed robbery, and the abolition of capital punishment could be interpreted by those who despise the law as a signal for committing other criminal acts.

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be debated at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), Housing—consideration of royal commission on urbanization; the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), Shipbuilding—British Columbia—discussions respecting subsidies; the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), Agriculture—eggs—request for change in deficiency payments.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT REGARDING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth), and Stanbury:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the Governor in Council.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Gauthier.

• (6:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of serenity that I rise this afternoon, to take part in the discussion which is to end tomorrow night, not as a representative of the New Democratic party said a while ago, but by a vote for or against the abolition of capital punishment.

Right away, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am in favour of retaining the death penalty in our statutes and opposed to life imprisonment, that is, imprisonment until death, and I shall try to give my reasons in the next few minutes.

I do not want to take more than the time alloted me but I would like to say that since the beginning of this debate, and I was here all the time, only one member was refused more time and unfortunately he was in favour of retaining the death penalty.

For a great many years, a public debate has been going on in Canada on the possibility of removing from our statutes the death penalty imposed as punishment to people found guilty of capital murder. Since 1961, the criminal code provides for the death penalty in the case of people found guilty of qualified murder, that is premeditated murder. Since 1961, no one under 18 can be accused of capital murder under the law. Right away, we must eliminate from this discussion the case of young Truscott. Since 1961, any person convicted of capital murder can benefit from an appeal to the mercy of the jury or the judge; he can also benefit from the fact that his case is referred to a higher court and, finally, the accused found guilty can benefit from the fact that in the last resort the cabinet can exercise the royal prerogative and commute the sentence into a sentence of life imprisonment which, in fact, is a sentence of 15, 20 or 25 years.

Someone mentioned a little earlier the case of a man from Longueuil, Mr. Bernard Chartier; I found that case terrible, especially when it was discovered that a mistake had been made. Well, I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that capital punishment is at fault if a man in Montreal was falsely accused of a crime he did not commit. A mistake was made, I do not know by whom, but certainly not on account of capital punishment.

On one side, we have the abolitionists and on the other the retentionists or those who are in favor of retaining the death penalty, as it exists today. The abolitionists favour the abolition of the death penalty in the case of capital murder. When I talk of capital murder, I think of the tragedy at Sault-aux-Cochons.

On that occasion, Guay Ruest Pitre had premeditated the explosion of an airplane, killing 20 of 23 passengers.

There are those in favour of abolishing the death penalty even in the case of the murder of police officers on duty. It happened that police officers were murdered while on duty. The abolitionists tell us that they favour abolishing the death penalty in the case of murders of prison guards. I will not give any examples, because I want to be as brief as possible. And, there are those who favour abolishing the death penalty in the case of murders committed by the underworld or crime syndicates. Recently, we read in the newspapers that the bodies of people killed by the underworld were found in our region. They had been buried four feet underground and covered with quicklime.

There are also those who favour abolition of capital punishment and who, for several months now, have been carrying out a well organized campaign to ensure that their views prevail. Their intentions are good and, in the course of the debate, I have admired the arguments they raised in good faith. On the other hand, those same people accuse us of being barbarians with the poor victims who have to pay the consequences of their premeditated acts. They talk of barbarism and yet those same people who favour the abolition of capital punishment speak of life imprisonment, that is imprisonment till death.

Does that mean that life imprisonment is even more severe a penalty? I said I was against inflicting that punishment upon a human being: You will be imprisoned till death; we are denying you any hope of ever being a free citizen in this land.

When 30 or 40 years behind bars are involved, can you imagine the moral agony of the convict? In many cases, repentance will give way to a deep hatred for society, and anger will seize the convict, drive him to despair and even to suicide. Convicts have been known to commit suicide after being condemned to rather long confinements. When abolition of the death penalty is recommended, to be replaced by life imprisonment, is the condemned really being treated more humanely? Is his freedom not being denied him little by little?

Is that torture not worthy of the barbarians of the era of the Roman empire? I call it refined barbarism. There has been talk also of the immorality of the act perpetrated collectively by all the citizens of a country when the state, for its own security and the protection of law and order, not for the sake of vengeance but rather for the love of the heritage it will bequeath its children, decides to do away with a man found guilty of high treason.

The word "vengeance" was also used.

• (6:10 p.m.)

In the first place, the state, in general, practically ignores the individual it sentences. Any individual revenge is thus avoided. Moreover, the legislation providing for the death penalty is far from being dictated by vengefulness. The best evidence that we can give is this: Has not the state established systematic distinctions between the various types of murders? Has it not reserved capital punishment to only one class of murder?

No. This argument about revenge makes no sense. If someone can assert that the death penalty is obsolete, this argument can be considered as a residue of the last war when such phenomena appeared. Have these phenomena lasted? It is easy to answer. At any rate, if this instrument of the state had proved so superficial, the result of a collective revenge, materially, formally and historically speaking, it would never have survived throughout the ages and all the upheavals known since the first politically-known society.

We would be tempted to kill, still through vengefulness.

Besides we have the retentionists, those who have not made much noise till now, those who work for the retention and who sincerely believe in the protection of society.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of justice, it is said: Justice must be done. But justice must also appear as being done. Well, our society, our people want to be protected. But the people must also have the feeling that they are protected. In my opinion, if the penalty were removed from our statutes now, our society would not have this feeling of being adequately protected.

There are retentionists among all classes of society, all environments, all religions. It seems also that the great majority of the Canadian people is in favour of the retention of capital punishment for certain premeditated murders.

[Mr. Vincent.]

I want to point out now that, in my own riding, I met several persons who were in favour of the abolition of the death penalty, but the great majority is in favour of its retention as it exists since 1961. Thus, if the great majority of the people, as is evidenced by the surveys made in our ridings and throughout Canada, is in favour of the retention of the death penalty, society must have this feeling of being protected by the legislation in our statutes.

Before we come to a vote, which is serious, which is a matter of conscience, which will have a great effect on the social future of our environment, we must ask ourselves the following question: If we remove from our statutes the death penalty provided for those convicted of capital murder, will we have more or less of such premeditated crimes? The question here is not about crimes and their punishment in 1850, 1870 or 1925, when a man could be hanged for stealing a horse or stealing five gold pieces. We no longer have such things today. Capital punishment is exacted only from those convicted—the onus of the proof being on the Crown—in the case of premeditated murder, of high treason or of crime syndicate murders.

It is our duty, as legislators, to take the steps required to keep capital murder at a minimum.

As legislators, we must protect society, or rather society demands our protection. That is what I was asked in the personal letters I have received: to maintain for society this feeling of protection through a law which is written very clearly in the Criminal Code and which may be used in some cases. The members of our society ask us to protect them against those who made a choice and who are the only ones responsible for the application of capital punishment, the criminals.

I put the following question to myself before I vote: "Will the retention of capital punishment in our statute books result in a lower number of capital murders?" And I am convinced, in my conscience, that it will help us maintain the order established in our civilization.

I would go as far as saying I am convinced that by complying with this request to abolish the death penalty, we might be endangering the life in the future, not of the persons guilty of capital or premeditated murders, but of a great number of other persons. I am thinking especially about policemen, prison guards and certain witnesses who might prove embarrassing.

Mr. Speaker, shall we run the risk of exposing the life of hundreds of citizens in order to protect some people who are truly responsible for the death penalty in Canada?

It is said that the death penalty is no deterrent. Let us ask those who commit hold-ups whether they fear the death penalty. I should like to quote from an item published last week in a newspaper of my area about two thieves who broke into a private home and found a woman and a young girl. It reads as follows:

> Armed with baseball bats, the two men wearing hoods, a cap and gloves, struck Mrs. Cournoyer in the face. Miss Cournoyer was severely beaten over the head, the arms, the back and the legs. And throughout the beating, they insisted to know where the money was hidden. Before leaving, the hooded bandits struck the women again warning them not to call police because their days would be numbered.

Did those thieves fear the death penalty? For instance, if one of the hoods had fallen off by accident and the man had feared one of the women could have identified him, would he not before leaving, have done away with such an incriminating witness?

We cannot see it through statistics. It is impossible to see from statistics whether capital punishment prevented someone from committing a crime.

Mr. Speaker, if fear is the beginning of wisdom, I am of the opinion that this deterrent measure or this punishment for a crime against society must remain in our statutes.

Mr. Speaker, today I should like to turn the tables and say this: Those who are really opposed to the death penalty will vote for its retention in our statutes. Personally, if I vote as I am going to vote for the retention of capital punishment, it is because I want to remove the penalty of death at the hands of criminals from my fellow citizens, my brothers and my children, and above all, because I want society to retain the feeling that it is protected by adequate laws.

• (6:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I intended to say a few preliminary words on this question but because of the time I shall deal immediately with the subject of capital punishment. There are two questions I wish to deal with in this connection. First, is it fair to people in all walks of life? Second, through rehabilitation is there something to be gained by replacing capital punishment with life imprisonment?

Before dealing with these two questions may I say that when one speaks of a sentence of life imprisonment and uses the phrase "life imprisonment" it raises the argument, voiced by many, that it will cost too much to keep these people in prison. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, it is extremely difficult to believe that Canadian people have become so dollar-minded and callous in their thinking that they could not care less and are willing to snuff out a life in order to save, so they think, a few paltry coppers in taxes. Actually this argument is totally unfounded. People who think this way forget or ignore the tremendous cost involved in capital trials and their aftermath of appeals, and they do not know the realities of prison life.

Certainly, there may be the odd lifer or prisoner who gives no adequate return to the state in terms of dollars and cents. Let me say here, Mr. Speaker, that most lifers work in prison. They work in the printing shop or in tailoring or clerical work. I should like to point out also that if the prisoners were paid a wage commensurate with their services they would be able to pay the cost of their own maintenance. Since they receive nothing, it is easy to forget that they are a source of financial profit to the institution in one way or another. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that practically any warden will testify to the fact it is from the group of lifers that he draws a considerable number of his most trusted workers.

I come back to the question, can something be gained by the convict and by society through life imprisonment rather than capital punishment? In order to illustrate my point I should like to cite a few cases in which prisoners have been given life imprisonment rather than the death sentence. Let me start with the case of Robert Stroud, a case of a truly life sentence. Robert Stroud, the celebrated bird man of Alcatraz, spent 54 years of his life behind prison bars. About 43 of those years were spent in solitary confinement during which time he was raising and studying birds. Robert Stroud was an impenitent killer who fought off despair through those 43 years in solitary confinement. He studied birds and started with two sparrows. At one time he had as many as 300 birds crammed into his little cell. His book, "Digest of Bird Diseases", made him a world authority on birds. This same man, who spent all of his life in prison, also became an authority on legal strategy and wrote a book on penology.

Surely the saving of the life of this man was worth something to the world at large.

Then there is the case of the negro boy, Paul Crump. He was convicted in 1953 of a hold-up slaying. This was the act of an angry young person who went wrong in an environment where nobody found it easy to go right. Let me repeat that, Mr. Speaker, He went wrong in an environment where nobody found it easy to go right. At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to interpose the first question I asked: Is this penalty fair and just to people in all walks of life. Sing-Sing's Louis E. Laws, who escorted some 150 men and women to the death chamber, said that all were poor and most were friendless. This is a man who should know something about people and human nature. San Quentin's Clinton P. Duffy hated the death penalty because he said it hit the little man who is poor, poor not only in material possessions but in background, education and mental capacity.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to the statement—perhaps mine is worded a little differently—that a rich man may find it difficult to get into the kingdom of heaven. I do not know whether that is right. We do not want to say that they are not in the same class as the rest of us when it comes to getting into heaven. I do know, however, that it is not only most unlikely but most improbable that the rich man will ever enter the execution chamber. Whether we believe it or whether we do not, the fact remains that there are two laws, one for the rich and one for the poor. There is a law for those who have money and backing and one for the poor little man who has not got financial backing. I will deal with this later.

I return now to the case of Paul Crump, the negro boy. When he was only hours away from the electric chair the governor of Illinois finally yielded to mounting pressure and commuted Crump's sentence to life imprisonment. Why did he do that? In the course of this boy's imprisonment, he had become an entirely different personality. During his years in prison, he took an interest in writing and has written two novels, perhaps more by now. One of these was most successful.

Dealing still with life imprisonment for the individual rather than the death penalty, I cite the case of Nathan Leopold of Chicago who in 1924 as an 18-year-old youth was involved in one of the most bizarre murders of legal history. Perhaps there are many of us who will recall that time. The public demand for his execution was incredibly strong. A courageous judge withstood the pressure and imposed a life sentence.

Leopold was released in the 1950's. In other words, he spent 30 years in prison. Where is he now and what is he doing? Of all things he is employed by the United States government in the commonwealth of Puerto Rico doing research work that is designed to overcome the great parasite menace which kills or lays low hundreds of Puerto Ricans annually. This youth who committed this bizarre murder, this man who should have been hanged according to our rules, may be responsible for producing a drug that will have the effect of eliminating this problem entirely, save much suffering and may save thousands of lives.

Lastly, there is the case of the man who was directly and indirectly responsible for not one, not a dozen but hundreds of murders of the most atrocious and vicious kind. I refer to the former leader of the fanatical Mau-Mau terrorists, Jomo Kenyatta. He is the man who was highlighted in Robert Ruark's book "Something of Value". Hon. members should read that book. The mere mention of this man's name was enough to induce apoplectic fury in most Kenya whites.

This man was jailed by the British. Today as head of Kenya's 9 million people we find him leading the country into its third year of independence under a black government and under the slogan "Harambee—all must pull together". These people were torn apart only a decade ago by apparently implacable hostility—

Mr. Winkler: Do you support Hitler too?

Mr. Roxburgh: What is that?

Mr. Winkler: I merely suggested that on the basis of the hon. member's present argument he would support a man like Hitler.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Roxburgh: I still did not hear the hon. member. Let me continue. You may ask, how is it that Kenya, with its much more turbulent history of racial bitterness, has settled down in seeming harmony better than say Rhodesia? The answer is one that would have seemed inconceivable only a few years ago. It has all been brought about by the extraordinary forbearance and statesmanship of the once hated man who led Kenya to freedom, Jomo Kenyatta. These are a couple of illustrations of men who have been allowed to live because of their value to the world.

Before I conclude I should like to ask the hon. member who asked me a question whether he honestly feels that this penalty is fairly and equally applied to all people. I should like him to ask me that question, because regardless of the statements made in favour of retaining the death penalty I would stress strongly the fact that justice is not properly or fairly meted out to everybody. Even the professional killer has a far better chance of escaping the noose than the little man. The professional syndicates have money and can get their men acquitted in cases where the ordinary person would not have a chance at all. It goes every farther than this. In many cases the scales are weighted heavily in favour of the prosecution.

Let me take the case of Arthur Lucas, one of the last people to be hanged in Canada before the House of Commons began to ponder the abolition of capital punishment. I am not arguing whether Lucas was innocent or guilty but there was a real question about the processes of justice which resulted in his conviction. The Crown spent something like $40,000 on these processes whereas the accused's legal aid counsel had to get by on an allowance of $1,500. Surely anybody can see that all the strikes are against the little man, the man without any financial support, and I would defy anybody in this house to say that that is not a true statement.

The injustice of this penalty is further illustrated and illustrated more vividly in the case of two convicts who were both found guilty of murder. The one who had financial support received a life sentence. What happened to the other man, the little fellow who did not have the financial support? He was executed. Surely that it not justice. Could anything be more unjust when a life is at stake?

We have heard many good speeches on this subject with arguments pro and con, but I have just dealt with two topics because I feel that they are two matters which can be talked about without arguing whether they are right or wrong. I would ask the members of this house, especially those who have not made up their minds, to think deeply about this question before they make a decision, and I ask them to vote for abolition. In voting for abolition they will scratch this terrible penalty right out of the statute books of Canada.

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will, I trust, be brief. In a debate such as this repetition is impossible to avoid. However, I hope I shall not inflict repetition upon the members of the house more than is necessary.

I have listened intently to the many eloquent presentations and those I have not heard I have read. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that a new high in quality of debate has recently been achieved in this house. I believe the quality of the speeches which have been made and the thought which has been put into them are on the whole better than any series of debates to which I have listened since becoming a member of this house. There has certainly been much research in depth.

Having regard to the arguments presented in this house, and following the perusal of much material relating to the subject, I have formed three main conclusions. My first one is that capital punishment has not been proven to be a deterrent. I have uncovered no incontrovertible evidence pointing to the fact that it is. By the same token, Mr. Speaker, the lack of capital punishment has not clearly demonstrated or pointed up an increase in the murder rate per capita. There has not in my opinion been any irrefutable evidence pointing to an increase. Indeed, the evidence, as I see it, would seem to point up the fact that the punishment for the crime is not the deterrent; the actual deterrent is the fear of being caught.

Therefore I have concluded that the average criminal type has only one basic thought regarding punishment and that is the fear of being caught. The criminal mind seems to assume that the offender will remain undetected and therefore that punishment is of secondary consideration. In this regard he acts and reacts not unlike other members of society such as those whose most serious crime is, say, a parking violation.

We must bear in mind that for over three years, through the device of cabinet reprieve—I might add, automatic cabinet reprieve—we have in effect had abolition of capital punishment in this country. I do not blame individual cabinet members for the stand they have taken. Personally I would find dealing with the subject a most trying experience. But I submit that jointly and severally the members of the cabinet have not taken the proper stand.

I should like to refer to an article in the Toronto Telegram of March 23 which reads in part as follows:

Note of the government's policy toward capital cases was taken by Mr. Justice Eric G. Moorehouse, of the Ontario Supreme Court, when presiding at a murder trial in Bracebridge. He agreed there was no point in proceeding with the charge against a former milkman, because the penalty for murder had not been exacted for several years.

He accepted the plea of guilty on a charge of non-capital murder.

The crux of my speech this evening is based on one basic fundamental. Since, in effect, we have had abolition for three and a half years—and I am not arguing the pros or the cons to satisfy some members of this chamber who are concerned about statistics —which indicates to me that three and a half years is not a long enough period to establish trends or meaningful statistics, perhaps we should continue with abolition of capital punishment for a reasonable trial period in the future. Frankly, between Biblical quotations and so-called statistics it seems to me almost anything can be proven, either by quoting the Bible or citing a ream of statistics. I do not object either to quotations or statistics but they should be taken in their proper context and in their proper concept.

May I refer again to the article in the Toronto Telegram for March 23:

• (6:40 p.m.)

Capital cases in Canada have increased by 120 per cent since the Conservative government amended the Criminal Code in 1961 to establish degrees of murder. This figure from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics refutes the suggestion that the death penalty is not a deterrent to murder.

I suggest it does no such thing. This is using so-called statistics to prove a point. I submit that by virtue of the changes made in the law in 1961 an increase might naturally have been expected, not necessarily because of an increase in the number of capital murders but because of a difference in reporting. In my humble opinion no statistics can prove so completely nebulous an item as this is when they are based on such a very short period of time. One multiple killing could throw these presentations all out of line.

I suggest we should take note of the speech made by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn). If I understood the gist of his remarks correctly, he considered we might have to settle for a trial period of abolition. As I have mentioned, virtual abolition has been in effect now for three and a half years. I could support abolition for a period of the next five or seven years provided, and I think this is a reasonable proviso, that the most minute records should be kept and the most searching examination made of all activity relating to murder, attempted murder and crimes of violence. This material having been accumulated and digested, parliament could then study it and reach a decision on the basis of fact and logic, not as at present I fear largely on the basis of emotion.

The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) made a most moving presentation. He painted a picture of rehabilitation rather than punishment or retribution. I think this aim is commendable and perhaps one day, we can advance to this great position in the evolution of our society. I hope we shall be able to do so. But I submit we have a long way to go.

This is not the problem of the criminal. This is the problem of society. When we have to put people in hallways and corridors due to overcrowding in our hospitals, remembering that those who are in these corridors have only committed the crime of being ill, then, desirable as the hon. member's suggestion is, I fear we have not yet advanced far enough to be able to put it into practice.

The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) brought out some statistics which were meaningful to me. He compared the state of Maine with the province of New Brunswick. He pointed out that Maine has had no capital punishment for 80 years. These statistics were meaningful to me because both these areas have the same culture and the same economic background. On the basis of his figures there appeared to be no difference between the rates of murder per capita.

However, this brought up a question in my mind. I often read in the press—and in the part of the country where I live I have access to many United States newspapers—that a suspect was shot during the course of arrest. What happens? Does the old rule of shoot first and ask questions afterwards apply?

I have no statistics from the state of Maine or the province of New Brunswick in this regard, but before the statistics given by the hon. member for Royal are completely meaningful to me they would need to cover both aspects of this question. To me this is another consideration which adds weight to my suggestion that we should introduce abolition for a stated period and keep meticulous records until that period is over. If, for example, we were to find that innocent people were in danger of paying with their lives as a result of a quick decision to shoot by a police officer under extreme stress in the performance of his duty, then, of course, something would have to be done.

I therefore suggest a trial period long enough to enable meaningful statistics to be compiled. This would give time to all those engaged in law enforcement, in the penal service, in medicine and in psychiatry to become better prepared to assume the new responsibilities which would be theirs. We must never forget that regardless of what happens the first and most important consideration is the protection of our society.

[Translation]

Mr. G.-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of repeating nor summarizing the speeches made by honourable members, since the introduction of this resolution for the abolition of capital punishment.

Besides, I already stated that I was in favour of the status quo in this respect, when I spoke on January 24 last during the Address in answer to the Speech of the Throne.

• (6:50 p.m.)

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, as well as all my colleagues, that whatever the outcome of this debate, I shall not consider it as a defeat or a victory, because I am much less concerned with knowing if murderers will be hanged in the future than with the fate of all the prisoners in our jails and penitentiaries, as well as their future when they come back to civilian life.

You probably remember, Mr. Speaker, that the speech I made on January 24 last, dealt mainly with the rehabilitation of prisoners, with educational facilities that should be made available in order to fully prepare them to take their place within our Canadian community and thereby contribute to the development of our national economy, rather than being a burden and a useless charge for the state.

I repeat this appeal so that the state may take the required and adequate means to set up the control agencies that will enable those who pay their debt to society to have hopes of becoming full-fledged citizens and not failures or misfits always a burden for the state. Should we take as much time here to find solutions to the problems I mentioned as we are now taking to discuss the resolution before us we would perform a much more useful function. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) made an excellent speech on March 28 last on these problems when he said:

> If we want to prevent murders, we must grapple with the problem of prisoner rehabilitation and penitentiaries reforms.

I said at the beginning of these short remarks that it was not my intention to repeat or summarize the previous speeches, and I am going to keep my word.

Of course, I have read, heard, and even discussed the problem under all angles with my electors, my friends, my colleagues, with all those who have spoken to me and to whom I may have spoken of it. I am not an idealist but very optimistic. As a lawyer with some experience in criminology, I have tried to examine the problem in depth. Among the most serious objections I have heard on capital punishment are the following: if human life is held in due respect, it should then not be taken away from anyone. Right, but this principle should also apply to the murderer who should risk his own life if he is to gamble with the life of others. Other objection: I have also noted that among those who claim to be respectful of the life of others are mainly to be found those who have no hesitation to take their own life, thus not respecting their own. Other objection: Hanging is a barbaric custom unworthy of our advanced civilization; I agree. There would therefore be a change in the method of executing capital punishment; gas is assuredly more refined and efficient.

Miscarriages of justice must be avoided, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that the sense of justice, the judicial rules and practices and the knowledge used during the hearing of murder cases in our trials and courts of justice, remove all risk of error.

Other objection: capital punishment is not a sufficient deterrent factor to justify maintaining it. I will easily agree, Mr. Speaker, that there are not any more murders in countries where capital punishment is nonexistent or where it has been abolished, but I do not believe there are any more murders after the abolition than there were before. But one thing is certain: no executed murderer has ever committed a second murder.

I could quote many more objections to capital punishment and easily refute them, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the white paper on capital punishment which was prepared and distributed by the Department of Justice in 1965 gives an excellent outline of the situation. I disagree with those who suggest a five-year trial, as was done in England for example, because in five years' time murder will not be more or less serious than it is today. One must hold fast to one's opinions, especially on an issue as important as capital punishment and, as far as I am concerned, it is inconsequential to attach more significance to a second murder, or the murder of a jail guard or a police officer.

Capital punishment is the supreme penalty for the worst and the most odious crime: murder. I think it should be retained for the protection of society and justice; I do not think society has attained a high enough degree of civilization to abolish it now. When there are no more premeditated or deliberate murders, the battle will be won and we will then be able to amend the criminal code and pin a medal on our lapel.

[English]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, like all other hon. members I have gone through a very difficult period weighing the evidence in this matter and listening to the various arguments presented for and against the abolition of capital punishment. As a matter of fact, I believe I have either read or heard every speech that has been made in this debate and I have been greatly impressed with the calibre of parliament during the debate. As one of my colleagues said elsewhere during the course of the last few days, this debate has done a tremendous lot to permit parliament to recover from the cloud under which we were some time ago. The value of this debate has enhanced this institution and it is surely parliament at its best.

It has not been easy to get at all the truth in this matter and it is by no means certain that we are going to be able to get all the facts, but we must at this stage make a decision on the basis of the great deal of discussion we have had. I believe the time has come for a clear decision. I would not be in favour of seeing this thing hang on or go to a committee, and I do not believe we should clutter up this matter with a whole lot of other material. I think we should make a clear decision on the basis of abolition or retention.

• (7:00 p.m.)

I would be very much in favour of our considering the proposal made both by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and more recently by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), to the effect that if we are fearful of taking this step at this time, we should have a period of perhaps five years as a trial, as in Great Britain, during which period we could keep records to satisfy ourselves and everyone within the country that it is the wisest step to take. I do not think that would water down or clutter up the motion. I would be in favour of some such trial period, if the house decided that this would be a wise thing to do. However, I do think we should make a decision on this matter of abolishing or retaining the death penalty.

