When it was made public that we would have to vote for or against the death penalty, I asked myself who could benefit from the abolition of the death penalty, if not the murderer himself. Personally, I have no plans. If the death penalty is abolished in cases of treason, who will benefit from it if not the traitors? With regard to murders committed during acts of piracy, who will gain if not the pirates themselves? I agree with the legislators who, in 1960-61, advocated the abolition of the death penalty in the case of unpremeditated murders; for instance, in the case of an individual who kills in anger and also for crimes of passion. Moreover, the insane and adolescents are no longer put to death. I am in favour of that. But the man who makes his decision coldly and plans his crime with care is no longer useful to society.

Mr. Speaker, I also deemed it advisable to consult my constituents on that matter by sending a questionnaire to all the families in my riding. Their opinions were very divided. In the eastern part of my riding, people are slightly in favour of abolishing the death penalty, whereas in the western part they are in favour of retaining it. The comments made in several replies greatly helped me to reach a decision.

Even if I favour retaining the death penalty, I do not think that execution alone is an effective deterrent against murder. But whoever deliberately, with premeditation, deprives of his life a competitor, whether in business, in love or in any other field, does he not put himself outside society? If it were possible to kill, without being punished severely, all those who, one way or another, prevent us from achieving our goals, overpopulation would not be a problem in the world.

Does not the traitor who kills the head or heads of government, or who plots to betray his country to the enemy, deserve death? Besides, among the countries that have abolished capital punishment for murder, treason is still punishable by death.

Mr. Speaker, violent death, whether it is caused by an individual or by the state, is as much repugnant to me as to anybody. That is why all of us without exception should take advantage of this debate to consider and find the means to improve life within our human society, in order that everyone may develop according to his intelligence and capacities; in order that men and women who unite to perpetuate life may raise their children in suitable homes and teach them to respect God and other people.

It is time to assume our responsibilities and to stop feeling that this should concern others, but not us. We should react as equal and responsible men and women. We should face the problem and realize that our children and our children's children should not be made to suffer for our follies. We should give up the idea that science can replace morals and progress replace hard work and that, for instance, the well-known tranquilizers can replace peace of mind and the well-known dope, mental toil. We should give up the idea that pills can master the soul. We should give up our faith in so-called progress that sends satellites into space but cannot, because of politics, prevent two men out of three from going hungry. Finally, we should understand and spread the understanding around us and make the mighty that lead us understand that science without conscience will ruin the soul and that a world without a soul is doomed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

To respect life is not solely a matter of not killing. It is a matter of allowing life to fulfil itself, of ensuring such conditions as will allow the harmonious and free development of the human being.

While some want abolition of the death penalty for the murderer or the robber, claiming that it does not befit us to do justice and that God alone has the right of life and death, others, and often they are the same, favour abortion which is nothing other than murder.

Mr. Speaker, let us be realistic. The society in which we live must be made to recognize the right to live at all times, must be made to fulfil its true role. But first of all, what is society? Robert Rochon recently gave us an excellent definition in La Presse and I quote:

> A society is a group of men joined in a single community by nature, by law or by agreement. It is the moral union of intelligent beings, grouped in a stable and efficient way to achieve a common and chosen object. Now, that moral union of intelligent beings has three essential elements to achieve this goal:
>
> 1. Common purpose toward an end known to and wanted by all;
> 2. Common willingness to achieve this end;
> 3. Co-ordination in the means leading to this end, and thence the necessity of one common authority.
>
> Relationship between the members of the social body as such is determined by the purpose of the society and ordered by it. That group of men or intelligent beings is therefore a social fact consisting essentially in the behaviour of its members.
>
> Hence the necessity of complying with principles, practices, moral or legal rules.

These rules, Mr. Speaker, must be followed and respected by all, without exception, failing which sanctions must be taken according to the gravity of the offence against society, but it is not enough to act severely, we must get at the crime, at its roots by improving our methods of crime prevention, detection and prosecution.

Let there first be an end to murder and then capital punishment will no longer be necessary.

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a modest contribution on the motion now before the house as to whether the death penalty, as provided for in the Criminal Code, must be abolished altogether or whether it should be retained.

This question has a high degree of interest for public opinion and is not only controversial, but gives rise to very subjective stands. I am pleased to find that parliament agrees to settle this vital question through a free vote, one which is not subject to party discipline, for it is very binding on each member's conscience.

Mr. Speaker, what are the arguments put forward by the abolitionists? That it is morally wrong for the state, or for a person, to take a human life, in contravention with the Christian principles and human and social rules characteristic of a modern society. That it is a barbaric and outmoded punishment which is not consistent anymore with our modern ethics or philosophy, and most of the civilized countries have successfully abolished it. That the death penalty is but the expression of revenge by society against a murderer, and undesirable.

It is asserted also that capital punishment is not an effective deterrent. It does not have any special deterrent effect as would imprisonment. A great proportion of murders are committed in anger, and then, the consequences have no deterrent effect. On the other hand, whoever plans to escape justice is not influenced by capital punishment. Only the normal, law-abiding citizen could control his impulses when considering the punishment and at any rate, he would not commit murder. The certainty of being discovered and caught has a most effective deterrent effect, and the study of behaviour supports this argument.

It is maintained that a large proportion of murderers are not fully responsible for their actions and that the threat of this or that punishment would therefore not stop them.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a brief summary of the various arguments put forward by the supporters of the abolition of capital punishment.

I have no intention to extend my speech unduly, but I should like to refute those few considerations, and draw from them some conclusions.

The nature of the problem encourages those in favour of abolition to express their opinion openly and dissuades those in favour of its retention from doing the same, because they are afraid to be considered as inhuman or even worse. To justify their stand, those in favour of abolition should demonstrate that capital punishment has proven to be a failure and that it is totally undesirable.

[Mr. Yanakis.]

One cannot measure precisely the deterrence of this punishment, but for lack of proof to the contrary, one must admit that capital punishment is a deterrent and, if one is opposed to that punishment, reasons other than lack of deterrence must be invoked. The fact is that we can never know how many people are dissuaded from crime by the threat of punishment, either capital punishment or any other. Since gratuitous murder is extremely bad from a moral viewpoint, punishment must remain severe in order to demonstrate the capital offence it represents against society. Otherwise, the eventual murderer will very likely assume that society does not consider such a crime as one of the most repulsive. Those in favour of the abolition of capital punishment are concerned with saving the life of the murderers and also with the possible result of leading to brutality which executions might have on the people in general. But most, if not all, abolitionists would retain capital punishment if they were convinced it would spare innocent lives. Most feel they would not be justified to endanger the life of one citizen. At a time when the state is losing ground in its fight against crime, we should be more concerned about protecting society than criminals.

Mr. Speaker, let us look at what is going on around us in our respective areas, how many crimes are committed: bank robberies or other robberies, armed robberies, breaking into homes where residents are beaten to death for money alleged to be hidden, rape of young children, indecent assaults, etc.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be tragic if capital punishment were abolished to be replaced by life sentence, when we know that our penal and rehabilitation institutions are not now provided with adequate personnel to face the many problems that will arise.

The time has not yet come to abolish capital punishment. Why should we show excessive zeal when our neighbour to the south, one of the most progressive, the most powerful and the most democratic country in the world, has deemed it wiser to maintain the death penalty in 42 of the 48 states, including all the major states except Michigan.

The Association of Canadian Police Chiefs, in their letter to us, say that it is most concerned over what it calls the contempt that is being shown nowadays for the law of the land. It states that the customary procedure of the government of Canada since 1957 of showing clemency for dangerous criminals by commuting death sentences to so-called life imprisonment has largely contributed to the present sad state of affairs.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The association is, moreover, definitely convinced that the death penalty is the surest protection police have against dangerous criminals.

I think the time is ill-chosen to submit the question of death penalty to parliament, particularly in view of the great mobility of the population, the urbanization of rural centres and the inflow, where control is probably not fool-proof, of undesirable immigrants who think our country is an ideal place for crimes and gangsterism.

We must support our police forces. They are our advance guard against crime and, through their association, they are asking that capital punishment be retained; their morale would be seriously affected if we did otherwise.

I have here some figures for six of the largest states taken from reports of the F.B.I. of the U.S. Department of Justice for the years 1949, 1950, 1951 and 1953, in answer to those who maintain that criminal statistics, in the end, prove nothing for or against capital punishment as a deterrent to murder. Those figures show that in five states that have retained the death penalty the rate per 100,000 population is lower than in Michigan, where it was abolished. The most striking example is that of Massachusetts where, with a population of 3,729,795, including Boston, the rate is 1.3 per 100,000, compared to 4.5 in Michigan, the population of which is 3,850,500. Even in a state as large as that of New York, where the population is 11,665,437, the rate of 3.1 is lower than that of Michigan.

Here are more figures:

State	Population	Rate per 100,000	Number of murders 1949-53
Michigan	3,850,500	4.5	806	(no penalty)
Massachussets	3,729,795	1.3	187	(with penalty)
Pennsylvania	5,699,131	1.7	717	"
New York	11,665,437	3.1	1,820	"
California	6,666,927	3.5	1,154	"
Ohio	4,924,372	4.2	1,055	"

Mr. Speaker, in the light of those few considerations and in view of those facts, I find myself unable to support the abolition of capital punishment. However, I would make a distinction between capital murder and non-capital murder. When homicide is committed without premeditation, in a fit of anger caused by sudden provocation, the accused should be recommended to the mercy of the judge or the jury. This should also be the case for those less than 21 years old.

The others, the hardened criminals, are a danger to society and their deliberate actions should be punished by death, which is just punishment for the vilest of crimes and which alone may atone for an unforgiveable crime.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the humble contribution I wanted to make to this debate in accordance with my conscience and for the welfare and security of society.

[English]

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate and I must say there have been some extremely informative speeches. Both the supporters of abolition and the supporters of retention have presented their cases in a very capable manner.

I do not intend to take much of the time of the house. However, I feel that we as representatives of the people are obliged not only to stand up and be counted on issues which come before us but whenever possible to explain why we take the stand we do. I know all hon. members realize that the subject matter of this resolution is extremely important, and it has been mentioned many times that each individual member is facing a difficult decision.

Most of the points pro and con have been brought to the attention of the house and I do not believe there is much new ground to be developed. Both retentionists and abolitionists have presented statistics to endeavour to prove their case. Other hon. members have quite openly stated that no amount of statistics can prove the case one way or the other. Therefore it is my belief that each of us must make his or her own decision.

I must say at this time that I have come to the conclusion that I must vote against the motion before us and I wish to state my reasons briefly. But before doing so I wish to say I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) who pointed out so clearly that, despite a widespread interest in what the House of Commons is occupied with, we are not deciding anything other than establishing the opinions of hon. members on capital punishment. It is my feeling that this opinion poll may result in a very narrow decision but it also could be a decision by an overwhelming majority. Any further action would then be the responsibility of the government, but we have no assurance that the government will bring in any of the suggested amendments.

Should the government decide to introduce legislation to amend the Criminal Code as the result of what is now considered a free vote, the house could then be faced with a vote on this subject according to party lines. This brings me to my second reason for supporting retention of the present law.

I feel and have felt for many years that when we as parliamentarians discuss the subject of abolition of capital punishment we are putting the cart before the horse. On many occasions I have said that the parole laws of our country should be amended first. This resolution says that we can amend them at the same time as we amend the law respecting murder, which somehow suggests it would be a routine matter. If it is just a routine matter let us do it first and see how it works out.

I am fully convinced that most of the retentionists and probably all the abolitionists strongly feel that our parole laws should be amended and therefore I ask, why have we not done this job? If this debate is going to prove anything it is the fact that our parole laws need amendment, and after the amended laws have been given a reasonable trial we may find that more hon. members may wish to support the abolition of the death penalty.

There are two other reasons why I intend to vote against the motion. I believe the law as it now stands, wherein capital and non-capital murder are clearly defined, is as close to satisfactory as we can make it considering our parole regulations. Second, I am one of those who feel that the penalty of death is a deterrent and as such gives some measure of protection to our law enforcement officers and to society in general.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, since it is late I shall be very brief.

First, I should like to say that I would have voted for the abolition of capital punishment if, in the first place, Parliament had provided for as long a debate on all the ways and means to ensure real social reform concerning the judicial system, the penitentiaries, the rehabilitation and re-education of those living on the fringe of society.

[Mr. Simpson.]

• (5:40 p.m.)

Second, if parliament had committed itself to amend the Criminal Code, more particularly chapter 217, Prisons and Reformatories Act; chapter 206, Penitentiary Act; chapter 307, Canada Evidence Act; as well as chapter 264, Parole Act and chapter 160, Juvenile Delinquents Act.

Third, if parliament undertook to amend section 660 of the Criminal Code with regard to habitual criminals, because I am convinced that if the Criminal Code were amended to read "shall" instead of "may", society would be spared many murders.

As an example, I should like to quote from a talk given by Mr. J. P. Gilbert, police director of the city of Montreal, before the Ste. Marie alumni association. I quote:

> To give a concrete illustration of the problem of habitual criminals, I wanted to quote figures, he said. I have examined the record of every individual involved in murder cases in Montreal, during the last fifteen months, a total of 30 individuals involved in some 20 murder cases.
>
> I had taken from the record what is called the "tally sheet" of these people. This sheet shows in chronological order, the offences committed since age 18. The number of offences on the sheet varies according to each individual from a minimum of four offences to a maximum of 46, the last noted being a charge of murder, some sort of crowning glory for their career.
>
> Those thirty persons have a total of 359 offences charged against them.
>
> Each tally sheet was examined and a line drawn at the exact point where the criminal careers of those individuals should have ended, because they became habitual criminals under the law.
>
> Now, and that is the most important thing, if at the proper time we had put an end to the criminal activities of those people through preventive detention, and if they had been given an indeterminate sentence, we would most likely have prevented, not only 20 murders, but also 16 robberies and 219 criminal and other offences, for a total of 255 offences.
>
> The legislator has provided for the use of an indeterminate sentence in the very case we are dealing with.
>
> It is our responsibility to make sure, in the best interests of society, that the law becomes operative. It is with a view to social protection, not for a purely vengeful purpose, that the Montreal police department intends to bring before the courts in the near future all individuals who, under the act, are habitual criminals. It is in the light of this and for the same reason that we are looking forward to obtaining the support of all parts of this society which it is our duty to protect.

In the fourth place, I would vote for abolition of capital punishment if I were given the assurance that the accused persons shall be given an equal chance. The crown should try to get to the truth much more than to have a man convicted, as may happen in some cases.

For this, I suggest that the crown make available to the defence free of charge, instruments at his own disposal, that is detectives, investigators, experts in various fields.

In the fifth place, if we could provide our society with true and efficient means of rehabilitation, especially for the prevention of crime, this would mean that we should set up throughout our country re-education programs teaching what is right. Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt stated recently in this connection:

> What is the use of re-educating those who live on the fringe of society if, on the other hand, they are taught evil.

"In conscience," say the abolitionists. As far as I am concerned, my conscience tells me that the first thing that should be of concern to me, for the time being, as representative of the riding of Levis, is that I have to do my duty to the best of my knowledge and according to the mandate given to me.

Hence, I shall say that if there were judicial errors, as has been argued many times, but this has never been proved—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 5:45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to standing order 56 (4d) to interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment before the house.

[English]

Order. It being 5.45 p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to special order made on Thursday, March 31, 1966, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the amendment now before the house. Is the house ready for the question?

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) which was negatived on the following division:

• (5:50 p.m.)

Divisions

YEAS

Messrs:

Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Baldwin
Ballard
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Beer
Bell (Carleton)
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Brand
Brewin
Brown
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Carter
Cashin
Chrétien
Clancy
Coté (Longueuil)
Davis
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Douglas
Drury
Dubé
Enns
Fairweather
Faulkner
Favreau
Fawcett
Forrestall
Foy
Gendron
Gilbert
Goyer
Grafftey
Granger
Gray
Greene
Haidasz
Harley
Hellyer
Herridge
Hopkins
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Hymmen
Klein
Knowles
Lamontagne
Legault
Lewis
Macaluso
MacDonald (Prince)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
Mackasey
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McKinley
McNulty
Marchand
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matheson
Munro
Nasserden
Neveu
Nicholson
Nugent
Olson
Orange
Orlikow
Otto
Pearson
Pelletier
Pennell
Pepin
Peters
Pickersgill
Prittie
Prud'homme
Rapp
Rideout (Mrs.)
Roxburgh
Saltsman
Sauvé
Schreyer
Scott (Danforth)
Sharp
Sherman
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Tolmie
Tremblay
Trudeau
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Winch
Winters—113.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allard
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Beaulieu
Béchard
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Bigg
Bower
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cantin
Caouette
Cardin
Caron
Chatterton
Choquette
Churchill
Clermont
Coates
Code
Comtois
Côté (Dorchester)
Cowan
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Deachman
Dionne
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fane
Flemming
Forbes
Forest
Fulton
Gauthier
Godin
Grégoire
Grills
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Hees
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (Jasper-Edson)

Horner (The Battlefords)	Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)	Muir (Lisgar)
Irvine	Nesbitt
Isabelle	Nielsen
Johnston	Noble
Keays	Nowlan
Kennedy	Ormiston
Kindt	Pascoe
Korchinski	Patterson
Lachance	Pilon
Laflamme	Pugh
Laing	Régimbal
LaMarsh (Miss)	Ricard
Lambert	Richard
Langlois (Chicoutimi)	Rinfret
Langlois (Mégantic)	Robichaud
Laniel	Rochon
Laprise	Rock
Latulippe	Ryan
Laverdière	Rynard
Leblanc (Laurier)	Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
LeBlanc (Rimouski)	Simard
Leboe	Simpson
Lefebvre	Skoreyko
Lessard	Smallwood
Lind	Smith
Loiselle	Southam
Loney	Starr
MacEwan	Stefanson
MacLean (Queens)	Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Macquarrie	Thomas (Middlesex West)
MacRae	Thompson
McCleave	Tucker
McIntosh	Turner
McLelland	Valade
McQuaid	Vincent
Mandziuk	Wadds (Mrs.)
Matte	Watson (Assiniboia)
Mongrain	Webb
Monteith	Whelan
Moore	Winkler
More	Woolliams
Morison	Yanakis—138.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), Housing—consideration of Royal Commission on Urbanization; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), technical and vocational training—request for subsidization of teacher training program; the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent): Agriculture—eggs—Frequency of deficiency payments.

[Translation]

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED AMENDMENT REGARDING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purpose of

(a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

(b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and

(c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the speeches we have heard in this debate have been of a uniformly high order and have shown a great deal of thought on the part of hon. members. One could single out any number of speeches touching on both sides of the question for particular mention. I think of the very good speech made by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier). I did not agree with him but it was an exceedingly well prepared and well thought out speech. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) also made a very eloquent plea. I did not agree with him either but I think he gave a particularly fine demonstration of spontaneous speaking in the house. We also heard from, among others, the hon. member for Queens, and this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) spoke. Those are the ones I remember but perhaps it is invidious of me to mention them because I am sure I have missed some very good ones.

I had hoped to rise earlier this afternoon to indicate that I was opposed to the amendment and rise now to indicate that I am also opposed to the motion. I do not think that I am going to bring to the attention of hon. members any new argument one way or the other but I do feel, like all other hon. members, that this question is one which affects us personally. It is not one which was a matter of electoral campaigning. It is not a matter of political partisanship or party platform, and thank goodness it is not. Therefore one must explain one's view to one's constituents.

Right from the outset I would want to reject any impatience that has been shown by certain editorial writers or by some speakers in the house who, either because they have written articles or have spoken in the house and come to their own conclusion, feel that this debate should now end, particularly if other speakers in this house want to express a view which is contrary to the decision arrived at by these editorial writers or other speakers in the house. I can only classify that as some form of intellectual or moral arrogance and frankly it is more to be pitied than criticized.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I am against the resolution as I was against the amendment. Like my colleague, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), and others I feel that the burden of proof in effecting a change in the law is upon those who seek to change the law. This may be my feeling as a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, and I confess that so far their arguments have not been compelling enough to effect a change in the law as it now stands in the statutes.

I know that everyone has expressed his views bona fide one way or the other. I have a folder full of letters and petitions on both sides of the question. I would thank the people in my constituency and those elsewhere who have written me on the subject, and I am only sorry that I cannot agree with them all. But they have written to me according to their conscience, and I am speaking and voting today, I hope, according to my conscience.

I do not think that at this time there is any purpose in canvassing the argument whether or not capital punishment is a deterrent. However, the argument usually made to us to indicate that capital punishment is not a deterrent is that those people who have been apprehended and sentenced to death and questioned on the subject have said that it was no deterrent to them. But, Mr. Speaker, as indicated earlier this afternoon, there may be hundreds and thousands of men and women in this country who have been deterred. These people do not appear in any statistics. In the same way there may be thousands of men who have been deterred from committing armed robbery or any other form of crime simply because there is a punishment for that crime. If I may say so, I think the argument that capital punishment is not a deterrent puts in doubt the whole theory of punishment because it applies merely to what you might call the peak and not to the whole slope of the theory of punishment.

• (6:30 p.m.)

When we get to the very bottom of the slope we may look at the three or four-year old who will not raid the cookie barrel or the jam pot because he knows that if he does so without permission his little backside will be warmed or he will be slapped on the hand. That deterrent fear is fundamental to the theory of punishment and in my example we see it at its most elementary stage. I know that some people think it is wrong to punish three and four-year olds because this might create repressions in the child I will leave those people to their own opinions. In any event, that is my comment with regard to the theory of capital punishment not being a deterrent.

I must also pay attention to the views of the people who are charged in this country with the protection of society and the enforcement of the law. I disagree with some of them on many things at times but in this regard I pay attention to them. Our police forces have had far more experience than many of us in dealing with that segment of society which unfortunately runs afoul of the law.

Also, when we cast aside entirely the opinions of the Attorneys General of this country and the opinions of their officials who have the responsibility for administering criminal law, we are arrogating unto ourselves some sort of exclusive preserve with regard to the theory of the definition of the law of punishment or of criminal law in this country. We know that the majority of Attorneys General in this country have pronounced themselves in favour of retaining capital punishment. Their views are not to be cast aside and denigrated. The Attorneys General and their staffs are part of the lawmaking process and they have their right to opinions about capital punishment.

Another reason, Mr. Speaker, why I should not like to see capital punishment abolished is, frankly, that the abolition of the death penalty would reduce murder to the level of many lesser crimes in the mind of society. Let us look briefly at some crimes for which life imprisonment is the maximum sentence and for which crimes life sentences have been given. Those crimes include rape, abortion, robbery with violence, and treason which is punishable not only with life imprisonment but in the alternative with death. A habitual criminal who has been found guilty of at least three indictable offences may also be sentenced to life imprisonment. Is it intended to bring murder down to this more prosaic level? Murder is the most abominable crime against a human being. After all, we as humans have an inalienable right not to be deprived unlawfully of our lives.

May I quote briefly from the White Paper on capital punishment prepared by the Department of Justice. I quote a passage taken from the report of United Kingdom royal commission which sat from 1959 to 1963. As found on page 2 of this pamphlet it reads:

—We think it is reasonable to suppose that the deterrent force of capital punishment operates not only by affecting the conscious thoughts of individuals tempted to commit murder, but also by building up in the community, over a long period of time, a deep feeling of peculiar abhorrence for the crime of murder. "The fact that men are hung for murder is one great reason why murder is considered so dreadful a crime." This widely diffused effect on the moral consciousness of society is impossible to assess, but it must be at least as important as any direct part which the death penalty may play as a deterrent in the calculations of potential murderers. It is likely to be specially potent in this country, where the punishment for lesser offences is much more lenient than in many other countries, and the death penalty stands out in the sharper contrast.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that what was applicable to Great Britain in 1963 is today equally applicable to Canada.

May I now state my last reason why I would vote against the motion. I particularly refer to paragraph 3 thereof. It is my feeling that over a period of years the executive has improperly usurped power by setting itself up as a sort of super grand jury to examine every death sentence. These examinations are held under varying conditions. Cabinet may be dominated by two or three strongminded individuals whose personal views on capital punishment then become, by an indirect process, the law of the land. We do not know what quorums attend cabinet meetings, we do not know what members attend, we do not know what forms of pressure, political and otherwise, are going on in cabinet under certain conditions. These things are all in my mind. No reasons are ever published why a death sentence was or was not carried out.

However, by being critical of what is being done by the executive I do not subscribe to the view that this argument should be used against the retention of capital punishment. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I find it exceedingly strange that the present cabinet, without the sanction of the electorate, without the sanction of parliament, has by its own actions deformed the law. That law was passed by parliament which has the supreme authority to do so. It was not passed by cabinet, because parliament has supreme authority in this country. Cabinet has deformed by its actions the law which a good number of those present in the house passed when the Criminal Code was amended in 1961 to create two classes of murder, capital and non-capital.

My criticism of this wholesale intrusion by cabinet into the carrying out of the death penalty as laid down by law and with the safeguards now provided is that it is wrong. Except in exceptional cases where there may have been a recommendation for clemency, cabinet intrusion has been wrong.

I think that the provision in paragraph (c) of the resolution that parole from a life sentence shall be subject to review by cabinet is wrong. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that every stricture I have made against cabinet action regarding interference with the death penalty is applicable also to parole.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Political pressures can be very prevalent. I know this has happened. The position would not be made public. Who can appear before cabinet to make representations? It is the rights of individuals that are being made the subject of secretive consideration and decision.

I would much prefer that we have a parole board of experts charged with the authority for release from a life sentence. In the same way the carrying out of the death penalty should be on the recommendation of the equivalent of the Home Secretary, the Solicitor General, let us say, who with his staff would make the review, and unless there were extraordinary circumstances there should not be interference by individual members of the cabinet with respect to the decision.

In conclusion may I say that I think the law as amended in 1961 should be given a much fairer trial. It had only two years of application before de facto the death penalty was abolished by what I say was an improper action of the executive in deforming the law, perhaps not the letter of the law but certainly the spirit of the law, without any sanction from parliament.

This sanction from parliament, this law and these amendments we are considering must also be considered by the other place which is also part of parliament and whose views in this regard must also be consulted. Therefore I would urge hon. members to reject the resolution.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask the hon. member how he explains that the former administration on 24 occasions commuted death to life imprisonment without recommendation of either judge or jury while the present administration did so in only 6 cases? If he has criticisms, would they not apply much more forcefully to the previous administration?

Mr. Lambert: Without being partisan may I say that the hon. gentleman is a little touchy because my strictures did not refer to any particular administration except that I said this administration had de facto abolished capital punishment. Under the previous administration there was capital punishment but it was restricted from what it was prior to 1961 because prior to 1961 you could have had a case like Truscott which could not arise under the law today. On this point I say that if the cap fits it may be put on. I am speaking personally. I am expressing my own views and I am not putting any partisan tag on any of my strictures.

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution because one of the experiences that has agonized me throughout the years is the fact that the most serious crime in the Criminal Code of this country requires the least proof for conviction. In fact, more positive proof is required to obtain conviction of a person who might go into a five cent to a dollar store and pick a dollar item off the counter. The proof necessary to convict would have to be positive in that case whereas in the case of murder, which seldom has witnesses, we proceed by making proof through circumstantial evidence.

Notwithstanding the fact that I favour the abolition of capital punishment I would make a distinction in the case of policemen and prison guards. I would reconcile that with the theory that when I am asleep in my bed at night and a policeman is on his beat protecting me and exposing his life to danger who feels he needs the protection of the deterrent of capital punishment, I think I owe him the protection that he feels he needs in order to protect me. I would also make that distinction with respect to prison guards because if a convicted murderer is condemned to prison for life and then kills a prison guard he will have committed a second murder for which there is no punishment.

The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) said that we also have to examine the question of the definition of insanity. I agree with that but we also have to go into the question of how confessions are obtained. It is all very well for us to say in criticism of confessions obtained in the Soviet Union that they are the result of brainwashing whereas confessions obtained in Canada are quite all right. In this connection there are many avenues of the Criminal Code that we should consider in a civilized society.

One of the most abnormal things we do under our code is to charge a man who has attempted suicide with a criminal offence. I think it is wrong to take a person who is addicted to opium and throw him in a penitentiary, because he is obviously sick just as the person who attempts suicide is obviously sick.

It has been said that capital punishment should be retained for fiendish crimes. I would say that the more sadistic the crime the less responsible is the person who perpetrates it because that person is obviously sick. When I support abolishing capital punishment it is not because I want to do it for the sake of the person who has committed murder but rather for the purpose of raising the level of our own civilization because if capital punishment is not abolished today in Canada it will be abolished at some time in the future.

Recently I received a pamphlet circulated by the Communist Party of Canada which through a press release has asked the public and members of parliament to support the abolition of capital punishment. I would say to the Communist Party of Canada that I am supporting the abolition of capital punishment, but I would ask them to print 200 million copies of their pamphlet and distribute them in the Soviet Union where the authorities are still executing people for economic crimes.

• (6:50 p.m.)

The other day I saw, as did many hon. members, an execution that took place in full view of the public in Saigon. It was for an economic crime and it was a revolting sight. It did not act as a deterrent in Saigon, because the people of Saigon have revolted against the sight of this execution and now have demanded that the military government of South Viet Nam be replaced by a civilian government.

I do not advocate it, Mr. Speaker, but it would be interesting to speak about the manner in which the Bible has been brought into the question of whether we should retain or abolish capital punishment. It would be interesting—and again I am not advocating it—if back to back with the debate we are now having on the abolition of capital punishment we had a debate on euthanasia. If that were to occur we would have the retentionists going to the abolitionists and saying "Lend me your notes because tomorrow I am speaking on euthanasia", and the abolitionists would be going to the retentionists and saying, "Give me your notes because tomorrow I am speaking on euthanasia".

I am not going to quote Biblical texts, but if I were to quote Biblical texts it would seem to me that the one instance in which God sat as the judge in Biblical history and heard the case of the first murderer he called the accused before him, sat as the judge, heard the case and condemned the accused, but he did not condemn him to execution. He condemned him to what Cain described as punishment greater than he could bear.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask—when I am speaking in this manner it is a question of one civilization versus another—what kind of a civilization do we want to live in? I am convinced that the rehabilitation of criminals will not be brought about through psychiatry. Incidentally, I feel that psychiatry has failed in rehabilitation, one field in which it could have shown its worth. I do not believe rehabilitation lies in psychiatry. I do not believe it lies in sociology or in the probation officer. I think it lies in chemistry. In the future we will treat a criminal as we treat a person today who has diabetes. The chemical imbalance which exists in the criminal and which makes him a Mr. Hyde instead of a Dr. Jekyll will be found.

I should like to quote an article which appeared in Time magazine, the issue of February 25, 1966. It reads as follows:

> In general, drug control of personality will be widely accepted well before the year 2000. If a wife or husband seems to be unusually grouchy on a given evening, says Rand's Olaf Helmer, a spouse will be able to pop down to the corner drugstore, buy some anti-grouch pills, and slip them into the coffee. Or a lackadaisical person could be dosed into a sense of ambition. Electrical stimulus of brain areas has been shown to produce responses of fear, affection, laughter or sex arousal; such techniques, says Yale's Dr. José Delgado, "will certainly increase man's ability to influence the behavior of man".

If this be true, if it is only a matter of chemistry, then it indicates how uncivilized we are in this century to continue with the death penalty.

So, Mr. Speaker, with the exposé I have made I should like to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), which is in line with the type of amendment he moved. It reads as follows:

> That the motion be amended
>
> (1) by adding to paragraph (a) of the motion the words "except the capital murder of a police officer, prison guard or other person as described in subparagraph (i) or (ii) of paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of section 202A of the Criminal Code"; and
>
> (2) by adding to paragraph (b) of the motion the words "except in the case of the capital murder of a police officer, prison guard or other person as described in subparagraph (i) or (ii) of paragraph (c) of subsection (2) of section 202A of the Code"; and
>
> (3) by inserting in paragraph (c) of the motion immediately after the word "imposed", the words "or in respect of whom a sentence of death is commuted".

In conclusion I should like to say that the history of man has been a history of killing, but perhaps if we abolish capital punishment and every country in the world abolishes capital punishment wars in the future will be averted.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to some very fine speeches in the house on the pros and cons of capital punishment. Members have spoken with sincerity on both sides of the question. Sincere men can look at the same problem and have different answers. I did not support the five-year plan simply because we would have little if any more information than we should have today after four years of abolition. We do not have the personnel in psychiatry or in psychology to carry on in depth the studies required. Considering that in this country we have had four years when no one has been hanged and considering that only a five-year period was sought, I could not in all conscience vote for that type of resolution.

If the main resolution carries the government will have to present a bill in the house. I hope that at that stage it will be referred to a committee where witnesses can be called and where first-hand information can be obtained from those dealing with murderers. I mean psychiatrists whose practices have involved this type of prisoner over the last ten years, psychologists who have studied these prisoners, some of the penal officials who deal daily with those who have committed murders, and some police officers who are concerned with law enforcement and crime.

• (7:00 p.m.)

We could also receive first-hand opinions from members of the John Howard Society, which has such a great reputation for working over the years in the interest of criminals, in an attempt to rehabilitate them. Perhaps we should also hear the opinions of parole officers who work daily with these people, and police officers who have handled them over the years. Finally, perhaps we should hear information and opinions from penal officials who have worked with these people in these institutions and know of their shortcomings and good points. It is only by this method that we can decide fairly and honestly how to deal with the situation.

It seems to me that we are considering this whole situation from the wrong end of the scale. We should go back in case histories and find out why these people become murderers. We must go back and study the lives of the boys and girls in Canada who, after 15 or 20 years, commit murder. This is the target at which we should direct our sights. If we can prevent crime we will not have murder, and there will be no need for debates such as the kind in which we are now involved. In other areas we use preventatives rather than curatives, and I suggest this is the answer to the present problem.

At this time I should like to refer to certain figures regarding the number of individuals paroled. I think the average runs in the neighbourhood of 60 per cent, of whom approximately 95 per cent require some kind of supervision. I believe 50 per cent of those either requiring a little or a lot of supervision eventually return to prison. Mr. Speaker, I note that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson) is shaking his head. If he has anything to tell the house I should like him to do so because the figures I have cited are those I have taken from medical records and journals available to me.

It is interesting to note that in Canada we have on the average one parole officer for every 60 parolees. This figure is very poor when compared to the comparable figure in countries which have studied this whole problem and have obtained the best results. On the average they have one parole officer for every 25 parolees.

I suggest there is no value in a five-year trial period because we cannot in that time train the number of psychiatrists and other personnel necessary to a successful evaluation of the rehabilitative program in that period of time. If we do away with capital punishment we will be faced with one of two facts. We will either have our penitentiaries inhabited by people who have been sentenced to life imprisonment or we will have to develop successful rehabilitation measures.

One might be led to believe by the motion now before us that individuals convicted of murder would be kept in prison for a considerable period of time, until pardoned by the cabinet. However, if one considers the recard of the last four years he will realize that the cabinet will parole them all. It would be far more cruel to incarcerate an individual for the rest of his life than it would be quietly to put him out of the way. If we put these people in a prison for the rest of their lives and wash our hands of them they will gradually deteriorate in mind and body. I am sure if hon. members had an opportunity to talk to some of these people they would soon learn that fact.

Has our science of analysis and assessment reached a point that we can honestly decide which convicted murderers can be rehabilitated and safely put back into society? One need only refer to the records to come to the conclusion that we have not reached that point. I know of one particular case where a psychiatrist let a man out of the penitentiary on his belief that the prisoner had been rehabilitated and would become a good useful citizen. Within a year of his release he murdered four young boys.

These are the shocking things that one must consider in deciding in good conscience what should be done. We are unable to decide without doubt whether or not an individual who is allowed out of prison on parole is going to commit another crime. I remember the case of an individual who escaped from penitentiary. He had been confined there as a result of a conviction for armed robbery. He was recaptured, returned to the prison and considered to be one of the worst prisoners in that penitentiary. At one point he was confined to the black hole. After a period of time the people responsible considered that he had been rehabilitated. In passing perhaps I should state that this man moved step by step from being considered the worst criminal in the penitentiary to one having the highest position of trust, meriting permission to work in the library. Everyone agreed that he had been completely rehabilitated and should be released. The psychiatrist, his pastor and jail officials all believed this to be the fact. His case was presented to parliament through a petition and he was eventually released.

Following this man's release he travelled around the country addressing service and boys' clubs, giving them very good advice. It was strange, however, that within six months of his release a series of crimes occurred throughout central Ontario. Eventually this man was caught in the act of robbing a liquor store in western Ontario and in the attempted capture of him he was shot and killed. It is perhaps interesting to note that the crime wave then ceased.

I have just brought this case to the attention of hon. members as an indication that we cannot know absolutely and as a certainty what is in the mind of a criminal, or what he might do following his release. That is the situation which confronts us at this time.

In Canada today we have over 100,000 prisoners in our jails and penitentiaries, and it is said to cost in the neighbourhood of $20,000 to $25,000 per year to maintain these prisoners and assist in the maintenance of their families, while insuring the enforcement of the law, I suggest that is not an exaggerated figure when one considers the cost of maintaining families and providing police forces across the country. It does not take much of a mathematician to figure out that it costs approximately $2 billion per year as a result of the incarceration of the 100,000 prisoners now in our jails.

At this time we are acutely short of parole officers and psychiatrists. This parliament should begin to consider the major and overall problem of penal reform. We should do something to find out where crime really begins. I mention this with some feeling because we must go back and find out what drives these young people into a life of crime. We should not be using our time to consider hanging, but rather we should be devoting our energy, time and money to research in the field of crime.

In conclusion, it is my earnest belief that we should refer this whole problem to a committee in order that we can obtain the opinion of the experts regarding this whole matter. Having done that, we might be in a position to make an honest decision as to what is best for the individuals who have been unfortunate enough to have committed murder.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Stewart).

Mr. Valade: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would ask Your Honour whether we are in order in proceeding with the debate, in view of standing order 3 concerning a quorum. I wanted to be fair to hon. members who have something to say in this debate and I think Your Honour should decide whether we should continue or wait until we have a quorum.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that there is a quorum in the house. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I did not speak previously in this debate because I thought that the White Paper prepared by the Department of Justice put before the house in a very satisfactory way the arguments on both sides of this vital question. In addition, those who have spoken, as several hon. members have commented, have approached this difficult question in a serious and earnest manner. In other words, sir, I felt that the arguments which would determine whether I should vote for or against the main motion had been adequately explored.

This evening however something happened. The hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Klein) put before the house a most important amendment. In doing this he was following in the direction set the other evening by the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme). The hon. member for Québec-Montmorency had the misfortune to discover that his amendment was out of order. This evening the hon. member for Cartier has revived the substance of that amendment in a manner which I assume is in order.

In examining this complicated question of capital punishment, which has excited the earnest consideration of some of the most profound people of our western civilization for the last 200 years, I do not think it is correct to turn to what one might call "principles", in the hope that there one will find adequate guidance for the conclusion one should draw. We do not live in a perfect world; consequently, the principles that we sometimes discuss in an academic way, the principles we find set forth in books on philosophy, do not help us too much when we are confronted with practical situations. Therefore, sir, I do not find the arguments based on "principle" adduced on either side of this question helpful or conclusive.

It seems to me that we have to proceed in a much more pragmatic way. I do not mind telling you, sir, that if I had a plain choice between the retention of capital punishment and its abolition, my judgment would lead me to vote in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. I would be hard put, in defending that judgment, to marshal data or theoretical argument that would inevitably lead to that conclusion. Similarly, I think if I were arguing for the opposite judgment I would have the same difficulty. I do not believe that data or theoretical argument point to the judgment one ought to make.

In other words, I believe that one makes up one's mind on a question such as this chiefly by turning to all one's past experience, to all the practical cases that one has lived with throughout his life. I am saying that my own experience, such as it is, would lead me to favour the abolition of capital punishment, and I am quite prepared to insist that there are other members in this house whose experience would lead them to a different conclusion. These are the facts of life; and I think we ought to explain how we reach our conclusion in a realistic way and not by disguising our human fallibility behind an insistence that someone has conferred upon us, in this particular matter, principles which are certain and sure. While I am in favour of the abolition of capital punishment, I recognize that there are people who feel very strongly that those people whose task it is to defend our society and state from those who would destroy those institutions, namely those we often call "officers of the peace," ought to be specially protected.

I do not think it is inconsistent with my general inclination toward the abolition of capital punishment to support the amendment that the hon. member for Cartier has put before the house. His amendment is couched in legal language, and I had to turn to the Criminal Code to see what it was all about. I find that section 202A of the Criminal Code provides, in subsection (c), that murder is capital murder in respect of any person who by his own act caused or assisted in causing the death of "a police officer, police constable, constable, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, acting in the course of his duties." It goes on to say that murder is capital murder in the case where a person causes the death of "a warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, gaoler, guard or other officer or permanent employee of a prison, acting in the course of his duties."

The effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Cartier would be to modify the resolution put before the house so that the penalty for capital murder as now prescribed in the law would continue to apply to cases where individuals killed persons as described in the subsections of section 202A of the Criminal Code which I have just read. It seems to me that to accept this amendment is perfectly logical. I am in favour of the abolition of capital punishment. I realize that my judgment is quite fallible. I realize there are those who feel strongly that capital punishment should be retained for those who kill these classes of persons, and I am prepared to yield to their superior experience in this regard. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Cartier deserves my support and, I would hope, the support of other hon. members.

• (7:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, like many hon. members I shall deal only briefly with the question before us, one of the most important that we have to settle.

To this end, I shall avoid the figures of speech used by some of my colleagues in discussing this resolution, so that I may examine the problem with all the possible objectivity.

I shall also stay away from the emotional style, so that emotions will not replace the logic that should guide us when we are trying to determine whether capital punishment should be removed from or retained in our statutes.

Mr. Speaker, in order to determine whether capital punishment should be removed from or retained in our statutes in cases of capital murder, I think one should restrict oneself to the value of the expression "capital murder" or, if you wish, "premeditated murder".

To begin with, let me say that I probably lack the qualifications of a lawyer to deal with this matter, but with all the respect I can feel for members of the legal profession, I suggest it would be advisable to let those who practise law in a professional way assess the value of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, a premeditated criminal offence is devoid of all passion that could lessen the guilt of the offender. Such an act is committed viciously, in a dastardly fashion, when fully aware of the causes and effects, both for the victim or victims and the culprit or culprits. It is committed either for easy profit or to eliminate a person who might interfere with the illegitimate plans of a murderer.

Faced with such a situation, what is the responsibility and the duty of society toward those who set it up for their own protection?

In my opinion, this is the question which members of the house must answer: What is the responsibility and the duty of society toward those who set it up for their own protection? Responsibility, duty, obligation are imperatives which legitimate authorities must carry out with promptness, firmness and justice.

Promptness must in no way lessen prudence; neither must firmness prevent understanding, nor slackness replace justice. Dura lex, sed lex is a saying well known to our lawyers and which expresses very well the heavy responsibliity entrusted to those vested with the duty and the obligation of enforcing the law.

We all realize the great responsibility that rests with us in this debate, that of deciding whether or not we should maintain in our statutes the death penalty for a person guilty of capital murder.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said yesterday something amounting to this: When an execution takes place, we all feel involved. Yes indeed, how could it be otherwise since it rests with us to make the decisions required in the matter of law enforcement and protection of society?

When a soldier, as member of a firing squad, has to shoot point-blank a comrade in arms, does he not feel much more directly involved? Yet, he has to go through with it. It is his duty.

Our society is under the same obligation to do its duty.

To my mind, it is not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North has said, a question of whether it is right or wrong for us to take a human life but whether the elimination of the author or authors of a capital murder is the only means to ensure the protection we are bound to give society.

Such is the question we must ask of ourselves, and not the question put by the hon. member for Winnipeg North who, to my mind, is defending the objective by which we must be guided in discussing the merits of this resolution.

That, I feel, is the cornerstone of the decision the house is called upon to render.

May I be permitted to quote, as an example, a commentary recently published in Le Devoir, by Mr. Claude Wagner, Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec, former judge and a highly reputable lawyer when he was in private practice. Here is what Mr. Wagner said:

> At a time when crime is on the increase and when greater efforts are being made to fight all types of crime, especially organized crime, it is hardly necessary to underline the naïvety that would be shown by the Parliament of Canada should it decide to abolish capital punishment.

Mr. Speaker, if the death penalty is not a preventive, it is undoubtedly the sole protection of the community against repetition of the offence.

He who deprives another of the right to live forfeits himself that right.

At this point, one can rightfully ask questions which we must of necessity answer.

Would the abolition of the death penalty for capital murder give society the protection it is entitled to?

Does our society have means of protection against the murderer as efficient as the death penalty?

Is the sentence of death decreed against the murderer by society to be interpreted as a deterrent or as a vindictive act?

Is the society that frees a murderer more civilized than the one that does away with him?

What is the greatest risk for our society, that of hanging an innocent man by retaining capital punishment or that of endangering the life of honest citizens by abolishing capital punishment?

The first hypothesis is unlikely, since the legal precautions with which the judicial system has been surrounded in the last few years leave very little chance of hanging an innocent man by mistake.

As for the second hypothesis, Mr. Speaker, it will obviously remain as long as we leave potential murderers at liberty.

How many of the abolitionists would be willing to live with a reprieved murderer? The abolitionists might find the answer to this question disappointing.

Why? Because none of the possible volunteers would feel safe and agree to the experiment.

It is up to the authorities to ensure the greatest possible safety for the individual by all the means at their disposal, that is by legislation and its enforcement through delegated authority.

Of course, our society is deficient in its ways of preventing crime. Therefore, we should ask ourselves whether our society is taking every social, economic and educational step to eliminate as much as possible the causes of crime.

In this respect, we certainly have urgent, imperative and immediate responsibilities.

Murderers do not always come from the poor classes. Some belong to the upper classes of society. But criminals undoubtedly most often spring from among the poverty-stricken.

• (7:30 p.m.)

That is why I deplore the time devoted by the house to the matter of deciding whether or not we should abolish capital punishment, and that a period of time has never been devoted to a substantial debate on the means to fight human destitution in our country.

The pity shown the criminals would be better justified if it were shown the parents of murder victims or the poverty-stricken.

While waiting for this change of objective, it is our duty to point out clearly what primarily is the role of the legally constituted authority in our democratic society.

This role seems clear to me. It consists in giving every honest and law-abiding Canadian citizen the assurance to be able to enjoy fully his right to life, without danger of being deprived of it by anyone.

Those who, by their actions, act contrary to this basic and undeniable premise, must expect society to deal most severely with them.

This protection sometimes, unfortunately, entails the elimination of the guilty person from our society.

That is why I must in my conscience vote for the retention of the death penalty in our statutes, so that society does not consider itself forsaken by those who have been given a mandate to protect it.

Concerning the amendment moved by the member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) and the other moved by the member for Cartier (Mr. Klein), I think the first one changes nothing to the situation now existing in Canada, since the cabinet can, by decision, commute all death sentences handed down.

Concerning the amendment moved by the member for Cartier, I believe it has some merit, but it falls short of what is required, since it seems to be concerned tremendously, and justly so, with the policemen, the person in authority, but very little with the protection of the individual, of society which gave us, as I said a while ago, the mandate to protect it against actions deserving the most rigorous punishment. Let us try, Mr. Speaker, to build a society for law-abiding people, a society in which potential criminals, these parasites of society, will be aware of the consequences of their actions.

Why should legislation announce with fanfare to potential murderers that the Canadian parliament is considering their iniquities and is ready to absolve them at the first opportunity.

I think we must today take an extremely important decision, binding our conscience. I know and I believe that every member will fulfil this responsibility with justice and objectivity, for the good of his fellow citizens and his voters, the taxpayers who send them here to speak on their behalf.

Personally, I take my stand. I am conscious of discharging my duty and reflecting here the opinion of my constituents.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few suggestions which should be taken into serious consideration by this government.

I suggest that we should revise and put teeth in our legislation against crime in Canada; that we should control more adequately the sale of fire-arms and restrict it to specially authorized organizations.

I believe also that we should spend a lot of time in the house discussing the ways and means of improving the circumstances of human beings in our country and contributing to the rehabilitation of poor families in Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I agree with those who suggested, in the course of this debate, that a fund should be instituted in order to help the families of murder victims.

I believe that this request, which was made by the Quebec Federation of Municipal Policemen, is worthwhile and that the government should take it into consideration as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if, in previous discussions, reference was made in the house to a telegram sent by the Quebec Federation of Municipal Policemen, which includes more than 6,000 municipal policemen, in which they asked the government to maintain capital punishment in Canada and institute a special compensation fund to help the dependents of murder victims.

As to the amendment which was before us earlier, regarding a five-year trial period during which capital punishment would be abolished, I must say that it resembles strangely a suggestion made last year by a Labour member of parliament in Great Britain, Mr. Sydney Silverman who, when lecturing in Canada on a tour at the invitation of a member of the N.D.P. advocated that solution as a substitute or an alternative to the present legislation.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for the retention of capital punishment, not because I consider that this is a legislation of revenge and prevarication, but because I know that it is the only one we have, at this time, to protect our society against potential criminals and murderers.

[English]

Mr. C. R. Granger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in common with all other members of this house I have been giving the matter which is before us this evening a very great deal of serious thought. I have noticed from the speeches to which I have listened and the comments of my colleagues in the House of Commons that everybody has been giving the subject deep and earnest consideration. Personally, I have tried to weigh the relative merits of the arguments which have been made on both sides, arguments which seemed to be so well balanced that one appeared to offset the other, to the extent that it took me some time before I was able to come to a firm decision.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I did come to a decision. The decision to which I came was that I would have to support the abolition of capital punishment. Granted, there are many factors involved and there are some intangibles for which there is no yardstick. Men of good faith and high principles support both sides; and there is no doubt that the sincerity of the one side, regardless which side it is, is equally matched by the sincerity of the other side.

I reached my conclusion for two particular reasons, among many others, and I should like to deal with them very briefly in a few moments. I do not wish to cover ground that has already been well covered by speakers before me, but I should like to say that it is to be expected that the general character of the people of Canada will be reflected in their laws.

These laws are designed not only to protect society but also to encourage the continuance of the principles which have been an abiding source of strength to all people in our nation.

[Mr. Valade.]

• (7:40 p.m.)

In the present debate arguments are made both for an against retaining capital punishment. Those who support retaining capital punishment and those who support its abolition are both endeavouring to bring in legislation which will be for the the betterment of Canada. I think there is no doubt about their intentions. However I believe that capital punishment ought to be abolished, if for no other reason than that to some extent it is unenforceable. It seems that it is becoming more and more difficult to enforce laws on the statute books that prescribe capital punishment. Where hangings are concerned juries seem to be unwilling to bring in verdicts of guilty. Quite often when a man is sentenced to hang, the verdict is changed to one involving penal servitude.

As things are today a man knows when he commits murder that he has an excellent chance, if caught, of not being executed. Therefore what are the advantages of retaining capital punishment? Under circumstances such as these, any deterrent effect capital punishment has is negated by the fact that the sentence to hang is seldom carried out.

I believe that the value of a deterrent depends largely upon the certainty and swiftness with which justice is dispensed. As things are there can be no certainty that capital punishment will be carried out. It is almost certain that when a man is sentenced to hang there will be interminable delays. As I said, juries seem hesitant to bring in verdicts finding accused persons guilty of capital murder, when they know that the convicted man very likely will hang. As a result there are laws on the statute books which are not enforced. That being the case, I maintain that it is better to rewrite the laws than to have them ignored.

On the other hand if the sentence for capital murder were life imprisonment, in my view juries would not be reluctant to bring in verdicts of guilty. There would be a far greater certainty that a murderer would be found guilty and punished if it were realized that the consequences of murder were certain penal servitude for life. I submit that the real deterrent would be the realization by would-be murderers that the law would be enforced, and enforced swiftly.

Another reason why I think hanging should be abolished is the effect that I think legalized killings or executions have upon the public character. When I talk of this I realize that I am talking of something about which it is impossible to quote statistics. It must be a matter of opinion, and it must be something for which there can be only a belief. It cannot be substantiated by fact. I agree with the man who said that whenever a criminal dies on the gallows a little part of the nation dies with him. I believe that an execution by the state has a detrimental effect upon the character of the people. I believe it has a detrimantal effect on both the state and the people. Also, I believe every time a man is hanged, the dragon's teeth for future crime are sown. I believe by the very means by which we seek to abolish crime we are in fact sowing the seeds of future crime. I believe it is wrong for the state to take upon itself the prerogative to say that it is permissible to kill in the face of the divine command: Thou shalt not kill.

I believe, too, that it is wrong in this modern age, in a country known for its humanities, for its forward looking social thought and conscience, that we should have today as part of our system of justice an instrument of medieval murder which is comparable with the rack and the thumbscrew. I believe it is time that the people of Canada should banish from this land the shadow of the gibbet.

• (7:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate assuredly not because of the enthusiasm the question under study stirs in me. I do so rather out of a sense of duty, and therefore shall do it fairly rapidly. I have risen simply because I owe it to my electors to let them know where I stand with regard to the abolition or retention of capital punishment. Referring to the correspondence exchanged with my electors, it would seem that the question has not aroused their enthusiasm or interest very much. In fact, I have received only four letters from the people I represent in this house. It is interesting to note that, in one of them, one paragraph reads as follows:

—society must absolutely be protected against this wave of the most revolting crimes.

This shows, Mr. Speaker, that in my electors' opinion, retention of the death penalty reflects not a desire for vengeance but rather a means of giving society the protection it needs.

In addition to those written testimonies which I hold in my hand, I discussed the matter with several of my electors who all agreed that society should be properly protected.

Consequently, it will not be news for any of them to learn that I will act according to their wishes and that it will make it a duty to vote in favour of maintaining capital punishment.

During our debate, Mr. Speaker, we have heard the opinions of both sides, the abolitionists as well as the retentionists. I respect those who do not share my opinion and I hope that they, in turn, will respect the opinion of those who do not share theirs.

In the course of our discussion, we had the opportunity of listening to many arguments and, especially of realizing that those who favour the abolition of capital punishment have brushed a very sombre picture of the lot of the murderer who is lead to the gallows. However, I think they forgot to give the complete picture by not referring also to all the inconveniences and harm sustained by those who are related one way or the other to the event, the victim's family.

At this point, I should like to put the following question: What is the result of a murder, when the widow of the man killed must subsequently struggle with all kinds of sad situations? Was there any thought given to the very talented young man, who, for a lack of money to continue his education, must bring it to an abrupt end, thus losing the possible advantages of an enviable and very interesting job which he could have filled in society? And what about the numerous other inconveniences faced by the families of those victims of the deadly bullets of certain people who have lived almost all their lives outside the law.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is our responsibility to take the necessary action to protect society. Have those who are in favour of abolition paid enough attention to the fact that by abolishing the death penalty we would give free rein to the traitors who endanger the very security of our society, of our country? What about the leaders of organized crime, the hired killers and, finally, the habitual criminals who would never miss an opportunity to commit other crimes if they could?

Mr. Speaker, I might have given more attention to that motion if the crime rate today was decreasing instead of increasing. I think it would be a serious mistake at this time, and when the number of crimes is forever increasing, to soften the steps taken to eradicate crime in society.

I think it is our duty to keep our eyes open and to give the protection needed. You know as I do that today masked bandits and criminals operate in the remotest regions and commit the most odious crimes in front of people who watch them helplessly. My colleague from Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) told yesterday the story of a tragedy which happened just a few days ago at St. Robert, a very quiet rural community where defenceless people were ill-treated and where crimes which would make your hair stand on end were committed.

Mr. Speaker, I will not say any more but I would like however to be reassured about the steps that will be taken by the government if the abolition of the death penalty is approved tonight and I would also like to know the attitude of the government in case it is maintained.

Personally, I think that with the 1961 amendment it is almost impossible to send an innocent to the gallows. Therefore, I think that by applying the present law, we have the guaranty that everyone gets the proper protection and that, in cases where there is the least doubt, the accused has the possibility of having the facts examined and of claiming his rights fully as provided by the House of Commons and the statutes of Canada.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Mr. Jean-Paul Matte (Champlain): I admit in all sincerity that nobody wants capital punishment to be abolished more than I do, providing there is no one left to deserve it. Let the murderers and gangsters abolish it first, as a retentionist once said.

My colleagues spoke either for or against the death penalty with dignity, conviction and seriousness and they often used arguments or statistics that are open to question. Some indulged in sentimental statements and oratory which, in my opinion, should not have taken up so much of our time in this discussion.

Like other members before me, I should like to give you briefly my opinion and that of the great majority of my constituents on this matter that I find most delicate, one on which everybody has his own idea, while stating that capital punishment is neither a murder nor a vengeance, but a deterrent.

The countries which impose or have imposed it are not murderers; otherwise, you would have to condemn all nations of ancient history and many modern states that have always insisted on protecting the public interest. Even the Bible refers to it very often, as many pointed out during this debate.

Society, Mr. Speaker, was not formed by accident. It was the will of our Creator that it should exist. It originated in the nature of individual man himself, who is unable to pursue his goal alone and to achieve the full development of his own being without the help of his brethren. Society is not the result of man's will, but of the deepest needs and most imperious aspirations of his nature. It is of divine origin, like our own nature. It received then the necessary means to protect the common weal.

We have to decide if the state should retain or abolish capital punishment as a means which it has by its nature for the greater good of society.

We have been told that capital punishment was justifiable in the days of barbarism, but that in a civilized country it should not exist. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that there will always be, in the various strata of society, a certain category of people in whom the indestructible instincts of cruelty or vengeance will have to be held in check by the salutory fear of death and this applies to us at this time. I believe this. I should like, in particular, to protect those whose duty it is to maintain law and order, and who ask us to retain capital punishment.

Allow me to support most of the arguments of those who preceded me and who advocated retention, although I must say one of the arguments of the retentionists really shook me, and that is the one which accuses society of not having done enough for certain individuals. Society, it would seem, is responsible to some extent for certain murderers. This assertion leads us to ponder on our responsibilities and endeavour to do even better in the future.

I understood the numerous arguments on rehabilitation, but one wonders if we are truly adequately prepared to reform the convicted, materially, morally and spiritually.

Do we have the necessary competence, in quantity and in quality? An army of experts on the rehabilitation of criminals would be needed, and we do not have them. Considering the considerable knowledge required of competent psychologists, surely it is not with guards, more or less sufficiently remunerated, I admit, lacking the required specialized and continuous training, from whom only grade 7 is required and who are in direct contact with the criminals that we can, in spite of their willingness, infuse what it would take into the convicts.

We must also take into consideration the surroundings in which the prisoners live. They will try more readily to find means to escape and to learn new tricks than to mend their ways. Assuredly, many social and penal reforms should be made; we have made a start, but are we ready to give all these unfortunate people the help they really need?

When we are ready, we will be in a better position to consider abolition of capital punishment, because retention must not be an everlasting and absolute decision.

Mr. Speaker, even though abolitionists were perhaps better prepared for this debate through publicity, I am convinced that we must retain the death penalty at present.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to be as brief as possible and I should like to concentrate on society and its responsibilities. I do not want to repeat what other members have said for or against capital punishment, but simply to point out the responsibilities of our society concerning this vile crime deserving the sentence of death.

Mr. Speaker, the authorities have the right and the duty to punish the bad and reward the good. God Himself does it in this world and in the next. As all power comes from God, the authorities should imitate God: they should punish evil while tempering justice with mercy. Parents themselves, whose authority comes from heaven, have the right to punish and to reward; so have those to whom they entrust the education of children; so has the Church through its spiritual punishments; so has all true authority in this world.

The Ten Commandments of God, and especially one such as "Thou shalt not kill", apply to every human being, for each will be judged according to his virtues and his sins, his merits and demerits. The commandments cannot apply to society, for theft, murder, adultery, lying and so on, are sins and crimes committed by individuals, not by society. Society, through the authority of its legitimate leaders, has the right and the duty to protect its individual members and to punish those who harm them. If the 5th commandment of God forbids a man or those close to the victim of a murder to kill for motives of justice or revenge, because a man is not in himself an authority, society, which has the authority, must intervene and punish if necessary. In wartime, society kills, destroys, lies, cheats and violates almost all the commandments and it must not justify itself in the same way as the individual alone or a particular soul. Those who cannot make these distinctions can only live in confusion and make anarchic judgments.

The main arguments of abolitionists are based on emotionalism, sophism, the weakening of the authority required to maintain order, the contradiction of God's commandments, materialism and more often than not, atheism. They are based on a distorted psychology tending to abolish the notion of sin, of personal responsibility, and to find society guilty of all sins and crimes of individuals considered as victims of that society. And since criminals, through this reasoning, become the victims of society, it is felt that those poor victims must be spared, looked after, coddled and even pampered. Is this not topsy-turvydom, the negation of divine rights and authority, of the rights of society to punish evil and protect us from it?

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, our society also has responsibilities. It is entrusted with heavy responsibilities and great duties. The strongest, the richest and the shrewdest overwhelm the weak. It is the law of the jungle at its most ferocious, and it can only foster inequalities.

This is being felt in all classes of society. How many middle class or professional people are compelled to compromise with their conscience in order to live according to their rank and their class? Many of us would be amazed if they could scrutinize consciences and realize the disorder created by our anti-social and anti-human economic system.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Our economic system has caused more casualties than the most devastating wars for the last hundred years. We have a great many families who have lived like animals, in hovels, without medical care, without education, without the bare necessities, disinherited, robbed, dispossessed and thrown into the streets by the barbaric, heartless, slanderous system of usury supported by those who are or were responsible for the commonweal; those who protect such a system are guilty of greater crimes than those who have had the misfortune to commit an offence.

Mr. Speaker, several members have reiterated in this house that taking someone's life was forbidden, because life is a gift of God and only He can take it away.

Let us also recall, Mr. Speaker, that God said: "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword".

This is my answer to these gentlemen: Why then do some men take it upon themselves to organize national or international slaughters? If it is a criminal act to take someone's life, how criminal then are those who have eliminated thousands of human beings under the guise of defending Christendom, Civilization, Democracy, or the Homeland? If so many lives could be destroyed to save various countries, to protect them against aggression, it should also be permitted to sentence to death a habitual criminal for the protection of society. I think it is our duty to do so. But here again, a great number of those crimes are due to our anti-Christian, anti-moral and anti-humanitarian system.

I agree with the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) that we should put more Christianity in our schools, in our institutions, in our lives. Mr. Speaker, the day we have in our legislatures, men who do not fear what people say and who have taken the undertaking to act according to justice as revealed by God and to legislate so that justice prevails in Canada and in modern America, they can once more reveal to the nation the secret of permanent freedom and justice and show the world the great ways of a durable peace.

To that end, we must reinforce our army and increase its units; but we must above all organize another sort of army, an army of devoted revolutionaries, composed of men and women who will wage an all-out war on injustice and corruption because they will not be afraid of having their lives exposed, of men and women who do not protect the corruption of others, of men and women who do not despise problems, of men and women who will face problems with firmness instead of avoiding them, of men and women who will strictly apply the principles of honesty, purity and unselfishness in their daily life. We must not only seek to contain and check the criminal world, but we must change it, and, to that end, we must believe in the Lord's Prayer: "Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven."

If God's will is done on earth by men who listen to him and obey him, surely remedial measures can be taken at the political, economic and social levels so as to ensure education and change the environment.

All this is urgent, but it will take more than laws to face up to hate, dispel fear, destroy envy and put an end to colour, race and environment selfishness, which are the sources of our divisions.

Mr. Speaker, we have remained stunted in the moral and spiritual fields; we have to live with a civilization craving for pills and excitement, where people while away boredom by looking at sex films or films of violence, and taking pep pills or sleeping pills, or ulcer pills. Often we cannot bring unity in our homes, in industry or in our country, to say nothing of our incapacity to do anything in a world torn up by fear, envy and hate.

Nowadays, a nation should not be afraid to stand up and say what is right and what is wrong. If we uphold what is right, as God shows it to us, in domestic or foreign affairs, in our private life as well as in our national life, then our private life and our national life will both be spent for the eternal happiness of each and every one of us.

Mr. Speaker, capital punishment is the only penalty that fits the seriousness of the crime of murder. The punishment imposed for a serious crime should be commensurate with the horror it arouses in most people; in the final analysis, punishment is justified because it emphatically constitutes condemnation of a crime by the community.

From this point of view, some murders deserve the ultimate sentence, that of death, provided that justice be the same for all and that the influential, the upstarts and the rich share the same fate.

Mr. Speaker, the death penalty is a just punishment for the greatest crime of all and may alone atone for an unforgiveable crime.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, our society has great responsibilities. Before making a decision which will greatly affect society, its future and the future of crime in society, I would like each member to ponder the strongest arguments. I think that the strongest argument is to have recourse to punishment of the Divine Providence, to put the question in the hands of Providence.

And on these words, I close saying that I shall vote against the abolition of capital punishment. I shall also vote against the proposed amendment, which recommends capital punishment only when policemen or prison guards have been murdered for, in my opinion, the members of society must be protected and respected as much as any policeman. I know that they, whose duty it is to maintain order in society, are more exposed than the others, but that is no reason to protect only them. All citizens must be protected, equally and justly. Justice must be done, it must triumph according to natural law and divine law.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to take part whatsoever in this debate from the opening day of the five now devoted to this subject until the vote tonight, but in view of some circumstances which developed a few days ago I now wish to make plain the position of those of us who are called retentionists, of whom there are a large number in this house.

The government house leader introduced a motion some time ago which required the unanimous consent of the house, to set aside government business for three days in order that we might discuss a private member's resolution introduced in the names of four individual members of this house. This motion required unanimous consent. While it called for the abolition of the death penalty the retentionists in the house did not raise any objection to it, and we had three days' discussion on the question.

Upon the conclusion of the three days of debate, which was all that the abolilionists asked for, an objection was raised to continuing the debate because government business was being set aside and the national work of the country was being delayed and held up. The retentionists considered that there was very important government work to be done. As a result of the objection raised by the retentionists, and I am using that word in its plural form, we were able to pass the supplementary estimates for the year ending March 31, 1966 during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Then efforts were made to bring back into the discussion stage this question of the abolition of capital punishment. Unanimous consent was again required from the members of the house, including the retentionists of whom there are a large number. The retentionists are very, very anxious to have brought on to the floor of this house and discussed a private members' notice of motion which stands in my name. This notice of motion is No. 22 and can be found on page 26 of today's Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. It was introduced on January 20, two days after the house assembled, because the retentionists in this house are thinking of the victims of murderers more than they are thinking of the criminal element who perform the murders.

This resolution which stands in my name, but was introduced on behalf of all retentionists in the house, was drawn up properly by the senior law officers of the crown. You will find the wording as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the expediency of introducing legislation for the creation of a Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to hear the pleas of persons who have suffered permanent injury or disability as the victims of crime and award compensation to such persons or their dependents as would seem fair in the circumstances, and wherever possible to do so, to impose payment of compensation by criminals to those they have injured.

This resolution could be based on any one of a large number of cases, but I am thinking in particular of a murder that occurred in the area of Toronto in which I live. A little seven-year old girl was murdered by a man who was, of course, later judged insane. He was considered sane right up to the time of the murder, although he was then 24 years of age. You realize, of course, that in the first 24 years of his life they could not tell whether he was insane or not, but the moment he committed a murder he was judged insane immediately.

In other words, they take one half hour of his life, as compared with the 24 years he had lived and was considered sane, and find him to be insane. The little girl was in our Sunday school and when she was murdered, and foully murdered, a fund was started in the section of Toronto in which I reside and go to church. I go to church in the riding of High Park although I live in the riding of York-Humber. A fair collection was taken on behalf of the little child. The amount collected paid for the funeral, the funeral plot and left some money over for the distraught mother, her husband and the little girl's brothers and sisters. But once that little sum of money, which had been contributed by Christians and other people of compassionate minds and hearts, was expended, that was the end of it.

I was a newspaper reporter for eight years, although I was in the newspaper business for a total of 40 years. During the time I was a newspaper reporter I covered several murder trials and had the bitter experience more than once of having to interview the families of murder victims. In these cases I never had anything to comment except unfavourably, because of what results from the action of murderers.

We retentionists believe that the federal government should establish a financial fund that would make payments regularly to the families of victims of murder and other criminal acts. This resolution was introduced on January 20 and I made a personal plea to certain ministers that it be brought on the floor of the house before the resolution for the abolition of capital punishment was introduced. I received absolutely no answer.

I and the retentionists in this house have more interest in the victims of murderers than we have in the murderers themselves. If a person is flying in a Trans-Canada Air Lines plane and the plane crashes, such as occurred at Ste Thérèse, Quebec, and your loved ones are killed, you can collect from T.C.A., which I suppose you might say is the government. Some lawyer will get up and tell me it is not the government, that this is a crown corporation and is not the government at all. But we pay the deficits.

You collect from the government if you lose a loved one through an accident on—I said Trans-Canada Air Lines but for the benefit of those who want it I will say Air Canada. You knew what I meant when I said Trans-Canada Air Lines, anyway. If you are in the province of Ontario, and I cannot speak of the other eight as well, and a man—

An hon. Member: The other eight? There are nine.

Mr. Cowan: —driving a motor car runs into you or your loved ones and someone is killed, if you cannot collect cash from the person who caused the collision and the death in your family you can institute an action and collect compensation from the unsatisfied judgments fund administered by the Ontario government through the Department of Highways. I refer to a death occasioned by an accident involving motorcars. Or you might be walking up the street in your own municipality and trip over a broken sidewalk, fall very heavily on the ground, fracture your skull and die within a couple of hours or days. Then the family sues the municipality and receives compensation for the death in the family. But if someone in your family is murdered by a criminal, we turn all the strength of the crown in behind the criminal to see that he gets three meals a day, has a warm bed, is looked after properly and is given a psychiatric examination. What about the victim? The attitude is: The victim is dead; skip it.

I say that if we can collect through accidents in an Air Canada plane and from the government behind Air Canada, if we can collect from the government of the provinces because of a motorcar accident and our loved ones are killed or die as a result of the accident, if we can collect from the municipalities if we should fall or trip due to some faulty work in the municipality, the families of victims of murderers and other criminal acts should also be compensated by the state, because they did not bring the situation on themselves.

[Mr. Cowan.]

When I asked the law officers of the crown, on behalf of the retentionists, if they would prepare this resolution, I said to the law officers that I wanted it drawn up on the basis that the families of victims of murderers should be able to collect in a cash way, if not from the criminal—whom the abolitionists are everlastingly telling us are poor, poor, poor—then from the government. According to the abolitionists the rich are never murderers; it seems that only the poor are murderers. They never point out that 80 per cent of the world's population are poor, so of course 80 per cent of the murderers will be poor. They just refer to the large number of murderers who are poor.

If the family of the victim cannot collect from the murderer or the murderer's family, surely they are as entitled to collect from the state as the family of a person who is killed in an Air Canada plane, on the highways of a province or due to negligence on the part of a municipality.

We retentionists gave unanimous consent, although we could have withheld it, to have the discussion of this resolution against capital punishment resumed for a fourth and a fifth day. The newspapers, those men and women who sit a long way from us and can read our minds as though they were an open book—I noticed this comment in some of the mass media—said that pressure was going to be applied here, pressure was going to be applied there, the steam-roller was going to roll and the whips were going to crack. Let me say in all fairness to the gentlemen who have conducted this debate that there has been no pressure at any time, of any kind, applied to any retentionist. There has not even been any conversation with any retentionist. This debate has been conducted properly and in a high-minded way, I believe, by the ladies and gentlemen who compose the House of Commons. But the retentionists went along with unanimous consent because they wanted me to present this argument at this time.

• (8:30 p.m.)

We have co-operated. We granted unanimous consent for the first three days. We granted unanimous consent for the fourth and the fifth day. We granted unanimous consent so the leader of the Conservative Party was able to continue beyond his 20 minutes. We granted unanimous consent so that the leader of the New Democratic party was able to continue beyond his 20 minutes, although we knew both were abolitionists. We granted unanimous consent for the continuation of the debate from ten o'clock to 11.30 last night. We granted unanimous consent for no division to be taken during that period and for the day's adjournment proceedings to be deferred. We retentionists have granted unanimous consent on about ten different occasions in the last two weeks to aid those people who want to mollycoddle the criminal element of Canada by reducing the severity of the punishment stated in the Criminal Code of Canada. At this time we would like the house leader of the government, and the cabinet, to please allow the retentionists one day in which government business will be cleared away so that we can discuss this resolution No. 22 calling for compensation to the families and victims of criminal acts.

When the law officers of the crown were preparing this resolution, they said to us: You do not want this resolution prepared simply as though all the victims were murdered. They remarked: We know your heart and we know your mind on this point. If a girl were being attacked by, let me say, an ape, a word synonymous with this type of man, and she cried out, perhaps as a result of having vitriolic acid thrown in her face to blind her, and gentlemen came rushing to her aid while the ape disappeared, that girl might be left blinded for life, although she had not been murdered. These officers of the crown said that they had prepared this resolution to cover a case like that, also, where a person has been attacked by a criminal and has suffered permanent injury, the family has suffered damages and compensation should be made available to that family.

Now, of course, the situation is much worse in a case where the breadwinner is murdered and a widow may be left with children to look after. What compensation does the state provide? The state provides none. The retentionists are asked, out of their Christian hearts and compassionate minds, to contribute to a fund for the relief of those families where the breadwinner has been murdered. I say that before we start easing the severity of punishment on murderers, we should give consideration to looking after the families of the victims, not only of murderous attacks but of other criminal attacks.

On behalf of the retentionists in the House of Commons, I ask that the government—not in the distant future, not in due course and after consideration, not after the Easter vacation or when the matter has been given every possible consideration or an inquiry has been made by the justice department—grant the retentionists a day, right away. We retentionists have granted unanimous consent regularly during the past two weeks. The government has set government business aside. They have even set aside the discussion of the budget.

We simply ask for one day. We do not think that is too much, considering that we have given unanimous consent for a five-day discussion for those who want to aid and abet the criminal population. We now want one day so that we can direct the cabinet's attention to the question of arranging for compensation for those families who may have lost their breadwinner, may have lost the mother of children, may have lost a child in his teens whom they have raised at great expense and was just coming to be a financial satisfaction to his parents, only to be done away with by a murderer. A family may have lost a dearly beloved baby by a murderous attack. What has the state cared up to this moment? It has done nothing: The victim is dead, so let the dead bury their dead. It says, in effect: let us find the murderer, we will make a gentleman out of him by buying some more psychiatric couches, putting him in prison for life and feeding him well. The retentionists ask for a little attention to the families of the victims.

I do not intend to comment further on this debate, except to say that I am opposed to the amendment. I am opposed to the main motion. The man or woman does not live who can tell me that the persons set out in this amendment, a police officer, prison guard, constable, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, is of more value to me than my wife or any one of my three daughters.

I believe that the death sentence is a deterrent. The abolitionists believe that the death sentence is a deterrent or they would not be introducing an amendment such as this which would prevent the murder of a police officer or prison guard by holding up the fear of the noose to those who might murder them.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, because I have strong feelings about the question of law enforcement in general, because I have strong feelings about respect for the law, because I have strong feelings in connection with the loyalty and support that the citizens of any country should give to the officers charged with law enforcement within the confines of that country, I feel I should have something to say on the resolution before the house. Now, in order to refresh our minds, I should like to read the resolution itself. I quote:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Criminal Code for the purposes of
>
> (a) abolishing the death penalty in respect of all offences under that act;

I particularly draw to the attention of the house the words, "all offences". I continue to quote:

> (b) substituting a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment in those cases where the death penalty is now mandatory; and
>
> (c) providing that no person upon whom a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment is imposed shall be released from imprisonment without the prior approval of the governor in council.

I find myself looking at the meaning of the word "expedient". I realize that we in this house frequently use and understand the meaning of the word "expedient". However, this is not an ordinary resolution. This is a resolution that is going to change something which affects many people, something upon which we all have very strong views. I am one who has been impressed by the arguments that have been advanced. Some of these arguments have been temperate while others have been quite emotional. Nevertheless these arguments have been advanced, I feel, by people who feel strongly about this subject.

I looked up the meaning of the word "expedient". I find that the Oxford dictionary gives the following meanings for the word "expedient": (1) advantageous; (2) suitable; (3) politic rather than just. So far as advantageous is concerned, in this day of increasing violence everyone will ask what possible advantage could there be by removing a possible deterrent to murder.

• (8:40 p.m.)

With regard to the second meaning, that is, suitable, what makes a time when respect for human life is becoming less with each passing day a suitable time to be taking away a possible deterrent to the murder of the innocent? Then, we come to the last meaning, politic rather than just. Surely we, as members of this house, are not so much concerned with the letters and protests received from those who I feel, quite inadvertently, would appear to favour the attacker rather than the victim. I think we have to legislate to protect society to the greatest possible degree. This becomes our duty. I contend that in a period of frightening increase in crime in Canada it is neither advantageous, suitable nor politic to remove from our statute books the death penalty, especially in the case of certain heinous crimes.

I feel that in debating this question we are putting the cart before the horse, as was said this afternoon by another speaker. I feel we should be debating and diligently seeking ways and means to control the criminal elements in our society and to get rid of the international crime rings, which we are told are even now entrenching themselves in our country. No doubt these people are following this present debate with more than average interest.

I feel that we should be debating and seeking ways and means of strengthening the hand of our law enforcement officers rather than placing their lives in further jeopardy. I believe they deserve to be fully supported in their difficult job of protection, and that never should undue pressure be brought to bear upon them.

However, Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of what we might be debating here; it is what we are debating. What we are debating is simply whether it is expedient to abolish the death penalty and to replace it with life imprisonment, subject to certain reservations. I cannot subscribe to the general idea that there is a great advantage in bringing about such a change. I do not believe that such a change as this should be made in the statutes of this country merely upon a majority vote. I believe there should be at least a two thirds majority before any legislation such as envisaged by this resolution is passed.

I feel that we have to pay some attention to our law enforcement officers. We have ample evidence that law enforcement officers in practically every province of the country have expressed the opinion that the abolition of the death penalty is not in the interests of justice. Provincial attorneys general, judges and many people who have dealt with criminals consider that the death penalty is a definite deterrent.

This is not the first time that this subject has come before the house. But I believe that this is the first time the government of the day has asked the house for a yes or no decision in the matter. I believe that resolutions of this nature have been talked out previously, as we say here, but this government has asked us for a decision. I presume that an amendment to the Criminal Code will follow such decision, if favourable. However, it seems to me that the whole question is too important for it to be confined to the judgment of just a few people. I feel the question should be carefully examined by an impartial tribunal in the light of existing circumstances and amendments made in 1961.

Having mentioned the amendments of 1961 let me immediately recall what must be obvious to everybody. These amendments have been in operation now for less than five years. After a limited time of operation we now have presented to us a resolution which pretty well does away with the flexibility, if you like, of the amendments made in 1961. We have a resolution which seeks to change the law, one which expresses the view that the death penalty should be abolished.

The fact that this resolution is before us today suggests that something must have been lacking in the amendments made in 1961. Mr. Speaker, I do not subscribe to that general idea. I do not believe that there is anything very much lacking in the amendments of 1961. Therefore, as we come nearer to the time to vote on this resolution, why do we not look at the amendments to see what they embody?

In my opinion these amendments gave very definite and most reasonable protection to a person accused of murder, short of total abolition of the death penalty. Capital murder, as compared with non-capital murder, is clearly defined. According to the white paper on capital punishment which was prepared by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) in June of 1965, persons under 18 are exempted from capital charges. Up to September 1961 any person convicted of murder was sentenced to death. From that time on, owing to the distinction made between capital and non-capital murder, which was clearly defined, only those convicted of murders which had been deliberately planned or committed in crimes of violence by the direct intervention or counselling of the accused, were sentenced to death. The death penalty was also imposed for the murder of a police officer or a prison guard acting in the course of duty and which resulted from such direct intervention or counselling. Additional information regarding the charge of capital murder and the charge of non-capital murder can be found at pages 66, 67 and 68 of the book which I hold in my hand.

The present law concerning a person convicted of the charge of capital murder should be well known. But I sometimes wonder whether it is realized that the decision whether a charge of capital murder or non-capital murder is laid is made by the local prosecutor after consultation with the Attorney General of the province in which the crime is committed. Surely if there is any doubt in the mind of the Attorney General or the chief law officer of the crown in any province, the accused will be charged with the lesser offence of the two, which would be non-capital murder, and this is a protective feature.

Since 1961 an accused person is arraigned on a charge of capital murder only if the Attorney General or crown attorney is satisfied that that is the proper charge to be laid. From there on the procedure is well known by all. Twelve jurors are sworn before the judge and they hear the evidence. The jury determines questions of fact, the judge determines questions of law. At the conclusion of the cases for the prosecution and the defence the jury decides upon the guilt of the accused. Still another safeguard is the fact that the judge asks the jury whether there is any recommendation for mercy, and such recommendation, generally speaking, brings a commutation.

With the above facts in mind, it seems to me that those who argue that an innocent person may suffer the death penalty are talking about something most unlikely to happen in light of the amendments of 1961. The fact must also be faced—and I do not say this critically—that for the past three years the present government has commuted every death sentence. Commutations have become ordinary rather than extraordinary. I have always felt that every time there was a commutation there was a feeling of rejoicing among criminals.

It has been argued that the death penalty is not a deterrent to the crime of murder. I submit it is, and I base that submission on the fact that nothing is dearer than life itself.

The old saying that "while there's life there's hope" applies. There is another old expression to the effect that were it not for fear of the law, man would commit murder. These old expressions are probably clichés and trite, but nevertheless there is usually an element of wisdom in them.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Before leaving the subject of the 1961 amendments, I believe it is proper for me to say that a five-year trial period is not long enough. Before the present resolution was presented to us there should have been an examination made of the results under the amendments. Has experience indicated an improvement as compared with the situation which existed prior to 1961? That is one of the questions to be asked. Should the amendments be given a longer period of time in order to determine whether they are sufficient or insufficient?

One of my reasons for voting against the resolution before us is that the 1961 amendments have not had sufficient time to demonstrate their effectiveness or otherwise. I once asked a distinguished judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario his opinion on the abolition of the death penalty. I wish I could quote his reply. He referred to instance after instance of killers whose sentences had been commuted to life imprisonment, who were later released and sent out into society to strike again. One such man killed three times before he was finally condemned. The judge said: "My experience shows that there are people who are definitely killers."

In our determination to do what is best I believe we should be very much influenced by what is good for the defence of society. We must act in the public interest. The protection of law abiding citizens who still make up the vast majority of the people who sent us here for that purpose, must be put first. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe it is the duty of all of us to do all in our power for the protection of the people who have entrusted to us that duty that responsibility.

We know that there are organized gangs of criminals whose business is murder. Dare we say to these criminals these words; "Come to Canada where we have abolished the death penalty. It will be easier for you there to kill. In Canada there is no crime, no matter how vicious or often repeated, that is punishable by death. And what does life imprisonment, so called, amount to these days? Perhaps ten years and you are free again, the way things are going today."

Do we want to take the responsibility of having said that to any organized criminals? I, personally, am not willing to take that responsibility. Sometimes I think that there is altogether too much attention—and this has been mentioned by the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan)—paid by well intentioned people to the criminal who has committed murder, and too little attention paid to his victim. How terrible the experience of the victim must have been. What an agonizing ordeal the victim must have gone through. Put yourselves in the place of such a victim. It might be a small child; more often it is an old person living alone. It could be a taxi driver sitting unprotected on the front seat of his automobile. It could be a storekeeper with a cash register, and with something worth stealing. The victim could be a police officer on duty or someone who in the carrying out of community service must be out alone at night. The victims might be even whole families said to be rich, as in the case so minutely described in Truman Capote's much talked about book, "In Cold Blood". The book brings out the fact that the plan for killing a man and wife and two children was made while the two criminals were in the penitentiary. They heard that the people lived in a somewhat isolated place; that they were well to do people. The motive was robbery. A very cold-blooded murder was planned, carried out, and only a very small sum of money realized. My reason for going into some detail about this incident is simply to emphasize that we must be governed by our desire to protect the innocent and defenceless people at all times. That is my opinion. We may differ on how best to do this, but let us not differ in our concern for those who need protection. Let us not differ in the need to reduce crime and violence as much as possible.

An interesting sidelight on the criminal character is brought out in this best seller, "In Cold Blood". It is that the two killers so minutely described in the book would swerve their car and speed up in order to kill a dog on the road. Senator McGrand, organizer and first president of the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies said: "Where there is no respect for life itself, there is no real respect for human life". The victims of a killer have no judge or jury of 12 to say they should not die. They have no body of legislators such as are assembled today in the Canadian House of Commons to argue that they should not die. They die, and that is the end of it.

We have societies for the rehabilitation of the criminal. More power to them; they are needed. But I have yet to hear of societies devoted to helping the widow and children of a murdered man. I wonder why public sympathy seems to be so misplaced. Is it because the public has become so accustomed to see crimes of violence night after night on television, that many people now take death by violence as something which happens all the time, or as mere play acting? Can you not hear the words: "It is not real; it is just a show".

Unfortunately the play frequently turns to grim reality. I am convinced that many crimes, especially those committed by juveniles and immature adults, are brought about by what these people have seen on television. Violence on television is glamourized. You hear people saying: "Television is a wonderful thing". Yet, who makes a serious attempt to turn this wonderful modern medium into a means for education, for better living, rather than what it seems to be today, which is a means of education for delinquency and crime? I wonder if something ought not to be done—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton that the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed.

An hon. Member: How long?

Mr. Flemming: Thank you. An hon. member asks how long I shall be. I say, perhaps three or four minutes.

In voting on this resolution, I consider that I have no choice. I should like however to support legislation which will contribute to the protection of society. I believe I should repeat these words: Our responsibility is the protection of our people, who in many cases are helpless women and children against whom at any time crimes may be committed.

I say that it is clearly the duty of members of parliament to support and enact laws, and to vote money for the protection of those who have entrusted to us that duty and responsibility, and that great honour. Therefore, my approach to the question of the treatment of a person who has committed a crime classed as capital murder is entirely from the standpoint of what is the best course to follow in order to legislate a maximum deterrent.

It has been argued that many nations have discontinued capital punishment. That is correct. Many have gone back to it. Great Britain has once more abolished the death penalty. It has been referred to in this debate that in the year 1965 there was a most alarming increase in the murder rate. The Daily Express had the figures and they are here, but as the house has been good enough to allow me to finish my remarks, I shall not go into them. However, there was an alarming increase in 1965 as compared with 1964. I know it may be argued that the next year the rate may be down. However, the proposition advanced is not one-sided.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I was impressed by many speeches, especially that this afternoon by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas (Mrs. Wadds). I was also impressed by the speech made by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) a week or so ago. He asked questions. So far I have not heard those questions answered. These were questions that were troubling him and they are troubling me too. He wanted to know what life imprisonment meant. No one has taken the trouble to define it.

He referred to organized murder syndicates that exist in large centres both in the United States and Canada, syndicates made up of people willing to murder other people for money—blood money. No one has said anything about that. In completely renouncing the death penalty do we render their business easier to carry on? My hon. friend from Bow River also raised this question: Do we make life safer and more secure for law abiding citizens when we mollycoddle criminals?

It is my considered judgment that the amendments made to the Criminal Code in 1961 should be given a longer testing period. They are a far more lenient approach to the whole problem of the treatment of a murderer than existed previously. Why do we want to substitute something else after less than five years experience of something which was based on a more lenient approach to criminals? I fail to understand that.

I cannot support the resolution as presently presented. I favour retention of the death penalty for certain crimes such as premeditated murder, treason, murder of a policeman or prison guard, and for repeaters. My basic approach to the question is that I am convinced it would be most unwise to make a decision on what is really only part of the problem of the treatment which the state should inflict upon a citizen who has taken the law into his own hands and committed the crime of murder. I use the word treatment rather than punishment because I am sure in my own mind that no one today connects the death penalty with punishment for a crime. The removal of danger from innocent people is what the law was designed to accomplish.

When I vote on this resolution I am going to be influenced by the following: Do I vote to protect innocent and law abiding citizens from death by violence, or do I vote to be more lenient with the criminal who has deliberately planned violent death and has been convicted of the same after due deliberation? So far as I am concerned I shall vote to protect the law abiding citizens, and on this basis shall vote against the resolution as presently constituted.

Mr. J. B. Morison (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the opportunity of being able to express myself this evening because initially—and I am going back about 18 months—I was quoted as being a retentionist and against the abolition of the death penalty. Subsequently I was quoted as favouring the abolition of the death penalty. I did not come to this opinion without some study. My basic reading was on the value of the death penalty as a deterrent, and as I read the authorities on the deterrent value I wondered whether or not I was just emotionally wound up in this thing, and therefore I swung toward the abolitionist side.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Morison: I went back to my riding, however.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Morison: That is all right, Mr. Speaker. I represent the riding of Wentworth. There are 56,000 people who vote there and I do not believe they are all wrong; and when I returned to my riding and spoke to them I found the majority do want retention of the penalty. I was sure then that they were not all emotionally involved, that there had to be an idea behind it and, if this was the case, maybe I had approached the subject from the wrong point of view, namely whether or not the death penalty was a deterrent.

The more I looked at it the more I realized that this probably was an irrelevant argument. Nevertheless, as I heard many hon. members talk about the subject I started to look at figures, and in this connection I quote from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics report, catalogue No. 85209, at page 11.

There I see that murders reported to the D.B.S. in 1956 ranged about one in every 10,000, and homicide deaths resulting therefrom were 1.2 in every 10,000. This was a pretty consistent figure. It was .9 in 1955, 1.0 in 1956, .9 in 1957 and 1.1 in 1958. The corresponding homicidal deaths in those years were 1.2, 1.2, 1.3, 1.2 and 1.4 in 1958.

Then in 1961 we introduced the definition of capital and non-capital murder, and we had wholesale commuting of the death penalty through 1962, 1963 and 1964. Murders reported to the D.B.S. in those years were 1.4, 1.4, and 1.4 per 10,000, and homicidal deaths resulting therefrom were 1.6, 1.5, 1.5,—about a 40 per cent increase on the average. Whether wholesale commuting started the trend I do not know, but it certainly caused me to wonder whether or not I should re-examine the situation.

From the figures it appeared that either the deterrent value was not there or else the Canadian people were becoming more lawless in their outlook toward crimes of violence, and if this is the case then I can only put forward something of my own thinking. I am not going to dwell on the evolution of capital punishment. We have heard many abolitionists talk about the death penalty for nickel and dime crimes. This is no longer the case and I am very glad it is not. However we have refined the death penalty down to the point where it is only applicable for premeditated murder, treason, and crimes of violence. I do not believe that the death penalty is a neurosis of our judicial system. I feel it has been refined to the point where it is an absolute necessity.

Out last amendment to the Criminal Code in 1961 divided murder into two classes, capital and non-capital, and I do not believe we have had a true test of the fairness or the efficiency of this law. It is the erosion of this rule of law that frightens me, and I shall return to this later.

Today the death penalty stands as the supreme punishment for those who defy our way of life and prefer to live with violence and mayhem. It is not used basically as a deterrent today, it is not used as revenge: It is used as the basis of the security in which our people live.

It has amazed me how many people have told me, "I do not really know why I want the death penalty retained, but I do know that if it is abolished it is a weakening of my rights. It is a weakening of the protection I have against those people who do not want to live within the laws we have designed for ourselves."

It is all very well for the abolitionists to stand up and plead for the dignity of life and the salvation of a convicted killer, but I am not sure that John Doe, citizen, is ready to accept the return of these killers into society, or even that he wants the responsibility of looking after them while they are incarcerated.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I also have sat here for three or four days listening to this debate and I always have felt as I sat here with my colleagues—and I am speaking of colleagues on all sides of house—that we represent 18 million Canadians; these are the Canadians who look to us and ask us to decide on laws for their protection and for their welfare. I do not believe we are doing that when we are allowing the possibility, or probability, of some men who cannot live within our laws being turned back into society. Nobody has any guarantee he is going to be able to live there within the law, but everybody is afraid that he will take a life again or will again destroy.

Earlier I mentioned an erosion of the rule of law. I believe throughout the world today our legislatures are taking away the rights of the individual. They are taking away these rights in different ways, so that in many of the matters which are a part of their way of life, people are deprived of basic rights which would have been protected by adherence to the rule of law.

Akin to this there also is something which has worried me and given me great concern; that is, the general lack of discipline we have among us and a disregard for any authority. I think a good example of this is a report of picketing in Oshawa not very long ago. This report is to the effect that there were so-called picketers who had ignored a court injunction and who had torn up this injunction after it had been read by the sheriff. What makes it even more frightening today is that on that picket line were prominent people whom we like to think of as our leaders; one was Mr. C. H. Millard, one of the persons we imported as a trustee of the S.I.U.; another was the leader of the New Democratic party in the province of Ontario.

Another incident which has given me some concern—and it was mentioned earlier this afternoon—was the comment of one of our judges in Ontario to the effect that it was a waste of time to pursue a capital murder charge, and he went to the lesser one of non-capital murder.

This outbreak may have been poorly timed. Nevertheless to me, and I am sure to many people who read those headlines, it was indicative of the disregard in which law is held today through the ill use of executive power. Instead of abolishing the death penalty at this time, I say it is better that we return to the proper use of capital and non-capital legislation, with some hope that, if we here in the house give a mandate, the executive branch will re-examine the royal prerogative and use it, not as a salve to their conscience, if this is what they have been doing, or as a stop-gap pending new legislation, if this is what they have been doing, but rather use it in the circumstances for which it was designed—extraordinary circumstances with a plea for clemency from judge or jury, or both.

In closing I might suggest to the abolitionist who says there are two types of law, one for the rich and one for the poor, that it is a deplorable situation, but it should not be allowed to influence the erosion of law. It could be argued that the rich should be deprived of the right to legal representation because the poor cannot afford it. This is a problem which could well be taken in hand by a strong and energetic law society, if it feels that it has failed to provide good representation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the death penalty is archaic; I do not think it is useless, although I might say that possibly the way we administer it is archaic. If we are going to make a change, then let us not abolish the death penalty but rather change the way we administer it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Danforth.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): As everybody knows, Mr. Speaker, we now are in the dying minutes of what has been a long, interesting and thoughtful debate. In the few minutes which remain I think it would be impossible for anybody to add anything to what has been said in the way of information. I certainly do not intend to attempt to do so. However as one of the movers of the resolution I did wish to say one or two words about the debate, and if I have the time, I should like to make a brief summary of the position we have been trying to present. I do this, Mr. Speaker, because no matter what the outcome of this debate, I do not think in our own hearts any of us have any doubt with regard to the result which will be achieved here tonight. I believe the earlier vote is symptomatic of what likely will be the result when the main motion is called.

This debate may not have been the greatest debate in parliament, but to me, it certainly is the finest debate in which I have participated since I came to this parliament away back three elections ago in 1962. Some of us who are newer members, Mr. Speaker, at times despair that our parliament ever is able to come to grips with what we think are fundamental problems. We often, or at least I do, feel a sense of frustration in that we never seem to be able to come to grips with the problems which stir us and reach our basic emotions. I do not think we can say that any longer.

I have sat through all the speeches in this debate, because I was one of the sponsors. I think it has served an extremely useful purpose, no matter what the outcome may be. I think it has forced us as members to put aside much of our partisanship and has permitted us to discuss, think about, and deal with matters of life and death and our attitude toward these things and toward all society which we hope to lead and which we endeavour to govern. It has compelled us to think about the criminal as well as the victim; it has made us think about the victim and his relatives; it has made us consider the relatives of the murderer and the stigma which will follow them all the days of their lives.

Many of our members have conducted a refresher course in religion. This too has been interesting. It has forced us in this chamber to look at the whole range of our scale of justice, its treatment of the accused, its injustice to the victim, its failure to curtail crime, its admitted inability to rehabilitate the criminal, and has shown us that we do not even understand the cause of crime much less its solution. For that reason I hope the debate will have served a useful purpose.

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

I should like to pay tribute to the other co-sponsors of the resolution, throughout the course of the debate, for their co-operation; the co-operation of all of them was unlimited, unprejudiced and of the highest order; it was a great pleasure to work with them.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I want to thank, on behalf of the sponsors, all members in all parts of the house who have participated in this debate for the consideration they have given to the motion and for the manner in which they have treated it. I think all members who have participated—and I have listened to all the speeches—have spoken deeply, sincerely and honestly. Though I may disagree with many—indeed, I anticipate I will disagree with the majority tonight—I hope that nothing I have said or that my supporters have said will be taken by those with whom we differ as implying that they are barbaric, or lacking in mercy, or that their concern for the well-being of the community, the protection of its citizens and the suppression of crime is any less than ours. I say that in all sincerity.

I think, Mr. Speaker, this debate has demonstrated that in all parts of the house our objectives are the same. It is the means to achieve them upon which we differ. All members who have spoken have voiced a concern for dealing with the problems of crime and for deterring the crime of murder. The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) raised the whole problem of compensation. I suspect there would hardly be a dissenting voice in this chamber if a motion of that type were to come forward. Those of us who advocate the abolition of the death penalty have always suggested that we are not molly-coddling the criminal. We hate murder and we hate crime: We have just suggested that the methods we now use to control it are not adequate and are not the only unique deterrents. We have always supported the principle of compensation for victims.

If there is one sad note in this debate it is to me that in the midst of the entire five days we have not heard from three of the top judicial officers in the land. No matter what the outcome of this vote, to me it will always be a source of personal regret that we did not have the benefit of the views and experience of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) or the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell). I feel sorry that in the midst of this debate they have sat mute, in silence, their views, intentions and experiences unregistered.

In this debate those of us who support abolition of capital punishment have tried to develop its historical background to point out to the house that we are not really doing any thing new, but that we are merely taking the last step in a long process of evolutionary change. We have accepted the view from the beginning that there is no member of this house who likes hanging, and that all hon. members who wish to retain hanging do so out of a sense of revulsion but of conviction in their minds that it is the only effective deterrent to the crime of murder.

Mr. Speaker, we have disputed this suggestion and we have tried to put on the record the experience of other jurisdictions where hanging has been removed with no appreciable change and with no effect upon the population or upon its safety. We have emphasized our view that the whole question of emotion surrounding hanging inhibits and confuses any sort of systematic attack upon the problems of crime. We have said that the real solution to crime does not lie in this type of penalty, but in greater emphasis upon the strength of our police, their salaries, their training; upon more courts and more adequate methods of detection. I feel that all the emotion which has surrounded the problem of hanging inhibits, deters and restricts us in this very serious goal.

Above all, we have tried to suggest that this whole question should be dealt with in a calm, reasonable and rational way. Indeed it has been a source of surprise to me to sit in the chamber and observe the tremendous emotion that has been generated. I had thought that the point before the house was a very simple and narrow one, as to whether or not we could take the last step and remove hanging as the penalty for capital murder. Instead we have gone very far afield, and great heat and emotion has been generated. This is perhaps inevitable under the circumstances, when we are dealing with a subject that touches people so deeply and upon which they feel so strongly.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, I am only hoping to run out the clock for another couple of minutes.

The only other problem that has always confronted me relates to the role of a member toward his constituents. I know that the people in my constituency want to retain hanging and that I intend to fight against it. This raises problems that all members who want to give effect to the views of their constituents must face. I feel that this is not the kind of subject about which one consults his constituents. This is not the kind of problem such as medicare or the role of the state in planning, about which your constituents have facts upon which you can make decisions.

The problem we face tonight is of the type that can only be settled by study, by reason, by judgment and by experience. This is the type of thing that can never be made available through one's constituents. This would be much like the man on a jury who having heard all the evidence, then goes out on the street and asks the people what he should decide, on the basis of newspaper reports. There is a time to follow and a time to lead, and during an issue of this kind we face a time when parliament should lead the nation, rather than follow it.

In about one minute we shall take a vote. Speaking for myself, will accept the result whatever it happens to be. I realize that a defeat of the motion will raise very grave and serious problems for the government and certainly for the cabinet. My heart goes out to them because of the agonizing decisions they will have to make.

Having listened to the debate and having received the views of my colleagues in all parts of the house my mind is unchanged. If we are not successful tonight, let me say that we have only lost round one of the battle to take Canada forward, and the fight to abolish the last remnant of this ancient penalty is not dead and has not stopped.

We will begin again tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.30 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to special order made Thursday, March 31, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the main motion. Accordingly, the question is on the amendment. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Klein), which was negatived on the following division:

• (9:30 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Andras	Béchard
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)	Beer
Ballard	Berger
Basford	Bigg
Batten	Blouin
	Boulanger

Division

Brown
Cashin
Chatterton
Chrétien
Coates
Côté (Longueuil)
Davis
Dinsdale
Drury
Enns
Fairweather
Faulkner
Favreau
Foy
Gendron
Goyer
Gray
Greene
Haidasz
Harley
Hellyer
Hopkins
Keays
Klein
Laflamme
Lamontagne
Leblanc (Laurier)
Macaluso
Macdonald (Rosedale)
Mackasey
McIlraith
McKinley
McNulty
Marchand
Mather
Munro
Neveu
Nicholson
Olson
Orange
Pelletier
Pennell
Pepin
Pickersgill
Prittie
Prud'homme
Pugh
Reid
Rideout (Mrs.)
Robichaud
Rynard
Sharp
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart
Tardif
Tolmie
Tremblay
Trudeau
Turner
Walker
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Winters—74.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allard
Allmand
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Badanai
Baldwin
Barnett
Beaulieu
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Bower
Brand
Brewin
Byrne
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Cantin
Caouette
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Choquette
Churchill
Clermont
Code
Comtois
Côté (Dorchester)
Cowan
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Deachman
Dionne
Douglas
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fane
Fawcett
Flemming
Forbes
Forest
Forrestall
Fulton
Gauthier
Gilbert
Godin
Grafftey
Granger
Grégoire
Grills
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Hees
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (Jasper-Edson)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Hymmen
Irvine
Isabelle
Johnston
Kennedy
Kindt
Knowles
Korchinski
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh (Miss)
Lambert
Langlois (Chicoutimi)
Langlois (Mégantic)
Laniel
Laprise
Latulippe
Laverdière
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Leboe
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard
Lewis
Lind
Loiselle
Loney
MacDonald (Prince)
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McLelland
McQuaid
McWilliam
Mandziuk
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Mongrain
Monteith
Moore
More
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Orlikow
Ormiston
Otto
Pascoe
Patterson
Pearson
Peters
Pilon
Racine
Rapp
Régimbal
Ricard
Richard
Rinfret
Rochon
Rock
Roxburgh
Ryan
Saltsman
Sauvé
Schreyer
Scott (Danforth)
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Sherman
Simard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Teillet
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Thompson
Tucker
Valade
Vincent
Wadds (Mrs.)
Wahn
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Whelan
Winch
Winkler
Woolliams
Yanakis—179.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Is the house ready for the question on the main motion?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The house divided on the motion (Messrs. Byrne, Nugent, Scott (Danforth) and Stanbury) which was negatived on the following division:

• (10:10 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Baldwin
Ballard
Barnett

Division

Basford
Batten
Beer
Bell (Carleton)
Berger
Bigg
Blouin
Boulanger
Brand
Brewin
Brown
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Carter
Cashin
Chrétien
Clancy
Côté (Longueuil)
Davis
Deachman
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Douglas
Drury
Dubé
Enns
Fairweather
Faulkner
Favreau
Fawcett
Forrestall
Foy
Gendron
Gilbert
Goyer
Grafftey
Granger
Gray
Greene
Harley
Hellyer
Herridge
Howard
Howe (Hamilton South)
Hymmen
Johnston
Klein
Knowles
Lamontagne
Legault
Lewis
Macaluso
MacDonald (Prince)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
Mackasey
McIlraith
McNulty
Marchand
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matheson
Munro
Nasserden
Neveu
Nicholson
Nugent
Orange
Orlikow
Otto
Pearson
Pelletier
Pennell
Pepin
Peters
Pickersgill
Prittie
Prud'homme
Reid
Rideout (Mrs.)
Roxburgh
Saltsman
Sauvé
Schreyer
Scott (Danforth)
Sharp
Sherman
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Tolmie
Tremblay
Trudeau
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Whelan
Winch
Winters—112.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allard
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Beaulieu
Béchard
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Bower
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cantin
Caouette
Cardin
Caron
Chatterton
Choquette
Churchill
Clermont
Coates
Code
Comtois
Côté (Dorchester)
Cowan
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Dionne
Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fane
Flemming
Forbes
Forest
Fulton
Gauthier
Godin
Grégoire
Grills
Groos
Guay
Gundlock
Habel
Haidasz
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Hees
Hopkins
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (Jasper-Edson)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Isabelle
Keays
Kennedy
Kindt
Korchinski
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing
LaMarsh (Miss)
Lambert
Langlois (Chicoutimi)
Langlois (Mégantic)
Laniel
Laprise
Latulippe
Laverdière
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Leboe
Lefebvre
Lessard
Lind
Loiselle
Loney
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIntosh
McKinley
McLelland
McQuaid
McWilliam
Mandziuk
Matte
Mitchell
Mongrain
Monteith
Moore
More
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Olson
Ormiston
Pascoe
Patterson
Pilon
Pugh
Racine
Rapp
Régimbal
Ricard
Richard
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Ryan
Rynard
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Simard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Thompson
Tucker
Turner
Valade
Vincent
Wadds (Mrs.)
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Winkler
Woolliams
Yanakis—143.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate the business we propose to submit to the house tomorrow. First, item No. 6 on today's order paper, third reading of the ARDA bill; second, item No. 9, third reading of the aeronautics bill; third, item No. 26, committee stage of the Bills of Exchange bill; fourth, item No. 42, the C.N.R. branch line legislation; fifth, item No. 10, second reading of the fair wages and hours of labour bill; sixth, item No. 4, second reading to amend the Research Council Act; seventh, item No. 15, second reading of the Science Council of Canada bill; eighth, item No. 39, second reading of the bill implementing the tax agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom and the tax agreement between Canada and Sweden.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

TECHNICAL AND VOCATIONAL TRAINING—REQUEST FOR SUBSIDIZATION OF TEACHER TRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked a question of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) concerning the possibility of bringing teacher training under the subsidizing section of the manpower retraining program. I do not think it is necessary for me to point out to hon. members of this house the importance of all matters pertaining to education. At this time of year our newspapers are full of advertisements for teachers, indicating that the chronic shortage of teachers which has been persistent in Canada since the war has not begun to be resolved. I am sure we will all agree, too, that it is a matter of priorities in coming to grips with the general problems of education.

For many years in Canada and in this house there was neglect on the part of the Parliament of Canada and the Government of Canada with respect to responsibilities in the field of education. In recent years there have been major breakthroughs, and particularly I would refer to the technical training program which I believe got under way in 1961.

Since 1961, there has been some $1 billion spent in the construction of new vocational schools. The number of these schools has amounted to 880, and 337,878 new student places have been provided under our Technical and Vocational Training Act. I am sure that this brief review of the statistics will indicate that the problem to which I have referred, that is the shortage of teachers, has been confounded and aggravated by this one program alone.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

I am sure that it must have been an oversight when this particular aspect of the manpower program was organized to have neglected bringing under the regulations a subsidy provision for teacher training of recruits. It seems to me that it would be particularly helpful to the older worker who has been replaced by a process of automation and technological change, and yet has the necessary educational background, to go on to teacher training college and, within the short space of a year, prepare himself or herself for an entirely new career as well as make a very great contribution to the whole upsurge in our educational program.

This obvious oversight came to my attention when I had several people approach me indicating that they had not been able to come under the subsidy retraining schedule. It was a surprise, I found, to even government officials in the regional national employment offices. They tried in every conceivable way to bend the regulations, realizing the importance of a program of this kind. Unfortunately they just could not accommodate these persons within the present terms of the act. As a result, we were only able to assist these people by having them go on welfare during the period they were under training in a teacher training college.

I think it is significant, Mr. Speaker, that in the United States, which has embarked upon a vast program of war on poverty, one of the new programs contemplated by the President in attacking this problem is the provision of a teacher corps. Teaching is essential to any upgrading program. We have a shortage of teachers. We have people who are willing to enter the profession of teaching. I think it would be of great assistance to them if the regulations could be changed to overcome this unwitting mistake that has been made, and a program provided for preparing teachers for general schools.

Before you can accept students into these vocational schools, of course there must be preliminary education. I am sure, therefore I do not have to go any further in this presentation. In view of the fact that potential retraining candidates are now making plans for training courses next year, I trust that some action can be taken as quickly as possible to resolve this difficulty.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has brought many worth-while points to our attention. At the same time I think it should be pointed out that the training of teachers is clearly a provincial responsibility. Although it is part of the joint programs between the federal and provincial governments, the initiative in matters such as this rests with the provinces.

Assistance to the provinces in the training of technical and vocational teachers is provided for under program 7 of the Technical and Vocational Training Agreement. The number of persons trained under this program has increased considerably since 1961. In the past five years, 6,200 persons have been enrolled in teacher training courses under this program. The federal government has contributed $1.6 million to the cost of these courses. Since 1961 new technical and vocational teacher training centres have been established, or existing operations expanded, in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario. The four Atlantic provinces have jointly expanded the technical and vocational teacher training centre at Moncton.

Much of the foregoing increase in teacher training has been oriented to the preparation of technical and vocational teachers for secondary schools. It is true that teacher training for those engaged in the teaching of adults has not been adequately developed, and consideration is now being given to this aspect of the problem.

Some steps have been taken as a result of recommendations made by various organizations interested in this matter. This summer this department, in co-operation with Carleton University, the Northern Electric Company, the National Research Council and other organizations, is arranging a pilot project course designed to upgrade instructors in electronics. The department is also developing a concise package training course that can be used in teaching adults.

The crucial task at the present time is to raise the general level of skills in the labour force through training. While the vocational training of youths coming up through the school system contributes to this objective, it is essential to increase the scale of training among adult workers, and to achieve that requires an increase in the quantity and quality of teachers.

The National Technical and Vocational Training Advisory Council recommended last fall that the minister develop a plan to increase the number of competent teachers and administrators of technical and vocational courses, and to upgrade and retrain technical instructional staff. This recommendation is now being studied by the department.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I add that the observations of the hon. member have been noted and will be brought to the attention of the department for further study.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.36 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday April 6, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, April 6, 1966, it shall stand adjourned until Tuesday, April 19, 1966, at 2.30 o'clock p.m., provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the house shall meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time, and

That in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Motion agreed to.

SHIPBUILDING

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING FUTURE SUBSIDIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a telegram dated February 22 from the premier of British Columbia to me and my reply dated April 5, concerning future shipbuilding subsidies for vessels built for provincial account, together with a letter dated March 25 from the five federal Liberal members from British Columbia and my reply to them of April 5, 1966.

PUBLIC SERVICE

STATEMENT OF POLICY RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like also at this time to make a statement on the government's policy on bilingualism in the public service. I hope the house will agree that the importance of this subject justifies the fact that the statement is a little longer than would normally be acceptable.

It is the objective of the government to make the public service of maximum benefit to the people of Canada by attracting to it the most competent and qualified Canadians available in all parts of Canada. To this end, and having regard to the character of our country, the government for several years has been taking practical steps to encourage bilingualism in the federal public service as part of its fundamental objective of promoting and strengthening national unity on the basis of the equality of rights and opportunities for both English speaking and French speaking Canadians.

In a diverse federal state such as Canada it is important that all citizens should have a fair and equal opportunity to participate in the national administration and to identify themselves with, and feel at home in, their own national capital. The government hopes and expects that, within a reasonable period of years, a state of affairs in the public service will be reached whereby

(a) it will be normal practice for oral or written communications within the service to be made in either official language at the option of the person making them, in the knowledge that they will be understood by those directly concerned;

(b) communications with the public will normally be in either official language having regard to the person being served;

(c) the linguistic and cultural values of both English speaking and French speaking Canadians will be reflected through civil service recruitment and training; and

(d) a climate will be created in which public servants from both language groups will work together toward common goals, using their own language and applying their respective cultural values, but each fully understanding and appreciating those of the other.

• (2:40 p.m.)

In developing measures to assist those now in the public service more effectively to achieve a reasonable proficiency in both official languages and to improve the recruitment of civil servants with this proficiency, the government has been guided by the following principles:

(a) The achievement of bilingualism is in itself a desirable objective for any Canadian citizen. Where the need for bilingualism clearly exists in practice, above all in the national capital, it should be recognized as an element of merit in selection for civil service positions.

(b) In conformity with the merit system, which must remain unimpaired, the requirement for bilingualism should relate to positions, and not only to individuals.

(c) Bilingualism must be introduced gradually over a period of years in a manner which will not lead to injustice or misunderstanding. The various measures should be integrated into a well defined, long term program.

(d) It must therefore be a requirement of any program that, in areas where a need for bilingualism exists, civil servants and prospective recruits must be provided with adequate time and opportunity to adapt themselves to new conditions in the service in a way that will increase their own possibilities for a successful and satisfying career.

(e) For similar reasons of equity, the careers of civil servants who are not bilingual and who have devoted many years of their lives to the service of their country must not be prejudiced in any way by measures to develop bilingualism.

(f) The government will consult from time to time with civil service associations concerning its policy on bilingualism in order to obtain their point of view, and to provide them with all reasonable assurances and remove any possible misunderstandings in regard to measures being proposed.

On the basis of the above objectives of policy and principles of action the government has approved the following measures:

I. In respect of civil service positions requiring prior university training

1. (a) Beginning in 1967, reasonable proficiency in the two official languages or willingness to acquire it within a prescribed period of time through appropriate training at public expense will be an element of merit in the selection of university graduates recruited for administrative trainee positions where the need for bilingualism exists, as is already being done in the case of candidates for foreign service positions.

(b) In those centres where a need exists for reasonable proficiency in both languages, procedures will progressively be established for the filling of executive and administrative positions, so that by about 1970 in the case of appointments from outside the service and by about 1975 in the case of promotions from within, bilingual proficiency or willingness to acquire it will normally be a requirement for the positions in such centres; that is, where a need exists for reasonable proficiency in both languages.

(c) These procedures will not cover at this time the technical, professional and scientific positions in the civil service, the armed forces or federal crown agencies as these categories present special problems. The appropriate departmental and agency authorities are therefore being asked to submit a long term program of effective action in their respective areas of responsibility which takes these special problems and particular difficulties into account.

2. A special pool of positions will be established in the national capital to be used to facilitate the recruitment and to accelerate the development of candidates of high potential who are proficient in both languages.

II. In respect of senior executive officers

A special program for improving bilingualism among senior executive officers serving in the national capital will be undertaken. It is envisaged that each year some 20 English speaking civil servants from the most senior categories, plus their families, will spend a 12 month period in a mainly French speaking city, while some 10 French speaking civil servants and their families will spend a similar period in a mainly English speaking city, to study the other official language and gain an understanding of the cultural values of the group they are visiting.

In respect of bilingual clerical and secretarial positions, it has been agreed in principle that a higher rate of pay will be paid in future in respect of clerical and secretarial positions in which there is the requirement for a knowledge of both languages and where both are used in the performance of duties, providing the incumbents of such positions meet standards of competence established by the Civil Service Commission.

The present program of language training will be strengthened and expanded to make the most effective contribution to the development of proficiency in both languages in the public service in those centres where the need for such proficiency exists.

The federal government will undertake discussions with the Ontario and Quebec governments concerning the early establishment of a secondary school in the Ottawa area in which the language of instruction will be French, in order to meet the requirements of those who wish to provide their children with secondary education in French, and concerning other joint measures that would directly or indirectly contribute to the improvement of the bicultural character of the civil service in the national capital.

A special secretariat on bilingualism is being established within the privy council office under my direction. Working in close consultation and co-operation with the Civil Service Commission, the Treasury Board and all deputy ministers and heads of agencies, it will be responsible for ensuring the co-ordinated and progressive implementation of the government's policy and program regarding bilingualism in the public service.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express the sincere hope that on the eve of our centennial, all Canadians will share my deep conviction that the policy and program of the government on bilingualism in the public service will be to make a very important, indeed an essential, contribution to the promotion of national unity and to a great and stronger Canada.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say at once that any action to promote the objective set out in the concluding paragraph of the Prime Minister's speech will, I know, receive the fullest support from this group. Our record during the period we were in office was one of continuing steps forward toward the assurance of full partnership of those of English and French origin in building Canada, without in any way diminishing the rights of those millions from other racial origins.

During our period of office we, for the first time in Canada's history, made the House of Commons bilingual in fact. When I first entered the House of Commons anyone speaking in the French language received even less attention than those of us who spoke in English. Indeed, when a person spoke in the French language the house emptied because so many of the members were unable to follow what was being said. We brought in simultaneous interpretation.

• (2:50 p.m.)

During our period of office we brought about the opportunity for those of French language to have a larger share in high positions of government, something they had not had before. We made provision for the appointment of ambassadors of French language and French origin so that in all parts of the world the character of this country would be made clear.

I mention these things as evidence of our attitude. Indeed, it was under our administration that for the first time there was any recognition of French speaking countries in Africa for assistance from Canada, to the end that in a spirit of co-operation we would thereby epitomize something of the relationship which we have under our constitution. In addition, it was under our administration that Her Majesty's representative in Canada, the Governor General, for the first time since Vaudreuil became a Canadian of French origin. I mention these things merely for the purpose of assuring that the record is clear and not subject to the kind of misinterpretation which it sometimes suffers.

The constitutional rights provided for under the British North America Act, in the opinion of the Conservative party, are inviolable, and cannot be changed except by unanimity. We took the stand in 1946 when Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent was Prime Minister of Canada. When he as a constitutional lawyer expressed the view that the rights of language and education enshrined in sections 91 and 92 could be altered by a simple majority of parliament we said no, that could not be done.

Mr. Pickersgill: He never said any such thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was our stand. That was our attitude, and that attitude still prevails. Indeed, I can do no better than quote Sir John A. Macdonald when, within a year from his death, he expressed what has been the viewpoint of the Conservative party throughout the years. These were his words:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in some quarters that, by any mode whatever, there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to render it inferior to the other. I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible.

That, Mr. Speaker, has represented our view. Now, at a time when the report of the B and B commission, which has been spoken of in such fulsome terms by members of the government, has not yet been presented, we come to deal, not through parliament but through governmental action, with a major element in the whole field of bilingualism. Under section 133 of the British North America Act use of the English and French languages on an equal basis was recognized in parliament, in the Quebec legislature, in federal courts and in the courts of Quebec. There is also authorization for the publication of federal legislation and legislation in Quebec in both languages. These are sacred rights.

Sir, there are divisions within our country. There always have been. The Prime Minister hopes that on the eve of our hundredth year of confederation we shall be able to do something to solve those difficulties. We took the stand that in an equal partnership, constitutional rights should be maintained based on mutual respect and recognition. Speaking in February, 1963 on behalf of the government I used these words:

> There have, however, arisen from time to time, questions as to whether Canada, as she approaches the first century of Confederation, has achieved the full measure of the vision of the Fathers of Confederation.

I suggested, with of course the unanimous support of the cabinet and our colleagues in the House of Commons, that there should be convened a national confederation conference, which would deal with certain matters, including those now being dealt with in this rather uncertain, vague and evasive manner. At that time I said:

> The scope of the conference will be of the fullest breadth. It will be asked to study ways and means of repatriating the constitution; the problem of adequate representation in the public service, in crown corporations and other government agencies; the recommendations of the Therrien report—

Which, as Your Honour knows, was part of the report of the Glassco commission. Continuing, I said:

> —the choice of a national flag, and other symbols of our national sovereignty. In brief, the conference will be asked to examine biculturalism and bilingualism in a comprehensive manner.

In the light of events of the last three years, the demand for what was then spoken of has intensified in the intervening years. Sir, tremendous problems are facing us. All kinds of doctrines have been advanced. There was the doctrine of the two nations that was basic to the government three years ago, until the hon. member for Mount Royal decided on a reinterpretation of that concept. There was the theory of opting out, leading to isolation of the province of Quebec. It has now to all intents and purposes gone up in the smoke of the Liberal council fire in Quebec last week.

Then there was the theory of associated states. That was the plaything of the President of the Privy Council for a while who, until the advent of the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, gave the lead to the acceptance of this doctrine.

We took our stand against these things. We were said to be anti-Quebec. The interesting part of it is this. When we stood in this House of Commons against the amending formula, when all the provinces but Quebec had approved of it, it was said by some that ours was an anti-Quebec attitude. Now the premier of Quebec and all his supporters stand where we stood, because we realized that that formula would simply mummify the constitution of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Page the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Diefenbaker: As far as the hon. member for Kamloops is concerned, he is consistent. By the time the President of the Privy Council had monkeyed with that formula, it was changed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the interruptions, Mr. Speaker, may I say this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are now getting away from the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister which, it appeared to me at least, dealt with bilingualism in the civil service. I suggest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that we go to that subject.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order. After all, when he made this announcement the Prime Minister ended with the contention that these measures would bring about unity. What the Leader of the Opposition is doing now is talking about unity.

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order raised by the hon. member for Ontario, I suggest it would contribute to the unity of the country if the right hon. gentleman would not misrepresent a former prime minister of this country, who never at any time made the statement attributed to him about sections 91 and 92 of the B.N.A. Act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: Just read this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May we have order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not make it clear, apparently, to Your Honour that what is being done today affects just one sector of the question of bilingualism and that the problem should be dealt with as a whole instead of by the adoption of a piecemeal system.

The Minister of Transport referred to a former prime minister. I would point out that his guardian angel, Right Hon. Mackenzie King, never engaged in this kind of thing in all the years when he was in a position to do so, and he had all the support of French Canada in doing nothing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the last thing I want to do, Mr. Speaker, is to provoke controversy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am trying to quieten it. There was a great blowing of trumpets as to what would be done in connection with the civil service. Throughout the election campaign we were told what was going to be done. There were promises as to what the government would do. Why did they not consult with the civil service organizations of Canada before proceeding along the line they have followed?

Mr. Sharp: We did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is the reason? The statement made by the Prime Minister said:

> The government will consult from time to time with civil service associations concerning its policy on bilingualism in order to obtain their point of view—

In other words, we are going to do the thing and then we are going to consult. That is not the attitude which will bring about unity within the nation.

I want to know this, and I think there is reason for my asking the question. What about the 10 per cent merit points which were spoken of so highly very recently and which were announced by the chairman of the Civil Service Commission of Canada? We see nothing about that in the statement. The chairman of the Civil Service Commission said he had a right to bring in these things. I say the Civil Service Act was never intended to be interpreted in this way, and if there are to be any changes in the Civil Service Act those changes should be made in this parliament, not under general sections taken advantage of by the chairman for the purpose.

I want to know whether this 10 per cent additional merit mark is in effect. If it is, I would point out that the civil service employees' organization of the province of Quebec has come out against it as being discrimination against those of French origin. Is this system in effect?

Now, what about some of the other changes? It is most desirable to bring together 20 English families in a French area and 10 French families in an English area, but that is just the icing on the program. It is a fine thing to have the necessary training facilities so that civil servants may become proficient in both languages. But these arrangements are mainly directed toward the future; 1970. After 1970 there will be no promotion unless a candidate is proficient in both languages or expresses a willingness to become so. Recruitment at university level after 1967 will require reasonable proficiency in the two official languages, or willingness to acquire it within a prescribed period of time.

Then the statement goes on to utter these pious words; that the merit system will be fully protected and there will be no prejudice to career civil servants. If the government carries this plan into effect, those words simply are not factually correct. There must be greater assurance that those who are today in the civil service will not, as a result of changes made after their entry into the civil service, be prejudiced in any way.

I shall not go into the other details. Believing as I do in the need of measures to encourage equal partnership—to do what we did, in large measure, to increase the fields of opportunity for those of the French language and race who previously were denied reasonable equality of opportunity—we think this whole matter should be referred to a committee of the House of Commons to secure the fullest possible information and the latest statistics thereon. And then the Civil Service Act should be rewritten by parliament, not by interpretation on the part of the chairman of the Civil Service Commission.

We believe that since this matter is a segment of the larger question of Canadian unity, action such as this should not be taken until the report of the B and B commission is available, and that in any event only such action should be taken as would bring about in this nation a new sense and recognition of the contribution of the two basic races, and of the other races. This was our plan in 1963, which was prevented from implementation only by our defeat at the polls. We had in mind the convening of a national conference on confederation whose purpose and aim would be a declaration of goals for the next 100 years. This provides the only way in which we as Canadians, can satisfactorily look forward to the second century.

Bilingualism in Public Service

[Translation]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic party are glad to learn that the government has finally taken steps to establish bilingualism in the federal public service.

In my opinion, no one who fully understands the history of Canada can have any doubt that one of the deepest and most legitimate grievances suffered by French speaking Canadians is that they did not feel at home even in their own federal capital.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I think it is to be deeply regretted also that we had to face a grave national crisis before we had the common sense and understanding to take the necessary action, which is probably essential to the future of our country.

I should like to underline the fact that the policy I just mentioned has always been advocated by the New Democratic party. As a matter of fact, the resolution on that subject passed by our party's national convention in 1963 read as follows:

> In the federal public service, we should officially recognize the equality of both cultures and take accordingly the following steps:
>
> (a) After a reasonable period of transition, bilingualism should become a condition for admission or promotion in the federal public service.
>
> (b) A language school should be established for civil servants who wish to become bilingual. Courses at such a school should be given during working hours.
>
> (c) French and English should be recognized as working languages in the federal public service.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that today's statement of government policy is but the first step in a direction that will lead us toward a true and rewarding unity that will hold the brightest prospects for the future of our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will not be much longer, because I do not think it would serve a useful purpose for the unity of our country to introduce recriminations and exchange mere needles when we are dealing with a subject which is of such fundamental importance to the future of Canada.

I say, Mr. Speaker, it is a commentary on our failure for decades that on April 6, 1966 the Prime Minister has to admit that it is not now the practice for oral or written communications within the service to be made in either official language; that by implication he has to admit that it is not now the practice that communications with the public being served are normally carried on in either official language, and that it is not now the practice for the linguistic and cultural values of both English and French speaking Canadians to be reflected throughout the civil service recruitment and training.

I feel it is a commentary on the failure of past governments of both the established parties that almost a century after the founding of our country, with both English and French established as official languages, the Prime Minister in a statement to parliament has to admit that, in fact, the civil service has not been bilingual, and that none of the elementary things that would be required have in fact been done.

An hon. Member: What about Saskatchewan.

Another hon. Member: You are needling.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentlemen to my right and far right want to make reference to Saskatchewan or any other province, I will be delighted to debate it with them at the right time and in the right place. At the moment they might perhaps for a change leave aside their normal propensities and deal with the matter before the house.

Mr. Starr: Why do you not deal with it.

Mr. Lewis: In the Prime Minister's statement, Mr. Speaker, I noticed the suggestion that from now on he will consult from time to time with the civil service organizations in order to implement the policy he has outlined. One of the things we have regretted is that this was not done sufficiently before the policy was made and before the policy was stated. I hope the Prime Minister's statement will be carried out fully, and that the civil service staff organizations will be consulted at each step in respect of future implementation of the policy.

May I suggest finally that in order to get into the civil service, bilingual university graduates not only from the general arts courses but including also the technical, professional and similar graduates who are left out of the immediate plan, it will be necessary, in our submission, to start with the undergraduates in the universities and plan to open up for them opportunities for bilingual positions in the civil service so their undergraduate days will be given to training themselves precisely for such careers.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic party I welcome this statement of policy as a first step—and unfortunately it is only a first step, and we all are responsible for this situation—in the direction of a genuinely bilingual and bicultural Canada.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I wish to congratulate the hon. member for York South, Mr. Speaker, for the way he expressed himself in such fluent French. I thought the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister would have done so also, but they did not. I hope they will become bilingual as soon as they can so that we will hear from them in French.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think the whole house is rejoicing at this statement of the Prime Minister on bilingualism in the Civil Service of Canada.

I take this opportunity not only to congratulate those civil servants who are currently taking language courses either in French or in English in order to master the two languages, but also to congratulate many federal members on all sides of the house who are at present taking language lessons to become fluent in one or the other official language of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I would now add that for four years the Ralliement Créditiste has exerted superhuman effort constantly to assert the existence of the French fact in Canada.

I maintain we have made a large contribution—and we are proud of it—to the decision the government has taken to do what is being done now.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said a little earlier: We have had in the past Prime Ministers who did not pay any attention to the French fact, and in spite of that they received the full support of the French Canadian element or, in other words, the element of the province of Quebec. It is the case of the Mackenzie King government which lasted almost 30 years in Canada.

The English in the west are not to blame if we had sheep in Quebec, but we proved during those years that we had here sheep instead of people, capable of having the spirit and the letter of the constitution respected.

I think that we are now 50 years late. An old proverb says that it is never too late. Well, at the present time the attitude of the government is useful to the population as a whole. This does not mean that we will not have or that we will not see again narrow-minded elements or people in various regions of the country, including the province of Quebec. Those narrow-minded people are the ones who hindered Canadian unity in the past.

One of the objectives of that new policy is found in the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I quote here paragraph (d) on page 2:

> (d) a climate will be created in which public servants from both language groups will work together toward common goals, using their own language and applying their respective cultural values, but each fully understanding and appreciating those of the other.

That is the attitude which the Ralliement Créditiste is advocating not only here in parliament but in the province of Quebec because we claim that it is not by practising discrimination against others that we will move upward, but it is by showing the greatest respect for others that we will gain the respect of our fellow-citizens. It is time that the position of the province of Quebec on that point should be known and even more so because all English speaking Canadians will be given the opportunity to learn French and all French speaking Canadians to learn English.

Mr. Speaker, along with those people, we will realize the benefits that this understanding will create and will bring about for the greater good of Canadian unity throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, we heard a little earlier the Leader of the Opposition talk about the divisions which exist in the country. Those divisions are of long standing, they have been existing as long as Canada itself. We had people who pulled on one side for their benefit and others who tried to pull their way for the same reason. Those people did not meet. Communications at that time were very hard to establish, so that the lack of contacts, of meetings, prevented national unity from becoming a reality. We heard English people, Anglo-Saxon people, English speaking Canadians talk against the province of Quebec, against our language, our traditions, our religion, and we had at that same time people in our province who talked against the Anglo-Saxon or English speaking Canadians for the same reasons or practically the same.

This means that there were fanatics on both sides. The same is true today. There are fanatics even here in the federal parliament, people who cannot see further than the end of their noses and who, therefore, refuse to face the possibility of building a self-respecting Canada, a Canada composed of such elements as will enable it to develop and grow with honour and dignity.

Mr. Speaker, here is another point in the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister:

> It must therefore be a requirement of any program that, in areas where a need for bilingualism exists, civil servants and prospective recruits must be provided with adequate time and opportunity to adapt themselves to new conditions in the service in a way that will increase their own possibilities for a successful and satisfying career.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I endorse exactly the statement of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that Quebeckers did not feel at home in Ottawa. There is some truth in that. People from the province of Quebec hardly felt at home in their own province, in many cases, for instance, as concerned the administration of the R.C.M.P., Air Canada or the C.N.R., it was required that reports from Chicoutimi or places where English is virtually unknown, be sent in English to the head offices of the various crown corporations.

Mr. Speaker, not a single other province in Canada would have tolerated what the province of Quebec has put up with since confederation. It is time for a change. It is time that the province of Quebec be respected and that it be treated as an equal as every one just said; then, we will be able to walk with our heads up, hand in hand, toward a united Canada which will develop allowing all its citizens to go forward respecting each other.

Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement Créditiste is very pleased with the decision of the government. We are going to watch what will be done tangibly, and what will be done on a practical basis following this new bilingualism or federal bilingualism policy.

Mr. Speaker, all members of my group are pleased with this initiative of the government and we urge it to hold out in all parts of the country, from coast to coast, so that all Canadians regard themselves as Canadians, not as opponents.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure every one in this house shares the sincerity and concern of the Prime Minister as expressed in the last paragraph of his presentation to the house, in which he said:

> I...hope that on the eve of our centennial, all Canadians will share my deep conviction that the policy and program of the government on bilingualism in the public service will make a very important, indeed an essential, contribution to the promotion of national unity and to a greater and stronger Canada.

I believe the Prime Minister was sincere in making that statement, and that this is something to which all of us in this house can subscribe. It is my duty, I think, to say a few things in addition to what has already been said to re-emphasize the position of the Social Credit party and of myself, in our concern and conviction that Canada must achieve more unity than she has at the present time. We must go forward together to prove to the world that peoples of diverse backgrounds can live together in peace and harmony.

As a Canadian who is not a member of either of the founding races of this country I say that we have in our heritage not only an English and French speaking background but the backgrounds of those people who came from many parts of the world, with a combined force that can build unity and set an example to the world at a time when the world needs unity perhaps more than ever before.

I am concerned about several things, because I do not think the policy enunciated by the Prime Minister will achieve what he has expressed as being the goal of the government. A number of developments are taking place that I believe ought to be of concern to every one of us in Canada, even though we agree with the objective to which the Prime Minister referred.

Approximately two years ago the government established a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. It was given the responsibility of reporting back to this house and to the people of Canada on the state of bilingulaism and biculturalism in this country. By the end of this year, as we learned the other day, this commission will have spent some $6 million, yet we still have not received a report and we do not know when one will be forthcoming.

If one looks at the press reports of today he will find that the B and B commission staff are fighting among themselves about the very things they are supposed to solve. One side calls the other immature spoiled brats, and they in turn refer to the other as a privileged class who will not consider the rights of everyone. When we see what is happening in the B and B commission we realize that this approach is causing more disharmony in the nation than it is in providing solutions to the problems which it was established to consider. The thing that bothers me in this regard is that the government is moving ahead of this commission, which is spending millions of dollars to find an answer to the problem, and in doing so it is going on its own way.

Most of us in this house agree that in the past we have had one of the finest civil services of any nation in the world. The dedication of the type of people who are in our civil service is something we can be proud of. I suggest to the Prime Minister that at this time the morale of the civil service is in a shambles because on the one hand the reorganization of the government has not been clear and specific, while on the other, in relation to bonuses to be paid to persons who speak both languages, the government is moving ahead of the royal commission before considering the overall question or completing the necessary consultations.

I cannot understand why the Prime Minister and the government are moving ahead of the royal commission, and why they do not call for a report at this time. The members of the commission staff are not even able to get along or work together to find solutions to the problems, yet they are spending millions of dollars. One wonders how they can spend so much money, unless they are standing on the street corners throwing it away to the public.

• (3:30 p.m.)

It is about time this report was called for. After we have had a chance to study it I think the Prime Minister might be in order in making the same presentation as he made today. The Prime Minister has mentioned the fact that he is going to bring together the departments of education of Ontario and Quebec in order to talk about setting up a French language school in the capital city. I would remind him that there happens to be eight other provinces in this country apart from those two. For all these provinces and their people Ottawa is the capital of our nation too, so I consider that any program should be much broader than the one mentioned by the Prime Minister.

I would also remind the Prime Minister, as a point of interest, that last year the school board in this city attempted to set up a French secondary school. The school board gave its complete support to this proposal but only 140 people—this figure includes both English and French speaking citizens—expressed any interest in the school, and only 43 of these people were within the boundaries of Ottawa.

It seems to me that the Prime Minister, in spite of his sincerity and desire in making 1967, our centennial year, a year of unity, is moving ahead of himself and in so doing is defeating the very objective which is his and to which I believe he is dedicated. I believe that the Prime Minister, in view of what he has said today, has an obligation to this house, to the country and to the government he leads to call for the report of the B and B commission immediately; because, if we are to proceed with the policy he outlined today, there is no justification for that commission continuing its work.

The objective of unity in this country is one that I share and believe in with all my heart, because if we in Canada cannot live together in unity and develop a cohesive nation, what hope is there for the rest of the world? We might look at two examples in this connection; one is Switzerland and the other Belgium. Switzerland is a trilingual country in which the people get along and work together in harmony, as we hope we can in Canada. On the other hand there is in Belgium a situation that is tending to disrupt that little country. I would hope that the policies to which the Prime Minister is dedicating himself will not make a Belgium out of Canada rather than achieving the real objective of unity that we need and which is demonstrated by Switzerland.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I take the liberty of drawing the attention of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, who apparently wishes to participate in the discussion, to the fact that the provisions of standing order 15, paragraph (2a), do not allow him to speak now.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON NATIONAL WILDLIFE POLICY

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who has had to leave, I seek the consent of the house to table a statement in English and in French on a national wildlife policy and program. Because of its length I shall not attempt to read the statement. Copies were distributed to the party leaders and later today will be in the hands of all members of the house.

I do wish to say that this resource is of such great value that it has been the subject of extended discussion with and co-operation by all the provinces, and that we intend to discharge in full our responsibilities under the migratory birds treaty.

I shall say only that the government will build up its force of biologists and scientists and make their services available to the provinces. Because we recently announced a federal migratory bird licence, popularly known as a "duck stamp", I think it will be agreed that the policy and program I shall table today is of sufficient importance to be printed in Hansard of today, and if I have the permission of the house I would ask that it be printed as an appendix.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of statement referred to above, see appendix.]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the minister has been kind enough, as has been indicated, to provide copies of the comprehensive statement on wildlife policy. Having had an opportunity to peruse that presentation I should like to make one or two comments.

I noticed that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, in presenting the statement, referred to the ten provinces concerned. I have already been reminded by my worthy colleague the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that there are two territories involved in this presentation. I can assure the hon. member for Yukon that the policy as outlined and as it will appear in Hansard covers the two territories as well.

The statement indicates that the government has been studying the reports that came out of the resources for tomorrow conference. It is unfortunate that we have not had a government statement on the matter before today because, as all hon. members are aware, that conference took place some five years ago in the city of Montreal. I think it is happy timing, now that this announcement has been made, that it comes on the eve of national wildlife week. It is of course well known that the celebration of this week commences April 10. It is an occasion that is dedicated to the memory of one who is known as the father of conservation, the late Jack Miner. I think it is also significant that it comes in the year in which we shall be observing the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the international migratory birds treaty.

I should like to have spoken at greater length on the matter, but I realize that a considerable amount of time has already been taken up in the course of this afternoon's sitting. I would emphasize once again that the time is long past due when we must come to grips with the problem of wise management, on the basis of the multiple use concept, of our renewable resources. This will require implementation of policies at all levels of government.

The statement as I read it is a rehash of many of the ideas, as I have already indicated, that came out of the resources for tomorrow conference. If we are to have government action on these matters the promise that was made almost a year ago to the resource ministers council, when the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources indicated that a wildlife act would be implemented, must be fulfilled at the earliest possible moment.

I think, too, that the problems of co-ordination, because of the jurisdictional difficulties in the management of our wildlife, must be submitted more frequently and with more vigour and enthusiasm to the resource ministers council and secretariat. I hope this organization will be revitalized and will do the job that was intended for it when it was set up some five years ago. This will require intergovernmental co-operation as well. I notice this matter is referred to in the statement.

Above all we must pay tribute to the excellent work that is being carried out by private groups in the resource field. I refer to the Canada Wildlife Federation, which was one of the direct results of the resources for tomorrow conference and is carrying on a major role in the public information sector of responsibility. The same applies to the Audubon Society, and sanctuaries such as the Jack Miner sanctuary and the Alberta game farm. The statement reaffirms principles that were laid down five years ago and is a major breakthrough in dealing with this long delayed problem. I hope that the statement will be followed by government action.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): First of all, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our leader I want to thank the minister for his foresight in sending him a copy of his policy and program statement. As one who has had a lifetime interest in wildlife, and as a member of a party whose policy has always been the maintenance of wildlife in Canada, I should like to congratulate the minister upon the announcement of a national wildlife policy and program for our country.

I presume this announcement is the end result of the resources for tomorrow conference that was called in Montreal, in 1961. I must emphasize the fact that this is the first detailed statement of policy in this respect we have had since the calling of that conference. I do not underestimate the work that was done either in calling the conference or at the conference itself. I am pleased the minister did provide for his full statement to be included as an appendix to Hansard today. This is very interesting to large numbers of organizations in this country that have worked for the conservation of wildlife and fish resources in Canada, as well as many other persons. I am sure that as a result of the previous announcement by the Prime Minister respecting the civil service, and this very important announcement, many thousands of copies of Hansard for this day will be ordered.

We are very pleased with the minister's announcement of a general wildlife policy which will provide for research into the relationship between wildlife and forests and their effect on wildlife populations. We are pleased that federal research services may be provided to the provinces on request, and that the federal government may support research and management related to wide ranging wildlife populations. Furthermore, we are glad to know that the federal government information program will be designed to serve the interests of all governments wherever situated in Canada.

The first requisite for research into this problem, Mr. Speaker, is a sufficient number of professionally trained staff to undertake research and to administer a policy program when it is implemented. We are very pleased to know that Canadians will have an opportunity to share in the use of our wildlife resources and in the cost of their maintenance. In that respect I have read the announcement carefully and I think it is a very imaginative suggestion on the part of the minister that we should be prepared to enjoy our wildlife and fish resources and to share in the cost of their maintenance and development.

This party is very pleased that the general policy will be applied to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. This party is pleased to note that opportunities will be sought to promote intergovernmental consultation, and that existing arrangements for consultation and co-ordination among various federal agencies will be reviewed with a view to improving the situation as it exists today. The control of the migratory bird harvests will require consultation and co-operation with the wildlife agencies of the United States.

I cannot resist mentioning at this time, Mr. Speaker, that I look forward to this co-operation on the part of the wildlife branch of the minister's department with similar agencies in the United States. We know already that the national wildlife agencies in the United States have expressed their opposition in the strongest terms possible to the proposal made by the North American Power Alliance for the development of our northern waters. I presume also that the proposed Canadian wildlife branch will offer its services to the government of British Columbia for research into the effect of the Columbia treaty projects and the Peace river power development on wildlife and fish in these vast areas to be flooded.

We hope, as a result, some sound solution will be found to the present problem. This program does offer an opportunity, in the opinion of this group, for the participation of organizations and persons that have been interested in this very important question. I am sure, as I said before, it will be welcomed by all those organizations; the wild life federations of Canada and British Columbia, rod and gun clubs and many other groups. We hope the minister will consider also along with this program, as has been mentioned before, the need for a Canadian conservation college to train young men to administer a program such as this. I also trust, Mr. Speaker, that this announcement is just a prelude to the announcement of a national water policy for Canada.

HOUSING

STATEMENT RESPECTING WINTER HOUSE BUILDING INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): On several occasions during the past few weeks, Mr. Speaker, members of this house including my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs and officials of Central Mortgage and Housing and of the Department of Labour, have discussed with me the matter raised in the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, namely the effect of the flood conditions in Manitoba on the termination date of the winter house building incentive program.

I should like to say, first of all, that some general representations have been received from a few other areas to the effect that the time for completion of houses under the winter house incentive program be extended beyond April 15. These representations have been based on a variety of factors, including climatic conditions and shortages of labour and materials.

Hon. members will recall that during the previous two winters the termination date for construction under this winter house building program was originally set for March 31, but in each case was extended to mid-April. At the commencement of this winter's program the experience of the two previous years was assessed, and it was decided that the terminal date should be established as April 15. In view of this decision, and after reviewing the experience generally throughout Canada this winter, the government is not disposed to consider any further general extension of the period.

The situation in parts of Manitoba, however, is quite different. There is a possible disaster owing to the flood situation in the area between Emerson and Winnipeg. It is not practical, and in many cases not possible, to continue the construction of houses in flooded or potentially flooded areas. In fact I understand Emerson is being evacuated today.

Accordingly the government is giving the winter house building program in the potential disaster area careful study, and special provision will be made with reference to the completion of houses in all areas of Manitoba directly affected by the flood condition. The exact number of houses which may be affected by the flood conditions is not known, but officials of the Department of Labour and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation have been requested to examine each case to determine to what extent a delay in construction has been caused by factors related to the current flood situation in Manitoba. Details as to the special action to be taken will be worked out as circumstances develop.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the decision of the government not to extend the April 15 date generally is valid, I should like to express appreciation on behalf of the people of Manitoba for the latter part of the announcement the Minister of Labour has just made. The weather has not been particularly kind to us this winter in the Manitoba area. The result has been certain delays. As the minister pointed out, right now the situation is difficult. Work is actually proceeding on some houses that are behind the dikes, and an effort is being made to complete these by April 15 in order to get the $500 winter bonus. However, if the dikes fail these very houses could be flooded. It is that situation which many of us from Manitoba have directed to the minister's attention. That is the situation we have asked him to deal with.

The statement he has now made that consideration will be given to paying a bonus on houses flooded for work done after the flood waters have receded is a very sensible one. I am glad to know the officials are keeping close watch on the situation. On behalf of all of us from Manitoba I thank the minister for this statement.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we would join in expressing appreciation to the minister for the action which is contemplated in connection with the flood situation in Manitoba as it affects the house building program. I speak sincerely in this regard, because I lived for many years in Manitoba not too far from the affected area, and still have fond memories of my Manitoba days.

However, I should like to call attention to the fact that I am now living in the province of British Columbia, and in recent days have had the opportunity and the occasion to discuss with the minister the possibility of extending this particular program and the period it covers to other parts of Canada. He advised me of the decision which has been outlined this afternoon, that as far as the general application of the regulations is concerned the government is not proposing to make any change.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is discriminatory action; because if we can blame the flood situation in Manitoba on God and say that it is an act of God, possibly we can say this of the storms and wintry conditions which seriously interfere with the house construction program elsewhere. So in thanking the minister for what is being done I would remind him that he is discriminating against other areas in Canada which have suffered adverse weather conditions, resulting in people being unable to meet the deadline.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE RESPECTING SALARY REVISIONS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works):

That the report of the joint committee of both houses on the library of parliament relating to salary revisions, reclassifications and upgrading of positions in the library of parliament, presented to the house on Thursday, March 24, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

C.N.R. PENSION RATES

Question No. 300—Mr. Laprise:

1. What is the basic pension rate granted to the pensioners of the Canadian National Railways?

2. When was the rate of that pension last increased?

3. Have there been requests for increasing this basic rate?

4. Will the C.N.R. increase this pension soon?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. The basic pension under the C.N. 1935 plan is $25 a month. This is paid to all members of this plan who entered service prior to January 1935 and have at least 15 years of allowable service and to those who entered service subsequent to December 31, 1934 and have at least 20 years of allowable service. (Under the 1959 pension plan, there is no basic rate as pensions are based on allowable service and average earnings.)

2. The basic pension has not been increased.

3. Representations have been made from time to time to increase the basic pension.

4. No.

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—HOUSING ACCOMMODATION FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 308—Mr. Howard:

1. What type and size of houses are provided for government employees in the air services of the Department of Transport in Prince Rupert, what rent is charged therefor, and/or are any housing allowances provided and, if so, what are the details thereof?

2. What type and size of houses are provided for government employees in the marine services of the Department of Transport in Prince Rupert, what rent is charged therefor, and/or are any housing allowances provided and, if so, what are the details thereof?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Seven duplexes and one single dwelling described as three bedroom basementless frame construction, having an area of approximately 944 sq. ft.

These houses are provided by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the department pays $135 per month for each unit to C.M.H.C.

Rental charges to employees vary between $77 and $80 per month and employees purchase their own electricity and heating fuel. These rental charges are based on the public service accommodation regulations.

2. Two dwellings, one is a two storey, three bedrooms, basementless detached house, with carport, having an area of 576 sq. ft., and the other is described as one half of a semi-detached building identical in size and description, except that no carport is provided.

The first dwelling is on permanent lease from Air Services and C.M.H.C. and the second one has been made available to marine services on a temporary agreement with air services until the fall of 1966. The rental charges are $80 per month for the detached house with carport and $75 per month for the one half semi-detached dwelling without carport. The employees pay for heat and electricity.

WORKING CONDITIONS, COAST GUARD VESSELS

Question No. 314—Mr. Douglas:

1. (a) How many days, on the average, do the masters and officers of the Canadian Coast Guard vessels Racer and Ready work each year (b) how does this differ from the average days worked by masters and officers on comparable commercial vessels using the same type of watch system?

2. (a) How many hours per year does this average out to (b) how does this differ from the hours per year worked on comparable commercial vessels?

3. (a) How many days off do the masters and officers receive in addition to annual leave and statutory holidays (b) how does this differ from the days off allowed on comparable commercial vessels?

4. (a) What is the rate of pay for masters and officers on the Racer and Ready (b) what is the rate of pay for masters and officers on comparable commercial vessels?

Questions

5. (a) When on leave, are masters and officers of the Racer and Ready required to be on a stand-by basis (b) how does this differ from the practice followed on comparable commercial vessels?

6. (a) Is compensatory leave granted to masters and officers of the Racer and Ready for Saturdays and Sundays worked (b) how does this differ from the practice followed on comparable commercial vessels?

7. Are the masters and officers of the Racer and Ready covered by all provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) The masters and officers of the Canadian Coast Guard vessels Racer and Ready work an average of 225 days each year. (b) The Canadian Coast Guard is a government service, performing specialized non-commercial functions with specialized vessels in fields in which there is no commercial counterpart.

2. (a) These officers work an average of 2,700 hours per year. (b) See answer to part 1 (b).

3. (a) These officers are off duty an average of 121 days per year, excluding 10 days' annual leave and 9 days' statutory holidays; after 15 years' service they have an additional five days' annual leave per annum. (b) See answer to part 1 (b).

4. (a) The rates of pay are currently: masters $6,998; chief officer $6,228; second officer $5,148; chief engineer $6,716; second engineer $6,228; third engineer $5,148. The above rates are presently being re-examined. (b) See answer to part 1 (b).

5. (a) When on leave masters and officers of the Racer and Ready are not required to be on stand-by duty. (b) See answer to part 1 (b).

6. (a) Compensatory leave is granted to the masters and officers of these vessels for Saturdays and Sundays worked, and this leave is incorporated within the work cycle; these officers work an average of 56 hours per week, they serve on the vessel four weeks and are off duty two weeks. (b) See answer to part 1 (b).

7. The employees of the Canadian Coast Guard service are in the same position in this respect as other federal employees.

C.N.R. EMPLOYEES

Question No. 347—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the number of C.N.R. working personnel, including trainmen and shop staff members, in 1960, 1963 and 1965?

2. What was the number of C.N.R. managerial level employees in the same years?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

The requested information which is published annually by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in Part 6, "(Employment Statistics) of Railway Transport" is as follows. The figures for the year 1964 are shown as those for the year 1965 are not yet published.

	Total Employees (Canadian Lines)	Total Managerial Supervisory (Canadian Lines)
1960	96,227	6,587
1963	85,591	7,758
1964	86,341	7,771

WAR VETERANS PENSIONS

Question No. 473—Mr. Laprise:

1. In 1920, what was the maximum pension a war veteran, either (a) married, or (b) single, could receive from the government?

2. When was the annual rate of this pension increased and what was the amount of each increase?

3. From 1920, what comparisons can be established between (a) the rise of the cost of living, and (b) the increase of that pension from year to year?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. In 1920 the maximum pension received by (a) a married veteran was $1,200 per annum. Additional pension for one child was $180 per annum; two children $324 per annum; each subsequent child $120 per annum. (b) a single veteran was $900 per annum.

2. Pensions were increased as follows:

Effective Date	Single Pensioner	Married Pensioner	One Child	Two Children	Each Subsequent Child
			(rates per annum)
1 Oct 47	$228	$300	$48	$84	$24
1 Jan 52	372	540	12	12	No change
1 Jul 57	300	360	No Change	No change	No change
1 Mar 61	360	480	84	144	48
1 Sep 64	240	288	36	60	24

3.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Veterans disability pension rates in current dollars and constant dollars, 1920-1965.

Year	100 per cent pension rates[1] in current dollars			Consumer price index (1949=100)	100 per cent pension rates in 1949 dollars
	Single	Married with no children	Married plus 2 children		Single	Married with no children	Married plus 2 children
	$	$	$		$	$	$
1920	900	1,200	1,524	93.6	962	1,282	1,628
1921	900	1,200	1,524	82.4	1,092	1,456	1,850
1922	900	1,200	1,524	75.4	1,194	1,592	2,021
1923	900	1,200	1,524	75.6	1,191	1,587	2,016
1924	900	1,200	1,524	74.3	1,211	1,615	2,051
1925	900	1,200	1,524	75.0	1,200	1,600	2,032
1926	900	1,200	1,524	75.8	1,187	1,583	2,011
1927	900	1,200	1,524	74.5	1,208	1,611	2,046
1928	900	1,200	1,524	74.8	1,203	1,604	2,037
1929	900	1,200	1,524	75.7	1,189	1,585	2,013
1930	900	1,200	1,524	75.2	1,197	1,596	2,027
1931	900	1,200	1,524	67.8	1,327	1,770	2,248
1932	900	1,200	1,524	61.6	1,461	1,948	2,474
1933	900	1,200	1,524	58.7	1,533	2,044	2,596
1934	900	1,200	1,524	59.5	1,513	2,017	2,561
1935	900	1,200	1,524	59.9	1,503	2,003	2,544
1936	900	1,200	1,524	61.1	1,473	1,964	2,494
1937	900	1,200	1,524	63.0	1,429	1,905	2,419
1938	900	1,200	1,524	63.7	1,413	1,884	2,392
1939	900	1,200	1,524	63.2	1,424	1,899	2,411
1940	900	1,200	1,524	65.7	1,370	1,826	2,320
1941	900	1,200	1,524	69.6	1,293	1,725	2,190
1942	900	1,200	1,524	72.9	1,235	1,646	2,090
1943	900	1,200	1,524	74.2	1,213	1,617	2,054
1944	900	1,200	1,524	74.6	1,206	1,609	2,043
1945	900	1,200	1,524	75.0	1,200	1,600	2,032
1946	900	1,200	1,524	77.5	1,161	1,548	1,966
1947	1,128	1,500	1,908	84.8	1,330	1,769	2,250
1948	1,128	1,500	1,908	97.0	1,163	1,546	1,967
1949	1,128	1,500	1,908	100.0	1,128	1,500	1,908
1950	1,128	1,500	1,908	102.9	1,096	1,458	1,854
1951	1,128	1,500	1,908	113.7	992	1,319	1,678
1952	1,500	2,040	2,460	116.5	1,288	1,751	2,112
1953	1,500	2,040	2,460	115.5	1,299	1,766	2,130
1954	1,500	2,040	2,460	116.2	1,291	1,756	2,117
1955	1,500	2,040	2,460	116.4	1,289	1,753	2,113
1956	1,500	2,040	2,460	118.1	1,270	1,727	2,083
1957	1,800	2,400	2,820	121.9	1,477	1,969	2,313
1958	1,800	2,400	2,820	125.1	1,439	1,918	2,254
1959	1,800	2,400	2,820	126.5	1,423	1,897	2,229
1960	1,800	2,400	2,820	128.0	1,406	1,875	2,203
1961	2,160	2,880	3,444	129.2	1,672	2,229	2,666
1962	2,160	2,880	3,444	130.7	1,653	2,204	2,635
1963	2,160	2,880	3,444	133.0	1,624	2,165	2,589
1964	2,400	3,168	3,792	135.4	1,773	2,340	2,801
1965	2,400	3,168	3,792	138.7	1,730	2,284	2,734

[1] Pension rates are shown for the year in which they became effective.

Questions

FLYING OF ROYAL UNION FLAG

Question No. 572—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. In how many centres in Canada and abroad and over what buildings did the Royal Union flag (Union Jack) fly by direction of any department or official of the Dominion Government on May 24, 1965?

2. On what occasion other than Victoria Day (May 24) would the Royal Union flag be appropriately flown on the courtesy flag staff on Parliament Hill?

3. What commonwealth leaders on visits to Ottawa have been or would be appropriately honored by flying the Royal Union flag from the courtesy flag staff?

4. What other flags are normally flown from this staff and on what dates or occasions?

5. On what occasions are the UN flag and the NATO flag flown from this staff?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by several departments as follows:

1. The royal union flag and the national flag of Canada were flown on May 24, 1965 at federal locations in Canada where there was at least two flag poles. These were: Pleasantville, Nfld., main entrance to the complex; Halifax, N.S., Camp Hill hospital; Ottawa, Ont., Brooke Claxton building, Supreme Court building, Parliament Hill groundstaffs, National War Memorial; Val Caron, Ont., Federal building; Windsor, Ont., Federal building; Battleford, Sask., Fort Battleford national historic park; Edmonton, Alta., Tri Services recruiting centre; the Veterans' Home; Kamloops, B.C., Federal building; Vancouver, B.C., General post office; Shaughnessy hospital; Whitehorse, Y.T., Federal building; Forty nine Canadian Forces Headquarters buildings throughout Canada.

2. The royal union flag is flown with the Canadian flag on the two ground staffs on Parliament Hill on the official celebration of the Queen's birthday (on or about May 24), and the anniversary of the Statute of Westminster (Dec. 11) and on the occasions of royal visits and certain commonwealth gatherings in Ottawa.

3. The union jack has been and will continue to be flown on the courtesy staff on Parliament Hill when the Prime Minister of Britain or his representative pays an official visit to Ottawa.

4. The UN flag and the NATO flag; the flags of other countries are also flown on that staff on special occasions such as state visits by the heads of those countries.

[Mr. Teillet.]

5. The UN flag is flown on that staff on United Nations day, and the NATO flag on NATO day, while either flag may be flown by special arrangement on other occasions.

IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

Question No. 667—Mr. Caouette:

1. For each of the last five years (a) what was the percentage of French speaking immigrants to Canada (b) what was the percentage of English speaking immigrants (c) what percentage did not speak either English or French?

2. Of these immigrants, what percentage settled in Quebec, and (a) what percentage were French speaking people (b) what percentage were English speaking people (c) what percentage were neither English speaking nor French speaking people?

3. Of these immigrants, what percentage settled in Ontario?

4. Is the government intending to further immigration of French speaking people to Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. John C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): A system of recording and compiling the language facility of immigrants to Canada was not introduced until 1962. For the years 1962 and 1963 the data compiled showed only whether the immigrant spoke one of Canada's two official languages fluently enough to integrate quickly in his occupation. The particular language spoken was not specified. However, more detailed information is available for 1964 and 1965.

1, 2 and 3. See following tables.

4. The government has intensified its efforts to increase the number of qualified immigrants coming to Canada from all countries, including French speaking countries. As far as France itself is concerned, two new immigration offices were opened during the fiscal year 1964-65 at Bordeaux and Marseilles and, to the extent possible under the regulations of the French Government, immigration promotional efforts have been stepped up. Regarding the settlement of immigrants in Quebec, the choice of destination is a matter to be decided upon by the immigrants themselves. However, immigrants are counselled overseas as to the areas of possible establishment best suited to their individual skills and personal qualifications. For example, French speaking immigrants ordinarily are counselled that the best opportunities for successful and ready integration lie in those areas of Canada having a substantial French speaking population. As can be seen from the attached tables, most French speaking immigrants have migrated to Quebec and this trend is expected to continue.

TABLE I

Percentage of Immigrant Arrivals by Province of Destination for 1962 to 1965

Year	Quebec	Ontario	Other Provinces
1962	25.65	49.88	24.47
1963	24.97	52.83	22.20
1964	23.06	54.58	22.36
1965	20.67	54.31	25.02

TABLE II

Percentage of Immigrant Arrivals by Province of Destination and Language Spoken, 1962 and 1963

Language Spoken	Canada		Quebec		Ontario		Other Provinces
	1962	1963	1962	1963	1962	1963	1962	1963
French or English or Both	78.6	72.4	76.8	68.45	76.67	70.65	84.35	81.13
Neither French nor English	21.4	27.6	23.2	31.55	23.33	29.35	15.65	18.87

TABLE III

Percentage of Immigrant Arrivals by Province of Destination and Language Spoken, 1964 and 1965

Language Spoken	Canada		Quebec		Ontario		Other Provinces
	1964	1965	1964	1965	1964	1965	1964	1965
French but not English	5.83	5.20	19.89	19.15	1.79	1.69	1.17	1.31
English but not French	44.46	50.58	24.51	29.62	47.16	50.86	58.46	67.26
Both French and English	3.95	3.49	10.00	9.65	2.04	1.79	2.36	2.11
Neither French nor English	45.76	40.73	45.60	41.58	49.01	45.66	38.01	29.32

[English]

*R.C.M.P. REPORT ON RAIL DYNAMITING, LEMIEUX, QUE.

Question No. 775—Mr. Choquette:

Have the Royal Canadian Mounted Police submitted a report giving information on the attempt made on the life of the present Leader of the Opposition when the rails were dynamited in Lemieux, Lotbinière county, in 1963?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the dynamiting of the rails at Lemieux, Quebec in 1963 was investigated by the Quebec provincial police and the Canadian National Railways police. Assistance was rendered by the R.C.M.P. and reports were submitted to R.C.M.P. headquarters, Ottawa, by the R.C.M.P. at Drummondville and Montreal.

FURS SOLD BY FISHERIES DEPARTMENT

Question No. 782—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total value of furs owned in whole or in part by the Department of Fisheries as of the 24th day of January, 1966?

2. What is the total amount of sales made since the said date?

3. What company or companies were the sales agents?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Estimated market value as of said date—$2,700,000.

2. $621,241.

3. Hudson's Bay Company, fur sales department, Montreal.

Questions

INTEGRATION OF SERVICES, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 852—Mr. Orange:

1. What plans are being made to integrate the staffs of the Indian affairs branch and the northern administration branch located in the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories, how soon will integration of staffs take effect and what timetable has been set out to integrate (a) welfare services (b) community development services (c) industrial development services (d) engineering services (e) financial services (f) purchasing and supply services (g) general administrative services?

2. What will be the total reduction of positions following integration?

3. What were the numbers in classification and location of each position in the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories of the Indian affairs branch in 1962-63, in 1963-64, in 1964-65, in 1965-66, and in 1966-67 including those positions which have been proposed by the branch to Treasury Board and the Civil Service Commission

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1 and 2. This matter is now being studied by an inter-branch committee, headed by the two assistant deputy ministers concerned. It is expected that this study will take several months.

3. See the following list.

Numbers in classification and location of each position in Mackenzie District for fiscal years shown 3.

Location and classification	1962-63	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66	1966-67
Fort Smith, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 7	1	1	2	2	2
Indian Affairs Officer 6	-	-	-	1	1
Indian Affairs Officer 4	-	-	1	1	1
Superintendent 2, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Administrative Officer 4	-	-	-	-	1
Administrative Officer 3	1	1	1	-	-
Administrative Officer 1 (Seas.) (unclassified)	6	6	6	-	-
Social Worker 5	-	-	1	1	1
Development Officer 4	-	-	-	1	1
Development Officer 3	-	-	-	1	1
Development Officer 1 (Seas.)	-	-	-	6	6
Principal Clerk	1	1	1	1	1
Clerk 4	1	1	1	1	1
Clerk 3	1	1	1	1	1
Stenographer 3	-	-	1	1	1
Stenographer 2	2	2	2	2	2
Construction Supervisor 3	-	-	-	1	1
Assistant Technician 3	-	-	-	1	1
Maintenance Craftsman 4	-	-	-	-	2
Totals	14	14	17	21	24
Hay River, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 2	-	-	1	1	1
Assistant 3, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Labourer	-	-	-	1	1
Totals	1	1	1	2	2
Fort Simpson, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 4	-	-	1	1	1
Indian Affairs Officer 1	-	-	-	-	1
Superintendent 2, Indian Agency	-	1	-	-	-
Superintendent 1, Indian Agency	1	-	-	-	-
Clerk 4	1	1	1	1	1
Stenographer 2	-	-	1	1	1
Labourer	1	1	1	1	1
Totals	3	3	4	4	5

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Questions

Numbers in classification and location of each position in Mackenzie District for fiscal years shown

Location and classification	1962-63	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66	1966-67
Yellowknife, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 4	-	-	1	1	1
Indian Affairs Officer 2	-	-	1	1	1
Indian Affairs Officer 1	-	-	-	1	1
Superintendent 2, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Assistant 3, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Clerk 4	1	1	1	1	1
Clerk 3	-	-	-	-	1
Stenographer 2	1	1	1	1	1
Totals	4	4	4	5	6
Inuvik, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 5	-	-	1	1	1
Superintendent 3, Indian Agency	-	1	-	-	-
Superintendent 1, Indian Agency	1	-	-	-	-
Clerk 4	1	1	1	1	1
Stenographer 2	1	1	1	1	1
Supervising Clerk	-	-	-	-	1
Totals	3	3	3	3	4
Fort MacPherson, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 2	-	-	1	1	1
Assistant 3, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Labourer	1	1	1	1	1
Totals	2	2	2	2	2
Fort Norman, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 2	-	-	1	1	1
Assistant 3, Indian Agency	1	1	-	-	-
Labourer	1	1	1	1	1
Totals	2	2	2	2	2
Fort Good Hope, N.W.T.
Indian Affairs Officer 1	-	-	-	1	1
Labourer	-	-	-	1	1
Totals	-	-	-	2	2

C.B.C. PENSION PLAN

Question No. 865—Mr. Gundlock:

1. Do reports on a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation pension plan at March 31, 1964, indicate an actuarial deficiency in respect to future benefits payable of $6,682,000 or 6.7 per cent of the $100,000,000 actual value?

2. Did the pension plan trustees recommend to the corporation that no action be taken until further analysis made in June 1965 was completed and the effect of integration with the Canada Pension Plan determined?

3. How did this deficiency come about and what effect will it have on retirement benefits paid to the pension plan contribution?

4. Has the further analysis of June been completed and, if so, what is the recommendation of the board as a result of the analysis?

5. What has been the effect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Pension Plan as a result of the integration with the Canada Pension Plan?

6. Have contributions to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation pension plan been allowed to determine collectively what changes were to be made to the plan and, if not, will they be allowed to in the future, and by what method?

Questions

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Yes. Actuarial examination of the C.B.C. pension plan as of March 31, 1964 indicated such possible deficiency, although actuaries of the C.B.C. pension board of trustees stated that pension liabilities at the time were adequately covered by the fund's assets.

2. Yes.

3. The possible deficiency relating to future service came about as a result of the present plan being in operation only 2½ years, not a long enough period to permit the necessary growth of the invested funds. There will be no effect on the retirement benefits paid to the contributors.

4. Yes. The report will be tested further in a full actuarial review scheduled for next year.

5. In regard to contributions and benefits, when the Canada and Quebec pension plans were introduced, the C.B.C. pension plan was amended along the general lines of the proposed amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act. Accordingly it is intended that the combined employee contributions will not be more and the combined benefits will not be less than those which applied in the C.B.C. plan before amendment.

6. The employees of the C.B.C. did not participate in the determination of the changes to be made to the plan, although they were advised directly, and through their unions where applicable, before the changes were implemented. Since that time, a pension advisory committee made up of representatives of the various employee groups, including each bargaining unit, has been set up to give all employees in the C.B.C. and opportunity to take part in the assessment of any changes or modifications to the C.B.C. pension plan.

C.N.R. SHIPMENT OF TRAILERS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 893—Mr. Scott (Danforth):

1. How many trailers were shipped over the C.N.R. from St. John's, Newfoundland and Stephenville, Newfoundland, to Grand Falls and Bishop's Falls, Newfoundland, during the months of May, June and July, 1960?

2. Who were the shippers for each shipment?

3. Who was the consignee?

4. What were the dates of the shipments?

5. Was approved credit issued by the C.N.R. or requested from the C.N.R. in regard to the freight charges incurred and, if so (a) to whom was credit issued (b) what was the total amount of freight charges on the shipments (c) were any collection statements sent to the shippers, and, if so, to whom (d) were any payments made on account and, if so, what were the dates of payments, by whom were the payments made, and what were the amounts of payments?

6. Does the C.N.R. have "blocking charges" for shipments of this nature and, if so, what are the charges?

7. Were blocking charges for shipment of the above trailers charged?

8. Did C.N.R. employees in St. John's, Newfoundland, work overtime on week days or Sundays and were they paid overtime for shipment of the said trailers and, if so (a) how many men were working overtime (b) how many hours did they work (c) what was the total amount paid for the overtime (d) what steps have been taken to collect the account to date, and the date of these steps, if any?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise that litigation is pending in the courts of Newfoundland and Quebec on certain aspects embraced by the questions and therefore answers to the questions could be construed as legal interrogatories or examination for discovery. In view of the subjudice nature of the matter it is not considered appropriate to provide information.

COMPETITION FOR FISHERIES WARDEN, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 913—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Who was the successful candidate in the recent civil service commission competition No. 66-H524, fisheries warden, Department of Fisheries, Pictou county, Nova Scotia?

2. Has an eligible list been established as a result of this competition?

3. What are the names and addresses of the applicants in this competition?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the civil service commission:

1. Roderick MacLeod.

2. Yes.

3. Having regard for the right to privacy of candidates and the possibility that the release of information could prove not only embarrassing but prejudicial to them, the commission holds in confidence information concerning candidates whose names do not appear on the eligible list.

[Mr. Gundlock.]

DISEASE IN CORN CROPS, SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Question No. 947—Mr. Danforth:

1. Have any incidents of disease in the commercial and seed corn crops of southwestern Ontario, particularly in the counties of Essex and Kent, been identified as caused by virus infection?

2. Have any outbreaks of disease in the commercial and seed corn crops been reported that have been suspected of being, or have been proven to be, caused by the maize dwarf mosaic or any other disease causing the stunting of corn?

3. Has the government stationed in the immediate area sufficient agricultural technicians (a) to correctly identify any such virus infection (b) to determine whether such disease could be spread by insects and to identify such insects (c) to work out suitable control measures in either of the above instances?

4. Are any technicians working on this problem directly and, if so, where are they located regarding laboratory facilities, etc.?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. Only wheat streak mosaic virus, which causes mild mottle symptoms in corn, has been identified. Red kernel stripe of corn which was originally suspected of being caused by virus infection has not been confirmed and probably is not virus induced.

2. No. Maize dwarf mosaic virus is known to occur in the corn areas of the United States but so far no suspected or proven cases have been found in Canada. It is known to be in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and as far north as southern Ohio. Considerable research is in progress in the U.S.A.

3. and 4. Adequate attention is given to plant disease problems in the region. One officer at Harrow now works on all corn diseases in southwestern Ontario. He refers any suspected virus diseases to the plant research institute, Ottawa, for expert identification and insect vector relationships. An additional specialist has been engaged, starting in June, to deal specifically with corn virus diseases and will be supported by local entomological staff on the mode of transmission.

In addition, the department has a highly qualified specialist at the plant research institute, Ottawa, on cereal and grass virus diseases, including corn. He is supported by two research officers on insect vector relations and isolation of viruses, respectively.

STATUES ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Question No. 964—Mr. Enns:

1. Under what appropriation were the various statues on Parliament Hill developed and which department is responsible for their maintenance?

2. Has the government any plans to erect additional statues e.g., the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and subsequent prime ministers to commemorate the 14 prime ministers in our first hundred years of confederation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Public Works and the Prime Minister's office as follows:

1. Department of Public Works.

2. Consideration is being given to the possibility of commemorating certain former prime ministers in the manner suggested.

ARDA PROJECTS, MANITOBA

Question No. 967—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Since the signing of the second ARDA agreement with the province of Manitoba, how many projects have been approved and what is the estimated total cost of these?

2. What are these projects, where are they located, when were they approved, what is the estimated cost of each and how is the cost shared?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. Fourteen projects have been approved and the estimated cost totals to $632,025.

2. The following list indicates the description of each of these projects approved, where they are located, the date on which they were approved, the estimated cost and the federal contribution of each project.

MANITOBA

Projects Approved for the Province of Manitoba from April 1, 1965 under the new ARDA agreement

Project Number	Approved	Description	General Area of Activity	Total Cost	Federal Contribution
				$	$
26001	October 12, 1965	Water Research Program	Province-wide	56,900	28,450
26002	October 19, 1965	Land Utilization Research	Province-wide	50,000	25,000
26003	October 12, 1965	Land Indexing of Productivity	Province-wide	25,000	12,500
26004	October 12, 1965	Rural Development Program	Interlake	98,500	49,250
26005	November 30, 1965	Rural Development Officer Services Training	Province-wide	12,925	6,463
26006	November 30, 1965	Fisher River—Feasibility Study	Fisher River (Interlake)	50,000	25,000
26007	January 11, 1966	Blueberry Project	Eastern Manitoba	25,000	12,500
26009	March 2, 1966	Fish Lake No. 2 Waterfowl Control Project	Interlake	25,200	9,450
36001	May 1965	Study Involving Rural Communities in Self-Appraisal of Potentials	Interlake	45,500	45,500
36002	May 1965	Co-ordination for Rural Development Research	Interlake	12,000	12,000
36003	May 1965	Soil Survey in the Northern Part of the Interlake Rural Development Area	Interlake	50,000	50,000
36004	July 1965	Land Capability Study, Including Preparation of Land Administration Map—Northern Interlake Area	Interlake	136,000	136,000
36005	July 1965	Preparation of Long-term Recreational Development Master Plan for the Area Extending from Netley Marsh to Hecla Island	Southwestern Shore of Lake Winnipeg	25,000	25,000
36006	March 1966	Pilot Group Action (Interlake)	Interlake	20,000	20,000

COAL

Question No. 1,013—Mr. McLean (Charlotte):

1. What was the total production of coal in Canada for each year from 1957 to 1965, inclusive?

2. What was the total amount of subsidies or grants paid by the federal government to the coal industry for each year from 1957 to 1965, inclusive?

3. What was the total tonnage and cost of Nova Scotia coal moved under subvention for each year from 1957 to 1965, inclusive?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. By fiscal years, the total production of coal in Canada was as follows:

Year	Tons
1956-57	14,287,000
1957-58	12,814,000
1958-59	11,182,000
1959-60	10,936,000
1960-61	10,484,000
1961-62	10,772,000
1962-63	10,310,000
1963-64	10,617,000
1964-65	11,739,000

2. By fiscal years, the amounts of subsidies or grants paid by the federal government, directly or indirectly to the benefit of the coal industry, including amounts for which there was subsequent reimbursement, was as follows:

Year	Payments	Reimbursements	Cost to Federal Treasury
1956-57	$ 9,454,640		$ 9,454,640
1957-58	8,684,973		8,684,973
1958-59	11,145,600		11,145,600
1959-60	17,477,013	$ 393,124	17,083,889
1960-61	19,203,823	706,876	18,496,947
1961-62	19,786,089	500,000	19,286,089
1962-63	20,334,402	296,468	20,037,934
1963-64	20,457,238		20,457,238
1964-65	23,062,762		23,062,762

Note 1: Under "Payments", the above includes: (a) the normal subvention assistance paid variously to transportation companies, coal mine operators, coal distributors or coal consumers in accordance with regulations under the subvention orders in council; (b) tonnage payments on Nova Scotia coal not otherwise eligible for subvention, made in 1960-61, 1961-62 and 1962-63, to delay the closing of certain Cape Breton mines; (c) payments of 30 cents per ton on Nova Scotia coal and 10 cents per ton on New Brunswick coal in 1962-63 and 1963-64, conditional on the use of such funds to improve the competitive positions of these coals in relation to imported residual fuel oils; (d) payments based on the consumption of coal in thermal electric power plants in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, made directly to the respective provincial power commissions, under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, to enable them to reduce the cost of electric power to industrial consumers but indirectly encouraging the use of coal rather than other fuel; (e) payments made to sectors of the steel industry, under the Canadian Coal Equality Act, but having some indirect benefit to Nova Scotia, Alberta and British Columbia bituminous coals.

Not included in the above are contributions by the province of Nova Scotia to the 1960-61, 1961-62 and 1962-63 programs of delaying the closing of certain mines until employment readjustments could be made. While making the federal payments as indicated by (b), the government of Canada acted merely as transmitting agency for these additional provincial payments.

Note 2: Under "Reimbursements" in the table above, the amounts shown were involved in an agreement of the province of Nova Scotia to pay part of the cost of increased subventions to enlarge the Ontario market for Nova Scotia coal and also a portion of the extra costs of stockpiling coal during a period of critical market constriction. In this case, the government of Canada paid the total cost of the increased subventions and the Government of Nova Scotia reimbursed the consolidated revenue fund for the provincial share.

3. By fiscal years, the tonnage and cost of Nova Scotia coal moved under subvention were as follows:

Questions

Year	Tonnage	Cost	Reimbursements	Net Cost to Federal Treasury
1956-57	2,474,481	$ 7,043,378		$ 7,043,378
1957-58	2,148,341	6,526,660		6,526,660
1958-59	2,238,104	8,257,742		8,257,742
1959-60	2,414,786	13,518,396	$393,124	13,125,272
1960-61	1,872,913	11,864,874	706,876	11,157,998
1961-62	2,311,503	13,266,996	500,000	12,766,996
1962-63	2,275,920	14,069,383	296,468	13,772,915
1963-64	2,560,633	14,588,150		14,588,150
1964-65	3,171,288	16,971,607		16,971,607

Note 3: The reimbursements are the same as described in Note 2, above.

Note 4: Not included in the table immediately above are the payments of 30 cents per ton (note 1 (c)) for use in improving the position of Nova Scotia coal in relation to imported fuel oil, and included in the total payments tabulation in answer to part 2 of the question. On Nova Scotia coal, these amounted to $1,176,590 in 1962-63 and to $279,384 in 1963-64.

POST OFFICE, NOTRE DAME DE LA GUADELOUPE, QUE.

Question No. 1,023—Mr. Langlois (Mégantic):

1. How much did the construction of the post office at Notre Dame de la Guadeloupe, Frontenac county, cost?

2. What was the cost of the land?

3. What was the cost of the building?

4. From whom was the land purchased?

5. Who supplied the building materials for this building?

6. What quantity of lumber was used in this building?

7. Was this lumber stamped or approved?

8. How much did this lumber cost?

9. What various sizes of lumber were required for this building and what quantity of each size was bought?

10. Who was or who were the regular inspectors who supervised this work (a) local inspectors (b) federal inspectors?

11. Were there any surplus building materials, and, if so, what was their nature and their value?

12. Was a part of the construction cost of this building borne by winter works programs and, if so (a) what was the amount of those grants (b) how many persons benefited from them (c) what are their names (d) how much did each one receive?

13. Who was the contractor for this building?

14. How many tenders were sent relative to this building and received by the government, and (a) what are the names of the people involved (b) what was the amount of each of these tenders?

[Mr. Davis.]

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. $34,282.81 including Post Office equipment, legal fees, survey, etc.

2. $4,500.

3. $25,265.10 (contract, extras and credits).

4. The Municipality of the Village of La Guadeloupe, Que.

5. La Guadeloupe Construction Enrg. General Contractor.

6. All lumber was furnished by the general contractor. The estimated quantity is approximately 14,300 bd. ft. of lumber and 3,660 sq. ft. of plywood (windows, doors and wood trim not included).

7. Lumber for floor and ceiling beams and joists was stamped. Lumber for perimeter walls and partitions was not stamped but was approved.

8. Unknown. (This is the responsibility of the general contractor.)

9. Approximate quantity as described in item 6 provides for the following sizes: (1" x 2") (1" x 3") (2" x 2") (1" x 6") (2" x 3") (2" x 4") (2" x 6") (2" x 8") (2" x 10") (2" x 12") or approximately 997 pieces 12 ft. long or 11,800 bd. ft. Woodsheathing, approximately 2,500 sq. ft; Plywood, approximately 3,660 sq. ft.

10. (a) Mr. J. Lapierre, Clerk of Works. (b) Messrs. J. M. Chaloux, Architect, District Office; R. Godin, Mechanical Engineer, District Office. R. Imbeau, Technical Officer, District Office. A. Trudel, Technical Officer, District Office.

11. Not known.

12. No. (a) Nil. (b) None. (c) See (a) and (b). (d) See (a) and (b).

13. La Guadeloupe Construction Enrg., La Guadeloupe, Que.

14. Five (a) La Guadeloupe Construction Enrg. (La Guadeloupe) $24,477.00; H. Lessard & S. Labreque (East Broughton $24,659.00; Claude Bourassa (Victoriaville) $24,833.50; Marquis & Freres Limitee (Sherbrooke) $24,991.00; Girard & Frere Enrg. (Chicoutimi) $29,600.00. (b) See above.

[English]

TELEVISION TOWER, ELDEE, ONT.

Question No. 1,074—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. What was the total cost of the land purchased for the erection of a television tower at Eldee, Ontario, in the Nipissing district?

2. When was the tower erected?

3. Who was the contractor?

4. How many tenders were received and from whom and what were their respective amounts?

5. Does this tower receive its signal from the relay station of Sturgeon Falls, Ontario, and, if so, where does the signal of Sturgeon Falls come from?

6. Does the tower of Eldee serve also the French speaking population of Mattawa, Ontario, and the residents of the town of Témiscamingue and its district as well?

7. What is the total estimate of the size of the French speaking population served by this tower of Eldee?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. $100.00.

2. Tower erection was started on January 27, 1963 and the station came into operation on March 15, 1963.

3. Canadian General Electric Company Limited.

4. Tenders were received from Canadian General Electric Company Limited and RCA Victor Company Limited in the amounts of $151,291.30 and $154,517.10 respectively. In addition, Canadian Marconi Company Limited and Northern Electric Company Limited were invited to tender but declined to bid. These tenders were for the supply, installation and testing of a complete television rebroadcasting station and associated equipment including the tower.

5. This television rebroadcasting station receives its signal from the Sturgeon Falls station by means of off-air reception. The Sturgeon Falls station receives its signal by means of a direct connection to the C.B.C. French television network.

6. Yes.

7. A population of 18,900 based on the June 1, census.

[English]

STUDY OF MOUNT LOGAN SKI PROJECT

Question No. 1,078—Mr. Keays:

1. Has an amount of $48,000 been paid in full to the Dyname Corporation for the study of the Mount Logan winter skiing project and, if so, was the amount paid in one instalment?

2. If the amount was not paid in one instalment (a) in how many instalments (b) on what dates (c) how much was paid each time?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. The answer to the first part of the question is yes, and to the second part is no.

2. (a) Seven (b) and (c) October 2, 1964, $7,000; October 5, 1964, $14,000; October 7, 1964, $7,000; November 6, 1964, $7,000; January 8, 1965, $7,000; January 20, 1965, $3,000; January 21, 1965, $3,000.

USE OF TOWER, MOUNT RYAN, QUE.

Question No. 1,079—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Does the government own a tower situated on Mount Ryan, in Lac Sainte-Marie, Gatineau county?

2. Did this tower once serve as a radar substation?

3. How much did it cost and when was it built?

4. Could it be used as a relay tower for television?

5. What is the average cost of a television relay tower with ordinary equipment?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the departments of National Defence and Transport as follows:

1. No. The installation was disposed of through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation in September 1964.

2. The radar station was never operated.

3. The cost of the tower is not known because it was financed by the U.S.A.F. It was built in 1962.

4. For relay purposes depending on what stations are to be received, the distances involved, and the areas to which these signals are to be relayed.

5. Depending on type, from $20,000 up.

SASKATCHEWAN REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PENSION PLAN CORRESPONDENCE

Question No. 1,083—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government of Saskatchewan asked permission from the government of Canada to table in the Saskatchewan legislature all correspondence between the government of Saskatchewan and the government of Canada regarding the Canada Pension Plan, since May 22, 1964?

2. If so, on what date was the request made?

Questions

3. Has approval for the tabling of this correspondence been granted by the federal government?

4. If so, on what date was approval granted?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare has not received a request from the government of Saskatchewan for permission to table correspondence dealing with the Canada pension plan in the Saskatchewan legislature.

2, 3, and 4. See answer 1. above.

ACCESS ROADS, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,093—Mr. Laprise:

1. Since the implementation of the joint construction program for access roads to forests, what projects have been completed in Chapleau county?

2. What projects are still not completed, and when are they to be completed?

3. What projects are under study at the present time?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. The following access projects have been completed in the electoral district of Chapleau: (1) Forsyth—Maricourt Lake access road. (2) Paradis—Ducharme Lake access road.

2. Projects not completed include: (1) Villebois Township access road; (2) Bourque Township access road; (3) Mazarin Township access road; (4) Megiscane River access road; (5) Varsal Township access road; (6) Chibougamau to Matagami access road; (7) Matagami to James Bay access road; (8) Faillon Lake access road.

Completion dates not available as this information is not required for forest access projects submitted by the province for federal government contributions.

3. Final details of the province's 1966 program have not been supplied. Preliminary information indicates continued construction of most of the projects listed in 2 above.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITY SALES

Question No. 1,100—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Has there been a decrease in the number of government annuities sold since 1960 and, if so, for what reason?

2. Has the government any plan to increase its sales of these annuities?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. Yes. There was a decrease of about 25 per cent in the number of deferred annuities sold between 1960 and 1966. The number of immediate annuities sold also decreased from 1961 to 1964, but has increased sharply during 1965 and 1966 following the adoption of a new interest rate.

There are several reasons for the decrease in the number of deferred annuities, among these being higher interest rates in other forms of investments, a buoyant stock market and a tendency on the part of potential purchasers to postpone decisions until they knew more about the Canada Pension Plan.

2. No, but it is expected that there will be some increase in the sale of annuities now that the Canada Pension Plan is in effect.

PURCHASE OF MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Question No. 1,127—Mr. Douglas:

1. Is the Department of Transport giving consideration to the purchase of the municipal airport at Saint John, New Brunswick?

2. When such takeovers occur, is it the policy of the Department of Transport to absorb present employees and give full protection to the seniority, pension and other rights and privileges enjoyed by the present employees?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. At the request of the municipalities concerned, the Department of Transport has agreed to look into this possibility.

2. Subject to satisfactory agreement with the municipality, it is the policy of the department to endeavour to continue employee benefits wherever possible within governing federal legislation and regulations.

PURCHASE OF BATTERIES, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,128—Mr. Crouse:

1. Did the Department of Transport purchase batteries from a company named Cipel and LeCarbone Ltd. during the month of February, 1966?

2. If so, in what part of Canada is this company licensed to carry on business?

3. What are the names of its president and directors?

4. What is the brand name of their batteries?

5. How many companies in Canada bid on the purchase of these batteries, and (a) what are their names (b) what were the amounts of their bids?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Transport and my department as follows: 1. Yes.

2. This company was incorporated on May 18, 1954 and according to the terms of its letters patent it may carry on its operations throughout Canada.

3. According to the annual summary as at March 31, 1965, the directors of the company are: A. David Cavaz, 45, rue des Acacias. Paris 17, France; Willy Gast, 34 A Ostermundigenstrasse, Berne, Suisse; Thomas Joseph Palmer, P.O. Box 250 Valleyfield, Que; Louis Jalabert, S.F.C.I. 500 St. James Street West, Montreal, Que; Bertram R. Badmore, 12 Treascobeas Rd, Falmouth, England; Jean Louis Rambach, 98 Ter Blvd. Heloise. Argenteuil, France; P. Demoreuille, The Carbone Corporation, 10 Bowers Road, Caldwell, N.J., U.S.A.

4. "Cipel".

5. Two (a) Cipel & LeCarbone Limited. Union Carbide Canada Limited. (b) Cipel.

Type: AD608Z, $94,789.80 (low bid); AD513, $96,847.24; AD215P, $21,361.40 (low bid).

Union Carbide: Type GG124, $116,325.80; T1600, $62,039.52 (did not meet D.O.T. specification); AC1000, $26,647.40.

*LICENCES FOR B.C. POWER DAMS

Question No. 1,130—Mr. Herridge:

1. On what date was a license issued or were licenses issued to the B.C. Power and Hydro Authority for the building of the High Arrow, Mica Creek, and Duncan dams?

2. What are the terms of the license or licenses for the building of these dams?

3. Who is responsible for the safety or design of these structures?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. Licences were issued for the Arrow Lakes, Mica and Duncan Lake projects under the International River Improvements Act on August 1, 1965.

2. The terms and conditions of the licences read as follows:

"1. The improvement shall be constructed, operated and maintained in accordance with, and the licences shall comply with the requirements of, the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia River basin signed at Washington on January 17, 1961, together with Annexes A and B thereto; the Protocol to the said Treaty, being an annex to the exchange of notes dated January 22, 1964, between the governments of Canada and the United States of America regarding the Columbia River treaty; the exchange of notes between the governments of Canada and the United States of America dated September 16, 1964, relating to the disposition in the United States of Canada's entitlement to certain benefits arising under the said treaty together with the Canadian Entitlement Purchase Agreement entered into between the Licensee and the Columbia Storage Power Exchange signed August 13, 1964; and any exchange of notes between the governments of Canada and the United States of America or any other inter-governmental agreement exchanged or entered into hereafter pursuant to, and for the purpose of, the said treaty.

2. The improvement shall be constructed, operated and maintained in accordance with, and the licences shall comply with, any orders, directions and judgments of the Permanent Engineering Board established by Article XV of the said treaty and any tribunal or authority mentioned in Article XVI of the said treaty or constituted by the governments of Canada and the United States of America pursuant to the said Article XVI."

3. Section 3(a) of the Canada-British Columbia agreement dated July 8, 1963 stated that "British Columbia shall at its own expense construct or arrange for the construction of all the dams and operate or arrange for the operation of all the storages as required by Articles II and IV of the Columbia River treaty dated January 17, 1961."

NORTHERN ONTARIO WATER RESOURCES STUDY

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Fulton:

1. Is the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, on behalf of the government of Canada, participating with the government of the province of Ontario in a northern Ontario water resources study?

2. If so, what is the extent of the federal government participation, and what is the nature and scope of the primary interest of the federal government in such studies?

3. What is the estimate of the duration of such study?

4. How many federal government personnel will be involved in such studies in the fiscal year 1966-67 and what is the estimate of cost to the federal government during that fiscal year?

5. With the exception of the Nelson river, are there any arrangements for similar co-operative water resources studies in other provinces in existence or in contemplation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. No. The Department of Mines and Technical Surveys is conducting an engineering appraisal of northern Ontario water resources; while the government of Ontario is conducting economic and other studies of the water resources of the same region. Both study programs are being co-ordinated by a federal-Ontario committee.

2. Not applicable. See answer to (1) above.

3. The federal study will require at least three years.

4. Full time services of six classified employees and part time services of an additional ten classified employees, plus casual assistance on field surveys. The sum of $500,000 has been provided in the fiscal year of 1966-67 estimates specifically for this assignment.

5. As stated in (1) above the government of Canada and of Ontario have undertaken separate studies of the water resources of northern Ontario with co-ordination of these separate studies by a federal-Ontario committee. The Nelson river power investigation was a single study program undertaken jointly by Canada and Manitoba. The planned water use study of the entire Nelson-Saskatchewan basin will be on a basis similar to the Nelson river power investigation, except that this will be a study program undertaken jointly by Canada, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The proposed study of tidal power possibilities in the Bay of Fundy will be undertaken jointly by Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

IMPORTS OF PORK PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,140—Mr. Winkler:

1. What amounts of pork carcasses or pork products were imported into Canada from March 1 to March 18, 1966, inclusive, from countries other than the United States?

2. From what countries did such imports originate?

3. What are the names of the companies that imported this product?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The amounts of pork carcasses or pork products imported into Canada from March 1 to March 18, 1966, inclusive, from countries other than the United States, according to Department of Agriculture records, were:

From Ireland

Fresh and Frozen	Pounds
Hams	562,180
Backs, Loins, etc.	345,476
Bellies	445,974
Butts and Picnics	543,140
Miscellaneous Boneless Pork, Blade Meat, Cheek and Head Meat, Jowls, Trimmings, etc.	120,944
Miscellaneous Bone-in Pork, Hocks, etc.	29,567
Ribs, back and loin ribs	13,031
Ribs, side and regular spare ribs	36,409
Ribs, shoulder and riblets	12,011
	2,108,732
Cured, Smoked and Cooked—
Bellies, Side Bacon, Bacon squares, Dried Pork Bellies, etc.	5,235
Miscellaneous Bone-in Hocks, Knuckles, etc. (smoked)	279
	5,514
Pork Casings	24

From Denmark

Canned Pork	9,031
Canned Hams	39,600
	48,631

From The Netherlands

Pork Casings	33

From Poland

Canned Pork	7,200

2. These imports originated from Ireland, Denmark, The Netherlands and Poland.

3. The names of the importers are known to the department through its inspection of imported product. This information is regarded as confidential.

DEVELOPMENT BOARD GRANTS, STELLARTON, N.S.

Question No. 1,145—Mr. Carter:

1. Was an Atlantic Development Board grant in the amount of $400,000 authorized for a general purpose building at Stellarton, N.S. and, if so (a) what company will occupy it (b) who are the directors of this company?

2. Was an Atlantic Development Board grant in the amount of $200,000 authorized for an industrial park at Stellarton, N.S. and, if so, will the said company occupy part of it?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows:

1. Yes. (a) Temporarily occupied by Clairtone Sound Corporation Ltd. (b) We are advised that the directors are: Peter Munk, President Executive; David Harrison Gilmour, Vice President and Treasurer; Zigmund A. Hahn, Sr., Vice President and Secretary; Michael A. Chojnacki, Vice President, Manufacturing; G. Malcolm Hogarth, Director; Clifford V. Brokaw, III, Director; James M. Hutton, Jr., Director; Wallace Robert Johnston, Director; J. Maitland Macintosh, Director; J. C. MacKeen, Director; D. W. Samuel, Director; Robert M. Southerland, Director; A. Mark Vansittart, Director.

2. Yes. The company will occupy part of the park.

WHARF AND BREAKWATER REPAIRS, PORT GREVILLE, N.S.

Question No. 1,147—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to carry out any repairs to the wharf at Port Greville, N.S., or to carry out any dredging in the harbour in close proximity to the existing wharf?

2. Is it the intention of the department to carry out any repairs to the breakwater at Port Greville, N.S.?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. No.

WHARF REPAIRS, PORT PHILLIP, N.S.

Question No. 1,148—Mr. Coates:

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to carry out any further repairs or improvements to the wharf at Port Phillip, N.S., or Port Howe as it is more normally called, and what is the extent of the repairs or improvements planned?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

LOBSTER TRAP AND LICENCE QUOTAS

Question No. 1,149—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Fisheries to place quotas on the number of traps that can be used by a lobster fisherman and, if so, when can a decision be expected in this matter?

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Fisheries to limit the number of licences issued for lobster fishing?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Controlled lobster trap limitation is to be introduced this season, as an experiment, in lobster fishing area 8 in Northumberland strait.

2. No.

OTTAWA PERSONNEL, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,152—Mr. Lind:

1. What are the names of the individuals who occupy the following positions in the Department of Public Works, Ottawa branch (a) chief of accommodation (b) director of property and building management (c) assistant director of property and building management (d) assistant superintendent of government buildings (e) chief of operations (f) superintendent of government buildings?

2. How long has each been employed by the department?

3. What special qualifications does each have for these positions?

4. Has the Department of Public Works received inquiries from the Ottawa Real Estate Board, individual property owners, and contractors relating to these positions?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) J. H. de Puyjalon; (b) D. A. Freeze; (c) E. C. Martel; (d) (i) N. R. Millar (Operations), (ii) C. R. Anderson (Technical Administration); (e) E. W. Labelle; (f) W. M. Dicks.

2. (a) 3 years; (b) 26½ years; (c) 20 years; (d) (i) 2½ years, (ii) 20½ years; (e) 10 years; (f) 11 years.

3. Each of these officials was appointed to his position by civil service competition. Mr. Dicks was appointed by civil service competition initially as assistant superintendent of government buildings, and promoted to his present position later. These competitions required certain qualifications which these persons met.

4. No.

LIMITATIONS ON CIVIL SERVICE COMPETITIONS

Question No. 1,157—Mr. Reid:

1. Are some civil service competitions limited to certain geographic areas?

2. If so, what are the criteria for determining the geographic area?

3. Is this practice common in civil service competitions, and (a) if so, for what reasons (b) if not, for what reasons?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. (a) The nature of the duties to be performed (b) The area served by the office (c) The availability of qualified candidates.

3. Yes. See answer 2 above. In addition, it is in accordance with the provisions of sections 33, 34(b) and 35 of the Civil Service Act.

LANDING STRIP, REINDEER LAKE, SASK.

Question No. 1,161—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. Who owns the landing strip at Reindeer Lake in northern Saskatchewan?

Questions

2. Did the Department of Transport assist financially in its construction and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. While Department of Transport records do not indicate the ownership of this aerodrome, they do show that it is operated by Arctic Lodges Ltd.

2. No.

*C.N.R. CONTRACT WITH TRANSOL, INC.

Question No. 1,163—Mr. Ricard:

1. Did Canadian National Railways sign a transportation contract on October 9, 1963, with Transol Inc., a company which was incorporated on June 13, 1963, and, if so, up to what date was this contract in force?

2. Has Canadian National Railways become the owner of Transol Inc., and (a) if so (i) what were the purchase terms (ii) what amounts have been paid to the said company (iii) what were the assets of Transol Inc. at the time of purchase (b) if not, what is the present relationship between Canadian National Railways and Transol Inc.?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, and it is still in effect.

2. (a) No. (b) A contractual arrangement whereby Transol Inc. under a Quebec Transportation Board permit performs for the railway an over the highway cartage service between Quebec and Rivière du Loup serving intermediate points en route.

AIR CANADA EXCURSION RATE TO EUROPE

Question No. 1,177—Mr. Martin (Timmins):

1. Does Air Canada's 21-day excursion rate to Europe apply between June 9 and July 11, and between August 4 and August 29, 1966, and, if not, for what reason?

2. If the 21-day excursion rate does not apply in these periods, is this made clear in Air Canada's advertising and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advise as follows:

1. Twenty one day excursion rate does not apply eastbound to Europe between June 13 and July 7, and between August 8 and August 25. As an incentive to travel in off-peak times, by industry agreement excursion fares may not be offered by any airline between the dates quoted.

2. Airline advertisements do not give details of all terms and conditions, or periods of validity of fare levels but refer to—"See your travel agent or district Air Canada office."

[Mr. Watson (Assiniboia).]

FEDERAL GRANT TO LUCKNOW, ONT.

Question No. 1,179—Mr. Loney:

What amount of grant in lieu of taxes on federal property was paid to the municipality of Lucknow, Ontario, for the year 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1965 grant, $529.

AIR CANADA FLIGHTS TO MARITIMES

Question No. 1,180—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

1. Has Air Canada recently advertised flights to the Atlantic provinces from Montreal entitled "going to the maritimes"?

2. Were Moncton, Halifax and Sydney mentioned and, if so, why was Saint John not listed?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advise as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes; Saint John was not listed. Destinations mentioned in individual advertisements vary according to current and forecast loads. The volume of traffic moving to Saint John was at a level which was considered to be satisfactory by comparison.

MEDICATION MK665

Question No. 1,183—Mr. Harley:

Is the medication MK665 (Merck Sharp and Dohme) under study in Canada at either the preclinical level or clinical testing level?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The medication MK665 (Merck Sharp and Dohme) has never been under study in Canada at either the preclinical or clinical testing level.

ACTION ON RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING PESTICIDES AND INSECTICIDES

Question No. 1,184—Mr. Harley:

What action to date has the government taken on the recommendations of the special committee on food and drugs concerning pesticides and insecticides?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): On July 9, 1964, the formation of the federal interdepartmental committee on pesticides was approved and it was charged with looking into all the recommendations of the special committee on food and drugs as these pertain to responsibilities of federal government. The federal interdepartmental committee has held 13 meetings. It has formed working parties on legislation, research and development, and transport of dangerous materials. The legislative working party has reported to the committee and recommendations concerning legislative changes are being prepared. A survey of pesticide research in Canada has been conducted and a report is in preparation. The federal interdepartmental committee on pesticides has encouraged the formation of provincial interdepartmental committees on pesticides. Such committees are now operating in eight provinces. The federal committee has reviewed all current operational pesticide programs conducted by the federal government.

MILK SUBSIDIES

Question No. 1,187—Mr. Godin:

1. What was the cost of 100 lbs., of milk in 1950, 1955, 1960, and 1965?

2. During these years, has the government granted subsidies to farmers with respect to milk production?

3. If so, what was the amount granted per 100 pounds of milk?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. There are no published figures on the actual cost of producing 100 pounds of milk in the years indicated.

The average cost of milk to plants for all purposes (fluid and manufacturing), based on dominion bureau of statistics average value of milk sold f.o.b. the farm gate, for the years specified was:

1950	1955	1960	1965
$2.63	$2.88	$3.16	$3.68

2 and 3. The government has assisted manufacturing milk and cream producers in various ways over the years. Support has been given by purchases of product, quality premiums, export assistance, butterfat subsidies, and milk subsidies. Some provincial governments have set minimum prices.

Because of the variable methods of support which differed in individual years, direct comparisons are not possible but herewith are given Federal expenditures in those fiscal years, and manufacturing milk and cream deliveries in those calendar years.

Expenditures	1950	1955	1960	1965*
($ millions)	2.4	5.3	14.2	54.4
Milk equivalent of manufacturing milk and cream deliveries (cwt. millions)	84.4	98.9	107.3	113.4

* Estimated

MILK PRODUCTION COST

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Godin:

During the years 1940, 1950, and 1960, what was the production cost of 100 lbs. of milk in the federal experimental farms (a) throughout Canada (b) throughout the province of Quebec?
1189

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): The dairy cattle research program on the experimental farms is in the fields of nutrition, breeding, and management. It is not conducted specifically for the purpose of determining costs of milk production. Accordingly, the information requested on production costs of milk on experimental farms across Canada is not available.

FLASHING LIGHT, HALIFAX AIRPORT

Question No. 1,203—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the government given consideration to the installation of a flashing light at the entrance to the Halifax international airport, and (a) if so, what decision was reached (b) if not, would the government now do so?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The provincial department of highways has agreed to instal a flashing amber light at this intersection.

NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

Question No. 1,225—Mr. Crossman:

What was the total number of unemployed persons as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the month of February for each year since 1957?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Estimated number of unemployed persons, 14 years of age and over, Canada, February 1957 to 1966, inclusive. February 1957, 352,000; February 1958, 600,000; February 1959, 570,000; February 1960, 597,000; February 1961, 716,000; February 1962, 582,000; February 1963, 546,000; February 1964, 467,000; February 1965, 397,000; February 1966, 356,000.

Source: Dominion Bureau of Statistics Canadian labour force survey.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, allow me at this stage to point out that, out of a total of 1,261 questions put on the order paper since the beginning of this season, the government has answered 1,027 questions, which, I believe, is an all-time record.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am pleased that that statement was not made on motions.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on what has just been said by the parliamentary secretary, I must say that irrespective of what he has said all he has to do is to look at the written questions on the order paper. He will find that many of them have been there since January 18, and they are the ones about which we are worrying.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FOREIGN PATENTS

Question No. 103—Mr. Ormiston:

1. What has been the total cost of all foreign patents purchased since 1945 by (a) the federal government (b) other Canadian institutions including corporations and companies operating in Canada?

2. What has been the total cost in fees paid by (a) the federal government (b) other Canadian institutions including corporations and companies operating in Canada for the use or license of foreign patents since 1945?

3. What has been the estimated total value of all Canadian patents sold and licensed to foreign countries, foreign nationals, foreign institutions, foreign corporations and foreign companies since 1945?

Return tabled.

DEFICITS AND PROFITS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 132—Mr. Caouette:

1. What are the annual deficits or profits of the following crown corporations since their inception (a) Canadian National Railways (b) Air Canada (c) C.B.C. (d) Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation (e) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (f) Polymer Corporation Limited (g) Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited (h) Northern Canada Power Commission (i) Defence Construction Limited (j) Canadian Arsenals Limited (k) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

2. What commercial profits has the government of Canada earned through its industrial or commercial enterprises?

3. How are the amounts accruing from the profits of the crown corporations generally divided?

4. What are the regulations governing the reserve funds and the investments of the crown corporations.

Return tabled.

[Mr. Béchard.]

ST. MARY INDIAN RESERVE, B.C.—AIRSTRIP

Question No. 534—Mr. Howard:

1. Does the government have any plans or does it know of any plans to establish an airport or airstrip on the St. Mary Indian reserve in B.C. and, if so (a) what acreage will be used (b) what compensation will be paid, and (c) how will the compensation be distributed?

2. Upon what dates was this matter discussed with the Indian people concerned and what are the names and positions held by each person who participated in each such discussion?

3. Was any objection to the proposal raised by any of the Indian people and, if so, what was the nature of those objections and what action was taken with respect thereto?

4. What is the current status of the plans?

Return tabled.

PURCHASING POLICY OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 546—Mr. Caouette:

1. Do Canadian National Railways, Air Canada, C.B.C., Polymer Corporation Limited, Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation have a purchasing policy which favours Canadian enterprises?

2. If they have such a policy of what does it consist?

3. If they do not have such a policy, does the government intend to issue directives, so that state owned enterprises give preference to Canadian enterprises?

Return tabled.

FEDERAL FERRY OPERATIONS, ATLANTIC COAST

Question No. 553—Mr. Barnett:

1. Does the federal government operate, either directly or indirectly through any of its agencies, ferries or other types of vessels on the Atlantic coasts of Canada for the public carriage of passengers, freight and motor vehicles?

2. If so, what vessels between what ports carry motor vehicles on a "roll on, roll off" arrangement?

3. If operating agencies of the federal government are involved in any of the above specified services, what are they and what runs do they operate?

4. Is any operating deficit incurred in the operation of any such vessels or runs?

5. If so, through what channel is any such operating deficit met and what amounts, by way of subsidy or otherwise, have been paid for each vessel or service involved during each of the last five fiscal years (including an estimate for the current fiscal year)?

C.N.R. WATER TRANSPORT SERVICES, ATLANTIC COAST

Question No. 554—Mr. Barnett:

1. Does Canadian National Railways operate water transportation services in the coastal trade on the Atlantic coast of Canada, either directly or through subsidiary companies?

2. If so, between what ports and on what runs, listed by its various schedules, does the C.N.R., or each and all of its subsidiaries operate such services?

3. Which, if any, of such services carry (a) passengers (b) general cargo (c) motor vehicles?

4. Do any of the vessels engaged in any such services carry motor vehicles on a "roll-on, roll-off" basis and, if so, between what ports?

5. Do any of the vessels engaged in such services receive a federal operating subsidy either directly or indirectly?

6. If so, through what agency is such subsidy paid for each vessel or service involved?

7. For each of the last five fiscal years (including an estimate for the current fiscal year) what was the total amount of the operating subsidy paid for each vessel or service involved?

GOVERNMENT FERRY SUBSIDIES

Question No. 617—Mr. Nowlan:

1. What ferries or other types of vessels listed by name does the federal government either directly or indirectly pay subsidies to or operate?

2. Where do such ferries or other types of vessels operate?

3. Is any deficit incurred in the operation of such ferries or vessels and, if so (a) what has been the amount of the deficit for each ferry or vessel during each of the last five fiscal years, and (b) what formula has been used for payment?

4. What amounts, by way of subsidy, deficit, or otherwise, have been paid in the operation of each such ferry or vessel during each of the last five fiscal years (including an estimate for the current fiscal year?)

5. What amounts were paid by the federal government either directly or indirectly in the construction or purchase of each such ferry or vessel?

REPORT ON MEDICAL RESEARCH

Question No. 1,045—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Was a report on medical research in Canada presented to the Prime Minister and/or the government by Mr. Charles L. Gundy and, if so, when?

2. What consideration has been given to this report?

3. By what persons was the report endorsed?

4. When may a decision of the government in respect of the recommendations in the report be expected?

Return tabled.

Motions for Papers

DEATH BENEFIT ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,133—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. As of March 1, 1966, what was the balance in the (a) public service death benefit account, and (b) the regular forces death benefit account?

2. What amount has been contributed to each account in each of the past 12 months?

3. What amount was disbursed in benefits from each account in each of the past 12 months?

4. Has there been any change in premiums payable under the supplementary death benefit plan (Public Service Superannuation Act) since October, 1964?

Return tabled.

CANADA-WEST INDIES EXPORTS AND IMPORTS

Question No. 1,173—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What is the dollar value of Canadian exports to each country of the West Indies each year since 1960?

2. What is the dollar value of imports to Canada from each country of the West Indies each year since 1960?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 114 and 115 are acceptable to the government.

I ask that the other notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

FORMS COMPLETED BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Motion No. 114—Mr. Douglas:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy (a) fingerprint form CSC 283-20M-1-57-1027, and (b) "personal history form" which the Civil Service Commission asks certain government employees to complete.

Motion agreed to.

TELEVISION COVERAGE, PICTOU COUNTY, N.S.

Motion No. 115—Mr. MacEwan:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams, letters and correspondence between any unions, organizations and persons in the county of Pictou, province of Nova Scotia, and the Minister of Transport for February 1, 1966, to March 31, 1966, with respect to the removal of the freeze on television applications and coverage by satellite from the CTV network, station CJCH, Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

BILINGUALISM—SPEECH BY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION CHAIRMAN—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of clarification may I ask the Prime Minister this question. He covered the general field of bilingualism and the measures to be taken in the Civil Service. Is it to be understood that no longer in effect is the decision that was announced by the chairman of the Civil Service Commission on February 1, that proficiency in the two official languages is to be considered as an additional asset, and will count as an aggregate 10 per cent of the total selection-rating score? Is that still in effect or has it been abrogated by the announcement of the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my statement I said that proficiency in both languages would be considered as an element of merit in respect of those positions where a knowledge of both languages is required. The application of that, Mr. Speaker, will of course be the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission. There is on the order paper question No. 944 dealing with this matter, the answer to which will probably go into very considerable detail.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Will consideration be given to bilingualism when candidates applying for a position take examinations?

Will the merit factor respect, within limits, bilingualism? Will it be worth anything?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: It will be one of the elements of merit, Mr. Speaker, in respect of those positions where a reasonable proficiency in both languages is required.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether this policy applies to the armed forces?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend would read the statement he will find that special reference is made to the armed forces. It does not apply to them. A special report is being made regarding the situation in the armed forces, and discussions are going on.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a further supplementary question of the Associate Minister of National Defence. The minister will recall the policy changes implemented with respect to staff officers in the army some two years ago, with respect to bilingualism and promotion on the basis of capability. Has that policy been extended to the other two armed forces?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): There was no change in the policy adopted two years ago. This, as the Prime Minister has just mentioned, is the subject of an inquiry just now. However, no concrete recommendations have been made so far.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if he and his colleagues would consider referring the policy statement which he made this afternoon on bilingualism in the public service to a standing or special committee of the house where evidence might be heard and where the staff associations and other interested parties might be given the opportunity publicly to present views and opinions. Also may I ask, Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister mentioned question No. 944—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —since that question has been on the order paper for some 33 days, may I ask when it will be answered.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The Civil Service Commission is an independent body.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I will consider the matter referred to by my hon. friend in the first part of the question. I would point out to him that the staff associations of the Civil Service have already been consulted in respect of the statement I made today.

Concerning the latter part of the question, a detailed answer is being prepared by the Civil Service Commission. I will try to hurry them up.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, my question is really supplementary to the first one put a few moments ago by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to the right hon. Prime Minister about bilingualism. I understand that you did not hear it because the voice of independents is so weak that I am under the impression we will need a megaphone to be heard by you, at the other end of the house.

My question is the following: can the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether the measures announced at the beginning of the sitting this afternoon concerning bilingualism in the public service, will be incorporated into the Civil Service Act, particularly section 47?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: All the regulations issued by the Civil Service Commission require to be within the legislation as it now stands.

[Translation]

ATTENDANCE AT MEETING OF POSTAL EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether executive members of the Canadian Postal Employee's Union attended the meeting held in his office today?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, the postal unions were not at this meeting. It was a meeting of national service-wide organizations of the Civil Service. This very important union is a particular occupational union inside the Civil Service in which there are, I believe, 20 to 25 other such unions. Attending the meeting were only national service-wide organizations.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

FURTHER REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of widespread concern over press reports regarding unidentified flying objects, and in order that these reports may not lead to unfounded speculation, I want to ask the Prime Minister if this matter is being investigated by any department of his government. If so, may I ask what department has been assigned this responsibility.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of these reports. Indeed, I had a telegram a few hours ago concerning another report from western Canada. These matters are being investigated by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): It is the soaring cost of living.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister if the Department of National Defence proposes to make any public statement following the investigation?

Mr. Pearson: I would hope so. When the investigation is completed, I hope the statement will be a reassuring one.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, whether in investigating these possible unidentified flying objects the protection of Canadians could not be taken into consideration, to protect them from possible radiation burns such as are apparently suffered by a boy in my riding?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure all aspects of the problem will be investigated. My hon. friend may recall, in respect of rumours and stories that unidentified heavenly objects had been sighted over Michigan a week or so ago, that the reports showed that these stories were greatly exaggerated.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REMOVAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to France's decision to withdraw from NATO.

In view of France's request that foreign troops be withdrawn from French territory, is the department still consulting with the French authorities with a view to establishing the advisability of keeping Canadian troops over there? Should Canadians troops remain in France, will the French government have any control over their operations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government of France does not intend to leave NATO.

Inquiries of the Ministry

President de Gaulle's government is not in favour of NATO's integrated military operation system. There will soon be bilateral negotiations with France on the matter of the two Canadian bases, but these have not yet started.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Did the French government inform Canada that it would have to withdraw its troops from France?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: Before when?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have until April 1, 1967, to do it, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

RHODESIA—IMPLEMENTATION OF SANCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has Canada been informed that the Commonwealth committee in London, of which our High Commissioner is chairman, intends to ask the United Nations to authorize use of force to implement compulsory sanctions against the government of Ian Smith in Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was a meeting this morning of the sanctions committee which, as my hon. friend says, was chaired by the Canadian High Commissioner. The meeting has not come to any conclusions, and it has adjourned for an indefinite period.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether the two ships in a harbour in Mozambique have cargoes which are for Rhodesia, as the reports indicate?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The ship that has gone to Beira, in Portuguese territory in Mozambique, has not docked. The best information available is that it does not propose to discharge its cargo. It would seem that the ship's captain is under orders of the government of Greece which has prescribed that no ship of Greek registry shall carry oil to Rhodesia.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he any information as to when the royal commission, I believe the Cardin commission, will be convened? Is he aware of the fact that the cleaning firms which clean the Centennial Towers building has been advised that it must have its personnel fingerprinted and checked for security, because the royal commission on security will be occupying offices in the building, beginning next week?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Perhaps I might answer the first part of the question about the Carter Royal Commission. In my budget address I said the report would be down in a matter of two months.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, the Cardin commission before Mr. Justice Spence.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not know of any commission known as the Cardin commission.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask whether I can identify it so that the Prime Minister may understand what I am dealing with? I am referring to the royal commission to be presided over by a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. Is the Prime Minister aware of the date on which this commission will convene? Is he aware of the circumstances I have mentioned, namely that the staff of a certain cleaning organization working in that building are to be fingerprinted? I hope, now, the identification is such that the right hon. gentleman will understand.

Mr. Pearson: If the right hon. gentleman is referring to the commission presided over by Mr. Justice Spence, I know nothing about the latter part of the question he asked. I will be glad to look into it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ROLE OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to address to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question of which he was given notice by my hon. friend from Greenwood. Is it correct as reported from New York that official Polish sources at United Nations have stated that Poland, as one of the members of the international control commission, does not envisage any role for the commission in bringing about a cease-fire or negotiations for ending the war in Viet Nam? If this is correct, is there any possibility for the remaining two powers on the commission to do anything without the concurrence of Poland?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I saw this report which appeared in the Montreal Star last night. In reply, I would say that, as I informed the external affairs committee on Monday, both the Polish and the Indian governments in their initial reaction to the Canadian suggestion about a possible future role for the commission raised a number of considerations which they thought would have to be taken into account if such a proposal were to stand any chance of gaining acceptance by the parties on the ground.

Careful study is being given to these considerations. I have no reason to believe that either government would regard our exchanges on this matter as closed. As is well known, Canada has been having exchanges of its own in Hanoi, Saigon and other capitals as well as at the United Nations, not wholly unrelated to what the commission might be able to do to bring about negotiations in Viet Nam at the opportune time.

Mr. Lewis: Are talks with the Polish government or its representatives still being carried on by any Canadian representatives?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether the welling up of domestic discontent in South Viet Nam in recent days has caused him to review and make a re-analysis of our policy relative to hostilities in that country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say anymore than I did the other day in the House of Commons.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

SCALLOPS—INQUIRY CONCERNING PRICES AND INSPECTION PROCEDURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister aware of the concern felt by the scallop fishermen on the east coast of Canada over the low price recently paid to the fishermen for their catches and also of their concern about recent inspection practices which resulted in large quantities of scallops being withheld from the market? Would the minister advise the house of any action proposed by his department to help the scallop fishermen out of some of their present difficulties?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): The hon. member, who has had many years of experience in keeping fish fresh at sea, knows that the department has a responsibility to develop clearly defined quality criteria and to differentiate between fit and unfit fish. He will agree with me that it is the responsibility of the buyers and of the fishermen to co-operate with departmental inspectors to assist them in implementing the fish inspection regulations.

I want to make it clear that departmental standards have not changed since last year. There has been no change, contrary to a report on Monday in one of the Halifax newspapers. Buyers and fishermen must recognize that scallops caught by Nova Scotia fishermen in waters off the Carolina coast require more and better attention than those originating from the nearer Georges bank. I would urge the close co-operation of all fishermen, as well as buyers, in assuring the consumer of a high quality product resulting in a better price to the fishermen.

I also want the hon. member to know that a specially equipped experimental fisheries vessel with a departmental officer aboard left yesterday for the Carolina ground to test the effectiveness of refrigerated sea water as a chilling medium for storing scallops at sea.

Mr. Crouse: I wish to thank the minister for his thorough reply. In addition to the measures he has already taken, has he suggested to his fisheries staff that they spend more time with the scallop fishermen, informing them of better practices in icing their catches which would eliminate the possibility of further fish being withheld from the market?

Mr. Robichaud: This is being done. In fact officers from outside regions have been into this area to assist the fishermen in the proper handling of scallops.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VALCARTIER CAMP—COMPLAINTS RESPECTING SHANNON AREA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would direct my question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him whether he is now in a position to report on the investigations into complaints with respect to the Shannon area to be expropriated in order to add to the space available at Valcartier Camp.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): We have made a complete review of this project and we are now considering what the possible alternatives to Shannon might be. We intend to go on the ground as soon as the snow has gone. We shall then see the people concerned and get their views, which will be taken into consideration before a final decision is reached on the subject. This should be later this month—I think in the last week of April.

HOUSING

HAMILTON—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN BUILDING SEWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Has the minister been contacted by the Hamilton Board of Control with reference to its desire for assistance in the construction of a $6 million trunk sewer designed to open up 900 acres of C.M.H.C. land for home construction?

Some hon. Members: Order, paper.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

BRIDGES

TROIS-RIVIÈRES—REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Crouse.]

In view of the statement made a little earlier by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State, could the minister consider the possibility of tabling the documents asked for by the notice of motion for production of papers of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières which was passed last February 2, and which we are still waiting for.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I would have to look into that, sir.

DRUGS

MARZINE—USE BY AIR LINES AS SICKNESS REMEDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I have a question to address to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his absence I would address it to his parliamentary secretary. I may say I had given the minister notice. My question concerns the use of a drug called marzine which is now issued only on doctors' prescription. Is this drug being dispensed on Canadian air lines as an air sickness remedy?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): This matter is now under investigation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEW PAY SCALE FOR AIR FORCE PILOTS—RESIGNATIONS OF NAVIGATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does he intend to take any action to prevent the resignation of R.C.A.F. navigators and other aircrew, because of the discrimination they feel is being practised by reason of the recent pay increases for R.C.A.F. pilots.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think this matter was dealt with very fully by the minister yesterday.

Mr. Pascoe: The question, Mr. Speaker, is prompted by a telegram I received from an R.C.A.F. navigator stating that he had resigned because of the pay policy announced by the Minister of National Defence.

WINTER WORKS

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE BECAUSE OF UNFAVOURABLE WEATHER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister not think that construction today which fails to meet deadlines because of six weeks or more of extremely cold and stormy weather should receive equal consideration to that received by those affected because of flooding.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is not acceptable.

TRADE

HIDES AND SKINS—REQUEST FOR QUOTA CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it is prompted by representations which have been made to me by London manufacturers. Is it the intention of the minister to establish quota controls on the export of Canadian cattle hides and calf and kip skins to protect our export markets and to prevent inflation of shoe prices in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAR FERRIES—INCREASED FARES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would inform the house whether or not he received a telegram today from the Premier of Prince Edward Island announcing that at yesterday afternoon's sitting of the legislature in Prince Edward Island a unanimous resolution was passed protesting the announced increase of fares to be charged on the car ferries, and if so, may I ask what action is being taken in this regard.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The answer to the first part of the question is yes, and the answer to the second part will be given by the Minister of Transport.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The Canadian National Railways did announce that they did not intend to continue to sell return tickets. This is the only increase in a great many years, and it is a very small increase indeed.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Minister of Transport tell us exactly what percentage of increase this would mean.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

The hon. member for Bruce.

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO DAIRY PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister inform the house whether final stabilization payments to dairy producers have been completed for the last dairy year.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there have been 135,000 cheques processed, and farmers of Canada have received a total of $18,750,000 to date, the highest payments in history. Claims are still coming in at the rate of about 750 per week.

[Translation]

QUEBEC—REQUESTED COMPENSATION FOR CROP FAILURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In case of poor crops and agricultural disasters in the province of Quebec, to what extent does the federal government help the farmers in Quebec at this time?

Mr. Speaker: That question seems of a very general nature and I wish to point out to the hon. member that it cannot be asked at this time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, does the federal government help the Quebec farmers when there is a disaster?

Mr. Speaker: There again, it seems to me that the hon. member is asking a question of a very general nature and I do not think that it is in order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Did the government of the province of Quebec request assistance for farmers who experienced crop failure?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ricard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the federal Department of Agriculture comply with such request?

Mr. Greene: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR COVERAGE OF FARM WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister received a resolution unanimously passed by the legislature of Prince Edward Island urging the federal government to introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act which would allow farm workers to be covered by unemployment insurance? Also in this connection, I should like to ask whether their hopes are expected to be met by the legislation forecast in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, for having given me notice of his question. I have made inquiries. As yet I have not learned of any resolution such as that to which the hon. member has referred; but in the course of inquiries I learned—and I think the house will be interested in this information—that an interdepartmental committee has been looking into proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and regulations. The work of this interdepartmental committee is well advanced. I have been promised their report within a matter of the next two or three weeks. When that report has come to hand and been considered by me it will be submitted to the government. I also wish to re-affirm the assurance that was given by the Prime Minister some months ago to the effect that, in due course there will be a revision of the regulations and the Unemployment Insurance Act, and that unemployment insurance will be extended to employees on farms in Canada at that time. I hope these changes will be possible before the conclusion of this session.

[Mr. Speaker.]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would accept my thanks for his tabling today of some correspondence which I asked for on March 1, together with the very interesting additions thereto. I should also like to ask him, in connection with the inclusion of British Columbia, which is within the ambit of the subsidy program, whether he would convey to the Minister of Transport my compliments on the improved functioning of that portion of his anatomy which lies above the neck.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Villeneuve.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO ADULTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether yesterday he received representatives of the Canadian Association for Adult Education who presented a white paper on the education of adults in Canada; also I should like to ask him whether the government will give urgent consideration to the white paper's important recommendations, including the recommendation in respect of a federal office of education.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received a delegation from this important association yesterday morning and they presented to me a white paper. I have read it; it is a very interesting and important document and we will be giving consideration to it.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has kept his promise to get the Canada Assistance Plan and collective bargaining in the civil service on the order paper, what about medicare? Will it be on the order paper when we come back after Easter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope so, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to advise hon. members that the question period has expired.

AGRICULTURAL REHABILITATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

AMENDMENTS CHANGING NAME AND EXTENDING APPLICATION

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-152, to amend the Agricultural and Rehabilitation Development Act.

Mr. Vincent: Wait a minute.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

• (4:30 p.m.)

AERONAUTICS ACT

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Transport) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-153, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

PAYMENT OF CHEQUES ON NON-JURIDICAL DAYS

The house in committee on Bill S-14, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Cheques.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, this bill has been considered in committee and there was an amendment which received the approval of the members of the committee. On behalf of the opposition I would ask for quick passage to assist the banks so they may remain open on Easter Monday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LINE IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction of a line of railway in the province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Amesdale on the Redditt sub-division of the Canadian National Railway in a north northwesterly direction for a distance of approximately 68 miles to a point in the vicinity of Bruce Lake, in the district of Kenora, at a total estimated expenditure of $11,100,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister acting on behalf of the Minister of Transport can give us some detail as to the necessity for the construction of this line.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, this resolution is in the standard form. It simply authorizes the railway to expend the necessary amount of money. There is no expenditure from the Consolidated Revenue Fund involved. The company has written the minister of the department and assured him that there is a guaranteed income in terms of total tonnage and that everything in the standard form has been satisfied. This proposition is deemed by the company to be a worth-while enterprise, and the company seeks the authority of this house to commence construction.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether it is not usual to send this type of resolution to a standing committee of the house.

Mr. Turner: The house has the option to either deal with this resolution in the committee of the whole or send it to a standing committee.

Mr. Lambert: That can be done only after second reading.

Mr. Turner: That is correct. We are now at the resolution stage.

Mr. Lambert: This resolution calls for authorization for an expenditure of $11 million. Of course that money is recoverable, but the construction of this line involves capital construction grants for which this house has some responsibility. I think it is incumbent upon the government to inform the house why this line is necessary. We are all interested in development, but we do not want to authorize a development over muskeg or through mosquito ponds. Obviously there is a good reason for the construction of this line, but I think the minister should give the committee all the information he has in order to clarify the situation.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could undertake that, after the bill is introduced and given second reading, it will be sent to a standing committee, if that is the desire of the house, in order to save some time at this stage.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, if we have the assurance that the proposed bill will be referred to a standing committee perhaps we can defer any statements until that time.

Mr. Turner: I will give that assurance, Mr. Chairman. I think this would save the time of the committee.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Turner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-165, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the Province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Amesdale on the Redditt sub-division of the Canadian National Railway in a north northwesterly direction for a distance of approximately 68 miles to a point in the vicinity of Bruce Lake, in the district of Kenora.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Vincent: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago we passed Bill No. C-152 and I want to know whether this bill was passed as amended.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it was.

Mr. Vincent: I was waiting for a copy of the bill and before I received a copy the bill was given third reading and passed.

Mr. McIlraith: It was passed as amended. Unfortunately some copies of the bill as printed on first reading were distributed to hon. members. I checked on this point, and the amendment was concurred in at the committee stage. The bill given third reading is the bill as amended.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could ask the house leader whether the bill as amended was reprinted and is available. I am not making a point of this, but I should like to know whether it is available.

Mr. McIlraith: I believe there were no reprints of the bill. At least, if there were they were not available at the table.

Mr. Vincent: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, may we know exactly what the amendment was?

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. McIlraith: I did not refer to Votes and Proceedings but I checked with the appropriate authorities to make sure of the position, because an hon. member had privately raised the very point now being discussed. I went to the Clerk to check the record, and the bill as amended was passed.

Mr. Starr: Further on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the record should be clear so that all members of this house are satisfied that the amendment referred to a moment ago was concerned with the change of name of the act.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it was concerned with the change of name.

Mr. Starr: So the act will still be called ARDA?

Mr. McIlraith: That is right. The amendment was to the clause dealing with the change of name.

FAIR WAGES AND HOURS OF LABOUR ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING HOURS OF WORK, RATES OF PAY, ETC.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-2, to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) would be good enough to explain the bill and any representations that have been made to him with respect to its contents.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. This act was passed originally in 1935, being chapter 39 of the statutes of that year. The purpose of the present bill is to bring the wages and hours standards in this act into conformity with the standards of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code enacted by parliament last year.

It has been the policy of the federal government for many years to establish wages and hours conditions for work on government construction contracts. This act relates to government construction contracts only. The wages required to be paid are the rates found to be prevailing in the district in which the work is to be performed for each class of work. The hours standard, however, was specifically set down on a national rather than a local basis. In the act as it now stands these hours are established at eight hours a day, and 44 hours a week, unless longer hours are authorized in special circumstances.

In accordance with the principles which parliament approved last year in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, the proposed amendment will make it a condition of a federal government construction contract that $1.25 an hour will be the minimum rate to be paid for work on all such contracts if the prevailing standard for any class of work in any area should be less than $1.25. If it is more, the hourly rate is not changed; we want to be sure that it will be brought up to the minimum rate fixed in the Labour Standards Act. If the bill becomes law the standard work week on federal government construction contracts will be 40 hours rather than the present 44, and an overtime rate of time and one half will be required after 40 hours in a week.

Also in line with the hours of work provisions of the Code, contractors will be permitted to work longer hours than under the existing legislation without the necessity of obtaining a permit. At present a permit is required, if it is found necessary to work more than 44 hours in a week. I might say that a substantial number of permits have been issued when work has had to be completed in a short season or in circumstances where completion of a contract was urgent. It is therefore proposed that the act be amended, in accordance with the bill now before the house, to permit the contractor to work up to 48 hours a week without a permit, so long as the overtime rate is paid after 40 hours.

At the present time a contractor is not penalized in any way if he is found to have failed to carry out the wages and hours conditions of his contract. The government considers that contractors who violate the labour conditions of their contracts should be subject to penalties. Having practised law for many years, it is my opinion that it is absurd to have a situation in which no penalties are provided. Accordingly an amendment is being introduced in the bill which will require that a construction contract shall contain a provision establishing liquidated damages in case of default in carrying out the wages and hours conditions.

In answering the second question asked by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) I would say that over the past year my predecessor and I, as well as senior officials of my department, have discussed the changes required in the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act with both employer and union representatives of the construction industry. In fact, I had consultation with one of the leaders in the construction industry today. I advised him that following the announcement of government business last night, this bill would be considered in the house today. A number of helpful suggestions were made during the discussions to which I have referred. We have incorporated some of the suggestions in the bill and we shall be discussing others later with industry when the regulations under the act are being revised.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks in connection with this bill with some general observations regarding government legislation on hours of work and pay per hours of work. In recent years such legislation has become more prevalent in our society. I expect this is because of pressure of certain groups upon the government. We appreciate that legislation in this connection has traditionally served a two fold purpose, namely that of protecting workers against exploitation and contractors against unfair competition. It is very difficult to set a standard of wages and hours of work that would apply equally to all Canadians, because of the different circumstances in rates of pay and relationships between employers and employees in various parts of the country.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It seems very apparent a serious mistake is being made in this Bill No. C-2, which endeavours to regulate the hours of work performed under government contracts. At times when the work may be taking place many miles from the employee's home, the employee would appreciate the opportunity of spending more time on the job in order to increase his weekly pay. Many of these working conditions can be, and are being, agreed upon between contractors and their employees at the present time. It is my submission that once a contract has been let at a certain figure, the government should no longer dictate to the contractor or his employees. Many construction firms and labour organizations feel very strongly along these lines.

Labour has fought for many years for the right of free negotiation with contractors, and labour representatives do not appreciate undue interference with their negotiations. I could say many things about management and labour relations in other industries and government legislation governing labour. However, since this bill is directed strictly at government contracts, I will confine my remarks to that subject.

I should like to mention further that the kitchen attendants and waiters at two air force bases in my riding received pay increases. However, at the same time their hours of work were reduced to 40 hours a week, so the end result was no increase in take-home pay. This was not what the working people of Canada want in the way of government legislation, and this is especially true at a time when there is a shortage of workers.

There are some changes I should like to see in the bill. The first would be no restriction on the hours of work: all negotiated paid employee contributions should be incorporated into the fair wage, wherever they exist. As we know, there is often a difference in this respect between companies and contractors. Possibly a recognition of the different types of construction work throughout the country is necessary. This suggestion is based on a desire to eliminate difficult and disruptive influences in the industry. I would propose that all conflicts over freely negotiated hours of work should be avoided in all types of construction work in a given labour market.

Then, too, a 30 day limit should be imposed on the registration of any violation of the labour code. If this were done a worker could not come back after one or two years and cause a contractor a great deal of difficulty in attempting to prove there had not been a violation of the labour code. The overtime permit procedure should be limited. I understand that this is being looked after. It has been a nuisance to many contractors when they have been required to get a permit for overtime work, especially on those jobs where the workers desired to work overtime. I would be interested in hearing the minister clarify some of these points.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it seems utterly ridiculous to me to introduce this bill to amend the fair wages and hours of labour act because, for instance, the minimum wage is set at $1.25 an hour. Here is what paragraph 1 says:

> (a) "fair wages" means such wages as are generally accepted as current for competent workmen in the district in which the work is being performed for the character or class of work in which such workmen are respectively engaged; but shall in all cases be such wages as are fair and reasonable—

And the minimum wage is set at $1.25 an hour for competent workmen.

I understand that the minister will be able to claim that nobody prevents a contractor from paying his employees $1.50 or $2.00 an hour. However, one thing remains; the minimum wage, in view of the cost of living at this time, is clearly insufficient.

Moreover, in the explanatory notes of Bill C-2, one reads:

> The main purpose of this bill is to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act to change the general standard of hours of work on federal government contracts from 44 hours in a week to 40 hours—

Let us take the case of a worker who now earns $1.25 an hour. If he works 44 hours a week, his salary is $55 a week. With the new legislation, if his salary remained the same, he would get only $50 a week, that is $5 less than previously.

I do not see in this bill any provision which would guarantee to the worker the same weekly salary, that is the same salary for 40 hours of work that he is now getting for 44 hours of work.

If another worker earns $2 an hour, and works 44 hours a week, he gets $88. If he works only 40 hours a week, he will get only $80, that is a decrease of $8 in his weekly income.

In my opinion, that bill should include some provisions to guarantee that the worker's salary will remain the same for fewer hours of work.

If he only works 40 hours a week, under the new provisions of the act, then his salary should be adjusted accordingly and he should be assured that his take-home pay will not be reduced.

In view of the present economic situation, I think such measures are essential at this time and that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) should state that all workers carrying out federal contracts will actually get the same salary, in spite of shorter working hours, they are now being paid under a 44 hour week.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out it is five o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to a consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion and public bills.

Mr. Nicholson: In view of the fact this bill has been on the order paper for some time and that some members of the house have expressed a desire to get the legislation through as soon as possible, I wonder if there is any possibility of proceeding with it? It is an anomoly that when parliament by an overwhelming vote has stated there should be a minimum wage, and a maximum 40 hour week without overtime for such industries as come within federal jurisdiction, yet we are not in a position to impose these restrictions when we let federal contracts. I am hopeful that hon. members might not see the clock for a few minutes until we get this legislation through.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: I appreciate the desire of the Minister of Labour to get this legislation through, and we share that desire. However, a great deal of time was taken up by statements on motions by ministers and replies by hon. members, and this is a short day. There was a great deal of time taken up by written and oral questions. However, in the last 20 minutes we have passed four pieces of legislation. I am sure the minister does not want to cram this through at this late hour. In any event, the government house leader and I agreed earlier today that we would proceed, in view of what has been done, with the private members' hour.

Mr. Nicholson: I am in the hands of the house, Mr. Speaker.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO INCREASE PENSIONS

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the advisability of introducing a measure to increase the amount of pension provided under the Old Age Security Act to $100 a month and lowering the age of eligibility of applicants to 65 years.

Mr. Knowles: Carried.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I would welcome a decision of the house in regard to the resolution standing in my name; and I appreciate the comment which came from my left. If it was any indication to me that this would be the result, then because, in the first instance, this is merely a resolution, and second, because it is for the guidance of the government, I would very gladly resume my seat and allow hon. members to indicate their opinions on the question.

Since approval of a motion does not normally occur in private members' hour, and since I have rarely had the opportunity to discuss any business during the course of this hour, I should like to say just a few words in order to allow members of the house to give the government the benefit of their decisions with regard to this matter.

I am very pleased, as are other hon. members of the house, to see a government resolution in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) on the order paper dealing with this question, and other plans in social justice. The house of course, knows the many times I have brought this matter to the attention of the government, both through the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and, I must admit, also through my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We are not too far apart in our views in this regard.

Very few of the members in the house today would deny that repeatedly during the course of the last election campaign this subject was made a very great issue. I would put before the house and the country today the thoughts I had on this question, as well as what I thought was necessary for people who must exist on the old age security pension and also on old age assistance.

One way or the other these questions are included in the resolution of the minister. A wealth of research information has been placed before us following upon the hearings before the committee of the other place, and I think that this fact has expedited the appearance of the resolution now standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am well aware that a vast number of members and supporters of the government know the feelings of the people in their constituencies who are concerned over this very important matter.

I do not think I need refer to the tremendous increase in the cost of living which has taken place since this government took office. Neither do I think I have to make reference to the status of people who are subjected to living on this income—and I say that with all justification. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, whether or not this resolution is accepted holusbolus, I believe the government should increase old age assistance, and the old age security pension to $100 a month forthwith.

I have also taken note of the many other areas of social justice referred to in the government resolution, and in this regard another matter I should like to put before the house this afternoon is this. I think it is high time that some definition of the word "disability" were given, as it relates to the awarding of disability pensions. For too long now we have been at the mercy of people who make arbitrary decisions in this regard. I am sure that every hon. member is besieged from time to time by people who can no longer earn their own livelihood because of the fact that someone in authority has stated that they are not permanently disabled, when in fact they could not earn five cents an hour even if hired on a production line.

This is a regrettable state of affairs. The government must accept the responsibility now of clarifying this provision under the Disabled Persons Act. In this enlightened age of affluence which we are enjoying it should not be difficult or beyond the bounds of reason for the government to make this matter clear.

As I said initially, Mr. Speaker, this was a course which I followed during the last election campaign. I am not going to boast about the results I had in the campaign; they are open to scrutiny by anybody. But I do recall that a cabinet minister in the last Liberal government stated that the main reason he was defeated in the last election was because of the Conservative platform of $100 a month for our old age pensioners.

The situation today is such that I know that if given the opportunity, the vast majority of the members of the house would stand up and support the terms of this resolution. I know that all my hon. friends to my left would. As a matter of fact, if the members to my far left had acted in accordance with their consciences, I know that the government would have been defeated in one of the earlier confidence motions during this session. I believe it is as a result of the careful consideration which has been given to suggestions made by the opposition members that the government is finally going to take action on behalf of the people who come within this great area of need.

I now wish, Mr. Speaker, to resume my seat, having taken very few minutes of the time of this house. I think you, Mr. Speaker, perhaps more than some of the other members of the house, know the degree of fairness I like to show when I deal, not only with the government but with all members of the house. The only favour I am going to ask of this government in this parliament is that they allow us to voice our opinions by way of a vote on this resolution, with the stipulation that it is intended for the guidance of the government.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Winkler: Surely.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to see whether I understand the position on the resolution. Is the hon. gentleman also including in this the consideration that the cost involved should be met out of the Canada Pension Plan, as he and his party advocated during the last election?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, the minister belongs to a government which does not have much regard for the way it spends money. He can find the money from wherever he wants; it will not matter to me, as long as he increases this very necessary payment to people who are in receipt of the old age security pension and old age assistance.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome an opportunity to participate in the discussion this afternoon, and I congratulate the hon. member for bringing this matter once more to the attention of the house. As all hon. members realize, it is indeed a vital question.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I might say that this is the third consecutive April that I have had the opportunity in this house to speak on matters pertaining to social security, and I should like to reiterate something I said on two previous occasions in the general area of social security. Over the past 30 years, in our approach to this subject, we have allowed a great many anomalies to creep into the law. In many areas this has been ignored. In my view one of the prime reasons for this is the fact that politicians, being what they are—and this is true at least in part of all parties in this house—have talked from time to time about these measures of social security as a result of pressure being brought to bear on them by various groups in the country. It may well be that the course of action advocated is justified. Of course it may be that the justification has been helped greatly by the pressures placed on various politicians to do these things.

In common with other hon. members, I feel that in many instances, and perhaps in the vast majority of cases, $75 a month is not at all sufficient for the old people of this country.

Reference was made, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. member who preceded me in this debate, to the way he conducted his campaign. Judging by the results and by the many elections he has fought, he undoubtedly conducted himself very well because he is now a most successful member of this house. I congratulate him for that. He made reference to the question of this $100 a month. I, too, would like to make reference to the type of campaign conducted in St. John's West, Newfoundland, and to that conducted by my colleague from St. John's East (Mr. O'Keefe). Both of us conducted our campaign in a manner consistent with what we both have said in this house. Really, all that we have done in social security is to approach it from a broad and comprehensive approach. Many areas of need exist.

I know if the hon. gentleman who spoke were to refer to his mail from his constituents, he would find what I have found. I realize from the many letters I have received, that many people who are not old age pensioners, are looking for assistance. As a result of this, over the past few years I have had an opportunity of making a relatively complete study of the type of assistance that is available to various groups, including old age pensioners, in this country. I refer to those groups who are very much in need of assistance.

Anyone who looks at the facts will find out that while $75 a month may never be adequate, there are many other groups of people in this country who have to survive on much less. I refer particularly to widows with young families. There are many other people falling into this class. I know of many persons in my constituency belonging to that group who might be termed the forgotten people of Canada.

Therefore, any government which is to deal with the problem of social security, if it is really to hold true to the principles of social justice must look at the whole area of need to determine what can be done on the basis of the resources available to the country.

When one makes a statement like that I suppose it is like Abraham Lincoln's definition of the responsibilities of government. Anybody can agree with it. A person of a conservative viewpoint can say, "That is very practical" and a person with a radical viewpoint may say the same thing. What really determines the difference is the way we apply this principle of social justice, personally.

Over the years we may have had periods in our history when we have not paid enough attention to social security. However, in the last few years perhaps we have been paying more attention to social security than we had before that time. The result is that today there is a greater awareness than ever before. There is a greater awareness now than there was even a couple of years ago on the part of members of the House of Commons and on the part of the public generally about social security. Not only old age pensioners but a great many other groups of people need to be attended to by the federal government. Many areas of social security are within the jurisdiction of the provinces. We find that one of the difficulties is in the field of the financial abilities of various provinces to cope with this situation.

Therefore, in answer to the hon. member's speech, I hope that when the resolution on the order paper to which he made reference comes before this house for debate he will give it his full support. I say that, because I think that this Canada Assistance Plan is an enlightened and certainly a much needed approach to social security. It will cover for the first time not only old age pensioners, who are very much the concern of this resolution, but other groups as well.

There are various ways in which the $100 a month can be financed. I think it is to these that the most practical considerations of any government must go. For instance, if we were to grant across the board $100 a month to old age pensioners, we know that it would cost in the vicinity of $800 million. Were the government to incur that kind of expenditure, what would happen to other programs for other people in need?

Many other social demands besides the one raised in the resolution are placed on the government. Those demands include such fields as education, retraining of the unemployed and other very necessary social programs which could have an impact on the economy of our country. When we talk about $100 a month, we must determine what it is that we are really trying to do. We must relate this to the cost, and we must try to come up with the best way of doing it.

In the light of the present circumstances I know that it is much easier for any politician to go out on the hustings and say to the constituents, "Well, we are going to give $100 straight across the board" because that covers those who need the money very much; it covers those who have less need for the money, and it covers those who perhaps do not have a need for it. The point is that it will cost the treasury a considerable amount of money.

It may be that any government happening to be in office, be it Liberal, Conservative, or otherwise, were it to raise the old age pension would tend to think it had done something wonderful in social security, and therefore would continue to neglect some other areas of need.

May I say that I think there are other ways at this time by which we can accomplish the purposes implicit in the resolution now before the house. That is to say, we may be able to provide additional assistance to old age pensioners through the Canada Assistance Plan which will be coming before the house at an early date. I am afraid I cannot comment on it. However, I am sure that it will meet with the approval of members of the house. In saying that I know that there will be hon. members who will feel that they would rather see an increase to a straight $100, because they will be afraid that under the Canada Assistance Plan there may be certain areas of need, as in the case of old age pensioners, which will not be met because ten provinces of Canada will be doing the administering, and perhaps for other reasons. I feel that by the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan the government is, in part, meeting the problem implicit in the resolution before the house today.

There may be other ways to approach this matter. Many hon. members in the house were particularly attracted to the Senate report, commonly referred to as the Croll report. It appeals to me, because in the administrative sense it seems in terms of social justice to guarantee practically a minimum income to our older Canadians.

I think that is the direction in which this country ought to be heading. In matters of social security in the past, that has been our approach. It has been the peculiar position of the federal government as related to other fields of need, which has caused it to branch into those other areas of social need. Therefore I say again that while our approach to the problem of old age pensions may not be all that perhaps it ought to be, it is more comprehensive than is the approach to almost any other area of social security.

• (5:20 p.m.)

So, if we move in the direction of providing a minimum income for older people I think we shall be accepting this principle of guaranteed minimum incomes and that we would go on from there at some later date in our development to making guaranteed minimum incomes available to other categories of people. This is, if you will, the cleanest way, the most honest way and the fairest way in which to meet this pressing social problem.

In the 30 years or more which have passed in this country since we began dealing with social security in a serious way we have built up a program based on a philosophy which is today, in my view, outdated. It has been based on the philosophy of the hand-out. I think this kind of approach is being taken far less frequently by members of all parties in this house, although I am dismayed from time to time when I attend meetings of boards of trade and similar bodies and find people there, no doubt with good intentions, still behaving as if welfare represented a kind of drain from the people who have to the people who have not, whereas what we are trying to do in reality is to give various classes of people better opportunities to fulfil themselves as Canadians.

We should remember that there are many groups of people, scattered and hidden throughout this country, who do not now receive even the level of assistance which is available to our old age pensioners. Many of them are not yet 50. They include widows with families, young people who have dropped out of school and who cannot find suitable jobs, people who have to draw social assistance—all of them people whose dignity is being severely damaged. I recognize the honest differences we may have on this subject, but the fact that so much was said during the past election campaign about this $100, important as it may be, could lead to our forgetting some of these other claims. When we talk about old age pensioners and their pressing needs we should remember there are many other groups in this country for whom little has been done up to now, either by Liberal or by Conservative governments to bring them into line with the benefits now available to our senior citizens.

This is, in part, a constitutional problem—at least, a constitutional problem presents itself in one piece of legislation to which the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) had made reference. I hope that when these matters are discussed further during the course of the next few months we shall all examine them in an effort to find the best and most acceptable way, both in terms of economics and of social justice, of providing pensioners with the assistance they need, and in this way help to establish a more comprehensive approach toward social security in this country than in the past.

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he really think that the resolution before us raises a constitutional question?

Mr. Cashin: No. I think—

Mr. Winkler: Thank you. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Like the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) I shall keep my remarks very brief because I should like to see this motion voted on by the house. I congratulate the hon. member for Grey-Bruce not only on presenting this motion but on the luck of the draw which enabled his motion to be discussed before some others. There are three or four motions on the order paper under the heading of private members' business including one in my name, all of which seek the same end, namely an increase in the old age pension to $100 a month and the lowering of the age of eligibility to 65 years right away.

I support this proposition. I have supported it for so long that I hardly need say so. I also wish to make the point that if we are to reform parliament and get some business done here it might be a good thing once in a while to let a private member's motion such as this come to a vote. All the motion says is that in the opinion of the house the government should consider providing $100 a month at age 65.

When this question was before us in two amendments during the debate on the address there were procedural arguments and it was suggested that the passing of either of those amendments would cause the defeat of the government. The passing of this motion would not cause the defeat of the government. It would simply express an opinion of the house, and I believe if the house were free to express its opinion on this issue, as it has been on other issues, it would be categorically in favour of the motion before us.

I listened with interest to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin). He took 15 minutes to tell us what he wanted to say. But what did he say? Really, all he said was that there are other areas where something needs to be done just as urgently as something needs to be done for the old age pensioners. But he did not say when or where we should move. As a matter of fact I believe his speech added up to the using of these other areas as an excuse for doing nothing to raise the old age pension, and I suggest that is not good enough.

Mr. Cashin: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not recall that I made reference in my speech to the Canada Assistance Plan which I thought would in a large measure cope with this problem?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, I know the hon. member referred to the Canada Assistance Plan. We have been trying to get the government to proceed with that for a full year. But again he is using that plan, as well as other things undefined, as an excuse for opposing the motion put down by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

I do not take second place to the hon. member for St. John's West in my belief that the Canada Pension Plan is good legislation. Indeed, I believe we have got many pieces of worthwhile social legislation on the statute books of this country, put there by the governments which have held office over the years, even if under pressure from some of us. But I think our package of social legislation will not be good enough for Canada in the sixties as long as we leave the old age pension at its present figure of $75. Even though people will begin getting the benefit of the Canada Pension Plan in some future year, I believe, as one who has studied this matter carefully, that at the present moment the level of our old age pension should be brought up to $100 a month.

I am asking the house today to let us have a vote on this issue to see whether this is not the opinion of the members of the House of Commons. The government can then decide whether it wishes to pay some attention to that opinion. Surely we have the right once in a while in private members' hour to express our opinion by a vote. The hon. member for St. John's West made a remark about the mail we get from our constituents. This is something which, I think, impresses all of us. Anyone who has been around here as long as I have gets a great deal of mail, and during the present session there have been many subjects on which people have been writing us. But in my experience it is still the hundreds of letters from older people telling me of their plight, of their difficulty in trying to get along on $75 a month, which outdistance all the mail I get on all the other subjects. If this is my experience I suggest it is probably the experience of a good many other members of this house.

It is also a fact that all the responsible social agencies in the country have established that an older person simply cannot get along on less than $110, $115 or $130 a month—different organizations have arrived at different figures.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I submit that with these facts staring us in the face, as presented to us by social work organizations, concerning the conditions which our older people face, and as presented to us in the letters our pensioners write to us, that we in this House of Commons ought to have the heart, the decency and the responsibility to act on this motion.

I would like to speak on it at length, Mr. Speaker, but I am pleading for a vote, and therefore I conclude these remarks at this point and urge the house to support this motion for raising old age security to $100 a month right away.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my first words will be to congratulate the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) for having introduced this resolution, and having put it on the order paper, to ask that the old age pension be raised to $100 a month and the age of eligibility of applicants be set at 65 years instead of 70 years as it is today.

While the mover was explaining why his motion should be adopted, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) intervened to ask if he thought we should raise taxes or include such an increase in the Canada pension plan. The Minister of Finance seemed to wonder where he could find the money to pay $100 to persons of 65 and over. I think that we are taking this matter a little too lightly in this house.

We do think of our old people, but not seriously enough. Like any other member of the cabinet, the Minister of Finance knows very well that a pension of $75 is inadequate at the present time and, during the last election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the head of government, promised up to $125 a month to those of our senior citizens who were in need.

But now, four and a half months after the election, the Minister of Finance is worrying about where to find the money to raise old age pensions.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: May I say to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that I did not ask that question. I asked the hon. member who was speaking at the time whether he intended to finance this out of the Canada Pension Plan, as had been advocated by his party. It is quite obvious where the money would come from: It would come from the taxpayers.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. Minister of Finance for making known his stand, but I do not agree with him in that the money required to increase old age pensions would have to be taken out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers. We now have several plans in Canada: the Canada pension plan, old age security, unemployment insurance, unemployment assistance, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Act, and coming medicare, all kinds of plans, the cost of which will be met through taxes.

Now, there is another way of financing an increase in old age pension, of financing social security in Canada. And that method, the Minister of Finance knows what it is. It is the full use of the Bank of Canada in making financially possible what is physically achievable. Instead of calling it a plan, a "master plan", let us call it a national dividend from the new credits of the Bank of Canada.

It is strange, but when war comes, the Minister of Finance does not wonder where the money will come from. The minister knows that in 1939, when war broke out, the government of the day did not go to the taxpayers for money, because they had not had a cent for some ten years, since the beginning of the depression. We went to the Bank of Canada. The Minister of Finance at that time, Mr. Ilsley, managed to use the Bank of Canada credits, to summon forth, right across the country, such war industries as no country in the world has ever known.

It was possible then to find the money and to set up a tremendous war machine in Canada. When it comes to social security, the Minister of Finance will ask us: where will the money be found, where will it come from? From the pockets of Canadian taxpayers? Let us be logical, and let us face the facts.

The Minister of Finance is aware that the Canadian people are making superhuman efforts and are ready to keep on contributing to the economic development of our country, to the establishment of new industries and to the increase of Canadian productivity. The Minister of Finance is aware of this. But in his budget, he checks the economic development of the country and he will create more unemployment and slow down the progress of the Canadian economy.

The increase in old age pensions must not result in a decrease of the purchasing power of other elements or social classes of our society. Is Canada able to produce enough goods to guarantee to all those who are 65 or over an income of $100 a month? Is Canada capable of producing enough clothing, food, housing, for all our elderly people to live decently in our country? Has Canada the physical possibilities to make life happier for our old people? The Minister of Finance does not ask himself those questions because he knows that Canada can do it, that the production is there, that our stores, our industries are full of all kinds of goods. We are not lacking in clothing, wood, manpower, goodwill, to develop the country.

And the main question which keeps coming up in the house as well as outside is the financial question: Where will the money come from? The taxpayers will pay, the Canadian taxpayers will be taxed more.

Mr. Speaker, when we tax the worker and the farmer, when the government taxes the people, we diminish the purchasing power of that class by that much.

Why not resort to the redistribution of wealth in Canada? If some requisites are taken away from someone earning $5,000 a year to be given to one who earns nothing, the over-all purchasing power of the Canadian people is not increased in any way.

We, in the Ralliement Créditiste, suggest the implementation of the social credit principle to pay a national dividend, not out of thin air but based on what the Canadian people create through productivity.

This year, in 1966-1967, we are advised by the government—and the Minister of Finance said so in his Budget speech—that Canada will produce approximately $54 to $55 billion worth of consumer goods or services. Faced with this huge production, the Canadian people as a whole, and not only in part, will have a total national income of about $40 to $42 billion. There will be a difference of $12 to $13 billion because the government does not try to balance production and the purchasing power or the taxpayers' income.

Mr. Speaker, the Social credit doctrine has been expounded in this house by members from Alberta for nearly 25 or 30 years. Since 1935, members outlined here the Creditists' theory or the Social credit doctrine, but the government has always turned a deaf ear. Instead of gearing the financial system to the production system, the government tries to adjust the production system to the financial system.

Instead of making financially possible what is physically possible, the government tries to make physically possible what is financially possible. Production is adjusted to finance, instead of finance being adjusted to production. That is the weakness of the present system.

Does the minister want to put a question?

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question about something that has always puzzled me regarding his views and the views of those who adhere to Social Credit doctrines? The hon. member has said, and now repeated it, that what is physically possible should be financially possible. I wonder whether the converse is true, that what is financially possible is also physically possible. That has been a problem that has always puzzled me about his financial views.

Mr. Caouette: That is exactly what I just said.

[Translation]

Instead of fitting finance to material possibilities, efforts are made to adjust material possibilities to financial possibilities.

I would now ask the Minister of Finance whether, in wartime, this one question was asked: Is there any credit available to make guns and shells or to build war plants?

As the need for war plants, guns, clothing and feeding soldiers arose, the government found the necessary credits. The minister knows that. But with peace, and for the preservation of peace, the minister can no longer find the money to guarantee economic security and personal liberty to each and every Canadian citizen.

In wartime, there were jobs for all Canadian young men and women and there were no unemployed in Canada. But, the minister says it is financially impossible to do it in time of peace. We will not accept this constant tight credit policy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Villeneuve and I appreciate the fact that he can be carried away when talking about financial theories, but I wish to remind him that a specific matter is before the house: the advisability of increasing old age pensions to $100.

Therefore, I ask the hon. member for Villeneuve to confine his remarks to the subject matter of the motion now before the house.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall comply with your request.

However, I wanted to insist that funds must be found to increase old age pensions to $100 per month.

Now, the present government does not have the means to finance these pension increases. All the government does, is to make promises at election time and to forget those same promises the day after the election. That is all it does.

I suggested the Bank of Canada to the government as a means to finance old age pension increase.

We have been demanding $100 per month for our senior citizens in Canada for the last ten years; with the rise in the cost of living, we will some day ask for $125 per month at age 60, because people 60 years of age can no longer find employment to make a living; even at 40, they are considered too old.

Mr. Speaker, these are considerations that we must eventually face. I do not want to prevent the vote from being taken on this resolution, but I want to give the Liberals an opportunity to prove they are sincere. If they are so desirous of helping the elderly in Canada, they will let the vote be taken on the motion this afternoon.

If they are not sincere toward our senior citizens, all they have to do is to stand up and talk the resolution out in order to prevent it from coming to a vote.

The Ralliement créditiste will vote in favour of an increase of the old age pension to $100 at 65 years of age—

Mr. Habel: How many are you?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Caouette: My friend, the hon. member for Cochrane, asked me how many members we are. Proportionately, we are more numerous than the members of his own party. In closing, I shall say that we strongly advocate a pension of $100 a month at 65 and that we wish this same pension be paid to needy people of 60.

I shall not talk the resolution out as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did earlier, and as the mover of the resolution requested, I ask that the vote be taken in favour of our senior citizens, and not in favour of any political party.

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, on an occasion such as this I think the sincerity of one's support for a motion of this kind is indicated more clearly by allowing it to come to a vote than by indulging in a multitude of words. However, I do want to state categorically that we in the Social Credit party are in full support of the resolution now before us, and we intend to give it our support if the government will allow it to come to a vote before six o'clock.

I do not think there is any question in anyone's mind regarding the necessity for an increase in old age security to $100 per month. On a number of occasions we have received communications from individuals who are endeavouring to get by on the present pension of $75 per month. They have provided us with lists of groceries, and their other costs, to show the increase in the cost of living that has taken place over a short period of time.

Here in this house it has been brought to our attention that there has been a constant increase in the cost of living, and we have been warned that this increase will continue throughout this year. For that reason I do not think anyone can argue that an increase in old age pensions is out of line. We hope therefore, that other members will have an opportunity this afternoon to support this resolution and vote on it.

A short time ago we in this party had the opportunity of presenting a compromise formula to the government for its consideration. We did so because the government had indicated quite clearly that it was not prepared to grant $100 per month old age pension at age 65. We regret there has not been any response whatsoever to this compromise proposal, and we must come to the conclusion that the government has not been sincere in its quest for a formula whereby old age pensions could be increased to bring some relief, especially to those who are in dire need.

The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) referred to the fact that our proposal would cost in the neighbourhood of $800 million. We do not accept that suggestion because old age pensions are universal and there would be a return in the form of income taxes. Of course other types of assistance would be eliminated, and this would drastically reduce the cost from $800 million.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Therefore we believe the government should move in line with the recommendations of this motion. We also call the attention of the government to the fact that veterans, superannuated civil servants and other categories of senior citizens are still awaiting some definite consideration. Many of these people are living in conditions almost of destitution. I have received from a number of old age pensioners organizations the request that we have a free vote on this particular measure. We were allowed a free vote on the matter that was decided yesterday. I realize there is of course a difference in the issue that was before us then and that which is before us now, but it is very difficult for senior citizens to understand why a free vote can be allowed on one issue but not on another that so vitally affects their interests. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion is made that this matter should come to a vote today as an indication of the feeling of the house for the guidance and direction of the government in its consideration of this issue.

I would suggest that a vote be taken this evening in order to obtain the decision of the house. I would further suggest that the government should take the result of the vote into very serious consideration. In the debate that was concluded last evening—I shall not refer to it in detail—it was said that treatment of the misfits in our society is a measure of the stature of our nation. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the treatment of our senior citizens is a measure of the stature of our nation.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, it amused me somewhat to hear several members clamour for the vote, and then, all of them took the time to speak just the same. One spoke for 29 minutes, another for 14 minutes, and so on. This being so, Mr. Speaker, everybody here would claim his right to speak in this house. I know members on both sides who would like to speak about old age security.

Everybody agrees, I think, that the situation of our old people should be improved. It is a matter of considering the best procedure to be followed for that purpose.

In my opinion, it is not realistic to give $100 to persons of 65, because some of them really need $150 at that age, while others would still not be getting enough, and for others still, $150 would be luxury.

Therefore, I feel that the whole social security program should be reviewed.

A member of the Ralliement Créditiste mentioned an aspect that should be taken into consideration. As things are, obtaining a pension at 65 leads some people to think they are getting old in our society, whereas between 60 and 65, jobs are getting scarce. This is not realistic.

I believe the whole social assistance system should at all costs be revised and reviewed, in a practical way, according to the needs of 1966. Consideration should therefore be given to the manpower program, for instance, as well as to the retraining of the unskilled worker, in short, jobs should be found for those between 55 and 60 years when they are no longer able to work.

The needs of old people should also be taken into consideration, because, as I said earlier, for a few of them, $150 a month would not be enough.

Even if partisanship is forbidden, even if it is said that no political capital should be made out of this question, I believe that efforts are being made to embarrass the government and I shall believe it until I am shown it is not so.

It was stated a while ago, across the floor, that the government did not seem sincere. It nevertheless remains that a bill on social security was announced and it seems to be rather comprehensive. It has not been submitted to us, but if it contains provisions to ensure a guaranteed income to our old people, according to their needs, and if it provides for additional benefits, for instance, when their health makes it impossible for them to survive with the present allowance, in short, if special allowances are paid without too many restrictions and red tape, I think their needs will be more adequately met than if we were to grant them a $100 pension at age 65. It was the leader of the Ralliement créditiste (Mr. Caouette) who suggested at one time that the pension be set according to the cost of living. That would be more realistic, for it is possible that a $100 pension at age 65 may not be realistic at some future time.

I think a vote at this time would settle nothing. First, the house is now in a minority. It would only embarrass those people who are unanimous in wishing the old people well.

In these circumstances, I think all opposition parties are helping the government by leaving it no peace, by reminding it of its responsibility to do something to meet the needs, not only the old people aged 65, 66 or 70 but of all those in our midst who need to live properly according to 1966 standards. The unemployed, for instance, those who, because of social conditions, cannot find employment, must also be our concern as much as the old people.

Consequently, I suggest to the opposition to keep on harassing the government for a comprehensive social legislation to solve the whole problem, covering all those in need, in a society as affluent as ours where it is inconceivable, even today, to find poverty when so many things go to waste.

I am not concerned about the financial aspect of the matter, for I know that when a practical plan to meet such needs is found, what is materially necessary will be made financially possible.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, some hon. members are calling for the question to be put. I should like to draw to their attention the importance of the matter under discussion. I was prepared to put forward quite legitimate arguments giving the government's viewpoints with regard to increasing the old age pension to $100 a month. Many members on this side of the house, and I am sure on the other side, would have welcomed the opportunity to speak in this debate today. However, many of them have left for the Easter recess, under the impression that we would continue with government business a procedure which was denied by hon. members opposite. Therefore with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Did the hon. lady say "denied"?

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the desire of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mrs. Rideout) to make her speech, and our desire to hear it, I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent to sit for another hour, perhaps hear her speech and a few others, and then reach a decision?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would once more ask the hon. lady whether she used the word "denied" in regard to our dealing with government business?

Mrs. Rideout: I said that the minister this afternoon asked for permission to continue with government business.

Mr. Winkler: And he was denied consent?

Mrs. Rideout: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has not expired.

Mr. Knowles: Let us go on.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, is the house leader going to indicate what the business will be for the week in which we come back?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. We expect to proceed with the budget debate and continue with it through that week. I hope there will be no need to change those plans. I do not foresee any at the moment, and I hope there will not be any need arise in the intervening time.

• (6:00 p.m.)

May I express the hope that all hon. members will have a much needed recess between now and Tuesday, April 19. I hope they will have an opportunity to visit the people in their constituencies as well as an opportunity to visit with their families, so that they will return refreshed and invigorated for the tremendous program of work we have ahead.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

NATIONAL WILDLIFE POLICY

CONTENTS

Introduction, 3969

General Wildlife, 3970

Migratory Birds
General policy, 3970
Maintenance and management of habitat, 3971
Control of harvest, 3972
Research, 3972

National Parks Wildlife
General policy, 3973
Research, 3973

Territorial Wildlife
General policy, 3974
Research, 3974

Co-ordination, 3975

NATIONAL WILDLIFE POLICY AND PROGRAM

Introduction

Wildlife, a renewable resource, is one of Canada's great heritages. Yet not enough is being done to ensure its future usefulness to Canadians. As the economy expands, as Canadians find more leisure time at their disposal, as urban development impinges on wildlife habitat, and as farmers and foresters adopt new techniques to protect and improve their crops, the pressures on wildlife steadily mount.

Wildlife contributes to the national economy and provides millions of man-hours of priceless outdoor recreation. There are over 1,000,000 hunters in Canada. In recent years they have spent about $100 million annually in pursuing their sport.

A great number of Canadians and foreign visitors use the resource in other ways: they look at wildlife, travelling many miles to do so, and study and photograph wildlife. Wildlife is a major attraction for visitors to both National and Provincial parks. There were over nine million visitors to our National Parks in 1965.

The demand for wildlife for both hunting and non-consumptive uses seems to increase with population growth and the rising standard of living. Evidence from the United States and Great Britain indicates that the increase in demand continues as the human population grows. So the need to preserve wildlife will become even more urgent.

The supply of wildlife has generally grown smaller as the number of Canadians and visitors to Canada has grown larger. Drainage of wetlands, destruction of natural cover for the building of cities, the improvement and extension of farms, the growing of trees, and the flooding of lands behind large dams have all reduced the area of habitat for many species. Wildlife numbers depend upon the extent and quality of available habitat, just as the numbers of livestock depend upon the quality and quantity of range.

Jurisdiction over wildlife is divided between Canada and the provinces. Canada has a responsibility for migratory birds, for wildlife in the National Parks, and for those species in the Northwest Territories declared by the Governor in Council to be in danger of extinction. The provinces and the Territories have full responsibility for all other wildlife, but the benefits of wildlife can accrue to all Canadians and some national perspective toward the resource is long overdue.

Means by which national concern about wildlife can best be translated into effective action have been discussed by representatives of Canada and the provinces at meetings of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, the Federal-Provincial Wildlife Conference, and the Prime Minister's and Premiers' Conference in July 1965. It has been agreed that the Federal Government should take positive action for the conservation of migratory birds and their habitat, and that federal assistance should be made available in respect of wildlife coming under provincial jurisdiction.

The policy and program outlined herein have been developed to meet the needs expressed by conservationists and wildlife officials throughout Canada by means in accordance with principles generally endorsed by responsible Ministers.

In brief, the program to be developed under our general wildlife policy includes supporting and undertaking fundamental research in support of wildlife management throughout Canada, provision of information about wildlife, and co-operation with the provinces, on request and by agreement, in attaining the goals of wildlife management. The program also includes an increase in activities related to the federal responsibilities for migratory birds, wildlife in National Parks, and wildlife in the Northwest Territories.

General Wildlife Policy

1. The Federal Government will undertake research on the relationship between wildlife and forests. This program will be integrated with basic studies of forest ecology and productivity being carried on by the Department of Forestry. Objectives will be to determine factors affecting wildlife populations supported by various types of forests, the effects of varying populations of wildlife on the forests, and the effects of forestry practices on wildlife populations.

2. The Federal Government will undertake research on factors affecting the health of wildlife populations. Diseases, parasitic infections, pesticides and other environmental pollutants have important effects on wildlife populations in all parts of Canada. Studies of those factors are specialized occupations calling for a high degree of training and adequate laboratory support and it is unlikely that those requirements will be met in all provinces. The Federal Government must develop facilities for such studies to meet its own responsibilities. Pesticides and many diseases affect more than one member of an animal community, so the information obtained will be useful to all governments.

The following programs are planned:

(a) Systematic assessment of the occurrence and significance of diseases and parasites affecting Canadian wildlife populations (some of which indirectly affect humans as well).

(b) Determination of the effects of pesticide-use programs on wildlife populations.

(c) Maintenance of a central registry of information on pesticide characteristics, pesticide residues in wildlife, and diseases and parasites if they relate to wildlife. Information will be provided to other governments on request.

(d) Development and maintenance of a national reference collection of wildlife parasites and disease organisms.

3. Wildlife research services may be provided to provinces on request and by agreement if it is apparent that the Federal Government is best equipped to deal with the problems concerned.

4. The Federal Government may support research and management related to wide-ranging wildlife populations. Some wildlife populations, for example, barren-ground caribou, move across provincial boundaries and thus come under the jurisdiction of more than one government. Co-ordinated or co-operative research and management are usually necessary if such populations are to thrive. Agreements may be concluded with provinces desiring to participate in co-operative research or management of populations that are not confined to one province.

5. The Federal Government's information program will be designed to serve the interests of all governments wherever possible. The dissemination of information about wildlife by all media is a powerful means of improving the quality of wildlife management and securing public acceptance of management measures. The principles of wildlife management are the same whatever species or groups of species may be involved, although the details of application may vary. Bulletins, brochures, and films prepared primarily to convey information about wildlife subject to federal responsibility may thus usefully and easily be modified to serve a broader purpose.

6. The Federal Government will act to improve the supply of professionally trained wildlife biologists. Prospective entrants to the field should be encouraged, and research carried on in the universities as an aspect of their graduate training program should be supported.

Two activities are under way and will be expanded:

(a) Needed researches in the wildlife field that can be effectively undertaken by university staff members and graduate students are being supported by contracts.

(b) Scholarships are being offered to graduate students in wildlife and allied fields.

Migratory Birds

General Policy

1. Every effort will be made to prevent the extinction of any species. Special protection of the birds and their habitat, and artificial propagation may be employed.

2. Bird populations should be managed so that they are maintained at levels as nearly as possible in harmony with man's various interests. Such a concept of optimum population size is useful, even though optima cannot yet be defined for more than a few species. Limitations of habitat and conflict between birds and man's other interests set the upper limit of optimum populations. Human demand and the danger of extirpation set the lower limit. Populations of most ducks should be maintained as nearly as possible within the high and low levels that existed during the period 1950-56. Such populations will ensure survival of all species, provide some opportunity for hunting and other recreational pursuits in Canada and the United States for the foreseeable future, yet not give rise to insoluble problems of crop damage. Populations of most geese could usefully be maintained at somewhat higher levels than have existed in recent years. As opportunity permits, or circumstances require, studies should be directed toward defining optimum populations of other migratory birds. If actual populations are not in line with defined optima, means should be devised to bring them to the desired level.

3. All Canadians should have an opportunity to share in the use of the resource, and those who use it should contribute by user fee to the costs of management.

4. Because migratory birds move back and forth across the continent, intergovernmental and international consultation, co-ordination, and co-operation in research and management will be continued and expanded.

Maintenance and Management of Migratory Bird Habitat

1. Survival of migratory birds is dependant upon maintenance of habitat. Suitable wetland habitat in amounts sufficient to support desired populations of ducks and geese will be preserved by acquisition, lease, or other form of agreement.

2. Agreements may be concluded with provinces desiring to participate in acquisition or management of habitat, the terms of agreement to be compatible with the national objective of maintaining desired populations and distribution of migratory birds and to provide security for the federal investment.

3. Some of the areas acquired in fee simple or to which agreements pertain may require no management other than that required to maintain them in their natural state. For many others, the pressure for an increased supply of birds and the need to get the highest return for the public investment will call for development and improvement. Thus, when it is economically feasible, habitat will be improved so as to increase its carrying capacity for and productivity of birds. This may be done by controlling water levels, altering natural plant cover, and creating nesting and resting sites. It is desirable that this be done so far as possible without adversely affecting the aesthetic quality of the landscape.

4. Habitat may be managed so as to influence the local distribution of birds and thus reduce the possibility and extent of damage to agricultural crops and other interests. Management plans for all areas where significant damage by birds occurs or may occur will include features designed to eliminate or minimize damage. Provision of food to attract birds away from commercial crops is the principal technique presently employed.

5. Land managed for migratory birds should be available for public use so far as possible. In most cases, the public should have access to habitat under public control in order to watch, study, or photograph the birds. In many cases, such lands may support concentrations of birds of sufficient size that hunting is desirable. In any case, management will involve controlling public activity so that it does not damage the habitat or undesirably disturb the birds. Public use may be subject to a user fee. Arrangements in this regard may be a part of agreements with provinces.

6. Land secured primarily for preservation of migratory bird habitat may be used for other productive purposes, if they are not incompatible. Where such is the case, and there is local need and economic justification for it, such uses may be permitted by agreement with provinces, other government agencies, corporations, or individuals.

7. Two programs to acquire adequate control of wetland habitat are planned:

(a) Conclusion of agreements with landowners whereby they agree not to drain or fill the wetlands which they own, or burn the vegetation around them, in return for a payment based on the value of the surrounding land discounted at five per cent for a 20-year period. Using this procedure to maintain about two-thirds of the more than six million small potholes in the vitally important prairie breeding grounds should provide habitat for populations within the 1950-56 levels.

(b) Purchase or long term lease of large marshes which require management for great productivity and public use. Large marshes are important not only as breeding areas but also as areas where the birds may winter or rest during migration. They are also the areas where much of the hunting takes place. Some of the marshes that are important to waterfowl and are likely to be drained or otherwise adversely affected are well known. The magnitude of a program to preserve all such areas, and the priorities for acquisition, cannot be finally determined until the ARDA-sponsored Land Capability Inventory, now under way, is completed and studied.

Control of Migratory Bird Harvest

1. A sustained yield of migratory game birds should be secured at as high a level as availability of habitat and risk of damage to other interests will permit. Within the limits imposed by the natural distribution of populations, all Canadians should have equal opportunity for a fair share of the harvest.

2. Given adequate habitat, regulation of the harvest is the principal means of population control. Regulation of the opening dates, season lengths, bag limits, and zones governing hunting will have the primary objective of maintaining overwintering populations at a level in harmony with the ability of the habitat to support them. Risk of unforeseen natural hazards, the existence of a presently unknown margin of error in population data, and the unpredictability of weather conditions that affect hunting seasons demand a conservative approach to the establishment of regulations.

3. Other objectives of regulations will be to reduce the waste of birds by crippling, to reduce the risk of accidents, and, so far as possible, to provide equivalent hunting opportunity to all Canadians. In addition, regulations will be drafted with a view to the practicality of their enforcement.

4. Equitable opportunity to harvest depends upon observance of the regulations governing hunting. Illegal over-harvest is equivalent to the theft of public property. Enforcement and information programs designed to secure conformity of hunting practices with regulations will be expanded and improved.

5. Special temporary provision will be made for privileged use of migratory birds by persons who, because of their place or mode of living, require the resource for subsistence. The legal basis for such provisions, which are especially necessary to some Eskimos and Indians, is not clear, nor will their administration be easy. Solution of both the legal and administrative problems will be given high priority.

Migratory Bird Research

The primary objective of research is to secure information that will enable effective management. In the process the sum of human knowledge of our natural environment is increased.

Research Related to Habitat

1. Since migratory bird management involves management of habitat as well, some research must be directed toward obtaining information on habitat characteristics and the complex interrelationships among living things that share the same space.

2. A major objective of migratory bird habitat research is to develop better methods of evaluating the habitat required for all stages in the life cycles of the various species. Contributing to this end are studies of rates of occurrence of birds in different areas and comparisons of growth, survival, behaviour, and use made of food and cover plants in each type of area. Data obtained will be basic to an improved classification of migratory bird habitat, as well as a more effective method of evaluation.

3. Research is required to provide the information necessary to develop methods of improving the usefulness of habitat at lowest cost. Studies of the characteristics and usefulness of natural habitat are basic, and yield the information to plan experimental modification of water levels, plant cover, etc.

4. Development of effective and economic methods of alleviating damage by birds to other interests requires investigation of the characteristics, extent, and severity of damage.

5. If land is to be used for more than one purpose, the requirements of the several purposes must be clearly understood. Thus, to develop plans for multiple use of wildlife habitat, the results of wildlife research must be considered in conjunction with information obtained during studies of other land uses, such as grazing, forestry, etc.

Research Related to Populations

1. Research on migratory birds themselves has the objective of maintaining current, accurate information on their population levels and distribution, and developing an understanding of the operation of factors affecting the numbers and distribution of the birds.

2. The demand-supply squeeze on ducks and geese necessitates development and perfection of systems for accurate and continuing measurements of their populations. Present systems include aerial and ground censuses of populations on the breeding grounds in spring, midsummer surveys to provide data for an estimate of productivity, and post-hunting season surveys on the wintering grounds. Most of the relevant work in Canada is carried on by the United States. Canadian participation will be extended with the eventual objective of assuming major responsibility within Canada.

3. The use of waterfowl by hunters should be measured so that there can be an annual balancing of population gains and losses. This can be done most effectively by a National Kill Survey that will be carried out by mail questionnaires directed to a sample of persons hunting waterfowl. The statistical universe from which the sample will be selected will be provided by a list of the names and addresses of hunters purchasing the Canada Migratory Game Bird Hunting Permit. All hunters of migratory birds will be required to hold a Canada Migratory Game Bird Hunting Permit, although it will be issued free of charge to Indians and Eskimos. This survey and associated enquiries will also yield information on the species of birds hunted, as well as when and where they are hunted. That sort of information will permit an evaluation of the effects of changes in regulation that has not previously been possible.

4. Factors other than hunting affect migratory bird populations and, if changes in population levels are to be understood and at least partially controlled, research on those other factors is required. Studies based on recoveries of banded birds yield information on survival rates, distribution, and movements. Field studies of breeding success and other phases of life history contribute to understanding of factors affecting populations. Effects of diseases, parasitic infections, and the use of pesticides can be significant and require continued study.

National Parks Wildlife

General Policy

1. Wildlife in National Parks is an important part of the national heritage and should be preserved unimpaired for the benefit, education, and enjoyment of future generations. It is, therefore, part of the national park purpose to maintain healthy populations of native animals, including predators, in balance with their environment.

2. Wildlife is an element of the natural ecological communities in National Parks. Such communities, including the wildlife components, may require management to maintain healthy forest and other vegetative cover, to control erosion, and to preserve recreational and aesthetic values. Management should be kept to a minimum in order to maintain aesthetic values of, at least, a quasi-natural environment.

3. National Park planning should give full consideration to character, size, shape, and location of park areas in order to provide for the year-round ecological requirements of the indigenous animal species, especially those with migratory habits.

4. Conflicts between wildlife and other park interests including human safety should be resolved if possible without destruction of wildlife. When removal or destruction of animals is decided upon on the basis of research findings, it should be done by Departmental employees and as promptly and unobtrusively as possible.

5. Adequate stocks of fish should be provided and maintained through modern methods of management where they can be applied without detriment to the aesthetic values of the areas concerned.

Parks Wildlife Research

1. Wildlife research is an integral part of National Park purposes where data are required to establish appropriate public activities and sound management of the natural features. Wildlife research for other than park purposes may be carried on in parks, if such study is otherwise in harmony with parks policy and if no areas suitable for its conduct can be found elsewhere.

2. Wildlife research in parks will be oriented toward studies of animals in their total environment, since the objective is to maintain environments that reflect a minimum human impact. Studies of range and habitat conditions and of the factors affecting population levels are basic. Priority will be given to studies helpful in devising means of maintaining habitat capable of supporting desired populations.

3. Studies of health and condition factors are of particular importance in parks, where populations are often limited by the extent of available habitat.

4. Studies basic to the develpment of suitable methods of controlling size and distribution of animals to maintain them in balance with their environment and to prevent conflict with other interests are of particular importance in parks.

5. Research oriented toward the maintenance of adequate stocks of fish is essential. Subjects of research should include productivity of park waters, the biology of fish and associated fauna, and other related limnological matters.

6. Public appreciation of natural history values must be developed through provision of nature trails, nature museums, nature guides, leaflets, lectures, and other interpretative activities. Data essential to such interpretative programs should be developed by well-planned research.

7. The National Parks Service is responsible for management of wildlife in parks and interpretation to the public of the natural features (including wildlife) within parks. The Canadian Wildlife Service is responsible for research aimed at obtaining information needed for the management of wildlife in parks.

Territorial Wildlife

General Policy

1. The federal responsibility for Territorial wildlife is to provide research support for management and such management services as may be agreed upon between the Federal and Territorial governments, except that there is complete federal responsibility for migratory birds. There is also a residual authority that may be exercised to safeguard species in danger of extinction.

2. Wildlife management in the Territories should be developed to and maintained at a level commensurate with the importance of the resource. Wildlife is one of the most important resources of the Territories, many of the inhabitants still depending in large measure upon wildlife for food and clothing. As the economy of the North develops, the importance of wildlife will change, but it will not diminish. The North will remain one of the few regions in the world where use of the land by wildlife will not be in serious competition with other uses. A continuing development of recreational use of wildlife is foreseen.

3. A primary objective of wildlife management in the Territories is to prevent the population of any species from declining to a level from which it might not recover.

4. Wildlife in the Territories should be managed so as to provide a sustained yield of those species that contribute to the subsistence of native populations. So long as native populations subsist in whole or in part on wildlife populations, this objective is secondary only to that of preventing the extinction of species.

5. Wildlife may also provide a basis for recreation, and, consequently, contribute to the economy of Territorial residents. Management for recreational use may be harmonized with subsistence needs under certain circumstances.

Territorial Wildlife Research

1. In line with the objectives of management, wildlife research in the Territories is aimed at determining the status of wildlife populations on a continuing basis, finding out what factors cause changes in the size and distribution of populations, and devising methods for maintaining desired populations.

2. The status of populations will be determined by inventories and periodic censuses of acceptable design. Studies of reproductive success and the effective rate of recruitment to wildlife populations as indicated by observations of sex and age classes within populations also contribute to that end and may, in some instances, provide a more economic means of obtaining the necessary information. Studies of physiological condition can provide indicators of trends in wildlife populations.

3. Management requires an understanding of the factors affecting changes in status and distribution of populations, as well as an awareness of such changes. Studies of condition and extent of range or habitat are important, particularly in areas where habitat conditions are amenable to modification, by control of forest fires, for example. Studies of mortality factors are also of high priority. These include hunting, the incidence and pathological effects of diseases and parasites, predation, and unusual weather conditions.

4. Research provides the means for assessment of the effects of management as well as the information required to devise the methods of management. Studies must be directed toward determining the effects on wildlife and the users of wildlife of changes in regulations governing the harvest.

5. Practical methods of disease prevention and control require continuing research and development.

Co-ordination

1. Opportunities will be sought to promote inter-governmental consultation on the effects on wildlife of programs and projects that substantially alter the natural environment.

2. Existing arrangements for consultation and co-ordination among agencies of the Federal Government will be reviewed and improved as necessary.

Consultation between governments and among government agencies is of particular importance in regard to wildlife. There are two reasons for this. For one thing, many forms of wildlife are mobile and regularly cross boundaries between jurisdictions. Therefore, what is done in one area may affect wildlife in another area as well. The second point is that wildlife exists on lands used for a variety of purposes and controlled or influenced to some degree by a multitude of government agencies at both provincial and federal levels, and any major change in land use has some effect on the numbers and distribution of wildlife. Good wildlife management will not be achieved unless there is consultation and agreement during the planning phases of projects affecting land use and programs of broad biological impact.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 19, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SYSTEM

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of collective bargaining applicable to employees in the public service of Canada and for the resolution of disputes that may arise in the negotiation or conclusion of collective agreements applicable to such employees; to establish a process for the presentation of grievances of employees arising in connection with their employment and to establish a system for the adjudication of grievances of employees; to provide for the establishment of a board, to be known as the public service staff relations board, which shall be responsible for the administration of the said measure and to provide further for the constitution and appointment of such other authorities, offices and employees as are required in connection with the administration of the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for Mr. Sauvé) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a corporation, to be known as the Canadian livestock feed board, for the purpose of assisting livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia; to empower the board to make payments related to the cost of feed grain storage in eastern Canada and payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation to or for the benefit of livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia, to enter into arrangements for the purpose of ensuring the availability at reasonable prices of adequate supplies of feed grain for such livestock feeders, and when authorized by the governor in council to enter into direct marketing operations in feed grain; to provide for the administration of the said board and for the establishment of an advisory committee; and to provide that all expenditures in connection with the said measure, other than those related to direct marketing operations, will be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament therefor and that any expenditures related to direct marketing operations in feed grain will be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund and charged to an account to be known as the Canadian livestock feed board account, the amount of any such expenditure to be charged to the said account not to exceed the amount by which ten million dollars exceeds the balance of the said account.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize payments to the provinces equal to 95 per cent of that part of the income tax paid under part I of the Income Tax Act by certain corporations in respect of income earned after 1965 that is attributable to the gross revenue of such corporations from the distribution and sale to the public in the province or the generation and sale in the province for distribution to the public of electrical energy or steam or from the distribution and sale of gas to the public in the province; and to provide that an amount paid under the said measure that is paid or otherwise credited by the province to such a corporation for the use of that corporation shall be exempt from income tax.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED CRISIS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), as follows:

I ask leave to move the adjournment of this house in accordance with standing order No. 26, in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the crisis of uncertainty and chaos in the affairs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation culminating in the current dispute between management and the producers of the program "This Hour Has Seven Days"; and the reported admission by the Secretary of State that "the row over 'Seven Days' is an iceberg symptomatic of more fundamental problems within the corporation", and her reported acknowledgement that there is serious trouble within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I had a French translation of this motion, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately it did not come down with me. As soon as it is available it will be sent to the various house leaders.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would address the Chair on the particular urgency of debate in relation to this proposed motion. The Chair has noted the contents of the motion as moved by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and I suggest that either the right hon. gentleman or another member of the house might want to offer comments in connection with the urgency of debate.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of urgent public importance and that there is every reason for Your Honour to allow the debate which has been proposed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

I think this matter is urgent on three grounds. I think it is urgent, in the first place, because a statement ought to be made in the house today by the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in order to allay the fears and misunderstanding which are prevalent throughout the country with regard to the recent dismissal of the two co-hosts of the program "This Hour Has Seven Days".

The motion moved by the Leader of the Opposition contains a statement made by the Secretary of State to the effect that the dispute over the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" is only symptomatic of a much wider discord within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. It seems to me most urgent that the House of Commons and the country should know what is the state of affairs within that organization. Certainly the statement made yesterday by Mr. Ouimet has done nothing to allay those fears. There is a contradiction contained in that statement. The chairman alluded to the fact that the producer of the program had mishandled controversial questions, but at the same time said that Mr. Leiterman, who is the producer, would continue with the program next season.

We have, therefore, the man who is responsible being retained on the program and the two co-hosts being removed from the program. This certainly indicates some breakdown in responsibility, and indicates that the reasons which have been given for the dismissals are not the true reasons at all. The minister's statement, therefore, that there is a crisis boiling up within the C.B.C. would seem to be warranted. I think this house and the country have a right to know what is the situation.

The second ground for urgency is that there ought to be a debate in this house so the government can hear the views of the members regarding this whole question and refer it to the standing committee on broadcasting. Statements which have been made by those within the corporation, statements which have been made by those outside the corporation, and statements which have been made by Mr. Robert Fowler, who was the royal commissioner looking into this matter, all ought to be referred to the standing committee. I am told Mr. Fowler was to be interviewed on the program "This Hour Has Seven Days", and that this interview was quashed by the management. If this is true this matter ought to be settled, and ought to be settled immediately, by having this whole question referred to a committee.

The third and most important reason for urgency, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that there is a grave possibility of either mass resignations by producers and performers or a strike by some of those in important positions within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Either of these propositions would do great harm to our national, publicly owned broadcasting system. All of us who believe in a national, publicly owned broadcasting system would be loath to see such a thing happen. If it could be prevented by having some arbitration machinery set up immediately to go into this question and prevent the loss of some very important and very capable staff, I think that should be acted upon immediately. I think it would be unwise for this house to sit here and allow the situation within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to deteriorate further. This is a most urgent matter which ought to be discussed, and it should be discussed today.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the sole question before Your Honour for decision at the moment, as I see it, is the matter of urgency of debate. The hon. member who has just taken his seat indicated that there was certain information he wanted the house to have. The house has already taken action in the matter by referring the estimates relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to the standing committee on broadcasting on March 22, and I understand those estimates are now before that committee.

I know of no better way of obtaining the information which the hon. member asserts would be the proper concern of this house than by having the appropriate witnesses examined before that committee. There is no reason why that cannot be done today. If the hon. member wishes it to be done today, then that is a matter for the committee.

I do not know whether the hon. member has taken the usual steps to have that done, but the point I wish to make clear, Mr. Speaker, is this. You have been asked to set aside the ordinary business of the house for today, business which is also quite important, in order to permit debate of this matter in this house without hearing witnesses and without having available the information which the hon. member indicated was so important.

I suggest that his whole argument has indicated that the correct method to discuss this matter is through the committee which has been constituted and which has the matter before it. There is no reason to move a motion to withdraw the matter from the committee at this time. In other words, no case has been made for urgency of debate within the meaning of standing order 26.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the urgency of this matter is concerned I am quite surprised at the attitude taken by the minister on behalf of the government. I do not think there has ever been a matter which in so short a time has brought about so much antagonism in all parts of Canada. Indeed, I understand that some 3,800 or more telegrams have been received by the C.B.C. in this connection. I personally have received a greater number than in respect of any other matter in the last couple of years. The question of urgency is apparent in view of an aroused public opinion and the need for parliament to look into this matter.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made mention of the reaction among C.B.C. employees in consequence of what they believe to have been arbitrary treatment on the part of management. He also mentioned the Fowler commission and the recommendations of that commission. My information, in view of those recommendations, is that because two officials connected with the "Seven Days" program, one in Ottawa and one in Toronto, gave their views to the Fowler commission, these two gentlemen have been advised that their contracts are to be terminated because they have not left a good image of the C.B.C. or in any event that there are doubts about the statements they made before the Fowler commission on broadcasting, and therefore they have lost their right to be treated in the manner in which one would expect.

There cannot be anything more urgent than this. This is not a matter which can be shelved away, as I see it, by saying that some other institution or body can look after it. This is a matter concerning a great national body that incidentally was set up under a Conservative government, under Mr. Bennett. I want to make that clear. That body was to be an institution for the benefit of the Canadian people, not for the glorification of those in high positions.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The Canadian people contribute fabulous amounts of money to the corporation, through parliament. We have a right to expect that those sums shall be expended in a way that is in keeping with the responsibilities of that corporation.

I therefore say there is urgency, and I am amazed at the attitude of the government house leader in this regard. If the members of the government do not know there is urgency, then they have not opened their telegrams.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the Leader of the Opposition suggesting it is urgent to discuss the action taken by the C.B.C. with regard to the program "This Hour Has Seven Days", hosted by Messrs. Patrick Watson and Laurier LaPierre, does not seem to me as urgent as the Leader of the Opposition would have us believe. I feel there are at present in Canada much more urgent matters than to determine whether the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" should continue to be hosted by Messrs. Watson and LaPierre.

Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I know personally Messrs. Watson and LaPierre. I admire a great deal those two Canadians who have performed a tremendous job at the C.B.C. in order to present the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" to the Canadian people.

We in parliament should keep in mind that, in the past, the hosts of many programs have changed in practically similar circumstances, and neither the Leader of the Opposition nor anyone else objected because the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was under a commission independent of parliament. In fact, the C.B.C. was not interfered with.

Mr. Speaker, there will always be an opportunity to discuss the Watson-LaPierre case, and others, before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, where all members are invited. When the estimates of the Department of the Secretary of State are before us we can bring up this question of the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" and establish the facts concerning Messrs. Watson and LaPierre.

Now, even if we were to discuss this matter today I do not think we could reach an immediate agreement. As I said a while ago, Mr. Speaker, I feel there are far more pressing things to be attended to.

During the last electoral campaign the government promised to wage war on poverty in Canada. That is a far more important matter than the situation in which Messrs. Watson and LaPierre find themselves at the present time. That is something far more urgent than the program "This Hour Has Seven Days".

Everybody appreciated the program, granted, but there are legislative measures to be introduced and studied here, in Ottawa, which are of far greater importance. And, at any rate, as I have already said, "This Hour Has Seven Days" can always be discussed when the estimates of the Secretary of State come up, or else before the appropriate committee.

Now, for my part, I do not believe in the need of adjourning the house to consider that specific case. The Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) stated that the row over that program is symptomatic of more fundamental problems within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and that the attention paid to it is an indication that there is serious trouble within the C.B.C. Everybody is convinced of that, even the Leader of the Opposition when he was Prime Minister of Canada. In fact, at that time he did nothing to correct what took place under his own administration.

Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) that there is not so much urgency to debate this case, but that, on the other hand, there are much more capital issues to be discussed today, in the Ottawa Parliament, for the well-being of the population. The firing of two individuals because of political pressures or other intrigues not specified in the newspapers is secondary.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the urgency is somewhere else than within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation today.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I think the very unusual statement which was made a few days ago by the Secretary of State, to the effect that there was far more difficulty and trouble brewing within the C.B.C. than had been apparent up to that time, is one with which this house should be concerned. However, I believe we have set up the proper method of dealing with this kind of information inasmuch as the committee on broadcasting now has the authority to go into this matter at once should it choose to do so. After all, the standing committees of this house are in effect an extension of the house itself.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you will also have to consider this motion to adjourn the house under standing order No. 26 in the light of paragraph 1 of citation No. 100 in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which states that a motion to adjourn the house under standing order No. 26 must involve the administrative responsibility of the government. The motion before us deals specifically with a question of programming by the C.B.C., and over the years there has been great resistance on the part of the government, and in particular on the part of the minister reporting for the corporation, to any attempt by members of this house to become involved in C.B.C. programming.

This is true of previous governments as well as of the government now in office. I can recall ministers who have held responsibility in the past for reporting to this house on C.B.C. affairs adamantly refusing to accept the kind of criticism which involved C.B.C. programming. Time after time they claimed it was not the responsibility of the minister reporting to parliament to become involved in the programming of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. For these reasons I think it would be difficult to accept a motion such as is now before us, a motion which involves programming, when over the years all governments have claimed they do not have an administrative responsibility in this area.

Another point is this. Urgency of debate requires that the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought up early enough, with the result that the public interest suffers. I suggest that today, or almost immediately now that the estimates have been referred to the standing committees, the particular committee concerned, which as I have said is an extension of this house, can inquire into this matter.

• (3:00 p.m.)

In my view this would be a far more useful exercise than conducting a debate on the floor of the house. The committee has power to call officials of the C.B.C. if it so wishes in order to find out what is at the bottom of this trouble which the Secretary of State claims is brewing within the corporation. We could call in the president and ask him if there has been gross insubordination sufficient to cause him to dismiss these men for the ensuing season. Until we get the rest of this information I do not think a debate on the floor of the house could serve any useful purpose.

I think what has happened during the course of the last two or three days is something that could have been avoided if the broadcasting committee had been set up several months ago, but it is too late to complain about that now. I sincerely believe the time could be spent far more usefully in calling the C.B.C. officials before the committee and finding out what is at the bottom of all this discord within the C.B.C. That would be far more useful than having a debate here without knowing what the president and other administrators have on their minds.

I also suggest that if the Secretary of State is aware of a lot of difficulty within the C.B.C. administration she should make a statement to the house about it. This she has not done, but she could make such a statement to the broadcasting committee. After all, we in this house do provide the funds for the C.B.C., and if it is not functioning well and properly and in the interests of the Canadian public generally, and she knows about it then she has a responsibility to tell the broadcasting committee or the House of Commons.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I refer you to the first paragraph of citation 100, which says the matter for debate must involve the administrative responsibility of the government and, if we are to follow the pattern of the past, we have to accept that C.B.C. programming is not a responsibility of the government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to a couple of points in regard to the urgency of debate. I regret I cannot agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve and the hon. member for Medicine Hat in the emphasis they have placed on the question of programming as mentioned in the motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition. Programming is only a part of the whole problem, and if a careful reading is made of the motion it will be seen it deals with a crisis of uncertainty in broadcasting, particularly in the C.B.C.

On the question of urgency I point out that within the rules of the house the debate which we are to continue today is on fiscal matters, and must run for another four or five days or until the end of this week. Therefore these broadcasting matters are not relevant for discussion in the budget debate, and I think Your Honour would be quite right to restrict that debate to matters coming within the terms of the budget.

Certainly I find it rather passing strange that the hon. member for Medicine Hat would cite a reference in Beauchesne with regard to the administrative responsibility of the government. By statute the C.B.C. is responsible to parliament, and parliament is in this house. It is to parliament that the C.B.C. is responsible. Therefore it is quite right that this matter should be discussed here if it is one of urgency. I suggest that the hon. member for Medicine Hat is placing the cart before the horse in that he is subordinating parliamentary to government responsibility.

The third point I would like to make is with regard to the broadcasting committee. A decision by the majority of that committee to relegate this matter to some indefinite date is not appealable to the house. It is not even referable to the house. What has been referred to that committee are the estimates of the corporation. If in deciding its agenda the committee puts this matter off to some indeterminate date and the Secretary of State does not appear before parliament to repeat the rather grave statement which she made at a partisan political meeting, then this house is stultified.

I suggest to Your Honour that now is the time for the minister to come forward to make her statement, to elaborate on it, and to give us the reasons why she made it originally. That is the crisis of uncertainty with regard to the C.B.C. The question of one program or another matters not. After all, one has only to go back to the records of June, 1959 to see that some hon. ministers now sitting opposite put forward a similar type of motion to discuss an internal C.B.C. matter concerning a less popular radio program. I suggest they cannot now argue on both sides of the question and I put it to Your Honour that this motion is entertainable. It is urgent as to debate. Otherwise it will be lost forever in the dim future.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge you to accept the motion on the following grounds. First, I think it is a great error, whether deliberate or innocent, to interpret the motion as one dealing only with programming in the C.B.C. What the motion seeks is a debate on the crisis of uncertainty and chaos in the affairs of the C.B.C. There is the reported admission by the Secretary of State that the row over "Seven Days" is an iceberg symptomatic of more fundamental matters within the corporation, and there is her acknowledgement that there is serious trouble within the corporation.

I submit that the motion seeks to have a debate on the serious trouble and controversy within the corporation, a corporation which is responsible to parliament through the minister. It is wrong to suggest that the motion and members supporting it are concerned with details of programming. We in this group are as anxious as other hon. members to leave the C.B.C. free to deal with its own programming arrangements.

Second, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Medicine Hat was right when he said it is important that the minister should make a statement to the house. This is precisely what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested was one of the reasons of urgency for the motion, because it would enable the minister to make her statement today, at a time when everybody in Canada and all members of this house are concerned about the problem.

Third, Mr. Speaker, for obvious reasons I have not had as much experience as many other hon. members in these matters but I recall looking up a number of occasions when subjects were debated under standing order 26 and, speaking from memory but I think accurately, the debates ended in the subject matter being referred to some committee or other. The fact that there is a debate on a matter of urgent public importance does not preclude the matter going to a committee. On the contrary, that may be the desired end. Therefore the suggestion that this matter be referred to a standing committee, and other similar suggestions, could be implemented after debate in the house today.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that what was said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the Leader of the Opposition as to urgency is obvious and compelling, namely that all the reports indicate that unless there is some assurance given through a discussion on the floor of this house we may have wholesale resignations from the C.B.C., or a strike by producers or some other group within the C.B.C. It will not do any good at all to have the standing committee on broadcasting consider this matter either a day or two days from now, if, in the meantime, irreparable harm has been done in the corporation by action which seems to be contemplated by responsible staff members of the corporation.

For these reasons I urge you to accept the motion as presented.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, The Chair has heard arguments for and against the motion proposed by the right hon. leader of the official opposition. While I do not wish to prevent further discussion, I believe the Chair has been sufficiently enlightened in respect of this matter to reach a decision.

As hon. members well know, the guiding principles in matters of this kind are to be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 100. The hon. member for Medicine Hat referred the Chair particularly to paragraph 1 of that citation. However, I prefer to base my ruling on paragraph 3 of citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> 'Urgency' within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means 'urgency of debate', when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the House do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

In referring to the question of urgency of debate the hon. member for Edmonton West drew attention to the fact that the immediate business of this house was the continuation of the budget debate, and that there could be no discussion of this matter during the next four or five days. I agree with the hon. member to this extent. This matter cannot be discussed while there is a motion of non-confidence before the house, and while there are before us an amendment and a sub-amendment, both dealing with financial matters. Any attempt to discuss the subject matter of the motion now before the house would be out of order, because of irrelevancy, during our consideration of those two want of confidence motions.

I should point out that the subamendment now before us will be disposed of this evening, and that the amendment will be disposed of on Thursday evening. Assuming that the government survives both amendments there will then be an opportunity to discuss the subject matter of the proposed motion when we have before us the simple motion that the Speaker do now leave the chair. It seems to me that will provide an early enough opportunity to discuss this matter.

In view of these facts I cannot accept the motion proposed by the right hon. leader of the official opposition.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF C.B.C. PROBLEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will he arrange for an immediate convening of the standing committee on broadcasting in order that it will have an opportunity to discuss the problems which have been reported to have arisen between management and the creative people of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the committee has been set up and that the estimates, including those of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, have been referred to it for consideration. I shall be glad to get in touch with the chairman of that committee to find out whether it is convenient to arrange for an immediate meeting.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. Will the hon. lady assure this house that when the appropriate committee is convened, senior management officials of the C.B.C. will be available and will appear before that committee in order to facilitate an examination of these problems?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity of speaking to the chairman of the broadcasting committee when he arrived in Ottawa just before the house opened this afternoon. In view of the fact that he is a new member of the house I informed him that it was his responsibility, and he needed no direction from the government, as to when he called a meeting. I also told him that he could call a meeting of the members of the steering committee as soon as he chose to do so, and that it was his right as the chairman of the committee to call before that committee any witnesses necessary.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, that there cannot and will not be any attempt by the government to restrain the committee from calling any member of the board of the C.B.C. at any time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the government house leader arising out of the statements made by that hon. minister and the Secretary of State. Will the government house leader give consideration to moving, by unanimous consent of the house, a motion in the terms of citation 304 of Beauchesne, directing the committee to make a special report on this matter to the house as soon as possible?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker, I think that would be an unnecessary interference with the committee's work in respect of matters now before it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State, asking the hon. lady whether there has been any discussion between her and the president of the C.B.C. with reference to the possibility of arbitrating the dispute now under way between management and certain employees of that corporation.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken to the president of the C.B.C. since Friday afternoon, when I first learned of this dispute. At that time he informed me of the views of the management regarding this matter. Mr. Ouimet was in my office at that time for 15 or 20 minutes in relation to an entirely different matter.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. minister prepared to make such representations to the president of the C.B.C. as have been suggested?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, since one of the vice presidents of the C.B.C. is in the gallery I am pleased to direct his attention to the suggestions made by hon. gentlemen during the course of this debate. Since this whole matter is between management and employees I must leave it to them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Douglas: May I also ask the Secretary of State whether she will ascertain if it is correct that the president of the C.B.C. instructed his staff on Sunday last to refuse to accept from the Canadian National Railways any telegrams directed to him, but that they be put on telex for transmittal to him on Monday?

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State which may provide her an opportunity to answer a question asked a moment ago. I should like to ask the hon. lady whether, if it were desired by the committee on broadcasting, she would assure the house that she would make herself immediately available to that committee?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say I would do so with any wild enthusiasm but I would certainly do it.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

ESTABLISHMENT OF EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader.

In view of the insecure situation of our eastern farmers, could he tell us when the government will likely introduce the feed grain resolution, so that farmers can buy their feed grain at a reasonable price? The resolution is dated April 5, and farmers are awaiting the government's decision to deal with this matter.

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we took the first legislative step in this regard by transferring a government notice of motion on the order paper today to government orders. I hope to be able to discuss the business of the house with representatives of all parties with a view to getting this and other important legislation before the house as quickly as possible, in a manner that is agreeable to all members.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CHANGE IN DATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a new date has been set for the federal-provincial conference originally scheduled for the first week in June and, if so, whether there has been any correspondence in respect thereto which can be tabled in the house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes Mr. Speaker, I learned over the week end, as the result of reports, of the date of the election in Quebec, which will conflict with the proposed federal-provincial conference. Since that time I have been in touch with the host premier of the province of British Columbia, as well as with other provincial premiers, in order to select another date which will be suitable, later in June.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PORTUGUESE GUINEA—SAFETY OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in relation to another of the trouble spots in Africa. Can the minister inform the house whether any Canadian citizens are in the Portuguese territory of Guinea which is presently reported to be in the hands of rebels? If so, has the government taken any steps to guarantee their safe removal?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice.

VIET NAM—ACTIVITIES OF CANADIAN AID COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, asking him whether he is in a position to make a report to the house regarding the activities of the Canadian aid for Viet Nam civilian committee. Is that committee in operation to provide assistance to North Viet Nam, and what is the attitude of the government toward its activities in this regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, while I have received no official communication that such a committee is in existence, I have seen press reports to the effect that one does exist, and that several hon. members of this house reportedly are sponsors or honorary patrons. There would seem to be no obstacle to the shipping of articles which are on the permissible list provided, of course, the Export and Import Permits Act is observed with regard to the sending of gifts, parcels or medical supplies whose ultimate destination is North Viet Nam or a particluar group in South Viet Nam.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs with reference to the matter he has just discussed. In view of the support by members of this house for aid to North Viet Nam, will the government give immediate consideration to extending similar aid to South Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government, of course, is now extending aid to South Viet Nam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister any evidence to support the statement that the medical aid proposed by the civilian aid committee is confined to North Viet Nam, or is it correct that it extends to civilians whether in North Viet Nam or South Viet Nam?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is argumentative and cannot be accepted.

WATER RESOURCES

GREAT LAKES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING RESPECTING POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether, now that he has had the refreshing interlude of a ten-day holiday, he is in a position to give us a report on the conference between himself and the government of Ontario with regard to pollution of the Great Lakes, a report which a month ago he indicated might be ready in two weeks?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I said that the report was being prepared in my department, would be submitted to the government of Ontario and then, if it were agreed, would be published. The first step is over. We are about to take the second step.

Mr. Fulton: Then it is still about to be published.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY REQUEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government yet in a position to make a statement concerning the study it has been making of the request for an inquiry into the case of Steven Truscott?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the Solicitor General to answer that question.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it has been decided that a review of the case should be made. It should be stressed that the government, in coming to this decision, is not prejudging the matter or the correctness or otherwise of the allegations that have been made concerning the Truscott case.

The official decision has not yet been reached as to the particular form the review will take. Before that is decided I will meet with the Attorney General of Ontario later this week—I have now made arrangements to meet with him on Friday of this week—and the nature of the review will be announced as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the reaction in general to that announcement will be most favourable. I want to ask the minister whether consideration is being given to the granting by His Excellency the Governor General in Council of a new trial instead of reviewing the matter generally through a commission, which of course would have to review the judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada and the Ontario Court of Appeal.

Mr. Pennell: This relates to a matter of the administration of justice in the province of Ontario and I think I owe the courtesy, at least, of speaking to the Attorney General of the province of Ontario. May I respectfully decline, therefore, to make any further announcement at this time.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May we in the meantime assume that one of the ways being considered as a possibility is a royal commission?

Some hon. Members: Order.

EDUCATION

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND SCHOOL TRUSTEES DELEGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I would like to ask whether, in view of the immense importance to the future of this country of the educational qualifications of her people, he has decided to meet with a delegation of the Canadian School Trustees Association who have been trying to arrange a meeting with him?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have met, of course, a good number of delegations on this vitally important subject. I am not too familiar with this particular delegation but will look into the matter at once and see whether a request has been made.

[Translation]

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning his recent visit to the Expo '67 construction site in Montreal.

Could he tell the house if the funds are used properly and if the construction work will be finished in time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a general question and it is not urgent enough to be asked at this time.

[English]

ESTIMATED DEFICIT—SHARE TO BE BORNE BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance respecting Expo '67. It is reported that the estimated deficit for Expo '67 has gone up to $82 million. Has the federal government concurred in this new estimate and, if so, what share of the $82 million will be borne by the federal government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister, or the house leader now that he is back in the chamber, indicate when we might be able to have the estimates of Expo '67 presented to a committee of the house so that all aspects of Expo could be gone into by members of the house?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether they were referred to the committee. I would have to check whether they were referred and are now before the standing committee. I will check into the matter immediately.

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

REPORTED REFUSAL OF LOANS TO BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

The authorities of a municipality located in my riding sent me documents and made certain protests with regard to the winter works program. I was told, among other things, that the bank refused to pay some municipal employees allegedly because it was a federal responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question? It seems to me he is now making a speech rather than asking a question.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, here is my question. A municipality in my riding was refused the necessary amounts of money to pay employees who had performed work in conjunction with the winter works program.

Further to information I was given—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put his question?

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY UNIONS—APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION BOARD CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Could the minister advise the house whether a chairman has been appointed for the two conciliation boards established in the dispute between the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways and the non-operating unions?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will be pleased to know that a chairman has been selected.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not a matter of great surprise.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Justice F. C. Munroe of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, who did such an outstanding job on the two previous conciliation boards, has agreed to accept this appointment at the joint request of both railways, and of the brotherhoods and unions concerned. This is a great—a unique—tribute to Mr. Justice Munroe.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

MEETING WITH PROVINCES ON WRITTEN CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys based on his statement in Toronto last night relating to constitutional reform. Is the government now postponing indefinitely any meeting with the provinces in order to obtain agreement on a written constitution suited to modern times?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question can be accepted. It seems to be of a very general nature and does not seem to be very urgent.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. My question is based upon the announcement by the Minister of Finance just prior to the Easter recess that greatly increased sales of wheat would be made to China. In the light of that announcement I wonder whether the Minister of Agriculture has reviewed over the Easter recess the prospects of building a grain elevator extension at Prince Rupert and has come to a more favourable decision than he did before?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this question is so urgent that it ought to be put verbally at this time. I would suggest to the hon. member that he could easily put it on the order paper.

Mr. Howard: I would rather raise it at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

CREAM—REQUEST FOR ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF SUBSIDY APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider asking his department to send a note of acknowledgement to those people who have submitted applications for deficiency payments on cream, thereby avoiding the further confusion of having farmers send letters to the department asking what has happened to their applications?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture has noted the submission made by the hon. member. This is not a question which should be asked at this time.

Mr. Korchinski: Could the minister indicate whether something will be done? Could he possibly indicate at this time when the final payments will be made so these people will not be kept waiting?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot accept the question. If the hon. member thinks it is urgent enough, he can discuss it on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Korchinski: I certainly will.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. I did not get a chance to send him notice. Has his attention been drawn to a speech made by a United States government official on the west coast indicating that as a result of the so-called automotive free trade agreement there has been an addition of $100 million to the balance of payments deficit? Has the minister decided on another industry to which the same principle could be applied, resulting in an addition to the balance of payments deficit without any compensating benefit to the consumer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very interesting argument, not a question.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the interest aroused amongst the Canadian people, can he tell us whether or not he has had a discussion with Mr. Laurier LaPierre about Mr. LaPierre's proposed entry into politics as a Liberal?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State related to those already asked with regard to the C.B.C. Has the hon. lady a solid basis of fact for her alarm over the affairs of the C.B.C. as expressed in her iceberg statement?

FARM MACHINERY

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister looked into the high cost of farm machinery, as he said he would, and what steps has he in mind to undertake now in connection with this matter?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the government is looking into this matter and an announcement will be made in due course.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Would the minister say who is looking into this question? There is a galloping increase in the price of agricultural equipment. The minister said months ago that someone was looking into the question. Is he doing it or someone else?

Mr. Greene: The government is looking into it.

NATURAL GAS

U.S. HEARING ON TRANSMISSION BETWEEN CANADIAN POINTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Will he advise the house whether the government of Canada is either represented directly or has someone holding a watching brief at the hearing of the federal power commission today into the question of how gas from western Canada shall be transported for use in eastern Canada?

[Mr. Johnston.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take that question as notice and look into it right away.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GREENWOOD—REPORTED FIGHT FOLLOWING PAY INCREASES FOR PILOTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the Minister of National Defence has been advised of a fight in the officers' mess at Greenwood as a result of the substantial pay increases for pilots? Have any new regulations been instituted by the defence department to avoid further fights with regard to discrimination in pay increases?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this is a question that should be asked at this time. Perhaps the hon. member would want to discuss the matter on the adjournment debate, if he thinks it is urgent enough.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Perhaps I could ask a supplementary question. What is the government doing to prevent these fights in officers' messes?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The government, Mr. Speaker, is doing its best to prevent fights in the House of Commons.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Defence. Is one step contemplated to keep peace and order within the R.C.A.F. the granting of permanent commissions to anyone admitted to pilot rank regardless of further considerations?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): It will be our policy to train only pilots who accept permanent commissions in order to guarantee that we have their services available to the defence forces for a longer period of time. With regard to the previous question, perhaps the Leader of the Opposition and I might join forces to visit some of the messes to see if we could use our influence in a moderating way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The suggestion is a good one, but how are you going to explain the unjust discrimination, no matter how pacific a temperament you may have?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN REPORT ON RUN-THROUGHS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if, as has been reported, he is proposing a further commission of inquiry into the recommendations of the Freedman commission; or alternatively, when may action be expected on the recommendations in that report?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The answer to that is no, Mr. Speaker. Consideration is being given by the minister to the matter but no consideration has yet been given by the government.

TRANSPORT

PICTOU LANDING, N.S.—REPORTED UNSAFE CONDITION OF WHARF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works which he may want to take as notice. In view of the importance of the employment which may be provided in the area and in view of the fact two ships will soon be docking there, has the minister received a telegram from the Henderson Lumber Company regarding the wharf at Pictou Landing, Nova Scotia, and the fact it cannot be used for unloading these ships because it has been condemned?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This does not appear to be a matter of national importance at this moment.

Mr. MacEwan: The urgency is that the ships will be docking any time and the wharf has been condemned so that trucks are not allowed on it. I will raise the matter at ten o'clock.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TRUCKING INDUSTRY—IMPLEMENTATION OF 40 HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if, in view of the continuing serious strike in the trucking industry, he has made a decision yet when he will implement the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code with regard to the 40 hour week?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs if he can say whether the report from Mr. Justice Wood on the Canadian Pension Commission has been received.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the report. I understand that requests for further presentations in the early weeks of May have caused some delay before the report can be written.

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

BILINGUALISM—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

With regard to the recent policy on bilingualism in the public service, does the government intend to include it in the Civil Service Act and to amend very shortly section 47 of that act?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The amending of this section, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of government policy and if any decision with regard to this section is made an announcement will be made in the regular way.

FISHERIES

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF LOBSTER SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In order to remove uncertainties in the fishing industry, can the minister say when the fishing season will open in lobster fishing district No. 7B?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Again I doubt that this is a question of national importance although it may be. If hon. members think it is I will allow the Minister of Fisheries to make a reply.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Robichaud: I understand the concern of the hon. member because in recent years no definite date was set for the opening of the lobster season due to the ice movement. However, the most recent ice chart issued by the Department of Transport indicates there should not be any ice in the area for the opening date of the lobster fishing season. In view of the foregoing it is recommended that the lobster season for districts 7B and 7C will open, as set out in the regulations, on May 1.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the closing of the oyster season. Has the minister any information on the investigation being conducted into the oyster situation in Kent county, in particular the water pollution samples which were sent to Halifax quite some time ago?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Following the tests of the samples of water taken from the area, we have ordered that the season be closed for that portion of the Buctouche river affected by pollution.

BAY OF FUNDY—REPORTED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and involves a matter of discrimination. On January 20 I asked the minister a question about closure of the New Brunswick shore and the minister advised that he would give me a reply in writing. The herring season opened on April 15 and there were over 30 New Brunswick seiners in the Annapolis basin Easter Sunday. Is the minister now able to state the time when closure of the New Brunswick shore will be lifted?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the hon. member that the herring season has been open all winter. There has been herring fishing by seiners during all the winter months.

So far as closure of certain areas in the Bay of Fundy is concerned, this matter is still under review. Because of recent representations received from certain areas on the southwestern shore of Nova Scotia, only this morning I notified the minister of fisheries for Nova Scotia that a meeting would take place in Fredericton on May 7, following the meeting of the Atlantic herring fishery, in order to discuss this matter further.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Langlois (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries.

Could the minister tell us at what time with regard to the lobster in district 7-B?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister give the house, either today or at an early date, the 15 items of important government legislation which he referred to outside the house during the recess? Would he indicate which of those items are not yet on the order paper and whether they will be put on the order paper soon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that before I do so there should be a meeting between the government house leader and the other house leaders in order to go into the plans for this part of the session. Most of these 15 items are already on the order paper and are well known to hon. members. Since I picked the figure of 15 I have been told by some of my colleagues that the figure should have been 21.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS TO EMPLOYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that industry spokesmen claim that overpayments to the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec pension plan could total up to $30 million a year, would the minister inform the house whether he has instituted a method of refunding overpayments made by employers as workers move from one job to another?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PERMISSIBLE EARNED INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the repeated increases in the cost of living, is the government considering an amendment to the regulations regarding eligibility in so far as earned income is concerned for those receiving supplementary assistance under the Old Age Security Act?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that this question sounds very much like one posed a moment ago, but if it is not the minister may reply to it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of policy and when a decision is made it will be announced in the regular way.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question either to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or the Minister of Finance. I am not sure who is handling the problem at the moment. May I ask how soon the Dr. Ritchie Donald report on coal will be available, whether the contents will be made public when it is available and how soon the government expects to act on the report after it is received?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Donald will probably be reporting to me since the Prime Minister asked me to take general responsibility in this area. We met with Dr. Donald the other day and I understand that his report is in its final stages. The question of whether it will be published will be determined when we receive it. So will the question of whether we act upon it.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Friday, April 1, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted by the clock when the budget debate was adjourned prior to Easter there was only time for me to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on his excellent non-partisan presentation and to point out that the sense of control, firmness and knowledgeable management that emanated from his speech was welcomed by all sections of the country. Since then, on the street interviews, as carried in the daily press, confirm the feeling of confidence on the part of the average citizen in this budget and in the various measures for controlled development of Canada that were put forward.

I trust it is in order to mention that my own minister, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson), undoubtedly made his usual wise and experienced counsel available to the Minister of Finance, and it is only right that his contribution should be noted here. Being a very modest and humble man it would never enter his head to seek this kind of recognition for himself, but I believe I can expose him to flattering remarks at this time. At any rate, it is good to be on the side of the angels.

This business of making a budget and of its presentation is something that has intrigued me for a long time. I wonder whether the importance of budget night is not becoming magnified out of proportion. I am not speaking of the importance of a budget itself. I am speaking of the custom that has grown up where by budget night becomes the surprise package focal point of our hopes and plans, our disappointments or satisfactions, our approval or condemnation of a whole year's program. There is a sort of Christmas morning gift giving or taking atmosphere about the whole thing that seems to me to be a little artificial and in many cases clouds the basic reasoning and logic behind a budget. Many press stories simplify the whole thing into two easily read lists. One is entitled "These things will cost you more" and the other, "These things will cost you less."

There are some well-researched articles on a budget and its implications in the financial pages and editorially but generally my impression is that the main interest on the front pages seems to be focused on whether taxes have gone up or down. Indeed, this concentration on the single point of higher or lower taxes leads many political columnists and pundits to forecast whether general elections are imminent. This is too cynical an approach for me, and I believe the importance of a budget is obscured by these observations.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I think the Canadian people are politically mature enough to understand why taxes go up or down. I think they are more vitally interested in great, imaginative national programs of resources development, medical and scientific research, educational opportunities and external aid than they are in the cost of a package of cigarettes or a bottle of liquor or a few dollars more in income tax. If this budget-making process could be levelled out over the year without this aura of "Guess what's in it for me", and "Do not open before budget night", I think a government's forward planning and management techniques could be more easily applied to five- and ten-year projects. Some of this is done now by individual pieces of legislation. The Canada-United States auto agreement is a case in point. I should like to see our citizens made aware of where their money is going and why it is going there and not just how much they are asked to pay. I believe their sense of involvement and participation in the nation's development and destiny would be heightened.

I know there are some budgetary matters that because of their effect on the stock and bond markets must be highly secret until the "big night". But in many other matters I see no harm—indeed, would it not be beneficial—in having the widest possible open discussion on plans, projects and measures for some months preceding the budget. This would do away with sudden jolts or the delaying of business decisions and an artificial slow-down of development on the part of industry and others who feel they must wait and see what the budget says.

If we used our budgets as a weapon for the achievement of say a four- or five-year development goal and that goal was thoroughly understood by every segment of Canadian society, would this not make the Speech from the Throne much more authoritative? Budget time provides a field day for politicians. Parliament is in the limelight and all of us, the professional experts and the amateurs—I am in the latter category as hon. members have rightly assumed by now—get the opportunity to speak to the nation. We tell the people in unmistakable political overtones what the budget means. But the people feel left out. I want them involved mentally and not just financially.

I know that a budget controls by acceleration or deceleration the rate of growth of our country. But it does this in accordance with conditions that exist or threaten to exist on a short term basis. Can we have a closer alliance between this budgetary control and our economic and physical five- and ten-year development goals? Are there not other ways of taking the heat out of a fast running economic motor than by lightening the load for a short time? Are we trying to get too much milk from too few cows? When this happens you can do one of three things: carry on and ruin the cow, cut back on her milk production, or get more cows.

If our present manpower resources are numerically inadequate to reach the full potentialities of growth for Canada, I would suppose we should increase those manpower resources quickly rather than lowering our aim. I have felt for a long time now that immigration on whatever scale is necessary to meet our development objectives should be considered as an economic resource as well as cultural and human resource.

There are great differences of opinion in this area. I do not propose to go into it further at this time other than to mention two opposing views on the same front page of the Financial Post of April 2, 1966. The heading of the first article reads: "Do We Really Have A Skills Shortage? Experts suspicious." I quote:

> Supplying the facts on skillpower will be the role of an important branch being set up inside the new federal manpower department. It is charged with going into the field to gather employment data, then processing it into detailed and useful forms which can be used in measuring Canada's manpower needs and resources.
>
> This is the result of a growing suspicion among government manpower planners that the skill shortage in Canada may not be nearly as acute as it appears. "There are so few facts to work on," a senior Ottawa official explains. "There are assumptions based on isolated examples, but we lack any really effective and sophisticated system for measuring our manpower resources. We are even worse off when it comes down to measuring manpower utilization."

The other front page article is headed, "Men Are Available To Do It Now", and reads:

> From Ottawa earlier this week also came news of a long overdue change in this country's approach to skillpower problems. The embryo Department of Manpower will henceforth find out from industry as precisely as it can what skilled manpower needs will be in the months ahead and translate these into training and immigration policies.
>
> This goes far to solve a paradox for policy-makers brought about by the steady step-up of the Canadian economy toward capacity operation.
>
> On the one hand we have evidence of an economy hamstrung by shortages of skills. Aircraft orders turned down for want of appropriate workers. Order backlogs one-third higher than a year ago in the plants of industrial machinery producers. Companies and provinces sending abroad for skilled hands for work ranging from textiles to mining. At the same time there have been equally disturbing indications that some so-called shortages are more talk than reality.

Who is right? I think it is time we found out. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his government, the Liberal government I am proud to support, must be praised for setting up the machine for the establishment of this new ministry under the guidance of a courageous and dedicated Canadian—he has just left the house—who has quietly won the respect and affection of his caucus colleagues and of the house as well, I believe. I refer to the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Marchand).

If any hon. members think, Mr. Speaker, because I have so far spent little time in praising certain budget items, that I am quietly criticizing the budget, they are away off base. For its timing and in the context of traditional budget procedures since our earliest parliaments, this budget is one of the better ones. I will certainly be voting to sustain the good judgment of the finance minister and of the government when the division bells ring, as I hope will all members of the house.

In the time remaining, Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of this house and I hope to the attention of all patriotic Canadians east and west an issue of immediate paramount importance. At least, I conceive it to be so and I do not stand alone in my concern. This matter does not directly concern itself with the budget but its relationship thereto is apparent. Frankly, I am convinced that it is of more immediate and lasting consequence to every Canadian man, woman and child than the budget itself. The issue I bring before the house, Mr. Speaker, is the whole question of the extent of foreign ownership and control of Canadian resources and industry in 1966, one year before the celebration of our hundredth birthday. Are we quietly strolling down the road to national oblivion? Is there an inherently dangerous relationship between massive foreign ownership and economic and then political sovereignty.