One of the members who spoke earlier this afternoon felt that he should be in favour of retention of the death penalty because in his view the people in his riding and indeed people all across Canada had the idea that capital punishment was protecting them, that it was very important to leave people with the feeling that capital punishment is a protection for society, and that therefore we should retain it. That is not the way my mind works. I think the people in our ridings sent us here for the purpose of representing them, and that it is our place here to get all the facts we can, weigh the evidence, make decisions, take a stand and interpret that stand for them back home in the ridings and across this country. I feel quite sure we have had access here to material, facts and information to which a great many people in our ridings have not been able to have access.

Were I not prepared to make up my mind as a private member on this matter, I do not think I would be doing my job here, whether or not the majority of the people in my riding are in favour of or against abolition of capital punishment. I have the obligation to make up my mind in the light of the evidence I get and then go back home and stand or fall by what the result will be. I have the obligation to explain to these people the stand I have taken, why I have taken it, and so on.

I wish to say right now that I am in favour of abolition. As a matter of fact I have been in favour of abolition for a good many years now. What I have heard in this debate has convinced me this is the proper stand to take, the correct stand at this time. I am going to adduce just a few of the facts which have impressed me in this debate, and the facts about which I shall tell my constituents when I go back home. I have no idea what a poll would show in my riding. I believe the majority of the people there, given access to the facts which we have had, would be in favour of abolition, because they are reasonable and sensible people who I think will approach this matter without emotion and look straight at the facts.

What are the facts? Here are some of them. First of all, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition gave them very, very clearly this afternoon as did some later speakers. We have seen from the facts that whether or not a country or a state has seen fit to retain or abolish capital punishment the rate of murder has remained practically unchanged, has remained virtually the same. All right then; I would say to the member who spoke this afternoon, if the rate of murder is virtually the same whether you retain or do away with capital punishment, we have the right and the obligation to say to our constituents that capital punishment does not protect them any better than a method of keeping the criminal in custody safely away from society. We have the right and the obligation to take away from our constituents a false view; that is, that capital punishment somehow protects them just because we always have believed that. We should give them the facts and figures to support this.

I believe we have the right to let them know in respect of the policemen and the prison guards who have been killed, that in no over-whelming number of cases has that killing of policemen and prison guards been done by murderers. It has been done by a hard core of criminals, just as many of whom were non-murderers as were murderers. I think we have the obligation to tell that to Canadians. I believe that once the people realize these are the facts, we do not need fear their reaction. I am not afraid of any feeling on the part of Canadians. I believe they would want to have the truth in front of them and would want to know what it is.

There is one bit of scripture which I always have believed, "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free". If we can get the truth to the people, I am not afraid of the result.

Hanging does not bring the dead back to life, nor does it help the survivors. In my view—and I think I am saying something which nobody else has said yet in this debate, and this is hard to do—I cannot see why it would not be an excellent thing, while the murderer is retained in prison, to employ him at some useful work, the reslt of such work being directed to help the family of his victim. In that way his rehabilitation can be a useful way of making a measure of restitution. There never could be complete restitution. However, I think he should be given an opportunity to make up to the family and relatives of the victim as much as he can. I believe this is in line with the thinking of modern penology.

In my view when a murderer commits a crime, if the state snuffs out his life the state compounds the crime and commits a second one. What happens when a boy kicks his younger brother and the father turns around and kicks the bigger boy? This does not help the little fellow and it implants in the bigger boy a feeling that he wants to get a little older so that he can get back at the fellow who kicks him. That is the type of thing we want to get away from.

We have been struggling through all this miasma of fear; I have seen this in the house. Of couse we are afraid, because we are on the frontier of evolution in this matter. This is the reason in many ways it is a thrilling debate—because it is new for Canadians. But it is not new for other people. The whole trend in the world today is towards the abolition of the death penalty. This has been brought out by one or two other members, but I wish to bring it out again, because I think it is important. The fact is that country after country—and Europe is the place where one finds it most frequently—has reached a point today where capital punishment has been done away with. Luxembourg began the process in 1822, Belgium in 1863, Portugal in 1867—100 years ago when we were beginning as a country—the Netherlands in 1870, Italy in 1890, Norway in 1905, Sweden in 1921, Denmark in 1930, Switzerland in 1942, and Great Britain in 1965. All the enlightened, forward looking countries, when at last they reached the stage where they got it through their minds that capital punishment was barbarism which belonged in the middle ages, did away with the death penalty.

• (7:10 p.m.)

It is interesting to note that during the Mussolini regime Italy again brought in the death penalty and that during Hitler's regime Germany also brought back the death penalty. When Hitler and Mussolini brought barbarism back to these two countries the death penalty also returned. Italy and West Germany have subsequently abolished the death penalty. East Germany does not belong to that part of the world that we consider advanced in these matters.

Britain, as hon. members realize, has abolished the death penalty for a five-year trial period. The veteran labour member who has led the fight in Britain for the abolition of capital punishment for years is Sidney Silverman. Last year he enjoyed the fruition of his campaign and capital punishment was abolished for a trial period of five years. It is interesting that during the recent election campaign Sidney Silverman was opposed by a close relative of a little girl who had been the victim of a horrible sex slaying. He rattled all the chains he could during the campaign but to the eternal credit of the British people they elected Silverman with a greatly increased majority.

That is the kind of thing that happens when people are prepared to make decisions with their eyes open on the basis of facts rather than emotion. Emotions should be considered and then put out of the way so that the facts can be deliberated and decisions made.

Over and over again during this debate hon. members have referred to the fact that in Canada we have in effect had no capital punishment, de facto, since December of 1962. Even before that time Canada's position on capital punishment has been weakening. When the former government divided the categories of murder into capital and non-capital it took a step in the direction of manifesting Canada's maturity in civilization and its ability to do away with capital punishment.

That was the first step toward the abolition of capital punishment. The second step has been the attitude of the government in not carrying out the sentence of death since the latter part of 1962. I suggest these steps are indications that this country has been readying itself for complete abolition of the death sentence. There would be a tremendous outcry by the people of Canada if pending executions were carried out as a result of a vote in this house to retain capital punishment. The people of this country in increasing numbers have become aware that capital punishment is not consonant with these times. In ever increasing numbers they are becoming prepared to do away with this form of barbarism.

Not long ago I received a letter, as did every British Columbia member, from the B.C. Corrections Association. This letter is dated March 18, 1966 and it states in part:

> We felt that you, as a British Columbia member, might be interested to see an expression of opinion on this issue from the present membership of our association. We represent all facets of correction, probation officers, parole officers, prison personnel, social workers, welfare workers and others.

In other words, this is representative of all types of people involved in criminal correction and rehabilitation in British Columbia. This association sent out a questionnaire in which they asked the recipients of the questionnaire to indicate whether they were in favour of complete abolition of capital punishment, abolition except in respect of capital murder of prison personnel and law enforcement officers, or retention of capital punishment. There were 64.3 per cent in favour of complete abolition, 25.7 per cent in favour of abolition except for the capital murder of prison personnel and law enforcement officers, and only 10 per cent in favour of retention.

It is my opinion that if 64.3 per cent of a representative group of people working closely with criminals are in favour of the complete abolition of capital punishment, the majority of Canadian people are ready for its abolition.

I was greatly impressed by the speech made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Byrne), as well as by those of others. I should like to quote and to endorse this observation of the parliamentary secretary:

> A nation which debases the value of human life by its extinction cannot hope to lead in the area of preventative diplomacy.

That is my last reason for suggesting that Canada should abolish the death penalty. We hope to be among those nations of the world which believe in civilized values. In order to acquire a leading position among such nations we must advocate the sanctity of human life.

People throughout the world are watching carefully to see whether or not leaders of nations are acting as they are talking. If we act at home the way we talk abroad this nation will be a leader among nations, but only then.

In conclusion, I hope that we have the courage now to decide that Canada should be placed among the civilized countries which have, with their eyes wide open, done away with capital punishment. I hope we place ourselves in that position with the sure knowledge that this will help us at home and in our role among the nations of the world. I believe that if we abolish capital punishment on a trial basis, we shall never decide to reinstitute it. In order to satisfy some of the fears expressed by hon. members perhaps we should adopt a trial period of abolition. Let us do so with our eyes open, feeling sure that we are doing the right thing in view of all the facts. Let us vote clearly and definitively to abolish the death penalty.

• (7:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. J.-P. Goyer (Dollard): Mr. Speaker, after hearing or reading the various speeches made in this house, one is inclined to believe that all arguments have been used. It is easy to repeat them and I willingly share the idea or at least the attitude of those who believe that it is good that the same arguments be taken up again from various angles.

For instance, we have been told often about the progress made by our society not only with regard to the death penalty but also in the field of mental health. We have heard philosophical and theological arguments which find their roots in documents which have come to us through the ages from the Bible to essays by Camus or Koestler.

The personal experiences that many of us have lived or witnessed in our midst, experiences which have influenced more or less deeply our attitude and which are reflected today in the stand which we will have to take soon. All of us, not to win, because this is not a marathon or a competition, but rather to look for a truth, if that is still possible, at the end of this debate.

Of course, a line of reasoning that leads to a decision cannot be followed in prejudice, when looking for sensationalism or exploiting an electoral advantage which would not be to the credit of those who elected us.

Throughout this debate, I was struck by the effect produced by the words: death penalty. For some, it is related to barbarism and anti-humanitarianism. For others, it looks like a valid and necessary, even essential, weapon for society. And yet, taken in itself, the death penalty is a means to sentence a criminal and as such it must have a punitive and a preventive value. Thus the necessity, in order to deal with that matter objectively, to forget any prejudice which subsists in us, to go beyond what hides the true problem and to dwell instead on the objectives to be attained by the death penalty, just like we would do when studying any other type of sentence. After reading a great deal of literature, especially articles by Marc Ancel, Paul Gornil et Giuliano Vassalli, I have a theory which seems to me worthwhile, that of an alternate penalty. The objection which I would then raise is as follows: Can death penalty be replaced by another penalty, which would retain the punitive aspect toward the convicted and the deterrent aspect toward society?

In fact, the alternate penalty is now accepted throughout the world, and is applied in Canada as elsewhere.

The latest amendments to the Criminal Code constitute a significant example of my argument. From now on, we differentiate between two kinds of murders: the capital murder and the non-capital murder, the first one involving hanging and the latter life inprisonment.

This theory of an alternate penalty is not new. Already, at the end of the 18th century, movement of penal reform brought about the abolition of corporal punishment to be replaced by loss of freedom only. In that respect, the loss of liberty was an alternate penalty to torture, since crime was punished by a different penalty.

Likewise, death penalty has this value of replacement when it ceases to have degrees, that is being accompanied by tortures more or less extended. For instance, in 1791, the French Criminal Code, decided that:

> The death penalty will be a simple deprivation of life without any torture exerted against the convicted.

To use a well-known method, a proper death penalty is found and established. Going through the ages, we could multiply the examples proving the application of this theory, to reach the present situation where the death penalty has been completely replaced: it has been abolished or partially replaced.

In both cases, the substitute punishment took the form of a denial of freedom. In other words, we are all more or less abolitionists, for in some instances imprisonment is accepted as a substitute for the death penalty indeed, nobody can say that nowadays a killer must always be killed. Otherwise, one who commits a passionate crime would always be hanged, one who commits a political crime would be hanged and the mentally ill committing a crime would be hanged. Yet, it is readily accepted today that those three types of criminals should not be hanged, either because of the law or following the commutation of the penalty. Why? Because the death penalty is instinctively revolting, too severe and contrary to reason. The death penalty is thus being questioned as a punishment and a deterrent and we are satisfied that life imprisonment has the same effect.

Basically, in the three examples given, the change takes place because of the personality of the offender. Consideration given not only to the crime committed but also to the offender and the circumstances under which the crime was committed. Why? Because the criminal is more sympathetic? Not necessarily, but it is felt that society must first of all consider him as an unbalanced or sick person or, as the case may be, merely deprive him of his freedom.

Are we aware that in those three cases we are relying, rightly or wrongly, on our penal system? In any case, unconsciously, we are. Unconsciously, because once again we concentrate on this one question: is it advisable to hang this particular criminal not? If the answer is no, then he goes to jail and we forget about him. We forget about him until special circumstances come up such as those which occurred in the past few years. Those past few years, it has dawned on the public that jails were actually schools for crime, which granted degrees in criminal science, instead of institutions devoted to the rehabilitation of the inmates. For too long—and such is the case even today—jails have been considered as places where murderers should be punished, when they are places where they should be rehabilitated.

Even today, much too few of our inmates are given rehabilitation courses. And what do they teach in our jails? Trades are still being taught that have just about vanished from our society. Handicrafts are taught, for instance shoemaking. I think such trades are things of the past. We should apply modern methods like they do in France, for example, where we find one out of five inmates taking courses that will lead him even to a diploma or a master's degree in law. Recent statistics show that inmates often are more successful than regular students.

At the present time, at St. Vincent de Paul, there are two psychologists for 1,700 inmates. That is asking two persons to perform miracles. It is putting them in an impossible situation where they cannot meet the needs and really achieve something lasting. There are still being built in our prisons maximum security cells, or holes, where a dog would not be sent to rot for fear it might become rabid.

[Mr. Goyer.]

• (7:30 p.m.)

Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been appropriated out of public funds to build such holes in St. Vincent de Paul.

In contrast with this amazing policy, a penitentiary meeting modern requirements is being built in Valleyfield.

What is the Canadian policy with regard to penitentiaries? The prisoner is no longer considered as an animal and subjected to conditions which society abhors today, but rather as a man who like any other, is entitled to respect in his sad plight. Guards are inadequately paid. It is acknowledged by our courts that guards connive at prisoners' rackets, supply them with goof balls and even help them to escape from the penitentiary. Is this acceptable?

There are outstanding experts today in the field of mental disease. Mental hospitals are staffed with all the required specialists; budgets have been increased. What is provided in our prisons? Less than nothing. As members of parliament, we are all responsible for this untenable situation. Academic speeches are in order, but the administration must also provide for required needs, so as to bring up to date our penitentiary system and explain to the people that Canada is lagging behind in this field more than any other country in the western world.

Does this mean, Mr. Speaker, that we should wait until reforms are carried out before substituting life imprisonment for the death penalty? No, and here is why.

(1) Abolition exists in fact or is recognized in practice for several types of crimes, whatever the present conditions of our penitentiaries, and the public accepts this.

(2) It is true that the public does not feel secure under the present system of probation. And, here again, I question the qualifications of the people in charge of the system of probation. And what is more, and this is more serious, they are not given the staff required to develop a coherent policy to follow up the person sent back to society, after his sentence is commuted. But, on the other hand, this is corrected by the resolution now before the house, which operates a drastic change by giving the right of parole to the governor in council in last resort.

(3) The conditions in our penitentiaries is not a danger for the safety of society, for once again, it is in all cases maximum security penitentiaries, but rather a serious barrier to the rehabilitation of the individual.

I call your attention on my last point. A penitentiary system must be administered in such a way as to enable the offender to leave jail a better man than when he came in.

The criminal or the offender is not sentenced to prison to be submitted to further punishment, that is, to be ill-treated. Sir Alexander Paterson, who once fulfilled the duties of chairman of the British Jail Commission, stated:

[English]

Offenders are sent to prison as punishment, not for punishment.

[Translation]

The fact that a person is sent to jail, that is to say deprived of freedom, constitutes the penalty in itself, not the kind of life such person is required to lead in the penitentiary. On the contrary, for the time must be foreseen when the prisoner will recover his freedom—if every thing has not been done during his imprisonment to rehabilitate him, a potential criminal is then being released.

To deny our social and humane responsibility for the rehabilitation of prisoners is to agree, in the long run, to multiply the number of criminals and consequently to seriously endanger public security.

This does not solely apply to a murderer—for this type makes up the smallest minority of prisoners—but to the majority of those who have been sentenced to penalties less than life imprisonment.

While other countries adopt systems of graduate detention, from total confinement through internment to half-detention, including even week-end or after business hours detention served outside the penitentiary, we are still discussing this antiquated question of capital punishment.

While parents and relatives of the victims of criminals are often burdened with economic and social problems, because for instance the victim was the head of a family which is henceforth left without means, instead of finding solutions to this situation, and of helping these people, through new legislation, we are concentrating our efforts in the search of a vendetta on the criminal. The criminal is involved in a human problem; those who are solely afflicted in economic and social problems. In 1966, these are the problems we, in parliament, should be concerned with.

In fact, the man who comes out of prison after serving a five-year sentence, even without having obtained a reduction of his term of prison, may present a greater danger to society if he has not been rehabilitated during this period of time. He is more apt to relapse into crime and thus presents a danger to society. A rehabilitated criminal whose sentence is reduced, on the other hand, is of course much less liable to disturb society.

The abolition of capital punishment is no innovation. It exists in several countries since half a century. To innovate would mean more than that. It would, rather, mean improving methods of rehabilitation, and studying ways of compensating in part the parents and close relatives of the victim, which would surely be more effective and healthy than the brute satisfaction of executing the criminal. This is the course of action of a progressive Parliament.

We will show Canada whether we will deal, not with out-of-date problems such as capital punishment, but with the problems of our time, those of rehabilitation and of compensation of victims; this is where our work lies and further discussion on capital punishment is a waste of time and it is outdated.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): I join in this debate this evening, Mr. Speaker, with reticence as I realize its meaning and consequences and its potential effect on the preservation of our nation and our society. I do so also with great respect for the history that has been mentioned by other hon. members here today. This respect for history is a quality that is not found in abolitionists alone but I am sure it is possessed by all members and particularly retentionists because we remember that our statutes are part of our history.

We are not back in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, and the ridiculous penalties for crimes other than capital crimes which have been related to us as applying in those years have nothing to do with the argument today. I claim that our functioning statutes, as they are now, are part of our history and society and should be respected and maintained as such.

I have listened with interest to the presentations of most hon. members. I have in fact read all the speeches to date. I congratulate my colleagues in all sections of the house upon the many cogent points that have been presented in this debate. I know that each one of us has and will put forward his or her argument without any personal acerbity to anyone, and according to his or her tenets of belief on this vital subject.

I heard five reasons put forward by one hon. member this afternoon, which he said retentionists use for the retention of capital punishment. These were good reasons. However, I did not hear him declare the most important reason, that of "government" itself, the protection of persons and property, the protection of the public. This reason must be present at all times and must be evident to all members, from private members to privy councillors.

• (7:40 p.m.)

I am one of those who believe that capital punishment should be retained in its present classified form. I am one of those who believe it is within the imperium of this parliament of Canada, the state and the Crown, to reserve at all times the right to demand the life of any of its citizens, or indeed, Mr. Speaker, the life of an enemy alien found guilty of crimes against Canada. I am surprised at this time, and shocked, to hear that some privy councillors, present and past, do not agree with this attitude. I refer to the fundamental right of jurisdiction and the authority to use the power of the state to enforce its laws. I would remind hon. members that Canada, as a corporate geographical and social entity and as a nation, does not exist and function in order to act as a stamping ground or a free range for, or as an agent of appeasement to, outlaws and perpetrators of capital crime.

I am also one of those who realize that my constituents did not send me to Ottawa to sit in this parliament in order to weaken or to tear down the statutes of Canada by doing away with any of these laws. On the contrary, in these times of contention, trouble and lawlessness those constituents are more apt rightfully to expect me to assist in placing more restraining measures of a deterring nature on the statute books.

This afternoon I heard hon. members say that it is an awful thing to realize the finality of the death of a condemned criminal, one who has been duly sentenced by the courts. I say it is an awful thing to realize the finality of the death of an innocent victim at the vicious and unmerciful hands of a rapist or a murderer or an armed robber—and we all know how merciless they can be.

The abolitionists contend there is a chance that an innocent man may be executed. I say that there is no record and there is no proof that an innocent man has ever been executed for murder. There may be hearsay, but there is no proof.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, is that if abolition is adopted by this house as a result of this debate, one other measure will immediately be required in country-wide form so as to be consistent with the argument of the abolitionists. This would be a measure to disarm all policemen in Canada. I would remind abolitionists that when an escaping criminal happens to be fatally injured in battle with our courageous policemen this in itself is a form of capital punishment. Therefore I would ask all abolitionists to be consistent, and to see that this action is taken, for it is just as ridiculous as their argument.

From the abolitionists I have heard nothing but a policy of appeasement of capital murderers, those guilty of treason and other capital crimes. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) very definitely tried in his argument to associate the retentionists in this debate with Adolf Hitler, who persecuted and murdered millions and millions of innocent people. The hon. member for Leeds, by arguing thus and supporting abolition, implies that Hitler should not have been executed; or I deduce from his argument that that is tantamount to what he said. The Allies did not capture Hitler while he was still alive, so the privilege of administering the death penalty to him was lost to them. Had he been captured he should certainly have been executed.

In this regard I was very much interested in the fine address made by the hon. lady from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), who pointed out that capital punishment was reinstated in Italy during the time of Mussolini. It was a good thing it was reinstated, and just in time for it to be administered to Mussolini himself. Although it was administered by a mob, in my opinion, he got his just dues.

Since the resolution which we are debating is contrary to any fundamental beliefs which I have, and since it does not as I have said, strengthen the protection of persons and property by the state, I cannot and I will not support it. Let us just look at the terms of the resolution. I had hoped that since it is the product of four authors from three political parties it would portray the wisdom I know these hon. members possess. But it does not do so. May I just put the resolution on record again:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of
>
> (a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that Act;
>
> (b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in these cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and
>
> (c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the Governor in Council.

In clause (a) this resolution advocates abolition of the death penalty in respect of all offences under the code. Mr. Speaker, I wish firmly to point out that it is not the wish of the majority of the Canadian people that the death penalty be abolished for treason. It is not the wish of the majority of the Canadian people that the death penalty be abolished for premeditated murder. It is not the wish of the majority of the Canadian people that the death penalty be abolished for murders committed by armed robbers who have, of course, premeditated these crimes that terminate in fatal results. I point out that there is a rash of these crimes, especially bank robberies, of an intensity in our cities and metropolitan areas the like of which we have never witnessed before. My constituents did not send me here to make it easier for armed robbers to murder bank clerks and their public clientele by lightening the penalty for crimes of this kind already provided for in the statutes.

Mr. Cowan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Alkenbrack: After I have finished. Neither did my constituents send me here to make things easier for the contract killer, the mercenary journeyman killer who goes from place to place, the hired tool of the underworld who kills for a price. These men are the servants of a Mafia narcotics racket of the underworld, and of the perpetrators of planned bankruptcies and arson. It is evident that these contract killings are increasing in number. I would think that of late this government has had enough experience with the underworld, to warrant the preservation of capital punishment to use against the underworld whenever needed.

Neither do the people of Canada wish us to abolish capital punishment to make it easier for the cop killer, another special class of murderer, the one who hates our policemen. Our police forces at all levels across the country have requested by letter and by petition that this parliament maintain capital punishment. I have had several telegrams, as I am sure have all hon. members, the latest of which comes from a Quebec police force totalling 6,000 men.

What about the protection of our prison guards who will be in a very precarious and vulnerable position at the hands of murderers in our penitentiaries, who would then have nothing to lose if they murdered their guards? I have statistics here regarding this particular matter, but I do not think it is necessary to put them on record. Surely hon. members will not act here in such a way as to jeopardize the lives of the policemen and prison guards of Canada.

I remind hon. members that just retribution is already provided for in the statutes for these other types of murders, often perpetrated by armed robbers robbing defenceless neighbourhood shopkeepers in our urban areas, for those who attack and murder elderly people in our urban areas, and elderly farmers on our rural back concessions,—pillaging and murdering because they think these people have money and valuables hidden in their homes. No, Mr. Speaker; for these reasons do not ask me to support clause (a) as it is presently worded.

Now, what about clause (b)? It asks that we substitute a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment for those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this covers and applies to the remarks that I have just made, because clause (b) is asking for a reduction in the severity of the retribution. Yes, we can actually say that clause (b) is asking that a generous measure of impunity be granted the perpetrators of the crimes that I have just generally outlined under clause (a). No, Mr. Speaker, for the above reasons I cannot support clause (b).

• (7:50 p.m.)

Now let us turn to clause (c). It provides that none of these murderers, or no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed, shall be released without the prior approval of the governor in council. Now, Mr. Speaker, you would expect this final clause, if it had any regard for the safety of persons and property in Canada, to read that no person upon whom the mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed for these capital types of crime would ever be released from prison. But no. In spite of the fact that we have a good, astute, firm, yet conciliatory National Parole Board, here we have clause (c) handing the keys to the convicted capital criminal's cell to the governor in council, which is actually the cabinet of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, since this cabinet presently sitting on your right, has such a poor record in regard to facing up to its duties in dealing with capital convictions, I say to you that if this resolution carries, and if the leniency shown in the past projects itself into the future, then the firm administration of justice as it ought to be performed has a poor chance in the years to come. In other words, since those hon. gentlemen opposite have commuted all death sentences to life imprisonment, or to a term which is, actually, less than life imprisonment, the Canadian people fear that they will also commute future sentences to something increasingly less.

There is one further point, and it is this: To vote for clause (c) of this resolution, and for this resolution in its entirety, is to make the freedom of a convicted criminal a political question, since any parole he might try to obtain he would need to obtain from the cabinet. Our parole board is above and apart from all political ilk or association. The cabinet is not. This clause brings politics to bear to control and govern what amounts to, or can amount to, the civil liberties of the citizens of this country. No, sir. Do not ask me to vote for clause (c).

What about the deterrent? Time and again, one hears the catch phrase used by the abolitionists: It has been proven that the death penalty is not a deterrent. Mr. Speaker, this catch phrase is not true. I wonder if these people ever stop to consider the stupidity of such a statement and what its ultimate application implies? In the first place, on what experience or evidence do they base their conclusion? On what index do they base their statistics? One has only to go to the historical fact that in many cases where capital punishment had been abolished by act of government in other countries and states, it has been re-imposed within a short time to combat the homicide which continued and increased and finally incensed the population to the point at which its return was demanded. No. In denying the deterrent value of a penalty in this, as in any other division of criminal activity, one can make such a claim only on the basis of evidence—and we have heard no such evidence.