I spoke earlier, Mr. Speaker, of the desirability of communication and public discussion of national goals and projects. If ever a question of the greatest public concern cried out for the broadest public discussion right now it is this one. I should like to see the Canadian people committed one way or the other by the time of our one hundredth anniversary a little over a year from now. What will we be saying as a nation on July 1, 1967—"We wonder what is going to happen to us by 2,000 A.D." or "We know what we will make of Canada by 2,000 A.D?"

I believe this is the major issue of the day. Really it is the only issue because, until it is faced and settled for generations to come, discussions of other matters, including budgets, are academic. We may be spending money for nothing. The moment of truth has arrived for us as a nation and as individual Canadians.

• (4:00 p.m.)

The conscious settlement and decision of this issue in our heads and hearts could prove to be our salvation as a united country. It could lift us out of our introspection and destructive self-criticism, this pulling up the flower to see if the roots are growing. I am convinced that the spiritual resources of most Canadians in every province are more than equal to the challenge and responsibility of owning Canada. This is a big enough challenge to stir their loyalty; this is a great enough goal to enlist their devotion. It is tough enough to use all their muscles and energy and creativeness; it could be the moral equivalent of war for a peace-loving people. There is a contented peacefulness that comes with the tranquility of the grave and there is the peace and poise of a people embarked on a great adventure. I believe I know what kind Canadians will choose when the issue is put to them.

The first question to decide is whether economic and political domination follow large foreign equity ownership of a country's economy. Where is the danger point? The second question is: In this interdependent world how do we handle this problem without becoming selfish national isolationists, without giving ideological comfort to the enemies of freedom and individual liberty, without making enemies of traditional friends and allies whose friendship is valued and unquestioned?

Our aim should be clear: under our own ownership and control to make the greatest contribution our talents allow to the awakening of the sleeping Canadian giant and then, in full co-operation with all nations, to work for equality of opportunity and justice through the rule of law for all human beings, black, yellow or white.

There are those, Mr. Speaker, who believe that Canada can accomplish these aims by becoming economically integrated in the North American complex. By submerging or erasing borders we become part of a larger unit. This thinking, which is represented on both sides of the 49th parallel, has come to be known as continentalism. Those who see more good than evil in foreign ownership penetration into Canada's economy have been called continentalists. For want of a better word those who take the opposite view have been called nationalists—economic nationalists or political nationalists. I prefer the word "Canadians."

Fundamentally—and I hope I am not simplifying this too much—a continentalist seems to think, consciously or otherwise, that whatever is good for North America is good for Canada. He sees no direct relationship between national self-determination, economically, politically or culturally, and the eventual total integration of Canadian and United States economies. If figures mean anything, then the present rate of takeover of Canadian resources, business and industry can lead only to that end. If there is no danger to Canadian nationhood in such an intertwining, we are very fortunate people. However, if there are unknown contingent liabilities involved in such an arrangement which affect all living Canadians and those yet to come, then we are embarked on a hazardous adventure. Those who have done any thinking at all about Canada's future must surely ask themselves; What are we getting into?

It is time, Mr. Speaker, for the fullest and widest public discussion from coast to coast about this whole matter. I ask my generation to answer these questions: Are we giving away our past which we did not earn, and our future which does not belong to us? As temporary custodians of this entity called Canada, have we the right to sell the family assets without reference to our heirs?

[Mr. Walker.]

If we Canadians can have the best of both worlds, economic and political control of our country plus unprecedented prosperity through foreign equity investment, then everything is coming up roses. I do not believe we can. The hard cold fact of financial equity investment is that political power is always used eventually to protect that investment. We are naïve to think otherwise. All the weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth will be to no avail if we wake up some morning and find we have lost the right to make our economic and political decisions for all time. And we will have no one to blame but ourselves—not the Americans, not the Japanese, not the Germans, just ourselves. It makes much more sense to me to ask individual nationals of other countries to come here and help us develop our nation from within as Canadians then to import dollars and have them develop and control it from without as non-Canadians.

In terms of labels it is already clear I am an economic nationalist. I believe that whatever is good for Canada is good for North America and the world. I want Canada to be able to speak forever with all the power and freedom of a nation in full control of its future. This does not preclude collaboration and the fullest co-operation with other nations whose aims are compatible with ours. It does mean that we are under economic obligation to no one to compromise our convictions or destroy our destiny. Who is going to develop and own Canada? Other people or Canadians?

This is far too broad a subject to cover in one short speech. If I have done nothing more today than to put question marks in people's minds, to start them seriously thinking and talking about this subject, I am satisfied. No government by itself can solve this question; it is up to the Canadian people. They must make the decision or, shall I say, twenty million individual decisions. To do this they must have the facts. There must be discussion and debate. Either this issue is the most important one, the important one, facing Canadians today or it is of no consequence. Either these figures from the Financial Post of November 3, 1962 are vitally important or they are harmless statistics.

I ask hon. members to note the percentage of foreign equity ownership in the following industries in Canada. This is in the manufacturing area and these are 1959 figures: Rubber, 90 per cent; pulp and paper, 38 per cent; agricultural machinery, 55 per cent; automobiles and parts, 96 per cent; electrical apparatus, 67 per cent; chemicals, 52 per cent; total manufacturing, 44 per cent; petroleum and natural gas, 69 per cent; mining, 53 per cent. Either these figures are vitally important or they are harmless statistics.

Either the following remarks by Beland Honderich of the Toronto Star are terribly important or they are just fillers for an after dinner speech. These are excerpts from the address given by Mr. Honderich on March 12, 1965, to the United States and Canadian members of the International Press Institute in Quebec city:

Total foreign investment in 1961 was just under $24 billion and increasing rapidly. Figures have not been published since 1961 but today it is probably in excess of $25 billion.

To express it another way, if the volume of foreign investment in the United States was as great as it is in Canada, it would total over $375 billion. And that, gentlemen, is considerably more than the combined assets of the 500 largest corporations in the United States.

Foreigners control one out of every three companies with assets of more than $1 million. They control two out of every three firms worth $25 million or more. No other developed country in the world has so many key industries under foreign control. If the same situation existed in the United States, General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, General Electric, Westinghouse, U.S. Rubber, Goodyear, I.B.M. and literally hundreds of the largest companies would be controlled by foreigners.

I continue to quote from this address by Mr. Honderich.

Foreign investment which brings with it new technical knowhow for the development of Canadian resources, and provides new jobs for Canadians, obviously contributes to the national good. But even in these cases there should be provision for Canadian participation in ownership. Canadians have a right, I submit, to share in the prosperity of Canadian business.

Foreign capital, on the other hand, that does not add to our productive facilities and, instead, merely brings about a change of ownership of an existing plant, should be subject to close scrutiny.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I polled my electors a few months ago on this problem and had over 2,700 replies. The figures are enlightening. My question was in four parts:

Are you aware of the extent of foreign ownership of "Canadian" industries and national resources?

The answer was yes, 88 per cent.

Are you concerned about this?

The answer was yes, 63 per cent.

Should steps be taken to reverse this trend?

Yes, 61 per cent.

If necessary, would you accept a temporary lower standard of living to accomplish this?

Yes, 40 per cent; only 40 per cent, closer to one-third than one-half.

Now you see why I say that it is up to Canadians to make this corporate decision. It is their country. It is their children's country. It is their devotion and commitment to Canada's second century that is on trial. I believe the danger flags are flying. The time has come to face the facts to make a national decision one way or the other. We are all involved. No one can escape this obligation to decide on Canada's future.

Let us move quickly with the Canada Development Corporation. Let us ask the Economic Council of Canada to move quickly on clause (d) of section 9 of the act which spells out a particular duty "to study means of increasing Canadian participation in the ownership, control and management of industries in Canada." Let us get all the experienced counsel available and determine whether we are travelling on a safe high-road to prosperity and power or in a borrowed vehicle down a dead-end street.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to follow the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Walker). I congratulate him on his eloquent and sentimental address on Canada and its future. He is from a wealthy area of Canada and can afford the luxury of this type of broad thinking. But I am from the Maritimes and am more concerned with matters close at hand. Therefore I hope the house will understand if my remarks are not so full of praise about the budget.

The budget was to be the big effort of the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). Good politician that he is I presume he looked over the last election results. I hope he saw the bitter defeat his party received in the Maritimes and I hope he questioned why. However, that would appear to be all he did because his failure to act on our regional imbalances is not being accepted in the eastern provinces.

The slogans that are prevalent today, "Ban the boom" and "Don't do it now, do it later", mean very little to us. We do not know where the boom is. We do not know what he is talking about that should be delayed. We do not have any idea of this going slow.

The lack of provisions in the budget to deal with our regional problems has caused the Minister of Finance to fall to the very bottom of the ladder with respect to his political ambitions. He is now the low man. I would venture to say he is just as low as was the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), in the eyes of the people in the Maritimes.

I read in the paper the other day that the minister is going to take a course in Berlitz French in order to achieve his political leadership ambitions. I suggest he go out and get a Berlitz course on the Maritimes because it would do him a lot of good and would be easier than the method he is now using to achieve better regard in the Maritimes and to further the ambitions which he quite rightly has.

This problem of regional imbalances is prevalent in many countries of the world. Large and small European countries have had to deal with it. The United States went through a serious period in this respect but has been able to diversify its economy. For example, the motor car industry is located all over the United States. California rivals New York, and the southern states are also well off economically.

It is not an easy problem. It is a difficult challenge to raise the levels of prosperity, particularly in a country with the geography and diversification of Canada. The Maritimes have always been regarded as low income and high unemployment areas. This is not something new. Many figures could be put on the record to illustrate the point.

Lest some people think we are sharing in the current wave of prosperity I point out that in the last five years the regional gain has surpassed the national increase only on three occasions. This might promote false optimism, but so far in the current upswing of the business cycle regional income has not benefited to the same extent as has Canadian income generally. Since 1961—the current expansion began in the first part of that year—personal income has risen 20.1 per cent in the region compared with 22.8 per cent in the nation.

So far as unemployment is concerned I need not give the figures except to say that since world war II unemployment in the Atlantic provinces has been 70 per cent above the Canadian average. Speaking of the post-war period reminds me that it was always said, "You Maritimers have no optimism. You are grovelling around with your problems without looking to the future". This might have been true but around 1950 we developed a new outlook. As the saying goes, we tried to pick ourselves up by our own bootstraps.

The first measure that we fought for—I see the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming), a former premier of New Brunswick, is in his place and he will know what I mean—was the Beechwood project. To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, that was the first time a federal government assisted a region of Canada in a particular way, and that was the Conservative government of 1957.

The premiers of the Atlantic provinces caught this spirit of optimism, held meetings and introduced constructive proposals on a non-partisan basis. APEC was formed as an agency to gather information which made possible many of the political decisions that were required. Further, the Conservative government set up the Atlantic Development Board, a very revolutionary measure which has had considerable success, and I give the present government credit for modifying it.

A lot more needs to be done, but that was the picture at that time in the Maritimes. At the grass roots and at the political level we were showing new enthusiasm and were trying to do something about our problems. The idea caught on in Ottawa. The Economic Council of Canada was formed and we were optimistic. I digress, Mr. Speaker, for a minute to pay tribute to the work of that council and particularly to Dr. John Deutsch who has shown able leadership. I have always admired him and I particularly admired him for a forthright speech which he delivered to the Canadian Club in Fredericton on January 20, 1966, of which I shall have more to say later.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Dr. Deutsch set as one of the objectives of the Economic Council the study of how "national economic policies can best foster the balanced economic development of all areas of Canada." They admit there is some difficulty in getting at these deep-rooted problems, but one thing was done. They attacked the system of subsidies and their short term benefits. This advice was given to the Minister of Finance in a very straightforward way by Dr. Deutsch and others but he paid no heed to the part of that advice relating to regional plans. I shall return to this subject later.

Many people of the Maritimes at all levels as well as civil servants here in Ottawa have tried to help in regard to our present difficulty. I should like to pay tribute to those civil servants in Ottawa with whom I have had some communication during the years regarding the problems now facing the Maritimes because, without exception, they showed an interest and a willingness to help us with our difficulties. Every one of them, particularly those of the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Finance, were sincere in their efforts to find a solution.

During the last two years we have been discouraged by the fact that the government has undermined the efforts of all concerned by turning a completely deaf ear and cold shoulder to our representations. Many of us expected that bad news would be forthcoming and we were not wrong in this regard. The metropolitan areas of Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton were excluded from the benefits to be received through the Department of Industry in relation to incentive area plans. This matter has been mentioned in this house on many occasions. Delegations have made representations and briefs have been presented to the government, but the same old stalling has continued.

APEC, which is one of the strongest voices in the Atlantic provinces, has recommended that the entire Atlantic region be included in the new incentive plans. In support of that recommendation let me state that in my own area, the city of Saint John, we are not only failing to receive new industry but are losing some of our old and well established firms because they are moving outside the excluded area.

In addition to the fact that the areas to which I made reference were not included as designated areas, the Minister of Finance has ignored the words of advice of Dr. Deutsch and others. Where is the regional assistance that we were led to expect would be forthcoming and where, to quote the words of Dr. Deutsch, is the "set of policies selected and specifically tailored to promote a rate of growth in this region which is significantly faster than in the country as a whole?"

Tight money policy is making a comeback but the only thing the Minister of Finance has done to assist our region is to pick out a small area of "inflation" in Prince Edward Island and in Westmorland for special attention. He stamped out that inflation by delaying for some time the construction of a causeway. Instead of giving that area a tonic the government has given it a tranquilizer.

At this stage I should like to put forward certain proposals. As could be expected, I believe that the entire area of the Atlantic provinces, particularly Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton, should be included in the designated areas. I do not think our difficulties will be solved until that has been done. The government has suggested that the Atlantic Development Board will deal appropriately with this matter. However, success will not be achieved when two different agencies are involved in such an important industrial problem as the one now existing in the Atlantic provinces. I should like to quote again from the speech made in Fredericton by Dr. Deutsch. He said:

> —we must take advantage in each region of the trend toward the growing concentration of economic activity in the relatively larger urban centres. This has been a major feature of the pattern of development in all industrially advanced countries. Increasing urbanization has brought new problems which call for new solutions. But to try to reverse this trend would involve much greater economic problems and costs, if indeed it were possible at all.
>
> Many resource-based industries will continue to find advantages in locating close to the resources on which they are based, but we shall also have to offer greater encouragement to development of efficient growth centres within the different regions of our country, including the Atlantic provinces, so that they may be able to develop with the advantages of the vital economies of scale, lower costs, larger markets, and more useful pools of skills.

Those are very significant words and I wish the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) were here to listen and pay attention to them.

My second proposal has been mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). He stated that different industries and different areas should be exempted from the budget proposals. Some individuals have suggested that this would be selective budgeting. I do not care what name you attach to it, but one thing is certain, the Industrial Development Bank is not giving the Atlantic provinces their pro rata share of assistance.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out these facts of interest. The people of the Atlantic provinces received 166 of the 2,209 loans made during 1965, or 7.5 per cent. Of the $96,146,000 lent in that year the Atlantic provinces received only $6,016,000, or 6.2 per cent. The average loan made in that area during that year was $36,000.

The Nova Scotia voluntary planning board prepared an excellent report on economic planning and I should like to quote a portion of that report regarding proposals on monetary and fiscal policy. The report states in part:

> In periods of national monetary restraint, and in the absence of excessive aggregate demand pressures in Nova Scotia, the federal government should make an effort to exclude the province from the full force of credit restrictions by (a) having the agencies of the federal government which provide credit, such as the Industrial Development Bank and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, apply restrictive policies less severely in the province, and (b) encouraging the commercial banks to exempt the province from the full force of restrictions on credit availability.

Evidently that advice did not reach the ears of the minister when he was preparing his famous budget.

My third proposal came to mind when I listened to a question asked today in the house regarding the so-called automobile agreement. This involves an interesting experiment. I do not know what its ramifications are or whether it will or will not help certain areas, but it is evident that the Windsor area, which had employment difficulties, has experienced certain success. I should like to see a similar experiment carried out in respect of particular commodities in the Atlantic provinces area. I think many of our natural markets in the New England states and in the West Indies could be further developed in this way. Let us hope that the next experiment in free trade of this kind is carried out in the Atlantic provinces.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I put forward these proposals to the Minister of Finance with all sincerity, hoping that he will in some way interest himself in them and redeem himself after the fiasco which he brought forward the other night as his first budget. It is for these reasons that we in the Maritimes are so concerned about the budget. We are concerned about the lack of consideration it displays for our particular area. As I said, beginning in the 1950's we supplied new interest and enthusiasm. Planning boards and agencies were set up, the premiers met, delegations came to Ottawa. Within its responsibility the federal civil service supplied research and information, and action was taken by the previous government.

I ask hon. members to remember Beechwood, the Atlantic adjustment grants and the Atlantic Development Board. The great regional disparities were there before us. We all joined the battle and the fight was begun. But now the Liberals are back and, in the words of many Maritimers, Ottawa is up to its old tricks. Can we afford to turn back the clock to 1956? Is it the old Liberal gang that is letting us down? Will the leopards change their spots?

I am surprised that the Minister of Finance, a former respected civil servant who should have the same interest in this problem that the civil service generally has, and his government do not believe in the principle of special treatment for regional needs. They have become the apologists for big business and central, industrial Canada with all its great power and wealth. For this reason, although the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue made a very good speech it did not interest me.

I call on all members from the Atlantic provinces, regardless of their political affiliation, to unite in putting forward our cause as strongly and forcibly as possible. In this connection we can take a lesson from Quebec. I see some of the members from that province in the chamber. When a question of their just entitlement is involved, when economic objectives are concerned, all of them stand together regardless of party. There is no division along political lines, and one would not dare oppose them. They know what they want; they unite, go forward and get it. Let us do the same and once and for all show the political leaders of this country—I include the Minister of Finance—regardless of their ambition or background, that we really mean business.

I have read the subamendment of the New Democratic Party. Personally I would not support it because it involves the principle of a guaranteed annual income and I have not fully made up my mind on that point. I cannot decide whether this should apply to people who are not working. I also believe that the whole subamendment is premature in view of the report of the Carter commission for which we are waiting.

Mr. Knowles: It would be very good for the Maritimes.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Economic White Paper for 1966, which was tabled in this house shortly before the budget was brought down, makes it abundantly clear that during the year 1965 the economic climate in Canada changed from one of moderate expansion in the early part of the year to what the paper describes as a boom climate at the beginning of the year 1966. In this connection I am not going to take the time of the house to read the White Paper but I should like to draw the attention of hon. members particularly to pages 14 and 15 of that very excellent paper.

Without doubt 1965 was another year, in fact an amazing year, of achievement for the Canadian economy. There would be little point in my attempting to review all the achievements during that year, but I think I should refer to at least a few of them because of the very significant contributions that my new department, the Department of Labour, and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, for which I have the responsibility of reporting to parliament, have made in bringing about these achievements.

As hon. members are aware, the demand for an ever-widening variety of goods and services has continued at an increasingly high rate in the past four years. Admittedly this prolonged expansion, which latterly has been very rapid, has brought highly gratifying benefits to Canada. For instance, total employment has increased since 1962 by over 13 per cent, with non-farm employment up by 17 per cent. With regard to unemployment, the national average has come down from the disastrous level of nearly 8 per cent in 1962 to less than 3½ per cent of the labour force in March of this year. The February, 1966, rate is in fact the lowest unemployment rate for any month of February since 1952, and last month, March, found 254,000 more Canadians gainfully employed than in March, 1965.

On March 31 of this year our labour force reached the record high of 7,162,000. It is noteworthy that the figure of less than 3½ per cent is getting very close to the 3 per cent target fixed by the Economic Council in the report to which the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) just referred. It is noteworthy also that Canadians generally are much better off today than they have ever been. Labour income has expanded by an estimated 37 per cent since 1962. Indeed, the income of Canadian workers in 1965 showed an increase of 11.1 per cent over 1964. This is the largest year-to-year gain since 1956, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. Even allowing for the rise in consumer prices, labour income was actually 28 per cent higher in 1965 than it was in 1962.

In 1965, also, housing production in Canada, which experience has shown is a very reliable indicator, reached a record high for the fourth consecutive year. Starts were made in 1965 on 166,565 new dwellings, and there is very little doubt that even this unprecedented figure might have been surpassed if the over-all economic expansion had not diverted investment funds into other opportunities.

• (4:40 p.m.)

However, as my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), has reminded us more than once during recent weeks, it is significant, most significant, in fact, that the current period of exceptional prosperity, our longest period of unbroken prosperity since world war II, shows no sign of abating. Herein lies Canada's immediate problem. Until very recently, the exceptional high and persistent level of demand for goods and services in Canada could be met by our expanding resources and by drawing upon our idle capacity in our factories and the unduly high, in fact alarmingly high, manpower surplus which existed when this government took office just three years ago.

Over the past year or so, however, Mr. Speaker, it has become increasingly apparent that the persistent demand pressures have begun to exceed our supply of manpower and our ability to meet a very difficult situation, at least, to meet it without very serious acceleration in costs and prices. This is something that we in a free economy have to guard against, must guard against, not only because it can impair our world trading position but because damage can be done to prices. This would have a very serious effect on the distribution of incomes.

The Minister of Finance has referred in his Budget speech, clearly and forcefully, to some of the more significant storm signals with which we in Canada are now confronted. He has outlined also some imaginative and constructive steps that the government is taking to help control the situation and to help guarantee continued expansion of the economy. As the minister aptly put it, now is the time to ease off on the gas pedal a little, though there is no need to put on the brakes.

On March 21, when this house was discussing supply, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) issued a stern warning, a timely one, I agree. He said that inflation signals were flying everywhere, and in a very sad tone of voice he added that the government seemed unaware of the danger. However, Mr. Speaker, the imaginative and carefully thought out Budget that was announced just a week after this speech shows what a very poor analyst the right hon. gentleman really is. I hope that the Budget has reassured him, for it is now evident that the government also had seen the inflation signals, probably long before he had, and that as a matter of fact the government had been giving the problem careful thought for some time so it was and is prepared to act decisively to cope with the dangerous situation to which the right hon. gentleman referred.

Hon. members may perhaps be reminded that the Leader of the Opposition said in effect that government action should be fully applied to all over-spending in Canada. In this connection I might refer to the passage at the bottom of page 2943 and continued on page 2944 of Hansard on that subject. In that same speech, on page 2944 of Hansard, the hon. gentleman refers to a statement by Bruce Hutchison as reported in the Ottawa Journal of February 26, in which the author had stressed the necessity for keeping our prices in line with world prices. The right hon. gentleman's remarks were as follows:

Here is an article by Bruce Hutchison. No one can ever accuse him of admiring anything more than he admires the present government. This is what he says as reported in the Ottawa Journal of February 26:

"The risk, of course, is that we shall price our goods out of the world market when we have a special chance to price them in."

Then he says, "So I could continue". I think, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members might be reminded that in a subsequent article in the Vancouver Sun of April 4, as well as in other Canadian newspapers, Mr. Hutchison commented on this passage in Hansard to which I have just referred. Perhaps it might not be inappropriate for me to quote Mr. Hutchison's comments on that speech in the house. In this article Mr. Hutchison says:

Indicting the Pearson government for its failure to prevent inflation, Mr. Diefenbaker cites me as a witness. He quotes certain statements from these columns to prove that even a Liberal of my partisan bias has seen inflation coming for a long time.

Then he tells parliament, with ponderous irony and a straight face, that my evidence against the nation's fiscal policies must be taken seriously because there is nothing on earth that I admire so much as the government.

This is kind, tender and very touching. After all the hard things I have written about Mr. Diefenbaker his compassion often fills me with remorse but I fight it down in the interests of truth. And as a man equally devoted to the truth Mr. Diefenbaker will be the first to admit an error.

Farther down he says, referring to Mr. Diefenbaker:

He is wrong in saying that there is nothing I admire as much as the government. No, I admire much more the economic revelations of Mr. Diefenbaker.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

They are not of the commonplace, grubby sort learned at college. They don't depend on arithmetic or any sordid reports from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

They emerge, immaculate, out of the deep, poetical subconscious, a sudden spurt of genius repealing the old outworn shibboleths, cancelling the obsolete law of supply and demand, burying Adam Smith, Maynard Keynes and all the economists forever.

When Mr. Diefenbaker gets going on the problems of inflation the spectator stands aghast before a primitive, shattering spectacle of nature, like a sunset on the Arctic tundra or the Matterhorn in moonlight.

There has been nothing so majestic and magical since Coleridge walked the road to Xanadu and found the woman wailing for her demon lover. You can hear those same wails in parliament today.

Having read Mr. Diefenbaker's speech in Hansard, I am too shaken to do it justice. The policy of stringent economy combined with vast new expenditures, the immediate tax reduction designed to cool the overheated business cycle, the need of more money in everybody's pocket to reduce the appetite for goods—these feats of subliminal fantasy leave a man dumb and prostrate in reverence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I may say also that earlier in this debate the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) said he could find nothing good to say about the Budget. For some reason that I find difficult to understand, he failed to recognize the imaginative, courageous and pioneering features of this Budget which he described as inept and bureaucratic. In the speeches to which I have referred, both the hon. member for Perth and the Leader of the Opposition quoted widely from selected newspaper editorials in an attempt to find support for their position. In view of this, it might be fitting for me to give the house just one quotation from an impartial outside observer, the New York Times.

This highly respected newspaper, in its editorial comment on the first Budget of the Minister of Finance, said:

In taking these steps Mitchell Sharp, Canada's new Finance Minister, is displaying both imagination and flexibility in fiscal policy. Mr. Sharp made clear that his tax package is not intended to halt the upward movement of the Canadian economy. Instead, it is designed to sustain the expansion by moderating it.

In the same editorial I find the following:

The most interesting feature of Mr. Sharp's decision is his innovation of a refundable tax on corporate profits. This proposal represents a flexible attempt to influence corporate spending . . . . This kind of fiscal flexibility, which has been used in Europe, has been talked about in Washington. Now that Ottawa has introduced it on this side of the Atlantic, Washington too may be encouraged to adopt a more flexible stance.

• (4:50 p.m.)

As one who for approximately two decades, Mr. Speaker, was active in two major Canadian industries and also in the public utilities field, I have no hesitation in joining with the Times and with many other leading newspapers in stating that the Budget is not only flexible but it is imaginative, timely and sound. This key approach is to move some demands forward in order to even out the level of business activity.

As has been pointed out in this debate, in the last report of the Economic Council the council warned that the recent rate of expansion and investment spending in Canada is clearly not sustainable on a long range basis. In view of this, Mr. Speaker, may I ask how any intelligent, well informed person can seriously argue that this budget will not relieve at least some of the excessive demands on the economy?

In his comments on the budget the hon. member for Perth also referred to page 7 of a pamphlet entitled "Private and Public Investment in Canada, Outlook 1966." His remarks are reported at page 3729 of Hansard and he quotes from page 7 of the pamphlet as follows:

> Within the goods producing industries the greatest additional strength appears in the resource based forest and minerals industries where outlays are expected to increase by one-third compared with the 14 per cent rise recorded last year. Of particular significance are the programs currently planned by the mining industry. These involve a doubling of expenditures in iron mines and a similar increase in outlays for potash mines. In addition, spending for facilities for non-ferrous metal mines is expected to rise by about 50 per cent. The added strength in the forest based industries is entirely the result of a further substantial expansion of investment for pulp and paper mills, involving outlays some $120 million greater than those of 1965.

Then the hon. member goes on to ask this question:

> Does the minister want to stop this? These industries help our foreign exchange position; they provide employment and expansion.

In answer to the hon. gentleman's question, Mr. Speaker, it is safe to say clearly and positively that the government does not want to curtail desirable expansion in the forest industry or in any other industry where immediate expansion in these industries is likely to be in the national interest. But what the hon. member for Perth seems to forget is that the forest based and certain other industries in Canada are faced with considerable over-expansion at this particular time, and this is particularly true of the pulp production capacity of this country.

As some hon. members know, I was associated with Canada's forest industry for some little time before I went into politics and, as hon. members will recall, I had the honour to serve as minister of forestry for a period of approximately one year. I speak with some little knowledge and I can say unequivocally that as a result of the enormous expansion of the pulp and paper facilities which is now under way in Canada, particularly in the pulping industry, not only Canada but other export nations of the world are faced with a huge surplus capacity for almost every kind of pulp for the next six or seven years.

In this connection I might refer hon. members to a study which was made in Rome by FAO in the fall of 1963 when I headed the Canadian delegation to the conference held there and my deputy minister chaired the international group who made a study of forecast forest products through to 1975. This review showed conclusively that there will be a huge surplus of certain forest products for the period 1967-1973, followed by shortages in or about 1975.

The forest industry of this country is looking forward to this increased demand in 1975. A great deal of planned expansion in most forest industry activities, however, will not be needed for another five to seven years. That is with the possible exception of newsprint of which there is a shortage. Yet in spite of these figures and in light of the facts brought out in the international study in which representatives from Canada took an active part, at the time the Budget was presented, Mr. Speaker, new pulp and paper capacity representing an investment of approximately $500 million, perhaps more, was either under construction or on the drawing board in British Columbia alone. Other such plants valued at hundreds of millions of dollars were either under construction or on the drawing board in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Still others are in the planning stage. I can show hon. members these plants and the forecasts of production and surplus capacity. What the minister is doing in this Budget, Mr. Speaker, is to encourage the owners of plants which will not be needed for two, three, four, five or perhaps seven years to defer construction where it seems wise to do so until closer to the period of anticipated shortage in the 1970's. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is little point in building plants at a time when we are short of labour, particularly skilled labour, and when we are short of funds, to meet a demand that is not going to be here for several years.

I can state quite frankly that if I were still in business the fact that after March 31, 1968 there will be no sales tax whatever payable on production machinery and equipment would be a very great inducement for me to defer at least some expenditures of that nature. This is especially true, Mr. Speaker, when you consider that the complicated machinery and equipment in a modern factory, such as a pulp or a paper mill, represents the bulk of the huge expenditures involved. Some of these plants are running into $85 million to $100 million, nearly two-thirds of which cost is for machinery and equipment. Why in the name of common sense should one not wait until there is no sales tax payable on that machinery and equipment?

But, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the inducements or incentives which are provided for in the Budget the federal government itself is easing the pressure—taking some pressure off the gas pedal, if I may use my colleague's words—by reducing its own expenditure program for existing and planned capital projects by some 10 per cent. True, some people, including some members of this house, say that the government could and should have gone farther along this line. But I ask hon. members just to keep in mind that the minister said there was not to be a sudden application of brakes but rather a slowing down. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, a reduction of 10 per cent in anticipated capital spending, representing a postponement of several hundred million dollars, is a slowing down that should set a good example both to private industry and to provincial and municipal governments.

Surely the provinces and some municipalities at least can assist in this slowing down process by carefully examining their planned construction programs with a view to seeing just what projects may be lengthened or what projects can be postponed for a year or two. A postponement of at least some public projects would, I believe, certainly be highly desirable in my own province of British Columbia.

• (5:00 p.m.)

In addition to the private investment slated for this year, which I have already said is running into hundreds of millions of dollars, there are two large provincial hydroelectric projects in B.C. each running to a total of at least two-thirds of a billion dollars. The costs of each of these projects have skyrocketed since they were first announced. The ever-increasing payrolls which reflect the recent high wage levels in the province of British Columbia are, I can assure all hon. members, a source of grave concern to private industry in my province. Private industry in British Columbia is finding it increasingly difficult to compete with the tempting wages being paid by the provincial government agency concerned and by its contractors.

In this connection I was gratified to read just a few days ago that the premier of British Columbia, who is certainly a great optimist and who had some critical remarks to make about the Budget when it was first presented, made a statement on April 9 in which he expressed grave concern over the inflationary situation that was developing in the province. He is now suggesting caution in language not very different from that used by the Minister of Finance.

May I read two passages from the Vancouver Sun of April 9, 1966. The headline is: "Bennett Asks Restraint To Halt Inflation". I quote his words from the body of the article:

> This is a dangerous period we're in now . . . . It is an inflationary period and it is not a time at which management should try to make excessive profits nor for labour to make excessive demands.

Farther down he says:

> We want to keep this dynamic society of ours moving—

Might one not think that these are the words of the Minister of Finance rather than the premier of British Columbia?

But, Mr. Speaker, while adequate and appropriate fiscal and monetary measures are important and very necessary tools for use in keeping our expanding economy on an even keel, the solution of our other economic and social problems must also be kept in mind. In fact, some such needs must be vigorously pressed. Vast sums of money must be paid out for greater assistance to those who need it. I refer to programs like the Canada Assistance Plan. Vast sums of money are needed for education and vast sums are needed for health purposes. The Minister of Finance made this very clear in this Budget presentation, even though some hon. members opposite who have spoken seem to have overlooked this fact completely.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) in his remarks on April 1 referred to the war on poverty as "government whitewashing." It is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is serious. Perhaps his statement to which I have referred, having been made on April 1, April fool's day, was intended to be taken with a grain of salt.

The existing activities of the government, which it has been made clear are to continue, include a vast expansion of the technical and vocational training facilities built during the past five years, the rural rehabilitation and development agency, the $112 million housing and electrification program for our Indian communities, area development for industry and vocational rehabilitation for the handicapped. No one, Mr. Speaker, can seriously call the expenditure of $112 million for this very proper and very essential purpose mere whitewashing.

Among other new activities also provided for, which are also to continue, which have been included in this year's estimates and therefore in the Budget are programs of manpower mobility, the development of special experimental training programs for people in areas where opportunity is lacking, an expansion of area development to include capital cost grants to new industries of a fifth to a third, and the expansion of the ARDA program to include a $50 million fund to finance projects in rural areas where poverty is severe. Again, Mr. Speaker, these programs can hardly be referred to as mere government whitewashing. Included also in the war on poverty are the Canada Assistance Plan, recently placed on the order paper, and the Company of Young Canadians, now being established.

True, some of these activities lie ahead. However, in the face of such programs it is hard for me to understand, and I am sure it is difficult for most hon. members in this house to understand, how any responsible member can say that the government is prepared to discard our poor, our handicapped, our unemployed and our untrained as defective parts of the machine.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands at one point in his remarks actually painted Canada as little better than a disaster area. He mentioned slums, poverty and waste of manpower. That there have been problems and serious problems, in some of these areas is true. But what is more important, Mr. Speaker, is that steady progress is now being made to surmount them. Our improved youth allowances program, our increased university grant program, our student loan program and the Canada Pension Plan are good examples of progress. They are certainly not mere whitewashing on the part of the government.

We all know that the provinces have been making enormous efforts to gear their educational systems to our modern needs. We all know that the federal government has been backing up the provinces, especially in areas of technical and vocational training and higher education generally.

Since 1961, when the present technical and vocational training agreements with the provinces came into force—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Minister of Labour but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The Chair is under the impression that the minister has unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May the minister continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their courtesy. I am almost through and I will not be very long.

As I was saying, since 1961, when the present technical and vocational training agreements with the provinces came into force, the federal government has shared with the provinces in capital expenditures on more than 860 projects for building and equipping technical and vocational schools. Just within the last year enrolments in all the programs under these federal-provincial agreements have increased by 300 per cent. Those are things that people ought to bear in mind before they start talking about government whitewashing.

In the setting of this Budget debate and in the light of our current problems, Mr. Speaker, it might have been appropriate for me to devote some time and thought to the role that our system of labour relations can and should play in contributing to Canada's social progress and continued economic growth. It has seemed to me for some time that we in Canada have been entirely too reluctant and hesitant in breaking new ground in the solution of broad economic and social problems through the combined efforts of labour, management and governments. What we need today, in my opinion, is a new strategy of labour relations in Canada to ensure that economic growth is achieved and that its benefits are fairly shared.

In spite of the indulgence extended by the house, time does not permit me to develop this theme adequately during this debate. I hope to do so, however, on another occasion at an early date. In the meantime I urge hon. members to study and restudy the Budget proposals. When they have done so I have no doubt whatever that both the amendment and the subamendment will receive scant support when the time comes to vote on them.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak in the Budget debate perhaps I may be permitted, since it is the first opportunity I have had, to congratulate you and your colleagues on your elevation to the high positions you hold in this house. Coming so many months late, my congratulations may possibly carry a greater note of sincerity, especially after having watched you perform your duties.

I should like, if I may be permitted to do so, to pay a very brief but very sincere tribute to my predecessor in the House of Commons, Dr. Eloise Jones, who served the constituency of Saskatoon with such excellence. Now and for many years to come she will be held in high regard and affection not only by those in this house but also by her constituents in the city of Saskatoon.

• (5:10 p.m.)

After spending a few days in my home riding, as most members did, I came back to Ottawa having listened to many of my constituents. I received many telephone calls from them and talked with many of them personally. There were many letters waiting on my desk when I returned expressing disappointment because nothing had been done in the Budget to curb the increasing cost of living which is presenting such a serious and real problem to the average Canadian.

I have also received, as I am sure members of the government including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) have, many letters from those unfortunate people who are caught in the cost-price squeeze, people who live on fixed incomes, old age pensioners, for example, for whom no relief is in sight. It disturbed me that there was nothing specifically laid out in the Budget to help solve their serious problem.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

At the same time I was disturbed that there appeared to be a lack of proposals to increase the supply of doctors and medical schools in the light of suggestions for a medical care plan applicable to this great country of ours. This situation has prompted me to offer some advice to the government, possibly gratuitous, with regard to a field about which I believe I have some slight knowledge, that is to say, the education and training of doctors and, in particular, of general practitioners, and to suggest means by which we can make use of existing facilities to train more doctors without incurring tremendous expenditures. I consider the present shortage of doctors to be a serious problem. The national need for physicians, particularly for general practitioners, is increasing daily. Along with the necessity to satisfy this need comes something which is just as important—the responsibility of the government as well as of the profession to see that a high quality of medical care continues even as the ranks are thinned. I should like to direct my remarks specifically to the general practitioner, the so-called family doctor, and refer briefly by way of background to his status among his fellows, his opportunities or lack of them, his continuing education and his role in the health team of today.

Perhaps it would be wise first to place this problem in its proper perspective. It is difficult for most of us to realize the immense advances which have been made in medical science as well as in the other sciences in the past half century. In the area of organization and quality control of medicine it was only in 1910 that the Flexner Report made its impact on the United States and Canada, and only in 1912 that Sir Thomas Ruddick fathered the Canada Medical Act, one of the first attempts at organization and quality control of the practice of medicine. It was as recently as 1929 that the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada was formed to help organize the specialists who were springing up as a result of the advances of the day.

However, with these changes in the organization of medicine came the trickle that became a stream and the stream that became a torrent of advances in medical knowledge. Dr. Raymond Keating, professor of medicine at the Mayo Clinic post-graduate school, pointed out the remarkable fact that 90 per cent of all advances in scientific knowledge, including medical science, have taken place during the past ten years by scientists living at the present time. This avalanche of advances has had a profound and lasting effect on medical practice.

As I mentioned before, specialists within medicine were created, five main ones at first and 24 sub-specialties. This was a very necessary and important development in view of the amount of knowledge which was so vast that no one man could grasp more than a small amount of it. This, of course, had other effects. The conscientious family doctor has striven mightily to keep up but has found himself swallowed up in this avalanche, his status and duties becoming more attenuated as the years went by.

The public too have become confused. Surrounded by these advances and anxious to seek the very best care available, they have in many instances sought out specialists directly for medical care, services that few if any specialists have the training and experience to provide.

The medical schools too have undergone a change. Whereas they used to educate doctors for general practice, they now aim to produce what they term a basic undifferentiated doctor. After graduation it is easy for specialist training to be obtained in excellent schools throughout the world, but this does not hold true for general practitioners, although very recently attempts have been made to correct this gap in their continuing education. Little, if any, initiative has been taken by the medical schools to come to grips with the problem.

It is true that brief post-graduate courses are held in an ostensible attempt to continue the education of the general practitioner but these are little more than sounding boards for the lecturers involved. A few of the more enlightened universities have included general practitioners on their faculties, albeit in the lowly positions, but even these attempts have been half-hearted and would seem intended more to quiet the agitated general practitioner than to elevate his intellect. The result of this has been that since our medical knowledge has a half life of ten years or, to put it another way, one half of one's knowledge is replaced by new knowledge in ten years time, specialists have become better with all the facilities available to them. Meanwhile, however, the general practitioner has become in the eyes of his peers a second-class doctor or, in that faintly contemptuous phrase, "only a general practitioner".

Despite all this, the family doctor of today is better trained than he has ever been, and with the facilities he has at hand he is better able now to diagnose and treat disease than he has ever been. The dedicated general practitioner works harder on the average for longer hours and for much less pay than the great majority of his specialist colleagues. This is something I should like the government to take a close look at if they wish to maintain a high level of medical care as they develop schemes for medical care across this country.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The lack of continuing training for the family doctor has resulted in the gradual closing of hospitals. I do not mean the closing of beds or of front doors; I mean in the medical sense of restricting those who are admitted to hospital staffs. I mean the limiting and restricting of privileges of general practitioners who by some stroke of fate are still allowed to practice in the precincts of a particular hospital. In Britain we have the ultimate result of family doctors practising completely apart from the hospitals, becoming office and home doctors with no opportunity to practise continuing care for their patients. This was clearly pointed out at the first international conference of Colleges of General Practice, which was held in Canada at the behest of our College of General Practice in 1964. At that conference general practitioners from Britain and other countries which have followed this same type of practice very clearly pointed out the trend.

In many areas of our own country the general practitioner is still allowed to practise within his competence in our hospitals but every day more and more these privileges are being whittled away. In the university centres, except for the few enlightened ones —they are few, I can assure you—such as the University of Alberta, at Calgary, the University of Western Ontario at London, and Dalhousie in Halifax, except for those which have pilot projects coming up this year the general practitioner is being squeezed out of hospital work under the guise that his continuance would only lower the standards of medical care.

By some strange process of reasoning the majority of our medical educators today seem to believe that you can elevate the standards of medical care by excluding almost totally from the centres of learning those who look after between 85 per cent and 90 per cent of the health care of Canada. They do this without seeing what is obvious to me, that by free association with the very best in medical care, by rubbing shoulders and practising alongside those who represent the finest in specialist care, and by having their work scrutinized by these same people, our standards of care could not help but rise to meet and face the challenge that would be their's. This is something that our medical educators do not seem to understand.

We hear the pious platitudes of these same educators who say, and I have heard them, that their primary purpose is to train general practitioners because we have such a need of them and because we shall need more and more of them due to all the medical care programs that are coming along. They say this publicly but at the same time they do their utmost to downgrade the work of the family doctor and expose the medical student to a totally specialist or fragmented atmosphere where the patient becomes lost in the shuffle and becomes an interesting case rather than a human being afflicted with disease.

Hospitals even outside the university setting are becoming increasingly departmentalized and with this the privileges of the general practitioner on staff are becoming increasingly restricted, even in areas of already demonstrated competence.

There is no question in my mind that those who perpetuate this state of affairs are sincere in their objectives, but there is also no question in my mind that they are very wrong in what they seek to achieve. They are not entirely to blame. The general practitioner himself has become so used to being a second-class medical citizen that in many instances he has given in and has watched his privileges being whittled away without a murmur.

Others, however, in the general practitioner group, with the encouragement of some of the more enlightened specialists, have tried to break through the indifference that has settled on general practice. In 1954 they set up the College of General Practice of Canada with the objectives of stimulating postgraduate training, research and teaching in their chosen field. This college was incorporated in 1960 and has as its motto, "In education lies our strength." This group certainly recognizes the necessity of doing something now to try to produce more general practitioners to meet the needs in Canada today.

[Mr. Brand.]

I should like to quote briefly, if I may, Dr. Rice who is executive director of the College of General Practice of Canada.

> Is it not paradoxical in the presence of a demonstrated need for more family doctors, to have a decline in the number of general practitioners who are leaving practice for other endeavours, and in the numbers of newly-graduated doctors entering general practice as a career? Why has this situation developed? To those who study this problem, the answer is obvious and should surprise no one. Simply, we—> —have not kept pace with present community needs. We have failed to keep up to date by adapting the present day pattern of general practice to meet these needs, and more seriously we have given up training medical students as family doctors. We have permitted a situation to develop where general practice has been allowed to become in the eyes of many, and in particular in the eyes of the medical student, that which remains in the practice of medicine once the specialities have been extracted from it.

By "we" he means the general practitioners as well as the medical professors.

>
> We have permitted the general practice of medicine to become increasingly unattractive by allowing it to become a way of life which is more restrictive in its scope, more demanding in terms of time, lacking in recognition and prestige, and less remunerative in its monetary return.

The College of General Practice has gone ahead and set up these post-graduate programs. I have mentioned three universities where this year residencies in general practice will be going into effect to help improve the standard of general practice in Canada, and it needs to be improved. It was this same college which commissioned Dr. Kenneth Clute, a specialist from Toronto, to do a study on the general practitioner, to do it without fear or bias and see what was wrong with the profession in Canada and what could be done about it. These residencies I have mentioned are training programs which are being set up and they are a step in the right direction. But the point is that the College of General Practice is still going to be stymied in its ultimate objective unless we awaken our medical schools and make them realize that they must integrate fully into their curriculums the general practice of medicine.

It is no longer good enough for them to say that this cannot be done. Such arrogance can only hurt the practice of medicine in the future. They must recognize that they have a direct responsibility and be willing to act on this responsibility. You can give medical schools as much money as you want, but until they change the manner in which they are training their doctors you are not going to maintain the standard of medical care or increase the number of doctors who are going to be needed in future years.

Hospitals too must realize that it is no longer good enough to departmentalize into departments of medicine or surgery, or what have you, or clinical departments where patients are treated and then, in order to keep the family doctor from making too much fuss, allow a general practice department which is not in the least bit clinical, which is merely a paper thing where you have a meeting once a year to satisfy some administrative thinking. This does away with the continuing education of general practitioners. It does nothing to boost the sinking morale of the family doctor. It just keeps him from raising too much fuss at the local medical meetings.

With the prospective need for doctors in our country it is up to the government to give direction to the medical schools and to hospitals to encourage the continuing education of the general practitioner and help break down the ivory tower bastions that have been set up in so many of our medical schools. We can turn out more doctors without building too many more medical schools. We have countless community hospitals ready and available now in which the integrated training of doctors can be carried out in co-operation with our medical faculties. What we need are medical teachers. We need more teachers and facilities to train medical teachers.

• (5:30 p.m.)

We need more teachers not only in the specialties but teachers in the general practice of medicine, the only practice which looks at the patient as a whole patient rather than just a part. This is the segment of the practice of medicine that is so necessary for the preservation of the human being and human dignity in the presence of disease.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, it will seem quite obvious to everyone that I am somewhat partisan in my remarks, but I think it is high time someone took to task those medical educators and specialists who are so insular in their approach that they consider the average family doctor as someone to be tolerated only and never totally accepted in the great society of Hippocrates.

We need more doctors, primarily family doctors, and unless we change our attitude and integrate general practice into medical schools and hospitals the trend already started, where 60 per cent or more of our medical students go directly into the specialist fields, will continue whereas the reverse used to be true. Closed hospitals, limited and restricted privileges and other terms like these should be abolished. In their place should come practices related directly to one's training and one's competence.

In conclusion may I say that the general practitioner agrees with Maimonides in his "Daily Prayer of a Physician":

> May there never develop in me the notion that my education is complete, but give me strength and leisure and zeal continually to enlarge my knowledge.

On that note may I make a plea to the government to look very carefully at the problem of medical education. This is something that cannot be swept under the rug in the hope that as a result of establishing a medicare plan it will be solved. This problem will not be solved in this way. We need direction and help from the government and I ask the government to look seriously at this problem to see what can be done to improve the lot of the largest number by far of men educated in the medical profession today.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the general rate of growth of the economy in Canada I wish it were possible to say nice things about the Budget and, more particularly, about the Budget speech, but I do not think that is possible for any objective person studying the social and economic conditions of our country today.

When I read and re-read the minister's speech in introduction of his Budget I came to the conclusion that this Budget decrees that the poor shall, indeed must, always be with us. In his speech the minister bemoaned the fact that inflation hurts the poor the most, and he was right. Rising consumer costs certainly hurt people on low or fixed incomes most of all. But the minister says in effect, we cannot do anything or we can do very little for the poor precisely because of the inflation which hurts them. To me this is not only a vicious circle but a declaration of moral and social bankruptcy on the part of the minister and the government for which he speaks, and indeed of the entire social and economic establishment in Canada.

So is another lamentable implication of the minister's speech, and I challenge him to show where at any place in my general analysis of his words there is an illogical point. His analysis of the economic situation alleges that the reason for the inflationary pressures, as he insisted throughout his speech, is the fact that we are using our productive capacities to the full or almost to the full.

What does that mean? It means that the minister boasts of our expansion and prosperity and then concludes that he can do nothing substantial for the poor of Canada. I say to him and to you, sir, that there are only two alternative implications to be drawn from this kind of analysis of our economic situation. The first is that we can do more for the poor when we are experiencing a recession, when we do not have inflationary pressures. That is an obvious piece of arrant and cynical nonsense. Or, alternatively, the implication in the minister's analysis is that we can never eliminate poverty in Canada; we cannot do it in times of recession because we do not have enough and we cannot do it adequately in times of prosperity because we have too much.

That is precisely what the minister says in his Budget speech to the poor of this country, and I have no doubt that he will deny any such implications in his speech.

Mr. Sharp: I do.

Mr. Lewis: I was sure that the minister would deny it, but I say to him in all seriousness, because I think this is the basis of the discussion that ought to take place in this parliament and in our country, that whether he denies these implications or not, indeed, whether he intends them or not, they are the only conclusions that can be drawn from the totality of his presentation. Otherwise he would have said to this parliament and to the country that it is precisely because we have such expansion in our economy, and precisely because we are experiencing a period of continued prosperity, that this is the time when the government will take all necessary measures to eliminate poverty.

Furthermore, I say to you that the blind approach which the minister and his government have taken to the social purposes of our economic activity has shown one thing that has always annoyed me beyond words, and that is the ease with which economic experts and ministers of finance point to indices of prosperity and rates of growth, always ignoring the one basis for that growth and that is its social purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: Let me say I am not concerned with economic growth, nor is anyone in my party, nor should anyone in this house be, if the results of that growth are concentrated in the hands of those who already have too much. That is exactly what has been happening in this country. It is only this blind approach to the social purpose of our economic activity that could have led the minister and his government to commit such a regrettable and repellent hoax on the low income groups as that contained in the minister's manipulations of the income tax provisions.

The minister went into a long song and dance about the fact that even though inflation required him to take back the tax reduction which was made a year ago, or most of it, he was not going to touch the poor people and he was going to make their lot better. After this self-righteous speech, if you look at the tables that he himself included in his budget speech, what do you find? You find that this tremendous generosity on the part of the minister will result in a reduction in taxes for a single person who earns $1,500 a year of $4 per year.

Mr. Sharp: How much tax did he pay?

Mr. Lewis: That does not matter and it is not relevant.

Mr. Sharp: I think it is.

Mr. Lewis: The minister says it is relevant and I say it is not relevant, and that proves my point. If these people were unable to pay bigger taxes before it was the fault of the minister and his government because they were not able to earn more money to pay more taxes.

The point with which I am concerned is the ease with which the minister is able to salve his conscience by saying, I am helping the poor. What does this help consist of? It consists of $4 per year for a single man earning $1,500, 33 cents per month or 7½ cents per week.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: How much did they pay in taxes?

Mr. Lewis: The minister has already asked that question and I think I have answered him. I say to him in further answer that he might have been more generous to the people of Canada and more appreciative of their need and would have shown a much more sincere feeling for the poor had he increased old age pensions and established a floor in respect of income instead of perpetrating this insincere hoax which gives a single man $4 per year, 33 cents per month or 7½ cents per week, this hoax which gives a married man without dependants earning $2,500 per year $4 per year, 33 cents per month or 7½ cents per week. To the married person with two children earning $3,000 a year he gives 5½ cents a week, to the $3,500 a year man, 17 cents a week, to the $4,000 a year man, 9½ cents a week. This is the generosity he shows to the poor of Canada. My point is not that he was doing anything completely wrong in reducing taxes for these people; it is that he should have reduced them substantially more. I am making the point that the entire policies should have been directed toward raising the living standards of all the people who pay such low taxes and a third of the people who do not pay any taxes at all.

Despite this, Mr. Speaker, if you look into the record you find that over a year ago, in the 1965 Throne Speech, the government declared a war on poverty; indeed, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) talked about it before the Throne Speech. On April 5, 1965, His Excellency the Governor General read some stirring and ringing words. Some of them are worth recalling. The Throne Speech said:

> All the great potentialities of our economy are not, however, being realized. The talents of some of our people are wasted because of poverty, illness, inadequate education and training, inequality in opportunities for work.

I pause here to say that at least the Prime Minister and the government realize that these conditions, which some of us have been drawing to their attention for decades, do in fact exist. The Throne Speech went on to say:

> To combat these problems, to improve the opportunities of people who are now at a disadvantage, is to put new power into economic expansion and to enhance the unity of our country.

I applaud that sentiment. Who would not? Everyone in Canada applauded that statement because increasingly we are becoming aware of these things. What are we talking about when we speak of poverty in Canada?

I want to spend a few minutes outlining the elements of poverty directly from a publication of the Special Planning Secretariat that the Prime Minister set up. These figures are contained in a publication called "Meeting Poverty—Profile of Poverty in Canada." The first few pages of this publication contain a summary of the findings of the secretariat. Here you find some really distressing facts which ought to have found their way into the Budget or at least into the Budget speech.

You find that in Canada— and this is what we are talking about when we speak of poverty— at the census of 1961 some 23 per cent of Canadian families had an income of less than $3,000 a year. This figure of $3,000 is the line drawn by welfare counsellors and sociologists as the floor for a half-decent standard of living for a family with children. As I say, 23 per cent, one out of every four of our Canadian families, had an income of less than $3,000 a year. In addition some 700,000 single persons made less than $1,500 a year. If you add these numbers together you have some four million Canadians or more than 25 per cent of our people, who are members of families or are single, below the line of income required for a half-decent standard of living. One out of every four Canadians is in that situation.

With regard to families headed by women, says this report, more than half—not 23 per cent but more than half—had incomes of less than $3,000 a year and about two-fifths or 40 per cent of them lived on less than $2,000 a year. If you consider the situation with regard to fishermen, logging and farm workers, you find that three out of five families of fishermen, which is 60 per cent, and every second family of logging and farm workers, which is 50 per cent, and one third of our labourers, which is 33⅓ per cent, had incomes below $3,000 a year. This is the extent of existing and continuing poverty in Canada. This situation is even more striking if you analyse it in some of its various aspects.

In early pages of the same report you find that the unemployment rate among workers under 20 years of age is more than double the national average. Note that this applies to people under 20 years of age, which is precisely the age when we should develop young Canadians into having an appreciation of their country and a desire to make a contribution to it. Yet their unemployment rate is more than double the national average.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we think of Canada as a country of widespread education. But note this. In 1961, says this report—I am not quoting it but am citing figures from it—of Canadians aged 15 and over there were 5,166,346, or 47 per cent, with no more than elementary schooling. I draw to the attention of the house this figure of 47 per cent of those aged 15 and over who in 1961 had only elementary schooling. These included 176,524 with no schooling at all, and a figure as high as 848,261 with schooling of four grades or less. These conditions are found in an affluent, expanding economy. These are the facts about the situation in Canada today.

When you come to the aged people, which is the next most helpless group, you find that 21 per cent of Canadians aged 65 to 69 consistently receive old age assistance. That is, almost one out of every four persons aged 65 to 69 receives old age assistance. The median annual income for men in their late 60's is $2,000, $1,500 in their early 70's, and $900 in their late 80's, if they live that long. As they become older, in need of greater income, as their health fails, as they become more helpless, their income is reduced from $2,000 in the late 60's to $900 in the late 80's. How more inhuman and thoughtless can a society be than one which treats its old people this way?

If you look at health, which is the next criterion in the realm of poverty, you find this statement at page 5 of the report:

> Low income groups receive less health care than higher income groups, although they suffer from more illnesses in general and their illnesses tend to be more severe.

In housing you find the same story. You find that among families earning $6,000 and over in 1961, only 18 per cent lived in dwellings providing less than a room per person. But among families earning less than $3,000 this proportion was 35 per cent. They also lived, in significant measure, in houses infested with rats and vermin, houses in need of major repair and unfit for any human being to dwell in. This is what we are speaking about when we talk of poverty.

The Canadian Welfare Council prepared a report for the conference on poverty last December. For the purposes of this report they carried out a survey of families in four Canadian cities. In their report the Canadian Welfare Council "painted a bleak picture of poverty among city dwellers". They found that the median income per person for the families studied in Saint John, New Brunswick, and Montreal was $34 a month; in Toronto it was $44 a month and in Vancouver it was $53 a month.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The majority had less than grade 8 education, insufficient to enable them to get better or more permanent jobs or even to take part in retraining courses. The report stated that housing is a source of deep anxiety for the poor. Few own their own houses and rents are high. Food and rent consume almost 70 per cent of all incomes.

Then there is this sentence in the report:

> Sharing the house with rats and other vermin does not give people a sense of their own worth or a wish to be part of the community. Nevertheless, most do want to be part of their neighbourhood and do not want to move away even from these tenuous connections.

The Canadian Welfare Council also stated in a report on rural poverty that Canada's rural poor subsist in some areas on incomes as low as $11.71 per person per month. These are the facts about the Canadian people. I repeat that we are dealing with somewhere between 25 and 30 per cent of Canadians. These are the facts which the minister had before him when he was preparing the Budget.

There is no word in the Budget about the war on poverty. There is nothing to suggest that there are steps being taken that are adequate at the present time. This so-called war on poverty is a paper war. There is not a day but I find on my desk some press release from the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) about some kind of pilot project which has been established in some part of some province of Canada. By this time I think the minister ought to have enough pilots to get himself at least one ship that knows where it is going and how to get there.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? If I had filled my Budget speech with already announced policies of the government, would he not now be accusing me of having padded it?

Mr. Lewis: No, I would not. I would have been delighted if he had been able to find government policies with which to fill his speech. I would have been delighted to listen to a list of government policies to deal effectively with this problem in Canada. Let him not hide behind other government promises. As Minister of Finance, and I shall come to this in a moment if I can, he had certain steps to take with relation to taxes; he had certain steps to take with relation to monetary policy; he had certain steps to take with relation to the fiscal field generally.

He could have taken these steps if he had not been completely blind to the real needs of Canada and if he had not taken off on the usual course of the big business fraternity in this country. All of these factors to which I have referred persist today, as they did in 1961. Of course I agree, as anyone with any sense of integrity at all would agree, that some of the problems will require time to be solved. They cannot be solved by the wave of a wand or the snapping of somebody's fingers. Certainly it takes time to retrain; it takes time to replace illiteracy with some education; it takes time to have industry that will absorb such people. However, precisely because it takes time, Mr. Speaker, and I cannot help but become angered by this kind of excuse from the other side, the longer you delay the start the longer it will take to find a solution and the longer these people will continue to suffer. The start that has been made is a picayune and pusillanimous one which does not even approach the problems with which we are faced. Hence the sub-amendment moved by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, because as one expert in the United States said some time ago, and I do not recall his name, many people forget the simple proposition that the poor need income. It is as simple as that.

It is for this reason we say in our sub-amendment that people who make as little as $1,500, if they are single, ought not to pay any income tax, and married people, with a family, making only $3,000 ought not to pay any income tax. We ought to begin now to build a guaranteed floor under income for every Canadian in every part of the country. There is no other way in which you can get people out of their poverty except by providing them now with the necessary income to live like decent human beings in self-respect and dignity. Then their attitude will change. Then, and then only, will it become possible to retrain them, to educate them, to make them more productive citizens of our community.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that in order to do this the Minister of Finance would have had to bring in a Budget which made some drastic and radical redistribution of income from those who have too much to those who have nothing or too little. It is this refusal to recognize the need for using monetary and fiscal policy to redistribute income, including in this case the taking of more power into the hands of the government, that leads the minister to present a Budget which contains relatively nothing at all. If he had had any less, he could not even have made a speech about it, let alone call it a Budget.

The minister is anxious and concerned about inflation. He is so concerned about it that he makes an elementary error in economics unless what I studied in economics in two universities was completely wasted on me. As reported on page 3380 of Hansard the minister stated that there would be an increase of rather more than 9 per cent in the gross national product in 1966. Of this, a little more than 5 per cent would be in volume and 4 per cent in price. Then he says:

> That is the prediction my advisers made without taking into account any of the proposals that I shall make subsequently. Part of the expected price increase is attributable directly to contributions under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and to the recently announced increase in the Ontario provincial sales tax, both of which reflect improvements in public and social services.

There may be some element of validity in the reference to the Ontario provincial sales tax, which is in the short run handed over to the consumer in the form of higher prices. But surely it is sheer nonsense to talk about contributions under the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans as being inflationary. Surely they are the opposite. Surely they are just as much a tax as any other tax, and are deflationary rather than inflationary.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the hon. gentleman wants to be fair. I did not say they were inflationary; I said they were the cause of some of the increase in prices.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is either playing on words now or he was playing on words in his Budget speech.

Mr. Sharp: I was being exactly accurate in the Budget speech.

Mr. Lewis: No, in the Budget speech the minister dealt with increases in price as being synonymous with inflation.

Mr. Sharp: No, I did not.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, the minister did. In any case, even the statement that they put pressure on prices is an exceedingly questionable one for anyone to make in this house or elsewhere.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain)—Trois-Rivières—possible closing of elevators; the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford)—External Affairs—India—request that further aid be given; the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie)—Transport—Prince Edward Island causeway—application of stretch-out policy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, at the dinner recess I was dealing with the minister's erroneous statement, to be found at page 3380 of Hansard that the contributions to the federal and Quebec pension plans will be directly responsible for part of the price increase he expects in the future. I want to make clear that I did not refer to what I think is an error merely to introduce a minor technical argument, but because it seemed to me to indicate an approach typical of conservative economic thinking which seeks to tarnish the value of welfare measures such as old age pension plans.

Every member of this house is concerned with increased prices. Last year there was an increase of 3.5 per cent. After making long dissertations about the action he was going to take to stop this inflation, the minister ended up by telling us that he hoped—he could not guarantee it obviously—that the expected increase of 4 per cent in the consumer price index might be reduced to 3.5 per cent. After all the effort he expended and all the words he threw at this parliament and the country, he ended up by reducing the inflationary percentage from 4 per cent to 3.5 per cent.

Three point five per cent last year and 3.5 per cent this year will be a 7 per cent increase in the cost of living in two years. This will be disastrous for industrial and agricultural workers generally and those on low and fixed incomes such as old age pensioners, in particular.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

What causes these terrible increases in prices, Mr. Speaker? Did the minister bother to ask himself whether they were justified by cost increases or by other genuine and legitimate factors of the market? Should we not find out whether they were justified? Before putting on the brakes, or taking the foot off the pedal, or whatever simile the minister wants to use, should he not have satisfied himself that the price increases came from justifiable economic pressures? I can look only at the available data, and the available data I want to deal with first are the profit increases as compared to the price increases.

It is true that we have had an overall price increase of 3.5 per cent. The largest increase is the rise in food prices. As my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) pointed out, and as the Canadian Economic Council also pointed out, that was mainly the result of shortages in meat products, fruit and vegetables in the United States.

However, if you look at what happened to profits in the year 1965 you really find an astonishing result. There was an increase in the profits in all industries, as can be seen from a study of any of the publications dealing with this matter, of 13.5 per cent in 1965 over 1964. That was already on top of an increase of 14.6 per cent in 1964 over 1963, which again was on top of an increase of 6.6 per cent in 1963 over 1962, and of 9 per cent in 1962 over 1961.

One might say that 1961 was the year in which the upward curve of the economic cycle started, and therefore you would expect a somewhat higher rate of profit increase to result in 1962; but there is no excuse, other than sheer profiteering, for an increase of 14.6 per cent in 1964 over 1963 and an increase of 13.5 per cent in 1965 over 1964. If you take the five years from 1961 to 1965, the total percentage increase in profits in that period for all industries is 51 per cent.

I was particularly interested to look at the profits in the food and beverages industry, from which some of the particularly large increases in the consumer price index come. I found that in the food and beverages industry there was an increase in profit of 18.5 per cent in 1965 as compared with 1964, which is 5 per cent more than the average increase for all industries in Canada. This is where the price increases on food come from—profiteering by food processing and food packing companies.

Taking the five year period 1961-65 there was an increase of 43 per cent in the profits in the food processing and packing industries. The same thing applies to retail trade profits, which show an increase of 20 per cent in 1965 over 1964.

When the subject of profits is referred to in this house, and also outside the house, somebody immediately raises the question: How about wages? Well, how about wages? If a similar calculation is made with respect to wages—I am referring to total labour income, which includes salaries, wages and other sources of labour income—you find that the increase in 1965 as compared with 1964 was only 11 per cent, as against 13.5 per cent increase in profits. In 1964 it was 8.7 per cent over 1963, compared with 14.6 per cent for profits.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless, of course, he is given additional time by the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members and I hope I will not be too long in completing my remarks.

An hon. Member: We do have a time limit.

Mr. Lewis: No time limit was set. I do not intend to take advantage of my extension, but I do intend to take enough time to enable me to complete my remarks. I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that if you look at wage increases you will find that only in 1963 compared with 1962 was the percentage wage increase, 6.7 per cent, about the same as the profit increase for that period, namely 6.6 per cent.

Because of the kind of propaganda I have often heard both in this house and outside, I should underline that the important thing when you look at these figures is to realize that they are figures for total labour income. If you look at wages only you will find an increase in 1965 over 1964 of only 5.2 per cent, as compared with the figure of 11 per cent representing the increase in total labour income.

Wages of industrial workers alone—wages which are said to affect prices—increased in 1965, compared with 1964, by only 5.2 per cent. In the manufacturing part of the industrial complex, which of course is the major part as far as value of production is concerned, the increase in 1965 over 1964 was only 4.9 per cent. Remember too, Mr. Speaker—and I underline this—that these statistics are based on surveys of firms which employ 15 employees or more, they do not cover firms which employ less than 15 employees.

• (8:10 p.m.)

It is a well established economic fact that the smaller the firm, generally speaking, the smaller the wage rate, and therefore the smaller the wage earnings of the workers. There are exceptions to this, of course, but generally speaking that has been established in economic history. If you take the workers in smaller establishments, particularly in manufacturing industries, the likelihood is that you would find a picture that is worse than the one that has already been given.

Aside altogether from these percentages, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that after you have dealt with all these increases in wages you still have an average weekly wage in Canada, in the industrial composite, of $91.18. That is in Canada as a whole. That is the average. This is not a high wage today, and anyone has the right to complain if he has a family in modern Canada, in 1966, if he is earning that. That is only a total annual income of approximately $4,500, or less, which is about 50 per cent above the poverty line of $3,000 a year which we discussed earlier.

Mr. Vincent: What about the farmers now?

Mr. Lewis: When you come to the farmers the statistics for their earnings are made up in a different way. While the increase in food prices has been the most substantial part of the total price increase, as far as I have been able to ascertain from my studies of the situation, it is not the farmer who has received that increase: it is the middle organization, the corporation that packs and processes the farmer's product, that has had the advantage of this increase in price.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands proposed on behalf of this party the subamendment to which I referred earlier and which will be voted on later. It was because of the thinking involved in it that my leader earlier in this session proposed a prices review board to investigate price increases in order to find out whether they are justified.

What the minister should have done, before he condemned the lower economic areas of this country to at least another year of stagnation, before he condemned the people in poverty in this country to continue in their poverty, is this: He should have satisfied himself how much of the increase in prices is due to administered prices; how much of that increase is due to monopolistic greed; how much is due to a deliberate policy by the corporations to get as much money as the traffic will bear. In short, how much of that increase in prices is due to sheer conscienceless profiteering?

If this is the reason for much of the increase in prices, as I am personally convinced it is, the remedy is not to condemn millions of Canadians to continue living in poverty. The remedy is to take a number of new, brave, logical steps to stop this profiteering, rather than to condemn poor people to continue being poor.

But the minister in his budget was very tender to the corporations. When he imposed a 5 per cent tax on them, he made it refundable. The corporations will pay this refundable tax in monthly instalments over a period of 18 months. At the end of that time, for the following 18 months, he will return it to them with 5 per cent interest.

I was struck by the comparison between the personal income tax, which the minister said, and I am using his figures, meant a total annual addition to revenue of $210 million, none of that being returned to the taxpayer, and this 5 per cent refundable tax which will bring about $250 million a year, but which is to be returned to the corporations with interest. What an eloquent contrast there is in the minister's treatment of the workers and middle class people of this country who pay most of the $210 million that he is going to get in additional money and the way he treats the corporations.

From the corporations he takes this refundable tax in a measure which is just about as useless, and I say that, choosing my words carefully, as anything of which a serious economist could possibly conceive. The $250 million involved in this 5 per cent refundable tax, amounts to about 2 per cent of the total projected investment by private corporations. And, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason in the world why these corporations should not pay the 5 per cent refundable tax into the minister's treasury and invest exactly the same amount as they intended to invest. These corporations never invest the last of their pennies. They always have resources in their undistributed reserves, or from borrowing, if that is what they intended to do. Giving the minister money at 5 per cent, money which in 18 months or 24 months they will get back, is not a bad thing for them. Five per cent is not a bad return, when all you have to do is let the money lie in the minister's pocket.

Therefore this whole gesture is so phony as to be outrageous. The minister said that this is economic planning. With due respect, it is an example of nothingness of the most meaningless kind.

I will not deal with the Swedish system because my hon. friend the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has already done so.

I wish to conclude by very briefly suggesting the following measures which are necessary now: I respectfully say to you, sir, and to all hon. members in this house that this budget underlines as few things have done the need for full and courageous planning of Canada's economy.

The minister talks about the construction boom. He talked about it in most of his speech. Sure, there is one. It does not require an economic genius to know that the boom is primarily due to centennial projects across Canada; to Expo '67, and to all the various projects undertaken all across the country. That there is a boom in other building as well I will not deny. But the great pressures on the construction industry, the more than desirable pressures on that industry are due to the building programs of villages, towns, cities, provinces, and the federal government across Canada, having to do with the centennial. Those pressures will end in 1967 or 1968. There is not a word in the budget of any plan to provide a necessary substitute. There is no shelf of building projects except the few things that the minister has deferred in public construction.

We now need more, and not less, expenditure on area development, in order to equalize opportunities in this country, in the way in which the Speech from the Throne said on April 5, 1965 it should be done. We need the Canadian Development Corporation about which not a word appeared in the Throne Speech, and about which there was not a word in the Budget.

Mr. Sharp: It is in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: If it is, then I take back what I have said just now. But there is not a word about it in the Budget. And, what is perhaps more important, it is not on the order paper.

Even more significant is the fact that last week end at a Young Liberals Convention one of the senior ministers of the Crown said that he doubted very much whether there was any value in this development corporation. This was the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters). The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) later appeared at the convention and read a lecture on how the corporation was very necessary, and that the government will introduce it.

Mr. Sharp: It will.

Mr. Lewis: I am glad to hear it, and I hope that the minister introduces it.

An hon. Member: It is not what you would do.

Mr. Lewis: I am sure it will not be the kind of corporation I would introduce, Mr. Speaker. I am certain that the minister will introduce something similar to the idea that was laid out before us one or two years ago, where 90 per cent of the public corporation was to be in the hands of private corporations. I am sure that in the minister's proposal the government will have very little to do with the policies of this Canadian Development Corporation. Certainly, that is not the kind of proposal that we would introduce. That is not the kind of thing the New Democratic Party had in mind when it proposed, as it did propose years ago, the Canadian Development Fund—long before it appeared in the Throne Speech of this government.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I go on to say, Mr. Speaker, that we need planning to which public investment is tied in as a necessary instrument all down the line. We need to use the Canadian Development Corporation for the purpose of increasing the public sector in the economy in order that the minister may have much greater control than he has now. At the present time, when he says he intends to reduce public spending on construction by 10 per cent he is talking, as I am sure he will agree, about a very small part of total investment in Canada. The effect of such a reduction upon the economy is almost infinitesimal because of the relatively small amount of expenditure in the public sector of the economy. The greater the investment in public hands, the more the steps which the Minister of Finance takes in future years, the greater will be the effect on the economy as a whole.

Mr. Chrétien: What about the constitutional problem?

Mr. Lewis: Of course there is a constitutional problem, but there is still a large area of investment in which the federal government could participate without encountering any constitutional difficulty. And there are still large areas in which the provinces could co-operate with the federal government in public investment if the federal government takes the lead, as we hope it will.

Mr. Sharp: We hope they will.

Mr. Lewis: Let the minister try to give some leadership and see what response is forthcoming—not leadership in words, not leadership in speeches on the floor of the house, not leadership in a Speech from the Throne only, but in terms of actual plans with concrete financial propositions, plans the details of which are laid out in such a way that the provinces will know exactly where they are going; not in such a way as to place added financial burdens on the provinces which they are unable to bear.

I say, briefly, that we need legislation to deal with foreign ownership. The Canadian Development Corporation, or Development Fund, is the only effective way to deal with foreign ownership. Again there is not a word about it in this Budget. I was pleased by the compliment the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), a very honourable gentleman, paid to the previous minister of finance, another honourable gentleman. Nevertheless, it was significant that despite these honourable exchanges between honourable men—and I note that the former minister of finance paid the present minister the same kind of courteous compliment—the fact is that many of the things which the former minister of finance considered the cornerstone of Canada's economic future have been forgotten by his successor, particularly with regard to the question of foreign ownership.

We need a policy aimed at redistributing income in Canada to give everyone a fair and adequate income. This means the placing of a floor under income. I say, with all the emphasis I can, that if a prosperous time of economic expansion is not the time for taking these steps to improve the quality of life in Canada, I should like to know when the time will be ripe for this kind of action. This is the time to fight poverty, to take steps to eliminate inequalities in Canada as between groups and regions. It is not a time to stand pat as the minister did in his Budget, or to sit complacently as he does now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-L. Rochon (Laval): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate the previous speaker for his creditable attempt to win us over to his views. But all members of the house realized that the politician gave way to the petty politician, never losing sight of the interest involved: that of his own party.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly how many budgets have been brought down since confederation. A hundred? Perhaps more, perhaps less, because it must be kept in mind that in certain circumstances, twelve months have elapsed without a budget being submitted to the house, as was the case, for instance, during the last year of the administration of our friends opposite, and that some other years, there were more than one, the main budget and the other commonly called the baby budget. Obviously, then, it is difficult to specify, even with all these statistics.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Be that as it may, the bringing down of the budget is always wrapped in mystery. There is in the air an atmosphere of suspense, as it would be called in the film industry, and the other evening, it was surely a good idea to adjourn the house for a little over an hour before the arrival of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

Like other government members who spoke previously, I feel duty bound to congratulate him on his masterly report of the situation in Canada; he clearly indicated the soundness of our economy, the leading part played by our country among the great countries of the world; his words gave clear indication that he fully intends, in spite of present difficulties, to hold back the threat of inflation.

He would have liked, as he said himself, and I quote:

> I need hardly say that as a new Minister of Finance I would have preferred the main features of my first Budget to be proposals to reduce taxation. But we can all take satisfaction from the fact that our problems are no longer the problems of overcoming slackness or stagnation but those of managing growth and prosperity. Our task is to sustain the longest economic expansion in Canadian history.

Those words, Mr. Speaker, show what a great Canadian he is, a Canadian who believes in the future of his country, a great Canadian who realizes that, even at the price of sacrifices, there is but one way to follow, which may not be the wide and easy way, the wide way of the easy life, but the more austere one, at least for the time being, of the freely-accepted sacrifice for the well-being of everyone.

Perhaps the hon. members who spoke before me did not emphasize enough, in this budget debate, the remarkable character of what might be termed in sports a real performance. I am simply referring, sir, to the material aspect of the matter.

The Minister of Finance and his collaborators have in fact been working for months to prepare it, he had indicated his intention to present it to the house some time previously. He was ready on time.

He came here with a white paper, a document impressive by its contents as well as by its sincerity, and which, this year, achieved greater dimensions than usual. As customary, copies had been distributed in advance to the press and to leaders or financial critics of the various opposition parties. Moreover, all those documents had also been previously translated in the other language and similarly distributed.

Everything went off without a hitch, as it will be remembered, and it is certainly appropriate to congratulate—which is too seldom done perhaps—all those in the Finance Department, in the Bureau for Translations or elsewhere, who share in that annual operation. There, it seems to me, is an excellent example given to other government departments and more particularly to certain royal commissions which, at times, keep us waiting longer than we would wish for their reports.

There is another phenomenon which occurs every year and it is the foreseeable reaction of the leaders of the opposition parties. That is also part of the ritual.

Sometimes, one can guess or foresee the contents of the budget speech but one also goes wrong at times. On the other hand, it is seldom a mistake to say that whatever happens, opposition critics will never be satisfied. The short interviews they give newspapermen and radio and television reporters as they come out of the house could almost be written in advance. I do not think those should be taken seriously.

Today, they can complain of the deficit and say the government should do more to save the taxpayer's money but who does not recall the postwar years when the minister of finance of the time, Mr. Abbott, used to announce surpluses at times reaching hundreds of millions, but complaints were no fewer. It was said then that no government had the right to ask the taxpayer for one cent more than necessary.

This is not the case today, although the estimated deficit is relatively small compared to total expenditures. After all, an amount of $150 million out of more than $9 billion is an acceptable ratio. It is like borrowing 15 cents to buy something worth $9, when one does not have all the cash needed. Viewed from that angle, the deficit is more acceptable and shows how sound our economy is.

However, if the Minister of Finance had been perfectly free to do everything he wanted—I am thinking of the fixed expenditures he had to meet—I am sure he would have preferred to balance his budget, even announce a surplus which would have helped reduce the national debt.

Everybody becomes an economist the day after the budget is brought down.

Perhaps this was not the case a generation ago, because the influence the government could exercise on the economy was not known then. Things have changed a great deal today, and observing the country's economic situation, it is easy to imagine what one would have done under the circumstances as Minister of Finance. That is why I think the last budget speech did not really surprise anyone. The budget brought down on March 29 was, first of all, an extremely serious and reasonable budget.

Yet the minister was in a difficult situation. At the present time Canada is enjoying great prosperity. Generally speaking, practically every region is in full development. Except for some more or less chronically poverty-stricken areas—which are being looked after, as we know—there are no serious problems in any part of Canada. Unemployment is decreasing, and there is even concern, particularly in the larger cities, about a labour shortage, especially skilled labour.

Money circulates easily and cannot be said to be excessively concentrated in the hands of a few. The measures to stimulate the economy launched with the return to power of the Liberal party have been extremely successful, but at the same time have created problems of a different sort which are just as difficult to solve.

The climate of confidence prevailing in our country gave rise, to use the expression of Claude Ryan in Le Devoir, to a thirst for investment. Understandably, under these conditions, with money rolling and investment opportunities multiplying constantly, the demand for consumer goods—for, in the final analysis, the consumer is the one who benefits from this state of affairs—is very great, greater than necessary for a sound national economy.

In saying this, Mr. Speaker, I am not telling anyone anything new. We can all see the rising cost of living. I spoke earlier of buying something for $9. While saying that I was trying to think of something one could buy today for $9.

• (8:40 p.m.)

What amount of groceries does this represent in the local supermarket? Not much. Can clothing for a child be bought for this sum? Perhaps a pair of shoes? But when one has several children, or even just two or three, the money does not stretch very far. In 1910, a young civil servant could live on $600 a year. Today, he begins with a salary seven or eight times higher and he may not live any better, taking into account, of course, the change of circumstances since that distant period, although basically statistics indicate that since the end of World War II the average salary of the workman, for example, has increased more than the cost of living, which proves that the workman does live noticeably better now than he did then.

But this situation will not last forever and if the present trend continues all these advantages may be lost.

This was well understood by the Minister of Finance. This was certainly what the population understood also. In spite of the recriminations of the opposition, it can be said that the budget was well received. I was saying that the day following the budget everyone becomes somewhat of an economist; the average Canadian has perfectly understood this very simple principle that the pressure on prices cannot decrease as long as the amount of money in the hands of the consumers increases constantly. To reduce demand by increasing taxes is to avoid the risk of inflation.

But there is something of an alarming nature and somewhat of a paradox in that. It would be inhuman, in certain cases, to reduce the purchasing power of the taxpayer at a time when the cost of living increases rapidly. "The certain cases" to whom I am referring are the small taxpayers. It is in that light that the serious and complicated document which is the minister's budget speech takes a really human aspect because although it provides for a general increase in personal income tax, it grants the small wage earners real relief.

That is where some reservations could be made. It would be impossible to blame the minister for relieving the small taxpayer who has much more difficulty in finding $100 than the big taxpayer in finding $1,000 to pay his income tax.

I wonder, however, if the minister went far enough in that direction. The maximum amount in that respect is $5,000. Over that amount there is an income tax increase. But, in 1966, even $5,000 is not such a high income. Personally, I think that the minister might have been a little more generous and set at $7,000 the amount over which income tax would have gone up. It would have shown a more realistic view of things, for instance, the price of groceries or children's shoes, about which I spoke a little earlier.

Of course, it would have been necessary in that case to find the money elsewhere or to agree to a higher deficit. The easiest solution would have been, of course, to increase even more the income tax at higher levels. However, I think that would not have been a very good idea. Canadians are now among the most highly taxed people in the world —which is not so hard to understand in a wealthy country like ours—and when getting the money where it is—to speak like some socialists—we must be careful not to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. An income of $12,000 a year does not allow anyone to live ostentatiously and, in spite of that, the state now claims almost $1,000, that is what it would cost one annually for instance to change one's car. It is quite enough.

Then where can we find the money needed to protect the economy while not increasing too much the already heavy burdens which the taxpayers have to bear? I admit that the answer is not easy to find and that, had I been the Minister of Finance, it is quite likely that I would have done the same thing.

However, while studying the rest of the budget and particularly the refundable tax of 10 per cent on gross profits which will from now on be imposed on corporations, I was reminded that during the war the government of the day whose minister of finance was Mr. Ilsley, adopted a similar policy with regard to the individual taxpayers. At that time, if I am not mistaken, it was called compulsory savings. I wonder if a similar method could not have been used, in spite of the administrative difficulties involved. And so, two birds could have been killed with one stone: decrease the amount of money in circulation, and therefore the demand, without totally depriving the taxpayer of the enjoyment of his money.

There is an idea; it may not be of the brightest, but I wonder if the advisers to the Minister of Finance might not consider it.

The debate on the budget usually gives the opportunity to discuss matters that, in fact, have no direct bearing on it. Members are allowed to introduce local problems that are of particular interest to their ridings. That is why, without taking up too much of the time of the house, and after expressing in general terms what I thought of the seriousness of the speech made by the Minister of Finance, of the wisdom with which he intends to achieve the goal toward which every Canadian should aim: "stop the advance of inflation without making anyone suffer too much," that is why I should like to point out two matters of interest to the riding of Laval I represent here. For many years now, my predecessors and myself have asked for the dredging of the two rivers des Mille-Îles and des Prairies which completely surround Île-Jésus, which became last fall the city of Laval, the second largest and most populated city in the province of Quebec, larger and more populated with its 185,000 inhabitants than the capital of the province, Quebec City.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to point out once more what this work would mean to our region in economic benefits. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) has understood it so well is so well aware of it, that he said last month, at Ste Rose where he addressed the Thousand Islands Yacht Club, while he was not speaking in an official capacity, that he understood and suggested, as a member of the executive committee, the importance of this work to a city in full progress that will become one of the most beautiful and modern cities of Canada, as can be foreseen from the architects' and town planners' overall plans. These words were from an authority and I wanted to remind you of them, Mr. Speaker. During the discussion of the estimates, I will go further into the idea of the Minister of Transport and I will submit in detail the reports of the government's engineers, those of public works as well as those of transport, who recommend the carrying out of those works for the economic development of the area as well as that of the Montreal region, since a report of the consulting engineers shows that the dredging of the two rivers and the building of dams would raise the water level in the harbour of Montreal of approximately five feet.

The other matter deals with penitentiary employees, especially the clerks who could be better treated than they are presently. I studied the matter and I know it well since one of the largest penitentiaries of Canada, St. Vincent de Paul, is in my riding of Laval. During discussion of the Solicitor General's estimates, it will show you, Mr. Speaker, that a clerk P-A-5 receives only $4,800 while a grade 2 employee, which is the equivalent of a clerk P-A-5, gets $5,300; that a clerk P-A-3 receives only $4,380 while a guard of comparative grade gets $4,900.

As I say, I shall have the opportunity to come back to it, but in the meantime, I wanted simply to substantiate the claims of this class of employees who are as much in danger as their colleagues, the guards, since in their employment contract they are included in what is called the "reserve". In the case of a riot or any other trouble, they are called on the front line.

In closing, may I say that I am satisfied, as we all are on the government benches, that this year's budget will yield the anticipated results. If the minister succeeds, as he proposes to do, in stabilizing prices while safeguarding the prosperity we now enjoy, he will have deserved well of his country.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate tonight I propose to confine my remarks to one aspect only of the Budget, and that is the matter of dominion-provincial fiscal arrangements. In this connection I want to deal specifically with my own province of Prince Edward Island and try to present to this house as succinctly and as clearly as I can the particular plight of our province and why I think it should receive special recognition in the matter of fiscal assistance from the central government here in Ottawa.

I know—and the figures and statistics that I shall quote later will substantiate my contention—that our province, in its attempt to maintain for its citizens the same sort of provincial and municipal services that Canadians generally enjoy, is confronted with greater difficulties in public finance than any other province in Canada. We must, however, provide our people with the same standards of services that are being enjoyed by people living in other parts of Canada, and we must never forget that a Canadian citizen has certain inalienable rights whether he lives in Prince Edward Island, Ontario or British Columbia; and there can be no justification for having high standards of education, health, welfare and all the well-established functions of government in one part of Canada and pitiably low standards in another. We must deal with the needs of Canadian citizens wherever they may reside, and the federal government must arrive at financial arrangements which will enable each province to furnish to its people a reasonable standard of essential services.

National consideration must therefore be given to the needs of all partners in this great union. The growth and the economic problems of the province of Prince Edward Island must be the concern of every province in Canada. That is why I make this special appeal to the federal government tonight for special recognition in helping us solve these problems. We have strained our resources to the limit, Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to maintain our essential public services at a reasonable level, but we are still not able to establish and maintain national standards because of our inability to raise sufficient revenues from the sources of revenue at our disposal.

Why are these sources of revenue not available to us? They are not available to us for two reasons; first because of our small population, and second because of our low per capita income. Unfortunately, through no fault of our own, we are one of the provinces which has failed to grow in population over the years. We are now only 108,000 people, and since 1951 we have gained only 10 per cent in population. Compare this with the other provinces of Canada. Over that same 15-year period from 1951 to 1965, while we have gained only 10 per cent in population the provinces of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta have gone up 50 per cent, the Provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland have gone up 40 per cent, and Manitoba, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have gone up 20 per cent.

Unfortunately, too, our young people are leaving our province in increasing numbers because central Canada affords brighter prospects and opportunities. With their departure the province loses not only the most efficient type of worker but also the progressive ability important to further expansion of industry and enterprise. Unfortunately only the very young and the very old stay with us and, as the Special Senate Committee on Aging pointed out in its recent report, the proportion of older people in Prince Edward Island is higher than in any other province of Canada—10.4 per cent as compared, for example, with Quebec with only 5.8 per cent.

Our small population is therefore the first reason for the sources of revenue not being available to us, and the second reason—as I mentioned previously—is our low per capita income. According to the latest figures issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the average weekly wage in Prince Edward Island was $63.56 as compared with the Canadian average of $93.51. In this respect we are the lowest of any province in Canada.

The per capita income of a province, Mr. Speaker, is one very definite measure of its tax potential, and it must be obvious that whenever and wherever personal income levels are low, provincial tax revenues will be comparably low even if special efforts are made to boost revenues by the imposition of additional tax burdens. With reference to the imposition of taxes, taxing authorities must always consider ability to pay in fixing tax rates. With the lowest average weekly wage in Canada, it must be quite apparent that tax revenues are not available to our government.

This low per capita income is also reflected in many other ways. In 1961, for example, the latest year for which Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures are available, life insurance sales in Prince Edward Island were only $1½ million as compared with $4½ million in Newfoundland, $12 million in New Brunswick and $10½ million in Nova Scotia. In 1964 only 126 dwelling units were under construction in our province, as compared with 600 in Newfoundland, 2,038 in New Brunswick and 2,060 in Nova Scotia.

Through no fault of our own, therefore, we are one of the provinces with tax raising potentials inadequate for our needs and we therefore require federal assistance over and above the amounts we are now receiving in order to improve and expand our existing services and at the same time avoid insolvency. From March 31, 1962, to March 31, 1966, a five-year period, our net general expenditures went up by 57 per cent while our net general revenues went up by only 28 per cent. Compare this with some of the other provinces. Newfoundland's revenue, for example, during the same period went up by 50 per cent but its expenditures went up by only 37 per cent; Nova Scotia's revenue went up by 38 per cent and its expenditures rose by only 43 per cent; New Brunswick's revenue went up 44 per cent and its expenditures by only 34 per cent.

How long, I wonder, can that situation continue? How long can we continue to allow expenditures to exceed revenues by such large amounts and at the same time hope to maintain a solvent position? Our people have a deep respect for financial integrity and have demanded in the past that government spending be as commensurate as possible with ability to repay. For this reason successive governments have practised drastic economy in expenditures and have exploited every feasible means of raising provincial revenues. The province has tried to perform its functions with great frugality and economy but there are certain basic essentials which must be provided, and even when these are kept at the lowest possible level they are still high in relation to our small population and low tax potential; consequently the province has been going steadily behind each year.

The net increase in provincial debt for the year ending March 31, 1966, was $6 million, and as of March 31, 1965, the province had a net debt of $44 million plus an indirect debt of $14 million. This, Mr. Speaker, makes a total direct and indirect debt of $58 million, which is not very large when compared with the debt of many of the larger provinces, but when we consider it represents a per capita debt of $537 and that in our province we have not behind the debt the natural resources which are enjoyed by many of the other provinces of Canada, it is very large indeed. From March 31, 1958, to March 31, 1966, for example, revenues including what we received from Ottawa increased from $9,400,000 to $23 million, or almost 150 per cent, while expenditures during the same period increased from $10,800,000 to $30 million, or almost 215 per cent.

• (9:00 p.m.)

These mounting deficits, Mr. Speaker, cannot continue indefinitely, and yet on what is the province able to cut back? Every item of expenditure in the provincial budget can be justified. Even then, our expenditures on essential services are below the standards enjoyed by people in the other provinces of Canada. Let us consider for example the field of education. In 1964, 24 per cent of our provincial revenue was applied to education as against the Canadian average of 30.9 per cent. We are the second lowest province in Canada with regard to expenditures on education. The average salary of our teachers is only $2,783, the lowest in Canada. In Ontario, for example, the average salary of a teacher is $4,922; in Newfoundland, it is $2,818; in Nova Scotia, $3,504, and in New Brunswick, $3,254.

We have only 124 teachers in our schools today with university degrees. This is the lowest figure in Canada—11 per cent as compared to the Canadian average of 30.4 per cent of teachers with university degrees. We have only one with a doctorate, six with masters, and 117 with bachelor degrees. Teachers are just not remaining in the teaching profession in Prince Edward Island. We have only 75 teachers with 26 years or more experience; 145 with 16 to 25 years experience; 180 with 10 to 15 years experience and 245 with 4 to 9 years experience. Teachers require more advanced training in order to cope with a more advanced curriculum and they consequently, and rightly so, require more pay. Specialization in the teaching profession has become necessary and the small school, staffed with one or two teachers instructing in all subjects, can no longer furnish a sound, basic education for our students. We must not and we will not cut back expenditures on education, thereby neglecting the educational needs of our children. They must have available to them the best educational opportunities that are possible, because this will equip them with the means of making a better living.

An average male, for example, who goes only to grade eight in school will earn in later life an income of $3,526. If he completes high school he will earn $5,493 and if he gets a university degree he will earn $9,188. Can we be expected, therefore, to cut back our expenditure on education to the very definite detriment of our children? I say emphatically no, we cannot and we must not. Our children must have available to them the best educational opportunities that are possible. Equal educational opportunities should be available to all Canadians regardless of the economic circumstances of their province.

The government of our province is attempting to carry out a program of industrial development. However, Mr. Speaker, it has been said very correctly that industry cannot operate or expand in a vacuum. In order to flourish, it requires a friendly climate, one created in part by a broad structure of provincial and municipal services including highways, electric power, hospitals, welfare services and many others. Our expenditures on these items are by no means exorbitant and annual appropriations for the departments of agriculture and fisheries are very moderate. In short, Mr. Speaker, all costs are kept at the barest minimum level and as a result there are certain almost basic essentials which our province is not able to provide for its people, although they are entitled to them and they are being enjoyed by people living in other provinces of Canada.

As I mentioned previously, we have strained our resources to the limit in an attempt to maintain our essential public services at a reasonable level, but we are still not able to establish and maintain national standards. We are, as partners in this great confederation, entitled to enjoy these national standards. Since, through no fault of our own, we are not able to raise the money to provide them, we must receive federal assistance over and above the amounts which we are now receiving. In other words, we must receive a greater share of the taxes which are being paid to the federal government and this should come to us in the form of a special adjustment grant based on fiscal need.

In asking for this, Mr. Speaker, we are only asking for part of what is our own. Let us not forget that the federal tax revenues are the result of the collective effort of all our people. Merely because taxes are paid in one province does not mean that this revenue is necessarily produced in that province. Corporations and individuals in the central provinces, who pay taxes to the federal treasury, in many cases earn their incomes from businesses carried on in all the provinces of Canada.

We in Prince Edward Island have seen other provinces grow richer at our expense. We see every day the best of our youth being attracted to other provinces just as they are entering the period when they might become an asset to us. You will find in almost every part of Canada a great number of persons, born and educated in Prince Edward Island at our expense, who are now holding positions of trust and responsibility in the professional, academic, commercial and industrial fields and contributing by way of taxes to the economic advancement of the province in which they live. We are more than happy that we have been able to make this contribution to the economy of other parts of Canada but we cannot really afford it.

We argue most vehemently, therefore, that we are entitled as of right to a special adjustment grant, the amount of which must be arrived at on the basis of fiscal need and not on the basis of some over-all formula worked out for all the provinces of Canada. Any attempt to meet the needs of Prince Edward Island based on a formula of universal application is doomed to failure. I am convinced that no formula of general application can give realistic recognition to the special financial problems of our province with its relatively low natural resources, its small population and its low per capita income.

In asking for this special treatment, Mr. Speaker, we must not be looked upon as beggars or poor relations, but rather as Canadians who have made and will continue to make a contribution to the development of this great nation. I think it was the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) who said at one provincial premiers conference in 1960 that we must get away from the idea that the premiers of the provinces come to Ottawa like well dressed, respectable bandits, desirous of breaking into the treasury in spite of the Herculean efforts of the Minister of Finance to retain its pristine purity. As I say, we are entitled as of right to this special adjustment grant.

Ahead of us, Mr. Speaker, lie great and challenging opportunities, but if we are to make the most of them in Prince Edward Island it is essential that we achieve more equitable and satisfactory fiscal arrangements, based on the fundamental principle of fiscal need. This is a situation which demands immediate action so that the people of Prince Edward Island may enjoy the same standards of public service as are being enjoyed by people in other parts of Canada.

I sincerely hope, Mr. Speaker, that our province will not be discriminated against by reason of the fact our people did not elect anybody on the government side of the house at the last election. Such a suggestion has already been thrown out to the people of Prince Edward Island by the leader of the Liberal party in that province. This is what he said just a few days ago, immediately after the provincial election was announced. He said that we must elect a Liberal government in Prince Edward Island because of the deteriorating liaison between the Shaw administration and the federal government at Ottawa, which can only be remedied by a change of government on the island. I hope, Mr. Speaker, some responsible person on the front benches would deny this statement and assure this house and the people of Prince Edward Island we will not be discriminated against by reason of the fact we did not elect anybody on the government side at the November 8 election.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, at the very outset of my participation to the debate on the budget brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), I wish to state that his budget disappointed everybody. It was disappointing, discouraging and disgusting. The Canadian people did not expect that type of budget at all, because during the electoral campaign, barely four and a half months ago, the government did not promise that kind of budget, which would literally ignore the old people and children of Canada, our education, and would even fail to present a concrete program for our war against poverty in Canada.

The budget is a disappointment to the whole population, to all classes of society. When one realizes, Mr. Speaker, what this budget means for instance to the small wage earner, worker or farmer—and their name is legion—one can see a taxpayer earning $3,000 a year, who paid $22 in federal income tax before this budget, now pay $20 a year—I am talking here of a married taxpayer, with two children eligible for family allowance that is $2 less per year.

And what of those, Mr. Speaker, who earn less than $3,000 a year, who will not benefit of any tax exemption, who will have to pay sales tax on all kinds of things, on clothes and everything else, sales tax here, manufacturers tax there, taxes here and there and everywhere.

We know they are legion those who still earn less than $3,000 a year. Not so long ago, a member for Montreal was telling me that there are still in his riding, thousands of workers who earn from $1,900 to $2,000 a year. And in a riding where human beings are human beings as everywhere else in Canada, will those people, those workers, have any tax exemptions? Absolutely not. Will they have increased family allowances for their children? No. Will they have higher old age pensions? No. And the Minister of Finance delights in a system of that kind, telling us that our people, our business men will have to put a brake on economic expansion in Canada; that even the government will have to postpone construction of government buildings and that even the government will have to reduce the rate of growth in Canada.

And, Mr. Speaker, over and above this, we are told that these measures will facilitate borrowing in Europe, that provincial, municipal and federal governments will have easier access to foreign capital as a result of the cancellation of the 15 per cent tax imposed on non-residents in Canada, on Canadian government bond interests. This exemption which came into effect on April 15, that is four days ago, is intended to facilitate the sale of debentures and bonds in the United States and Europe and to allow the three levels of government to get more easily the money required to pay the cost of public services.

In addition to public administrations, hospitals and educational institutions, which will have their bonds guaranteed by the provinces, will also have the same type of exemptions.

The Minister of Finance stated in his budget speech that he does not want to make decisions in this connection on corporate or personal loans before the general revision of the Income Tax Act which will be dealt with in the report of the Carter commission on taxation.

Mr. Speaker, those are points raised by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech.

The government, of which the Minister of Finance is a member, during the election, promised to increase old age pensions. We expected that the government or the Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, would announce an increase to $100 per month in pensions paid to our people aged 60 or over. Nothing doing. They turn a deaf ear when it comes to raising pensions.

As far as family allowances are concerned, the minister knows that they have not changed since 1945, and he also knows that the cost of living has at least tripled in that period of 21 years.

What do the minister and the government do to increase old age pensions according to the cost of living index. Nothing at all. And the government boasts on the hustings that it wages a war against poverty in Canada.

Through its recent budget, the government creates new indigents in Canada and lets poverty work havoc all over our confederation, all over Canada.

Mr. Speaker, by this system, we are now taxing taxes and nobody protests against that. As concerns automobiles, the government takes right away $600 on a $3500 car, which means that the automobile would cost only $2900 without the federal tax.

Not only is a $600 tax levied on a $3500 automobile but provinces are allowed to levy a tax; for instance, the province of Quebec levies a provincial tax of 6 per cent on the federal tax of $600 on a car. This means that in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, and also in other provinces, we pay $36 as provincial tax on the federal tax, and the federal government says nothing. The provincial government is happy to take its $36.

Nothing is being done to change this system. The Minister of Finance is aware of it. Instead of getting at the financial system, the minister says: stop the economic expansion, stop building air terminals, roads, and developing your country, stop that expansion which could be detrimental to the future of Canada.

Instead of putting forward a program intended to stop or restrict the economic expansion of Canada, the minister should have established clearly a means of distributing our Canadian affluence. The minister knows that affluence does exist in our stores. He knows that our farmers can produce more, and that our manufacturers can manufacture more. The minister knows that production renews itself and increases from year to year and that stocks of previous years are not consumed, so that we are confronted today with the following situation: our stores, our businessmen, our industrialists in their buildings, in their storerooms, on their shelves, have all kinds of products in such quantities that our consumers are not able to consume what is actually for sale in Canada.

Instead of offering a system by which the Canadian taxpayers could go and draw on their own wealth and resources, on their tremendous production, the minister tells us: "Stop growing, stop developing, stop!" What will the minister say when industry, for example, is confronted with automation?

Does the minister wish to ask me a question?

Mr. Sharp: If I may, please.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, could I ask the hon. gentleman whether he is really suggesting that I said in my Budget speech anywhere that the expansion should stop. I hope it proceeds at a steady and high rate.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the minister has a short memory. In his budget speech, he asked, on behalf of Canadian prosperity, not to build, not to carry on some building projects, to stop public works in some areas, not to build federal buildings. He asked the Canadian industrialists not to make investments or to invest as little as possible to enable the economy to stabilize itself. That is what he said in his budget speech.

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. gentleman would want to be fair with the minister.

Mr. Crouse: No, he would not.

Mr. Sharp: May I suggest that he is grossly perverting my words in the budget speech, which was strongly in favour of continued and steady expansion in this country, and was directed to that end. I am sure he and I agree on the desirability of a steady and high degree of expansion.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the minister has a short memory. He encouraged the business world not to do it now, but rather to wait. He is afraid of too quick and too strong an expansion in Canada. Do the Canadian unemployed agree with the minister? Do the Canadian economists agree with the minister?

Production will come from automation. What does he propose in his budget speech about the problem that automation will create in Canada?

When I compare that budget of the Canadian Minister of Finance with the budget that the Minister of Finance of British Columbia tabled on February 12 when the latter predicted a crisis:

[English]

Increase in home-owner grant to $110 from $100; removal of the sales tax on all meals, confections, candies, soft drinks, newspapers, periodicals, magazines, school supplies; removal of real property tax on non-profit organizations operating for community benefit and on community halls.

[Translation]

While the federal Minister of Finance, on behalf of Canada, is submitting a budget likely to make Canadians tighten their belts, in British Columbia, administered by a Social Credit government, taxes are reduced instead of being increased.

I would advise the Minister of Finance to visit British Columbia and Alberta to find out how Social Crediters operate without increasing taxes.

[English]

Mr. Basford: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Basford: Is the hon. member also aware that the people of British Columbia provincially are the highest taxed people of Canada.

Mr. Caouette: It is not true. They have better services in British Columbia than anywhere else in Canada. There is greater economic expansion in British Columbia than anywhere else in Canada, and my hon. friend must know it.

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance says that taxes are highest in British Columbia. That remains to be seen. What taxes are higher than the federal taxes? Look at the personal income tax. What tax, compared to the federal income tax, is charged to the individual?

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Caouette: Their national resources are great—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I have recognized the hon. member for Skeena on a question to the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette: I have only ten minutes to go. He will have plenty of time when I have finished. If he is satisfied, perhaps he may defer his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: We want to know why Lesage goes out to British Columbia to borrow?

Mr. Caouette: My hon. friend from Nicolet-Yamaska reminds me of an occurrence.

The Minister of Finance must be aware that Hon. Jean Lesage went to borrow $100 million from British Columbia; yet, during the 1963 federal election, some of his organizations claimed that British Columbia was bankrupt. Three weeks after the 1963 election, Mr. Lesage's government was borrowing $100 million from British Columbia. Not too bad for a bankrupt government.

In 1965, the member for Quebec West (Mr. Marchand) repeated the same thing about British Columbia. Premier Bennett said: "Gentlemen, we have disbursed $100 million; if you need more, come back, we still have $800 million to lend."

All kinds of stories were made up at that time about the Créditistes; during two elections. Today, the Minister of Finance would tell the house that the citizens of British Columbia are paying more taxes than anybody else in confederation. That is as false as can be. The citizens of the province of Quebec are the most heavily taxed. According to its population, the province of Quebec has more debts than any other province. This situation is due to Premier Lesage. The hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien) is smiling; he will be helping his co-religionists of the province of Quebec on June 5. Quebec never had a more costly government from every point of view. We do not want a similar government in Ottawa. But that is practically what we have.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the minister said in his budget speech, according to some of the highlights published in the newspapers:

In future, charitable donations may be deducted only if the donee is an organization registered with the government.

That is a fine state of affairs. Parish priests, presbyteries and charitable organizations will have to apply to the Minister of Finance for a licence, and they will need one because they will be registered with the government. Therefore, those charitable donations will be the only ones accepted.

I have here a letter dated February 22, from a parish priest of Verdun, in the province of Quebec. This is what he says about charitable donations that may be deducted for income tax purposes, and I quote:

Mr. C. A. Bergevin, public relations officer of the Department of National Revenue, Taxation Division, 305 Dorchester Street, Montreal; this man, under instructions from Mr. J. Gear McEntyre, is causing a great deal of trouble to members of the clergy regarding receipts for charitable donations deducted from the taxable income of taxpayers.

The abovementioned gentlemen reserve themselves the right to reduce the receipts for 1965 as they see fit and without possible appeal.

Parishioners sign a form and we trust everybody. The law allows 10 per cent of the salary, less deductions for married men with or without children and for single persons. The 10 per cent deduction should be fully applied to the taxable income and we should no longer be bothered with those annoying receipts.

The staff called upon to check those receipts could be given some other work; this would result in a significant saving and trust would prevail once and for all.

Under this system, in short, the wage-earner is always being pestered by the vultures of the federal or provincial income tax.

I rely on you and the wage-earners also count on your help to obtain a final solution.

The following solution has been suggested by the minister: charitable donations will only be accepted in the future if they are made to organizations registered with the government. All parish priests will have to register and be licensed to collect charitable donations, in order that Canadian taxpayers might claim an exemption to that effect.

Mr. Speaker, here are other highlights of the budget. An $11 million increase in the estimates of the Department of National Defence. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) is happy. The C.B.C. is getting $110,643,000 compared to $97 million, that is, an increase of $13 million. The national debt charges cost $1,185,500,000, that is one-ninth of all government income, one-ninth of the budget, but no one questions it. Why did the Minister of Finance not penalize the financiers instead of asking the Canadian people to accept more deprivation and more sacrifices? Why does he always put the touch on the builders of the country and not on those who are gobbling it up?

I mentioned that the age of automation is coming and that the department will be hard put to find an appropriate administration, a financial administration conscious of the realities in Canada.

I have here an article from a Vancouver paper, the Vancouver Province dated February 11, 1966 in which it is said:

[English]

Guaranteed Incomes Posed to Answer Automation Fear

A guaranteed annual income of at least $3,000 for everybody may be the eventual solution to growing problems of automation, says W. H. Ferry, vice president of the Centre for the Study of Democratic Institutions at Santa Barbara, Calif.

Asked at a press conference whether this would be the same thing as the original Social Credit concept of a free monthly dividend for everybody, Ferry said. "It's the same result, but on a very different basis."

However, he said he thought the national dividend ideas of Social Credit founder Major C. H. Douglas would come back into prominence in future years.

[Translation]

This means, Mr. Speaker, that in the south of the United States, in California and elsewhere in Canada, people are beginning to realize the logic of the national dividend advocated by Major Douglas, to fight against poverty efficiently in any country of the world. Against these solutions which would efficiently combat poverty, the fact is brought forward that a number of economists are not in agreement over the Social Credit propositions. In Quebec, we have economists who believe in Social Credit. Here are some of them: Mr. Yordan Kostakeff, professor of economics; Mr. Ernest Grégoire who was for 35 years professor of economics at Laval University, Ernest Grégoire, a former mayor of Quebec City; Mr. Robert Theobald, who accepts the principles of Social Credit, as well as Mr. John Snyder, who advocates the distribution to the consumers of wealth and plenty.

These people agree that the Creditist proposals should be tried instead of criticized. Instead of ridiculing the creditist proposals, let us try to put them into practice in Canada; then we will no longer have to read budget speeches such as that of the Minister of Finance the other day in which he announced unprecedented prosperity in Canada: a prosperity illustrated by the dissatisfaction of all the classes of society.

In fact we are witnessing ever-increasing strikes, not only in Quebec but in all of Canada: strikes of teachers, of students, of Canadian mailmen, of Hydro-Quebec engineers, of truckers in Ontario, of farmers in northern Quebec and in the Lake St. John region technicians strike.

How does the government try to put an end to these strikes? By increasing salaries? But even if a workman were to earn $10 an hour, if he must pay $350 for a suit, $200 for rent, if in fact he pays three times what the goods are worth, where will he be? Exactly where he was before. That is why I am utterly convinced that under the present system strikes will never solve the problems of workers, farmers, teachers and engineers. A problem solved by a strike means another strike in two, three or four years.

There is another solution to the problem: that advocated by the Creditistes, or the use of the Bank of Canada according to the physical possibilities in the country, in our respective provinces, and the distribution of a dividend to each and every one, in order to divide the riches, wealth and production of the country according to the work of Canadians.

• (9:40 p.m.)

That is the solution which would end fights between management and labour, and which would remove this general dissatisfaction within the whole population, not only in labour and farming, but in the small local businesses, in industry which faces unsold production, and in all social classes affected. All social classes are affected and lessened by this financial system which the Minister of Finance dares not touch. The Minister of Finance knows too well—he knows it as well as I do—that the financial system is not adapted to Canadian needs.

The other day I reread the speech made by my colleague for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), who said: "Why is it that the United States government succeeds in creating finance? Why is it that we, Canadians, have to borrow on the United States market to develop our national heritage? Why is it that we cannot, here in Canada, through the Bank of Canada, create the credit required for the financing of the economic development of this country?"

But the Minister of Finance would rather make his pilgrimages to Washington, New York or elsewhere, to work out loans from Europe and the United States for the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government. The government would rather borrow than create its own credit.

Can loans from France, Belgium or the United States give more value to the economic expansion and to the development of our natural resources?

If we have the brains, the labour and the physical capabilities of building public hospitals and buildings, not only in Ottawa, but also in Hull, of building schools in Canada, in short, if we have all the physical potential, with greater reason we should use the Bank of Canada to finance everything the Canadian people are capable of developing and building in this country.

But no, the Minister of Finance goes running to Washington to ask permission to build a trans-Canada highway. They rush to France to ask permission to develop our natural resources. We have huge quantities of minerals: copper mines, gold mines, iron mines, but we must ask the Americans permission to develop this tremendous wealth.

Mr. Speaker, this budget is a sucker offered to the Canadian people: a tax increase. The budget tells the Canadian people exactly the opposite of what the government promised before November 8, 1965. The government can make promises but it is unable to keep them after the election. We should have benefited from tax reductions instead of being loaded with tax increases. And it is clearly stated here that six out of ten taxpayers will be paying more taxes, possibly up to 14 per cent more.

Mr. Speaker, in a few moments, we will be asked to vote on the Conservative amendment and on the New Democrat sub-amendment. I must say, in my name and on behalf of my group, the Ralliement Créditiste, that we will vote for the sub-amendment calling for tax-exempt incomes up to $1,500 for single persons and up to $2,500 for married persons. We had asked exemptions of $2,500 for single persons and $5,000 for married persons, but this sub-amendment is a step in the right direction and that is why we will support it in order to force the government to face up to its responsibilities. If it cannot take its responsibilities, let it give way to others who can.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of standing order 58, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on the amendment to the amendment.

• (9:50 p.m.)

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Cameron, Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) which was negatived on the following division:

Division

YEAS

Messrs:

Allard
Barnett
Brewin
Caouette
Dionne
Douglas
Fawcett
Gilbert
Herridge
Howe (Hamilton South)
Knowles
Langlois (Mégantic)
Latulippe
Lewis
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
Mongrain
Orlikow
Saltsman
Simard
Winch—20.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allmand
Andras
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Baldwin
Basford
Batten
Béchard
Beer
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Bower
Brand
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantelon
Cantin
Cardin
Caron
Cashin
Chatterton
Choquette
Chrétien
Churchill
Clancy
Clermont
Coates
Côté (Dorchester)
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Crouse
Danforth
Deachman
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Enns
Éthier
Fairweather
Fane
Flemming
Forbes
Forest
Forrestall
Foy
Fulton
Gendron
Goyer
Grafftey
Granger
Greene
Grills
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hales
Harley
Hees
Hellyer
Hopkins
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Johnston
Keays
Kennedy
Klein
Korchinski
Laflamme
Lambert
Lamontagne
Langlois (Chicoutimi)
Laniel
Laverdière
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard
Lind
Loiselle
MacDonald (Prince)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacEwan
Mackasey
MacLean (Queens)
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McKinley
McLelland
McNulty
McQuaid
Madill
Marchand
Matheson
Moore
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Munro
Nasserden
Neveu
Nicholson
Nielsen
Nowlan
Nugent
O'Keefe
Olson
Orange
Otto
Pascoe
Patterson
Pearson
Pelletier
Pennell
Pepin
Pickersgill
Pilon
Prud'homme
Pugh
Racine
Rapp
Régimbal
Reid
Ricard
Richard
Rideout (Mrs.)
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Roxburgh
Ryan
Rynard
Sauvé
Sharp
Simpson
Smith
Southam
Stafford
Stanbury
Stefanson
Stewart
Teillet
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Thompson
Tolmie
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Valade
Vincent
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webb
Whelan
Yanakis—172.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Mr. Nielsen: May I adjourn the debate, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Howard: The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) and I had the unique and perhaps unhappy distinction of being paired.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was not paired, Mr. Speaker.

• (10:10 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

GRAIN—TROIS-RIVIÈRES—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF ELEVATORS

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, the other day I put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) in which I asked him, in effect, if he would consider taking urgent action to cope with the serious crisis facing the grain elevators of Trois-Rivières.

I have brought up the matter on two or three occasions, but any action seems to lag alarmingly. This is constructive criticism and I have no intention of blaming anyone. However, no solution seems to be forthcoming and no thought given to repercussions which are naturally detrimental to the economy of the St. Maurice region of the province and even to the national economy. The grain elevators of Trois-Rivières handle wheat from the west. This is known to be very important to the economy of the country. They handle great amounts of it, as may be seen in the report of the National Harbours Board which we were given today. In fact, for last year only, the total amount of merchandise handled at the Trois-Rivières wharf was about 5,222,689 tons. The report further asys that grain exports are still increasing.

I think that if a solution to the problem is not found soon the grain elevators will have to close.

What is the problem? I shall state it briefly. Until now, the grain elevators paid some $26,000 a year in taxes to the municipalities; suddenly, they were required to pay some $280,000, an increase of over 1000 per cent. You will understand that this is prohibitive, seeing that the Canadian Wheat Board fixes the handling charges and that our grain elevators compete with others which are not so burdened.

The only way we can solve this problem is to bring together all the people concerned, namely, the National Harbours Board, the operators of harbour facilities, the municipal council of Trois-Rivières, and in all probability, the Municipal Board of the Quebec legislature, as well, because everyone will have to contribute his share in order to find a solution, which would probably be spread out over a period of three, four or five years.

Grain elevators directly provide a living to some 300 to 350 people as well as to the handlers who live in the neighbourhood; in turn, these people provide a living for corollary or subsidiary industries, namely trucking and other such industries.

Under the circumstances, owing to the vast industrial development which is going to take place in the Trois-Rivières area, should these facilities be denied to the area, I think it would be a real disaster for all the Mauricie, which includes, by the way, Champlain county, Saint-Maurice-Laflèche county, part of Maskinongé county as well as Nicolet county, and of course, the county of Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Transport, taking into account precisely all the possible consequences of such a crisis upon regional, provincial and national economies, to lead the way in order to hasten this procedure, this settlement, this solution.

I know that the municipality of Trois-Rivières is concerned. I know that something has been done already. Mr. George Lloyd, of the National Harbours Board, already went on the site to discuss the question, but the proposed solution does not seem acceptable as such and no conclusion has been reached anyway. I know that he is supposed to go back there soon.

I suggest that the hon. Minister of Transport and the National Harbours Board had better give Mr. George Lloyd a free hand, so to speak, so that he may find a solution before it is too late.

With the most constructive possible intent, I should like to appeal to the minister most insistently, and I know that in so doing I reflect the wishes of all those concerned in my constituency. Thus will we prevent a very acute crisis.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister without Portfolio): With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I shall reply on behalf of the Minister of Transport.

The problem of the grain elevator company at Trois-Rivières referred to by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières arises solely from the expiry in 1964 of a tax agreement between the elevator company and the city. In 1965, the city fully assessed the elevator company and this resulted in a greatly increased tax bill for 1965. I understand that the elevator company has instituted legal action to set aside the increased assessment.

Despite the fact that the cost increase to the elevator company at Trois-Rivières is not due to any action of the National Harbours Board, that board, in co-operation with the city of Trois-Rivières and the Trois-Rivières Chamber of Commerce, is attempting to work out arrangements which will lessen the impact of municipal taxes on the principal users of the harbour.

These arrangements require not only action by the board, as suggested by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières but also concurrent action by the city. I can certainly assure the hon. member that the National Harbours Board has shown its willingness to co-operate to the extent of its ability to do so, but it would not seem appropriate for me to give the impression of interfering in municipal matters at Trois-Rivières such as the tax relations between the city and a private company.

The hon. member asked whether the minister was willing to appoint a special committee to look into the matter at once with the interested parties. This would not seem to be necessary, because in fact, though not in name, such a special committee already exists by virtue of the fact that representatives of the city, the elevator company and the National Harbours Board are discussing the matter extensively.

I hope that the matter will be brought to a successful conclusion.

• (10:20 p.m.)

[English]

TRANSPORT—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—APPLICATION OF STRETCH-OUT POLICY

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I asked a question the other day concerning the reference in the budget address of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to the deferment of construction of the Northumberland causeway. It is clear to anyone who is familiar with the maritime provinces and their economy that transportation has been and is a major and most important issue in that area. Communications with the mainland have been of the essence of the social and economic life of Prince Edward Island since the time of confederation. One can say without hesitation that the provision of adequate communications with the mainland is a federal obligation. It is therefore incumbent on those of us who represent the province to remind constantly those in charge of the national administration of their obligation in this respect.

The causeway project, one which was long sought and one which has transcended partisanship in our province and beyond it, activates us all. It was therefore with profound disappointment, shock and surprise that I listened to the Minister of Finance the other night while he outlined his restrain-the-boom technique, with particular reference to our long sought and desperately needed transportation project.

There has been a great deal of discussion, and my question was motivated by concern about the semantic exercises which have been carried on as to whether or not a rescheduling meant, or means, a deferment. I can only form my judgment, as is fair and proper, on the basis of the utterances of the minister himself.

One of the most important sections in the budget address spoke of the necessity for the government to review its construction program and defer a number of projects, as can be found in Hansard at page 3381.

Mr. McIlraith: Deferment or rescheduling; read the whole thing out.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have always listened to the minister with great restraint. Perhaps he will practise a little restraint and do me a similar courtesy.

Mr. McIlraith: I will not allow Hansard to be misread.

Mr. Macquarrie: The suggestion is to defer or reschedule a number of specific projects. Now rescheduling is apparently not a deferment. Yet I find that after the minister listed the five projects concerned be said:

I regret and I am sure everyone in this house regrets, that it is necessary to defer these projects—

And among the five projects are a grain elevator at Prince Rupert—the problem there was that the tenders were too high—the proposed new taxation building in Ottawa and a national museum, some less urgent work at airports, some harbour and marine works in coastal areas where there is serious pressure on the construction industry and, last, some smaller public buildings in Ontario and British Columbia.

Among this interesting collection of projects is the great Northumberland causeway under class "d". Why? It is to minimize the pressures on the peak summertime employment market, and maximize winter employment possibilities. I would be interested to know where that minister, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), or any other minister finds these dreadful and overpowering pressures upon our labour force. If he would consult the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) he would find the last report indicates that the Atlantic province unemployment figure stands at 10.5, a drop from 10.9.

I would be interested to know when any project need be deferred because of lack of available labour. If it is not a shortage of labour, it is also not because we are galloping into excessive prosperity in the Atlantic region. Any minister need only read the second report of the Economic Council to find there a prescription not of restraint but of what our region needs in acceleration.

For the government on one hand to seek to encourage industry to move in and assist the economy of the region, and then exercise unnecessary and unwarranted restraint in one of its projects, leads me to believe that the reasons are not economic but political.

I quote from the Charlottetown Guardian of November 10, 1965, these words in its editorial notes:

> "We spent $100,000,000 in Prince Edward Island and we didn't get a seat there" complains revenue minister E. S. Benson. It was asinine misstatements of this kind that helped them lose the two seats they had.

I hate to believe that it is for political considerations. I hate to believe that it is a five cent speech, Mackenzie King theory, once again being resurrected, but I would like very much to find an economic reason and I have not yet been able to do so in all the post-dated explanations and equivocations. I would simply ask the government to admit it made a mistake in including this project, and that it push forward with an essential development in our area to help the economy of the Atlantic provinces, rather than hinder it.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I hasten to assure the hon. member that the Northumberland strait causeway is not being delayed in any way. The completion date is unchanged. It remains as it was when stated in the first announcement. What has been done here—and this fact has been asserted in a press release from myself, in correspondence from the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and in other statements—is that a certain rescheduling has been made since the preliminary statement.

The rescheduling has only to do with the time of the maximum workload in the area. This is being done for the benefit of the maritime provinces, in particular for the wonderful province from which the hon. member comes.

As a result of this new timetable we are assured of a significant volume of winter work in late 1966 and early 1967, which is exactly the time of year that the hon. member has complained about when giving statistics on winter unemployment. This work activity will come at a time of the year when work is normally needed in the hon. member's province. It will be a positive factor in the economy of the province.

The new schedule provides for uninterrupted efforts to build the P.E.I. approach to the proposed nine mile crossing. Tenders for the 4½ mile approach road will be called in June, following completion of land acquisition.

This road, at the P.E.I. end of the crossing, will be completed in the latter part of 1967 as a step toward the construction of the main structure and it will serve as a hauling route for the project. Plans for the two mile New Brunswick approach causeway will be completed in July, with the call for tenders expected in August. This will permit the contractor to be on the site for work throughout the coming winter period. Of course, there is no alteration in the existing schedule for the approach road begun last year and it is moving ahead on schedule, to be completed by August of this year. This is perhaps a little better than on schedule.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Perhaps I should set out the other three major contracts involved. They are: the substructure for the main bridge portion of the project approximately four miles in length; the bridge superstructure of structural steel, and the tunnel section and off-shore tunnel portal to be constructed from the Prince Edward Island side. The detailed plans and specifications for the main bridge elements will be completed about December, 1966, and for the tunnel-causeway section a little later than that. These are all on schedule. There is no delay.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister's allotted time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.33 p.m.

23033—255½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 20, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF "RENEGADE IN POWER" AND "LAMENT FOR A NATION"

Question No. 109—Mr. Ormiston:

1. Have copies of Peter Newman's "Renegade in Power" been purchased by departmental and Crown corporation libraries and, if so, how many?

2. Have copies of George Grant's "Lament for a Nation" been ordered and/or purchased by departmental and Crown corporations libraries and, if so, how many?

3. Have copies of Peter Newman's "Renegade in Power" which are government property been placed in External Affairs offices and Trade Commissioner offices abroad and, if so, how many?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all departments as follows:

1. Yes; 16.

2. Yes; 96.

3. No. One was presented to the embassy in Washington and placed in the chancery library.

BUTTER PRODUCTION

Question No. 126—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the production of butter in Canada during the years 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966 to date?

2. Is Canada exporting any butter and, if so (a) where (b) what were the total exports for the years 1963, 1964 and 1965?

3. What was the percentage of consumption of butter in this country for 1963, 1964 and 1965?

4. What happened to the unsold production for the years 1963, 1964 and 1965?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Production of creamery butter in Canada during 1963, 1964, 1965, and 1966, to date, is as follows:

Year	Production '000 lb.
1963	351,919
1964	351,822
1965	336,666
1966	not available

2. Exports of butter by countries during the calendar years 1963, 1964, and January to October 1965 (latest figures available) are shown in the following table.

3. Percentage of consumption of creamery butter in Canada for 1963, 1964 and 1965.

Year	Percentage of Consumption to Production %
1963	99.8
1964	101.5[1]
1965	105.9[1]

[1] Represents some out of storage movement.

4. Unsold creamery butter in 1963 moved into storages in Canada.

EXPORTS OF BUTTER BY COUNTRIES DURING THE CALENDAR YEARS 1963, 1964 AND JANUARY TO OCTOBER, 1965.

Export Class Number	Description	Country	1963		1964		Jan.-Oct., 1965
			Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value	Quantity	Value
			Cwt.	$'000	Cwt.	$'000	Cwt.	$'000
51-29	Butter	United Kingdom	55,987	1,720	364,614	12,551	27,813	989
		Norway	nil	nil	nil	nil	5	—*
		British Guiana	"	"	88	7	nil	nil
		Honduras	"	"	185	12	"	"
		St. Pierre and Miquelon	98	6	680	38	1,172	68
		United States	2	—*	12	—*	15	1
		Totals	56,087	1,726	365,579	12,608	29,005	1,058

*Amount too small to be expressed (less than $500.00).

Questions

[English]

FISHERIES DEVELOPMENT EXPENDITURES

Question No. 143—Mr. Crouse:

1. What was the total amount of money expended by the Department of Fisheries during 1965 in Newfoundland for the provision of fresh fish collection centres and community stages for salt fish?

2. What was the total amount expended for similar installations in (a) Quebec (b) New Brunswick (c) Nova Scotia?

3. What was the total amount spent by the federal government in Newfoundland during 1965 on buildings, marine works, wharves, breakwaters, practical research and demonstration, to accelerate fisheries development activity?

4. What was the total amount expended for similar fisheries development in (a) Quebec (b) New Brunswick (c) Nova Scotia?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. 1964-65, $489,374.14; 1965-66, $717,-651.91. These amounts include works, where necessary.

2.(a) Nil. (b) Nil. (c) Nil.

3. Fisheries expenditure included in 1 above.

4. Re fisheries, answered by No. 1.

FISHERIES STATISTICS

Question No. 186—Mr. Tucker:

1. How many fishing communities are there in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

2. How many fishermen are there in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

3. What is the number of fishing boats not decked in operation in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island, by inshore fishermen?

4. What is the number of decked fishing boats up to 75 feet in length in operation in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

5. What is the number of fishermen in operation and using boats not decked in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

6. What is the number of fishermen using decked boats up to 75 feet in length in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

7. What the average income of fishermen using boats not decked in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

8. What is the average income of fishermen using decked boats up to 75 feet in length in (a) Newfoundland-Labrador (b) Nova Scotia (c) New Brunswick (d) Quebec (e) Prince Edward Island?

[Mr. Winters.]

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Not available.

2. (a) 22,615 in 1964; (b) 13,333 in 1964; (c) 5,790 in 1964; (d) 3,512 in 1964; (e) 3,329 in 1964.

3. Not available.

4. Not available.

5. Not available.

6. Not available.

7. Not available.

8. Not available.

C.B.C. PUBLIC RELATIONS STAFF

Question No. 484—Mr. Keays:

Are there any public relations officials in or connected with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and, if so, how many and what are the names and addresses of each?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that its public relations is largely carried out by the management group as a basic responsibility. The corporation employs two full time public relations people who assist in this work: Mr. Jack Lusher, 1500 Bronson Avenue, Ottawa, and M. Paul Dumont-Frenette, room 1425, Place Ville-Marie, Montréal.

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING MARITIME PROGRAM

Question No. 533—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the government received any briefs or presentations since January 1, 1964, relating to a Maritime Program for Canada from (a) the National Metal Trades Federation C.N.T.U. (b) the Marine Workers Federation C.L.C. (c) the Shipyard General Workers Federation of B.C., C.L.C.?

2. If so, what was the date upon which each such brief or presentation was received and the date and nature of any response?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Transport as follows:

1. Yes.

2. On March 25, 1964, representatives of the three unions presented to a number of cabinet ministers a brief entitled "Build a Merchant Marine Now!—A Maritime Program for Canada". Mr. J. K. Bell, secretary treasurer of the Marine Workers Federation (C.L.C.) was informed that the brief would be considered by the interdepartmental committee appointed to make representations with respect to government policy on shipbuilding. The government announced on January 17, 1966, a revised program of assistance to the shipbuilding industry.

IMMIGRATION, 1964 AND 1965

Question No. 663—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many immigrants were admitted to Canada in 1964 and 1965?

2. What were the countries of origin of these immigrants in 1964 and 1965?

3. What criteria are applied to refuse an immigrant admission to Canada?

4. What requirements of admission must be set by a person who wishes to immigrate to Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. In 1964 there were 112,606 immigrants admitted to Canada. In 1965 the number was 146,758.

2. See the following list.

3. Prospective immigrants are refused admission to Canada if they come within any of the prohibited classes of section 5 of the Immigration Act or if they do not come within any of the classes of section 31 of the Immigration Regulations.

4. To be admissible to Canada as an immigrant, a person must comply with the provisions of section 31 of the Immigration Regulations and not fall within one of the prohibited classes listed in section 5 of the Immigration Act.

Country of last permanent residence of immigrants admitted in 1964 and 1965

Country of Last Permanent Residence	1964	1965
Algeria	3	10
Arabia	7	7
Argentina	461	489
Australia	1,855	2,150
Austria	1,099	1,472
Barbados	422	560
Belgium	989	977
Bermuda	82	120
Brazil	428	587
Britain	29,279	39,857
England	20,481	28,820
Northern Ireland	1,847	1,934
Scotland	6,698	8,363
Wales	236	682
Lesser British Isles	17	58
British Guiana	614	609
Bulgaria	6	13
Burma	3	39
Ceylon	80	126
Chile	61	73
China	184	197
Colombia	74	47
Cyprus	101	239
Czechoslovakia	91	68
Denmark	717	859
Egypt	1,855	1,378
Finland	353	504
Fiji Islands	209	304
France	4,542	5,225
Germany	5,992	8,927
Greece	4,391	5,642
Hong Kong	2,490	4,155
Hungary	424	453
Iceland	20	7
India	1,154	2,241
Indonesia	7	7
Iran	31	136
Iraq	19	73
Ireland (Republic)	680	861
Israel	871	822
Italy	19,297	26,398
Jamaica	912	1,214
Japan	138	209
Jordan	49	69
Kenya	83	112
Kuwait	10	7
Latvia	2	4
Lebanon	347	602
Lithuania	0	2
Luxembourg	36	22
Malaysia	68	96
Malta	1,162	1,055
Mexico	136	147
Morocco	1,092	834
Netherlands	2,029	2,619
New Zealand	448	561
Norway	259	324
Pakistan	282	423
Peru	48	53
Philippines	237	1,502
Poland	1,944	1,975
Portugal	5,309	5,734
Rhodesia	169	89
Roumania	57	55
St. Pierre and Miquelon	16	19
South Africa—Republic	417	545
Spain	674	837
Sweden	325	361
Switzerland	1,446	2,169

Questions

Country of Last Permanent Residence	1964	1965
Syria	37	71
Tanzania	10	42
Trinidad	467	775
Tobago	4	5
Tunisia	38	12
Turkey	304	469
Uganda	13	18
Uruguay	84	89
U.S.A.	12,565	15,143
U.S.S.R.	77	157
Venezuela	336	310
Yugoslavia	1,187	1,230
Zambia	86	37
Africa, n.e.s. (1)	108	119
Asia, n.e.s. (1)	107	194
British West Indies n.e.s. (1)	267	372
Central America n.e.s. (1)	34	39
Europe n.e.s. (1)	6	9
North America n.e.s. (1)	2	2
Oceania n.e.s. (1)	0	5
S. America n.e.s. (1)	151	214
West Indies n.e.s. (1)	127	169
Other countries n.e.s. (1)	10	6
Grand Total	112,606	146,758

(1) n.e.s. means "Not Elsewhere Specified".

[English]

REAL ROUSSEAU

Question No. 684—Mr. McCutcheon:

Is one Real Rousseau, who according to the Canadian Press on June 23, 1965, was identified in the preliminary hearing of Hon. Yvon Dupuis, in the pay of the federal government and/or has he been at any time during the last two years and, if so (a) where is or was he employed and (b) what are or were his duties?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all departments as follows: No.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS

Question No. 873—Mr. Caouette:

1. What are the standards by which the salaries of postmaster and assistant postmaster are established?

2. Do these standards apply to the whole of Canada?

3. Does the Minimum Wage Act apply to the Post Office Department?

[Mr. Munro.]

4. If not, what category of employees is not covered by this act and why?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. The classification of Post Offices is based on the volume of postal business transacted. The salaries of the Postmasters and Assistants are based on the classification thus determined.

2. Yes.

3. The Minimum Wage Acts of Provincial Governments do not apply to Post Office Department employees. The Government, as a matter of policy, has established that minimum wage standards within the Canada Labour (Standards) Code would be extended to Federal Government employees.

The Civil Service Regulations have been amended with respect to annual vacation, general holidays and a minimum wage of $1.25 per hour to conform with the conditions outlined in the Code and these new regulations apply to Post Office Department employees who are subject to the terms of the Civil Service Act. They do not apply to small Revenue Postmasters and Sub Postmasters.

4. Revenue Postmasters are paid on the basis of postal work performed rather than on time required to be available to provide service. They are available to provide service for 40 hours per week but they may engage in other gainful employment when not required for postal work. Many of them operate stores in conjunction with the Post Office and where the Post Office is located in a home, there is little interference with the performance of normal household activities. On the basis of the hours required to perform postal work, they are paid in excess of the minimum wage of $1.25 per hour. Sub-Post Offices are usually operated in conjunction with another business and, like Revenue Offices, Postmasters are not required to devote full-time to postal work. They are paid a basic amount plus commissions on the sale of postal values. The status of these two groups in so far as the application of the Labour Code is concerned is still under review.

[English]

CORRELATION OF FAIRS, ETC. AND EXPO '67

Question No. 879—Mr. Thompson:

What plans are being made to relate major Canadian events, such as the Calgary Stampede, the Canadian National exhibition, the Pacific National exhibition, and other fairs and festivals to Expo '67 next year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): A very active program is in progress to promote Expo '67 at major Canadian fairs and exhibitions. It is the intention to have prominent displays at the Calgary Stampede, the Pacific National exhibition and the Canadian National exhibition. Expo '67 will be participating jointly with the Ontario government at the Canadian National exhibition, and at other fairs and exhibitions across Canada. All Expo '67 exhibits will include reference to its role in the Canadian centennial.

In addition, Expo '67 and the centennial commission are co-operating in several major national projects: (a) one which will result in national and international performing groups playing in several major centres of Canada as well as at Expo '67; (b) a series of folk art festivals; (c) the youth travel program under which hundreds of Canadian students will be assisted in travelling to various parts of Canada, some of whom may visit at Expo '67 when going through Montreal; (d) the canoe pageant; (e) a centennial guide book and the Canadian armed forces tattoo.

These and other events are described in the third annual report of the centennial commission for the fiscal year 1964-65.

GRANT REQUEST BY MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, 1965-66

Question No. 956—Mr. Brand:

1. What amount was requested by the medical research council for grants in aid of research for the fiscal year 1965-66?

2. Of said amount, how much was granted by the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The proposed programs for departments and agencies of the government are discussed during the course of the year with the staff of the Treasury Board and, in the light of total moneys available, agreement is reached by the government on the allocation of these total moneys as between the various departments and agencies. It is not the practice to disclose either the tenor or content of such discussions.

Estimates for the medical research council have been increasing substantially year by year as the appropriations below show:

1963-64—$ 5,100,000.
1964-65—$ 6,935,000.
1965-66—$ 9,250,000 in the main estimate.
$ 3,000,000 in the supplementary estimate.

$12,250,000

2. See No. 1 above.

GRANT REQUEST BY MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, 1966-67

Question No. 957—Mr. Brand:

1. What is the total amount of the request by the medical research council for recommended grants for the year 1966-1967?

2. Has the government made any decision as to how much will be made available?

3. Will the government give consideration to the making of supplementary appropriations so that the medical research council budget will be able to meet the necessary and scientifically acceptable plans which the council has placed before the government?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The proposed programs for departments and agencies of the government are discussed during the course of the year with the staff of the Treasury Board and, in the light of total moneys available, agreement is reached by the government on the allocation of these total moneys as between the various departments and agencies. It is not the practice to disclose either the tenor or content of such discussions.

2 and 3. The main estimate for 1966-67 is $12,350,000.

ALANIS OBOMSAWIN

Question No. 1,012—Mr. Howard:

1. Is one Alanis Obomsawin either by that name or the names of Helen Riley, Helen Robert(s) or Helen Robert Riley, a member of any Indian band in Canada and, if so, what is the name of that band, the date of birth of the said person, and the process by which her name appeared on the said band list?

2. If the answer to part 1 is no, does the government or any agency or department thereof have any knowledge of the origin of the said person and, if so, what is (a) her original name (b) her current name or names (c) her place and date of birth (d) her date of entry to Canada if she were born in or came from another country, and (e) her ethnic origin from the point of view as to whether or not she is of Indian descent?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the departments of Northern Affairs and National Resources and Citizenship and Immigration as follows: 1. No.

2. The Indian affairs branch has no official information about the personal history of this person.

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration has no file or record of entry of any person named Alanis Obomsawin. Because the other names listed are fairly common ones, it would be impossible to identify the record of any one particular person, so named, without the benefit of other personal data such as date and place of birth or parents' names.

EXEMPTION APPLICATIONS UNDER LABOUR CODE

Question No. 1,019—Mr. Loney:

1. How many companies and firms have applied for exemptions from the sections of the Canada labour code which concern minimum wages and hours of work?

2. How many exemptions have been granted?

3. What is the total of employees who are exempted from the provisions of the act as a result of exemptions granted up to March 31, 1966?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. Five hundred and forty submissions covering 4,239 establishments have been made under section 51 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code for deferment or suspension of the operation of part I of the code.

Two hundred and forty-two submissions covering 279 establishments have been made under section 52 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code for deferment of the operation of section 11 of the code.

2. Eight orders have been made under section 51 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code deferring the operation of part I of the code.

Twenty-nine orders have been made under section 52 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code deferring the operation of section 11 of the code.

3. Information is not available. Most submissions did not contain information on the number of employees affected.

C.N.R. PURCHASE OF CLEANING COMPOUND

Question No. 1,027—Mr. Monteith:

1. What companies tendered for sale of 123,500 lbs. of "extra heavy duty cleaning compounds", (specification No. 475-13A, of December, 1953) called for by the Canadian National Railways, such tenders having closed August 17, 1965?

2. Who was the successful tenderer?

3. What was the amount of the successful tender?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:—

A contract was awarded to Pennsalt Chemicals of Canada Limited, of Oakville, which had submitted the low tender following an invitation to bid which had been sent to 40 firms. It is not the practice of the company to disclose the names of companies submitting tenders nor to divulge prices which it pays for materials which are purchased by tenders, as to do so could be prejudicial to the competitive position of the supplier and in future transactions would restrict the Canadian National's ability to buy on the most advantageous terms to the railway.

REGISTRATION OF DRUG MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 1,039—Mr. Harley:

1. Is the government giving consideration to registering drug manufacturers, as recommended by the special committee on food and drugs?

2. If so, what action has the government taken in this regard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Based on the recommendations of the special committee on food and drugs, it is the government's intention to enact regulations requiring an annual report or notification by drug manufacturers of all their products for sale in Canada including imported drugs. Drug manufacturers have been advised of this.

COST OF PRINTING BY GOVERNMENT BUREAU

Question No. 1,047—Mr. Ricard:

1. What is the total cost of printing done by the Canadian Government Printing Bureau during each of the years 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

2. What is the total cost of printing done outside the printing bureau for each of the years 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

3. What is the total cost of all other government printing jobs done by the printing bureau during each of the years 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

4. What is the total cost of all other government printing jobs done outside the printing bureau during each of the years 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Information provided is based on fiscal year ended 31 March—calendar year information not currently available. 1961-62, $10,202,504; 1962-63, $9,709,872; 1963-64, $10,122,903; 1964-65, $11,177,181.

2. According to D.B.S. Publication (August 1965) "Commercial Printing Industries", Cat. No. 36-209, Table 8, the value of Printing, Publishing and Allied Industries: 1961, $887,727,860; 1962, $925,442,673; 1963, not yet available; 1964, not yet available.

3. Nil—Included in (1) above.

4. No record is maintained by Canadian Government Printing Bureau of total printing done on behalf of other departments, agencies and Crown Corporations. Printing let to outside printers by Department of Public Printing and Stationery on behalf of these Departments, agencies and Crown Corporations was: 1960-61, $5,887,672; 1961-62, $6,493,153; 1962-63, $6,771,874; 1963-64, $6,423,875.

[English]

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 21 OF INCOME TAX ACT

Question No. 1,053—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Have representations been made by any organization or association to the Minister of Finance and/or the Minister of National Revenue, since January 1, 1965, seeking amendment to the provisions of section 21 of the Income Tax Act respecting the joint assessment of income of a husband or wife when one spouse is employed in the business of the other?

2. If so, by whom, and what was the nature of the representations in each case?

3. What consideration has been given by the government to these representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

2. The Canadian Federation of University Women recommended that salary paid to a wife employed by her husband (or a partnership in which he is a member) be treated as separate income in the wife's hands when the services are actually performed and the compensation is not greater than would be paid to another person for the same services.

The Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs urged that subsections (2) and (3) of section 21 of the Income Tax Act be repealed and that the act be amended to provide that where the service is actually performed and the compensation is not greater than would be paid to another person for the same service the remuneration received by the employee spouse shall be deductible from the taxable income of the employer spouse, and shall be treated as separate income in the hands of the employee spouse.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce recommended that remuneration received by an employed spouse be treated as separate to the extent that services are actually performed and the compensation is not greater than would be paid to an unrelated person for the same service.

3. These submissions were carefully considered but it was decided that decisions involving important changes of this nature should be deferred until the government has the benefit of the recommendations of the royal commission on taxation.

DIRECTOR OF POLICY AND PLANNING, ARDA

Question No. 1,054—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has a director of policy and planning in the agricultural rehabilitation and development branch of the Department of Forestry been appointed recently?

2. If so, who, and by whom was the appointment made?

3. If by the Civil Service Commission (a) how many applicants were there in the competition (b) who were the members of the rating board (c) what positions do such members of the rating board hold?

4. What is the salary level of the position?

5. What position did the successful applicant hold immediately prior to this appointment?

6. Did the successful applicant previously hold positions in the civil or public service?

7. If so (a) what positions (b) during what periods of time (c) at what salary levels?

8. While employed previously in the civil or public service, did the successful applicant or anyone on his behalf apply for reclassification of his position.

9. If so (a) when (b) with what result (c) what reasons were given for the decision in this respect?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Civil Service Commission: 1. Yes, on April 12, 1966.

2. Mr. G. J. Lemieux, Ph.D.—by the Civil Service Commission.

3. (a) 26. (b) and (c) Mr. F. J. Doucet, director, program division, Atlantic Development Board. Mr. A. T. Davidson, assistant deputy minister, ARDA, Department of Forestry. Mr. B. J. E. Lavigne, administrator, feed grain assistance program, Department of Forestry—(adviser to Mr. Davidson). Mr. J. E. Côté, Civil Service Commission officer, Civil Service Commission.

4. $15,370-$19,080.

5. Director, bio-physical research, Eastern Quebec Planning Bureau, Mont-Joli, P.Q.

6. Yes.

7. (a) (b) and (c) Seasonal Employment: Summers of 1952, 1953 and 1954 as survey assistant and forest engineer 1.

Salary History

Continuing employment: 1.1.55, Forest engineer 1, $3360; 1.7.55, Forest engineer 1, $3540, semi-annual increment; 1.4.56, Forestry officer 1, $3900, economic revision and change in class title; 1.7.56, Forestry officer 1, $4050, semi-annual increment; 30.9.56, granted educational leave with half pay; 1.4.59, Forestry officer 2, $5580, reclassification; 1.1.60, Forestry officer 2, $5880, annual increment; 1.6.60, Forestry officer 2, $6240, economic revision; 1.11.60, Research officer 2(F), $6240, change in class title; 1.1.61, Research officer 2(F), $6540, annual increment; 1.1.62, Research officer 2(F), $6840, annual increment; 1.1.63, Research officer 2(F), $7140, annual increment; 13.2.64, Research officer 2 (F), $7140, salary on termination.

8 and 9. In April, 1959, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources requested the reclassification of Dr. Lemieux's position, among others, from forestry officer 1 to forestry officer 2. The reclassification was approved as it was in keeping with the duties performed.

No further request for his reclassification was received after that date. However, the Civil Service Commission understands that a further recommendation for Dr. Lemieux was under consideration in the Department of Forestry at the time of his resignation, effective February 13, 1964. This recommendation was related to the fulfillment of the academic requirements for the obtention of a Ph.D. degree in ecology. Dr. Lemieux resigned from the public service before completing these requirements, but he has since satisfied them and was awarded his Ph.D. by the University of Michigan in May 1964.

FEDERAL GRANTS, PORT ELGIN, ONT.

Question No. 1,060—Mr. Loney:

What amount in grants, in lieu of taxes, on federal property was paid to the municipality of Port Elgin, Ontario, for the year 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): $560.

COST OF C.B.C. MUNSINGER COVERAGE

Question No. 1,062—Mr. Thompson:

1. What was the cost to the C.B.C. for its coverage of Gerda Munsinger in Germany?

2. How much was paid for the interview with Mrs. Munsinger?

3. How much was spent on transportation and expenses for interviewer or interviewers?

4. What is the cost of the technical services, camera crews, etc.?

5. How much else was spent on the general C.B.C. news coverage of the Munsinger case in Germany?

6. How much television time to date has the C.B.C. devoted to the Munsinger affair (a) in direct newscasts (b) in special public affairs programming?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Total cost was $9,050.

2. $5,000 was paid to Mrs. Munsinger's agent and $3,000 was paid to the Toronto Daily Star. The C.B.C. recovered $2,000 through sale of the program material to the N.B.C. network in the United States.

3 and 4. The combined cost for transportation, staff expenses, etc., for coverage in Germany was $3,050 for providing coverage on four networks, English and French, radio and television.

5. Nil.

6. (a) 1 hour and 28 minutes in regular newscasts, plus 19 minutes in two special newscasts. (b) None in special public affairs programming, although the subject was dealt with in regular public affairs programs.

C.B.C. TELEVISION COVERAGE OF QUEEN'S VISIT TO WEST INDIES

Question No. 1,063—Mr. Thompson:

1. How much television time did the C.B.C. devote to the visit of Queen Elizabeth II to the West Indies (a) in direct newscasts (b) in special public affairs programming?

2. How much was spent for the required technical services, camera crews, etc.?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. (a) Two minutes and 55 seconds in regular newscasts. (b) Nil.

2. Nil. News film was obtained through a British TV news agency.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION, SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Question No. 1,064—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. Is the Department of Public Works intending to commence the construction of any buildings in southwestern Ontario within the next six months?

2. If so, what are the details of the projects?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

C.B.C. INTERVIEWS WITH MR. MUNSINGER

Question No. 1,068—Mr. Thompson:

What did the interview or interviews with Mr. Munsinger, including transportation, camera crews, technical services, etc. cost the C.B.C.?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. that the interview with Mr. Munsinger, shown on a special

T.V. news program and on "This Hour Has Seven Days", cost $4,000 including costs of transportation, interview, studio rental, etc.

TENDERS FOR PEAS, INDIAN AID PROGRAM

Question No. 1,070—Mr. Enns:

1. On what date did the Canadian Commercial Corporation call tenders for peas in the Indian aid program and on what date were the tenders closed?

2. What was the amount and price of the tenders of (a) the Ottawa Valley Grain Company of Renfrew (b) Northern Sales (1963) Limited and (c) the B.C. Pea Growers Limited?

Questions

3. Was more than one tender accepted from the successful bidder?

4. Were two sets of prices accepted from one company and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Invitations to tender were called by telegram on January 10, 1966 and were closed on January 14, 1966.

2. The following offers were received: (a) Ottawa Valley Grain Co. Lot 1—1250 long tons combination of grades:

			Revised
F.A.S. Saint John—Grade	2cw	$136.20 per long ton	$135.20 per long ton
"	3cw	$134.35 " " "	$133.35 " " "
Extra "	4cw	$132.50 " " "	$131.50 " " "
"	4cw	$130.65 " " "	$129.65 " " "

Lot 2—750 long tons combination of grades:

			Revised
F.A.S. Saint John—Grade	2cw	$143.20 per long ton	$140.05 per long ton
"	3cw	$141.35 " " "	$138.20 " " "
Extra "	4cw	$139.50 " " "	$136.35 " " "
"	4cw	$137.65 " " "	$134.50 " " "

Lot 3—50 long tons grade 3cw: F.A.S. Saint John—$192.60.

(b) Northern Sales (1963) Limited. Lot 1—750 long tons grade extra 4cw: F.A.S. Saint John—$133.95 per long ton. Lot 2—100 long tons grade 4cw: F.A.S. Saint John—$132.16 per long ton. Lot 3—75 long tons grade 4cw or better: F.A.S. Saint John—$134.40 per long ton (Lot 3 not acceptable as offer was based on supply of green peas rather than yellow which was specified in the invitation to tender).

(c) B.C. Pea Growers Limited. Lot 1—1200 long tons grade 3cw: F.A.S. Montreal $184.80 per long ton; or F.A.S. Saint John or Halifax $189.95 per long ton; or F.A.S. Vancouver or New Westminster $192.64 per long ton. Lot 2—450 long tons grade 3cw: F.A.S. Montreal $145.60 per long ton; or F.A.S. Saint John or Halifax $150.75 per long ton; or F.A.S. Vancouver or New Westminster $153.44 per long ton.

3. Two lots of 1250 long tons and 750 long tons were accepted from Ottawa Valley Grain Co.

Two lots of 750 long tons and 100 long tons were accepted from Northern Sales (1963) Limited.

4. Yes. More than one set of prices were accepted from each of the two firms. The prices were dependant upon the geographic origin of the peas as opposed to the location of the processing plants and inland transportation to F.A.S. point, storage, etc. The price differential is also due to the different lot quantities of peas available at various locations as well as the types of grades offered.

Ottawa Valley Grain Products Ltd. revised its prices downward to reflect savings in storage insurance and interest when specific shipping dates were known.

LANGUAGES SPOKEN BY IMMIGRANTS

Question No. 1,071—Mr. Laprise:

1. From 1940 to 1960, year by year, how many immigrants on their arrival in Canada were (a) proficient in French (b) proficient in English (c) proficient in French and English (d) conversant with neither language?

2. During these same years, year by year, how many of these immigrants settled in Quebec and of this number how many spoke (a) French (b) English (c) French and English (d) neither English nor French?

3. Does the government have an immigration policy which favours alike the two ethnic groups of Canada and, if so, does the same policy apply to each of the provinces of Canada?

Questions

4. In what way does the immigration policy of Canada take into account the French ethnic group in Quebec?

[Translation]

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Statistics on the languages spoken by immigrants on their arrival in Canada are not available prior to 1962.

2. As explained in the answer to part 1, the precise information requested is not available. However, shown below are figures on the total immigration to Canada from 1940 to 1960 and the numbers of immigrants who were destined to Quebec Province.

Year	Total Immigrants Canada	Immigrants destined to Quebec
1940	11,324	2,556
1941	9,329	1,931
1942	7,576	1,339
1943	8,504	1,369
1944	12,801	2,066
1945	22,722	3,428
1946	71,719	9,712
1947	64,127	8,272
1948	125,414	24,687
1949	95,217	18,005
1950	73,912	13,575
1951	194,391	46,033
1952	164,498	35,318
1953	168,868	34,294
1954	154,227	28,419
1955	109,946	22,117
1956	164,857	31,396
1957	282,164	55,073
1958	124,851	28,443
1959	106,928	24,816
1960	104,111	23,774

3. There is no difference in Canada's immigration policy with respect to the two major ethnic groups of Canada. The same policy applies to all provinces of Canada.

4. Canada's immigrant selection policy is not based in any way upon the ethnic origin of immigrants. The policy is to select those immigrants who are likely to become self supporting members of the Canadian community regardless of their ethnic origin.

[English]

CANADA-U.K. TAX AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,072—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is the recently abrogated agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom about double taxation being renegotiated?

[Mr. Laprise.]

2. If so, when is the agreement expected to be ratified?

3. Will the new agreement be retroactive to the date the former agreement lapsed?

4. Does the government contemplate taxing people living in Canada permanently but receiving income from sources in the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. The terminated 1946 Canada-United Kingdom income tax agreement has been renegotiated in part and replaced by a limited agreement, signed on December 6, 1965, that deals with four classes of income.

Both governments have expressed the hope that the limited agreement will soon be extended to include the subjects usually covered in a comprehensive agreement, and arrangements are now being made for holding meetings with a view to negotiating such an agreement.

2. The limited agreement will not be ratified by an exchange of instruments of ratification but will come into force after each contracting government has been notified by the other that all the things that have to be done to give the agreement the force of law in Canada and the United Kingdom respectively have been done. The governing date is expected to be the date on which the Canadian bill to implement the agreement is given royal assent.

It cannot now be determined when any comprehensive agreement that may be negotiated will come into force.

3. Yes, with respect to the subjects covered in the limited agreement. Not known, with respect to the subjects to be covered in any comprehensive agreement that may be negotiated.

4. Yes. The Income Tax Act provides that residents of Canada are taxable on income from all sources; it also provides that tax credits shall be allowed in respect of taxes paid to foreign governments on income from foreign sources.

The limited agreement provides that certain pensions from the British government received by Canadian residents shall be exempt from Canadian tax, unless it is more favourable to the pensioner to be taxed by Canada instead of Britain.

FRENCH TELEVISION SERVICE, PONTIAC COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,073—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. Was a study made by the C.B.C. into the possibility of providing the population of the northern area of Pontiac with French television network service?

2. If so, what was the result of such study?

3. If no study was made, does the government intend to make one?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:
1. Yes.

2. A preliminary study indicated that the cost per capita would be much higher than for other unserved areas, due to the very small, scattered population.

3. N/A.

[English]

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA PERPETUAL BONDS

Question No. 1,082—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. When were the 3 per cent government of Canada perpetuals issued?

2. At what price and yield?

3. What amount of these bonds is now outstanding?

4. At what time and under what terms has the government an option to redeem these bonds?

5. Have any representations been made to the government by or on behalf of the holders of these bonds?

6. If so, what is the nature of such representations?

7. What decisions have been taken by the government in respect of these representations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):
1. September 15, 1936.

2. 96.50 to yield 3.11 per cent.

3. $55,000,000.

4. The bonds are subject to redemption by call at the option of the government, as a whole or in part, at 100 and interest on 60 days' notice on September 15, 1966, or at any time thereafter.

5. Yes.

6. Representations from perpetual bondholders generally request that these bonds be called on September 15, 1966.

7. Under the terms and conditions of the 3 per cent perpetual bond issue, the government of Canada is required to give notice of intention to redeem the bonds by advertisements in the Canada Gazette and in daily newspapers, once in each fortnight for four consecutive fortnights with the first publication to be not less than 60 days prior to redemption date. Holders of perpetual bonds will be advised in this way if and when the government decides to exercise its option to call the bonds on September 15, 1966 or at any time thereafter.

FEDERAL GRANT, WIARTON, ONT.

Question No. 1,098—Mr. Loney:

What amount of grant in lieu of taxes on federal property was paid to the municipality of Wiarton, Ontario, for the year 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): $948.

STUDEBAKER CORPORATION

Question No. 1,104—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. Was there any agreement of any kind between the federal government and Studebaker Corporation at the time the Studebaker plant was established in Canada?

2. Were there any inducements or concessions to Studebaker Corporation for locating in Canada?

3. Who was responsible for the decision to close down the plant?

4. What was the reason for closing the plant?

5. Are there any plans for future use of the plant?

6. Does the government know whether existing guarantees on all models of Studebaker cars manufactured in Canada will be honoured by the Studebaker Corporation, and will the government take steps to ensure that these guarantees are honoured?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry):
1. Crown Assets Disposal Corporation reports that: Yes, the plant was sold to the Studebaker Corporation of Canada Limited by His Majesty the King in right of Canada by an agreement of sale dated the 28th day of February 1946.

2. No.

3. The decision to close the Studebaker plant at Hamilton was made by the board of directors of the Studebaker Corporation.

4. The reason given for closing the plant was that steadily declining sales had made it impossible to stem recent automotive losses.

5. I am informed that the company is considering a number of offers for possible use of the plant.

6. The Studebaker Corporation has indicated that it will continue parts production to meet all obligations under the guarantees of warranty on cars sold by the company which were produced in Canada.

Questions

MAIL DELIVERY CONTRACT, SEPT-ÎLES, QUE.

Question No. 1,111—Mr. Allard:

1. Did the federal government recently grant $60,000 to Clarke Steamship Lines for mail distribution in the Sept-Îles area?

2. What firm previously had that mail delivery contract?

3. Were there any tenders before the contract was given to Clarke Steamship Lines, and (a) if so, who were the tenderers (b) if not, why were tenders not called for regarding this contract?

4. Did the government find fault with Captain Jourdain of Cape Diamant, who formerly held that mail delivery contract?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. A contract was entered into with La Compagnie de Transport du Bas St-Laurent Ltée, a subsidiary of Clarke Steamship Company Limited, on 30th September 1965, for an amount of $67,000.00 per season.

2. During 1965 the Post Office Department had agreements with two steamship operators to convey mails between Sept-Îles and Blanc Sablon. One trip each week was performed by La Compagnie de Transport du Bas St-Laurent Ltée and the other trip was due to be performed by Captain Jourdain.

3. No. In accordance with Section 29 of the Post Office Act, the Postmaster General may, without public advertisement enter into a contract for conveying mail with any person operating a railway, air, steamboat or bus service. (a) Not applicable. (b) The company to which the contract was awarded was adjudged to be the only one which had the necessary vessels to provide reliable, regular service on the required frequency of two trips per week.

4. Captain Jourdain agreed to transport mails on a frequency of one trip per week during the 1964 and 1965 navigation seasons under temporary arrangements negotiated before the opening of each summer season. The Department was not satisfied with Mr. Jourdain's service. After giving assurance that he had a suitable vessel to perform the required services, starting in April 1965, Captain Jourdain was unable to fulfil his agreement. During the period April 16 to May 28, Captain Jourdain arranged for fill-in service but from June 4 to July 2 a total of four trips he failed to provide the agreed-upon service and the trips were performed by La Compagnie de Transport du Bas St-Laurent Ltée, a subsidiary of Clarke Steamship Company Limited.

[Mr. Drury.]

[English]

GRAZING LEASES, CAPE CROKER INDIAN RESERVE

Question No. 1,116—Mr. Loney:

1. What are the terms of agreement on land leased for grazing purposes on Cape Croker Indian reserve?

2. What is the number of acres involved?

3. What is the amount of money paid to the band?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The 13 grazing leases in effect on this reserve are for terms running from 2 to 6 years.

2. Approximately 1,514 acres.

3. $625 is paid annually to band funds and $260 is paid annually to individual Indians.

GRANT TO PEACE RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Has the government been asked for a contribution in reference to a drive for peace by the Canadian Peace Research Institute of which Dr. Norman Alcock is a member?

2. Has a contribution been made by the federal government in reference to this organization and, if so, how much?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. See answer to question No. 72 given to Mr. Howe, member for Hamilton South, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 2, 1966. The Canadian Peace Research Abstracts Journal is a publication of the Canadian Peace Research Institute.

2. No.

R.C.M.P. INQUIRY, TROIS-RIVIÈRES, QUE.

Question No. 1,119—Mr. Mongrain:

1. Was an allegation made that a citizen of Trois-Rivières was struck by a member of the R.C.M.P. while being questioned on January 31, 1966?

2. If so (a) was an inquiry made into this matter (b) what were the results of this inquiry (c) have instructions been given to forbid the use of such methods during interrogations?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes. (b) It was determined that this allegation is without substance. (c) All members of the R.C.M.P. are instructed as to the proper method of conducting an interrogation.

MARITIME MARSHLAND WORK AT GREAT VILLAGE, N.S.

Question No. 1,120—Mr. Crossman:

1. Does the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Authority have work planned or underway at Great Village, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, what is the nature of that work?

3. Have tenders been called and, if not, when will they be called?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry):

1. Yes (planned).

2. Construction of dike, aboiteaux and ancillary works (for marshland protection).

3. No—scheduled for late May, 1966.

POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES, ST. CYRILLE DE WENDOVER, QUE.

Question No. 1,129—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many employees were hired by the post office of St. Cyrille de Wendover, Drummond county, in 1964?

2. What were the names of these employees?

3. What were their wages?

4. During what period did each of these employees work at that post office?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General):

1. Six.

2, 3 and 4:

Name	Salary	From	To
Mr. Hilarion Lemire	$4260.00	January 1, 1964	December 31, 1964
Mrs. Diana Daunais	1353.33	January 1, 1964	September 19, 1964
Mrs. Thérèse Rutherford	929.95	January 1, 1964	December 31, 1964
Miss Lise Généreux	189.84	November 30, 1964	December 31, 1964
Mr. P. Archambault	22.86	December 15, 1964	December 18, 1964
		December 21, 1964	December 23, 1964
Mrs. Thérèse Lemire	59.50	July 13, 1964	July 24, 1964
		(Total of 40 hours)
		August 24, 1964	November 28, 1964
		(Casual employment—Total of 16 hours)

[English]

CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES FOR AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,131—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Will the government examine section 11 (11) of the Income Tax Act which provides that certain taxpayers are eligible to claim capital cost of an automobile that is used in the course of their employment to help earn income, and consider amending the act to provide similar capital cost allowances for those individuals who substitute an aircraft for an automobile for the same purpose, by including the words "and/or aircraft" immediately after the word "automobile" in section 11 (11) of the said act?

2. For what reason or reasons was mention of aircraft omitted from section 11 of the Income Tax Act which now applies only to a taxpayer's use of an automobile?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

1. This has been examined in answer to representations made in past years and the decision reached was to propose no change.

2. The subsection referred to permits certain employees, who require transportation from place to place as they perform their employment, to claim capital cost allowances in respect of an automobile acquired for use in the performance of their duties. It has been considered sufficient to allow this deduction in respect of the means of transportation most generally used and unnecessary to allow a deduction in respect of the capital cost of a boat or aircraft acquired by an employee for use in his employment.

OLD AGE SECURITY FUND

Question No. 1,134—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

As of March 1, 1966, what was the balance of the old age security fund?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

The balance at the credit of the old age security fund as of March 1, 1966, was $193,591,673.61.

*EXPO '67—RECORDING OF R.C.M.P. BAND

Question No. 1,138—Mr. Macaluso:

Will the Minister of Labour use his offices with the American Federation of Musicians in order to obtain permission for a recording to be made of the R.C.M.P. band at Expo '67 as a cultural contribution to Canada's centennial year since this permission has been given to the United States army, air force, navy and marine corps for cultural purposes?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour):

Mr. Speaker, I have used my offices in this connection. Representations have been made to the American Federation of Musicians in relation to the proposed recording of the R.C.M.P. band. The policy of the musicians union is that persons who are not members of the musicians union are not allowed to record since it would be in violation of the recording agreement between the recording companies and the union. The members of the R.C.M.P. band do not belong to the musicians union, and their participation in a recording would therefore violate the agreement between the record producers and the union.

In answer to the second part of the question, in the case of personnel of the military service bands in the United States, they are members of the union and therefore would be permitted to record.

RONALD B. RAMSEY—APPEARANCE ON C.B.C.

Question No. 1,144—Mr. Laprise:

Did the C.B.C. pay the travelling expenses of Ronald B. Ramsey when he went to Toronto recently for the purpose of participating in the program "This Hour Has Seven Days" and, if so, how much?

[Translation]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Yes. I am informed by the C.B.C. that the return air fare, $56.00 economy class New York to Toronto, was paid by the Corporation.

[English]

FEDERAL BUILDING SITE, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 1,146—Mr. Coates:

Has a site been selected for a new federal building to be constructed at Amherst, N.S. and, if so, (a) where is it located (b) what was the cost of the site in question (c) to whom were moneys paid in the securing of the site and in what amounts?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, (a) Negotiations in progress to acquire a site located at the corner of Havelock and Prince Arthur streets. (b) and (c) Since the acquisition of the five properties concerned has not been finalized it is not possible at this time to determine the amount which will be paid to each property owner.

RABIES DISEASE

Question No. 1,154—Mr. Laprise:

1. Annually, since 1960 (a) how many deaths have been caused by rabies (b) how many people required treatment after being bitten by an infected animal (c) how many people required vaccination against this disease (i) in Canada (ii) in Quebec (iii) in the constituency of Chapleau?

2. Has the federal government helped financially the victims of the disease and, if so, to what extent?

3. Has an agreement been entered into with the province of Quebec for joint assistance to the victims of this disease and, if so, what are the terms of this agreement?

4. What is the aggregate amount of compensation received annually since 1960 by victims (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the constituency of Chapleau?

5. Has an agreement been entered into with the province of Quebec to find preventive measures to eradicate the possibility of human beings catching the disease and, if so (a) what are the terms of this agreement (b) what sums has the federal government spent annually since this agreement came into effect?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1.

	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
(a)	1	0	0	1	Not available
(b)	Not available		0	*1,155	" "
(c)	" "		0	*(i) 1,155	" "
				(ii) 153
				(iii) Not available

*Estimate based on 1964 survey.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Not available.

5. No.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

[English]

INCORPORATIONS UNDER DEFENCE PRODUCTION ACT

Question No. 1,155—Mr. Ryan:

What corporations, if any, have been incorporated under part I of the Companies Act with the approval of the Governor in Council pursuant to the powers given by section 7 of the Defence Production Act?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Defence Construction (1951) Limited by order in council P.C. 2269 dated May 10, 1951.

MAIL CONTRACTS, EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS

Question No. 1,166—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Are any mail contracts at present held by Eastern Provincial Airways and, if so, how many?
2. What is the travel detail of each contract?
3. What is the dollar content of each contract?
4. What is the volume by weight, of each contract?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. Yes, 9 contracts.

2. (1) Serving intermediate points between Gander and Nain and return on a weekly frequency with the exception of Change Islands, Fogo and Stag Harbour which are served semi-weekly and conveying all classes of mail during the season of closed navigation. (2) St. John's—Goose Airport via Deer Lake and return, frequency 5 trips per week conveying all classes of mail. (3) St. John's—Wabush via Deer Lake and return, frequency 5 trips per week conveying all classes of mail. (4) Deer Lake—St. Anthony and return, frequency 2 trips per week conveying all classes of mail. (5) Wabush—Twin Falls and return, frequency weekly conveying all classes of mail. (6) St. John's or Gander—St. Albans and return, frequency daily except Sunday conveying first class mail. (7) Moncton—Charlottetown—Halifax via Summerside and New Glasgow and return, frequency 3 trips per day except Sunday, Moncton, Charlottetown and one trip Sunday. Daily except Sunday service between Charlotteown and Halifax conveying first class mail. (8) Moncton—Goose Airport and return, frequency 2 trips per week conveying all classes of mail. (9) Moncton—Magdalen Islands and return, frequency daily except Sunday conveying all classes of mail.

3. (1) .003 cents per pound mile, annual cost, $231,093.74; (2) .24 cents per pound, annual cost, $45,128.70; (3) .34 cents per pound first class 10 cents per pound other classes, annual cost, $30,059.00; (4) .13 cents per pound, annual cost. St. Anthony airport closed part of year due to construction, $136.40; (5) .003 cents per pound mile, annual cost approx. Not in operation for a full year, $8,500.00; (6) St. John's—St. Albans, 11 cents per pound, Gander—St. Albans, 7 cents per pound. Estimated annual cost, $821.52. Service established December 22nd, 1965; (7) $8.55 per ton-mile, annual cost, $111,278.94; (8) .24 cents per pound, annual cost, $70,736.40; (9) $1.30 per ton-mile, annual cost approximately $85,000.00.

4. (1) 390,181 pounds; (2) 194,119 pounds; (3) 232,863 pounds; (4) 248 pounds; (5) 26,000 pounds approximately; (6) 11,736 pounds approximately; (7) 477,304 pounds; (8) 294,735 pounds; (9) 744,358 pounds.

LETTERS OF COMMITMENT, CANADIAN CAR MANUFACTURERS

Question No. 1,169—Mr. Hales:

Has $260 million of additional Canadian value been added as outlined in the letters of commitment between the government of Canada and Canadian car manufacturers and, if so, what portion has been achieved to date by each of these car manufacturers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The companies producing motor vehicles in Canada, which are covered by motor vehicles tariff order 1965, have undertaken to achieve an increase in their annual level of Canadian value added in the production of motor vehicles and original equipment parts in Canada, in an amount equal to $260 million, by the twelve month period ending July 31, 1968.

Reports received to date, which are confidential, indicate that the companies are making satisfactory progress toward meeting their Canadian value added commitments under the program.

MAIL SERVICE, GRUNTHAL, MAN.

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Jorgenson:

Has there been a request from the village of Grunthal, Manitoba, for the improvement of mailing delivery services and, if so (a) did the request include better facilities and mailing delivery services in Grunthal (b) were representations made by anyone other than the Chamber of Commerce (c) were any representations written or otherwise opposed to the improvement of the facilities and mailing delivery services?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): (a) There has been no request from the village of Grunthal for the improvement of mail delivery services. However, the Grunthal Chamber of Commerce made representations for better facilities and mailing delivery service. (b) No. (c) No.

Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,186—Mr. Godin:

1. How many Canadians paid contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Commission in 1963 and in 1964?

2. What was the amount received throughout Canada for each of these years?

3. In the same period, what was the amount paid to unemployed persons by the commission?

4. In 1963 and 1964, how many persons registered at the unemployment office in the city of Quebec, and of these how many were from Portneuf county?

5. Among those who registered in the city of Quebec and who were from Portneuf county (a) how many were eligible for benefits (b) how many were turned down?

6. Since the institution of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, how many contributors have died without receiving any benefits?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission as follows: 1. This information is not available.

2. Contributions paid to the unemployment insurance fund during the fiscal year 1963-64 amounted to $355,902,875—1964-65, $372,-901,531.

3. Unemployment insurance benefits paid in Canada during the fiscal year 1963-64 amounted to $365,654,718—1964-65, $335,-030,187.

4, 5 and 6. This information is not available.

ILLEGAL STILLS SEIZED

Question No. 1,191—Mr. Godin:

1. How many illegal stills were seized monthly during the years 1961, 1962 and 1963?

2. What was the total number of illegal stills seized during 1964 throughout (a) Canada (b) the province of Quebec (c) St. Maurice-Laflèche county (d) Portneuf county?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1.

	1961	1962	1963
January	12	32	29
February	18	21	34
March	18	22	22
April	23	23	23
May	19	21	28
June	13	11	12
July	16	15	27
August	15	19	16
September	15	12	22
October	19	15	24
November	14	33	28
December	33	41	38

2. (a) 247, (b) 45, (c) 7, (d) None.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

LETTERS OF ASSURANCE TO NOVA SCOTIA BUSINESSES

Question No. 1,192—Mr. Bower:

1. Have any businesses in Nova Scotia received letters of assurance as at February 28, 1966, that their plans for projects, if carried out, would meet the requirements of section 71H of the Income Tax Act or the Area Development Incentives Act and, if so (a) how many (b) how many in the federal constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare?

2. Have any further letters of assurance been sent out to businesses in Nova Scotia since February 28, 1966, and, if so (a) how many such letters have been sent (b) in particular, how many have been sent to firms located in or planning to locate in the federal constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare?

3. Is the government aware of any further public announcements by firms of their intentions to establish in designated national employment service areas in Nova Scotia and, if so (a) what are the names of these firms (b) where in Nova Scotia are they located?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. (a) and (b) Fifteen businesses in Nova Scotia had received letters of assurance as at February 28, 1966, that the plans for their projects, if carried out, would meet the requirements of section 71A of the Income Tax Act or the Area Development Incentives Act. One of these refers to a firm which plans to establish a project in the geographic area covered by the federal electoral constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare.

2. No additional letters of assurance have gone to businesses in Nova Scotia since February 28, 1966.

3. No.

QUALIFICATIONS OF PENITENTIARY INSTRUCTORS

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Orlikow:

What qualifications are required by the vocational training instructors and industrial instructors who are employed by the federal penitentiaries?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Vocational Training Instructors: Grade 12 or equivalent; matriculation from technical high school preferred. Trade background of at least five years at the journeyman level. Valid certificate of qualification of the trade in which he is to be employed. Valid teacher's certificate; verified teacher training or experience in instructional techniques. Knowledge of apprenticeship methods and training systems, including ability to plan, organize and teach courses; demonstrated knowledge and experience in man-management. Good character, sound judgment, acceptable personality. Good physical condition.

Industrial Instructors: Grade 10 or equivalent. From 3 to 5 years experience as a journeyman in the trade. Good working knowledge of all phases of the trade. Good working knowledge of the care, safe efficient use, running repair and maintenance of all machinery and equipment used in his shop. Fundamental knowledge of bookkeeping practices, first aid, safe working practices. Ability to provide on the job instruction. Good character, sound judgment, acceptable personality. Good physical condition.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,194—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many inmates of federal penitentiaries are now receiving training which is recognized by provincial and federal apprenticeship boards?

2. How many vacancies are there at present for vocational training instructors and school teachers in the various penitentiaries, and in what institutions do these vacancies exist?

3. How many hours does an inmate actually spend in vocational training shop per day, excluding taking counts and movement to and from place of training?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Full time formal trade school training, 371. Part time, on the job, and apprenticeship training, 383. Total, 754.

2. Vacancies are as follows:

	Vocational Training Instructors	Teachers
*Springhill	9	4
*Special correction unit (Quebec)	—	2
Cowansville Institution	8	4
Federal Training Centre	1	—
Collin's Bay Penitentiary	2	—
Saskatchewan Penitentiary	—	1
British Columbia Penitentiary	1	—
Matsqui Institution—male	11	4
*Matsqui Institution—female	5	2
Matsqui Institution—Pilot project	2	—
Total	39	17

*These institutions have an authorized establishment but are not in operation as yet.

3. 7.12 hours.

Questions

TRAINING OF PENITENTIARY STAFF

Question No. 1,195—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is remunerative recognition given to professional penitentiary staff who have qualifications exceeding the minimum requirements of the penitentiary service?

2. Are there monetary incentives provided for custodial staff in federal penitentiaries to improve their education and training for greater proficiency in job performance?

3. Do all custodial officers in correctional institutions receive training in the behavioural sciences by qualified professional staff?

4. Does the federal government contemplate the provision of training grants and bursaries for its employees in the field of correction and welfare in view of the fact that moneys are now made available to the provinces for similar training in these fields?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. The salaries of teachers, instructors, psychologists and classification officers are based on their education and experience. Leave with pay is granted to teachers to attend educational courses once in every third year.

2. Yes. In accordance with the correctional officers training plan, the custodial officer is given the opportunity to increase his knowledge and experience through regularly planned steps, both at the institution and staff colleges. He may then be placed on a regional eligible list for promotion as soon as a vacancy occurs.

3. Fundamentals in human behavioural sciences are taught in staff college courses. Follow up training is conducted at the institutions by psychiatrists and psychologists according to the needs at each institution.

4. In the case of the Canadian penitentiary service, financial arrangements have been made for officers in order that they may take postgraduate training in the field of corrections and welfare. A few selected officers attend universities full time and are granted allowances related to their salaries together with tuition fees.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many juvenile offenders are now in federal penitentiaries?

2. In how many cases did the court have presentence recommendations from social workers, probation officers, psychiatrists, etc.?

3. What facilities, if any, are there for segregation of these juveniles from the adult inmates?

Questions

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. 87.

2. This information is not available within this department.

3. No separate facilities exist as such. However, in the Montreal area, many are transferred to the federal training centre, an institution for young offenders and an attempt is made to segregate them from the older age group. In other institutions, attempts are also made to segregate juveniles from the adult inmates, as far as circumstances permit.

A new medium security institution at Cowansville has been recently opened and will accommodate young offenders and selected adults; some juveniles will likely be transferred there also. Three more institutions of the same type as Cowansville, at Springhill, N.S., Warkworth, Ontario, and Drumheller, Alberta will be opening in the next few months.

HOURS OF WORK OF PROFESSIONAL PENITENTIARY STAFF

Question No. 1,197—Mr. Orlikow:

How many of the psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians and dentists employed by the federal government work full-time at the penitentiaries and, of those who work part-time, how many hours per week does each work in the penitentiaries?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): There is a total of 15 psychologists, psychiatrists, physicians and dentists employed full time by the Canadian penitentiary service. A total of seven are employed part time and they work 15 hours per week. In addition, the penitentiary service has contracts with 29 individuals, i.e. psychiatrists, psychologists, physicians and dentists, for professional services in accordance with requirements.

HALIFAX AIRPORT TERMINAL ELEVATOR

Question No. 1,202—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Was provision made at the Halifax international airport terminal, at the time of its construction, for an elevator?

2. If so, would the government give consideration to its installation?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2. The department has under review a proposal to instal a passenger/freight elevator to serve the restaurant and lounge and to carry personnel and equipment to the Department of Transport offices on the upper floor.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

AIR CONDITIONING AT AIRPORT TERMINALS

Question No. 1,204—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Which Department of Transport airport terminals now have air-conditioning systems?

2. Does the government plan to extend such installations to any other terminals and, if so, at what locations?

3. Are any such installations being made at the present time and, if so, where?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Air conditioning systems have been provided for the operational and/or public areas of the following air terminal buildings: Gander, Nfld., Halifax, N.S., Fredericton, N.B., Quebec City, P.Q., Montreal, P.Q., Ottawa, Ont., Toronto, Ont., London, Ont., Windsor, Ont., North Bay, Ont., Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Lakehead, Ont., Winnipeg, Man., Regina, Sask., Saskatoon, Sask., Edmonton, Alta., Victoria, B.C., Port Hardy, B.C.

2. No provision has been made in the current (1966-67) fiscal year estimates to instal air conditioning systems in other air terminal buildings.

3. Yes, Moncton, N.B.

MARRIAGE ALLOWANCE FOR R.C.A.F. OFFICERS

Question No. 1,205—Mr. Tucker:

1. At what age can an R.C.A.F. officer receive marriage allowance?

2. Is there another subsistence allowance less than the marriage allowance available for married officers not eligible for marriage allowance?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. 23.

2. No, however, married officers who do not receive marriage allowance due to the age limitation are entitled, when married quarters are not available, to subsistence allowance but at a reduced rate which varies according to rank.

ARDA PROGRAM, MONTMAGNY-L'ISLET

Question No. 1,208—Mr. Berger:

1. How much money did the federal government spend under the ARDA program in Montmagny-L'Islet in 1965, and for what specific purposes was this money spent?

2. What is the estimated expenditure of the department concerned in regard to Montmagny-L'Islet for the year 1966?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. See the following list.

2. As it is the responsibility of the province to initiate and carry out the majority of projects and programs under ARDA, this information is not available.

PROJECTS APPROVED IN MONTMAGNY-L'ISLET IN 1965

Project No.	Approved	Description	Category	General Area of Activity	Total Cost	Federal Contribution
5005	March 1965	Study of farm woodlots to improve management and yields	Research	Islet, Kamouraska, & Rivière-du-Loup Counties	$194,914	$97,457
24013	June 1965	Socio-economic survey of population activity—St. Marcel municipality	Research	l'Islet Co.	5,450	2,725

PROFESSIONAL CLINICAL PERSONNEL, PENITENTIARY SERVICE

Question No. 1,211—Mr. Ballard:

1. Are there any professional clinical treatment personel (i.e., those eligible for membership in their professional associations), namely, psychiatrists, psychologists, and social workers, in the Canadian penitentiary service and, if so, what are their names and present appointments?

2. What is the establishment for personnel in each of the above professions in the Canadian penitentiary service?

3. Do any vacancies exist at present and; if so, how many?

4. Does the Canadian penitentiary service have provision for bursaries for personnel to take postgraduate professional training at Canadian universities?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. (a) There are in the Canadian penitentiary service eight psychiatrists and all are members of a professional association. They are: Dorchester, Dr. Philippe Michel, part time; Dr. R. G. Crandall. St. Vincent de Paul, Dr. Bruno M. Cormier, part time; Dr. D'a Voyer. Kingston Penitentiary, Prison for Women, Joyceville, Collin's Bay, Dr. George D. Scott, full time; Dr. R. J. MacCaldon, part time; and consultants when required. Manitoba, Dr. S. D. Schultz, part time psychiatrist. Saskatchewan, Referral made to North Battleford Institution and to Yorkton Institution. British Columbia, Dr. D. C. MacDonald, part time psychiatrist. Matsqui Institution, Dr. D. Craigen.

(b) There are eleven psychologists in the penitentiary service. They are: Dorchester, Mabey, D. E. Regional headquarters (Que.), Morin, J. A., Ligonde, P., Tremblay, J. L. J., Charron, M. O. A. I. (Miss). Regional headquarters (Ont.), Martinez, Paloma R. (Mrs.), Benson, M. (Miss). Saskatchewan, Geddes, J. H. Regional headquarters (west.), Des-Lauriers, Dr. P. L. Matsqui, Ross, W. J. Gardy, T. T.

(c) In addition there are 81 classification officers including 23 who have postgraduate degrees in sociology, education or social work and work in a professional capacity. They are: Dorchester Penitentiary, M. J. Gallant, K. H. Chappell, Z. J. A. Gaudet. St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, G. Lemire, J. R. R. Nadeau, J. A. M. E. Gosselin. Cowansville Institution, J. M. G. E. Abgral, J. P. M. A. Lafleur. Federal Training Centre, J. M. G. Lemire. Leclerc Institution, J. R. R. Martin, J. L. R. M. Roy. Regional headquarters (Ont.), S. M. Farrell. Prison for Women, Mrs. M. E. Batstone. Manitoba Penitentiary, O. M. Chaudhry, C. E. Dumaine.

Saskatchewan Penitentiary, E. C. Tremblay, W. M. Reydon. Regional headquarters (west.), W. Mort. Matsqui Institution, C. L. Clegg, J. F. M. Edwards-Evans, B. C. Murphy, D. R. MacGregor, Miss D. Kvietys.

2.

	Establishment
Psychiatrists (part time)	8
Psychiatrists (full time)	1
Psychologists (full time)	30
Classification officers	92

3.

	Vacant Positions
Psychiatrists (part time)	4
Psychiatrists (full time)	—
Psychologists (full time)	18
Classification officers	11

Questions

4. The Canadian penitentiary service does not have bursaries as such but financial arrangements are made for officers in order that they may take postgraduate training at universities offering correctional and welfare courses. A few selected officers attend universities full time and are granted tuition fees and allowances equal to their salaries. Three officers are completing master degrees this year under this plan.

MENTAL HEALTH RESEARCH GRANTS

Question No. 1,214—Mr. Orlikow:

Are any psychiatric research projects being conducted by the universities, governments, and private foundations being financed by federal health grants for the current year and, if so (a) what is the value of each grant (b) what is the total value of these grants for mental health research being done in each province (c) what is the total value of these grants for Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. Under the public health research grant, the Department of National Health and Welfare has allocated funds in 1966-67 toward the conduct of research into the prevention and treatment of mental illness and for the promotion of mental health in Canada at various Canadian universities, hospitals and other health agencies. (a) Seventy one research projects are being supported with the values of the grants varying from $975 to $41,440. (b) Newfoundland, $13,673; Prince Edward Island, $11,269; Nova Scotia, $29,690; New Brunswick, Nil; Quebec, $158,963; Ontario, $186,300; Manitoba, $48,758; Saskatchewan, $118,016; Alberta, $45,970; British Columbia, $139,538; Northwest Territories, Nil; Yukon Territory, Nil. (c) $752,177.

MENTAL HEALTH GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 1,215—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Are any psychiatrists in training for the current year in receipt of training grants from the federal government and, if so (a) how many (b) what is the value of each grant (c) what is the total value of the grants (d) what are the plans for next year's grants?

2. Have any commitments been made for the next five years to the universities and the medical colleges, in the field of mental health?

3. Have any requests been made by the medical colleges for the next five years in the field of mental health?

4. Have any requests from the medical colleges in the field of mental health gone up, year by year in the past five years and, if so, how much?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes. (a) 67. (b) Payments to trainees taking professional training are set by the provinces according to the need of the individual, but they are not to exceed $250 monthly for persons without dependants and $300 for persons with dependants. Besides a bursary, a trainee may receive travel expenses to and from the place of training only once during the training period; transportation costs to and from the place of training when a trainee is out on field work outside his training centre; tuition fees as actually charged by the training institution; and an allowance for books and technical supplies not exceeding $50 for the full course. Bursaries may be claimed for trainees during the period of actual training. This period may include a reasonable period of travel to and from the training centre. It is understood that the provinces in certain cases supplement the federal assistance. For short training courses, the duration of which does not exceed three months, actual reasonable living expenses may be requested. Living expenses are to be accounted for on the basis of provincial regulations governing travelling and maintenance expenses. (c) $55,565 for 1966/67. (d) The national health grants represent a federal-provincial program. Provincial plans for the submission of project against next year's and, to some extent, subsequent years' grants are presently under study in all provinces. The resulting submissions of projects and consultations with provincial planners will begin in December of this year.

2. See answer 1 (d).

3. The annual submissions of projects received from the provinces on behalf of training, research and health services in medical colleges, request the continuance of federal assistance in subsequent years, although a five year period is not always specified.

4. The following funds were made available on the request of the provinces to Canadian universities and their medical colleges in the field of mental health: 1961-62, $1,141,793; 1962-63, $1,246,549; 1963-64, $955,342; 1964-65, $895,033; 1965-66, $825,243.

APPLICATIONS FOR RESEARCH GRANTS

Question No. 1,216—Mr. Orlikow:

Has the Department of National Health and Welfare received any applications for grants to finance research projects and, if so (a) how many in each of the past three years (b) what was their total dollar value (c) how many were approved in full (d) how many were approved in part only (e) how many were refused, and in each case, for what reason or reasons?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes.

	1963-64	1964-65	1965-66
(a)	370	353	381
(b)	$4,665,989	$4,262,952	$6,798,183
(c)	85	84	101
(d)	106	57	83

A few projects were cancelled or altered at the request of the researchers on their sponsoring provinces.

Research projects do not receive approval as submitted under the national health grants when they exceed the funds allocated for this purpose or when they are considered by appraisers, consultants and advisory committees to be poorly designed or unsound research.

DRUG PURCHASES FOR VETERANS AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,217—Mr. Brand:

Will all purchasing of drugs for the Department of Veterans Affairs be transferred to the Department of Defence Production on April 1, 1966 and, if so (a) will there be a qualified pharmacist or physician on the purchasing staff (b) will all purchasing be done by regular personnel?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Yes, responsibility for the purchasing of drugs for the Department of Veterans Affairs was transferred to the Department of Defence Production on April 1, 1966 excluding emergency requirements and requirements of a non-recurring nature costing less than $25 per order. (a) Yes, there is a qualified pharmacist on the purchasing staff. (b) Yes, all purchasing will be done by regular personnel augmented by personnel transferred from the Department of Veterans Affairs including the qualified pharmacist. In addition, technical assistance is available from professional personnel in the customer department.

PAYMENTS TO ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Referring to the answer to question No. 481 (Hansard, page 2920 for March 21, 1966) are the persons employed by the electoral boundaries commissions paid salaries and expenses by cheques issued by the comptroller of the treasury?

2. If so, what are the names of the persons to whom the comptroller of the treasury issued cheques for such salaries and expenses during the years 1965 and 1966, and what was the amount of the cheques issued to each person for salaries and expenses?

3. If such persons are paid otherwise than by cheques so issued by the comptroller of the treasury, by what technique are they paid salaries and expenses?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

1. Yes.

2. Details are in the attached listing.

3. Not applicable.

Electoral Boundaries Commission

Names, Salaries and Expenses of Persons Employed

Name	1965			1966 to March 31st
Manitoba	Salary	Expenses	Total	Salary	Expenses	Total
Gilpin, George Ernest	7,110.00	435.65	7,545.65	1,200.00		1,200.00
Devion, Sandra Anne	3,133.88		3,133.88
Beresford, Henry Edward	840.00		840.00
Saskatchewan
Malone, Edward C.	8,280.00	550.50	8,830.50	1,020.00		1,020.00
Geddes, Virginia	892.50		892.50	61.25		61.25
Viminitz, Max	140.00		140.00
Alberta
Head, Ivan L.	8,310.00	2,153.81	10,463.81	1,020.00	256.75	1,276.75
Cameron, Ann M.	4,169.75		4,169.75	301.75		301.75
O'Sullivan, J. F. B.	1,725.00	654.30	2,379.30
Orobko, W. P.	350.00	330.45	680.45		48.00	48.00

Questions

Name	1965			1966 to March 31st
British Columbia	Salary	Expenses	Total	Salary	Expenses	Total
Wilson, Robert	4,986.00	783.90	5,769.90
Wilson, Mrs. Robert					110.00	110.00
Gracey, Barbara Doreen	5,971.50	484.09	6,455.59	915.00		915.00
Cherry, D. H.		141.77	141.77
Moore, M. V.		88.00	88.00		90.50	90.50
Nelson, J.		111.50	111.50
Official Court Reporter	637.80		637.80
Newfoundland
Burridge, John C.	700.00		700.00
Wade, J. Timothy	7,560.00	590.70	8,150.70	870.00		870.00
Moore, Dorothy	698.25		698.25	42.00		42.00
Nova Scotia
Anderson, Donald De Blois	8,370.00	404.50	8,774.50
MacDonald, Heather J.	2,999.62	124.90	3,124.52
Lawson, Kenneth G.	47.25	49.53	96.78
Martin, Patricia Pauline	194.30		194.30
March, John E. R.	1,085.00		1,085.00
Blackie, Gordon	80.00	5.20	85.20
Fisher, Andrew	80.00	23.85	103.85
Wodolawski, Marie	8.40		8.40
Prince Edward Island
MacLeod, Ian M.	8,280.00	169.30	8,449.30	720.00		720.00
MacKenzie, Carroll A.*	3,306.00		3,306.00
Tweedy, C. S. Mrs.*				427.50		427.50
Brophy, J. A.	25.00		25.00
McKenna, J. C.	25.00		25.00
Scott, Alex	25.00		25.00
Simmons, Joyce M.	85.50	5.90	91.40
New Brunswick
Turnbull, Wallace S.	8,460.00	651.55	9,111.55	810.00		810.00
Bonnycastle, Hilary Ann	2,932.50	308.10	3,240.60
Pierce, M. Elizabeth	669.75		669.75	11.75		11.75
Leblanc, Lorraine C.	376.00	300.20	676.20
Quebec
Caron, Yves	8,388.00	548.50	8,936.50	900.00		900.00
Allard, Therese	3,960.00		3,960.00	720.00		720.00
Langlois, Claude	70.00		70.00
Tanguay, Gerard	490.00	52.80	542.80
Martel, Fernand	490.00	90.40	580.40
Ontario
Gadsby, Sidney J.	8,496.00	542.30	9,038.30	900.00		900.00
Tappenden, Charles W.	385.00		385.00
Dell, Sophie	4,130.00		4,130.00	700.00		700.00

* Same person i.e. subsequent to Dec. 1965.
Tweedy (nee MacKenzie) Carroll W. Mrs.

REGINA, SASK.—SECURITY BOND ON HOUSING DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,220—Mr. Brand:

1. Did Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation require a labour and material payment bond by the contractor, G. Barker Construction Limited, for the benefit of sub-contractors supply labour or material required in the performance of the contract for the low rental housing development, block A, Glen Elm Park south, plan 63-R-25686, Regina, Saskatchewan?

[Mr. Sharp.]

2. If so (a) what is the name of the insurance company acting as surety to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (b) what is the amount of the bond (c) was the surety obliged to make payment under the bond to subcontractor claimants and, if so (i) what total amount has been paid to the said claimants (ii) what are the particulars of payments made (iii) do any claimants remain unpaid by the surety and, if so, what are the particulars of same with amounts claimed?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour):

1. Yes.

2. (a) The Dominion Insurance Corporation. (b) Performance bond, $712,119.88; Labour and material payment bond, $712,119.88. (c) Yes. (i) $173,592.01.

(ii) Payee	Amount	Particulars
	$
B. B. Torchinsky & Assoc. Ltd.	18.00	Testing of concrete.
Precast Concrete Limited	373.12	Supply of precast concrete material.
Drummond & Reeves Limited	335.70	Supply of clean out doors and thimbles.
Mackenzie & Thayer Limited	101.85	Supply of white exterior stucco.
Ross M. Rodger Limited	85.31	Particulars
City Lumber Yards Limited	3,294.14	Supply of Bostitch staples.
C. F. Sterne & Sons	2,451.47	Supply of lumber.
Pilot Butte Sand & Gravel Co. Limited	388.86	Supply of mortar buff. Supply of brick sand.
Con-Spec Sales Limited	346.61	Supply of Cop-R-Flash and Sure Klean.
Peacock Electric	5,928.45	Supply of electrical equipment and labour.
Clark Roofing (Sask.) Ltd.	5,068.55	Supply of roofing materials and labour.
Furnasman Limited	2,989.69	Supply of heating equipment and labour.
Silverline Decorators Co. Ltd.	800.00	Supply of labour (painting).
Modern Insulators Limited	697.12	Supply of insulating materials and labour.
Redi-Mix Concrete Limited	12,994.14	Supply of Redi-Mix concrete.
Cindercrete Products Limited	13,395.42	Supply of concrete building blocks.
Stewart Reeson Masonry Prod. Ltd.	5,613.35	Supply of brick, tile and cement.
Dominion Lime & Brick Ltd.	4,724.10	Supply of brick.
Ontario Culvert & Metal Prod.	5,300.00	Supply of window wells and gates.
Saskatchewan Steel Fabricators Ltd.	2,226.87	Supply of screen stops, angle frames, hinge assemblies and canopy posts.
Mechanical Dry Wall (Northern) Ltd.	2,340.00	Supply of vapor barrier and labour.
Marshall Wells of Canada Ltd.	386.40	Supply of hardware.
William S. Salmon	21,488.08	Supply of plumbing and heating equipment and labour.
Workmen's Compensation Board	179.66	Assessment by Workmen's Comp. Board.
B. B. Torchinsky & Assoc. Ltd.	20.00	Testing of concrete.
Fred Kroeskamp (labourer)	99.32	Supply of labour.
Arnold Kroeskamp (labourer)	55.60	Supply of labour.
Western Aluminum Products Ltd.	32,135.22	Supply of aluminum windows, sills and casings.
Pawliw Excavating	3,000.00	Supply of labour and including equipment.
Rogers Lumber Company	41,327.45	Supply of lumber.
Machenzie & Thayer Limited	700.00	Rental of equipment and payment for equipment lost on site.
C. N. Weber Limited	2,840.99	Supply of hardware.
Hauser Trenching & Excavating	64.00	Supply of labour.
Westeel Products Limited	1,822.54	Supply of damp-proof courses and miscellaneous flashings, and structural steel frames.
	$173,592.01

Questions

(iii) Yes.

Payee	Amount	Particulars
D. Schouten	Included in Gormans Ltd. claim on Saskatoon project ($7,800)	This claimant apparently was an independent contractor in Regina and the claim is subject of litigation in conjunction with the Saskatoon claim. (See Question No. 1,221).

SASKATOON, SASK.—SECURITY BOND ON HOUSING DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,221—Mr. Brand:

1. Did Central Mortage and Housing Corporation require a labour and material payment bond by the contractor, G. Barker Construction Limited, for the benefit of subcontractors supplying labour or material required in the performance of the contract for the low rental housing development in Saskatoon?

2. If so (a) what is the name of the insurance company acting as surety to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (b) what is the amount of the bond (c) was the surety obliged to make payment under the bond to subcontractor claimants and, if so (i) what total amount has been paid to the said claimants (ii) what are the particulars of payments made (iii) do any claimants remain unpaid by the surety and, if so, what are the particulars of same with amounts claimed?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour):

1. Yes.

2. (a) The Dominion Insurance Corporation; (b) Performance bond, $515,266.00; Labour and material payment bond, $515,266.00. (c) yes. (i) $28,871.89;

(ii) Payee	Amount $	Particulars
Mechanical Drywall (Sask.) Ltd.	6,991.85	Compromise settlement because of back charges by Barker and Metro Painting. Basically payment is for gypsum wallboard and vapor barriers.
Con-Spec Sales Limited	216.82	This is for liquid sealer.
Asphalt Services Limited	429.00	Asphalt paving of play area.
City Lumber Yards Limited	90.58	Lumber supply.
D.H.I. Limited	1,500.00	Materials supplied—windows and glass inserts. Compromise settlement $1,500.00.
Metro Painting (Brantford)	15,935.46	Compromise settlement of supreme court action for painting and holdback. $5,340.00 paid to Metro Painting and D. F. Miller, Q.C. $10,595.46 paid to Metro Painting.
Bennet Floors	3,604.18	Materials.
Redi Mix Concrete	104.00	Compromise settlement—materials.
	$28,871.89

(iii) Yes.

Payee	Amount	Particulars
Winnipeg Supply & Fuel Co.	—	Have started action against Barker in Regina. Default judgment. Garnishee order against CMHC. Paid $5,686.44 into court. Credits $1,250.00. Offer to compromise is made.
Gorman's Limited	Approx. $7,800.00	This is a supplier to a subcontractor (Schouten) and the matter at the present time is in litigation. Compromise indicated. (See Question No. 1,220).

CONTROL OVER TECHNICAL SCHOOL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,222—Mr. Forrestall:

Are any controls, regulations or legislation at present in effect in Canada to ensure that federal moneys extended to the provinces on a cost-sharing basis for technical school development programs are used for this specific purpose and, if so, what are they?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes. Control over the uses to which federal contributions toward technical and vocational training projects and programs are put by the provinces is exercised through the provisions of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and the technical and vocational training and apprenticeship training agreements made thereunder with the provinces. The act and the agreements authorize federal contributions to be made only in respect of costs or expenditures incurred by the provinces for purposes specified therein. The act describes these purposes in general terms; the agreements describe them in detail and also make provision for individual approval of capital expenditure and certain other projects by the minister or administrators of his department. The agreements further require that the provinces maintain full records of all expenditures and commitments made as well as revenues and refunds received in respect of such agreements, and that the provinces permit access to such records, documents and files as may be deemed necessary by the comptroller of the treasury, the Auditor General of Canada, or other authorized officers of the federal government for the audit of expenditure under the agreements.

NATIONAL DEFENCE PREVAILING RATE WAGES

Question No. 1,224—Mr. Madill:

1. In areas of Canada where the Department of National Defence is the largest employer of a single trade or occupation, what methods are used in determining wage scales for prevailing rate employees in that trade?

2. What base is used for determining the wage rate for prevailing rate painters at Camp Borden?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned: 1. Under the present government prevailing rate policy, the Treasury Board approves pursuant to section 4 of the prevailing rate general regulations, prevailing rates of pay for public service employees. Those rates are determined by the Treasury Board following surveys by the Department of Labour of the wages prevailing in the private sector for similar trades in all departments in that area. The fact that one employing department may be the largest employer of a single trade or occupation in the area has no bearing on the wage determination. The exceptions to this method are found in the two naval dockyards where the trades engaged in ship repair or allied work are determined on the basis of rates paid in shipyards either on the east or west coast as the case may be. Although the basis of determination varies in these two cases, the Department of Labour still retains the responsibility for recommending the rates for Treasury Board approval.

In so far as the Department of Labour is concerned: 1. In such areas, the rates recommended for payment to prevailing rate employees are based on rates paid by private employers to employees doing comparable work in the area of employment. If there is insufficient local data on which to base recommendations, a wider area is used.

2. Barrie, Ontario.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,226—Mr. Crossman:

What was the total amount to the credit of the unemployment insurance fund on January 31, each year since 1956?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): January 31, 1956, $885,542,796; 1957, $916,429,488; 1958, $838,917,441; 1959, $586,990,921; 1960, $445,885,387; 1961, $283,742,150; 1962, $135,877,305; 1963, $71,803,065; 1964, $42,895,204; 1965, $75,796,646; 1966, $161,919,787.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,227—Mr. Orange:

1. Does the government have any plans to open one or more permanent unemployment insurance commission offices in the Northwest Territories and, if not, for what reason?

2. Were any claims paid by unemployment insurance commission offices in Canada in the years 1964 and 1965 for persons resident in the district of Franklin, district of Keewatin and the district of Mackenzie, and, if so (a) how many (b) of these how many were with respect to Eskimo and Indian residents of these areas (c) what was the location of the offices paying such claims?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1. The unemployment insurance commission advises that it has no immediate plans to open one or more permanent offices in the Northwest Territories as the requirements for service could not be justified at this time.

2. (a) and (b) This information is not available. (c) The district of Franklin is serviced by the Ottawa local office. The district of Keewatin is serviced by the Winnipeg local office. The district of Mackenzie is serviced by the Edmonton local office.

REVISION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Question No. 1,236—Mr. Ballard:

1. Does the government intend to implement the recommendations of the Gill report on the Unemployment Insurance Act?

2. Does the government intend to submit to parliament a bill revising the structure of the Unemployment Insurance Act and, if so, when?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): 1. Careful consideration has been and is being given to the Gill commission's recommendations and the results of such consideration will be reflected in the proposed legislation on unemployment insurance.

2. The Speech from the Throne contains the assurance that the government intends to proceed with legislation amending or bringing up to date the Unemployment Insurance Act.

MONCTON, N.B.—OPENING OF AIR TERMINAL

Question No. 1,237—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date will the new air terminal, at present under construction at Moncton, New Brunswick, be opened for use by the travelling public?

2. Has a date been set for the official opening of the new air terminal and, if so, what is that date?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. It is expected that the new terminal building at Moncton will be opened to the travelling public in July, 1966; but the exact date has not been determined.

2. The official opening date will not be determined until after the date has been established when the building will be opened to the public.

VIEILLES FORGES SAINT-MAURICE HISTORICAL SITE

Question No. 1,240—Mr. Mongrain:

1. Does the government intend to contribute to the restoration of the historical site known as Vieilles Forges Saint-Maurice in Trois-Rivières?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

2. If so (a) what measures will the government take (b) has work on this project now begun and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. This historical site is owned by the province of Quebec; the federal government has not been asked by the provincial government to make any contribution in this matter.

2. N/A.

REDUCTIONS IN HEALTH DEPARTMENT GRANTS

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Orlikow:

1. During the last fiscal year, were any projects not approved, or reduced in amount, because the Department of National Health and Welfare did not have funds allocated to assist the provinces with an orderly development of their mental health programs and, if so, how many?

2. During the last fiscal year, were any hospital construction projects refused, or reduced in amount, because the Department of National Health and Welfare did not have funds allocated to assist the provinces with an orderly development of hospital facilities and, if so, how many?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No. The provinces submitted projects for the development of their mental health programs within the amounts of allocation for the year 1965-66.

2. No. All projects submitted by the provinces for federal assistance on behalf of hospital construction have been approved under the terms of the hospital construction grant.

SOCIAL WELFARE TRAINING

Question No. 1,249—Mr. Orlikow:

Has any money been allocated under the welfare training grants to help pay for the education of people desiring to improve their qualifications in the field of social work and, if so (a) how much (b) how many people are now at recognized professional schools under the provisions of these grants (c) what are the amounts of the bursaries provided (d) has any money been allocated for research projects in the field of social service (e) have any plans been developed for research into appropriate use of sub-professional staff in the field of social welfare?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. (a) $280,265 was approved for the fiscal year 1965-66 to assist persons taking full time graduate training at schools of social work. (b) 223 persons. (c) The bursary, training grants scholarship and fellowship provisions are used to assist persons taking social work training. Costs of bursaries and training grants are shared with the provinces. Scholarships and fellowships are a 100 per cent federal responsibility.

The amount of a bursary is determined by the provincial welfare authorities. The federal government shares up to a maximum of $1,500 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependants. The provincial welfare authorities also determine the amount of training grants with the federal share not to exceed $4,000 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependants. These grants are reduced proportionately for periods less than one year. Necessary travel costs are also paid.

Scholarships and fellowships are awarded by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The maximum amount of a scholarship is $2,000 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependants. The maximum amount of a fellowship is $4,000 for a calendar year, plus $500 for dependants. These awards are reduced proportionately for periods less than one year. Necessary travel costs are also paid.

(d) Yes. In 1965-66 research projects totalling $133,472 were approved. (e) Yes, through the technical and vocational training agreements of the Department of Labour and the welfare grants program of the Department of National Health and Welfare, provincial departments received assistance in 1965-66 to undertake programs of training for sub-professional personnel, and these programs will be evaluated in terms of their effectiveness in producing competent personnel for the welfare field.

SALES TAX ON DRUGS

Question No. 1,253—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government received representations from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association regarding the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs and, if so, what has been its reply?

Answer: Yes. The budget speech, as reported on page 3387 of Hansard for March 29, 1966, reads as follows:

I renew the undertaking given last year by my predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon, that if the considerations of the special committee of the house on food and drugs lead it to recommend that drugs should be exempt from sales tax as part of a comprehensive and effective program to reduce the prices of drugs, then the government would be prepared to recommend such action by means of a special statute covering all the measures required to give effect to such a program.

WHARF FACILITIES, DALHOUSIE, N.B.

Question No. 1,254—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Does the government intend to construct a wharf and docking facilities at Dalhousie, New Brunswick, during the present fiscal year?

2. If so, what will be the size of the facilities and the estimated cost of same?

3. Will these facilities be operated by the government, or by private interests?

4. If by private interests, what is the name of the person or company who will operate same?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

MULTIFORM EXUDATIVE ERYTHEMA

Question No. 1,256—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Has the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare received recent complaints about several cases of multiform exudative erythema?

2. Has the directorate found that the drugs sulfadimethoxine and sulphamethoxyphyridazine, when taken alone or with some other product, are in any way connected with these cases and, if so (a) has the directorate alerted the medical profession in this regard (b) has the directorate warned the manufacturers of these drugs and what was the nature of the warning?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. (a) Yes. The Department of National Health and Welfare on February 4, 1966, informed all doctors in Canada that the Food and Drug Directorate had received published information that Stevens-Johnson syndrome (erythema multiforme exudativum) had been associated with the use of long-acting sulphonamides as well as other drugs. (b) The manufacturers of long-acting sulphonamides have been informed that their labels must carry suitable warning statements such as: (1) Stevens-Johnson syndrome has been associated with the use of long-acting sulphonamides as well as some other drugs; (2) the dosage recommended should not be exceeded, and (3) the patient must be closely observed, and should any adverse reaction develop, the drug should be discontinued immediately.

[English]

ALEX STORM, NORTHERN AFFAIRS EMPLOYEE

Question No. 1262—Mr. McCleave:

1. Was Alex Storm, an employee of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources at Louisbourg, Nova Scotia, at any time within the last five years sent at Departmental expense to Paris, France and, if so, for what purpose?

2. Was equipment of the department, or information in its possession, used by Mr. Storm to carry out a successful search for treasure trove near Louisbourg?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. No.

2. No.

NATIONAL PARKS POLICY STATEMENT

Question No. 1266—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

Did the Prime Minister make a statement in Calgary in October, 1965, in regard to National Parks policy and, if so, what was that statement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes. Such a statement was included in my speech at the Palliser hotel in Calgary on October 20, 1965, during the election campaign. Following is an extract from the transcript of what I said:

There is another matter worrying you out here, and I understand you are worried, and that is that we are interfering in the administration of public parks in a way which will violate the rights of certain people who have vested interest in those parks. I understand this worry and anxiety and I have written one of our candidates who is particularly concerned with this, and I would like to read what wrote him, and this is a week or so ago.

I said: "I want to dispel this anxiety. There will be full opportunity for park residents and others concerned to make their views known before any final decision is taken by government". And I repeat that. I am glad to give that pledge. "In many cases" I said, "there are difficulties in reconciling the long term interests of Canadians generally"—and we have a responsibility in the federal government for the interests of Canadians generally and their interests in public parks—"the difficulty of reconciling that with the legitimate rights of individuals who have acquired very specific interests, such as leaseholds in the parks. It is not easy to solve such problems to the satisfaction of all concerned but every effort will be made to do this, and to this end the government will give careful consideration to the views of all those who are concerned, before deciding what further action it should take in the light of the provisions laid down by parliament in the National Parks Act".

I hope this commitment on my part will remove some of the understandable anxiety that is felt.

FEDERAL MEDICAL INSURANCE PLAN

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Thompson:

Under the medical insurance plan which covers federal government personnel, what is the premium for each of the following groups (a) R.C.M.P. (b) armed forces (c) postal employees (d) civil servants generally?

[Mr. McCleave.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

	Member
(a) and (b)
Main plan
(1) Member with one dependant	$2.05
(2) Member with more than one dependant	3.07
Optional plan in respect of persons insured under The Saskatchewan Medical Care Insurance Act, 1961
(1) Member with one dependant	$ .37
(2) Member with more than one dependant	.56
(c) and (d)	Employee
Main plan
(1) Single employee	$1.35
(2) Employee with one dependant	3.65
(3) Employee with more than one dependant	4.35
Optional plan in respect of persons insured under The Saskatchewan Medical Care Insurance Act, 1961
(1) Single employee	$ .26
(2) Employee with one dependant
(a) both resident in Saskatchewan	.63
(b) employee only resident in Saskatchewan	2.31
(c) dependant only resident in Saskatchewan	1.72
(3) Employee with more than one dependant
(a) all resident in Saskatchewan	.82
(b) employee only resident in Saskatchewan	3.33
(c) one dependant only not resident in Saskatchewan	1.91
(d) employee only not resident in Saskatchewan	1.91

EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

Question No. 1,271—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government intend to comply with the request of the Farmers' Union to establish an eastern feed grain agency and, if so, when will the decision be made known?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): The notice of motion introducing the livestock feed assistance act providing for the creation of a Canadian livestock feed board has appeared in Votes and Proceedings No. 56 of the House of Commons of Canada, April 5, 1966.

SAFETY IN CONSTRUCTION FIELD

Question No. 1,272—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the government received a request from the president of the Confederation of National Trades Unions (CNTU) for an inquiry on safety in the construction field?

2. Has the federal Department of Labour specific regulations on this subject and, if so, what are they?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. No such request has been received in the Department of Labour.

2. No.

CREDIT FOR FARMERS

Question No. 1,277—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government intend to institute interest-free credit or credit at cost for farmers?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Credit is now provided to farmers through the Farm Credit Corporation at or below cost. If there should be any change in this policy, it will be announced.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—VISITS BY MINISTER TO N.S. BASES

Question No. 1,286—Mr. McCleave:

Have major bases in Nova Scotia been visited by the Minister of National Defence and/or the Associate Minister of National Defence and, if so (a) what bases (b) on what dates?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Associate Minister of National Defence has not yet visited any major bases in Nova Scotia. Those visited by the Minister of National Defence are listed below: HMC Dockyard, Halifax, January 22 and 23, 1964; HMCS Stadacona, January 22 and 23, 1964; HMCS Shearwater, January 22 and 23, 1964; HMCS Cornwallis, January 23, 1964; RCAF Station Greenwood, January 24, 1964.

DEFERMENT APPLICATIONS UNDER LABOUR CODE

Question No. 1,287—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South):

Up to March 31, 1966, were any applications received by the Minister of Labour under section 52 (1) for the deferment of the operation of section 11 of the Canada labour code and, if so (a) how many (b) how many orders, if any, granting such deferment were granted by the minister (c) what were the names of those who made application (d) what were the names of those to whom the orders were granted?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Yes (a) 242 covering 279 establishments; (b) 29; (c) A list of these applications can be found in part I of the Canada Gazettes of August 28 at page 2,831, November 6 at page 3,623 and December 11, 1965, at page 4,071; (d) One general order respecting feed mills, feed warehouses and seed cleaning mills was published in the Canada Gazette part II of February 23, 1966; In addition orders were granted to the following: CJPM-TV Inc., CHSA-TV Ltd., CKRT-TV Ltée., CKTR (1958) Ltée, The Galt Broadcasting Company Ltd., Goodwill Broadcasters of Quebec Ltd., Radio Témiscamingue Inc., Sask-Alta Broadcasters Ltd., Abitibi Provincial Inc., Atomic Transfer Ltd., Central Truck Lines Ltd., Easson's Ltd., Gates and Watson Ltd., Husband Transport Ltd., J. Kearns Transport Ltd., The Patricia Transportation Co. Ltd. Pontiac Bus Lines Ltd., Nu-Way Express Ltd., Reimer Express Lines Ltd., Renfrew County Bus Lines Ltd., Rimouski Transport Ltée., Sarlon Coach Lines Ltd., Scott Interprovincial Truck Lines Ltd., S M T (Eastern) Ltd., Soo-Security Motorways Ltd., Star Delivery (Ottawa-Hull) Ltd., Western Canada Whaling Co. Ltd., Northern Telephone Ltd.

DEFERMENT ORDERS UNDER LABOUR CODE

Question No. 1,288—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South):

1. How many orders of deferment or suspension of part 1 of the Canada labour code have been issued by the Minister of Labour under the provisions of section 51 of the Canada labour code up to March 31, 1966?

2. What are the names of the applicants to whom such orders apply, and what is the respective period of deferment or suspension in each case?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. 7.

2. One general order respecting flour mills, feed mills, feed warehouses and seed cleaning mills was published in the Canada Gazette, Part II of February 23, 1966. This order defers the operation of part I of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code for a period of eighteen months from the 1st day of February, 1966. In addition, orders were granted deferring the operation of Part I to the following for the periods hereinafter set out: Canadian National Railways (longshoremen employed at ferry terminal, North Sydney, N.S.) 18 months from October 1, 1965. CKRT-TV Ltée., to December 31, 1966; Goodwill Broadcasters of Quebec Ltd., to September 30, 1966. Mystery Lake Broadcasting Ltd., to December 31, 1966. Sask-Alta Broadcasters Ltd., to December 31, 1966. CKSA-TV Ltd., to December 31, 1966.

APPLICATIONS UNDER SECTION 9(1) OF LABOUR CODE

Question No. 1,289—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South):

As of March 31, 1966, were any applications received by the Minister of Labour under section 9 (1) of the Canada labour code and, if so (a) how many (b) what were the names of the applicants (c) with respect to such applications, how many permits were issued (d) what are the names of the applicants to whom such permits were issued?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Yes. (a) Thirteen (b) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Pan American World Airways, Inc., Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Stanrock Uranium Mines Limited, The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, The Bell Telephone Company of Canada (c) Eleven (d) Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Pan American World Airways, Inc., Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, Stanrock Uranium Mines Limited, The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

INQUIRIES UNDER LABOUR CODE

Question No. 1,290—Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South):

Were any inquiries initiated under the provisions of section 51, subsection 2 of the Canada labour code up to March 31, 1966 and, if so (a) how many (b) in how many such cases has the governor general in council deferred or suspended the operation of part 1 of the Canada labour code (c) what are the respective federal works, undertakings or businesses and classes of employees therein, with respect to which such orders in council have been made?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): No inquiries were initiated under the provisions of subsection 2 of section 51 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code up to March 31, 1966.

APPOINTMENT OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS

Question No. 1,291—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What is the accepted technique whereby the Governor General is advised in respect of the appointment of Lieutenant Governors and/or provincial administrators?

2. How long has this technique been in use?

3. Has any other technique been used?

4. If so, what techniques and on what specific occasions?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

5. Has any Lieutenant Governor ever been appointed pursuant to an instrument of advice?

6. If so, what Lieutenant Governors, and when were they appointed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister):

1. Minute of council.

2. Since July 1, 1867.

3. No.

4. See answer to part 3.

5. No.

6. See answer to part 5.

SECOND NEW ENGLAND-NOVA SCOTIA FERRY SERVICE

Question No. 1,292—Mr. Bower:

1. Has the Department of Transport received the Margeson report on a second New England-Nova Scotia ferry service?

2. If so, what action is being taken to provide a more comprehensive service?

3. When is it estimated that this service can be put into effect?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

DISCREPANCY IN RE-ENLISTMENT BONUSES

Question No. 1,294—Mr. Smith:

Is the government giving consideration to a plan permitting airmen and sailors to re-enlist at the end of the third year of their first five year enlistment period so that the apparent discrepancy between soldiers on one hand, and airmen and sailors on the other hand, in the payment of re-enlistment bonuses may be removed?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Effective 1 May, 1966, the enlistment and re-engagement period for soldiers, other than apprentices and junior bandsmen, will be five years. The five year period will then be standard throughout the Canadian armed forces.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ADVERTISING AGENCIES

Question No. 112—Mr. Ormiston:

1. What are the names of all advertising agencies used by the federal government and crown corporations in the fiscal year 1962-1963?

2. What remuneration did each advertising agency receive during the fiscal year 1962-1963 and from what parliamentary votes were funds made available?

3. What are the names of all advertising agencies used by the federal government and crown corporations since April 22, 1963?

4. What has been the total remuneration received by each of the advertising agencies used by the federal government and crown corporations from April 22, 1963 to date, and from what parliamentary votes were these funds made available?

Return tabled.

BILINGUAL NAMES OF GOVERNMENT COMPANIES

Question No. 187—Mr. Caouette:

1. What are the government companies or organizations which have no bilingual names as yet?

2. What are those which have received a bilingual name during the last five years?

3. Does the government intend to translate into French the names of the corporations which still have only an English name?

4. Can an act of parliament compel the companies incorporated by letters patent to adopt a bilingual name?

Return tabled.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF FAUTEUX COMMISSION

Question No. 243—Mr. Groos:

Of the Fauteux commission recommendations numbered 1 to 44 which recommendations have been implemented and which have not been implemented?

Return tabled.

RESEARCH INTO WATER AND AIR POLLUTION

Question No. 555—Mr. Barnett:

1. What departments or agencies of the federal government are conducting research into (a) water pollution control (b) air pollution control?

2. What amounts for each of the last five fiscal years (including an estimate for the current fiscal year) have been spent by each of these departments or agencies in each of these fields of research?

3. What amounts in each of these fiscal years for these fields of research have been paid by the federal government to bodies other than departments or agencies of the federal government?

4. What are the names of such bodies and, of such amounts (a) what amounts are included in the figures requested above (b) what amounts are in addition to the figures requested above?

Return tabled.

STUDIES OF WATER POLLUTION

Question No. 688—Mr. Fulton:

1. How many branches or agencies of the federal government, including crown companies, are engaged in the study and/or control of the pollution, use, or disposition of the waters of Canada, with respect to fresh water, rivers and lakes as distinguished from the oceans and seas?

2. What is the name or description of each such branch or agency, to what department or ministry does it report, and under what statutory or other authority does it operate?

3. What is the same information as requested in parts 1 and 2 with respect to the oceans and seas?

4. Is there a cabinet committee on water use policy and, if so, when was it constituted?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL CAPITAL GREEN BELT

Question No. 792—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. What is the total acreage, as now defined, of the green belt in the national capital region?

2. Of this total acreage, how many acres have been (a) acquired and the former owners paid in full (b) acquired but settlement of price still under negotiation or other proceedings, except court proceedings (c) acquired but settlement of price still under consideration in court proceedings?

3. What is the total number of individual properties involved under each of the headings (a), (b) and (c) of part 2?

4. Are there any properties within the now defined limits of the green belt which have not been acquired by purchase or expropriation?

5. If so, where are these properties located and who is the owner in each case?

6. What properties within the green belt have been resold, specifying location of each and to whom sold, the acreage sold, and price of each sale?

7. What properties within the green belt have been leased for terms beyond five years, specifying location of each such demised property, lessee, acreage demised and terms of lease?

8. What is the total amount expended to date in the acquiral of the green belt?

9. What is the estimate of the remaining cost of acquiring the green belt?

Return tabled.

ALLOCATION OF SITES, NATIONAL CAPITAL GREEN BELT

Question No. 793—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Referring to part I of the sixty-fifth annual report of the National Capital Commission at page 12, what sites in the greenbelt, giving description in detail, have now been allocated for (a) recreational purposes (b) government purposes (c) reforestation purposes (d) conservation purposes?

2. What areas have been set aside for use by the city of Ottawa for garbage collection?

3. What area has been marked for development by the township of Nepean (a) as a community centre (b) as a municipal forest park?

4. With whom did the National Capital Commission consult before making these allocations setting aside, or marking for development?

Return tabled.

Orders for Returns

PERMITS FOR PESTICIDE USE

Question No. 897—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Are permits required for the use of certain pesticides on Canadian farms?

2. What pesticides require such permits?

3. Who issues the permits?

4. What research is underway in Canada with respect to the use of pesticides?

5. Are pilots engaged in crop dusting required to hold a chemical rating?

Return tabled.

ONTARIO—LOANS AND GRANTS FOR SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 902—Mr. Stanbury:

1. What amounts were paid by the federal government in each of the years 1960-65 inclusive toward construction and equipment of schools in (a) the townships of Scarborough, North York and Markham respectively (b) the town of Leaside (c) the village of Markham?

2. What amounts were so paid in each of those years toward construction, equipment and operation of universities in each of those municipalities?

3. How much of each such amount was paid by way of (a) loan and (b) grant?

4. What were the general terms of any such loans?

Return tabled.

N.C.C. EXPENDITURES, PONTIAC COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 924—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. What federal funds were expended by the National Capital Commission in the county of Pontiac, P.Q., since its inception under its present name for each year to date?

2. What major projects did the commission sponsor in 1964 and 1965?

3. What is its major project for 1966 in Pontiac and what sum has been allocated for this project?

4. How many employees will be needed by the N.C.C in Pontiac during 1966?

5. How are such employees hired?

6. What rate per hour is paid by the N.C.C. for labourers and tradesmen?

7. What are the boundaries of the N.C.C. in the county of Pontiac?

Return tabled.

RATING PERCENTAGE FOR BILINGUALISM

Question No. 944—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the civil service commission established a procedure whereby up to 10% of the total selection rating score is being accorded to bilingual proficiency in certain areas?

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

2. If so (a) when was this procedure established (b) pursuant to what authority (c) in what areas (d) does the procedure have the approval of Her Majesty's ministers?

3. Have instructions of a similar nature been given to commission officers or other public servants performing selection duties under delegated authority of the commission?

4. If so, what in detail is the nature of the instructions?

5. Were the staff organizations consulted before the procedure was established?

6. If so, when, under what circumstances, and with what result?

7. If not, for what reason?

8. Upon what basis of evaluation was the percentage of 10 chosen rather than another percentage?

9. Since the establishment of the procedure, what competitions have been held pursuant to the procedure, and what was the competition number in each case?

10. In each of these competitions, how many of the applicants (a) were bilingual (b) spoke one language only?

11. Who was the successful candidate in each competition?

Return tabled.

CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS, OTTAWA-HULL

Question No. 963—Mr. Choquette:

1. How many federal buildings have been built in the Ottawa-Hull region since 1955?

2. What was the estimated cost?

3. What was the actual cost?

Return tabled.

CENTENNIAL PROJECTS, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 1,121—Mr. Dubé:

What centennial projects in (a) New Brunswick (b) Nova Scotia, and (c) Prince Edward Island, have been approved by the centennial administration?

Return tabled.

WINTER WORKS, MONTMAGNY-L'ISLET

Question No. 1,209—Mr. Berger:

1. In the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet, what municipalities were assisted by the winter works program during 1965-66?

2. What was the nature of the works performed?

3. What amount was spent for each program?

Return tabled.

WINTER WORKS, GATINEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,239—Mr. Isabelle:

Have any municipalities in the county of Gatineau been assisted under the winter works program for 1965-66 and, if so (a) which ones (b) what was the nature of each project (c) what amount of money was spent on each project? (d) what amount did the federal government contribute for each project?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for production of papers No. 116 is accepted by the government.

I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

BILINGUALISM IN CIVIL SERVICE

Motion No. 116—Mr. Loney:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and telegrams received by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works and replies thereto on the subject of bilingualism in the civil service since the 1st of January, 1966.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRY

NEWFOUNDLAND—CLOSING OF IRON MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry. May I ask the minister whether he is aware of the statement in today's press by Mr. J. E. Chubb, president of Dosco Industries Limited, that the Wabana ore mine in Newfoundland will cease operations on June 30. If so, what steps have been taken by the minister's department or what steps will be taken by the government to try to retain this industry? Finally, Mr. Speaker, have any consultations been held between the government and the corporation concerned on this very serious matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the prospective closing of the mine at Bell Island recently announced by Mr. Chubb. I may say that for some time the government, and by that I mean principally the Department of Industry, has been assisting in the search for techniques to beneficiate the Bell Island ore in such a way that it can be marketed. Unfortunately the decline over the last nine months in world prices for iron ore has made this further pursuit impracticable, and has made economically necessary the closing of the mine at Bell Island.

Inquiries of the Ministry

We have been in consultation with the government of Newfoundland. At the present moment there is a meeting going on with representatives of various departments of the federal government with a view to providing urgently the best possible solution to the problems of the inhabitants of Bell Island.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I direct a supplementary question to the future minister of manpower. What steps will be taken by his department and by the government to assist the 850 employees who will be left unemployed in this situation, which is another in the series of economic blows to the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we shall immediately advise our national employment service in Newfoundland, and we shall try to do all we can to help these workers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. May I ask the minister whether the closing of the mine in Bell Island is due to the grade of the ore. The general demand for iron ore has not lessened materially. Has this closing to do with the grade of the iron ore? If so, is any research being done to see whether this particular grade of ore can be used?

Mr. Drury: It is because of the nature of the ore, and particularly its high content of sulphur. Research directed toward beneficiating this ore, which I have mentioned, has been carried out. It has not, however, been possible, because of the decline generally in the price of iron ore throughout the world to get the cost of removing the sulphur content down to an economically acceptable level.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Could I ask the Minister of Labour what representations he has received from the premier of Newfoundland in reference to this most unfortunate and deplorable situation, and what suggestions he is making with respect to federal initiative in providing economic assistance to this area whose economic prospects have now been rendered so bleak?

Mr. Drury: I have discussed this matter with my colleague in the cabinet from Newfoundland and with other ministers. We have given the matter considerable thought. When there is anything concrete to be announced, an announcement will be made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE U.S. TAX ON TOURISTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A question to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance, as the case may be. Has the minister or the government been advised of the rumour which is circulating in the United States press and which has now appeared in the Canadian press, to the effect that the United States government may be considering a tax on United States tourists going abroad; and has the government considered the possible effect this might have on Expo '67? Would the minister tell us, too, what representations may have been made to the United States government in the light of these circumstances?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I should like to assure the hon. gentleman and the house that there is the closest possible consultation between Canada and the United States on all aspects of the balance of payments problems of our two countries. I can tell the hon. member that this particular matter which is mentioned in a newspaper article this morning has not been raised by the United States in its discussions with us.

Mr. Lambert: Has the minister become aware of this report from sources other than the press? Is this subject upon which there has been any informal discussion? Has it been brought to the hon. gentleman's attention as a possible means of solving certain balance of payments problems?

Mr. Sharp: This idea of a tax on tourists is not new; it was put up as a trial balloon some time ago. But I wish to assure the hon. gentleman that it has not been raised between the United States administration and ourselves.

Mr. Lambert: One final question. What would be the attitude of the government if such a step—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is hypothetical.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ARBITRATION OF DISPUTE WITH EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether in view of the proposed strike of C.B.C. producers she would suggest to the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that he agree to arbitration of the dispute between the corporation and its employees in order to arrive at an equitable settlement and avoid what could be a crippling strike.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In the first place, I hope there will not be any strike, and that the differences between management and some of the employees will be resolved within the administration. I was informed that the statement put out by the producers was conveyed to the president of the board of the C.B.C. at the meeting in Halifax this week, but due to some error in transmission the telegram was not received there until about one o'clock today. Up to the time I entered this chamber I had heard nothing of the response made by the board.

Yesterday when the leader of the New Democratic party raised the question of arbitration the vice president of the corporation was present in the official gallery of this chamber, and I understand he transmitted the essence of the question to the president. I would hope that notwithstanding the heat engendered on all sides the management will be able to resolve this matter, as in the past, without any disruption of viewing or programming in any way.

Mr. Orlikow: Should it become obvious that this matter will not be resolved without a strike, is it the minister's intention to leave this question to the corporation, or will she take some active part in giving a lead to the corporation so as to avoid what might be a serious situation?

Miss LaMarsh: I suppose the reason for the rule about not answering speculative questions is that it is so very difficult to give an adequate answer.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

Should the C.B.C. be faced with a strike following the dismissal of two employees from that Corporation, would not the minister feel that such a strike would be welcome?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is basing his question on a hypothetical situation, and therefore it cannot be accepted.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, my question will be very simple. Would not the minister believe that, in the present circumstances, in the case of the C.B.C., it would be time to accept the strike in order to clean up the C.B.C.?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION IN TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I believe my question is of great national urgency, and I direct it to the Minister of Labour. In view of the 13 week old teamsters strike, in view of the breakdown in talks with the seaway workers, and in view of the threatened rail strike, I would ask the minister whether he has made a reply to or considered the appeal that was made to him this morning by the teamsters union members in regard to the critical situation concerning that strike, an appeal for intervention on the part of the federal government.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to say it because my hon. friend is usually so accurate in his statements, but no such representations were made to me today, nor have I heard of any today.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, supplementary to my original question to the Minister of Labour, even though he may not have received this appeal, which I understand was made to both the provincial and federal governments, could the minister inform us whether his department is taking any initiative to bring this transport situation under control or arbitration?

Mr. Nicholson: A board of arbitration already has been set up. It has made its recommendation in this particular case. This board was sponsored jointly by the federal and provincial governments. The strike resulted from the fact that the report of the board of conciliation was not accepted by the union. The federal government has been working with the provincial government in respect of negotiations concerning the truckers' strike. We had hoped the strike would be settled over the Easter week end. Difficulties, however, have intervened, and I am hopeful negotiations will be resumed at a relatively early date. I cannot go beyond that today.

Eight of the 12 members of the bargaining team for the unions approved of the terms of a settlement and said they would recommend it to the membership. When the vote came the union truck drivers in eastern Ontario voted to accept the settlement. However, the majority of the truck drivers in Ontario voted against it. Negotiations have not been resumed yet, but I am hopeful they will be at an early date.

HOUSING

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour and has to do with a number of representations I have received regarding N.H.A. builder loans not being available. One of the representations from Ottawa is to the effect that the situation is critical. One company has laid off 58 men, and if money is not available shortly another 62 men must go. This is so across the country, as to the seriousness of the situation regarding moneys not being available for N.H.A. housing. What has the minister to say in this regard?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, through C.M.H.C. the government is making moneys available comparable in amount to what was made available last year. The problem arises out of the fact that notwithstanding an increase from 6¼ per cent to 6¾ per cent in the rate at which C.M.H.C. can guarantee loans by approved lenders, and the fact that in the six or eight weeks following the increase such loans increased, private investors now seem to find other investments much more attractive. It is not that the government is not putting up the same amount of money. One or two approved lenders are putting up more, but the great majority are not, and the matter is under study in the light of the representations that have been made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for a very full explanation and ask him what is the government doing to meet the situation. I have mentioned this Ottawa case. Of course I cannot go into detail on orders of the day, but men are being laid off because of the shortage of mortgage moneys. What is the government's plan? What is it canvassing? What ideas has it to meet a situation that is apparently nation wide and serious?

Mr. Nicholson: The problem seemingly has become nation wide within the last few weeks due to the fact that builders have not been able to get funds from the private sources from which they were receiving them for a number of years. The situation to which the right hon. gentleman has referred is becoming more acute and the matter is receiving active consideration at the present time.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): As a supplementary question, can the minister give an assurance that if the situation becomes even worse, as is certainly anticipated in British Columbia, more direct loan money will be made available by the government?

Mr. Nicholson: That is a question of government policy which will have to be announced in due course. It depends in part on whether the winter works housing incentive program will be extended for another year.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour.

Is the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation now able, under the present legislation, to get funds from the Bank of Canada to help finance the construction of houses or the construction—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is an argument rather than a real question.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order. Is it not in order to ask the minister if the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has the right to get or borrow funds from the Bank of Canada to build houses or buildings?

Mr. Speaker: That question is out of order. The hon. member is asking for the explanation of a point of law, a legal opinion. That is why it cannot be accepted.

Mr. Caouette: I am not mentioning a point of law. I am simply asking if the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has the right—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is out of order.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

[English]

SPORTS

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR APPLICATION FOR OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I directed a notice to the Prime Minister's office, and I understand it has been passed on to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is in the field of international affairs, but it does affect the minister's department.

Would the minister advise the house what support, personnel, monetary and otherwise, his department has assured to the Canadian Olympic committee to assist them in their successful bid before the international committee in Rome for the 1972 winter games to be held in Banff, Alberta, in view of the fact that such a successful bid will broaden Canada's image as a trading nation and as a nation known for its winter sports resources.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada is extending every possible support to the application for these games.

Mr. Woolliams: How much?

Mr. MacEachen: At the moment I cannot give my hon. friend the exact figure, but at present I am discussing with members of the government the most effective way in which the views of the government of Canada on this matter can be presented to the meeting of the Olympic committee this week end and next week in Rome. Just as soon as a decision has been reached on the question I will be glad to communicate it to my hon. friend.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell us what personnel from his department are going to assist the committee, or perhaps the minister for external affairs will tell us what personnel from the Department of External Affairs would be going over to assist the Canadian committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is a matter of national urgency to find out who the people would be on the delegation. I suggest the hon. member might be able to obtain that information in some other way.

Mr. Woolliams: Is the department sending personnel to support the committee?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ambassador at Rome is being fully briefed at the present time with regard to the views of the Canadian government, so that at the appropriate time if necessary he may be able to present those views. In the meantime some consideration is being given to whether it might be possible for a member of the government to be present in Rome.

Mr. Woolliams: I would hope so.

Mr. MacEachen: I have to consider whether it might be possible for me to go, and if I am able to make arrangements I will let my hon. friend know.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—USE OF FORCE AND SUCCESS OF EMBARGO

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With regard to the apparent worsening of the situation in Rhodesia, will the government give assurance to the house that Canada will not resort to force without parliament being given the opportunity to give consideration thereto?

Second, in connection with the blockade and the embargo which is in effect, to what extent is the embargo successful? I ask this because I have before me an advertisement for corned beef, a product of Rhodesia, which apparently is coming into Canada because of the tremendous increase in food prices in this nation. Has the government made any representations in this connection, and is the embargo being enforced?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the embargo is being enforced; the embargo is successful. I will look into the particular story—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Advertisement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to which the right hon. gentleman directs our attention, but I have no hesitation in saying the embargo is very successful.

With regard to the first part of the question, as is known the Security Council by a resolution of April 9, acting under chapter 7, has imposed a mandatory obligation on all member states of the United Nations with regard to a particular situation, namely the diverting of ships carrying oil destined for consumption in Rhodesia. What other action may be taken by the United Nations is, of course, a matter which would depend on events.

The action thus far taken under chapter 7 seemingly is proving effective for the purpose intended. Under the National Defence Act practice there is an obligation that Canada will not send substantial numbers of troops outside the country without seeking the approval of parliament. If that kind of action were in contemplation, and I do not believe it is, the Canadian government would, of course, observe the practice of that act. The kind of force which is envisaged, however, I hope would not be of that order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have another question. Then is it perfectly clear that there will be no Canadian troops sent regardless of any UN declaration, without parliament making the affirmative determination?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not wish to give the impression that the government has any reason to believe there is any likelihood of a request being made of Canada for the dispatch of troops in respect of this situation in Rhodesia. I do not believe that kind of situation is in contemplation. The kind of force which is envisaged under chapter 7 could be an extension of the economic sanctions in addition to oil as now provided for in the mandatory direction given by the security council.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. In view of the situation which has come up, and since the house is faced with the possibility of sending troops, would the minister consider sending an all party delegation to that country to assess the situation there and also in Zambia?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that this question could be put differently, and thus be acceptable to the minister. Would the minister consider favourably a recommendation from the external affairs committee to the effect that the committee should go there before an untenable situation develops?

Mr. Speaker: That question is based on a hypothetical situation which is not under consideration at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Secretary of State, or perhaps of her Parliamentary Secretary, to whom I gave notice of my question?

On February 2, the house issued an order for return concerning the correspondence exchanged between the provincial Department of Highways and the Corporation of the Trois-Rivières Bridge. I would ask the minister or her parliamentary secretary when I can expect those papers which I have not heard about since then?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since I think I am responsible for this return perhaps I might be allowed to say that I am trying to get the very voluminous documents ready as quickly as I can.

EXPO '67

REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO RECORD R.C.M.P. BAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address two questions to the Minister of Labour, as a firm supporter of organized labour but also as a proud Canadian. My question arises out of the answer the minister gave with respect to the right of the R.C.M.P. band to record in Canada. My first question is, does the government agree with this decision of the international headquarters of the musicians union? My second question is, if not, would the minister consider discussing this matter with his opposite number in the United States in order to provide appropriate guide lines to meet this type of situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question can be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN CENTENIAL

INQUIRY AS TO ORGANIZATION OF YOUTH PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. Has the centennial commission yet forwarded to the minister a satisfactory proposal for a centennial youth parliament; and if so, when might the house expect an announcement in this regard?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I had forwarded to me by the centennial commission Mr. Fair's report, which was not satisfactory to the centennial commission nor to myself. Since that time I have had a number of conversations with Commissioner Fisher and other interested people, and have asked for a memorandum from various individuals. During the last week or so I have been considering the possibility of inviting a group representing all parties in the house to meet with me to lay out some guide lines in this regard—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Miss LaMarsh: —because I feel that a youth parliament is itself an extremely good idea, but the work that has been done so far is far too ephemeral; it does not give us any basis on which to proceed. It might be that if all parties have interested members I would ask the government house leader or the whip to consult with their opposite numbers and obtain the names of those interested so we might talk about the question with a view to having a youth parliament in 1967, not in 1977.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Several weeks ago I asked a similar question of the Secretary of State, and whether any additional proposals had been presented to her at that time. She told me there had been. Since proposals other than that of Mr. William Fair have been presented to the Secretary of State, I wonder whether she has considered them as well.

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was one produced by the centennial commission, which I found not much more satisfactory. The real difficulty is what responsibility, if any, sitting members of this house ought to have in the selection of the personnel and agenda for such a parliament. This is why I feel it might be useful if representatives of all parties had an opportunity to discuss it.

NATURAL GAS

U.S. HEARING ON TRANSMISSION BETWEEN CANADIAN POINTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question of the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I think my question should be directed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys since I have now discovered that he is responsible for the National Energy Board.

What concerns me are the hearings before the United States federal power commission with regard to the transmission by a Canadian company of western Canadian gas for consumption in eastern Canada, but subject to United States federal power jurisdiction and contending American interests. Just what action is the Canadian government taking in this regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I was about to answer this question. The energy counsellor of the Canadian embassy in Washington is attending these hearings of the federal power commission in the United States and is keeping our officials in Ottawa informed of their progress. The status of the energy counsellor is that of observer, since it is not the normal practice of the government of Canada to intervene or to be formally represented in such regulatory proceedings in the United States.

Mr. Lambert: Is it the intention of the government of Canada to make any representations to the government of the United States with regard to this question of the transmission of Canadian gas for Canadian consumption?

Mr. Pepin: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. A similar hearing, as the hon. member knows, took place in Canada before the National Energy Board, and a decision will be rendered on that hearing in the coming weeks.

Mr. Lambert: A further supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin).

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—SUNDAY WORK IN PAPER MILLS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

The Quebec government has decided to authorize Sunday work in Quebec pulp and paper mills. I would like to know whether the Quebec government consulted with the federal authorities of the Department of Justice before arriving at its decision?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF REPLICA OF "GRANDE HERMINE" FOR EXPO '67

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Due to the fact that the minister has announced the construction of a replica of the Grande Hermine and that it will be berthed eventually at the Cartier-Champlain park, Quebec city will the minister now consider rescinding that decision because of the complications in getting it on site, and find it a haven at Gaspé, the birthplace of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will be interested in reading about the Grande Hermine on the order paper.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 19, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the Minister of Finance on his first budget speech, both as to its presentation and content. The amendment before us is obviously an attempt, a very hard attempt, to find something that is wrong with something that is very good and a budget that is very much required for the very tricky economic conditions that we have in Canada today. I want to devote the whole of my speech to considering that budget in the light of the four western provinces of Canada. I make no apology for speaking on behalf of the four western provinces, the fastest growing and most exciting provinces of Canada.

During the course of the minister's speech he referred to the question of tariff policy for Canada and the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations being sponsored by the members of GATT. The Kennedy round seems to me to have almost become bogged down in a round of endless negotiation and discussion and, as the Minister of Finance very rightly warned us, the powers accorded the United States government by the U.S. Trade Expansion Act expire in 1967.

I know the minister will give every impetus to our Canadian negotiations to assure that the Kennedy round is as successful as possible in causing multilateral reductions of tariffs and the creation of freer and more liberal trade. The minister said in his speech, as reported at page 3376 of Hansard:

> But at a time when we are engaged in one of the largest international tariff negotiations in our history I think the house will appreciate the desirability of using whatever tariff reductions we contemplate to help us obtain better access to foreign markets for our own exports.

• (3:20 p.m.)

With that statement, Mr. Speaker, I am in general agreement, particularly when we look at our markets in Europe and the United States. However, I should like to draw the minister's attention to one area of the world to which I think this tariff program is not necessarily applicable, namely, the numerous so-called Pacific rim areas, Japan and the underdeveloped areas of Southeast Asia. I suggest that to have access for Canadian products to these markets it is not necessary for us to engage in bilateral tariff negotiations. We in Canada have traditionally been oriented to our Atlantic and European markets. This suggestion is not new with me. Our trading policy in Canada must also be oriented to the vast potential markets of the Pacific ocean area. Access to these markets for Canada, unlike our traditional markets, is not so dependent upon international tariff negotiations.

To gain access to this area we would not have to engage in bilateral or multilateral tariff negotiations. I suggest they play a minor part, and rather more important is that our foreign policy generally and our foreign aid and credit policy specifically must be complementary to our trading policy. As an export market for the raw materials, the mineral concentrates, potash—I compliment the minister for removing the tax on potash extraction—chemicals, the wheat and grain products of western Canada, we do not believe that eastern Canada and the Atlantic community provide the answer but we look rather across the ocean to Japan, southeast Asia and western Latin America.

[Mr. Basford.]

We on the west coast are bordering on one of the most populous regions of the world. As the underdeveloped Asian countries develop, their need for raw materials and manufactured products will be immense. In western Canada we want to assure that Canada fills a high proportion of those needs.

Surely it is in Canada's interest to do everything possible to realize the potentials of trading into this area. In order to do so we must undertake a realignment of some of our traditional trading patterns, and I want to make three specific recommendations. We have, as stressed by the minister, a difficult and dangerous balance of payments problem with the United States which must be solved. In referring to longer term solutions to our balance of payments problem the minister said, as reported on page 3379 of Hansard:

> Our basic approach is twofold; first, through industrial, commercial and manpower policies, to adapt the structure of the Canadian economy to exploit effectively the most rapidly growing markets at home and abroad;

As an aside, Mr. Speaker, I almost wish he had said we would use industrial, commercial, manpower, water and transportation policies to adapt the structures of the Canadian economy to exploit all of these markets. It certainly seems to me, at this particular time, that it is idle chatter to discuss the export and sale of western Canadian water which is going to be needed in the four western provinces for the agricultural and industrial development of western Canada.

I suggest that possibly the most rapidly growing markets abroad are in industrial Japan and the developing nations of southeast Asia. I suggest to the minister that many of the products we now buy from the United States, and which contribute to our balance of payments problem, could well be bought from Japan, a country with which we have an overwhelmingly favourable balance of trade. I should like to quote briefly from the Journal of Commerce, an important western publication for March 26, 1966, in which the changing pattern of Pacific trade is discussed. The Journal said:

> These products are finding an increasingly important place—

Referring to the new products coming from Japan.

> —in western Canadian markets. They range from motorcycles and automobiles to heavy tractors; from small upright drills to large turret lathes; from insulators to electric generators; from steel plate to huge diameter pipe.

At the same time, Japan has become an important market for Canadian raw materials, as well as finished and semi-finished goods. Japanese industry is teaming up with Canadian investors to explore and develop many resources, thereby putting mines, pulp mills and other industries here into full production.

In 1964, Mr. Speaker, only 9 per cent of Canada's textile imports came from Japan, only 4 per cent of our sundries came from the same source and Japan supplied only 2.3 per cent of our total Canadian imports. Even in view of these surprisingly low figures and our continuously favourable trade balance with Japan as well as our dangerous imbalance with the United States, Japan is asked to impose upon itself voluntary quotas on its exports to Canada. I suggest that this is principally in order to allow some of our marginal and often antiquated industries to continue to struggle along.

Canada's trade with Japan last year amounted to $350 million in exports and $220 million in imports, leaving a trade balance in our favour of $130 million. These are the latest available 1965 estimates. In line with the minister's policy announcement of taking industrial, commercial and manpower policies to exploit effectively the most rapidly growing markets abroad, and since Japan is one of those markets, I recommend to him in the strongest possible terms the immediate removal of voluntary quotas on Japanese imports to Canada and the removal of other tariff impediments to Japanese trade. Japanese-Canadian trade, Mr. Speaker, is good for Canada. We should remove immediately any impediments to that trade.

As a second specific recommendation, it seems to me that many of our industrial and commercial concerns are afraid of the impact upon their business of the importation of products from abroad without tariff protection. It is trite to say that trade is a two way street and in order to sell we must buy. It is understandable that the owners of businesses which will be affected by increased importations, and the workers in those industries, would be concerned about the future and security of their capital or of their jobs.

I think that we in Canada have not yet developed the proper techniques for dealing with this problem. President Kennedy's trade expansion act, which was designed to provide a lowering of United States tariffs and to bring about increased imports into the United States, provided machinery by which the government could assist those industries and those jobs affected by lower tariffs. I recommend to the minister that we in Canada must also develop similar techniques. In recommending increased imports from Japan, for example, I am not unmindful of the problems, or at least the concern, created, for example, in the Canadian textile industry. We must develop machinery to assist those people who would be affected or who think they would be affected.

This government's labour mobility program and other programs, for which I compliment them in that they are new, imaginative programs, will be of some help in this connection. However, I believe we must go farther than the existing policies in assisting the relocation of capital and of jobs that will be affected by freer trade. We need newer techniques to eliminate the understandable human concern of some people for the future of their business or of their jobs. We need also a policy directly aimed at assisting capital and workers in moving from one productive process to another.

Third, Mr. Speaker, in order to develop our export markets to the fullest it is essential that we develop transportation policies and facilities that can get the products of western Canada to those markets of the Pacific Ocean area speedily, cheaply and on guaranteed delivery schedules. On December 13 last year the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) announced an integrated study of Atlantic provinces transportation problems. I should like to quote from the press release of that date:

The integrated study of transportation problems and requirements of the Atlantic provisions was officially launched...

Acres Research and Planning Limited... will combine forces with the Economist Intelligence Unit of London, England, to carry out this major transportation study...

The over-all objective of the study is to assess the effectiveness of the present transportation systems and to determine how they can best be developed to foster the economic growth and well-being of the Atlantic provinces.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Farther on there is this statement:

Adequate transportation links between the Atlantic provinces and the major economic areas of the continent are essential to the growth of these provinces. Rising production and consumption are reflected in greater traffic flows. It is recognized that existing networks of road, rail, air and water transportation will have to be improved and extended. This may require major revisions involving considerable capital expenditure. The Atlantic provinces' transportation study will review the transportation problems against the background of the prospects for growth in the primary and secondary industries of all four provinces.

The Atlantic Development Board, the government of Canada and the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces have seen the need and the wisdom of such a study for the Atlantic provinces. I suggest and specifically recommend that if Canada is to exploit its foreign markets to the fullest such a study is urgently required for the four western provinces.

The rapidly rising export from western Canada of grain, metal concentrates, potash, gypsum, sulphur and chemicals has already led to transportation problems, bottlenecks and lack of facilities. We need only recall the debate on box cars in this house not so many weeks ago. This situation seriously limits or endangers many of our overseas transactions, and I suggest that in the future it will become even more serious.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I propose that there should be a comprehensive analysis of all of the transportation, storage and handling systems which are or will be involved in moving and distributing western Canadian resources and products to inland and overseas customers. The specific objectives of the proposed study should be to develop recommendations on a short, medium and long term basis to lead to actions to (a) increase western Canada's capacity for transporting its products to local and overseas customers; (b) increase the speed of our deliveries; (c) increase the reliability of our deliveries, and (d) reduce to the lowest possible level the costs of delivery to keep our products competitive.

Such a study would involve a review and analysis of western Canada's future sales and potential market areas over the next 15 to 25-year period and a determination of our transportation requirements to fulfil these maximum sales and reach these market areas. It would involve, therefore, a careful review and analysis of all of the links in our transportation chain, a study of our local and pool elevators, a study of our present and future extractive resource sites, the future sites of mines, refineries and pulp mills, our rail operations including both their possible abandonment and curtailment and also, more importantly, their development into new resource areas, the economy and efficiency of unit trains for the movement of bulk cargo, a study of the capacity of the Fraser Canyon rail lines and methods of increasing that capacity by either twinning the tracks or using one track eastbound and the other westbound.

This review and analysis would also involve a study of our trucking operations, both as a means of delivery to intermediate or final loading points, and the need for and best location of a second trans-Canada highway; the place of fluid pipe lines and, even more exciting, the role of solids pipe lines for the transportation of coal, chemicals and even grain, on which the Alberta Research Council and others have already done such valuable work; inland shipping, direct ocean shipping; the terminal, storage, transfer and handling facilities of our Pacific ports of Vancouver, New Westminster and Prince Rupert for both general cargo and, probably more importantly, bulk loading facilities; the examination of new port sites such as the presently discussed Sturgeon Banks off the lower mainland of British Columbia, and our Pacific port handling facilities not only for today's vessels but for the type of vessels that will be arriving, or at least should be arriving, on the Pacific coast in the future.

Each part of our western transportation system, Mr. Speaker, both publicly and privately owned, should be studied to determine and assess its present capacity, operation and effectiveness and the extent and speed with which the capacity and effectiveness of each facility can and should be increased. We should determine the bottlenecks and inadequacies of our transportation system and the sequence in which these bottlenecks should be eliminated or the inadequacies filled.

The Atlantic transportation study which I mentioned is being conducted by Acres Research and Planning Limited in consortium with the Economist Intelligence Unit of London, England, and I am sure there are other firms working either singly or in consortium which would be suitable for such a study of western Canadian transportation.

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, another full-dress royal commission on transportation facilities; in fact, I would deplore the appointment of such. As an aside I might almost say: God preserve us from the present ones we have working. I want and I am advocating rather a comprehensive and co-ordinated study, by knowledgeable and expert consulting engineers and transportation and market analysts, of our transportation needs in western Canada both present and future and how best our transportation systems, co-ordinated on an economic and feasible basis, can foster the economic growth, prosperity and development of the four western provinces.

Such consultants as I am advocating should divide their recommendations into short-term, medium-term and long-term proposals so that within one or at the most two years recommendations and action plans could be designed for a group of immediate improvements. Then during subsequent stages of the examination, over say three to five years, longer term recommendations could be devised and a continuing analysis of the implementation of previously approved recommendations could be made.

In the time allowed to me, Mr. Speaker, I have recommended three specific things in connection with the increasing and total exploitation of the markets which are available to the products of western Canada. I have suggested the removal of voluntarily imposed quotas on Japan and the removal of all tariff impediments to Canadian-Japanese trade. I have suggested policies to assist those industries and workers which would be affected by freer trade so that they would not oppose the liberalization or freeing of our trade. Third, I have recommended transportation policies so that western Canada can maximize its endeavours to gain access to the markets of the Pacific ocean area. These are specific proposals, Mr. Speaker.

In conclusion may I say to the Minister of Finance in a general way, and I know he is not unsympathetic to this view, that in working out his budgetary proposals for this country and in shaping the fiscal, tariff and monetary policies of Canada he must always remind himself that we live in a very vast country composed of five quite different economic regions, the interests of which are not always compatible and sometimes conflict. He must also remind himself, and I emphasize this, that that which is good for central Canada is not necessarily always good for the extremities of the country, such as the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia, and also the prairies. Yet the extremities of the country both east and west, the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia, and also the prairies, have a right to look and must be able to look to him as minister and to the government of Canada to initiate policies which will assist, foster and strengthen the industrial, commercial and trade development of the far eastern and far western regions of Canada.

The Budget—Mr. Nielsen

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss today a national resource before I discuss generally the provisions of the budget. My remarks are directed specifically to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who I am very happy to see is in his seat, and to the government. My remarks, sir, are directed as well to all members of this house and also to you.

There is some misunderstanding, I believe, with respect to a matter I raised on one or two occasions in the house before the Easter recess with respect to the pilfering by commercial organizations in the city of Edmonton of the Klondike theme.

There can be no doubt about the responsibility of the government of Canada for the development of northern resources. There can be no doubt about the exclusiveness of the jurisdiction of the government of Canada over the development of these resources. It follows, therefore, that there is a direct responsibility on the minister and on the government in the resource development field. Unlike the provinces where exclusive jurisdiction over resource development resides entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, the responsibility here is clearly that of the government and of the minister.

I therefore suggest, sir, that when the matter is raised in the house, and when I make these remarks I cast no reflections whatsoever upon the Chair, I am merely endeavouring to inform the Chair of the national nature of the subject matter which has been raised by me on previous occasions, on each occasion that the matter is raised it must be determined whether it is one of sufficient urgency to be raised on orders of the day.

It is also quite clear, sir, that tourism is a resource. The extent to which tourist revenues in this country increased under the previous government to a point where for the first time in history our balance of trade with the United States was on the credit side is a matter of record.

There is also, sir, no doubt that throughout the whole world the romantic ring of the Klondike remains despite the passage of 68 years. The Klondike and all that that era stands for remains in the minds of people throughout the world. It is a great tourist drawing card. It is a potential tourist revenue earner in an industry the development of which is vital to bringing the Yukon out of what the minister himself has described as a deficit area.

That the Klondike is in the Yukon can also not be doubted. That the whole of the Yukon tourist industry is built around the Klondike is also quite clear. Any extended effort, therefore, by any agency whatsoever to attempt to drain off by the exploitation of the Klondike theme tourist revenues from the Yukon will seriously impair not only the development of that industry in the Yukon but will also seriously impair that day when the Yukon can call itself economically independent and that day when the Yukon can look forward, because of that fact, to self-government.

I am sure that the commercial organizations in the city of Edmonton and the city fathers were well meaning in choosing the theme of the development days of the Klondike when three years ago, I believe, the federal government evidenced a declining interest in the promotion of several projects in which the government of Canada had invested substantially. The Yukon had been developing its Klondike tourist industry for many years before the city of Edmonton commenced what I have called on previous occasions this larcenous exploitation of a resource which in no way belongs to it.

It would be different if this exploitation were a one-night stand. It would be different if it were on isolated occasions that the theme was exploited. It has been exploited in almost every province and in many cities and communities throughout Canada; in fact, it has been exploited not only in Canada but throughout the world. However, this is an extended and continuing effort by the city of Edmonton with, I must assume, the condonation of the province of Alberta to exploit something to which they have absolutely no proprietary right.

An hon. Member: Are you saying there are a lot of bootleggers?

Mr. Nielsen: They are claim jumpers. That is what they are. This continuing exploitation, sir, is hitting the Yukon hard. The minister will agree with that. It is syphoning off tourist revenues that otherwise would go to the Yukon. The argument is, of course, that we are adopting a dog in the manger attitude.

Sir, we do not have the resources in the Yukon that the city of Edmonton has within its municipal boundaries in order to fully exploit this resource. Our efforts must be combined and are being combined with those of the previous government and this government to exploit this resource for the benefit of the economic future of the Yukon. Many tourists the world over under the impact of the tremendous publicity campaign now being carried on by the city of Edmonton will stay in Edmonton, enjoy the Klondike days which have been organized there and go home thinking they have seen the Klondike. The result will be a distortion of Canadian history.

The Klondike is not in Edmonton, nor does that famous and fabulous era of Canadian history have anything to do with Edmonton. It was not Edmonton that made the contribution in the way the Klondike did to the over-all economic development of this country during the gold rush days.

The promotional literature I hold in my hand, sir, is an expensive, coloured brochure issued by the Edmonton Exhibition Association and it leaves the clear impression that the Klondike is in the city of Edmonton. They have stolen Klondike Mike. They have stolen Klondike Kate. They have stolen the Chilkoot mine. They have even stolen the Yukon.

An hon. Member: That is hard.

Mr. Nielsen: It has in large print: "Ride The E.Y. & P." Then in small print it says:

A small version of the famous Edmonton, Yukon & Pacific steam train chugs and hisses around the half mile—

And so it goes.

An hon. Member: But it is still in Edmonton.

Mr. Nielsen: The White Pass and Yukon route is the railway of history that chugged its way through the days of the Klondike gold rush.

Another advertisement says that you can visit the Chilkoot mine of those famous days, even though very few Edmontonians involved in this commercial exploitation know the geographic location of the Chilkoot pass. It is said that you can pan for real gold nuggets. Well, sir, they would have to be imported because there are none in Edmonton.

Under the heading, "Lively Downtown Celebrations", is the following:

Local citizens wear costumes of the Klondike era—recalling the fabulous excitement of the gold rush era.

• (3:50 p.m.)

When did Edmonton have a gold rush era? They like to say, sir, that many prospectors and sourdoughs who travelled to the Yukon passed through Edmonton. Sir, the cities of Seattle, San Francisco and Vancouver played a much larger part in that history than the city of Edmonton ever did. In another part of this brochure they invite the citizens to "return to the lively days of the gold rush." Again, this is in the city of Edmonton. How can we in the Yukon compete with the Mounted Police musical ride which has been imported for the purpose of this immoral and illegal exploitation? I am surprised that the Mounted Police would lend themselves to such an unlawful purpose and I mean no reflection on the force when I say this. "Bonanza", too, has been stolen. Under all this material we find the inscription of the Edmonton Exhibition Association whose motto is printed here as being "Pro Bono Publico", for the public good.

It does a disservice to Canada to allow this kind of exploitation to continue. Neither the citizens of the Yukon nor the government of the Yukon can endorse a continuance of this kind of illegal and immoral exploitation. When I say "the government of the Yukon" I mean the minister and his representative in the Yukon together with the Yukon legislative council. I believe the minister has received a resolution passed unanimously by the Yukon legislative council asking him to take action. The government of the province of Alberta cannot be left out because we are not speaking of the Yukon versus Edmonton in this issue; we are speaking of the Yukon and the province of Alberta. We can no more speak of the Yukon and Edmonton than we can of Dawson and Edmonton. I suggest to the minister that he has an obligation to act, and to act now, on the request of the people of the Yukon made known to him through the Yukon legislative council. He has an even greater responsibility. It is to retain intact a resource which comes under his personal protection as a member of a government which has direct responsibility for resource development.

The council has asked the minister to intervene with the government of the province of Alberta. It has asked for his intervention with the city of Edmonton. It has asked for his intervention with those responsible for Expo '67. Instead of allowing the city of Edmonton to anticipate the establishment of any kind of display at Expo '67 which would involve the exploitation of the Klondike, the minister should himself be considering taking action at Expo '67 similar to that which was taken during the last Grey Cup parade. He advertised the Yukon in that parade, and quite properly. He should take the same attitude now and give this matter his most serious consideration.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member be agreeable to calling it "the real Klondike"?

Mr. Nielsen: There is only one legitimate Klondike. Anything less than that is a hoax. Anything less than that is an immoral if not an illegal offer made by agencies so as to deprive an area coming under the minister's direct responsibility of its proprietary right to a resource the responsibility for the development of which lies upon the hon. gentleman's shoulders.

That legal action is possible should not escape the minister's consideration. I ask him to look at section 306 of the Criminal Code which deals specifically with frauds of this nature.

Mr. Lambert: Oh, that is carrying it a little far.

Mr. Laing: May I ask the hon. member whether he has made any representations to the members of parliament from the Edmonton area?

Mr. Nielsen: I have, sir. We in the Yukon are ready to believe that those who originated this exploitation did so in a well meaning fashion. But we also believe they do not appreciate the serious and deleterious long range effect this kind of thing will have on the development not only of this specific resource but of the Yukon as a whole. We asked them to reconsider that poster. This is not a dog in a manger attitude we are taking. Many thousands of taxpayers' dollars out of Canadian pockets generally have gone into the building up and exploitation of the tourist resource in the north. Our tourist resource in this part of northern Canada, the Yukon, is built solidly, squarely, specifically and exclusively on the Klondike area. Any attempt to mislead tourists into believing that the Klondike area exists elsewhere is bald fraud.

As to the Budget generally, I have studied this Budget trying to find a clue to a coherent fiscal or economic policy, and I can say it makes trying to find a needle in a haystack an absolute cinch. They took the tax off false teeth. After the new taxes no one will need their teeth, false or otherwise. At present food prices teeth are a waste of time.

A serious question affecting mortgages was raised today by my right hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). The minister in charge of housing, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), said today—I believe I heard him correctly—that the problem was nation-wide and had become so in the last few weeks. This can be attributed directly to the policies of the present government outlined in the Budget and to the ruinous acceptance by this administration of guide lines emanating from Washington.

While I am referring to the Minister of Labour I am compelled to add that he is the only minister now in charge of a skeleton department. Some have skeleton staffs but the Minister of Labour has a skeleton department. In this connection I should refer in passing to the report on the Department of Labour by Woods, Gordon and Company dated November, 1965, in which it is stressed that manpower and labour relations must be closely integrated. This government completely ignored that report in setting up a separate department of manpower. Here is a massive survey undertaken at a great deal of public expense and completed no later than November last. Yet immediately after the election it is thrown out of the window for reasons of pure expediency.

I submit that the Budget tackled inflation at the wrong end. The problem of inflation is to equate production with demand. Hon. gentlemen opposite are cutting down demand instead of helping production. Canadians are being penalized in an era of plenty because this government has no confidence in the capacity of the economy to produce enough to meet demand.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Canadian industry and Canadian labour can produce. There can be no doubt on that score. The real problem confronting us today is that costs of production have risen. Why have costs of production gone up? They have gone up because the cost of everything the working man must buy has gone out of sight. Never before in the history of this country have we had not only such a high cost of living but, over a few short years, such a remarkably accelerated increase in that cost of living. The costs of food, clothing, recreation and accommodation have soared. Food costs alone went up 7 per cent in the past year. The result is that labour has been forced to ask for higher wages in order to make ends meet. No one can blame labour for that. People who work for a living have a right to a fair share of the present prosperity but under this government, with high taxes, high prices and high costs, this has been denied.

Why do we have high prices? It is because the government increased the money supply in Canada by 12 per cent in 1965 compared with 6 per cent in 1964.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Could he square the statement he is now making with his earlier complaints about the lack of money in the economy?

Mr. Nielsen: I did not catch the minister's question.

Mr. Sharp: Earlier the hon. gentleman was referring to the scarcity of money. Now he is complaining about the fact that we expanded the money supply by 12 per cent.

Mr. Nielsen: I was speaking of a specific situation in the housing industry which should be met. I criticized it and I shall be advancing a constructive suggestion. That situation should be met in the way the Conservative government met it when it injected many millions of dollars into the housing industry, which had dramatic, exciting results and did not cause the tremendous impact presently being caused by tight money.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman another question? Was it not true that during that time there was a great deal of unused resources and high unemployment in Canada?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the United States?

Mr. Nielsen: I do not believe the minister can deny that there was more done during the term of office of the previous government to accelerate resource development than was ever done before, and all this government has done in the three years it has been in office is simply to endorse and/or expand those policies which were developed during the days of the previous government.

Mr. Sharp: Was that why there was so much unemployment in those days?

Mr. Nielsen: In the first place, the unemployment which confronted the previous government when it took office in 1957 was a legacy of those now sitting on the treasury benches, in particular of the minister who was then a deputy minister in that administration. In the second place, the minister himself would admit that the upswing in the economy began in 1961, two years prior to his government taking office. His colleague, the ex-minister of finance, has admitted this many times. I am simply saying one thing, sir, that when you have too few dollars chasing too few goods you have inflation, and that is precisely what we have in Canada at the present time.

Mr. Drury: Such an economist.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am described by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) as the new economic expert. He will have an opportunity to expose his own knowledge in this field.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Mackasey: I realize I am out of my seat—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member in his seat? He cannot speak from there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member for Verdun knows that if he wishes to take part in the debate or ask a question he should be in his seat.

An hon. Member: Now he is moving over.

Mr. Mackasey: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, only because the hon. member for Yukon alluded to a statement he thought I made which I did not make but which I wish I had made. The reference that was made was to new economic policies. I remember the hon. member for Yukon saying that when too few dollars chase after too few goods inflation is the result. I thought at the time that this was a new monetary policy.

Mr. Nielsen: It may have been the influence of the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) on the hon. member for Verdun. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, this government has simply not attempted to cope with the situation. It increased the money supply for the simple reason that under the ex-minister of finance a deal was made whereby Canadians would not undertake large scale borrowings in the United States.

The government accepted guide lines and directives from the United States curbing direct investment in Canada. It increased the money supply in order to make up the deficiency and to provide a spurious prosperity prior to the election. Now Canadians are being asked to pay for it.

The government imposed an 11 per cent sales tax which has produced rising costs at every stage of industrial manufacture, not only making it difficult for Canadian producers to compete internationally but making it possible for them to be undersold in the Canadian market by imported United States products. That is why we have had at one and the same time, sagging export figures and soaring import figures.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman to give us the sagging export figures of which he complains?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Sharp: It does.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, it does. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) has raised this matter on previous occasions. The hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) and several other hon. members on this side have raised it.

Mr. Sharp: Equally erroneously.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister asks me to quote figures which I do not have at hand. He hopes to win a point, but he does not.

Mr. Sharp: There are no such figures of sagging exports.

Mr. Nielsen: There are such figures and they are on the record. The minister likes to cover up the situation that exists.

Mr. Sharp: No. I am asking you to give the figures.

Mr. Nielsen: The automobile pact was supposed to help ease our balance of payments deficit with the United States but since the pact was introduced in January, 1965, we have brought more American cars and parts into the country than at any time in our history. Those cars still cost the same in Canada as they did previously. At the same time, parts that used to be made in Canada are now being made in the United States. Our deficit with the United States is the highest it has ever been and our world deficit is over $1 billion—

Mr. Sharp: Not as high as it has been.

Mr. Nielsen: —on account of that. This is a situation that will seriously strain Canada's international credit.

What the government should have done was to remove immediately the 11 per cent sales tax on equipment and material in order to reduce costs to industry. Instead it has promised to cut it down to 6 per cent in April, 1967, and to remove it by 1968. This, I suggest, is too little and too late.

What has happened is that the Budget completely failed to take into consideration the real needs of Canada's economy. We must maintain, not curb, expansion. We must do it without allowing inflation to continue unchecked. The minister's approach was purely that of a bureaucrat eager to cure the symptoms without considering the real nature of the disease. There is a very real possiblity that the shortsighted and negative approach in the Budget will endanger Canada's economic expansion and place this nation's economy in a strait-jacket. Already there are signs of that happening.

• (4:10 p.m.)

This is a government, sir, which gives the appearance of fearing expansion. A timid, fearful and negative attitude is the very antithesis to what is required at the present time. We must preserve the prosperity which Canadians have worked so hard to achieve and at the same time maintain a reasonable balance between costs and prices. We must remove taxes which serve only to hinder and not encourage the smooth flow of economic expansion.

As a Conservative I am particularly concerned about the effects of this negative and overly-cautious approach, because it was our policies which made prosperity possible; it was our policies which enabled the ex-minister of finance to say that the upswing in the economy began in 1961, which I do not believe the minister will dispute.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? Was it not the policies of the previous administration which brought about the exchange crisis?

Mr. Nielsen: It certainly was not. It certainly was not this party which did such a disservice to Canada's image internationally as was done by those now occupying the treasury benches in their political campaigns in 1962 and 1963 by disparaging the devaluation of the dollar, a situation that the minister now has no intention of altering. A great thing has happened as a result of the devaluation of the dollar; yet the minister and those surrounding him in those election campaigns certainly were the severest critics of the action taken at that time.

Mr. Sharp: Only of the exchange crisis.

Mr. Nielsen: And in so doing did a great disservice to Canada's image internationally.

The present expansion, as the minister knows, is now in its fifth year having begun in 1961, two years before the Liberal government took office. It commenced as a result of, first, the massive wheat sales, wheat sales that were strongly criticized from across the way when that policy was announced by the previous government. It began as a result of capital development programs such as the Saskatchewan dam and the Pine Point railroad, which again were severely criticized by those opposite when they sat on this side of the house.

Another factor in the expansion was the assistance to shipbuilding, seriously curtailed since this government took office. There were also incentives to exploration and development, another program commenced by the previous government and only enlarged upon in a meagre manner by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) since that time. I can sympathize with him and the difficulty he has in coping with the myopic attitudes of his cabinet colleagues in this regard. Other programs dealt with the retraining of manpower, vocational training and municipal winter works. All of these projects were the foundation for what the government is attempting to take credit for now. Devaluation of the dollar provided a tremendous impetus to Canadian exports and gave us new records in overseas trade.

All this is in danger of being thrown away on account of the unrealistic, timid and uninspired policies of this government. The Budget is an attempt simply to maintain the status quo. This is not good enough. In the affairs of men and nations, to stand still is to fall back, and where the government has not been standing still it has been leaping sideways.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret that it is necessary to inform the hon. member for Yukon that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) in the last few minutes, I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) ought to be thankful he does not have the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) on his staff. When they look at Hansard I believe some of their inflationary definitions may be kind of hard to follow.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry I do not have a printing press.

Mr. Thompson: I should like to say to the hon. member for Yukon that if he really wanted to do something for his very important territory, aside from complaining about Edmonton's so-called usurpation of a tourist theme, he and I might get together in an effort to see that the government finishes the Alaska highway. In that way we would do more for that northern part of the country than all the Yukon days put together from now until the end of time.

Mr. Nielsen: And pave it too.

Mr. Thompson: Let us hope that the Minister of Finance has some influence on the members of the government and will be able to get them to realize that this project is one that has been long neglected and overlooked by the government which concentrates its interest on the eastern part of the country, and that the completion and paving of this highway could do a great deal for the economy not only of the west but of the whole country.

I was most interested to hear the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) classify himself as the spokesman for the four great western provinces. If he took a little closer look at things I think he would realize that the prosperity of his own province is due largely to the imaginative, impressive and progressive government of that province. Probably this is true of all the western provinces. What bothers me as I go over the Budget speech and hear the contributions to the debate made by various members is the fact that the policy of holding back or retarding the so-called economic boom in Canada comes from the federal minister in direct opposition to the over-all, sound provincial administrations across the country which I think are basically responsible for the degree of prosperity we have in Canada at this time.

The reverse ought to be true, and I think it is perhaps because of this fact that we feel we need leadership and direction from the federal government and do not have the degree of unity or national identity that we so desperately need. I am sure the Minister of Finance is viewing the Budget debate as a really worth-while educational experience. I hope to add a little to the debate myself.

I should like to say to the minister that I think he has made a grave mistake in stepping on the brake in an effort to control the prosperous era in our country and that he would have been much better advised to take hold of the steering wheel instead and attempt to redirect certain areas of it so that it would not end up in what could be a very undesirable situation; it is one which might be effective in some areas and completely ineffective and harmful in others. Where there is a situation of inflation, particularly in respect of the control of the spiral of prices, something needs to be done. However, Mr. Speaker, it is the contention of those of us in the Social Credit party that to apply inflationary pressures to the extent that we might burst this economic bubble is more dangerous than what the Minister of Finance is attempting to correct at the present time.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I cannot quite understand the minister as he talks about us having reached our productive capacity, because when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) gave us his guide lines in respect of United States subsidiaries operating in Canada he spoke of the need of Canadian owned companies and United States subsidiaries alike to strive for a maximum realization of the potential for full participation in the life of the Canadian economic community. To say that at this time that we have in any way reached the capacity of our productive machine is, I think, a completely false assumption because I am sure we could without any real difficulty increase our productive capacity in practically every area by 50 per cent in the next couple of years.

If the economy is operating at capacity, why is the government involved in a war on poverty? Why is the ARDA program almost swamped with requests for rehabilitation projects? Why is it that in Canada we still have 340,000 unemployed? It is not that we have a dearth of skilled labour; the fact is that we have not speeded up our retraining and educational programs nor have we applied the right incentives in the right areas to reduce this tremendously large surplus of employable labour so that the over-all picture of the economy may go forward at an even more rapid pace than is the case at the present time.

The number of ridiculous paradoxes in our economy shows clearly that it is redirection this economy needs rather than reduced speed. We find the construction industry now having to slow down because of manpower shortages in certain areas; yet the growth in the civil service and in other governmental employment areas in Canada goes forward by leaps and bounds. We are urged to buy Canada back from the United States, but the provisions of the Bank Act make it necessary for industry and government as well to turn to the United States for the kind of risk and development capital that is needed in this country. It seems to me that Canadians are more willing to invest in the national debt because the return is higher and more secure than investing in resource development.

I think the assumption made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) yesterday, when he cried out against the so-called profiteering and gangsterism in the economic picture of this nation, is completely ill-founded, because what we need today is to encourage private Canadian capital to move into the development of Canadian resources. As evidence of this, Mr. Speaker—and I draw this point specifically to the attention of the Minister of Finance—there is the fact that Canadian borrowing on the United States market during January and February of 1966 was 11 times more than it was during those two months of 1965. Yet we learn from statistics published in the press, I think only the day before yesterday, that savings deposits in Canada amounted to nearly $10 billion at the end of February and personal savings deposits during last year increased by something like $800 million.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that what we need is redirection in a way that will encourage Canadians to invest their savings in the development of our resource wealth. Without this type of encouragement and governmental policy we have to run to the United States to obtain our capital. Those of us who believe there should be a greater degree of economic nationalism in Canada hear many people complaining about the investment of the American dollar in this country, but I do not believe this is a legitimate complaint as long as Canadians refuse to invest their savings in their own country. How can we blame someone else for investing in the resources of Canada if we apparently do not have the courage necessary to do so ourselves?

[Mr. Thompson.]

I believe that exports are necessary to improve our balance of payments situation, but tight money policies and taxation combine to put the Canadian producer in a non-competitive situation. In this connection I wish to refer for a few moments to the oil industry of Canada. I wonder how much concern there is on the part of Canadians with regard to the take-over of this Canadian industry by American companies, an industry which is the third largest in this country at the present time? I do not believe there is too much concern—apparently there is not —because of the reluctance of Canadians to invest in our oil industry. Even those who fear that it may eventually lead to a political take-over are cautious in their assessment of the situation. From a strictly business point of view most of them regard the capital inflow as a blessing and, in the realities of our economic life, had it not been for the willingness of Americans to invest capital in these resources they would not have been developed to the extent we see today.

I think it is an indictment of Canadian governmental policy that we have not been able to induce Canadian people to invest their savings and provide a sufficient amount of capital to develop at least half of our oil industry, and at the same time provide incentives that will encourage them to take over an even greater part of it. Without American capital where would we be in the development of our natural resources? I mention this fact only because I believe that rather than a slow-down policy or a braking of the economy there should be a redirection of the economy so that Canadians would be more willing to invest in our natural resources. Canada has had a great deal of money lying idle in savings accounts all through this development period. Billions of dollars have been lying idle. Unfortunately this has been largely caused, I believe, by the policies of the federal government, and as a result Canadians have been more interested through the years in investing in American development rather than the development of Canada.

At the present time the per capita investment in the United States by Canadians is two and a half times the per capita investment of Americans in Canada. For this reason I believe the Minister of Finance should have directed his energies and policies toward encouraging Canadians to play a greater part in the development of the resources of this country. Today the need is not to slow down production but rather to step up and facilitate the distribution of what we can produce. One economist commented recently, "We are learning to live with prosperity, but we do not know as much about managing it as we do about getting there."

The general policy of slowing down the boom is a dangerous one. It is dangerous because the case for an inflationary situation has not really been made. The Minister of Finance says that we face the threat of dangerous inflation. I do not believe that in the traditional meaning of the word "inflation" this is true. With due respect to the attempt by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) to define "inflation," I would say the inflation to which the Minister of Finance refers, but which is not really the case is caused by too many dollars chasing too few goods. If this were the case in Canada today, why are we borrowing from the United States market the tremendous amount of money that we have borrowed for our capital development?

In the first two months of this year we borrowed from the United States market $172 million. The amount was large last year but this year there has been a general increase in borrowing from the United States. I believe that we have in Canada today not an inflationary situation but a deflationary one. I do not think we have enough capital to carry on our normal commercial and industrial activities and at the same time carry on the resource development needed in this country. What we face in Canada today is an inflation of prices. It is this inflation of prices that is causing concern all across the country. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I think the general increase in prices that has been evident this year is just a beginning. It is in this area that we should be attempting to find an answer and employing the necessary slow-down in an effort to keep the cost of living in some sort of equilibrium.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Economic Council in its second report clearly stated that there are not yet sufficient means for judging the economy to be in a phase of general inflation. The council warned the government, and I had hoped the minister would have taken more heed of this warning, by arguing that we should not be too quick to implement anti-inflationary policies. The council wisely said that fiscal and monetary policy should be aimed at sustaining economic growth over a prolonged period of time instead of using monetary policy in an attempt to control short term fluctuations in economic activity. Instead of attempting to slow down the entire economy, the government should have recognized the need for priority areas. In so far as expansion or maintaining the status quo is concerned, there can be no place for slowing down the productive growth of Canada. The development of our resources must go ahead with an increased rate of growth. It is the only means by which we can provide new jobs and an increased standard of living.

In this regard the attempt to apply in Canada a policy that is used in Sweden, namely, the withholding of a percentage of the earnings of corporations, I think is not going to accomplish the intended effect in any way whatever. The 5 per cent of earnings which is going to be held in a position of trust is only going to provide the security for new borrowings in foreign markets. Companies are already moving toward this idea in order to overcome the adverse effects of this particular policy. I do not believe it will work. Corporations will merely borrow on this accumulated credit.

I believe that those in this house who use Sweden as an example of the ideal controlled economy, which results in greater government control and ownership of industry, are completely wrong. The fact remains that today Sweden is basically a free enterprise country with over 90 per cent, in fact nearly 95 per cent, of her total productive machinery owned privately by the Swedish people.

I suggest to the minister there is another area of capital development which we cannot, we dare not, slow down. I am referring to essential capital development for such projects as schools, hospitals, universities and for research. We cannot slow down this type of economic development. While this is non-productive development, it is the pre-requisite for future productive development. I think the present policy of slow-down is going to run into difficulties because it is going to slow down these two areas of our economy that really should not be slowed down at all. The first one, again, is required for the productive sector of our economy and the development of our resources. The second is for the essential type of capital development which may be non-productive today but which is vitally connected with the productive process tomorrow.

There is a third area which should be considered in these areas of priority which might strictly be termed non-productive development and which could well be slowed down. I am speaking here of the construction of government buildings and the type of construction that is concerned with the World's Fair in Montreal as well as the centennial celebrations of our country.

This type of construction, which is truly non-productive in the sense of increasing the productive value of our economy, could well be slowed down. It could well be spread out over a longer period of time. I think what the minister should have done in his Budget was to give a new direction to the economy in these areas of priority and to have encouraged on the one hand a greater degree of expansion while on the other hand slowing down those areas that are not so much concerned with direct productive increase of the over-all economy.

In this regard it is interesting to note what is happening in connection with Expo '67. According to press reports yesterday the deficit for Expo '67 is going to be approximately $82 million, and the federal government is going to be responsible for half of that. I am not saying that construction of Expo should be slowed down, but this is the type of development that is really getting out of control. The construction of government buildings and that type of thing is all in this area as well. In fact, I think the danger that we face in Canada as a result of the Budget introduced by the minister—this is the reason I cannot agree with Budget policy—is that it will put this country into real difficulty instead of solving present problems.

There are certain areas where the expansion program is going ahead much faster than in other parts of the country. The two western provinces lead Canada in this regard, and Ontario is close behind, so far as a percentage increase is concerned. We should not be slowing that down; we should be encouraging that to go forward because that is where we are going to increase the value of our over-all economy which is going to help those areas that do not have the same increase in production.

I am concerned that the government in the Budget has seen fit to decrease the external aid program. Our external aid is not going out in the form of dollars to be spread across the world. We are using what we are able to produce and using our own personnel to help other people. This aid, therefore, comes right back to help us. I feel that this kind of aid program has some real hope of doing something big. We are using the wrong approach by reducing our aid; we should be increasing it because it is also part of our international responsibility.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, there is another area in which the government should be applying the brake. This is the area of government expenditure as it relates to the increasing size of governments in Canada. The cost of government on the federal scene this year, along with the normal amount of supplementary estimates we can expect to be added to the proposed Budget, will bring federal expenditures into the neighbourhood of $10 billion. If we add that to the municipal and provincial budgets, we will find that in Canada today the prospect is for government expenditures to be at a level of approximately $20 billion. I do not believe we can afford this kind of luxury at this time.

I believe the Senate proposal for a basic annual income for senior citizens was the logical way for the government to help this area of our economy. The amendment to the amendment upon which we voted last night would have affected the entire structure of the economy. It was out of place at this time and therefore we could not support it.

I do believe the government should have been taking more care to slow down the increase in expenditures which have nothing to do with the productive increase in our economy. Along with this there should have been certain areas of tax reduction. I think it is interesting to note that the Alberta government has instituted a policy under which it is eliminating its share of death duties. I noted a statement in today's business section of the Gazette, in the column written by John Meyer, in which he suggests that succession duties might be one area in which we could decrease taxes and increase our own ownership of the economy.

This article says that the implementation and retention of death duties has done more to contribute to the sale of Canadian assets to foreigners than any other factor. More would be gained toward maintaining Canadian ownership by modifying these, indeed by dispensing with them altogether, than any number of Canada Development Corporations. This article refers to the differences in government about whether to go ahead with the Canada Development Corporation, and apparently these differences do exist. This type of tax reduction, I feel, would have done a great deal to speed up the productive sector of the economy instead of running the risk of slowing it down and sending this country into another deflationary period, which I do not believe we could risk.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In this regard I also think something might have been done by the government to decrease the tremendous debt load at the present time. Last year I believe we spent $1,180 million by way of paying for the cost of our national debt. On looking at a report issued by the Tax Foundation I find that the forecast is that our national debt will increase next year at a much more rapid rate than it increased last year. This means that we are going to find ourselves involved in an ever-increasing debt load which draws capital out of productive use and throws it into that kind of dead expenditure which is the cost of government. Debt charges during the coming fiscal year will amount to approximately $60 for every man, woman and child in the country, just for the national government alone.

I suggest that had the government adopted a policy which would slow down this increase in our national debt then we might have been doing something important toward giving the right kind of direction to the economy and speeding up its productive value. I think that the government is using a monetary policy at the present time which will work in the opposite direction from that which is intended. Because of this we stand in danger, as a result of this slow-down type of budget, of pushing the country into a deflationary economic situation which we all agree we do not want. Our need in Canada is not to hold back but to move ahead. The distribution of goods and services is a field in which we are only beginning to tap our potential. Smugly we pat ourselves on the back for being good businessmen while we rationalize our own trade deficits and slow down our production.

The disposing of surplusage is a narrow and old fashioned way of assessing our tremendous production potential. What about the many other countries which do not provide their people with enough to eat? What about the vast and continuing world markets for both primary and secondary products? The time has come to institute policies to bring about a freer sale of surplus commodities and to pioneer in the field of world-wide distribution of goods from wherever they are produced to wherever they are required. This is the challenge of the age so far as the international scene and our own national economy are concerned.

The Globe and Mail business section of today's issue carries a series of articles which illustrate the need for clear thought and action in relation to trade. The Prime Minister of Barbados speaking yesterday in Canada said that the 1926 Canada-West Indies trade agreement is hopelessly out of date. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce talks about the necessity of increasing our trade with the Communists behind the Iron Curtain.

What are we doing in this regard, Mr. Speaker? Are we merely gauging our trade policies in certain parts of the world on surplus commodities, or are we gearing our trade policies to the real needs of the world and our ability to meet those needs? What real efforts are being made by the government to use trade as a means of providing lasting and realistic support for developing nations? The kind of imagination and the kind of policy which we in Canada need are to be found in a policy which will not slow down in any way, or cause the government to say that they must slow down, the productive capacity of our over-all economy.

In considering the proposed amendment to the Budget motion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the amendment actually outlines the shortcomings of the policy of the Minister of Finance. Until we can aim our policies toward relieving these particular problems which are outlined in the amendment we are not going to have a satisfactory financial situation in this country.

Behind all of this is the need for bringing in a realistic monetary policy geared to the distribution of goods instead of geared to a debt system which holds back our potential productivity. We heard last night from the hon. member from Prince Edward Island about the pockets of poverty and the financial and economic situation which exists in that province, a state of affairs which can hardly be tolerated in an era of affluence such as the present. Therefore I cannot stress too strongly the danger of slowing down the economy and, instead of decreasing the cost of living or at least holding it steady, pushing ourselves into a truly deflationary period where there is not adequate capital to move what we are able to produce, with a resulting further upward spiral of living costs.

In closing I would again re-emphasize that we need to adapt our monetary policies to a greater degree of productivity and to hold back on those non-productive developments which I think can be spread over a longer period of time. Such policies relate to trade, to the Bank of Canada, to the amendments which must be made to the Bank Act and to an over-all economic policy which is geared to expansion. At the same time it requires from the federal government leadership including tax reduction where necessary, bringing about an over-all production which will not just tend to hamper and to hinder the policies of some of the provinces but which will let all of the provinces work together and go forward with the type of expansion which the country needs. This is the kind of financial policy and the kind of Budget which I had hoped the Minister of Finance would bring down but which I do not think he has brought down. I think his present Budget will work to the detriment of the nation rather than toward the objective which he has outlined to the house.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member who has just spoken one question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the annual period of waiting and suspense in Canada is over since Tuesday, March 29, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) announced to the Canadian people how he intends to levy the revenues required to administer the country during the fiscal year which began on April 1.

It goes without saying that the government's receipts must be sufficient to enable it to administer the country and also to make the necessary expenditures which, in many cases, are very important incentives in the national economy.

Every year, the period preceding the bringing down of the budget is marked by temerity, anxiety, anguish, speculation and all kinds of forecasts.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Editorial writers and economists vie with each other in setting forth the reasons which, in their personal opinion, justify a relief, a stabilization or an increase of the fiscal burden.

It is obvious that no budget could ever meet with unanimous approval in a country as diversified as Canada. However, most Canadian economists and editorial writers have praised the first budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and I am glad to quote a few of their comments:

Ably presented document—the least partisan of all budget speeches heard in the Commons in recent years—clever innovations—appropriate budget—Mr. Sharp takes inflation seriously—expert budget—putting on the brakes—Mr. Sharp is a realist—cautious and conventional budget. If many have criticized certain measures contained in the budget, nobody rejected its general idea in order to maintain that the threat of inflation was imaginary—good doctor—in more ways than one, the Sharp budget is an act of faith.

I join with all these Canadians to commend the Minister of Finance for his courage in presenting such a budget that will ensure a continuing and progressive economic growth in this country.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, in this, my maiden speech on the budget, to briefly state to the house my concept of the relationship between government and private enterprise.

I am pleased to note that the present Liberal government favours private enterprise and provides the assistance required for complete development. Protecting private industry has always been a Liberal tenet.

One hundred or even 50 years ago, most people could live blissfully unaware of political crises in provincial or federal capitals. Today, if politics are ailing, economic and social pursuits are also affected. In the twentieth century, the state exerts a constant influence on the happiness and well-being of every businessman and individual, whereas in the nineteenth century, private initiative enjoyed complete freedom and the state simply acted as a referee between the parties.

In certain areas of the world in the twentieth century, under full socialism, private initiative is completely suppressed and taken over by the state. In Canada, our infinitely varied and mixed system must be maintained and I believe the system is perfectly justified by current economic conditions.

These days, it is not easy to find a clear and satisfactory definition of private enterprise, because under present conditions of our modern life, all economic systems are unavoidably restricted one way or another. As a rule, however, these restrictions should not, in any case, discourage private initiative or destroy freedom of action. I feel that I should quote to hon. members what His Holiness Pope John XXIII had to say about this in his encyclical Mater et Magistra. His Holiness said, and I quote:

At the outset, it should be affirmed that, in economic affairs, first place is to be given to the private initiative of individual men who, either working by themselves, or with others in one fashion or another, pursue their common interests.

In this modern and complex world of business, it seems to me the state should co-ordinate the various forces and merely complement private enterprise, not replace it. By always echoing the claims of part of the population, it is easy for the state to forget the importance of free enterprise in the national economy. The state must not listen to the well-meaning who would like to refashion society through state intervention in economic affairs. The state must, on the contrary, fulfil with competence and dispatch its duty as legislator and, up to a point, as supervisor. The state and private enterprise must co-operate in a spirit of progress. The state must never forget that man is not made for the glorification of the state, but that the state exists for the glorification of man; and we, as legislators, must seek to bring the capitalist system to serve the whole population.

The role of the government in a competitive system, such as we have in this country, is to ensure the maintenance of conditions favourable to private initiative. To what extent the state should intervene to discourage that private initiative which made possible the economic progress all Canadians are enjoying at the present time is the big question mark.

Mr. N. R. Crump, president of the C.P.R., stated as follows at the 36th Annual Convention of the Canadian Chambers of Commerce:

Free enterprise has been the basic factor in Canadian development. Business growth, as far as the public is concerned, may be due to the particular situation of Canada as compared to other countries. For a country which had no future either economically (because of American inducements) or politically (because of a diffuseness inherent in bilingualism and biculturalism), Canada, nevertheless, accomplished some remarkable achievements.

The Canadian government should, with foresight, establish a clear economic policy creating a climate favourable to investments. It should stimulate, co-ordinate and develop the sense of responsibilities, the love of work and savings, but never try to absorb or destroy creative energy and the sense of responsibilities. In North America, as you know, private enterprise created the highest standard of living in the world, even if it has not yet completely eliminated poverty and unemployment; and Canada, like the United States, should be a bulwark of private enterprise.

Therefore, it must set up a list of priority for its expenditures in order to ensure its participation in the improvement of the competitive situation in our Canadian economy, because its initiatives and its legislation affect the whole population; it can have a determining effect on our industrial expansion, by using wisely its tremendous purchasing power.

The state must co-operate with the public and private sectors. It must exercise a wise control, based on the general interest and with the experience of the private sector, in order to make its initiatives more dynamic and efficient. I have confidence in the type of co-operation which has always existed in Canada between government and private enterprise, and I earnestly hope to see the continuation of this type of co-operation, so that our country may attain full economical development. The government must continue to assist our industry in order to create activities liable to bring about other satellite activities. It must continue to promote the expansion of Canadian enterprise through an acceleration of its program of industrial research and its program of services for technical consultations. It must also continue to use the tax factor.

You will all agree with me when I say that the intervention of the state is obvious, at the present time, but that such intervention must necessarily be restricted to areas and a method of operation—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but as it is now five o'clock the house will proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTED NATIONAL INDIAN DAY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into consideration the advisability of appointing a day during the course of our centennial year as a "National Indian Day", to mark the presence among us of our first citizens and to recognize their outstanding contributions to our national life.

• (5:00 p.m.)

He said: At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I advise hon. members that I do not intend to speak for long on this resolution. This will give other members a greater opportunity to take part in the discussion. I would express the hope that other speakers will not take up too much time, and thereby talk out the resolution.

This resolution may seem strange to some who have never investigated or appreciated the role which the Canadian Indian has played in our nation. There are probably very few of us who realize that there are more than 200,000 Canadians of Indian descent in our nation, in other words, one in every hundred, and that their numbers are increasing at a rate greater than the national average. In the years before and since nationhood the Indian has, I feel, been misused and abused by those of other origins who have had the responsibility of determining policies for our successive governments. Some may say: "That is just a cliché; every once in a while someone gets up and says that." I am not in the habit of talking in this manner but I sincerely hold the views I am expressing on this subject.

At this stage in Canada's development, when every nationality in our population appears to desire a unique position for its contribution, there is no group of individuals which stands higher in my estimation than the Canadian Indians. It is for this reason that I propose we should have a national Indian day in our centennial year.

It has been my privilege since my election to the House of Commons in 1957, and even before, to have been associated with those who make up the Indian community in my constituency and to realize their determination to make Canada a better place in which to live, to realize their dedication and loyalty to our nation. This is exemplified by the fact that during the first world war every eligible man of the Micmacs of Cape Breton Island volunteered to fight for his country in time of peril. Further, in the second world war many of the Indian people from my constituency and throughout Canada served with distinction in our armed forces overseas.

I have been concerned to learn of the discrimination and neglect that this race has been forced to suffer during our years of nationhood. It is not uncommon to hear people say that the Indians are lazy and slovenly, that they do not wish to help themselves. I have heard this said by white people, but I do not agree. I condemn this line of thinking and I condemn those who say such things. In any race one will find people who are lazy, people who are slovenly and who do not wish to help themselves. I am glad to see that the thinking of Canadians is slowly changing, that we are getting away from the attempt to transform these people into "white men", as it were, and beginning to develop a pride in them and a recognition of their rights.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

If we hope to develop the Indians into a well-adjusted community with pride in their cultural heritage we must continue to act along the lines recently announced by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) when he produced a program estimated to cost the federal government in excess of $100 million over the next five years. Undoubtedly some people will be shocked at the size of the amount which the minister has indicated is necessary for the provision of better housing, water, sanitation facilities, electrification and improved roads in the Indian communities throughout this country. But this shock could lead to a re-examination of the degree of neglect the Indians have had to suffer during the last 100 years because governments were unwilling to recognize the just claims made on them and provide the consideration which the Indians demanded but did not receive. At this point let me commend the minister and the government on this forward step. I hope there will be many more to follow.

I should also like to commend the extension department of St. Francis Xavier University, the laymen and the clergy who have been doing tremendous work since 1957 in my own area of Cape Breton in the field of community development and in other matters in co-operation with government.

A national Indian day will not in my opinion eliminate in any way the inequities which exist in our nation so far as Indians are concerned. But it would, I believe, add luster and honour to the race and focus public attention on the tremendous contribution which Indians have made toward the development of our country. I do not suggest that this should be another "national apple day" or celebration of that kind. I suggest this be made truly a national Indian day, a day upon which all the people in Canada would recognize our Indian brothers in a proper manner.

I mentioned a few moments ago the contribution which has been made by the Indian people. There are some who might wonder what this contribution has been. It is not generally well known that any contribution of significance has been made. Indeed, if one were to inquire of most Canadians they would probably indicate that according to their understanding the Indians are a drain on the federal treasury, a problem everyone would like to eliminate if only someone would suggest an easy solution, one which would not cost too much money or take too much time. This attitude is not in keeping with the facts and we need only look at some examples of the kind of man the Indian population of this nation has been able to produce. I should like to name just a few. Many of these people will not be quickly associated with the Indian communities. Indeed, some Canadians would be much more anxious to classify them as white men.

In the Senate we have Senator Gladstone who was outstanding as a leader in Alberta, I understand, before he became a senator and was a prosperous rancher. In the British Columbia legislature we had Frank Calder. I am glad to hear the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) say he is still a member of that legislature. In Ottawa we have had for many years Dr. G. C. Monture, a distinguished civil servant and world authority on mineral resources development who at the present time is an adviser to the Atlantic Development Board. There is Jack Beaver, a nuclear engineer; Leonard S. Marchand, the first Indian ever to be appointed to the personal staff of a minister of the Crown; Mrs. Mildred Gottfriedson who in 1963 was selected mother of the year and, from the Eskasoni Band in my own constituency, a number of young men and women who have shown promise of making further contributions of significance. Among them are John Lewis who received a $1,500 scholarship to study engineering at St. Francis Xavier University, Joan Johnson who received a scholarship to Mount St. Bernard College and Janet Morris, now working in the civil service here in Ottawa who was chosen "Miss Indian Affairs Branch" for 1965.

I should also mention Miss Kahn-Tineta Horn, an outspoken and talented model; Dr. Ahab Spence, a clergyman, the first Indian to receive the degree of doctor of law; well known artists such as Gerald Tailfeathers and George Clutesi, and a great number of clergymen, lawyers doctors, dentists, school teachers, nurses, stenographers, hairdressers as well as members of a variety of other trades and professions. At this time of the year perhaps it is fitting to give special recognition to George Armstrong, a Mohawk Indian who has been an outstanding hockey player, a man who has gained a special status by being selected as captain of his team and who has always proven to be a gentleman both on and off the ice.

As I say, it is my hope that the government and all hon. members will give serious consideration to the merits of my proposal. It is definitely non-partisan in character and I believe there will be no dispute among members of the various parties in the house as to the value of the action I propose.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I have taken only a few short minutes in which to deal briefly with the resolution before us and the aims intended for it. My purpose has been to allow an opportunity for those who wish to speak on the resolution to do so while still enabling us to conclude our discussion before the time allotted for the private members' hour expires at six o'clock, at which point we could possibly vote on this motion. It is my hope the government will take the unique step of saying the resolution can be adopted today and that the necessary action will be taken, in keeping with the commendable announced intentions of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, to set aside one day during our one hundredth year to give Canada's Indians the recognition they deserve.

Mr. Enns: Would the hon. member permit a question? What action does he envisage which might properly take place on such a day? I ask this question in support of the resolution; it is not my intention to be critical in any way. What steps does he think can be taken so that the whole country can properly recognize this day? Does he visualize using the services of television and other media?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have many suggestions in mind and I would be pleased to outline them once the resolution has been adopted. The hon. member mentioned the news media—radio, television and the press. I think we should devote that day to the Indian people and take the opportunity to do a proper public relations job on behalf of the Indian people. We should explain, as I have tried to do in a few short minutes, what has been done by the Canadian Indians and the contribution they have made. This is a function which could be performed right across this country from one end to the other. I think this should be done in a serious way as an annual event to instil into the minds of the Canadian people regard for the traditions and culture of the Indians and an awareness of the part they have played in our history and which I believe they will play increasingly in the future.

Mr. Enns: Would the hon. member agree that the Indians themselves should be allowed to take the initiative in planning such a day and that the government should be invited to lend some financial support in the promotion of these activities?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Certainly. I think the Indian people, possibly the national advisory Indian commission, should be consulted on all phases of this proposal. We should certainly work in close co-operation with them and I believe the government should definitely provide funds for a project of this type.

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express support for the initiative which has been shown by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) in putting forward this resolution. I believe this is indicative of the complete support which he will find for his resolution among members of all parties. I think his idea is an excellent one. Perhaps, as has been suggested by the Canadian Indian Youth Council, we might incorporate a national Indian day as the culmination of a national Indian week.

A national Indian week would be a build-up and would focus attention on activities which I believe should be spread over a few days because all of them could not be packed into a single day. It should become an annual event and our centennial would provide us with reason to initiate it next year.

I have received a couple of suggestions about the timing of such a week. It seems that the second or third week of August would be the most satisfactory time each year. For example, during that period this year the National Indian Council will hold its annual conference, and about the same time there will be the Fort Qu'Appelle powwow. I think the various Indian tribal and provincial organizations could co-ordinate their activities around such a proposed national Indian week.

Quite frankly I prefer the idea of a national Indian week because it would arouse more attention than a single day's events. There are other reasons for suggesting a period of a week. Many exhibitions are held in various parts of Canada around the middle of August and they would provide a good setting for many Indian activities. There could be exhibitions of Indian handicrafts and dancing, but more than that the exhibitions would provide meeting places for Indians all across Canada.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Personally, I should like to see more stress placed on the future role of young Indians in Canada. I think we tend to stress the past too much when we speak about our Indians; it is the future which certainly is most important. With most of our Indian population under the age of 25 I think it is essential that national Indian day or national Indian week be used to provide our Indian youngsters who are just about to emerge into the Canadian mainstream of life with some idea of how they can fit into this life.

Since I have indicated my support for the proposal of the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, I would hope that he and other members would support an idea which has been circulating among various Indian groups in Canada for some time now. I refer to the formation of a national Indian dance troupe. There is no question in my mind but that such a dance troupe could bring about a flowering of Indian talent in Canada. If it were well run I think it could become self-sufficient fairly quickly and at least at the international level I think it could attain a fame which perhaps even our national ballet could not.

In the minds of most Europeans Canada is still associated with Indians more than the United States is, and I believe this is a good thing. Some people think it is a poor image for Canada to have in Europe but I think the reverse is true. I believe it is an excellent thing and we should capitalize on it. I believe an Indian dance troupe most certainly could act in the role of a Canadian ambassador abroad and would stir even more interest in our country among Europeans.

In my own constituency where Caughnawaga and St. Regis reserves are located, because of the world exhibition in Montreal the centennial year naturally is creating much interest. There are now fairly well advanced plans at Caughnawaga to receive Indians from across Canada. A residential village is planned and the people of Caughnawaga hope to play host to Indians from across Canada who will be attending the world exhibition and participating in it.

A month or two ago I was extemely happy to discover that our government had decided to invest a substantial sum of money in an Indian pavilion at the world exhibition site. The amount mentioned in the announcement is approximately $1 million. I am confident this pavilion will do honour to all our Indian citizens and I am sure it will be one of the most visited places at our world exhibition. The show promises to be top notch. If I am not mistaken, we will have Indians from every province in Canada including representatives from British Columbia with their famous totem poles. We will have exhibitions of the varying cultures which exist among our Indian population in Canada. All in all I am confident the pavilion will be one of the smash hits of the 1967 world exhibition, and I am extremely happy that the government has decided to go along with the idea of building a pavilion.

I think the most important thing which will result from the creation of a national Indian day is that it will help to stimulate self-pride and help preserve the various cultures which exist among our Indian population. Over the years we have heard a great number of solutions proposed in respect of the problems which beset our Indian people. The solution which continues to come forward in one form or another is complete assimilation and integration into our society, with the disappearance of the reserve system. I certainly think it is to the advantage of our Indians if they are integrated into our economic way of life and this necessarily implies social adaptation and integration on their part. This is a process which has been going on gradually for a long time. The explosive growth in the population of Indians now necessitates much more rapid economic and social integration.

What the Indians fear and what often turns them against this necessary social and economic integration is that their culture too will be integrated and assimilated and therefore disappear. This is a justifiable fear. It is for this reason that I personally favour the retention, at least in southern Quebec and southern Ontario where I know the situation, of the reserve system because I believe it is only within the reserves that there lies any hope of cultural preservation. The creation of an Indian day for Canada would contribute to this necessary cultural preservation. It is this problem above all which I think concerns so many of the educated and articulate young Indians who now are emerging from our educational system and who are taking their part in the mainstream of Canadian life.

• (5:30 p.m.)

It would be my hope that the creation of a national Indian day would contribute to the self-pride and self-confidence which our Indian people must have if they are to preserve their culture and be able to enter into the mainstream of life. There certainly is no lack of self-confidence among the Indian people of Caughnawaga or St. Regis whom I represent. I think there is a lack of self-confidence among Indian people in other parts of Canada. This is probably the thing that holds Indians back from playing a full role in our society and economy. I believe that the Canadian government in its policies toward Indians over the years is in large part responsible for this lack of self-confidence. The paternalism which guided the policies of the Indian affairs branch until very recently did far more harm than good to our Indian people. I believe that if they had been left completely on their own for 75 years up to 1963 our Indian people would have been far better off.

However, Mr. Speaker, this paternalism has come to an end. The head of the department is, I think, an excellent man and the budget of the department has recently been more than doubled. I am fully confident that in the next few years the so-called Indian problem in Canada will largely disappear and we will see a full flowering of Indian culture throughout this country.

There is one other point I wish to make. I hope this matter is not open to criticism too much longer but another measure that continues to hold back our Indian population is the Indian Act. I do not believe that anywhere in Canada are the inadequacies of the Indian Act more evident than in its application to the reserve at Caughnawaga. Here is a reserve that is part of Montreal suburbia; yet the people living there are subject to the same rules and regulations that apply to marshland Indians living in the James Bay area or east or west of Hudson Bay.

The application of this act to Indians living on a reserve such as Caughnawaga just does not make any sense. It is essential that the Department of Indian Affairs and the government now move rapidly to alter the Indian Act radically. In fact, I think the whole thing should be thrown out and we should start anew with an act that can be applied to southern reserves and those in less developed areas in which our Indian people reside.

Certainly the present act is completely outdated so far as the people I represent are concerned. The act is holding back development in my area because we find, for example, that our local Indians are unable to have their own police force, they are unable to set up a municipal type government that will serve them so much better than the present one, they are unable really to take over control of their own reserve, which in the case of my constituency would be the best solution. Caughnawaga is quite capable of looking after its own affairs but the present Indian Act prevents the Indians there from so doing.

It is my hope that with wholesale changes in the Indian Act, with the change in emphasis from paternalism to self-help, with stress on a national Indian day, a national Indian week, stress on the richness of the Indian culture that exists in this country, we will very soon have a completely different Indian in this country. We will have an Indian who will feel completely self-confident but will remain completely Indian, one who will be able to go out into our economy and earn a living that is as good as that of any other Canadian citizen but will at the same time feel free to go back and enjoy the life, the hunting and fishing on his own reserve. We will have an Indian who can combine the best of both worlds. His world is a good one but the world in which we live is a good one too and there must be some adjustment between the two.

I am confident that the Canadian Indian is capable of finding the role that will enable him to enjoy the best of both worlds. It is my earnest hope, and one that I am confident is shared by all hon. members, that not only will our Indian peoples be able to preserve their various cultures but as they assume a full role in our economic and social life there will occur a flowering of the many Indian cultures in Canada in a way that will enrich our national fabric.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the long dissertation of the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie (Mr. Watson) I wonder whether enough time is available for a vote on this motion. I think it is imperative that this motion, if no other during this parliament, should be the subject of definitive action by parliament by way of a formal vote on a private member's motion indicating what I hope will be our unanimous support for the principle and concept of the motion.

[Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: The concept of a national Indian day perhaps had its origin among the native Indian peoples on March 4 and 5, 1965, when at a meeting of the Indian advisory committee to the Centennial Commission the idea was proposed by Mr. Guy Williams who was then and is now the president of the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia. I think it is appropriate and coincidental that Mr. Williams is in Ottawa today and is in fact a guest of the House of Commons in the gallery, together with three extremely attractive, young native Indian ladies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: In the past few years there has been a growing interest among non-Indian people in the affairs of the native Indian population of Canada. There is certainly a growing and developing interest among members of parliament. I have noticed a decided change in that more members have in recent years paid attention to and spoken about Indian affairs than was the case just six or eight years ago. There is also a growing interest by native Indian people in their own affairs, in their own well being, their own stature and progress. This is excellent, because we all know that only from among and within any group of people will come the leaders of that group. They will not come from outside but from inside.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I think the history of the development of Canada shows, even to one who has read it scantily, that our development as a nation is very closely interwoven with the history, development and culture of our native Indian peoples in all parts of the country and that the two are inextricably mixed together in the fabric of this nation. Even though I believe there must be unanimous support for this motion, in my opinion the best way we can, in the words of the motion itself, "recognize their outstanding contributions to our national life" is not exclusively by a national day, a national week or participation in our centennial year. Canada could give them recognition by doing everything possible to help the development of self-government amongst our native Indian people, by doing everything possible to bring about the time when there is no Indian Act, no more government bureaucracy to stand in the way of progress so much needed by our native people.

We can develop recognition of their outstanding contributions as individuals by reading a little of the history of our native people. If we read that history we will understand and admire their culture, thir philosophy and their way of life. Believe me, if the members of this House of Commons had even half of the philosophic concept of life that our native people had years ago, we would not have nearly the trouble we have within this nation. They had a philosophy, an understanding and a concept of life that far surpasses anything we have been able to develop. We need not be patronizing or paternal in our attitude any longer. Rather we should accept this group of people because they are human beings and a part of life on this planet. They are not just a particular group of people with a particular ethnic background.

It has become commonplace, Mr. Speaker, in this parliament and in others which preceded it for motions in the names of private members to be talked out, in other words, not allowed to come to a vote. So far as the New Democratic party is concerned, and I have consulted with our members who are here, we are desirous of having this motion come to a vote. We have only one person to make a few comments, namely, myself, and we hope other members will be equally brief in their remarks. This is not the time for parliament to be speaking with a forked tongue, as the saying goes amongst some native tribes; this is the time for parliament to show by action that we do not only talk in favour of the recognition of the cultural development of the native people but we act as well.

I sincerely urge that even if parliament votes upon no other motion in the name of a private member, no other private member's public bill, no other business of a private member, we would be well advised to vote on the motion before us now. Then the native people would know we have respect for their contribution and that we recognize fully their historical development and cultural contribution to Canadian society.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise at this time and speak in support of the motion introduced by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir). I note that the objective hoped to be achieved by the motion is the marking of the presence among us of our first citizens and the recognition of their outstanding contribution to our national life. I believe there is an increasing awareness amongst the general population of Canada of the existence of the native people and a corresponding desire to atone in some measure for the attitude which we in general have taken toward them, either consciously or unconsciously, in the past.

The motion before us has to do not with our responsibilities to the native people from an economic point of view but with a recognition of their cultural contribution and the importance of this human resource in our midst. As we think of the motion before us I believe we must recognize the very important contribution that has been made to Canadian life by the native people. We must recognize also the fact that the native people are able to make an invaluable contribution to the various segments of our economy in which they move. This has been pointed out by the mover of the motion in referring to the number of native people who have made an outstanding success in their chosen vocation, profession or trade.

I believe that the adoption of this motion and the proclaiming of a national Indian day will not only bring to these people a sense of satisfaction through knowing that we do appreciate their contribution and recognize their abilities but it will assist the non-Indian population of Canada to have a greater appreciation for and and a greater knowledge of the contribution the Indian people are making. I am therefore not going to take further time and thereby contribute to talking out this measure. I simply want to indicate clearly that we are in full support of this motion and we hope we will have an opportunity of so indicating by voting on it before six o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the mover of this notice of motion stressing the impotrance of the contribution of the Indians to the building of our country, since they were its first inhabitants.

We will celebrate next year the centennial of our country's confederation and the Centennial Commission, which is responsible for the preparation of the various programs and celebrations which will mark in 1967 the various events of that period of our history, wants to stress the importance of each of the ethnic groups which make up our country. That is why the Centennial Commission looks very favourably on this motion moved by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir).

In March 1965, the Centennial Commission met in Ottawa with 18 Indian leaders from all parts of Canada to get their advice on the participation of the Indians to the centennial celebrations. One of the most important recommendations made by that group reads as follows:

> That a National Indian Day be appointed;
> Considering that a National Indian Day would recognize the contribution made by the Indians to the Canadian civilization.

In November 1965, another national meeting was held in Winnipeg and the Indian leaders from eight provinces attended. Even if the main subject of discussion dealt with the Indian folklore, as reflected today in Indian festivals, reconstitutions and powwows, and their integration in the centennial celebrations, one of the resolutions passed at that time provided for the proclamation of a National Indian Day. The resolution was sent to the Indian National Advisory Council, whose members are appointed by the Indians throughout Canada, with the recommendation that the Indian Affairs Branch be invited to implement it. The Indian National Advisory Council met again at the beginning of January 1966 in Ottawa and strongly recommended to the Indian Affairs Branch to create a National Indian Day.

Quite recently, the Centennial Commission once again met in Ottawa, on April 18 and 19, 1966, with 22 Indian leaders from eight provinces to follow up the work undertaken at the conference of March 1965, in order to evaluate the progress made with regard to the projects devised by the Indians for the centennial.

At that meeting it was suggested that a National Indian Day be proclaimed. Everyone agreed that since the treaties with the Indians were signed during the reign of Queen Victoria, the most appropriate and most significant date would be May 24. It was therefore unanimously agreed to include in the minutes of the meeting a request to the Centennial Commission and the Indian Affairs Branch to support the recommendation to the effect that May 24 be recognized throughout Canada as National Indian Day.

That recommendation is now being studied by the Indian Affairs Branch as well as by the officials of the Centennial Commission.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, could I rise on a question of privilege? We have had representative spokesmen from each of the parties except the Ralliement Créditistes and two spokesmen from the Liberals. Could we not dispense with further comment—there are only five minutes left—in order that a matter both vital and important might be voted on and parliament given an opportunity to express its opinion?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I recognize the point made by the hon. member for Skeena but the Chair has no authority to curtail debate. The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member commences his remarks may I at this time appeal to the minister who is present in the house—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): —and to the government to allow this matter to come to a vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should point out to the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria that if he speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Howard: Go ahead.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join with my colleagues in this house in expressing my tribute to the Indian people—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): You can express it by voting.

Mr. Haidasz: —for their contribution to the development of this country. They have played a commendable role in the history of Canada and should therefore be recognized especially by their fellow Canadians at this time when we are on the eve of the centennial of the confederation of Canada and making preparations for our one hundredth birthday.

I want to join with hon. members who have spoken before me in the tributes which they have paid not only to the Indian people and their leaders but also to the present government and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) for having launched a massive program to improve the economic and social conditions of the Indian people. I refer, Mr. Speaker, in particular to the program which will devote $112 million in the next five years to this end, as announced by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

I also wish to stress the fact that the government will be organizing a special program to honour the Indian people, their culture and their contribution to the history of Canada by erecting an Indian pavilion at Expo '67. This has already been announced in a special press release last month, and I am happy to state that the appointment of the chief of the Caughnawaga Indian Band Council has been approved as the Commissioner General of the Indians of Canada pavilion at Expo '67. Chief Delisle's primary responsibility will be to ensure that the Indians of Canada pavilion will be truly representative of the views and aspirations of the Indians and will give visitors from across Canada and from the entire world a faithful picture of Indian life and culture in this country.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the hon. member permit a question? May I ask him how many of our Indian people in British Columbia, in Nova Scotia and all across the country who are not close to Montreal will see this pavilion or have any part in it? It is a very good thing, but how many of our Indian people will participate? The hon. member has one minute left, so can we vote?

Mr. Haidasz: In the programs and projects organized by the centennial committee I am happy to state that there are several Indian Affairs projects across Canada not only contemplated but already approved by the Indian bands. For example, I should like to mention a pictorial history of the Canadian Indians and a joint Canada-United States Indian conference in the summer of 1967. An Indian editors' conference has already been held and there will be other Indian projects, such as Indian powwows and the famous Canadian Indians exhibit at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Mr. Howard: Question.

Mr. Haidasz: All members have spoken in complimentary terms about the resolution presented to the house by the hon. member, and I have not heard any dissenting voice on this matter. However, Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that this resolution should first of all be studied by the government and referred to the National Indian Advisory Board of Canada. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 21, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

[Translation]

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) presented the first report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Later:]

He said: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house, I move, seconded by the member for Québec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), that the first report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented this day, be now concurred in.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): In French and in English.

[English]

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to give unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hochelega probably knows that the unanimous consent of the house is required to move this motion. Since consent has not been given, the motion cannot be moved.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect, I should like to ask whether it is possible for the Prime Minister or the house leader, one or both, to find some way of making it possible for the committee to meet, instead of allowing one intransigent member of this house to frustrate the will of the committee, of parliament and, indeed, of the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

EXTENSION OF EXEMPTION UNDER U.S. SECURITIES LEGISLATION

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that when I reported to the house on March 7 on the last meeting of the joint Canada-United States ministerial committee I drew attention to the discussion we had had on the proposed S.E.C. regulations applying to foreign securities traded over the counter in the United States.

I now wish to advise the house that the S.E.C. has announced that the exemption for foreign issuers from these regulations is being extended to November 30. Having regard to the time allowed for companies to register, this means that in effect no Canadian company would be affected before April of next year at the earliest. The government welcomes this announcement since it provides an opportunity for further discussion of the issues involved with interested authorities in Canada as a basis for working out a mutually satisfactory long term solution with the United States government.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my only comment on this announcement is that we will, of course, want to look into its implications. However, as in some of the other dealings the Canadian government has had with the United States government in regard to financial relations between the two countries, guide lines and what have you, there has usually been a quid pro quo. The minister has said nothing about whether Canada has had to make certain concessions in this regard, or whether this has been merely a straight extension. Canada having obtained certain concessions under the interest equalization act, we also know what sort of halter we put around our necks in order to do so.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we are glad to have the announcement just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This promises a respite from the proposed changes under the S.E.C. regulations. I hope, however, that the government will exercise all possible measures and persuasion to have the United States government agree that as of April next these S.E.C. regulations will be waived entirely; because I think they have caused a good deal of concern in Canada, and it would be most unjust if they were imposed next April.

• (2:40 p.m.)

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGE IN MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the house of an important change in the manpower mobility program. In the program as instituted at the end of last year, a worker can receive a grant to help him to move only if he has been unemployed for four out of the previous six months. Otherwise he can get assistance but only as a loan. We wish to broaden the grant part of the program, but the house will appreciate that this can be done only carefully, as our administrative experience of this type of assistance increases, so that we do not incur abuses.

The step forward we have now taken affects areas where the shut-down of an enterprise, or a lay-off, is of such a size in relation to total employment in the area that unemployed workers have little chance of getting jobs except by moving. This situation is particularly likely to arise in remote areas, as when a mine closes. The regulations have therefore been amended to provide that the minister may designate such an area, and that unemployed people in the area will then be eligible for mobility grants without the qualification of having been unemployed for four months.

Under the terms of this new regulation I have today designated Bissett, Manitoba, as an area where, for the next 12 months, mobility grants will be available on the new terms. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the need for this assistance arises from the shut-down of San Antonio Gold Mines. I should add that in view of the recent announcement of the intended closing of the Wabana mine, I expect shortly to designate Bell Island, Newfoundland, for similar assistance. The problems of the people there may be particularly difficult, and my department is urgently examining, in collaboration with other departments, what special action we might take in conjunction with the designation of the area for mobility grants.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we have all listened with great interest to the comments made by the minister with respect to the change in the regulations concerning grants and loans. In particular he mentioned the Wabana area in Bell Island, Newfoundland.

Certainly what has now been announced is a decided improvement over what existed previously. In the long run, however, I suggest that it would be much better for the government to do all it can to provide employment in the particular areas mentioned, and in other similar areas, rather than providing the Gordon one way tickets out of those areas. That remark has particular reference to the maritime provinces.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I am sure that members of all parties, and those in the organized labour movement who have called for an expansion of the manpower program, will greet the announcement the minister has made today with a great deal of satisfaction. It indicates at least a beginning of a change in the government's thinking. It seems to many of us and to people outside the house concerned with this that the government and the departments concerned until very recently felt that the manpower program, such as it was, was adequate. It was very obvious to everybody concerned that a good deal needed to be done.

We think this announcement shows a step in the right direction. However, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will shortly look at the recommendations of bodies such as the Economic Council which urge that the whole programs of loans be wiped out, and that this kind of problem be dealt with through grants. It is obviously unfair and impractical to expect people who for a long time have been unemployed to pay back money which has been advanced to them so they can move to a job where they can earn a living for themselves and their families. As a beginning, however, we welcome this.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to the statement of the minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) to the effect that, for certain areas of Canada, the government is ready to intervene and grant loans to those who need them and to facilitate their mobility when required.

These measures are liable to be of assistance to certain areas such as those the minister mentioned. I should, however, like to call the minister's attention to other areas which he has not mentioned this afternoon, for instance the area of Val d'Or-Malartic, where gold mines are to close. Other mines are discontinuing their operations and we have to attend to moving such manpower as is no longer needed.

If the minister were to make a thorough study of the situation prevailing in our region, I think he would ask his colleagues to urge the government to help create new industries and develop new mines wherever this can be done, so as to keep our manpower in our region and avoid any relocation. This would not only prevent relocation of workers, but it would also prevent them from running into debt because, according to government policy, they would have to pay back, over the next five or ten years, the loans obtained.

I, therefore, draw the attention of the minister to this matter. I hope that he will examine it thoroughly and that new industries will be attracted to areas where workers are already established so that they may go on living there.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

FARM LABOUR FROM JAMAICA FOR SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement on government policy with regard to the entry into Canada of Jamaican workers coming to help with the crops and other agricultural work.

A thorough study of seasonal labour demands undertaken by the department and the national farm labour committee indicates that Canadian workers can meet the demand in the various parts of Canada, provided however that recruiting is intensified and the movement of labour is well planned.

Nevertheless, a shortage of workers for picking fruit and vegetable crops in southwestern Ontario is almost assured, this coming summer and fall.

Under those circumstances, my department has agreed to authorize, in advance, the entry of Jamaican workers, so that farmers and fruit growers might prepare for their crops. I wish to make it clear that the entry into Canada of foreign workers is permitted only under strictly ordered and specific conditions and must not interfere with the salaries, conditions of work and job opportunities enjoyed by Canadian workers.

After consultation with the Ontario branch of the federal-provincial committee on farm labour, the government stipulates that farmers, before hiring Jamaican seasonal labour, must agree to a number of conditions, including a minimum salary of $1.25 per hour, in addition to adequate lodgings; a period of work of not less than eight weeks and not more than 16 weeks, but which shall be extended so as to guarantee an average weekly salary of $50 during the period of employment; and the payment, by the operator, of travelling expenses to and from the operation.

Casual employment will be offered Canadian workers under similar or even better conditions than those I have just outlined, under the federal-provincial agreement on farm labour. Travelling expenses of workers hired for at least five weeks will be paid, as well as the return fare in the case of those having worked at least for that period of time. If, for one reason or another, a worker cannot complete his assignment, he will be paid the return fare of a substitute.

Fruit and vegetable growers in southwestern Ontario are requested to notify without delay the National Employment Service in regard to the workers they want to hire, under those or better conditions. Applications for Jamaican workers will not be accepted after May 15.

After the applications reach the National Employment Service, discussions will be held with Jamaican authorities with regard to the conditions of employment laid down by the department. The producers themselves will then conclude the negotiations with the Jamaican authorities. The Immigration Service of the department will look after the official procedures governing the entry of workers into Canada, in accordance with the agreements entered into with the authorities of Jamaica.

The Canadian government has agreed to seek in Caribbean countries, Commonwealth members with which our country has special ties, the labour it might need. The government of Jamaica has shown interest in our seasonal workers on several occasions. During his visit to Jamaica in November 1965, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) was approached on this subject. But since the agreements will have to be entered into over a limited period of time, it has been decided to restrict to Jamaica, at first, the recruiting of workers. It is known that other Caribbean governments are interested in our seasonal workers. Therefore, if the present provisions are extended, the Canadian government would be ready to begin negotiations with the countries concerned.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the statement the minister has just made is extremely important. It raises a question which has concerned people in Canada and the United States for a number of years, the question of the importation of people from foreign countries to work on Canadian and United States farms.

The provision whereby these workers will be guaranteed a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour is a good one, as is the requirement that they be given adequate housing facilities. However, Mr. Speaker, I would hope the government will do more than merely put this on paper. To my knowledge, every year there have been complaints and well founded newspaper articles about the fact that agricultural workers in general, working on seasonal projects, have been housed under the most primitive and unsanitary conditions possible. I would expect that the federal government, which is arranging this plan, will also arrange for inspection of the housing accommodation provided for these people in order to make sure that the agreement the minister has announced will actually be lived up to and enforced.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, this decision of the minister or of the government to admit Jamaican workers into Canada to help bring in the crop, mainly in southwestern Ontario, comes as something of a surprise to me.

Every year this part of Ontario generally called the fruit and tobacco valley, cries out for additional manpower at a certain time of the year.

Well, every year in my area, as in many other areas of the province of Quebec, people are anxious to go and work at these crops in southwestern Ontario. Most of the time they are told that there is no work for them, that they cannot be hired. There are thousands of Canadians anxious to work at these crops.

I do not believe the minister at all when he tells us that there is a lack of manpower. Rather, I think that pressures are now being applied on the department and the government to allow the farmers of this part of Ontario to get workers who will be paid about $1.25 an hour instead of $2 or even $3 an hour during harvest time.