Has anyone heard a potential murderer say: "I would not take a life because capital punishment is not in effect"? If such a statement sounds stupid, it is certainly not more so than the glib, parrot-like repetition of the phrase one hears so often—"We know that capital punishment is not a deterrent to murder". I submit that we know no such thing. Nor can we even conjecture reasonably what a deterrent capital punishment is to this ultimate and most horrible of all crimes against humanity. Probably not even the most expert and skilled analysts of the human mind would dare to give more than an approximation on such a subject, so qualified that it would tell us nothing. Yet the most amateur practitioner in human behaviour glibly tosses the now familiar phrases about in support of abolition as if the human mind could be fathomed, measured, calibrated and predicted—and, in particular, the mind of a potential murderer.

And now one is inescapably drawn to the most staggering conclusion of all. Given, for one moment, that the theory of the abolitionists is true; let us presume, for argument's sake, that they are right, what is the only conclusion? I say it is this: If capital punishment is no deterrent to wilful premeditated murder, then no punishment whatever is a deterrent to any crime. If this is so, why have any law?

If the prospect of paying for murder with his own life is not deterrent to a calculating, would-be killer, then what a mere bagatelle lesser punishment would be all the way down the line of lesser crime to thieves, embezzlers, reckless drivers and junior perpetrators of petty crimes. And yet, hon. members will agree, thieves do run, many reckless drivers do leave the scenes of accidents, and embezzlers deny the forged signatures, all in a desperate effort to escape the penalty laid down in the statutes.

Does anyone with even the most elementary powers of reasoning think for one moment that the knowledge and prospect of retribution does not deter—does not give at least some acute practical mental consideration to the minds of all sane people, at all ages of accountability, in every moral exigency with which they may be faced? The only possible exception to this is the complete and utter maniac, a man so deranged that he is incapable of thought. And this man is effectively protected from the death penalty by the statutes. Certainly, the insane are so well protected that it is a fact that the sane killer often seeks that defensive haven, the plea of insanity—a somewhat ironical fact if we for one moment believed the abolitionists' contention that a killer does not fear the death penalty.

• (8:00 p.m.)

To return to the resolution as a whole. It might be supportable were we entering a millenium of Utopia. But this is not Utopia. Neither our political nor our social system is perfect. This is Canada 1966; if we grant too much leniency and liberty within the social system our political system will suffer, and possibly perish. I will not be a party to this. Let the statutes stand as they are, without amendment and as they have been since the amendment of 1961, with provision made for capital and non-capital murder. Let the cabinet do its duty as the people of Canada expect duty to be done in each capital case according to its merits.

From the time of Cain capital crime has been a characteristic of this thinking animal, man. The old testament of the Holy Bible speaks in clear, understandable terms of God's law regarding murder. In the fifth chapter of Genesis, the sixth verse—and I am not afraid to quote it—it is stated: "Who so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being eight o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to special order of Thursday, March 31, 1966, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on any amendment now before the house.

Motion of Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purpose of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the governor in council.

[Translation]

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), is as follows:

That the motion be amended as follows:

First, by adding after paragraph (a), the following words: 'except for capital murders, as currently defined, committed while a sentence of life imprisonment is served'.

Second, by adding, after paragraph (b), the following words: 'except in the case of a capital murder committed while a person is serving a sentence of life imprisonment'.

Third, by inserting in paragraph (c) immediately after the word 'imposed', the words 'or with regard to whom a death sentence was commuted'.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Before we call on hon. members to vote perhaps I should indicate the procedure we propose to follow. I intend to call upon the mover and seconder of the amendment to rise if they wish to vote and then—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would read the amendment in English, since I did not catch the translation completely.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair should also read the main motion in French.

[Translation]

Messrs. Byrne, Nugent and Scott (Danforth) moved:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purpose of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the governor in council and on the amendment moved by Mr. Gauthier.

[English]

The amendment moved by Mr. Gauthier, seconded by Mr. Caouette is as follows:

That the motion be amended as follows:

First, by adding after paragraph (a), the following words: 'except for capital murders, as currently defined, committed while a sentence of life imprisonment is served'.

Second, by adding after paragraph (b), the following words: 'except in the case of a capital murder committed while a person is serving a sentence of life imprisonment'.

Third, by inserting in paragraph (c) immediately after the word 'imposed' the words 'or with regard to whom a death sentence was commuted'.

I shall first call upon the mover and seconder to vote for the amendment if they wish, after which I will ask hon. members beginning with the first row to my right who wish to vote in favour of the amendment to rise, and then, as we do in committee, I will call upon the members in the second, third, fourth, and fifth rows in favour to rise. I will then call on those in favour in the first row to my left, to be followed by the second, third, fourth and fifth rows to my left. We will repeat this process in respect of those voting against the amendment.

Division

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Gauthier), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Baldwin
Bigg
Caouette
Chatterton
Chrétien
Fawcett
Forrestall
Gauthier
Gilbert
Godin
Haidasz
Mackasey
McIlraith
McKinley
Mather
Nugent
Rideout (Mrs.)
Robichaud
Saltsman
Schreyer
Scott (Danforth)
Trudeau
Winters—23.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allard
Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Béchard
Beer
Bell (Carleton)
Berger
Blouin
Bower
Brand
Brewin
Brown
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Cantin
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Churchill
Clancy
Clermont
Coates
Code
Comtois
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Deachman
Diefenbaker
Dionne
Douglas
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fairweather
Fane
Faulkner
Favreau
Forbes
Forest
Foy
Fulton
Goyer
Grafftey
Granger
Greene
Grills
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Harley
Hees
Hellyer
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (Jasper-Edson)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Johnston
Keays
Kennedy
Kindt
Knowles
Korchinski
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh (Miss)
Lambert
Lamontagne
Langlois (Chicoutimi)
Laniel
Laprise
Laverdière
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Leboe
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard
Lewis
Loiselle
Loney
Macaluso
MacDonald (Prince)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McLelland
McNulty
McQuaid
McWilliam
Madill
Marchand
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Monteith
Moore
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Munro
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Neveu
Nicholson
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
O'Keefe
Orange
Orlikow
Ormiston
Otto
Pascoe
Patterson
Pearson
Pelletier
Pennell
Pepin
Peters
Pickersgill
Pilon
Prud'homme
Pugh
Rapp
Régimbal
Reid
Ricard
Richard
Rinfret
Rochon
Rock
Roxburgh
Ryan
Rynard
Sauvé
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Sharp
Sherman
Simard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Stafford
Stanbury
Starr
Stefanson
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Tolmie
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Valade
Vincent
Wadds (Mrs.)
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Assiniboia)
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webb
Whelan
Winch
Winkler
Yanakis—199

[Mr. Speaker.]

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether we could have some clarification with regard to what will happen with regard to other amendments, if any are moved, from now until tomorrow prior to the final vote?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that question could be directed to the government house leader, but I might refer hon. members to the consent order adopted by the house on Thursday,

March 31, which specifies at what time further amendments are to be disposed of by the house tomorrow.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this point to indicate to the house that it is my intention to support the abolition of the death penalty when that question is voted upon tomorrow evening. We are now completing the fourth day of debate on this question and it seems to me that at this time there is relatively little that is new that can be added in the way of propositions either for or against the measure upon which we shall be voting tomorrow night. But there does seem to me to be one fresh consideration which I believe is relevant to this debate, and therefore I should like to move an amendment at this time in order to bring before the house the basic question that the British House of Commons had before it in its most recent legislative action with regard to capital punishment.

As most hon. members will know, the abolition of capital punishment for murder under the criminal law of England has not been made absolute and for all time. Rather, the legislative action they have taken has abolished the capital penalty for a period of five years only and at the end of that five year period, dating from the enactment of the law, in the event of the failure of the British parliament to enact any further amendments in order to dispose of the death penalty once and for all time, this penalty shall once again be enforced under the English criminal law.

I propose to put before this house by way of an amendment the suggestion that the motion which is before us this evening and will be voted on tomorrow night be amended so the house will declare itself in favour of amending the Criminal Code on a trial basis for five years, so that in effect what is in the British law shall be incorporated in the Criminal Code of Canada.

I shall not take up any more time of the house. I think the purpose of the amendment will be well understood. It certainly will be understood by members who have been following this debate. Therefore Mr. Speaker, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien):

That the motion be amended by inserting therein, immediately after the words "Criminal Code" the following words:

"on a trial basis for a period of five years."

Mr. Fulton: Licence to murder?

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to prolong this debate any more than is necessary for me to state my views as simply and as concisely as possible on the question whether capital punishment should or should not be retained; nor is it my intention to try to refute any of the personal views expressed by any hon. member during this debate. Statistics have been used and the Bible has been quoted to prove the arguments of those who support either side of this question. But it seems to me that statistics are of little value in trying to chart human behaviour at any given time under many different environments and cricumstances. It is because of this that society has had to lay down certain rules of individual behaviour without which society itself would cease to exist. Without these rules and the ability to collectively enforce them, there would be chaos. It is necessary, then, that crimes against society must of necessity be punished in order to maintain the rule of law and the right of human beings to form a society and live together in that society.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The fact that people can live together is the result of the majority of the people respecting the law and the rights of the individual as set out in our rules of behaviour. It is an accepted fact that those who commit crimes against society should be punished for the protection of society itself, and that the punishment should fit the crime. This principle applies to a petty thief who may receive a nominal prison term as well as to the murderer who, by taking a human life, must expect the greatest punishment.

Organized crime, established almost on the basis of a military operation and just as effective, is now reaching into Canada in its war against society. Human life means nothing to the crime syndicates. Unless effective methods are used to combat these vicious operations our society could become enslaved, just as other societies have, by this sinister underworld.

Mr. Cowan: I should like to ask the hon. member for Lisgar if he is aware of the fact an Ontario Provincial Police officer was killed this afternoon on the grounds of the Royal Ottawa Sanatorium, according to a Canadian press dispatch? I refer to a member of the provincial force, not the municipal force.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): This only illustrates, Mr. Speaker, that the trial period we now have for abolition has not worked. Many sincere men and women have argued that society should not, under any circumstances, take a human life and, in any case, the death penalty was not a deterrent to murder. Is it not reasonable to suppose that society is concerned for those who help make it work by obeying these rules and without whom it could not exist? It can be argued that the death penalty is or is not a deterrent, although I must admit that I am far from convinced it is not a deterrent. One irrefutable fact is that it is a deterrent to the one who has already committed a murder.

One of the strongest arguments for abolition that occurs to me is that there is always the danger of an innocent man being convicted. It was this very argument that persuaded the government under the leadership of the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to amend the Criminal Code by dividing murder into two categories, capital and non-capital. Those convicted of non-capital murder, and this included minors, were subject to life imprisonment. This meant incarceration for a period of from eight to 20 years. Those convicted of capital murder, which included premeditated crimes, were subject to the death penalty. Under those conditions any judge or jury would be hesitant about convicting a man of capital murder upon circumstancial evidence. The risk of imposing the death penalty on an innocent man, particularly when one considers the appeals to which a convicted man is entitled, has been as far as is humanly possible eliminated.

Unfortunately, these amendments have never been given an opportunity to work since this government has commuted all sentences, no matter how heinous the crime. We have had, in effect, at a time when crime was on the increase, total abolition since this government took office.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while expressing the greatest sympathy for the views of many good and sincere citizens who for various reasons would abolish the death penalty, I find that as a legislator the important issue is the protection of society from these criminal elements. As I see it, my duty as a legislator is to support legislation that would achieve the ultimate degree of protection for our citizens. I therefore intend to vote for the retention of the law as it now stands.

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest as my hon. colleagues in all parts of the house have discussed both sides of the important motion before us, and the vital issue concerning the abolition or retention of capital punishment. A great deal has been said. Eloquent presentations have been made, and further discussion might appear to be redundant. However, because I feel that all opinions are important, and in order to provide an opportunity for all members to express themselves in the time which has been allotted, I will make my remarks very brief.

As the members who favour abolition present their case, I notice that a recurring theme in their argument is that capital punishment does not effectively deter homicide. This theory is immediately challenged by the retentionist, and the argument goes on with each side summoning impressive documentation for their respective positions. In my own studies, Mr. Speaker, and I have tried to consider this matter objectively, I have become convinced that there is no proof that capital punishment is an effective deterrent or the only deterrent force.

I believe that many statements and much evidence supporting this fact are typified by the rather concise statement, which might be considered a ready or available reference for the average Canadian, as found in the latest edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica. It is as follows:

> Regarding deterence, it is well established by statistical studies that (1) when comparisons are made between contiguous states with similar populations and similar social, economic and political conditions—some of these states lacking and others retaining capital punishment—homicide rates are the same and follow the same trend over a long period of time regardless of the use or nonuse of capital punishment; (2)—the abolition, introduction or reintroduction of this penalty is not accompanied by the effect on homicide rates that is postulated by the advocates of capital punishment; (3)—even in communities where the deterrent effect should be greatest because the offender and his victim lived there and trial and execution were well publicized, homicide rates are not affected by the execution; (4) the rate of policemen killed by criminals is no higher in abolition states than in comparable death-penalty states. Capital punishment, then, does not appear to have a specific influence on the amount or trend of the kind of crime it is supposed to deter people from committing.

Mr. Speaker, the point is certainly not that the Encyclopedia Britannica is a particular or ultimate authority in this matter, although I have been in touch with their editorial board who inform me that their statement is the result of many hours of study and research the world over. The point is rather that a reasonable doubt exists as to the basic value of capital punishment. There is reasonable doubt that this nation gains any great benefit from the use of the gallows. It is my understanding that in their wisdom the courts of this great land caution the many Canadians who are asked as jurors to judge their peers to remember that, if a reasonable doubt exists, that doubt must free the accused and the condemned. Mr. Speaker, in this case, that doubt is present, and as a member of the jury judging capital punishment, I must, in all human conscience, cast my vote for abolition.

I have mentioned reasonable doubt as to the effective value of the ultimate penalty. There is another area of reasonable doubt which is in my opinion of prior importance and could well be the prime consideration in regard to the whole issue before us.

In this twentieth century, in spite of all the knowledge and experience at our disposal, there is possibility of error whereby an innocent person has, and under our present Criminal Code can be put to death for a crime which he or she did not commit. In this debate actual cases have already been mentioned in this connection. I am sure that there are and must be many more.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Professor Borchard, of Yale University, in his book "Convicting the Innocent", has collected 68 cases from England and the United States in which innocent persons have been convicted of crime. Twenty five of these cases involve murder. No doubt error is not discovered as often in murder cases as in others, With the execution of the supposed offender further investigation usually ceases, whereas in other kinds of offences investigation by the family, friends and legal advisers of the convicted person frequently continues.

I could refer to the royal commission in England appointed by Queen Victoria in 1864 and the summary report which quotes evidence by Sir Fitzroy Kelly, a former attorney general and solicitor general as follows:

> After careful consideration and examination, he has come to the conclusion that it is not in any way reasonable to be doubted that in many instances innocent men have been capitally convicted, and in certain numbers of instances, few of course, but yet formidable numbers, have been actually executed . . .
>
> He well remembers that there were, between the years 1802 and 1840, 22 cases of capital convictions, seven of which resulted in the execution of the convicts, and in the rest of which the sentence was mitigated, or a pardon granted. But in the whole of the 22 cases, the innocence of these persons was established, or at least, established satisfactorily to those who investigated the matter, and in most of the cases to the satisfaction of the advisers of the Crown.

It took the British parliament, which is the mother of this parliament, 100 years to recognize gross injustice and take steps to correct this injustice. This matter has been under consideration here, in this very place, off and on, for half a century.

Even the strongest proponents of retention, Mr. Speaker, if they will examine their own consciences, must have at least one reservation. This could be predicated on the possibility of an innocent person paying with his life for the crime of another. This possibility is usually minimized as insignificant statistically when viewed in the interest of the public and the nation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I must insist that while any shadow of doubt exists, while an alternative exists, no matter how imperfect that alternative may be we dare not use the prerogative which is ours to exercise the supreme penalty. If hon. members will consider this one point and this point only, I am sure that they will come to only one possible conclusion namely that capital punishment should be abolished.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much this opportunity to put on the record for the benefit of the people who sent me here to represent them the reasons why I am going to vote as I will vote on the matter now before us. I have found it, as many others have confessed to finding it, a very difficult decision to reach. For many months there has been a deluge of literature and of arguments both for and against the abolition of capital punishment in Canada. Arguments have been drawn from many sources to support the opposite conclusions so strongly held by responsible individuals and highly respected organizations. In the end, each member of this house is left with the responsibility to weigh the evidence and to judge for himself or herself how his or her vote should be cast.

The purpose of capital punishment is to serve as a deterrent to crime. If capital punishment is not a deterrent to crime, then there is no reason to retain it as a penalty in our Criminal Code. This debate, then boils down to whether or not capital punishment serves as a deterrent to crime. I believe that it does, and holding this belief I cannot support the resolution for abolition.

Capital punishment is part and parcel of the over-all public discipline which builds respect, which maintains respect and which forces respect for law and order across the land. I am persuaded that it still has an important part to play in the maintenance of respect for law. Society seeks to protect itself co-operatively through the imposition of rules and laws. Individuals have very little power. It is through associations and organizations that they become strong. The rights and privileges of each is based on the rights and privileges of all. Protection of persons, protection of property, protection of all the freedoms that we enjoy is bound up in the maintenance of the rules and laws that have been established. Without law and order we have chaos. No organization of any kind can continue to exist without the enforcement of laws.

Laws are maintained by penalties. When no penalty is provided for infraction of the laws, there is little or no respect for that law. How far would we get in teaching people to respect the red and green lights on the corners of our streets if there were no penalties attached to violations of the rules? It is true that all those who violate the rules are not punished. Many people walk across the street —I have done this myself—when the light is not in their favour. But when doing this they realize they are breaking the law, and were it not for the penalties involved, and occasionally applied, there would be no respect at all for law.

The severity of the penalty indicates the importance of the law. Minor offences are punishable by fines. The more serious the offence, the greater the fine. Other offences are punishable by imprisonment or by both fine and imprisonment. Torture at one time was used as well, but that has been dropped. The ultimate penalty is capital punishment. It is presently reserved for capital murder and indicates the attitude of the Canadian people toward deliberate killing.

No child can grow up in this country knowing that capital punishment is a part of our Criminal Code and not realize that murder is a serious offence. No newcomer or visitor can doubt our national attitude toward murder while capital punishment is included in our statutes. This is one of the reasons I support its retention.

Arguments have been offered that we should abolish capital punishment because it is barbarous, uncivilized and unbecoming of a progressive nation in this enlightened age. I cannot agree that this age is sufficiently enlightened that it is beyond the need for penalties in law enforcement. True, we have made great progress in the field of scientific achievement and in the science of government, but has human nature changed to the same extent? I think not.

Criminals have moved ahead with the times. They are more sophisticated, they are more scientific and they are more legalistic. They go for the quick "buck" through modern methods which they seek to operate within the law. They have a fuller understanding of legal procedure and are better able to cover their tracks. I do not believe that human nature has changed to the point where it is unimpressed by penalties for wrongdoing, and this being so I believe it is unwise to stop at any penalty short of the ultimate one.

This country is now disturbed about a rape-murder case which arose some years ago at Clinton, Ontario. This country is suffering pangs of regret about a similar case at Aylmer within recent weeks. That case is still unresolved. Within recent days this country was horrified by the confessed rape murder of a five year old girl by a man in his thirties.

Where is the civilization, the purification, the improvement in human nature that can now justify the removal of penalties from our law? We need penalties, penalties to suit the crimes; and for the ultimate crime we need the ultimate penalty.

Across this country there are children playing in school yards, in playgrounds and in the streets. Some of our women and girls have to find their way home from their employment after nightfall. Are we to relax the protection which has been devised for the protection of the weak? I say that we should not.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The use of capital punishment is said to be unbecoming to civilized people. Is not crime unbecoming to civilized people? When civilization succeeds in eliminating crime, then penalties can be eliminated. Can we convince people that elimination of penalties will result in the elimination of crime? I think not.

I agree with those who contend that penalties should not be used as retaliation against criminals. Penalties should not be imposed by society for revenge. Penalties should be imposed to protect society by restraining criminals, by discouraging crime and by inspiring respect for law and order. Punishment adds substance to the promise of punishment. The ultimate protection therefore comes from the ultimate promise.

One of the arguments used for promoting the abolition of the death penalty is that mistakes have occurred in assessing guilt, and there is danger of an innocent person being executed. The weakness of this argument lies in the fact that if we accept it in connection with capital punishment we should be consistent and accept it in relation to all punishment. All punishments carry the same risk or error. Danger of error applies all across the board. Are we to withhold punishment for all wrong-doing because an innocent person may suffer?

The possibility of error in assessing guilt is a matter for the courts. Every person under our law is presumed innocent until he is proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The possibility of error in assessing guilt calling for capital punishment is no more valid as an argument in favour of abolition than is the possibility of error in assessing guilt for any other kind of crime, a reason for outlawing all punishment.

I believe that our present laws concerning capital punishment are as close as we can get to a fair balance between the exercise of mercy and the imposition of a penalty severe enough to discourage the crime of murder. In July, 1961, parliament revised the Criminal Code with regard to the crime of murder. Murders were divided into two classes, capital murder and non-capital murder. The list of killings coming under the heading of capital murder, for which judges are compelled to impose the death sentence, is very limited. It includes planned and deliberate murder and encompasses the murder of police officers and prison guards. All other killings are classed as non-capital murder and carry a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment.

Every death sentence must be reviewed by an appeal court and by the cabinet. The cabinet has the power to commute any sentence of death. Very few executions have taken place since this change in the Criminal Code was made.

I have no criticism to offer in this respect. I hope that governments can frequently find sufficient reason for commuting the death sentences that are imposed by our courts. I hope that some redeeming features and some hope for rehabilitation can be found in all murderers, but I remain convinced that the ultimate penalty should remain on our statute books to be used in the discretion of the government when necessary to stay the hand of those who would deliberately kill their fellow men.

Penalty is the price for wrong-doing. The ultimate penalty is the price for the ultimate crime. Everybody pays. The guilty one, the family of the guilty one, the friends and neighbours of the guilty one, the police, the judge, the court officials, the sympathetic people of the nation. Everybody pays.

Our laws are a legacy from all the generations of mankind that have preceded us. Our laws are designed to promote the happiness and well-being of our generation and generations yet to come. They are the product of experience, of trial and error. They are made to fit human nature—not to fit human nature as we hope it might be, but to fit human nature as it is, as it has proved to be.

I wish to support the capital punishment law as revised in 1961. I believe it is good law and should be continued for a much longer period before further change is considered.

There is one matter I should like to place before this house, and I do so in all humility. I have not had the advantage of legal training but it does seem to me that a situation has developed which should be given serious consideration. An editorial in the Globe and Mail of Friday, March 25, outlines the attitude of a court dealing with a charge of murder. It states:

> Mr. Justice Eric G. Moorhouse (the judge in the case) agreed to a reduction of the charge to one of non-capital murder after this had been requested by counsel for the defence and concurred in by the Crown. The accused pleaded guilty to a lesser offence.

This particular case involved the man charged with the rape murder of a five-year-old girl. The editorial continued:

> There is nothing particularly unusual about this course until one considers the factors by which Judge Moorhouse apparently allowed himself to be guided. He commented: "I think this court is bound to take notice of the fact that the penalty for capital murder has not been exacted for some time, and in view of this I can see no useful purpose in proceeding with this case in the hope of obtaining a verdict of capital murder."

• (9:10 p.m.)

I quote this in order to indicate that there is uncertainty in Canada today concerning the policy of applying our laws in this area of capital punishment. The death penalty is provided for in our Criminal Code, but there is doubt in the public mind about the extent to which it is being used. The judge's statement at Bracebridge indicates this. This debate and this decision by parliament is being closely watched. If abolition is recommended by the house in the forthcoming vote there will be no problem, but if abolition does not carry, then there may be a measure of discrimination in the treatment of those now under sentence of death.

To allay any doubts about this I would recommend to the government that consideration be given to the commutation of all death sentences presently imposed. It is unjust that some death sentences should be considered under a set of conditions prior to a decision by this house and that other sentences should be considered after a decision is taken by the house, when in both cases the sentences have been imposed under the same set of laws and under the same set of circumstances. It would be much better if all sentences heretofore imposed be commuted before a decision is taken by the house, and then a new start could be made after that decision is made. I commend this to the consideration of the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make my maiden speech in this house, I must admit quite frankly that I do so with deep sadness, due to the disgraceful events of the past weeks, and having to speak on such a serious, burning and controversial subject. I realize that everyone of us is entitled to his own opinion, keeping in mind that, as members of parliament, we are also spokesmen for our constituents.

Therefore, I wish to thank those who have helped me in taking what I believe is the best course by making their views known to me, even though I may disappoint those who do not share my views. But in a sound democracy, the minority must yield to the majority, and if the rules of the game are followed, there is less chance of coming to a deadlock or of causing misunderstanding. Starting from that principle, I am in favour of maintaining the death penalty for capital murder and my decision is based more on reason than on feelings.

Capital punishment must be applied to protect society and, in my opinion, it is not out of revenge but for the common weal. To abolish this penalty would result in depriving society of security and encourage contempt of the law.

If a criminal knows, when committing a crime, that the only punishment awaiting him is detention in a penal institution, then society is actually looking for trouble. To oppose capital punishment is not necessarily an indication of great moral strength or of social progress; it could rather be a sign of decadence.

It is not so much a matter of knowing what is good for the criminal, than what is necessary to maintain order within society and to protect lives and also ensure the safety of the citizens. In fact, it is easier to pardon than to condemn in our times, when no personal prejudice is involved.

Man has a tendency to self-delusion, and deems himself wiser and kinder than God. Let us not forget either that man-made justice is only an earthly decision, willed by God; I am considering only the case where the guilty party is truly guilty. God withholds his heavenly judgment. It cannot be denied that earthly justice is not perfect as divine justice is.

Should we believe that all murders should be liable to capital punishment? Obviously not. We must not ask that capital punishment be applied to all cases. Judges and juries must then take everything into account to determine the degree of the murderer's responsibility.

Psychology, psychiatry, criminology, sociology must help them to differentiate between a fully conscious action and the deed committed by a murderer temporarily blinded by anger, jealousy, despair, circumstances, etc.