Here, I should like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that not only are people over 30 asking for work, but that a great number of university students from Toronto, Montreal and Quebec city would like to work for these Ontario farmers at harvest time.

I wonder whether it is sensible at this time to invite Jamaican workers to come and help with the harvest of this part of Ontario, this Canadian region?

Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister does not tell us how many immigrants will thus be admitted into Canada. He says that, according to the data of the National Employment Service, it will be possible to establish the number of Jamaican workers who will come. I appeal again to the hon. minister, not because I am against the Jamaican workers or the farmers who want to obtain workers at a lower price, but since we have students who are looking for such work in order to earn money to continue their studies and workers who want to earn enough to allow them to live in their own province, I do not think that, under the circumstances, it is at all advisable to invite Jamaicans or other foreigners to help with the fruit or tobacco harvest in Ontario.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the government is taking some action to resolve the critical shortage of agricultural workers, but what I fail to understand is why this is confined strictly to southwestern Ontario when representations have been made in this house on behalf of farm organizations from western Canada in respect of the serious shortage of workers on the prairies and in many other parts of Canada. Therefore it is very difficult for me to understand why the minister is confining this to the fruit and vegetable growers; why these are the only people from whom he will accept applications, in southwestern Ontario.

An hon. Member: Also tobacco.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, representation has been made to the minister's department regarding the sugar beet workers in southern Alberta and southern Manitoba, but there has been no announcement to the effect that the nationals of other countries will be allowed into Canada to help overcome this problem. I am pleased that the minister has announced there will be some minimum standards set up in so far as living accommodation and wages are concerned, because certainly we do not want to bring in workers from offshore and cut down the standards of the people in Canada who are doing this type of work.

In Alberta I believe there has been some concentrated effort to bring Indian workers from the reserves in northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan to assist in the fields of southern Alberta. I am wondering whether the program in respect of Canadian seasonal workers will be applied to these Indian workers who come from the northern part of the province into the south; because certainly if the manpower mobility program is to be extended to any workers, I believe these Indian workers have a right to participate in this type of a program.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Generally we are pleased to see that something is being done, but it seems that it is restrictive and discriminatory if it is to be confined in the way suggested.

[Translation]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HABITUAL CRIMINALS

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-166, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Habitual Criminals).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing to amend section 660 of the Criminal Code is for the protection of society as well as the rehabilitation of the criminal; it not only tends to punish but also to prevent crime.

In view of the spectacular failure of certain parole cases brought to light, while so many others have gone unnoticed when persons had through this method succeeded in being reinstated in society; also, in view of the less spectacular but no less real failure of the present penal system showing an average rate of relapse of 60 to 70 per cent which did not fail to be cited by the champions of criminal treatment against the believers in the specific value of the penalty, I deemed it my duty to move this bill.

In short, such deprivation of freedom will last as long as remedial measures are indicated.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

23033—260

[English]

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCES

On the order:

Introduction of bills. Mr. Choquette—Bill intituled an act to amend the Criminal Code (repeal of power to commute a sentence of death).

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of the bill entitled "An act to amend the Criminal Code (repeal of power to commute a sentence of death)." This bill should not be before parliament and it has no place on the order paper. There can be no interference with the Queen's right to grant mercy, even though this member would abolish the Queen. This ought not to be on the order paper; it is unconstitutional and improper, and cannot be justified on any ground.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I rise on a point of order.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) recently introduced in this house a bill providing for the abolition of the Senate. Such a bill is, on the very face of it, unconstitutional, and yet it was decided that once a bill is put on the orders of the day it must be given first reading without further ado. The objection of the Leader of the Opposition is unfounded.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will take into consideration and study the remarks of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I had not finished. This is in no way a Queen's prerogative. By referring to section 655, subsection (1) of the Criminal Code, the Leader of the Opposition will note that it deals specifically with the royal prerogative and, in my view, the bill in question is to amend subsection (2) of section 655 of the Criminal Code in a way that does not affect the royal prerogative.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what the difference is; commutation is an exercise of the royal prerogative.

Introduction of Legislation

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I understand the situation, the question is not whether the bill should or should not be given first reading, because that has already been granted by the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In any event, as I said a moment ago the matter will be taken into consideration. The representations made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition will be considered along with the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbinière.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LISTING OF INGREDIENTS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South) moved the first reading of Bill No. C-167, to amend the Food and Drugs Act (listing of ingredients).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Food and Drugs Act to require producers of foods and drugs placed on the Canadian market to accurately and completely list all ingredients on the labels of their products as far as possible. Ingredient labelling is of particular significance to the many Canadians suffering from various allergies, to whom knowledge of contents in the manufactured food is of great importance.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL AND BORROWING CAPACITY OF CORPORATION

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to increase the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from $24 million to $40 million and thereby to increase the maximum borrowing capacity of the said corporation from $600 million to $1 billion.

Motion agreed to.

PENSIONS

CORRELATION OF VARIOUS PLANS WITH CANADA PENSION PLAN

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended tc the house by His Excellency:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act and the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Act to provide for a reduction in the contributions required to be paid under those acts as a result of the implementation of the Canada Pension Plan and for the correlation of the pensions or annuities payable under those acts with the pensions payable under the Canada Pension Plan; to extend the portability provisions of certain of the plans established under those acts; to raise the limit on the amount of the supplementary death benefit payable in respect of persons employed in the public service and members of the Canadian forces; and to make amendments of a general nature in connection with the administration of those acts and of the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act and the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE UNDER TERM 29

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to give effect to term 29 of the terms of union of Newfoundland with Canada and to pay to the province, out of the consolidated revenue fund, in the fiscal year commencing on the 1st day of April, 1967 and in each and every fiscal year thereafter, an annual amount, by way of additional financial assistance as contemplated by term 29, of $8 million.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE RELATIONS AND OTHER RELATED LEGISLATION

On the order: Government notices of motion:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon a measure respecting employer and employee relations in the public service of Canada and upon such other related legislation as may be referred to it by either house; that 24 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that standing order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto; that the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

HOUSING

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker, I direct this question to the Prime Minister, who I know has received correspondence, telegrams and the like from house builders across Canada relative to the shortage of funds available to them under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to have this matter looked into in view of the widespread criticism—possibly a better word would be the request—of builders everywhere across Canada that unless something is done in this connection there will be a very large reduction in employment and detriment to the economy as a whole?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The Minister of Labour, I believe, made a statement on this matter yesterday. I can only add to that statement what I believe he said also at that time, that the question is being looked into as a matter of urgency and importance.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister give consideration to making further moneys available in the form of direct loans if the situation becomes critical?

Mr. Pearson: That is one aspect of the question that is being considered.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—INVESTIGATION BY R.C.M.P. INTO DEATH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Solicitor General, and ask him if the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have been asked to make an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of George Victor Spence.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): You said it.

Mr. Douglas: I mean Spencer. Has any report been received?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I understand a full investigation was carried out, there was a coroner's inquest and an autopsy performed. So far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, the death was from natural causes.

Mr. Douglas: I was referring particularly to the circumstances surrounding the death. Will the minister ascertain how it was possible for a man whom the Prime Minister said was under surveillance in order to protect him against possible assassination could have been dead for several days before the R.C.M. Police became aware of this fact?

Mr. Pennell: I am speaking from memory now, but I believe the statement that was made in the house was that the surveillance in this case would be adapted to the necessities of the situation. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police at all times continued to take such steps as were deemed necessary in the circumstances of the case.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Was the R.C.M.P. given orders to keep under constant surveillance Mr. Spencer's property or house?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that question is in order. The hon. member is asking if the R.C.M.P. was given orders or instructions. In my opinion, that question is not in order at this time.

[English]

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday, I believe, by the Minister of Justice for the province of Quebec, can the Prime Minister say whether he or his government has received any formal request or any request from the province of Quebec for the setting up of a royal commission to investigate organized crime in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): A communication has been sent by the federal government to the provinces, as I think I indicated in the house before the recess, dealing with the possibility of a conference to discuss this matter. I am not sure whether all replies are in, but I will inquire and possibly make a report when they all come in.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

FARM LABOUR FROM JAMAICA FOR SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Does the minister remember the approximate number of Jamaican immigrants he says are needed to pick the fruit and tobacco crops in southern Ontario?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the agreement has been reached, those who want Jamaican workers will have to apply to the National Employment Service. I do not know how many will apply to that service under the conditions announced in the house.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration based on the statement he made earlier today. I should like to ask the minister whether he has considered or will consider applications from farmers in areas other than southwestern Ontario for additional farm labour if they should make application to him; for example, from sugar beet producers in southern Alberta.

Mr. Marchand: Wherever there is a shortage of labour we are ready to consider the same proposition.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question. Can I ask the minister whether southwestern Ontario is the only place in Canada which is considered to be short of farm labour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, you have suggested that the question is argumentative but I was simply asking the minister which areas in Canada the government considers to be short of labour at the moment. I think it would be helpful for farmers in other parts of Canada to know, for example, whether or not applications would be entertained.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I think applications have been filed by some Alberta agriculturists. These have been studied, and if they are ready to discuss them I am ready to meet these people and also to give the hon. member the reasons we have refused them.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): A supplementary question. May I ask whether the minister has had any official communication from the government of British Columbia with regard to bringing farm labour into that province from either Jamaica or Mexico?

Mr. Marchand: To my knowledge, not from the government of British Columbia. I can try to get some information about this matter. Perhaps the communication came to my department. It did not come to me.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration? Has the hon. member received requests, for instance, from the province of Quebec, for help with the blueberry crop in the Lake St. John region?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Will the government or the department entertain applications for the bringing in of farm labour from other countries as well as from Jamaica?

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we have limited our request for workers, or rather imports of labour, to the Commonwealth countries. Now, if there still was a labour shortage and we had to look elsewhere for workers, even then the principle would not be affected as it would be a matter of discussing each case and finding out what type of labour is required. For instance, someone mentioned a while ago that anyone could pick fruit. Because of certain aspects of that operation, the work cannot be performed by just anyone, the workers required must be skilled.

We are therefore dealing with specific cases and I cannot answer for each one of them, unless you define them individually.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. As part of the agreement being worked out, is it the thought of the government that these labourers will be returned to Jamaica after their employment?

Mr. Marchand: It is a condition.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO OVERSPENDING BY PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Secretary of State. Before asking it I would commend the good lady for her concern for the taxpayers' stake in the C.B.C. My question, of which I have sent her notice, is this. Is it true that one C.B.C. producer named Wilson Southam spent up to ten times what was approved, having been previously warned about overspending on other programs?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

TRANSPORTATION OF LIVESTOCK—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to my favourite Minister of Agriculture. In view of the increasing number of livestock being hauled by motor truck, and the representations made by the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies as well as other organizations for legislation to meet these changing transportation practices, has the minister given any consideration to amending the cruelty section of the Criminal Code to bring the provisions of section 389 in line with modern transportation requirements?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to thank my favourite and venerable member for Kootenay West for giving me notice of his question. In reply I may say departmental officials are looking into this in conjunction with officials of the Department of Justice. Many representations have been received with regard to this very important question, and if remedial action is deemed necessary the amendment to the Criminal Code will be announced in the normal manner.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact most members of this house have received many representations concerning cruelty to animals in its various aspects, I was wondering if the Prime Minister would recommend to his colleagues that this whole subject be referred to an appropriate committee of parliament for general consideration and recommendation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

OTTAWA VALLEY—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN SPEEDING UP LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is one which I feel is of the utmost urgency in view of the fact that many farmers in the Ottawa valley and the surrounding area, due to severe crop loss from the drought last year, are unable to procure seed and other supplies for this year's crop unless loans are made available immediately. Has the government received a request from the Ontario government for co-operative assistance to provide these loans and, if so, what action is being taken?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as of this date I have received no request in this regard, although I am given to understand from a news release from Toronto that such a request is to be made.

SASKATCHEWAN—PETITION RESPECTING BROKENSHELL COMMUNITY PASTURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has he received a petition from the patrons of Brokenshell community pastures Nos. 1 and 2 protesting the use of "A.I."?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question should be on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED ARREST OF MEMBER OF FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General, of which I have given notice. Will the minister confirm the arrest in Nova Scotia today of an officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and advise the house of the circumstances leading to the arrest as well as what charges, if any, are being laid?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much if the question, without more explanation, can be accepted at this time. Even if the hon. member gave notice of the question I do not think that makes it necessarily acceptable to the Chair. I suggest the hon. member place it on the order paper.

Mr. Coates: This is a serious matter, and I believe the Solicitor General is prepared to answer it. I think it would be helpful if he did answer it.

Mr. Speaker: Of course I can only judge by what is in the question itself. The hon. member says it is very urgent, and I will accept his word for it and allow the minister to reply.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I can only say that an investigation is proceeding. At the time I came into the chamber I was informed no charges had been laid. Perhaps I ought not to go beyond that statement at this point.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister advise whether this arrest is related to the three bank holdups in the county of Pictou within the last nine months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—ACTIVITIES OF CANADIAN AID COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that it is firmly established now that a Canadian organization formed to aid civilians in Viet Nam is directing its aid entirely to North Viet Nam, what is the government attitude toward this organization and its efforts?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not believe I can add anything to what I said in answer to a somewhat similar question posed the other day by the Leader of the Opposition.

FINANCE

ALBERTA—PROPOSED REFUND OF ESTATE TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. In view of the fact that the premier of Alberta has now indicated, either in a resolution or by a public announcement, that he will refund to the people of Alberta 75 per cent of the estate tax, is there any agreement between this government and the Alberta government to refund the other 25 per cent, or is a deal being worked out in that regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. When can I expect an answer to starred question No. 726 which has to do with penitentiary security and has remained on the order paper unanswered since February 18?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will give the hon. member's inquiry immediate attention.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has had the opportunity to review the speech made last evening by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to the Ottawa Board of Trade and, if so, whether the statements and threats therein contained represent government policy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the Prime Minister answer the question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he cannot insist on an answer.

Mr. Nielsen: He is afraid to answer.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Prime Minister has the right to say he will not answer a question, but he has not even had that courtesy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I beg to disagree with the hon. member. Obviously if a minister does not stand in his place it is because he does not intend to reply. I suggest he does not have to get up and say that he does not want to answer.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PAY INCREASES TO PILOTS—INTEGRATION INTO SALARY STRUCTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence but in his absence perhaps the Associate Minister would reply. May I ask whether the recent increase in pay to pilots in the Royal Canadian Air Force will become part of the permanent salary structure of the service?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I understand that it will, Mr. Speaker.

FARM MACHINERY

REPORTED INCREASES IN PRICES OF COMBINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture with reference to the price of farm implements. Is he aware of the fact that since November last, shortly before he was appointed minister, small combines have gone up in price $250 a unit, big combines $600 a unit, and that in the same period the price of hogs came down 10 cents per pound?

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Can the minister tell the house when we may anticipate the long awaited, often promised white paper on immigration?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what we are trying to do right now is to adopt some new regulations concerning non-immigrants in Canada. We are working hard and I hope that we will produce some results soon so that some of the shortcomings in the present regulations can be corrected. I think that if we succeed in doing so hon. members will not complain too much about the time we are taking to review the whole philosophy of immigration.

Mr. Brewin: A supplementary question. I hope the minister, in referring to the question of visitors and non-immigrants and the urgent need for the government to announce its policy in this regard, can assure the house that this does not mean that the general promise of a white paper to review the whole subject of immigration is being overlooked.

Mr. Marchand: It does not mean that, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the thousands of immigrants in Canada who have arrived here on visitors' visas and have since made application for permanent residence status, some of whom now have orders of deportation against them, has the government changed its attitude respecting those persons with deportation orders against them? Is the government still going to deport them or is it reviewing these cases? If so, has the government held up the deportation of these people until such review is completed?

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I hope that within the next few weeks I will be in a position to make a statement concerning non-immigrants in Canada. We have endeavoured to make certain regulations which, I think, will be agreeable to most hon. members. However, some deportations may still have to be made; I am thinking of those who, in any case, cannot be accepted in Canada under the act and who will be deported immediately. This can be done under present regulations. As for the others, applications are held in abeyance and no deportation will be made.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TERMINATION OF BUDGET DEBATE—CONSIDERATION OF REDISTRIBUTION PETITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the government house leader. In view of the fact that the rules provide for a six day budget debate, which would mean that the present debate would carry on until next Monday evening, we are prepared to forgo Monday and end the debate on Friday if that is agreeable to the government.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this suggestion would be very agreeable to the government. I would propose, in the light of what has been said, a meeting with the other house leaders immediately to see whether we can reach some arrangement to provide for the termination of the budget debate on Friday, consistent with protecting hon. members' opportunities to speak.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the house leader. Could the house leader tell us when the government proposes to go ahead with the debate on the redistribution petitions?

Mr. McIlraith: I am glad to welcome back the house leader for the official opposition, and I hope he had a very good Easter. Our plans, which have not been confirmed, were to begin that debate on Wednesday of next week but, as I say, that is not a firm decision.

Mr. Harkness: That is the redistribution debate?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's statement the day before the Easter recess that he hoped medicare would be on the order paper when we got back, and in view of the fact that it is not on the order paper, can he now say when we may expect this legislation?

[Mr. Marchand.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I still hope to have it on the order paper before long, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: But hope springs eternal.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman what other steps are being taken by the government to assist the 850 workers who will lose their employment at Bell Island, apart from providing them with one way tickets out of their native province?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Every possible step is being taken that can be taken.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO TRUCKING STRIKE—IMPLEMENTATION OF 40 HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the very serious trucking strike that is causing so much difficulty and trouble in our country. Is a settlement imminent? Also, will the Prime Minister say whether representations have been made to the government that if the 40 hour work week provision in the federal labour code were carried into effect the strike could be settled at once?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only say, in addition to what has been said by the minister, that the chief conciliation officer of the government is meeting with the representatives of the parties at this moment. I hope there will be a good result from that meeting.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister say whether representations were made to the government of Canada that if it would insist on the carrying out of the legislation passed by parliament for a 40 hour week, rather than achieving the 40 hour week over a period of three years, the strike could be settled at once?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, representations have been received on both sides of that particular issue.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON POLLUTION PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Does the minister expect shortly to make a report on the general problems of pollution other than the joint report he is expecting from the Ontario government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, a lot of work is being done in this field at this moment in view of the very important international conference on pollution which is to be held in Montreal in October and November next. Most departments of the federal government, the Departments of Agriculture and of National Health and Welfare for example, at this moment are preparing for this event.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the order of business of the house and I therefore direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the serious situation developing between the Postal Employees' Union, the Civil Service Association and the Civil Service Federation, is the government planning to give top priority to legislation that would provide for collective bargaining in the civil service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That legislation is being given top priority and I hope it will be before the house shortly.

EXPO '67

USE BY EDMONTON OF "KLONDIKE" THEME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has he received any communication from the government of the Yukon asking for his intervention with the government of the province of Alberta respecting the use of the Klondike theme?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house what action he or his government intends to take in this regard?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, yesterday I listened to the hon. member deal with this matter. I think that the somewhat tropical language he used might be as effective as anything I can do in drawing it to public attention. I do not know whether it would be proper for me to remonstrate with the city of Edmonton or with the Edmonton exhibition board. However, we shall be having some discussions on this subject.

• (3:40 p.m.)

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 20, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at five o'clock you called me to order because the house had to interrupt the budget debate to proceed with consideration of private members' business.

However, I saw this morning a newspaper comment on the second part of my speech, dealing with the Bélanger Commission, which I was to deliver this afternoon. Obviously, there is a misunderstanding which I hasten to correct immediately.

Before getting on with the second half of my speech, I must finish expounding my philosophy concerning private enterprise in its relations with the state.

As I was saying, when I was interrupted, you will admit that the intervention of the state is unavoidable at the present time, but that it must necessarily be restricted to areas and methods of operation where private enterprise is less efficient and weaker, or uneconomical.

Not so long ago government controls applied mainly to a particular class of undertakings. After two wars and the recession of the thirties, the difference between public and private enterprise has lost its meaning on several scores. Joint enterprises where businessmen and governments are partners have come about and I think that is a gratifying development.

The government's intervention remains at a high level to the extent that some measures which were to be temporary have assumed a permament nature. On the other hand, and that is to the credit of our governments, the most recent interventions are part of a general plan.

Besides, private enterprise must be dynamic and give leadership, as it has always done since the beginning of our young country. Every businessman should not only take an interest in politics but also try to ascertain the needs, the objectives and the problems of his fellow citizens. Businessmen should not be reluctant to express their views about politics, and they should do it through the numerous bodies which serve them. Harsh or bitter criticism or words of praise should be expressed for the welfare of the whole population, particularly if the state or groups suggest measures detrimental to the competitive system.

Businessmen should keep on increasing productivity, and they must in return get a fair yield on their investments. I feel that the profit motive is of vital importance: it is precisely that motive which leads private individuals to produce in spite of the risks involved in the undertakings. Profit is the yardstick which determines the value and usefulness of our efforts. The word profit is not to be banished from our vocabulary. Did not Winston Churchill himself say that we should never complain about people who make profits but rather about people who suffer losses? The more industry will affirm its strength and its interest in the welfare of the people, the less need there will be for the government to restrict and control industry. Businessmen should realize that the more they insist on piling up new responsibilities on the state, the more the latter will be obliged to increase its authority. Private enterprise should have the foresight and the initiative to seize new opportunities as well as the vision to scrap obsolete methods which are no longer competitive. Free enterprise should wish to participate in the economic development of the country and, in return, profit by it—which, to my mind, is perfectly legitimate.

Now that I have tried to establish my own position on the relationship between the state and industry, I should like to deal with the recommendation of the Bélanger commission concerning the taxation system in Quebec to the effect that the government should tax capital gains. The Bélanger commission points out, and with good reason, that this tax should be applied in Canada as a whole, that is in all the provinces.

At the present time, in Canada and in Quebec, a citizen who has invested his savings in movables or immovables, the value of which goes up during a certain period, pays no tax on this increased value when he winds up his assests. The tax would bear on this capital increase.

It strikes me as illogical to propose such a tax, because Canada is not ready to accept that type of measure. It would be nonsensical to tax directly those who wish to invest in Canadian enterprise when our country is still in the first stages of its economic development. I fail to see how capital could be attracted if a tax were levied on capital gain.

A country cannot develop its natural resources without considerable outlays which, of necessity, entail great risks. As a consequence, the government must not tax the successful outcome of those risks; on the contrary, it should encourage investment of risk capital and broaden the Income Tax Act in this regard.

It must be remembered that Canada, especially at the present time, is short of investment capital and that such a measure could drive away the capital required to develop our resources. It is difficult to understand how levying a tax on capital gain could be accepted in a country in such great and pressing need of capital. If capital, Canadian or foreign, is to be restricted, if the amazing development of our economy is to be stopped or brought to a standstill, then let us tax capital gain. In other countries, that tax exists and can exist where the economy is sufficiently mature and productive to bear the burden of such a tax. But Canada is not ready to bear that burden so long as it cannot do without the massive importation of the foreign capital it needs to finance its expansion and to create new jobs.

On the contrary, capital gain should be encouraged and not penalized. In any event, that measure is absolutely inconsistent with the exemptions of 20 per cent and 9 per cent on dividends granted by Canada and Quebec respectively. If we seek to increase Canadian capital, it should not be taxed, because it will then become necessary to appeal further on to United States capital which would thus gain further control of our economy. Obviously, this country needs income to pursue its aims, but I feel this income should be sought in an area less damaging to industrial development.

In the present circumstances, it is impossible to anticipate all the consequences of this tax, immediate as well as long term. I dare hope the Carter commission whose report cannot be long delayed, will not present such a recommendation to the federal government. For the time being, the financial world is awaiting this report with some apprehension and fondly hopes that fiscal reforms will not be carried out in this direction. Furthermore, it must be kept in mind that if capital gains are taxed, capital losses will have to be eligible for deductions. What would be the final yield of this tax, and is it worth implementing?

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote a few lines from President Johnson's economic report for 1965. I believe they could also apply to this country.

> We must strive to make our society not only prosperous but progressive; not only affluent, but humane; providing not only higher incomes but greater opportunities; with its members enjoying not only full employment but fuller lives.

[English]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on his appointment to the important post he now holds, and to say how fortunate he was that the Conservatives had the red carpet rolled out for him before he took office.

• (3:50 p.m.)

One of the most disturbing statements we hear today is with regard to our dangerously high mounting deficit, combined with high taxation and the high cost of living, all this occurring in a boom era of prosperity. For the record it is probably good to go back and examine the situation which existed in 1956 because it had certain characteristics akin to the present.

In 1956, the last year of the St. Laurent government, we had a trade deficit of $728 million. This meant that in the markets of the world we were buying $728 million more in goods than we were able to sell. We also owed just under $700 million in interest on our debt and in dividends, all of which we were paying out, which gave us a total deficit of $1,330 million.

In 1962, which was the first year in nine years that we were able to sell more in the markets of the world than we bought, we sold $127 million more in goods than we imported. This trend continued, and that is why I say the government is very fortunate that the Conservatives rolled out the red carpet for it.

I see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is smiling and I know why he smiles. The following year we were able to sell $500 million more in goods than we brought into the country. Compare that with the present. It is a disturbing fact that in 1965 our surplus balance of trade had dwindled to just over $100 million. In spite of the fact that we sold $1 billion worth of wheat we were only able to sell a little over $100 million more in goods than we bought. It bothers me, not in a political sense but for the sake of the welfare of Canada, that despite all the boom selling of wheat we had a trade surplus of just a little over $100 million. I am sure this must be of concern to all parties in the house.

But what is more frightening still is that our over-all deficit, including interest, dividends, etc., climbed to $1,237,000,000. I say it is all the more frightening because the United States is putting a limit on American funds available for foreign investment and wants more of its subsidiary investments to return home.

It is also frightening to note that we increased our imports by 12 per cent but increased our exports by only 5 per cent. Where would we have been if it had not been for that $1 billion worth of wheat represented by the sales to Communist China and other Communist countries pioneered by the Conservative minister of agriculture, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) in the midst of Liberal criticism?

Most of the goods we export today are raw materials or semi-processed goods which require just a small labour content. The raw product we export provides work for one man whereas the finished product would require the work of three skilled people. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in many cases we export the raw product and import the finished product back to Canada. Most of our import bill is still made up of purchases in the United States of goods of a class or kind which we manufacture in Canada or could manufacture in Canada.

The point I want to make is that the flow of American capital is being cut down. What has the minister done about this? Does he think that increasing taxes will solve the problem? I do not think so. I think the minister will agree with me that taxes in Canada must be lower, both on productivity and on income, than they are in the United States in order for us to meet the competition of the United States. Let us be frank about it. We are competing with the United States, one of the most powerful nations of the world with vast reservoirs of brains, skill and capital. Our country borders it for 4,000 miles, and to compete with the United States greater incentives must be offered to industry in Canada. This is the opinion of many experts.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is he advocating a larger budgetary deficit than we have this year? Is that the purport of his remarks?

Mr. Rynard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know the minister may need a little advice on this matter and I shall be very glad to give it to him. I can give it to him by telephone or I will even go to his office. I want to point out to him, and I think he will agree—if he does not let him stand up and say so—that we cannot compete with the United States and at the same time increase taxation on productivity and brains. If he believes that is possible, I want him to stand up and say so right now. I am sure Mr. Firestone and many other economists would like to know.

Mr. Ricard: The minister declines.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I do not for a minute suggest that the road is easy. It is not. We cannot increase income tax and taxation on productivity if we are to compete. Either we are going to be hewers of wood and drawers of water or we are going to be drawn into the network and become part and parcel of the United States.

This present year will be known as the year when the taxpayer was squeezed harder than ever before in the history of our country. Federal taxes are up; provincial taxes are up; municipal taxes are up; the cost of living is up. Where does it all end? Today we have a 10 per cent increase in the amount of credit outstanding for consumer goods. Small loans show an increase of 13 per cent, and instalment credit is up 24 per cent. The consumer is paying almost 10 per cent more for his food than he did last year. The increase has been 40 per cent over the last 10 years, but the farmer today gets very little more than he got in 1956. I ask, what has the government done about this?

Why was there no relief for the municipal taxpayer in the Budget? Municipal taxation is levied on property assessment. It is not related to income. Increased municipal taxation can be devastating when combined with the increased cost of food and services. It is cruel to the old age pensioner, to those on fixed incomes and to those with low incomes.

I suggest that since the government is going to introduce medicare in 1967 it should take over health and welfare services in all of the municipalities across Canada and in conjunction with the provinces also take over education, leaving the municipalities with their police, fire protection, water, hydro and other services. The lower income group, old age pensioners and people on fixed incomes just cannot carry the burden of municipal taxation together with all other forms of taxation.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I also wish to bring to the attention of the minister the matter of research. This is not easy because we are embarking on new fields. I should like to say to him that the United States spends 3 per cent of its gross national product on research and Canada spends 1 per cent. I should also like to remind him of the fact that in the period from 1956 to 1961 when we were in power 12.5 per cent of Canadian science graduates went south of the border and 48 per cent of engineering graduates. That is bad enough, but let us look at recent figures. In the year ending June, 1963 over 4,000 professional and technically trained people crossed the border into the United States. I wish to remind the minister, Mr. Speaker, that these are Canadian born people. It cost us an average of $25,000 a year each to educate them. I am sure the minister is listening and I can tell him where this money goes.

We spent $25,000 a year on each of 4,000 people who went south of the border in 1963; 4,000 times $25,000 is $100 million. This is the gift that we gave away in this country in that year. I should like to go further and say to the minister that those 4,000 trained people have a working potential of a quarter of a million dollars. The minister is good with figures; I know he is. That figure increases to $1 billion over their lifetime and that is repeated year after year. I have the figures since his government came into power; here they are. We had something like 100,000 professional people who crossed over to the United States in the period 1963-65. The Blue Book or the Canada Year Book will give you these figures. They are greater than they were in any two year period of the previous Tory government.

I should like to say to the minister that we had unemployment, and the government has done a lot of talking about it, but in the period 1963-65 over 100,000 people crossed the border. Among them were 850 physicians and surgeons. The minister can check these figures. We will be building new schools this fall and enlarging our present medical schools to take in 400 to 500 new medical students who are needed because of the new plans the government has in respect of medicare and so on. Yet we exported 850 physicians and surgeons in that period.

I am not blaming the minister but I would say to him, for goodness sake close this loophole, because we cannot go on giving to the most powerful nation in the world this amount of wealth and brains every year. He knows how it can be done. This can be done in the field of research so that the people who are trained and who wish to go into research will have an opportunity to do this work. It is not good enough to contribute to only 50 per cent of research projects which have been tried and passed by the board as research projects and leave out the other 50 per cent. The people who otherwise would be carrying on those projects go south of the border and find projects there.

If our young men and women who are coming out of our universities do not find the incentive in this country, they are going to go south of the border. They can simply walk across and pick up a salary one-third higher. I am sure the minister knows this just as well as I do. Therefore I am disappointed that something has not been done about it. Yes, the brain drain has been worse under this government than at any other time in history. From June, 1963 to June, 1965, as I said before, 100,000 Canadians crossed the border into the United States. Included among them were 1,765 engineers. I am sure the minister feels just as badly about this as I do. There were 1,187 technicians, 163 industrial designers, 258 university professors, 850 physicians and surgeons, 725 accountants and auditors, 2,040 trained nurses—and we are building schools to train them—and 2,610 managerial officials and proprietors. This is fatal in an underpopulated country such as Canada and we simply cannot afford it. We cannot prevent these young people going south of the border, but we certainly can do something to provide them with more incentive to remain here. We can improve their situation by making appropriate changes in the personal income tax.

What have you done, Mr. Minister, to see that more of these young people remain in Canada? I am worried about this exportation of brains and people. We are short of capital and, Mr. Speaker, I only have to remind the minister of the words of Mr. Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, when he said:

> Any situation in which Canada needs to import a great deal of capital from a country which is trying to restrict the export of capital is inherently unsatisfactory.

Those are the words of the head of the Bank of Canada. This, Mr. Minister, is the position in which the government finds itself—short of money and exporting brains and people to a country where already 45 per cent of the labour force has four years of high school compared with 24 per cent in this country, where 11 per cent of their labour force has completed university compared with 5 per cent in our case. We become poorer by the minute because of the way we are handling our affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish for a moment to deal with the matter of medical research. I am disappointed that nothing has been said or done about this. More medical research would improve medical care and in turn improve national productivity. Related fields —biochemistry, genetics, chemical control of viruses—all would have a tremendous impact on the veterinary field and on agriculture in general.

I should like to turn for a moment to the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs. It has been said over and over again that this is going to be looked into. Surely to goodness it does not need any looking into to remove the sales tax on drugs which are used by sick people. It is a great disappointment to me that the government has not seen fit to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs and therapeutic items. Over the years in this house I have urged the repeal of this iniquitous tax, a tax on sickness, and a tax on people at a time when they are least able to carry it. I wonder whether the minister knows just how much is involved in this tax on drugs. I am going to tell him. He taxes the sick people in this country almost $12 million on drugs.

The minister knows that a great deal of the sickness is suffered by the people in the older age group, many of whom are on the old age pension. I know the minister knows as well as I do that 70 per cent of all the women in Canada over age 70 have nothing but the old age pension to live on. This is iniquitous and is not good enough. I cannot understand it. I know the Minister of Finance is a very nice person, but I cannot understand why in the world he does not repeal this tax. Why in the world did he say that we have to wait until the Food and Drug committee brings in this recommendation? Why this shilly-shallying on a thing like this?

• (4:10 p.m.)

If the minister wants a precedent he has one in what the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) did. The Prime Minister did not wait for the report of the B and B commission on the French-English situation. He announced in the house that the fellow who knows French and English is 10 per cent better, or some such figure, than the Frenchman who does not know English or the Englishman who does not know French, no matter how well educated they are. He did not wait for the report of that commission which has cost us over $4 million to date, one of the most costly commissions in the history of this country. I ask the minister to take another look at this matter. As I say, the Prime Minister did not wait for the B. and B. commission to bring in a report with which some French and some English will not agree or some other Canadians may not agree.

We are all in agreement that this is a tax on the people who are least able to pay. How in the world, in all conscience, can this government bring in medicare in 1967 when they are going to tax the very people they are trying to help? If this is not hypocrisy at its worst, I have never seen it.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I find myself in sympathy with a good deal of what he is saying on this occasion. I ask why these considerations did not weigh more heavily on the Conservative administration when it was in office? My main purpose in making the statement which I made was to be sure that the maximum benefit would be available to the people when this tax is removed.

Mr. Rynard: The only thing I can say is that the Conservatives had the red carpet rolled out for the present government. Things were on the move but it is natural that there may have been flaws in that red carpet. After all is said and done, the taxes were not as high then. You have increased them. I am not saying that the Conservatives should not have repealed it. If the minister will read my speeches, he will find that I advocated this procedure when the Conservatives were in power. The Liberals have been in power for over three years. What have you done?

[Mr. Rynard.]

We have been through two elections in which you said you were going to help these people. You are introducing medicare. We were not introducing medicare at that time, but the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) says you are introducing it. However, you are keeping the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs and you are taxing the very people you are trying to help. I do ask the minister to introduce an amendment to change this. I know that at heart he is a sympathetic fellow. It would be one of the most pleasing things we could do in this house so far as both sides are concerned, Liberals and Conservatives. I have many friends on the other side of the house. I see one smiling now, and he is in perfect agreement. The minister would make friends with all of us if he did this. Why does the cabinet shuffle around, as it does, on a point like this instead of removing the tax forthwith?

I cannot see for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, why a smart man like the Minister of Finance would impose a 5 per cent tax on industry and at the same time give incentives to industries in depressed areas of the country. He imposes a 5 per cent tax, the proceeds of which he is going to withhold for 18 or 24 months. The only reason I can see for this procedure is that the minister is really a fairly sharp businessman. He knows he is going to get this money from industry for nothing. He knows that with the present rate of erosion the money he pays back will be worth only 92 cents on the dollar. I am wondering whether this procedure is going to hold back industry. How can they change plans which are made for years ahead? It does not make any sense to me.

I should like to see more done in Canada to attract research scientists. Above all, this would keep our young Canadians whom we have educated in our universities in research jobs in Canada. It would give them an income and give them an incentive to work. They will be driving continually to put Canada in the front line. People will be coming here for post-graduate work, and we will be attracting scientists from other places. The skills of these young people will bring about new products, new drugs, to make this country wealthy. Let us not keep sliding into the arms of the United States, good neighbours as they are. Let us quit drifting. We cannot afford it any longer.

I ask the minister to take a look at these things. I hope I have not made it too difficult for him, but I do feel very keenly about these things. I know how difficult it is to do some of these things but for goodness sake, let us stop the drift. As I said before, when the Liberals took over we were selling $123 million more in goods than we were buying. Last year, Mr. Minister, this figure went down to just over $100 million in spite of over $1 billion in wheat sales pioneered by the previous Tory government. I am telling you, I want to see Canada prosper just as you do but you are not going to let it grow and prosper unless you make these changes to keep our young people here, to make industry competitive and make this country great. You had better start right now. It is a lot later than you think.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who just resumed his seat said he hoped he was not too difficult with the minister. I may appear to be critical of the minister and his department, but I want to tell him I am not. After all, if this is a debate I should like to put forward some ideas that I know he will want to consider. Believe me, he does not need me to tell him that the Budget was good or bad. The Budget was well received by the public and by the business sector and he can be satisfied that it is a good Budget.

In every established nation, especially an agrarian one, a Budget is primarily a remedial measure, that is, it is meant to remedy certain inequities and certain things that happened the year before. Only a small portion of the Budget initiates new ideas. I am sure the minister will agree that this has been the history of Budgets up to now. By and large, I have no complaint with the measure the minister introduced to rectify the abuses in corporate pension plans. As all hon. gentlemen realize, these plans were a way of taking profits out of the company by purporting to endow employees with pensions in which they never got a vested interest. It is an important remedial measure.

I was pleased to see the other measures relating to personal income taxes, the renewal of the sales tax on production machinery and so on. These things are good. The minister will agree that by and large they are remedial and necessary. However, I put it to the minister that within a short period of time he will have to discuss with his departmental officials whether or not a Budget shall be remedial only or should introduce new ideas, new measures to set a completely new climate for finance and for business.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Let us consider for a moment, Mr. Speaker, the 5 per cent withholding tax, which is something along the lines of the wartime compulsory savings plan. It could be a new idea but it depends on the emphasis the minister puts upon it. For instance, if the minister says that in the future the government will have a strong voice in either a short-term or a long-term disposition of profits or a portion of profits, then this is a new idea which will have a serious and strong effect on business. But if as far as the minister is concerned he only means to allay inflation, then I put it to the minister that this a remedial measure and probably may not have—I do not say will not have but may not have—much effect on inflation.

I also put it to the minister that today inflation or recession does not depend heavily upon the supply or scarcity of money. I put it to the minister that business today is influenced by other factors which are psychological. For example, if business thinks it can make and sell a product then it will do so; and if it has not sufficient money to finance it, it will borrow it at any cost and add the cost to the price of the goods.

I also put it to the minister that he should examine whether or not supply and demand today are really controlled by the same forces in that supply is controlled by the producer who in turn, by promotion, advertising and consumer credit, has a very heavy hand on the control of demand for goods. Consequently these two are lumped together.

I also put it to the minister that I think the expression he used in his speech about too much money chasing too few goods resulting in inflation is partly true but not always true. I would ask the minister to consider whether, if you have inflation, it necessarily means that there is too much money chasing too few goods. I seem to recall that for the past five years there has been a scarcity of money and a surplus of goods. Money has been scarce. It is never plentiful enough to fulfil the ambitions and plans which companies have instituted for themselves. At the same time we have an inflationary pressure which will reach 5.6 per cent from January to December in 1966 and which will effectively remove any interest earned on the money of people with fixed incomes.

Therefore I put it to the minister that the principle which he and everyone follows, that too much money chasing too few goods equals inflation, may not necessarily be the case, and

I suggest that it is up to the minister and his department to look very carefully into this precept.

While I am on this idea of pricking sacred cows, or sacred principles, one matter which comes to mind is the second report of the Economic Council. You will agree with me, sir, that the second report seemed to indicate that Canada and Canadians are greatly concerned about our efficiency of production. By and large this concerns all of us and the report does outline some educational problems. But the emphasis is always on production.

I have my doubts that this is the most important consideration. In fact, I think that the most important problem in Canada today is distribution rather than production. In other words, I am not worried about being as efficient as we can be, but I am worried that somehow the people who produce the goods do not earn enough money to buy them unless they use consumer credit.

According to the statistics which were given the committee on consumer credit, it seems that by the end of this year each family using consumer credit will be in hock to the tune of about $3,200. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures the disposable income of the average family in Canada is around $500, and I calculate that interest alone on the consumer debt comes to about $600. In other words, 75 per cent of families in Canada using consumer credit have a disposable income which is insufficient to cover the interest on the principal borrowed and have absolutely no purchasing power at all unless they borrow further money. The minister will agree that in that case inflation is a welcome thing for them. This question of mortgaging one's income disturbs me much more than efficiency of production, though this is of some concern.

Let me explain to you, Mr. Speaker, why it is urgent for the minister to start his department thinking along brand new lines. The Department of Finance will have to lead the nation and set the standards and rules under which the nation can blossom. Since the war and with the advent of television and the promotion of travel Canadians have become very aware of things which have always existed but of which they were unaware before. Canadians have seen with their own eyes mountains of raw material. They have seen electric power unused when other nations have remained short of power. We have a seaway reaching to mid-continent which people in other nations would give their eye teeth for. We have fresh water in lakes uncounted and unseen for which other nations are thirsty. We have atomic energy and uranium. Possibly we have a world monopoly on energy. We have manpower and food enough to feed the world. These are now acknowledged facts of which everyone in Canada is aware.

Having seen all these resources and having seen what other nations have done with one-tenth of the resources and manpower in Canada, Canadians want and will be satisfied with nothing less than greatness, not greatness in the old sense but greatness in the sense of an entirely new society. Therefore the minister and his department must set the climate which will acknowledge the desires of Canadians. This will be no easy task because no matter what new ideas the minister puts forward he still has somehow to dovetail them with the economic theories expressed in other nations. As I say, it is not going to be easy; it will be difficult. But we must make a start on the matter.

I have spoken before about the problem of distribution. It is difficult enough to cope with the profit problem which results in wage earners making far less than what is demanded for the goods they produce and profits tending to congeal in one spot instead of being widely distributed. The problem is more difficult when these profits leave the country. In order to stop profits being passed out of the country by subsidiary companies it becomes essential for Canadians to buy the shares of these subsidiaries.

I suggest that there are three approaches which bear consideration. First of all, I do not think there is any argument that we must centralize and clean up the stock markets. In other words, we can no longer afford to have 60 per cent of the invested money go for promotion and for speculation. Second, we shall have to simplify corporate procedures so that it is not as costly to get a broad basis of investment or participation as it is now. It now is a costly matter. That will have to be done. And most important in that regard is the Canada Development Corporation.

• (4:30 p.m.)

In 13 years in business and law I have come to the conclusion that Canadians are very hesitant investors. Nothing short of a government guarantee will make them gamble or part with their very hard earned money. What is so wrong with the Canada Development Corporation following the same lines as C.M.H.C. where you have guaranteed mortgages? In other words, with C.M.H.C. we try to entice people to put money in bricks and mortar. Why could the Canada Development Corporation not be introduced along the same lines? Why could there not be provided a comprehensive scheme whereby the purchase price of the shares—approved shares and not just any shares—would be insured?

Nothing short of a guarantee will satisfy Canadians. If a guarantee is provided I can assure the minister that money will come out of the woodwork. In fact, it will come out of almost anywhere because there is money here. In that way we shall be able to buy back the shares presently owned by people in the United States. I want to make clear that I am not concerned with control. Control is not the real concern. The real concern is the ownership of the shares or where the dividends go. Dividends are those moneys most easily invested again. It is easy-come, easy-go money. On the other hand, money that you have to work hard for, that you have to scrape together and save, is not easy money. If the money from dividends goes to the United States, then there is a vicious circle, the easy money being re-invested from the United States and the hard earned Canadian money not being invested. An insurance scheme by the government would make it feasible for many people to invest. That way we should be able to buy these shares back from the foreign people who now own them.

What do Canadians want? Here the minister is going to be involved in proposing a new sort of fiscal thinking. Canadians want and expect a guaranteed minimum income, not only for the aged but for everyone who cannot make a living in this very complex society. I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the time has now come when Canadians are no longer under the impression that the social cripples should run the same race as the fleet and healthy. I think all Canadians will agree that in this complex society people who cannot make the grade really are social cripples and that we want to help them. We shall have to do it. We cannot tell people that we cannot afford it, because everyone knows that this country is fabulously rich. Therefore a system will have to be devised by the minister and his department that will make it possible for this country to follow along these lines.

We shall have to deal with automation. The minister will have to ensure by his tax and fiscal measures that the people who are disrupted by automation will be the ones to have a temporary and possibly a permanent benefit from automation.

With regard to unemployment insurance, I think we must revise the whole scheme to make it realistic. At present our thinking on this matter is scattered. We shall have to have a comprehensive scheme by which a person who becomes unemployed or unemployable for any reason may go to one central agency where, under a realistic insurance plan, he would receive somewhere in the neighbourhood of 75 per cent of his previous earnings. Thirty dollars is of no value to an unemployed man. This whole concept of unemployment insurance must be taken out of the political plane. There is no use in our saying we cannot afford it. We know we can afford it.

Housing is another problem that will have to be faced. I think the minister will acknowledge before very few years have passed that housing will have to become a public utility because it is out of reach now for even the middle income group. It is even more out of reach for the low income group. When I suggest new ideas I mean this, that we have on the one hand an inventory of building materials, labour and electrical equipment in one place and, on the other hand, land in another place. Surely under a completely new scheme we ought to be able to bring these together to create usable inventory instead of, as we now do, putting great pressure on money and even greater pressure on land.

In urban centres land has become fantastically high in price not because there is a useable demand for it but because people are beginning to hedge against inflation with it. That is why the price has gone up. People do not want gold; they do not want insurance premiums; they do not want pensions. They want something real that will appreciate, and land is the only thing that they think will meet that requirement. Therefore there is not that useable demand for land but an inflationary or speculative demand which is pushing land prices to fantastically high figures. When there is a useable demand for land that is when people want to build houses, but they are having a very hard time acquiring it. I do not think this trend will be reversed. It has gone too far. But I suggest that we shall have to put a stop to it somehow and I suggest that the minister might give consideration to escalating the value of government bonds or securities with this in mind, somewhat in the same manner as is done with our pension plan, because people are worried about inflation. So long as people are worried, they will continue to buy land they do not want because to them it is better security than gold.

May I say to the minister that in order to obtain what is requisite for the new society, while still maintaining freedom and free enterprise, between now and the time of his next budget he might look at the problems I have raised. He might look at the question of corporate taxation and, in fact, all taxation in fields where we want people to invest money. In other words, can we not provide some exemption where profits are invested to buy back United States shares or shares in new industries? It seems to me, sir, that what is being done is that we are taking the cash value in taxes and leaving the taxpayer without the money to invest. If we want the Canadian taxpayer to invest in industry or in shares issued in Canada, surely an incentive ought to be provided for him to do so.

I also wish to mention the question of capital gains. In this country we have capital gains and we have taxable profits. I have my doubts that there is really much distinction between them or that capital gains induce speculative investment. I think that the minister could well look into this whole question to decide whether all profits should be taxable or whether consumed profits should be taxable regardless of whether those profits were made with the intention to profit. There are many arguments in law respecting this that now might no longer be applicable.

May I also say that it is time to look into the question of expense account living.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Otto: I cannot really say, sir, from my experience that expense account living has added to efficiency. Surely when you come right down to it there is no substitute for hard work in producing a good product. There is turmoil and confusion as to what is and what is not deductible and what is and what is not spent for business. I think that we should have a clean sweep across the board in this respect.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I do not think we can give Canadians everything they want and everything they should have under the old fiscal arrangements or under the ideas now held by those agreeing with John Maynard Keynes or economists who think as he does. I think something new will have to be worked out. I think the department will have to seek out new avenues. In fact, the minister will have to take the lead in setting the course toward what all Canadians want—greatness in a new society.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal in recent days about Canada's problems in respect of productivity. We have been told that our productivity has nearly reached its upper limit and that because of this we must expect a continued swift increase in the cost of living. Some aspects of our productivity problems have been covered by the second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada, but one quite interesting factor has been generally ignored.

It is customary to deplore the loss to our economy through strike action, and we find that in 1963, 917,140 man-days were lost to our economy. In the same year, 100 million man-days of labour were lost because of illness, over 100 times as great a a loss. This loss represented 3.8 per cent of the gross national product of that year or over one and a half billion dollars. If we assume a continued 3.8 per cent loss, the figure for 1965 comes to at least $2 billion. We must also consider the loss through those who continue to work while their productivity is lowered because of illness.

It is obvious that not all of this illness is preventable but I think it is safe to say that at least 10 per cent of it could be avoided with increased availability of medical care. Such a reduction would represent a gain to the economy of at least $200 million. It is also obvious that the institution of government-sponsored health care would have a very salutary effect upon our productivity. It is also the necessary first step in our war on poverty, sadly neglected in this budget.

It is frequently and vociferously stated that adequate medical care is available to every Canadian, and while this may possibly be true in theory it is simply not so in practice. It can readily be shown that the poor are also the sick and that they do not get the same medical care as our more prosperous citizens. To quote Dr. George James of the New York City Department of Health:

> The poor cannot pay for adequate medical care; consequently, they are more likely to be ill, and unable to work, at least at top efficiency; consequently, they make less money and become less able to pay for medical care. As a result, they are more likely to be sick and therefore they get poorer.

This vicious circle can carry on for generations, and the link of illness must be broken before financial status can improve. These people not only fail to contribute to productivity but in many cases must be supported by welfare arrangements.

A study prepared by the Department of National Health and Welfare in 1950 and 1951 showed that families with annual incomes under $1,500 spent $47 per family per year on medical care, while families with incomes over $5,000 spent $158 per family, over three times as much. It is ludicrous to suppose that poor families are three times as healthy as richer families, so we are left with the conclusion that poor families get only one-third of the care they need. Needless to say, these 1951 dollar figures are no longer valid, but 1959 studies indicate that the medical spending gap is growing. I regret that the government has not kept such studies up to date.

We should perhaps examine why low income Canadians do not get adequate medical care. First, quite obviously, is the financial barrier. The poor are unwilling to incur medical expenses and simply fail to seek medical attention. Even if a low income patient wants to seek free help, it means losing valuable wages waiting interminable hours in hospital outpatient departments or special clinics.

If an illness is severe, he may seek attention at a time when the disease is much harder to control or cure. The 1951 study cited earlier shows that the poor spent much more time in hospital than the better-off. If they are not hospitalized, prescription drug treatment is often ignored because of the cost. Alternatively, the doctor must prescribe a second-best treatment that his patient can afford.

Several recent studies indicate the extent of this failure to obtain health services. A 1965 study prepared by the social planning council of Hamilton and district showed that 37 per cent of Hamilton's senior citizens found their incomes inadequate for necessary medical expenses. If this is extrapolated to the rest of Canada, we find some 352,000 senior citizens without adequate medical resources.

The recently published Report of the Senate Committee on Aging includes the following statement:

> We heard a great deal also in the course of our inquiry about the concern of old people out in the community regarding doctor and drug bills, which they can ill afford to meet on their meagre incomes. Indeed, we were told that many of them out of pride and feelings of independence neglect their health rather than seek help on the basis of "charity" or "welfare".

We in this party regret particularly the failure of the government to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on drugs, and although I shall in part be repeating the statement made by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) I should like to say that when considering the cost of prescriptions we must bear in mind that more than 20 per cent is represented by taxes. The reason is that the 11 per cent is added to the cost at the wholesale or manufacturing level. The various profits are added subsequently, so the gross amount of taxation actually represents more than 20 per cent of the price. The result is that more than a dollar out of every five dollars paid for a prescription goes in tax or double the 11 per cent which shows up in our present system. Bearing in mind the fact that many people cannot afford to buy necessary medications, it seems ludicrous that this area should have been chosen by the government as one from which to raise taxes, particularly since the Hall Commission recommended that it should be a part of the medicare program.

Again I may seem to be repeating a point which the hon. member for Simcoe East has made, but I should like to remind hon. members that earlier this month I asked whether the government had received representations from the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association and, if so, what had been the reply. The answer I received quoted a section of the Budget speech which I had already heard, saying that if the considerations of the special committee of the house on food and drugs led it to recommend that drugs should be exempt from sales tax as part of a comprehensive and effective program to reduce the prices of drugs, then the government would be prepared to recommend such action by means of a special stature covering all the measures required to give effect to such a program.

There is supposed to have been a special committee on food and drugs. This parliament has been in session for over three months, since January 18. By virtue of a question I asked in the house on February a meeting of this special committee was called. However, approximately half an hour before the organization meeting was due to begin it was cancelled. That is more than a month ago and nothing has been said about the matter since. So it looks as though we are not even to have a meeting of the Committee on Food and Drugs, let alone get the 11 per cent tax removed.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It is to be hoped by mentioning this now that at some time in the fairly near future we can get down to a study of the cost of drugs because I know as a medical practitioner, that the cost of drugs is one of the most expensive, prohibitive costs patients have to put up with. In the over-all cost when a patient has an illness the primary cost is not the doctor but the drugs. Something not only has to be done about bringing in drugs as a program within a medicare scheme but for the present at least there should be some way we can get rid of the 20 per cent or more in taxation on drugs that the patient has to pay and possibly get the cost of drugs down to a more reasonable level, with a more normal and natural return for the drug companies rather than the very large profits they are now making.

It is interesting to note that in the United States the average annual expenditure of the elderly for drugs is more than double that of the average of the entire population. It is safe to assume that the same holds true in Canada. I regret the necessity of using U.S. figures but Canada is sadly retarded in the accumulation of such statistics, a fact noted also in the Senate committee report. I do not think any fault lies with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics but rather with the government in not directing the use of the facilities available, because it is well known that D.B.S. has some of the finest facilities in the world for the collection and projection of such statistics.

In the study on urban poverty prepared by the Canadian Welfare Council last November we read the following:

> In general, it may be said that health problems constitute the immediate cause of inadequate income for a great many of these families. Health problems are present in over 50 per cent of the households, with 43 per cent having chronic physical problems in the family. Many of the families reported that they did not get dental or medical care they needed, because of the cost.

It was found that an average of 49 per cent of families in the four cities studied expressed "emotional barriers" to seeking medical help because of their financial status. The report went on to say that of those who sought medical treatment several expressed the feeling that they were given inferior treatment, which is certainly so. It is therefore entirely a myth that all Canadians receive adequate medical care regardless of income.

Let us look at the results of this disparity in health care. Once again we must resort to United States figures but there is no reason to doubt that they represent the situation in Canada. A study was carried out by the New York city department of health on specific death rates in Flushing, a middle class section of New York, and Bedford, a poor section of Brooklyn. The causes of death chosen for the study are those where death rates tend to vary less between comfortable and poor areas than most other conditions.

It was found that the death rates for the five conditions chosen were significantly higher in the poor area. Deaths from diabetes and pneumonia-influenza were more than twice as high in the poor area. It was calculated that if the standard of care available in Flushing could be maintained across the city 13,000 lives could be saved each year. It should be remembered that Flushing is not the wealthiest area but a middle class one.

Dr. James of the health department summarized the study this way, referring to the 13,000 unnecessary deaths:

> In the light of present medical knowledge, these are preventable deaths. If we measure them against the list of the most important conditions that kill our citizens each year, these 13,000 deaths rank third on the list. Consequently, in this great city, whose health record on the whole is very good, poverty is the third leading cause of death.

It is impossible to estimate the degree of disease and disability suffered by the poor compared with their wealthier neighbours but it must be staggering.

We have in Canada, therefore, a situation in which the poor are ill and the ill are poor in a self-perpetuating cycle. Their own productivity is low or non-existent and their cost to the country's economy, represented by $2 billion in lost production, must be added to the welfare costs from which they cannot escape. The poor, while contributing in part to our overstretched productivity, are also the ones who will suffer most acutely from our present economic situation.

Our low wage earners, those on pensions or welfare, and those living on savings are the forgotten ones in our great boom. Their resources were long ago stretched to the limit and they will be unable to bear any further increases in the cost of living. We grant that the Canada Assistance Plan may provide a measure of relief but we doubt that it will be soon enough. It becomes obvious, therefore, that if we wish to conquer poverty and to increase productivity we must strike first at illness.

We in this group have listened to the government's promises of a comprehensive, universal health scheme by July, 1967, but we have grown rather anxious about the absence of any apparent action to this end. We heard about it right up to last November 8, which I believe was election day, and there has been a very deep silence since that time. However, we would like to urge the government to move as swiftly as possible in this field because we feel it is essential for the welfare both of our people and our economy.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with all those who have congratulated the Minister of Finance on his Budget speech. Before going any further, I just want to say two things on this subject.

I was particularly pleased to see that the small wage earners are to be exempt from the new tax which will be imposed shortly on the Canadian people as a whole. I was also happy to see that the concept of a compulsory reserve was introduced to exercise some control over investments. I think that formula deserves to be studied, amplified and developed.

But, most of all, this afternoon, I would like to talk about the financial aspect of a commission which has been very much discussed in Canada so far and about its immediate and future objectives. I am talking about the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Many times in this house and in the newspapers there has been talk about the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, not so much to discuss the objectives it is seeking, but mostly to try to discredit it a little by pointing out how much it costs, the money it is spending and the time it is taking to do its work.

Following a question asked here, it was said that the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism had cost $4.5 million up to March 31, 1966. It was said that it was the most expensive commission in the history of confederation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

If we add to the amounts already spent those which will eventually be spent, since the commission has not finished its work, it is possible that this figure will reach between $4 and $7 million.

There is no need to be scandalized by such heavy expenditures. Figures are always relative. Compared with billions of dollars, $5 million is relative. That might not be enough if the work to do is more important than the money allocated for it. The contrary may also be true. It might be too much if the commission spends that money without any control or needlessly.

I think that it is from that standpoint that we must evaluate the commission's work and the huge amount of money which figures in the books of the Canadian government. Was that money spent usefully?

Is our purpose, the purpose of the government in instituting this commission, worthwhile and worth the amount of money we are investing in that great venture?

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, there is malice, if not meanness, in insinuating that this commission is costing more because the commissioners may be more greedy or unwise in the spending of public funds. I feel such a gratuitous statement is unfair to those who are struggling with a task of fundamental importance to the future of Canada.

It is a fact that the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism is costing more than the other commissions. It is the first commission to have ten commissioners; usually royal commissions have one, two or three commissioners. That is a first explanation.

The second reason is the way in which the commission decided to carry out its mandate; it leads to considerable expense. How does it lead to such expense? First, through the series of regional meetings held right across Canada and then, through its vast research program.

At the time when I was a member of that commission, most of the funds, that is almost three quarters and very often 90 per cent of the money allotted the commission went into research or the secretariat. Last year, according to our figures, the salaries paid the commissioners represented no more than 5 per cent of the funds allowed the commission to perform its work. All in all, when the work is done, I do not think the commissioners' salaries will exceed 10 per cent of the funds granted the commission.

Those facts have to be taken into account when considering the amounts paid to the commission. The real question is whether the commission was justified in calling regional meetings and in undertaking this research program which is very expensive. In order to get a satisfactory answer to this question, the intentions which lead to setting up the royal commission should be kept in mind.

I should now like to quote a few paragraphs from the statement made on December 17, 1962 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) when he was leader of the opposition.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, I am sorry to interrupt the minister, but I wonder whether he intends to use the time at his disposal to deal with the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, since we are now dealing with measures designed to levy funds for the government. I wonder what connection there is between the two subjects.

Will the Laurendeau-Dunton commission find the means to levy the funds required to meet the expenses anticipated? Of course, a few references can be made to the commission, but not a whole speech.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): A general discussion is held during the Budget debate.

Mr. Lambert: I am asking the question. The Speaker, on Tuesday afternoon, said that to discuss the C.B.C. was out of order because an amendment and a subamendment was before the house. We are now on the amendment and only the amendment can be discussed.

An hon. Member: Who moved the amendment?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, obviously I mentioned the commission in relation to the expenses it has incurred.

Mr. Lambert: These are not expenses.

Mr. Marchand: Yes, these are expenses. I thought that at this point on the Budget debate, I could discuss such a subject without being limited by the rules.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for having reminded the Chair and the hon. members that the minister could have strayed from the question now before us.

I think the minister simply wished to emphasize that, in some quarters, it was being mentioned that the inquiry of the commission had been rather costly. This is a budget matter. I think the minister may proceed with his remarks, within the limits of the expenditures provided for in the budget.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, to make quite clear the extent to which these expenses were justified, I think I should indicate to the house what prompted the setting up of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, especially the idea that inspired its establishment.

To this end, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a few paragraphs from a speech delivered in this house on December 17, 1962 by the right hon. Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition. The text can be found on page 2725 of the official report. Here is what he said, and subsequently, as Prime Minister, he presided over the cabinet which established the royal commission. I quote:

> This means, I believe, that we have now reached a stage when we should seriously and collectively in this country review the bicultural and bilingual situation in our country; our experiences in the teaching of English and French, and in the relations existing generally between our two founding racial groups. In this review there should also be in my view, every opportunity and every encouragement for Canadians, individually or in their associations, and organizations, to express their ideas on this situation. If they find it unsatisfactory they should suggest concrete measures to meet it and to reach a better, more balanced participation of our two founding groups in our national affairs.
>
> Are we ready, for instance, to give to all young Canadians a real opportunity to become truly bilingual? If the answer is yes, as I am sure it would be, what concrete steps should be taken at the different levels of our educational system to bring about this opportunity, having regard to the fact that constitutional responsibility for education is, and must remain, exclusively provincial? What further contribution to this end have we the right to expect from radio, from television and from films in both languages? How can we encourage more frequent contacts between young Canadians?
>
> Then, there is the question which has already been mentioned in this debate, one of specific and inescapable federal responsibility. What are the reasons why there are relatively so few French-speaking Canadians in the professional and administrative jobs of the federal civil service, including crown corporations and federal agencies? How can that situation be improved as it must be improved? Would it be desirable, for instance, to have a bilingual school of public administration operated by the federal government in Ottawa?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it abundantly clear that those who, at that time, created the B and B Commission were not looking for transitory measures to solve an extremely difficult problem, but intended to get at the root of the matter and offer solutions acceptable to Canada as a whole.

That was their aim and to prove it, let me say that the government did mention on many occasions it would not wait for the commission's report before passing badly needed legislation.

On June 25, 1963 the Secretary of State—at that time the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne)—said in the house, as reported on page 1548 of Hansard:

> As far as the federal administration is concerned, as I said before, we do not want to wait for the commission's recommendations, before taking action. We want to achieve as soon as possible perfect equality for the two official languages, not only with regard to verbal or written communications with the public, but within every department.

He more or less repeated his statement in a speech delivered on June 12, 1963.

Therefore, the aim of the commission was —and I think that is how the commissioners interpreted their terms of reference—to seek out the deep-rooted causes of uneasiness in Canada. That is why the commission embarked on a vast research program. That is why the work of the commission is taking such a long time and why its recommendations will probably not be forthcoming before some months yet.

As the commission travelled across Canada, it became quite clear, from public hearings, that, generally speaking, Canadians did not know their country; they know their own region, their own province, but not the country as a whole. Each part of Canada developed towards the other parts prejudices which are now deeply-rooted, because people do not know what is going on and ordinary media of information do not usually fill in this gap.

Public meetings have proved that in this vast country which extends over 3,000 miles, people need to know one another better, to know what is going on in the western provinces, in British Columbia, in the Prairies, in Ontario, in Quebec and in the Maritimes. Our country is not only vast but it is divided by all sorts of barriers: geographical barriers —those who have crossed the Rockies know how much they constitute a barrier; distance barriers—those who have crossed the Prairies know how much these vast stretches of land constitute a barrier. There are also linguistic, ethnic and religious barriers.

Here is a vast country which does not know itself in depth, which often knows itself only through prejudices. Hence, it is important that the commission be allowed to investigate all these aspects of Canadian life, that it report on what it has heard and also on the results of its own reasearch, because to investigate on bilingualism and biculturalism, Mr. Speaker, is not easy. Some people may think—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but I think that his remarks do not exactly relate to the subject before the house. He referred to budgetary expenditures at the begining of his remarks, but I think he now deals with the principles which governed the initiatives of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

I think the minister is departing from the subject under consideration, because tonight we have to vote on a very definite amendment. I think the minister should confine his remarks to the financial considerations concerning the Budget.

Mr. Marchand: In all deference, Mr. Speaker, I know that the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism has been very costly. Members of the house and the general public have complained about that. I simply wanted to tell the house why this commission had been so costly, to give the reasons and to emphasize the importance of the work of this commission in terms of the money voted. I simply wanted to prove to the house and the public that if only a few millions are needed to settle this problem of relations between ethnic and linguistic groups, I would not consider it costly and that this should not have significant repercussions on the budget as a whole.

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): In rising to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to make a comment or two with regard to the statement we have just had from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand). What he has said was that this has been one of the most costly commissions in the history of Canada. He has tried to justify the action of the government, action taken in the face of opposition put forward during the period when this matter was first under consideration. I say to you, sir, that this commission has ignored the hopes and aspirations of more than one-third of the population of Canada, those of ethnic origin other than French or English, the two founding races of our nation.

We on the opposition side of the House of Commons believe that rather than emphasize the differences that exist between Canadians in one part of this country and those in another part, the primary objective of a government that is striving for unity should be to bring Canadians together on those things that they have in common. We believe that the place to do that is at the conference table with positive suggestions rather than negative ones and a questioning of the differences that exist between one part of our nation and the other.

However, we are dealing with the Budget on this occasion and particularly with the amendment which reads as follows:

—the policies of this government have failed to deal constructively and effectively with major national problems facing Canada which require action now to provide policies for adequate incentives to increase productivity, stimulate export trade, to meet the serious and increasing imbalance of international payments, to maintain price stability, and to promote orderly and equitable development and expansion in all areas in the nation.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I can understand that the members on the treasury benches do not want to talk about these things. All they have to do is look at the record of the last three years. If one looks at the Budget presented this session, one will realize that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has had to back-track on almost every action taken by the former minister of finance.

On this occasion, on the eve of our centennial year, the Budget debate is of more than passing significance. The Throne Speech outlines a government's good intentions; the Budget measures its sincerity and its purpose. The debate on the Budget is a crucial one under our system of government. Our predecessors in parliamentary practice attached votes of confidence so that the Budget debate would not be an idle exercise. These votes have never been looked upon as an obstruction to orderly government. Indeed, the allocation of time for this purpose enshrined within our rules has compelled a more than passing consideration of the Budget.

This debate should therefore be one of the decisive instruments of our democratic system of government. One need not examine the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance for very long to establish that it lacks any positive purpose. Therefore, sir, it lacks the greatest quality required to make it an instrument to build this nation.

There is another quality regarding Budgets and the debate associated with them and that is that parliament must be ready to stake its life on the various votes which are taken in relation thereto. I can think back and remember the Budget which introduced the 11 per cent sales tax about three years ago. I need not remind this house or the country now the leader of the N.D.P. and the members of his group failed on that occasion to face that decision. Their failure to vote then allowed the 11 per cent sales tax to take effect and has resulted in the factors which have led to the inflation which exists today in our country.

Three years later I am wondering about that decision which has had the effect of providing anxiety and privation for those on fixed incomes and those on low incomes in this country. I thought then, sir, and I think today that that was an act of cowardice on the part of a political party in this parliament. I know that the leader of the N.D.P. and his followers say that they remained in their seats reluctantly. But they nevertheless allowed the 11 per cent sales tax to take effect and allowed this tax to become one of the factors which have destroyed the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. We in the official opposition took a stand then which we still take today, namely, that a government so lacking in foresight and vision was unworthy of continuing in office.

We have since had further budget debates. We have had an election. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) so loved the prospect of a majority that he ignored the accumulated backlog of business before parliament and put the country to the expense of an election. It is interesting to realize that that was one of the times when the Liberals did not have the answers.

We in this parliament must now face the decision which should have been taken three years ago. The Minister of Finance and his colleagues, who have the answers, would not listen to reason during the last three years. The result has been the crises of 1966—tight money, inflation, the highest cost of living in the entire history of our nation—

Mr. Sharp: And the lowest unemployment.

Mr. Nasserden: —the deterioration of our balance of payments position, the highest consumer debt in Canadian history, costs spiralling day after day, and the tacit confession from the Minister of Finance that things will continue to spiral. Parliament faces the decision already delayed three years but now compelling in light of the events and conditions within the country. This nation must be restored as a bastion of freedom and the bulward of opportunity for the humblest and the poorest of our people. The arrogance which is embodied in the attitude "You never had it better" must be relegated from the administration of the affairs of this country. Prior to 1957 this country was subjected to that type of arrogance, an arrogance marked by conceit and by a cavalier attitude toward the problems which confronted our people in their daily lives.

The minister referred to unemployment. Canadians of that day did not enjoy the prospect of unemployment. Worse than that, they did not enjoy the prospect of facing the problems associated with unemployment and automation without the training which should have been given in the period when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power for 22 years. The government of that day failed, and failed dismally, to meet that problem, but when we came into office one of the actions taken under the direction of our minister of labour, the present hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), was to provide a program for building trade schools throughout the country. I believe over 287 trade schools were built in Canada.

That is the evidence, Mr. Speaker, of the neglect of the former administration, a legacy which was handed to us in 1957 and 1958 and which we met by doing something constructive in the years we were in office. I recall those days so well, particularly the response of the people in the great grain growing area from which I have been sent here. The people in my area did not like the prospect of the privation associated with empty pocketbooks and unpaid bills with at the same time overflowing grain bins. They did not like the attitude of the department of which the present Minister of Finance was then deputy minister. In short, they did not like the attitude "If you want our grain, then come and get it".

In the sessions which followed in 1957 and 1958 the foundations were laid for the expansion and development which began in 1961, and I am most happy, sir, to congratulate the Minister of Finance on his assertion that this expansion has continued and still persists despite the mistakes that have been perpetrated during the past three years.

The Minister of Finance is such a modest man. In 1962 his modesty was most remarkable. At that time he believed he had the answers. I have before me one of the answers he gave to the people of Canada. In fact, the Liberals inserted it in one of their pamphlets during the 1962 election campaign entitled "What Is Happening Now?" It reads as follows:

> There has been some economic recovery since the spring of 1961. Liberal spokesmen predicted it early in 1961. We expect it to continue through most of 1962. It is a normal movement in the business cycle; and as such, it is a welcome change. With this government's policies, however, it has a predictable end in another slow-down.
>
> We have had this sort of recovery before. In 1959 Canada made better progress than in other years of Tory government. Our production then increased by 3 per cent. That was better than the 1 per cent of 1958. Unemployment was less severe. But it was still serious. And in 1960 it became much worse again.

Then in red letters to emphasize the position of the minister, who was then one of the chief critics of the government of the day, the following statement was made:

> This year is like 1959. It provides some improvement, but nowhere near enough. And there are many indications that the improvement will not continue long. It is only a small offset to the economic slow-down of the Tory years.

Mr. Sharp: Then there was a change of government.

Mr. Nasserden: In the minister's Budget and in almost every publication from the Bank of Canada the confession has been made that this expansion which was begun in 1961 has increased and carried forward to an extent unknown in the history of our nation.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: As a result of government policies.

Mr. Nasserden: As a result of the foundations that were laid in 1957 and 1958.

Mr. Sharp: Why not go back to 1914?

Mr. Nasserden: It is very interesting, sir, to realize that the slow-down of those years was such that it has taken all these three years for a minister of the Crown in this the greatest land of opportunity, the land of raw materials and great resources, this land of limited population, to plead with business to slow down and to cut back on construction, all in the name of the inflation that was caused by the 11 per cent sales tax put into effect by this government. You know, sir, the minister was one of the architects of the fraud perpetrated in 1962 by the then opposition of that day. I need not remind anyone here nor in the country how well the hon.

gentlemen opposite demonstrated their illegitimate claim to the responsibilities of government. They still retain the old arrogance. The Minister of Finance is a living embodiment of that arrogance. Instead of coming clean with the Canadian people and with parliament the minister hedges, hoping a fractured gesture will serve a wholesome purpose.

I would ask you, sir, if the situation is of the magnitude that the minister has outlined on more than one occasion, and as indicated by every factor in the field of business today, why does he not remove the sales tax entirely? I cannot help but feel that the budget, therefore, is another monument to carelessness. It is an arrogant denial of responsibility. This debate can serve some useful purpose if it puts an end to the careless, divided administration opposite. It would then give Canadians a purpose and restore a new respect for the institutions that we have here in Canada.

I remember vividly how the Minister of Finance was in the vanguard of those who bore the banners of shame and degradation during the devaluation crisis. Day after day he was one of those who brought into question the integrity of Canada. I remember those repeated false claims fraudulently, arrogantly, carelessly and deliberately uttered by the front bench opposite. They were not content to destroy—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nasserden: —confidence in Canada, but they took their purpose to the other nations of the world as well, in the international field.

Mr. Sharp: Can I ask the hon. member a question? Since these are very serious charges that he is making, can I ask if he would document these charges against me in this respect?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder whether the minister could wait until I have completed my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member wishes to ask that any questions be put when he has terminated his speech.

Mr. Nasserden: I remember that period. I remember that election campaign. I remember how members opposite gave birth to that illegitimate foundling, the truth squad. During the debate the minister has said that they never questioned the necessity for devaluation.

Mr. Sharp: That is right.

Mr. Nasserden: Why did you use the term "Diefendollars"? The minister ought to know that history has a way of catching up. At this particular time it has certainly caught up with this government. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister all cast doubts on Canada's future. Every one of them said that with the devaluing of the dollar Canada did not have a future. Today, without generosity, without any apparent twinge of conscience, they would have us believe that they had something to do with the expansion and development that took place in this country from 1961 to 1965.

Mr. Sharp: Government policy since 1963.

Mr. Nasserden: I say to you, sir, that that expansion was well on the way before this government ever took office. I need not call witnesses in this regard. Indeed, I say to you without fear of contradiction that the expansion has taken place despite the impediments that have been the issue of this unhappy government opposite.

Mr. Sharp: We have done very well.

Mr. Nasserden: The minister has exhibited some pride in the health of our economy today. I say to him that it is a false pride without substantial foundation.

Mr. Sharp: Who is running down the country now?

Mr. Nasserden: First of all, the minister and the government opposite have only complicated the economic life of this nation since coming to office. Second, inflation today is rampant in this country, robbing our people of the purchasing power of their dollar. This inflation is a direct result of the poorly considered, ill-conceived measures which were the results of the labours of the present government.

It would also seem, sir, that the government embarked upon a program designed to create a high cost economy as soon as it assumed office. Members of the government have been eminently successful in that regard. The cost of living in Canada is at an all-time high. Consumer credit, which was referred to by a member opposite, the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), is at an all-time high in Canada. Municipal taxes have become an increasing burden in almost every part of Canada. This problem has become so acute that some provincial governments have put in motion legislation to refund a part of the municipal tax burden.

Interest rates have gone up. We have had a return of tight money such as this country has not seen since hon. gentlemen opposite were in office prior to 1957. Farm machinery and production machinery have reached all-time record prices. All of these things add to the responsibilities of those who carry a dinner pail and work for a living, not to mention those who have to rely on fixed incomes.

I submit, sir, that these things have not happened accidentally. The government opposite, having destroyed the confidence of Canadians in the former government, set out deliberately and systematically upon the course it has followed to bring about the high cost economy that we have in Canada today.

Hon. members opposite are the ones who have boosted interest rates of National Housing Act mortgages, adding to the cost of owning a home. I submit that this deliberate action results, even if payments are amortized over a longer period of time, even if down payments are lowered, in adding to the cost of living. That action takes away something from the man who carries a dinner pail. Hon. gentlemen opposite have also raised interest rates on some of the loans to farmers. That could not have been done other than deliberately and knowing that it would increase the cost of production. I believe that the record bears out the belief that higher interest rates have been part of the government's policy which it embarked on deliberately three years ago.

During the election campaign, sir, we heard about this man who cares. I ask you, sir, where is this man who cares? Where is this man who was talked about throughout the election campaign? The only time that we see him in the house is during the question period or when he comes in to applaud some particular piece of business in which he outlines—

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: To whom is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Nasserden: I am referring to the Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. Sharp: Then those are scandalous remarks and you should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Nasserden: I say to the Minister of Finance that that kind of arrogance—

Mr. Sharp: It is you who are arrogant.

Mr. Nasserden: The government might have been able to get away with it if they had been able to deliver the goods as far as legislation is concerned—

Mr. Chrétien: He is not going to spend his time listening to you.

Mr. Mackasey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, earlier you called the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to order because he had departed from discussing the amendment. I should like to ask Your Honour what this personal attack on the Prime Minister has to do with the amendment now before us. What is the purpose, under the guise of a discussion on the Budget, of this attack on the Prime Minister who is not present in the house at the moment, and this attempt to reintroduce the type of atmosphere which has existed here for far too long?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nasserden: We are used to hearing these things from the hon. member for Verdun. But if he does not realize that the Prime Minister has failed to deal effectively with problems involving the daily lives of our people then he has not been doing the job for which he was sent to this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: If that is all you can talk about you should sit down.

Mr. Nasserden: In any consideration of the Budget one cannot help but think of the leadership given to a nation. I well recall how in former debates when the Budget was under consideration in this house the decisiveness of the then prime minister and the leadership given to this country were questioned by those who now sit on the front benches opposite. I ask you, sir, to look at the record and consider whether we have had the type of decisive leadership during the last three years of this administration to which the country is entitled.

I notice that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) is not here. I wish he were because he is one of those who, above all others in the House of Commons, talked during that period about decisiveness and the need for leadership in this country. He is charged with the responsibility for transportation in Canada. He has had the MacPherson report before him for three years. Today that report is ancient history; yet there is no legislation before us to deal with the important problems raised therein. Where is the decisiveness of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to a problem which affects every phase of our economy in every part of this nation? For three years nothing has been done to deal with this most important matter, one upon which the future development of our nation depends. The minister, once so vocal, so decisive, is now the very symbol and monument of indecision and delay.

We have a new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene)—a missionary in the forest of high machinery prices. He uses the right phrases. He says the right things. The Minister of Finance and some of his colleagues think he is a "nut", someone to be put up with but not really to be listened to with attention. The Prime Minister himself tipped his hand in this regard when he appointed to the Senate those who had been disowned by the electorate, Hon. Harry Hays and the former member for Assiniboia, Hazen Argue, to advise the government on agricultural matters concerning western Canada. Together with them the Minister of Finance pays lip service to grain marketing.

A few days ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture to give some indication to the farmers of western Canada of what they should produce in the coming year. One of the ministers got up to say, rather smartly, that the farmers could decide very well what they wanted to produce. There was a time in this country when we had a minister of agriculture who went out to the farmers of western Canada and told them to produce one billion bushels of grain for the next three years. The Liberal answer during that period was that a final payment would be made which would amount to a bribe to the electors of western Canada who produced grain. That is an indication of the attitude of members opposite. The Minister of Finance used to take delight in hearing stories of cheques being brushed aside from the doorsteps of farmers in western Canada. That story was told in almost every other part of Canada by Liberal members and spokesmen laying a foundation for the false impression among people in many parts of this nation that the final payments came out of the treasury.

There is one matter I wish to deal with before I conclude. It concerns grain handling. We are all aware of the hesitation shown by the government with regard to the terminal at Prince Rupert. That hesitation produced hesitation in turn on the part of the grain companies with regard to the terminal at Vancouver. I believe the government would be well advised to consider a subsidization program for the construction of terminal facilities at the west coast. In the long run it might prove economic for the government to take this course; it might put this project on a much sounder economic basis not only for the grain trade but for the farmers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday, March 29, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on behalf of the government, tabled in the house the details of the national budget for the fiscal year 1966-67.

That document represents for the country an important event because it must bring to light the most urgent problems and suggest appropriate remedies.

A budget is the equivalent of detailed soul searching which, in addition to analysing with perception and priority the various problems which face the country, breaks down the coming expenditures and tries to find the revenue needed.

Since a budget exists to promote the welfare of the people and the economic life of the country, it must not be concerned only with mathematics and material considerations. A healthy budget must include, in addition to an economic direction, a social, family and humanitarian philosophy, according to the needs of the day.

Moreover, a dynamic budget can also afford some originality and does not have to fall systematically for worn and redundant economic theories already exploited and debatable.

In fact, economists disagree on so many things and the economic theories already in force have produced such unexpected results at times that one should not persist in going through the same gestures and refuse to take new and bold steps.

One must see that economic theories too often prove to be rational and that they grade problems too synthetically. They often remain too rigid and the results obtained often lead to a questioning of their standards.

Thus, when one says that to fight inflation it is necessary to reduce demand, restrict credit, take money out of circulation, restrain production and cut expenditures, and when, on the other hand, one suggests that to allay unemployment it is necessary to cut taxes and increase expenditures, the two problems are solved with more complexity than is used to state them, because several economic factors are little related and bring about conflicting results.

A realistic budget comes much more from the practical mind of a businessman than from theories held by academicians. To use an expression found in some provisions of the Civil Code of the province of Quebec, an able Minister of Finance must act as "un bon père de famille".

• (5:50 p.m.)

There are major problems in Canada and they must be faced squarely as soon as possible. Our main concerns are as follows: to provide work for all, welfare and security for everyone and to make the budget and the economy serve the individual. To this end, strong and immediate steps must be taken to increase our production capacity, improve our manpower, increase exports, develop our resources, fight poverty radically and ensure real economic balance.

In my opinion, the present budget of government is a collection of diverse, scattered and incoherent theories, it lacks dynamism and originality, it is a step backwards in the development of our country and, above all, it sacrifices to a doubtful economic balance the social, family and humanitarian needs of the Canadian people.

Inability to stimulate an increase in production and exports, indifference toward limiting our trade deficit, delay in establishing a strong manpower policy in co-operation with the provinces, too evident concern over keeping money concentrated in the hands of the little Canadian and foreign tzars, absence of an intelligent policy concerning the balance of payments, obstinate and shameful refusal to increase old-age pensions and family allowances, waste and maintenance of too heavy expenditures in national defence, neglect to establish a parliamentary committee and a national conference on constitutional and financial reform, increased taxes on the income of the majority of people, all these grievances make this budget dull, apathetic, mediocre and disappointing.

The national budget of the hon. Minister of Finance for 1966-67 is a reflection of the inertia of a government which shows itself to be increasingly unable to deal with legislation in order of importance and to solve the administrative problems of the country.

During the Easter recess I talked with a great number of my constituents, and it is, unfortunately, a sad message that I bring back to the Minister of Finance, a message with which I fully agree.

In spite of the seriousness of the situation and the general disillusionment, if we want to inject a humorous note it would be appropriate, as is usually done in Ottawa, to draw inspiration from the United States and parody this budget by borrowing the tune from the Gillette Company, a U.S. firm:

To be sharp, to feel sharp, to look sharp;

Now, in Canada, we may add: to live sharp, to die sharp.

During the few minutes at my disposal I shall be unable to dwell on each of the decisions taken by the Minister of Finance. Therefore, I shall only deal with some highlights.

After all, the minister's stand is based on the following assumptions: the Canadian economy is operating at full capacity; due to inflation and to production having reached its peak, we must slow down the increase in demand, reduce public and private investments, contain production and restrict the money supply.

But should the minister be wrong in his assumptions, a good portion of his theory would collapse automatically.

I am not convinced that our economy is operating at its peak capacity. This opinion is shared also by the Economic Council of Canada. In December 1965, the said Council pointed out a gap of 3 per cent between present and potential capacity. Today, this gap would be 2 per cent. Therefore, there is a substantial margin which would force us to stimulate our economy and justify another expansionist budget.

It is easy to see that many industries are operating at moderate capacity—the minister should visit my bailiwick, the county of Sherbrooke, and the surrounding constituencies to see that this is true—and that a good number of workers could increase their efficiency.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

Mr. Allard: Unemployment still exceeds 2.7 per cent. Putting these unemployed to work would bring our economy to its full capacity.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise): Television—Chibougamau-Chapais—suggested use of services of the Northern Quebec Telephone Company Limited; the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe): Unidentified flying objects—request for investigation; the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski): Agriculture—Cream—request for acknowledgement of subsidy applications.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Monteith.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned at six o'clock, I was saying that in spite of the optimism of the Minister of Finance I was not convinced that our economy had reached its maximum efficiency since there is still a 2 per cent gap between its present and its potential capacity.

Our rate of unemployment still exceeds 2.7 per cent, the level usually maintained by an economy operating at full capacity.

According to the statistics for the week ending March 19, 1966, the national rate of unemployment reached 4.8 per cent, while it went up to 6.5 per cent in the province of Quebec and to 10 per cent in the Maritimes. Only Ontario, with a rate of 2.9 per cent, comes close to the ideal rate of 2.7 per cent. Must it be inferred that the minister tailored his budget to fit the situation in Ontario, rather than the situation throughout the country, instead of taking into account uneasiness and stagnation prevailing in several other provinces?

That is why when the minister claims that our economy is operating at full capacity I say he is shortsighted, that he sees only his own province and is being hoodwinked by a dangerous misconception.

Consequently, the measures he has announced will have effects damaging to our whole economy, and disastrous to the economy of several provinces and regions. If in addition, as a consequence of the restrictions he is laying down, a recession were to occur within six months, the situation would be serious.

Even if the claims of the minister were to be recognized the question arises whether the means he is using to achieve his objectives are the best. Mr. Claude Ryan, in a well-informed commentary published in the editorial of the newspaper Le Devoir on March 31, 1966, rightly pointed it out.

If a reduction of expenditures is required, such reduction should be made simultaneously in several areas. Tackling the excessive and wasteful expenditures in the Department of National Defence, to my mind, would have been indicative of wise management.

Applying his theories the minister has only reduced federal expenditures on construction work by 10 per cent, or $35 million out of total expenditures of $9 billion, a rather meek gesture.

Furthermore, the 5 per cent redeemable tax on private enterprise's gross profits and the partial and gradual exemption of the 11 per cent tax on some capital equipment do not take into account the diversity of industrial development from one area to another and the variety of equipment problems.

If the minister had to raise personal income tax, nothing prevented him from introducing changes and taking into account the family responsibilities and the education expenses of the taxpayer instead of following tradition by providing for standard raises based solely on nominal categories.

The present budget lacks dynamic incentives to boost productivity and encourage skilled labour in order to meet international competition.

Another well-informed columnist, Mr. Peter Newman, said, and rightly so, in an article published in La Presse on March 30, 1966, and I quote:

1. Almost no provision has been made for those parts of Canada where unemployment rather than inflation is the real problem, particularly as manpower in Canada will increase by 220,000 new workers this year, many of whom will not have the advantage of being where work is available.

2. Only a weak effort has been made to deal with the serious problem of the Canadian balance of payments, which has increased considerably. By asserting that Canada intends to maintain the stability of its currency, Mr. Sharp gave the financial community—at home as well as abroad—the reassurance it wanted.

Mr. Speaker, a list of the highlights of the present budget would read as follows:

Small tax cut for the small wage earners.

Higher taxes for average and top bracket wage earners, from 10 to 14 per cent.

Status quo with regard to the basic exemptions.

No basic increase in old age benefits or in family allowances.

Reduction of the tax on industrial machinery but in a year only, and repeal in two years.

Decrease of 10 per cent in building expenditures and deferment of non urgent works.

It is obvious that the minister has sacrificed to his economic views, which I do not share at all, the social, family, humanitarian and regional needs of the Canadian people.

And yet, in the last year governments, institutions and several Canadians have declared war on poverty.

The tax cut for small wage earners is equivalent to a huge reduction of 6 cents a week, that is the price of a package of chewing gum. Is the minister trying to make people forget poverty by just advising small wage earners to chew gum?

The failure to increase the basic income tax exemption in a social, family and humanitarian concept and the refusal to increase old age pensions and family allowances show a total disregard of urgent and widespread needs.

The minister is too quick to close his eyes to the canker of poverty which must always be the government's main concern, as stated so aptly recently by the Quebec Minister of Family and Social Welfare, Hon. René Lévesque.

I do not find any originality or initiative in the field of personal income tax. The present budget remains too orthodox and cold.

For instance, what does the minister think of the theory of negative taxation which is now being studied in the United States? Is he ready to set up a committee to study that matter, within his department or elsewhere, instead of waiting calmly for other countries to lead the way in that direction?

Negative taxation is based on the principle of distributive justice. Each citizen, throughout his life, must get a minimum income to live.

That negative tax is set according to a line of poverty. In the United States there was talk of setting the line at $3,000 per family. In Canada it could be set at $2,500 or $2,000.

Thus, taking $3,000 as the basic line, an individual who would earn only $2,200 would get the difference from the state, that is $800. An individual earning $4,000 would be taxed on the excess, that is on $1,000.

• (8:10 p.m.)

A personal income tax would continue to apply to those with incomes higher than the amount set as the poverty line. Anyone earning less than the amount set as the poverty line would be paid by the government the difference between his earned income and the amount set as the poverty line. The individual who would earn nothing because he would be unemployed, would get the full amount set as the poverty line.

This would result in the removal of all social allowances, including unemployment insurance, except payments for education, hospital insurance and medicare.

It would be appropriate to maintain certain real estate and indirect taxes.

That is a new and imaginative system. It is under consideration by the Johnson administration but its possible application has been delayed in the United States by the extension of the war in Viet Nam.

What does the Canadian government do during that time? It is blissfully asleep on the same old clichés. It struts pompously along in stagnation. It immunizes itself against any new idea. Nothing can be done and everything seems stupid, unless it has been tried previously. The earth, the sun and the moon came about because there were precedents. What a mentality!

No wonder Canadian politics lack vitality and renovation.

Therefore, I would ask the Minister of Finance to have doubts about his forecasts and his advisers. He should pay as much attention to men of great experience and exceptional qualities like Dr. O. J. Firestone, vice-dean of the faculty of social science at the University of Ottawa and former economic adviser at the Department of Trade and Commerce, who advocates a tax reduction, and Mr. Robert Beck, president of DuPont of Canada, who recommends an increase in our production potential.

Before I conclude my remarks I particularly want to call the attention of the minister to the Canadian textile industry and the many problems it is facing.

This industry contributes a great deal to the Quebec economy. As a matter of fact, it has about 417 mills in the province employing 35,879 workers; it is the fourth most important Quebec manufacturing industry. Most of the mills are found in about 20 of Quebec's larger cities. In my constituency of Sherbrooke there are 12 spinning factories: Austin, Bruck Mill, Carnegie, Domil, Dominion Textiles, Fil National, Glenhill, Kayser, Morgan, Paton, Sheer Silk, Tricotex.

The textile industry is very important to Quebec, and to more than 20 cities. It has stood the test of time and is now lying at the mercy of increasing foreign imports; yet, in his budget speech, the minister never so much as hinted that he would intervene or consider means of reducing foreign imports.

There is great concern in the Quebec textile industry at the present time. More than 5,000 textile workers are unemployed and some factories have no alternative but to pay their employees the lowest salaries in the whole of Quebec industries and to have them work in inhuman conditions to achieve a certain level of production; employees are working relentlessly from morning till night, taking only five or ten minutes out for lunch.

The textile sector of our economy is perhaps the most Canadian of all our industries; 80 per cent of its capital is made up of Canadian investments. I think the minister and the government should make an effort to preserve our industries. I have received many complaints from labour and industrial organizations.

In 1963, particularly, imports from Japan increased by 37.5 per cent; those from Hong Kong rose by 36 per cent. We sell wheat to Communist China. I would not mind if we sold it to all the countries in the world. In return, we accept textile products. I would ask the government to diversify imports and to suggest to foreign countries to diversify their exports to Canada instead of always sending textiles.

The hon. minister has the figures. He knows that Communist China buys wheat from us and other things which it needs and in return sends us 75 per cent and more of textile products, which we do not need since Canadian industry can meet our domestic demand.

I would like to ask the hon. minister to consider the fate of the textile industry in view of the present acute crisis which is shaking this country, for thousands of citizens are affected by it in the province of Quebec. I would like to ask him to study means of putting a stop to these imports. The best way to do so would be to bring their prices in line with those of Canadian products, by setting their value for customs duty purposes.

As an alternative quotas should be maintained and, if need be, improved. The scope of quotas should be broadened to include additional products and each category should be clearly defined. In fact, the only solution to the problem of low priced imports would be to set all inclusive quotas.

Quotas should be applied to all items of clothing, products and textiles; there should even be sub-quotas to prevent over-saturation through concentration as it is now possible.

These are suggestions which should be studied by the hon. Minister jointly with his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), and the government should also take an active part in the study. We do not know what the government's policy is with regard to the textile industry. I hope it is not the one expressed by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who, in 1959—I do not have the reference, but if it is requested, I could give it—who said that the textile industry was not sustained by Canadian raw products and gave the impression, throughout his long speech, that it was one which should be allowed to go to ruin. I trust that is not the present government's policy and that it will soon adopt vigorous measures with regard to that important industry.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) sought to smuggle into the Budget debate his opinions on the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and the new government policy on bilingualism in the civil service. The minister has achieved an almost uncanny knack of choosing the wrong time and the wrong forum to express his opinions. At the proper time during this session, which assuredly is not during the Budget debate, I will deal fully and explicitly with the views which he expressed and with what I consider to be the disservice which he and his colleagues are doing to Canada's public service.

Tonight I wish only to remind the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that he is very much a political neophyte and would do well to absorb some of the wisdom and the statescraft of the great leaders of his own people, Cartier, Langevin, Laurier, Lemieux, Lapointe, Arthur Cardin, and St. Laurent, before he discards the heritage and tradition which they impressed upon Canada and before he seeks to pontificate upon problems which he does not yet understand. It is a great thing to get at least half dry behind the ears before seeking to solve overnight, problems which have engaged generations of the best political minds of the nation.

What of this Budget, sir? I say that not since the days of the "miller of Valleyfield" has Canada experienced a Budget so prosaic and unimaginative as that delivered by the hon. gentleman from Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) on March 29. But one would have to search even farther back in history to find a Budget which so studiously avoided the major issues of the day.

The Minister of Finance sought, or appeared to seek, to find some justification for the insipid and vapid fiscal policies he espoused in the imminence of the report of the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation. Certainly after that Commission has taken more than three years to study our taxation system the house and the country has the right to expect profound and practical recommendations to update our taxation system. Without doubt the federal "Topsy-built" tax structure has become regressive, stifling enterprise in many regions and discriminating against many taxpayers. A major overhaul is undoubtedly imperative.

There can never be, of course, such a thing as a tax millenium but perhaps we may see in the Carter report a peep of light over the dread tax horizon.

I think it is only fair that the house say to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) that we expect prompt and decisive action in dealing with the report of the Carter Commission. Officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue, including the new tax analysis unit, have already seen, and in my view, improperly seen, sections of the Carter report. The two ministers cannot have the slightest excuse for emulating the stalling and temporizing with which the government has dealt with all other royal commission reports.

If a second budget is needed in 1966 to bring our tax structure up to date, and if a proper overhaul is recommended, then I say that the minister should not have the slightest hesitation in bringing down a second budget.

What I want to assert to the minister tonight as vigorously as possible is that the imminence of the Carter report is no excuse whatever for the colourless, lack-lustre, pallid approach of the Budget to the major fiscal issues of 1966. Rising costs and inflationary pressures are stealing much of the real gains in our economy, and what is tragic, they are stealing them from the very people who need them the most. Compare, if you will, as I have done, the advertisements of the supermarkets three years ago and those of today, and one cannot but be shocked and alarmed by the advance in the cost of staple items of living.

Let us take another basis, Mr. Speaker. Compare if you will, the prices listed for the basic items of living in Washington, District of Columbia, with the prices advertised for the identical commodities in Canada's national capital. Then compare the salary levels of Washington and Ottawa, and one can only be astonished at the handicaps suffered by the salaried workers in this community.

I suggest that the timorous and inadequate proposals of the Minister of Finance to deal with inflation are largely self-defeating and will intensify rather than contain the problem. In particular, I would submit to him that the 5 per cent refundable tax on corporate income will significantly increase the pressures and thereby defeat the very objective of the tax.

The pressure in business will be to maintain a consistent level of retained earnings and of dividend pay-outs, and with the 5 per cent refundable tax this can only be achieved by percentage increases in product prices considerably in excess of 5 per cent. I predict to the Minister of Finance that a year from now he will be most unhappily aware that his panacea, his cure-all, in fact will have spread the disease.

Equally, Mr. Speaker, I think it is difficult to understand the failure of the minister to make any attempt to balance the budget. Deliberately in boom times he plans a budget deficit of $150 million, and at the very time when the policies of the government have made money tighter than at any time since 1957 he plans to go into the market for a cash requirement of $500 million in 1966-67, as opposed to only $187 million in the last year. Clearly what he is doing is trying to pull himself up by his bootstraps. I suggest that he will succeed only in confounding his own problems.

Mr. Sharp: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has been very good at getting up and asking questions, and bootlegging questions at that. I will answer his question at the end of my speech.

Mr. Chrétien: You are afraid.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I intend to make a full presentation and I will answer the minister's question at the end of my speech. But I would ask him not to bootleg questions as he has done constantly, sitting in close proximity to Hansard and putting so many comments on the record.

Mr. Sharp: I thought my hon. friend would be flattered to know I was listening to his speech. I am just trying to be helpful.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I put it to the house and to the country that if our national budget cannot be brought into balance at a time which the Minister of Finance alleges to be our greatest boom, then when can it be? Surely it is monstrous to suggest that we can go on and on in years of prosperity, ever increasing the national debt, ever living beyond our means, without anticipating a day of fiscal reckoning. If there is any validity at all in cyclical budgeting, and I believe there is, then how can anyone doubt what stage of the cycle we have achieved in 1966? Once again the Minister of Finance has allowed himself merely to be the prisoner of events, instead of attempting to act as captain of the nation's fiscal fate.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

What I have said here, Mr. Speaker, must apply equally in connection with the spreading crisis in our balance of payments position. All the minister does is to view it with alarm, to suggest that we must develop a long-term balance of payments policy, and then he retreats without even suggesting a palliative.

• (8:30 p.m.)

One of the aspects of the minister's speech which fascinated me was his pinpointing at one stage of his speech of the year 1962—and at another stage he said "five years ago"—as the period when the upturn in our economy gained momentum. What a difference there is between this confession and what the minister and his colleagues are prone to assert on the hustings. But now at least we have his acknowledgement that it was the policies of the former government which sparked the upturn. The real fact is that our present state of economic well-being is firmly grounded in the devaluation of the dollar, a policy once scorned, sneered at and vilified by most hon. gentlemen opposite. They are now the inheritors of the benefits of the very policies that they pilloried. The genuine basis of our economic well-being is in the policies introduced by the former hon. member for Eglinton, Hon. Donald M. Fleming, who I believe, sir, will be established in history as one of the most intelligent, courageous, and far-sighted ministers of finance of all time.

Sir, in my view the Budget is much more significant with respect to the matters with which it does not deal than with respect to the evasive pronouncements over the limited range with which it does deal. It is much more significant in its omissions than in its inclusions or its proposals. I want to deal with three matters virtually ignored in the budget, agriculture, education and federal-provincial relations.

Can you imagine, sir, a budget of Canada with only two parts of a sentence—I repeat —with only two parts of a sentence mentioning the farm industry? In mentioning that fact, sir, I am aware that you come from Stormont, and that you know the picture in eastern Ontario. In one part of the sentence the minister states that "the prospects for wheat sales are good" and in another he announces the deferment of commencement of construction of buildings on the satellite experimental farm. There is not another mention of agriculture in the whole speech. There is not even a forecast in the review of economic conditions.

Sir, what an illustration this is of the urban orientation of this government, and what an illustration this is of the total disregard and neglect of the basic industry in this country. It troubles me beyond description that any minister of finance can put together a Canadian budget without a single moment's thought to the agricultural community. And this occurs at a period when much of Canadian agriculture is in a condition of explosive change, and in a critical cost-price squeeze. The Minister of Finance has done less than justice to himself and to his colleagues by his contemptuous disregard of the Canadian farmer.

I assert to him that his proposed deferment of the building on the satellite experimental farm is the very reverse of what he should be doing. He should be expediting those buildings and stepping up the program of research into animal and plant diseases, soil nutrition, animal and plant breeding to increase productivity, and to reduce costs. A pause in the experimental farm work will be self defeating. It is penny wise and pound foolish, ill advised and inappropriate, and a wholly invalid technique for attempting to deal with the spiralling costs of building.

My political neighbour, the hon. member for Renfrew South, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) must know the essentiality of proceeding with every possible dispatch with this satellite experimental farm. I appeal to him directly to insist that the Minister of Finance end this arbitrary and capricious deferment of the satellite experimental farm.

I found astonishing the Budget's silence on the subject of the federal role in education. At one stage in his speech the minister paid lip service to the need for manpower training and for improving the skills of the labour force. But that was all. True, the Speech from the Throne contained some pious ejaculations about the role of the federal government in education. The Prime Minister has announced some interim plans for increasing university grants; but the house had the right to expect, sir, from the Minister of Finance some discussion of the financial provisions proposed to be made, and also discussion of the future plans of the federal government in this vital field of education.

Let me state my view very definitely. The federal government must take the necessary responsibility for the financing of education, and for the developing of the intellectual resources of the nation. The present piecemeal approach of student loans, bursaries, etc., I say is inadequate. The need for federal participation in the field of education, and particularly in higher education, has become a fact of Canadian life which cannot be gainsaid.

The position is very clearly set forth in a few sentences of Professor Frank H. Underhill, delivered during the Massey lectures of 1963. At page 65 this is what he says:

> In an environment that changes every decade with the revolutionary advances of science and technology, our future depends on our flexibility, our adaptability to changing conditions. And this depends upon the quality of the education that we make available to our young people. This is a national interest that we all have in common; in the conditions of the second half of the twentieth century, our rigid division of powers in which we insist that education is a function belonging entirely to the provinces is self-defeating. In a world economy in which all groups are becoming daily more interdependent for their economic health and prosperity, we need a strong, well-equipped national government to direct and supervise the growth of our economy as a whole in its relations with the world as a whole.

I am sure it will astonish Professor Underhill that one of his students who never agreed with him when he was a student now agrees with him completely.

In my view, the time has come to establish a national office of education—a national education secretariat, call it what you will —reporting to parliament through the Secretary of State and responsible for planning and co-ordinating all the national efforts in the field of education. The time to do it is now.

I suggest that special support is needed in the field of the humanities. The revolutionary advances in science and technology have tended to obscure the importance of the humanities. In particular, in my view, a greatly expanded program of research in the fields of political science and economics is urgently needed. Special federal help to the two universities in the national capital regions, Carleton University and Ottawa University, ought to be given in these particular fields for which the location of these two universities gives them a unique advantage. These two universities ought to be predominant in the fields I have mentioned, but they have had little opportunity adequately to equip themselves for the special role which I believe they should play in the fields of political science, economics, and probably history.

Then, sir, the Minister of Finance made but passing reference to the field of federal-provincial relations. His presentation, in my view, was most inadequate and gave no indication of future government policy. For the past two and a half years, sir, there has been a process of emasculation of the power and authority of the parliament and government of Canada. This process appears to be accelerating. The time to call a halt is now, in this year, 1966.

Again, I adopt views expressed by Professor Underhill in the Massey lectures, and I quote from page 65, to which I have already referred:

> As things are, however, our national government in recent years has approached the ten lusty provincial governments, and especially that of Quebec, in an attitude of timorous politeness, as if apologizing for the fact of its own existence. And the Canadian people as a whole cannot apparently reach any agreement to entrust their fortunes to any one political party with a majority support. They watch apathetically while our unprotected federal quarterback, looking in vain for a pass receiver, is overrun by the big husky linemen of the provincial defensive team and thrown for another loss.

Then at page 66 Professor Underhill says:

> Yet it is at this time, confronted as we are by opportunities and dangers so momentous, that our ambitious provincial governments are doing their best to erode the basis of national authority and to add to their own importance and prestige. The assignment of greater responsibilities and greater financial resources to the provincial governments is, of course, in the interest of the provincial politicians and bureaucrats. I can see no evidence that it is necessarily in the interest of the people of the provinces who are also citizens and taxpayers of the Canadian national state.

Sir, I believe that there is the gravest danger that already the federal government has parted with adequate budgetary flexibility to such an extent that it may no longer be able to influence the national economy effectively, or to protect the nation against recession or depression. Believe me, sir, we must have one national economic policy. We cannot have ten regional economic policies and hope to survive as a nation. Parliament, and the government responsible to it must have and retain the broad economic powers properly vested in this national authority. I say that only in this way can there be balanced and equitable development of all regions of Canada.

• (8:40 p.m.)

The existing tax sharing agreements are due to expire and already it is clear that the forthcoming federal-provincial conference will be another raid on Ottawa. I put it to the Minister of Finance here and now that he has a positive and unequivocal duty to call a full halt to the erosions of such encroachments upon federal authority. And I put it to the right hon. gentleman from Algoma East (Mr. Pearson) that he was not sworn as Prime Minister of Canada in order to preside over the liquidation of the national authority.

I use the words of one of his predecessors:

> A strong and dominant national feeling is not a luxury in Canada, it is a necessity. Without it, this country could not exist. A divided Canada can be of little help to any country, and least of all to itself.

Those are the words of Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King as they appear in Hansard of March 30, 1939.

Let me illustrate the need to call halt to the erosions into federal authority. Mr. Eric Kierans, Minister of Health in Quebec, the man who seeks to out-Lévesque Lévesque, argues that the federal departments of agriculture, of fisheries, of national resources and of industry are now superfluous because the provinces, and Quebec in particular, have the same ministries which, according to him, are perfectly competent in their respective domains. "Canada", he has said, "will never again know a strongly centralized economy because Quebec knows better then Ottawa what its problems are; because Quebec now has the means to solve them."

Add these strange constitutional heresies of a former president of the Montreal Stock Exchange and former Professor of Commerce at McGill University—who should know better—to the weird pleas of those public men who want Ottawa to share with the provinces control over monetary policy, credit and banking, over Eskimos and Indians, and what do you have? A totally emasculated and impotent central government and a powerless parliament of Canada.

Already, we are perilously close to just that. Further federal retreat and we are over the precipice. I say deliberately that those who seek to chisel away bit by bit the power and authority historically and constitutionally vested in our central government are much greater danger to Canada than any lunatic fringe of separatists. It is boring from within in order to destroy.

I proclaim it tonight as an article of political faith that the basic problem in Canada today is not that the central government is too strong, but that it is too weak.

The provinces have emerged into a position of strength never before matched in Canadian history and never contemplated by the Fathers of Confederation or by any of our federal or provincial statesmen in almost 100 years.

A famous philosopher once said: "A nation which forgets its past condemns its future". Our past is one Canadian nation—not ten associated states. It is not the right, and certainly not the duty, of public men in the Parliament of Canada or in the provinces to repeal 100 years of constitutional history; it is not their duty to believe that the ultimate in statescraft is to emasculate the national government in favour of ten provincial administrations.

I am speaking strongly and deliberately and after much meditation. Nineteen sixty six must be the year which restores and revivifies Confederation, not the year which stultifies and harpoons all Canadian objectives and purposes. For, believe me, with a weak, emaciated federal authority, all semblance of nationhood will disappear.

Today, effective decisions on economic, constitutional and political issues of the gravest national importance are being assumed by federal-provincial conferences, and the Parliament of Canada is being by-passed. Delegation of decision making to federal-provincial conferences makes debate in this parliament little more than shadow-boxing. Undoubtedly there is an important role for meetings of federal and provincial officials, but that role is not the assumption, the usurpation, of effective political power in Canada.

The pretension of provincial premiers to national authority are false historically, unsound constitutionally and suicidal economically.

If members of this parliament of Canada, irrespective of party affiliation, will stand firm againt erosions of and encroachments upon federal authority, I believe all Canadians will respond. I believe the people of all Canada, Quebec as well as Ontario, Nova Scotia equally with Manitoba, will refuse to see confederation compromised out of existence. But the time to speak up is now—next year may be too late.

One of the constitutional devices, of which I am not proud, is the opting out formula. At the time it was devised it appeared to be a brilliant solution of a constitutional impasse over university grants. I take full responsibility personally for having supported it. Had it ever occurred to me that it might have established a pattern whereby opting out has become the rule and remaining in the exception, I would have opposed the institution of the formula with all the vehemence at my command. That I did not have the foresight to do so, is one of my major political regrets.

Far better that the Quebec universities should have suffered additional but eventually only temporary hardships, than that a new constitutional formula should have been devised which may well succeed in undermining the national authority of the parliament and government of Canada to influence, direct and where necessary regulate the national economy.

Two of everything does not contribute to nationhood, and heaven forbid the day should come when we have three or ten of everything. In my view, two pension plans are an abomination. Ten medicare plans will be worse. And this is happening at the very time when ordinary Canadian people seek unity and nationhood with an ardor never before experienced. Provincial politicians in British Columbia may seek to badger the essential unity of the nation, but the people of British Columbia do not.

Provincial politicians in Quebec may vie with one another in drawing blood from Ottawa, in inventing new terms and new theories emphasizing the state of Quebec—not the province, mark you—as a means of downgrading Ottawa. But I have travelled enough in all parts of Quebec and know enough of the real pulsing heart of that province to be certain—as morally certain as I have ever been of anything in my life—that the people of Quebec will respond equally with the people of Ontario to policies of genuine Canadianism, or if I may use the expression of one of my old chiefs, the late, delightful Dr. Bob Manion, to a red-blooded policy of Canada first. The citizen of Quebec is basically no different from the citizen of Ontario or Manitoba. First, he is a Canadian and second, he is a Quebecker. It is time that the political pygmies stopped trying to reverse that fact of life.

Mr. Speaker, only 254 days remain before this wonderful nation, this magnificent homeland of us all, enters the centennial year of her confederation. We must stop drifting; we must stop believing that necessarily all will be well in the end.

The next century for this most favoured land depends upon the adoption of positive, decisive, enlightened policies of national development. We in this twenty seventh Parliament must be as adventuresome but as realistic as the great fathers of our country. Can this twenty seventh parliament rise to what is the greatest challenge of the whole of the first century of Confederation? My prayers, sir, are that each one of us may be guided to be worthy of the nation which has given to us the privilege of serving her in her highest and noblest institution.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with pleasure to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and I even found it very objective. I was not surprised to note that most responsible Canadian papers endorsed it readily. The opposition objects to it and it does not surprise me. Its role is to object. What surprises me most about the opposition is that their objections could not prove useful to them if ever they returned to power, because when the Leader of the Opposition and most of his chief lieutenants will disappear, the Conservative party might return to power and then, how will they be able to support the policy they are advocating today?

The member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) referred very earnestly to important problems. He exaggerated the situation in Quebec. True, there are separatists in Quebec, but most of the people are not. They wish to preserve confederation, but they ask that our rights, so dear to us, be respected; the member for Carleton is aware of this and is willing to respect our rights.

In his budget, the minister attempts to remove the threat of inflation in Canada. This threat actually exists. Besides, the opposition, in a non-confidence motion some time ago, criticized the government for ignoring this threat of inflation, as the minister remembers. Now, the minister is taking action to fend off the threat of inflation. I commend him for it and I hope he will continue.

The Créditistes, and I understand them, claim that the Bank of Canada could lend without interest to school boards and municipalities. I listened to the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). I did not hear the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) because I was not in the house. I suppose he spoke along the same lines.

Mr. Caouette: It was better.

Mr. Caron: I do not doubt it, because the hon. member is a talented man. In my opinion, those who say that the Bank of Canada could lend without interest to school boards and municipalities are mistaken. The Bank of Canada can certainly lend, but it must obtain its money somewhere. If the Bank of Canada—

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

Mr. Caouette: A short question. The member for Hull, Mr. Speaker, says that the Bank of Canada must take its money somewhere. Can the hon. member tell us where the Bank of Canada takes its money to lend it to foreign countries, like Jamaica, the Congo and others, without interest. Where does it take its money?

Mr. Caron: Out of Canadian citizens' incomes. The Bank of Canada derives its income from Canadian citizens.

Mr. Caouette: Where?

Mr. Caron: They granted loans without interest; it may be a mistake. They wanted to help these countries having difficulties, to prevent them from going communist. I believe the country did the right thing and I fully approve.

I maintain that it is impossible to lend to all municipalities and school boards, because we could not find the necessary incomes to do so. If it were possible, I would be delighted. But I cannot, because I cannot understand the way Créditistes work out their calculations concerning incomes. They ask the Bank of Canada to lend money. It cannot make money.

The other opposition parties, namely the New Democratic party, can propose special measures. They can propose a reduction in taxation and an increase in exemptions. That is normal. They know they will never be in office; that is why they can say it so easily.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order. When we moved an amendment in the house concerning the creation of debt-free money and without interest, the member for Hull voted in favour.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caron: I admit that I voted in favour of debt-free money without interest. It was then a non-confidence motion but we could not oppose it. We voted in favour because it was necessary. We might not do it today, because we are not in opposition. If you were on this side of the house, you would see what kind of difficulties one can come up against. There is nothing like sitting on the side of the government to become prudent. One must foresee the future. Members of the opposition can object, they do not have to foresee. The people are not obliged to follow them. We have seen that the people so far did not follow them.

They are not concerned as to where the money comes from. They are not concerned about the inflationary situation which would result and they take pleasure in making such a proposal which they know is unacceptable. Let them have this pleasure and, as has been done by some responsible newspapers, let us say that Canada was right, that the minister was right in introducing measures to check inflation in Canada.

This budget is realistic and timely. The deficit will be larger or smaller, I do not know, it will all depend on the economic situation in Canada. If our economic situation is good, the deficit will be small; if it is bad, it might be larger. The present minister wants to protect Canada against a larger deficit.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for the courage he has shown in establishing bilingualism within the Civil Service. I understand that the hon. member can laugh because automobiles are his only concern and bilingualism does not interest him very much.

In my opinion, the policy advocated by the Prime Minister on bilingualism required courage. He has established it with courage and I congratulate him. I do not pretend it is perfect, but I think that we could have probably better—

Mr. Caouette: It is much better than what the Tories have ever given us.

Mr. Caron: Exactly. It is far much better than what the Conservatives have given us. I share the opinion of the hon. member in this respect, because the Tories have never given us a thing, and there has been nothing more.

We are going to introduce a certain amount of bilingualism in the framework of the Civil Service. This may take a certain time, even until 1975.

Mr. Caouette: Not only in Hull.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would remind the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) of the amendment which is now before the house, and I would ask him to confine his remarks to that amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We are now discussing the budget. I understand we have before us an amendment and that a subamendment has been moved by the New Democratic party.

On the other hand, I feel adequate leeway has been given all members, whatever their party, to say what was on their minds. It seems to me, in the cricumstances, that the member for Hull should be given adequate leeway to say what he has to say at this time, while we are discussing the national budget.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair feels it is necessary to remind the house that there is an amendment which is now being debated, and the remarks made by hon. members must be confined to that amendment.

Mr. Caron: Sir, I have to differ in opinion with you. It is a fact that on the Budget speech anyone may speak on any subject; it has been that way since the beginning of confederation. I do not believe I should be deterred and required to speak only on the amendment. I think I should be allowed to go ahead with my speech in the way I have started; I do not believe I should be stopped.

[Translation]

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister was right—he did not give us all that we expected—but he was right in giving us something new, something practical.

I know that, since 1918, we have always been saying that those who are bilingual would receive additional salary. It was never given. Today, it can be hoped that, within a year or two, those who are bilingual will be getting it. I claim that outstanding courage was called for, on the part of the Prime Minister, to act as he did.

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate him on behalf of Canadians, not only the French Canadians, but all bilingual Canadians who live in this area.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Prime Minister. I am pleased to see a greater interest in bilingualism, now that extra pay has been mentioned. Bilingualism will not easily come about, it will be difficult, and most people do not seem to realize the situation.

Some mentioned Italians, Germans, Polish and others, but those people came to Canada as immigrants and knew they would have to speak either English or French, and they learned one or both languages. But we, French Canadians, have been here since the early days of colonization. We were the first settlers of the country, then we were defeated by the English on the Plains of Abraham and had to live side by side with them. Regular meetings between English and French have made us realize that we had to learn both languages.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the Chair did not allow the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) to go on with a speech along those lines. Tonight, you interrupted the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) and suggested that he confine his remarks to the non-confidence motion now before the house. However, the hon. member for Hull did not comply with your instructions and, in my opinion, he should not be allowed to go on, just as you did not allow the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to continue his speech this afternoon because he was not dealing with the amendment.

Mr. Caron: On the point of order, the narrow-mindedness just shown by the hon. member is amazing. In the past, no proposed amendment to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne or to the Budget speech ever prevented a member from referring to anything whatsoever. I admit it is not in the standing orders, but it has been the tradition since confederation and I do not believe I may rightly be prevented from doing so.

Besides, the hon. member for Carleton referred to this and I may speak about it myself, for I have a right to speak on any subject during the Budget debate and I intend to continue, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must still remind the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) of the amendment which is now before the house. I would hope he would make every effort to confine his remarks within the limits of that amendment.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We saw a while ago the hon. member for Carleton spit on the province of Quebec as probably no other Conservative can do and the Chair tolerated it. For the last four years—

Mr. Ricard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am on a point of order at the present time.

Mr. Ricard: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I am on a point of order at the present time and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot should resume his seat.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There can be only one point of order at a time.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I was in the house when the hon. member for Carleton made his speech and I do not remember him saying what the hon. member for Villeneuve says he did. I think the member for Carleton spoke with all due respect, even if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) did not like his remarks. There is no reason to say that he spat on the province of Quebec, for he made a fine and dignified speech—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, there is no question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) does not have a point of privilege; he is refuting an argument.

The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot was off the track as he always is anyway.

As to the question of privilege, I maintain that the hon. member for Carleton was allowed to say anything, not only with regard to the amendment before us, but any nonsense as we know the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot is able to say. But now they object to the hon. member for Hull expressing what he has to say with regard to the Budget speech.

I have been here for four years, since 1962, and I have had the opportunity to hear people from all parties express what they had to say during the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne or on the Budget speech introduced by any Minister of Finance including the present minister who is the sharpest of all those we have known during the last four years.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the Chair should recognize those facts and grant the member for Hull the necessary leeway, letting him express his views just as was done in the case of the hon. member for Carleton who said all he had to say against the province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would refer hon. members to a statement made a day or so ago by Mr. Speaker. He referred to the question of urgency of debate. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) drew attention to the fact that the immediate business of this house was the continuation of the Budget debate and that there should be no discussion of this matter in the next four or five days. At this time Mr. Speaker went on to say:

> I agree with the hon. member to this extent. This matter cannot be discussed while there is a motion of non-confidence before the house, and while there are before us an amendment and a subamendment, both dealing with financial matters.

I would refer that statement of Mr. Speaker to the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) and to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

The hon. member for Hull.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I will try to abide by your ruling, although I find it very hard because in the past—and I have been here since 1953—I never heard anyone interfere with a speech on the Budget or a speech in the Debate in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I am surprised that I am forced at this time to speak only on the amendment which is before the house, because I have been speaking on the main matter of the Budget itself and have been following the practice established by others. I do not see why I should be stopped on this.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the immigrants who came to Canada knew they had to learn either English or French, while we, who have been here from the beginning of the settlement, who were defeated on the Plains of Abraham and have lived near the English for centuries, have understood the necessity of knowing those two essential languages.

That is why I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister for the work he has accomplished in order to give us the opportunity of speaking both languages in Canada. I know it is difficult, that it will take years; but I know that since 1918 there has been talk of additional pay for those who are bilingual but nothing ever came of it.

The Prime Minister told us last week that we would probably have that within a year. I have faith in him as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) has faith in the minister, Mr. Sharp, who is the sharpest of all the ministers we have had. I am confident that we will have bilingual people in the civil service. That is why I congratulate him—

Mr. Caouette: The Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) is the worst.

Mr. Caron: The Postmaster General is a good guy; I have nothing to say against him. I admit that he does his work well and I wrote him again today; I hope he will reply.

Mr. Caouette: He is a unilingual who does not believe in bilingualism.

Mr. Caron: He will get used to it just the same. You know, it sometimes happens that a new minister does not accept federal principles, but in the end he falls into the federal mold and accepts everything. That is what he will accept in the end.

Two races must live side by side in our country. That is why those who come from all over the world to settle in Canada—

Mr. Caouette: Once more.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the hon. member that his remarks are now outside the amendment before the house.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept that ruling. What we do—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the hon. member resume his seat, please? I should like to refer again to a statement made by Mr. Speaker with reference to this matter a day or so ago. He said that any attempt to discuss this subject matter on the motion now before the house would be out of order because of irrelevancy. I point out to the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) that the remarks which he is now making are not relevant to the amendment now before the house.

Mr. Caron: I do not accept this ruling. You are looking at it in a narrow way. It has always been the practice in this house for hon. members to speak on any subject they wanted during the Throne Speech debate and the Budget debate. This is what I am doing now. I do not think you have the right to do what you are doing at present. I cannot accept this ruling.

I think we have the right to refer to what has been said in this house, and I intend to go on with it.

[Translation]

If both languages are official in this country, we have a right to speak either one anywhere. This is the reason why I state, sir, that I am entitled to act in such a way.

May I say a few words on the National Capital Commission. This body considers kindly the Quebec side for access to the beautiful Gatineau park through the city of Hull. But otherwise, nothing doing.

I recently requested the National Capital Commission for a park development in the national capital region. The MacLaren Company donated a lot measuring 1,000 by 500 feet for a park. I was told experts would be sent to give advice, but no money.

On the Ontario side, however, thousands and millions of dollars are spent; but, for the Quebec side, they are cautious, they are afraid to spend.

I submit that the National Capital Commission should spend as much in Quebec as in Ontario. Those things, which we need, must be maintained. That is why I say that the National Capital Commission is remiss in its duty at present by supplying experts without the necessary funds to renovate and develop the parks we are interested in.

We are proud of our province of Quebec and our city of Hull, just like the town of Lucerne and the neighbouring towns, which are Quebec towns deserving the attention of the National Capital Commission.

We did not get what we wanted. But on the other hand, we saw trucks carrying earth and cement on the Ontario side, because in Ontario, millions mean little. But when it is for the Quebec side, everything is double-checked.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to accept this. I claim that the National Capital Commission has an obligation to spend on the Quebec side as much as it spends on the Ontario side. We, in the province of Quebec, must get what we are entitled to. That is why I am asking today that the National Capital Commission should think of us and give us what we are entitled to.

Today, everything has developed, everything has changed. The National Capital Commission should also have changed in order to keep pace with progress. Only the men change within the N.C.C., but the principles remain unchanged. The men have changed, but the principles remain the same. Expenditures are made in Ontario but not in Quebec.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that the N.C.C. must assume its responsibilities in the province of Quebec as well as in Ontario. That is why I am asking those whose duty it is to speak to the members of the N.C.C. to go ahead and tell them: Look toward Quebec, you are needed there and you must carry out your obligations.

Mr. Speaker, if we are given advice, Ottawa gives money. That is the main difference. But I believe we are entitled to a small share of this difference. The population is not as large, I admit it, on the Quebec side; we may get a bit less than Ottawa, but we must get some. That is why I ask that this be attended to with special care. The cities of Hull, Gatineau Point, Lucerne and others could benefit from what the National Capital Commission is doing. I would suggest to these gentlemen that they find out the facts before asking for some change or other.

Recently, I heard the member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) speak in Quebec of a national capital that would encompass the Ottawa-Hull area. It was reported yesterday in the press that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) had said the same thing yesterday, but I was told a while ago that he had not said it, that he had simply answered the press that it was a point of view. I accept his point of view.

But I submit that the former minister, the member for Outremont-Saint-Jean had no right to go to Quebec to speak of a national capital, because it is neither within his responsibilities nor his duties.

The national capital could be a fact, if we knew we would be accepted within the whole of such a national capital. But we do not know. We are not respected. That is why I say that we cannot accept it.

The national capital would be fine if the National Capital Commission were like the commission on bilingualism. But only a few of its people speak French, while the great majority does not know a single word of French.

I suggest that until we change the way of doing things in the capital, we will be unable to accept it. Moreover, if we asked the people of Ottawa to accept the national capital, they would say no, they cannot accept it because they do not believe in it.

In Quebec, we believe in it even less. The hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration the former Secretary of State, now member for Outremont-Saint-Jean, who are important men in the party, should not overwhelm or impress the other members and ministers by insisting on this national system—

[English]

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I admit that some of my time has been taken up by other hon. members and yourself, but I should have had that time to finish my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the hon. member for Hull that the time taken by the occupant of the chair and some other members of the house was credited to him, and he has been given sufficient time.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to speak on the budget, and in so doing I simply want to turn my attention and the attention of the house to two items which have been particularly noteworthy, at least to those of us in Prince Edward Island, in the past few weeks. Perhaps these items in themselves say something much more significant about the way in which this budget was constructed and the kind of communication which took place not only within cabinet ranks but perhaps between governments.

First and foremost I want to mention what has become now a most notorious item, that of the construction of the Prince Edward Island causeway. It is a strange thing in a way that a project which was in fact described by my own predecessor for the constituency of Prince as a non-political project, as a project that is in fact above politics, has become so political. While it was looked on as perhaps having certain influences in the most recent federal election, there are still some who may be willing to see certain influences on the future provincial election which is being held in the coming months.

I want to look at the project not so much from the political value point of view but from the point of view of its significance to the people of Prince Edward Island, and the way it has received such sorry treatment, particularly at the hands of the present government.

I have here a postcard which tells something about the causeway. On the back of the postcard there is a little poem which I should like to read:

At the Capes in the winter you stand on the shore,
New Brunswick behind, P.E. Island before,
And you long to get over, but how can you cross?
You are stopped by the wind, and the lolly and frost.
But this is to tell you a way has been planned
By which you can pass to the opposite strand,
So don't be discouraged, despondent or blue—
Hold this to the light and you'll see your way through.

Then by holding it up to the light, Mr. Speaker, you can see the causeway on one side and the shores of the two provinces on the other. It is an interesting postcard. The most interesting thing about it is that it was mailed in 1908. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) said at one point that the Liberal government which had started this project would complete it, I was wondering whether he was thinking of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, because surely this was in his time.

Let me say again that this is not a project that can be the prerogative of any particular party or group. It is a project which is so important that unless every faction in society is in support of it, in full understanding of the dimensions of the project and its significance to the region, it will have in many ways a tragic effect, either in the actual construction of the project or upon its realization.

I was immensely disturbed, as I am sure were many members of this house, not just those from the maritime region and Prince Edward Island but those from across Canada, at the cavalier fashion in which the Minister of Finance during the course of his budget presentation said that there would be a——readjustment of the timetable for the next phase of the Northumberland causeway project in order to minimize the pressures on the peak summertime employment market and maximize winter employment opportunities.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, that statement was the beginning of many editorials, headlines and letters. Eventually a unanimous resolution was passed by the provincial legislature requesting the federal government to reinstate at full flight the construction of this causeway. A strange thing about this business is that it was during the course of the last election campaign that our very dear friend the Minister fo Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), while visiting on Prince Edward Island, said at last there would be no further holdup, that the work would be going ahead, and that the causeway was not a gift to Prince Edward Island. He said it was not an election bribe, perish the thought, but a sound economic investment for all of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I am glad to see he still supports that view.

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly do.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who I am also pleased to see here this evening, on October 26 in O'Leary, Prince Edward Island, said that one reason for getting it started at once was that this project would do more to stimulate the economic growth of Prince Edward Island than anything since confederation.

These were great and noble statements, yet somehow or other they seem to be in conflict with the things which the Minister of Finance was saying on the night he delivered his budget speech. I would have liked to have been in the corridor and witnessed the first confrontation of the Minister of Transport with the Minister of Finance following delivery of that speech, for I am sure that if he still registered the same enthusiasm as he does at this moment across the floor of the house, then there must have been an animated conversation between them.

What, Mr. Speaker, is the exact situation with regard to the construction of the causeway? When it was introduced we were told by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) that one of the significant things about the constructing of this causeway would be that much of the work would have to take place in the four summer months, for these were the only months in which, from the standpoint of weather alone, such a project could be undertaken.

Hon. members may remember that on February 14 the Minister of Public Works, answering a question of mine which asked what was the expected date of completion of the Prince Edward Island causeway, replied, as reported at page 1148 of Hansard:

It is impossible at this early date to forecast accurately when a project of this magnitude and complexity will be completed. However, with maximum progress this project could be completed in late 1970.

It seems that we are being treated to a spectacle wherein one department, for certain economic reasons which do not really apply anyway to Prince Edward Island or the maritime region, is making certain cut-backs, when the minister responsible for this project must realize that a cut-back cannot in fact take place if the project is to be completed on time. So we have been treated to this sorry mess of statement after statement, some in contradiction of the others.

In this connection I want to read what I thought was an excellent editorial in the Friday, April 1 edition of the Charlottetown Guardian entitled "Back to Blunderland":

Orbited into the realm of Alice in Wonderland is the "next phase" of our causeway project as it gets casually kicked around at the Mad Hatter's party at Ottawa. It couldn't get underway this winter because—as the Mock Turtle was at pains to point out—it's the kind of job that must be tackled in the spring. The soil, you know; Island clay. It freezes in the winter and that's not good. But in the spring, tra! la! there'll be a burgeoning of all kinds of things, and our sods will just yearn to be lifted.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Comes the spring; but with it the dispiriting news from the White Rabbit that winter is when this work should really be done. Winter's over now and there'll have to be "a readjustment of the timetable". It would never do to start in the spring, or the summer either for that matter. That would be disastrous because there's an employment boom somewhere and if it hits us down here we could all go bust. Next winter, perhaps . . .

"Have some wine," said the March Hare in an encouraging tone to Alice as she sat aghast at this news. Alice looked around the table, but there was nothing on it but tea. "I don't see any wine," she remarked. "There isn't any," said the March Hare primly.

Then Tweedledee butted in to explain why there was really nothing to worry about. It might look that way, but, then again it might not. "Contrariwise, if it was so, it might be; and if it were so, it would be; but as it is, it ain't."

Still Alice couldn't understand, and the Queen came to her assistance. "Around here, you see," she explained, "it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast."

"Curiouser and curiouser!" thought Alice. She wondered whether they were trying to fool her or whether they were all as cracked as they sounded.

"The rule," said the Queen in a last effort to clear up the matter—"the rule is, jam tomorrow and jam yesterday, but never jam today." When Alice objected that it must come sometimes to "jam today" there was a chorus of protestations. "No! no!" was the shocked reply. "It can't! It's jam every other day. Today isn't any other day, you know."

At this stage the Dormouse, who had taken no part in the discussion and seemed to be falling asleep, gave a snort and cried out: "Oh my fur and whiskers!" That broke up the party, leaving Alice as mystified as ever and wondering—and hoping—if it hadn't all been a bad dream.

I think in the minds of many this would be an accurate description of what is taking place in the terms of the construction of the causeway. I think one of the things we should care about, and one of the things that has never been made clear by anybody is why the causeway is being built at all. That is a fundamental question. It strikes me that there are three answers to this. First of all, under the very terms of confederation itself, there was the realization that the federal authority would have the obligation to establish a permanent link with this province. It is in the construction of the causeway that such realization will be fulfilled.

When we look at the amount of money, $148 million, to be spent on one province which has little over 100,000 people, it seems to be a gift. That is really the point: It is not a gift.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): It is economic good business. If anyone will look at the amount of money it has cost throughout the years to operate the present Canadian National Northumberland ferries they will realize that the construction of the causeway is good business, and I am glad to see that the Minister of Transport agrees with me. This has been said far too little. Even if things are left as they are, in order to provide a service to Prince Edward Island the federal authority will spend that much money on us. The fact of the matter is that supporting the ferries is supporting a very uneconomic system. Therefore, the construction of this causeway itself is good business, and will be good business when it is completed.

Further to the construction of this causeway, there is the knowledge, to those of us who are interested in certain kinds of industrial development in Prince Edward Island, that this will make available low cost power, which is something that at this time we do not have available for even minor kinds of processing. I hope for this reason that there will be no delay, no hesitation, no slow down in the means necessary for completion of this important link.

I might mention another matter which relates to the present ferry system, and it is strange how interrelated these two subjects are at this point. I learned by private letter that there was to be an increase in the cost of the fares now being charged to travel on the Canadian National ferries. I learned later through a public announcement, which came through some other leak, that this would be the case. I think it is interesting to note that as it appears, technically there is no increase. What happens, and I have a copy of the fare schedule here, is that the old fare schedules listed the fares both ways. They gave fares one way, and the return fares. If you will look at this one you will not find return fares any more. In fact, the new rates mean an increase in cost of some 25 per cent for a car and driver using the ferry. That is an increase from $3.90 return, to $5.

In itself this may not be particularly serious perhaps to persons who use the ferry casually, or who may only drive over it once in a while to visit relatives. But what it does mean to people who are involved in businesses in which they use this system, is a substantial extra cost. In this regard, one trucker informed me that it would mean $40 per week to him alone. Another told me that it would mean $2,000 a year on his trucking operation. When we are talking about products that must be moved off the island to the mainland, when we come to extra costs to the consumer as well as to the producer, how can we look with equanimity at this planned increase at a time when there is a well known increase in the cost of living.

One man in particular mentioned to me that the bulk of the bread now comes to Prince Edward Island from New Brunswick. He could see that it would be all too necessary for the people bringing this bread into the province to increase the cost. It may be only one cent, but one cent means a great deal to a family with a very low standard of living. I think this is shocking, because this ferry system is not a luxury. We do not have the option in Prince Edward Island of using other means of transportation; therefore we must use the ferry system as someone else must use a road when it is the only road into his own community.

The fact that this increase was brought about without any forewarning, without any notice being given by the Department of Transport, or the C.N.R., and without notice being given to Prince Edward Island government suggests to me some disinterest, or some lack of concern about the many problems facing the people in Prince Edward Island today.

There is a unanimous resolution in the legislature of Prince Edward Island asking the Minister of Transport if this is not a situation that could be considered in some kind of inquiry, possibly by the Board of Transport Commissioners.

This coming Sunday, May 1, I am told this new system will come into effect. Many things about it frankly amaze me. One of them is this: Now, in the summer, when a tourist is making his pilgrimage to the island, and perhaps hauling his trailer, instead of paying the usual fare he would pay for his car and trailer under the old fare system, a vehicle checker will now run around measuring the lengths of the trailers. According to the length the tourist will pay a certain fee. I do not know whether the people who have set the scale realize how many trailers are hauled back and forth on the ferry system. I am sure that the vehicle checker will have to have a pair of running shoes, and will have to have assistance if he is to carry out this kind of scheme.

Then, the purser himself told me that it takes all the time they have available on a normal crossing to sell all the tickets to people who want to go to the island, or who want to go to the other side. In many cases these are return tickets which have to be issued only once, and not twice. What is going to happen is that everybody will buy a ticket on every trip. There will have to be more staff to handle the greater work load, more pursers and more vehicle checkers, takes all the time they have available on a which, in turn, will mean extra cost. But they are already paying that extra cost. It will put us right back where we are. And causing great inconvenience to the staff of the Canadian National, and to the people of Prince Edward Island.

[Mr. MacDonald (Prince).]

Frankly, these are things I do not understand, and I do not know whether this government has really kept in touch with what is happening beyond the borders of Quebec. I would suggest, from my few remarks, that we reappraise some of the stands being taken, because what I have to say is of interest not only to the central part of the country, but to the whole of this nation.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): Mr. Speaker, along with other hon. members I want to extend my congratulations to the Minister of Finance for his well prepared and well presented budget. We all appreciate that taxation has never been a popular institution, and that the implementation of tax measures often requires courage and leadership. In presenting this budget the minister has demonstrated both of these qualities.

In his speech the minister has clearly indicated our economic problem, inflation; and he has indicated the means required to combat this problem. He forecasts an economy in which demand is outstripping supply and in which available productive capacity is overtaxed. His remedies are special taxation, curtailed spending and economic incentives. Unfortunately, economic, fiscal and monetary policy is not simple and is not simply explained.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Many citizens still find it difficult to understand how the introduction of a tax may actually lead to a lower cost of living, or why a government would want to tax if it did not want immediately to spend. As a result it is easy for the political demagogue to fool the ordinary citizen for political advantage, to isolate budgetary measures such as taxes and to describe his opponents as heartless and unconcerned. The opposition in this debate have unfortunately been guilty of this misrepresentation and this demagoguery. Instead of responsible criticism they have engaged in personal attacks, as the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) did this afternoon, and introduced other topics and side issues. While they agree there are inflationary pressures, they would still add fuel to the fire by urging tax reductions and increased expenditures. Though these measures would certainly be desirable in a static or a decreasing economy, they are not advisable in the present situation when we have severe inflationary pressures.

If we are to have continued economic growth in this country which has so much potential growth, there must be direction and control by government. It is recognized that some of the controls and restrictions will be opposed in certain quarters but, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that our Canadian citizens should have a greater and broader concern than their own personal, corporate, and regional interests; that they begin to realize that economic measures introduced by the government, although often burdensome in the short-run, are necessary for the long-term balanced growth of all Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if I have any criticism of our government's economic policy it is that we are not doing enough in the area of external aid. In saying this I recognize that this government has made great progress in this area during the last three years. But, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is still not enough. Many other countries give a greater percentage of their national production to other countries than we do and many of these have a lower standard of living. Five years ago the United Nations suggested that we increase external aid to 1 per cent of gross national production and I would urge that this is an acceptable goal to strive for. I suggest it would be a great historical tragedy if in this day when we of the western world have the technical means of providing food, clothing and shelter for the whole world, we should fail to do so.

It would be a tragedy if we were to continue to use the great productive processes at our disposal for more and more luxury, pleasure and amusement while two-thirds of the world is hungry and undernourished. If it were possible to convert all the waste in Canada—wasted food, wasted liquor, unused clothing, half-smoked cigarettes and so forth —into external assistance it would amount to a considerable contribution. Although this may seem idealistic, I suggest it might be worth while to consider imposing taxes or penalties on waste or prodigality.

In this respect I should like to congratulate those groups and associations which have supported the Canadian Hunger Foundation which has done so much in this vital area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty pursuant to Section 5 of standing order 58 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment before the house.

Division

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Monteith) which was negatived on the following division:

• (9:50 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Allard
Asselin (Charlevoix)
Baldwin
Barnett
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint-John-Albert)
Bigg
Bower
Brand
Brewin
Cantelon
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Code
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Douglas
Enns
Fane
Flemming
Forbes
Forrestall
Fulton
Gilbert
Grafftey
Grills
Hamilton
Harkness
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howe (Hamilton South)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Johnston
Keays
Kennedy
Kindt
Knowles
Korchinski
Lambert
Lewis
Loney
MacDonald (Prince)
MacEwan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McCleave
McCutcheon
McKinley
McLelland
McQuaid
Madill
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Nugent
Orlikow
Pascoe
Patterson
Peters
Pugh
Rapp
Régimbal
Ricard
Rynard
Saltsman
Scott (Danforth)
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Sherman
Simpson
Skoreyko
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Thomas (Middlesex West)
Thompson
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Woolliams—93.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Allmand
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Batten
Béchard
Beer
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantin
Caouette
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Choquette
Chrétien
Clermont
Côté (Dorchester)
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Davis
Deachman
Dionne

Drury	Marchand
Dubé	Martin (Essex East)
Duquet	Matheson
Émard	Mongrain
Éthier	Neveu
Faulkner	O'Keefe
Forest	Olson
Foy	Orange
Gauthier	Otto
Gendron	Pearson
Godin	Pelletier
Goyer	Pennell
Granger	Pepin
Greene	Pickersgill
Groos	Pilon
Guay	Prud'homme
Habel	Richard
Haidasz	Rideout (Mrs.)
Harley	Rinfret
Hopkins	Robichaud
Hymmen	Rochon
Isabelle	Rock
Klein	Roxburgh
Laflamme	Ryan
Laing	Sauvé
Lamontagne	Sharp
Langlois (Chicoutimi)	Simard
Langlois (Mégantic)	Stafford
Laniel	Stewart
Latulippe	Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Laverdière	Tolmie
Leblanc (Laurier)	Tremblay
LeBlanc (Rimouski)	Tucker
Lefebvre	Turner
Legault	Wahn
Lessard	Walker
Lind	Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Loiselle	Whelan
Macdonald (Rosedale)	Winters
MacEachen	Yanakis—112.
Mackasey
McIlraith
McNulty

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) and I were squared off with each other this evening.

• (10:10 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the questions and answers in relation to the business of the house earlier today, the house leaders had a meeting to discuss the matters which were raised, and as a result came to an understanding that we would request the suspension of private members' hour and terminate the budget debate tomorrow.

Then on Monday and Tuesday we will proceed with legislation, and on Wednesday with redistribution.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I would accordingly ask unanimous consent of the house that the following be made an order of the house:

That, notwithstanding the provisions of any standing orders, this house orders that on Friday, April 22, 1966, the hour for private members business shall be suspended and at 5.45 o'clock p.m., unless the debate be previously concluded, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put the question on the main motion "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" for the house to resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means (Budget), and, if it be decided in the affirmative, the house shall forthwith resolve itself in Committee of Ways and Means.

I might say that there have been certain other understandings about certain speakers. In answer to the inquiry of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition about the business of the house, I should like to bring forward a more precise list tomorrow which would be in better form.

On one of the days we would take the resolution preceding the collective bargaining bill, and on the other day we would take the order respecting the construction of the Canadian National branch line, because they want to get ahead with the actual work on that.

Mr. Starr: What about the Ottawa terminal?

Mr. McIlraith: We should also deal with the measure to provide for the Science Council of Canada, and with the Research Council Act amendment. Then there is that hardy annual Combines Investigation Act. Then, the house would be in committee to provide for the development of commercial fisheries in Canada.

Mr. Starr: List everything.

Mr. McIlraith: We might also look at the first resolution on government orders of the day for today, which was the resolution to amend the Farm Credit Act, to increase the capital. I think that is one that commends itself particularly to farmers.

Mr. Starr: What about the Ottawa terminal bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have heard the proposal put by the hon. Minister of Public Works that there be suspension of private members' hour tomorrow afternoon and also that the question now before the house be put at 5.45 p.m. Is this an order of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO REPORTS

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the Easter recess, I raised the question of investigation into the recent sightings of unidentified flying objects in Canada.

Unidentified flying objects have been reported for centuries, from every part of the world, but only after the second war was serious investigation begun. The United States Air Force has conducted such investigations since 1947, with an attitude ranging from objective, careful study to desperate efforts to prove that U.F.O's do not exist.

A great many objects have been reported to the U.S. group. Several can be put down to crackpots or hoaxes, and most have been explained as aircraft, balloons, clouds and lights on clouds, stars and planets, and other naturally occurring phenomena. However, as of this month, 646 sightings remain unidentified. This is a relatively small percentage of the total reports, but still too many to be ignored. It should be remembered that the vast resources of United States government and military agencies have been brought to bear in trying to solve these cases.

A great many of the U.S. reports have come from military and civilian pilots, airport control tower personnel, radar operators, meteorologists and astronomers, all thoroughly trained to watch the sky and to know what they see there.

In several cases, an object has been observed simultaneously by radar operators, ground observers, and jet interceptor pilots. Unless we want to assume that each one of them was having the same hallucination at the same time, these sightings must remain unexplained in terms of natural phenomena.

There have been reports of U.F.O.'s in Canada for years, as there have been in every country. It has been, and still is, customary to subject the reporters of these objects to every sort of ridicule and humiliation. However, I believe that it is long past the point when we can safely assume that every one of these people is drunk, neurotic, or just lying. Most reports come from people of good reputation, whose testimony would be accepted without question under any other circumstances.

• (10:20 p.m.)

I wish to make clear that I do not support either side of the U.F.O issue. There is not enough evidence to conclude that flying saucers exist, but there is too much unexplained evidence to ignore. It is my contention that the Canadian government should direct an appropriate department to conduct a continuing investigation into all reports. I believe a climate should be created in which Canadians can report what they see without fear of ridicule. The conclusions of these investigations should be published regularly. Most sightings can be shown to be naturally caused, but I suspect that even proof of visits from outer space would be more reassuring to the public than Canada's present attitude of ignoring them in hopes that they will go away.

I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, what investigations Canada is now conducting, and what the government's intentions are.

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): I cannot answer directly the question which was posed at the end of the hon. member's short speech. I do not personally think there is a co-ordinated effort being made now, but I believe several departments of government are interested in the subject matter referred to by the hon. member.

Speaking for the Department of National Defence, I am sure that our Defence Research Board will be interested in his remarks. It seems to me the National Research Council will also be interested and, to a lesser degree, the Department of Transport. I will do my utmost to have initiated the inquiry requested by the hon. member, and proper consultation developed between the departments concerned. I appreciate the suggestion that regular reporting on these sightings should be made. I will make it a point, at least as far as the Defence Research Board is concerned, to initiate an investigation and I trust this will have the results for which the hon. member is hoping.

AGRICULTURE—CREAM—REQUEST FOR ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF SUBSIDY APPLICATIONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I notice that neither the minister nor his parliamentary secretary is present; I would have expected that one or the other would be here to reply to the questions I intend to raise.

Indeed I do not see much point in continuing in their absence. I had thought that the government would at least extend a certain degree of courtesy to a private member who does not have many occasions to raise questions in the house, because of restrictions under the rules.

Mr. Aiken: There is not a minister present at the moment.

Mr. Korchinski: It is obviously the policy of the government to ignore private members. That is perfectly all right with me. I can raise this question at another time. However this is another example of the arrogance of the government. Not having answered the two questions I raised a couple of days ago I would have thought the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) would have taken advantage of this opportunity to clear the air and indicate to many farmers what is the situation with regard to the supplementary payments which farmers thought they were going to receive.

It is now almost a year since it was suggested that supplementary payments would be made. The government advertised this in different media. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics apparently 450,000 farmers were circularized, and both television and radio carried advertising indicating such payments would be made. All farm organizations, co-operatives and 4-H clubs were also so advised. In addition Farm Letter No. 6 was sent out dealing with this matter, a further letter on June 4, and a third one on August 24.

Many farmers have made application for these supplementary payments. Possibly the officials in the Department of Agriculture may have been swamped with applications but, whatever the reason, they did not even acknowledge receipt of applications. Naturally farmers are concerned about what has happened to their applications. Many have written to me, and during the Easter recess a lot of people asked me what was going on in the department. Surely the minister owes it to the farmers to clear the air and I specifically ask, even though the department might be swamped, that it at least acknowledge receipt of applications.

If the department cannot do that then it should indicate the possible final date when farmers may expect payments. I have one case of a farmer who submitted an application on July 24 last year. He wrote again on November 14 but got no reply. He wrote a third time on January 6 of this year, then a fourth time on January 31, and finally he wrote to me.

These people want to know what is happening. They do not have secretaries to write for them. They think the department should have sufficient staff to carry out its obligations. They ask how is it that when it comes to income tax time there is always sufficient staff to deal with forms when the government is collecting money, but when it comes to the question of money being paid to farmers there does not seem to be sufficient staff?

There is no use in the minister's telling us that 130,000 farmers have been paid. There are many more who have not been paid and they want to know if the department has received their applications. They want to know whether they should submit other applications, and how long they should wait. They do not know whether there will be another payment in a few months time. They do not know whether there has been a first or second payment, and I ask the minister for an explanation on this problem.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee that originally set up this system of raising questions on the adjournment motion, I feel in duty bound to rise on a point of order. It is absolutely useless for an hon. member to raise a question at this time when there is neither a minister nor a parliamentary secretary present on the government side to answer the question. At one time this evening there was not one minister or parliamentary secretary in the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Aiken: I see one minister has now returned to the house but I could not let this situation go by without commenting on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should advise the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) to read the conditions of provisional standing order 39A, particularly that section at the top of page 38 of the provisional standing orders.

Mr. Aiken: I have read it.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 22, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

[Translation]

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) presented the second report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCES

On the order:

Introduction of bills. Mr. Choquette—Bill intituled an act to amend the Criminal Code (repeal of power to commute a sentence of death).

Mr. Speaker: The point of order raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is still under consideration, so this bill will stand.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—SPEECH IN COMMITTEE BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct two questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he learned that statements he made in committee, which have not received the approval of parliament, referring to NATO and Canada's intentions in that regard, have aroused great fear and even consternation among NATO nations?

I ask him whether he heard the broadcast this morning from the C.B.C. representative in Bonn, and whether it is the intention of the government to make changes in Canada's NATO relationships. What is the basis for the plan, to which reference was made in that broadcast, for a rotation of troops every two months? Is the minister prepared to make a statement that will restore confidence among our allies in NATO?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would not agree Mr. Speaker, that there is any necessity for making a statement to restore confidence in Canada's position in NATO. I can say without any equivocation that Canada's NATO colleagues have the fullest confidence in Canada's interest and concern for the integrity and future usefulness of NATO.

I did listen to the broadcast this morning. My statement that Canadian forces were not in Europe for all time I should hope would gather support from my right hon. friend. Of course that statement does not mean that Canadian forces are going to be withdrawn in the near future, nor was there any such implication in the statement.

The absence of a permanent settlement in central Europe requires a strong NATO. NATO's purpose in addition to providing defence is to promote a peaceful settlement. When a settlement is finally achieved—and I do not wish to hold out false hopes for early success—there will no longer be a need for NATO in its present form.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Years hence.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The right hon. gentleman says "Years hence". That may be so. In the meantime we must do everything we can to promote a peaceful settlement. One might hope that in the long run, with the improvement of the international atmosphere, the United Nations would come to play a larger role in preserving world peace and stability. In that kind of world the substantial deployment of Canadian forces in Europe would no longer be necessary.

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In the meantime it is not unreasonable to hope that the Europeans will themselves assume increasing responsibility for the defence of Europe. But that depends largely on developments in Europe. While we are needed, of course, Canada has already clearly indicated that she will not let NATO down.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is odd that the minister did not think of this when he made the statement to which reference was made in the broadcast. What was the basis on which anyone with any knowledge of the responsibility which rests on the friends of NATO would suggest that there is to be a rotation of forces every 60 days? What was the statement in that regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I listened to the broadcast this morning, and my recollection is that it said nothing about the suggestion which was made by way of a question put to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, he was not concerned in this. It was the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The broadcast this morning referred to my statement about the limited character of NATO itself and the need for United Nations participation in its operations. With regard to the question the right hon. gentleman has asked, I will state what was said yesterday in the committee.

As has been stated many times, a number of ways of effecting improvements and economies are naturally being examined by the departments concerned as part of the adjustment necessitated by the French government's decision. There are many possibilities, but not all of them will prove practicable and desirable in the light of our responsibilities in the alliance. The suggestions made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre yesterday fall within the area of possibilities that will receive consideration, but I would regard them as extremely unlikely to be implemented.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While he is considering this most important matter will he give consideration to the policy of the New Democratic party in this respect?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the significant changes that have taken place in Europe will induce Canada to advocate appropriate changes in NATO strategy and in Canada's contribution to NATO.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend well knows, that is the kind of question that cannot be answered on orders of the day. We discussed that question in part yesterday, and we will have a further opportunity to do so when we give it the attention it deserves.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a supplementary question, just for the benefit of those of us who have not got the latest revised version of the N.D.P. platform in this regard, would the minister let us know what it is?

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether, following this change in the structure of NATO and in the event of extra expense being placed on Canada, France has indicated any intention to defray part of this extra expense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Well, as I said yesterday in the committee—and I think my hon. friend was present—these matters are now being studied by the French and Canadian governments. No final decisions have been made. Negotiations have not yet begun.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): As a further supplementary question, has a final date been set for ending these discussions or is that left open?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The French government has given a terminal date by which time an endeavour will be made to deal with the questions involved. If we cannot conclude the negotiations by April 1, 1967, I would hope we would be given an extension of time.

CANADIAN CITIZENS REQUESTED TO REPORT FOR U.S. SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the case of Glyn Briscoe of Port Moody, B.C., which has had a good deal of press coverage, and in view of other cases which have come to my attention and that of other hon. members, of persons who appear to be Canadian citizens being called up by the United States authorities to report for selective service, is the government planning to make any statement to clarify the position of Canadian citizens and protect them from any embarrassment in the event that they should visit the United States at any time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, we have given this matter very serious consideration. The Solicitor General, who is particularly concerned with it, is not in the house at the moment, but I should hope he could make a statement on this matter on Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister whether he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs is making any representations to the United States in order to clarify the situation; because some of these people, first of all, have been interviewed by F.B.I. agents and, second, have been told that if they should visit the United States at any time they are liable to arrest for failing to report for selective service.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Instructions have already been sent to our embassy in Washington to make representations based on the case which my hon. friend has mentioned.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DONATION OF ISLAND FOR EXPO PAVILION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister report on the claim by an Iroquois chief that Tekakwitha island, proposed for a permanent Indian pavilion near the site of Expo, was donated without the authority of the Indian council on the Caughnawaga reserve?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

VAL D'OR, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION DELAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport?

In view of the new policy of the government which consists in postponing developments in Canada, can the hon. Minister tell the house if this new program will affect the construction of an airport at Val d'Or or can he assure me that it will actually be built this year?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would hope not, but I think it would be prudent for me to make inquiries before giving a final answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE AND UNSAFE AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry and is based on the fact that recently the automobile industry in the United States was obliged to recall defective and unsafe cars. Has the industry in Canada given the minister a detailed report on why there have been no recalls for similar models in Canada, and can the minister report to the house on any findings he has had from the industry?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had a detailed report, but when one is received I will be glad to make a statement.

Mr. Grafftey: Has the minister or anyone in the government inquired of the industry why these recalls are not being made in Canada? I am not saying they do not have a good excuse, but is anybody asking the industry why these recalls should not be made in Canada when similar recalls have been made in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grafftey: Has any member of the government asked? Yes or no? Has anybody in the government asked the industry why?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: I am on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: We can have only one point of order at a time. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Caouette: Was I not recognized?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asked a responsible and reasonable question of the government. The minister stated in answer to that question that the matter was under consideration, but he was asked whether any representation has been made by the government to the automobile manufacturers concerning the changes being made in the United States, to preserve the lives of people within this country. Surely there was nothing unreasonable in that question. I submit with the greatest deference that it was a proper question and that the answer is one that Canadians want to know, because of the tremendous massacre which is taking place today on the roads of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question put by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi was of course along the same line as the argument submitted by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. It was not a question; it was an argument, and this is the reason the Chair could not accept it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the question. Has any representation been made by the government to the manufacturers asking for the information and the assurance that was referred to by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi? There is no argument in that.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The original question was, has any member of the government made such an inquiry. I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Very good. Then we have the answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. For the last several weeks, and I think this is for the information—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Following the question asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey), I think that this point of order can enlighten the house.

Some people are trying to downgrade the automobile industry in Canada and to play politics with that matter. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi is sending up a trial balloon which is clearly and purely political.

The automobile industry is not responsible for accidents; road hogs, somewhat like Conservative members—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —are to blame for accidents.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): That is not a point of order; sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am convinced that after thinking it over the hon. member for Villeneuve will admit that there is not really any point of order. He submitted an argument which, to a certain extent, answers the one which was put forward by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

It is obvious that we are moving toward a debate on that matter. The question period is not meant for debate but for asking questions. I feel that there is not any point of order about the matter which the hon. member is bringing up at this time.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I again rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi does not know anything at all about automobiles.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege, the first I have raised in eight years in this house. The hon. member for Villeneuve has raised a point regarding my motives in this issue. I think most members in the house know about my motives. I would say to the hon. member that in so far as he is an automobile dealer, he has a conflict of interest when he gets up and speaks in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. John Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of privilege and say that I have been an automobile dealer for the last 10 years and have no conflict of interest in this respect. The safety of the people of Canada is my concern, just as much as it is the concern of the hon. member on the other side of the house. I should also like to point out to the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Two questions of privilege have been raised, and I suggest that we return to other matters which might be considered by the house at this time.

[Translation]

TRANSPORT

MONTREAL—SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS FOR GRAIN MOVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell the house if, following the instructions given to the railways by the board of transport commissioners to the effect that almost all empty cars be sent to western elevators, he has received numerous protests and whether he intends to do something to alleviate the shortage of cars at Montreal elevators?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of the hon. gentleman; therefore it would be impossible to answer the question.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister inform the house what steps are now being taken to deal effectively with the disastrous situation at Bell Island, which affects over 9,000 people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the announcement was made that the mine would be closing at the end of June, throwing I think 800 or 900 people out of work at Bell Island, the government at once considered this as a matter not only of seriousness but of an emergency character, and has been in touch with the government of Newfoundland, other government agencies and the Atlantic Development Board. I hope to be in a position to give a more detailed reply to my hon. friend on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS AND SECRETARIES DURING ADJOURNMENT DEBATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it now government policy not to have ministers or their parliamentary secretaries present to answer queries that are raised in the ten o'clock adjournment debate? If not, will the Prime Minister impress upon his ministers the necessity to have someone present to answer questions on these occasions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): So far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker, all ten o'clock questions have been effectively dealt with by the government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Not last night. There was no minister or parliamentary secretary here. It was just contempt of parliament.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

In the same connection, I was here last night to answer a question and the one who raised it was not. This has happened on two occasions in the case of the member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays).

[English]

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member for Bonaventure refers to the evening of March 31 when I did not show up for the debate. Could I remind the hon. member that I was not informed, although I probably should have been in the house at six o'clock; but I did not take the advantage which one of his colleagues in the former parliament took, of circulating the same accusation throughout my riding, bearing in mind that this person is at present employed as a public servant—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question on the same subject. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will arrange in the future to extend to hon. members who raise questions on the adjournment motion the courtesy of seeing that a minister or a parliamentary secretary is here to answer the questions.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: Last night no one was present to answer the question.

Mr. Pearson: I will do that, Mr. Speaker, and I will also do my best, with the help of members on the other side of the house, to see that when questions are raised the members who raised them will be here, too.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this is not a proper discussion. The question was raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie and a reply was given. It seems to me the matter should be considered closed. It is developing into a debate on whether questioners are here to pose questions at ten o'clock and ministers are here to answer the questions posed. The rules are there, and I believe there is no point whatsoever in pursuing the discussion on this matter.

Mr. Korchinski: In reply to my question, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated that ministers are always available. I should like to know why the minister was not available last night.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bow River.

SPORTS

FEDERAL SUPPORT FOR APPLICATION FOR OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if he would advise the house whether any member of his government, any official from the Department of External Affairs or any other official is attending the meeting in Rome of the international committee which is deciding whether Canada should get the winter games at Banff.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to check, but I have been informed that an official from Ottawa and our ambassador are both attending this meeting. I should add, if I may, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be in Rome. I believe he is leaving this afternoon, and he will be there also.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING THIS DAY WITHOUT LUNCHEON ADJOURNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask a question of the government house leader. A situation has developed whereby a number of members who wish to speak in the budget debate will be precluded from doing so because we have agreed to terminate this debate at six o'clock today. In order to give these members, or as many of them as possible, an opportunity to speak I wonder if the government house leader would seek the unanimous consent of the house to sit during the luncheon period.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I would be happy to make such a request so there would be an opportunity for hon. members who wish to participate in the debate to do so. I hope they can make their remarks brief. I ask for an order of the house now.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house so order?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

TRUCKING INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF 40 HOUR WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour, in absence of the minister. I should like to ask whether the government is prepared to introduce an amendment to the 40-hour week legislation so that all those who are engaged in the interprovincial motor transport industry can be covered by this legislation?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): I believe the minister replied adequately to this question on several occasions last week, if the hon. member for Ontario would refer to Hansard. In any event I will bring it to his attention when he returns on Monday.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACT FOR REPAIR AND REFIT OF H.M.C.S. "BONAVENTURE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has a formal contract announcement been made regarding the Bonaventure repairs? If not, when can we expect this announcement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): An announcement has not been made, Mr. Speaker, but I expect it will be shortly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the minister check into reliable reports emanating from Halifax this morning as the Bonaventure left Halifax with Department of Industry officials aboard, that the estimate will probably go over $8 million?

Mr. Drury: I shall be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of a previous question I asked, in connection with the situation created by a lack of National Housing Act mortgage funds. Has he received a unanimous communication from the Ontario members of the National House Builders Association to the effect that they deplore the serious situation, critical to the house building industry, and urging immediate government action to re-establish the available direct N.H.A. mortgage loans in all areas? The Prime Minister said the matter was before the government, and it is one of such urgency that I wondered if he was in a position to answer today.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am not in a position to answer today but I appreciate, as my right hon. friend does, that it is a matter of great urgency. It is being treated as such. I hope the minister will be able to make a statement on it at the beginning of the week.

INDUSTRY

AUTO PARTS—REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In order that Canadian car parts manufacturers may compete more effectively and on a fair basis with their United States counterparts, would he not seriously consider removing the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I suggest to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter that can be discussed during the Budget debate. I shall listen very carefully to representations that may be made. Many have been made already.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—MEETINGS OF INTERNATIONAL CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would inform the house whether discussions are still continuing amongst members of the international control commission with a view to a conference seeking peace in Viet Nam, or whether those discussions are now at an end.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The discussions are not at an end. I had one on Wednesday morning.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the developments in Viet Nam, can the minister inform us whether any progress has been made since the last time there were such discussions, or are we still at the same impassé with regard to the attitude of Poland in the matter?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would be wrong to say that Poland was the obstacle, but I think my hon. friend will understand it is not possible for me to give any details about this matter at this stage.

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COMMONWEALTH MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs which I hope will not be embarrassing. I should like to ask whether he has anything to report with regard to the recent meeting in London of commonwealth representatives concerning Rhodesia.

An hon. Member: Help him up.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I just want to say to the Prime Minister that the reason I hesitated was that yesterday my hon. friend fired a loaded question at me which got me into some trouble, according to the Leader of the Opposition. I have decided from now on—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You need the Prime Minister's help.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to pay perhaps even greater attention to questions that might not be intended to be loaded but undoubtedly have that result.

Mr. Pickersgill: The answers are sometimes loaded.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend the Minister of Transport says that sometimes the answers are loaded.

An hon. Member: He ought to know.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my friend says, he ought to know. I must bring this litany to an end. There was a meeting of the sanctions committee yesterday, but we have not had a report as yet.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO ARDA PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Forestry?

We do not hear very much about the ARDA program being carried out, I believe, throughout Canada at the present time. Is the department going on with its surveys in the province of Quebec? Where are the experts now? Where are the government experts working now?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): You will see; there is an election in the province.

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an answer today and not next week. I would like to know where the experts are now.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wants information, he can always get in touch with the minister concerned, but I do not think his question can be put at the present time.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLOWANCE OF WARTIME SERVICE FOR PENSION PURPOSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. My question relates to a matter concerning which certain assurances were given to us when the departmental estimates were before us a few weeks ago. Has the government made a decision to allow wartime service for pension purposes in the case of permanent force personnel?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): The department has made a decision and made a recommendation to the government, which I believe is up for consideration now. The appropriate legislation should be before the house very shortly.

PENSIONS

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED INTEGRATION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): My question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister give consideration to referring the bill to integrate the various governmental pension plans into the Canada Pension Plan to a standing committee so representatives of the various civil service organizations may give evidence?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will not give a definite undertaking that it will be referred, but I shall certainly take the suggestion under consideration.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CÔTÉ, LONGUEUIL—REMARK IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR VILLENEUVE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I regret that I could not give you notice of my question, because I have just read what I wish to refer to in Hansard.

Mr. Starr: Order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): During the budget debate the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) was making a speech, and he was interrupted by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there is a question of privilege arising out of something that happened yesterday I suggest to the minister that even though he has taken notice of the matter now for the first time, under the rules he still has to give prior notice to the Chair.

Mr. Starr: In writing.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if he will do this in writing, according to the rules, it can be brought before the house later.

Mr. Knowles: It could be debated during the lunch hour.

[Later:]

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a question of privilege. Last night during the budget debate the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) made a speech.

Mr. Starr: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister was kind enough to give the Chair written notice of the question of privilege, but as he knows the rules of parliament require one hour's notice. This is one hour that did not have seven days.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask respectfully, if Hansard does not appear in the hands of hon. members one hour prior to the opening of a sitting, will we not be permitted to raise questions of privilege based on our reading of Hansard when we do receive it?

Mr. Speaker: This is of course a very interesting point for hon. members. If we went along with the suggestion of the hon. member it would require every member to immediately get down to work and read the whole of Hansard the moment he received it, to make sure that the point of privilege could be raised at the first opportunity.

An hon. Member: We should read our own speeches.

Mr. Speaker: I still feel that any time an hon. member takes notice of something he should give one hour's notice. The rules require one hour's notice before any matter such as this may be taken up by the house. The rule is there. It does not make exceptions for matters which may be raised as a result of reading Hansard. I suggest that the rule should be followed in this also.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Would it not be possible, because of the understandable desire of the minister to place this matter before the house, for the house to give unanimous consent to his doing so?

Mr. Speaker: If that is agreeable the Chair will be very pleased to hear the question of privilege.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I thank hon. members of the house. To me this is an important question of privilege. While the hon. member for Hull was dealing with the subject of bilingualism the hon. member for Villeneuve said the Postmaster General was the worst. Then the hon. member for Hull said, "the Postmaster General was a good guy", and I agree with that. The hon. member for Villeneuve came back and said, "He is a unilingual who does not believe in bilingualism". My question of privilege is based on the fact that I believe in bilingualism. I speak and understand English quite well, and I am trying very hard to improve my French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence, in order to take some of the burden away from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. My question is this. Is mobile command sufficiently integrated to provide from its static headquarters for a more rapid rotation of troops in Europe, in order to demonstrate the mobility of our Canadian forces and to gain experience in so doing?

An hon. Member: That is a loaded question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SPORTS

PAN AMERICAN GAMES—POSSIBLE VISIT BY QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Pan American Games Society would like to have Her Majesty the Queen visit Winnipeg for the games, can the right hon. gentleman say now where negotiations stand with respect to a possible visit to Canada by Her Majesty next summer?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have already indicated to the house that we expect and hope that Her Majesty will pay a visit to Canada during centennial year. The details of that visit have not yet been worked out.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TAHSIS, B.C.—REPORTED THREAT BY MAGISTRATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I would ask the minister whether he would look into a published report that a magistrate in Tahsis, British Columbia, has threatened to place the entire membership of an Indian band on the interdicted list. In his capacity as Superintendent of Indian Affairs, if this action has taken place will he make the strongest possible representations to the Attorney General of British Columbia against this discrimination and infringement of individual rights?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister I am sure has noted the representation made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

NATIONAL PARKS

SASKATCHEWAN—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, prompted by the many urgent representations I have received from various persons in Saskatchewan.

Now that the first anniversary of his announcement of a second national park for Saskatchewan has rolled around, can the minister say where this park is to be located and when its developement will commence?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question should be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO REQUIREMENTS FOR FARM WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture arising out of a statement made yesterday by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. May I ask the minister if the government, or his department, has looked into the problem respecting agricultural workers, and is he satisfied that all requirements for these workers can be met by Canadians, other than in southwestern Ontario?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my department is continually looking into this problem and discussing it with various provincial officials and other provincial authorities. If we do find that in other areas they require workers from outside Canada, and if these needs can be met by a supply of workers from outside Canada, we would be prepared to look into any individual problem at any time.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF TRESPASSING PROBLEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I know the question of trespassing comes under provincial jurisdiction, but I am asking this question at the request of some quite important organizations in this country. The point I raise has caused a great deal of trouble across Canada in the various provinces.

Would the minister place this question on the agenda of the next meeting of the dominion-provincial agricultural conference so it could be discussed with a view to finally evolving some formula to provide better relationships between farmers and hunters, who usually trespass?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The representations made by the hon. member have been noted by the minister, and if the hon. member thinks a reply to this question is required that could be obtained by putting the question on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED SPEECH BY MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the contents of the speech by the Minister without Portfolio on April 20, as reported in yesterday's press, with regard to what goes on in parliament, the attitude of the members, their thinking and so on, represent the views of the government, as expressed by the minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed a report in the press about the speech in question. To me it sounded like a very interesting speech, and I have asked the hon. minister to give me a copy of it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would he table it so we could all see it?

[Translation]

TRADE

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE U.K. ENTRY INTO COMMON MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and my question is not dangerous.

In view of the instructions contained in the Speech from the Throne prepared by the Labour government regarding the entry of the United Kingdom into the Common Market, could the minister tell the house whether he has recently received any communication in this connection or whether he is having any discussion with the London government, or its representative, on the conditions of entry and on the implications, advantages and disadvantages for Canada and other Commonwealth countries?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is very general in nature and unacceptable in its present form.

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could inform the house when he expects to set up the special inquiry on security about which we have been so concerned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): At the moment, Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given to the terms of reference and the personnel of such inquiry. I hope there will be an announcement about this shortly.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPRESENTATION AT U.S. HEARING ON TRANSATLANTIC CORRIDORS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret that I have not been able to give him notice of it. Perhaps he can take my question as notice if he is not now in a position to answer it. Has his department an observer present at the U.S. federal aviation agency hearings which I believe are taking place at the present time, regarding safety measures on transatlantic flights.

I ask this in light of the views of the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations that the minimum allowed spacing between jets on transatlantic flights is not adequate for safety.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I know that the proceedings in question are being very closely followed by the officials of my department. Whether an official of my department is there as an observer I shall have to inquire about. We are all deeply concerned about this matter.

May I be permitted to say that we appreciate the great public apprehension that has been caused about this matter, and we are pursuing every aspect of it just as thoroughly as we can. I am sure all hon. members realize that the Canadian air lines would be very concerned indeed if they felt they were doing anything that would endanger the safety of the passengers on transatlantic flights.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Thursday, April 21, consideration of the motion of Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, I have followed with interest the presentation of the budget by the Minister of Finance and the debate which has ensued. Taking into account the varied group ideologies of this house, it seems to me just about every aspect of its impact has been explored.

It is now apparent the budget attempts to do too many things in too many different ways, and that the end product may well have a sort of gigantic cancelling out effect. The temperatures in the economically overheated areas, where the minister apparently wishes to lower the fever, probably will not respond to the too bland treatment, and areas such as Nova Scotia beset by economic chills, may slip into a deep freeze. The classic monetary policy of tight money which is being and presumably is to be applied as an anti-inflationary move does not lend itself to selective regional application. It will impinge on the frailer economic zones as a chilling frost. Fiscal policies of hold-back and stretch out of government capital expenditures and/or grants hit areas of weaker economy disproportionately hard.

The Minister of Finance offers the country a deficit budget which is inherently inflationary. But he apparently implies that because the deficit contemplated is less than that envisaged in last year's budget, the present budget is therefore corrective of the threatened inflationary spiral and the consequent acceleration of the rise in the cost of living.

What I do not find in either the budget, the estimates or the minister's remarks is a hard undertaking that selective fiscal moves are assured to assuage the deflationary effects the over-all policies will have in areas such as the maritime provinces. I do not have to labour the point of the undesirability of weakening an already relatively fragile economy. Dr. Deutsch, in the second annual report of the Economic Council of Canada, has stressed adequately the essentiality of ironing out regional economic disparities in order to avoid the perpetuation of a series of poverty pockets.

I believe the government could well take a page from President Johnson's book and note that, confronted as he is with every problem we face in Canada and more, he has not lost sight of the need to apply corrective measures in the solution of the problem of Appalachia, a situation parallel in many ways to the one Canada has in her Atlantic provinces.

Like most hon. members, I suppose, I took advantage of the Easter recess to visit broadly across my constituency. I was tremendously impressed with the consternation almost universally expressed by my constituents. This consternation stemmed from their conviction and fear that the budget presaged the administration of remedies calculated to counteract an illness not affecting their area, one which is certainly not affected by an overheated economy.

Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, the constituency I have the honour to represent, embraces the western end of our province and constitutes one of its areas of relatively low personal income, little industrial development and a disproportionally high percentage of the population aged 60 and older. Fishing, fish processing, wooden ship and boat building, the tourist industry, the ancillary service industries and the retail trade provide the bulk of employment. There is only one sizable manufacturing plant in the area, a cotton mill employing about 500 people.

A 1965 study of Yarmouth's economy, subtitled "A Preliminary Socio-Economic Assessment" by a group of four professors from the departments of economics, education and commerce of Acadia University points out that during the 1951-1961 period the natural increase in population, the excess of births over deaths, was 3,249. The census reports, however, show the population increased only by 592. The Acadia group makes special note that——there exists a marked similarity between the structure of society and the economic problem experienced (in Yarmouth county) in the adjacent counties of Shelburne, and Digby of which latter, Clare is a municipal unit.

• (12:00 noon)

This all adds up to the fact that the constituency as a whole has a high proportion of elderly folk, most of whom live on small fixed incomes, are peculiarly vulnerable to rising living costs, and can easily be forced back on the municipalities for support. It also adds up to another load on the municipalities—the burden of educating the youth of the area who, in very high proportion, move away, as indicated by the static population, just as they are about to become productive. To provide good educational facilities and retain high quality teachers in competition with more prosperous sections of the province already extends to the limit municipal financial resources deriving from a narrow tax base.

During the past ten years it is true that Nova Scotia and Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare have moved ahead notably, but as a province and as an area within a province they are insufficiently robust to withstand a prescription of fiscal sedation. I conceive Nova Scotia, Mr. Speaker, to be the great wharf of Canada and it seems to me that its potentials as such have yet to be exploited. For example, there is something incongruous in the fact that Canada, one of the greatest per capita exporting countries in the world, has a seagoing merchant marine one-twelfth the size of small, landlocked Switzerland. What would Russia give to have fine, ice-free harbours such as Shelburne and Yarmouth? With coal reserves, the possibility of hydro power, and perhaps even offshore deposits of oil and gas, I say the day can come when Nova Scotia and areas such as Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare can broaden their economic base and raise their prosperity level to the national plane.

In my immediately foregoing remarks, Mr. Speaker, I have given myself the liberty of stroking with a pretty broad brush and treating of a future considerably beyond the purview of this year's budget. However, I have done this deliberately in order to justify, by demonstrating potentialities for future self-reliance, the immediate things that the government should consider this year instead of a Mother Hubbard application of tight money and construction holdbacks. In areas, and there are probably many of them in Canada, where the economy is relatively low I contend all such strengths as exist at present should be fortified to offset as much as possible the debilitating effects I foresee in the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

To continue with my constituency as a sort of case history, Mr. Speaker, I say that the infrastructural needs such as wharves, dredging operations and other facilities calculated to fortify and strengthen the fishing industry should be met. Additionally, projects fomenting the regionally very important tourist industry should be prosecuted vigorously. The growth of our fishing fleet, both in respect of numbers and size of the fishing units makes once adequate structures inadequate and has brought about a need for additional shore installations. Interest in large scale operations involving fish processing plants with heavy fresh water requirements can be encouraged by governmental assistance in providing water supplies to towns and areas unable to afford such installations but which otherwise are attractive sites for such plants and other secondary industrial enterprises.

The tourist business is another place where federal assistance on an increased scale could do much to mitigate the over-all depressant effect of the Budget in areas such as Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare. In this connection I should like to mention the new national park in Nova Scotia, originally known as the western Nova Scotia park but now known as the Kejimkujik national park, I presume because it was not extended into western Nova Scotia, the point of entry for tourists from the United States by sea and air. This park should be enlarged to cover a portion of the existing contiguous Tobeatic game sanctuary which lies in parts of Digby, Yarmouth and Shelburne counties.

Access roads, on the basis of the roads to resources idea, should be built into the park from the towns of Shelburne, Yarmouth and Digby. Federal assistance along these lines would greatly stimulate the tourist trade and further, by providing easy access to fine recreational facilities, make the towns of the constituency more attractive sites for secondary industry so vitally needed to broaden the economic base. Full development of the tourist industry demands adequate travel facilities and I am disappointed to find the government lethargic in seeing that improvement is made along these lines.

It is my understanding that improvement to the Yarmouth airport to bring it up to high standards as befits an entry point for increased tourist travel from the United States is scheduled for 1970. The provision of modern aircraft of the D-9 type for the United States-western Nova Soctia service is also currently postponed in programming until 1970. Far from postponement these are moves that should be implemented at the earliest possible date.

The second ferry service from the United Stated to western Nova Scotia, a must both from a tourism point of view and to facilitate the export of the products of our fisheries, seems to be experiencing an extremely long period of gestation. The delay in getting this facility under way impedes the full development of our role as Canada's ocean playground. When I point out that tourism brought into Nova Scotia some $58 million in 1965 and the total landed value of our fish catch in the same year amounted to $48 million, perspective is given to the potentialities of the former activity.

The short term program of aid on the part of the federal government for a low economic temperature area in a low temperature economic zone which I have outlined, with appropriate changes to suit specific circumstances, I submit should be a government policy under this Budget in all such like areas and zones in the country. I would hope the government will see to it that through its departments and agencies such a policy is implemented.

It is no more than an investment against the danger of areas of income disparity being pushed below such levels as to demand future expenditures of a handout nature vastly exceeding in cost the more positive approach of providing now the means of more productivity and the road to national economic parity.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I must say that a new member experiences some amusement in hearing a government supporter speak praisingly of the Budget presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and pat him on the back only to be followed by a member from the opposition parties, speaking in condemnation of the Budget and kicking the Minister of Finance in the lower part of the body. Probably the truth lies somewhere between the praise and the condemnation. There can be little doubt that the Canadian economy is in quite a different position from what it has been for some time. When one reads that we have just finished our second year in which the gross national product grew by over nine per cent in terms of current dollars, that is, without taking into account increases in prices of goods and services, and that in each of the years 1964 and 1965 the gross national product, after the effect of price changes on the physical output of goods and services was removed, still rose 6 per cent, most Canadians would be pleased with the steady rate of growth of our economy.

• (12:10 p.m.)

With the increased growth in the economy the unemployment rate has been reduced from about 5½ per cent two years previously to 3½ per cent today. The unemployment fiures indicate that today there are about 350,000 unemployed.

Along with this general increase in prosperity for Canadians price rises unfortunately began to accelerate. Two years ago the rate of inflation in price increases was 2 per cent a year. Last year it rose to 3 per cent and now it is 4 per cent. These increases have not been equal for all commodities, however, and the greatest increase was found in food prices which increased 6 per cent.

Wages, however, did not rise at dangerous rates in the past year. Average hourly wages in manufacturing rose just over 4 per cent. Had the productivity performance been better this would not have been inflationary at all. In the construction industry, however, there were definite wage cost pressures. For the past 12 month period available, November, 1964 to November, 1965, construction wages rose 10 per cent.

This, of course, is directly related to the present boom in the construction industry and the widespread shortage of many skilled tradesmen. The building boom has been created by the increase in residential building, particularly in the apartment field, and in business generally associated with the rapid growth in the economy in the past few years, but also by the centennial projects and Expo '67.

Looking back one can reasonably state that the economy is very healthy indeed but with the caution that price pressures and some bottlenecks are developing, particularly in the construction field. Unemployment has fallen sharply in Canada but it still has a long way to go to achieve the position of no unemployment.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

The question arises as to what is the outlook for 1966. According to the government's forecast in the Budget speech, real output of goods and services cannot be expected to rise by more than about 5 per cent this year compared with 6 per cent in the last two years. Its reason for the reduction is that most of the slack in the economy has been taken up and future increases in the economy can only come from new resources, both natural and human, being brought into productive use.

The obvious question arises: If there are still 350,000 people unemployed, how can it be said there is no slack in the economy? The quick answer is that the unemployed are now largely unskilled or have skills not presently in demand while the shortages are in skilled labour in other fields. This situation can to a large extent be blamed on the government not having taken effective action in the manpower field. The Economic Council of Canada in its first annual review suggested that with an average rate of growth of 5½ per cent in the economy and with price rises kept down to 2 per cent, unemployment in Canada should be able to be reduced to 3 per cent. However, in spite of growth higher than what was targeted for by the Economic Council, unemployment is not being reduced as much as it should be and the effects of high demand are higher prices rather than less unemployment at present. Unfortunately this situation cannot be changed overnight or by a single Budget. It can only be met by the government instituting effective manpower policies involving training and retraining, mobility assistance by grants rather than loans and effective placement and research services as suggested by the Economic Council.

In the meantime the object of the Budget is to nudge the economy down very slightly about 1 per cent of the gross national product. This Budget must be criticized not so much for its aggregate effect on the economy in the forthcoming year but rather for the make-up of the Budget from the point of view of (a) the fairness of its provisions, (b) the shaping of the country in the future and (c) its effects on productivity.

Some of my colleagues have dealt with various aspects of the Budget and have pressed for a prices review board, an adequate manpower program, full medicare and an immediate commencement of the Canada Development Corporation to take care of some of the problems confronting Canadians today.

I should like to direct my mind to the effect of the Budget on the construction industry and in particular the housing problems facing Canada today. In doing so, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to note that the keynote of the message of the Minister of Finance is restraint on increases in spending rather than stimulus. His objective is a steady and sustained growth in our economy, and he warns that if we do not by one means or another moderate the increase in aggregate expenditures the most immediate penalty we shall suffer is an inflationary increase in prices.

On page 3379 of Hansard in his Budget address on March 29 he states:

> As a practical matter in our society this danger cannot be avoided by trying to regulate prices and wages. We must deal with the basic issue which is at the present time an excess of spending power over what is available to meet demands. It is this excess which causes rising prices, costs and profits and which harms those in our society whose economic power and bargaining position are weak.

Most of the measures introduced by the Minister of Finance suggest that in his opinion demand is the trouble. So the cure is to take away money from business and those citizens who have some discretionary spending power. This will reduce the demand for capital goods such as machinery and new buildings and for consumer goods. This seems an odd way to deal with the economy in which one of the obvious problems is an acute shortage of money by many Canadians.

When one remembers there are 350,000 unemployed in Canada and that according to the 1961 census some 23 per cent of Canadian families had an income of less than $3,000 a year and some 700,000 Canadians had an income of less than $1,500 a year, or in other words 25 per cent or about four million Canadians live below the poverty line, one wonders where the surplus of money is. However, the government is determined to exercise restraint in many sectors and amongst its restraint measures it has pledged to cut back its own proposed construction program by some 10 per cent and has asked the provinces and municipalities also to take a serious look at their plans. What is the effect of this measure?

In the past two years the construction industry has pushed ahead at a very great rate. Investment has been high in all phases of the economy, for homes, apartment buildings, schools and recreational centres, plants, factories and office buildings. The forecasts for the coming year show that the boom is likely to continue. Added to these natural causes are the many projects associated with the centennial of confederation celebrations and Expo '67. Not surprisingly this surge forward has resulted in sharp rises in construction costs and some corrective action became necessary. However, it is the method by which the government did it which we in the New Democratic Party question.

The major emphasis in the 10 per cent cut-back in federal construction plans is in the public sector. In the private investment field the government has taken some action to slow down the boom, but the fact remains that public and social capital are being cut back more rapidly than is private capital. The government is apparently giving a higher priority to the production of private capital than to the creation of social construction. Although both private and social capital are needed in our economy, the weight of evidence as brought forward by the second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada is that social capital in many fields probably in the long run leads to higher productivity within the economy than does investment in private capital. It is the problem of productivity that is becoming the most crucial in our economy, and its slow growth is one of the major causes of the general rise in prices.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Productivity can be raised by better education. Productivity can be raised by new processes developed through basic research. The government should carefully reflect on its priorities in this field. It should make certain that the genuine needs for social capital in this country are not sacrificed to short run private advantage and profit. Unfortunately the Budget proposes cutting federal government construction by 10 per cent; yet the anticipated cut-back in construction in the private sector as a result of the budgetary proposals is only anticipated to be between 3 and 4 per cent.

What is the present state of housing today? The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), who is in charge of housing, stated in Toronto in December, 1964:

> For all the talk about what we intend to do, for all our efforts, nearly 100,000 Canadian families live every waking moment of their lives under housing conditions that are really appalling—a disgrace to the communities in which they reside. The same 100,000 families cannot find other accommodation on the open market at rents they can afford to pay, and 20 per cent of all our occupied dwellings have very primitive bathing and toilet facilities. This, I suggest, is real poverty.

And quite apart from the despair and degradation of blight and decay, these neglected areas impose an unnecessary drain on the civic economy. Municipal services and other facilities cost more to provide, while assessments must decline. The extra overhead is subsidized by the taxpayers of the entire municipality—assessments must be increased in good areas to offset diminishing tax revenues in the run-down neighbourhoods.

Mr. Speaker, you would agree with me that this is not a bright picture. In the 1965 annual report by the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation he stated that residential construction increased in 1965 but the increase was small compared with gains of previous years. It reflected a high level of housing starts in the first half of the year followed by a decline which almost completely offset the early gain. He claims that the fall was attributable to the shortage of mortgage funds as a result of a heavy demand for investment funds for other purposes. Housing starts for 1965 were 166,565 units compared with 165,658 for 1964, an increase of .5 per cent compared with 11.5 per cent in 1964 and 14.2 per cent in 1963.

The cost of houses financed under the National Housing Act increased in 1965 as it had in each year since 1961. This was largely because of rising prices for materials and rising construction wage rates and to some extent because of larger houses. These factors, together with supplementary costs such as legal fees, combined to raise the average cost of N.H.A. financed houses to $17,402 in 1965 from $16,478 the previous year.

He said that the characteristics of persons buying N.H.A. homes remained relatively unchanged from the previous year. The average borrower's income was $6,655; he was 35 years of age and had two children. He also noted that more than 65 per cent of all housing started in 1965 was financed by conventional mortgage loans by life insurance and trust and loan companies and that N.H.A. loans were increased on single dwellings from $15,600 to $18,000. He stated that the demand for housing remained at a high level throughout the year and if funds had been more plentiful in the latter part of the year 1965 could have ended with another substantial increase in housing starts, particularly in starts of dwelling units.

He also noted that amendments to the National Housing Act which were made in 1964, aimed at elimination of slum and blight areas and to meet the housing needs of the aged and the poor, were finding acceptance and development by provinces and municipalities. We in the New Democratic Party welcome these changes and hope for an increase in the use of these provisions by the provinces and municipalities.

What are the changes needed to have an active housing program to fill the needs of all Canadians? The fundamental problem with regard to Canadian housing policy under the National Housing Act has been the almost exclusive concentration on loans for new houses. Although there is nothing wrong, and indeed much can be said for a federal agency to lend money and ensure mortgages at fair and reasonable interest rates to buyers of new homes, this attacks only one small part of Canada's housing problem. The problem is that only people who are fairly well off can afford to buy new homes even at the N.H.A. mortgage rate, currently 6¾ per cent, which is about 1 per cent below that usually paid for conventional mortgages.

The result of this can clearly be shown by a look at the average income of borrowers under the National Housing Act. The average income of N.H.A. borrowers was $6,375, far above the national average income. Thus those who had most benefited under the National Housing Act were in the higher income brackets, a situation which Professor James Murray, in a study for the Ontario Association of Housing Authorities, called "socialism for the rich and private enterprise for the poor." For the person in the higher-middle income bracket the National Housing Act has been a fair success.

For those in the lower income groups, however, housing policy in Canada has been a total failure. Since public housing plans were started in 1949, a total of only 10,625 public housing units had been completed to the end of 1964. In 1964 C.M.H.C. approved only 790 units in federal-provincial housing projects. This was down from the 989 units approved the year before. But what is the need in Canada? Professor Murray's study estimated that by 1981 the need will be for 1 million low income dwelling units and an additional 1 million units for so-called moderate income persons earning between $3,000 and $4,800 a year. The output to date has not even scratched the surface of the needs for publicly assisted housing in Canada.

In addition, special problems also exist with regard to housing for our elderly people. This group in some cases consists of lower income people. Recent studies indicate that inadequate provision has been made across Canada for the housing needs of elderly people.

The New Democratic Party suggests the following program for housing in Canada, particularly concentrating on the needs of those in the low and middle income groups for whom private enterprise has failed in the provision of adequate housing:

First, there should be a federal ministry of urban affairs and housing. The present set-up of having housing as an appendage to the Department of Labour is not adequate. This need was also ably stated by the member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) immediately after the last election and serious consideration should be given to this suggestion. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would report to the minister in charge of this department. It would have the function of suggesting the over-all housing policy for Canada, spelling out the objectives in legislation to be presented to parliament. The department would also be responsible for financing houses through loans and grants.

The department would be responsible for social, economic, technical and design research into housing and community problems. It would be responsible for co-ordination of the measurement of national housing needs as forwarded by the provinces and the determination of national priorities and programs, again with the necessary consultation with and agreement of the provinces. One would like to see C.M.H.C. taking an active part in implementing the plans set forth by Professor Murray with regard to housing needs determined for the year 1981.

Second, N.H.A. loans must be available to purchasers of existing homes whether they lie within a designated urban renewal area or not. Often people in the lower and middle income groups cannot afford the purchase of new homes but would be able to finance the purchase of older homes if mortgages were available demanding reasonable down payments and bearing low interest rates.

• (12:30 p.m.)

There is a striking example of the above need in my own riding of Toronto Broadview. There is an urban renewal plan development in my area which involves the three levels of government. Many problems have arisen in the first phase of development. The foremost has been the question of compensation to the home owner. The federal government takes the position that it is not responsible because, in the words of the minister, it acts as only the banker or financer of the development. The provincial government refers the problem to the municipal government and in turn the municipal government claims it is bound by the expropriation act which is a provincial statute.

The result has been a failure by all levels of government to recognize a particular problem of urban renewal development programs concerning fair and adequate compensation to these owners. The expropriation act provides compensation only on the market value of these houses at the time of expropriation and does not take into account the compulsory taking or any replacement costs these people suffer.

This has resulted in owners having to pay at least 20 per cent to 25 per cent more than they have been offered for their homes for comparable homes in other areas. Many of these people are elderly and live on fixed incomes, and the necessity of moving and assuming mortgages renders a great hardship on them. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Finance to consult with the Minister of Labour who is in charge of housing and to press for and facilitate necessary changes by the provinces and municipalities to make more adequate compensation on the basis of market value, compulsory taking and replacement costs. Another step in the right direction would be taken if these persons who buy older homes were allowed N.H.A. mortgages at reasonable interest rates. Justice demands this type of treatment.

At this time I might mention also a necessary amendment to the National Housing Act which has been urged by the Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. A letter to me and to my colleagues in this party, dated March 11, 1966,—I am sure the Minister of Finance received a copy because he represents a riding in Toronto—reads as follows:

> The board of governors of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute respectfully request your support to the amendment of the National Housing Act at the earliest possible moment which would permit loans to Ryerson for the purpose of construction of residential facilities. We realize that Ryerson is not alone in this matter and that the amendment would probably include an eligibility for such loans to post-secondary, non-degree granting institutes of which there are several across Canada. At present such institutes do not quality for N.H.A. loans.
>
> Our present enrolment is 4,200 day students. Half of these students come from outside metropolitan Toronto. The availability of suitable private residential facilities is not good and is deteriorating yearly. As you are perhaps aware, the board has recently announced an expansion program involving an expenditure of approximately $27 million for new instructional and administrative facilities. We are projecting for an increase in enrolment to the 10,000 level within the next five years. Our need is, of course, pressing but is obviously growing at an alarming rate. Both the federal and provincial governments are contributing to this expansion program but our first concern is to provide instructional space. None of the $27 million I referred to will be devoted to residences. The board feels it must now pursue actively the matter of residential facilities.

We have requested the government to make this amendment and have every hope it is receiving favourable consideration. However, we earnestly ask your support and initiative in the early passage of such an amendment. Since you are a member of parliament for metropolitan Toronto, the sons and daughters of your constituents are not as directly concerned about residence facilities as those coming from outside the Toronto area. However, we are taking the liberty of writing to you because Ryerson has assumed such an important role in this province and in this area and because the need is growing at such a rapid rate.

We of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, ask the government to take immediate steps to bring forth the necessary amendment to meet this very urgent problem, whether it prevails in Toronto or elsewhere.

The third step with regard to housing which we in the New Democratic Party feel is necessary is that the N.H.A. interest rate must be reduced from the current 6¾ per cent. This high interest rate means in effect that people are paying for their houses an amount double that which they originally paid for their homes. The high interest rate also stretches out the period of payment, in some cases to 25 or 30 years, which must be very discouraging to couples buying a home. If they are 40 years of age when they buy it, this means they will be 65 or 70 years of age before the payments are completed. Some purchasers have told me, "I will never live to see the house paid for."

If the Minister of Finance suggests that a reduced rate of interest would be unjust to people who are already paying the higher rates, then I respectfully suggest that all Canadians should be allowed to claim as an expense against their taxable income any mortgage interest payments during the year. In so far as persons paying rent are concerned, they should be allowed 7 per cent of the rent paid during the year. I might say that a bill has been introduced in the state of New York which covers this particular matter. These measures would in some degree relieve the financial hardship experienced by people buying homes or paying the high rents of today.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

I suggest also, Mr. Speaker, that in all N.H.A. mortgages there should be an allowance of approximately $2,000 for the purchase of fixtures, furnishings and appliances by the purchaser. This amount should be included in the N.H.A. loan. As the situation stands today, people buy a new home and then are immediately faced with the necessity of purchasing these new appliances and furnishings and paying very high interest rates to loan companies. This operates as a hardship upon them in keeping up the payments on their home.

Fourth, housing must be made available to persons at a cost of not more than 25 per cent of their income. Rentals for public housing projects must be limited to this figure.

Fifth, public housing projects must be fairly small in size and integrated with the rest of the community. In the United States much of the effort in public housing has been wasted because the projects were made too large and isolated in special areas. This has caused the formation of ghettos for the less fortunate members of the community and will likely hinder the prospects of children coming from such homes being able to move upward on the economic ladder. It is much more egalitarian, much more in keeping with democratic ideals, to keep different sections of the community in communication with each other. Isolating neighbourhoods by income levels is one way of defeating this aim of our society.

Sixth, special emphasis must be given to adequate housing for the elderly. In particular, there needs to be an increase in availability of suitable accommodations for unattached people, that is, widowed, elderly people, at a cost which they can be expected to afford.

Seventh, urban renewal plans must be totally co-ordinated and provision must be made for persons displaced by slum clearance. These persons must be guaranteed good housing at rents they can afford when they are moved out of their present premises. Much new housing for lower income persons must be provided before really serious attempts at slum clearance can bring the type of social progress visualized by the planners.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Eighth, loans for home improvements should be encouraged more than in the past. The 1965 annual report of C.M.H.C. indicates that for the fourth consecutive year there has been a decline. Homes in good repair are the best defence against blighted areas and also provide an avenue of employment during seasonal lay-offs in some industries.

We in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, feel that these measures would go a long way to solving Canada's housing needs. The building of homes helps in the building of character and a sense of pride and accomplishment which should be experienced and enjoyed by all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, allow me to repeat in this house what has been heard over the last two weeks from all Canadian citizens. The budget tabled a few weeks ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is the best balanced budget we have had for several years. It did not hold any great surprises, but it did contain a most timely one.

That surprise was the practical application of a principle which everyone and especially the leaders admit in se, but that no one had thought of putting into practice. That principle is the one that recognizes the small wage-earners, the economically weak, who make up the greater part of our population.

They are the ones who, in fact, must benefit from social and economic programs and who must pay less for those services. Those who can afford it understand that they must pay more, which is normal, to ensure the survival of those social and economic programs essential in any country. That is at least, Mr. Speaker, the opinion of the people I met in the riding of Gatineau. You know that as a result of studies made recently by ARDA in my riding and neighbouring ones, the riding of Gatineau was judged one of the most in need of help among all the ridings in eastern Canada.

On behalf of my constituents, I wish to thank once again the Minister of Finance for remembering them.

Allow me now to talk about a question which concerns more than one department and which will no doubt be the subject, in the years to come, of controversial and bitter discussions, of more or less partisan stands, but which, I am sure, will go its own way just the same; it is the creation of a federal district including part of the province of Ontario and part of the province of Quebec.

Right away I see people pricking up their ears to better hear those strange ideas and pursing their lips with worry, ready to answer such remarks spitefully. However, let us keep calm and not say more for the moment except that, in principle, I am as much against the creation of such a district if it were to become a reality tomorrow morning. I know that most of the neighbouring cities and municipalities in the federal capital area to be included in the district do not consider very favourably, at the present time at least, that new geographic entity.

Several municipal councils have said publicly, through their mayors, that they are against the project, using various arguments ranging from a loss of autonomy, political intervention, racial drownings, loss of advantages and personal prestige to a host of others. All that is true but we must realize that one of these days we will have to face a very important problem which already hovers like a menacing cloud over our heads in this area.

I am glad to learn that studies are already under way on the Quebec side in this connection and that the value of such a project in the near future will be fully considered.

The establishment of a federal district, both geographically and politically, is premature at the present time, but the question should be put otherwise. Would we be in favour of setting up a federal district on a psychological level, so to speak?

As a member representing a large part of the city of Hull in Gatineau riding and as a representative of the greater part of the country where are located N.C.C. properties on the Quebec side, I would object to the establishment of such a district immediately. But I would not hesitate to foster this idea right now, while postponing its actual, geographical or political implementation until later, in a more or less distant future.

But inasmuch as:

(1) The Quebec side gets its share of federal buildings;

(2) The development of the huge territory of the national capital on the Quebec side is carried out more promptly and the driveways, roads and parks now lying fallow are developed within five years;

(3) An extensive network of schools—an important condition—is built throughout the national capital area, both on the Quebec and on the Ontario side. These would be federal schools restricted to students seeking a career within the civil service. Their schooling standards would be similar and they would be bilingual and bicultural. This would be the implementation of all suggestions and reforms advocated for a century in our country. The schooling would reach the secondary level.

(4) The construction of two bridges across the Ottawa river at Lemieux island and between Britannia and Deschênes, two strategic locations already recommended by N.C.C. committees, to be carried out simultaneously. This is how I visualize the psychological federal district. This project will influence the future action that the residents of the national capital area will be called upon to approve.

(5) The new capital is to become bilingual in every respect, economically, socially, culturally and administratively.

If the federal district does not come into being in the near future, the N.C.C. is to blame, because it has failed to make the appropriate recommendations to the various departments, especially the Public Works Department to which it is answerable.

Needless to say, it owns land on both sides of the Ottawa river and never advised any Department to put up buildings on the Quebec side.

The duties of the commission are set down in black and white as follows in the 1961 Canada Year Book:

> Co-ordination and development of public lands in the national capital region are undertaken by direct planning and construction by the commission's staff; by co-operation with municipalities; by provision of planning aid or financial assistance in municipal projects; and by advising—

And please note this:

> —the Department of Public Works on—

Here is the point.

> —the siting and appearance of all federal government buildings in the 1,800-sq. mile national capital region.

Nothing says that the commission should build on one side more than on the other, and I do not see why the Quebec side should be less developed than the Ontario side. It is part of the national capital region.

Admittedly, the N.C.C. has done much to develop the lands in the national capital region; however, in the light of the above, I hope it will do more and a lot better in future if it wants the Quebec part to participate in this dream already half a century old.

In conclusion, please allow me to say a few words about this region rich in historic past and natural beauty which has inspired poets and writers.

[Mr. Isabelle.]

I could quote scores of authors who have admired the marvels of this area in the Gatineau. But I shall quote only two. The first, Mr. Herbert Marshall, appearing in 1956 before the parliamentary committee charged, as we know, with reviewing the work of the Federal District Commission, as it was then called, whose responsibility it was to implement the National Capital Plan and report thereon:

> Easy access to this magnificent natural area from Ottawa and Hull is a valuable asset not only to the inhabitants of the area but to visitors from near and far. Its natural wild beauty, variety of flora and fauna, picturesque sites, lakes and streams, mountainous terrain, everything contributes to make it a heaven for tourists, campers, skiers and for all those who love untouched nature and all this fills the needs of the calm and appeasing beauty of the Canadian woods.
>
> Here, on the doorstep of the capital, can be seen at its best, spring renewal, teeming birdlife, flowers, wild animals and trees in the summer, the glorious colours of fall, the clean and stimulating whiteness of winter scenes.

And what about my second testimonial, possibly more eloquent than the first, given by Mr. Percy Sparks whose forebears arrived in this area before Colonel By.

> Ten minutes after leaving the parliament buildings, the visitor will cross the Ottawa river and land at the very spot where Philémon Wright, the first white settler, established his colony in 1801. From this spot, he plunged into a wild area of 80,000 acres of wooded mountains, lakes and rivers where life beats in the raw and whose aspect has changed very little since the day Wright first gazed upon it.

Are they not beauty spots of nature which, one of these days, will have to be filled with federal buildings to embellish this unique and enchanting garden located only five minutes from the Canadian parliament buildings? Gréber, who was a geographer and a poet, described also that marvel which is a true reflection of the appearance of the whole country, in its full geographical dimensions, the beautiful area of the federal capital consisting of Quebec and Ontario.

These are some of the reasons which could prompt me to ask the National Capital Commission to make recommendations to the Department of Public Works for the construction of federal buildings on the Quebec side of the national capital. It is not a matter of courtesy but of justice toward the people who have always given their best service to Canada and often under difficult conditions, which there is no need for me to recall here, I mean the French speaking people of the national capital area.

Just think that over a period of ten years, from 1954 to 1964, out of $221 million spent in the Hull area and on the Ontario side, only $9 million were allocated to the Quebec side.

Those are the remarks I wanted to make as my contribution to this debate.

• (12:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to say a few words with regard to the Budget and perhaps some other measures of a fiscal character which were not included therein. I will make them as brief as possible because I know there are many other hon. members who wish to speak.

It is my impression that this is a negative Budget. This Budget was conceived in desperation and born in doubt. It is fraught with the prospect of giving birth to a baby Budget at any time. I am sure many people across this country were concerned about the changes in income tax. I think they were alarmed to find that the tax has been increased in the middle and higher income range. I think they were even more alarmed that greater reductions had not been made affecting those in the lower brackets. It seems to me that the dividing line is around $4,000.

In 1965 the previous minister provided for a decrease in income tax amounting to approximately 10 per cent. The increase this year is in the neighborhood of 14 per cent. I know it must have been merely incidental that in the period between came an election.

I have a chart here which contains some interesting figures. It was printed in the London Free Press on March 30, 1966. It shows that a single person, with no dependants, receiving $1,300 a year would last year have paid $15 in income tax. This year he will be able to make a great saving. He will pay only $13. This $2 represents approximately half a cent per day. In the $3,000 bracket a married person would have paid $65 last year. This year he will pay $59, a saving of $6. I do not think this sum will go very far in buying the necessities of life, the cost of living being what it is today.

Here is another example. A married person, with two dependants, earning $3,000—and there are many of them throughout this country—would last year have paid $22. This year he will be paying $20, a grand saving of $2. Six out of ten people are paying more money. The other four save $1 or $2 or $5. I contend that this is nothing but an election hoax.

I was concerned, as I know everyone was, that there was no increase made in old age security payments. I wonder why. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) himself is reported to have said during a recent election campaign that he would make available $100 a month or up to $125 where necessary. I presume he meant on the basis of a means test.

The election is now ancient history. The amendment we moved during the debate on the address to increase these payments to $100 was voted down. The Prime Minister himself voted against his own election promise. How can the senior citizens of this country live on $75 a month as many of them are forced to do? The government has raised our salaries. The salary of the Prime Minister has been raised. Why would they forget old age security recipients?

I contend that the acceptance of such an increase would not cost as much as we are led to believe. Ninety per cent of the money involved in the extra $25 per month would, I am sure, go back to the general economy. A large proportion of this amount would find its way back into the federal treasury through different taxes. Many of these people, through no fault of their own, are hard hit by the rising cost of living. Spiralling costs make it almost impossible for them to live with any semblance of dignity. Someone once said there is nothing to fear from the present government while we are in a state of prosperity and nothing for us to hope for when we are in a state of economic distress.

I have here a clipping from today's Ottawa Journal. Incidentally, April 22 is an important day because it is the anniversary of the first battle of Ypres. The article reads as follows:

• (1:00 p.m.)

Hundreds of Veterans of the 1st Canadian contingent will gather in Ottawa to pay tribute to their comrades who fell victims to the horrible gas attack, and also to renew acquaintances.

The Prime Minister and his Liberal government should also remember that these surviving members are not only "veterans of war," but that all are now "old age pensioners," many of whom no doubt are feeling the pinch on $75 per month, and no doubt many will ask themselves was the sacrifice really worth it.

With regard to the refundable tax of 5 per cent on corporation profits over $30,000 I should like to ask, is this designed to place a brake on industry and on productivity and, if it is, how is the word "brake" spelled? Is it b-r-e-a-k or b-r-a-k-e? I am sure many firms would use this money for expansion if they had the opportunity, particularly the newer, growing institutions, and I would think this measure is encouraging them to borrow on the collateral they would receive from this saving at say 7 per cent, though the government is only going to give them 5 per cent on their own money. This could place another 2 per cent handicap on the operation of such businesses. I ask, how long can we continue to tax industry? Do we not by doing so price ourselves out of some very valuable foreign markets?

I would also refer to an item in the Budget dealing with the tax on production machinery and building materials. We are happy to see that the tax on certain production equipment is to be reduced by 6 per cent effective April 1 next year and that it will be entirely wiped out on April 1, 1968. But what about the tax on production machinery? The minister was questioned on this subject today and said he was taking the matter under advisement. I hope he gives it serious thought because it is my opinion that this tax is making it difficult for many Canadian firms to compete in foreign markets.

No intimation has been given that the tax on building materials might be changed, and I wonder why. It is a tax which is directed to everyone. It is a tax on a very sensitive sector of our economy. A young couple who want to build their first home at an approximate value of say $20,000, of which half would be made up of building materials, will pay a penalty of $1,100 for the privilege of buying a stake in our country. This is a great hurdle for them to jump and I ask, why impose such a penalty, particularly on young people?

This tax is daily increasing the cost of building. It is increasing the cost of building factories and manufacturing plants and of retail building. It is reflected in the retail prices of merchandise and it is one of the greatest inflationary pressures we are suffering at present. In my opinion the government is not only condoning this but actually is aiding and abetting it.

I have here another article written by a man well known in this house, Robert W. Needham of the London Free Press, dealing with restraints in the budget. He says:

> On the demerit side, it can be argued with validity that it dulls individual incentive and hence could lead to a reduction in productivity—a prime necessity in conquering inflation. It can be contended as well that the taxes of themselves can be inflationary, in this instance by inspiring demands across the board for wage increases.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. Sharp further might be accused of a psychological and political blunder in his tax treatment of individuals as opposed to corporations: the specific charge, discrimination.

The article goes on to say:

> This special levy on corporate earnings will be payable for 18 months and then will be handed back, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent, during the succeeding 18 to 36 months depending upon the state of the economy.
>
> This device is intended to "freeze" a modest portion of business cash profits that otherwise would flow into capital expenditures.
>
> In effect it is a compulsory savings scheme that will result in amassing a fund of $250 million. This will be freed and utilized to stimulate future economic growth.
>
> However, the political if not the economic weakness of these two aspects of Mr. Sharp's program should be apparent. It might be summarized in the question: why tax increases for individuals, but compulsory savings for corporations?...
>
> Mr. Sharp has promised to stand in the wings ready with a "baby budget" of readjustment should the need arise.
>
> It's to be hoped that this will be unnecessary for what it would mean in terms, not of expansion, but of recession.

I should now like to mention one other thing upon which I have received many representations, as also has the minister. I myself have made representations to him. It is with respect to the tax on jewellery. I have here a letter from the large jewellery firm of John A. Nash and Son, London, Ontario, which states:

> The war has been over for 20 years. At that time a special excise tax was put on so-called luxury items. It has since been removed from cars, refrigerators and almost everything but on retail jewellery items.
>
> We all feel—the retail jewellers—that this is a discriminating tax and should be removed.

I would respectfully ask the minister that he give this serious consideration.

I should now like to speak about N.H.A. loans but I will not expand on the subject because several hon. members have already spoken about the difficulty. But I must make strong representations because the difficulty is country-wide. It affects every community, including the riding I have the pleasure of representing. I have here an article from the London Free Press of April 15 which reads as follows:

> Finance Minister Mitchell Sharp's crystal ball appears to have been accurate. His brakes on the construction industry arrive at a time when it was reaching high gear, exceeding the record 1965 level by over 12 per cent, and when building trade labour was extended to meet the demand.
>
> Home and apartment builders say that the cost of homes and apartments with sales tax and high priced mortgage money is making housebuilding too costly. Sharp's directives may spread sparse construction workers over the extensive contracts for industrial and institutional structures which are running far ahead of past years.

Home builders are complaining—and possibly rightly—that residential construction is being used unfairly by governments as means of controlling the economy. It is a field that is most readily reached and doesn't materially affect national productivity like controls on industrial building would, as Mr. Sharp well knows.

In spite of the housing contractors' complaint the forecast for general construction is that the second quarter of 1966 may equal the first quarter. There is some concern that the taxing measures may cut off some of the advance by the third quarter.

I contend that these are discriminatory things. I know the minister does not introduce them with that thought in mind, but I take this opportunity to advance my argument.

Lately we have heard a lot about the high cost of living and I am wondering what is going on in this direction. Why did the minister not see fit to take some action to halt the rapidly spiralling cost of living? During the world war II we had an institution known as the wartime prices and trade board. Perhaps we need a peacetime prices and trade board because somehow we must protect our position as a trading nation. We do not have to read the consumer price index to realize that goods are costing more. Anyone can go to a grocery store and there find that in the last six months such staples as bread, milk and canned goods have gone up 10 per cent in price.

• (1:10 p.m.)

If you go to buy a suit of clothes today, the price has advanced at least 10 per cent compared with what you would have paid for it one year ago. About this time of the day many of us find that we would like to go for our lunch, and within the last month in our own dining room the prices have advanced 20 per cent. The evidence is everywhere. How far can you go without some control? Personally, I would like to make it clear that under normal circumstances I do not favour controls, but for a short time it might be a wise thing. In this way perhaps we could do something about protecting the older people and also maintaining our foreign markets.

These are some of the things which I think must be said today. I am going to close with an item from the Tillsonburg News of April 1, 1966. I thought this was a very pointed statement, and I do not say it is pointed because it has to do with a man by the name of Sharp. It says:

Mr. Sharp talks of others curbing their spending but still plans to spend $743 million more than last year, which amounts to $150 million more than he plans to take in, even after increasing taxes and slowing down capital construction projects. One might have expected a little bit more in the way of governmental good example when it comes to belt tightening.

I would close, Mr. Speaker, by saying as I did at the opening of my remarks that it is my impression this Budget was conceived in desperation, born in doubt and is fraught with the prospect of giving birth at any time to a baby Budget. I hope the minister, when he finds that the time has come, will not hesitate to do so. After all, we have to do certain things. One is to check inflation and the second, among many others, is to correct the inequities in the Budget.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I shall take a few minutes, during this Budget debate, to draw the minister's attention to the manner in which some funds are spent in the face of the war on poverty.

I shall not take time to repeat all the fully justified criticisms made by the hon. members who spoke before me. This Budget, as seen by a small businessman, is the funniest and most ridiculous ever produced by financiers. The first paragraph of the official communiqué, for instance, can be brought down to this: We are a highly productive country; the demand is too strong; let us stop producing.

Do you not feel that this is strangely similar to what Mackenzie King used to say: There are too many products; let us throw them into sea or burn them, so that starving children cannot have them.

It is always the great principle of high finance. Destroy the goods to impoverish, burn the food to starve the people, and starve the people to better enslave them.

Yes, Canada has to meet a great challenge, that of a strong demand, with unlimited production capacity. But is too cowardly to meet this challenge, and instead of rolling up its sleeves and getting down to serious business, it would rather sit idly and hold back, like the soldier on the front who, in the face of the oncoming enemy, would rather turn about and run. That is the emblem of the courage shown by the present government.

This shows, once again, how this government sneers at the people, dismissing all its nice promises made during the election of November 8, 1965.

Nothing for old age pensions which he had promised to raise to $100 a month, even $125, according to some Liberal candidates; nothing for family allowances which should be $25 a month at least; nothing to remove the discriminatory 11 per cent sales tax on building material; nothing for joint programs which the Prime Minister had promised to discontinue, but instead new ones have been established; nothing to solve the thorny question of receipts for charitable donations, except that in the future each presbytery will have to tack up its federal licence above its front door, just like a car owner has to display his licence plates; nothing to raise income tax exemptions to $2,500 for single persons and $5,000 for married couples.

An income tax reduction has been announced for taxpayers with an average or below average income. According to the old Age Security Act, an average income, in the opinion of the government, is $2,200 a year for a married couple; in other words, income tax is reduced in the case of persons not earning enough. How ridiculous can you get? After these so-called reductions, the minister candidly announced that he will get from the average workers a surplus of about $120 million a year. Is that enough for you, the small fellows? But do not touch the big fellows. For example, the tax on heavy production machinery and equipment will be reduced to 10 per cent. This is much more urgent than reducing the tax on building materials, because it directly affects the large companies which are so helpful at election time.

And most amazing of all, the minister announces that, probably to reduce unemployment and encourage labour—this must delight the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand)—he will reduce his 1966-67 construction program by 10 per cent. In addition, he promises not to launch any other program.

No wonder the future minister of manpower is thinking of bringing Jamaicans to allow our unemployed to stick to their trade for ever.

• (1:20 p.m.)

Again this morning I read about another decision taken by the government. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) was announcing that the $500 premium granted toward the building of family housing during the winter would be abolished shortly.

It means that the new policy of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is to deprive those who do not have enough to live. That is the logic of the present government. Besides, it is an economic logic which goes extraordinarily well with its monetary system based on indebtedness.

I read on page 6 of the official press release that 19 per cent of the whole budget will go for National Defence in order to pay soldiers to travel to various foreign countries, when we do not even have the competent people we need to protect us against criminals, fraudulent bankruptcies and narcotics. It will cost the Canadian citizens 14 per cent only to pay the interest on our national debt, that is on the credit which the Bank of Canada should have issued and which we had to borrow so as to steal more from the people. We will pay 11 per cent for transportation and communications, whereas the Canadian Pacific will make a net profit of $67 million at the expense of our crown corporation. Then, I wonder when such extravagance will stop and how much longer it will take the people to wake up?

And who pays for all those mistakes? For all those schemes? For so much incompetence? The Canadian people.

Are you sceptical? Read page 5 of the same press release.

What is done in the field of personal income tax, that is all the workers whose permission is no longer asked but from whom the state collects the tax directly on their gross salary, as soon as they start to work, and even before they have had time to put bread on the table at home? How do you call that if not a state dictatorship? The state first, and let the people die. We have gone that far; 28.5 per cent of the whole budget is thus taken from the small wage earners.

And what about the sales tax which again affects the majority of the working people and which makes up 18 per cent of the budget.

That means, therefore, that the small wage earner pays over 50 per cent of that astronomical and wasteful budget, with regard to the population of the country.

Add to that the tax of 21 per cent on the income of corporations or small businesses, customs duty, etc.

We are forever trying to find new taxation fields but nothing at all is done to recover our country's wealth and use it to promote the welfare of our people.

There does not seem to be any question asked as to whether the country could derive more benefit from its sovereignty rights. What is more, the mere thought of it seems to be cast aside, either not to disturb the foreign trusts which literally plunder our country or not to dry up a source which might enable old-line parties to remain in power for a few years to come.

At the risk of allowing the worst revolution to break out when the people will be fed up, further encouragement is being given to the reign of the most stupid financial dictatorship only to be found in a country as rich as Canada.

Our governments are merely vile braggarts inviting loan shark outfits and foreign companies to come and grab the tremendous Canadian wealth.

The only thing our statesmen have learned about administration is how to levy taxes, whereas the levying of taxes is precisely a clear indication of maladministration.

To my regret, I have to end my remarks that most people know to be true, without being honest enough to accept the necessary changes.

I could deal with economic matters for hours, but I shall keep my remarks for a much more receptive audience than the members of this house who seem impervious to common sense. As a matter of fact, the farmers and workers of my riding, the unemployed and the destitute are much more capable of understanding me.

I said at the outset that there was a very specific point I wished to call to the minister's attention, that is, the funds appropriated for the Pointe-Bleue reserve.

Again this year, a sum of money will be earmarked for the community service section of the Indian Affairs Branch.

I must also congratulate the government for having appointed to the Pointe-Bleue reservation an officer who is working in cooperation with the Indians to develop the community.

This delegate acts as liaison officer, giving the Indians their first opportunity to express their opinions on the administration and reorganization of the reservation.

This officer, appointed and paid by Ottawa, reports on his operations to the Department. Has his report been considered at its full value? This is the question to which I should like to call the attention of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) and the deputy minister and his staff.

At present, some consideration is being given to eliminating Mr. Boissonneault, but this would be a major error.

Mr. Speaker, my words may harm some and possibly make a few little Caesars squirm in their seats, but I must inform them that I have never retreated from the truth and that I am a fervent defender of democracy, particularly when the poor, the have-nots and the oppressed are involved.

I have already mentioned in the house that there is a little dictatorship installed at Pointe-Bleue, where the big chief is a white man, and to support this, I received yesterday a letter signed by Chief Harry Kurtness of Pointe-Bleue but not written by him —however, I think I recognize the handwriting—in which I am bitterly blamed for having attacked the administration at Pointe Bleue.

The letter, Mr. Speaker, reads as follows:

I believe there are improvements—

I said so at the time.

—I believe there are improvements to be made in this direction.

I shall come back to this during the estimates of the department, because we have much to ask for the Pointe-Bleue reserve, particularly as concerns the administration.

• (1:30 p.m.)

The author of the letter, and I have a pretty good idea who he is, said:

You seem to go by the reports of one of your last election campaign organizer, Mr. Herbert Connolly.

We wish to inform you that no other person, association or organizer but the Band Council is responsible for the administration of the Pointe-Bleue Indian reserve.

If you have any criticism to make, we shall be glad to hear you at a meeting of our Band Council where any misunderstanding can be cleared up.

I answered the letter simply by saying to Mr. Kurtness—he is not the one who wrote the letter:

In reply to your letter, I wish to say that I will be glad to air my views before the whole Council.

You seem quite satisfied with what the government has done for your reserve up to now and I would like to hear you say so publicly.

If, in your opinion, your reserve does not need new paving, sidewalks and sewers, I want to hear you say so in public.

But have you not made it quite clear to me that you wanted to run your own business once and for all, without being told what to do by a guy like Bourassa who, by the way, will not be the little Pointe-Bleue dictator very long.

Indians are just as smart as anybody else and the time has come for them to run their own affairs.

Therefore, I suggest a meeting in the college hall if necessary, in order to spell out the facts and correct the situation.

I am waiting, Mr. Speaker, for an answer to my letter, in order to throw a little light on this case.

This great white chief indeed seems to support the bigwigs in Quebec and some of their cronies in Ottawa.

This will tell you beforehand that all the efforts made by this government to give back to the Indians the administration of their own business will be unsuccessful, in this dictatorship and its tentacles do not disappear first.

The reason why I speak today on this urgent matter is that I have just received a letter from the president of the Independent Community Association of Pointe-Bleue which is supported by more than 195 residents. Since I have but five days to plead this case, I must inform parliament about certain facts which occur at Pointe-Bleue before things get worse.

In fact, the minister knows that there is an association at Pointe-Bleue. Through that association, which forms part of the federal plan, the Indian people want to administer the amounts of money the Minister of Finance makes available to them. And, to support my argument, here is what was said at a meeting of that association.

> This is the first official publication on the activities of your community association.
>
> Since its foundation, the active members have worked hard to insure the speedy progress of the organization.
>
> As you have read in the newspapers, and heard on the radio, some measures have already been taken through the welfare committee to ensure a better performance in this field.
>
> Recently, the industrial committee also made some representations, while studying job opportunities, and more specifically to date, in field of forest concessions.
>
> Through the efforts of several meetings, the active members finally succeeded in bringing about a first official meeting with the introduction of legislation and regulations, as well as setting up new committees and enrolment of new members.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this association should have the right to speak. I am sure that if the government trusts the officer it appointed, it will know the truth. I have here the letter of the president of the association with all the signatures of the active members —a 15-page letter—which states clearly what is happening at Pointe-Bleue.

I think the time has come in 1966 to provide Indian reserves with the necessary means to take their administration into their own hands. I believe that the old agency system is no longer justified on the reserves. Indians became mature enough to manage their own affairs long ago.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

The impression given throughout Canada that Indians are not qualified to administer themselves is out of date, or rather, it is perpetuated by some small dictators or bureaucrats who place their own comfort above the freedom of Indian reserves.

Today, in his budget, the Minister of Finance will therefore have to provide more for the development of Indian affairs. He will particularly have to inquire about how this money is spent, and to correct the present administration, which keeps for itself the major part of the amounts voted.

It will be necessary to pay more attention to the majority voice of the Indians who are still free from fear and from the job offers of the department and to place less confidence in the few white people comfortably established for years and living off Indian poverty.

It will be necessary to hear the real members of the Band Council, not those who are under the agent's trusteeship, and to hear the free associations, all the residents who can still speak without fear of reprisals from the agent's office.

It will be necessary to reconsider the Boissonneault report upon which Mr. Bélanger, of Quebec, "God, the Father", and Mr. Bourassa, of Pointe-Bleue, "God, the Giver", and certain bureaucrats in Ottawa did not look favourably, in connection with their positions.

While the government intensifies its efforts towards truly democratic action, its work is being annihilated by the very people who should support its efforts.

While the government works to give the Indian people administrative independence on their reserves, we note with sadness that they depend more and more on the Hudson Bay Company which has been fleecing them for a hundred years now, while local merchants get nothing but crumbs, because they are politically dependent on this shameless patronage.

Social dependence: most Indians have been put on social welfare and denied the opportunity to develop their own handicraft which would enable them to live according to their aspirations.

And, after all that, we are told right and left that Indians are lazy and incompetent. And to better keep Indians in that condition, as soon as one of them acquires enough culture to lead his group, he is immediately enticed away from the reserve by interesting salaries in the outside world.

These are the bare facts. The government has now been warned: let us see how it will act.

Mr. Speaker, my time has now elapsed but I shall surely bring up the matter again later. However, I felt I had to point out these facts to the minister and the government because, at the present time, the association which includes two thirds of the members of Indian reserves is about to revolt: it has given me five days to settle the matter.

[English]

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): It is encouraging to a new member of this house, Mr. Speaker, to know that the period of time allotted for the debate on the Speech from the Throne or the debate on the Budget provides him with an opportunity to express his views on a wide variety of topics or issues. Personally, I look upon these time allotments as being of crucial importance to parliament if the time is spent in a constructive and purposeful manner. One finds it a very enlightening experience to hear or study the speeches of hon. members from the various regions of Canada.

In this speech I want to discuss the present and future of Canada. But if one is to discuss the future of Canada he must first of all look to the history of this country and other factors that have played a part in merging this country into the nation it is today. If one does not take this approach he is talking about a structure without discussing, first of all, the foundation of that structure.

First, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) upon his very capable Budget presentation. It is certainly no easy task to prepare a Budget that will be readily acceptable to all people and all areas, whether they be geographical areas or economic areas. We have the privilege of living in a country that has an unequalled potential. Canada is 3,000 miles wide, it is larger than the United States, larger than Europe and one-third larger than Australia. The very size of the country can raise varied problems in the development of that country but those need not, by any stretch of the imagination, be insurmountable problems.

Canada has, indeed, been greatly affected by its geography. Professor Careless of the history department of the University of Toronto says:

• (1:40 p.m.)

Geography, of course, does much to influence the history of any nation. But this is particularly true of a land as sprawling and spread out as Canada, composed of a number of different geographic regions, often with natural barriers between them, regions which in Europe might have contained a whole patchwork of separate countries. Thus Canadian history largely records a struggle to build a nation in the face of stern geographic difficulties. That struggle still goes on. The difficulties arise from the very extent and variety of the Canadian landscape; the range on range of far western mountains, the rough tracts of forest and bush, the Arctic and sub-Arctic wastes, and the infertile belt of ancient rock nearly a thousand miles wide, called the Canadian shield, which runs through the very heart of Canada. Barriers such as the mountains and the shield exact a heavy price in scattering the population. They make for sectional divisions and high transportation charges. They weaken national unity and retard national development.

They represent also the immensity of the problems of development that have been and still are slow and expensive of solution. They also represent some of the costs of geography that have been borne by the Canadian people throughout the course of Canadian history. The present Budget, like many other Budgets before it, is one that has been brought forth to meet the exigencies of the time. One has only to make a review of Budgets during the course of Canadian history to realize what a tremendous challenge it must be to a finance minister and to his colleagues to try to solve the major problems of their time and to attempt to give recognition to the many individual problems that are presented to them from time to time. As I have said, the geography of Canada has in itself presented many problems to finance ministers over the years.

Be that as it may, however, we must also be ever mindful that geography has also offered Canada many assets. In eastern Canada the sunken coastline of the continent formed the off-shore fishing banks that attracted many hardy Europeans to that part of the continent in pre-pioneer and colonial days, and which are so important to the economy of that area today. The St. Lawrence River invited people to venture inland and today is Canada's commercial highway. The great plains west of the Great Lakes have become the granary of the world. The Canadian shield was first of all a source of fur and then of timber. Today it is a source of pulpwood, minerals, and water power. The mountain ranges of the west have proven to be another storehouse of mineral riches. On the Pacific coast there are giant stands of timber and more fisheries. In southern Ontario and southern Quebec geography has presented us with an area that has proven to be suitable for mixed farming and rapid industrial growth. In the sub-Arctic area the large mineral resources have only begun to be opened up. Geography may have made development difficult in Canada, but this same Canada has indeed been a rewarding one for those who have met its challenge. These are just some of the geographical factors that have played a part in Canada's growth.

The most important development on which we of today must focus our attention is the series of conferences of the Fathers of Confederation who 100 years ago spent several long and arduous days laying the constitutional framework for a new nation in the best way they knew how. It was their hope and their aim to build a foundation that would successfully support the edifice for years to come. As we look back we must agree that they did their work reasonably well. Many of us may feel that the several constitutional legal decisions handed down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council at Westminster during the last decades of the nineteenth century went a long way toward weakening the work and the good intentions of the Fathers of Confederation. Be that as it may, even with those unforeseen interpretations of certain sections or parts thereof of the B.N.A. Act, in particular sections 91 and 92, the constitution has been able to ride out many internal and political storms in the face of what looked like bleak and dismal horizons.

Two great Canadians stand out as having laid the political basis which made Confederation acceptable and practical to all people of this country during the first half century after the formal adoption of the B.N.A. Act. They are Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Their ability to weld together two political parties that had nation-wide support not only preserved our system of government in Canada, but they were able to unite all the major diverse characteristics of the country whether they were human, geographic or economic in nature.

Sir John A. Macdonald was responsibile for much of the geographical expansion in many areas of this country through such means as transportation, the railway route across Canada being finished in 1885. He had the uncanny ability to bring men together. His national policy protected infant Canadian industry and he also helped to overcome some of the worst qualities of geographic sectionalism in Canada.

[Mr. Hopkins.]

Sir Wilfrid Laurier worked to bring the two major racial groups in this country together. He built another transcontinental railway along with several branch lines. He brought in two more provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta, in 1905. He was a strong believer in Canadian autonomy and sacrificed possible political success in 1917 for the sake of unity in Canada. I personally have an appreciation for the contribution made to social reform by the late J. S. Woodsworth at a time when Canada was in a stage of rapid economic and social change from an agricultural nation to that of a growing industrial power.

My own party is one that has had a tradition of promoting Canadian autonomy, social reform, the unity of Canada and economic growth. The Liberal party has been one of reform and change when change became necessary.

While there have been and are two major racial groups in Canada, we also have across this land people of a host of other racial origins who make up a large percentage of our total population. In my own constituency of Renfrew North there is a very large number of people of German origin whose ancestors came to this country more than 110 years ago. Along with a large number of constituents of French and Anglo-Saxon origin. I also have Polish, Italian and Jewish groups as well as several others. All of these people work together and get along in harmony.

The very basis of success in a multi-racial, multi-sectional country is to understand our fellow man and to appreciate the problems with which he is faced. National problems must be approached in a rational way rather than in an emotional way. In a country such as ours, which is multi-racial, if emotional arguments among racial groups or among the various sections of the country become the means of trying to solve geographic or social problems it would be difficult to reach a successful solution to any problem. Rather, instead of the overcharged emotional approach, rationalized well thought out discussions which alone will pave the way for stability, solidarity and a moderate nationalistic spirit are the only responsible-minded approach that can be taken by the leaders and the people of our country.

During the past decade we have heard and read about problems that would be facing Canada as we near our country's one hundredth birthday. I feel that it is time, as we are almost on the eve of Canada's one hundredth birthday, for all members of all governing bodies at all levels of government and the people of Canada to stop and give the same serious thought today to the future of Canada as was given to the future of Canada by the Fathers of Confederation 100 years ago.

Only we as an aggregate people working together regardless of racial origin or geographical location will ensure the continuation of and the progress toward unity, harmony and nation-building which has been handed down to us by the Fathers of Confederation and succeeding generations. If all of us make a sincere attempt either to continue or develop an understanding of and respect for our fellow man, if there is a spirit of compromise on the part of everyone concerned in any disagreement that may exist and if all of us are willing to approach all problems of the present and future in a constructive and reasonable manner, then we will indeed be able to build a great future for this country and its people. I have faith in the members of this house to work toward these ends and I have faith in the future of Canada as a nation.

We of English Canada have sympathy for the great social and economic changes that are taking place today in the province of Quebec. I want to pay tribute to my French speaking colleagues from the province of Quebec for the many enlightening discussions I have enjoyed with them. I appreciate the fact that many of them are able to stand up in this house and deliver their speeches in either language, and I can say to them that I only wish I had the ability and the confidence to do the same.

Only on the basis of mutual respect and mutual confidence among the members and political parties of this house and, indeed, among all provincial and federal leaders can we meet the social, cultural and sociological problems that face Canada today. The problems that face us today are not isolated by any means in Canadian history. We have had some in the past that were somewhat similar but probably were not as important.

If we do not use the lessons we have learned from some of the stresses and strains that have been placed on Canadian unity in the past in order to solve our problems of the present, then we are giving validity to the saying that "if there is anything that we learn from history it is that we do not learn anything." Let us rise to the challenge that faces this nation and, by exercising mutual respect, confidence, patient dignity and constructive well thought out action, place Canada on the road to harmonious, united and progressive nationhood for another 100 years.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the last remarks made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat with regard to the extent to which we appreciate the contribution made by hon. members from the province of Quebec on all aspects in this chamber. In fact, were it not for the members from the province of Quebec, some from Cape Breton Island and one or two from other places, this would be a dull and lifeless chamber.

I want to make a brief comment about the method in which the Budget debate is initiated and proceeds. I think it leaves a great deal to be desired because all too often a Budget presentation consists of a few islands of statistical information surrounded by large lakes of unreality and deception. When I say "deception" I hasten to inform the parliamentary secretary that I mean it in its political form, its purest form.

I think a minister of finance should be qualified as a dress designer because he has to plan very carefully what he is going to emphasize, how much he is going to show and how much he is going to conceal. Those, I think, are the characteristics of a dress designer.

An hon. Member: The minister has designed a bikini.

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is the designate of government to sort out all the hundreds of suggestions made to him both inside and outside of his department. Those measures he finally incorporates are the fiscal and monetary acts the government wishes to impose in its governing role.

From the time of Jeremy Bentham it has come to us that the role of government should be one which provides the greatest good for the greatest number. A critical contemporary has added a supplement, "and the least evil for the smallest number". This proviso is certainly part of today's concept in a truly democratic system of government.

We in this chamber must look carefully at these Budget proposals. It is not too easy a job. We are not economists, and I often thank God for that. I know that economists are inclined to look down their noses at politicians. But for my part, and here I borrow a phrase, I believe that economics and the national economy are subjects far too important to be left to economists. Perhaps here I owe a word of apology to the Minister of Finance who was himself, I understand, an economist at one time. However, no doubt his presence in the cabinet has caused him to forget what economics he knew.

It is difficult for us to cover the whole waterfront. I think there is a way in which we in this chamber can come to a better understanding of these problems so that when the time comes to debate them we shall be better equipped to do so. I shall propose a suggestion along these lines before I sit down. With this in mind I intend to raise a few points with regard to the Budget. I do not offer them as being ideas with which I am irrevocably seized or as being essential for the good of the country. They are ideas in which I believe, and they could be the subject of discussion. In addition, they might have some effect in enabling us to arrive at a more logical conclusion with respect to the fiscal and financial policies of the government. I believe the public would like us to concentrate a little more on these economic issues which so closely affect them and less on some of the other things which have afforded a measure of light entertainment and heavy drama in the the past.

For example, I have an idea that people would like us seriously to consider the problems presented by inflation. That word, of course, is a bland euphemism used by those in authority to express the fact that the prices of meat, milk, bread, shoes, taxes, rent and so on are all going up and up, so much so that there is reason to believe that one of the unidentified flying objects about which we have heard so much has been identified as the cost of living index.

Certainly it is a matter of great concern, particularly to all those people who occupy the lowest part of the economic totem pole, the people living on fixed incomes or those whose incomes are largely determined by conditions external to this country. These are people whose incomes usually follow rather than precede the upward climb of prices, people who never have enough to permit them to pay more and more in order to buy less and less.

What remedies, if any, exist? I know the minister is fulfilling the orthodox economic advice given to him by his orthodox advisers. To this extent he has probably done the best he could. I realize this is very faint praise but it is as far as I am able to go.

From my own state of blissful ignorance of orthodox economics I suggest that to raise taxes and syphon off purchasing power is simply not providing the greatest good for the greatest number within the meaning of the definition with which I began. I say this certainly will result in more evil for a larger number of people. It is like the carrot and the stick, only there is a new twist to it. The minister has presented the carrot to the people, but while the donkey is eating the carrot the minister at the same time is beating it with a stick, and I do not think this is very fair treatment. Someone else has suggested it is like giving a dose of castor oil in the morning and paregoric in the evening.

• (2:00 p.m.)

The minister has prescribed two companion steps, a system of forced savings which will syphon off money from direct investment and then an abandonment of the incentives which heretofore existed to promote development in industry. In that regard I would like to refer to what is contained in the second report of the Economic Council of Canada on this very issue of the necessity of providing incentives so that automation, diversification and more efficiency will result in our industrial activities.

Dr. Deutsch of the Economic Council has been concerned about this particular issue and, as a matter of fact, has suggested that we continue to maintain these same incentives. At page 174 of the report we find the following:

> The experience gained—

The report is dealing with the experience gained with the incentives which we did have and which are being removed by the budget.

> —should make it possible to develop a better and more effective scheme. An improved tax incentive program should be broad and widely available to small and large companies alike. It should encourage the taking of risks in the exploitation of new ideas and methods on the basis of widespread initiatives.

It is absolutely essential, in a country like ours with a small population, to provide our industrialists with the strongest possible incentives in the form of research and development. To help increase their efficiency is essential. Any attempt to water this down or get rid of it is, in my humble opinion, completely wrong and erroneous.

As a result of these proposals what could happen here is that for a very short term there might be a decrease in prices, although I have my doubts. But if the government and the minister genuinely believe that only through measures of this kind is to be found relief from inflation, why do they not plunge in and take the complete measures which are suggested by these proposals? I would not support that. I do not support these proposals. I think it would be unsatisfactory because the people who would suffer from it are the people who can least afford it. I do not think it is right, but if the government believes so, why does it not go the whole distance with it?

What will happen now is that the modestly well to do and the wealthy will continue to buy on an individual basis the things they think they need to make life comfortable, and if prices are in fact reduced by a lag in demand it will be on the part of the lower income brackets who will be compelled to limit their purchases because of lack of purchasing power. I am sceptical in any event.

What about the United States which is a potential powder keg of built-in inflationary dangers by reason of the Vietnamese war? Up until recently the President of the United States indicated that he was not going to raise taxes. I may have to take these words back in a week or two because he has not yet sent a message to Congress, but surely if there is any country suitable for the program devised by the Minister of Finance it is the United States where there is the grave danger of inflation.

Mr. Chrétien: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Certainly.

Mr. Chrétien: Is the hon. member aware that in the United States a married taxpayer with no dependants, with a gross income of $4,000 a year, pays $207 more in income tax?

Mr. Baldwin: It may well be so and if the parliamentary secretary quotes these figures to me I am quite prepared to accept his statement to that effect, but this is not the point. We are now at a certain plane where taxes have been fixed and provide a certain amount both here and in the United States, and the minister is suggesting that in order to contain inflation he must raise taxes. I do not accept that as being a proper program, and with the greater danger that exists in the United States I say that if the United States authorities felt the same way about it the President and the government of the United States would also have raised taxes. It is a matter of relativity rather than comparison, Mr. Speaker.

This whole business reminds me a lot of a device which was in existence in the early days in the United Kingdom. The Prince of Wales had a boy called a whipping boy and when the prince did something wrong the whipping boy was upended and received punishment. This is exactly what is happening here. Because of the errors made by the government and certain people in industry and finance, a large minority of people in the lower income brackets are the ones who are being punished, and that is not the kind of answer which is good enough for this house.

There are other issues which ought to be raised and made the subject of discussion in any proper Budget debate. To a very large extent prices are made up by cost generated by the imposition of taxes. Certainly the values of capital and labour which go into the price of a commodity or a service are in considerable measure fixed by taxation and, especially in modern days, the pyramiding effect of taxation. Taxation in turn is fixed by the cost of government and I suggest it is hypocrisy for the government to tell labour and industry to follow guide lines until it itself submits to self-discipline and puts its own house in order.

There is the mounting tide of government employees. There is the rejection and refusal to follow all but a fraction of the Glassco commission recommendations. There is the incidence of error, of waste, of extravagance and non-productive payments which are contained in the Auditor General's report, and the government has also failed to follow 80 per cent of the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee.

It is no wonder that industry and labour reply "so what" to the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) when they very timidly suggest that they should limit their price increases and wage demands. I think they are perfectly entitled to say, "You start and we will follow." I think this is absolutely essential.

I should like to talk more about taxation but the time allowed is against me. However, there will be ample opportunity when the Carter royal commission report is brought in. But it is my submission that the present taxation system, like a crazy quilt, has been built up without rhyme or reason, without regard to the cardinal principle of an equitable tax system, namely, one which permits people to have the fullest access to the resources of a country unimpaired by incentive destroying levies. I think the first essential is not an increase in taxation but a reduction, a reduction which follows a decrease in the cost of government, in the controllable cost of government expenditures with which this government has not shown the slightest intention of dealing.

On the other branch of fiscal policy, the tariff, there is the question if a policy of freer trade would not bring more goods at cheaper prices within the reach of the Canadian consumer. In this regard we must not lose sight of the psychological aspect of purchasing at the present time. One cannot call it hoarding, but there is no doubt that with the continuous talk of inflation and the learned dissertations of people about the overheating of the economy, and the grave and serious mien adopted by government people, financial editors and others, there has occurred a built-in psychotic feeling, the desire to buy something now even though one does not need it because it might not be available later or will only be available later at an increased price. I suggest that a large amount of the purchasing taking place at the present time is because of this psychological factor.

If it were made aware to people that tariff barriers would be reduced to a limit that would permit a greater flow of goods coming into the country, a lot of this fear would be lost. I am not too concerned about labour and industry, in the sense that they are organized. My concern is with the consumer and I suggest, despite all opinions to the contrary, it is more than time that the industries which have become fat and lazy behind protection should be exposed to the cool fresh wind of competition and get out on their own.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Certainly this should be done on a staggered and progressive basis. There should be tax incentives for research development, improving techniques, and an orderly transition to the type of industrial activity where, with increasing productivity, markets can always be found at home and abroad in the face of any competition. Canadian industries with access to great and varied types of natural resources and with know-how and competence should be able to compete anywhere including their own country without the help of tariffs as they now exist. In the modern industrial age the benefits which have accrued through economy of scale now can be matched and even surpassed by the economy of diversification and automation. This is where our destiny lies.

In this regard I should like to put before the house the bare outlines of some arguments made by others which bolster my own view. In the Toronto Telegram of April 19 I find that Mr. Douglas, the president of Douglas Aircraft Company, came to Canada and the following item appeared:

> Lack of interest in subcontracting by Canadians startles Douglas chief. Canadian manufacturers have displayed a lack of interest in obtaining subcontracts from the Douglas Aircraft Company...
>
> "Your government came down and leaned on us pretty heavily and said let's see some work in Canada"...
>
> "But when we sent some teams up to Canada three or four years ago, people said we don't want your business."

Then, Mr. Speaker, again with reference to the Economic Council of Canada, at page 172 there is a very strong opinion to the effect that the role of Canada should be one which recognizes the growing degree of international economic interdependence. More specifically, an active and meaningful role by Canada in negotiations to broaden and deepen non-discriminatory multilateral trade coincides with our long term interests and position as a major world trader. Putting it very shortly I suggest that freer trade, the opening up of our markets, and more and more goods and services coming in here would result in Canadian industry being compelled to become effective, efficient and demonstrate its ability to produce at lower costs. This would immediately make available not only more commodities to Canada at a cheaper price but would put us in a better competitive position with relation to the rest of the world.

I do not think it is good enough to say that because the tariffs have existed and because the Kennedy round of tariff negotiations is not proceeding as fast as it should we are not free to take action on our own. I think we are, and I would like to see this matter discussed. There are other considerations such as the question of United States capital coming into this country. There has been much opinion stated on that. I should like to refer hon. members to a book called "The Prospect of Change and Proposals for Canada's Future". This contains a number of essays by various people, some of whom are professors and even economists. One of them at page 245 is considering the effect of foreign ownership and control of Canadian industry. There a question is raised in respect of whether there is a danger in reasonable and moderate use of foreign capital in Canada. I am not here taking sides one way or the other but I do suggest this is not a one-sided proposition and is one which should be considered. There are other considerations.

Mr. Harry Johnston, a well known Canadian economist, suggests that in his view there would be absolutely no advantage in the change suggested by the last minister of finance, that all it would do would be to pass control to James Street and Bay Street rather than Wall Street. I say that this is the sort of thing we should be discussing. There is the question of designated areas and the northern part of Canada having a tremendous potential for industrial development. This is progressing slowly because it takes risk capital. Every time I see under the designated area program the designation of certain areas to permit the continuation of an uneconomic industry, which is bound to be only for a comparatively short period of time, I think there is something wrong. I think it would be far more effective to go into an area like the north where the resources lie. If there is going to be a program of these incentives, surely it is better to go into these areas where we have the opportunity, the program and the resources. We did this in respect of the Pine Point railway. This was a partnership arrangement between the government, the railways and industry and it has been tremendously successful.

This is the sort of thing the government should be doing in the north. I think the time is very late when this should be done. I am sorry I have exceeded the time I had intended to take. My proposal is that when the Minister of Finance has brought down his Budget the debate well might be postponed to permit the subject matter of the Budget presentations, the fiscal and monetary policies which the government feels are necessary and adequate for the country for the next year, to be submitted to a committee before which would appear the advisors of the minister who have advocated these policies and before which also would appear others who do not agree with those policies. I think this would initiate in the country a real debate on and give us an opportunity to come to grips with the economic problems. This is something which is so essential and necessary.

I have sat through eight or nine Budget debates. This debate has been a good debate. However, this is the sort of thing we need rather than a debate in a vacuum, in a place where there is no conflict of ideas and no joinder of issue on the questions, the question of United States capital coming in here and the question of free trade. These are problems in which the people of this country are vitally interested. I think these things need to be brought out into the open, examined critically and considered thoroughly before the debate continues.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the course of the last election campaign I took the position that one of the greatest needs at the present time is responsibility in government. Because of the constant political campaigning which had characterized our parliaments and the ever present possibility of another election, I made the suggestion that it might be desirable to have a set term for parliament, such as four years, during which the only permissible occasion for an election would be on the defeat of the government on a straight want of confidence motion, the number of which would be strictly limited. I suggested that one such occasion would be the Budget debate, because we know the Budget is the main indicator of the monetary and fiscal policies of the government.

Personally I have refrained from supporting non-confidence motions based on specific issues, but because I was opposed to the position taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) with reference to general monetary and financial policy I found myself last evening in the position of being compelled to register my protest by voting non-confidence in the present government. I did so because I believe the general trend of the Budget speech and the policies enunciated by the minister is not in the best interest of this nation. I should like to read the first point mentioned in the press release from the office of the Minister of Finance outlining the highlights of the Budget.

• (2:20 p.m.)

The current economic boom, with rising demands pressing against available production capacity, presents a great challenge to Canada to manage our present prosperity and maintain a steady and sustainable rate of growth.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that contributions during the course of this debate have raised a serious question as to the extent and magnitude of the suggested boom. It is true that many parts of the country and no doubt many citizens of the country are enjoying a very adequate share of the prosperity that is spoken of, but we dare not close our eyes to the fact that all is not as bright as the minister suggests.

For instance, I listened with a great deal of interest to the contribution to this debate of the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid). In the course of his presentation he gave a very dark and gloomy picture of the existing economic situation in his home province of Prince Edward Island. I am not saying that was overdrawn; I am not saying that conditions are not as dark as he suggested. I am just pointing out the fact that here was an hon. member who in presenting the conditions of his own province did not take the position that all was well and everything was bright and rosy. However, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that perhaps in some instances such conditions are not altogether caused by a lack of recognition on the part of the rest of Canada of these particular situations. I am not going to say they exist because the policies enunciated by the federal administration are not adequate to meet the needs, but I would suggest there may be a possibility that provincial policies are not adequate to meet the demands at the provincial level.

Therefore I would suggest that in some of these areas people might give consideration to electing a Social Credit government which might be able to present a picture that is a little brighter, because where Social Credit has formed the administration conditions are very bright and encouraging and those areas are developing better and faster than any other part of our great nation. I throw that out, Mr. Speaker, as a suggestion. Perhaps if conditions are not right and things are not going well, if the economic situation is dark, these people had better look around for some other type of administration which can bring a degree of prosperity and assistance to areas in difficult straits.

I should like to re-emphasize the fact that provincial administrations do have a great deal to do with national progress and development because if policies are not adequate and effective in the various provinces then, of course, the revenue accruing to the federal administration with which to fulfil its responsibilities is also lacking. Therefore I would again point to my own province of British Columbia and the neighbouring province of Alberta and bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the economic and financial policies that are being applied there. I say they are resulting in a measure of development and progress that is unequalled in any other part of this great country of Canada.

I have mentioned that there are areas of this country which are not enjoying the boom to which the minister has alluded. There are also various classes of our citizens who are not enjoying the affluence of which we speak. There has been considerable discussion this session of the plight of old age pensioners. Suggestions have been made, amendments have been proposed and speeches have urged the implementation of further assistance to our senior citizens to bring their income up to a level at which they can live with a measure of dignity and decency. But the attitude of the government has been that it is not in an economic or financial position to provide this assistance.

I suggest that if our economic and financial situation is not adequate to meet the needs of our senior citizens and others at that particular income level, there is something wrong with the administration of our national affairs if we are enjoying such a boom that we have to put on the brakes. I have spoken of the old age pensioner. I could refer to federal superannuates, I could speak of our veterans, I could call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, all those living on fixed or low incomes. I suggest that these people are not enjoying that standard of living commensurate with an affluent society, one in which the government feels it essential to brake and slow down our development. Therefore I suggest that not all areas or citizens of this country would support the claim that Canada is enjoying an unprecedented boom.

I should like to have referred to a number of specific matters in detail but because there has been agreement to limit our contributions in order that as many members as possible may take part in the debate this afternoon I shall refer to them only briefly. Some of the documents to which I intended to refer will be set aside and I shall refer only to some specific situations. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the tight money policy being implemented by the federal government at this time. I do not know whether they would call it a tight money policy; they refer to it as slowing up a little, taking your foot off the gas to spread the boom out a little so it will last longer. But I would suggest that in the final analysis it is a tight money policy which will have very serious effects upon the development of this nation.

It has been brought to our attention that there is a severe shortage of money for construction purposes. I have a telegram at hand from the Ontario Council of the National House Builders Association referring to the desperate situation created by the complete lack of N.H.A. mortgage funds, which is critical to the housebuilding industry. The members of this association strongly urge immediate government action to re-establish the program of direct N.H.A. mortgage loans in all areas. I have received other communications from builders' associations and those engaged in the construction industry pointing out the fact that this policy will have a very serious effect upon the whole construction industry and will also spread into a great many related and allied trades.

The suggestion is that there is a shortage of skilled labour. I should like to call attention to the April issue of the "Canadian Builder". After referring to the effect taxation is having on the industry, this publication refers to the alleged shortage of manpower and states at page 34:

> The fact is that the short-sightedness of the immigration policies of various governments in this country has created this situation.

I would suggest that rather than slowing up construction and our economy because there may be a shortage of labour, we should see to it that sufficient labour is brought in to augment our labour force in order to carry through the tremendous program of development and progress that is possible in Canada at the present time.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Continuing along this line, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the fact that we in the Social Credit party have advocated for a number of years that the Bank of Canada provide facilities and capital to assist our municipalities in their programs for the provision of services to their people. I should like to re-emphasize this this afternoon because I believe it is important and pressing. I suggest that without something like this our municipalities are not going to be able to carry forward their programs and meet the challenge of their growing communities. We have suggested that a municipal development bank be established as a branch of the Bank of Canada. Money would be provided at a very low rate of interest, perhaps covering the cost of administration or at least a very low rate of interest, in order that municipalities might provide the facilities that are required in their communities.

I thought for a while that the government was moving in the right direction by establishing the municipal development assistance fund or loan fund. They saw fit, however, to cut it back just when it was getting nicely into operation. I say that the municipal authorities are very unhappy about the decision of the government in this respect.

We think, Mr. Speaker, of the entire debt structure of Canada. Reference has been made to this by other speakers. At the moment the service charges on our national debt require $1,100 million annually. I suggest this is something that ought to cause great concern. I was interested, however, to note that the government is moving in a direction we Social Crediters have advocated for a number of years, namely, that the Bank of Canada take over the national debt, assume responsibility for it and work toward its liquidation. The Bank of Canada has purchased some bonds in the past.

I cut out of the Ottawa Citizen for April 18, 1966, an advertisement with reference to an issue of $325 million non-callable government of Canada bonds. The advertisement states that the Bank of Canada has already agreed to acquire a minimum of $50 million of the new bonds, open as to maturity. I suggest that this is a move in the right direction. There ought to be more of it because it is much better to pay the interest back to the Consolidated Revenue Fund since that means in effect that we are getting our money at practically no interest. I therefore commend the minister and the Bank of Canada for this action. We would only urge that it be extended still farther.

I believe it was the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) who, speaking last night, asked this question: If the government cannot balance the budget in boom times, when can it be done? I believe this is a question of which the Minister of Finance should take cognizance and provide an answer. If we cannot meet our obligations now, if we have to continue borrowing and building up the national debt, further increasing the debt charges at this time when the minister says we are in such a boom we have to slow up, then when in the name of common sense are we going to be able to get to the place where we can balance our budget and operate this country on a business basis?

I should like to refer, Mr. Speaker, to the cost of living index. It has been pointed out that the cost of living is constantly increasing. The Ottawa Journal for April 7 contained an article with this headline, "In The Last Six Months, Food Prices Up 6 Per Cent." We are told we have not reached the peak yet, that we can expect a continuing rise in the cost of living and in the prices of our products. I believe that this is one of the most distressing factors in our whole economy today.

I have received letters, as I am sure many members have, from old age pensioners who have gone into supermarkets, compared prices and found that the little bit of money they try to stretch to provide even the basic necessities of life is not sufficient to purchase enough for them to get by.

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member permit a question? Why did the hon. member vote against our amendment when we proposed to increase the old age pension to $100?

Mr. Patterson: This is a complete misrepresentation of the facts, Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen know it. They did not propose that in the amendment. They criticized and hammered the government for not doing it but they know as well as I do that to support that motion would not have brought the old age pensioners one nickel. Some of these politicians, Mr. Speaker, go up and down the country completely misrepresenting the facts, when they know they are not saying the right thing. I tell you, people are beginning to catch on.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They certainly are.

Mr. Patterson: They are getting fed up with these political footballs.

Mr. Ricard: You can say that again.

Mr. Patterson: I was talking about our senior citizens and veterans. They are the ones who are hurt most by the constantly increasing cost of living. You will have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that last night, because the government did not provide for certain things, including an increase in old age pensions, we voted against the government. Where were the Tories then?

Mr. Ricard: Here.

Mr. Patterson: Check the record and see how many were absent. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition is not able to control his group any longer and the result is that they are absent.

[Mr. Patterson.]

I am simply pointing out that the cost of living is constantly increasing and the ones who are getting hurt most are the ones who can bear it least. No attempt was made in this Budget to provide any of the assistance required. We talk about savings and investment. I am sorry that I am going on because I intended to be very brief but these interjections are interesting and provide some opportunity for a little digression.

However, in so far as savings and investment are concerned, I have an article here which I am not going to read. It is from the Ottawa Citizen for April 1, 1966. The heading is "Report Shows Canadians Can't Afford To Invest." The article goes on to say that Babson's estimates that a household with earnings of $7,000 a year after taxes spends 91 per cent on living expenses, leaving 9 per cent for accumulation. Of course, if you reduce that to the bracket in which many of our Canadian citizens live there is no money left for investment. In fact, the people cannot tighten their belts any more because they are so tight now the people would not get by if they tightened them any more.

• (2:40 p.m.)

I refer now to the income tax. The report which appeared in the newspapers following the introduction of the Budget stated that six out of ten would pay more taxes. Everybody knows that we have a social responsiblity in Canada to assist those who are unable to assist themselves. We have an obligation imposed by our need to have the government do for us collectively what we cannot do for ourselves individually. There is a limit financially, Mr. Speaker. You can kill the goose that lays the golden egg. I believe that is what is going to happen if the government maintains its trend of increasing taxes, overburdening the Canadian people and overburdening the taxpayers.

I have in my hand a letter from a young man who expresses deepest bitterness because the government is dictating to him how he is going to spend his money, implying that he has not enough brains to know how to spend it himself. I quote one brief paragraph:

> Forgive me if I got carried away but I feel so strongly about this and other things that I am going to have to live with for many, many years. It seems that my future is being carefully plotted out for me while all that I can do is write letters and pray that I will still be able to have a choice of where I will work and what I will do as time progresses. Sometimes I feel as if I want to break out and scream as I watch my decisions made for me by a government that believes that I haven't got enough brains to take care of myself.

I believe that brings out the picture very clearly. It shows that some people think that the government says to people: You have not got enough sense to know how to spend your own money; we are going to look after it for you. Therefore the whole structure that is being erected is a denial of the rights of the individual to look after himself and to live his life as he wants to live it.

With regard to taxation policy the minister hides behind the fact that the Carter Commission has not made its report. I think the government is hiding behind that report. There is no reason why it could not proceed to bring about relief to the Canadian people. Instead, it hides behind this report, making excuses. We hope that the commission will report quickly.

In view of the agreed limitation of debate and the courtesy extended by the house, I am going to conclude my remarks at this time. I do, however, register my strong exception to the policies followed by the government in dealing with some of our national problems and I object to the lack of any policy with respect to other issues of concern to the Canadian people.

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker of this house. Everyone to whom I have spoken about you has praised your ability to handle difficult situations quickly, fairly and in an orderly manner.

I should like to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for presenting to this house a wise budget which fits the needs of the hour. The task of the government is to sustain the longest economic expansion in Canadian history and therefore we must have some restraint in our expansion to safeguard the continued growth of our economy. Time Magazine says:

> This inflation-dampening budget earned a round of editorial and business approval.

I have checked the reaction of many of my constituents to this budget. One farmer said, "It did not hurt us, but Joe Greene sure saved our hide". A businessman said that he thought it was a budget that should check inflation and it did not hurt him too badly; he had expected an increase in personal taxes but he did like the 5 per cent refundable corporation tax. "Over all" he said, "this budget should trim inflation." I quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of April 5:

> Economists generally like the refundable tax, which they regard as perhaps the most sophisticated instrument of economic control that Ottawa has devised in a generation.

What does the ordinary man on the street think of this budget? I have talked to many on this point. They generally agreed that it did not hurt us and they expected the minister to check the inflation so why not clip those who can afford it? This judicious rebalancing of income tax will help to check or dampen inflation without disturbing the underlying uptrend in business.

I would like to suggest to hon. members and the government that they consider the image of this parliament and the business life of our country by considering for a moment the meaning and value of integrity. Colton once said:

> Nothing more completely baffles one who is full of trick and duplicity than the straightforward and simple integrity in another.

The Oxford Dictionary defines integrity as "wholeness, uprightness, and honesty". The World Book Dictionary defines it as "honesty and sincerity". A man of integrity is a respected man and I believe it is our duty as members to be respected men and women. I believe that a re-dedication to those principles for which our forefathers and predecessors stood is necessary if we are not to slip back into the morass of a totalitarian state. Popularity and public acclaim are not the measure of a man. What should matter most to hon. members is that we conduct the business of our country with integrity. We should, when necessary, operate as a trust, doing the unpopular thing when it is in the best interest of the country so to do and always foregoing self-interest. As the business leaders of Canada entrusted with the affairs of this nation, we must at all times exercise integrity.

Some hon. members may greet this suggestion with cynicism but it is not too difficult for the thinking person to see the practical values of integrity. It is both efficient and economical and although not always easy to practise its reward is serenity of mind.

I should like to suggest to the Minister of Finance and our government an area which I call the erosion of our tax base through business failures, namely, bankruptcies. Our government has and is doing something about this situation, but I urge them to speed up the process and save the consumer, the farmer, the businessman and corporation from the terrible loss through bankruptcies which, last year were in excess of $500 million in Canada.

Daily in our local papers we have been reading about the scandalous collapse of one of our largest finance companies. I quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of February 4, 1966:

> Responsibility for the collapse of Atlantic Acceptance Corporation Ltd. last summer, rests entirely with a small handful of not-so-clever—but completely arrogant—scoundrels, thoroughly familiar with the bankruptcy game.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Some of the scandal took place in the constituency of Middlesex East. Just south of 401 highway—excuse me; it is known now as the Macdonald-Cartier Freeway—on one of the main access routes to London, Wellington Road, is situated a famous shopping area known as Treasure Island. It was here that a lawyer and a London businessman set up Wildor Holdings Ltd. and, either intentionally or unintentionally, they, along with some of the principals in Atlantic Acceptance Corporation, proceeded to demonstrate how to turn the corners in business. According to the reports in the London Free Press, even before the British Mortgage and Trust Company had advanced the moneys under the first mortgage, a particular gentleman had his hand in the bread basket and received some $10,000 for processing the first mortgage. It appears to me that a certain London lawyer seems to have been rather closely connected with this transaction.

Then suddenly we find the principals of Treasure Island running out of moneys to complete the project, so the British Mortgage and Trust Company foreclosed under their rights as the first mortgagee. At that time there was outstanding over $335,000 in mechanics liens against Treasure Island by local firms and supply houses. In addition, there were several thousands of dollars in judgments against this property. The businesses concerned, which had trusted the integrity of these London businessmen and this lawyer, now find themselves with their equity completely wiped out.

The next thing we know is that Treasure Island is refinanced by Atlantic Acceptance Corporation. The people of our area naturally expected some new principals. But who are the principals? None other than Wildor Holdings Limited. The same London lawyer and businessmen are involved. They finish Treasure Island and negotiate with a local farmer for an additional two acres of land on which to build an arena. Under the guiding hand of this London lawyer they pay $6,000 for the two acres of land. But the property is registered in the name of a relative of the London lawyer and is immediately sold to Wildor Holdings Ltd. for a mere $100,000.

Someone cut the $94,000 melon. It would be interesting to know who got a slice of this melon. Maybe the Minister of Finance could bring this to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson). I should like to press for a thorough investigation into this Treasure Island debacle. Many of my constituents suffered while these fellows hid behind the law.

I could go on talking about this fraud at great length. I ask hon. members to realize that this happened right under the noses of our provincial authorities. Something is very much wrong with the administration of our laws when these rascals can fleece the small businessman and not be brought to justice. Let me remind you, Mr. Speaker, that this happened in my riding and not in the province of Quebec. Allow me to quote from an article in the Globe and Mail of February 4, 1966:

> Many of the characters in the Atlantic affair were old hands in the bankruptcy game. We recognize a number of the individuals, and had known of their association with Atlantic for a long time.

Many of these names were also associated with British Mortgage and Trust, in which a large number of my constituents also lost heavily along with constituents of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith). Several of our older residents lost much of their savings and stocks last July before Ontario finally stepped into the picture and guaranteed the depositors. I urge the minister to consider bringing all near-banks and other such institutions which are taking deposit moneys under one single act so that we can in future avoid this rocking of our financial structure. The president of Clarkson and Company says: "Atlantic is probably the worst blow the free enterprise system in Canada has suffered in many years." I do hope that these individuals are pursued and brought to justice.

Let us look at some of the statistics on bankruptcies. In 1946 defaulted liabilities in Canada totalled $6 million, with 278 estates in bankruptcy. These jumped in 1950, the first year after the 1949 amendments to the Act, to 1,303 bankruptcies and $25 million of defaulted liabilities. If we admit the principle of the relation of cause to effect, we must conclude that the 1949 amendments resulted in an immediate increase of 500 per cent in the number of bankrupt estates and 400 per cent in the liabilities of bankruptcies in 1950 compared with 1946.

The operation was becoming so profitable that this increase continued, and at the end of 1963 the amazing figures were reached of 3,678 estates in bankruptcy and $193,700,000 in defaulted liabilities. It is a truly devastating torrent, and this during the most prosperous years experienced by Canada.

Confronted by this plague, certain associations and groups prepared some 47 briefs and presented them to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin).

In reply to these briefs and to the suggestions made by these associations, it was stated in judicial circles that the Bankruptcy Act was well thought out and protected the creditors provided they used it when they believed their rights to have been encroached upon. Without pretending to know more than these lawyers, I do maintain that when creditors are systematically victimized by these organized frauds they are not at all protected by the Act. On the contrary, they are being duped. The responsibility for pursuing these bankrupts falls on the shoulders of the creditors who have already lost very heavily. It also becomes the responsibility of the creditors to inform the Superintendent of Bankruptcy.

What are the duties of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy? The answer is given in Section 3 of the Act. After speaking about his appointment by the Governor General in Council, subsections 2 and 3 contain provisions as to the powers and duties of the superintendent. The part most interesting to creditors is paragraph (f) of subsection 3 which says that the superintendent shall—> —receive and keep a record of all complaints from any creditor or other person interested in any estate and make such specific investigations with regard to such complaints as the superintendent may determine.

It must be noted that if the Act in using the word "shall" binds the superintendent to do a certain thing, the same act gives him complete freedom when it uses the word "may", because if the superintendent does not have the appropriate staff or the appropriate funds then there is physical incapacity. I strongly recommend that the phrase "may determine" he changed to "must determine" to do away with this distinct weakness in the present Act, and I urge this house to consider immediately the new amendments to the Bankruptcy Act found in Bill S-17 of the Senate. Surely the urgency of this matter is very obvious to hon. members when we consider the losses to individuals, businessmen and corporations during the last ten years.

In 1955 the number of estates in bankruptcy was 1,795. In 1960 this number had risen to 2,828. Here are the figures for subsequent years: in 1961, 2,659; in 1962, 3,190; in 1963, 3,678; in 1964, 3,606; in 1965, 5,003. I would draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that in 1946 there were 278 estates in bankruptcy whereas last year there were no less than 5,003 estates in bankruptcy. Between 1955 and 1966 there was an increase of some 3,208 bankruptcies. Most surely, part of this increase must have arisen as a result of planned bankruptcies.

What about the defaulted liabilities over the period from 1955 to 1965? In 1955 total defaulted liabilities amounted to some $53 million. In 1960 the total was $174 million. In 1961 it was $116 million; in 1962, $149 million; in 1963, $194 million; in 1964, $203 million. In 1965 it had risen to $392 million, a figure which does not include the loss amounting to more than $100 million sustained by over 40 businesses which were put into receivership following the collapse of Atlantic Acceptance Corporation. I consider these figures conclusive evidence that the bankruptcy racket does erode the tax base, and that these losses must ultimately be borne by you and by my constituents, as well as causing many innocent victims to suffer injustice.

• (3:00 p.m.)

I believe the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) has given the reason why changes in the act are necessary when he stated as reported at page 2211 of Hansard:

> I am also very anxious to explain to members of the committee the difficulty which the minister has in trying to administer a very complicated, awkward, and obsolete act, in trying to deal with what has become sophisticated and, I understand, organized crime in the field of bankruptcies.

I urge that a committee study Bill S-17 and that immediately this committee make recommendations to the house for changes in this obsolete Bankruptcy Act. The Minister of Justice on March 4 outlined some of the changes to the act. These changes could return some integrity to business, instead of such scandalous reports as these.

In summary, I urge you to look at the figures. In 1946 the number of estates in bankruptcy were 278, with a total liability of $6 million. In 1949 the Bankruptcy Act was revised, and immediately bankruptcies jumped, so that in 1950 there were 1,303 estates in Bankruptcy with a total liability of $25 million. This bankruptcy operation was booming—and by the end of 1963 the number of estates in bankruptcy had risen to the amazing figure of 3,678 with a total liability of $194 million. This is a devastating amount.

In 1964 the Attorney General of Quebec instigated a special investigation squad to check into bankruptcies, and under the present laws was able in 1965 to reduce bankruptcy liabilities in Quebec by some $5 million, and the number of estates in bankruptcy by 123.

What happened in Ontario, which also had a special squad of investigators, according to the deputy attorney general of Ontario? Ontario's bankruptcies jumped from a total liability in 1963 of $84 million to a total of $260 million in 1965, and this does not include the over $100 million caused by the Atlantic Acceptance debacle. Sir, this Atlantic Acceptance scandal has rocked the financial structure of our country; therefore I urge the Attorneys General of all provinces to take action to stop this fantastic situation.

We all know that the administration of justice is a provincial responsibility, but I urge co-operation with the provinces to investigate all fraudulent activity, in fact every estate in bankruptcy. Bankruptcy liabilities in Ontario increased by over 325 per cent from 1964 to the end of 1965, and in Canada by over 88 per cent. Therefore I urge the Minister of Finance, along with the Minister of Justice, to help the provinces fight this scandalous monster, bankruptcy.

Mr. McCutcheon: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lind: Certainly.

Mr. McCutcheon: Before asking the question may I say I believe this was the hon. member's maiden speech and I would like to compliment him on the excellent material he dug up for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McCutcheon: But I have one thought in mind. In his remarks the hon. member mentioned a certain infamous London lawyer, and many rascals involved in this event that took place in his constituency. There are many reputable firms of lawyers in the city of London and I think the hon. member should name the one to whom he has alluded. We have had plenty of broadside accusations around the house recently, and I wonder if the hon. member would give the name.

[Mr. Lind.]

Mr. Lind: I would be very glad to answer. I think if the hon. member would just go back and read the recent issues of the London Free Press, dealing with the investigation, he will know the London lawyer to whom I have referred.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate and I assure the minister that in any comments I make I do not wish to be offensive. Rather I hope they will be a contribution to help the thousands and hundreds of thousands of financially distressed people across the country who are clamouring for a better budget than this.

The budget presented during this session was nothing but a blanket blast at the Canadian economy, ignoring priority needs and promotional measures in areas of slow development. The economy in general is booming and the chief preoccupation of the government should be to sustain economic growth of such a nature as to prevent that unwanted spiralling price structure called inflation, the curse of all boom periods.

The government at such a time should appraise its own fiscal policies by taking a hard look at its spending program, curtailing projects where possible and giving high priority to those projects in areas of high unemployment which do not require the skilled labour of which we are so short today—projects which are ready for execution. In other words, I regret that the minister did not take a positive approach to the problem.

He has looked negatively at the Canadian economy. He has taken steps which will not reduce the inflationary pressure but will only serve to prolong this dreadful period and have it followed by a recession, which will place us in a position similar to 1956-57. What a retrograde step to be taken by a government which won the faith of an electorate by its promise to give the Canadian people a bold, imaginative and daring team. The positive approach would have been so reassuring for all Canadians, be they manufacturers, producers, service industry workers or consumers.

The government has not heeded the warnings of the Porter commission, which recommends the removal of all impediments to the free use of monetary and fiscal policies to meet the present situation. It has not thought it advisable to encourage productivity as a means of combating inflation. It wants to discourage productivity, but I warn that increased productivity is an essential basis for continuing prosperity.

I quote from an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of April 15 which tells how Canadian General Electric increased productivity:

> The company purchased declining businesses and stimulated them to higher levels of production and employment and also acquired vacant plants and re-activated them as basic approaches to the expansion program.
>
> • (3:10 p.m.)
>
> In the first category, Canadian General Electric bought the Scarboro plant of John Inglis Co. Ltd. of Toronto and Amalgamated Electric Corp. of Markham, Ont.
>
> In the second category, the company bought inactive plants at St. Andrews East, Que., Lachine, Que., and Trenton, Ont.
>
> "At the time of their purchase by us, none of the last three plants was contributing a single man-hour of production to the Canadian economy."

There, Mr. Speaker, you have one of the positive approaches by a progressive company to meet the demand for increased productivity in our country. Had the minister, with all his imagination, brought forth measures to encourage the reopening of so many of those plants in Canada which now are closed, we would have had a part solution to the problem of inflation through this increase in productivity.

This is the sort of encouragement which the Budget should have brought in. An increase in the output of goods per man unit is essential to the social and economic growth and the full utilization of all plant and machinery, of all human resources not now employed, and can lead only to improved productivity and availability of products for all. These are the ingredients for a full fledged growth with sustainable yield—the true hope for the future.

During the life of an ordinary economy we seem to concentrate our efforts more to settling the problems existing in the urban areas of the country. This is understandable, because in these areas the people living there first of all are faced with having to pay rent and do not have many of the facilities which those living in the rural areas would have. Therefore, in a time of recession their problems probably are more pressing. How can the minister explain that in a period of high employment, and with the fact of shortage of labour in the urban areas, we have not concentrated our efforts in those areas of Canada where there exists high unemployment, and thereby give to those people a level of income which would be equal to that enjoyed by those living in the areas of high employment.

This is a time when we should concentrate on these slow growth areas, the financially distressed areas, because we claim there are no more problems in the area of high employment. Therefore, why not direct our attention to the problems in the slow growth areas and thereby raise the incomes of those who have been waiting so long and so desperately.

It is difficult to understand why harbour and marine works in coastal areas are being restricted, when the minister knows very well that projects of this nature do not necessarily require all skilled labour. Also by this method of restriction we are impeding the possibility of increased productivity which after all should be our main concern today. By holding back these possible developments in designated areas we are planning to put these areas in a severe depression whenever we will face inevitable recession, which we will have by the effect of this Budget.

Our national capital market is being strained. The new 5 per cent forced savings tax on corporations will widen the gap between the available capital and the outlays for means of expansion, which in many cases are essential to survival of many of our corporations. The minister's intentions may be good, but how does he expect that large corporations with plans on the drawing board, with personnel available to administer a larger business, with a program geared to greater production, can hold back their investment plans. They will obtain their financing from other sources and thereby add to the cost of plant and equipment which can be repaid only—and I repeat only—by increasing naturally not decreasing, the price of goods to consumers. These companies must remain competitive and are forced to continue the normal requirements of expansion. There may be a few companies which because of the lack of capital will be forbidden to expand, but many of them will not stop their expansion programs by reason of this forced saving of 5 per cent.

What this will mean is that it will cause these companies to pay 6, 6¼ and six and a half per cent on their loans, and then in a few years they will get a rebate on their loans of 5 per cent interest. This cost of plant will be reflected in the cost of consumer goods.

The Minister has not found it proper immediately to eliminate the sales tax on production machinery and building materials. As I said earlier, plans to expand are going on, notwithstanding the forced savings on corporation profits. By planning the gradual elimination of the sales tax on machinery, we are only prolonging the inflationary period in which, when competition becomes more severe, we will not be in the same league as those who will be competing for markets, either domestic or foreign. If eventually we are forced to sell to meet competition, then our corporations will not be making a profit and, this being so, will not be an asset to our country.

When I realize that power chain saws are subject to the 11 per cent sales tax, I cannot understand the reasoning behind such a move. We are penalizing the woodsman because he wishes to work, and are endeavouring to discourage him from producing more. Measures of this kind are not conducive to increased production. We have discouraged home building. I can refer the minister only to a statement made by Mr. Jean-Yves Gélinas, president, National House Builders Association. Mr. Gélinas states, as quoted in the Globe and Mail of April 7:

> Government policy has helped push house prices beyond the means of many Canadians. The 11 per cent federal sales tax that remains on building materials contributes to inflation. In a tight mortgage market the builder finds himself in the position of a drowning man coming up for the third time and having the government reach forth and pull him from his predicament through the simple expediency of putting some mortgage money on the market. The government is the hero. Of course what is forgotten is that the rescuer originally pushed the victim in.

The article goes on to say:

> The industry was asked last year by the federal government to gear itself for a doubling of production. he said, but such planning requires an assurance that mortgage money will be available.

Then Mr. Gélinas proceeds to say:

> • (3:20 p.m.)
>
> Today the government, in its concern about inflation, has taken a deliberate course to restrict mortgage funds available under the National Housing Act.

Further on he states:

> In some areas it appears that C.M.H.C. has refused to approve loans for pre-sold houses to home-owner applicants. It is our contention that this policy is not halting inflationary trends, but rather it is contributing to inflation.

There you have a statement by the president of the National House Builders Association with regard to a problem which in itself is of great concern to all Canadians. The country is aware of the fact that we do not have the funds necessary to continue public housing because the commitments of 1965 were not in keeping with the increases of the preceding two years. There is in this country a shortage of housing and the government does not seem to be fully aware of the danger of allowing a regression rather than an increase, which there must be to meet the demand for housing and the immediate need for slum clearance.

The daring budget was not heard. There is no imaginative undertaking. We have not ventured into new grounds for increasing productivity. We are satisfied to withhold expenditures in those areas of high employment, forgetting totally those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who live in depressed areas and we seem to condemn them forever to a secondary way of living. I do hope the minister will reconsider the sad effects that his budget will be creating in the areas of high unemployment and will take steps to cause a greater concentration on a settlement of the problems in these areas, and thus bring their level of income within striking distance of those living in the high employment areas of our country.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) when he spoke several days ago can only have the effect of making the rich of this country richer, and of the poor and the sick continuing to live in poverty and ill health. If the minister has ever heard of the idea that a budget should be used to redistribute the income of the people of the country on a more equitable basis, he certainly did not give any indication in the budget that he considered this principle of any importance. This budget is characterised by its tremendous concern for the status quo, for not interfering with the right of business to make a profit under any circumstances.

Today I wish to speak about one phase of Canada's life which I think the minister ignored completely. I refer to the fact that if this country is to progress as it must, there is an immediate need for a tremendous increase in our efforts in the field of scientific research. The present Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), while he was president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions said in a speech in Montreal just over a year ago:

> The core of modern economy is research, yet here we are spending 1 per cent of the U.S. research figure. We are situated in the zone of influence of the largest economy in the world, yet we have done virtually nothing towards research—the driving force of any economy.

The Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), speaking in March of last year in the city of Montreal, said:

> The need for more research means that first priority must be given to the universities and other educational institutions, to ensure a continuing supply of qualified engineers and scientists in future years.

In the same speech the Minister of Industry gave a list of nine countries and showed the percentage of their gross national product which was being spent on research. Interestingly enough, Canada is at the bottom of the list. The United States spends 2.84 per cent on research, the United Kingdom 2.37 per cent, Soviet Russia 2 per cent, Japan 1.48 per cent, West Germany 1.18 per cent, Sweden 1.7 per cent, France 1.5 per cent, the Netherlands 1.4 per cent, and Canada 0.86 per cent. In the light of these figures and the statements of these two ministers with regard to the importance of research, what do we find in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance? The minister makes the announcement that because of the boom the government has decided that a building required by the National Research Council, the major research organization in Canada, will not be proceeded with this year because we simply have to slow up the boom.

On the day on which the minister's budget speech was reported in the Ottawa newspapers there was a report in those same newspapers that one of the large builders in the city of Ottawa was going ahead this year with the construction of a $30 million office and apartment complex. He did not listen to the minister's call for restraint, for a stretch-out. I do not blame him. He was interested in making a profit. There is nothing wrong with that. He is interested in building facilities which people with money are willing to pay for, so he is going ahead.

I suggest that if the minister was concerned about the boom and directing it, instead of simply announcing that the government will not go ahead with necessary projects, projects of the greatest importance to the welfare of all the people of this country, he would have considered, as he has not, some system of priorities so that if we have to curtail our building boom at all we would curtail those things which are of the least importance to the Canadian people.

The need for an increase in the expenditure of money and effort for research was very well documented by McGill University in a submission they made to the Bladen Commission. I want to read in summary some of the things they said. They point out, with regard to the biological sciences:

> While comparatively well-supported, these sciences are in fact not given the support they should have, and their strength is comparative only.

Then they say that Canada is not putting enough money and effort into research and therefore all the areas of endeavour are under supplied. Then they say further:

> In the case of the biological sciences, the main concern at present is the loss of American funds due to the change of policy whereby research funds are to be spent within the United States rather than outside it.

Has there been any announcement by the government that there will be a replacement of these funds? If there has, I have not heard of it and neither have the universities. What do they say about the physical sciences? This is what McGill University had to say in this submission:

> The physical sciences are in a worse plight, both comparatively and absolutely. The cost of sophisticated equipment is now becoming such that a scientist being invited to join a university staff will often detail his equipment and funding needs as a condition of his acceptance. The shortage of staff in the physical science departments, due in part to the opening of new universities, the drain to the States, and the continual movement into industry, put the chairmen of these departments into a most unenviable position.

These are just two illustrations of the problems that McGill University is facing. In their submission to the Bladen Commission they made some very specific recommendations.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I want to quote just a few of them:

> That the government at least double the funds now given to universities to support research in the sciences, with the particular intention that institutional block grants may be greatly increased.
>
> That the government declare forthwith a policy of replacing United States financial support with grants from its own funds, as that support is withdrawn from Canadian projects.
>
> That the government allow an overhead institutional charge of 40 per cent of the total amount of all grants made to academic personnel working in Canadian universities.

This is just one illustration, Mr. Speaker. Several months ago in December 1965, a brief was presented to the government outlining the needs in the field of medical research in Canada. This brief was endorsed by about 100 of the most prominent medical scientists in Canada. I want to read a few sentences which outline the position of the medical researchers as they see it. I quote:

> Although financial support has been increasing, medical research in Canada today is being conducted on an inadequate scale. As the Royal Commission on Health Services commented: "Available funds lag behind the amounts needed for the support of research".
>
> A substantial increase in capital and operating support for medical research in Canada is needed at once. The key consideration is the creation of conditions which will encourage teacher-scientists to remain in Canada and in teaching and research; which will encourage Canadian teacher-scientists and graduates now in the United States to return to work in Canadian universities and hospitals; and which will encourage undergraduates to take up research in the medical sciences as a career. Unless a more favourable environment for medical research is provided as a matter of urgency, the skilled manpower on which all else depends will be inadequate both in quantity and quality.

The figures supplied to us by the United States Immigration Department indicate that every year for the last five years at least we have been losing scientists and research people at a fantastic rate. We have been losing in the neighbourhood of 500 doctors, 500 engineers, 500 professors and scientists of various types. A report issued last week by the O.E.C.D. indicates that Canada is losing scientists at a greater rate, three or four times the rate of other countries in western Europe. There is no indication from the minister that anything will be done about this situation. It is not a new situation. It is one which, as I have indicated, has already been brought to the attention of the government.

I have before me an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail in October, 1964. It is datelined, Chalk River, and I should like to quote two paragraphs:

> Canada is reaching a stage where it must consider providing facilities for research in high-energy physics and improve its support for low-energy physics research, the director of the physics division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited said yesterday.
>
> A small team of researchers who work in the frontier of these fields is essential to the development of a modern technological society, Dr. L. G. Elliott suggested in an interview. They constitute a very high level educational group which trains the teachers who in turn train the country's engineers and scientists.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Well, this was written a year and a half ago. What has the minister and the government done about it? They have done nothing. Then in January, 1965, another article appeared in the Globe and Mail, and I want to read just a couple of paragraphs from it:

> Four Canadian universities that are constructing basic science buildings may be forced to plead for a grant from the United States to equip them because the Canadian government says "no mechanism exists" for such a capital grant.
>
> Dr. D. V. Bates, assistant dean for graduate studies in research, faculty of medicine at McGill University, said yesterday that Canada's most urgent research need is for nearly $4 million to equip new buildings at McGill, Dalhousie, University of British Columbia and the University of Western Ontario.
>
> "We can't bring scientists and show them empty floor space. How can we recruit good men? They can't work without tools", he said.

I believe these illustrations I have given indicate clearly the need. Because of my interest in this subject, I have had correspondence with a large number of scientists across Canada. Since we have been asked to restrict our remarks so that we can finish the debate, I would like to quote from just two communications which I have recently received. One is from Dr. John Beck, who is the physician in chief at the Royal Victoria Hospital and director, McGill University clinic. I will just read one paragraph in which he says:

> In the current year research support applied for in the fall of 1964, for the year 1965-1966, amounted to $681,939. Of this amount the M.R.C. granted $371,958 or approximately 54 per cent of the money requested. I personally reviewed all the applications with the investigators concerned and can assure you that the requests made were in no way out of line. If these investigative groups are to continue to compete with their confreres in the U.S.A. then they must have the facilities, both equipment and personnelwise, to carry on with the ideas which they have put forth.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the head of the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Manitoba, Dr. Nickerson. He said, and I quote:

> We have had no serious recent financial setbacks, but have suffered like everyone else from the trimming around the edges which has been necessitated by the limited M.R.C. budget. As you know, most of the increase in funds to this agency has been offset by the transfer of responsibilities previously covered by health and welfare and other bodies which have not had comparable increases. After standing commitments were taken care of, we could give only 47 per cent of the money requested for new and renewal annual grants this year. This meant that funds classified as B1, highly desirable but not absolutely essential, could not be granted, and the expansion of a number of our projects fell into this category. It was hoped that these could be covered by the supplemental appropriation, but from the letter which arrived today, it appears that this allowed only a small part of the B1 category to be funded.

This letter from Dr. Nickerson was written on April 19 of this year. In the light of this, is it surprising that an increasing number of Canadian scientists in the field of physics, chemistry, medicine and other types of research leave Canada and go to the United States? I once tried to get the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to estimate the cost to Canada of educating these highly skilled people who left Canada. Finally, after a great deal of thought, they estimated the cost in this respect at something like $25 million a year. In the report to which I alluded, the report of the committee on research at McGill University which was submitted to the Bladen Commission, the cost was estimated at $75 million a year. It sems to me, as so often happens in this country, that this government is being penny wise and pound foolish. Faced by a problem, we find that the government has fallen into the usual trap which one can expect from Liberal governments, and allowed things to continue as they were.

• (3:40 p.m.)

This means, as I said at the beginning, that those who are wealthy will continue to be wealthy. The builder that I mentioned earlier in Ottawa who is no different from other builders in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Edmonton or Vancouver will not only continue to be wealthy but will become wealthier and wealthier. That will be at the expense of the Canadian people, and science will continue to be ignored.

In this connection may I read from a letter which I received, dealing with this subject, from the chairman of the Manitoba Economic Consultative Board, Mr. B. H. Kristjanson, who is a very experienced and highly respected civil servant. In fact he is a top person. May I quote a couple of paragraphs from his letter:

> A basic problem in slow-growth areas such as the prairie region is that the public sector has to carry a large part of the costs. Head offices of giant corporations are not located here and the smaller firms carry on little, if any, research. Our own public revenues are also relatively limited. Indeed we are hard pressed to meet general education requirements for teachers.
>
> At the same time we believe that an increase in the growth rate in this region requires a significant increase in the investment in science and technology applied to the resources of the region. This led us to recommend the establishment of a research park with a view to assembling an effective constellation of scientific talent at one spot. We have estimated that a group of fifty scientists would call for a budget of perhaps three million dollars per year.

Mr. Speaker, I pause for a moment to say that an expenditure of $3 million a year in the field of basic research in the province of Manitoba is a very small amount of money when one looks at the tremendous sums spent on such projects—and I am not being critical —as Expo '67 or the Pan American games which will be held next year in my own city.

I continue quoting from the letter I received from Mr. Kristjanson:

> My principal concern is that the effort be on a scale sufficiently large to merit the respect and attention of scientists on this continent. And here is where a fair amount of money will be required. This is where it seems to me that a federal allocation of funds would be very much in order. The need is to provide sufficient funds to be able to attract first-class personnel and to allow an inter-disciplinary approach to problems.

I agree completely with Mr. Kristjanson. If one studies the budget proposed by Minister of Finance he will see that if the minister does not disagree with the proposal put forward by Mr. Kristjanson, he has succeeded in ignoring it completely. If there is anything in the budget which could really give hope to Canadian scientists, I have not been able to find it.

I want to conclude by reading one sentence to the Minister of Finance from a speech made by Dr. Hans Selye, one of Canada's most distinguished and outstanding medical researchers. I quote:

> Would it not be wise, for example, to put aside a small fraction of the huge sums we pay for a semblance of armed security, to develop for our children the foundations of a distinctively Canadian culture and scientific effort?

I commend those words to the Minister of Finance and hope that if he cannot give to them the consideration in the year 1966 that they warrant, that he will perhaps do so in 1967. If he does that, Mr. Speaker, he will deserve the thanks of all Canadian people.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as this is my first opportunity to rise on the budget debate as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, I preferred to wait a few days before giving the house my views on the current budget in order to know exactly what kind of criticism the opposition parties could direct at the Budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp).

I would have thought that the opposition parties would at least find one common ground to justify their attacks on the government, but such was not the case, and I realize that most of the newspapers were right in saying that the present budget was built on solid ground. As a matter of fact, if the main editorials written on the present budget were to be reviewed, they would prove to say almost unanimously that this was a realistic and adequate budget, taking a positive view of problems and offering adequate solutions.

If we analyse the budget, we realize that the Minister of Finance had in this budget presentation two main objectives in mind on behalf of the Canadian people.

First, the minister indicated his intention to lay down policies designed to extend the present period of prosperity, unprecedented in the history of this country and secondly, he is striving meanwhile to contain as much as possible the increase in the cost of living through stabilization of prices and production costs.

It is generally recognized that we are in the sixth year of continued prosperity in Canada, without any let-up of the economy and that our production capacity has reached the highest level in many years.

In fact, statistics prove that the unemployment rate decreased in 1965 to an average of 3.5 per cent, a rate unequalled in the last twelve years at least and, according to forecasts found in the budgetary papers included in the white paper tabled by the Minister of Finance prior to the budget speech, it is obvious that the growth of our economy will remain at an unexpected level, even unhoped for, in 1966, and that will improve the situation in the weaker economic areas.

However, too quick a growth creates strong pressures on the Canadian economy, particularly in some more favoured areas such as the larger centers of the following provinces: Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

During the weeks prior to the budget, the governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, told Canadians about the imminent danger facing an over-extended economy which could result in a blow-out in the economic system, and he said that to avoid serious difficulties, it would be in order to take concrete steps to reduce the pressures on domestic demand.

Excessive demand has resulted in the last few months in a noticeable increase in prices in various sectors of the economy, particularly in the field of construction where production costs are excessive in several parts of Canada.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The President of the Economic Council of Canada made a speech in Toronto a few weeks ago on the same subject; he, too, warned Canadians against the danger of an overextended economy. Now, the Minister of Finance, after analysing the situation, came to the conclusion that it is time, not to check the economic growth but to rationalize it in that the level of the economic growth must be maintained at a reasonable percentage in order to achieve the intended goals. To this end, the minister proposed to restrain the excessive increases in the demand in some areas and encourage the productivity and the competitive position of the Canadian industry.

He suggested, for instance, that the sales tax on production machinery and equipment be progressively reduced in order to enable industrialists to plan their investments instead of making them all in the same year, as there was an impending danger, following the forecasts for 1966, that the industrial sector of the Canadian economy was again planning huge investments, which would have exerted still greater pressures on our economy.

Now, by withdrawing progressively the sales tax on production machinery and equipment, the Minister of Finance wanted to induce various industries to make only the investments which were absolutely necessary and he was satisfied to learn that industrialists will invest in 1966 more than they invested in 1965, in order to meet immediate demands.

In withdrawing progressively the tax on production machinery and equipment, the minister induced those who were not forced to make immediate investments to postpone them so that our economy may continue to improve in 1967 and 1968.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is a worthy and fair initiative because, since the demand has been too heavy in 1965, and was anticipated to be even heavier in 1966, it was of the utmost importance to give the industrial sector a valid reason to postpone projects which are not absolutely necessary in 1966, till 1967 or even 1968, when the economy may be in need of these investments which would have worsened the pressures in 1966.

The minister forecast, despite this initiative that some consider untimely for fear of a slowdown in the economy in 1966, the minister, as I say, forecast that the Canadian economy, would in the 1966 fiscal year produce 8.5 per cent more than in 1965. That is, in spite of the measures taken by him and calling upon investors not to go too fast in 1966, the minister estimates that the gross national product will increase by 8.5 per cent in 1966, the level considered appropriate for the Canadian economy to develop, without creating overheating difficulties. As I said previously, we are in our sixth consecutive year of economic expansion. This is the longest period of expansion ever experienced by this country in peacetime. In the past, such periods were often followed by depressions. However, if we manage our affairs soundly, there is no reason why there should be a regression after this prosperity. On the other hand, if we allow certain pressures to build up, then we will find ourselves in a situation where prices and costs will increase excessively, and if there is an excessive increase in capital outlays, then we will be in a period of difficulty.

What the Minister of Finance sought to do was to hold back certain capital expenditures so that the long-term requirements of Canada could be met without causing great fluctuations and our present capacity of meeting our investment needs would not be overtaken by demand in that field.

The Second Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada points out how industrial investments can be a factor contributing to the instability of the Canadian economy.

> Declines and expansions in investment have historically been an important factor contributing to the unstable and uneven growth of the Canadian economy.

That is what the report says. Then the council points out that, even if the actual volume of such investment will have to go on expanding considerably from current levels if potential output is to be attained in 1970, the recent rate of expansion in investment spending is clearly not sustainable on a long-term basis to 1970 and beyond—see page 29 of the report.

The council mentions that any program to stabilize the expansion must tend to encourage an upswing in business investment with as close a relation as possible to potential growth of production. That is why the council recommends:

> —that careful examination of possibilities for postponing and stretching out major construction projects in areas of particularly acute shortages of construction manpower and capacity.

See page 186 of the report. That is exactly what the minister did.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance showed a great deal of imagination and objectivity when he used the 11 per cent sales tax on production machinery and equipment as an instrument for planning Canadian investments.

In fact, some industrialists are not going to invest in 1966 and will decide to wait for a year, if possible, in order to benefit from a 5 per cent reduction on machinery and equipment they will have to use in their new undertakings. Those who are not in such a tight position may wish to wait two years before making the investments they deemed necessary, in order to benefit from the full exemption, that is 11 per cent on machinery and equipment.

As reported in Mr. Newman's column in the Toronto Star the day after the Budget speech, it is a very new concept of the federal budget and I quote:

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

> Despite the caution inherent in his approach, Mr. Sharp boldly rejected the old fashioned idea that governments tax only to raise money. Instead, the new Minister of Finance firmly established his intentions of using taxation in its much more creative application as an instrument for modifying the nation's economic trends.

[Translation]

One of the criticisms often raised during this debate, which I should like to point out, came from the opposition members representing the Atlantic provinces who claimed that this budget did not meet the requirements of the economic situation in that part of the country, where economic conditions may not be as good as elsewhere in the country.

However, coming myself from a riding which is a designated area because its unemployment rate was recognized as being over the Canadian average, I can point out to hon. members that the Department of Finance admits there are in the country some areas where unemployment is a problem which has not yet been completely solved and which deserves particular attention.

But, before talking about the appropriate measures, allow me to point out that unemployment has decreased enormously in the disadvantaged areas of the Canadian economy. At page 29 of the economic white paper,

I find, table 16 which shows the unemployment rates by region.

Well, if I take the unemployment rate for the Atlantic provinces, I find that in 1965 that rate was the lowest since 1956. In fact, in 1957, the unemployment rate in eastern Canada stood at 8.4 per cent; in 1958, 12.5 per cent; in 1959, 10.9 per cent; in 1960, 10.7 per cent and in 1961, 11.2 per cent, etc.

In 1964, the rate was down to 7.8 per cent and, in 1965, to 7.4 per cent; that shows clearly that in the last few years the situation has been much better in that part of Canada than it was in 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961. However, we are ready to admit that this situation has not been completely corrected yet and it is necessary to give it particular attention.

In the present budget, the Minister of Finance adopted measures which will not be the same throughout the country in that all the existing measures to help areas which are faced with an economic slowdown will remain in force.

In fact, since the Maritime provinces and the whole of eastern Quebec are covered by the assistance program for designated areas, the present budget provides that those designated areas were not to be affected by the economic control measures proposed. Although amortization allowances with regard to property acquired in the next 18 months will be considerably reduced for a period of three years everywhere in Canada, the amortization allowance rate will be kept at the same level for the designated areas; that will create a more favourable situation for those areas which are faced with slower economic growth. Indeed, that sensible difference in amortization will encourage industrialists to look even more to those designated areas where the Department of Industry is already granting grants of up to 33 per cent for all new investments in machinery and industrial construction.

Moreover, in the designated areas, which include all eastern Quebec practically and all the Maritime provinces, the income of the new manufacturing or processing industries which are eligible for a three-year income tax exemption will also be exempted from the refundable tax of 5 per cent.

If we add to what I have already said the fact that the government intends to maintain and even increase its assistance to the Atlantic region, through numerous programs similar to ARDA, the $100 million fund for the development of the Atlantic region, it is obvious that the present budget favours the underdeveloped areas of Canada.

It is also to be noted that the government will maintain its public works program in the Maritimes, while it will be trimmed down in other parts of the country; it is unfortunate that the new policy on the causeway between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island has been so badly misinterpreted.

It is well understood that the causeway will be continued and completed as per schedule. Only one change was made: a new work calendar was accepted so that the greater part of the work would be performed during the off-season, that is when unemployment reaches a peak, so that the project might contribute even more to the economy of those provinces.

There is one point, Mr. Speaker, which I would like to bring up because it is of great comfort to me, in that it is a new initiative which proves great imagination.

I mean the 5 per cent tax on cash profits, that is profits after tax deductions. In view of the $30,000 exemption, it is not meant for small businesses for after all they will not pay it. However, it is intended to deprive businesses temporarily of part of their cash profits which they might otherwise be tempted to spend on capital expenditures this year. As there is a shortage of labour and material in capital goods industries, including construction, any additional expenditures would inevitably lead to increased costs and prices as a result of competition between businesses for labour and materials already in short supply.

It must be noted, however, Mr. Speaker, that this new initiative does not apply in areas recognized as less economically developed in Canada, namely, the designated areas.

The funds paid to the federal government will bear an annual interest of 5 per cent and may be repaid at any time, from 18 to 36 months afterwards, thus enabling the federal government to release them when resources are subject to lesser pressures and allowing investments to keep on expanding at a more easily maintained rate.

This notion of a refundable tax on cash profits is an entirely new one. It is somewhat similar to the Swedish program also designed to regulate capital expenditures. It is different in that, except for this $30,000 exemption, all companies are taxed, whereas the Swedish system is optional. It is also different in that Swedish authorities have set no time limit for repayment. In Sweden, finally, the funds can be released only for specific purposes or for use in specific areas. We believe that due to the situation in Canada, it is easier to achieve our aims by means of the provisions we have suggested.

Mr. Speaker, I would have a lot more to say, but a great number of members still wish to take part in this debate. I shall therefore conclude my remarks immediately. In conclusion, however, I should like to commend the Minister of Finance for having submitted to Canada an objective and realistic budget which was well received in all parts of the country. We only have to read the comments in the press to realize that the Minister of Finance was really successful in bringing down his first budget, as the new minister in charge of Canada's economy.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am extremely sorry but I do not agree with the comments made by the hon. member for Saint Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, about the budget. Unfortunately, we are moving toward the end of the Budget speech, and all the necessary time to criticize it will not be made available to me because it would take me at least two hours to do so, especially to point out some of the deficiencies which could be found in it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few brief observations. Many of my colleagues have spoken on specific subjects and I would not like to repeat all that has been said. But there is one brief remark I would like to make at the outset, and I trust Your Honour will permit me because on Wednesday afternoon my colleague from Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) delivered himself of a considerable speech on a subject irrelevant to this discussion.

I have nothing personal in this, except to say it involved his region of the Yukon, my city of Edmonton and the province of Alberta. I would merely say that the nature of the extravagant language he used in describing the actions of the city of Edmonton demonstrated in reverse ratio the strength of the case he was trying to put forward. Having said that, I think cool reason and a responsible approach to what we both are trying to do will achieve success, rather than standing on the side lines firing off soaring fireworks of extravagant allegations.

There are so many things that could be said about this Budget. First, I am going to put on the record a quotation from Dicken's "Tale of Two Cities", with due apology to Mr. Earle McLaughlin, President of the Royal Bank of Canada—with whose remarks I do not always agree, but I think in this case this is an apt description of the picture the minister tried to portray the other night. In speaking of 1965 Mr. McLaughlin used this quotation:

> It was the best of times, it was the worst of times, it was the age of wisdom, it was the age of foolishness, it was the epoch of belief, it was the epoch of incredulity, it was the season of light, it was the season of darkness, it was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair, we had everything before us, we had nothing before us, we were all going direct to heaven, we were all going direct the other way—in short, the period was so far like the present period, that some of its noisiest authorities insisted on its being received, for good or for evil, in the superlative degree of comparison only.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I think that this would describe the minister's remarks of self-congratulation on the achievements of the administration which he represents, so far as fiscal and monetary conditions in Canada are concerned. Well, all we got out of it was that the minister finally admitted, after many denials by representatives on the government side, in the previous year, in the face of charges by members on all sides that inflation was becoming rampant in the country, that these were because of certain actions taken by the government—not by this minister, but by his predecessor. Therefore I certainly cannot share his remarks at the time of the Budget with regard to the actions of his predecessor, because I do not believe there have been any actions although perhaps well intentioned and well meaning, as foolish as those taken by his predecessor.

In so far as inflation is concerned, the minister is attempting to deal with it; but as my colleague from Carleton (Mr. Bell) pointed out yesterday, the minister's hands are tied by the policies of his own government in the previous years. The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has no more control over the fiscal and monetary policy of Canada than I have over the depth of ash on the moon; I have no control there, but neither has the Minister of Finance, because first of all the dealings of this government with the provinces have given the provinces a far greater slice of the public share of the gross national product than has the federal government.

We are exhorted not only by the governor of the Bank of Canada but also by the minister with regard to restriction of activity and stretch-out of some building programs. Frankly, the stretch-out is peanuts, it is meaningless. However, the provincial administrations have taken the lid off their activities. In my own province of Alberta this year's budget is up 38 per cent over 1964—$682 million for 1,400,000 people. If there should be a policy of restraint—and I agree there should be—then this must be applied all the way around, because if the $1 that the Minister of Finance of Canada attempts to save—and does—is spent twice and three times over by a provincial treasury, or provincial administration or through it by a municipality, what does it do? The effect is the same on the inflationary pressure, and we are going to see a continuation of the increase in prices.

The minister said the federal government is going to cut back some $34 million of public works. Within the last two weeks a series of wage contracts have been signed in Montreal which will more than wipe out everything the minister has attempted to do. Already we can hear the rumblings in the Ottawa construction trade concerning what it will mean to the price of a house or building in late 1967, 1968 and 1969; it is going to be fantastic. Because this was started in the particular area of Montreal it will spread; it is now spreading to this area and soon will have a relative effect across the country.

Let us not hide our heads in some sort of a cloud of self-delusion that all is good and proper in the best of all possible worlds. I would have liked to see something in the Budget with regard to removing the ceiling on the gift tax so that it would be meaningful to institutions of higher learning—the universities. I know that perhaps the minister would like to do this. We receive so many requests on behalf of medical research. Our universities are crying out and are woefully short of plant and teachers for medical training and medical research, research in this country by our own people.

What is the good of training hundreds and hundreds of well educated medical graduates and then have them go to do their post-graduate work in the United States, where they remain in too great numbers. We look at the federal contribution to medical research; it is picayune. Perhaps we have seen the glimmer of something; I note in the report of the president of the University of British Columbia, which appeared the other day, that the federal government has made an additional $3 million grant toward the construction of a teaching hospital on the campus to be administered by the University of British Columbia—an extra $3 million for the purpose of teaching, and I am told this is the first time. I hope this is repeated time and time again. However, I should like to see the private sector of Canada make similar gestures toward research, not only medical, but also scientific research. We have the people, but we must be able to pay them.

Mr. Deachman: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lambert: I have only a few minutes and I would like to continue.

I should like to see this encouraged not only by the removal of the gift tax with these specific purposes in mind, but also by some meaningful exemption in relation to the estate tax with regard to particular matters of this kind. How can we encourage people to accumulate funds for these particular purposes, when somehow or other the accumulation of an estate has a bad name in Canada.

Mr. Deachman: Who gave the $4 million to it.

Mr. Lambert: I know the gifts that were made by the Woodward family and others.

Mr. Deachman: I will not confuse you with the facts. Go on with your story.

Mr. Lambert: I would like to be able to encourage the minister in this particular sector so that we can get this encouragement for our individuals, both with regard to the estate tax and the gift tax. This is a suggestion I would make. The last point I should like to refer to in these few remarks I have today is on the question of inflation. The other day when the minister was talking about an extension of some relief under the S.E.C. regulations in the United States I had asked what had been the quid pro quo given by Canada and I was told there was none. I wanted to be satisfied that in so doing the minister was not having a halter slipped around his neck, as was done in the case of his predecessor in 1963, in order to gain some short term advantage, and an illusionary advantage, under the equalization tax act of the United States.

Mr. Sharp: Access to the United States market is not very illusory.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: It was illusory in the long run for Canada in that we then undertook to limit our holdings of foreign reserves at $2,600 million expressed in U.S. funds. I simply say that the then minister of finance had a bridle slipped on him; he also took the bit, not one bit but two, a curb bit with a very tight curb. The net result is that the Minister of Finance, who should have a very useful tool at his disposal to curb inflation, is now prohibited from so doing by the agreement with the United States in that Canada must keep an artificial ceiling on its interest rate in order to discourage the coming into Canada of foreign funds, which must be controlled because of this agreed ceiling of $2,600 million. This is a proposal that I want considered: Would it not be better today to remove ourselves from the exemptions of the Interest Equalization Act?

Mr. Sharp: We would have to pay more for our borrowings.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, we would have to pay more for our borrowings, but the minister is now asking for the same thing in another way. We can argue this matter at greater length some other time. I cannot deal with it at length now because it would take from 20 minutes to half an hour to go into detail. However, Mr. Speaker, I ask that this proposal be considered, in order to allow us to use our own monetary tools to control our domestic monetary policy. We are hobbling ourselves with a foreign exchange tool of control. What is the greatest advantage to Canada in the long run? Is it the higher cost of funds borrowed in foreign markets, or the erosion of our savings in Canada, causing untold hardship to our people on fixed incomes as a result of inflation?

The minister has said he is trying to curb inflation, but let us refer to his Budget papers. On page 19 of the budget papers there is a paragraph on prices which indicates that there was a good 3 per cent increase in prices in 1965. Then there is this illuminating statement:

> All of these factors, in the context of conditions in the early months of 1966, suggest that it would not be prudent to assume a rate of price increase any less than that recorded in 1965.

So we can expect the same thing in 1966 as we had in 1965. Does the minister mean that his efforts to combat inflation will not succeed in reducing the rate of inflation, or will he merely contain inflation to the level of 1965? If that is all this budget is aimed at, I say it misses the mark and does not do the job that needs to be done in Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to congratulate in particular the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for the foresight he showed in his Budget speech, which is both cautious and realistic.

The first budget of the minister was a complex and skilfully introduced document, which evidenced not only the cool thinking and the ability of the Minister of Finance but also his hesitation to attempt any fiscal adventures.

The main purpose of the delicate balance in the series of measures proposed is to curtail the general requirements of the Canadian consumer and to encourage the Canadian businessman to slow down in his capital investments and his importations. The minister therefore wants to make our economy free from inflationary pressures and extend, beyond our centennial year, our present prosperity.

The budget speech itself was the least partisan of all those heard in the house of recent date.

The new Minister of Finance read his 16,000 word document with the brilliant self-confidence of a reasonable man in an unreasonable world. To see him make his speech in the house was like seeing a perfectly adapted human machine at work.

In spite of the caution which he had to show, the minister rejected the obsolete concept according to which the government creates taxes for the sole purpose of collecting money. Instead the new Minister of Finance firmly declared his intention to use taxes in a much more creative way to alter the economic trends in the country.

The minister also re-asserted that, in spite of this age of co-operative federalism, Ottawa still has an important impact on the Canadian economy. Even the cautious measures of the budget will, in 1966, change the figure of the gross national product—the sum total of Canadian earnings and production—from 9 per cent to 8½ per cent.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main objectives of the minister is to reduce substantially the capital outlays of the public and private sectors during the next year. As far as private undertakings are concerned, they are subject to two main measures intended to slow down their investment appetite. They will have to pay the treasury a 5 per cent refundable tax on their gross profits. They will also be granted a partial or total exemption from the 11 per cent sales tax on some capital goods, provided they agree to postpone the purchase of those goods for one or two years. These two measures will certainly regulate the flow of investments.

According to two Quebec economists, Messrs. Claude Masson and H. Djahanbin, the federal budget is economically sound in the circumstances; more particularly, it has certain flexible fiscal provisions which can be changed if need be. The budget of the minister obviously carries an incentive to reduce the rate of expenditure so as to extend the period of Canada's economic development. The maintenance of the 11 per cent tax on building materials is justified, since this is the area of highest inflationary pressure for the time being.

The president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, Marcel Pépin, said he was pleased the federal budget did not increase the income tax for those who earn less than $5,000 a year. He also added:

> It is a step in the right direction; soon, the taxable minimum will have to be raised.

All in all, the tax measures advocated by the hon. minister please the Labour Congress. That is the opinion expressed by the general secretary of the organization, Mr. MacDonald. He stated that the C.L.C. was very pleased to see the Minister of Finance was not a victim of those who endeavour to set off a general panic with regard to inflation. The union representative added that the minister's decision to reduce the taxes levied in the case of certain low-income groups was a first step in the war against poverty. Mr. MacDonald also said he was pleased with the initiative of imposing a special refundable tax on corporate profits. This measure will enable the government to plan certain long-term expenses. As far as the war on poverty is concerned, I dare hope that the Minister of Finance, in the obvious fight he is seeking to put up in order to maintain and distribute the national income amongst all classes of society, will find a way to provide for the most unfortunate class in Canada, that of people over 65 years of age, who now get a lean $75 per month. It should be possible to implement, in the near future, the recommendations of the report brought down by Senator Croll, and to guarantee $105 per month for persons who live alone, without other sources of income, and $185 per month for married couples.

To bring about a change in order to extend rather than to check the development of the country, this is the significant wager that the Minister of Finance was willing to take up. It is felt that the measures he proposed will reduce by one third of a billion dollars the amounts of money which Canadian businessmen intended to invest with a view to developing their businesses this year. This, in addition to the other deflationary provisions of the budget, will quickly slow down the accelerated pace of our economy.

Two measures which will indirectly have a favourable effect on our current deficit is the abolition of the 15 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian government bonds in the United States, and the fact that a great part of the production machinery, the purchase of which is prevented by the budget, would have been imported from the United States.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

The government, Mr. Speaker, has introduced a budget to pace prosperity. The boom was getting out of control and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) initiated action on a number of fronts. To begin with, he has restored about two thirds of Mr. Gordon's short-lived income tax cuts of 1965. There are still some wispy concessions to persons in the lower strata; but for the most part, things are pretty much as they were in 1964. Second, the government has deferred another group of construction expenditures, with a total value of $34.8 million. At the same time it has promised to forgo new spending programs, except in emergencies, and has appealed to the provinces to exercise similar restraint, notably with regard to highway programs.

A third major measure is the refundable tax on cash profits. The minister hopes, by this device, to divert probably for 18 months a portion of the flow of business funds into capital expenditures. Two other changes announced are intended to check inflationary pressure by inducing postponements of the capital programs which are bidding up costs. The minister has decreased them selectively. The new restrictions will not apply to heavy construction equipment or to equipment required for long-term utility projects, but they will bear on such assets as buildings and machinery.

In the same fashion, and with the further purpose of stimulating higher productivity, the Minister of Finance has made a distinction between production machinery, on which the tax is to be eliminated by stages, and building materials which could scarcely be cheapened without stimulating an already excessive demand. The minister dangles an effective carrot; the longer business waits, the cheaper the final investment.

General praise has been accorded the Budget. There has been commendation of the removal by stages of the sales tax on production machinery. The personal income tax changes, with small reductions for low income earners, were described as a move in the right direction by the Canadian Labour Congress. As far as manufacturers are concerned, it has been called a "groan today, grin tomorrow" budget. Mr. Fred Samis, general manager of the Canadian Electrical Manufacturers Association said that the budget has put his industry in a more competitive position in foreign markets.

The tariff changes in the budget drew approval from the Canadian Importers Association. A joint statement by the Canadian and Montreal Stock Exchanges said that the elimination of the withholding tax should relieve our balance of payments situation by making bonds more attractive to foreign investors.

The Minister of Finance has explained that his budget was designed to slow down but not halt the boom; to reduce the inflation factor in the increase in the gross national product; to steady the headlong Canadian course by cutting the amount of money individuals and business would have to send chasing after a short supply of labour and materials.

Federal, provincial and municipal governments will all find it easier to borrow money with the removal of the 15 per cent witholding tax on interest payments to non-residents on securities of Canadian governments. It is hoped that the change will enable some borrowing to be done in Europe.

In his attempt to use the budget as an important factor in influencing the economy on a short-term basis, the minister has fashioned a new tool. The compulsory savings plan for large businesses could, in theory, give the government the means to help decelerate or accelerate the economy at very short notice. As far as is known, the scheme is unprecedented anywhere. If the plan works, a considerable step forward will have been taken toward the goal of managing the economy, so that the peaks and valleys of boom and recession are levelled out.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, ministers of finance have shared a certain resignation towards economic fluctuations. They believed that prosperity and recession came in cycles. These cycles might be influenced here and there, but they were like a solemn law of nature, not really to be avoided in their inevitable succession. Now, however, a new kind of hope is being entertained. The economic upswing has continued longer than anyone expected, longer than anyone thought possible. The hope grows that perhaps it can be kept growing indefinitely.

Most business executives agreed that the budget was the best statement of fiscal policy to come from the Liberals since they regained office in 1963. A typical reaction was that the refundable tax would help to dampen the leading edge of the boom without destroying it.

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce was generally favourable toward the budget and the chairman of its executive council said:

> The budget recognizes that the economy's thermostat has been set too high, and appropriately and realistically calls for some measures of restraint to bring about a better balance of supply and demand.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association called the levy imaginative. They said it was designed to meet current circumstances, and although it will not be liked by those affected it is much to be preferred to a flat tax increase. By providing for interest on the refund, the finance minister has demonstrated that he believes the modernization program of industry must only be reined in while inflation is a threat.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Budget generally found favour among Canadians, because the minister was not a victim of those who have been trying to press the panic button on inflation; because of the reduction in taxes on low-income groups as a step in the right direction in the war on poverty; because of originality in the conception of the 5 per cent refundable profit tax, and because of specific measures such as the removal of sales tax on production machinery.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is my modest contribution to the present debate on the budget which, I am sure, will be interpreted by all Canadians as realistic and as maintaining Canada, whose growing economy makes the whole world envious, on the road of progress.

[English]

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I think it is always a good thing, but especially in the closing hours of a debate, for one to abridge his remarks as much as possible. I will try to do that.

Many of my colleagues from the Atlantic region have in my opinion made most excellent speeches on the very important problems facing our part of the country. In my few minutes I wish to talk about one aspect only, and that is the relationship of the regional economy from which I come to the national economy. One of the fundamental responsibilities of the national government is to use its power, economic and otherwise, to minimize inequalities which exist as between regions in the country, and between particular regions and the country as a whole. Some of these regions suffer economic inequalities in large measure because of national policies. Therefore the responsibility of the national government becomes all the more sharp. It is all the more incumbent upon those of us from such areas to bring our legitimate complaints and our carefully thought out suggestions to the government's attention.

I believe that this government, through its policies, is diminishing its power to equalize the economic advantages and disadvantages in this country. I believe the whole confederation process was in part a measure for sharing economic wherewithal, and sharing advantages and disadvantages. My colleague from Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), or from Klondike South as he has facetiously been referred to did a good job in discussing the way in which the government has abridged its power to assist and to operate significantly in these areas.

I shall speak not of the power, and the diminution of that, but of the will to move in the direction of adjusting disparities between economic regions. I do not think that that will has been or is being shown. The parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) in my opinion made an excellent speech. Being a little more definitive, I would say that he did a fine job in arguing a very poor case.

I do not think that the strong point of the minister's Budget, or his Budget speech, was its attention to problems of regional economies or to measures that the government has taken in relation thereto. In the past we have made many suggestions as to improvements in the Atlantic region, where the disparities are becoming more acute. Many of us from time to time have pointed out instances where the government's actions have directly contributed to widening the gap which exists economically between Atlantic Canada and the rest of Canada. Let me cite in our own city of Charlottetown the closing of the Enamel & Heating Plant also to be mentioned are the closing of military bases such as the one at Goose Bay, and the closing down of H.M.C.S. Queen Charlotte.

If my colleague from Prince Edward Island had not dealt so well and so convincingly with the causeway deferment or rescheduling, I would have discussed it. We may come to a miraculous manifestation. Our causeway is going to be built just as quickly, while less money is going to be spent on it. A shorter season of the year is going to be used, and so on. Having listened to words to this effect, I wonder why such an inconsequential thing was even mentioned by the minister in his Budget night presentation.

We shall remember in Prince Edward Island this little exercise in semantics and we shall remember certain commitments which have been made as a result of explanations of what the minister said, when he was talking about his deferments.

History will record, and one need not adopt a partisan attitude to say this, that this government has never manifested concern for the Atlantic region, such as its predecessor manifested from its first days in office.

The former minister of finance has left the cabinet. But it would appear that his maritime outlook still lingers on. He said: "Assistance should be given to the maritimes who might wish to move to other parts of Canada where there might be greater opportunities". That is a little travel subsidy. I heard that the people of Bell Island in Newfoundland are going to come into this category. As they face their bleak economic future they will receive assistance in moving out.

I say, do not subsidize a program of pushing the maritimers out of the maritimes. Do something, rather, to push the region ahead economically so that our young people may be able to stay there and make their contribution to Canada in their own part of Canada. Why should we be the economic transients of this country, subsidized in our wanderings by the government? I hope sincerely that the Prime Minister's announcement this morning about Bell Island will be followed by something more substantial than the assistance in outward mobility to those people. I would hope that from the solutions which surely are now being mulled over, something will be done for those people. I hope some interim measure will be taken to keep the mine open perhaps until the end of the year, with government subsidy assistance, to help those people. I ask that not because those people are from my province or from my constituency, but because all maritimers know that if any part of the region suffers we all suffer; if any part flourishes, we are all the richer and the better for it.

We have each, in our areas, known economic adversity. I would think that a wise and careful government would adopt the same policy with regard to any region as it would in relation to the nation. It should know that no nation is truly prosperous if regions thereof are suffering economically. I think one thing could be said about the preceding government: that its outlook and development of economic policies was national.

I have been hearing all the bouquets which have been thrown at the minister. Some of them were so heavy they were heard. The minister made a mistake in his seeming unawareness that many policies and practices which he regards as useful in dealing with over-all national economic problems do not apply necessarily to some regions. I would not go so far as some of my colleagues, to say there is nothing good in his budget, although I have not time in 30 minutes to think of many good things. He may have sound policies in his boom restraint, but these do not apply to an area where, according to the latest statistics, 63,000 people are on the unemployment role. Yet none of them could be found to work on the causeway during the summer.

I think that he should recognize and should have recognized that policies which may be useful in the national scene could, when translated to the Atlantic region, be downright harmful. We do not need the application of brakes since we are not having any boom that is in any great danger of going bust, to use the vernacular.

I would suggest that the minister might have prepared himself by a more careful scrutiny of that very valuable and interesting document, the Second Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada, which body has made a careful study of regional growth and disparities. I wonder why the minister did not take advantage of this very important major piece of research.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I think the government should as a matter of urgent priority give attention to the serious economic problems of Atlantic Canada, because before us at this very time are many indications that the gap is not narrowing but widening.

I should like to read a recent editorial from a great newspaper in Atlantic Canada—the Fredericton Gleaner. With reference to unemployment, this article, which appeared on March 18, says:

> Nationally there was a slight improvement over January. Unemployment dropped by 3,000 in Canada, a percentage improvement of one-tenth of one per cent.
>
> In the Atlantic provinces the reverse was true. Unemployment increased by 2,000.
>
> This new decline in regional employment comes on top of the persistent chronic lag of the region behind the rest of the nation. Last month the unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces was 10.9 per cent, in the remainder of the nation the figure was 4.5 per cent.
>
> An unemployment rate of nearly 11 per cent is a serious thing in itself, especially since this is a period termed "prosperous". If this is prosperity, what will happen to this region in a recession?
>
> The initiative has not been seized and such halfway measures as have been taken (Prime Minister Pearson says we should be "grateful" for them) have come so far from closing the gap that it is actually widening in spite of them.

Following carefully the rules of the house, I subscribe precisely and fully to that comment.

I never thought that after witnessing the plethora of commissions which have been and are being conducted over Canada I would make the recommendation I am now about to make. I imagine there was never a time when we had so many inquiries going, and I suppose we would reach a stage of social equilibrium, as the social scientists would say, if half the population were investigating the other half. I have heard—though I believe this is apocryphal—that the universities are considering setting up a course intending to produce Bachelors of Inquiry. But since this brilliant budget—and I must place quotation marks on the word "brilliant"—has failed to take account of the regional disparity in the Atlantic provinces, I believe it is time to set up an all-embracing inquiry into the economy of the maritimes and the Atlantic provinces. Such an inquiry would consider all the factors, trends, conditions and prospects of growth within the region, and, what is more important, the relationship between the region and the rest of the country. It would give careful scrutiny to the adjustment of national policy in respect of increased economic goals for the Atlantic part of Canada. Important contributions have already been made by the Duncan and White commissions.

After watching painfully the way in which the national government has failed to show interest and initiative in dealing with the Atlantic economy I believe the time has come to set up another royal commission, comprehensive and all-embracing so that we may look quickly and with some sense of urgency at a situation where in a great and prosperous country such as Canada that part of Canada where confederation began slips further and further back while the rest of the country gets ahead. I believe another royal commission might at least focus attention on this question and amass information impressive enough for the minister, at some time, to use. I commend such a suggestion to him and to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am glad of this opportunity to say a few words on the Budget speech and on the whole economic situation in Canada. We are told, according to this Budget speech, that Canada is prosperous, that prosperity is everywhere and that everything is running smoothly. Then, when things are going too well, restrictions are imposed to prevent further progress.

Mr. Speaker, we are told the economy is in fine shape—why then are there restrictions on credit and investments?

I wish I were strong and powerful enough to open the ears of the Minister of Finance and the other ministers, particularly those who are at the controls, and especially the Prime Minister, who is the one in charge of the present administration, the country and the people.

The Minister of Finance is at the controls of all the monetary, economic and political machinery concerning taxation, income tax and gains. It is up to him especially, as well as to the others, to analyse the revenues, expenditures and gains of citizens, families and institutions.

The minister knows very well, through experience, that our democratic and financial systems can no longer co-exist and that instead of democracy there is at the moment a dictatorship which prevents young and old, men and women to live as they will. He should in fact understand that this is a real dictatorship exercised through the medium of hunger.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

There is discontent and strikes everywhere in Canada; raises in salary are asked for as a solution in industry, in transport, by mailmen, professors, engineers, students and even by civil servants: there are strikes in just about every sector. Why are workers, the builders of the country, so dissatisfied? I put the question to the minister, but I shall answer for him. It is because the people have had enough of excessive policies for Canada, of rationing and credit restrictions of austerity programs, and of excessive taxes, inquiries, investigations, forms, dictatorship and yokes, and loss of freedom.

The people are not satisfied with the present system. There is general discontent in this country and throughout the world; there is fear, insecurity, useless deprivations; crises follow one another; on the one hand, large quantities of essential goods are lost and, on the other hand, half the population is deprived, Canadians are unemployed and live in slums.

One fact remains, Mr. Speaker, and it is that the present economic system does not operate properly and leads to credit restrictions, overtaxation, unemployment, misery and the inconsistency of deprivation in the midst of plenty.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The present system penalizes the workers who do their work well, by making them unemployed; it penalizes the producers who do well and who produce all we need but who are respectful of the masters of finance who are not doing their own job well.

Banks currently refuse to lend money at reasonable interest rates; they do not care about the government and government regulations even though the government guarantees the loans.

Do you want instances? Take the National Housing Act, with 5½ per cent interest guaranteed by the government. I do not know of a single bank that has made a single loan on these terms. You have industrial development assistance under which the government guarantees loans up to $25,000; banks refuse to lend money at 5½ per cent with government endorsement, banks even refuse to lend on 6 per cent notes, but they will make family loans at 12 per cent.

Quite frequently, the banks refuse loans, even family loans, when the customer's solvency leaves to be desired; in such cases, he is advised to apply for his loan to a finance company where he has better chances of getting it. If the customer does get his loan, he pays up to 24 per cent in interest.

If the finance company has the money, it is because it has obtained credit from the bank. That is the true picture, Mr. Speaker. It is an odd situation and we have some difficulty in understanding the reason for the general dissatisfaction among the citizens. Successive taxes create inflation and, to correct the situation, further credit restrictions are imposed, investments are restricted, supposedly to fight inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the inflation in the present system is caused by the governments, their taxes and the debts they enter into and the interest they pay to the financial authorities of this and other countries. It is not the money in circulation.

The government enforces credit restrictions because it is in agreement with the bankers, because the citizens are too deep in debt, and the same is true for the school boards, the municipalities and vestry boards, for institutions of all kinds as well as for the farmers.

Here we must ask ourselves this question. Why are the citizens and the governments so much in debt with some financiers? It is because the government of Canada has given up controlling the issue of money and credit and put it in the hands of some private institutions which, through that control and that power, cash in on our wealth, adding the citizens' assets to their own and putting on the debit side the assets and inheritance of past generations; thus the assets of the governments have been entered on the debit side.

Our governments, our ministers of finance bow before those trusts to such an extent that they have become the tools or servants of those private institutions.

Instead of taking over again the control of money and credit, they bow before those institutions, they put the country into debt, they let the citizens get into debt and be robbed. The Minister of Finance knows very well that it is mathematically impossible to reimburse more money than was received from those institutions. Bankruptcies, debts relinquished, unreceivable, citizens in debt, governments in debt, budgetary deficits, credit restrictions and limited investments are the results. There is more unemployment and poverty, citizens are voicing their dissatisfaction, workers go on strike, families are being dislocated, children are left without anybody to care for them, without education, farmers leave their farms, businesses go bankrupt, the wealthy become wealthier, but fewer in number, there is more poverty, the working man is robbed to help the unemployed, a large number of people live on welfare, the federal government's contribution to social welfare is nearly $1.5 billion, as much as for national defence, besides the hundreds of millions of dollars paid by the provinces.