Consideration must also be given to the influences exerted, to family and community responsibilities, to the age of the culprit, whether it is a first murder or a relapse, and alway remember that, except in cases of utter degradation, man always maintains some freedom, hence some moral sense.

It can be deemed probable that certain tendencies to eliminate the concept of sin and repentance will be harshly judged in the future. Such an attitude makes it too easy to release a prisoner, giving him the opportunity to commit further crimes; furthermore, early release reduces the benefits.

To conclude, capital punishment cannot be rejected under the claim that man may not pass judgment on his neighbour. The judge, of course, must never seek to make a final decision on the culprit, since only God can do it, and has the right to do so, but he must weight the deeds and seek to determine the degree of responsibility.

If this responsibility is clearly established, and if extenuating circumstances are definitely inadequate, the judge may have to condemn the accused, but never in a vindictive spirit or according to the "eye for an eye" philosophy.

On the contrary, he must do it only to protect society and with a feeling of suffering and humiliation, for the whole of society must also feel partly responsible for the wrongdoings of the accused and if the state is denied the right to take the life of one of its members, it should, by the same token, be denied the right to deprive a man of his freedom forever, leaving him without hope of freedom or rehabilitation. The argument for the substitution of life imprisonment to capital punishment is thus deceptive. However, I would favour a less inhuman means of execution than hanging.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I have tried to present my personal views, freely and according to my own conscience. Before resuming my seat, may I take this opportunity, since I could not do so earlier, which explains my lateness, to congratulate you on your appointment, which I do as warmly and sincerely as those who spoke before me.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do so with a full realization of the fact that the matter of the abolition or the retention of capital punishment can be the subject of much emotional sentimentality and argument which in the final analysis will contribute very little to the final determination of the question. This, of course, is a very controversial issue in respect of which attitudes in many cases are deeply rooted and highly motivated in the minds of the respective advocates. They are capable of arousing powerful emotions. We must, therefore, be careful not to stigmatize the abolitionist as necessarily being on the side of crime and castigate him for wasting his sympathy on cold-blooded killers by the same token, those who favour retention must not be stigmatized necessarily as being heartless and lacking in mercy.

This, as I said, is a very controversial issue in respect of which good people honestly are divided, all having high motives in their respective convictions and each advocating that which he thinks is best for society. You might ask yourself why anybody from the province of Prince Edward Island would even interest himself in the question of capital punishment, because in the four year period from 1961 to 1964 inclusive we have had only one murder in that province, resulting in one victim. As a matter of fact, statistics will indicate that we have the lowest incidence of crime of any province of Canada. In the last year for which Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures are available we had only 81 persons charged with indictable offences, resulting in only 75 convictions—one in every 1,440 people, the lowest by far of any province in Canada.

We are justifiably proud of the law-abiding tendencies of the people of our small province, of the very effective work done by our police forces in suppressing serious crime, and the very efficient work done by our social agencies in diverting in some other direction those who may have a possible propensity to crime. We have approximately 21,000 young people in our province between the ages of 10 and 19 years and of that number, during 1965, we had only 35 brought before the juvenile court. This represents only one in every 600 between the ages of 10 and 19. I suggest this is a remarkable record and a very clear indication that fathers and mothers are giving more than mere lip service to respect for the law, and are instilling this same respect in their children. I am sure that had we more of this, the retention or abolition of capital punishment might not loom so large on the Canadian horizon today.

I am very interested in an article which appeared recently in an issue of The Christian Science Monitor, entitled "Are you a delinquent citizen?" It asks the question "Where does crime start?" and continues to state that the answers are almost unanimous.

> Whether couched in psychiatric terms, in the scholarly language of the educator, or in the hard vernacular of the professional policemen, all point in one direction: the home.
>
> Another major institution that can and does help prevent delinquency is the church.

These factors, as I say, are important; if we had more direction from the home base, we might not be so concerned about the abolition or retention of capital punishment. I am convinced, however, that we in this house have an almost inescapable obligation, irrespective of where we come from, to speak out on any social problem of such magnitude and importance as this. I think the government is to be congratulated for bringing the question before us in such a manner that we are able to vote on it without regard to party lines.

In Canada, for the past three years, we have been abolishing capital punishment by commutation of the death sentence, by cabinet order. This, Mr. Speaker, I suggest, is a quite dangerous practice and one which is very unsatisfactory, unless the jury which has tried the case has recommended mercy for the accused.

After having made a rather careful study of what purpose capital punishment is intended to serve, and after having given careful thought to how it has achieved that purpose, I cannot but conclude that complete abolition would endanger the lives of our citizens and would do away with the greatest safeguard the police have in dealing with dangerous criminals. Complete abolition would, I maintain, endanger the lives of our citizens, because I do not think there is anything which will achieve the degree of deterrence so much as punishment by possible loss of life. It is true that it has failed as a deterrent after the murder is committed, but that does not mean that it may not have deterred many other people, and we will never know how many people have abandoned the idea of murder because of the fear of execution if they are caught and convicted. We are not able to examine the mental processes and attitudes of the potential murderer. We cannot look into his heart to see what actually goes on there.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Human nature being what it is, it is very difficult for me to be convinced that somewhere along the line—and I speak now of course only of deliberate planned murder—the person planning the murder did not think of the penalty. After all, it is only common sense to assume that what will happen if you are caught forms a part of your thinking. When murder is premeditated, I maintain that the consequences in the event of detection must certainly be taken into consideration. It has been very correctly said that no value is stronger than that attached to the preservation of life, and I submit that proof of this lies in the fact that every accused murderer fights for his life at his trial and will not give up until he has carried his case to the highest courts available to him, and has exhausted every means at his disposal to maintain and prove his innocence.

Abolitionists will argue that there is always the danger of an innocent person being convicted and put to death. That is possible, Mr. Speaker, because we do not have a perfect system; but it is not I suggest ever a practical argument because our system of law administration in dealing with murder cases provides the necessary safeguards to protect the really innocent.

First of all, we have an inquest into a death. Then we have a preliminary hearing before a magistrate. Then, in those provinces which still maintain the grand jury system, we have an inquiry by the grand jury to determine whether or not there is sufficient evidence against an accused to warrant putting him on trial, or to warrant bringing in a true bill against him. Should a grand jury determine that a true bill is warranted, then we have the trial itself before an impartial judge and 12 independent and impartial jurors—peers of the accused. A verdict is rendered not by the judge but by the 12 impartial men.

After all this, when an accused is convicted by a petty jury he then has the right to appeal, and this right is provided whether he requests it or not. During all these steps the accused is represented by competent counsel and if he cannot afford his own, one is provided for him at no expense. No man is allowed to plead guilty under our law to a charge of capital murder. I am satisfied that no accused is discriminated against by reason of wealth, race, colour or creed in so far as the application of the death penalty is concerned.

Justice is a relative concept which changes with the type of crime. This principle is recognized throughout all our codified law. I think it was the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) who pointed out during his speech that a minor traffic violation, for example, is not subject to as severe a penalty as is a conviction for breaking and entering. A conviction for breaking and entering is not subject to as severe a penalty as a conviction for armed robbery, and so on down the line. The punishment inflicted should, and I submit it does, reflect our abhorrence of the crime. Planned and deliberate murder is one of the most abhorred and, therefore, the punishment inflicted should be a mark of our revulsion for it.

Having established, at least to my own satisfaction, that the death penalty has a specific deterrent, that it has a deterring effect which would not result from any other form of punishment, I must assume the position that it should be retained in respect of all cases of capital murder. I am therefore obliged to vote against the present resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to unduly prolong the debate but I want just the same to make a few remarks in order to explain how I will vote.

I think that I owe it to my constituents and to those who got in touch with me to give the reason for my decision.

As a former crown prosecutor, it was given to me to fight crime and my natural tendency is certainly not to pamper criminals. However, on the occasion of this debate, like all hon. members in this house, I had to study a number of documents favouring abolition or retention of the death penalty. I felt I had to do some research, to listen to several excellent speeches made in this house and most of all, to give that matter some thought.

I must admit that I was in favour of retaining the death penalty. I accepted as a matter of fact the proposition that the death penalty was an efficient deterrent, that it was a protection for the society, that it was a just punishment, and that in any case, our sympathy should go to the parents of the victim rather than to the criminal himself. I realized that hanging was a barbaric act, but I accepted it as being without any alternative and necessary to protect society.

Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I have now changed my mind and I do not hesitate to say that I will vote for the abolition of the death penalty.

I do not intend to mention in this brief speech all the arguments which influenced my decision. Besides, I would only be repeating what others have said better.

Allow me to add that I was greatly inspired by the debate in this house, by the writings of Thorsten Sellin, Arthur Maloney and Arthur Martin, also by comments made by Father Ambroise on a radio program called 'Chez Miville", and by three articles by Father Jean-Paul Régimbald which were published quite recently in Le Devoir.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the first question which arises is whether the death penalty really protects society.

As pointed out by Father Régimbald, whose name I just mentioned, and who is a former prison chaplain, there are three types of murderers:

(1) The calculating murderer who plans his crimes before hand.

(2) The emotional murderer who commits his crime under stress;

(3) The hired murderer, a mercenary who kills for money.

The first one, the calculating murderer, only acts when he is convinced that all his preparations are so perfect that he will not even be arrested.

The second one, the murderer carried away by passion, does not even think of the death penalty.

As for the hired killer, he is not afraid of anything, not even of dying.

Therefore, it seems that capital punishment is not too effective to deter the three kinds of murderers from committing their crimes.

As a matter of fact, there is no indication that abolition of the death penalty, in certain countries or some American states, resulted in an increase of murders.

Statistics referring to American states or other countries that have abolished or retained capital punishment were quoted several times in the house. Tonight, I wish to give but a few examples.

Wisconsin, Maine and Michigan, three states which abolished capital punishment, have the following rates of murder per 100,000 population: 0.9, 1.4 and 3.3 respectively. On the other hand, Florida, South Carolina and Georgia show rates of 7.7, 10.1 and 10.3 respectively. And yet those last three states have retained the death penalty.

It is true that those six states are not located in the same region, so that comparisons are imperfect. But, even when you compare American states in the same area and with similar population distributions, statistics do not reveal any increase in the number of murders in those where capital punishment was abolished.

In New England and Massachusetts, where capital punishment has been retained, the incidence is 1.8 for every 100,000 people, while in Maine, as I said a moment ago, where capital punishment has been abolished, the incidence is 1.4.

Therefore, it is far from being proven that the death penalty has a deterrent effect.

If the death penalty is not an efficient deterrent, should it nevertheless be retained as a punishment? Is it conceivable that, in 1966, our civilization has not made sufficient progress to rid itself of the law of retaliation?

Can we really find support in the Holy Scripture to maintain that the state should kill murderers?

In the Sermon on the Mount, Our Lord said: "Ye have heard that it hath been said 'an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth', but I say unto you that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also . . ." and, in Mathew 5:17: "I am not come to destroy the law but to fulfil it."

The first murderer was Cain. Did God take his life for having killed his brother? He cursed and banished him, but he marked him so that no one would hit him.

Is it not a basic principle of Christianity that God does not want the death of the sinner but his conversion?

The human being slowly progressed from the cave to the tribe and to society. It also progressed from the club to the stake to hanging. Must it now stop at the rope or the electric chair? Or must it not find a civilized solution in keeping with its level of civilization?

Of course, the abolition of capital punishment must not mean that society will no longer be protected.

In general terms, life imprisonment will have to be substituted for capital punishment.

Our penitentiaries will also have to be completely reformed to give prisoners modern and adequate psychiatric and psychological care in order to rehabilitate them.

It will be necessary to find ways of making prisoners useful and productive so that their work may compensate the state for its expenditure.

Perhaps we should study the possibility of prisoners working outside penitentiaries and contributing to the development of our natural resources in certain parts of the country such as the North, where escape is practically impossible.

If our system of rehabilitation and discharge is sufficiently improved, the day may come when some definitely rehabilitated and repentant criminals will be able to resume normal life and pay their debt to society by their contribution.

I think that a decision in favour of the abolition of capital punishment would be a positive gesture worthy of the high reputation of this house and would provide a magnificent ending to a memorable debate of which we may justly be proud.

[Mr. Dubé.]

• (9:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to enter into the debate on whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent, beyond pointing out the fact that those in this house who have advanced the idea that capital punishment is no deterrent have been able to bring forward statistical proof, or statistical evidence, shall I say, and sociological studies that appear to bear out their position, while those who are convinced that capital punishment is a deterrent have been completely unable to advance any statistical or sociological studies that would bear out their position.

I think one of our problems in a case like this is the question of what lies at the back of our thinking and attitudes. This is one of the most difficult things for human beings to discover. We have to, as it were, sneak up on ourselves to find out just what makes us behave as we do, just what makes us take the positions that we take; and all of us, of course, have a tendency to rationalize our position and assure ourselves and others that we take this position from at least a logical point of view, and perhaps from considerations of nobility.

I suggest that our attitude toward murder is based on terror and fear, because murder is a fearful and a terrible thing. It drives home to us suddenly the very thin shell of civilization that protects us from violence and a relapse into savagery. As a consequence we have very strong emotional reactions against murder. But I would suggest that fear and terror are poor counsellors.

I have also noticed in the course of this debate a strange confusion between personal, individual indignation and rage and outrage, and public policy. I do not suggest there is anyone here—I would hope there is not—who coming across a murderer in the process of committing his crime would not do his best perhaps to kill that murderer with his bare hands. In some circumstances he certainly would, without any consideration of what led the man to take this step, without any consideration of the various factors involved, but merely immediately to try and destroy that man in rage and fury. However, Mr. Speaker, I submit that is a very different thing from agreeing to have somebody else later, many months later, destroy this life, on our behalf, in cold blood.

• (9:50 p.m.)

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I would expect that most of us would do this because it is a generous impulse that provokes this rage and indignation. But it is not a generous impulse that suggest, "Let us get the hangman. Let him go and hang this man for us." I say this because I think we should realize that in no murder trial is it possible for all the facts to come out. The facts go far behind the actual crime of murder. I have heard a great deal in this debate about protecting society from those aberrant individuals, but I have heard practically nothing in this debate about protecting the individual from what society does to him. Unless we can go along the strange, dark, twisted road that a human being has to go before he finally commits the crime of murder, we are in no position whatever to judge him. We are judging not a man who has suddenly become a murderer, we are judging a man who, through force of circumstances or how society has treated him, has been twisted and brought to the point where he is able to commit this crime.

I think the proof of our real attitude toward this fellow, Mr. Speaker, is how we go about it. We do not take the murderer and hang him in the market place. We do it in the dead of night. We do it in secret and in private. Whenever we do something on those terms, it is something we are ashamed of doing, otherwise we would not do it this way. We are ashamed of it even though we will not admit it.

Usually we are ashamed of evil things. I know there are many who are not convinced by this argument. I know there are many who still have fears and apprehensions they have been unable to overcome. They have been unable to overcome their quite natural fear of murder. To those I would say the amendment produced this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) putting forth the idea of a five-year trial period, should be the answer. Last year in November in Great Britain the British House of Commons passed the Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act. It was passed on November 9, 1965 and is to expire on July 31, 1970, unless the British parliament by affirmative resolution of both houses otherwise determines. The abolition of the death penalty for murder was for offences corresponding to murder, murder under the Army Act and under the Naval Discipline Act, and substitutes instead a sentence of imprisonment for life, except in the case of a person under 18 at the time of the commission of the offence, who is to be detained during Her Majesty's pleasure.

On sentencing a person to imprisonment for life, as above, the court may declare the period which it recommends as the minimum period which should elapse before release on licence; and no person convicted of murder is to be released on licence unless the secretary of state has had prior consultation with the Lord Chief Justice, together with the trial judge if available.

The act reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

> No person shall suffer death for murder, and a person convicted of murder shall, subject to subsection 5 below, be sentenced to imprisonment for life.
>
> On sentencing any person convicted of murder to imprisonment for life the court may at the same time declare the period which it recommends to the secretary of state as the minimum period which in its view should elapse before the secretary of state orders the release of that person on licence under section—
>
> For the purpose of a proceeding on or subsequent to a person's trial on a charge of capital murder, that charge and any plea or finding of guilt of capital murder shall be treated as being or having been a charge, or a plea or finding of guilty, of murder only; and if at the commencement of this act a person is under sentence for murder, the sentence shall have effect as a sentence of imprisonment for life.

I would plead with those who, after giving serious consideration to this, feel they cannot support the abolition of capital punishment without some provisos, to give this five-year trial period a chance. Let us see what comes out of it. Five years should be sufficient to settle this argument as to whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent.

Mr. Vincent: We have had a three-and-a-half year trial now.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, we have had a three and a half year trial. If we want to take that into consideration, then there is your proof that capital punishment is no deterrent and that the abolition of capital punishment does not promote homicide.

I am suggesting that unless you are prepared to accept that, and any rational person would be, then we now have a chance to have a certain set period from the date of the passage of the amendment to the Criminal Code, in which to see if the statistics which we have had to date are borne out during that five-year period. As I said, I am not going to enter into any argument as to whether it is a deterrent. Nor am I going to enter into the argument on religious grounds because I do not feel qualified to do so. I suggest to those who have been quoting biblical authorities for the taking of human life by capital punishment, that there is more than one portion of the Bible. Perhaps closer attention to the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth rather than to some of the more blood thirsty prophets of the Old Testament might produce religious arguments more in keeping with the spirit of today.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will carry and that the resolution as amended will carry. I say that all those who feel that capital punishment is a blot on our present civilization, and all those who fear its abolition, will have at least part of their point of view represented for five years, to see which has the right of it in this serious moral question of taking human life.

May I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Before ten o'clock is called, may I ask that we continue the sitting to debate this issue? I suggest that we sit for another hour and a half and I also suggest that there be an understanding that there will be no vote taken tonight. We would provide for hon. members to make speeches for another hour and a half if that is agreeable.

Mr. Starr: First, of all, may I say this is agreeable to us. I should like to ask for clarification of one point. We now have an amendment before us, and there is the likelihood another amendment will be introduced. Will all these amendments be voted upon at 5.45 tomorrow, or is there a possibility of voting prior to that time?

Mr. McIlraith: The order of the house is so drafted that there is a possibility of a vote on any amendment being taken at any time during the debate. The order provides that tomorrow at 5.45 the proceedings shall be interrupted and any amendments then before the house must be voted upon at that point. This order is to permit further amendments; but an amendment could be voted upon at any time before that.

My suggestion is that we agree that there will be no vote taken tonight in view of the hour, but that hon. members be permitted to speak for another hour and a half.

Mr. Knowles: There is just one problem with regard to sitting late, and I think we can resolve it. I refer to the debate on the adjournment motion. I remind the house leader that we deferred these questions from last Tuesday night, so there is a backlog of them. I wonder if we could agree to having the adjournment debate right now, so we do not keep the ministers and others here too late. Then we could return to this capital punishment debate until 11.30.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. McIlraith: No; since there is a limited time for this debate on the abolition of capital punishment, I should like to feel that all hon. members who wish will have an opportunity to speak. Surely we could make some other arrangement regarding proceedings on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Knowles: What does the minister suggest?

Mr. McIlraith: That we have the questions retain their order of precedence and that we take them tomorrow night on the adjournment motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that this house will sit until 11.30 p.m., on the understanding that there will be no division tonight?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I want it to be clear that included in the order is the understanding that the questions which were to be taken tonight on adjournment will retain their present status and be taken tomorrow night.

Mr. McIlraith: They will retain their present order of precedence and will be taken tomorrow night after ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house agree with the observations made by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), in addition to what I said previously, that we sit until 11.30 p.m. and that no division will take place tonight?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Nanimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was just standing up to say that I have finished my argument, and I would like somebody else to carry on now.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, our attention has been focused on the subject of capital punishment for some months now in view of the promise of this debate. It has been our duty to look into the subject carefully, and probably all of us have done so. We have read statistics and claims regarding both sides of the question, as well as considered views pro and con from any interested sources. I have been wrestling, even writhing, with my thoughts on this question for some time now. Many of my constituents from Spadina have endeavoured to be, and have been, of assistance to me with their letters and articles. Recently I circulated a questionnaire throughout my riding which included the capital punishment question. Many replied to the question, but their answers showed that opinion was divided about 50-50.

Several weeks ago I thought I could resolve my quandary by being in favour of the abolition of capital punishment except for certain types of particularly heinous murders, such as those which result from the exploding of a bomb on an aircraft or the premeditated poisoning of a testator. But the manner in which the resolution is framed leaves me no escape. To vote no would be to turn back the clock to the days when it was essential summarily and crudely to dispose of anti-social human beings; to the day when there was no other practical way to deal with them and with the menace they constituted; to the day of the sadistic guillotine, of garrotting and the gallows. To vote no would be to continue to sanction the crudity and the obsenity of hanging, the human species out of hate, not out of necessity.

The state undoubtedly has the right, a right it no longer exercises, to take an eye for an eye or a limb for a limb. So why should it insist any longer on a life for a life, taken in such revolting and vindictive fashion, as was the case in Canada up until three years ago? To vote no would be to continue the risk, even with the safeguards of our advanced society, of sending an innocent or even an insane person to the gallows. For the law is certainly not an exact science, something for which the lawyer is prepared to vouch. Medicine cannot always detect a man's aberrations in advance of trouble, or afterwards. We just do not know how many brain complications have altered a man's personality or impaired his tolerance for alcohol. As Oscar Wilde well put it:

> No man can tell to what red hell
> His sightless soul may stray.

To vote an absolute no would be to fail our advancing civilization and its increasing respect for the sanctity of human life. But to vote "yes" means asking some very serious questions: Is capital punishment more of a deterrent than life imprisonment, and will its enforcement save innocent lives? It means sparing from the gallows all murderers, traitors and pirates without exception and substituting for the death penalty a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment.

I am not sure whether capital punishment is more of a deterrent, or much of a deterrent at all, or whether it does or does not save innocent lives. This is my uncertain conclusion after examining the statistics available in the material with which we have been suppled. To give an example. In the decade of the 20's, when times were good, and in the 30's when times were bad there were many more capital crimes committed in Canada than in the 40's, 50's and early 60's. In the United States, the states which do not have the death penalty are mostly northern states, and these states have a low murder rate anyway. In 1953 the murder rate in Georgia was 14 times as high as in North Dakota and Minnesota, though the state of Georgia had capital punishment and the latter two states had not. I could pick out illustrations which might tend to show the reverse and prove that capital punishment is more of a deterrent than life imprisonment. But I find nothing that is really convincing. I feel I could maintain equally well the thesis that when the state takes a life by violence it encourages individuals to feelings of a similar kind.

• (10:10 p.m.)

For these reasons, subject to the questions of proper punishment and prevention, I can only conclude that the abolition of capital punishment in this country for the entire future makes sense, and somewhat to my own surprise I find my investigations have led me to support the whole principle and not just a part of it. This is why I did not vote for the amendment which was put earlier this day. The sanctity of human life must, it seems to me, be the deciding factor, and having taken this view it is indivisible. I recall the famous words of Sir Marshall Hall, the great English barrister, who shook many a jury with these words in capital cases:

> How can you teach your children mercy and reverence for life when by your actions, your verdicts and your speech you contradict the very things you teach?

Unlike one hon. member who spoke earlier in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I feel with Marshall Hall that there is an element of inconsistency and contrariness in the state's taking life in the hope of deterring the taking of like. I have considered advocating the dispatching of certain traitors and murderers by more humane methods, but consideration of the principle involved prevents me from picking and choosing. Despite animal-like behaviour I am not prepared to admit that man is an animal, even when he is dangling at the end of a rope, or burning in a chair, or being boiled in oil as used to be the case in the old days.

We cannot hope to instil reverence for life in those who kill when they are insane; but they are not executed. We can hope to make progress with the ignorant and the underprivileged, and in Canada we have already done so and can continue to do so. Our capital crime rate is about one third of that in the United States. Some southern states have ten times as much trouble as we do in this respect.

In the United States in 1935 there were 199 persons executed. By 1964, due to the abolition of capital punishment, and commutations, only 15 persons were executed in the whole of the United States. This shows that our neighbouring society is either recognizing the preciousness of human life or the utter futility of exacting a life for a life.

There were many who were not unhappy with the distinction between capital and non-capital murder as defined by the last Conservative regime. Many thought that the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), as the then minister of justice, had affected some admirable amendments to the Criminal Code, but now it is plain that they have been scuppered by the age old prerogative of commutation, an executive act.

This was a likelihood that no one foresaw or admitted as likely at the time. The power of commutation was originally intended to be exercised only in cases of grave political import, cases peculiarly involving the interest and security of the state. Gradually this power became the "rule of no law" in the hands of the cabinet, and particularly so after capital murder was defined. This power to pick and choose a victim with an uneven hand was soon so obviously unfair and reprehensible that this government has been led to the position where all death sentences to date have been commuted.

I say to hon. members that I am not blaming either the former government or this government for this evolutionary and conditioning development, but I would like to make it clear that after sparing 20 or more murderers by commutation over the last three years, to be absolutely fair, just and consistent this country is almost committed to abolish capital punishment for all crimes for all time.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that sure detection, swift apprehension and proper punishment are the real deterrents to crime. In my own mind there only remain the questions of proper punishment and proper prevention. These are all that remain to be considered in respect to this resolution. In this connection I strongly feel that a mandatory life sentence for offences, that by definition in our Criminal Code presently bear the death sentence, is a proper punishment if it is carried out or is substantially carried out.

Our practice in Canada has been to consider a life sentence as a sentence of 21 years only and that lifers be released after serving about 12 years, or even the minimum requirement of 10 years for good behaviour. This practice is so common that a 25 year sentence is more feared than a life sentence by a hardened criminal. Mr. Speaker, the Parole Act, Revised Statutes of Canada 1958, chapter 38, provided that certain regulations could be passed in respect of time of parole. Regulations were passed on two occasions subsequent to the passage of the act. The most recent regulations were brought into effect by order in council, 1827 on December 3, 1964. By these amended regulations, section 2 of the Parole Regulations, as it then existed, was revoked and the following substituted therefor—and I will read only part of it:

> (3) A person who is serving a sentence of imprisonment to which a sentence of death has been commuted, shall serve the entire term of the sentence of imprisonment unless, upon the recommendation of the board, the governor in council otherwise directs.
>
> (4) The board shall not recommend a parole, in a case coming within subsection (3), until at least ten years of the term of the imprisonment have been served.