To develop our natural resources, build bridges and roads, expand industries, build family dwellings, schools, universities, churches, hospitals, establish municipalities, school boards, you have to run deeper into debt, and this falls on the taxpayer already crushed by private and public debts of the past.

The Minister of Finance is mainly responsible for our anti-social and anti-human system; usurers, usurpers, murderers who will lead future generations to suicide.

As a corrective measure, winter work programs were invented. It is the biggest farce yet. Seventy five per cent of the money given municipalities goes to waste.

People are even used as beasts of burden. I have seen in my own constituency people harnessed to a wagon to carry soil up a hill. Instead of using horses, 25 or 30 men had been harnessed to a wagon to carry stones and earth. It costs a hundred times more to use men instead of machines. Although machines are available, representing progress, we still prefer the ancient way of doing things with human hands.

Is that what is called progress? Is that the fine budget which newspapers and publicists praised to high heaven? A tremendous amount of publicity was given to a debt-incurring budget, which does not face up to realities in Canada.

There are in this house many members, including the Minister of Finance, who see only prosperity and growth. I submit that many institutions, like the stock exchange, fleece our people. Investors draw in interest three times the capital loaned and even at that the capital is still intact. That is, hon. minister, the area where you should keep a watchful eye.

The Minister of Finance foresees a marked increase in national production which will reach $54 billion but he provides no means allowing this increased prdouction to reach the householders, the tables of Canadians, those who are unshod and shabbily clothed, and those families who are in need of better housing and who could make use of progress and scientific developments available.

No, the minister prefers to put the brakes on investments and credits which will increase even more the wealth of the blood suckers spawned by an obsolete and orthodox system, devoid of social sense and heedless of the common weal.

With a stroke of the pen the banker swells the figures in his books in order to increase the debts; as there are a great number of debt-ridden persons, they are refused more credit.

Others who do not like to get into debt avoid asking the banker to wield his pen. The figures remain static because they refuse to get deeper into debt.

No other pen than that one can write down figures giving a right to goods. It is not on God's orders that there are no others, but because of a stupid rule made by men, by those entrusted with the administration.

Figures are adjustable, but when they are related to amounts entitling to goods, it is man who is adjusted to the figures.

The man is there feeling hungry, there is food but no figure. A great many people find that normal and feel that this system is entirely sound and moral. Those who think like that are like those who have their nose in manure and smell nothing; they even think it smells good.

The financial system is a failure and yet the present leaders declares that it should be preserved and protected.

The present system put Canada $75 million in debt when Confederation was established. Today, after 99 years of unstinting work, our national debt has reached $25 billion and the indebtedness of all governments and of the Canadian people totals $86 billion. The public debt comprises money which does not exist, which never existed and which the governments have undertaken to repay with interest.

Our economic life is rotten. This way of coining money lending it and imposing an interest upon it at birth, is the most diabolical invention ever thought of to disrupt the economy, to sabotage, to sow discord and hate between nations and men and to change man into a wolf preying on his fellow men.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As a solution to this problem, Mr. Speaker, there are two ways by which men could purchase their share of progress: first, by lowering the price of goods, to allow to get more for each dollar; second, by increasing the number of dollars in the hands of the consumers.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

We are obliged to curtail production. But, Mr. Speaker, if there is no production then why curtail it? Then, there is no problem production wise.

Those who remain attached to the old method of financial distribution are enemies of progress. They paralyse its expansion in production and prepare the revolution; since progress is what distinguishes man from beast, Social Credit establishes a distinction between intelligent and stupid people.

Mr. Speaker, I would say in passing to the Minister of Finance that the income tax formula contains serious discrimination. Why not have the same income tax formula for all citizens? Why protect some groups in our society by taxing them less? All citizens should be on the same footing. Why allow some institutions to build up some reserves, undeclared or declared, so that they might invest in the stock market and other institutions, in order finally to declare that they are capital gains exempt from tax? This is one injustice I point out to the minister. There would be a lot more to say about that.

In order to be fair, single people who earn $3,000 should be tax exempt just like married people with an income of $5,000, and also there should be an exemption of $1,000 for each child.

As far as family allowances are concerned, in 1945 they were $5, $6, $7 and $8 a month and national production reached $11,400 million. Family allowances have remained almost at the same rate, that is $6 and $8 a month, while production reached $51 billion in 1965. Could we not have found two extra billion for the children 16 years of age or under who have no purchasing power? The amount of $6 a month or 20 cents a day is not even enough to buy a quart of milk or to pay the taxes included in the current cost of living of those children.

Old age pensions were increased from $40 to $46, from $55 to $65, and from $65 to $75. The cost of living of a child under 16 is just as high as that of a senior citizen.

The ministers and members in Ottawa, who are the only ones responsible for legislating and allocating funds in the field of family allowances, should first of all increase those allowances and adjust them to the cost of living.

Instead of laughing at families by giving them $6 and $8, we should give them adequate allowances instead of miserly ones. All other elements have been multiplied by 6, 8, 10 and 12. The 6.7 million children in 2.8 million families would thus have a purchasing power adjusted to the evolution of the economy since 1945 and the $2 billion injected in the consumption in the provinces, cities and rural areas would give new impetus to the economy, production, industry, trade, construction, education, labour and balance family payments throughout Canada, without distinction of race, religion, language, sex or nationality. That would be a proof of common sense with regard to our families and our children.

Progress causes unemployment, the system must cause lay-offs. Greater money supply without higher prices. Figures and prices must dovetail. There are no production problems, only purchasing problems. People do without things not for lack of production, but for lack of money.

Several members, of parliament and many Canadian citizens, might perchance be tempted to ask what would be the use of putting more money in circulation? But ask yourselves what is the use of having products if there is no money to purchase them. They only serve to create unemployment, frustrated and discouraged people.

With the present financial system, it is impossible to lower prices without harming the producer, as it is impossible to fill purses without raising prices.

If workers, through strikes or by other means, get higher wages, these raises are included in prices and the latter go up. The disparity remains between prices and buying power of money.

What should we do? We must put machines to work and distribute dividends to people. That is what we must do, Mr. Speaker.

Why should we ask for further production instead of asking for money to buy products which, in fact, are plentiful? To ask for work in order to buy the output of labour is tantamount to being forced to earn one's bread twice while eating it once. To ask for public works under the present financial system is just like asking for an increase in the cost of living.

Public production must be paid the same as private production.

The government makes us pay for public works through taxes. Do workers asking for public works want more taxes, which are already very burdensome on the family budget? When some taxes are not paid by them directly, they fall back on the taxpayer anyway through prices.

The solution would be found in the distribution of more buying power, but without burdening the industry or the taxpayers. If the industry is asked to pay more, it will raise its prices. If the taxpayers are asked to pay more, the buying power is reduced.

Do you not see also that the present financial system is at the root of all our problems, all our difficulties in both the public and private sectors?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for York North.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a comparative newcomer to this house, may I ask for your guidance in respect of whether as Minister of Finance I have the privilege of speaking again on the motion to go into committee of ways and means. I am a little uncertain and would not want to transgress the rules or do anything which is not in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps I should refer the minister, in respect of his right of reply, to standing order 37 on pages 31 and 32. Standing order 37(2) reads as follows:

(2) A reply shall be allowed to a member who has moved a substantive motion, but not to the mover of an amendment, the previous question or an instruction to a committee:

Then subsection (3):

(3) In all cases Mr. Speaker shall inform the house that the reply of the mover of the original motion closes the debate.

I think the question before the house now is whether or not this is a substantive motion. If the motion before the house to resolve itself into committee of ways and means is a substantive motion, then the minister is entitled to exercise the right of reply; if it is not a substantive motion, he has no right of reply. Therefore, the question before the house is, is this motion or is it not a substantive motion.

• (5:20 p.m.)

A definition of a substantive motion is given by Beauchesne at page 165 as follows:

A substantive motion is a self-contained proposal not incidental to any proceeding, amendable and drafted in such a way as to be capable of expressing a decision of the house.

I would think the motion before the house is incidental to a proceeding of the house, in the sense that it is the procedure by which the house proceeds to the work of the committee of ways and means. I think this motion is a procedural and not a substantive one, and therefore the Minister of Finance does not have the right of reply.

May I refer hon. members to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Beaudoin on April 2, 1957, when the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Harris, rose to speak in almost exactly the same situation. Mr. Speaker Beaudoin then ruled that while there was an argument for both sides, he would take the view that it was not a substantive motion and therefore the minister did not have the right of reply. I would give this information to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Sharp: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I would have welcomed the opportunity to make a few brief remarks in reply, but I shall certainly abide by your ruling.

Mr. John H. Addison (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members in the house would rather hear from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) than myself at this time. I have been watching the clock and it seemed to me I would not have this distinct privilege but that he would. However, fate is sometimes in the hands of other people, and in this particular case Your Honour was the judge.

I wanted to speak this afternoon, and am delighted I have the opportunity to do so, because of the exchange that took place in the house this morning between the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) and the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) with regard to the whole question of automobile safety. I listened very carefully this afternoon to the remarks of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) who suggested that his was not a political argument and was not partisan in the sense that one political party was capturing the attention of the public in regard to the particular problem to which he was referring.

I for one certainly do not wish to see this question of automobile safety become a partisan, political instrument which can be used for a particular purpose or a particular party. I think everyone in this house is genuinely concerned about the safety of every Canadian citizen. I believe the problem facing us is a very substantial one. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi suggested that the hon. member for Villeneuve should not be included in dealing with this problem because he had a conflict of interest. It may be assumed that I have a conflict of interest in this respect, but I would suggest this is an absurd assumption because those of us who are in the automobile business and understand it—and I have been in the business for 15 years—have something to offer for the general good.

I think we must identify the problem. I am sure we have all had experience through close, personal friends and others, of automobile accidents and deaths. Last year in Canada 4,879 people met their death in automobile accidents. A total of 395,310 people were injured in Canada last year. One traffic death occurs every 100 minutes in Canada, and one injury occurs every 3½ minutes. In 1966, there will be 385,000 young Canadians who will reach driving age and only 6 per cent of them will have received any standard driving course. It is also interesting to note that 27 per cent of all traffic victims in 1965 were pedestrians.

Let us consider the statistics in the United States. Every 13 minutes a man, woman or child is killed in a traffic accident in that country. Every 18 seconds somebody is injured seriously enough to be disabled beyond the day of the accident. Financial losses in the United States pile up at the rate of $15,000 per second around the clock.

We have heard and read a great deal about the discussion that has been taking place in the United States with regard to automobile safety. Most of the publicity, serving the sensational side of this problem, is concerned with events after the accident has actually taken place, what happens inside the car, truck or other vehicle or what happens to the object it hits. It seems to me that the old adage "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" could well be applied here.

A program called "Elmer the safety elephant that never forgets" was instituted about 19 years ago in our public schools. This program is for children between the ages of approximately five to nine years and is sponsored in Canada by the Canadian Highway Council. A city that is very close to us, Hull, instituted this program a short while ago in 22 schools in the area. I am sorry the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), who sits in front of me, is not here today. Comparing a five-month period when the Elmer safety program was not in effect with the same five months when the program was in effect, it was found that the accident rate in regard to children in Hull was cut by 50 per cent. This great reduction in accidents applies right across the country where the program is instituted, but it is only instituted in a fraction of the schools in Canada.

It is estimated that 85 per cent of motor vehicle accidents are caused by human error, 10 per cent by mechanical failure and 5 per cent by natural causes, weather, defective roads or whatever the case may be. I had the opportunity of speaking with a member from Vancouver today, who told me the experience in that city as a result of the safety check for motor vehicles that is mandatory. In Vancouver it is mandatory for each motor vehicle to be subjected to an inspection and safety test twice a year. Whereas the average across the country of automobile accidents due to mechanical failure is 10 per cent, because of the program in the city of Vancouver they have cut this figure to 1 per cent. This safety check program is rigidly enforced by the law in that city and the statistics prove conclusively that accident rates can be cut by proper maintenance of automobiles.

In the whole of Canada there are approximately 6,366,000 vehicles on the roads today. The alarming thing is that of this number, 5,200,000 are from three to nine years old. With regard to the 5 per cent of accidents caused by physical defects such as roads and so on, the Good Roads Association across Canada, together with the provincial Ministers of Transport, are inquiring into the problem. As I have mentioned already, 385,000 young Canadians will reach driving age this year, of whom only 6 per cent will receive standard driving training. In addition, Mr. Speaker, in Canada there are about 7,400,000 licensed drivers.

• (5:30 p.m.)

It is interesting to note that about one third of the licensed drivers in Canada are women. I am sure they will be glad to learn that men are involved in up to eight or nine times as many accidents as are the women. Of course, the men do much more difficult driving. Statistics do show that drivers who take a certified driver training course have 50 per cent fewer accidents and 81 per cent fewer traffic violations.

A great many people have been discussing what the role of the federal government should be in connection with this particular problem I should like to quote from part of the talk given by Mr. Keith H. MacDonald, general chairman of the Canadian Highway Safety Council, when he was speaking to the British Columbia Highway Safety Council in April, 1966. This is what he said about the federal government:

> The federal government, for example, must supply leadership in the fight for safety. It must demonstrate that it is concerned about improving the traffic conditions. It must do something more than acknowledge the problem.
>
> As our biggest employer, the federal government can set an example for employers across the country by adopting the kind of employee education programs some of our large corporations have found effective. At present it is far behind industry in this respect. Governments should lay down safety standards for the vehicles they operate and provide adequate training and improvement courses for their drivers.
>
> Ottawa can make extremely valuable contributions toward safety education through the facilities of the C.B.C., radio and T.V., and the National Film Board. Constructive support for organized safety campaigns by these public information agencies will get the safety message to a wider audience. This is, after all, the avowed purpose of their existence—public service.

What has the federal government done in the United States? It is startling when you hear it. President Johnson has proposed increasing federal spending for traffic safety by $700 million over the next six years. Under his program federal grants to the state would be increased, the Secretary of Commerce would be empowered to determine automotive safety performance criteria, and the federal government's highway safety research efforts would be expanded. The states would be expected to use their grant money for driver education and licensing, advanced traffic control techniques, vehicle inspection, the improvement of police and emergency medical services, and for other specific purposes.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, Mr. Speaker, the federal government contribution to the Canadian Highway Safety Council was $25,000 last year. We have made a magnamious effort and increased it to $40,000 this year. The Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) has instructed the Canadian Government Specifications Board to inquire into the problem. The problem is of tremendous magnitude.

One thing we must do in Canada is to adopt uniform traffic signals. We cannot be in a position, for example, where the province of Quebec is changing to the international system; where the United States is changing to the continental system, and where a province is changing to another system. The traffic laws of Ontario permit you to turn right on a red light. In most of the province of Alberta, you cannot turn right on a red light, but in the city of Calgary you can. Well, this is an absurd situation. We must have a uniform code for the rules of the road.

Each province has jurisdiction over traffic. I suspect, however, that as emergencies arise, as in the case of the Atlantic Acceptance bankruptcy, the provinces will return to the federal government some of their jurisdiction and this will enable the federal government to conduct more properly the affairs of the nation. In the near future I predict a return to the federal government of authority in so far as traffic legislation is concerned.

We have three agencies in the federal government interested in this problem. There is the Department of Health and Welfare, which is obviously concerned with the welfare of the people. We have the Department of Justice, which does not administer but which has established the Criminal Code. We have also a Department of Industry which should be responsible for setting standards relating to automobile safety equipment. The code treatment which has been proposed by the Minister of Industry will deal with the human, mechanical and environmental aspects of automobile safety. I hope that at this conference which is proposed all interested parties would have an opportunity for presentations. This would include unions, associations, clubs, manufacturers, provincial authorities, roadbuilding officials, municipal officials—all the people who are concerned with automobile safety across this country.

If we are to have any semblance of order, then these programs must be adopted. There is no reason why all the municipalities and all the provinces together with the federal government cannot agree on a simplified, standard traffic code for this country. Perhaps conditions vary slightly from one province to the other but it does seem to be nonsense for each province to have different standards, particularly when we are inviting people to drive across Canada and encouraging visitors to come to Canada.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Minister of Industry at the earliest opportunity, to bring before the house the Canada-U.S. automobile agreement, so that we can examine it. We have not accepted it in the house as yet, but in theory we have accepted a continental automobile industry. I suggest that in the future we will also have a continental approach to traffic. Some members have given notice of their intention to introduce legislation in this field. If we have to legislate here, we must be very careful that we do not pass laws which will not apply to automobiles coming from the United States, and vice-versa.

I am not here to defend manufacturers, to defend governments or to defend anyone. This is a social problem. We spend millions and millions of dollars on old age pensioners, on grants to put our children through school and so on. This is a problem that can be cured and we know the cure if we will get down to work and adopt it. Last year the provinces gathered together, from taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel and motor vehicle license fees, $831 million. This is a sizeable amount of money, and I strongly believe part of this money should be spent on highway safety investigation. The federal government, because it is the central government, must take the lead. We have been neglecting the problem. We must accept the responsibility. Certainly the fact the provinces have jurisdiction presents a difficulty, but we have had experience in that particular field.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As I said at the beginning my purpose is not to criticize any particular group. To me, the best interest is to act in accordance with the leadership of the federal government. We know that modern scientific techniques which have been applied to car and truck manufacturing, to the building of roads and bridges and to driver training can bring about a program that will substantially reduce traffic fatalities. Mr. Speaker, we have waited too long to bring this about. I suggest we start now.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments remaining in the Budget debate I wanted to place on the record matters that, had there been an extra 10 or 15 minutes, I should have gone into more thoroughly. However, I am grateful for the one or two remaining moments.

The first thing I wish to do is to thank the minister, and particularly the government, for the stated attitude that has been taken toward the maritime area, because the government will sit down in the near future with the provinces to discuss federal-provincial tax sharing for the period 1967 to 1972.

I hope that this attitude will be followed through to its hoped for completion. In my province of Nova Scotia this could result in an increase in revenue to the province of something in excess of $50 million. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister will not stray from these declared intentions. Indeed I hope and it remains a continuing hope that the government in the striking of a new basis for the sharing will not veer from the national average, but rather will stick to the average of the two highest provinces and use this as a yardstick when it enters into the tax sharing conference in the fall.

Very briefly, may I in one minute deal with what is rapidly developing into one of the most serious labour crises in the country. I refer briefly to two situations, the first concerning defence employees at H.M.C. Dockyard in Halifax, and the second concerning the army depot and naval magazine at H.M.C.S. Shearwater, where there is continued discrimination against certain kinds of employees.

Will you be good enough, Mr. Speaker, at the appropriate time to tell me when I should stop my remarks.

I do not propose to trace the history of the founding formula for the prevailing rates policy. It goes back to 1934 and 1935. I simply suggest that, perhaps, 30 years later it is time that the government found some other basis upon which to look at the matter of payment of hourly paid employees within the Department of National Defence throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I draw to the hon. member's attention that the time has come for him to complete his remarks.

It being 5.45 o'clock it is my duty pursuant to special order made on Thursday last to interrupt these proceedings forthwith and to put the question on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On division.

Motion (Mr. Sharp) agreed to on division.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 945-1, 7905-1, 20925-1, 21045-1, 23505-1, 23705-1, 24100-1, 26325-1, 41105-1, 42205-1, 44043-1, 44047-1, 44125-1, 70500-1, 70505-1 and 84805-1, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): May I ask the house leader what the business of the house will be from Monday next?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): It is a pleasure to be asked in such a way by such a member. The business for Monday and Tuesday will be as indicated last night.

The first item is No. 47 on the order paper, the resolution to introduce a measure to provide for collective bargaining for the public service; then item 42, second reading of Bill C-165, to provide for the construction of the Canadian National branch line in Northern Ontario; then item 15, second reading of Bill C-149, to provide for the establishment of a Science Council of Canada; then item 4, second reading of Bill C-150, to amend the Research Council Act; then item 8, with the house in committee on Bill C-145, to provide for the commercial fisheries in Canada; then the bill which is in today's Votes and Proceedings, to amend the Combines Investigation Act, and the Criminal Code.

The Deputy Speaker: Would I be expressing the wish of the house if I called it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 25, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

• (2:40 p.m.)

REDISTRIBUTION

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the provisions of standing order 15A, I propose that the question of allocation of time for the consideration of objections made pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act be referred to the business committee. Before you read my proposal, Mr. Speaker, since this is the first time this rule has been invoked in the house, I would like the indulgence of the house to make a brief explanation of the reason it is put forward at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: The reason for putting it forward is that the house leaders have been considering the method of having the debate on the redistribution objections conducted in a way that would be satisfactory to all hon. members, in the sense that it would give them a fair and equitable proportion of the time for discussing the various matters as they relate to their particular parts of the country.

There are some 33 notices of objections before the Chair, and they are distributed among nine provinces.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could you give the numbers for each province?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. For Alberta there is one, but it relates to all the districts. For British Columbia there is one relating to all the districts and another relating to an individual constituency. For Manitoba there is one relating to all the districts. For New Brunswick there is one relating to all the districts. For Nova Scotia there are three relating to individual constituencies. For Ontario there is one relating to all the districts and four relating to individual constituencies. For Prince Edward Island there is one relating to all the districts. For Quebec there are two relating to all the districts and 18 relating to individual constituencies. For Saskatchewan there is one relating to all the districts. That makes a total of 33, of which 24 relate to individual constituencies. Therefore it would seem that there should be some method of apportioning time to give some reasonably fair distribution of the time to discuss the various types of objections. For instance, some of the objections relating to individual constituencies concern only the use of names and things like that.

While there is every prospect that we may have a satisfactory agreement, I thought it well to give this notice under the standing order. I hope that when we start the debate on Wednesday we will not have to use the procedure under standing order 15A at all. However, if we do it will be only to have the total amount of time fixed by statute evenly distributed among the various provinces.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, is there any possibility of having a discussion on this? I ask because I am a member from Alberta; my name is on a list along with 17 other members from Alberta, and I intend to talk on redistribution.

Mr. McIlraith: The whole purpose of the rule is that the discussion on the allocation of time, instead of taking place in the house, would take place among the party house leaders.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the house leader for a moment. First of all I am rather surprised that he would introduce this motion at this stage without first setting up the business committee. Actually, as the house leader himself has said, the new rules in this respect have not been applied previously, but as I understood them we would set up a business committee which would sit down and work out these proposals and then submit a notice saying, "We are going to allocate such an amount of time." This proposal could have the appearance of a guillotine, to say we would have so much time to discuss a very important question, namely redistribution. The right to discuss this question is in accordance with the act which we passed in parliament.

I know the house leader will agree with me that all the problems are not being raised by one party. They are being raised by members in all parties. He has only to talk to some of the members of his own party to understand the difficulties involved, because everybody in every province of Canada is concerned about the problem.

I think this is very important to our discussion. I am answering the house leader's remarks quickly now, but this could develop into somewhat of a contentious problem. If this matter could be worked out amicably then the problem probably could be solved much more easily. However, by doing it in this way before the business committee is set up and before there is a meeting of the house leaders, the government is saying in effect "We are going to serve notice that if the guillotine is needed to get on with this, we will use it".

On this side of the house we have taken a stand in respect of the redistribution act. We pointed out the difficulties which the members of the house leader's own party and the government now realize exist in that act. There are certain problems which will arise in this debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, following the remarks made this afternoon by the government house leader (Mr. McIlraith) to the effect that 33 petitions have been submitted to the house with regard to the readjustment of electoral boundaries as suggested by the various federal-provincial commissions, I wish to point out to the minister that 158 federal members of all political parties in the house have objected to the electoral boundaries proposed by those various federal-provincial commissions.

Mr. Speaker, there appears in my name on the order paper, under the heading of public bills, Bill No. C-143 entitled an act to repeal the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act which deals with the matter now under discussion.

Now, would the government house leader agree that Wednesday, for instance, we start by considering this bill, after obtaining the unanimous consent of the house, so as to determine what the federal members, Liberal, Conservative or others, want to decide or discuss in this connection?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Speaker, I understand that the government house leader said there are 33 petitions, which means that 158 federal members are not at all satisfied about the new federal boundaries suggested by the federal-provincial commissions.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Public Works to be clear and precise on that subject. We are not going to accept a motion limiting the debate and imposing closure on any member of the house. We want him to be precise and to give the house the opportunity to discuss freely the new electoral boundaries.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I must tell him as well as the other members of the house that it is out of order to start a debate at this time. There is no motion before the house. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) made this proposal in order to have the hon. members' arguments studied by the special committee. That is the minister's suggestion. We would therefore be making a mistake if we kept up a debate on the subject of redistribution when all we have is a simple suggestion made under standing order 15-A. I would ask hon. members who want to make representations along the lines of those just made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and which undoubtedly deserve all possible consideration, to submit them to that committee for study, when it has been set up.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

In the same circumstances, should you not have called the Minister of Public Works to order? I do not think he had the authorization to deal with that matter the way he did a little earlier.

Mr. Speaker: I am under the impression that the minister wanted to explain why he wanted to make that proposal to the house. He did not have to make it. He did it as a matter of courtesy to the house.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): If the government house leader had made this proposition for consideration by the house, perhaps he did not have the right to do so. I believe, as you said, that he did so by courtesy. Now, if he was allowed to make this proposition, I think we have the right to say why we do not accept it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Suggestions which hon. members would like to make should be conveyed through their spokesman during the meeting of the committee in question.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, and in regard to the last remarks made by Your Honour, may I respectfully submit that there is no business committee and that no request has been made of any party leader to name members to a business committee. Although standing order 15-A(3) says there shall be a report back from the business committee, there can be no compliance with rule 15-A(3), which sets a time limit, since it is non-operative in that there cannot be a reference dated from today to a non-existing committee. Therefore the first step must be to establish the business committee, and I think Your Honour will agree there is no such committee.

Mr. Speaker: Without entering into a discussion with the hon. member I may say that notification has been received from each of the parties as to their nominees to the committee. It is my understanding in view of that fact that the committee does exist, because that is the only requirement we have at the moment under the rules. As the Minister of Public Works has pointed out, this is a new rule and naturally there will be some difficulty in putting it into proper working order. The suggestions made by hon. members will be taken into consideration by the Chair and, I am sure, by the government house leader.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the arguments proposed by the government house leader and others, and in order that we may proceed with this debate on a more amicable basis as a result of a meeting of house leaders and others regarding the appropriate allocation of time, I wonder whether the house leader would consider withdrawing this notice of motion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding about what has been done.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister explain what has been done?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to do so. The time for this debate is fixed by statute, and there is no suggestion that we are limiting the time allotted in that regard. However, there are 33 motions to be disposed of within the statutory time limit. The only way of obtaining the assurance that there would be a fair and equitable distribution of the time to be devoted to the consideration of each of these motions was by unanimous agreement of the house leaders, which I am very hopeful we will obtain.

I may say there is every indication, if we avail ourselves of this rule which provides that in the event of unanimous agreement of the business committee an agreement can be made an order of the house, that this will be done. It was for this reason, and this reason alone, that I gave the notice.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question. I do not think the minister is suggesting that by statute there is a time limit for the debate. There is a limit as to the time in which to debate the subject after the commissioners have filed reports with the Speaker. I do not think the minister is suggesting for a moment that the statute itself limits the time for consideration of the matter. It was my impression when he moved the motion that he was setting the time limit.

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid I cannot agree with either part of my hon. friend's remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, do you agree with the first part?

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Woolliams: Then I will put the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will hon. members not agree with the Chair that we are not making any progress now? As I understand it there have been discussions until now among the party representatives, and I gather—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: —that these discussions will continue.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I am just saying what my understanding is. I may be wrong, but I gathered that representatives of the different parties in the house had been discussing the modality of discussion in connection with the debate under the redistribution act. If not, I assume that this type of discussion will take place and if no progress is made, if there can be no agreement among the parties, at that point a time might be set for opposition objection to be discussed in the house. But I suggest to hon. members that this is certainly not the time, on orders of the day, to try to regulate the debate which we will have under the redistribution act later this week.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): With great deference, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a very significant principle at stake here. The minister has stated that by statute we are limited in the time the house can take for the discussion of this matter. My understanding—and I have not looked up the law; I did not expect this matter to be raised today—is that the only fixation is that in so many days after the reports are made the discussion shall have taken place and be completed.

What the minister is saying, in effect, is that having delayed so long in introducing this matter he now has but a few days, and because of the failure of the government to introduce it earlier we are to be subjected to a guillotine to be fixed by the government. That is something we will not accept, Mr. Speaker, with great deference.

It is a serious step that is being taken. The government is asking parliament not to debate this matter at greater length because it failed to bring the matter before parliament in the intervening weeks since the house began the session. Surely we cannot be limited by self serving action on the part of the government to save itself from the consequences of its failure to bring this matter before parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Whether or not the point raised by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is well taken, I suggest again that this is not the time to reach a decision on the matter. In due course, perhaps when the motion is made later on or after we have discussed the different objections in the house, there may be further consideration by hon. members on whether there should be a time limit. But I suggest we cannot decide the question at this time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the situation is that by statute the debate on the redistribution question has to be completed by a week from next Wednesday.

Mr. McIlraith: That is correct.

Mr. Douglas: The whole purpose of the motion by the house leader for the government is that the time between now, or whenever the debate starts, and a week from Wednesday should be allocated by the business committee of the house in such a way that every member who has an objection will have an opportunity to state that objection, rather than having a few of the objections dealt with and the rest left untouched.

• (3:00 p.m.)

I can see no harm in referring this matter to the business committee. My understanding of the new rules is that the business committee still has to report back and ask for an order of the house with reference to any allocation of time. We are not allocating time by this motion. All we are doing is to ask the business committee to discuss the matter and, if they agree, to make a report back and ask for an order of the house allocating time during the period when the debate starts and when it must end a week from next Wednesday. If there is some dispute as to the legislation, to the effect that the debate does not have to end a week from next Wednesday, then we can discuss that matter when the order of the house comes up for discussion, and the house leaders can also discuss it.

It seems to me that the quickest way to dispose of this right now is to agree that the house ask the business committee to look into that matter and see whether there is any possibility of allocating time in such a fair and equitable manner that all members who have complaints may have an opportunity of registering their opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, you were perfectly right a moment ago when you said that the business committee had not yet been established.

In the circumstances I do not think that the Minister of Public Works should have raised the question before the house at this time. That there should be a meeting of the house leaders to find out how matters stand, it would seem to me that it would be normal to start by that, and then establish the business committee, and report to the house what the house leaders or the business committee have decided.

But, as you said a while ago, no business committee has yet been constituted.

I suggest, pursuant to standing orders, that on this question you ask the Minister of Public Works not to rise again, but wait for the meeting of the house leaders of the various parties and establish the business committee, so that we know exactly where we are going, because, at this time, we do not know where we are going and where, in particular, the Minister of Public Works wants to lead us.

[English]

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Hochelaga) moved that the second report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, presented to the house on the 22nd instant, be now concurred in.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, notice of this motion was given Friday.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I oppose this motion, as I think many members of the house do, in view of the manner in which it is presented. I believe the house has made some decisions regarding the effective operation of committees. It seems to me that if two or three committees ask permission to sit indefinitely while the house is sitting, then a large number of members are precluded from attending this house, and this is not advantageous.

I would have no objection—I think many hon. members of the house feel this way—if on occasion, when witnesses are being heard by a committee, the house were asked to give the committee permission to sit while the house is sitting, for that specific purpose. I would not oppose the motion if the wording were to indicate a limit on the length of time for which the request is made. I presume that if the mover and seconder limited their request to the rest of this week this would probably suffice, and would eliminate the need for a further outline of why opposition is taken to the motion.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to move an amendment to the report, having had informal consultations, to the effect that the committee have leave to sit only during this week, but I am informed that such an amendment would be out of order. I would hope that the house would pass this motion today if it were to give unanimous consent that the motion be amended to this effect. It would be improper for me to make such an amendment, but I would ask the house to concur in the chairman's report, subject to the committee being authorized to meet while the house is sitting from Monday, April 25 to Thursday, April 28 inclusive.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the proposition advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion, following amendment of the report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCES

On the order:

Introduction of bills. Mr. Choquette—Bill intituled an act to amend the Criminal Code (repeal of power to commute a sentence of death).

Mr. Speaker: On Thursday, April 21 last the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) rose on a point of order in respect of a bill appearing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) intituled "an act to amend the Criminal Code (repeal of power to commute a sentence of death)". The Leader of the Opposition then stated that there can be no interference with the Queen's right to grant mercy and that such bill ought not to be on the order paper, as being unconstitutional and improper.

As hon. members know, the Speaker does not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law. However, it is his duty to ascertain that there is no departure from our standing orders or the ordinary conduct of our proceedings or legislative business.

In the same manner as, for instance, it is the duty of the Speaker to determine whether a bill involves an expenditure of money and, if it does, to see that the expenditure be first considered as a resolution in committee of the whole and that such resolution be accompanied by the recommendation of the Governor General, it is in the present case the duty of the Speaker to determine whether this bill interferes with the Queen's prerogatives and to see that the proper procedure be followed.

Criminal Code

Reference to page 413 of Bourinot's fourth edition and citation 283 of Beauchesne's fourth edition indicates that the consent of the crown is always necessary in matters involving the prerogatives of the crown, and that such consent may be given at any stage of a bill before final passage, though in the Canadian house it is generally signified on the motion for second reading. This consent may be given by a special message or by a verbal statement by a minister, the latter being the usual procedure in such cases.

• (3:10 p.m.)

It will also be seen that a bill may be permitted to proceed to the very last stage without receiving the consent of the crown, but if it is not given at the last stage the Speaker will refuse to put the question. It is also stated that if the introducer of a bill finds, from the statements of a minister, that the consent will be withheld, he has no alternative open to him except to withdraw the measure.

I now have had an opportunity to peruse the provisions of the bill in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière. It would seem to me that the bill purports to amend the Criminal Code by deleting subsection 2 of section 655 and also section 656. This subsection and section give the Governor in Council certain statutory powers with regard to pardon and commutation of sentence which, according to the terms of section 658 of the code, do not affect in any manner Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy. If, as stated in the code, subsection 2 of section 655 and section 656 do not in any manner affect Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy, I have difficulty in coming to the conclusion that amending them or deleting them would affect such royal prerogative. Section 658 of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

658. Nothing in this act in any manner limits or affects Her Majesty's royal prerogative of mercy.

In my opinion it is reasonable to conclude that the provisions of this section are not affected in any way by the hon. member's bill. In other words, the crown's prerogative of mercy is not affected but only the exercise of the statutory powers of the Governor in Council.

Taking that into consideration and also the fact that it is the passing of a bill rather than the introduction thereof which would constitute an infringement of the royal prerogative, I think I should come to the conclusion to permit the motion for leave to introduce such a bill and to let the house decide by their vote if such a motion should be adopted.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-168, to amend the Criminal Code (Repeal of Power to Commute a Sentence of death).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: I understand the deep royalist dissent of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), but I must admit that I am submitting this bill in all good faith.

Let me explain: Since 1963, all death sentences have been commuted by the present government. In addition, when the vote was taken recently on the question of capital punishment, most cabinet members were in favour of its abolition. Therefore, I saw fit to introduce this bill so that a judicial type body might be empowered to commute death sentences, thus withdrawing such power from the cabinet.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Churchill: No.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Choquette) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Allmand	Cardin
Badanai	Caron
Barnett	Carter
Batten	Choquette
Béchard	Chrétien
Benson	Clermont
Brewin	Côté (Longueuil)
Brown	Crossman
Cadieux (Terrebonne)	Davis
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)	Deachman
Caouette	Douglas
	Dubé

Duquet
Émard
Éthier
Fawcett
Foy
Gauthier
Gray
Greene
Grégoire
Groos
Habel
Haidasz
Harley
Hellyer
Herridge
Hopkins
Howe (Hamilton South)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Johnston
Laing
Langlois (Mégantic)
Laprise
Leboe
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard
Lewis
Loiselle
Mackasey
McIlraith
McNulty
McWilliam
Marchand
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matte
Morison
Nixon
O'Keefe
Olson
Orange
Patterson
Pearson
Pelletier
Pennell
Peters
Pickersgill
Pilon
Prud'homme
Richard
Rideout (Mrs.)
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rock
Saltsman
Schreyer
Sharp
Simard
Stanbury
Stewart
Teillet
Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Turner
Walker
Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Winters
Yanakis—93.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Ballard
Basford
Beaulieu
Bell (Carleton)
Bell (Saint John-Albert)
Bigg
Bower
Brand
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cantelon
Chatterton
Churchill
Coates
Code
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Fane
Forrestall
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Horner (Acadia)
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Kindt
Korchinski
Lambert
MacEwan
MacInnis (Cape Breton South)
MacRae
McCutcheon
McIntosh
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nesbitt
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Pascoe
Pugh
Rapp
Régimbald
Ricard
Scott (Victoria (Ont.))
Simpson
Southam
Starr
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Winkler
Woolliams—55.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Mr. Choquette, seconded by Mr. Caron, moves that the said bill be now read the first time. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT AND CRIMINAL CODE

EXTENSION OF MORATORIUM RESPECTING B.C. FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-169, an Act to amend an Act to amend the Combines Investigation Act and the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I understand that two sessions ago an amendment was made providing for the exemption of fishermen in British Columbia in view of difficulties in respect of the Combines Investigation Act. It is my understanding that this bill provides for a further extension of this exemption.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, provided there is no interference with the rights of Her Majesty.

[English]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PAYMENTS TO RAILWAY COMPANIES FOR ELECTION SERVICES

Question No. 139—Mr. Caouette:

1. Do returning officers receive telecommunication or express through the C.N.R. or through the C.P.R.?

2. How much did the government spend for C.N.R. services during the last election?

3. How much did the government spend for C.P.R. services during the last election?

4. What was the amount of the C.N.R.'s debt in 1963?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Chief Electoral Officer is concerned:

1. Yes.

2. Up to and including March 31, 1966, this office spent $15,515.62.

Questions

3. Up to and including March 31, 1966, this office spent $5,893.67.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

4. The amount of Canadian National's long term debt as at December 31st, 1963, was as follows:

Bonds	$1,380,898,764
Government of Canada loans and debentures	410,354,762
Total long term debt	$1,791,253,526

FEDERAL ELECTION EXPENDITURES

Question No. 140—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many employees did the government hire for the last federal election?

2. What was the cost of each of the following items for the said election (a) salaries (b) rentals (c) stationery (d) publicity and other?

3. What is the total amount of government expenditures for the last election?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows: 1. 194,785 employees.

2. Up to April 15, 1966

(a) Salaries	$8,165,881.70
(b) Rentals	$1,571,118.10
(c) Stationery	$ 5,277.04
(d) Publicity	$ 227.00
Printing of election material and other	$3,166,685.38

3. Total: $12,909,189.22

*USE OF RIFLES BY PENITENTIARY GUARDS

Question No. 726—Mr. Alkenbrack:

1. With respect to the recent escape of prisoners of the Collin's Bay penitentiary, was the utilization of one of the rifles issued to a guard impeded by grease on the bolt?

2. Do guards at penitentiaries have daily inspection of their rifles and, if not, what is the reason?

3. Is it mandatory that penitentiary guards shoot in order to prevent an escape of a prisoner or prisoners and, if not, what is the reason?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows:

1. The inquiry found that the rifle malfunctioned in consequence of having been oiled in storage and moved from the warm armoury to the extreme cold outside. The commissioner of inquiry has found that it was an unfortunate circumstance and that no one should be blamed for the incident.

2. In maximum security institutions, rifles are inspected upon issue to an officer when he takes over duties requiring him to be armed; they are inspected again upon the return of the rifle to the armoury.

In medium security institutions, rifles are issued only in cases of emergency. They are inspected when issued.

No firearms of any kind are held at the minimum security institutions.

3. It is not mandatory that penitentiary guards shoot in order to prevent an escape. Officers may use firearms to prevent an escape when that is a reasonable course to adopt in the circumstances.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN ICAO

Question No. 732—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is Canada's contribution to the International Civil Aviation Organization?

2. What are the standards used in assessing this contribution?

3. How many Canadian representatives are in this organization and (a) how many are basically French speaking (b) how many are basically English speaking (c) what are their functions and their remuneration for each committee or commission of this organization?

4. What is the part played, if any, by the government in this organization?

5. What is the total cost of the Canadian participation in this organization?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada's contribution to the International Civil Aviation Organization for the calendar year 1966 is $251,216.00. (U.S.) or 4.20 per cent of the total assessment of member states of the Organization for that year.

2. The principles applied to determine the annual contributions of member states (Contracting States) of the International Civil Aviation Organization which were confirmed by the ICAO Assembly in 1965 are as follows:

(a) The general principles determining the basis of apportionment of expenses among Contracting States: (i) capacity of Contracting States to pay, as measured by national income, taking into consideration national income per head of population; (ii) a Contracting State's interest and importance in civil aviation; (iii) the use of a percentage system to apportion each State's share of the expenses of the Organization out of the total of 100 per cent; (iv) the determination of a minimum and a maximum contribution.

(b) In respect of the principles at paragraph (a): (i) the percentage system should express the contributions of States to two places of decimals; (ii) the minimum contribution of any one Contracting State should be .13 per cent for a full financial year; (iii) the contribution to be paid by any one Contracting State in any one year should not, in principle, exceed 30 per cent of the total contribution.

(c) In the application of the principles at paragraph (a) the following should be taken into account: (i) in the computation of the scale, capacity to pay should carry a weight of 75% and interest and importance in civil aviation a weight of 25%, and from these should be obtained coefficient figures for each State expressed as percentages of the whole; (ii) in taking account of the capacity of Contracting States to pay, only total national income per capita income should be considered as being subject to quantitative evaluation and to inclusion in the computed scale; (iii) the adjustment to each State's national income should be based on a maximum possible reduction of 50% for States having a per capita income of less than $1,000; (iv) interest and importance in civil aviation should be measured by the capacity tonne-kilometres available on each State's scheduled air services; (v) capacity tonne-kilometres should be given a weight of 75% for international services and 25% for domestic services.

(d) The difference between the maximum contribution by application of the principles and the fixed maximum contribution should be distributed over the remaining Contracting States by applying the same principles.

(e) The increase in a State's contribution as compared with the previous year's, expressed in per cent of the total contribution, should not exceed 10% of the previous year's contribution or .07% of the total contribution, whichever is the higher.

(f) The per capita contribution ceiling principle should be evaluated by judgment.

3. There are two Canadian representatives at the International Civil Aviation Organization. One is the representative of Canada on the Council, the governing body of the Organization. He is also a member of each of three bodies subordinate to the Council, the Air Transport Committee, the Finance Committee, and the Committee on Joint Support of Air Navigation Services. He is bilingual. His mother tongue is English. His annual salary is $16,006. The other Canadian representative is a member of the Air Navigation Commission. He is English speaking. His annual salary is $11,554.

23033—267½

4. As a country with a substantial interest in international air transport, Canada has contributed to the establishment and development of the International Civil Aviation Organization. Canada participated in the founding of the Organization at the Chicago Conference of 1944. Since 1947 when ICAO formally came into existence, Canada has been represented on the Council and has provided a member of the Air Navigation Commission. As the headquarters of ICAO is located in Montreal, Canada is host to the Organization.

5. In addition to the payment of an annual contribution, the Government of Canada provides ICAO with office accommodation and the usual related services in the International Aviation Building in Montreal, the annual operating cost of which is approximately $379,000 more than the annual rent paid to the Government by ICAO.

[English]

COST OF ARMED FORCES SCHOOLS

Question No. 892—Mr. Prittie:

1. What was the cost of operating the following joint service colleges in 1965-66, and what will be the estimated cost in 1966-67 (a) Royal Military College (b) Collège Militaire Royal (c) Royal Roads?

2. What was the cost of operating schools for service dependants in Canada and overseas for the calendar year 1964, and what will be the estimated cost of operating these schools for the calendar years 1965 and 1966?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. The annual estimated operating costs for the Canadian services colleges is shown below. These estimates include—military pay and allowances, civilian salaries and wages, cadets' transportation costs to and from training units, food supplies, camp stores, laundry and dry cleaning, clothing and personal equipment, operation, maintenance and repairs of buildings, and miscellaneous supplies.

	Royal Military College (a)	College Militaire Royal (b)	Royal Roads (c)
1965-66	$3,600,000	$2,600,000	$1,200,000
1966-67	3,800,000	2,700,000	1,300,000

2. The financial records of the Department of National Defence are based on a fiscal rather than a calendar year and are not maintained in a manner which will permit the ready identification of all items related to the cost of operating schools for service dependants. However, based on the following criteria: (a) Salaries for the teachers and the other staff members; (b) transportation of pupils; (c) rentals; (d) operation, maintenance and repairs; (e) furniture, textbooks and supplies; (f) miscellaneous expenses, including liability insurance, sports and special classes; and (g) included in the costs for overseas are the transportation costs for the teachers to and from Europe.

An estimate of costs for 1964 and 1965 have been worked out as well as what it may be expected to cost in 1966, i.e.

	1964	1965	1966
In Canada	$6,747,000	$6,871,000	$6,067,000
In Europe	3,756,000	3,630,000	3,814,000

ARDA PROJECT, TÉMISCAMINGUE COUNTY

Question No. 925—Mr. Lefebvre:

Will the county of Témiscamingue soon have a pilot project and full development and, if so (a) what is this project (b) how much will be spent for this project (c) does the ARDA program provide for a complete study of this county?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. To date, the province of Québec has not submitted a proposal to cover a pilot project for the county of Témiscamingue.

(a) Answered by 1 above.

(b) Answered by 1 above.

(c) The province may submit project proposals for consideration under Part I of the federal-provincial rural development agreement 1965-70 to undertake jointly, physical, social and economic research concerning any of the projects or programs under this agreement. Basic physical and biological research is not considered pertinent to the intent of the act.

ARDA AGREEMENTS

Question No. 968—Mr. Stefanson:

1. On what date did the first ARDA agreement expire?

2. On what dates was the second ARDA agreement signed with each of the provinces and who signed them?

3. What is the effective date of these agreements and when do they expire?

4. How much money has the federal government allocated for the duration of the agreements and on what basis will it be allotted to the provinces?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. March 31, 1965.

2. British Columbia, May 25, 1965; Saskatchewan, April 20, 1965; Alberta, April 15, 1965; Manitoba, July 29, 1965; Ontario, April 9, 1965; Quebec, May 18, 1965; New Brunswick, April 21, 1965; Nova Scotia, May 28, 1965; Prince Edward Island, April 6, 1965; Newfoundland, May 13, 1965.

In each case, the Minister of Agriculture of each province signed the agreement, except for the province of Newfoundland it was Premier Joseph R. Smallwood, minister of Economic Development, acting in this capacity.

3. Effective date, April 1, 1965—Expiry date, March 31, 1970.

4. (a) An amount of $125 million has been approved for allocation to the provinces. (b) The annual allotment available to the province shall be determined as follows: (a) an initial amount of $375,000; (b) the balance of the allotment shall be calculated according to a formula based on the following factors as recorded in the 1961 census of Canada, each given equal weight: (i) the rural population of the province expressed as a percentage of the rural population of the ten provinces combined; and (ii) the number of rural non-farm families in the province with a family income less than $3,000 per year expressed as a percentage of the number of such families in the ten provinces combined; and (iii) the number of farms (excluding residential and institutional farms) with a total capital value of less than $25,000 and annual sales of farm products of less than $3,750 expressed as a percentage of the number of such farms in the ten provinces combined.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF CANADA-U.K. TRADE

Question No. 1,097—Mr. Flemming:

1. Does the Department of Trade and Commerce attempt to draw the attention of manufacturers located in the United Kingdom to the possibilities of the sale of goods in Canada which we are presently importing and does the Department advise Canadian manufacturers of natural products of the possibilities of making sales of their products in the United Kingdom?

2. If so, what is the method of disseminating such information?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. (a) The responsibility for assisting United Kingdom manufacturers to sell in Canada rests largely with the staffs of the British High Commissioner's office and the eight British Trade Commissioner offices across Canada. Appropriate assistance is provided to these offices by the department when requested. (b) The department spends considerable effort in advising Canadian manufacturers and exporters of the possibilities of making sales of their products in the United Kingdom.

2. Methods of disseminating such information include: (a) Foreign Trade Magazine, a fortnightly publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce; (b) Trade missions to Britain sponsored by the department; (c) Participation in trade fairs in Britain sponsored by the department; (d) News releases, magazine and newspaper articles, speeches, and similar forms of publicity; (e) Periodic tours of Canada by trade commissioners from the three posts, London, Liverpool and Glasgow, maintained by the department; (f) Periodic tours of Canadian industry by commodity specialists and other head office personnel; (g) Personal contact with the exporting community by officers of the department's six regional offices across Canada; (h) Participation by departmental personnel in Export Study Groups, seminars, annual conventions, forums, etc.; (i) Dissemination of market access information such as tariffs, import regulations, etc., to Canadian trade associations and firms; (j) Assistance to Canadian firms on transportation, documentation and packaging problems; (k) Information on export financing through the Export Credits Insurance Corporation; (l) On request, provision by Trade Commissioners of market information, recommendation of agents, status reports on British firms, etc.

MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,109—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare received a resolution from the Cape Breton county municipal council requesting the federal government under ARDA or any appropriate agency to undertake the steps necessary to provide an economical price market for milk not required for the fluid milk market by the use of subsidy or other means and, if so, what action has been taken by the minister?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. The dairy policy recently announced by the Minister of Agriculture includes a subsidy for milk not required for the fluid milk market.

NUCLEAR POWER PRODUCTION

Question No. 1,114—Mr. Mather:

What is the estimated percentage of Canada's power needs which will be produced by nuclear stations by 1980?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): No precise estimate can be given, since there are uncertainties in the estimate of total installed capacity of nuclear power stations and also in the estimate of the total installed capacity of all types of power stations in Canada by 1980. An approximate estimate is that the installed capacity of nuclear power stations will be just over 10 per cent of Canada's total installed electrical capacity at that time.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION FUND

Question No. 1,136—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. In each of the past ten years, what has been the balance in the public service superannuation fund?

2. In each of the past ten years, what amount has been added to the fund by (a) civil servants' contributions (b) the government, and (c) other sources?

3. In each of the past ten years, what amount has been disbursed from the fund in (a) benefits, and (b) other expenditures?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1, 2 and 3. The answers to these questions are contained in table 1, parts 1 and 2 of the report of the administration of the Public Service Superannuation Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1965, which was tabled in the House of Commons on March 31, 1966.

*ACTIVITIES OF F.B.I. IN CANADA

Question No. 1,151—Mr. Basford:

1. Do officers of the United States federal bureau of investigation operate in Canada and, if so, under what arrangement?

2. Do such arrangements provide that any operations in Canada by the F.B.I. shall be with the knowledge of and under the supervision and control of the R.C.M. Police or local Canadian police forces?

3. Are officers of the F.B.I. permitted to question Canadian residents in Canada without the presence at such questioning of an officer of the R.C.M. Police or a local Canadian police force?

4. Was Mr. Alfie Gunn, an officer of the F.B.I., permitted to question members of the Briscoe family of Clark Road, Port Moody, British Columbia, in the absence of a R.C.M. Police or local police officer and, if so, under what arrangements?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. Agents of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation have no jurisdiction in Canada. Informal practices of long standing do, however, exist whereby under certain circumstances agents of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation can secure the assistance of the Royal Canadian Mounted

Questions

Police, for the purpose of making inquiries as regards matters within the jurisdiction of the Canadian government. Each request for assistance is considered in the light of general principles established by responsible ministers over the years, as further amplified by past usage, and if it is determined to be a proper request disclosing a proper interest, a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will either make the inquiry or will accompany the agent of the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation when the inquiries are made.

A reciprocal practice exists for the benefit of members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police wishing to make inquiries in the United States.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. No such permission was given to Mr. Gunn.

RABIES IN DOMESTIC ANIMALS

Question No. 1,153—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many rabies cases among domestic animals have been reported annually since 1960 (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the constituency of Chapleau?

2. Among the animals stricken by this disease, annually, (a) how many had to be slaughtered (b) how many recovered through treatments (i) in Canada (ii) in Quebec (iii) in the constituency of Chapleau?

3. Have the losses caused by such slaughters or by the segregation of the sick animals been assessed and, if so, what has been the amount in dollars, of the annual losses (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the constituency of Chapleau?

4. Have the owners received any compensation for their losses and if so, what has been the annual amount of the compensations (a) in Canada (b) in Quebec (c) in the constituency of Chapleau?

5. If the cost of compensation is shared by the federal government and other public bodies (a) what authority is directly responsible for such assistance, and (b) what is the financial responsibility of each participant?

6. Annually since 1960, what sums have been granted for research to fight and eradicate this disease?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

1.

Year	(a) Canada	(b) Quebec	(c) Constituency of Chapleau
1959-60	437	14	1
1960-61	97	11	Nil
1961-62	301	38	Nil
1962-63	336	12	Nil
1963-64	402	42	Nil
1964-65	619	122	11
1965-66 (to Feb. 28)	621	177	61

2. (a) No animals were ordered destroyed. (b) (i) Nil; (ii) Nil; (iii) Nil.

3 and 4. While no animals were ordered slaughtered, indemnity was paid to owners for those animals that died of rabies, which represents the primary loss.

3.

Year	4(a) Canada	4(b) Quebec	4(c) Constituency of Chapleau
1959-60	$ 52,879.50	$ Nil	$ Nil
1960-61	19,469.70	Nil	Nil
1961-62	32,035.00	Nil	Nil
1962-63	51,117.90	Nil	Nil
1963-64	54,576.80	5,435.00	Nil
1964-65	47,474.00	15,083.00	982.00
1965-66 (to Feb. 28)	114,713.50	23,316.00	7,837.00

[Mr. Pennell.]

5. (a) Through a federal-provincial arrangement, the provinces of Ontario and Quebec pay an indemnity to owners for animals that died as a result of rabies and the federal government re-imburses the provinces 40 per cent of the amount paid by the provinces.

(b) Since rabies is a reportable disease under the animal contagious diseases regulations, all investigations, diagnosis, control and evaluation of animals which died is handled by the Canada Department of Agriculture. The provinces of Ontario and Quebec pay an indemnity on receipt of a certificate of death issued by the department. As indicated, the federal government reimburses the provinces 40 per cent of the amount paid by the provinces.

6. Specific amounts are not detailed in Department of Agriculture estimates for rabies research and eradication. However, during the past years, 1960-66, it is estimated that $75,000 annually has been expended upon laboratory work into the problem of rabies control. In addition, considerable sums have been spent in the field for rabies control, including $117,388 for the purpose of rabies vaccine since 1960 for the free vaccination of 81,057 dogs and cats during the same period. This does not include the cost of field investigation and control services by veterinarians of the department.

Questions

UNION WITH WEST INDIES

Question No. 1,172—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Has the government of Canada received enquiries from any country of the West Indies requesting union with Canada?
2. If so, which countries have made overtures and what reply has the government of Canada given?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

ROADS TO RESOURCES, ONTARIO

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Reid:

1. What is the amount paid to date to the province of Ontario under the "roads to resources" program?
2. What roads were undertaken in Ontario under the program?
3. What are the terminals of each road?
4. What was the approved total mileage of each road?
5. What is the mileage completed to date of each road?
6. What is the total cost of the mileage completed to date on each road?
7. What is the estimated cost of full completion of each road?
8. What is the estimated date of full completion of each road?
9. What payments were made each year to the province of Ontario since commencement of the program?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): See following table.

1. $6,662,708.01

2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	8.
Savant Lake South	End of secondary highway No. 599 to Trans Canada highway No. 17	Approx. 90 miles	80 miles	$3,749,473	N/A	Complete
Foleyet to Chapleau South	End of secondary highway No. 129 at Foleyet to highway No. 129 in vicinity of Chapleau	Approx. 60 miles	60 miles	$2,603,667	N/A	Complete
Minaki South	Minaki southerly to connect with secondary highway No. 596 at Pellat	Approx. 15 miles	21 miles	$1,160,688	N/A	Complete
Nakina Northerly	Nakina northerly via Cavell to area in vicinity of Percy lake and Melchett lake	Approx. 50 miles	47 miles	$1,747,664	N/A	Complete
Flack Lake Road	Point 8 miles north of Elliott lake then northwesterly to highway No. 129	Approx. 38 miles	8 miles	$ 661,438	$1,500,000	Unknown—provincial schedule
Port Arthur North (Spruce River Road)	Point immediately east of Port Arthur northerly to the vicinity of Cheeseman lake west.	Approx. 70 miles	74 miles	$4,293,387	N/A	Complete
Lingman Lake Road	Pickle Crow northwesterly to Manitoba border in vicinity of Lingman lake	Approx. 220 miles	35 miles	$ 634,375	$6,000,000	Unknown—provincial schedule

9. 1959-60—$ 118,956.14
1960-61— 1,504,264.15
1961-62— 1,649,159.94
1962-63— 1,391,383.58
1963-64— 498,944.20
1964-65— 750,000.00
1965-66— 750,000.00

CONSTRUCTION OF REPLICA OF "GRANDE HERMINE"

Question No. 1,201—Mr. Coates:

Was Davie Brothers Limited, of Levis, Quebec, awarded the contract for the building of a full-size replica of Jacques Cartier's ship Grande Hermine and, if so (a) were tenders called for this contract (b) what were the names of the firms who submitted tenders (c) what were the amounts submitted by each firm?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Davie Brothers Ltd. of Levis, Quebec, was awarded the contract for the building of a full size replica of the Grande Hermine without tender call after L'École Polytechnique of Montreal, who were engaged by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to provide detailed specifications for the reconstruction, advised, with the concurrence of Mr. H. I. Chapelle, curator of the new museum of history and technology of the Smithsonian Institution and an internationally recognized authority on historical shipbuilding, that Davie Brothers Ltd. were the only shipbuilding company with the capacity to meet the required tight construction deadlines and the rigorous standards for authentic replica-making. Consequently, Davie Brothers Ltd. was invited to submit a firm price quotation. On behalf of the department, Deputy Commissioner Robert Shaw of Expo '67 convened an ad hoc group composed of Messrs. Fred Rhuland of Smith-Rhuland Ltd., of Lunenburg, who built replicas of the Bounty and Bluenose; George H. Cuthbertson, Toronto naval architect; R. A. Engholm, immediate past commodore of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club; and Commodore O. C. S. Robertson. The group recommended acceptance of the submission.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MARITIME POWER DEVELOPMENT GRANTS

Question No. 1,273—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Did the government approve the grant to the province of Newfoundland as recommended by the Atlantic development board for the development of power at Baie d'Espoir and, if so, on what date?

2. Was announcement of the approval of this grant made and, if so, on what date and by whom?

3. Did the government approve the grant to the province of New Brunswick as recommended by the Atlantic development board for the development of power at Mactaquac and, if so, on what date?

4. Was announcement of the approval of this grant made and, if so, on what date and by whom?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am informed by the Atlantic Development Board as follows: 1. Yes, to the Newfoundland Power Commission. March 5, 1964.

2. Yes. March 10, 1964, Hon. J. W. Pickersgill.

3. Yes. To the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission, January 10, 1964.

4. Yes. January 10, 1964, Hon. J. W. Pickersgill.

*MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Coates:

1. Has the government's manpower mobility program gone into effect and, if so, on what date?

2. Has the government earmarked funds for advertising purposes for this program and, if so (a) what newspapers will be involved (b) how much has been spent to date on advertising?

3. Have applications been received for assistance either by way of grants or loans under this program and, if so (a) how many (b) from what provinces have these applications been received (c) in what numbers?

4. Have any applications been approved to date and, if so (a) how many (b) what is the total amount of money involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. Yes, December 28, 1965.

2. Yes, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, (a) a total of 106 daily and 70 weekly newspapers were involved; (b) $131,-269.91.

3. Yes, from the effective date of the program to March 25, 1966, (a) Loans, 590; grants, 281. (b) All provinces.

(c)

Province	Loans	Grants
Newfoundland	22	10
New Brunswick	4	2
Nova Scotia	38	25
Prince Edward Island	8	4
Quebec	66	44
Ontario	376	151
Manitoba	23	6
Saskatchewan	4	1
Alberta	16	7
British Columbia	33	31

4. Yes, from the effective date of the program to March 25, 1966, (a) Loans, 384; grants, 172. (b) As of March 31, 1966, loans $84,659.95; grants, $36,313.56.

OIL AND GAS PERMIT BLOCK 66-65

Question No. 1,218—Mr. Brand:

1. Was oil and gas permit block 66-65 awarded jointly to British American Oil Ltd. and Pacific

Questions

Petroleums Ltd. on January 27, 1966 and, if so (a) was there any evidence of collusion between the two companies with reference to the submission of identical tenders (b) were there any other companies submitting bids and, if so, who were they and what were their bids?

2. Are British American Oil Ltd. and Pacific Petroleums Ltd. separate corporate entities, or are they part of one company?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Oil and gas permit block 66-65, which was offered at the January 27, 1966, permit sale, was awarded to The British American Oil Company Ltd. and Pacific Petroleums Ltd. jointly for a total work bonus bid of $157,425. The two companies had submitted identical tenders on the permit block and were offered the option of acquiring it jointly or submitting further separate tenders to break the deadlock. A decision concerning the awarding of the permit block had to be reserved until the companies involved could indicate their choice of procedure. Consequently, it was not until March 1, 1966, that a letter was sent to each of the two companies confirming that in accordance with their wishes, the oil and gas permits involved were being issued to them jointly.

(a) There was no evidence of collusion between these two companies with reference to the submission of identical tenders. In the first place, the tender by the British American Oil Company Ltd. was a direct work bonus bid on the subject permit block whereas the bid by Pacific Petroleums Ltd. was a result of a slide in the amount of $53,524.50 from an unsuccessful bid on another block offered at the sale. Before the slide, the Pacific Petroleums Ltd. bid on permit block 66-65 was $103,900.50. In the second place, the bid of $157,425 was obviously the result of simply multiplying the total acreage involved in the block, 314,850 acres, by the amount of 50 cents per acre. Usually, oil companies tendering bids calculated in this fashion add on a few odd cents to prevent just such a tie situation. Both companies neglected to do this in the subject case, but it is doubtful that either will make the same mistake at a sale for some time to come.

(b) There were three bids submitted on permit block 66-65. The third company bidding on this block was Socony Mobil Oil of Canada Ltd. It is not the policy of this department to release the amounts of unsuccessful tenders; however, it can be stated that the Socony Mobil bid was considerably less than those submitted by the other two companies.

2. The British American Oil Company Ltd. and Pacific Petroleums Ltd. are separate and distinct entities.

[Mr. Brand.]

ARDA PROJECTS, GATINEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,223—Mr. Isabelle:

1. Since its inception, how many projects have been carried out and/or studies undertaken by ARDA in Gatineau county?

2. What amounts have been spent on these projects or studies?

3. To what towns, villages, municipalities and parishes do these projects and studies relate?

4. What was the nature of these projects or studies?

5. Was a preliminary report made by ARDA on a study of rural poverty in the constituencies of Gatineau, Labelle, Pontiac-Témiscamingue and Renfrew North and, if so (a) were any constituencies declared the poorest in Canada and, if so, which ones (b) did ARDA send this preliminary report to other federal government departments in order to prevent duplication of assistance?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. To date the province of Québec has not submitted any project proposals to federal ARDA to be carried out in the Gatineau county.

2. Answered by 1.

3. Answered by 1.

4. Answered by 1.

5. A study of rural poverty was made under ARDA for the counties of Gatineau, Papineau and Pontiac, but not in all the areas suggested in the question. (a) No. (b) Yes.

PENALTY FOR PREMATURE RETIREMENT, ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,230—Mr. MacRae:

1. Is it mandatory that members of the R.C.A.F. who served in world war II and who wish to retire voluntarily while under the maximum age limit for their rank, should be penalized from 5 per cent to 25 per cent of their pension, depending on their age?

2. If so, is this penalty applied to the serving members of all three armed services?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. Subsection 6 of section 10 of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act provides that an annuity payable to any contributor under the act, whether he has had world war II service or not, who has not reached the retirement age for his rank and who retires voluntarily from the forces, be reduced, in the case of an officer, or a man who has less than 20 years service in the regular forces, by 5 per cent for each full year by which his age at the time of retirement is less than the retirement age for his rank or, in the case of a man who has 20 years or more service in the regular forces, by 5 per cent for each full year by which his service in the regular forces is less than 25 years.

2. Yes.

PULP AND PAPER EXPORTS

Question No. 1,233—Mr. Faulkner:

1. What percentage of the pulp production of Canada is finished in Canada in the form of (a) fine paper (b) coarse or wrapping paper (c) paper board and specialty paper?

2. What has been the total annual value of exports from the protected sectors of the pulp and paper industry in the last five years?

3. What has been the ratio of exports to total domestic production in the protected sectors?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. (a) (b) and (c): Data available to the dominion bureau of statistics are not sufficiently detailed to disclose the quantities of pulp used to produce specific grades of paper. However, the following information is available for the year 1963:

1963	Tons
Total production of wood pulp	12,474,107
Wood pulp used in making basic paper and paperboard	8,484,040
Wood pulp exported	3,339,492
Wood pulp imported	74,208

1963	Tons
Production of "writing and reproduction paper" and "miscellaneous fine paper"	204,450
Production of "wrapping papers"	340,604
Production of "sanitary papers" (sometimes called coarse paper)	182,339
Production of "paper board"	1,299,382

No information is available on "specialty paper".

2 and 3. Export statistics are not compiled on the basis on which this question is asked.

CHANGES IN NAMES OF DEFENCE ESTABLISHMENTS

Question No. 1,234—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government planning to drop "H.M.C.S." from the names of H.M.C.S. Stadacona and H.M.C.S. Shearwater, and replace it with "C.F.B."?

2. Is the government planning to drop "R.C.A.F." from the name R.C.A.F. station Greenwood and all other Canadian air force stations, and replace it with "C.F.B."?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, the Canadian forces base (CFB) Halifax now incorporates elements of what was H.M.C.S. Stadacona as well as elements of certain other units. Similarly H.M.C.S. Shearwater and certain other units and sub units have become the Canadian forces base Shearwater.

2. Where Canadian air force stations have become Canadian forces bases, "R.C.A.F" has been dropped from the name.

FRENCH SPEAKING STAFF, QUEEN MARY HOSPITAL, MONTREAL

Question No. 1,260—Mr. Allard:

1. How many French speaking physicians are there at the Queen Mary hospital in Montreal to admit and examine French speaking veterans?

2. What is the total number of medical practitioners or specialists at this hospital and of this number, how many are French speaking?

3. Under what conditions is a physician or specialist allowed in this hospital?

4. Is correspondence between physicians, specialists or the administrative office and French speaking veterans conducted in French, and is it always conducted in French?

5. What is the total number of nurses, assistant nurses, graduate nurses, maintenance, office and other staff employed at this hospital, and of this number, how many are French speaking?

6. Of the total number of persons employed at the hospital, how many are bilingual?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Patients at Queen Mary veterans hospital are examined and admitted from the out patient clinic. This is staffed by part time general practitioners, of which there are a total of 10. Three of these are French and all ten speak French fluently. There are also two full time medical administrative physicians in the out patient clinic, both of whom are French.

2. There are a total of 148 part time medical practitioners and specialists at the hospital. Of these, 40 are French and of the remainder the vast majority can speak French although their mother tongue may be English. All 40 French doctors speak English well. In addition, there are 13 full time specialists, of whom four are French and the remainder have varying degrees of proficiency in French.

3. All general practitioners' credentials are reviewed by the senior treatment medical officer and the director of admission services who recommend appointments to the medical executive. The appointments are then approved by the medical advisory board. Each appointee must hold a license to practise in the province of Quebec. In addition, those holding specialists' appointments must hold a specialists' certificate from the Quebec College of Physicians and Surgeons and from the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons. All but three of the consulting staff hold teaching appointments at either McGill University or Université de Montréal. Admission to the indoor consulting staff usually requires fellowship in the specialty concerned.

4. Correspondence between veterans and physicians is always through the medical administrative staff and in each case it is in the language employed by the veteran.

5. Hospital Service	Total staff	French speaking staff
Administration	160	120
Chaplains	2	2
Dietary	135	107
Heating and power	16	9
Housekeeping	96	86
Maintenance	22	18
Medical officers, dental officers, and specialists	21	17
Nurses	179	83
Nursing assistants	18	5
Nursing orderlies	153	111
Stores and equipment	31	19
Other services	105	57
Totals	938	634

6. Total number of employees 938

Number of bilingual employees 531

These numbers are based on employees' statements and do not indicate the level of proficiency in either language.

WAGE RATES, ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA

Question No. 1,263—Mr. Schreyer:

What are the wage levels paid by Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, to (a) reactor operators (b) machinists and other prevailing rate employees, by classification at the Chalk river establishment and the Whiteshell establishment, immediately before the last agreement and subsequent to the last agreement negotiated?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

	Chalk River		Whiteshell
(a) and (b)	Mar. 65	Apr. 66	Mar. 65	Apr. 66
Tool and die maker	$2.87	$3.07	$2.83	$3.04
Instrument mechanic	2.77	2.97	2.72	2.93
Machinist	2.71	2.91	2.66	2.87
Carpenter	2.66	2.86	2.60	2.81
Reactor operator cl. 1	2.55	2.71	2.48	2.65
Stationary engineer cl. 3	2.49	2.65	2.41	2.58
Painter	2.42	2.58	2.33	2.50
Reactor operator cl. 2	2.31	2.45	2.21	2.36
Contamination monitor	2.20	2.34	2.08	2.23
Stores counterman	2.07	2.17	1.94	2.05
Helper	2.01	2.11	1.87	1.98
Janitor/labourer	1.90	1.99	1.75	1.85

RENTALS CHARGED BY ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA

Question No. 1,264—Mr. Schreyer:

What are the rentals per square foot or other unit of measurement charged by Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, to lessees of (a) residential premises (b) commercial premises, at Chalk river and at Pinawa, Manitoba?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Rentals charged by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to lessees of residential and commercial premises at Pinawa, Manitoba and to lessees of residential premises at Deep River are based on recovery of the following costs—interest and amortization of funded capital maintenance and municipal services. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has no commercial premises at Deep River.

DIRECTIVES TO ATOMIC ENERGY LTD. ON WAGE RATES

Question No. 1,265—Mr. Schreyer:

Has the government of Canada ever issued any directives to Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited, regarding wage rates to be paid by it to any of its staff or prevailing rate employees and, if so, when and for what reason?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): No.

HALIFAX—TIME OFF FOR NATAL DAY CELEBRATIONS

Question No. 1,269—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is it intended to grant any time off for hourly paid employees of the Department of National Defence establishments in the metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth area on the occasion of Natal Day celebrations in that area?

2. If not, will consideration be given to this matter?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. No. Natal days are not authorized holidays with pay for prevailing rate employees. However, prevailing rate employees wishing to celebrate these occasions may use annual leave credits if available or take leave without pay.

HOG PRICES

Question No. 1,273—Mr. Lautlippe:

1. Has there been a drop or has there been an exaggerated market fluctuation recently in the price of hogs and, if so, does the government intend to take measures to stabilize prices?

2. What was the price paid for hogs for each month in the last two years?

3. What is the percentage of increase or decrease in the price paid for hogs for each month in the last two years?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes. There has been a drop from the very high level of February 1966. However, March prices were still about 133 per cent of 1964 prices.

Hog prices in North America are tied quite closely to marketings in the U.S.A. Canadian prices through 1964 and the first quarter of 1965 were quite steady as demonstrated in the table below. With reduced marketings, prices steadily rose from $27.94 in April 1965, to a peak of $43.19 in February 1966. In March 1966, marketings and slaughter in both Canada and the United States increased considerably, resulting in a price drop to $36.12.

The Agricultural Stabilization Act provides for the stabilization of hog prices and the government intends to continue to utilize this legislation.

2 and 3. Table on the average monthly price of Grade "A" hogs at Toronto showing the increase or the decrease of price from previous month:

Year	Month	Average price grade "A" hogs per cwt. Toronto* $	Price increase or decrease vs. previous month %
1964	January	26.85	+2.7
	February	27.61	−6.5
	March	25.92	−2.0
	April	25.38
	May	26.40	+3.9
	June	29.08	+9.2
	July	28.41	−2.4
	August	28.10	−1.1
	September	28.24	+0.5
	October	27.13	−4.1
	November	27.12	Even
	December	27.63	+1.8
1965	January	27.44	−0.7
	February	28.23	+2.8
	March	27.80	−1.5
	April	27.94	+0.5
	May	30.46	+8.3
	June	34.81	+12.5
	July	36.24	+3.9
	August	36.66	+1.1
	September	36.88	+0.6
	October	35.90	−2.7
	November	37.58	+4.5
	December	41.64	+9.8
1966	January	42.73	+2.5
	February	43.19	+1.1
	March	36.12	−19.6

* Source—Livestock and Meat Trade Reports, Department of Agriculture.

Questions

ENCOURAGEMENT OF DAIRY FARMERS

Question No. 1,275—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government intend to take any measures to encourage dairy farmers to increase their production?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): The government has announced its dairy policy with an increased level of support. The purposes of the program were stated and appear in Hansard of March 23, 1966. Briefly, the program is designed to bring economic stability to dairy producers and to encourage adequate production of dairy products for Canadian consumers.

MARKET GARDENING POLICY, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Latulippe:

Does the government have a policy regarding the production of vegetables or market gardening in the province of Quebec and, if so, what is that policy?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Yes. The continuing policies of the Department of Agriculture in any province encompass:

1. Research into new varieties and cultural practices.

2. Marketing standards and related inspection services.

3. Crop loss assistance through the Crop Insurance Act.

INDIAN WELFARE AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,282—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Have draft agreements been prepared by the federal government and submitted to the provincial governments regarding welfare programs and community development programs for Indians and, if so (a) have any provinces approved these drafts (b) which ones?

2. Has the federal government signed any such agreements and (a) if so, with which provinces (b) if not, for what reason or reasons?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes; (a) Yes; (b) The province of Ontario has approved the drafts of the welfare and the community development agreements. The province of Alberta has approved the community development agreement.

2. No; (a) N/A (b) The federal government has not signed the two agreements with Ontario pending further consultation with the Indian people of the province. The federal government has not signed the community development agreement with Alberta pending further study of means of ensuring that adequate welfare programs are available to Indians of the province to complement community development programs.

[Mr. Greene.]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PROVINCIAL ARDA PROJECTS

Question No. 867—Mr. Southam:

1. In 1964-65, what projects were undertaken under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act in each province?

2. What was the nature of these projects?

3. What was the cost of each of these projects?

4. What projects are under study or contemplated to begin soon in Saskatchewan?

5. What amount will be earmarked or appropriated for each of these projects?

Return tabled.

EXPO '67 RADIO ADVERTISING

Question No. 1,241—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Has an eight week schedule of radio station advertising of Expo '67 been placed by a national advertising firm with a selected or preferred list of radio stations, commencing May 2?

2. If so, (a) by what national advertising firm is the advertising schedule being placed (b) what are the radio stations on the preferred list (c) what is the reason for their selection?

Return tabled.

• (3:50 p.m.)

FARM MACHINERY

PRICE INCREASES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), I ask leave to move the adjournment of this house in accordance with standing order No. 26 in order to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the extravagant and unjustifiable increases in the prices of agricultural machinery, imposing a monstrous burden on the farmers of this country at a time when they are faced with the spring farm work, necessitating many of them having to get new machinery at once.

This matter is of immediate and overriding importance and demands action now, which the Minister of Agriculture failed to take after promises made by him following his trip through western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale kindly address the Chair on the question of the urgency of debate?

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of great urgency because, since November 1 of last year the price of farm machinery has increased greatly, from $250 for a small combine to $600 for a large combine, while at the same time final payments on wheat this year are 17 cents a bushel less than last year. In addition, the prices being received by farmers for hogs, eggs and everything that the farmer sells have gone down. Let me remind the house that the president of the Cockshutt Farm Equipment of Canada Limited only three or four days ago at the official opening of an agency in Saskatoon stressed the fact that the cost of farm machinery will go up within the next three to five years.

The urgency of the matter lies in the fact that farmers at the present time have no money to buy this expensive farm equipment because on the one hand the price they receive for their produce is going down while on the other hand the cost of this type of equipment is going up. In 1962 a standing committee of this house investigated farm machinery prices. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) travelled throughout the west he said it was his intention to set up another committee to look into this situation. I suggest it is now too late for such an investigation because the situation has become too serious and much damage has already been done.

As an alternative I would suggest to the minister that a commission of inquiry be set up to look into this problem. After all, we set up an inquiry into almost anything that takes place in this country. Why should we not set up an inquiry to investigate this situation? Many professors of agriculture and farm management are available to carry out an investigation into the increasing costs of farm machinery and could then provide recommendations in respect of which the minister could act accordingly.

This whole situation has become extremely serious and the problem now facing farmers throughout Canada relates, as the minister pointed out when he was out west, to the high cost of farm machinery. At almost every place the minister spoke he said he was going to do something in an attempt to alleviate the situation. Since then almost six months have elapsed but the minister has done nothing in this regard.

I should like to see the house debate this matter and come to the conclusion that a royal commission or a one-man inquiry should be established to consider this serious problem which now faces the agricultural industry.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party would like to support the contention that there is urgency of debate in the matter which has been brought to our attention by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). Throughout this country in the course of the next few weeks farmers will be going on the land and in the course of the next few months many of them will have to purchase new equipment or pay for repairs to old machinery. It seems to me to be most important that this house have a discussion about the very serious and considerable increase in the cost of farm equipment in the last few months.

This whole matter is related to the question which I tried to bring before this house last year regarding the increase in the price of steel, because the increase in the cost of farm machinery is an inevitable consequence of that increase. Farmers are now caught in a cost-price squeeze and this house must give some consideration to the matter.

A debate on this subject today will not bring down the price of farm machinery but it would enable the government to state what it proposes to do about the matter, whether it proposes to have a complete investigation into the price of farm machinery to ascertain whether or not the increases have been justifiable or warranted or to say whether it proposes to set up a house committee to look into the matter. It would give the government the opportunity of outlining what action, if any, it proposes to take. I think the farmers of this country are entitled to know, first, that the House of Commons is concerned and, second, whether the government is going to act or continue to drift and allow the situation to go from bad to worse.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) is certainly definite, since it concerns the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, that is the sky-high and unjustifiable increase of farm equipment prices, which places a huge burden on the shoulders of the Canadian farmers when they are about to start their spring work.

Mr. Speaker, this is a definite matter; its importance is of course public, since it concerns mainly the farmers, not only those in the west, but the farmers all across Canada.

The hon. member contends there has been a tremendous price increase regarding farm equipment, and that is true. However, are farm machinery prices the only ones to increase in Canada? For instance, have clothing and food prices not increased? Is this matter not as definite and important as that raised by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale?

Mr. Speaker, prices are increasing not only with regard to farm machinery but also in housing construction, on account of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials; rent prices and education prices also are going up. It costs more today to keep a child in university and high school than was the case one or two years ago. These questions are just as important as the price increase of farm equipment.

I fully understand the stand taken by my good friend, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) in favour of this motion for adjournment but, Mr. Speaker, are they not the same people who, all across Canada, strongly advocate salary increases, or increases in people's income which are indirectly involved in the cost of production in Canada, in the field of farm equipment just like in any other field.

These are the same people who now want to discuss, in the federal parliament, the opportunity to decide if there have been too many, not enough or a reasonable number of price increases.

Mr. Speaker, prices of farm machinery and equipment depend on those who build or industrialize these machines. The prices are set by private enterprise. If there happens to be a combine in any field whatever we have federal legislation which allows us to determine whether there are speculators exercising their influence in a certain field of society.

Well, I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, that this motion to adjourn is not at all regular at the present time because if we are to consider the importance of farm machinery, we must do the same for all fields of economic activity in Canada. Food items are directly dependent upon farming operations in Canada.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, even though the matter is important and definite, this is not the time, in my opinion, to deal with it, because the house must now proceed to the establishment of a legislative measure which will allow, not only one class, but all classes of society, to benefit from a just and fair legislation.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the motion complies with the requirements of paragraph 2 of citation 100 in regard to moving the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 in that the public interest will suffer if the matter is not given immediate attention. I think it also complies with the requirements of paragraph 3 which says that the ground of urgency of debate is valid when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough, and so on. It does not seem to me that there will be an opportunity in the immediate future when the subject matter raised by the hon. member can be debated.

If we look at paragraph 1 of the citation we find it says that the matter must involve the administrative responsibility of the government. I am not sure whether the price of farm machinery is in fact an administrative responsibility of the Department of Agriculture or the Minister of Agriculture. However, this situation has gone on so long without anything being done that what is required is an investigation to find out why the price of machinery has been going up. I think this is the point of the hon. member who moved the motion, he wishes to bring the question to the attention of the house, and the delay in dealing with the matter is the reason for it being a matter of urgency.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has stated, a debate this afternoon and this evening could not change the price of farm machinery, but surely we could have a statement from the Minister of Agriculture indicating that this matter will be taken up by his department or will be referred to the agricultural committee. Then he could perhaps get on with the matter. I agree it has been postponed so long that it becomes more urgent day by day.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would certainly concur in the sentiments of the hon. member who moved the motion to the effect that the cost-price squeeze in which the farmer finds himself is of very serious moment. I think we are all very much concerned with this question. As I have stated from time to time, the government is certainly looking into the matter of farm machinery prices.

When the hon. member accuses me of being dilatory I wish he would express the dilatoriness in degree. It was only on January 18, not November, that I went out west, so I have only been dilatory to that degree. Also, Mr. Speaker, I certainly sympathize with the hon. member when he says it is singular that with the many, many royal commissions we have appointed in the past few years the rural people have not been getting their share. It seems to me the city dweller has received the major share of the royal commissions.

In this regard I would say that in the best interests of the farm community the matter has to be looked into carefully. I do not think we should jump into royal commissions. We may have had a way of jumping into royal commissions from time to time which has not always been the be-all and end-all of a problem. I think, therefore, that this problem must be looked into very carefully.

With respect to the question of urgency, which I think is the only material question at the present time, I might point out that urgency concerns, of course, the question of whether an opportunity is given by the ordinary rules and procedures of the house to discuss this matter apart from a discussion under standing order 26. I would point out that this matter might have been debated in the budget debate as recently as Friday. It is very difficult for me to see how this continually increasing and augmenting problem has become urgent only since Friday. In my mind the farmer has suffered from this problem for some considerable time, and I am rather surprised to find hon. members opposite actually implying that only since Friday has it become urgent, because of course they could have discussed it in the budget debate as late as Friday.

I would also point out that the agricultural committee is sitting at the present time and considering the estimates of the department, and any discussion of this matter can quite properly be brought before that committee at any time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while agreeing most wholeheartedly with the difficulties that our agricultural community faces in this regard and while voicing the concern and resolution of the government to do whatever is necessary to protect the interests of the farmers, I do not believe that at this time the matter is urgent in the parliamentary sense in that it could have been discussed in the budget debate and hon. members opposite did not see fit to do so and, second, it can be discussed at any time by the agricultural committee in their consideration of the estimates of the department. Therefore in the parliamentary sense I submit that urgency does not exist.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say just a few brief words on this subject. I think all of us, including the minister, agree that this is a matter of public importance and the question that arises concerns the urgency of debate. As I understand it, this means urgency of opportunity. The minister mentioned that the budget debate was completed last Friday and the matter could have been discussed at that time. However, I respectfully submit to Your Honour that the budget debate, as we know, is a limited debate and although government and opposition members in practice take part in it a great many members of the house had no opportunity to speak in that debate. In any event, these motions refer to opportunity of debate in the future, not the past.

As was pointed out by the mover, these rapid increases in price have taken place in the relatively recent past. They have not necessarily taken place since last Friday, but I think I have already disposed of that argument. The big problem, as was so well pointed out by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), is the question of urgency of debate. We know that the government has certain legislation planned for today and tomorrow and that the redistribution debate is to take place on Wednesday and may last a number of days.

The big problem is to get some kind of inquiry set up now so that this matter can be dealt with. I am quite sure that if the matter were debated today it would not take all day. Points of view could be expressed quite succinctly and briefly and the matter could be disposed of. The government could make an announcement of some sort of inquiry—it is their prerogative whether or not it is by means of a royal commission—and we could then get on with the government business planned for today.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I am afraid the Chair will have to render another unpopular decision this afternoon. I have listened with great interest and attention, of course, to the representations made by hon. members in support of the motion moved by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale suggesting that the house should adjourn its ordinary business with a view to discussing and considering the matter raised in his motion. There is no question whatsoever that, as the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale and others in support of his motion have said, this is a matter of great importance, a matter of urgency, a definite matter of urgent public importance. But as other hon. members taking part in this discussion have pointed out, we have to consider the question of urgency of debate.

In this connection I would again refer hon. members to citation 100, paragraph 3, of Beauchesne, fourth edition, which says:

"Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself—

There is agreement that the matter is urgent.

—but it means "urgency of debate", when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough and public interest demands that discussion take place immediately.

I would also refer hon. members to paragraph 2 of citation 100 which refers to a ruling made by a previous Speaker and says:

The Speaker ruled that the motion should not be allowed, because he did not think the matter mentioned in the member's statement was of recent occurrence—

I would also refer to paragraph 8 of the same citation which contains a statement made by the Speaker in the British house and refers to the same rule:

I do not think that, under the Standing Order of 1882, a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale did say in his statement in support of his motion that this unhappy situation which has occurred dates back to November. It is a continuing unhappy and unfortunate situation. I do not think it is a sudden occurrence such as that contemplated by the standing order and the precedents of the house, and in view of this, with sincere regret I do not think I can accept the motion of the hon. member.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED STATEMENT AT BOARD MEETING RESPECTING PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been directed to the remarks made during the course of the meeting of the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation held in Halifax which, as reported, had all the appearances of being contemptuous of parliament, to which the C.B.C. must report, in that it was alleged to have been suggested that the fact that a committee of the house had been set up might interfere with the possibility of there being a settlement in connection with the controversy over the weekly feature "This Hour Has Seven Days".

Has the Prime Minister any information in this connection and has he communicated with the C.B.C. and pointed out to that body that this kind of expression of view is contemptuous of the House of Commons?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have seen press references along the lines of my right hon. friend's question and I have asked whether it is possible to obtain the text of what was actually said. The Secretary of State is unfortunately away today on official business, but I expect to see her as soon as she gets back to see whether she has any information.

HOUSING

REPORTED CURTAILMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, in answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister said the Minister of Labour would be making a statement shortly in respect of loans under the national housing legislation. However, while the house is waiting for that statement I want to ask the Prime Minister if he can tell the house whether the cabinet has made a decision to the effect that funds available for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be curtailed? Telegrams are pouring in to the effect that not only are applications for loans being rejected but applications which were submitted early in March are now being returned to prospective home owners. I am wondering whether this is a decision of the cabinet.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am getting those messages too. I am, of course, aware how seriously this situation is regarded by many people and the matter is to be discussed at our cabinet meeting tomorrow morning. As it happens, the minister responsible for the corporation is absent today; I believe he is addressing the Canadian Labour Congress. However, I hope he will be back for the meeting tomorrow morning when we will be discussing this matter, and I hope that a statement can be made after that discussion.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. Is it possible, at least as a preliminary move in the right direction, for the government to consider accepting the applications which were already submitted in good faith and which have been in the hands of the corporation for some time?

Mr. Pearson: I should not like to express an opinion on this matter, Mr. Speaker, but I would be glad to look into it.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

FURTHER REQUESTS FOR AID TO WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the future minister of manpower.

Since he announced to the house that Jamaican workers would come to work in some parts of Canada, has the minister received other requests from Canadian organizations asking for immigrant labour, either from Jamaica or elsewhere?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Personally, I did not get any. I could inquire if any were received by the department.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Since for the last five months we have been addressing ourselves to the future minister of the new department of manpower, which will be created eventually, can the Prime Minister tell us when he intends to create that department, so that we may be able to address the minister as such?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly on our list of priority legislation and I hope we will get to it as soon as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—ASSISTANCE TO UNEMPLOYED MINERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position today, as he promised on Friday, to give a detailed report as to what the government has in mind to assist the 850 miners who will be displaced as a result of the closing by Dosco of the mine at Bell Island? The Prime Minister may recall that questions were posed in the house last week to the Minister of Industry and also to himself by the hon. member for St. John's East and myself.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. member for St. John's East has also indicated his intention to ask this question which was asked last Friday, with some reference having been made to it before that. I think that the best way to give the answer I indicated I would give is to read from a telegram which I have sent to the premier of the province concerned, Newfoundland, which includes the following paragraphs:

> We are setting up a working group of senior officials from all federal government agencies concerned, and we would like to arrange for discussions at the earliest convenient time with officials of the government of Newfoundland to explore both the possibility of promoting alternative opportunities for employment on Bell Island and measures for the retraining and re-establishment of all persons who are now employed in the mining activity who would be interested in employment elsewhere. In such a program employment elsewhere in Newfoundland would, of course, be given priority. It would be our thought that a report to both governments should be prepared, after consultation by the officials, for consideration at the earliest feasible date.
>
> We realize fully what a disastrous economic blow the closing of the mine will be to this large community and indeed to the economy of Newfoundland and are anxious to do everything we can as a government to help meet the situation.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria said I was not here. I am very much here. As the Prime Minister knows, I was going to ask that question this afternoon, so the hon. member opposite is mistaken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF FILING DEADLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that the deadline for filing income tax returns this year falls on a Saturday, April 30, which is not a civil service working day and neither is the following day, Sunday, would the minister consider extending the deadline to midnight, Monday, May 2?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, although I would be willing to consider this matter, I should point out that anyone filing a personal income tax return is provided with an envelope and we will certainly accept any return mailed before midnight on Saturday.

GERDA MUNSINGER—DEDUCTION OF TAX ON PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister assure the house that income tax was deducted at source by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and other organizations or persons in Canada who paid a fee to Mrs. Gerda Munsinger for services rendered?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be on the order paper.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING INVESTIGATION REQUEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question in view of the discussion today on the motion to adjourn the house. Would he be prepared in the very near future to make a statement on what is the policy of the government with reference to an investigation into the high cost of farm machinery? The minister mentioned the date of January 18.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I shall be making an announcement with regard to this question in the very near future.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not cross-examining the minister, but by "the very near future" does he mean within a few days?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member, out of force of habit, is cross-examining the minister.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture?

The Quebec Minister of Agriculture advises the farmers of the northwestern part of the province that his department is forwarding the amount required or appropriated for their crop failures in 1964 and he tells them at the same time that the federal government will pay them a similar amount.

The month of May is almost here and the farmers have not received anything. Is the minister aware of this situation and does he intend to satisfy the claims of the farmers in that part of the country?

[English]

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, the federal government participated in a program of emergency agricultural relief in the province of Quebec to which I believe we contributed some $12 million. The program is administered by the province of Quebec with a federal contribution. To the best of my knowledge the administration in Quebec has been a satisfactory one, although I have no knowledge whether all claims have yet been satisfied.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister mean that the $12 million were actually paid to the province of Quebec? Have the $12 million been paid to the province of Quebec?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the claims are paid as they come in. I am not aware whether all of the $12 million has yet been paid. I wonder if I might take that part of the hon. member's question as notice. As I say, I do not believe it has all been paid because the claims are processed as they come in.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? Is the minister aware that the Quebec Department of Agriculture is advising the farmers that the federal government is to issue these cheques in the same way as the Quebec government, that is directly to the farmers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not in order.

[English]

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

REPORTED STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN ON NEED FOR MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport with respect to his Atlantic Development Board responsibilities. Does the minister agree with the over-all contention of Mr. Ian MacKeigan, chairman of that board, who in an important speech on Friday in Fredericton contended that the board has run out of money and that much more is needed? Can we expect a statement as to the government's intentions respecting the board and the need for more money?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will refresh his memory by looking at the Speech from the Throne he will see that an amendment to the act is envisaged. The fund has not actually run out of money but most of it has been committed to various projects. As my right hon. friend the Prime Minister pointed out some time ago, we do not think that the work of the board has yet been completed. The government does not intend to see that it is hampered in going on with its work.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): As a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether he gives full reassurance that the board is still necessary and that more funds will be made available?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very glad that the hon. gentleman does not agree with the rather extraordinary views expressed by his leader some little time ago as to the necessity for a fund, and that he agrees with us that the fund is necessary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister not aware that it was the same leader of this party who established this board originally?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, without any money.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MAYOR OF QUEBEC CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

I should like to ask him whether he has had today or whether he is to have talks of the utmost importance with the mayor of the city of Quebec or with members of his executive?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot judge from this question whether its substance is urgent or of national importance. It is most difficult for me to accept the question.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, if the minister were given the opportunity to answer, I believe you would then be enlightened on the urgency of the question.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

It was to give the minister an opportunity to welcome the mayor of Quebec who is now in the gallery.

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and future minister of manpower, following the question you ruled out of order in connection with the visit to Ottawa of his worship the mayor of Quebec. I believe that it is not very often that the mayor of Quebec comes to Ottawa and it is a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it as soon as possible?

Mr. Caouette: Did the mayor of Quebec have a meeting with the minister or the right hon. Prime Minister, in connection with federal buildings in the city of Quebec, the use of which we ask for the benefit of Quebec city?

I think this is rather important.

Mr. Speaker: Very important indeed, but the question is out of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RESPONSIBILITY ALLOWANCES FOR AIR FORCE TECHNICAL OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the recently announced defence department pay review team, could the minister advise the house whether that team will be considering special responsibility allowances for radio operators, navigators and other technical officers in the air force? Also, when is the report of that body expected?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not the type of question that should be asked at this time. It does not seem to be so urgent that it might not be placed on the order paper. If the hon. member thinks that the matter he raises is urgent, it might be given consideration in the adjournment debate or he might communicate directly with the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I think that will help to clarify some of the uncertainties that now exist in the services.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION—PROSECUTION OF FORMER OFFICERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a strictly appropriate question at this time of the Solicitor General. Has the Solicitor General anything further to report wtih respect to the examination of the accounts and documents seized by the R.C.M.P. from the Seafarers International headquarters from the point of view of the possibility of laying charges against some of the former senior officers of that organization?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, recently the R.C.M.P. placed an extensive report in the hands of the special counsel who subsequently expressed the view that there are some points to be clarified. Accordingly, I have asked that the investigation be concluded and that a final report be made at the earliest possible date.

[Mr. Speaker.]

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING SYSTEM

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of collective bargaining applicable to employees in the public service of Canada and for the resolution of disputes that may arise in the negotiation or conclusion of collective agreements applicable to such employees; to establish a process for the presentation of grievances of employees arising in connection with their employment and to establish a system for the adjudication of grievances of employees; to provide for the establishment of a board, to be known as the Public Service Staff Relations Board, which shall be responsible for the administration of the said measure and to provide further for the constitution and appointment of such other authorities, officers and employees as are required in connection with the administration of the said measure.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to move the adoption of this resolution which stands on the order paper in my name. The purpose of the resolution, and it is an important one, is stated in the first sentence.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of collective bargaining applicable to employees in the public service of Canada and for the resolution of disputes that may arise in the negotiation or conclusion of collective agreements applicable to such employees;—

I will not read the rest of the resolution at this time, Mr. Chairman. In other words, the object of this resolution is to make possible the introduction of legislation which will in its turn make possible the introduction into the public service of Canada of an appropriate system of collective bargaining.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The principle that public servants should have an opportunity to participate in such a system has, I believe, widespread support in the Canadian community. It is a principle which I think I can say is accepted by all parties represented in this house. It is our hope that the legislation which embodies this principle and which, if this resolution carries, will be placed before hon. members for their consideration and ultimate approval, will prove to be an effective instrument for the regulation of employer-employee relationships in the public service.

It has been the usual practice in this house, in dealing with legislation relating to the administration of the public service, to provide for its detailed examination in committee and it is the intention of the government that this practice should be followed with respect to the proposed collective bargaining legislation with which the resolution before us is concerned. With this object in view, a resolution to establish a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons has been placed on the order paper and this resolution will be called at an appropriate time.

Legislation dealing with the public service has traditionally been considered by parliament in a non-partisan atmosphere and it is my hope that this tradition will be maintained with respect to the measure contemplated in this resolution. The legislation to be placed before the house has been prepared with very great care but there is little doubt that suggestions to amend it will be made. Hon. members may be assured that the government will be prepared to consider very seriously any such suggestions for change and to support those which would result in improvements.

The legislation forecast in this resolution will rightly be regarded as a measure of very great significance in the history of the public service. For those who have customarily been identified as servants of the Crown, that is, servants of the people, and whose terms and conditions of employment have been determined by parliament or by the government of the day, this legislation will provide the right to participate in a process of joint determination of the terms and conditions of their employment. This is a process which is rooted in the concept of equity and equality between the government as employer and organizations representing its employees. Such a change will call for major adjustments in established processes and procedures and in the traditional attitude of all those who are concerned.

The legislation proposed by this resolution has been long in preparation—properly so, I believe, in view of its far-reaching implications and importance. The preparatory committee on collective bargaining under the distinguished chairmanship of a great Canadian public servant, Mr. Arnold Heeney, was established in August of 1963. This committee of senior officials was asked by the government to prepare for the introduction into the public service of an appropriate form of collective bargaining and arbitration and in doing so to examine the need for reforms in the system of classification and pay applying to civil servants and prevailing rate employees. Supported by a staff of very competent experts, the preparatory committee met regularly during a two-year period. In the course of its deliberations it received briefs from and consulted with interested employee organizations. It also consulted a number of distinguished persons from the universities, from industry and from provincial and municipal governments. Its report to the government, made in June of last year, was tabled almost immediately and is, of course, available to hon. members.

I should like to express the gratitude of the government, and I am sure members of this house will join with me in this expression of gratitude, to the chairman and to the members as well as to the staff of the committee for their effective and valuable services.

The proposals contained in the preparatory committee's report which relate to the reforms in the classification system were welcomed by the government, and after discussion with the Civil Service Commission they were approved. A program to convert all positions in the civil service to the new plan of classification was immediately undertaken by the Civil Service Commission. This program is now well advanced and is expected to be completed next year. The reforms in the system of classification are of great importance to the successful introduction of a system of collective bargaining, since it is intended that the groupings established by the classification system will constitute the basis of the collective bargaining relationship.

The report of the preparatory committee has been studied very carefully by the government since it was received and published. In the course of this study, the chairman and other members of the committee and its staff have continued to assist ministers. They will, of course, be available to assist the joint committee in its examination of the measure referred to in this resolution should the resolution itself obtain the approval of hon. members, as I hope it will.

The measure to be introduced varies in a few important respects from the proposals made by the preparatory committee on collective bargaining. The modifications which have been put forward by the government do not detract, however, from the fact that the proposed legislation conforms to the basic recommendations of the committee. I will make reference to the main modifications a little later as I refer to the more significant aspects of the resolution before us.

The proposed measure, if parliament approves it, would require changes in two other important pieces of legislation. It will be necessary to amend the Financial Administration Act in such a way as to provide the Treasury Board with authority in keeping with its responsibility to represent the employer interest in the proposed system of collective bargaining. It will also be necessary to amend the Civil Service Act in such a way as to provide for this allocation of authority and to enable the Civil Service Commission to concentrate on its fundamental task of staffing the service and preserving the merit system of selection and appointment.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The statutory reforms in the administration of the public service which are contemplated in this legislative program are, in the view of the government, no less significant than the reforms instituted by the Civil Service Act of 1918 which in essence constituted the beginning of our civil service as we know it today. It is the government's hope and expectation that the changes which will be brought about by this legislation, if it meets parliamentary approval, will ensure that the public service of Canada in the years to come will have the administrative capacity and flexibility to adjust to the changing demands of the Canadian community which it serves.

It has been, and is now, a civil service unexcelled in any country in the world and equalled by few. I hope that the changes now proposed will help to maintain that proud position.

The reforms contemplated in the proposed legislation owe much to several separate studies and investigations of personnel management in the public service which have been undertaken in the post-war period. I have already referred to the work of the preparatory committee on collective bargaining. I would also like to emphasize the important contributions made by the Royal Commission on Administrative Classifications in the Public Service, under the chairmanship of the present hon. member for Davenport, which reported in 1946; by the Civil Service Commission in its report on personnel administration in the public service, which was published in 1958; and by the Royal Commission on Government Organization, under the chairmanship of Mr. Grant Glassco, which reported in 1962.

The report of the Glassco commission underlined the principle of managerial authority and responsibility in the administration of the public service. I think that was an important and timely emphasis. In many areas of the public service new administrative processes reflecting this emphasis are now being introduced. When the report of the Royal Commission on Government Organization was first published, that is, the Glassco commission, its stress on managerial authority was seen in some quarters as a threat to the traditional security of civil servants. The proposal to transfer a significant measure of authority from the independent Civil Service Commission to the Treasury Board and to departmental management was regarded at the time with some apprehension by employee organizations and by others.

It was argued that, if much of the traditional protection afforded employees by the involvement of the commission in the determination of pay and the regulation of other conditions of employment were to be removed, employees themselves should be given the right to protect their own interests through appropriate collective bargaining procedures comparable with those available to employees in the private sector of the community. The argument was an impressive and persuasive one, and it has done much to establish the environment in which the new legislation was considered by the government.

In developing this new legislation the government has had certain general objectives in mind: First, to protect the public interest; second, to respond in an understanding and responsible manner to the aims and aspirations of its organized employees; third, to preserve the capacity of the public service to function efficiently in serving the people of Canada and, fourth, to respect the principles underlying industrial relations law and practice in Canada. In their evaluation of proposals made by the government I am sure members of the house will want to keep all these objectives very much in mind.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address myself for a moment to some of the more important aspects of the policy to be embodied in the legislation which it is proposed, if this resolution carries, to put before parliament.

First, as to its application it is intended that any such legislation should provide a system of collective bargaining for most of the public servants who are not now covered by the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Members of the armed forces, however, who are not employees in the normal sense of the term, will not be covered. Nor will members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or persons locally engaged abroad. The bill will not apply to the employees of parliament in respect of whom the government has no authority as an employer. These groups, who might in the broad sense all be thought of as public servants, will constitute the major exceptions from the application of the legislation.

In Canada, legislation to regulate the relationships between employers and organized employees has invariably assigned important powers and responsibilities to independent labour relations boards. The bill which will be placed before the house will propose the establishment of a similar regulatory board. Its duties will include the definition of bargaining units, the certification of bargaining agents, and the investigation of complaints relating to infringement of rights granted by the statute.

Under the federal industrial relations statute bargaining units are determined by the labour relations board upon application of an employee organization seeking certification. The measure to provide for collective bargaining in the public service will propose a similar procedure. In the interests of an orderly change to the bargaining relationship, however, it will normally require that during a transitional period bargaining units should be defined in such a way as to correspond with the occupational groups in the new classification structure.

I should mention at this point that the proposed legislation will make it possible for bargaining rights to be extended progressively to employees in different occupational capacities during a maximum period of two years. It is our hope that organizations representing employees in the operational category, who are engaged in a wide variety of service and maintenance occupations, will be able to seek certification by October 1, 1966.

Under the schedule which we anticipate and which we hope to be able to carry into effect if parliament gives us the authority, and which is designed to carry into bargaining the present pay review cycle, certification will be available on July 1, 1967, to employees in the professional and scientific category and technical category, and on October 1, 1967, to employees in the administrative and administrative support categories.

Under the proposed legislation an employee organization certified as a bargaining unit would enjoy the exclusive right to bargain on behalf of employees in the bargaining unit concerned and to enter into collective agreements on their behalf. The rights that would be gained through certification would be substantial, heralding a significant change in the traditional relationship of employee organizations to the government as employer.

The most difficult problem to be resolved in the regulation of any system of labour relations is the manner in which disputes are to be settled. The dispute settlement provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, which are similar to those in most labour relations acts in Canada, permit strikes and walkouts where employees have established a bargaining relationship. However, as hon. members know, such actions are not permitted until a number of conditions have been satisfied.

These normally include negotiation in good faith and, where a dispute develops, its consideration by a conciliation board. Strikes and walkouts are lawful only when the conciliation board has reported and a number of days have elapsed after the report has been received. In other circumstances a strike or walkout is an illegal act and is subject to penalties prescribed by law. Strikes and walkouts are also prohibited during the lifetime of a collective agreement.

• (4:50 p.m.)

In so far as the public service of Canada is concerned, the preparatory committee expressed the view that third party arbitration should be the established method of resolving disputes. It said in effect that strike action as a means of resolving disputes would be inappropriate in the public service but that conditions prevailing at the time would not in its view justify a statutory prohibition of strikes. That was the position taken by the preparatory committee.

The legislation which it is hoped will be introduced makes provision for an arbitration process which conforms in all but one important respect with the recommendation of the preparatory committee. The exception however, is an important one. Hon. members will recall the committee's proposal that the Governor in Council should have authority to set aside an arbitration award in what is considered to be abnormal circumstances. The government has concluded that to follow this proposal would appear to give to the employer an undue advantage. It is perhaps not surprising that employee organizations in the public service have taken a similar view. The legislation referred to in the resolution, therefore, will contain no provision permitting the government in its own right to withdraw from an arbitration award. Arbitration will be equally binding on the employer, the government, and the employee, the public servant.

The great majority of organized public servants have made it clear to the government through their elected officers that they wish to be governed by a process of dispute settlement based on binding arbitration. That view is not shared by all public servants, however. Many other responsible Canadians also feel strongly that the right to strike is fundamental and should be qualified only where a clear case can be made to restrict that right in the public interest. The government believes that these strong and very genuine feelings should be respected. Accordingly, the legislation will provide for an alternative method of dispute settlement comparable with that prescribed in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. This method, founded on conciliation and permitting strikes in prescribed circumstances, would be available, as an alternative to the process of binding arbitration, to any bargaining agent. The proposal for this alternative process which permits strikes, however, will vary from that established by the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act in one important respect. The bill will provide that an employee subject to the process will not have the right to strike if his services are essential to the safety and security of the public. The designation of such employees would be made in the first instance by the employer, that is, the government, but in the event of objections registered by a bargaining agent such designation would be determined finally by the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

The last matter of substance, Mr. Chairman, to which I should like to refer in dealing with the resolution is the fact that the proposed legislation will make provision for the introduction throughout the service of formal grievance procedures. The lack of such procedures in most parts of the public service has made it difficult in the past for management to identify and deal with irritants in the relationship between individual employees and those who represent the government as employer.

The preparatory committee recommended that grievance procedures conforming to certain minimum standards should be available to all public servants. The government has accepted this recommendation and has made appropriate provisions for grievance procedures in the proposed legislation.

I should like to conclude these remarks by reiterating my view that the legislation referred to in this resolution will be of very real significance in the development of the processes of public administration in Canada. It is my profound hope that it will provide a framework within which the parties, employer and employees, will be able to develop a relationship founded on mutual confidence and respect to the general betterment of the public service of Canada and to its even greater effectiveness in the service to the people of this country.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this day may well become an historic one in the development of personnel relations in the public service of Canada. Indeed, only two other occasions relating to the public service seem to me to have equal significance. They are the original introduction of the Civil Service Act in the days of Sir Robert Borden, the father of the merit system and of the modern civil service, and the introduction of the complete revision of that act in 1960 under the aegis of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert.

Mention of these three occasions will serve to remind us, as the Prime Minister also did this afternoon, that parliament should approach public service matters with a total freedom from partisanship and with one objective only—how can parliament establish and obtain the best atmosphere in which public servants can achieve the finest administration for the benefit of all Canadians? I want to express at once appreciation of the indication by the Prime Minister in his address this afternoon of willingness to consider amendments to the proposed legislation, where the merit of such amendments may become evident as our discussion proceeds.

Even those of us, sir, who are close to its work have difficulty in realizing what a vast, complex and highly organized structure the Canadian public service has become. In the youth of some of us at least, the federal government reached into our lives but little. Today the tentacles of officialdom reach into almost every facet of our daily lives, and each of us is profoundly affected by the countless decisions taken by public servants in the many departments and agencies of government.

About 350,000 Canadians are employees of Her Majesty, of whom approximately 140,000 are employed by the proprietory and agency corporations and 210,000 are employed by departments of government or departmental corporations. There are over 100 departments or agencies. These statistics emphasize the importance today of the Canadian public service and its widespread ramifications.

All of us in all parts of this house know how exceedingly fortunate Canadians have been in the calibre and quality of the public service. I share to the full the view expressed by the Prime Minister that our public service compares most favourably with that of any nation in the world, and there are many branches of our government service which are unequalled anywhere in scholarship, dedication or accomplishment.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I think the tests we must bring to this new legislation which will be before us must be these: Will it promote efficiency and proficiency within the service? Will it enhance the attractiveness of a civil service career to our ablest young people? Will it assist recruitment of the best minds for our public administration? Will it assist in creating the best climate for constructive effort and dedicated achievement and leading to a fairer and more equitable treatment of public servants in all departments and agencies? Will it improve morale, help to end feelings of frustration and anxiety among civil servants? When the bill goes to a special committee, and I am pleased to know it will, these are some of the tests to which I suggest each of its sections must be submitted.

Collective bargaining, of course ,as such is not new in the public service. The Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act applies to employees in most crown corporations. In quite a number of those corporations bargaining agents have been certified under that act and conditions of employment and levels of wages and salaries are established by collective agreement. Most provinces now have a system of negotiation and arbitration with their employees and they have applied such systems to their municipalities.

For many years I have believed personally that procedures of negotiation and arbitration for the federal public service should be recognized and established and that they should adhere as closely as possible to the law in effect governing relations generally between employers and employees. I enthusiastically endorse the principle of collective bargaining. I confess that in other days I had hoped that this could have been achieved by an evolutionary process under which convention, tradition and agreement, rather than statutory enactment, would govern the procedure.

I have always been impressed by the national Whiteley councils in the United Kingdom which since 1924 have worked effectively and efficiently there without any statutory basis whatever. But I confess to sharing the disillusionment with the manner in which events, some of them untimely and unfortunate, have rendered section 7 of the Civil Service Act of 1961 less than efficacious, and I have come reluctantly to the conclusion that only a statutory base in feasible in the attempt to obtain the collective bargaining system which all of us want at this time.

If the proposed bill based upon this resolution is similar to that drafted under the supervision of the preparatory committee on collective bargaining in the public service, as the Prime Minister has indicated, I want to express some reservations about its complexity and possible inflexibility. The place, of course, to thresh this out is the special committee, but I want to sound this note of warning now. The system of collective bargaining should not be made too rigid, should not be placed in a legislative strait-jacket, but must be given the opportunity to live, breathe and grow in order to meet and conform to changing circumstances.

I believe that this occasion should not pass without some words of tribute to the work of the national joint council. For about 22 years it has been the forum in which organized civil servants could discuss and consider jointly with officials representing the government a wide range of questions affecting conditions of work. The central questions of salary and wage levels have never been included in the national joint council deliberations and, indeed, as the Heeney report of 1958 pointed out, it was hardly a suitable forum for joint consultation and systematic discussion of this complex subject. But it has to its credit very substantial accomplishments, chief of which are the five-day week and the group medical-surgical plan.

The national joint council has been a useful and constructive body. When the Prime Minister replies, I should like him to indicate what is to be the future role, if any, of the national joint council. The Prime Minister will see that at page 87 of the report of the preparatory committee it is indicated that this is being reviewed and that recommendations will be made to the governor in council. I should like to know whether they have been made and what is the nature of them.

I should also like to know what the government proposes shall be the future role of the pay research bureau. I have what I might describe as a paternal interest in this bureau, because one of my earliest actions on entering this house in 1957 was to endeavour to persuade, and I did persuade them, the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition, and the then minister of finance, Hon. Donald M. Fleming, to establish this bureau which the staff associations had theretofore sought unsuccessfully. I believe it has played a most useful role, that its techniques of research, which were shaky at the outset, have been consistently improved, that its work is needed in the future as a source of complete and impartial information about the comparability of salary and wage levels in various grades and classifications.

The Prime Minister has indicated this afternoon that if a system of collective bargaining is to be successful a drastic rearrangement and simplification of the existing classification and salary structure is a sine qua non. The Prime Minister has told us this afternoon that this will be completed some time next year. Indeed, I think this could be one of the most significant and advantageous by-products of the institution of collective bargaining.

Since 1929 this simplification and rearrangement has been urged periodically by various commissions but these recommendations have been largely ignored. The work of the Royal Commission on Administration Classifications in the Public Service was virtually pigeonholed by the St. Laurent government. The Glassco commission report was the latest to find the system "too elaborate and complicated", and recommended radical simplification. Yet in this as in other matters the present government has paid scant attention and virtually no respect to the Glassco report.

Last July, when the preparatory committee on collective bargaining in the public service submitted its report, the then 138,000 continuing positions under the Civil Service Act were found in over 700 classes and 1,400 grades. The special committee will want additional details in this regard to those given this afternoon in the house by the Prime Minister as to how far in fact the work of simplification and rationalization has proceeded. It is very evident that the very number of grades and classifications at present would cause collective bargaining to bog down.

I have no doubt, sir, that there will be many growing pains in the application of new and simplified classifications. It is exceedingly difficult to bring about reasonable uniformity of conditions of employment when there is such an immense variety and diversity of public service jobs. Obviously a clerical job may be very different, although the grade or classification may be the same, for persons working in the embassy at Prague, in an Atlantic seacoast town, at departmental headquarters in Ottawa or in a post at Frobisher Bay.

In addition to the reduction and simplification of the grades and classifications, there are certain other essentials, I submit, if a plan of collective bargaining is to be fully successful and its integrity established firmly. I suggest that these essentials are a basic and integral part of industrial relations law today.

First, there must be full freedom of choice on the part of a civil servant to join whatever organization he wishes. Second, there must be firm prohibition of any discrimination, direct or indirect, against any civil servant as the result of his belonging to an organization of his choice. Third, there must be prohibition of any interference by the government, or any agent of the government, with any staff associations or organizations, including provision of appropriate penalties for threats, reprisals or acts of intimidation. Fourth, there must be provision for an adequate system of redress of grievances and for full investigation of complaints.

Finally, I should like to say that the calibre and ability of the persons appointed to the board and to the arbitration tribunal must be so high and distinguished as to command and retain the confidence not only of all public servants but of all Canadians generally. There is no place for patronage, either political or bureaucratic, in these appointments.

• (5:10 p.m.)

When I refer to the arbitration tribunal may I mention what to me is one of the astonishing features of the report of the preparatory committee as found on page 78:

> The awards of the tribunal should reflect the view of all three members, a majority including the chairman or the chairman alone and, in any event, should be signed only by the chairman. There should be no provision for minority reports.

If I interpret that correctly, it means that the chairman of a three-man board is himself a majority of one even though his two colleagues oppose him, and they are unable to submit a minority report. I confess that I am reminded of the story of Lincoln's cabinet. I do not know whether the Prime Minister treats his cabinet in this way but Lincoln apparently polled his colleagues and found all of them, seven in number, in favour of a certain course of action which he alone opposed. So he announced the result, "Seven yeas; one nay; I declare the nays have it." Frankly, I do not see how this particular proposal in the report and draft legislation can be permitted to stand.

There is one aspect of public service administration which I want to emphasize cannot be made the subject of collective bargaining, and that is the basic merit system. That system, which we owe to Sir Robert Borden, must be preserved inviolate as the central core of our civil service policy. Hon. members are aware of the very deep concern that I feel about possible intrusions into the merit system of factors extraneous to it. I only want to assert now that it is a matter which cannot, in totality or in part, be the subject of negotiation. It must be and remain what the Heeney report of 1958 described it as, "a permanent feature of the Canadian philosophy and machinery of government."

There are a number of other aspects of the bill to be founded upon this resolution which will require especially careful study in the special committee. Personally I am not fully satisfied that the proposed exclusions from collective bargaining are all necessarily sound. Obviously, the armed forces must be excluded, but I am not certain I know why the bill should exclude all persons appointed by the governor in council, persons locally engaged outside Canada, and the bulk of casual employees. It was not clear from what the Prime Minister said this afternoon whether the bill as introduced will differ from the bill recommended by the preparatory committee as to casual employees not being brought under collective bargaining. The latter, it seems to me, are among the employees who may need protection most.

No doubt the special committee will need to spend a great deal of time studying and hearing evidence on the question of the right to strike and the alternative processes mentioned this afternoon by the Prime Minister. Personally I want to study very carefully not only what the Prime Minister said in that respect this afternoon, which I was unable to follow in detail, but the actual provisions of the bill before commenting in detail upon it.

On this whole question I know there are major differences among members of the house and indeed among the staff associations, and I think we should keep an open mind on the subject until all the evidence has been heard. On balance, as I am at present advised I doubt that either the recognition of the right to strike or the prohibition of such right matters as significantly as some believe. Prohibitions of this character have never been very effective in preventing persons with a sense of moral outrage taking retaliatory action. I think our eyes should be upon the goal of preventing conditions arising where the possibility of strike action could even be contemplated. That is the approach we should take. I am sure that already hon. members are receiving telegrams in this respect. Since I came into the chamber this afternoon I have received two, one on each side of this particular subject. I want to hear a great deal more discussion before making a final decision in relation to it or the alternative processes which the Prime Minister has mentioned.

The Prime Minister has indicated that the proposed right of the governor in council to set aside an award as proposed by the preparatory committee will not be in the bill he will introduce following this resolution. But he did not say what reservation, if any, there would be of the residual authority of this sovereign parliament in the event of an emergency where the general public interest requires protection. My hope would be that any such reservation would be as drastically limited as possible.

The 1961 Civil Service Act for the first time made a civil servant's pay a matter of statutory right. In my view a civil servant's pay, determined as it now will be by the process of collective bargaining, is in exactly the same position as a bondholder's interest, an elderly person's pension, a war veteran's pension of other payments which are guaranteed by statute. Nothing should interfere with that pay determined, as I say, by the process of collective bargaining. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that I mention this with some feeling, perhaps principally because the 1962 pay freeze, which I tried hard to prevent, was the reason for my two and a half years enforced holiday from this house.

The Prime Minister this afternoon told us of the consequential amendments which will be required to the Civil Service Act and the Financial Administration Act. What I do not understand is why the resolutions in respect of these amendments are not now on the order paper. Will these amending bills also be referred to the special committee? If so, I venture to suggest they should have been on the order paper this afternoon and should have been brought forward. Personally I believe it is imperative that the special committee should have before it from the outset the full package of the government's proposals. I do not think we should start our deliberations in the special committee until we have before us the complete package of the government's proposals.

The institution of collective bargaining will not create a bed of roses either for the government or the staff associations or indeed for the person most involved, the public servant himself. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that sincerity of purpose and mutual good will, plus not a little bit of patient understanding, will be prerequisites of its success. But I think this resolution does constitute a very major advance in personnel administration. I endorse wholeheartedly the principle of the resolution and would assure the Prime Minister that we on this side of the chamber who will be members of the special committee will take full advantage of his offer in relation to amendments and will work diligently to ensure that the procedures and techniques are the most advanced and enlightened that this parliament can possibly devise.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the members of this party have long advocated and supported the introduction of legislation which would provide full and complete collective bargaining rights for all government employees and employees of all government agencies. Today, in introducing the resolution preceding the necessary legislation to provide for collective bargaining, the Prime Minister has put on the calendar what could well be a red letter day in the history of the Canadian public service.

As all members know, we have been for some years far behind many other countries in providing this type of legislation. Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand and several other countries have for decades had legislation providing for collective bargaining procedures for the public service. In Canada we have been slow in getting around to this.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

The first province to pass such legislation was Saskatchewan which in 1945 made provision for the entire public service to come within the purview of the Trade Union Act and extended to government employees all the rights and privileges which were enjoyed by all other employees within the jurisdiction of the provincial government. I am only sorry that we have taken so long to follow this lead.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Having said that, this does not in any way lessen the sincerity of my commendation to the Prime Minister and to his cabinet for the great forward step which is being initiated by virtue of the legislation to be put before us. I am sure that it must afford the Prime Minister some satisfaction, having himself had some connection with the civil service of Canada, to think that he has played a major role in the steady advancement of the public service of this country, which began with Sir Robert Borden. He was followed by the late William Lyon Mackenzie King when he was prime minister of Canada, and who in my opinion played a very important role in developing the civil service of Canada, establishing its independence and raising its standards. Today we have another Liberal Prime Minister introducing collective bargaining legislation. If it is effective, as I hope it will be, then the Prime Minister will have won for himself a place in the history of this forward march of the civil service of Canada.

I shall not attempt to discuss in any detail the proposals which the Prime Minister has made, first of all because I should like to examine them more closely and, second, because I should like to see the legislation. We will be able to make a contribution when the bill comes down. However, I should like to say one or two things about the whole process of collective bargaining.

First of all, any legislation which is brought into this house should give to government employees the same rights and privileges as are now enjoyed by other employees anywhere else in Canada. For too long we Canadians have accepted the concept that public servants are in some way or other second class citizens, that they ought not to have the same rights and privileges as their fellow workers. I have never seen any justification for this attitude. I can see no difference between a worker who is employed by General Motors and one who is employed by the government of Canada or any of the government's agencies. I hope that when this collective bargaining legislation comes in it will cover all employees of the federal government. I exclude naturally the military, whom I do not consider employees but servants of the Crown who enlist for military service.

As a matter of fact, if we are to retain a good staff in the civil service we will have to give them the measure of dignity and independence to which they are entitled. The day is past when getting a government job is a plum. There was a time when people rushed into government jobs because there were not too many jobs in the private sector. But today there is tremendous competition for able personnel. The government has to compete in the labour market and it is not going to be able to compete effectively if persons who have become employees of the government know that they are going to be treated as second class citizens. If we want a good quality of public servants then we must to see to it that they enjoy all the rights and privileges enjoyed by other workers.

I agree wholeheartedly with what both the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Carleton said about the high standard of the public service of this country. But I hope that we will never stop with the steps which are being taken as a result of the resolution introduced today by the Prime Minister. I hope that in due course we will not only be able to build up a highly qualified and highly skilled public service for the government of Canada but that we will be able to make the public service at all three levels of government a career into which young men and women will go upon graduation from university or some technical institute or high school.

I hope that the day will come when we will have reciprocal agreements between the federal and provincial governments and between both those levels of government and the municipalities, so that people trained in public administration will, if they so desire, be able to move from the municipal field to the provincial field to the federal field or vice-versa while at the same time retaining their pension rights, their seniority rights and their other privileges.

In this way, Mr. Chairman, we would build up in Canada a great reservoir of well-trained and highly-skilled public servants who could work at any level of government and who would have a measure of security and independence which is not always possible at the present time. Often-times now civil servants begin to work at one level of government and when they get to a certain age cannot avail themselves of the opportunity go to move another level of government because they would jeopardize their pension rights and they are beyond the age when they would want to do so.

Second, I would hope that when this legislation is brought before us it will give to the civil servants of Canada all the rights of collective bargaining as they relate to wages, hours and conditions of labour. I hope it will enable them to bargain collectively about methods of promotion, job classification and all of the things which are related to their conditions of employment. I hope the legislation will not restrict their right to strike. I am not clear about what the Prime Minister means about the right to strike being prescribed in certain circumstances.

I think we must remember this, Mr. Chairman. While none of us wants to see civil servants go on strike, the fact remains that in the last analysis the strike is the only effective weapon which workers have in the process of collective bargaining. If the employer, whether it be a government or a corporation, knows that the employee is debarred by legislation from exercising the right to strike, them, of course, the employer can drag his feet in the whole process of collective bargaining.

There may be a very few isolated categories in connection with which there ought to be some understanding that there will be no strikes, but I would make them very restricted indeed. I would not have any of them if I had my way, but if the government is going to have a few then there ought to be some quid pro quo to protect these people so that they are not taken advantage of. That would mean they would have to have some right of appeal to a fairly impartial body, not merely to an arbitration board with the Minister of Labour, appointing the chairman.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The reason I argue strongly for leaving employees with the right to strike is not that I want to see civil servants go on strike but because I believe that if the government bargains in good faith, and if the grievance procedures which are set up are effective, the question of strike is not likely to arise. I do not say it will never arise. I was associated with a government which introduced legislation to bring all civil servants and employees of the Crown under the terms of the Trade Union Act. This act gives to employees the same rights as other employees, including the right to strike. Never at any time, as far as I am aware, has a strike in the public service been called but we have had instances where employees in government agencies went on strike. Looking back on that now I am quite prepared to admit that probably on half those occasions when strikes in government agencies occurred the government was at fault because it had acted either on insufficient or inadequate information.

We must disabuse our minds from the idea that workers like to go on strike. They do not. They usually go on strike when they are desperate, when it is the last resort. Strike is the ultimate weapon. I am convinced that in 99 cases out of a 100, if the government bargains in good faith and with an appropriate spirit of give and take, all problems can be resolved without resorting to strike.

To take away from the government employee the right to strike and to treat an employee differently than if he were the employee of a private company or private utility seems to me to be placing a slur on him which is not justified. Therefore I hope that when the legislation comes down there will be no restriction with reference to the right to strike. If the government insists that there be some restriction I hope that it will be narrowed as much as possible and that some quid pro quo will be provided so that advantage will not be taken of the fact that parliament has deprived these workers of their right to use this ultimate weapon in collective bargaining.

I hope that the legislation which the government is going to bring down will give to the workers the right to name any collective bargaining agency, that it will give them the right of maintenance of membership, that it will give them the right of check-off from their wages and salaries for the support of the organization which is bargaining on their behalf.

The third thing I want to suggest, Mr. Chairman, is that I think this legislation must provide for genuine collective bargaining and not merely for consultation. Too often in the past governments have tended to be somewhat condescending and have tended to provide merely for a certain amount of consultation, which really is not collective bargaining. In the final analysis the success of all this depends as much upon the spirit which goes into these discussions as upon the legislation which is placed on the statute books. Much will depend on the attitude of the government itself.

When representatives of the government's employees sit down at the negotiating table with representatives of the government they must be classed and treated as equals. An employee may be subordinate to the man across the table when he is back in the office or in the department but when they sit down at the negotiating table they are equals. There ought to be no right to pull rank. If we are going to have genuine collective bargaining a spirit of complete equality in the right to express opinions and the right to disagree and dissent must be accepted.

I understand from the legislation as the Prime Minister has very briefly outlined it that employees will be allowed to be represented by any collective bargaining agent they select. I take it for granted that these bargaining agents will be certified by the labour relations board, once that body is satisfied that any particular bargaining agent represents 51 per cent or more of the employees concerned. I also understand that employees will be allowed to bargain on the basis of occupational groups, which I think is excellent.

For the government there are two choices as to who should bargain on its behalf. I notice that Professor Saul Frankel in his little book, "A Model For Negotiation And Arbitration Between The Canadian Government And Its Civil Servants," makes two suggestions. He suggests first of all that it might be done by the Civil Service Commission. On page 29 he says:

> One way of dealing with this problem might be along the lines followed in the province of Saskatchewan. There the Public Service Commission performs in a dual capacity. It administers the system of recruitment, promotion and appeals, and its chairman is the person who speaks for the government in full-scale negotiations with the staff associations.

Then he says:

> I have noted already the theoretical objections that might be made to this dualism. How does one reconcile the necessary partisanship of a civil service commissioner acting as agent of the employer with his vaunted independence and impartiality in the field of recruitment and promotion? It would seem that practical experience in Saskatchewan has not found this to be a serious issue. Similarly in Australia and New Zealand the dual tasks of administering the merit system and negotiating conditions of employment apparently have not proved incompatible in practice.

It seems to me, however, that since we are devising a model it would be tidier to locate full responsibility for negotiations within a government department under a responsible minister. The Civil Service Commission would then be left free to maintain the merit principle in recruitment and promotion. The British example combines the advantages of theoretical consistency with practical success.

I agree with Professor Frankel. I think that the government in its proposal to set up the Public Service Staff Relations Board is taking the right course. In a provincial government where the number of employees is smaller a public service commission can fulfil the dual role, and I do not think the theoritical difficulties are very serious. But in a very large public service such as that of the federal government I think that the idea of setting up a Public Service Staff Relations Board which will act for the government in the carrying out of these negotiations is fit and proper provided, of course, that the Public Service Staff Relations Board is not hamstrung by the Treasury Board so that members being sent to negotiate are told: Your job is to hold the line, there are going to be no increases; provided you come out with the same sized wage bill as last year you can sign the agreement.

I am sure that the Prime Minister and the chairman of the Treasury Board realize that there will have to be constant liaison between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Staff Relations Board in order that this board will be able to take full cognizance of the arguments presented by the employees with respect to rising costs, with respect to comparable classifications and comparable salaries in the private sector and in other jurisdictions, and in order that it will have a sufficiently free hand so that there can be genuine collective bargaining.

I say to the government that if you send the Public Service Staff Relations Board into these negotiations with its hands tied this legislation will be a farce and will not provide for genuine collective bargaining at all. You would just have a series of conferences which would attempt to wear the civil servants down to the point where they must either sign an agreement they do not want to sign or resort to strike action.

I hope, and I feel reasonably sure knowing that some members of the government are genuinely interested in this matter, that the negotiating team for the government will get sufficient—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Pearson: Continue.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: I am almost finished. I thank the committee for its indulgence. I feel sure there will be sufficient flexibility and freedom of action given to those who will be negotiating on behalf of the government to enable genuine collective bargaining to take place. I believe the government will get a good response to the step it has taken today not only from the people of Canada generally but from its own employees and from the employees of its agencies. My experience has always been that when you treat people with dignity and maturity they respond in kind. When you give to our public servants a new power, a new responsibility, they will, I feel sure, act accordingly and in no way abuse the rights and prerogatives which this proposal would give to them. On the other hand, the government has to do everything it can, and this house has to do everything it can, to see that the employees have no reason to feel that the legislation does not provide for genuine collective bargaining.

I wish to make special reference to the question of grievance procedures. The Prime Minister mentioned this subject. Grievances have to be dealt with promptly; there has to be machinery by which the grievances which employees take to their bargaining agents can be examined and rectified should some error have been made. Furthermore, there should be the right of appeal. I take it that grievance procedures ought not to be the subject of strikes. But there has to be some right of appeal if a disagreement between the two bargaining groups cannot be resolved. The Prime Minister said there will be provision for the avoidance of strikes during the life of an agreement. However, one has to consider the possibility of a violation of an agreement. If one party is convinced that the other has violated an agreement and if after discussion it has not been possible to remove the disagreement, it seems to me there should be a right of appeal to some outside body which would make a finding on the matter.

I hope the government will be prepared to be bold about this point when it brings down the legislation. I hope it will have faith in the public service. I believe that if we give these people the rights and privileges to which they are entitled as free citizens of this country they will accept their responsibility and discharge it having due regard to their obligations as servants of the people of Canada.

I congratulate the government on bringing down this legislation. We shall wish to examine it very closely when it comes before us, but if it provides for the kind of collective bargaining for which we have been asking, if it contains provisions such as those of which I have been speaking, I can assure the government that this measure will have our wholehearted support.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, that resolution is a good omen because it foreshadows the legislation which will soon be introduced. On the other hand, I admit frankly that it is always with a little reluctance that I take part in a debate on a resolution because, in my opinion, it is a superfluous stage in our proceedings. As a matter of fact, the house loses very precious time that way.

If all hon. members would agree to eliminate the resolution stage I would be very happy. I would have liked it better if the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had introduced the bill this afternoon to allow us to study something concrete.

But such is not the case. The Prime Minister takes the floor and tries to sell us something he is hiding. He is praising its colour and its size, but we do not know what it is, we have not seen it and we are wondering what is inside that surprise package.

That is the impression I get every time a resolution is introduced. We know that the standing orders require it. Let us get away from 1867. It seems to me that we are a little behind the times. Let us get rid of that procedure. The Prime Minister and his ministers should stop introducing resolutions and should introduce bills instead.

After the Prime Minister had told us everything the legislation did and did not contain, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the other members of the opposition told him in turn that there might be this in it, that it might be better to include some other thing. I am convinced that the bill is already drafted and I am almost convinced that all the remarks by the four opposition parties will not help to give a final form to that measure because, once again, I feel that the text of the legislation is ready and that all the remarks that are made will not change it one bit.

Therefore, why waste the time of the house? We have already lost two hours studying a resolution and today, if we are to proceed as in 1867, the resolution should be introduced at the same time as the legislation to enable us to study it knowing what it is about.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You are not obliged to talk on a resolution.

Mr. Gauthier: What do you mean, we are not obliged to talk on a resolution? We have been talking about it for the past two hours. This what I have just mentioned; nobody has to speak. As a matter of fact, nobody should speak. I am rising to say no one should speak. Two hours of the time of the house have been taken up. This is what we are wondering about; what will this legislation bring us? Let us do away with this procedure.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Gauthier: It is all very well to say: sit down. The thing is to convince the others to resume their seats and not to take up the time of the house. The hon. member opposite keeps saying: sit down. He is always seated and never speaks. We are wasting our time with all this. For the past two hours, I have heard speakers deal with the resolution. The Prime Minister himself took up 30 minutes to say that he will introduce something, while the others are wondering whether this legislation will contain anything.

Let us put an end to this procedure. Let us do away with the resolution stage so that pieces of legislation might be brought before the house.

It is not that we are against the bill; quite the opposite, we are very satisfied to have this legislation brought down.

It is said in the resolution and I quote:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of a system of collective bargaining applicable to employees in the public service of Canada and for the resolution of disputes that may arise in the negotiation or conclusion of collective agreements applicable to such employees.

This only involves a government scheme for government employees which, of necessity, will be operated by government employees and which will be negotiated by the government. This is all that is involved really.

Those people are working for the government, probably because they had good pointers from the parties. In short that is all it is, a government setup.

I would much prefer having the civil servants belong to a union completely independent of the government, just a simple union which could negotiate with the government. It would be more logical.

But any way, it is an improvement since it involves the establishment of a board for collective bargaining. It is surely an improvement on what we had in the past. We are most happy with this small improvement but we would wish that all employees of the civil service belong to a completely independent union, since they are claimed to be free men. Such is the claim, but I do not at all believe it. Nevertheless, it would be a small step forward concerning the freedom of the employee.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment very briefly on the resolution before us in connection with bargaining rights for public servants. For a number of reasons we in this group have been in favour of bargaining rights for public servants. At this stage in the debate it is difficult to speak without repeating some of the things which have already been said but I will try to avoid covering the same ground twice.

First, I would like to say there is a certain degree of myth attached to the proposition of public servants having the right to bargain but on the other hand there is a distinct reality that it can be very valuable not only to the general public service but also to the government itself. This sounds like a contradiction, but what I mean is that over the years we have been in a position where a certain amount of bargaining has been going on all the time, although not in the same sense as it will be once official bargaining machinery such as is proposed is set up.

This will not provide a utopia, as many public servants may think, because the responsibilities of the public service are going to be manifest to them in much greater degree than in the past. The psychological effect, however, will be to produce a peace of mind for public servants in having an organization that will do the right thing for them with respect to working conditions, wages and so on.

However, they will come to realize more than ever that the executive officers of their organization will have to be watched, and the officers will have to keep in close contact with the rank and file membership of the public service lest at any time they speak for themselves and not for the ordinary membership. This may even bring about a situation in the future where limitations will be put on the length of time an officer may hold office. This, I believe, will become paramount in the actual effectiveness of negotiations.

We shall also discover that some of the members of the public service will be better off as a result of collective bargaining but others will not be as well off as at present because in the process of elimination of categories and by reason of the grinding mill of negotiations some public servants will be removed from their present categories.

When the bill is introduced we shall have to spend a considerable amount of time analysing it in order to make certain that it will be a properly working act of parliament right from the beginning. I think this analysis will have to take place in committee, and I am hopeful that there will be free expression of opinion in order that parliament can offer its best with respect to the bargaining position of public servants.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, should I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Haidasz: No, continue.

Mr. Gauthier: Continue.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to—

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I must advise the hon. member for Sherbrooke that the time allotted for the study of private members' business has been postponed to a later date. He may therefore continue his remarks with regard to the resolution now before the house.

Mr. Allard: It is very kind of you, Mr. Chairman, to point out that I now have the floor. However, before I go any further, allow me to say that I disagree with the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) concerning the resolutions put before this house.

By virtue of my political status here in the house I must, however, differ somewhat today from the opinion he has expressed; I feel that the resolution stage has its importance for it allows the government to give parliament an outline of the bill to follow and the occasion to find out what the various political parties and members think of the matter to be submitted to them in greater detail.

Naturally, much time can be wasted in the house, and we have seen it happen from time to time. The same applies to the committees. When the committee is formed, we sincerely hope it will proceed without delay and not dwell only on matters of secondary or lesser importance, because the problem is of capital importance.

That problem has been facing us for many years in Canada and has not been solved yet, but the introduction of the resolution leads us to believe that it will soon find an almost complete solution.

Therefore, I wish to congratulate the government for introducing that resolution. If, at times, I criticized rather sharply several pieces of legislation in the house, I am happy today to congratulate the government and the Prime Minister for submitting the matter to the house for study after a few months' notice.

Of course, we are used in Canada to politicians of good faith, there are so many of them, but from an administrative standpoint how slowly everything is done.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) pointed out a little earlier the merit of the measure but underlined the time it took to introduce it.

That problem is of capital importance. It has created between the government, the employees and even the public for many years tensions, worry, numerous grievances. Finally a resolution is introduced, a bill will follow, and I hope that it will enable us to strike a happy medium and give justice to that category of Canadians who willingly spend their youth on special studies and their life at the service of the state, and who have the right to work under human conditions, in line with those which prevail in 1966, and not according to a conception of the labour code which is 75 years old.

The present legislation needs to be amended considerably, and that bill will most certainly do it. We will therefore have to study it in detail when it is introduced.

Since 1961 the present legislation recognizes the right of association to civil servants. Sections 7 and 10 provide that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and the Civil Service Commission must, from time to time, consult with representatives of civil servants associations before formulating recommendations or taking decisions with regard to the salary of the members of the civil service. Well, that legislation is obsolete and backward because it is responsible for the government lagging too far behind the existing labour code.

[Mr. Allard.]

If, as an employer, the government is different in some respects from the private employer, it cannot avoid the many social obligations of today. Our changing democracy requires it.

In order to delay the granting of negotiation and conciliation rights, it has often been alleged that parliament, by virtue of its sovereignty, cannot commit its authority beforehand in the matter of expenditures in favour of a inferior organization. This argument has some validity, but it should be considered very closely in the light of rights granted to workers at present, so as to reflect the slight differences which, I hope, the bill will contain in detail.

We are lagging behind a great deal. The British government, that we take as a model in some fields, has recognized since 1925 the right of association and conciliation within the public service. In 1925, the British government included in its legislation a provision to the effect that all matters remain subject to the final authority of parliament. Thus, it upheld the principle that parliament could not abandon its absolute sovereignty.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Since 1925, almost 700 cases have been submitted to arbitration and in more than 95 per cent of those cases, the decision reached by arbitration was unanimous. It follows therefore that when the government and its permanent employees are able to discuss matters democratically through conciliation procedures, an increase in grievances and friction is not so much to be feared. We have proof of this by the criteria laid down in England since 1925.

I shall not deal at length with this matter today, because I shall refer later on to the setting up of a conciliation board, to the role of the chairmen and, of course, of members of those conciliation boards.

However, I should like to make a few remarks regarding the right to state grievances. Of course, the government is an employer somewhat different from a private employer, because it has national responsibilities to face and assume, whether in peacetime or in wartime.

Notwithstanding its national responsibilities, I think that the government should not exclude from the bill the right to strike, as a corollary to the right of association or bargaining. Obviously, I believe the committee should spend more time on the question of dividing the essential and secondary fields of administration where the right to strike should be prohibited or allowed.

As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) pointed out so well, in cases when the right to strike would not be permitted, well, there would be a right of appeal. Whatever the formula to be adopted, the bill should be democratic, modern, in line with democratic evolution, the standards of labour legislation, and they should try to introduce a formula which would be as close as possible to the privileges allowed to employees in private enterprise, with the necessary differences in certain fields from the point of view of public and national responsibility of government.

Therefore, I feel that the right to strike should be considered by this committee and should be subject to strict restrictions, so that it could be used only in the fields where they would decide, after having exhausted all the negotiation procedures and, therefore, it should be the ultimate recourse to be taken after sheer injustice or absolutely inflexible stubbornness.

There is another point I would very much like to see defined in the bill, but I am very much afraid it will not be in the sense I would hope for. This follows on a grievance which is most important and essential to the future of the Canadian federation.

It would be most important to provide for the definition of the bargaining unit. You are doubtless aware of the very significant and substantial grievance arising today between groups of employees of crown corporations concerning some rulings of the National Labour Relations Board to the effect that bargaining units are considered, not as defined by the Industrial Disputes Act, but considered by precedent and by repeated similar rulings that the bargaining unit must be strictly on the national level.

I should like the government to consider the problems of the Canadian crisis revealed to us in considerable depth by the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, because French Canadians in the civil service have been badly discriminated against in one way or another, intentionally or not, in a concerted or inadvertent manner.

I know several French Canadians who wanted to make a dynamic contribution to the administration of their country, but who did not evince interest in the civil service because they were treated as inferiors and always kept in second and third class positions. The better salaries were the private preserve of another group.

It is important to provide in this legislation, when we are looking for an efficient remedy to this government problem, that the bargaining unit be considered on the national level as well as local, because some civil servants in the province of Quebec have particular problems. Whatever may be said, Quebec is not a province like the others.

This is established by facts, by theory and by the people's feelings. Civil servants in the province of Quebec have particular problems also with the government. That is the reason why it is important. It takes nothing away from national unity but, on the contrary, it might strengthen it. It is not always by pushing someone aside or by prodding him that you make a friend out of him. One can make a friend out of an intelligent man.

I should be in favour of a study by the committee upon the advisability of establishing the bargaining unit at the local level, so that the group of French Canadian employees may receive an equal treatment within the civil service.

• (6:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, after the full statement by the Prime Minister in introducing this legislation it is not my intention at this time to speak at any length, but I will expand on my remarks at second reading of the bill. I know that everyone is very anxious to pass this resolution and to see the actual legislation proposed by the government.

However, I should like to assure hon. members, in answer to a few of the questions raised by the hon. member for Carleton and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that reclassification of the civil service has been carried on with every possible speed since this government came into power. We appointed the Heeney committee which reported to us, following which we immediately asked the Civil Service Commission to proceed with reclassification.

Reclassification is well under way and it involves a massive task, there being more than 200,000 civil servants. It is expected to be completed so that, in the event this legislation is passed, we will be able to commence collective bargaining this October with some reclassification and with the complete reclassifications by October of 1967. I think this indicates remarkable speed considering the great task involved.

In relation to another question asked about amendments to the Financial Administration Act and the Civil Service Act which are necessary as a result of this collective bargaining legislation, I should like to assure hon. members that appropriate legislation will be introduced as soon as that is physically possible. With the indulgence of the house, after this legislation has been given second reading I hope we can move to item No. 53 on the order paper involving the authorization of a joint committee to consider this legislation. It is the plan of the government, when we complete the redistribution debate, to proceed with second reading of this bill and then move to second reading of the two other bills involved. They would then be referred as quickly as possible to the special joint committee so that the necessary legislation can be passed, we hope, by July.

There was only one other point raised which I think I should answer at this time. I refer to the point in respect of the independence of the Public Service Staff Relations Board and the arbitration tribunal about which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam spoke. I should like to assure the hon. member and the committee that it is the intention of this legislation and of the government that these shall be completely independent bodies appointed for terms which will secure their tenure and make them completely independent of any government influence.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister will be good enough to answer the two questions I raised in respect of the future roles of the national joint council and the pay research bureau.

Mr. Benson: I am prepared to deal with those more fully during second reading of the bill.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

[Translation]

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Prime Minister) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the public service of Canada.

[Mr. Benson.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall this bill be read the second time?

[English]

Mr. Knowles: At the next sitting.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): At the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, in order that we may proceed with the naming of the members of the committee I would ask for unanimous consent that we deal now with item No. 53 on today's order paper which simply authorizes the setting up of the committee necessary to examine the legislation now before us.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is agreeable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give unanimous consent to deferring private members' hour for the consideration of item No. 53 on today's order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ESTABLISH JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. E. J. Benson (for the Prime Minister) moved:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to inquire into and report upon a measure respecting employer and employee relations in the public service of Canada and upon such other related legislation as may be referred to it by either house; that 24 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that standing order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto; that the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Motion agreed to.

• (6:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the intention of the house to revert to private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, in view of the time that has been lost, the house would rather go on with government business. We would be prepared to go on with the railway branch line bill.

Mr. Knowles: Would it not be fairer, Mr. Speaker, to give a little extra time to the hon. member who has a private motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Is it the wish of the house to go on a little beyond seven o'clock and take an hour for private members' business?

Mr. Knowles: My suggestion is that we have private members' hour now and that it last until one hour from now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like that to be understood, Mr. Speaker, because my bill will be the next item of business and I want to be back in the house. I would suggest that with unanimous consent private members' hour extend to twenty-five minutes past seven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that private members' hour commence now and continue for one hour until 7.25?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BRIDGES

WALPOLE ISLAND-CHATHAM TOWNSHIP—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent) moved:

That in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge on Chenal Ecarte (also locally referred to as the Snye), one of the channels at the mouth of St. Clair River, where at present there is a cable-operated ferry linking the shore of Walpole Island to the shore of Chatham township, county of Kent, (mainland side), Ontario.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I cannot begin my remarks on this subject without first thanking hon. members most sincerely for their generosity in allowing a full hour for private members' business so that I may present this motion.

Rarely do we as members of this house have an opportunity to do something directly for our fellow man that will be as helpful to any group of people in Canada and as satisfying to hon. members as the acceptance of this resolution. Here is a golden opportunity for us as members to go on record. When we support this resolution we will be taking a great step toward establishing again in the minds of the public the fact that members of this house do care about their fellow man and can co-operate for the common good. Many of the newspaper reports of political infighting, partisan prejudice and bias will be proven wrong in the face of such action on the part of men of good will in this house.

It is in this vein that I thank the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy) for his interest. I welcomed his offer to second my motion. He has done this because I believe he honestly and sincerely wants to help the 1,500 people living on Walpole Island in my constituency. Let me remind the house that these people vote in my riding, not his. However, he is fully aware of the problem as he lives close to the area and is therefore well qualified to speak on the subject as I hope he will.

This bridge is required desperately so that reasonable access may be obtained to the island which is only about 300 feet from the mainland. Transportation to the island from the mainland is only possible by the use of an antique scow whose only condescension to modern trend in the past 100 years has been the replacement of handpower on the cables by a gasoline motor. For a ride on this contraption the public pay 25 cents each way. Quite often an hour's wait or more is required before a potential user can get aboard and pay his 25 cents to risk his life and vehicle in the crossing.

Many people in the area will not cross to the island because of a well-founded fear of the crossing. Indeed, there are people in this area who have never been on the island. If reasonable access to the island can be obtained it will means many dollars of extra income to the residents. There are natural resources on the island that can be utilized. To give one example, there is a large, sandy beach which could become a source of income to the band and thus reduce their dependence on federal funds. In addition, there are thousands of acres of the most fertile soil awaiting development. I am told that less than one-third of the potential agricultural area on the island has been developed. The island, if provided with reasonable access, could be a veritable garden spot.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, there are many skilled and semi-skilled people on the island who would naturally gravitate to our side for employment rather than as at present going on the diesel ferry that carries them to Algonac, Michigan, where many work in industries. We need these people in industry in Canada now and they have a great contribution to make to our economy.

Many times during the past winter the residents of the island were isolated and bread and other essentials were only obtained by most dangerous and perilous trips across the ice. I only wish Hansard had the facility of putting on the record pictures such as I have in my possession of the situation there this spring.

I do not intend to take up much more of the time of the house. Someone may ask about the cost, which I have purposely not mentioned. The cost is not important really, because if any member feels we cannot afford a structure such as this let me remind him that, while I favour toll-free access, people in the area would gladly pay double what it now costs to risk life and limb on the scow for the privilege of crossing on a bridge.

Therefore, before anyone in this house thinks he can use the "no money" device, shall I say, to delay this bridge let me point out that I know that I speak for the people in southwestern Ontario when I say they want the bridge and need it badly enough that a self-amortizing plan with tolls would be readily acceptable although, of course, not as satisfactory as a free way. Remember, they already pay to ride on the scow.

• (6:30 p.m.)

For the benefit of members who are not familiar with this area of Canada may I point out that the St. Clair River flows between Canada and the United States from Sarnia past Walpole Island, roughly 30 miles. The stream is approximately one mile wide and at Walpole Island the river divides into three narrower channels before emptying into Lake St. Clair. The channel between mainland Ontario and Walpole is called the Snye or Chenal Ecarte. This is where we need the bridge immediately. The channel is about 300 feet wide. On the opposite side of Walpole Island is the middle or main ship channel, approximately a quarter of a mile wide, between Walpole and Harsen's Island which is United States territory. Harsen's again is approximately three-eighths of a mile distant from mainland United States.

At the rate our country and population grow it would seem that an international bridge to the United States of America must soon be considered. As things now stand, in order to proceed from Wallaceburg to Algonac, Michigan, it is necessary to drive to Sarnia and cross the Blue Water bridge, a trip of 40 miles up one side and 40 down the other. If you go the other way it is approximately 70 miles by highway to Windsor where there is the Ambassador bridge and the Detroit-Windsor tunnel.

It would seem to me—and this is only a layman's view—that three bridges hopping from island to island would be more feasible than one large structure crossing a mile of open water. The bridge to Walpole Island could be the first step toward an international bridge in the future. This would be of benefit not only to the 1,500 residents on Walpole Island but to probably half a million people in Ontario and many, many more in Michigan. So you see, Mr. Speaker, this is a worth-while idea in many ways.

The river drive from Sarnia to Walpole Island is one of the most beautiful in Canada. This fact has been recognized by the municipalities involved and the provincial government. Indeed, the minister of highways of Ontario, Mr. MacNaughton, has already introduced or will soon introduce legislation to establish this route as a scenic parkway. It will rival the Niagara parkway in beauty. Further, he has personally signified to me his interest in this bridge, which adjoins Ontario highway No. 40. It would be complementary to the parkway and to the expressway being built to take commercial traffic off the river-front road.

As a matter of fact, Mr. MacNaughton has written me as follows in a letter dated March 1, 1966:

> My capital construction program for the 1966 construction season is pretty well set by treasury board and by my own department, which would preclude anything of an imminent nature being done, but probably we can get on with some of the preliminary investigatory work in any case.

So, Mr. Speaker, here is the offer of the province of Ontario to co-operate. This bridge must be a joint effort, and I am sure that the province is ready and willing to co-operate with the proper federal authorities and make a start toward this worth-while endeavour.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me ask members of this house to place themselves in the position of a husband or a father on Walpole Island whose wife or child is seriously ill or, for that matter, dying. The ferry cables are broken or the ice floes have isolated your island home for several days. You cannot get a doctor to the island and you cannot get your loved one to a doctor or a hospital. How would they then vote on this resolution, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Walter F. Foy (Lambton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this motion because I believe it deserves the attention of all members of the house. First of all, I should like to say that even though this motion was introduced by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), who is a member of the opposition and represents in this house the Walpole Island Indian Reserve, I am both honoured and pleased to second it.

Before giving my reasons for saying that this motion should be passed I should like to give a brief description of this island reserve. I have distributed to hon. members pictures of some of the ice floes which are such a great problem to the people on the reserve.

Walpole Island is about ten miles in length and about six miles at its widest point. The reserve is located at the junction of the St. Clair River and the Snye, about 30 miles to the south of Lake Huron. The band comprises about 1,500 members and their reserve is entirely surrounded by water. The proposed bridge would span the Snye River for a distance of 300 feet at the suggested point from the island to the mainland. Incidentally, the Snye River is the only channel for freighters carrying cargo to the city of Wallaceburg.

The only means of transportation to the island reservation is by ferry. The ferry that crosses the Snye is operated by motor-driven cables from the mainland. Even during the months when navigation is open, accidents are numerous. The cables foul freighters and many pleasure craft. But when the cold months of winter set in and navigation is closed, the hazards are unbelievable. The industries north of Walpole Island continually pour waste, accompanied by extremely hot water, into the St. Clair River. This, plus the mild climate during the winter months and the fast current, prevents a complete freeze-up of the river.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the ferry operates during this treacherous period when it can. It must break a path through the thin ice and very often must fight large masses of ice which float down the St. Clair River into the Snye. The mode of transportation under these conditions reminds me of what I have read about the Daniel Boone days but certainly not of the year 1966.

On this island there are approximately 8,000 acres of the finest corn-growing land in this country. This land is leased to white farmers who employ the Indian people on the island and this provides income for the band members. The acreage could at least be tripled if there was modern access from the mainland to the island. Here, then, is one reason that this bridge should be constructed.

• (6:40 p.m.)

In summer Walpole Island is a resort area and about 1,000 people live there for the season. This is another source of income for the Walpole Island Indian band, but this increase in population multiplies the problems of commuting back and forth from the mainland to these resorts. There are only 25 permanent jobs on the island. The remainder of the labour force, men and women, must commute to the mainland to work and earn their living. A further source of income to the Indians is the many hunters who require guides and other services during the duck hunting season. These are a few of the many reasons why this bridge is a necessity for better economic, social and living conditions, to say nothing of safety which is certainly of major consideration.

However, the most distressing factor, from my point of view is the education of the Indian children. Each hon. member knows the stress that every level of government puts on education today for all children, not just for Indian children. We as members say we must educate our Indian children and youth so they will be able to help themselves, so they can learn trades and professions and be independent. We say our ultimate aim is that the Indians be self-supporting, that they live in dignity with a standard of living equal to that enjoyed by all other Canadians. But what about the Indian children on Walpole Island? There are 182 pupils who commute by bus and the ferry to the city of Wallaceburg to attend high school. There are 193 children in the lower grade school on the island.

The ice floes are a menace during the winter months; yet those children attending high school must venture on an antiquated cable-drawn ferry through this ice floating along in the strong current. When the ice floes reach a density and volume which prevent the ferry from operating there is no other way for the students to cross the Snye. Therefore they are unable to attend their classes. For the same reason teachers from the mainland are unable to reach the island and their classrooms in the lower grade school. As a result 375 pupils are compelled to miss school through no fault of their own. They have the added problem of trying to pass examinations after poor attendance through no fault of their own.

I should like to read from the Windsor Star of February 15, 1966. The column is headed: "Walpole Asks Action On Bridge." There is a picture showing one of the ferry docks. Under the picture it says:

It's not very far from the mainland to Walpole Island but the island might have been another planet over the weekend. Ice floes from Lake Huron and the St. Clair River have halted the ferry from Baldoon to the island indefinitely, stranding people on both sides of the Snye Channel. Shown here is the ferry and part of the ice field that is disrupting traffic. The island is in the background.

This is a very serious matter. In addition to the problems the students face there have been a considerable number of deaths resulting from cars running off the ferry. There is also a serious hazard to sick people who cannot be taken to hospital or to a doctor due to the interrupted ferry service during ice floe time. These ice floes are continuous throughout the winter, at least until the end of February. It is not unusual for ice to be flowing until nearly the end of March. I believe this was mentioned by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent.

At this point I am going to refer to the press release and announcement made in the house by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) a few weeks ago. The announcement had to do with the program of physical development of Indian Communities for which the federal government has budgeted $112 million during the next five years to undertake a massive Indian reserve improvement program. I draw attention to this part of the statement:

In order to provide access to and from reserves for school children, employment opportunities and economic development, adequate roads are necessary. To this end some $17 million will be spent in co-operation with Indian band councils and other levels of government.

This is the open door for co-operation with the Walpole Indian band council who have already petitioned and asked their government for this bridge.

I now quote from the Chatham Daily News of February 16, 1966, one short paragraph of an article entitled, "Walpole Ferry Operating Again", in which it is said:

The bridge to the island has been a platform plank of a great many politicians for years.

Today, Mr. Speaker, there are three bus loads of children crossing the Snye twice daily. It is estimated that in 12 years there will be 21 bus loads of children crossing twice daily. This bridge is needed and it is needed now.

I ask and plead with the hon. members to forget partisanship as I have done. I know that politics will never disappear from government. It is an essential part of our system but there are some areas where all parties in the house should forget politics. I believe this is a case in point. The great need for this bridge is one instance where no political philosophy is involved. The safety and need of the Indians should be of the utmost concern to all hon. members.

I know this is a motion and not a bill but in not talking out this motion all hon. members will silently give their approval to this great need. I know hon. members will recognize their responsibility as members of this parliament and pass this motion. To those who feel it a political responsibility to talk it out I say: Would you want your children to be carried on an open, outdated cable-drawn ferry, which is a hazard in itself, plus having the added peril of facing these ice floes twice daily in order to get an education?

• (6:50 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I regret to interrupt the proceedings but it is my duty to remind the house of the subjects which will be before the house for discussion at ten o'clock. May I have consent to read the agenda?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—Grain—Prince Rupert, B.C.—increase in elevator capacity; the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan)—National Defence—Greenwood—reported fight following pay increases for pilots; the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan)—Transport—Pictou Landing, N.S.—reported unsafe condition of wharf.

BRIDGES

WALPOLE ISLAND-CHATHAM TOWNSHIP—SUGGESTED CONSTRUCTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McCutcheon:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of constructing a bridge on Chenal Ecarte (also locally referred to as the Snye), one of the channels at the mouth of St. Clair River, where at present there is a cable-operated ferry linking the shore of Walpole Island to the shore of Chatham township, county of Kent (mainland side), Ontario.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker I am pleased that the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) has brought this resolution forward for our consideration. I am even more pleased that the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy) has seen fit to second it and give it such forthright and eloquent support. The resolution has, I believe, been put forward in such a way that we can consider it entirely on its merits and without spending an undue amount of time in discussion, I hope, express an opinion of the house suggesting that action be taken by the federal government so far as it has responsibility within this field.

The hon. member for Lambton West said this proposal had been a plank in many political platforms and the thought occurred to me that if all these planks had been put together the bridge might already have been built. However, this is a project which still remains to be accomplished.

A resolution of this kind brings to mind the size of Canada and how little of its geography is known in detail to those who do not live in the area concerned. I am sure that if I were to discuss, for example, the transportation problems of the Indian people at Ucluelet or housing needs on Vancouver Island, the hon. member for Lambton West or the hon. member for Lambton-Kent would be no more familiar with the local geography than I was with the Walpole Island area until a comparatively short time ago.

Though I was not aware of the constituency in which Walpole Island lay I was interested in a communication which I and other members, I assume, received some time ago from the chief of the band council on the Walpole Island reserve. Since I have some acquaintance with the problems in the transportation field which face Indians in my part of Canada I wrote asking for further information, and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I received additional information very promptly together with an outline map of the area.

One part of the information which greatly intrigued me—and this was not stressed by either of the previous speakers—was the fact that the Indians living on this reserve have progressed further in the direction of managing their own affairs as a self-supporting community than have many of the Indian bands across Canada. For this reason, if for no other, I found myself interested in the project we have been discussing, one which seems to be of so much concern to these people.

As a matter of fact, I took it upon myself, though this area is a long way from Comox-Alberni, to address a communication to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in his capacity as Superintendent General of Indian affairs to ask how this particular project stood so far as the Indian affairs branch is concerned. Reference has already been made by the hon. member for Lambton West to the recently announced program for Indian community development. I feel sure that the proposal we are considering lies foursquare within the provisions of the economic development program recently announced by the minister involving plans to spend $112 million in this field over the next five years.

I venture to believe that no one in any quarter of the house would quarrel with the minister's intentions in this regard, and I would point out that particular reference was made to the need for an improvement in transportation facilities to enable the Indians to enrich their economic, social and educational life through measures of self-help and increasing self-government. For this reason I ask the house to express itself in support of the resolution.

As I understand it, the entire area of Walpole Island consists of Indian reserve property. I believe this creates a constitutional situation in which the federal government and the Indian affairs branch can become directly involved in a way which might not be possible were the island only in part an Indian reserve. If the co-operation which the Department of Highways of the province of Ontario has indicated its readiness to provide is indeed forthcoming, there should be no delay in working out financial arrangements with the Indian affairs branch as the proper agent of the federal government so that this project may go forward with the least possible delay and a remedy be found as quickly as possible for the deplorable transport facilities outlined by the two hon. members who have spoken this afternoon.

I am interested in the suggestion that this bridge would be a possible link in an international crossing. I refer to this only to suggest that since this project is related to international waters it is an area within which the federal government has authority in some measure at least. I rise as one member who represents in this parliament a large number of the Indian people of Canada and who for this reason has some knowledge of the transportation problems with which many of the Indian people are faced. I do so to give full and wholehearted support to those who urge the speedy passage of this resolution and I trust that speedy construction of the bridge will be possible.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on the motion of the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon), which has been supported by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy). Their contribution was an eloquent plea for a bridge across the Chenal Ecarte from Walpole Island to the approaches of highway 40, which leads into Wallaceburg.

I first wish to say that we on this side of the house are well aware of our responsibilities for the welfare of the inhabitants on Walpole Island. We are aware of the economic studies that have been made by the St. Clair area development board, and I can assure hon. members that the officials of the Indian affairs branch here in Ottawa have been studying that report, as well as the reports made on the self-government experiment on Walpole Island.

I agree with the previous speakers that a bridge of this type would be an important factor in the provision of better movement between the main island and the neighbouring mainland. Construction of this bridge would, no doubt, be an important project. Besides the consideration of local needs and demand, important factors such as divided jurisdiction of the different levels of government, the feasibility of building such a bridge, other engineering studies, and the costs of construction should be carefully taken into account.

[Mr. Barnett.]

I would like to commend the local Indian band authorities for taking the initiative in this matter. Having taken on the responsibility of carrying out the project, I hope that liaison with local, municipal, provincial and federal agencies will be smooth and fruitful. At this time I would like to acknowledge a letter, dated February 16, 1966, which I received from Chief Burton Jacobs of the Walpole Island council, which I read with great interest and immediately referred to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing), who is the Superintendent General of Indians.