So the floor is now ten years. After that a prisoner can apply for parole even though he is sentenced to life. Under these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I maintain the punishment is insufficient; there is not sufficient protection against repetition, and the house should therefore, I submit, amend the Parole Act and its regulations to put in a floor of at least 21 years on paroles in respect of a mandatory life sentence. I would settle for 20.

If a person be convicted of non-capital murder, as we presently understand it, then I would have no objection to part (c) of the resolution, save that these cases probably should not go to the governor in council at all; but if a person be convicted of treason, piracy or capital murder as we presently understand them, then the application of part (c) with its open door feature should be of grave concern to all hon. members. I suggest to all hon. members that there should be a guarantee in the public interest that a person guilty of murder in one of the worst categories that we already have catalogued, and know as capital murder, should not be paroled or pardoned for at least 21 years. I submit this is necessary in order that this resolution may have the confidence of more members of this house and the confidence of the public.

So that there would be no possibility of any tampering with the carrying out of a life imprisonment sentence in what are regarded as capital murder cases or the equivalent, I was going to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh), but I was anticipated by another amendment; however, that amendment would have been that the resolution be amended by adding to paragraph (c) of the said resolution the following words:

Provided that no such release shall take place in a case where the death penalty is now mandatory before such person has served at least 21 complete years of such life imprisonment sentence in prison.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be possible for me to move that amendment to the main motion tomorrow.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by pointing out something that this house and the country seems to have completely overlooked. There seems to be a general feeling that the final vote tomorrow night will settle something about the question of capital punishment in Canada. That vote will settle nothing and the outcome will make absolutely no difference in the law of this country concerning capital punishment.

What we are discussing is a motion made by four hon. members suggesting that legislation ought to be introduced. What we are voting on tomorrow night, including any amendment, is a sort of a straw vote in order to ascertain how members feel about the question of capital punishment. It is nothing more than that. We will be voting on a motion proposed by private members which suggests certain things to the government. If that motion passes the government may or may not bring in legislation and it is entirely up to the government to decide how to act after the motion has been debated and voted upon.

After our vote, the government may bring in legislation which is entirely different from the wording or general intent of the motion. Although the government must give some general consideration to the result of the vote, it is not obliged to do anything that is suggested by the motion. If the motion fails, the government may still bring in legislation. Whichever way the vote goes, the government must make its own decision.

Even more difficult is the fact that if the vote is close, and it has been suggested it may well be, the whole question will be as unsettled as it is now. The real decision, if one is to be made, will be made at the second reading stage of any bill which is brought in.

I point out that fact for this reason. If the vote is close, either for abolition or retention of the death penalty, it is merely a straw vote which does not settle anything. If the vote tomorrow night is in favour of abolishing the death penalty it will not mean that a bill abolishing the death penalty would be carried on second reading.

The decisions of this house are made by the majority of those present and voting on a question before the house. If we have a close vote tomorrow, a vote on another occasion in respect of another question might easily produce another result. I merely point out that the vote tomorrow is not going to settle the question of capital punishment, unless there is a substantial majority on one side or the other. If there is a substantial majority, I think the government is safe in assuming that if it brings in a bill in accordance with that expressed substantial opinion of the house, it will carry.

I point this out at the beginning of my remarks because I read in the newspapers and keep hearing members of the house say that we are going to settle the matter on a vote, and thank goodness the vote is coming tomorrow night. But we are not voting on the question of capital punishment tomorrow night at all. We are not going to change the law. We are not voting on legislation. We are just taking a sort of general opinion on how members feel about this question. We will have to start the whole procedure over again and the government will in the end have to take responsibility in regard to legislation, whether the vote does one way or the other. I believe that a vote at this point is desirable and we should have it quickly. I support the intention to have a vote tomorrow night because I believe we should obtain the feeling of members of the house on this question.

I also believe we should not adopt the amendments. I should like to see a straight vote on this question. If members of the house agree to abolish capital punishment, and there is a substantial feeling in this regard, then let that be done. If members of the house are not of this opinion, let us know that also. But the question should be settled in this way and we hope for a majority opinion so there will be a clear indication with regard to a bill to be brought in by the government that would meet the wishes of the house.

I would indicate that I shall vote against the motion in its present form because I do not believe in the absolute and final abolition of the death penalty, and I shall vote against any amendments that are brought in unless they go toward bringing about a clean vote on this subject, so that we know where we stand.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, if it appears to be the majority, and the substantial majority, will of the house that we abolish capital punishment, this will not make me feel badly. I shall go along with the result, but will vote against the motion in any event.

I should like to say just a few words on the main subject. The hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) spoke earlier this evening and expressed my own views very well. For this reason I shall cut down my own remarks. My neighbour in the house, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse), advised me that if he did not have a chance to speak in the debate, he also agreed with the hon. member for Middlesex West.

When the debate was opened by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), he took a backward look to 1810 when the penalty of death could be imposed for theft from a shop. It does seem strange to us now, but it was not considered at all outrageous then in the context of the social conditions under which people lived. As social conditions changed and the concepts of property, legal and moral rights and obligations developed, the offence of burglary became less serious and human life more sacred. I have no doubt that 100 years from now this debate will seem strange to those who may look back on it. It will not seem strange because of the result, but because we had to have the debate at all.

[Mr. Aiken.]

I predict that with the changes and advances in medical, social and legal knowledge, the surprise of these people will be that we had not sufficiently advanced to the point where we could by medical science and sociological approaches do something more realistic toward criminals than we are now able to do. However, Mr. Speaker, we are not living 100 years from now; we are living in 1966, and our duty is first to those among whom we live and their best interests and protection in the world of today. We have a duty to the future. We have a duty to bring about a society where no one will commit murder and no one will have to be punished. In the meantime, however, the unpleasant duties of society must be met, as they always have been, in a direct way. We cannot look at other countries, at other societies, at other times.

• (10:30 p.m.)

So far as I am concerned, I will welcome the day when the penalty of death can be abolished. That day will come when medical science has delved into the human mind, and can straighten out the warped, vicious and antisocial behaviour of those who are a menace to society, whether in or out of custody. That day will come when a sentence of life imprisonment can do something more for the soul, mind and spirit of the convict than to let him rot in the hopelessness of despair or become a human vegetable. That day will come when our concern for human welfare goes beyond that very small segment of our people who have purposely set out to contravene the fundamental law: Thou shalt not kill. That day has not yet come.

Society cannot take a timid approach to the unpleasant things of life. Neither can parliament nor the government. We must constantly search for more humane, more realistic, more enlightened methods of achieving the protection of society from those among us who acknowledge no moral, human or devine laws. Such change is not necessarily an improvement because it is easier, more pleasant or less abrasive on the sensitivities of those who abhor violence. It is only an improvement if it achieves its objective in an easier way. Statistics are quoted on both sides of the question as to whether the possibility of losing his own life deters a person with murder in his heart. Until it is proven otherwise, it is normal to assume that it does. But being in doubt, if I must choose between the protection of society and the protection of the convicted murderer, I choose society.

In 1961 we took the step of holding forfeit with their own lives only those who deliberately planned and carried out the death of another. We divided murder into capital and non-capital. The usefulness of this legislation has never been tested, because in 1963 the present government abrogated the law by commuting all sentences. The 1961 act has never been given a reasonable trial before we are asked to take the next step of complete and final abolition. If the House decides to take this step now, then so be it. But as I stated at the beginning, I am not personally convinced that we in Canada are ready for it, nor willing to accept it; nor am I so convinced myself. I will vote against the motion for abolition.

As I indicated in the beginning, I will vote against the motion. As for any amendments, my feeling is that you cannot abolish the death penalty and still retain it in some cases. If it is morally wrong to take a person's life in punishment, then the crime itself is not relevant at all. This I think is logic, but I cannot go along with this premise. I cannot believe, therefore, there is a half way measure. If we are going to change the law this time, we should either go the whole way or leave it as it is, with the division between capital and non-capital murder.

I should like to see a vote on the main motion without any amendments. I conclude with the obvious remark that many of my constituents, many of my friends, have come to a different conclusion than I. However at this point the responsibility is mine, and I intend to vote against final and absolute abolition of the death penalty.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): I should like to intervene, Mr. Speaker, to explain as briefly as I can to my constituents and to hon. members why I am voting for the motion before the house to abolish the death penalty in respect of all offences under the criminal code. Quite a number of years ago I sat on the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate which was set up to consider and study, amongst other things, the subject of capital punishment. When I was appointed to that committee I must say that I was strongly in favour of the retention of capital punishment. After listening to the evidence presented to the committee, however, I was persuaded beyond a doubt that capital punishment should be abolished.

The evidence presented to that committee was overwhelmingly in favour of the abolition of the death penalty. No significant evidence worth serious consideration was to my mind brought before the committee to support the retention of capital punishment, and I can recall the surprise of many, as the voting took place at the conclusion of the committee's hearings, when I voted for the abolition of capital punishment.

The entire subject of capital punishment was dealt with very fully at that time by the joint committee. The result of its findings was a tie vote which was broken only, as I recall, by the votes of the joint chairmen of the committee in favour of retention of capital punishment.

I am of the opinion that at the present time in my constituency, as far as I can ascertain, the majority of the people are in favour of the retention of capital punishment. But I believe that as their representative in parliament I would not be doing my duty if I voted otherwise than what I intend to do in connection with the resolution now before us. I believe that my constitutents would expect me to take advantage of all that I had the opportunity to learn and study when this subject was thoroughly discussed by the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons some 10 or 11 years ago. With all the information funished me and others who sat on the committee at the time I came to the sure conclusion that, according to the best evidence available to parliament, capital punishment should be abolished, I am sure that the people I represent in this house would expect me to follow my own findings as a result of the studies made available to me and others at the time, and to parliament as a whole.

As I said Mr. Speaker, at that time we heard the best evidence available; and I am satisfied from what I have since read and from any work I have done on the subject that this same evidence is the best available to us at the present time.

The overwhelming opinion of the experts is that the death penalty should be abolished. In addition, capital punishment is gradually being abolished all over the world in one country after another, particularly in the advanced nations, as we regard them, which are forward-looking and which have made a very detailed study of the subject. In many of these countries capital punishment as been abolished for years, as hon. members know.

• (10:40 p.m.)

The scholarly address of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) influenced me very much in this debate. He was most convincing. And the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoken earlier today were, as usual, of great force and effect.

I do not need to review the reasons which have been given to the house in support of the necessity for abolishing capital punishment. I believe these are abundantly clear. At least it is clear to myself, after study and upon careful consideration, that I must support the motion before the house to abolish capital punishment, as set forth in the terms of that proposal. I do not think I need take up any more time tonight on this matter, since the subject has been so fully dealt with by other hon. members.

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): I do not intend to take up the time of the house for very long. However I do wish to make a few comments on the private members notice of motion which is now before the house. This motion in the name of several private members in effect recommends the abolition of capital punishment. I have listened with interest to all those I have heard speak, and I have read in Hansard the speeches of those who have spoken while I was absent from the chamber. The calibre of debate has been high and many excellent speeches have been made both for the abolition and for the retention of capital punishment.

I had intended to go into detail to give the reasons I am voting against the motion before the house, but similar reasons have been advanced by other speakers so I do not think there is need to repeat them. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) who has just resumed his seat said that though he had been against it in the past he was now supporting the motion. Yet he did not advance any substantial evidence to explain why he had changed his mind.

When the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) addressed the house a few minutes ago, he too, spoke in favour of this motion. He talked about advancing civilization and sparing from the gallows all those who have been convicted of murder. I do not feel these are arguments to advance in favour of changing the present law.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) gave an excellent address and one with which I agree very much.

He is a member of the legal profession, as is the hon. member for Spadina, yet these two hon. members have different ideas on this subject. I certainly support wholeheartedly the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka; I think they were very well documented. I am not a lawyer; I am only a layman and perhaps I do not understand the niceties of this particular problem. However I have spent a lot of time studying this question and I have given a lot of thought to it. I have arrived at my own decision with sincerity and to the best ability of my judgment and my conscience.

Like other members of the house, I have received many letters from constituents, some advocating abolition and some retention. Likewise I have received letters from people outside my constituency, and briefs from organizations expressing support for one side or the other and, in so doing, soliciting my support for their side. I am sure all those who have communicated with me and have come out for one side or the other, realize that, whatever decision I arrive at, I shall do so according to my own conscience. I am not maintaining that the decision which I have arrived at is right and that those who hold different views are wrong. I could be wrong; nevertheless I have arrived at this decision with sincerity and according to my own conscience.

I do not want to be told by those who advocate abolition that their stand is progressive, and that those of us who hold different views are barbarians or are uncivilized. They have a right to their own views and I, likewise, am entitled to mine.

I am certain all hon. members have given a great deal of thought to this subject, and that those who favour retention are no less Christian than those who favour abolition. The rule of law is for the protection of society. I am sure all of us are concerned with finding the best method for the protection of society. We as individuals have arrived at different viewpoints on how society can best be protected. I, as an individual, am saying I am personally of the opinion that the present law, as it is defined into non-capital and capital murder, with the penalties as outlined in the Criminal Code, is the best way to afford protection to society.

There has been nothing advanced during this debate, or in discussion elsewhere by those who advocate abolition, which would lead me to believe that they have hit on a better plan for the protection of society. Again, I may be wrong and others may be right, or vice-versa. The argument which has been put forth that capital punishment is a deterrent, or that it is not a deterrent, is difficult to prove.

During this debate good cases have been advanced for both sides, giving statistics and information to support both sides. However, there are so many factors which have to be taken into consideration, such as location, environment and circumstances, that they make it impossible to achieve any true comparison, and therefore practically impossible to prove either side. I cannot help but believe that many a would-be murderer did not murder just because we have capital punishment. I know, however, that this is hypothetical and no proof can be advanced.

I do not intend to go into the various types of murders, but it does seem to me from reports during the past several months that crime is on the increase. Syndicate or contract murders are on the increase in Canada, and this is one reason that I would say it is not desirable at this time to make a change, and that the law should remain as it is. The law is not perfect. It is always susceptible to improvement. I have great faith in our laws and in our form of justice. No doubt errors have been made in the past, and no doubt errors will be committed in the future, no matter how the law is changed.

When speaking on this matter the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) outlined in detail the amendments made to the Criminal Code in 1961 when he was minister of justice. These amendments divided killings into two types, non-capital and capital, and also brought about several other changes. Since those amendments were introduced very few of those who have been convicted of murder have been hanged. When the amendments were introduced they removed the risk of an innocent man being executed. This was one of the most bothersome features of the previous law.

• (10:50 p.m.)

I am sure none of us would like to see a life taken, whether it be that of a murder victim or of a murderer. It seems to me that many overlook the terrible tragedy that a family, which has lost someone who has been murdered, must suffer. The argument always is that you cannot bring a life back. No, you cannot bring a life back, but one must endeavour to have the best means to prevent a murder taking place and also endeavour to protect society. There are those who say that humans are not capable of making certain decisions or certain judgments, that the human race is not infallible, and that we are dealing with human frailties. That may be true, but nevertheless we are going to have to depend upon human decisions and judgment in most instances for a long time to come. The time may come when humans will treat one another in such a manner and with such respect that society may not require the same protection as it needs at present.

I believe the law as it is now is in the best interests of Canadians generally, and provides the needed protection for society. When the vote is taken I will vote against the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-L. Rochon (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the debate which is going on now will certainly prove to be one of the most interesting of this session, one of the most facinating also, because it will have enabled hon. members of the house to express their views on one of the most controversial subjects of our times: the abolition or the retention of the death penalty.

It has long been discussed by workers, industrialists or university people, on radio, television, in the newspapers. In several countries, authorized voices have been heard, some favouring the retention and others the abolition of the death penalty.

Canada did not escape that pressure of public opinion. And last year, in view of everything that had been said and heard, the Department of Justice felt it was its duty to publish a White Paper and present that serious problem objectively, so that we might study it under all its angles and get a good idea of its social scope.

Since then, a number of booklets have reached us and our constituents, in our respective ridings, have told us what they thought. That is the reason why such a bill is now under consideration. That is the reason for the free vote which each of us will be called upon to cast according to his own conscience at the end of this debate.

Here is why I accepted to take part in this debate at this late hour, Mr. Speaker. After thinking seriously about it, I have reached a definite and well-documented opinion on that matter, an opinion which I feel is so much better that I would consider that my intervention is not only useful but of benefit to society if I succeed, not in convincing those who are still undecided, I will not go that far, but in making them think.

I said, a while ago, that Canada had felt the tides of public opinion, either for or against abolition of capital punishment. For over 25 years now, one government after another as well as the present government, for lack of precise instructions from parliament has felt that the better thing to do was to commute all death penalties, even though they were passed by courts of law.

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, and our government is well aware of it, to regularize the situation, to put an end to that uncertainty; the time has come to realize that the exercise of discretionary powers in such a serious matter gives rise to qualms of conscience and that we, the members of parliament, can no longer shirk our responsibilities.

Must we be for or against capital punishment? It is a matter for our consciences, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, and you will appreciate that before we vote, we had to get information, we had to listen, we had to think of the safety of the population in face of the rising wave of crime and murder, we had to remember that our authority comes from God and that God Himself said in the Genesis: "Who so sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed".

Therefore, you will realize, Mr. Speaker, that after all those numerous reasons heard, listened to and thought over, my conscience indicated that my strict duty is to say here tonight, in this house, that I must vote for the retention of the death penalty.

• (11:00 p.m.)

There are two sorts of arguments in favour of the retention of capital punishment. First, so to speak, there is the doctrinal or philosophical point of view, which may be summarized as follows: "Human life is so sacred that every means must be used to protect it. He who takes away life deserves death." There is also the argument of deterrence: "If, in taking away life, a man knows he is risking his own, he will not kill."

On the other hand, there are also two sorts of arguments put forward by the enemies of capital punishment. The first is also based on the sacred character of human life: "If life is sacred, we have no right to take it away from anyone." The second concerns the deterrent aspect of capital punishment. It may be summarized as follows: Apart from any moral consideration, we might be in favour of the death penalty if only there was evidence that it reduces the number of murders. Such is not the case. Statistics prove nothing, either in favour or against. Therefore, capital punishment must be abolished.

I shall not attempt to develop the first argument based on the sacred nature of human life. I readily realize that from the same premises can be drawn diametrically opposed conclusions and that such an abstruse reasoning will convince nobody. The second argument, as well as the second objection, are more valid and deserve more consideration. However, before dealing with capital punishment as a repressive measure, I should like to attempt to answer an argument often put forward by those who oppose it.

For these people, capital punishment would simply be, basically, some sort of a community revenge complex; a modern form of the old lex talionis: an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth. What formerly held for relatively primitive communities, for some eras infinitely remote from ours, no longer holds for our infinitely more progressive and modern society. To this I would reply that what is contemptuously referred to as the lex talionis is no more than a perfectly legitimate attempt to make the punishment fit the crime. To serious crime, serious punishment. But it will be objected that this is an obsolete notion and that in this day, there can be no question of making punishment fit the crime when what we need, on the contrary, is to make the punishment fit the criminal.

Modern penal science no longer seeks to suppress or punish, but to rehabilitate, and capital punishment, because it is past recall—by its very definition, if I may say—has obviously no corrective value.

While this argument makes some sense, it should not, I feel, be developed to its utter limit, because it is ridiculous to claim that in deciding upon penalties, the seriousness of the crime should never be taken into account and that the criminal should be the only consideration.

Besides, those who are not forcibly against severity, the most inclined to leniency towards criminals, are not always logical with themselves. They want to protect society; yet, in their concept of individual protection, they want us to believe that criminals are rather victims of this society, instead guilty people; they forget that murder or homicide are direct infringements on the freedom of individuals, and hence are crimes against society.

In my opinion, society is the association of all individuals making up the society; and when I say that it must be protected, I think, for instance, of my right to stroll quietly about the streets without being attacked. And this is the right of millions of law-abiding Canadians who have the right to insist for the protection of public powers.

Someone will say that I go a little too far, that my freedom is not threatened that much, neither my life, and what proves that they would be better protected by the retention of the death penalty?

That the freedom of individuals to attend quietly to their business, without fear of evil-doers, is nowadays more threatened than it was before the Second World War, is a truth unanimously admitted and confirmed by statistics. The present debate deals with the death penalty; otherwise, I could dwell at great length on the continual increase of the number of crimes with violence, which often end in murder. I am convinced that this state of things is due to lack of vigorous reactions of society in the face of this threat. But instead of imputing this phenomenon, as it should, to the fact that public opinion does not support energetically enough the police forces or the courts in their fight against criminals, some people prefer to blame our penal system.

It is not to a member in whose riding is located one of the largest penitentiaries of the country, that of St. Vincent de Paul, that you have to prove that our present system is not perfect. But there is one consideration that is never kept in mind. The more we pity the criminal, the more we criticize the courts for being too severe, the more we condemn our prison system in general, the more the number of crime increases. Why not try an experiment for once? Why not stop our criticism? From now on, why do we not encourage our courts to be more severe, instead of feeling sorry, as we do, for the criminals. How do we know that the figures on crime would not diminish?

It is said that statistics on the number of murderers, as compared with that on the number of executions, does not prove any deterrent value at all of the death penalty. It is concluded therefrom that fear of the gallows never caused any murderer to hesitate. But there seems to be one thing forgotten, that is in our times, in this country—and the present debate is evidence of this—the death penalty is rejected by a good part of public opinion. Those who stand against it, surely in good faith, are often influenced in their great devotion for what they believe is a good cause. In the end, they have created so much confusion in the minds of the people that every time the question of an execution comes up, thousands of citizens immediately have pity on that poor criminal. There is so much criticism against capital punishment that people are trying to find all sorts of excuses for the offender. In this way, an atmosphere which is almost favourable to murder is created. Young people who grow up in a society where they are sure to find defenders everywhere, whatever they do, in the end have a complete disregard for the law. Laws do not so much prevent crime as the moral climate of society. We can retain capital punishment but as long as there are people who disparage it, who cry injustice and inhumanity every time there is talk of its application, there will be less and less hesitation before killing. But if it were certain that society as a whole abhors murder, do you really think one would so easily risk being an accessory? Those who know criminals will tell you that a great many of them have a great capacity for self-pity and for finding all sorts of excuses for themselves.

As long as people here and elsewhere find them more deserving of mercy than strictness, as long as people, every time a criminal is executed, rise and say along with I forget which movie director: "We are all murderers", murderers will find themselves interesting. What is more, they will feel all the more innocent if they find here and there people ready to weep on their sad plight.

I do not want to be cynical or merciless toward the unfortunate people who must be removed for the benefit of society, but I want us to consider not only the murderers but the victims also. If the death penalty could prevent only one murder, it should be maintained.

I am convinced that if the critics of capital punishment were silenced and if, for once, we were to think of the fate of the victims instead of that of the murderers, we would go a long way toward cleaning up the moral atmosphere of our community.

Today, parliament has the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to show clearly the revulsion murder should create. In maintaining capital punishment, we will demonstrate that we have no intention of allowing human life to be scorned.

In view of the lateness of the hour, may I be allowed to close these few remarks I wanted to make in my own name, because my conscience had shown me where my duty lies. My constituents of Laval told me: "Look at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, at Bordeaux jail, at the women's jail, all institutions within Laval constituency, and you shall know where your duty lies".

My duty I said it a minute ago, is to favour the maintenance of capital punishment, for the good of the community.

• (11:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take up too much time at this late hour on the fourth day on the debate on capital punishment, but I do want to say a few words to substantiate my reasons for voting the way I intend to vote tomorrow evening.

We have listened now to over 50 speeches both for the abolition and for the retention of capital punishment. I have listened to all speeches with a great deal of interest and believe that, whether one favours abolition or retention, the members who have spoken have put forward good arguments on both sides.

I will not go into detail, quote figures and extracts from the Bible, because I believe that regardless of the way you look at quotations from the Bible interpretations can be made both for and against capital punishment. So far as figures are concerned, many people have done a lot of research into the subject and I am sure it would only be repetitious if I were to put them on the record again.

On March 24, the second day of the debate, there were many outstanding speeches. Since I have had the pleasure of sitting in this house I do not think I have listened with more interest to honest speeches coming from the hearts of people with strong feelings on the issue of capital punishment.

I am sure that all members of parliament over the past two years have had much material sent them both in support of the retention and of the abolition of capital punishment. I have in my hand at the present time a publication regarding the death penalty in America. I have here two volumes from the Canadian Society for the Abolition of the Death Penalty. I have also another handbook entitled "Alternatives to Capital Punishment". I have statistics regarding murder from the years 1961 to 1964, and I could go on to name many more volumes and petitions which have been sent to my office.

I recall a meeting held one year ago in room 200, when I believe we had a member from the British houses of parliament present who had taken a great deal of interest in the debate on the abolition of the death penalty in Great Britain. At the meeting I was a little disappointed, due to the fact that I felt that only one side of the story was told at that time. Contrary to what transpired at that meeting, I think the speeches which have been made in the last two weeks in this house have definitely put forward both sides of the story.

I am not going to take issue with anyone who has different opinions from me, because they hold firm convictions in the attitude they are taking. But one thing which has perturbed me a little in my thinking, and to which I have not found the answer, is that for some reason or another most lawyers seem to take the attitude that the death penalty should be abolished. I am not a lawyer and am unfamiliar with court room techniques; but from the layman's point of view I do not understand why a good many lawyers tend to follow this line of thought.

I have felt for a long time that some revision may be required in the procedures of our courts of justice. If a man is in trouble and can afford to hire the best lawyers in the land, it is his privilege to do so. When a man who is being prosecuted does not have this financial ability, the state will find a lawyer for him. This is one area in which our courts may not be doing complete justice to an accused person. It is possible we do not get the same type of lawyer to defend as we do to prosecute. The government can engage a topnotch lawyer with all the necessary money available for research and for his fee. On the other hand the state appointed lawyer may have to settle for $400 or $500 for research and for his fee, compared with many thousands of dollars paid to his counterpart. This is one area we might examine. Possibly my hon. friends who are lawyers and who are more familiar with this situation could do something to bring about a change.

• (11:20 p.m.)

I wish to refer briefly to some impressions I have gained while listening to this debate. The general preoccupation seems to have been with the poor man who has committed murder—whether his life should be taken in reprisal for what he has done. I do not look at it that way. I do not think I am a hardhearted man, but I believe in justice. If a man has committed a crime and a jury has decided that he should be hanged, it does not bother my conscience; I have no qualms about justice being carried out in this way. One class of people we have not heard about are the innocent victims, the people who have been murdered, though I think this is one point about which the general public is very much concerned. These are the people we are responsible for looking after, as men and women who have been elected to govern and look after society in Canada.

When I was young, I recall, we used to hear about the gangsters of Chicago, New York and places like that. At that time Canada was relatively free from syndicated crime. I can recall Al Capone, when I was young. I could go to the fair, and the motor cars these fellows used were on show. They were the gangsters who were against American society. Today we have the same thing creeping into Canada. We have heard about those murderers in Montreal just as late as this winter. We have heard about the Santa Claus murderer, and crimes like that. As members of parliament we have an obligation to society.

Like all other hon. members I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate. I have read with great interest most of the material that has come to my office. I have received many petitions, both for and against the abolition of capital punishment, from various groups in my constituency. I have received many letters from my constituents, and over the past week end more people have come up to me and spoken of their feelings and what they thought my stand should be on this subject.

This is one of the major decisions I have had to make since coming to this house three years ago, but my conscience dictates that I support the retention of capital punishment and that is how I intend to vote when the issue comes to a vote tomorrow evening.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in support of the motion to abolish capital punishment, but I shall speak only briefly and shall refer to only a few of the arguments. I am supporting this resolution because I believe it is wrong to kill, wrong to take human life, whether the killing is done by an individual or by society. This belief is based on the rational recognition of the sacredness of human life and on the commandment of the Judaeo-Christian tradition which says, "Thou shalt not kill." According to my interpretation this commandment is very clear, and if there is to be any exception to it, those who wish to raise the exception must prove it.

So far as I can see, Mr. Speaker, there is only one exception to that rule, namely self-defence; but even with self-defence I do not believe an individual can deliberately kill his attacker. His intention must be to deter his attacker and not to kill him. He may only kill his attacker if there is no other possible way to defend himself. In other words, killing in self-defence must take place as a last resort.

This is not the case where the state executes a condemned murderer. The execution is not a justified killing in self-defence because, (1) there are other more direct and effective ways of preventing murder, and (2) there is no proof that capital punishment is a more effective deterrent to murder than life imprisonment.

Other hon. members have discussed in detail the effectiveness of capital punishment as a deterrent, and they have shown that according to statistics countries without capital punishment have no more murder than states which retain capital punishment. Many hon. members have referred to these statistics but in their own judgment have chosen to ignore them. I do not want to go into all the statistics, but they clearly show the rate of murder has not gone up in abolitionist states.

If capital punishment is to be an exception to the rule "Thou shalt not kill", then I submit it is up to the proposers of this exception to prove it is the only method to prevent murders. It is no proof to say that it has been done for years, that we have had capital punishment and therefore it should be retained. Many things were done for years. Men were sold as slaves for years until slavery was abolished. Kings ruled as despots for years until ordinary citizens changed the situation.

We are here dealing with a very strict rule regarding the sacredness of human life. I think we should consider that very seriously. Some hon. members are saying that capital punishment may not be a deterrent for all potential murderers, but that it is certainly a deterrent for some potential murderers. They would say that if it is a deterrent for some, then it must be retained even if it would deter one potential murderer. This is a very serious argument, but it fails to consider that the abolition of capital punishment also has a positive effect. It is my belief that when the state abolishes the death penalty, it creates an atmosphere of greater respect for human life and that this respect has a diffusive and educational effect on society. As a result, when you ask the question, how many innocent victims could have been saved if capital punishment still existed, you also would have to ask the question, how many would have hesitated from violence due to the influence of a state order which will in no circumstance directly take human life. Of course we can give no specific answers to these questions; we can look only at averages, and the averages seem to indicate that in those countries where the death penalty has been abolished the rate of murder does not increase and is often lower.

Mr. Speaker, I have said that capital punishment is not justified as self-defence, because there are other more direct means of preventing murder. There are some people, and some hon. members, who have said that if we abolish the death penalty, we will be left unprotected, that there will be no safeguard for society; but I maintain that there is little real relationship between the existence or non-existence of capital punishment and the rate of murder. Nobody has indicated the real cause or effect between the incidence of capital punishment and the diminution or increase in murder.

There are real causes of murder; it is these causes which have to be dealt with, if we are to have protection and safeguards. Sociologists and criminologists will point out that the causes of crime and murder are inadequate housing, inadequate slum clearance, inadequate recreation, and inadequacies in education, moral guidance, economic and social stability, police protection, crime detection, weapons and arms control, as well as inadequate prison and parole reform. These are some of the causes. It is these causes which must be attacked if we are to protect society and create safeguards.

To discuss the protection of society against crime solely in terms of capital punishment is to becloud the real issue. Several hon. members, including the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) have referred to referendums or surveys in their ridings; they have indicated that this should be some criteria for our decision here. However, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest, when we are sent here as members of parliament, we have to make our decision not on referendums in our ridings, not on the total yes's or no's, but rather on the weight of the arguments given on either side of the question. When we are elected they count up the votes, but once we are here we study the weight of the arguments.

Many hon. members have indicated that those of us who speak for abolition are more concerned for the murderer than for the victim. This is not true. I think we all care very much for the victim, and that is why I think we should act toward the elimination of the real causes which would do more to eliminate crime.

I support abolition and am ready to vote for it tomorrow. I have not heard any arguments which would convince me that we should retain capital punishment. I suggest the burden of proof is on the retentionists, because they are proposing the exception to the rule: Thou shalt not kill.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

It being thirty-two minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 5, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on transport and communications, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

• (2:40 p.m.)

TRADE

MAINLAND CHINA—INCREASED WHEAT SALES AND QUOTA LIST ON EXPORTS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of the house to table a press statement being issued today by the Canadian Wheat Board announcing the increased quantities involved in the new long term wheat agreement between the board and the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Hon. members will recall that both parties concluded an agreement last fall covering the sale and purchase of from 112.0 to 186.7 million bushels between August 1, 1966 and July 31, 1969. It has now been agreed that the quantities involved will be increased to a minimum of 168 million bushels and a maximum of 280 million bushels over the three year period. At maximum levels the total value of wheat shipments under this agreement will be approximately $550 million.

The board also announced the first sales contract under the revised agreement. The contract calls for the shipment of 59.7 million bushels of wheat during the first five months of the new crop year.

The new long term agreement provides for credit terms of 25 per cent cash and 75 per cent in 18 months, which are identical to those in the previous agreement. A revolving credit level of over $200 million was required to facilitate this agreement and the government will provide the credit guarantee which makes this business possible.

I should also like to advise the house that agreement has now been reached as to the quantities of sensitive goods which the Chinese export organizations may export to Canada for the year beginning August 1. It will be recalled that when the new long term agreement on wheat was signed last October it was agreed that the annual dollar value ceiling on exports of such products should be fixed at $10 million per year. The individual product quotas were to be settled later. This has now been done.

With the consent of the house I would like to table this new quota list, and may I suggest that for the convenience of hon. members it be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, we have been expecting this announcement since last fall, when the Chinese delegation visited Canada and negotiations were started in relation to the additional approximately 30 million bushels per year. At that time some of us hoped that the agreement would be extended for a five year period, but be that as it may, I am very grateful, speaking for western Canadians and I hope all Canadians, that we have been able to supply the extra 30 million bushels to meet the Chinese needs.

I hope, too, that the government will consider very seriously not only the final establishment of the list of sensitive goods the Chinese can export to Canada, but the pledge the previous minister offered to the Chinese in relation to the setting up of a non-official trade office here in Canada. The Chinese have these offices now in more than a score of countries, and I am sure they would take it very kindly indeed if we gave them the opportunity of putting one or two of their people here so our importers could contact them in Canada to arrange for the import of goods through direct representatives of the Chinese.

I would personally go one step further and suggest that we should ask the Chinese to establish stores in Canada where their handicraft goods could be displayed for all those who wish to see them. I believe we have some responsibility to the Chinese to do something positive to help them find markets for their goods, not only in this country but all over the world.

This market has turned out to be not only large and growing, but is now considered permanent. The Chinese not only want more grain, but I think are quite willing to try to find markets for their goods all over the world in order to pay for it. This breakthrough into the Chinese market has significance far beyond the mere dollars and cents value of the foreign exchange it earns for Canada. It gives us a chance to make contact with them and discuss matters other than the mere trading that goes on between our two countries.

I hope that some day our neighbour to the south will see fit to amend its Alien Trading Act and its Foreign Assets Control Act and allow the American people to trade with this, the largest country in the world. It is not a new concept wherein you trade with a nation which you do not recognize. I think the peace of the world would be improved if these steps were taken.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the announcement that was made a few minutes ago by the Minister of Finance will be welcomed by the people of this country, particularly our wheat producers. It seems at first glance that the magnitude of the additional sale is very great, but I venture to say that the additional sale does not really amount to that much. It would seem to amount to the order of 56 million to 94 million bushels over and above that which was earlier anticipated. If one carries this over the period of three years it does not mean as much in extra sales to the Chinese mainland as we should like to see.

It has already been suggested by the previous speaker that Canada should take additional steps to foster increased trade with China, even to the extent of setting up an unofficial agency in order to trade with that country. It seems to me the government of Canada should look seriously at the prospect and desirability of recognizing the government of mainland China, because among other things it would provide for more official machinery for expanding and fostering trade between the two countries. I would hope that in the light of continuing large scale sales to China the Department of Trade and Commerce and the government will put increased pressure on the Department of External Affairs with a view to having Canada rethink its policy vis-à-vis China.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) indicated clearly that we will increase our wheat exports to the China National Import and Export Corporation and that on the other hand we plan to increase our imports of textiles and textile products.

Now, the minister advises us that, in order to enable the Chineses to increase their wheat purchases in Canada, terms for credit stipulated in the new long-term agreement are 25 per cent cash and 75 per cent in 18 months; these terms are identical to those of former sales. Credit by renewable acceptance of over $200 million was required to facilitate the sale and the government will offer the credit guarantee required to make the deal valid. This means that the Canadian government, that is the Canadian people, will guarantee the credit necessary to enable the Chinese people to purchase more wheat.

We do not object to exporting more wheat, but wheat is not the only thing we can export to China. We may soon see, because of our textiles imports, our own textile mills closed down in the Drummondville and Eastern Townships regions.

It seems to me the government should see to it that we export not only wheat but all other products we have in large quantities and it should enable Canadian industry and domestic commerce to avail itself of credits similar to that now being granted the Chinese people, so that they might sell their products and to bolster their production and distribution.

Once again, we do not object to transactions with China or anyone else, but we must do it for the benefit and advantage of the Canadian people, and not solely to increase the textiles imports coming from China.

Let us first think about Canada, and start at home in the greater interest of the Canadian people.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Along with other members who have spoken briefly on this announcement, Mr. Speaker, we welcome what appears to be a continuing and expanding market for Canadian wheat. One of the limiting factors in the sale of wheat during the past season has been the ability of the railroads to deliver this wheat to export positions. We certainly hope the minister and the government will use their influence to impress upon the railways that there is a need for expansion of the necessary facilities to get this wheat to our customers within the time specified.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there is no mention of any flour in this expanded sales announcement. Of course you cannot sell people flour if they want to buy wheat. However, we hope if there is any possibility that some portion of this wheat can be exported in the form of flour, every effort will be made by the Canadian Wheat Board and by the government to impress upon our customers that we do have a very large milling industry within Canada.

Generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, the performance of the railways during the past few weeks in delivering wheat to the west coast in particular has been far more satisfactory than it was during the early part of the shipping season, from about August until about December. We acknowledge that there has been an increased effort to allocate facilities and equipment to the delivery of this wheat. I want to say again, as has been said so many times in this chamber, that we do not regard the movement of wheat as secondary in so far as the over-all operations of the railway are concerned. This appears to have been the attitude of the railways during the last months of 1965.

So, as I said, we welcome this announcement. We hope there will be an expansion in our transportation facilities so we can meet all the commitments that are made, as well as being in a position to accept additional sales later this season.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATION FOR THREE YEARS

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-23 (from the Senate), to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—ATTEMPTED DELIVERY OF OIL BY GREEK TANKER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I ask him whether he has any further word in connection with the Greek tanker which apparently was intercepted by a British warship because it was believed that its oil was destined for Rhodesia? What is the present position in this regard? Does the Canadian government approve of the action taken in stopping this ship; what is the position as to the ownership of the ship; has there been a change in registration, and are any commonwealth countries represented in the ownership of the ship in question?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question.

The present situation concerning this tanker appears to be that the ship is about to dock or has docked at Beira in the Portuguese territory of Mozambique. The Canadian government has been advised that the master of the ship stated, to the captain of the British naval ship who questioned him, that he was not intending to discharge oil at Beira but simply intended to make use of port facilities there, and that the oil cargo was intended for French Somaliland.

I certainly hope this proves to be correct. I have been in communication with the ambassador of Greece in Ottawa, and my understanding is that the government of Greece has ordered all ships of Greek registry not to carry oil to Rhodesia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether there is any foundation for the suggestion that this ship, while at sea, changed its registry to that of Panama; and if that suggestion be well founded what representations, if any, have been made to the latter country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There has been a suggestion that there was a change of flag, thereby seeking to indicate a change of registry. However, there is some confusion on this point, and as there is an international law implication I prefer not to give any judgment as to the legal consequences. I may say that this whole situation is bound to excite interest at the United Nations, and this in turn could encourage moves to give the United Nations a wider authority than it now possesses under the security council resolution of November last, which merely urged member states to take all possible steps to give effect to the sanctions program which was being taken against the government of Rhodesia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does that very lucid statement the minister has just made indicate that Canada intends to do its part in making sure that this problem shall be submitted to the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman I am sure would lucidly understand that that is a question that can only be dealt with at the right moment.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): In connection with what has been just said, I should like to ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs can assure the house that the Canadian government will lend all necessary support, diplomatic and otherwise, to any action thought necessary by the British government, even including the use of force, to prevent the economic sanctions approved by the United Nations from being made ineffective by the delivery of shipments of gasoline to Rhodesia.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am not so sure that I am prepared to agree without qualification to the suggestion made about the use of force, because there are important consequences stemming from that which one would want to bear in mind. I can say, however, that the Canadian government has taken every step pursuant to the security council resolution of last November to support the position of the British government, and to register its strong opposition to the illegal regime in Rhodesia.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If Canada undertook to assist in the use of force against Rhodesia might that not entail the loss of life unnecessarily?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I did not of course say that we would undertake to use force. My hon. friend will recall that in February last, in discussion in this house, I made that very clear. If force is used to the limit the consequences involved in my hon. friend's question are obvious.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest we go to another subject. We have had the original question and five or six supplementary questions.

ZAMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION OF AIR LIFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell the house whether the oil lift for Zambia that Canada has been taking part in has terminated, and if so was the reason for that termination the fact that other oil supplies were adequate for Zambia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the oil lift to Zambia has not terminated. Canadian participation continues until the end of the month, when the matter is to be reviewed. I might say that the oil lift has been a very effective project.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 the Prime Minister announced that he intended to set up a royal commission to review the security procedures which have obtained in this country in recent years. I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to announce the personnel and the terms of reference of such a commission and, if not, how soon does he expect to be able to do so?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to announce the personnel nor the terms of reference of the proposed commission now. I was giving consideration last evening to the terms of reference, and I hope very shortly after the resumption of parliament after the Easter recess to announce to parliament the commission's terms of reference, and the personnel.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention in the terms of reference to empower the commission to look into any of the grievances with respect to security cases that have been handled in recent years.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can say in a general way that it would be our intention to have in the terms of reference authority for the commission to look into security procedures, both in regard to their adequacy for the protection of national security and their relation to the rights and freedoms of the individual. I should think any commission looking into this aspect of the matter would wish to look into cases in the past to see if there is an example of one or other of these things.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a related question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government will table in the house today or at the earliest opportunity prior to the Easter recess the transcript of the press conference held by the Minister of Justice on March 10, which we have been assured will be made available as one of the matters before the royal commission. I think it would be helpful and important if it might be tabled in the house.

Mr. Pearson: I will certainly be very glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker. The transcript of the press conference was, of course, attached to the order in council to be sent on to the commission.

[Translation]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUGGESTED AUDITING OF BOOKS BY AUDITOR GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister.

According to the answer to my question No. 137, it cost over $5 million to the Canadian people to audit the books of crown corporations which are not required to be audited by the Auditor General of Canada.

Does the government intend to correct this situation by entrusting the Auditor General with such auditing?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he put this question on the order paper?

Mr. Caouette: It has been put on the order paper, and that is why I should like to get an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member just said that he had received an answer and that he was not satisfied. He is asking a new question which does not seem so urgent, in my opinion, that it could not easily be placed on the order paper.

[English]

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—REMOVAL OF TAX ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received representations from the automobile industry to now remove the sales tax on production machinery as announced by him in his budget to be effective for April 1, 1967, so the automobile parts industry in Canada may be in a position to better compete with its counterparts in the United States? If so, what is the decision in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I may confirm that I have had such representations. They are under consideration.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): May I address a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. Is it a fact that the minister encouraged these manufacturers to go ahead and buy this machinery?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether the question as asked can be put at this time.

TRANSPORT

YARMOUTH, N.S.—DELAY IN DOCKING OF FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that on Saturday, March 19, the Canadian National ferry Bluenose arrived at the mouth of Yarmouth harbour at 4 p.m. then turned around and went to sea until eight o'clock the next morning, much to the inconvenience of the passengers. Would the minister investigate the reason for this strange behaviour on the part of this government vessel?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MOVEMENT OF SKILLED WORKERS FROM CANADA TO U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his prospective capacity as minister of manpower. I have given him notice of this question.

In view of the telegram sent the minister on March 19 by George Burt, Canadian director of the United Automobile Workers, expressing concern over the loss of skilled tradesmen to the United States and the loss of jobs for skilled tradesmen in the automobile and automobile parts industries in Canada, would the minister inform the house whether he is prepared to launch an immediate investigation into the dimensions of the skilled trades drain out of Canada, particularly in view of the shortage of skilled tradesmen in other areas of the economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a question but rather a speech. I do not think the question can be accepted.

GRAIN

VANCOUVER—CONSTRUCTION OF SASKATCHEWAN WHEAT POOL ELEVATOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Finance in his capacity as minister reporting for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the long struggle that we had to persuade the Saskatchewan wheat pool to build an elevator at Vancouver, would the minister consider getting in touch with officials of this grain organization to see whether they would not reconsider the stopping of work on the five million bushel terminal at Vancouver which I understand has been precipitated by the cancelling of the government contract for the elevator at Prince Rupert.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool was in touch with me several days ago. Subsequently I had a letter from the secretary of that organization, and I agreed to see the president as soon as he could come to Ottawa for discussions. The president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool informed me, at the time of the first telephone call, that they had just received bids for the new terminal at Vancouver and that they were 30 per cent above their expectations. For this reason in particular they were reconsidering whether they should proceed, and I asked the president of the Saskatchewan wheat pool to come to Ottawa and have a talk with us here before making a decision.

Mr. Hamilton: As a supplementary question, would the minister consider discussing with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture some readjustment in the handling rates on the west coast to deal with the very inflated costs there at the present time?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle knows, as do the Minister of Agriculture and myself, that the Board of Grain Commissioners is a semi-autonomous body, and it would be improper for us to make representations of that kind with regard to the rates being charged by elevators.

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF ELEVATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the grain elevators of Trois-Rivières are doomed to close shortly, due to a situation that has lately arisen, unless a drastic and urgent solution is found to solve their problems? Would the minister consider appointing a special committee at once to look into this matter with the interested parties?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It is difficult to determine the urgency of this question. The minister has noted it and I would ask the hon. member to put it on the order paper.

Mr. Mongrain: May I bring it up at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[English]

WEST COAST—INQUIRY AS TO TERMINAL CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Does the minister consider the existing terminal capacity at west coast ports sufficient to service the demand for Canadian grain consigned through those ports.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF TRANSPORT CO-ORDINATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, based on a statement he made earlier today. I would like to ask the minister whether the government is prepared to bring in legislation setting up a transport co-ordinator, so that maximum use can be made of our transport terminal facilities for delivery of the increasing amount of grain during the next crop season.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, so far as the question in respect of legislation is concerned, this is a decision which would be announced in due course. Yesterday I met with the heads of the railway companies to prepare them for the necessity of continuing to use their facilities to the maximum, at least until the end of this calendar year. We have, as I say, reason to believe that the demand will be such during the balance of this calendar year as to put a strain upon all transportation facilities in the country.

May I just add that the performance of the railways in the last few months, already referred to in this house, has been most commendable. We are going to establish new records in this new crop year, especially on the Pacific coast.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—PETITION RESPECTING CHANGE IN PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could he advise the house what information he has had from the government of the United Kingdom respecting the resolution that was passed by the legislative assembly of the province of Quebec asking for changes in the powers and the authority of the legislative council of Quebec? Has he had any communication with the British government? What has been the reason for the delay in the presentation of that matter before the United Kingdom government? Is it still the intention to introduce it in the new British parliament? In other words, what has happened with the perigrinations of that resolution?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had no information recently about this matter. The resolution was transmitted to the United Kingdom government. Perhaps one reason for the delay was the recent election in the United Kingdom, but I shall be glad to get in touch with the U.K. government and ask their intentions in this matter.

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT ON BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

This question arises from a question I put to him in the house on March 24.

Is it the intention of the Prime Minister, before the recess, as an Easter bonus, to announce his new policy to promote bilingualism in the federal civil service?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope to make a statement on this matter tomorrow.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION OF YOUTH PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Would the hon. lady inform the house if she will soon announce plans for a centennial youth parliament; and in consideration of the fact that many members of the house are interested in this worth-while endeavour, will a parliamentary committee be set up to assist in furthering the project?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, the centennial commission is the body which decides upon projects. I have not yet had forwarded to me a satisfactory project for the type of centennial celebration my hon. friend suggests.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—RESOLUTION RESPECTING POSSIBLE DELAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister advised the house that he had received a resolution from the Prince Edward Island legislature. Now that he has had a chance to study it, can he assure the house and the people of P.E.I. that there will not be any readjustment of the timetable for the construction of the causeway?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that the resolution is being given very careful consideration. I received it only yesterday, and I think I can assure him there will be no delay in the completion of the project.

WATER RESOURCES

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING RESPECTING POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether he can tell us when the report on the meetings between himself and officials of the government of Ontario with regard to pollution of the great lakes will be ready? On Monday, March 24 he was kind enough to say the report was being prepared. Can we expect it before the Easter adjournment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. This is not an ordinary report. It is an analysis of what is being done by both governments. I think it should be in after the recess.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): As a supplementary question, can the minister advise the house whether similar discussions are proceeding with the United States government concerning a joint pollution control program?

Mr. Pepin: Discussions at the technical level are conducted regularly. Discussions at the political level are contemplated.

EXPO '67

USE BY EDMONTON OF "KLONDIKE" THEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister, on behalf of the federal government, communicate with the officials of Expo '67 in the interests of preserving our national history undistorted, asking them to ensure that no promotional publicity prepared or being prepared under the direction of Expo will contain any reference to Edmonton's dishonest use of the Klondike resource?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska.

[Mr. McQuaid.]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: This question could not be accepted by the Chair. The hon. member is making allegations.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice to discuss it at ten o'clock. They are not allegations at all. It is just as important as the causeway.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no assurance that the question will be accepted for ten o'clock.

[Translation]

TRADE

QUEBEC—CAR LICENCE PLATES PROMOTING EXPO '67 AND CENTENNIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

We have learned with great pleasure that the Quebec Minister of Transport, Hon. Claire Kirkland-Casgrain, had announced that car plates for 1967 would underline two great events: Expo '67 and the Canadian Centennial. I should like to commend the minister on her initiative—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question?

Mr. Vincent: Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce aware of that decision and does he propose to hold a meeting with the ministers of the other provinces to decide now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be placed on the order paper.

[English]

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the recent request by General de Gaulle that all NATO forces leave France unless they come under French command, and in view of the consideration being given by his department to a new policy, would he seize this unexpected opportunity to examine the policies of the New Democratic party with respect to NATO before coming to a decision?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister of northern affairs, of which I gave him notice. It arises from the just announced discovery of treasure trove worth $700,000 in the ocean near Louisburg, Cape Breton. Was Alex Storm, an employee of the department and one of the three men who made the discovery, working for the department when he carried out research in the archives at Paris, France—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO GASPÉ-MATAPEDIA SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the soft-hearted Minister of Transport, whom I would not wish to see become hard-headed, if we can expect an inquiry into the rail traffic problems on our peninsula in the very near future.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The inquiry is under way at the present time, sir.

HOUSING

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WINTER BUILDING BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister been asked by the Winnipeg House Builders Association to extend the cut-off date for the $500 winter house building bonus in the case of houses under construction in areas which are in danger of being flooded?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I shall have to take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COST OF EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has she received a reply from the C.B.C. in answer to her request for an approximate cost of servicing the areas of Canada which are presently not served by C.B.C. television?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Not that I have seen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Simpson: As a supplementary question, could the hon. lady say when she expects to receive this reply?

Miss LaMarsh: Well, Mr. Speaker, hope springs eternal and I keep hoping the agencies will respond as quickly as members of parliament would like them to do.

[Translation]

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Did he finally succeed in contacting the provincial Minister of Natural Resources in connection with subsidies to gold mines in northwestern Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and he assured me that he would do his utmost to remedy the social aspect of the problem.

Mr. Caouette: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister to have any meeting with the Quebec minister in order to establish clearly what assistance can be given to northwestern Quebec gold mines?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the impression that the Quebec minister would deem such a meeting necessary.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW PAY SCALE FOR AIR FORCE PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask the minister whether there was a meeting today in Ottawa of senior air force officers from Greenwood, Summerside and Halifax to discuss the recent pay increase to pilots only, and if there was a meeting, is there any plan to offset the rumoured resignations of the many other officers of the air force?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The answer to the first question is yes. In respect of the allegation in the second question, this is the first I have heard of it and I expect it is not true.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Is the minister now in a position to answer the question I asked a few minutes ago?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the question was ruled out of order.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister indicate what redress is open to radio navigators in the light of the violation of the principle of equality, as a result of the recently announced pay differential policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is out order. The hon. member is asking what redress is open. He is asking for an expression of opinion.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, may I address a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister say whether any indication has been given to air crew other than pilots that their pay situation will be reviewed in a manner that will prove favourable to their interests?

Mr. Hellyer: Not beyond the cyclical pay review. I think it also has been indicated, as I indicated yesterday in my answer to a question by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), on the question of whether the air crew allowance would subsequently be included as part of the pay for pension purposes, that this matter would be studied and a decision taken at the time the cyclical review is announced.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. What was the purpose of the meeting in Ottawa today with the officers from Summerside, Halifax and Greenwood if it was not to discuss the unrest?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question cannot be asked. The hon. member is asking a question which suggests the answer; it is a leading question.

Mr. Hellyer: The answer he gave himself was incorrect. Perhaps I can set him straight—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence a supplementary question. Would the minister give supplementary consideration or review to the position of navigators, along the same lines that he has in respect of the pilots?

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Hellyer: That question was answered yesterday. I said it would be reviewed along with the cyclical pay review. In answer to my hon. friend opposite I can say—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister make a statement in the house outlining his new policy in respect of the air force, and also outline what steps he is taking to improve morale in the three services?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is necessary, but when the national defence committee meets after the Easter recess I will be pleased to make a statement. I can say to my hon. friend, if he needs the reassurance, that we are making outstanding progress in our reorganization in the armed forces.

WINTER WORKS

EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a representation from Edmonton requesting a two week extension of the winter works deadline date of April 15? If so, what consideration is the minister giving this request?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me right such a request did come in some time ago. I have received a few, but not many from other parts of Canada. The Edmonton request has been referred to the officials for study.

I might say that I would be less than frank, in view of the second question, were I to hold out much encouragement to the hon. member for an extension in the Edmonton area. It will be recalled that situations similar to the one that occurred in Edmonton this year occurred in Quebec and in other parts of Canada in the winter of 1963-64, and in the lower mainland of British Columbia where a 29 day snow storm occurred in the winter of 1964-65.

Last fall the government announced its intention to extend the date to April 15. This was done at the time the program was announced last fall. It is doubtful that there will be any further extension beyond April 15.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NORTH ATLANTIC AIR CORRIDORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister table the report of the survey, commissioned by the government from UNICA Research Limited of Montreal into the matter of narrowing the air corridors across the north Atlantic from 120 nautical miles to 90 nautical miles?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member place his question on the order paper.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think Your Honour must have misunderstood me when I asked my question. I was merely asking the minister whether he would table a report. I have repeatedly heard hon. members ask ministers whether they would table reports.

Mr. Speaker: By the time the question ended the Chair had forgotten the start of the question. It could be allowed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would have to think about that request.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON PROVISION OF MEDICAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised a reply to the question by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in respect of the Indian medicine chest case.

I should like to tell him that the health services in respect of the Indian people have been in effect for many years, and that there is no question about their being impaired by any test case in the courts. What we are doing is endeavouring to provide medical services which can be integrated with those of the neighbours of our Indians.

I give this answer on behalf of my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, within whose responsibility these services to the Indians fall.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the minister of northern affairs. Would it not obviate the necessity of appealing the decision in the medicine chest case if the government, either by administrative act or by the introduction of legislation, undertook to supply these services to the Indian people, on its own or by arrangement with the provincial governments, in which event the case would then be dropped?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now arguing the case rather than asking a question.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBLE FARE INCREASE ON N.B.-P.E.I. FERRY SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the story reported in the afternoon paper in Summerside yesterday to the effect that there is to be an increase in the fare charged by the C.N.R. on the New Brunswick-P.E.I. ferry, could the minister inform the house whether this increase has been considered by the board of transport commissioners, and whether that board will hold hearings regarding the increase?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries in this regard before answering.

[Later:]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): May I direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that there will likely be an increase in the fare now being charged, will this increase go toward the construction of the new causeway?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN AMALGAMATION OF CHEESE FACTORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recent announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce regarding the increased exports of Canadian cheddar cheese, will the minister bring to the attention of Treasury Board the urgent need of assistance in the amalgamation of cheese factories so they can increase their production?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making representations to the minister, and I suggest that is not a proper way in which to frame a question at this time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—CONSIDERATION OF GRANT OF NEW TRIAL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the Truscott case I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he has anything to report regarding consideration to the use of a short-cut if, on an examination of the case by the law officers of the crown, the conclusion is reached that there is a probability, likelihood or possibility that an injustice has been done, by the granting of a new trial, which the government has the power to do in cases of doubt?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be giving my report to the Prime Minister within a very few days. The point raised by the right hon. gentleman will be given consideration when I am preparing that report.

WATER RESOURCES

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINES MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of the conflicting statements made by the minister's parliamentary secretary to the minister of mines and the resources minister of British Columbia regarding possible water exports, will he be conferring with the resources minister of British Columbia in order to prevent any further premature announcements being made outside this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member is making an allegation as part of his question, and for that reason it cannot be accepted.

[Mr. Webb.]

DAYLIGHT SAVING

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT ON NATION-WIDE BASIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. A short time ago I understood him to say that he would consider whether anything could be done toward unifying the implementation of daylight saving time across Canada. In view of what is being done now in the United States in this regard, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has thought about this and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BISSETT, MAN.—ASSISTANCE FOR UNEMPLOYED MINE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in his capacity as the minister of manpower. I should indicate that I have given him notice of my question.

My question relates to the sudden and unilateral decision of San Antonio Gold Mines Limited to close the operation of the gold mine at Bissett, Manitoba. In view of this situation, has the department taken any action either to help the company recruit skilled mine labourers or to establish a special national employment service office in that town in order to assist the people to find employment elsewhere in the country?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. A team of manpower officers under a regional director left Winnipeg this morning for Bissett. They will be located there for a period of time and will try to find employment and carry out consultations in order to direct some workers according to our training programs. They will also consider the situation in order to discover the extent to which we can apply our mobility manpower program. I might say that we are working in co-operation with the Manitoba provincial department of labour in this regard.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT REGARDING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The house resumed, from Monday, April 4, consideration of the motion of Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the Governor in Council.

And on the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the debate in which we have been engaged is one of great importance. The decision we will reach tonight will be an expression of the opinion of this house. If that opinion is for the retention of the present law there will be no change; if it is for modification, further steps will have to be taken by way of amendments to the Criminal Code.

I have listened with interest to the very many informative speeches that have been made. All of them I have read with critical attention. I have been impressed by the careful marshalling of arguments on both sides of the question and by the eloquence of those who have spoken as well as by their earnestness and conviction. The House of Commons has treated a serious subject with great care and appropriate consideration.

We have been discussing the question, as I see it, is the state justified in taking a life? Tonight we will give our decision and on that decision will depend the fate of many people in the future. The subject is not new. It has been debated for generations. It will be debated in the future, for murders are unlikely to cease and the state has a perpetual responsibility.

I am entering upon this discussion merely to record my point of view and to express my regret to those of my constituents who may hold a different opinion. I have refused to reply to questionnaires sent in advance for I hold that debate should precede decision.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: I have not held a fixed position over the years on the subject of capital punishment. I am familiar with the stress and strain of being obliged to participate in that awful decision that consigns a man to the gallows. I have been oppressed by the lingering doubt that perhaps an innocent man was being condemned to death.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Twenty years ago I was a member of a committee that endeavoured to obtain commutation of sentence for a man convicted of murder and sentenced to hang. He had been a comrade of mine in wartime. The other day I reviewed certain notes I had made at that time. I recorded that 15,000 citizens of Winnipeg signed the petition asking for clemency and that 75 lawyers of that city in one way or another had expressed similar views to the minister of justice of that period. We failed in our attempt. When all hope of reprieve had vanished I visited the condemned man in his cell on the day before the execution. We talked together as calmly and as dispassionately as if we had been in a home rather than in a prison. He told me he was innocent, but he made no complaints about anything or anybody. Stoically he had prepared himself to meet his fate with the same fortitude that he had shown overseas in wartime. A case like that inclines one to the abolition of the death penalty.

On the other hand, I have been bothered equally as much, if not more, by the many horrible crimes that have been committed. At an earlier period before the war, a convicted murderer who had escaped or had been released from prison in the United States entered Manitoba and strangled two women in the city of Winnipeg. One of the women was the mother of two small children. That case always comes to my mind when the subject of capital punishment is under discussion. It is, of course, only one of many somewhat similar cases. The question I have asked myself repeatedly is: Whose life is the more valuable. The murderer who murders again or the innocent victim? Which life does society consider should be saved? Is the state justified in saving the life of a criminal without being able to give complete assurance that another innocent person may not be sacrificed to that criminal's rage, lust or homicidal tendency? The case of strangler Nelson inclines me to the retention of capital punishment.

A wealth of material on the subject has been made available to us. Not least in value is the White Paper prepared by the Department of Justice. I am not sure that anyone has produced in this debate any argument that is not to be found in that booklet. The statistics have been helpful but how much they prove is somewhat uncertain. On page 110 a review is given showing the number of murders over a five-year period in the various States of the Union. Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have populations almost equal in size. Both retain capital punishment. In the five-year period there were 187 murders in Massachusetts and 717 in Pennsylvania. What does that prove? Compare both those states with Michigan whose population is only slightly larger. Michigan is an abolition state. In the five-year period murders in Michigan totalled 806 as against 187 in Massachusetts and 717 in Pennsylvania. Does this prove that capital punishment is a deterrent? But then look at North Dakota and South Dakota, states which could not be more alike in every respect. North Dakota has abolition; South Dakota retains the death penalty. In four of the five years tabulated their record is identical. Does that prove anything and if it does, what is it?

The abolitionists say that the retentionists cannot produce any figures to show that the death penalty acts as a deterrent. Nobody can, for those who are deterred from committing a crime do not volunteer that information to anyone. To say that the death penalty is no deterrent is to say that men do not fear death. This, to me, is incredible. Fear of death is an instinctive reaction. To conquer or subdue that fear is a feat of which some people are not capable. In wartime fear of death operates 3,000 miles away from the battlefield, one mile away, and on the battlefield itself. No one who has seen death in many forms can say and be believed that fear of death is not a powerful factor in determining a course of action. That is not to say that many criminals are not completely reckless and fearless. But there must be many others, criminally inclined, who shrink from risking their lives.

The sanctity of human life is a powerful argument that has been used very effectively during the course of this debate. I wish that the sanctity of human life were universally acknowledged. In the 66 years of this 20th century so little regard has been paid to the sanctity of human life that literally millions of people have been destroyed without compunction in war, in concentration camps, by atomic bombs. They have been destroyed in the heat of action and with cold-blooded premeditation in the gas chamber.

In the state's increasing conflict with the criminal how much weight should be given to the wholly admirable ideal of the sanctity of human life? Which life is more sacred, that of the deliberate killer or that of the possibly defenceless and harmless victim? Which life is more useful to the state? To which does the state owe the greater responsibility? Can the state give an assurance that the cold-blooded, calculating murderer will never have another chance to practise his evil ways? We are told that only a few murderers become repeaters. Whose life is the state prepared to offer up as the second victim or the third victim? Where, then, lies the state's responsibility for the sanctity of human life? These are some of the questions that I have been pondering during the last few days.

We have been informed by countless articles and statistics that crime is on the increase. We now know that we are in the shadow of organized crime which has infiltrated into Canada. Organized crime appears to make use of professional killers to accomplish some of its objects. To frustrate the operation of our laws professional killers apparently are employed to liquidate witnesses in narcotics and other cases. These professional killers either have no fear of capital punishment or else run that risk to avoid speedier punishment at the hands of their masters. Organized crime is a state within the state conducting war from within. How lenient can the state afford to be with those whose aim is the destruction of the state? Should capital punishment be retained as the state's ultimate weapon against organized crime which, far from being activated by impulse or emotion, relies rather on the most carefully planned, the most carefully premeditated operations?

The section of the Criminal Code which the abolitionists would like to remove is the very one which deals with planned, premeditated murder. The section, reprinted in the White Paper on page 67, reads as follows:

> Murder is capital murder in respect of any person where it is planned and deliberate on the part of such person.

The section also provides the death penalty for those who kill law enforcement officers and prison guards. In recent years capital punishment has been sparingly used. The section is there in the act but the cabinet may use its discretion in its application. Commutation of the death penalty, life imprisonment instead of hanging, may be determined by the cabinet judging with great care each case on its merits. The abolitionist should have no cause for complaint if the section remains in the act and the death penalty is rarely used. The retentionist should have little cause for complaint if the section is retained as the state's reserve power in case of necessity.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Society must decide which life is the more valuable—the child, the woman, the police officer, the prison guard or the criminal. The state cannot guarantee life for all of these at our present stage of development. The state cannot yet guarantee that prisoners will never escape. Psychiatry cannot yet guarantee an absolutely accurate answer to psychiatric problems. The parole system cannot yet guarantee that reformation and rehabilitation have been completely successful. Until those guarantees can be given the state owes a higher duty to its law-abiding citizens, to its women and children, than it does to the criminal.

I am now prepared to answer the question I posed at the beginning: "Is the state justified in taking a life?" My answer is "Yes", under the law as it now stands with the cabinet deciding each case on its merits and with due regard to the safety of the law-abiding citizens of the state. I propose to vote against the amendment and the main motion in order to retain the present law as it was modified in 1961.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): There are times, Mr. Speaker, when the House of Commons rises to heights of grandeur and becomes deeply conscious of its great traditions. I think this debate had been one of those rare occasions. There has been a minimum of rancour and there has been no imputation of motives because I think that the abolitionists and retentionists alike have been sincerely searching their consciences to see if we can honestly resolve a moral problem. This problem is, how can we abolish a brutal punishment without endangering the safety of society?

I am in favour of the motion to abolish capital punishment and I am also supporting the amendment to put it on a five-year trial basis. I doubt that there is much new that can be said in this debate. The entire field has been well covered but I should like to put very briefly four reasons for my opposition to capital punishment. The first is that capital punishment is contrary to the highest concepts of the Judaic Christian ethic. I do not propose to go into theological arguments, but both in this debate and in the discussions which have taken place outside the house many people have been quoting Scripture in support of retaining the death penalty.

It is always a dangerous practice to quote isolated passages of Scripture. The Bible has been quoted in times past to support slavery, child labour, polygamy, the burning of witches, and subservience to dictators. The Scriptures have to be viewed as a whole. The Bible is not one book, it is many books. It does not have a static concept. It represents man's emerging moral concepts as they have grown through the centuries.

It is true that the Mosaic law provided the death penalty for murder. It is equally true, if one looks particularly at the 20th chapter of the book of Leviticus, that the Mosaic law provided the death penalty for 33 crimes including such things as adultery, bestiality, homosexuality, witchcraft and sacrificing to other gods than Jehovah. It seems to me that those who want to pick out isolated texts from the Bible in support of retaining the death penalty for murder have to be equally consistent and ask that the death penalty be retained for all the other crimes listed in the Mosaic law.

Of course, those who take this position overlook several facts. They overlook, first of all, the fact that the Mosaic law was an advanced law for the primitive times in which it was formulated. It was later succeeded by the Hebrew prophets who introduced the idea of justice superseded by mercy, the possible redemption and re-establishment of the individual. They overlook the fact that if any nation in the world ought to feel itself bound by Mosaic law it should be the state of Israel. The state of Israel abolished the death penalty many years ago except for Nazi war criminals and for treason committed in times of war. The religious hierarchy of the state of Israel enthusiastically supported the Knesset in abolishing the death penalty in that country.

But for those of us who belong to the Christian religion it seems to me we have to remember also that the Christian religion went far beyond the Mosaic law. In the days of the founder of Christianity the Mosaic law still obtained. This law decreed that a woman taken in adultery could be stoned to death. We should remember the statement of Jesus of Nazareth when he came upon a group of people preparing to stone such a woman to death. He said, Let him who is without sin among you cast the first stone.

When the crowd had dwindled away so that only the woman was left he said to the woman, "Go and sin no more". It seems to me that this is the ultimate culmination of the Christian concept of the application of mercy and the possible redemption of the individual.

My second reason for opposing capital punishment is that I believe capital punishment brutalizes the society that uses it without providing any effective deterrent that cannot be provided equally well by life imprisonment. I believe that any society that practices capital punishment brutalizes itself. It has an effect upon that society and I do not believe that society can rid itself of murderers by itself becoming a murderer. Surely if brutality would deter the committing of a crime Great Britain should have been a place of law-abiding citizens because a little over 150 years ago there were over 200 crimes for which an individual could be put to death. Instead of making Britain a nation of law-abiders it was a country where crime abounded, where human sensibilities were dulled by the public execution of criminals. It is rather significant that in that day, as in this, it was often the juries who were more humane than the lawmakers. It was only because juries refused to convict, knowing the terrible punishment which would follow, that the lawmakers were forced 150 years ago to remove the death penalty from a great many of the crimes for which it had been prescribed.

• (4:00 p.m.)

All of the evidence which can be gathered seems to indicate that the death penalty is not a unique deterrent and that life imprisonment can be equally effective. Most hon. members are familiar with the works of Thorsten Sellin, a professor at Pennsylvania University, and his book "The Death Penalty Relative To Deterrence And Police Safety". Many figures have been quoted and I do not think there is any need for me to quote them again. Certainly his study in the United States, which compared states which have abolished the death penalty with states which have retained it, led him to the conclusion that "abolition had no visible effect on homicide rates".

Marc Ancell, who did the United Nations study which looked into the experience of the many countries which have abolished capital punishment, some of them as long as 50 years ago, and states which have retained it, came to this conclusion:

> Removal of the death penalty has never been followed by a notable rise in the incidence of crime no longer punishable with death.

I readily agree, Mr. Speaker, that quoting endless statistics is not going to prove either the case for abolition or the case for retention, but there certainly seems to be no convincing volume of evidence which would satisfy any unbiased individual that abolishing the death penalty has resulted in an upsurge of homicide or that those states which have retained the death penalty are any freer of capital crimes than those which have not.

After all, Mr. Speaker, who is it that the death penalty deters? It has certainly not deterred the man who commits murder. Will it deter him in the future? Surely he can be deterred in the future by being incarcerated for the remainder of his life. Who is deterred if this man is hanged? Is he to be hanged as an example to the rest of the community? I can conceive of nothing more immoral than to break a man's neck as an example to other people, but if that is the argument then surely, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said yesterday, we ought to have public executions.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said that the fear of death will deter men. The fear of death will deter normal men but when a man commits murder, is he normal? Can we understand the motivation that causes a man to take a human life? When a man commits homicide, does he sit down and assess whether he is committing it in a state that has capital punishment or in a state that has abolished capital punishment? I think not. In the main the man who commits homicide is the man who is mentally ill, the man who kills does not make the common, rational judgments that are made by the average individual.

Miss LaMarsh: You contend they are the ones who commit most of the murders?

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Miss LaMarsh: You contend they are the insane?

Mr. Douglas: The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) says that they are not insane. This depends entirely on her definition of insanity.

Miss LaMarsh: That is in the law.

Mr. Douglas: An individual who has become so mentally sick that he will take another life or ravage a child is certainly not a mentally healthy or normal individual.

The third reason I am opposed to capital punishment, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe there are better ways to ensure the safety of society. I completely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre who argued that we must be concerned about the safety of the public. When he asks which is the more important, the life of an innocent person who may be killed or the life of a murderer, there is no doubt that the life of the innocent person is the more important. But is the fact that we break a man's neck any guarantee that innocent people will not be hurt?

We are not suggesting removing the penalty. We are saying that the penalty which ought to be retained is one that will do the two things which are important. First of all, it must be a penalty which will remove the convicted person from human society as long as that person is likely to be a menace to the safety and well-being of his fellow men. Second, that person should be given an opportunity to receive whatever psychiatric treatment and rehabilitation is possible in the light of his own particular circumstances.

What we have to decide is what we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker. Are we thinking purely of punishing somebody because they have done wrong? Are we thinking purely in punitive terms? Are we thinking purely in terms of vengeance or retribution? Or are we thinking of the two things I have mentioned, first, the safety of society by incarcerating the convicted murderer for life and, second, the possible rehabilitation and redemption of that individual. There is additionally the third great advantage that if society has made a mistake it is possible to rectify the mistake, because justice is a human institution and like all human institutions it is liable to error.

I maintain that society has no right to take from a man something which it cannot restore to him. If society makes a mistake and confines a man to prison, depriving him of his freedom, when that mistake is found out society can at least restore to him his freedom and provide him with some compensation for the years he has been incarcerated. But if we hang a man and then find that a mistake has been made there is nothing at all which can be done to make amends.

My quarrel with the death penalty is that it is purely a negative attempt to promote the safety of society. We need to adopt positive measures to promote the safety of society. For instance, we need better law enforcement. In both Canada and the United States every year a great many unsolved crimes are committed. One of the best deterrents is for the criminal to know that if he does commit a crime he will be found out, that he will be incarcerated and put in a place where he can no longer be a menace to the community. We need quicker crime detection methods. For some types of crimes, particularly for those involving psychotics, there ought to be indeterminate sentences.

• (4:10 p.m.)

We all recall a case a few years ago in which a man sexually assaulted a child. He was sentenced to five years in jail. To my mind this was ridiculous because it was based purely on the punitive concept and not out of regard for the safety of the community. It was assumed that at five years less one day, when he was in jail, he was a menace but at five years plus one day he was no longer a menace. Such individual ought to be sentenced to be kept out of circulation until such time as a panel of judges, psychiatrists and social workers are as certain as a human person can be that the individual is no longer a menace to the safety of the community. I think that in many cases indeterminate sentences to keep out of circulation psychotics who are likely to commit crimes would be of great advantage. In the case I referred to the man got out of jail after five years. Within six months he had not only assaulted another child but had killed the child in the process. Had that individual been sentenced to an indeterminate sentence in the first instance he would not have committed this second heinous crime.

If we want genuine deterrents in this country we need a program of penal reform for the segregation of prisoners and for their rehabilitation so that young first offenders do not go to jail to take what is virtually a postgraduate course in crime.

Let us face the fact that when we talk about retaining capital punishment as a deterrent we are really trying to take the easy way out from solving our problems. In the long run society often gets the criminals it deserves.

Why do we have criminals? What is wrong with the society that produces criminals? Some years ago when I was attending

Chicago University I remember that every newspaper in the United States had a heading, "Where Is Crawley?" Crawley was a young gunman who was being hunted across the United States for a series of murders.

A very great columnist in the United States wrote a column which he headed, "Why Is Crawley?" He said that the people of the United States, instead of asking "Where Is Crawley", ought to take a little time out to ask "Why Is Crawley?" The columnist went over his history. He came from a broken home which the father had deserted and where the mother was out working all day. The boy lived on the streets. He was part of a gang of hoodlums. He was sent to reformatory and then was back on the streets. He was without proper education and without any counseling. He was sent to jail and associated with hardened criminals. He came out of jail twice as tough as when he went in. By 19 he was a hardened criminal. By the time he was 21 he was a killer. He was finally shot down by the police who were trying to capture him.

I suppose one of the most lamentable murders in our time has been the killing of President John F. Kennedy. Yet, when one reads the story of the man who is believed to have been responsible for his death, we find that when Lee Oswald was a boy in school he was recommended to undergo psychiatric treatment because of the dangerous psychotic tendencies he then displayed. But there were not enough psychiatrists to look after all the children in that particular part of New York city and this boy was not treated. This boy grew up with his psychotic tendencies expanding, and he is believed to have been responsible for extinguishing one of the brightest lights of our generation.

If we really want to tackle the problem of eliminating crime, we must tackle the problem of the slums which breed crime and we must tackle the problem of the lack of psychiatric clinics to take care of psychotics and persons who may become criminally dangerous. We need the kind of penal reform that will make possible the rehabilitation of first offenders with proper probation and parole. We need to go to the roots of the cause of crime and to ask ourselves what it is that produces the murderer in society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I shall only take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. I thank the house.

My final point is that I am opposed to capital punishment because I believe that the measure of a nation is the manner in which it treats its misfits and its offenders. Capital punishment has already been abolished in most of the advanced nations of the western world. The abolition of capital punishment has come to be taken as the hallmark of a nation's conscience. I want to see Canada take this great forward step, and I want to make a special appeal to the members of the house to consider how important for Canada and for its future will be the vote we shall take tonight.

I understand that 14 men are now under sentence of death.

An hon. Member: How many have they killed?

Mr. Douglas: This places the government in a very difficult dilemma.

An hon. Member: You mean the cabinet.

Mr. Douglas: The government is the cabinet. They are virtually one and the same thing.

I should not want to be in the shoes of the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet who have to face up to this very difficult problem. Nobody has been hanged in Canada since 1962. If the motion tonight is defeated the government is going to be in an awkward position. Either it will have to commute those sentenced to death to life imprisonment, knowing that the House of Commons has just rejected a motion suggesting the abolition of the death penalty, or it will have to take the defeat of the motion as an expression of opinion and allow the death sentences to be carried out.

I urge the members of the house to consider the predicament which faces the Prime Minister and the cabinet. I want to urge the house to give a five-year trial to the abolition of the death penalty. If the fears that have been expressed prove to be warranted, if there is an upsurge in the rate of homicide, if we are faced with an increase in crime rate, then in five years the members of the House of Commons who are here then can allow the death penalty to become effective again simply by taking no action. But I would urge that we give this a chance, that we step into line with the progressive countries of the world which have already abolished the death penalty.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I know there are members in different parts of the house who do not agree about all the details, for example, about the full extent of abolishing capital punishment, but may I point out that we are not dealing with legislation. We are dealing with a resolution which simply sets forth certain principles. If the house expresses itself as being in favour of replacing the death penalty with life imprisonment, that will really mean life imprisonment unless the Governor in Council decides to the contrary. The government, I hope, will then bring down legislation. At that time we will be able to discuss the legislation and deal with the details of what the law will have to say.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It must bring in legislation.

Mr. Douglas: Yes. If the resolution passes it will be mandatory on the government to bring down legislation, but the point I want to make is that when that legislation comes before the house it will be subject to amendment and refinement. This is not the time to resolve differences about details. The time to resolve them is when we have legislation before the house which can be discussed clause by clause in committee of the whole. At such a time the matter can be examined in greater detail.

What I plead for is that we pass this resolution tonight, with the amendment, which will declare in principle that the house is in favour of abolishing capital punishment and replacing it with life imprisonment. If we do that then I believe the House of Commons will have won a great victory, not a victory that will be accompanied by the blaring of trumpets or the rolling of drums but a victory in that we will have taken a forward, moral step and left behind one of the last relics of barbarianism. We will be moving forward to a more humane approach in dealing with crime.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening attentively for four days to hon. members who spoke either for or against abolishing the death penalty.

I intend to be very brief. I will make what will probably be the shortest speech in this debate. As a matter of fact, I will make only a few remarks.

To show where I stand, I must say right away that I am for retaining the death penalty.

One of the main points raised by those who are preaching abolition—and I repeat "who are preaching"—is that the death penalty is not a deterrent against murder. Therefore, how can we explain that robbers, allegedly armed, sometimes use toy guns or, even worse, unloaded guns?

Another point often raised is about statistics. What worries me a little is that statistics are chosen in this or that country depending on whether or not they are favorable to the discussion. Besides, I think that statistics can be made to say anything, depending on whether they are taken as a whole or only in part. In this debate, they have been used to mean all kinds of things but only in part.

The Holy Bible was also put to use. But there again, if you take the time you will find quotations which, on occasion, can serve both sides, either for or against abolishing the death penalty.

In reply to those who claim that abolition would make the difference between civilized and uncivilized society, I say that premeditated murder certainly constitutes a much more serious obstacle to that ideal of a civilized society.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the first duty of an hon. member is to protect society by always considering the common good. I feel deeply that voting in favour of abolition is not to serve the common interest and I say that for two main reasons:

First, to vote for the abolition of the death penalty is to give hired killers the assurance that they can, for money, kill all those they want, without ever having to fear that the same thing will happen to them.

Second, to vote for the abolition of the death penalty is to give to all those sentenced to life imprisonment a licence to kill as they please, either other prisoners or prison guards, especially when trying to escape.

Murder is by far the most odious of crimes. It certainly deserves the harshest punishment: the death penalty.

[English]

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this debate I had some misgivings as to the timing of it, fearing that following on a rather emotional period in the house we might see further displays of extreme emotionalism, possibly followed by bitterness. But I think it is very much to the credit of all hon. members who have spoken that the calibre of the debate so far has been fine and that the various opinions have been expressed in such a sincere, studious and thoughtful manner.

The amiable and eloquent hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) objected to those in favour of retention inferring, intentionally or unintentionally, that abolitionists were soft on criminals. I would like to add an equally strong objection against those in favour of abolition inferring, whether intentionally or unintentionally, that those in favour of retention are somehow barbaric, unthinking and unprogressive.

One hon. member of the house said:

> I see few members of this house prepared to question it—that abolition of the death penalty constitutes in itself social progress.

I definitely question it, Mr. Speaker, and I suggest that by their speeches and opinions many hon. members question it too.

I do not agree with the inference that those who wish to abolish the death penalty are more modern, more learned or more sympathetic. For centuries thinkers and philosophers have returned time and time again to the idea of abolition. It is nothing new. It does not seem to me a sign of the maturing of our society. In fact it seems to me that the maturing of our society would be exhibited by a decline in crime altogether. But though we are rightfully boasting of our enormously high standard of living, yet at the same time we are considerably worried about the increase in violence, delinquency, and organized and professional murdering.

According to the Department of Justice June 1965, publication, "Capital Punishment", there are slightly over 60 countries in the world which still retain the death penalty and there are about half that number which have abolished it, totally or in part, so it does not seem at all true to say that we are somehow behind the times and very unprogressive if we do not rush into abolition of the death penalty.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) said in his excellent speech that it is nice to be a reformer. Indeed this is true. It is very dramatic and it is very attention getting, but to be a worthwhile reformer the reform proposed must involve some improvement in our society and no one yet has been able to state convincingly, to me at least, that abolition of the death penalty would be an improvement in our control of murder.

[Mrs. Wadds.]

• (4:30 p.m.)

Only 13 of the 50 states of the United States have abolished the death penalty and in three of these the penalty has been revived. New Zealand and Australia have brought it back again after periods of abolition. It seems to me that very clearly it is a matter of interpretation, the interpretation of our regard for human life. It is precisely because I do regard human life as so precious and as the fundamental birthright of every human being that I say the gravest penalty must be maintained as a warning against murder and to encourage a premeditated and thoughtful form of human behaviour. Our whole society is concentrated on protecting this birthright, this feeling of the precious element of human life. We pride ourselves with some justification on the lowering of infant mortality, the extended life expectancy, our vastly improved medical science, and freedom from starvation and death by exposure. Whether it be from pride in our social standards or moral and religious codes, our whole way of life is directed to keeping people alive.

Research scientists, some of our most gifted minds, often die in despair having devoted their whole lives to the search for a cure in one phase of a disease. We have armies of police and we spend millions of dollars protecting people by instituting laws against assault, against reckless driving and against any behaviour that might lead to bodily harm. This all is based on our respect for human life and our desire that the life of each person, young and old, small or big, sick or well, should be untouchable and inviolate.

The person who rebels against this society, who sells or gives a government secret to another government is accused of treason. Generally this is considered the worst of all crimes and in some countries capital punishment is even maintained for treason when it is abolished for murder. I feel strongly that rebelling against our society to the extent of committing premeditated murder is just as loathsome as treason.

Other mistakes are retrievable, as has been said time and again in this debate, but this one is not. I think our young people should grow up knowing this, learning this. Why should there be so much talk about the irretrievability of the death penalty and so little regarding the irretrievability of the life of the victim? Why should we be so squeamish about retribution? Learning to live at all well or fully or rewardingly is learning of retributions. If we concentrate, we learn; if we exercise, we have strong muscles; if we over-eat, we grow fat. Some people will not recognize retributions as the result of their behaviour, or do not mind them, but no one should be allowed to have any hope of avoiding the penalty for murder.

Murder cannot be thought of as a permissible act in our society, and I strongly object to the argument that capital punishment is a repetition of murder. To me this seems to make a farce of punishment. If it is to be made a farce in the treatment of the most impermissible of all acts then it is logical to consider punishment a farce for lesser crimes, and where then does our society turn to for control?

I think one of the best speeches in this debate was made by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh). I agree with her entirely in respect of her support for the need for gradations of crime and therefore gradations of penalty. Like her, I definitely feel there is a limit which must be recognized as utterly unacceptable. If, regrettably, with all our efforts and safeguards members of our society still go beyond this limit of behaviour, there can be no other course but to remove them.

Certainly as much as anyone in this house I dislike emotional displays as a means of debate. But since some of my colleagues feel strongly enough about abolition of the death penalty to mention deep personal and religious reasons for their feeling. I hope I will be forgiven if I express a personal reason for retention of capital punishment, a reason which I am sure many Canadian women share and a reason which I think should be expressed—the feelings of a mother.

There are some unchanging facts in life, and in the days before childbirth or during the pain involved a mother's whole thought always has been and always will be that this child live. That it be beautiful, rich or clever always will remain secondary to the one basic wish that it live. Henceforth any sickness in this child becomes a mother's greatest worry. The end of this child's life becomes the greatest loss which could be contemplated, and if any person murders this child, whether if be with an axe, a gun, or poison, and for whatever reason, whether it be through jealousy, sexual perversion of what have you, then whoever that person be that person forfeits his or her right to go on living.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that I am alone in this feeling and in wanting this kind of protection in society for my children and for other children. Some persons speaking in favour of abolition have said that those in favour of retention speak of it in qualified terms and somehow are not sure of their opinions. I feel very sure that our society must have its rules and must have its penalties. There may come a time when there will be no murders committed. Like everyone else in this house, like every other Canadian, I sincerely hope so, but until this time comes I feel that millions of people across this country feel such revulsion to certain murders that the severest penalty must be maintained.

Capital punishment has been with us for a long time. There are thousands who feel it is a deterrent to murder. It is a long established practice that before repeal or revision of a statute those who seek the alteration must accept the onus of responsibility for substantiating their claim that a requirement exists for such changes. The people most immediately involved with detecting murder and apprehending murderers, our police, do not want abolition. To me this is an enormously strong argument against abolition. In other areas of our society we base our decisions on opinions of those most closely connected with the problem. Why not in respect of this so important problem?

• (4:40 p.m.)

In the 1960 debate in this house it was pointed out that perhaps one of the most convincing arguments is to be found in the report of the special parliamentary committee of 1956. They came to this conclusion on the sole point of whether capital punishment does represent a deterrent:

> In considering the arguments for and against abolition, the committee was conscious of the view of the provincial attorneys general and other officials responsible for law enforcement from whom it received evidence that capital punishment is an important and necessary deterrent to murder.
>
> The committee has concluded that capital punishment does exercise a deterrent effect which would not result from imprisonment or other forms of punishment.

Like the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), I do resent Communist organizations pressing us to decide in favour of abolition. Certainly they do not wish to aid us in strengthening our society. I am sure it is unnecessary to add that I am absolutely not implying any Communist leanings on the part of those who have spoken in favour of abolition.

Mr. Orlikow: Why mention it?

Mrs. Wadds: We have heard a lot from lawyers. I respect their learning and their experiences but it does seem to me that their experiences are probably concentrated rather closely in one area. To me, one of the most ineffective suggestions is that those in favour of the retention of capital punishment should have to witness capital punishment. Is it not equally sensible to demand that those who would use this argument should have to witness murder itself?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Wadds: There may be some mothers —undoubtedly there are—who feel differently than I who might ask: Would you feel this way if your child was the murderer? I can only say that personally I would. Of course, this is a thought to be avoided just as the thought of sending a child to war is to be avoided, but if we reach this limit of our resources in our society then we must pay the price.

I feel that war is a breakdown of everything that we are striving for with regard to respect for human life and in learning to understand others with whom we live. Murder is the same sort of breakdown. The record shows that all those in favour of abolition did not or would not refuse to go to war to maintain our type of society. This leads me to my last point, that we should vastly increase our resources toward the abolition of murder.

We hear a lot about guidelines in economics, guidelines in education, guidelines in culture. There seems to me to be one definite guideline, the irrevocable, unchangeable guideline which is, "thou shalt not kill".

Let us double, triple or multiply our research a hundred-fold into mental and emotional health, in every avenue that may protect people from the state of mind in which they commit murder. I think there may be a great deal to be done in this respect in our entertainment world. Surely there is a great deal of interest, beauty and charm in this world without so much of our literature, drama and art being devoted to crime and shooting. Surely it is bad for our children to watch shows ad nauseam in which there seems to be something smart and clever in violence and shooting straight.

Let us concentrate on abolishing murder, but until it is abolished let us treat it as it is, as impermissible and to be punished in the strongest possible way. As the hon. member for Bow River and others have so rightly said, there are three ways of dealing with crime, by swift detection, by swift apprehension and by swift punishment.

Like all citizens, Mr. Speaker, I am most anxious that there be no weakening of respect for our judicial system. It seems to me, and I have questioned many people and have given close attention to every opinion that has crossed my desk, that Canadians are widely divided, even among churches and church members, in their attitude toward capital punishment. But I am sure all Canadians are unanimous in the feeling that the stability of our judicial system is of first importance in maintaining the stability of our way of life.

I think most people approve of appeals but I feel strongly that these should remain in our courts. I cannot but feel that cabinet decisions are bound to be political. They cannot be otherwise because they are made by politicians and politicians of all people, it seems to me, are peculiarly unfitted for such decisions. Their elected job is a temporary one. It is based on popularity and it does not carry with it the expectation of this kind of decision-making. Surely all such decisions should rather go to judges who are educated and prepared for such decision-making. They have the facilities for and are accustomed to accumulating evidence and evaluating it.

We have obviously progressed in the swift detection and apprehension of criminals and it does not seem sensible to me to weaken this progress by confusion, delay and uncertainty regarding the penalty. Distasteful as some penalties may be, I feel they are requisites in dealing with crime.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, one is tempted to remain silent in this debate as it is quite impossible to be original. However, by repetition the total added weight of argument may help to influence the opinion of the house and tip the scales.

It is self-evident to state that the question of capital punishment has perplexed mankind for many years. Each of us has wrestled with his own conscience, torn by conflicting emotions and influenced by our individually developed philosophies hammered out in the battle of life itself.

My biggest personal battle was to try to separate emotion from logic. All of us are motivated by instincts, some of them quite basic, and one is the reflex to hit back as hard as you are hit, to say that if a person destroys life he must pay by forfeiting his life. Through study and discussion I have arrived at the position where I support the general principle of the abolition of capital punishment. At the same time, if necessary to obtain some measure of abolition I would support amendments which would have the effect of retaining capital punishment for certain categories of murder.

What we are doing is deciding as a House of Commons whether capital punishment ought to be retained in a civilized community. In a civilized country the taking of human life can be justified only by the clearest evidence of imperative need. When we ask ourselves what is this clear and convincing evidence which justifies the taking of human life, the answer usually advanced comes under two headings, deterrence and retribution.

I believe that capital punishment can only be justified on the ground that it is a unique deterrent, and I contend it is not. Essentially this ultimate crime is motivated by emotions so strong that its perpetrator does not stop to think whether or not he will die for it. The law neither deters nor encourages him. For him, at the moment, it simply does not exist.

Because death is awful and final many people tend to underrate the deterrent power of the self-destructive prospect of life imprisonment, of loss of freedom, of soul-corroding confinement, of the deprivation from the simple pleasures and beauties of a free life.

It should not be forgotten that until 1955 the offence of rape was punishable by death. The repeal of the death penalty for rape has not led to any increase in this offence. The real deterrent to crime is the certainty of detection and punishment rather than the severity of punishment.

Millions of words have been uttered on this subject, learned briefs have been drawn, statistical evidence has been adduced, and the present position is that it has not been proven that capital punishment is a unique deterrent to murder. Nor has it been shown that when capital punishment was abolished the incidence of murder increased. Therefore I submit that the main argument for retention falls.

The second main argument advanced by the retentionists is that of retribution. What it means is that the community marks its abhorrence of the crime of taking human life by the gravity of the punishment it exacts. In that way the community hopes to burn into the conscience of mankind the unspeakable wickedness of the crime itself. We therefore have a paradox. To show the community the evil of taking human life, the community uses the taking of human life to do that very thing. Our society should say: We abhor the taking of human life so much that we ourselves renounce the right to do it.

• (4:50 p.m.)

There is also an element of revenge in retribution which is understandable but which is not compatible with the degree of civilization we have attained. The question is often posed: How would you feel and act if someone ravaged and murdered your daughter? Instinctively and emotionally my first reaction, my first retort, would be that hanging would be too compassionate. But on cool consideration and logically analysing the question, what do I achieve by taking the murderer's life? Do I regain my child? It does not correct his error. The act brutalizes society and lowers it toward his own depraved and savage level.

The argument of retribution in effect says that the only suitable punishment for one who takes life is to take his life. Apart from moral and philosophical concepts of retribution, is there not a paramount, practical reason why society should not execute even the most sadistic, brutal murderer? Do we not achieve more by preserving him so his abnormal behaviour can be studied by psychiatrists? These studies are essential if we are to add to the sum total of man's knowledge, if we are to delve into the dim recesses of irrational behaviour, if we are to learn how these sick minds work. Might we not apply such increased knowledge in a preventive way which could conceivably stop the occurrence of a similar act, one which could be slowly forming in a twisted, sick, warped and tortured mind? If we eliminate the abnormal murderer, do we not cast aside all opportunity to examine him and really make more possible the repetition of the type of heinous crime that we as a society are so desperately trying to eradicate?

In the long run it endangers rather than protects society to execute even the most brutal murderer. Our chance to find out his reasons for committing the crime is gone. Thus we leave ourselves a prey to other potential and developing murderers who can harm an unsuspecting society whenever the circumstances permit. We must confine, examine and assemble the increasing, cumulative knowledge about abnormal psychology and apply it as a preventive measure if we truly wish to erase this type of menace from our midst.

For those who waver in this debate, I believe that one of the most convincing and perhaps clinching arguments against capital punishment is the possibility of judicial error. First, error can arise leading to conviction and execution in situations where through ignorance or lack of funds the accused does not have the highest possible calibre of defence. This is rare but possible. Second, in any system of administration of justice, however mature and efficient and in spite of the best legal counsel, through coincidence and circumstance miscarriages of justice can and do occur. The Evans case in Britain is the most striking example of this possibility. The execution of the convicted person obviously makes rectification of the error impossible.

Mankind recoils at the horror of taking an innocent life. Mankind blanches at such monstrous injustice. When we know that the possibility exists, this alone is a most powerful argument for the abolition of capital punishment. Britain has for years gone through the agonies of debate on capital punishment. They achieved its abolition with a compromise. Capital punishment was abolished for a five-year, trial period. If necessary we could follow their example. If there is no significant increase in capital murder during that period, parliament can move with assurance and public support to relegate the hangman's noose to where it belongs, the museum. If this approach would satisfy some honest doubters I for one would support such an amendment.

Through the centuries man has tried to grapple with the abstract question of justice. It is a relative concept which changes with the times. If we peer back into history we note that capital punishment was once thought to be the only just punishment for theft, adultery, heresy and forgery. We now find this punishment for such misdeeds revolting. Voices thundered in the past that death was the only suitable punishment for such crimes.

As society develops and the sanctity of life becomes more ingrained into our philosophy, as we struggle to combat our primitive urges which are scarcely concealed beneath the surface of us all, gradually through quiet evolution we have discarded old ideas of retribution and punishment. We have taken tentative steps. We have groped toward changing and elevated ideas of justice. We clamber clumsily at times, hesitatingly and afraid up the ladder of social reform and progress. Is not the abolition of capital punishment the natural culmination of centuries of man's effort to achieve justice based on reason? Is it not the final step, the final rung on the ladder, the summit or the high plateau to which we at times unwittingly and at times consciously have been painfully crawling?

[Mr. Tolmie.]

I feel that now is the time to take this last step. I believe it to be inevitable. I see no purpose in delay. A custom which has disappeared in most civilized countries and is withering away in many more should be discarded in a country such as ours which has been renowned in the past for its enlightened reform approach to the great social questions of the day. When historians in years hence peer back down the distant corridors of time, when future generations yet unborn reflect on this day of decision, let them be able to say: Members of the house bravely and wisely took another forward step in man's eternal search for solutions to the problem of crime and punishment.

Men of good will have honestly and sincerely voiced their opinions in this house. What a rare and precious privilege it is that we as individuals are still masters of our fate. Whatever the result, this chamber will be forever enriched, forever ennobled by the clear clash of conflicting concepts of free men in a free land, all dedicated to adding a little more to the sum total of social justice.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this important debate and putting my own thoughts and convictions on the record, I am mindful of the very fine speeches that have been made, particularly this afternoon. I shall be very brief. I have three contentions to put forward in support of my own position. First, I am concerned with the bleak outlook in regard to violent crime. I have figures here I could quote which demonstrate that violent crime, organized crime, in the United States increased by 40 per cent from 1958 to 1964, and the predictions are that if trends continue, particularly in juvenile delinquency, by 1975 there will be an increase of 80 per cent in crimes of violence. Figures also demonstrate similar trends in Canada.

Capital punishment still represents necessary protection for our social order. I distinguish capital punishment as applied in some countries in Africa for their self-protection.

But the peace and good order of the public can be endangered from time to time by forms of professional criminality. We are legislating for the whole of Canada, not for a particular state or a European country with different outlook from ours. I am impressed by the fact that at least the Attorneys General of our two major provinces profess that there is still a need for the retention of capital punishment.

• (5:00 p.m.)

My second thought is that abolition deemphasizes the role of rehabilitation. Abolition tends to detract from our whole program and unfortunately does not mean a corresponding interest in attention to rehabilitation. If I may digress for a moment, I would say that I believe many strong retentionists and abolitionists become so wrapped up in the problem that they tend to forget the major part of rehabilitation itself. In addition, many abolitionists will have to revise their thinking in so far as maximum security institutions are concerned. Most of them tend to be against segregation.

My third contention is that the attitude of society toward crime and punishment would be weakened if we removed the supreme sanction of the death penalty. In other words, it demonstrates society's revulsion to crime. The abandonment of the death penalty may cause less serious concern toward criminals which would result in a lowering of morality and our attitudes would be weakened accordingly.

I want to refer to the amendment of the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice. I am against it. It has the appearance of being government sponsored and the appearance of a cover-up or back door method. In my opinion we have had already a trial period. Let there be no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker, the issues are the same regardless of this amendment. It would be wrong to support this amendment and I suggest that the government must accept the responsibility.

The amendments made in 1961 served a purpose. I would have liked to see capital punishment gradually fall into disuse but still on the statute books. The government failed to live up to its responsibilities in this regard. They panicked in the Marcotte case where there was not even a recommendation of mercy. The government has been in trouble ever since. Contrary to what has been said in the press and elsewhere, the onus of proof is still on the abolitionists.

The other day I read that those who feel like I do are in what is called the "twilight group". I do not mind being placed in this position. In closing may I say that the other night I felt that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) had expressed my thoughts quite well when he said, if I have to choose between the protection of society and the convicted murderer I am on the side of society.

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park): It is not too often, Mr. Speaker, that I raise my voice in this chamber. I am glad to have the opportunity of doing so on this very important subject. It may be said that what has been said has no influence on those who have listened once they have made up their minds. I have made up my mind on how I am going to vote. I intend to vote for abolition. However, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Wadds) have influenced me to the extent that I am going to toss aside my prepared text and speak as briefly and as firmly as I can about my views on this subject.

In the first place, sir, I had the privilege and opportunity of serving on the committee of this house which dealt with capital punishment. This committee considered all the factors for retention and abolition. These factors were argued strongly and very ably by people who were competent, knowledgeable and factual in what they had to say. It has been said that the committee decided to retain capital punishment. As you all know, there is no minority report issued by such a committee. My summing up of the situation was that the committee came to the conclusion that the public of Canada were not ready for the abolition of capital punishment at that time and found reasons to justify that position.

I should like to call to your attention the development of the idea of the abolition of capital punishment over the past twenty years. In 1948 the United Kingdom House of Commons passed two bills. One was for the complete abolition of capital punishment and the other provided for the division of murder into two classes, retaining mandatory punishment by hanging for a capital crime. Both of these bills were thrown out by the House of Lords. We know that in this house there have been no debates in the past in regard to the abolition or retention of capital punishment but this matter has been debated in the British House of Commons for centuries.

The members of the committee which dealt with capital punishment had the advantage of reading the debates which took place in the imperial parliament. They referred to the royal commission report which had been submitted on capital punishment. I had the opportunity of reading the report of the royal commission on capital punishment. I have come to the conclusion that capital punishment at the present time should be abolished.

Following that a law was passed in England dividing murder into two degrees and retaining capital punishment for murder in the first degree. The law here was then changed by this parliament and murder was divided into two degrees, retaining capital punishment for murder in the first degree. We can see the progressive spread of the idea. The royal commission found as a matter of fact that, having regard to the number of homicides in the United Kingdom and the number of persons who had been executed for murder over the past 50 years, the problem had resolved itself into such a small compass that it was a case of retention or abolition or finding some practical way of moderating the rigidity of the law.

The only solution that they could suggest was that after a jury had made its finding of guilty or not guilty they then be asked to go back and make a second finding if they had made a finding of guilty. They should be asked to decide whether there were extenuating circumstances indicating that the penalty should be reduced to life imprisonment. They have now gone one step further in the United Kingdom and suspended the application of capital punishment for a period of five years.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I feel that we too have advanced to the stage where we should abolish capital punishment. I have struggled, as all members have struggled, with my conscience in making up my mind whether or not this final sanction of the law should be imposed or revoked. I believe that it should be revoked. I appreciate the sanctity of life. I can understand the feelings of the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas just as I can understand the feelings of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. This is a matter of conscience and my conscience dictates to me that capital punishment should be abolished. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for its abolition.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words this afternoon to express my views on the resolution for the abolition of capital punishment. I have decided for some time now, to vote for the retention of the death penalty in cases of capital murder, treason and piracy, as provided under the 1961 act. An amendment to the resolution is now before the house, providing for abolition of capital punishment for a five-year trial period.

Mr. Speaker, I am also against this amendment because it is equivalent to saying to those who may have ideas: Do it now, you have five years to do it. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is the proper solution and, frankly, I have not been too impressed by the speeches I have heard in the house in support of the abolition of the death penalty.

It is said that Canada is civilized enough now to abolish the death penalty; there were times in the past when people were more civilized than they are today. The fact that we know about automation or that we are on the threshold of cybernetics does not mean that we are civilized for all that. To my mind, being civilized is to know that my neighbour exists, that he has rights and that I must respect them. Whoever plans a murder surely does not respect the rights of his victim. In all the speeches made I found only repetitions of the massive propaganda to which we have been subjected to get us to vote for the abolition of the death penalty. I noted, Mr. Speaker, that the abolitionists have at their disposal vast advertising media to make it appear that a great majority of the people are in favour of abolishing the death penalty when a capital murder is committed.