In noting the remarks in this letter about the need for a bridge I also welcomed news of the successful development of the experiment in self-government on the island. I regard this experiment in self-government on Walpole Island as an important move. This event has evoked much interest among many Indian leaders across the nation who share the philosophy that enlightened band administration is the spark plug of community development. The opportunity to participate fully in determining their own destiny should be the goal of all Indian people as Canada approaches the centennial of confederation.

We are grateful to the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and the hon. member for Lambton West for their assurances that the provincial authorities are ready to discuss the project of constructing a bridge across the Chenal Ecarte. I am informed that the Indian affairs branch is well aware of the desire of the inhabitants of the island for such a bridge to replace the ferry service. The open deck, flat-bottomed barge operated by an engine driven cable is not the best form of vehicle to cross the 300 foot channel of water, especially in adverse weather and under the conditions experienced at certain times, as explained by the hon. member for Lambton West.

The department is aware of its responsibilities for the welfare and education of the 300 odd students who cross the channel by this ferry to reach the secondary school at Wallaceburg. So far as the further negotiations that should be carried on between the band council, the provincial government, the local authorities and the Indian affairs branch are concerned, I would like to say that these are already in progress. This morning the representatives of the people on Walpole Island met with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) and have scheduled a meeting next month with the local authorities and also with the representatives of the Indian agency in that area.

I also note that the officials who will be present at that meeting will be considering a motion to have a firm of consulting engineers look into the question. It is my hope and my desire that the negotiations will finally be fruitful and provide what is best for the residents on Walpole Island and for the development of the St. Clair area.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this evening I am the second member from British Columbia to enter into this debate on the building of a little bridge to serve a band of Indians who live on an island in Lake St. Clair in the province of Ontario. It may seem strange to the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) that two members from such a distant province would take part in this debate, but I might say that in British Columbia we have two things very much in common with the hon. member and with the problem of the Indian band on Walpole Island. British Columbia is a province in which we have a considerable population of Indians living under a variety of circumstances in very rugged country, and being served by some of the most rugged forms of transportation to and from civilized roads and communities that are to be found anywhere in Canada or, indeed, anywhere in North America.

Another thing we have in common is that we British Columbians, as we move throughout our own province and up and down Vancouver Island, have become familiar with some very weird and wonderful forms of transportation that have served us for many years. Therefore I for one recognize the hazards which attend this Indian band on Walpole Island as they go to and from the mainland, using the rather primitive conveyance which the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Foy) have described. The latter of these two hon. members has provided us with a picture showing this primitive device crossing the 300 feet of water to the island, across ice floes, much in the manner of Eliza in "Uncle Tom's Cabin". As a matter of fact I think it was on ice floes in and around that very area that Eliza nipped across the ice, and I know the hon. member will correct me if I am wrong. I see him rising.

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes. I know the hon. member would not want to have any error in his remarks. Eliza, with the dogs nipping at her heels, crossed on the ice at Amherstburg, which is downstream about 15 miles from Detroit.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deachman: I am sorry if I erred by 15 miles. However, I think you will agree that in an area as big as Canada I was in the general ball park. This problem concerns a band of about 1,500 Indians, about 750 of whom I understand are employable or are able to get into the labour stream. The community adjacent to them is the town of Wallaceburg. Certainly it would improve the lot of these Indians if they had better facilities for going to and from Wallaceburg. We have many Indian bands in Canada and the problem of transportation to and from the reserves is a great problem, and one of the matters the government is facing at this time. Whether or not a bridge of the capacity suggested by the hon. member is capable of being built at this time I cannot say. However, there is a government memorandum which was given to me when we were accumulating, some days ago, information on this problem. In this memorandum it is suggested that the cost of the bridge which would be required to meet the needs of this band on Walpole island, a bridge about 300 feet in length, would be somewhere between $1½ and $2 million. That is a considerable amount of money to spend in an area which we have had described to us as a relatively small one, and containing a relatively small number of people.

There is an argument for this and I am not disputing the validity of it. While I was listening to the hon. member I worked out what it would cost to build this bridge, as compared with what it would cost to build the causeway to Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend will recall that only a few days ago when we were listening to the termination of the Budget debate, the young, new and very able member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid) spoke about some matters concerning Prince Edward Island and the cost of building that causeway. He indicated the cost would be something in the neighbourhood of $1,400 or $1,500 per person living on the island. If you multiply $1,500 by the 1,500 persons in the area served by this bridge, you come out with a cost of $2½ million. So, they are comparable in cost.

I do not think anyone would argue that this is an inordinate cost for a bridge to serve a group of people. I just question whether funds are available from the federal treasury at this particular time for this service, having regard to what the government has in mind in respect of the improvements on Indian reserves with relation to housing, school facilities, roads and transportation. In this regard I should like to refer the hon. member to page 2801 of Hansard of March 17, when the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) dealt with his announcement of the reserve improvement program. In this announcement he indicates the government certainly is prepared to give aid in the very direction in which my hon. friend is requesting aid for the Indians of Walpole Island. I should like to read to the hon. member the pertinent paragraphs which I am sure he will find interesting. The minister said:

> I am pleased to inform the house that an extensive Indian reserve improvement program to cost about $112 million in the next five years, will be undertaken. Under the program Indians will receive assistance to provide better housing, safe water supply, sanitation facilities, electrification of homes and improved roads in their communities.

He goes on at page 2802 to say:

> Transportation is of vital importance to provide access to and from reserves, for school children, employment opportunities and economic development. Improved roads on many reserves are a necessity. To this end some $17 million will be spent in co-operation with Indian band councils and other levels of government.

So here we see earmarked, for the very purpose which my hon. friend wishes, a sum of $17 million, already announced in the program of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Now, I wish to allude to a report given to me not long ago when this matter was under study.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask the hon. member a question before he alludes to the report? In the light of the statement he has just made in respect of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, does he not think we should deal with this matter and enable the governor in council to use discretion in respect of whether or not this would qualify within the ambit of that program, and hope that the government at least would take a look at it, which is what the motion is asking?

Mr. Deachman: I believe we should deal with it, and that is precisely why I am on my feet at this moment.

Mr. Churchill: Are you supporting the resolution, because there are only five minutes left; if you are supporting it, I would like to support it as well.

Mr. Deachman: I certainly have not said anything here this evening that would not be in support of transportation to assist Indians on reserves in Canada, and indeed that is the purpose of my remarks here this evening. I know the hon. gentleman and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, share with me a desire to see that the transportation facilities on Indian reserves across Canada are improved to enable these people to gain a better livelihood and have better access to municipalities, in order to bring their children to school and to enjoy a better integration into the community than they are now able to have.

It is with this in mind that, as I said a moment ago before the interjection by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), I wish to refer to a report entitled, "An Economic Survey of the Walpole Island Indian Reserve". This is a co-operative venture by the Walpole Island Indian band and the council of the St. Clair Regional Development Association. It is a very interesting report, and indeed a very able one. One of the things to which it alludes is the difficulties the Indians themselves find in obtaining jobs in or near the community of Wallaceburg where they must seek employment off the island if they are to improve their lot by obtaining employment other than merely agricultural or other casual employment on the island.

The report goes on to suggest that the people of Wallaceburg are not all too favourable toward the matter of employing Indians of Walpole Island. I should like to read the pertinent paragraph in the report, because I think it is of interest and is germane to the question of assisting the Indians in this particular area, so that the use of such a structure and road improvement would indeed be warranted. It says:

> Because of this prejudice not many Indians are employed in Wallaceburg. The greater percentage work in Algonac where pay scales are higher. However, expansion in industry in Wallaceburg and along the Canadian shore might raise Canadian pay scales and may offer better jobs.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Then it refers to frequent complaints about carelessness on the part of Indians who are hired, and it states:

> This carelessness must result from a great lack of interest in a job. It is unfortunate, but reputations such as these are thought to apply to all. Many industries in Wallaceburg have never hired Indians because of this poor image. These industries should be encouraged to hire a few Indians to remove these prejudices and open the door to further employment.

I certainly appeal to the hon. members for Lambton-Kent and Lambton West to encourage industry in their communities to make use of the Indians and thereby give them the opportunity to improve their standard of living. This would also increase employment possibilities in Wallaceburg for Indians rather than forcing them, perhaps through misunderstanding, to remain on reservations and accept a somewhat lower and more discouraging standard of living.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deachman: Yes, I will be glad to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Churchill: It is my understanding that the mover and seconder of this resolution have the support of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs. In view of that fact, will the hon. member not now give the house an opportunity to pass the resolution? Otherwise he will be running against the wishes of the government?

Mr. Deachman: I am sure the hon. gentleman would not wish to deny me the right to free speech in this house and to conclude during the few minutes left some of my remarks in respect of this particular subject.

Mr. Churchill: That is hypocrisy on your part.

Mr. Deachman: This is a subject in respect of which all the members from British Columbia as well as those from Ontario have a deep and abiding interest, because we are continually interested in the welfare of the Indian people of this country.

Mr. Churchill: You are opposing the resolution.

Mr. Deachman: It is our desire to improve the lot of the Indian not only by improving his housing situation, as will be done under the proposed improvement plan of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but by improving his schooling, sewers and lighting within Indian band communities, and by improved roads and transportation facilities. In this way the Indian, whom we have neglected for so long, may indeed enter into a more satisfying life in the Canadian community. We hope some day that he will be truly represented in this house. That is something that surely is desirable.

May I call it seven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will resume the business which was interrupted at 6.25 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LINE IN NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-165, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Ontario by Canadian National Railway Company from the vicinity of Amesdale on the Redditt subdivision of the Canadian National Railway in a northwesterly direction for a distance of approximately 68 miles to a point in the vicinity of Bruce lake, in the district of Kenora.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is, as we sometimes say in the house, a little bill. It is for the purpose of authorizing the Canadian National Railways to build 68 miles of branch line in northwestern Ontario, not far from the Manitoba border, from a place near Redditt, in a northwesterly direction to the vicinity of the Steel Company of Canada's Griffith mine on the west shore of Bruce lake, which is in the district of Kenora.

The estimated cost of this branch line is $11,100,000, averaging $163,234 per mile. In accordance with the usual practice, the bill authorizes the railway to spend that amount for that purpose, and allows an additional 15 per cent, if required, to cover contingencies, with the usual provisions respecting necessary borrowing.

The Griffith mine is to be developed to work extensive deposits of low grade ore suitable for open pit mining, which ore will be extracted, concentrated and then pelletized at the mine site. It is planned that these pellets will be shipped from the mine at a rate of about 1½ million long tons per year. By means of a traffic guarantee contract, conditioned upon the construction of the proposed line, the mine's entire output of pellets would, for an extended period, be assured to the Canadian National Railways for carriage over its own lines either to lakehead transshipment points or an equivalent distance to other destinations. The contract also provides for compensation to the railway in the event that during an initial period the average annual volume of shipments fall below the agreed minimum level.

I have been satisfied accordingly that this proposal, so protected, should improve the net operating position of the Canadian National. It would obviously also make a significant contribution to the productive capacity and the economy of northwestern Ontario and to Canada generally, and would provide regular productive work to about 500 men in this vital industry. I know it is quite wrong to refer to a previous debate, but in this area, where there is a considerable Indian population, I would hope that it could provide some employment for Indians.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the minister a question at this point?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: Does the minister have the support of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman), who has just opposed a bill which would provide assistance to the Indians?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is usual to make proposals to the house and then allow the house to decide, after hearing the proposal, whether it intends to support it or not. I must confess I have not asked the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra whether he will support this proposal, but knowing how progressive he is, I feel sure he will give it ardent support.

Mr. Starr: Can the minister tell the house who the developers of this mining property are and whether they are Canadians or of some other nationality?

Mr. Pickersgill: The mine is owned by the Steel Company of Canada and it is to be managed for them by the people who manage the Wabush mine in Labrador, Pickands Mather. It is expected that most of the output of this mine will go to the Steel Company, though naturally it would expect to make the best possible use of the ore and the pellets.

Mr. Starr: Will these pellets be shipped out of the country or processed here in Canada?

Mr. Pickersgill: They will be processed right at the mine, and that is one of the great advantages of this particular project. An open pit mining project would not employ anything like that number of men.

Mr. Starr: What will happen to the pellets; are they to be shipped out of the country for processing?

• (7:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I expect that most of them will go to the Steel Company of Canada's plant at Hamilton. Of course, that company is not going to restrict itself as to where it will sell them. As all hon. members know, over the years the Steel Company has bought a great deal of ore from the Mesabi range in Minnesota. We are now producing more and more of the ore for our steel mills here in Canada, and the provision of this line will provide much more of the same. If there is a surplus for export, I presume it will be exported to the advantage of our balance of payments.

The operator plans to put the mine into operation about the end of next year and desires rail service for that time. If this deadline is to be met, a very early start on the construction of the railway line would be essential, and the management of Canadian National have made representations to me repeatedly, and as recently as this morning, in this regard. I may say that representations were also made to me a day or two ago by the chairman of the board of the Steel Company pointing out that the season is now pretty well advanced, even in northwestern Ontario, and the sooner the contracts can be called for beginning the construction of the line, the sooner it will be possible, of course, to go on with the other capital expenditures.

Mr. Starr: What is the time estimated for the complete construction of the line?

Mr. Pickersgill: If they can make a good start in 1966, they hope to have it completed in the autumn of 1967 so it will be available for use by that time. It is possible that the actual ouput of the mine will not begin to be available for shipment until 1968, but there would be some ingoing traffic—not to the same extent, of course—in order to set up the operation.

I unreservedly commend the bill to the house as being one beneficial to all interests concerned, including the national interest, and deserving of encouragement and support. As long as we assume that the Steel Company is likely to be—and I think most of us feel it is pretty likely to be—a viable and profitable industry, there is absolutely no prospect of any loss by Canadian National, but instead a substantial net addition to its profit position. That will be very welcome indeed, I am sure, not only to the management of Canadian National but to everyone in this house which has to provide for the contingencies the railway has to meet when its operations are not profitable.

My hon. friend, the Minister without Portfolio, at the resolution stage, said that if the house so desired, this bill would be sent to the standing committee on transportation and communications. I, of course, propose to carry out that undertaking if hon. members feel this is still necessary after the explanation I have given and any answers I give to questions they might wish to put in their speeches on second reading. However, Mr. Speaker, it did seem to me that because of the very simplicity of the bill and the urgency of getting it through both houses, because the railway cannot start its operations until that has been done, perhaps—I did consult my hon. friend for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell), who was the one who raised the question the other day—its referral to committee might not be necessary. The hon. member made no commitment, of course, but I would hope that with a view to getting on with this project and not losing any part of this construction season, hon. members would be inclined to proceed with the committee stage right here in the house and send the bill on to the other place.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question on the matter of referring the bill to committee? Has it not been the procedure in the past to allow railway construction to begin and refer the bill to committee later?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the law is—I know I should hesitate in dealing with the law, (a) not being a lawyer and (b) because it is perhaps in breach of the rules—that Canadian National Railways cannot build one inch more than four miles of railway without the prior approval of parliament. I have suggested to the railway they can take all the steps necessary short of asking for bids. In fact I have told them that I do not think they should even do that, because Canadian National Railways does not want to be in contempt of parliament.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): With regard to whether this bill should be referred to committee, the procedure, at least for quite a way back in my memory, has been that all these bills have gone to committee. At that time we have the advantage of maps and explanations of the company officials. The minister said there are some problems, in so far as delay is concerned, which have to be considered. Some of us might go along with that suggestion. The Committee on Transport and Communications is busy on some other duties. I also have in mind the fact that the C.N.R., who are involved in this matter, will probably appear before a committee before too long and these questions could be asked at that time, although that time might be too far advanced for our questions to be effective. However, it would give members interested an opportunity to study the geography of the area in question.

I think there is a slight danger here. It is an uncontroversial bill and is perhaps routine, but responsibilities have attached to the construction of new branch lines in the past and we would want to be fully assured that Bill No. C-165 is exactly the same as others of a similar nature which have come before us. I really have not anything too specific to ask. From the minister's statement we have an idea of the plans and the usual guarantees. It might be bad precedent if the C.N.R. were allowed to have bills put through without being referred to committee, because last year for example a bill in connection with the C.P.R. line at Esterhazy, Saskatchewan, was considered in committee for a very long time; it was controversial to the extent that every possible question was asked about this private company and its intentions. Therefore we have to be careful that we do not give a better break, in so far as our responsibilities are concerned, to the government company and allow it to have an easier time, as it were.

I should like to ask the minister how far the work has progressed. I take it from the minister's statement that it has not progressed very far.

Mr. Pickersgill: The work has not been started.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Then, Mr. Speaker, subject to one or two questions that might arise later when we deal with the bill in committee of the whole house, I am satisfied that this bill be given second reading.

Mr. Norman Fawcett (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on this subject. As a former member of the Canadian National Railways family I am happy to see that Canadian National are again pioneering in going into this area. I should also like to say that, having been a long time resident in northern Ontario, I am happy to see the railway opening up another section of this part of the province. I shall not get into any of the technicalities that have been suggested with regard to the disposition of this bill, but as far as I am concerned I am very happy to see this development taking place.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take very much time of the house, but I do want to draw the attention of both the government and the house to the need for public safety in connection with just such legislation as envisaged by Bill No. C-165. During our history as a confederation we have granted charters to various railway companies which, as hon. members know, have built railways from one end of Canada to the other, often resulting in great duplication. This year of all years the house has been discussing to a great extent railway abandonment, which ties in with railway building.

I should just like to say a few words about public safety and the need for railway crossing safety devices in the case of every new railway built. I have with me a communication which emanated from Picton, which is situated in Prince Edward county in my riding, pointing up the need for this cognizance of public safety on the part of members of this house. The letter concerns a railway built some time ago as an extension to an existing railway in my constituency for the purpose of drawing iron ore.

The communication reads as follows:

> Once again the ore route from Marmora to Picton has claimed the life of one of our citizens, on one of the level crossings constructed relatively a very few years ago.
>
> At the very time the railways across the country were being forced to eliminate the hazard of level crossings because of ever-increasing motor traffic, this ore service was allowed to maintain and construct any number of these crossings with insignificant markers and with no warning lights or signals. The resultant tragedies, including the one this past week, shock us year after year, and the loss of our citizens is a severe blow to the community. Many others have narrowly missed a similar accident, including one of our local businessmen.
>
> Totally aside from the grief occasioned the families of these unfortunate citizens, the paramount consideration, we can but wonder which is the most valuable to our communities, the life and productivity of these citizens over a lifetime, or extra dollars in the immediate balance sheets of the railways. If millions can be spent to speed rail traffic, why cannot expenditures be made at the same time, to safeguard crossings for the motoring public.
>
> The demand for additional safeguards on this ore route—

I add to this, Mr. Speaker, "on all railways in Canada".

> —calls for the support of every local organization and municipal body.

[Mr. Fawcett.]

And I add to that, Mr. Speaker, "calls for the support of this parliament as well to take the leadership in this cause".

> To date it has been the motorcar that has been struck; tomorrow it may be a loaded bus.
>
> The time has come for every level crossing in this or any other community to afford the protection of signal lights and semaphores.

I admonish the government to see that this 68 miles of railway is protected at every crossing with modern, bona fide, tested devices which will protect human life.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Competitive bids or tenders.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the minister gave any information in his statement about the date it is expected to start the operation of carrying the ore?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if the committee will agree, my hon. friend the Minister without Portfolio has informed himself particularly about this bill. If he could answer these factual questions I will deal with the political ones, if there are any.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I think I can say we would not mind hearing from the junior minister of transport. May I say that due to some transportation difficulties which some members of this parliament had yesterday the hon. member is beginning to learn very quickly about transportation problems in Canada.

Mr. Turner: I just want to say, Mr. Chairman, that it was a very pleasant lunch for both the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre yesterday when we were diverted because of fog.

In answer to the hon. member's question, the company hopes to get into full production in the spring or the beginning of 1968. Therefore, construction of the line should be finished by the end of 1967. If that is to be done, the grading and other work must start this summer, virtually immediately.

Mr. Starr: What will be the anticipated profit annually from this railway?

Mr. Turner: The railway expects to make—I do not want to betray its competitive position—well in the neighbourhood of $1 million from this particular line.

Mr. Starr: Per year?

Mr. Turner: Per year.

Mr. Starr: Over and above the cost of construction?

Mr. Turner: The cost of construction will have to be depreciated in the normal way; but the depreciation will be amortized over a period of time.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister's mention of its competitive position leads me to ask another question. I am not familiar with the situation and do not know whether the C.P.R. was at all a factor in the negotiations. Were they included in any negotiations, or are they so removed from the area that they were not even considered?

Mr. Pickersgill: I know that area pretty well—

Mr. Starr: Is this a political answer?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps it is in the second category of answer. The two railways are about 20 miles apart, and as the proposed branch railway runs north from the Canadian National there would be no interest whatever on the part of the Steel Company in having to pay freight on at least an extra 20 miles through rather rough country, where I timber cruised at one time. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre also knows the area very well.

At the same time, Mr. Chairman, I might assure the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox that I do not think the problem of level crossings will be very troublesome in that area. Because if the railway crosses one road it is not likely to cross two.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Alkenbrack: Knowing that part of the country myself fairly well I did realize, Mr. Chairman, that there would not be many railway crossings, but I was asked to point this out in general to the government. I am sure the minister will agree that if there are crossings they should be protected, and at the cost of the railway, not of the municipalities. This has been a municipal expense ever since charters have been granted. I contend from now on, that no new lines should be built without the safety devices being built in at the cost of the railway itself.

Mr. Pickersgill: With the objectives the hon. gentleman has in mind, of course as Minister of Transport I have the greatest possible sympathy.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 8—Report to parliament.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, in speaking on clause 8, I am not particularly speaking about this bill itself. I wonder if the minister perhaps when this comes before the committee, could see that a list is prepared of all new branch lines which have been constructed within the last ten or 20 years. With that list could there be some details of the financial success or otherwise that those lines have enjoyed, to give us some over-all insight into the over-all transportation problems that we shall have to deal with this year?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is a very good idea, sir. In fact, I shall ask the railway to do that for the whole period since the end of the war.

Clause agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before passing to the next item of business, may I just express my appreciation to hon. members for the co-operation which has been received?

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): The minister did such a good job with this bill that I think we should bring him back as house leader.

FISHERIES

PROVISION FOR DEVELOPMENT OF COMMERCIAL FISHERIES

The house resumed from Friday, March 18, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-145, to provide for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada—Mr. Robichaud—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Starr: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think that the business to be undertaken at this time, in the order it was to be taken up, would bring us to item 15 on the order paper, being second reading of the act to provide for the establishment of the Science Council of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe, sir, that was one of the items indicated on Friday last.

Mr. Starr: The order of business was indicated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, in view of the fact that the minister was not able to be here today, if we could not go on with the fisheries bill, and the export and import bill which my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is prepared to proceed with.

Mr. Churchill: But our men are not here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could we perhaps take the export and import bill next, on which I know the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is more competent to speak than any member on the other side of the house.

Mr. Churchill: How did I know it was coming up now?

Mr. Knowles: You did not go too far away.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we came prepared to take up the items that were listed on April 22. Why could we not now go ahead with the Science Council and with the Research Council?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was never anticipated by the government that we would make such wonderful progress as we have made today.

Mr. Starr: Why not?

Mr. Pickersgill: We thank you for your co-operation. My hon. friend the Minister of Industry is away on business, and he is the one who ought to be dealing with some of it.

Mr. Starr: Anybody else can do it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we should not make very good progress without having the minister present. If it is not convenient to go ahead with the fisheries bill in committee, for the convenience of the opposition we should be willing to take anything for which a minister is available. We should particularly like to go ahead with the export and import bill, because of its very great importance, and because of certain of its international aspects. That is No. 46 on today's order paper.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, the government house leader on Friday last set out the items that we were to consider. Consequently the opposition has prepared itself to consider items of business in that order.

[Mr. Starr.]

This afternoon shows another indication of the tremendous disorganization with which this government conducts its business from day to day. The house leader specifies the business one day, and then when that business is to come up no minister is on hand to take up that matter. The government should not try to juggle the order paper because it is not fair to the opposition.

The Minister of Transport now suggests an item that was not even listed by the house leader. We are certainly not prepared to go ahead, just because the minister happens to be prepared. It was not to have come up in this order. The work of the house has been set out by the government house leader.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course the government is quite prepared to go ahead with the fisheries bill, which was one of the items listed. If that would suit the opposition perhaps we could proceed with it right away.

Mr. Churchill: Someone had better get the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on March 18, last, the committee was about to consider clause 2 of the bill. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, perhaps at this time I should deal briefly with some of the matters raised during the discussion at the introduction stage of the bill, which is to provide for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada. Matters mentioned by hon. members overlapped, to some degree. If hon. members will bear with me I am sure that I can cover all matters which have been raised.

• (8:00 p.m.)

Through this legislation we plan to bring several of the current development activities of the Department of Fisheries under one act. We want a more dynamic development program brought to bear on the fishing industry through the introduction of the latest developments in mechanization and the most efficient use of our fishery resources.

This bill provides for the exploration and development of known and entirely new fishery resources; for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new and improved types of vessels, equipment and fishing techniques, for the development of new fish products and for the improvement of product handling, processing and distribution.

This legislation also paves the way for regulations to enable assistance for the construction, equipping or modification of commercial cold storages and bait freezing facilities. The legislation is flexible and allows for a variety of action programs on a broad front. The federal-provincial fisheries conference held just over two years ago provided the initiative leading to the introduction of this bill.

During discussion of this bill, it was asked if it was proposed to introduce a new program which could be compared in any way with ARDA. Let me say that this legislation is companion to that of ARDA. My department will continue its close collaboration with ARDA in rural development where fisheries play a part in the economy of the areas concerned, and through the introduction of complementary programs provide for the kind of assistance to fishermen which will enable them to pass through a transitional period into a more highly mechanized operation.

Among other matters raised during discussion was the application of technology to the industry, the maintenance of strict fish inspection, programs to assist small fishing villages with freezer facilities, and the provision of a measure to improve the lot of fishermen. Let me say that the provision of measures to improve the lot of fishermen is the whole basis for this legislation, and is its primary objective. These needs are all provided for.

It is recognized that the gradual centralization of the fishing industry and the building of boats with greater draft will call for extensive dredging operations and new shore facilities, and I wish to state that in this area there will continue to be an active association between the Minister of Public Works and myself. This of course is applicable to both coastal and inland areas.

Reference has been made to the staggering tonnage of fish which is being wasted at sea, and the need for utilization of these species. The problem of the utilization of fish wasted is now being studied with a view to maximum utilization of all species. On the Pacific coast, as I have already said, we are encouraging the increased utilization of the offshore groundfish resource and are exploring ways and means of making use of hitherto unused species, such as dogfish. Similar action is being taken on the Atlantic coast.

The federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangements in the next fiscal year cover a wide range of development projects and this program is larger each year. In addition, the department and its scientific agency, the Fisheries Research Board, are bearing the full cost of many development projects, and here of course we include resource research projects. These projects include vessel development, the acquisition and testing of electronic devices, the expansion of herring and mackerel shark fishing in the Atlantic and Gulf of St. Lawrence, the continuation of off-shore lobster studies and the eel survey in the Atlantic, as well as the exploration of the promising off-shore groundfish resources of the Pacific.

Several provinces have indicated their desire to take part in bringing about a rapid expansion of the industry by sharing in the cost of experimental fishing for crab, scallop, herring, shrimp, eel and smelt, and the testing of light attraction systems for catching fish; fish detection by helicopter and electrical trawl fishing to mention a few. The list of federal-provincial combined participation projects on the Atlantic coast is lengthy, and as I have already mentioned includes considerable vessel and gear development and testing in a variety of fishing operations.

We are making technical assistance available to fishermen right across the country on a relatively large scale. It has been stated in this house that not enough attention is being given to the inland fisheries. I should like to point out that since I took office separate federal-provincial fisheries committees have been set up for both British Columbia and the prairie provinces. These groups meet to work out appropriate programs of fisheries development for these areas. They are not only concerned with the commercial fisheries but with sports fishing as well, and are doing excellent work in focussing attention on actions which should be taken for the betterment of the fisheries as a whole. There are, of course, similar committees for Ontario and the Atlantic coast provinces.

Increased effort is being placed on studies of the ocean floor and the effect of ocean currents on fish populations. The Fisheries Research Board has active programs of oceanographic research on both the Pacific and Atlantic oceans and has recently embarked on comprehensive studies in the Atlantic ocean, based at the Bedford Institute of Oceanography at Dartmouth, Nova Scotia. Research is to be conducted on pelagic and bottom fishes, their food and the interplay of the physical and chemical oceanographic factors, with a view to improved methods of finding and catching fish.

To discover the secrets of the oceans, the development of highly sophisticated instruments is required and recruitment of highly skilled specialists is under way in the Halifax-Dartmouth area. We are keenly aware of the need to train specialists in fisheries research and in 1966-67 a program is being initiated whereby grants will be awarded to appropriate university departments and staff, specifically to encourage research into the marine and aquatic sciences, and to develop trained fisheries scientists by supporting graduate students. A limited budget will restrict award of these grants in the initial year, but requests for assistance received to date indicate both wide appreciation of this scheme and the need for a considerable increase in future financial support.

Although the management of fish in inland waters is, in some provinces, under provincial administration, the Fisheries Research Board in expanding research on the fresh water fishes of Canada with the development of its new fresh water institute in Winnipeg. It is hoped from these broadly based studies that principles will be developed of importance to fish farming techniques and the management of fresh water fish stocks. Continuing research is also being directed to the possibilities of farming marine and anadromous species.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The needs for fisheries research in all areas of Canada are being actively reviewed with a view to meeting our responsibilities. We are acutely aware of the competing needs for increasing research in all parts of Canada, within the limits of manpower and financial resources available to us.

It is difficult to envisage what order of expenditure will be necessary to carry through the fisheries development activities by the federal government over the years. I should like to assure my hon. friends, however, that this will be reflected in the estimates of my department from year to year, and will be adequate to meet the needs of an expanding industry and of the research and development activities necessary to bring about a better livelihood for Canadian fishermen everywhere.

As I have mentioned on a previous occasion, the estimates of my department, which totalled $23 million in 1963, exceed $40 million for the present year.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Due to representations which have been made to me since the introduction of the bill I shall have certain amendments to propose during our discussion of it. The main amendment will affect clause 3 of the bill.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, the minister has given us a comprehensive statement on his interests and intentions with respect to this legislation. It is very revolutionary at first glance, and certainly one gets an idea of its scope when he sees the powers given to the governor in council under clause 5. However, I rise this evening briefly to interest the minister and the committee in a subject that he will remember was a favourite of mine some time ago.

Studies have been conducted into many species of fish, both commercial and otherwise, with one notable exception, perhaps because of the fact that on the east coast it has not got as great commercial value as other species, and has given rise to different interests in different areas. I refer to the Atlantic salmon, and I hasten to add that it pleased me to hear the minister mention that this new legislation will deal with it from a sport standpoint. East coast salmon have both a sporting and commercial interest, and I would like to see a massive research program conducted into Atlantic salmon from both these standpoints.

It is true that surveys have been conducted on particular rivers. We have examined the pollution problem on some rivers, perhaps not as extensively as it should have been done, and we also investigated the effect on salmon of dams and things like that. I shall not go into all that, but we in the east know the great value of the Atlantic salmon. We are proud of it. Saint John harbour salmon is the finest eating fish in the country, and testimony was paid to that effect no later than yesterday by the junior minister of transport. He gave that testimony in public and there were many witnesses to it. I only hope that if he ever goes to the west coast he will not be ashamed to say that the Saint John harbour salmon is the finest of them all.

We all know the great interest taken in Atlantic salmon from the angling standpoint. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is present and I know he goes to private camps on the Restigouche and the Miramichi to catch those salmon. We have all seen pictures of the salmon being caught in the rivers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, and I take this opportunity to put in my plea on behalf of Atlantic salmon.

We extend to the minister our good will on this legislation, which is comprehensive. It is something that seems to be needed, but we will have many detailed questions to ask about it. Again I ask the minister to consider holding an extensive study into every aspect of Atlantic salmon, a species which has largely been forgotten in the modern world, but one unsurpassed in world fishing.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, may I briefly reply to the hon. member. I am sure he is aware that in connection with the Mactaquac project on the Saint John river there will be undertaken the largest, full-scale program of salmon research in the country. The proposed hatchery will be unique of its kind on this continent and will probably be administered by the department's fishery research board. It is likely that it will be the largest undertaking of its kind on this continent to deal with salmon research.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I thank the minister for his remarks. I know the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has more knowledge than I on this matter, but in spite of the scope of this project many who live on the upper reaches of the Saint John are pessimistic about the effects of the project. It is already known that Beechwood itself has already had tremendous effects, and no matter how dams are cleaned they have not helped. However, I hope the project the minister has mentioned will be successful.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am beginning to suspect that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert is trying to provoke a debate. I would be quite content to hear him and the minister argue about which stream in New Brunswick produces the best New Brunswick salmon, but when the hon. member starts to talk about some piddling little fish down in Saint John harbour being the best fish in the country, he is taking in a lot of territory, and one could take those as fighting words. However, Mr. Chairman, I am not sure how far you would allow such a battle to rage before suggesting it did not deal with the legislation before us.

I shall discuss the question with the hon. member at some time and place, and content myself now with the suggestion that one of these days he visit the coast of B.C., particularly my constituency, and treat himself to the pleasure of some real salmon.

However, I would not want any of these remarks to be taken as suggesting that as a member of parliament I am not willing to lend my support to any measures sponsored by the department to improve the quality and abundance of Atlantic salmon, because we all recognize the value of salmon to our fishery, be it on the east or west coast.

• (8:20 p.m.)

I believe, Mr. Chairman, the bill which we are considering now is perhaps the most specific item, at least so far as consideration in this house is concerned, that we have had since the federal-provincial fisheries conference of a year ago last January. Certainly I am quite sure all members of the house welcome the advent of this bill as a concrete indication of a forward move, in the direction that was plotted at least in a preliminary way at that conference so far as fisheries development is concerned. I am inclined, of course, to wait to see how this bill works out in operation before giving it undivided praise. In saying that, I think it is clear it is a bill which depends in large measure for its success in practice upon some measure of co-operation with the provincial authorities of the various provinces of Canada which have a commercial fishery resource which can be exploited and developed.

I feel it is a little complicated, perhaps, that we are considering this bill in the house at the same time we have before the Standing Committee on Fisheries the estimates of the minister's department for the current year. There may be some advantages, however, in that. Certainly one of the questions I should like to ask the minister, now that this bill is before us, and to which he might give some reply before we go out of committee, is one which I might have asked at the hearings of the standing committee, when the estimates are before it. I note that in the current year's estimates there is an item of programs and projects shared by the provinces, in the amount of $1,130,000, which represents a substantial increase from the total under the similar heading of last year.

One of the questions I would like to have answered is whether or not the passage of this bill will result in increased amounts in shared-cost programs with the provinces over those which are provided for in the estimates now are under consideration. I think that is a question the answer to which would give us some indication of the significance and scope of the program envisaged through introduction of this bill. I assume the amounts proposed in the estimates of the current fiscal year are amounts developed on the basis of programs certainly prior to the time the bill was introduced in the house, and possibly prior to the time when the decision was made by the government to have it introduced at this session. I ask that question because, as I say, I feel it is significant from the point of view of giving us some idea concerning what expansion is envisaged in the program of fishery development as between the federal government and the provinces or as between the federal government and other agencies which may be involved in fishery development as a result of the proposals in this bill.

I should like to say, Mr. Chairman, that in this particular connection I naturally am concerned about the role the government of the province of British Columbia—the province from which I come—is going to play in the proposals outlined in this bill. Both inside and outside the house I previously have pointed out that at the federal-provincial fisheries conference, if my recollection serves me correctly, the province of British Columbia was the only one not represented at the ministerial level. In view of the relative importance of the fishery in British Columbia I felt this perhaps was rather unfortunate, and that on the surface at least it indicated some lack of interest and concern on the part of the government of British Columbia in the economic future of British Columbia's fishery.

I am aware that since that time a special report on fishery matters was prepared under the auspices of the government of British Columbia and submitted to a special committee on fisheries at the last session of the British Columbia legislature. This report which was prepared by Mr. McMynn, who now is on the staff of the Department of Recreation and Conservation of British Columbia, gives a comprehensive review of the fisheries situation in British Columbia. I think it underlines some of the apparent lack of interest, however. I am going to make a brief reference, if I may, to the report submitted by Mr. McMynn to the legislative committee. In part he has this to say:

> A general conclusion which seems apparent from the above concerns the present and future role of the province in the commercial fisheries of British Columbia. Until 1957 the British Columbia Department of Fisheries provided a diversified and important service to the industry. Today, the commercial fisheries branch serves mainly as a licensing agency. The deputy minister of the Department of Fisheries formerly exerted considerable influence on matters of vital concern to the fishing industry. He was recognized as the provincial government spokesman and adviser on fishing matters. In this position he facilitated a close and effective working liaison between the federal Department of Fisheries, the provincial Department of Fisheries, and the several provincial departments and international agencies associated with commercial and sport fisheries.
>
> Since 1957 the important function of government-industry liaison has decreased. There is no longer a provincial Department of Fisheries, and consequently the province has little administrative or jurisdictional involvement in the management of her marine fisheries. Notwithstanding the foregoing, British Columbia should ensure that future exploitation of its fisheries is in the provincial interest. To do so will require greater provincial participation, particularly in view of rapidly increasing demands upon the fisheries resource by commercial and sport fishermen and by competing water users.

I hope that the submission of this report and the consideration given to it by the legislative committee in British Columbia perhaps will be a milestone in the sense of restoring at least the level of interest in the commercial and sport fishery which formerly was held by the government of British Columbia. Indeed I would go further and say that if the purposes of this bill are to be met, at least so far as British Columbia is concerned, the provincial authority is going to have to proceed much further than it ever has in the past in respect of the kind of interest it takes in the commercial fishery.

I know the minister made reference to the federal-provincial fisheries committee and I hope perhaps he might give us some indication of the type of work this committee now has in hand in relation to the existing situation so far as the operation of the government of British Columbia is concerned. I might say also, Mr. Chairman, I am a little concerned in my own mind with regard to what the immediate result of the passage of this bill may be in British Columbia, because of some of the references in the report made by the special fisheries committee to the legislature. They recommend that a provincial ministry of fisheries be reinstituted as part of the government of British Columbia and that there be provincial participation on the federal fisheries board and at federal conferences. However, they make this somewhat contingent upon a clarification of the jurisdictional situation as between the federal and provincial governments. They suggest it is only if the government of British Columbia is given greater jurisdiction that increased provincial participation should take place.

We all know that when it comes to the bringing forward of any formal proposal in any jurisdiction, whether it be a proposal such as the Fulton-Favreau formula, or others, involving constitutional revision, a situation develops which necessarily involves a good deal of time. In the context of the crisis in the fishing industry of British Columbia, in my view there might be a disastrous delay in taking full advantage of the proposals set forth in this bill, especially on the Pacific coast of Canada.

I feel that this is a situation which the house should be aware of as we consider this bill. I have heard the Premier of British Columbia make remarks from time to time about what a great Canadian he is, and how he is all for national unity and development. I must say that when it comes down to the practicality of a situation I am from time to time deeply disturbed by the very independent parochialism of attitude that is manifested in certain government quarters within the province from which I come. I hope the government of British Columbia, in the light of the introduction of this bill, will be prepared to take a much more practical approach to this question of fisheries development, and participation in such programs as the federal government is prepared to put forward for consideration jointly than has been indicated by the report of the committee. That report seems to me to take a rather technical and restrictive attitude as far as getting on with the job of expanding our commercial fisheries in British Columbia is concerned.

As we get into a consideration of the clauses of the bill, I may have some other remarks to make and questions to raise. I noted the remarks of the minister about the inter-relationship between this bill and the ARDA program. I was interested to hear his remarks in view of some questions I asked the Minister of Forestry not too long ago, when we were considering some changes to the operation of ARDA. In view of the fact that in practice ARDA has been participating in certain fisheries development projects, at least on the Atlantic coast of Canada, I expressed some concern that there might be overlapping with possible inefficiency in the operation of these two programs. I was glad to receive the assurance of the Minister of Fisheries, as indeed I received the assurance of the Minister of Forestry, that it is the desire in respect of these programs that they be integrated rather than operated as a duplication of effort.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to hear what other members of the committee may have to say during this discussion.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, after hearing the remarks made by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, I would like to know what the minister intends to do about sections 3 and 4 dealing with federal-provincial relations in the field of Canadian fisheries.

The hon. member who has just resumed his seat was talking about British Columbia. Fisheries also present problems in the province of Quebec. We also have at the provincial level a Department of Fisheries.

Now, in Bill C-145, we read in section 3:

(1) The minister may undertake projects, (a) for the more efficient exploitation of fishery resources and for the exploration for and development of new fishery resources and new fisheries; (b) for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new types of fishing vessels and fishing equipment and of new fishing techniques; and (c) for the development of new fishery products and for the improvement of the handling, processing and distribution of fishery products.

Subsection 2 reads as follows:

The minister may enter into an agreement with any province providing for the undertaking jointly with the government of the province or any agency thereof of any project that the minister is authorized to undertake under subsection (1).

Well, Mr. Chairman, the present leaders of the province of Quebec state that joint programs no longer interest them. It remains to be determined what role the Minister of Fisheries of Canada can play with the Minister of Fisheries of the province of Quebec. I do not think that the federal minister can dictate anything to the province of Quebec. Besides, subsection 3 of the bill clearly stipulates that:

The minister may, with the approval of the governor in council, enter into an agreement with any province providing for the payment to the province of contributions in respect of the cost of any project that is undertaken by the government of the province or any agency thereof and that the minister is authorized to undertake under subsection (1).

• (8:40 p.m.)

But the province states that it does not need the minister. Now, under the circumstances, what is the value of Bill C-145 when a province decides to act on its own, outside joint programs, without the authorization or even the suggestions of the federal Minister of Fisheries?

Section 3, subsection 4, reads as follows:

For the purpose of assisting the formulation and assessment of fisheries development projects, the minister may undertake economic studies alone or jointly with the government of any province or agency thereof or with any university—

Under these circumstances, can the hon. minister undertake development projects with a university without the agreement of the province, or the agreement of the province of Quebec? I wonder. That is questionable.

And I read on:

—with any university, educational institution or person—

The minister:

—may co-ordinate such studies with similar studies undertaken in Canada.

The hon. minister has to face certain problems in the provincial sphere, whether it is in Quebec or in British Columbia. He may not have similar problems in the Maritimes, where he comes from, for in those provinces, the role the federal government plays in fisheries administration has yet to be determined.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the matter is quite clear in British Columbia just as it is in the province of Quebec.

Here is what we find in section 4 of Bill C-145:

The minister shall, in carrying out any project or economic study under this act, make use, wherever possible, of the services and facilities of other departments of the government of Canada or of any agencies thereof.

Now, we find that the minister "shall make use of the services and facilities of other departments of the government of Canada" to decide upon the policy to be followed, not only in one province but in Canada as a whole, as regards Canadian fisheries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have a Minister of Game and Fish in the province of Quebec. Other provinces also have one. I noticed a while ago that one hon. member was adopting a definite stand in favour of his province.

It is not so much that I want to take sides for the province of Quebec, but I wonder what the Minister of Fisheries of Canada has decided to do about the province of Quebec, even about any province whatsoever.

I understand that it is stipulated that the minister must get information, ask for co-operation or make suggestions.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, to save a little time, the hon. member might allow me to clear up the matter he has just raised; I could give him the answer immediately, thus allowing the debate to proceed.

First of all, and the hon. member may not be aware of it, there is no Minister of Fisheries in the province of Quebec; there is a Minister of Industry, who looks after the commercial fisheries of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Caouette: The Minister of Game and Fish.

Mr. Robichaud: That does not exist any longer, it comes under the Minister of Industry, but relations between the Quebec government and the federal government are very favourable. We have had for a few years a federal-provincial committee on fisheries; we meet with the Quebec representative several times a year. We have joint projects on fisheries, research, demonstrations of new fishing methods, in the province of Quebec as well as in the other provinces; we also have some with the industries; in fact, we have some with the United Fishermen of Quebec. We have joint projects under which we make grants. We co-operate in the field of research with the universities of Quebec, whether it is Laval University or the University of Montreal.

I can assure the hon. member that our relations with Quebec are very favourable.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are not trying here to establish if the relations between the minister and the province of Quebec are very favourable; we are trying to establish whether or not the province of Quebec advised the Minister of Fisheries, as any crown minister of Canada, that from now on the joint programs will no longer be accepted, that the joint programs dictated or organized by the government of Ottawa will no longer be welcome in Quebec, that the Lesage government wants to assume its own responsibilities without the intervention of the ministers in Ottawa.

The Minister of Fisheries must be aware of that.

There is currently an election campaign going on in Quebec and these allegations are being used to prove that the Ottawa government has no say in Quebec. The friends of the Minister of Fisheries are saying that. I did not make it up. I am not sounding the alarm in Quebec, the friends of the Minister of Fisheries are.

When my good friend the Minister of Fisheries claims there is no longer a Minister of Game and Fish in Quebec, my honourable friend knows quite well that Hon. G. D. Levesque is still there, and is particularly involved in questions of fish and game. To my knowledge, he has not yet asked the Canadian Minister of Fisheries if the latter was ready to agree to a joint program.

Mr. Chairman, this is to say that Bill C-145 is quite untimely in the circumstances. It is not even, as the hon. member for a British Columbia riding said a moment ago, suitable to conditions in British Columbia. It may be suitable to New Brunswick, though I am not sure; but one thing is certain, the bill on fisheries is not suitable to present needs in the province of Quebec.

The minister knows the Gaspé Peninsula as well as I do. We have fishermen there, professional fishermen who have been fishing for years and, even today, face an alarming problem, not as far as learning to fish is concerned but how to put fish products on the market.

The minister offers no solution in Bill C-145. He says that he is ready to study everything concerning fishermen in general. But, he offers no solution at all.

Will fishermen be better off after the passing of this bill? The minister can answer: yes, definitely.

The minister has been looking after fisheries for the past three years. Has the lot of the Canadian fishermen improved since he took over this department? I see the minister shaking his head meaning yes and no. He knows that conditions of Canadian fishermen have not improved and will not be improved under Bill C-145.

I do not intend to prolong the debate. The bill introduced by the minister contains no solution to help the Canadian fishermen of his constituency.

The minister tells us: We are going to co-operate with the universities, the students, the provincial government. Why not with the Ladies of St. Anne and the Children of Mary, in order to try and find a solution? He knows well that his bill is not the answer. We need something else besides that, we need a market so that our fishermen might sell their products; we need domestic and international markets.

Then, our fishermen will be able to establish a distinction between categories (a), (b), (c) or (d) in their fish production. The minister knows that the fishermen do not need a lawyer, a notary or the minister to tell them how to fish. However, they need a market so that they may dispose of their products in order to live decently. That is what the fishermen need all across Canada.

An hon. Member: He should know.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, he should know.

• (8:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, when the minister introduced the bill on second reading he used words to the effect that there was not very much new contained in the bill, but that it merely consolidated in statute form those things which had previously been done by appropriation or by specific items in the estimates; that it combined and put into one law where all could see the procedures and systems which would be a guide for the future.

However, there is one new venture in a sense, and that has to do with giving to the Department of Fisheries some determination as to cold storage facilities. I want to extend my congratulations to the minister for finally taking the lead that those of us in the C.C.F. propounded during the time the Conservatives were in office.

Mr. Caouette: You have changed now.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend from Villeneuve says we have changed. We changed the name, but we did not do so in a situation which was as terrible as when he changed.

Mr. Caouette: What about the Social Credit party?

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend wants to talk about Social Credit. I will take him up on that in a moment and tell him something about what happened in my own province under Social Credit.

Mr. Caouette: That is a different matter.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend says that is a different matter. Mr. Chairman, would you like to protect me a little from the hon. member for Villeneuve?

The Chairman: Order, please. May I remind the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Villeneuve that we have before us clause 2 of the bill.

Mr. Howard: I was proceeding to that clause, Mr. Chairman, pointing out that during the time the Conservatives were in office they decided to discontinue the payment of subventions under the Cold Storage Act because of the fact that prior to 1957 a few friends in the Liberal party had made a gold mine out of continuing subventions under the Cold Storage Act and borrowings from the Industrial Development Bank. Consequently the Tories saw fit to limit the payment of subventions.

We protested at that time because the matter came under the Department of Agriculture. We said there should be a separate determination of all fisheries products cold storage warehouses and that they should be divorced from the department of Agriculture; and I commend the minister for taking heed of our words uttered at that time.

I am inclined to think that the bill should be expanded—I hope this is one of the amendments the minister has in mind when we reach the appropriate clause—so that payments or subventions, as they might otherwise be called, under clause 5 might also be made to fisheries products processing plants as well as to cold storages.

We recently had a situation on the Queen Charlotte Islands where the only fish cannery on the islands was on the verge of going under, owing to a series of events over the last number of years, most of them difficulties over which the company had no control but which emanated from the fishery itself. We saw a situation there where that plant was maintained in operation only by the workers themselves putting in a subsidy by way of taking a lower price for the fish they caught than would normally be the case on that coast. This would have been a prime case in point for payments under a bill of this sort.

If the minister will later on move an amendment to that clause to provide for payments to processing plants, he will be taking another step in the direction of properly and fully giving all the assistance available in order to develop and preserve the fishing industry in the province of British Columbia, as well as that in the provinces along the other coast. I merely mentioned British Columbia because that is the province from which I come and the one with which I am most familiar.

It is regrettable that my own provincial government has not only not seen fit to interest itself so far in participating with the federal government in the development of our fisheries, but it is also regrettable to note that the provincial government in office now, that of Social Credit, is the one that destroyed the department of fisheries we used to have in 1957 and, in effect, thumbed its nose at the problems of the fishing industry in that province. It is a sad event, when the great bulk of the income in our province comes from the fishing industry, to see a government in effect ignoring the entire industry and the difficulties with which it is faced.

However, Mr. Chairman, this should not be used—and we have said this before—by the federal government as an excuse not to step into the field and to do all it can to promote the fishing industry in that province. Merely because there is a reluctance or an inability or a lack of concern on the part of Premier Bennett and others in this regard, should not deter the federal government from exhibiting a larger degree of interest than has been the case up till now.

The minister mentioned that under this bill we may be able to assist the groundfish industry which has advanced into the market in the last year or so. The minister also mentioned that under this legislation we might be able to deal adequately with the problem which exists in relation to dogfish which, up until now, with one or two slight exceptions, has not been a commercially marketable fish, although the livers have been fished for and for which at one time there were subsidies paid.

Development of these new fisheries and other new fisheries which exist on the coast and which heretofore have not been exploited to any marked degree will depend upon the extent to which we can market these products. In this regard it is interesting to note that the royal commission on price spreads of food products, which was appointed and reported during the time the Conservative government was in office, made some recommendations with respect to the marketing of fish, recommendations which so far have been ignored both by the Conservatives and by the subsequent Liberal government. This is one matter which must be looked at.

• (9:00 p.m.)

In this connection I am aware that clause 3 of the bill deals with the development and distribution of fisheries products; but I can only say that there is not much point in going full scale into exploring, developing and exploiting new fisheries if you also do not go full scale into marketing and selling those particular fish products.

The bill seeks primarily to advance the exploitation of fisheries and to advance and intrude into the exploration of new fishery resources. It seeks to introduce new fishing vessels and techniques, to assist in the fuller exploitation of the fisheries themselves and also seeks to go into the area of new fisheries products, and new handling, processing, and distribution techniques. That, I think might cover the field, as it were.

Whatever good may come from this legislation, whatever good may have come from the programs similar to these contemplated by this bill which were dealt with by way of appropriation earlier, could very easily be offset by other activities. In fact, sometimes in the past the good contemplated by conservation measures, by the development and increase in exploitation of certain fisheries in order that we could exploit them to the full within the bounds of conservation itself, has been offset and will be offset in the future if the government does not take cognizance of and do something about the fact that other nations in the world are interested in catching fish.

The government must recognize that other nations in the world engage in fishing the same sort of fisheries products that we fish. Sometimes they engage in this fishing right on our back doorstep.

We have had long discussions in this house about the North Pacific Fisheries Treaty, the treaty to which Canada, the United States and Japan are signatories. If the abstention principle some time in the future is removed from the treaty, and that incidentally is the intention and desire of the government and the people of Japan, then one of the countries on the other side of the Pacific will be able without compulsion or without any prohibition to fish for the very fisheries products which have been our lifeblood in British Columbia. That country's vessels will be able to fish within 12 miles of our shores.

It is imperative, if any good is to come from the legislation now being passed, that we move fully into the international field and have discussion not only with nations in NORPAC, but that we include within that treaty other nations the vessels of which fish in the Pacific Ocean for the fisheries products we fish for.

Within the last year we have seen Russian fishing vessels on our back doorstep, just off the northern tip of Vancouver Island. The Russians are under no prohibition whatever to abstain from fishing for the fish which we normally consider ours because they are spawned in our areas. If the massive fishing fleet of the Soviet Union concentrates on the salmon, halibut or herring fishery, that could mean the destruction of those fisheries for British Columbia. If that were to happen all the beneficial things contemplated by the bill before us will come to naught.

Korea is another nation which is expanding its fishing fleet. The People's Republic of China, which is another of the great and developing nations on the horizon, will be embarking on the ocean eventually in order to catch fish. We on this side of the Pacific must recognize these possibilities, and these trends, and these dangers. We must take concrete steps to draw these countries into a conservation pact with us, knowing that only by conservation practices engaged in by all nations with fishing industries shall we be able to exploit these fisheries to the full. Without conservation practices destruction will come to the fisheries. That destruction can be just as devastating as that brought about by the building of hydroelectric dams on rivers containing fish.

Another matter of concern is the degree to which United States fishermen off and around Alaska catch what we classify as our homecoming salmon, which is salmon that comes into the spawning streams in that part of the country which I have the honour to represent. Those salmon come into the Nass and Skeena Rivers and their tributaries. United States fishermen wait on the other side of the international boundary to catch these fish as they follow that route down the Alaska Panhandle as they come to spawn.

We have had conversations in the last couple of weeks with United States authorities about their surf line, as it is called. I have read statements attributed to the deputy minister of fisheries before the Fisheries committee to the effect that there was no agreement about altering that surf line in Alaska, and that some other course of action may have to be followed. I say that it is imperative that we deal strongly and firmly with the United States to see that it desist in wrecking our conservation practices. The United States must enter into a conservation pact to establish surf lines, in the good will and spirit of co-operation necessary to preserve and develop our fisheries.

We must concern ourselves with the 12-mile territorial fishing zone, which was passed in law by parliament some two years ago. That law contemplated the establishment of straight base lines, and the 12-mile fishing zone measure therefor. Those straight base lines which we were promised faithfully would come into effect before the end of 1964 we have not yet seen. I say that unless we draw those straight base lines so as to include Dixon entrance, Hecate strait and Queen Charlotte sound, the three immense bodies of water which are in the north central part of the province, and draw those base lines in such a way as to close off those areas to prevent other nations exploiting the fisheries there, we could very easily find other nations seeking to exploit the very groundfish that we are so proud of. It is imperative that this be done or the good contemplated by the bill before us can come to nothing.

From the Alaska Panhandle a number of rivers, the Stikine being a notable one, form the spawning base of fish in Canadian territory. In order to come to these spawning grounds salmon have to go to Alaskan or to United States waters. Part of the way up the Stikine river, in United States territory, United States fishermen without any compunction can stretch their nets across the mouth of the river and catch the salmon as they swim up that river. I believe that conservation practices that we contemplate with respect to the Stikine fishery could again come to nothing. This also requires some degree of international co-operation. That is so not only with respect to the Stikine, but also with respect to other waters where fish come to spawn, or where they have to go through foreign territory to their spawning beds in Canada.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I turn now to domestic questions. In the last number of years we have seen that logging and construction companies have dredged up spawning beds in order to build roads. They have dumped logging debris and slash into rivers to such a degree that spawning beds have been destroyed. Not many weeks ago right in my own community of Terrace a logging company was seen to have carried out its operations with bulldozers blazing their way through a particular river, while young steelhead were to be seen there. The answer we got from the Department of Fisheries was: We are sorry, but we did not have that listed as a salmon spawning stream so we could not put anything in the contract as far as the logging company was concerned. This is really the height of ignorance—a department having to admit that one stream, and I do not know how many others, was not listed as a salmon spawning stream. I do not know how we can engage in effective conservation programs when information about the salmon spawning areas is not complete. Unless we do more in this field we shall find that some of the good and beneficial parts of the bill before us will not be realized.

I know that in his heart the minister wants to do everything he possibly can to enhance our fisheries. I know that in his heart he wants to do everything he possibly can to seek out new fisheries projects. I know he wants to have conservation practiced by everyone concerned; it is his hope that conservation will be in the minds of everyone. I know that in his heart he wants to do these things. The bill before us may or may not be able to bring about the desired results. It depends upon what the minister intends to do from now on, not only in respect of those things contemplated in the bill which are desirable in themselves, but also with regard to those matters to which my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni referred—the activities of other nations and other governments, notably the government in British Columbia.

If the minister would strike out in all directions in the name of conservation and the exploration of our fisheries, perhaps a day will come when we can be much more proud than we are now of our fisheries and of our fisheries department.

Mr. Crouse: As the representative of Queens-Lunenburg I welcome this opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-145, an act to provide for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada.

I listened with great interest to the Minister of Fisheries when he presented this bill, and in my view it is certainly a comprehensive one which, if properly applied, could affect all aspects of the fishing industry. The bill says in one clause that the minister may make provision for the more efficient exploitation of fisheries resources, the exploration for and development of new fisheries. I believe this is the most important clause in the bill.

For many years in Nova Scotia the fishing industry was an affair of small boats, small capital investment and a surplus of manpower. It was based almost entirely on salt fish. Today the industry is greatly changed. It is based on larger boats with modern equipment, and instead of a surplus of manpower there is a growing shortage of skilled men to man the ships.

Shifting markets have brought about increased fish sales but at the present time the large fleet operating from Nova Scotia and engaged specifically in scallop fishing is facing a serious situation, due to a glut of scallops on the market. We have seen prices fall from a high of some 60 cents to the fishermen last year to a low at the present time of 37 cents, with a prospect of the price falling still further. I had the opportunity recently to speak to many of the fishermen in my area and if prices do not improve many of them of necessity will be obliged to change their entire operation and go into other types of fishing.

By means of this bill the minister could, I believe, give some assistance to these men. There are other types of fish in the sea which are not now being caught and marketed in large quantities. I refer to the possibility of extending our whaling fleet; I refer to the possibility of enlarging our crab fishing activities; I refer to the possibility of increasing our catch of shrimps; to the possibility of the development of new techniques for catching herring, and to the possible marketing of sharks which are prolific on the east coast and which so far have not been marketed by Canadian fishermen, though they are marketed by the fishermen of other countries.

If the minister uses this bill to assist fishermen in this way I am sure he will receive considerable praise from all Atlantic coast fishermen. Since the Conservative government expanded the subsidy program we have had little difficulty in enlarging our fishing fleet. It seemed it is quite possible for fishermen to get together, form a company and build a new ship. But that is not the only problem. Once a ship is built the fishermen must have a market for their catch which enables them to operate at a profit. I suggest that through the research facilities available to him the minister should devote his efforts under this particular clause of the measure to expanding existing markets and developing new markets for some of the species I have mentioned.

Another clause in the bill calls for the introduction and demonstration to fishermen of new types of fishing vessels and fishing equipment, as well as of new fishing techniques. This is a most important aspect of the legislation. I say this because I believe we have seen the expansion of our fishing fleet without proper consideration of the type of vessel constructed.

For example, on February 19, 1966, Blue Mist II was lost with all hands off the southwest coast of Newfoundland. In an edition of the "Canadian Fisherman" of March, 1966, we read that the seiner Ocean Star sank off the British Columbia coast on January 29 carrying seven crew members to their death. Doubts have been raised about the vessel's stability. We read that the Northview was lost in the Finlayson Channel in February, 1961, with eight men aboard. The Combat was lost in Hecate strait with seven men aboard during March, 1965. The Sea Ranger was lost in April, 1965, in the Bering sea.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The question arises why these ships were lost. In the April, 1966 issue of the Canadian Fisherman there is an article by Bren Walsh, Newfoundland correspondent, dealing with the problem of icing up, from which I would like to quote briefly. In it he states that the problem seems to be one of severe icing conditions. Mr. Russell, the manager of the company which operated Blue Mist II, stated that disaster had struck twice in seven years, the first boat it lost being the Blue Wave. The manager also said that his company—> —is now formulating plans to spend thousands of dollars in research on de-icing.

>
> "It has to start somewhere," he said. "Someone had to initiate research into the de-icing of aircraft and there's good reason why we should be the ones to make a start for the fishing industry."
>
> He said they would be happy to make this a co-operative joint effort with other companies, if practical, but that they will carry on in any case on a research program.
>
> From what I could learn there has been surprisingly little research done on the problem to date—
>
> Russell said de-icing experiments were carried out some years ago by the British Association of Shipbuilders but their conclusions—whatever they were—are buried in an obscure report.
>
> He said his company had some preliminary studies initiated shortly after the loss of Blue Wave in 1959. The main conclusion of these studies was that little specific knowledge exists on the problem.
>
> On the question of whether de-icing is possible, he had this to say:
>
> "If a way can be found to partially de-ice a ship ...it will likely involve the use of either electricity or of heated liquids pumped throughout the ship."
>
> If electricity is used, he said, "it must be done in such a manner as to avoid shorting out the ship's main electrical system or of electrifying the ship."

As a resident of Lunenburg and the coast of Nova Scotia, I have visited the waterfront during winter months. The ships, as they arrive in port following a winter gale, are quite a spectacle. They are almost completely covered with ice from the tips of their masts, and throughout their length and breadth. For many years the only way to remove the ice, so dangerous to the crews, was to use a mallet, which required arduous labour to knock off a very small quantity of ice. In recent years captains and crews have met with some success by installing steam equipment. By using steam hoses they have managed to remove some of the excess ice that builds up, layer on layer, while the ship is en route to port.

It is evident that the minister has given some thought to this matter or he would not have included clause 3(d) in the bill. Therefore I suggest to him that when he is considering new types of fishing vessels he make a study of their stability factor and of a proper manner of de-icing them when they are to operate in the North Atlantic in severe winter weather. This is vitally important, especially when we consider the shortage of crews and the necessity of maintaining our fishing fleet at sea.

The minister has also included a subclause (2) whereby he may—> —enter into an agreement with any province providing for the undertaking jointly with the government of the province or any agency thereof of any project that the minister is authorized to undertake under subsection (1).

Here I would commend to him the remarks of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert who spoke in great praise of Atlantic salmon and with whose remarks I agree. In Nova Scotia in recent years we seen a great decline in the catch of Atlantic salmon.

At one time the Lahave river was known to yield over 250 salmon during a season. Last year it yielded less than 75, to the great regret of local people who looked upon the river as a major attraction for tourists to the area. The reason the river contained a large number of salmon in previous years is that at one time lumber operators maintained large wooden dams on the river, which served to control the supply of water and enabled salmon to get upstream to the spawning grounds during the spring of the year. With the advent of trucks it was no longer necessary to maintain river water control for the sluicing of logs to the mouth of the river, and so the dams were allowed to fall into disrepair.

It is believed that the Department of Fisheries could go a long way toward reestablishing the salmon run not only on the Lahave but on the Gold River, the Medway River and other salmon streams in Nova Scotia by reconstructing wooden dams on these rivers for water control. In view of this provision in the bill I hope the minister will avail himself of the opportunity to carry out joint programs with the provincial authorities to help restore the salmon fishing in the major salmon rivers of Nova Scotia.

There are many other provisions in the bill to which I could address myself tonight. One of them concerns the necessity of working closely with the Minister of Public Works in the provision of new facilities for the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces. We have expanded our fishing fleet, but in many maritime areas we are now suffering from inadequate docking facilities. This is especially true in Lunenburg and throughout many parts of my constituency. I hope the minister will give favourable consideration to this matter when implementing this clause of the bill.

Clause 5 of the bill gives the minister very extensive powers, which I fear might even trespass on the rights of the provinces. He will have to use his good judgment when implementing this clause of the bill. As he is well aware, in the Atlantic provinces we have fishermen's loan boards. We have departments of fisheries in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and, I believe, Newfoundland. Therefore, in view of the wide powers which will be granted to the minister by this bill, before implementing any new measures I hope he will undertake careful consultation with the various provincial interests.

I reserve the right to make comment on other provisions of the bill at another time. In closing I commend the minister for his efforts in bringing forth this bill which, in the main, should prove of great assistance to the Atlantic provinces and to the fishing industry in general.

Mr. Patterson: My observations, Mr. Chairman, will be brief and general in nature this evening. I have listened with great interest to the minister's statement. In fact I have always found his statements dealing with the fishing industry of great interest. Tonight he referred to amendments which he will introduce as we study the various clauses of the bill. We look forward to seeing these amendments so that we can analyse them in order to assess whether they will be effective in meeting the various problems with which the industry is confronted.

We are all aware of the tremendous importance of the fishing industry to Canada. Any measure of program directed toward enhancing the industry, whether on the east coast, the west coast, or in the areas in between, will receive unqualified support.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I think back, Mr. Chairman, to former years when there was a real measure of co-operation on a non-partisan basis when it came to a consideration of fisheries problems. That spirit of co-operation was characteristic of the approach which all members took, because they realized the problems we faced would not be solved by a political approach, but that they would be solved when we were able to co-operate in bringing in what we believed were effective and adequate measures for the solution of our problems. It almost seems as though now a new era has dawned; we have departed from that attitude of co-operation and have moved into an area of criticism, which I think is doing and will do a disservice to the entire industry.

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, supported by his colleague for Skeena, went to considerable length in an effort to downgrade the government of his own province. It is remarkable that there are those in this house who seem to take a great delight in doing this for political purposes and political motives; but it is unfortunate in a debate such as this that we would resort to tactics of this kind. I wish to assure the Minister of Fisheries, you Mr. Chairman, and all members of this house, that the government of British Columbia is actively concerned in all phases of the British Columbia economy and in the welfare of all its people. I wonder whether it could be that an election campaign is in the offing in British Columbia, and that this is part of the program.

Mr. Howard: I did not know that.

Mr. Patterson: It may be the take-off for an election campaign. Several years ago I was invited to an non-partisan meeting; it was not a political meeting at all, but rather was a meeting called by the fisheries organizations. They had representatives from the various political parties and it was during an election campaign. The candidates there used it for a political platform. I should like to assure all concerned that it was not very effective in those days; in fact it backfired.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the problems which face the fishing industry in British Columbia, or in any other part of Canada for that matter, will be solved by political criticisms or innuendos. They will be solved by an organized and constant effort on the part of all concerned to find a solution to the problems which face us.

Mr. Howard: Would you permit a question?

Mr. Patterson: Certainly.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member has permitted me to ask a question, Mr. Chairman. I am sure we all want to work in a spirit of co-operation; that is our desire, our intention and our hope. If we have erred as the hon. member indicates, I wonder, in order to get us back on the right track, would he detail for us what the provincial government has done in recent years to assist the fishing industry in British Columbia?

Mr. Patterson: In past years the fisheries affairs have been under the direction of another department, and in fact are still at the present time. I believe, however, we must recognize this fact, that on the Pacific coast the major responsibility for activities in respect of the fisheries is under the jurisdiction of the federal government. In fact, a study of the regulations and of the whole picture, as it affects the Pacific fishery, points out this fact, that the federal government has the major responsibility in the field of fisheries. I do know that the minister under whose jurisdiction the fisheries fall, so far as the provincial responsibility is concerned, is vitally interested in this matter. I do know also that a great deal of attention and throught is being given to it and, just as British Columbia has faced and solved its problems in many other phases of activity, so I know they are going to face this realistically and, so far as possible within the provincial jurisdiction, meet their responsibilities and cooperate with the federal government in its efforts to solve the problems of development, the problems of conservation, the problems of marketing, and every other type of problem with which we are faced on the Pacific coast.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I felt I would be remiss tonight if I failed to make these few brief observations. I wish to say again, in spite of what the hon. member for Saint John-Albert said about the Atlantic salmon being tops so far as the fish of Canada are concerned, that I do not agree with him altogether, because through my constituency flows the mighty Fraser river, one of the great salmon fishery rivers of the continent and of the world. I should like to say it is pretty hard to beat the Pacific salmon when it comes to quality, when it comes to size and when you judge it by any other criteria. Let me say again in closing that regardless of where the problems of the fishing industry may lie, no matter what part of Canada we are speaking of, we are vitally interested in and will support every measure designed to meet the problems in this industry and in our Canadian economy.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to clarify one or two points in connection with this matter before he goes on, or before we pass this bill. What I have in mind relates to the Northwest Territories. The minister may have made a statement on this before I came into the house. In the north and in the Great Slave lake area there is an industry started in respect of the char fishery, and which requires some help from the Department of Fisheries. I should like to see efforts made to button up projects with the provinces; but there is no mention in this bill about the Northwest Territories.

I am wondering where the fishermen in the Northwest Territories stand in respect of the proposed activities envisaged under this particular bill. Although it is expensive, the people of the Great Slave lake area are able to fly out their fish, and can command a good price on the New York market and in the markets of some of the larger centres. I should like to have from the minister his views with regard to co-operating with the areas which are not formed into provinces, such as the Northwest Territories and perhaps the Yukon territory.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take much of the time of the committee, but I am interested in this bill as I realize that when it is adopted it will present an opportunity for the government to do something for the commercial and sport fishing industries of Canada. If it seizes that opportunity I can envisage great advantages forthcoming to various areas in addition to our coastline and maritime regions.

I am not one of those fellows who gets married to every passing whim and fancy that attracts popular sympathy, because I realize that any member who does that will find himself a widower once a week. What I want to say is based on the good common sense of the people I have the honour of representing, who have given some study to this question.

[Mr. Patterson.]

It was very pleasing to hear some members, including the minister, indicate that this is more or less an ARDA fisheries program carried over to meet the fisheries situation which now exists in Canada. I was very pleased to hear the minister say on several occasions that this program will also cover sport fisheries in this country, which at the present time can also be strictly termed as commercial fisheries.

I rise to bring particularly to the attention of the minister a subject I have mentioned once or twice before in this house during the last few years, and relate it to the opportunity that is being provided the minister, his department and his officials to restore the damaged fisheries in the Kootenay and Columbia river areas as a result of the construction of dams under the Columbia river treaty. The minister may be interested to know that the building of these dams will flood in total 135,400 acres of the Columbia valley region. Of particular interest at the present time is the 24,700 acres that will be flooded on the main stem of the Columbia and the Arrow lakes, 10,400 acres of which is in the Lardeau valley, the spawning ground of the Kokanee. A large number of Kokanee are spawned there every year.

The Arrow lakes and Columbia river area from the international boundary to Revelstoke has always provided excellent fishing grounds for residents and tourists, particularly for Kamloops trout, Dolly Varden, lake trout, silver trout and other trout species.

The people of the area which I have the honour to represent are very concerned about this damage to a very important industry, and there is no question that there is going to be immense damage done to the natural fishing industry in this region. On that account the B.C. Federation of Fish, Rod and Gun Clubs of the area, chambers of commerce, farmers' and women's institutes and, in fact, the general public and the tourist industry are all very concerned that action should be taken by both the federal and provincial governments to do all that is possible to restore this industry.

In this regard I should like to quote briefly from one or two newspaper articles I have before me. Quite recently there was a meeting held in the district during which this subject was discussed. It may be of interest to the minister to know that the Arrow lakes will rise 69 feet, and two thirds of the spawning area will be lost. The Duncan dam is sitting on 68 per cent of the Kokanee spawning ground which feeds the Kootenay lakes and Kootenay river.

Mr. Paisch, who is secretary of the B.C. Wildlife Federation, addressed that meeting and mentioned that a survey of this situation was undertaken in 1961, and that the views of this organization were presented to the water comptroller who was holding hearings in the district prior to the final agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia in respect of the treaty. He said:

> The government is suffering from a complete absence of understanding of fish and wildlife.

He was referring to the government of British Columbia. He is reported in this article appearing in the Nelson Daily News of April 6, 1966 as having stated:

> It's something that always has been here and always will be,—

He went on to say, as reported:

> Many people are coming up from California because they've ruined their natural resources there, and now the same thing is being done here.

He was referring to the building of these dams on the Columbia and the flooding of these areas.

He is further reported in this article as follows:

> Paisch said that "residential hunters and fishermen spend $75 million per year and people were never given a chance to state whether they would pay a bit more for power and retain the thing that makes B.C. the place we want to live."

I should like to quote further from the Nelson Daily News of January 25, 1966 regarding a rod and gun club meeting about dam clearing under the heading "Arrow Lake Fish Study Recommended at Meeting". It states in part:

> During the annual meeting of the West Kootenay Rod and Gun Club Association held in Nelson, Sunday, the government's attitude toward the clearance of dam reservoirs was discussed. This resulted from the Columbia river report read by Frank Shannon and Harry Hanson.
>
> F. Shannon stated that the provincial government is not worried about it. He said, "They feel clearing can be done later when it's needed and it doesn't seem to be worth the expense".
>
> Stewart Smith, chief fisheries management officer said at the end of his speech that "We've always recommended full clearage of reservoirs." He added that leaving reservoir areas uncleared makes them inaccessible to fishermen and destroys their value as a recreational area.

The article then continues to state that the meeting dealt with the whole question, and that committees were established for the entire region and at various local points.

A brief has been submitted to the provincial government urging that a survey be undertaken of the fishery resources in the Duncan lake, Arrow lakes and Columbia river areas so that some planning can be done in order to do as much as possible to remedy the damage that will be caused by the rise and fall of water, the flooding of spawning grounds and the resultant change in the amount of pelagic food available.

I bring these facts to the attention of the minister because I think he has an opportunity under the terms of this bill to do something with the co-operation of provincial governments and local people concerned. We have a great number of people in these districts who understand the situation very thoroughly, and there are many organizations and individuals who would be willing to co-operate with both governments to do everything possible, according to the best information available, to overcome as far as possible the great damage that will be done to these fisheries by the construction of these dams.

Our area is known as a recreational area. People are coming up from the United States in increasing numbers every year. Last year there were approximately 125 boats which came from as far south as Portland on the Columbia. Many of them went as far north as Revelstoke, a distance of over 300 miles of good hunting and fishing at this time. This means a great deal to the economy of the area, not only to the tourist industry and the recreational industry generally, but to the hotels, businesses and the local residents.

I rise briefly to bring these things to the minister's attention in the hope that he will domonstrate to the people of the Kootenays that he intends to take some action under this legislation, and to seek the co-operation of the provincial government in designing a program of surveys and of programs covering the building of hatcheries and other things as recommended by the experts, in an attempt to remedy as far as possible the result, as I have repeatedly stated, of the building of these unfortunate dams.

When the minister replies to the various remarks of hon. members that have been made during this debate I hope he will indicate that he is willing to consider my suggestions and invite the people of British Columbia to undertake to co-operate in action taken under this worth-while bill to remedy the situation. Otherwise we will have wasted our time in referring to the various proposals contained in it.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, because I did not realize the scope that is covered by this bill I omitted to mention one point of which I have since been reminded. In Alberta we have three national parks along the Rocky Mountain area, at Waterton Lakes, Banff and Jasper. Those parks are tourist areas. I know that the federal government takes care of the fisheries in these parks but I know, too, that in between the parks there are many, many mountain streams and campsites. Tourists go to the streams between the parks and participate in sport fishing. I know that the province is supposed to stock these streams, but there is a tremendous drain on the fish in the streams.

The complaint of the tourist is that he fishes and catches nothing. He also complains about the same thing in the national parks. He will come out of these areas and say they are fished out. One could pass this off as a joke and say that the tourist is not using the right kind of fishing outfit, the right kind of flies, etc. But if we are to take care of fishing in this country and, with the provinces, button up the regulations, let us make it all-inclusive; let us see that the provinces carry out sufficient restocking programs so that fish are available to tourists. The tourist industry produces the second or third largest revenue to this country and we are doing nothing about the industry, except with regard to the national parks.

Even the national parks are deficient in this respect because the streams in the parks do not contain a sufficient number of fish. The Minister of Fisheries should be talking to the managers of our national parks and if necessary buttoning up some projects so we can bring more tourists into this country and make them happy when they get here. I think it is his duty to do this, and would hope that under this act he would feel free to make every effort to discuss this question with his colleagues, and if necessary with the province of Alberta with regard to streams surrounding the parks which are under the jurisdiction of that province. I ask the minister how far he anticipates his authority will go under this act, and whether he intends to confine it to the seasides and not come inland to do a job where there is a job to be done.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the hon. member for Fraser Valley suggested that I had injected a partisan, political note into the discussion. I thought I was being very restrained and factual in what I had to say. However, I would like to make clear to the member for Fraser Valley and the committee that I am not one of those people who consider the Premier of British Columbia and his government to be like some great god on high that is beyond and above any criticism.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley made some reference to elections. He may have some information that I have not. I do know there are one or two provincial elections around in the country, but as far as I know there is not any election in the province of British Columbia. I would like to point out to the committee and perhaps expand somewhat, in view of what the hon. member for Fraser Valley said, on why I am concerned about the question of fisheries development in British Columbia, and what is and what is not being done about it.

I am concerned that at the present time the province of British Columbia is, relatively speaking, falling behind some of the other provinces in Canada in respect of the growth of its fishery. In fact, according to the last figures I have seen, the landed value of the fish caught by the fishermen of the province of Nova Scotia is now ahead of that of the province of British Columbia. I would point out that as I understand it the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal government in respect of fisheries is exactly the same in the province of British Columbia as it is in every other province in Canada.

What I am concerned about and tried to draw attention to is that at a time when, relatively speaking, the fishery of British Columbia is falling behind, according to the evidence I have the only province that seems to be making noises about questions, and finer points of constitutional jurisdiction, is British Columbia. This is at a time when apparently on the Atlantic coast there is increasingly a measure of co-operation in joint projects and ventures between the federal authority and provincial governments in regard to fisheries expansion.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the government of British Columbia and the standing committee of that legislature, as can be seen from its report, are concerned about quibbling over constitutional jurisdiction. I would remind the hon. member for Fraser Valley that according to the figures I have in respect of the budget of the government of British Columbia for 1965-66, out of a total budget for the Department of Recreation and Conservation of $5,462,000, our commercial fisheries branch was granted a vote of $31,566; and in the estimates for the current fiscal year, out of a total estimate for the Department of Recreation and Conservation of $6,421,932, the estimate for the commercial fisheries branch totals $32,872. That $32,872, as I calculate it, represents five one hundred thousandths of one per cent of the total budget of the province of British Columbia for the current fiscal year.

I would not suggest this is an over-spending by the government of British Columbia in the field of commercial fisheries, even though the major jurisdiction may lie within the authority of the federal government. I would point out that I have in my hand the Votes and Proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia for Tuesday, March 29, 1966, which contains the report of the standing committee, to which I made reference earlier, and it says in part:

> Your committee recommends that due to the interlocking relationship between resources solely under provincial jurisdiction and that of fisheries, an agreement should be concluded with the federal government providing greater jurisdiction to the province since it is unreasonable to expect the province to accept greater responsibility unless it has concomitant authority.

Further down the report says:

> In the event of proper and satisfactory provincial jurisdiction and authority being established, your committee recommends
>
> (1) that there be a Minister of Commercial Fisheries for British Columbia.

I submit that if we in the province of British Columbia are to receive any benefit from the bill now before the house, the government and legislature of the province of British Columbia should not be quibbling about defining constitutional matters. I agree that there are areas in which study can be made and agreement worked out, but as I understand it the major point is that it would be desirable that there be a minister in the government of British Columbia responsible and able to discuss these matters with the federal authority, a minister who could come as the minister of fisheries of British Columbia to a federal-provincial fisheries conference with authority to speak for that government, a minister who would be prepared to take in his hands responsibility for seeing that British Columbia participates in these programs and receives a fair share of the possible advantages that can flow from the bill now under consideration by this house.

• (10:00 p.m.)

If that is being politically partisan in this area, then I make no apology whatever to the hon. member for Fraser Valley or to any other hon. member of this house for expressing this point of view. The government of criticism either inside this house or outside of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the committee would be disposed to go on for another 15 minutes. There has been an indication that there will not be very many more members who wish to speak and it would be of great help if we could finish the committee stage of the bill tonight.

Mr. Starr: We could certainly be agreeable to co-operate. There are two members of our party who wish to say a few words and may not take more than 15 or 20 minutes. If we let it go for another day it would probably take longer, when we could dispose of the matter tonight.

Mr. Howard: I think if we set the time limit at 15 minutes this would be quite agreeable. I am sure we could conclude in that time.

Mr. Starr: I do not think that is fair. Some members have taken full time and others have not spoken at all. If we do not set a time limit, then they will try to make their speeches as short as possible.

Mr. Howard: If you do not set a time limit we will be here till midnight.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the Chair shall not see the clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member for Ontario agree that we do not see the clock for half an hour

Mr. Starr: That is fine.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bower: Mr. Chairman, as a member from Nova Scotia, a province which in 1965 achieved the position of first place in Canada for the landed value of a fish catch, and having the honour to represent in this house the constituency of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare which in turn leads all other ridings in my province in landed value of the fish catch—indeed, some 37 per cent of the provincial total—I particularly welcome Bill No. C-145 introduced by the Minister of Fisheries.

In the course of moving second reading of the bill the minister took exception to the references made in this house to the fact that the fisheries department was considered the orphan of the government. The minister countered this definition by announcing very substantial increases in the estimates of his department over those of the recent past. Perhaps he will not object if, in an entirely non-partisan way, I liken the fisheries department to a sleeping giant which has slept over far too many years but is now stirring energetically.

With the proper implementation of the enabling legislation which is contemplated in the bill before the committee I see no reason why in 10 to 15 years from now the then minister of fisheries will not be justified in presenting even more greatly expanded estimates commensurate with the burgeoning growth of the harvest of the sea.

Canada, a great heartland country with the bulk of its population residing far from its coasts, perhaps naturally has not shown the countrywide interest in the fisheries industry which has obtained in agriculture, manufacturing, mining and the service enterprises.

As the hon. member for Gaspé intimated the other day, many people of our country have only fragmentary and distorted notions of our fisheries and fishermen. When they think of this segment of our economy, if they think of it at all, too often they conjure up the vision of a white bearded oldster in a sou'wester on the end of a wharf interrupting his net repairing to carve out a model boat for a curly headed youngster, or of a rough and ready brawling activity far removed from the bucolic regularity of farming or the well ordered procedures of mining, manufacturing and the service industries.

Mr. Chairman, our fisheries constitute an important serious, high risk, capital hungry sector of our national economy that, having made considerable progress over the recent past, still has a basic problem. That problem is the need to accelerate in respect to expansion, modernization, research and investment, for we have fallen behind the other great fishing countries of the world. Our great stretches of coastline and the potential economic significance of the industry make such a situation intolerable.

[Mr. Bower.]

Previous speakers in debate on the bill have stressed the demand factor in the fisheries. To emphasize this potential may I point out authorities now estimate the world population will reach 4,000 million in the next 14 years. The great bulk of the increase will be in the so-called underdeveloped countries. It has been my personal observation that it is precisely in those areas where, in addition, to chronic quantity lack of food there is the equally grave problem of deficiency in protein supply.

Only recently, Mr. Chairman, we heard the Prime Minister announce that our country was prepared to increase substantially our wheat contribution to India in view of the famine conditions facing that country. This was a gesture in response to a specific crisis. But, over the years, Canada as one of the more prosperous countries of the world is going to be continually called on for food by the emerging nations and, sir, I maintain the sea is a great protein source. With adequate expansion, modernization, technical innovations, trained personnel and basic research our fisheries can produce palatable low unit cost protein. In enlightered self interest, Mr. Chairman, with our current and probably continuing role of suppliers of food to deficiency areas in this respect, it behooves us to assure, if I may put it rather inelegantly, that we are in a position to fill more bellies for a buck of aid.

I am particularly impressed by the scope of the bill. After careful study I believe it can serve as the basis, in a very real way, for the development of our commercial fisheries. No doubt as time passes, legislation for special cases and circumstances will be necessary, but I do feel we have in the proposed legislation the makings of a solid foundation.

I would be the first to agree with the minister and several other hon. members that our offshore fisheries are now, and in the future will be, the vastly dominant factor, quantitatively, in the fisheries picture. The emphasis on improving equipment, personnel, and techniques in that sector is wholly desirable.

I believe the remarks of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg admirably summed up the objectives we must keep ever in view. Those are the utilization of all species, and the utilization of all of each fish, except the wiggle of its fins.

The structure of the bill in my opinion is sound in that it envisages a spread of contribution and participation in the development of our fisheries all the way from Ottawa to the operating level. At least, I take it that, in clause 7 providing for the setting up of advisory committees, the minister has in mind calling into the picture people actively taking part in the various operating sectors of the industry. There, Mr. Chairman, resides a mine of practicality which can serve well in maximizing the effectiveness of the legislation.

Clause 2 of the bill, I am glad to note, interprets marine plant life as included in fishery resources. This is an area I believe where research, the improvement of harvesting, handling devices and conservation measures may have a significant incremental effect on the total fisheries effort.

• (10:10 p.m.)

In conceding major import to the offshore fisheries, Mr. Chairman, and the need of phasing in, and promptly so, the improvements in that sector to bring the industry up to optimum development level, I put in the demurrer that we do not as policy, phase out of existence our inshore fishermen. I certainly want to see our big offshore operations developed to the highest degree of efficiency, but I contend the individual fishermen and indeed the small local fish plants have significant roles to play in the industry picture.

Perhaps there are too many part time fishermen, but I submit there are thousands of inshore fishermen capable of making a living well above poverty level in this particular phase of fishing. In any group of people anywhere there are the incompetents, the lazy and the free loaders; but, Mr. Chairman, my own observation is that the vast majority of our inshore men are energetic and competent. They are people who, with the investments in their boats and equipment and their willingness to face the risks inherent in their jobs, constitute a sort of yeomanry, a whole group of small entrepreneurs. It is my observation that where they have adequate basic facilities—wharves, dredgings and breakwaters for instance—they can and will do well. They are very significant contributors to the over-all economy of a constituency such as mine.

During debate on the fisheries bill frequent mention has been made of the prospects of fish farming and the concept of vocational and technical training of crews for the adequate manning of the modernized and more complex offshore fishing fleet to be.

Mr. Chairman, I submit it is almost an inevitability that the source of personnel in both these instances will be the general community of inshore fishermen. Certainly therefore the viability of this community must be maintained.

In southwestern Nova Scotia the inshore fishermen, generally speaking and according to the season, engage in lobstering, the netting and trapping of herring, groundfish fishing and the harvesting of marine plants. In other words, the fisherman's yearly income is made up of the total of several specialized activities. Whenever one of these activities is adversely affected the fisherman's yearly take can be disastrously driven downwards from a reasonably satisfactory level.

Recently large-scale purse seining for herring, and the establishment of plants for the processing to fishmeal and fish oil have taken place in southwestern Nova Scotia, and this no doubt accounts for the increase of the province's herring landings to 145 million pounds in 1965. These developments, in general, are a source of satisfaction. However there is a consensus in the fishing communities of Shelburne and Yarmouth counties and the district of Clare that the purse seining conducted in the inshore fishing areas is adversely affecting the traditional gill netting and trapping zone. The inshore herring fishermen sell to the small plants for processing for human consumption, as contrasted with bulk processing of the seiners' catch for non-human consumption. Fears are expressed that the purse seining close inshore may be damaging the schooling and reproduction of herring in the spawning grounds by over-harvesting.

I would hope that the minister might see fit to establish a zone extending three to 12 miles offshore in which purse seining would be excluded, and parallel with this he should have a thorough departmental study made of the situation, as a contribution to the conservation of resources concept.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that there are precedents for the first of the two moves I have just mentioned in the restriction of draggers over 65 feet in length to 12 miles off the coast, and the barring of purse seining in a zone around Grand Manan Island on the north side of the bay of Fundy. The reservation of a zone for the net fishermen, leaving the whole sweep of the ocean to the seiners, should not unduly hamper the large scale operation.

During the debate on the resolution introducing the fisheries bill, the hon. member for Halifax brought up the problem in his constituency arising from the lack of freezer facilities in the smaller fishing communities. This was a source of preoccupation to me also, for it is indeed shocking to witness boatload after boatload of herring being thrown overboard because of lack of the means to preserve them as bait or for processing for human consumption.

The minister assured the hon. member that when the house saw the bill it would find in it provisions for overcoming this problem. I take it that the minister thus gave us a pre-interpretation of this part of clause 5 of the bill, and I trust it will work this way.

I would also add my plea to that of other hon. members and urge on the minister the essentiality of his securing the co-operation of the Minister of Public Works in expanding the shore facilities and services, and I am not talking about "the wharf for every fisherman", which is too often used as the brush-off answer of the government to essential facility requests.

In the district of Clare, in Yarmouth county and in Shelburne county, installations which seemed large are now overcrowed in the bigger fishing ports. Additionally, in many smaller ports in all three of these areas, these facilities are lacking, are in a bad state of repair, or are inadequate. It seems to me that we have been accommodating to current size of operations rather than building to a growth concept.

If, as we all hope, the Fisheries Development Act is to stimulate the modernization and expansion of the industry, and we see right now more and bigger ships both of the offshore and inshore type, the moment is at hand to get on with the shore installations and services, lest the beneficial effects of the legislation be blocked, and Canada remain behind, in international competition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude by expressing my concern, and I know it is the concern of everyone in my constituency—indeed the concern of most of the people of the Atlantic provinces—that the minister has not been able to give definite advice on the setting up of the 12 miles fishing zone and its corresponding base lines in totality as a protective device for Canadian fisheries against all foreign fishing fleets. This leaves the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act of 1964, promised in the election campaign of 1963, now in the year of our Lord 1966, something of a lame duck in Nova Scotian eyes.

[Mr. Bower.]

Recent news dispatches reporting the introduction of a bill to the House of Representatives of the United States, to create a 12 mile fishing zone, does not tend to dispel the impression that the Americans are not altogether antagonistic to the 12 mile limit idea, but yet we do not have our Canadian protective limit.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Minister may undertake projects.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to clause 3, which I would ask my colleague, the Minister of Transport, to move, namely:

"(5) The minister may enter into an agreement with any person for the joint undertaking of any project that the Minister is authorized to undertake under subsection (1) or for the payment to any person of contributions in respect of the cost of any such project undertaken by that person."

I am sure this amendment will meet some of the representations which were made to us following introduction of the bill. It will cover fish processors and co-operative groups and will even go a little further because it will also include agreements with individual fishermen, which sometimes are necessary for carrying out new experiments. I would therefore ask my colleague to move the proposed amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I so move.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Just for clarification, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister, in his understanding of the amendment which his colleague has proposed on his behalf and viewed in conjunction with clause 3(1)(a), whether it would enable the minister to undertake a project which might be described as a fish processing plant project?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give a specific reply to this question. It all depends for what purpose the fish processing plant would be used. There may be instances where we would wish to introduce new methods for processing or preparation of fish for market in respect of which we would consider making grants to a processing plant or enter into an agreement with such a plant.

Mr. Nowlan: I will be very brief, Mr. Chairman. In my remarks I do not wish anyone to consider that my brevity detracts from the importance of the fisheries. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare spoke at some length about the fisheries, but I will be much more brief. I do not wish anyone to think that this takes away from the interest those in my constituency have in this matter. The recent amendment I believe does answer some of the objections of the members from the west coast in respect of the bill as originally drafted. In so far as clause 3 is concerned, and in the general context of fishing, a project which I would heartily commend to the minister is a removal of the closure of the New Brunswick shores so that the discrimination with relation to New Brunswick versus Nova Scotia seiners might be removed.

I submit that as a fisheries project this matter should be commended to the minister. He has mentioned the conference at Fredericton on May 4 to May 8, but I should like to tell him that I do believe that conference will deal more with the history and the life of herring than it will with the problems of Nova Scotia vis-à-vis New Brunswick.

Mr. Robichaud: I said that on the occasion of that meeting I hope to have a special meeting with Nova Scotia and New Brunswick representatives so that we can get together and arrive at a satisfactory agreement.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister for those remarks of clarification. I will wait with interest for the meeting and say no more about this now, although I do say this would be one of the best developments in the Atlantic region because when you have 30 boats in the basin and see these boats come some distance from the weirs put out on April 13, that is something to be concerned about. The minister stated that the herring season was all year, but the weir season opens on April 15, and it was to that I was referring.

Mr. Robichaud: It is open all year.

Mr. Nowlan: Then I have found that this is one subject in which I can get an education. The second point is the matter raised by my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare. I do not intend to belabour this point tonight, but I do intend to say more about it and present more facts and figures in the form of a question to the Minister of Public Works because I appreciate that this also has a relationship to his department.

As the Minister of Fisheries is aware, coming from his province, the fishermen from Digby island and Digby Neck have for once in their history united on one thing in an attempt to solve their very pressing harbour facility needs. I refer, of course, to the Petty passage project. This will come under fishery department projects, and the minister can undertake this through other agencies, because it obviously involves other agencies. I intend to say more about this at a later time.

It takes rock to put a breakwater out, and being from Nova Scotia I think this breakwater causeway would have more beneficial result than the causeway to the island, because it would also provide a harbour. The harbour facilities there have not been improved for years. Hundred-foot trawlers are the common thing today, yet the dock space there is 20 years old.

I am glad to see the Minister of Transport in his seat tonight because the next thing I wish to refer to is a joint project under clause 3 and concerns the Atlantic Development Board. During the Easter recess it was brought to my attention that some fish plants do not have landings of ten million pounds, and therefore perhaps do not qualify for water development grants. In one case two plants exist back to back and together process more than ten million pounds of landed fish. In the particular instance to which I have reference the two plants employ between 60 and 75 people. I hope in an effort to develop commercial fisheries in that particular area sympathetic attention will be given to the requests of these two companies, and others, in the matter of qualification for grants, because they do process more than the required ten million pounds. I think there is some anomaly in the fact that they operate back to back, yet under the regulations cannot qualify.

That is all I intended to say at this late hour. I think an hon. member has a technical question he wishes to put forward. As far as I am concerned, any development of the commercial fisheries industry of Nova Scotia will be beneficial, and we are all in favour of any such development.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I should like to briefly bring one point to the attention of this committee which relates to clause 3 (a) of the bill. My point is related to the more efficient exploitation of fisheries resources. I have apprised the minister of this. It is the intention of some of the provinces, particularly the province of Ontario, to ban from use monofilament net. It is the duty of the minister in this house to ratify the intention to ban it, and it is his duty to make the final decision. Monofilament net of dimensions used in the eastern Ontario area for fishing and particularly for whitefish in lake Ontario and bay of Quinte, costs as high as $25 per pound, ready for fishing. I raise this matter on behalf of a constituent, a commercial fisherman. The constituent concerned, and he is not alone in this predicament, has purchased about 100 pounds of this monofilament net.

It is reported that the Game and Fisheries Department of the government of Ontario wish to ban monofilament net for two years. If banned two years only, this would be very difficult to administer, to inspect and to enforce. If the ultra-efficiency of this type of net is a long-term detriment to the maintenance of the fishing industry, then it should be permanently banned.

Monofilament net is the most efficient fishing device ever devised by man. It is invisible in the waters of the Great Lakes, the result being that it fishes night and day, and in both foul and fair weather. The fish cannot see it.

• (10:30 p.m.)

I agree that if this type of gear is so efficient that it endangers the maintenance of the various species which it catches, then it ought to be rigidly controlled, even to the extent of banning it from Canadian commercial fishing waters. But my point is this, Mr. Chairman. Monofilament net was recognized previously, has been legalized and is now being widely used. If it is banned, then the commercial fishermen who have equipped themselves with this type of net should be fully compensated for the loss of the legality of their monofilament nets.

I point out to the minister the need of the fishermen to adjust themselves to this eventuality if monofilament is banned, and the date of the beginning of the ban on the sale and use of monofilament should be announced far enough in advance to give the fishermen a chance at least to recoup some of the money which they have invested in monofilament. This, I suggest, could be three months or six months in the future. For example, if announced now it could go into effect in November. Monofilament could be fished until November, but no new net purchased after the date of the announcement.

Then when by law the use of monofilament must cease, the fishermen still in possession of this type of net should be compensated at a just, fair and pro-rated, depreciated rate for all monofilament net in their possession. When this is done, the government should possess the net. Any different or less effective arrangement means the financial ruin of many commercial fishermen not only in my constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox but anywhere in Canada where monofilament net is used, and particularly in the inland, fresh water fisheries of our country. A less costly arrangement might be to allow commercial fishermen to use the monofilament net which they own at the present time until it is worn out, with a final date of permitted use placed on all net of this nature.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, that is a matter for the government of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, I should like to plead with the minister to take advantage of the provisions of clause 3 (1) (a) of this bill for the more efficient exploration of fishery resources, to restrict certain inshore fishing grounds for the sole use of inshore fishermen and prohibit their use to deep sea draggers. The inshore fisherman is equipped with small boats which cannot fish more than 15 or 20 miles offshore. The deep sea draggers can go 200 or 300 miles offshore to the Grand Banks, and it does not seem right that a deep sea dragger should be permitted to destroy these fishing grounds and deny their use to the inshore fishermen who depend on them solely for their livelihood.

The only way to solve this problem is for government to restrict certain inshore fishing grounds to inshore fishermen. I am not saying that this should be done in every case, but in certain cases it is essential that the inshore fishing grounds be restricted solely for the use of inshore fishermen.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Minister may make payments.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister to consider including in this clause as potential recipients of any payment, processing plants as well as cold storage warehouses. I put this suggestion to the minister and ask whether he considered it in the drafting of the legislation. If he did, what are the reasons for not including it? If he did not consider it, will he now consider including processing plants as being corporate elements eligible for payment under this particular clause?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the matter of including processing plants was fully discussed and considered, but after consideration it was decided that we could not include them under this act. In most provinces, if not in all, assistance to processing plants is a matter of provincial responsibility. We had specific reasons for including cold storage warehouses, because our inspection requirements will have the effect of making many cold storage companies and owners of cold storage facilities add further equipment to their plants. This was the reason we included cold storage. We have had many representations to this effect.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, the minister said that processing plants were not included because of provincial responsibility. I believe that was the word he used. Does this mean that it is his view that payments to processing plants would be a matter of provincial government jurisdiction under the constitution, and it would be ultra vires the parliament of Canada to enact any such change?

Mr. Robichaud: I cannot answer that question, but I would bring to the attention of the hon. member clause 3(c), which refers to the development of new fishery products and projects for the improvement of the handling, processing and distribution of fishery products. This clause would in many cases assist fish processing plants, particularly now in view of the amendment which has just been approved.

Mr. Howard: Is the minister saying that it is unnecessary to include the words "processing plants" in clause 5?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, this is my understanding.

Mr. Howard: Why not put in the words "cold storage warehouses" in the first part of clause 3?

Mr. Robichaud: Because it is our intention to have a special type of assistance available for cold storage in the regulations under the act.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Advisory committees.

Mr. Patterson: I should like to ask the minister whether the establishment of advisory committees would be done on a provincial basis, or on an area basis, or would it be based on particular interests such as fisheries development or some other phase of the industry?

Mr. Robichaud: The appointment of such committees could be on a provincial, regional or area basis, depending on the project that would be considered. We will take into consideration the need of certain provinces or regions in appointing such committees.

• (10:40 p.m.)

Mr. Carter: In view of what the minister has just said, as far as my own province is concerned I would ask him to keep these committees down to the bare minimum in number. In my province we already have a multiplicity of agencies dealing with the fishing industry. There is an old saying that too many cooks spoil the broth. I think that this is the case to a large extent in my province, where we have a provincial branch of the federal Department of Fisheries, we have the provincial department of fisheries, the fisheries development authority, the provincial fisheries loan board, the fish trades association and the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited. On top of that we have the National Fisheries Council of Canada, and we recently set up a committee on centralization and a committee on bait policy. To add to this multiplicity of existing agencies all dealing with the fisheries will make confusion worse confounded. As far as Newfoundland is concerned, I hope that these committees will be kept to the very minimum, but I hope that at least one fisherman will be appointed to each committee because, as I pointed out a few moments ago, I do not think a single fisherman is represented on them.

Everybody knows how to tell the fisherman how to catch fish. Everybody knows how to tell the government to run its business, and what it should do for the fishery industry. The fisherman, who is most directly involved, does not manage to exert any influence at all. If we are going to have committees in my own province, I do hope that the fishermen will be represented on them.

Mr. Barnett: On the point mentioned last by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, I was going to inquire of the minister whether in the matter of the advisory committee he had any plans to ensure that fishermen, among others, would be on it. Perhaps he could indicate what is in mind with regard to the selection of people who might be on that committee?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Chairman. It is our intention to have fishermen represented. For the information of the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo I might say that with respect to recent committees I have selected or appointed representatives of fishermen to be members of such committees.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Expenditures.

Mr. Robichaud: There is an amendment that I have asked my colleague the Minister of Transport to move.

Mr. Pickersgill: I move:

That Bill C-145, to provide for the development of the commercial fisheries of Canada, be amended as follows:

By striking out line 36 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"Subsection (2), (3) or (5) of section 3 providing for the payment"

Mr. Howard: Under clause 8, a provision is made that any expenditures under this act will be dealt with by way of appropriation. In other words, the estimates of the Department of Fisheries for subsequent years will contain items relating to whatever projects are to be undertaken during that particular fiscal year. I think that is a commendable way to approach this. It will give parliament the opportunity annually to look at the operation of the act and to assess its effectiveness, and also to propose changes that it is felt ought to be made. I want to say that I think it is the correct way to deal with items of this particular nature. I hope that the first such project will be included in supplementary estimates A of the current fiscal year, when they are presented.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Mr. Barnett: This leads me to the point of asking the minister whether he would care to answer now the question I raised earlier as to whether in fact the passage of this bill would means that additional amounts would be brought forward, or whether the item I mentioned, in the current estimates, is intended to cover everything that might be done under the bill during this current year. If the minister prefers I could pursue this question in the fisheries committee.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, I would prefer that this matter be pursued in the fisheries committee. I give the hon. member an assurance that this bill would result in the acceleration of an additional number of projects.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 9—Regulations.

Mr. Robichaud: I have a minor amendment also to this clause in order that the regulations may be in line with the amendments proposed earlier. I would therefore ask my colleague the Minister of Transport to move as follows:

That clause 9 be amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (a), by relettering paragraph (b) as paragraph (c) and by adding, immediately after paragraph (a), the following new paragraph:

(b) prescribing matters, including matters similar to those required to be specified in an agreement under subsection (2) or (3) of section 3, to be provided for in agreements entered into pursuant to subsection (5) of section 3; and—

Then (c) would follow.

Mr. Pickersgill: I move.

Mr. Howard: Needless to say it is extremely difficult to follow amendments of this sort and relate them to other parts of the bill. I assume this is an amendment consequential upon the previous amendment to clause 3. I would ask the minister if this is a correct assumption. Is this purely a consequential amendment—not an amendment of substance?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, it is an amendment consequential to the amendment which was made to clause 3 by adding subclause (5).

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

Mr. Robichaud moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to thank hon. members for their co-operation.

• (10:50 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if any of the ministers present on the treasury benches tonight is able to tell us what is going to be brought before the house tomorrow, and will assure us that the ministers will be here?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before acting for my colleague the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) on this occasion, and I hope on this occasion only, notwithstanding what was said by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) earlier in the debate, I should like to say that I appreciate very much the co-operation we have had from all quarters of the house today, and I hope we will have even closer co-operation tomorrow, because we have a rather large menu.

We shall begin with item No. 46 on the order paper, the Export and Import Permits Act; then take No. 50, the Farm Credit Act; then No. 39, which is a tax agreement; then No. 15, the Science Council; No. 4, the Research Council; No. 3, the resolution respecting automotive products; No. 48, the eastern feed grain board; No. 5, the ARDA fund; and the government will reserve the right, which it has under the rules, to bring forward any other bills on the order paper when these are completed.

Further, if the circumstances are such, it will also reserve the right which it has under the rules to alter the order; but we shall try to give as much notice as possible of any alteration, and it is our firm intention to begin with the item standing in the name of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters).

Mr. Starr: And all the ministers will be here?

Mr. Pickersgill: We will have enough ministers. I think I have given so many safeguards that even Mackenzie King would be proud of me.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

GRAIN—PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we shall have to move quickly from fish to grain because of the grain elevator situation in Prince Rupert. I would like to preface my remarks by reading from the Ottawa Citizen of Tuesday, April 19, a statement by the Prime Minister with respect to the revised deficit for Expo '67, revised to an amount of between $82 million to $83 million which, as the newspaper stated, was an increase of more than 70 per cent over the original deficit estimated at $47,534,000. The Prime Minister said with respect to that, and I quote:

> It doesn't seem much out of line, not in view of the rising costs of construction and of the increasing costs of the Performing Arts Centre here.

After many years of work by many organizations in Prince Rupert, by countless individuals, and by myself as member of parliament for the area, we finally got the Board of Grain Commissioners to proceed to call tenders for the grain elevator extension at Prince Rupert. After the tenders were opened and it was realized what the costs of the extension would be, the minister made an announcement that they were not going to proceed with the extension because of what he classified as higher construction costs, higher than anticipated in the original estimates.

I worked out a calculation a moment ago and I find that the tenders for the grain elevator extension were just about 70 per cent higher than the original estimates, almost a parallel situation with the Performing Arts Centre, which the Prime Minister said was reasonable in the light of higher construction costs. It seems to me that that parallel attitude should be reflected in the government's concern with the grain elevator extension in Prince Rupert.

I think the minister, rather than having postponed the matter, really scuttled it, if his remarks as recorded in Hansard are to be taken at their face value. Incidentally, when the matter first broke it came about in a rather curious way. I asked the minister about the grain elevator extension on Friday, March 25. On that very same day, when he declined to answer an item appeared in the Prince Rupert Daily News indicating that the extension was going to be postponed.

The first thing the following Monday morning I phoned Treasury Board officials who told me the matter was not before them. I then phoned the minister's office and his officials told me the minister did not make any announcement about it because he was out of town that Friday. No one seemed to know where the announcement emanated from.

The fact is that it did come about and the minister substantiated it on Monday, March 28 when he said, first, that the tenders were too high, and second, that he hoped prices would come down, and that they would wait until prices came down—which I think is a hope beyond realization, if present day trends mean anything. He hoped for a time when he could get better prices for the grain elevator. I took this to mean lower bids or a revised estimate of the engineering in respect of the project itself.

On April 5 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) made an announcement in the House of Commons about the sharply increased grain sales to Red China, or to the Import-Export Corporation in China, and indicated they would be raised from a minimum of 168 million bushels to a maximum of 280 million bushels over a three year period, and that the contract called for a shipment of 59.7 million bushels of wheat during the first five months of the new crop year.

I thought surely when this announcement was made by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), having heard it, would jump up and say that with this increase in sales the government, now seeing the urgent necessity for expanding the grain elevator at Prince Rupert, would give due recognition to the city of Prince Rupert as having one of the finest harbours on the west coast, one which is ice free the year round and is closer to the Orient than the other ports on the lower mainland. I would have expected him to say that the government gives recognition to the city as a rail head of the Canadian National Railways for the grain from the prairies, and give recognition to the fact that during the regime of the Conservative government there was a recommendation that the grain elevator should be developed because of the grain sales. When the Prime Minister made the statement the other day that the Expo deficit was not out of line because of the rising construction costs, I thought that the minister would take the lead from his leader and say that the prices bid on the grain elevator extension in Prince Rupert really were not much out of line, taking into account rising construction costs.

[Mr. Howard.]

I say: Please Mr. Minister, change your mind, and give recognition to Prince Rupert. Let us not delay any longer, or the grain sales will be gone and we will be back where we were in 1951 when the grain elevator did not operate.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to say that I certainly concur with a considerable proportion of what my hon. friend from Skeena (Mr. Howard) stated with regard to the desirability of the elevator at Prince Rupert and the planned addition. I think it should be made very clear that the project has not in any shape or form been abandoned; it has been postponed for the time being. I should point out that the bids were some 70 per cent higher than the estimated price, and surely by no stretch of the imagination can this increase of 70 per cent for the facilities be deemed to be meaningless.

I would point out that the rescheduling of the construction of the proposed extension to the elevator will not affect the movement of the grain from that port since shipping schedules can be maintained by the regular staff working over-time and by the hiring of additional temporary labour. So, despite poisoned pen letters being circulated, this will not affect the movement of grain from the west.

• (11:00 p.m.)

By the same token I think that an efficient handling at Prince Rupert through the extensions that were planned is very desirable for the future. I point out that the proposed extension was intended primarily to provide additional working space, so that while one ship was being loaded preparation of the cargo of the next ship to be unloaded could take place in a routine manner, at the same time and with the same staff and equipment. Therefore, from the standpoint of grain handling, what this will mean is that there will have to be more overtime and more labour than now obtains.

There is no shadow of a doubt, apart from the fact that the bids were vey high, that the postponement of this project was part of the government's over-all commitment to hold the line because of inflationary trends. It is only common sense that if we are going to hold that line, and the government's intention to hold it to 10 per cent of its commitment in construction is valid, the Department of Agriculture cannot say it will not bear its fair share. It is all very well to say that we will hold the line in construction, provided the other departments do so and we are allowed to carry on.

To the best of our ability we have tried to cut the construction of all departments by 10 per cent because of our policy to hold down inflation and maintain our cost structure. To the best of my knowledge this is the only project of the Department of Agriculture in the province of British Columbia that is being postponed and I do not think it is in any way inequitable. I certainly assure my hon. friend that I share his desire to have this project proceeded with as soon as possible. Certainly as soon as our economy permits us to move ahead again with construction, this will be one of the first projects that will receive serious consideration.

Perhaps I should point out to the hon. gentleman that I have asked my officials to check over the proposed plans in an attempt to see if the costs can be revised in areas where there have been very considerable increases.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—GREENWOOD—REPORTED FIGHT FOLLOWING PAY INCREASES FOR PILOTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour I too shall be as brief as possible. I do not think I will have any more trouble in switching from fish to "foul" than the hon. member preceding me had in switching from fish to wheat. I use the term "foul" not in terms of a bird, but as an adjective.

On April 1 the Minister of National Defence made an announcement which certainly was foul as far as the greater number of personnel of our air force is concerned, who do not benefit from the latest pay increases given to pilots because of certain conditions. The question I asked the other day, which prompts this further discussion and explanation, was not asked to embarrass the administration of the Canadian forces or any particular administrative officer. It was asked to illustrate the deep, disastrous disillusionment and disappointment of a great number of air force personnel, and personnel of other services, who feel that this is fundamental discrimination.

The principle of equal pay for equal ranks and equal opportunity has apparently been thrown out the window. This will have a great bearing on recruitment in the future. I am sure that every son of an air force officer would like now to go into the forces as a pilot, in spite of the fact that they might have engineering or technical aspirations. With the increase in the pay to pilots would any potential air force recruit go into any other field than flying, provided he could qualify?

I should like also to refer to pensionable pay allowances and make particular reference to the station with which I am most familiar. At Greenwood where the Argus is flown a single flying crew consists of about 16, of which 11 or 12 perform tasks other than flying the aircraft. How can one expect to have teamwork in such a crew when the increased basic pay of the pilot and co-pilot is pensionable, yet the flying allowances paid to the other 10, 11 or 12 are not pensionable? To those men coming to the end of their years in the service and about to retire, this means a great deal in dollars and cents.

The other matter that creates distress and disillusionment in the service is that the maximum increases are given to the older pilots, pilots in the 16-year progressive stage, and not to younger pilots. How can this policy help to keep pilots in the service when in most cases they are already too old to go to commercial air lines? If these commercial air lines really want pilots they will pay $100 a month or more than the service in order to obtain pilots trained by the R.C.A.F.

I think the policy is shortsighted. It is like the Dutchman poking his finger into a hole in the dike to stop the flow of water, when there are other cracks in the dike wall. I would refer to the policy announced by the minister in Edmonton over the week end, and by his department before the week end, with regard to pay for special responsibilities. Did the minister and his department consider responsibility pay before the pay increases were announced, because we have the anomaly of a helicopter pilot on a destroyer earning more in dollars and cents than the captain of the destroyer, or the army pilot of an L-19 training plane receiving more than a Squadron Leader navigator who has flown 8,000 hours all over the world, more than even some hon. members opposite, and a great deal more than some foreign dignitaries who visit this country. Often the pilot of an L-19 training plane has flown only 100 hours.

These are the reasons for distress and disillusionment in the service and it is just rot to say they are not. The minister talks about integration. One could argue that this is one of the last straws to service personnel who wish to make a career of the service.

Dollars and cents is not the only thing that brings them to the service; they are activated by patriotism, esprit de corps and other things. They know they can earn more in dollars and cents in the commercial world but choose to join the service. Then the government introduces this discriminatory policy.

The minister talked about responsibility pay, and I have dealt with the question of pensionable pay and allowances for air crew. The minister has also said this policy is to further integration, but in my opinion it will cause disintegration in the service because it is discriminatory. I hope there is a minister present who will answer this question. You sometimes sit in an empty chamber, such as it is tonight, and think you are speaking in a vacuum. During the Easter recess I had the opportunity to talk to individuals, following protocol, because one has to be careful to follow protocol, and found there is a really deep concern in this connection.

It is only a short time since I came to this house, but I have received telegrams from Rivers, Manitoba, Comox, and of course from many people at Greenwood who wish to make a career of the service but are afraid to do so because of shot-gun announcements like this. It is said that this policy will further integration but, as I say, it is causing disintegration.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would answer by simply assuring the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings that I will bring to the attention of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) the very lucid arguments he has made even at this late hour of the day.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.12 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 26, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) presented the first report of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs, and asked for unanimous consent to move that the report be concurred in.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on the matter of—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will wait a moment, I shall first read the motion of the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron). Is the hon. member rising to comment on the motion of the hon. member for High Park?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, it is about the unanimous consent required for the hon. member to move his motion today. I think 48 hours notice should be given in such a case. In view of the fact that a reduction of the quorum of the committee is requested, we do not believe this should be granted.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park must have the unanimous consent of the house in order to move this motion. I understand that the hon. member for Lapointe objects to giving this consent, and therefore the motion cannot be presented at this time.

[English]

HOUSING

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF MORTGAGE MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I redirect to the Prime Minister, with slight changes, a question I have asked him on several occasions recently; namely, what is going to be done to meet the serious situation of prospective house builders who require money under C.M.H.C.? I suggest that the Prime Minister has been receiving a great number of messages on this matter. People are being hurt by high interest rates and are unable to get the necessary money. The government should now be in a position to offer some hope, not only to the builders but particularly to those who desire houses.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has been considering this matter at a cabinet meeting this morning. That consideration will be continued, and I hope to have a statement to make to the house as soon as we have completed consideration of this matter, which I agree is very important. I hope to be able to make such a statement at the end of the week at the latest.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUESTIONING OF DRAFT DODGERS IN CANADA BY F.B.I.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last week the right hon. Prime Minister indicated that the Solicitor General would be making a statement on Monday or Tuesday of this week with regard to Canadian citizens who have been called for military service in the United States due to the fact that at various times they have spent some period of time there. I wonder whether the Solicitor General is prepared to make that statement at this time.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize to the hon. member, but I did not hear all his question. I believe, however, I answered the question yesterday in replying to starred question 1151 on the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: The question I asked and in respect of which the Prime Minister said the Solicitor General would be making a statement had to do with whether the Canadian government intends to clarify the status of persons who believe they are Canadian citizens but who may have spent one or two years in the United States and now are being subject to call for military service. What is the status of such persons; what action should they take in the event they are called for military service, and what protection have they in the event they visit the United States, where some of them already have been told they will be placed under arrest?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question is wider than the one which I agreed my hon. friend would take up. This matter has been under consideration, and of course involves an interpretation of United States legislation and the position of Canadians in the United States in respect of this legislation. We had a good deal of experience concerning this during the war when the draft law applied to Canadians. I am not in a position to go further than I have gone at the moment, but we are examining it and I hope to be able to make a statement as soon as that examination is completed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. With reference to the answer the Solicitor General gave yesterday to the member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), this answer would seem to indicate that the press reports with regard to the visit of the F.B.I. agent, Mr. Alfie Gunn, to the Briscoe family are incorrect when they state that the F.B.I. agent was given clearance by the R.C.M.P. before he called on this family.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may wish to rephrase the question. As he knows, he cannot ask whether a press report is exact or inexact.

Mr. Douglas: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question and ask whether the F.B.I. agent, Alfie Gunn, was given the green light by the R.C.M.P. prior to calling upon the Briscoe family at Port Moody, British Columbia.

Mr. Pennell: I believe my answer yesterday was that there had been no arrangement for Mr. Gunn to carry out the visit that he did carry out.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has a further supplementary question.

Mr. Douglas: The minister's answer is that no permission had been given. I am asking now whether there was any clearance, formal or informal, on the part of the R.C.M.P.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to intervene at this moment, but I do not think the question the hon. member is asking now is of the type which can be asked and which should be answered at this time. It is a detailed question about an event which already has taken place, and I do not think it involves a degree of urgency which would warrant its being allowed by the Chair at this time.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, I am merely asking a question with reference to an answer the minister gave yesterday, which was somewhat ambiguous. I wished the minister to clarify it, and I took it for granted the minister would have that information at hand.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the answer would be to put a further question on the order paper.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister and his colleagues, when they are giving consideration to this matter, also take into consideration the terms of the Foreign Enlistment Act, which places heavy penalties on Canadians who are serving in foreign armed forces in countries with which Canada is not at war?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I believe that is another question.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister or the government made any protest to the United States about such behaviour?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I have already announced, we have made representations to the United States government in respect of this particular case.

[Translation]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

QUEBEC PROPOSALS FOR AGENDA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Since the Quebec premier has just stated that he must have a strong mandate to enable him to discuss with federal authorities, could the right hon. Prime Minister tell us whether or not Mr. Lesage has informed him of the Quebec claims to be discussed at the next federal-provincial conference?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the agenda for the next federal-provincial conference which is to take place in Victoria in June is still under consideration. We have asked for the views of the various provincial governments as to what might be placed on that agenda, but I am not sure whether all those views have been received, including those of the government to which the hon. member refers.

Perhaps I should point out that this conference is to be a short one of a ceremonial nature, in connection with the 100th anniversary of British Columbia. It is not anticipated that we will have a full agenda for this conference, which will last only two days.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister?

Has the Quebec premier advised the Prime Minister of Canada that he has special points to discuss at the next federal-provincial conference?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall look into this matter and hope to be able to make a statement within a short period of time, regarding the views of the provincial governments, as to what should appear on the agenda of this conference.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEVEN TRUSCOTT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUBMISSION TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has kindly forwarded me a copy of the order in council in the Truscott case setting out the decision of the government, namely that the matter be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada. The supreme court is being asked what it would have done had there been such an appeal, which was in fact denied by one judge, as I recall the circumstances.

In view of the limitations on the supreme court, even taking into consideration the fact that it may hear certain further evidence beyond that already given, does the minister not realize how very difficult, if not impossible, will be the onus resting on the appellant under the circumstances, the law and jurisprudence being what it is?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I took into consideration the representations put forward on the floor of this house by the right hon. gentleman. I might say that we gave meticulous consideration to all representations, and in my humble opinion we reached a conclusion which will meet the purpose, which is, of course, to determine whether Truscott was the victim of a miscarriage of justice. It was in an effort to reach that end that we made this reference to the supreme court.

In view of the fact that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked a question and received a promise on April 19, I think it would be in order for me now to place on the record the form of review. It has now been decided to refer the case to the Supreme Court of Canada pursuant to section 55 of the Supreme Court Act. The pertinent part of the order in council puts this question to the court:

> Had an appeal by Steven Murray Truscott been made to the Supreme Court of Canada as is now permitted by section 597A of the Criminal Code of Canada, what disposition would the court have made of such appeal on a consideration of the existing record and such further evidence as the court, in its discretion, may receive and consider?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, does the Solicitor General not see the difficulty here, that under the rules of the supreme court the limitations on that court are of such a nature as to practically deny any consideration of whether there has been a miscarriage of justice? The suggestion was made that the crown in its wisdom, had it come to the conclusion that there may well have been a miscarriage of justice, could grant a new trial. Would that not have been more appropriate? What were the reasons for the failure to accept that suggestion, since the supreme court has already ruled that there is no appeal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question posed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is argumentative in nature, and I doubt very much if it should be allowed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not want to make it argumentative, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to help in this matter. I have been concerned in these cases myself, and we all know of serious instances of the miscarriage of justice. A policeman in Montreal was acquitted the day before yesterday after being sentenced to be hanged two years ago.

Is the minister in a position to say why the government is placing the matter before the supreme court in this way, by way of consideration similar to the course followed in the Coffin case? What were the reasons why the government would not give consideration to a new trial? Did the government conclude that it was unable to do so on the basis of the evidence that had been offered?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, allow me to say to the right hon. gentleman with the greatest respect that there is considerable difference between the type of reference in this case and that in the Coffin matter. I would point out that this has gone beyond the usual rules relating to appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada. I would with respect draw the attention of the right hon. gentleman—I do not think I need to do so, however—to section 103, I believe it is, of the Supreme Court of Canada Act, which permits that court to make rules to deal with any reference brought before it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Pennell: We took all these matters into consideration. I give the solemn assurance to the house that after long and anxious consideration we deemed that the reference in this form would be the best way to deal with the question.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Solicitor General could say why, if it was possible under section 55 to refer directly to the supreme court the question of the innocence or guilt of Steven Truscott, the matter should not have been referred directly instead of by way of appeal, which is very limited in scope?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize that the question which has been asked by the hon. member for Greenwood does not differ too much from the type of question asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, which I considered to be argumentative to some extent. It does appear to me that we are embarking upon an exchange of views among legal experts in the house. Perhaps we might hear from the hon. member for Kamloops, who wants to ask a supplementary question, but I suggest that his question should not be argumentative.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I think you will find it is not argumentative at all but is addressed to a related factor, which is this. Did the Solicitor General or the government give consideration to the question of providing counsel to argue the matter for Steven Truscott, and paying the expenses of counsel and related expenses of investigation that are necessarily concomitant to the gathering of new evidence, the submitting of new facts and the obtaining of opinion evidence, and so on? Was this considered, and if so what decision was made as to whether the expenses of counsel in this connection should be paid?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that the government will ensure that Mr. Truscott will not be handicapped by lack of funds in putting his case adequately before the court.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do the terms of reference as drawn make it possible for the supreme court to hear any new evidence in the case?

Mr. Pennell: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe the terms of reference speak for themselves.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Can we interpret the answer the minister has just given to the hon. member for Kamloops as an assurance that the legal costs of Truscott, and the costs of assembling the evidence, will be paid by the government?

Mr. Pennell: No request has been made for legal or financial assistance, but I can assure the hon. member that lack of funds will not stand in the way of Mr. Truscott having an adequate opportunity to present his case.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Can we get this pinned down? If a request is made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question has now been asked twice and a reply has been given. I suggest the hon. member should be satisfied.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the wide interest in the order in council which was passed today concerning Steven Truscott would the Solicitor General consider asking, through the Chair, for permission for it to be made an appendix to today's Hansard?

Mr. Pennell: I will be pleased to do so, and I now formally make such a request.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement that the order in council referred to by the Solicitor General be printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of order in council above referred to, see appendix.]

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED CO-ORDINATING AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister report to the house on the proposed transportation authority which would co-ordinate policy in planning transportation agencies?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I know of no such body.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I was merely asking whether he could report to the house on the plans. I would add this question, is it the intention of the minister to reveal these plans when he speaks in Winnipeg tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have no plans to reveal, sir.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—EFFECT OF INCREASE IN TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has recently announced its intention to increase tolls by 10 per cent, and the fact that Mr. Charles Gibbings recently stated the proposed increase in tolls on the great lakes-seaway system would add 1¼ cents to the cost of transporting a bushel of grain, will the government give consideration to refusing this increase?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt if the question is extremely urgent and should be answered immediately. Perhaps the hon. member may give some thought to placing it on the order paper. The urgency of the question is not readily apparent to the Chair.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, of which I gave him notice yesterday. Has it been drawn to the attention of the minister that persons making application to the office of the Civil Service Commission in Toronto for work as census takers this summer have been instructed to apply through their member of parliament or through the local Liberal organization? If so, does the minister approve of the practice?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): A question for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister whether he has abandoned his responsibility for making announcements about extensions of airport runways to one J. R. Caldwell, who is described as being an area director for the Liberal party.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REDUCTION IN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister in view of the absence of both the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister. Has the government arrived at a decision to further reduce the strength of the armed forces by 10 per cent to conform with the realities of recruitment and the present strength?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to discuss that matter with the Minister of National Defence.

INCOME TAX

GERDA MUNSINGER—DEDUCTION OF TAX ON PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister an answer to my national sixty four dollar income tax administrative question, of which I have given him notice?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): As I recall this question, it was one that was raised with respect to the deduction of withholding tax from funds paid to Mrs. Munsinger by the C.B.C. I should like to inform my hon. friend in this regard that section 105 of the income tax regulations dealing with withholding tax for foreigners only applies to services rendered in Canada.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF FILING DEADLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask him whether he has had an opportunity to consider the question I asked him yesterday concerning extending the filing date for income tax returns.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have considered the matter, and in view of the fact that April 30 falls on a Saturday I have decided that personal income tax returns mailed or delivered over the counter up to May 2, that is next Monday, will be accepted as having been filed on time. I have instructed the officers of my department to this effect.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

NOVA SCOTIA—ARREST OF MEMBER OF FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that Corporal Harry Sutherland of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has pleaded guilty to the armed robbery of a bank at Trenton, Nova Scotia, is an investigation being initiated or continued into his possible involvement in armed robberies which have occurred recently in Nova Scotia, especially the one at Stewiacke, Nova Scotia, last year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair hopes that the question is hypothetical.

SPORTS

CANADIAN APPLICATION FOR WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the minister of health is attending the international Olympic committee meeting in Rome, has he anything to report regarding whether Canada has been successful in its bid for the winter games?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but I am expecting a report at any moment.

[Translation]

FINANCE

EFFECT OF POSSIBLE U.S. TAX ON TOURISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

Is the minister able to confirm the assurances given by Mr. Saulnier, last Friday night, to the municipal council of the city of Montreal to the effect that the $100 tourist tax would not be collected in the case of American people coming to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member to put this question on the order paper.

[English]

FISHERIES

LAKE ERIE—REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION OF PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the disastrous drop in the last few days in dockside prices for fresh water fish along the north shore of Lake Erie, can the minister inform the house whether the government is taking any action to stabilize these prices at a level which will provide some profit to these fishermen?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the substantial drop in the price of fresh water fish from Lake Erie was also brought to my attention a few days ago by the hon. member for Essex South and by the manager of the Fisheries Council of Canada. This drop is mainly due to an unusual carryover from last fall. If official representations are made by the fishermen and by the fish processors to the Fisheries Prices Support Board, the matter will be investigated at once.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON COMMONWEALTH MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of external affairs. I asked the minister a question on April 22 in regard to the meeting of the commonwealth representatives concerning Rhodesia, and he said he had had no report at that date. Perhaps he has received a report by now, so may I ask him whether he will tell the house what transpired at the meeting, and whether any suggestion was brought forward at the meeting on which Canada might be acting with regard to imposing sanctions against South Africa and Portugal in order to restrict their dealings with Southern Rhodesia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the meetings of the sanctions committee, by their very nature, of course must remain confidential. However, I may say that the kind of question raised, can only be decided by governments and is not the kind of question which normally forms part of the agenda of the sanctions committee. That body deals only with the operation of directives, and regulations based on those directives which are now in force.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, because although the answer may have been clear to other members of the house, it was not clear to me. In view of the fact that we are going to consider the Export and Import Permits Act in just a few minutes, and as guidance to the house, can the minister inform us whether the government intends to extend to any other country the sanctions now applied under that act to Rhodesia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, that is a highly hypothetical question. If that situation should arise the government will have to examine the facts in the light of whatever circumstances are presented. What my hon. friend is asking the government is, if such and such a situation develops what will be the government's policy?

Mr. Winkler: Nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows that is not a proper question.

Mr. Churchill: A further supplementary question. I want to protect the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who will be dealing with this act in a few minutes. I would rather ask the minister of external affairs whether any action is contemplated under that act than the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who will tell me that he must refer the question to the minister of external affairs.

I now ask the minister again, is any action being contemplated by the government under the Export and Import Permits Act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair would be inclined to support the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his suggestion that the question is hypothetical. In any event the minister has given a reply which, though it may be unsatisfactory to the hon. member, is the reply which he has to accept.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. I inquired the other day about importations from Rhodesia, and I had before me an advertisement regarding Rhodesian canned beef. I asked whether there were importations into Canada of this beef, and I think it was the Prime Minister who said he would look into the matter. That question was not hypothetical. The Secretary of State for External Affairs might now give the answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend is quite right; that was not a hypothetical question, but as far as I can find it was not one that was based on fact.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I have to say about that, Mr. Speaker, is that one can go into any store and buy this beef. So the question was based on facts. I should like the minister to become a little more observant.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi in his capacity as chairman of the committee on privileges and elections. May I ask him when he intends to present the first report of that committee, the decision about which was made some time ago?

Mr. G. Roy McWilliam (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, a request has been made for accommodation for the privileges and elections committee to meet, and when the space is allotted this question can be raised at that time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

FINANCE

REDUCTION IN DEPRECIATION ON AUTOMOBILE EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Has the minister received a telegram from the Association du camionnage de Québec Incorporée, regarding the decrease in depreciation of car equipment, from 30 to 28 per cent, and the 11 per cent tax on the cost of retreading tires?

If so, what was his answer to the telegram?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not very urgent in my opinion. The hon. member could put it on the order paper or discuss it, if he wishes, with the minister.

[English]

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF DEFECTIVE AND UNSAFE AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi asked some questions in relation to defects which may have existed in respect of Canadian produced automobiles, and I undertook, as soon as I got a detailed report, to furnish him with an answer.

In respect to General Motors Corporation cars, certain Chevrolet and Chevelle 1964 and 1965 models built in Canada and the United States were found to have a potential problem in the accelerator linkage sticking. Any vehicles from United States production in Canada or any of Canadian production sold in the United States will be followed up for corrective action, along with the vehicles produced and sold in Canada.

In the case of the Ford Motor Company, the only vehicles which have had defects discovered were produced in the United States. Those produced in the United States and sold in Canada will be subject to the same rectification procedures that are being followed in the United States by the Ford Motor Company.

In so far as Chrysler Corporation is concerned, the vehicles which have been reported defective relate to United States production. Canadian production is of a different design. So far as vehicles produced in the United States and sold in Canada are concerned, the follow-up will be made by the Chrysler Corporation and corrective action taken.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): In view of what the minister has just said, and in view of published reports that the government has a policy with regard to auto safety, when can we expect a statement outlining in some detail the policy of the government in this whole field?

Mr. Drury: I believe the house is aware that at the present moment attempts are being made, in consultation with all the interested parties, to draft an auto vehicle safety code. These efforts are making some progress. There will be a large scale meeting in June at which it is hoped to secure the co-operation not only of the various federal government agencies concerned but also of the provincial governments and the commercial and industrial interests affected.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DISCONTINUANCE OF STEAMSHIP "CANORA" ON WEST COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Canadian National Railways has decided to discontinue operation of the steamship Canora on the west coast, causing unemployment for approximately 50 men, and in view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has now decided to operate its motor vessel on this same service, will the Minister of Transport intercede with the C.N.R. to re-employ the 50 discarded employees on the new vessel now being constructed to replace the Canora?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The only comment I can make about the question is that the minister has noted the representations made by the hon. member. If further action is required I suggest the hon. member place the question on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A question to the Secretary of State. In view of the pending debate on redistribution can the minister assure me that I will have an answer by tomorrow to questions Nos. 202 and 212, which have been on the order paper since January 24? A dog team would have got here twice in the interval.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As I have told the hon. member, these things go from my department to the Chief Electoral Officer, or the Redistribution Commissioner, and then out to the boundaries commission. I presume they come back. But I deny there has been any hold-up in my office. In fact instructions were given that every question was to be answered by the end of the Easter holidays. I know the province of Alberta has a well deserved reputation for efficiency in these matters, and I can only say to the hon. member that I would be happy to join with him as a representative of that province in doing everything I can to get the information he is seeking.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the Secretary of State advise us whether a transcript of the evidence given before the Redistribution Commission during the public hearings will be available to hon. members in time for the coming debate?

Miss LaMarsh: I am not sure. I do not think such a request has been conveyed to me heretofore nor, indeed, do I know whether this material is in existence. But I shall be happy to take it up with the redistribution officer immediately after the orders of the day have been called.

TRADE

KOREA—REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATION OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the intention of the minister and his department to act on the request of the Vancouver Board of Trade and initiate negotiations with the Republic of Korea with a view to arranging a trade agreement with that country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SMOKING—REPORTED INCREASE AMONG SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): My question is intended for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In his absence I might perhaps direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Bearing in mind a report from the department of health to the effect that there has been a marked increase in cigarette smoking among Canadian school children, will the minister tell the house at an early date what is happening to his program which is aimed at curbing such addiction?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will take this matter up with the minister immediately on his return from Rome.

TRANSPORT

DIGBY, N.S.—PROPOSED CAUSEWAY-HARBOUR PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): My question was to have been directed to the Minister of Public Words. I do not see him in his place but I see him toward the back of the chamber near the third row. I wish to make sure he is in his formal position ready to answer this important question, of which I have given him notice. I should like to know whether the minister has received and considered a brief prepared by the government of Nova Scotia on the Petite Passage causeway-harbour project in Digby, Nova Scotia, and, if so, whether he has any plans to convene a meeting of all interested parties immediately in order to explore the feasibility of such a project.

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will not mind if I suggest that the question should be placed on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

ASSISTANCE TO NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Villeneuve asked me a question with regard to the payment of emergency agricultural relief cheques in the province of Quebec. On looking into the matter further I find he may have been referring to a special relief project in the Lake St. John area. In this particular area the cheques representing the federal contribution are being sent out directly by the federal government and not by the provincial government, as is the case under the more general program of emergency agricultural relief.

The cheques are now in the process of being sent out. I thought I should clear the record in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question.

In view of the fact that payments have not yet been made by the federal government while cheques issued by the provincial government have already been received by the farmers, could the minister let us know how long it will be approximately before farmers can receive these payments?

[English]

Mr. Greene: Some of the cheques are going out at the present time. The total payment being made by the federal government in emergency relief to the farmers of this area comes to $989,140. I can assure the hon. member that we shall proceed promptly with the mailing of all the cheques, now that we have the list.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED POSSIBLE STRIKE OF TORONTO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Has he had a report that the meeting which took place this morning between the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the president of the Toronto producers' association has broken up and that a strike is imminent, the president of the C.B.C. having stated that he would not consent to any arbitration and that the decision regarding the removal of the two producers of "This Hour Has Seven Days" is irrevocable?

Further, will the Prime Minister say whether it is the intention of the government to use its good offices, without in any way infringing upon the act which sets up the C.B.C., to assure that there will indeed be arbitration with regard to this matter for the benefit of the Canadian people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have had no report on that particular meeting yet. As far as the latter part of the question is concerned, if the government can use its good offices in any way which will not constitute intervention in the affairs of the C.B.C. it will, of course, be glad to do so.

• (3:20 p.m.)

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND OPERATION FOR THREE YEARS

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-23, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, section 27 of the Export and Import Permits Act now provides that the act will expire on July 31, 1966. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to extend the act for three more years. The act in its present form came into force originally in 1954 to expire in 1957, and was extended in 1957, 1960 and 1963, in each case for another three years.

The act under section 3 provides the authority necessary for control of exports of arms, ammunition and implements of war, and also of atomic energy materials and other strategic materials, in order to ensure that these are not shipped to destinations where their use might be detrimental to the security of Canada or her allies.

The act also provides authority to control the export of materials which become in short supply in order to protect the supply position of Canadian industry. The act provides authority for control of all exports to certain countries listed in an area control list, which includes all countries in the Sino-Soviet bloc.

The act under section 5 provides authority for control of imports of a commodity which is scarce in world markets or subject to intergovernmental allocation. It also provides authority for control of imports of commodities which are under price support in Canada pursuant to acts named in the section. It also provides authority to implement an intergovernmental arrangement or commitment.

The proposed amendment is a simple renewal of the act unchanged in its provisions. These provisions were debated in the Senate on March 29, 1966, during the second reading and discussed in detail in the banking and commerce committee at that time.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the minister has given us a brief outline of the importance of this act and has indicated that the amendment will be simply an extension of the act for a three year period. Under those circumstances the house could assume that this might be done in very short order but, though we may deal with it expeditiously, nevertheless we should take a look at the act because it was not discussed at any great length three years ago.

For those who may be discussing this act three years from now and who have the good sense to look at the Hansard index to find out what was said on this occasion, I shall list for their advantage something I would have appreciated myself on this occasion, namely, certain references which are helpful to a review of the act. I suggest that anyone wishing to make a survey of the act might look back to Hansard of March 16, 1954, page 3065 and following pages, where there is a good indication of the modifications made to the act on that occasion and also a listing of the strategic materials that were then indicated as being prohibited from shipment to various countries of the world.

The second Hansard reference I give is March 5, 1957, starting at page 1903. On that occasion there was extended discussion. The history of the act was given at some length by the then parliamentary secretary, Mr. Dickey, who was followed by Hon. Donald Fleming, then opposition critic of the Department of Trade and Commerce who, at page 1906 and following pages, also gave an extensive review of the act.

The third reference I give is May 17, 1960, page 3963, when the act was again extended for a three year period and was piloted through the house by my parliamentary secretary of that time, Mr. Pallett, with the chief critic from the then opposition being the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith).

In 1963, when the act again came up for renewal, the amendment was passed without debate. There were certain circumstances obtaining at that time which induced us to push through the act without giving it complete consideration. The government house leader of that time, now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), was floundering a little and, as I usually do when the house is in difficulty, I came to his assistance and we passed the act in a few minutes thus helping him out. There was no debate and consequently the 1963 reference will be of no advantage to anyone examining the act in the future.

However, anyone interested in the history of the act will be repaid by glancing at the 1957 debate. I do not intend on this occasion to give an extensive summary of the act. I simply point out that it is six years since it has been discussed and perhaps the house should take a look at it to see how advantageous it is and whether it should be continued in its present form.

In the debate in 1954 Hon. Donald Fleming and Hon. J. M. Macdonnell criticized the government of that day for its avid desire for power. They thought the act was continuing in the hands of the government more power than was desirable. In 1957 the discussion ran in a somewhat similar vein and it was suggested by the opposition of that period, the Conservative party, that possibly the act need not be continued.

In 1960, when the positions had been reversed, the Minister of Public Works, then in opposition, took the stand that perhaps the act was no longer required. So it is obvious that people change their opinions when they cross the floor of the house.

Originally the act was designed to be used in emergencies. It was a carryover from some of the wartime legislation. When it was revised in 1954 the Korean problem was causing quite a bit of difficulty and so the act had a purpose for emergency situations. Then the act was continued after that time to make provision for problems that could arise due to the scarcity of certain commodities, either on the export or import side, and it had an additional, important purpose, to prevent the export of strategic materials to sensitive areas in the world where trouble might break out. In other words, the act prevents the export of arms, ammunition and base metals that might be useful for war purposes.

• (3:30 p.m.)

On the import side it has not been used as extensively as on the export side but it has been used in order to protect agriculture and fisheries in this country on occasions when it appeared that the market was going to be flooded with commodities which were in good supply in Canada and in the hope that the price level for the producer in Canada would be maintained.

When we reach the committee stage of the bill perhaps the minister could provide us with some details with regard to the operation of this act in recent years. On one occasion in 1954 I believe the act was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. I do not suggest that be done on this occasion because that committee has perhaps enough work to do without having an additional bill put in front of it. However, the convenience in doing so is that the officials could appear before that committee to give full information on the operation of the act. Perhaps, however, we can obtain sufficient information today from the minister when we are in the committee stage.

I should like to know how extensively the act is being used at the present time, the total of export permits over the last two years, for example, and similarly the total of import permits for that period, also the type of goods affected on either the export side or the import side. Perhaps the minister might have this information available for us when the time comes.

Then I wish to deal briefly with one other aspect of this act. It was never intended for purposes other than those which I have indicated on the export and on the import side. Recently it has been used for the application of sanctions against Southern Rhodesia. When we were debating the subject of Southern Rhodesia in January and February I dealt at some length with this particular aspect of the matter. I wondered whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) was making use of this act for a purpose which never was intended when the act was introduced and when it was modified over the years. There was no suggestion in any of the debates of the past that this act would be used for the imposition of sanctions.

The imposition of sanctions, of course, is one step closer to the imposition of force and you get into very dangerous waters when that is done. When we were discussing this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs I suggested that the action at that time should have taken the form of presenting to the house a resolution asking for the approval of the action of the government with regard to Southern Rhodesia. Instead of so doing he made use of this act, with the co-operation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), to impose sanctions. As I said, from the history of the act, which I do not wish to review at too great length, it never was intended for that purpose; it was intended to prevent the export of strategic materials to sensitive areas of the world where warfare might break out. Naturally Canada does not wish to be involved in anything of that nature or be a party to assisting any country or any groups who are about to engage or are engaged in warfare. So the limitation on strategic materials, was imposed for a very definite purpose and of course should be maintained.

On the commodity side, in our interest as a world trader we have endeavoured not to place any restraints in the way of our manufacturers and exporters in the shipping of non-strategic materials abroad. On the import side the use of the act up to the present, so far as I am aware, has been only on occasion when there was a really serious threat to producers in this country. Now, however, we have reached a stage where the act is used as a political arm for the purpose of applying sanctions involving a restriction of trade between Canada and Rhodesia, a restriction of trade in order to compel Rhodesia to take some political action of which Canada approves. Canada expresses its approval of that political action by saying in effect to Rhodesia, we will not trade with you any longer; we will cut off the export of goods to you and the import of goods from you in order to cripple your economy, if we can do so, to the point where you will revise the political situation in your country.

I do not know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce can deal with this particular problem, although he has to carry some of the responsibility, and I realize it overlaps into the field of external affairs. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, however, is the person who is responsible to parliament for the application of this act; he is the one who has to sign the export and import permits and supervise the act. At the same time, as Minister of Trade and Commerce he is responsible for the promotion of export and import trade. Therefore he is rather caught in a vise and has to renounce his good offices as a person in favour of expansion of trade to accommodate the Secretary of State for External Affairs who wishes to apply pressure to a country within the commonwealth for purposes to which this government has given consent.

When the Minister of Trade and Commerce replies, I hope he will give us a little advice with regard to this particular problem. When we reach the committee stage I will ask him one or two specific questions. To give him a little warning I should like to ask him now, and he can reply later, whether the extension of our embargo involving the application of sanctions to Southern Rhodesia was discussed with the continuing committee of NATO with whom I believe we are supposed to discuss any alterations in the lists of prohibited articles which come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Trade and Commerce in administering this particular act. Has there been a discussion with the members of NATO with regard to the extension of embargoes under the Export and Import Permits Act or have we just been going it alone?

The other question which emerges is in reference to the statement the minister made that certain action can be taken by way of intergovernmental agreement. The intergovernmental agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada concerning Rhodesia, it seems to me, has been rather carelessly expressed in the letters which were exchanged between the two countries. I am wondering whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce is relying entirely on that or is he now placing some reliance upon the action of the Security Council of the United Nations.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I conclude by saying that I think the Export and Import Permits Act serves a useful purpose when it is restricted to those things for which it was designed, the prevention of the export of strategic materials to sensitive areas of the world, and restricting imports when there is some danger to the producers of this country. I do not think it was ever intended, or should be used, for the imposition of sanctions.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the bill now before us I had thought and hoped that the minister might have taken the opportunity to give the house a reasonably extensive review of the act in view of the fact that, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) has said, it has had no real consideration since 1960. During the interval there has been a considerable turnover of personnel in the house and many members are not familiar with the act or its operation. Although this proposal involves merely an extension of the act, it does bring into review the entire statute and indicates the silly manner in which we proceed with legislation in that we are told the night before that an act of this importance is coming up for review. It is to be hoped that in future we can work out a better timetable so that members will know in advance when matters of this kind are to be brought before the house.

I should also like to say how much I appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, because those of us who have not been in the house in previous years are not necessarily familiar with this act and his résumé has been very helpful. It was the kind of thing I should have expected from the minister. It is not our intention to delay passage of the bill, but before we reach the committee stage I should like to mention certain things about the act which, after reading it, might cause one to wonder. I hope the minister will be prepared either in his reply at this stage or in committee to elaborate considerably on the operation of the act in those areas in which we indicate we are interested.

The act on its surface appears to be very powerful, giving very wide and uncontrolled discretionary powers to the minister. For example, under the terms of section 3 there may be established a list of goods called the export control list. We should like to hear from the minister what goods are on that list. We will also ask him to inform us as to the criteria upon which this list is based and how decisions are made. We should also like to know what countries are involved in relation to this list and what goods are covered both for import and export purposes. In short, we want to satisfy ourselves that this act is not in fact being used as a screen behind which political decisions can be made and carried into effect.

When one looks at sections 7 to 11 he finds that they give great discretionary powers to the minister in respect of the issuing of import and export permits, import certificates and the altering of permits, as well as in many other ways. Again I hope the minister will tell us something about the operation of these sections and indicate what criteria are taken into consideration. Perhaps he will also state whether or not there is any provision for appeal from decisions which he makes under these sections. In short, perhaps he would give us a detailed rundown of the operation of the act.

Once the kind of information I have asked for is before us we can then proceed to a more detailed examination of this bill. At this point this is all we want to say other than to reiterate that we do not want to hold up passage of the bill but rather to look into it a little more closely to see how it has been operating during the last few years.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate will be brief and perhaps it would save time if the minister would answer a question I intend to put to him by merely nodding his head. Having regard to the announcement about individual permits made by the minister on March 1, which will apply in any case to offshore shipments when there is no contract in effect, will shipments to the United States require permits?

Mr. Winters: To what shipments is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Chatterton: I am referring to shipments of copper to the United States and I should like to know whether they require individual permits?

Mr. Winters: Offshore shipments of copper scrap and copper contentrate require individual permits.

Mr. Chatterton: Does that apply to shipments to the United States?

Mr. Winters: Not to the United States, no.

Mr. Chatterton: Thank you. On March 1 the right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked the minister whether the purpose of imposing individual permits was to conserve our own supply and the minister replied, as recorded at page 1942 of Hansard, that was the case. If that is so, how can we conserve the supply for Canadian use when no permit is required for shipment to the United States? I can understand the situation if the purpose of the permit requirement is to avoid shipment to countries in the eastern bloc. However, if the purpose of the requirement of individual permits is to conserve our supply, how can this be achieved without imposing similar restrictions on exports to the United States?

I have been informed by a small copper mining company in British Columbia that they are selling their copper concentrate now on the London exchange at a price between 90 cents and $1.02 per pound. I understand it is being sold on the New York exchange at 44 cents per pound and that this is an artificially depressed price. This particular company had a contract at this time so a permit is not required. But that permit will expire within a short period of time, at which time they could be subjected to the requirements of this act and forced to apply for an individual permit. The company may be told it cannot sell on the London exchange in which case, by virtue of the differential in price between these two exchanges, it stands to lose over $7,500,000 per year.

Perhaps the minister will also indicate during our consideration of this bill in the committee stage what the present copper supply situation is in Canada. Is there a shortage created by the demand in the United States, primarily because of the war in Viet Nam, or is there a shortage caused by industrial development in Canada? I hope to obtain answers to these brief remarks and questions either in the minister's reply or when we reach consideration of the bill in committee.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the point brought to the minister's attention by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) regarding the purposes of this act which I contend has been used in a very illegal way. I refer, of course, to its use in imposing sanctions against the government of Rhodesia.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre pointed out that warnings had been issued in 1954 and again in 1957 that the great powers under this act could be abused. Those warnings were very well founded. Last fall and early this year we had an excellent example of how the power in this act has been misused by the government. As has been pointed out already by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, this government, in particular the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), has used the act to carry on economic warfare against another country simply because we do not like the form of government there or the method that country used to acquire its independence.

It is quite clear that the act was never intended for that purpose. The minister himself just a few moments ago, when setting out and reviewing the purposes of the act, never mentioned anything of this kind. He went to great lengths to show that the act was to be used for the purpose of controlling the export of war and strategic materials to iron curtain countries and controlling the import of goods in order to protect agricultural and fishery groups in Canada, and the like. Finally, at the tail end of his remarks the minister mentioned that the act was used to carry out intergovernmental agreements.

This matter was argued at length during a previous debate in the house on the subject of foreign affairs. A number of members, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and myself in particular, pointed out at that time that there was no legal basis whatsoever for using this act to apply sanctions against the government of Rhodesia. I will not go into the legal arguments again at this point because they are already on record. However, one argument I might mention briefly is the rule of law known as ejusdem generis. This is one of the cardinal rules of administrative law. The minister pointed out the principal purposes of the act and referred to the fact that it is used to carry out intergovernmental agreements. I have referred to the action taken by the government under this act and that matter has already been dealt with at length As I said, the act was certainly not intended to be used for political purposes and waging economic warfare for political reasons against other countries.

This matter has been raised in the house and discussed at length in the press and other places throughout Canada. It is one of considerable public interest and I am astonished that the government did not take this opportunity of suggesting to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) that the act should be amended at this time. If it is the intention of the government to use the act for international political purposes and imposing our will upon other countries with whom we are not at war, although apparently we are engaged in economic war with one country at the moment, I think amendments should have been introduced to make quite clear that this was a purpose of the act.

I am astonished that the government did not bring forward amendments at this time if this is its desire. Certainly parliament has never been given any opportunity of expressing its approval or disapproval of the government's actions against Rhodesia. The government has been very careful to avoid presenting this problem for the approval or disapproval of parliament. Since the government feels so certain that its actions in this regard are right, I am surprised it has not taken this opportunity to give parliament the opportunity to express its view on the matter.

I am amazed that the Department of Trade and Commerce has not seen fit to introduce appropriate amendments to the act at this time. I fully realize that the minister has other things on his mind than international politics as such, which is the job of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. To be perfectly fair, perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce did not think of these things when the act was brought forward for renewal. This appears to be the case in any event because in his statement there was no mention of Rhodesia and the use of this act.

Surely the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs should have consulted each other a little more closely before this bill was introduced so that in the future, if the Secretary of State for External Affairs wishes to carry on economic warfare against a country that does not meet his standards and requirements, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has the responsibility of administering this act and, under present conditions, the highly questionable orders in council, would at least have the opportunity of saying whether he wanted to be the goat in these matters.

The whole purpose of this act has been abused and perverted and I am most astonished that the government, if it wanted to test the approval of parliament in this regard, did not decide to make it quite clear that the act should be used for political purposes and did not recommend to parliament appropriate amendments. When we reach the committee stage we will certainly have a number of other questions to ask the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, the introduction of this bill is an opportunity for me to call, if I may, the attention of the minister to the great hardships besetting the Canadian textile industry.

I observe in the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act that certain rules and regulations as to import permits have been designed to protect agricultural products in Canada. But I am of the opinion—and the minister may enlighten me further on this point—that an effort must be made now or very soon, so that the textile industry may benefit from government protection and assistance.

The minister is certainly aware that a highly important industry is involved, as far as Quebec is concerned. There are textile mills in more than 20 towns in the province of Quebec. Close to 40,000 men and women find employment in them and my own riding, the wonderful county of Sherbrooke, has 12 textile mills.

There is no one in the house ignorant of the fact that, each year, this industry is faced with considerable and gradually increasing problems as a result of imports from Japan, for the past few years from Communist China, and also from the United States and other countries.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Of course, if it must take into account the concept of trade, Canada must also consider selling to foreign countries and accepting goods from them. It is quite simple to deal with the exchange of goods. It is the good old primitive formula of barter.

But what we deplore, Mr. Speaker, is what is happening in the field of textile imports; when we sell mostly Canadian wheat to some countries, they insist on selling us in return goods which they do not sufficiently diversify and thus send us too large quantities of textile products which are harmful to the Canadian industry.

Take, for instance, the case of Communist China to which we have been selling for some years the Canadian wheat it needs, and from which we accept, in return, goods comprising textile products in a proportion of 75 to 80 per cent.

The minister undoubtedly has information he can refer to; he has access to information sources much broader than mine. But that is precisely the fact which we deplore, and I think that the government should not lose sight of that problem in order to ask those countries to set their own export quotas or grant them limited import permits, taking into account a philosophy, a trade concept to the effect that we should not accept too large a quantity of textile products liable to harm the Canadian production.

The problem is difficult to solve. On the one hand, there are the textile companies which are complaining about foreign imports, something they have been doing for some years. On the other hand, those companies are obliged, in order to meet foreign competition, to increase productivity and have their employees work in almost inhuman conditions, I would say, where the employees have to work under a bonus system and with great speed.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member for Sherbrooke, but I take the liberty to remind him of the standing orders of the house dealing with the relevancy of debate, which require that his remarks must be more closely related to the bill under consideration, namely:

An act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

The standing orders do not allow us, at this time, to enter into a debate about the provisions of the act itself, namely the Export and Import Permits Act. Hon. members must limit their remarks, as much as possible, to the renewal or extension of that act for a new period of time.

Of course, the remarks made by the hon. member at this time are interesting, but I am sure he will want to relate them in some way to the subject under discussion now, that is the renewal or extension of the said act.

[Mr. Allard.]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, if I dealt with the point I raised, it is because of the remarks made by previous speakers, namely the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), concerning the various problems he raised.

I realize that when you interrupted me, I was speaking more specifically of internal difficulties of the textile industry, but I was just about to relate them to the problem of exports and imports according to permits granted to exporters. It is obviously a digression, but I was intending to come to a conclusion and draw to the attention of the minister the problems of the textile industry as well as the quantity and the number of import licences granted to Canadian importers. I think that too many permits are granted and that there are not enough restrictions in Canada concerning textile products.

That is why I wanted to draw, very briefly, the attention of the minister to that matter. It is the first time I do so and I can assure the minister that the numerous textile workers as well as the heads of companies—there are now 5,000 unemployed—are very heedful of decisions made by the central government along these lines and of the welfare it can bring to people who suffer and need help.

[English]

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I shall only take a few minutes to say a few words on the subject now before the house. I feel that the minister, being a Nova Scotian, might feel rather hurt if the members from Nova Scotia did not say anything during the discussion of a measure the minister has introduced. Like the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), I was rather disappointed that the minister did not take more time with his opening statement. The usual complaint made by the opposition is that ministers take too much time. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), like all Nova Scotians, is charming and not antagonistic or obnoxious, so I would have liked to hear a lot more from him. I am grateful, however, for what has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) by way of background to the act and to bring us up to date. He went back to 1954. As the hon. member for Danforth said, this was most helpful to those who are new in the house as well as to some members who have been here for some years but who still perhaps do not have all the information they should have about certain legislation. The hon. member for Winnipeg

South Centre drew the attention of the house to the fact that the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) opposed the Export and Import Permits Act in 1960. It is fine to have this information on the record. I had forgotten about that but I recall now that this was the situation.

Since the minister has spent some time away from the house in the ivory tower circle, he is probably not too familiar with the importance of this measure to his own province. I might mention that during the time the previous government was in power, and I have no doubt since although I am not quite sure, steel rails and other commodities were sold to the government of Mexico by Dosco which operates the steel plant at Sydney, Nova Scotia. I recall that on one occasion, through the actions of the minister of trade and commerce of that time and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who was then prime minister, an agreement was signed with the President of Mexico for the purchase of steel rails and other steel commodities.

Someone mentioned that the minister's job is the promotion of trade, and with this I fully agree. I hope the minister will be equally as effective in this portfolio as was the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) when he held it. When the minister replies I should like him to advise us what liaison exists at the moment between the officials of his department and Dosco with regard to the possibility of securing more export orders for the steel industry at Sydney. I am sure that the minister, being a native Nova Scotian and up to date with what is happening in our province, realizes that the situation as to steel is alleged to be rather bad. I hope it is not as bad as it would appear to be according to the newspaper reports one reads. I hope the minister will exert every effort through his department to assist Dosco and thereby the employees of the steel plant at Sydney. I was wondering if any recent meetings had been held between representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce and representatives of Dosco with reference to the possibility of securing more orders.

I can say to the minister that, if we get some good results from him, when the time comes that he decides to contest the leadership of the Liberal party I for one will work hard to get all the Liberal delegates from Nova Scotia attending the national leadership convention to support him. But once he becomes leader of the party we will do our best to defeat him. I am sure we would all be pleased to see the minister in that position. I do not wish to continue these remarks but I should like to remind the minister that we have not forgotten he is a Nova Scotian. We are not forgetting that he is Minister of Trade and Commerce, for as such I am sure there is much he can do to assist the steel industry in Nova Scotia and thereby the workers concerned as well as the economy of the whole province.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. May I remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two remarks I might make in winding up this brief but interesting debate, and may I thank hon. members for their participation and contributions. I found it interesting to listen to the arguments advanced by those who feel that the actions by the government in its program regarding Rhodesia should not appropriately be taken under this statute. I can assure hon. members that this question has been explored by our lawyers who have come to the conclusion that this action does fall within the framework of the statute and so I may say that whatever is being done is being done on a perfectly legal basis.

Some questions were asked about copper. These could perhaps be more appropriately dealt with in committee. If the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton) does not mind, provided he is in the house at the time I will be glad to answer any questions on copper which fall within the purview of this act.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) asked questions about textiles. I am glad to say that the textile industry in Canada is one of the industries which has shown growing efficiency and made great strides in recent years and is now able to stand on its own feet much better than it has for many years. It is competing very effectively both domestically and in world markets.

I am glad to tell the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) that it will be a great pleasure for me to do whatever I can to further the interests of the province of Nova Scotia, both with respect to the exportation of steel or any other products made in that most favoured of all provinces, with the exception perhaps of one constituency in another province.

In recent weeks we have in fact enabled Dosco to ship a substantial order of steel rails through the instrumentality of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. I and officials of the department had a number of meetings with officials of Dosco at that time, all of which, I am sure, were satisfactory to them, and for our part it was a privilege to be of assistance in enabling those transactions to be conducted. I think that those who direct the affairs of Dosco will be able to testify that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation has been of substantial help to them over the years and I hope it will continue to be so in the years ahead.

If there are other questions hon. members would like to ask in committee, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to endeavour to answer them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Duration.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words now we are in committee. The minister relied upon information from the law officers of the crown to the effect that legally the government was within its rights in using this act with regard to Southern Rhodesia. But the point which we were making was that the act was never intended originally, at least up until 1965, for the purpose which has now been attached to it. That was the point we were making.

I still think, despite the opinion of the law officers, that the government should have used a different method when it was breaking new ground in the imposition of sanctions. This is the only time in Canada's history that sanctions have been applied except for wartime, and certainly this particular act was never envisaged for that purpose.

May I relate to the house what the parliamentary secretary of the day, Mr. Dickey, had to say in response to those who were criticizing the government in 1954 for asking for these powers which at that time the members of the opposition thought should be curtailed. As reported at page 3156 of Hansard for March 15, 1954, the parliamentary secretary said:

> The final point made by the hon. member for Greenwood—

[Mr. Winters.]

That was Hon. James Macdonnell.

> —was to ask me whether or not the need for this power has disappeared, and to what extent that meant this power was being retained and re-enacted simply because it is nice to have powers. I can tell him that that is not correct.

Note these words:

> The limited use of those powers is not properly the test of the need of the powers, but it is a test of the manner in which the powers have been used. It indicates, I think, the restraint and the care that have been brought to the exercise of these powers.

Those who were criticizing the government of that day from this side of the house were correct. They were fearful that the government would perhaps use these excessive powers in the wrong way. Constantly when we were talking, as we were in that decade, about excessive powers in the hands of the executive we were assured that, of course, the government of that period would never think of exceeding its powers. However, Mr. Chairman, if I may digress for one sentence, this shows the value of an opposition drawing attention, in the course of debate on legislative items, to the dangers that are inherent in legislation unless the drafting of bills is carefully considered.

Those who spoke against this measure in 1954 were certainly doing a service to their country. What they feared has happened. The government has used this act in a way that was never intended and it has extended immeasurably its powers under the act.

May I make one other reference, in this instance to the debate on May 17, 1960, as reported at page 3964 of Hansard. The present Minister of Public Works was then speaking and in a short paragraph had this to say:

> I think all hon. members will agree that this type of legislation is not the type of legislation which is desirable in our parliamentary system and that, were it not necessary, it should not be brought forward. I think hon. members will also have to agree that world circumstances being what they are today there is not much alternative left but to grant an extension of this arbitrary power given to the government to control exports for certain purposes and to control imports for certain limited purposes set out in the act.

When he spoke on that occasion he saw dangers in this act at a time in 1960 when the world situation was disturbing because of the intensification of the cold war. He reluctantly agreed that the act should be continued in force but he did place emphasis on the limited purposes set out in the act for the control of imports, with which he dealt at some length later in his speech. However, at that time nobody envisaged the use of the act in the way in which it is now being used for the imposition of sanctions and the complete cessation of trade with Southern Rhodesia.

At this stage I want to express my thanks to the minister for a letter he sent me on March 10 in answer to certain questions which I put before him on March 1 when we were considering his estimates. I have received from him a full reply to the questions I asked on that occasion.

• (4.20 p.m.)

Let me summarize the questions and the answers. I asked about the situation with regard to imports from Southern Rhodesia. In three stages the government reached the point at which it excluded all goods of Rhodesian origin. In reply to the question whether Southern Rhodesia had been properly placed on the area control list the answer was, yes. This had been done on December 20, 1965. May I ask the minister in connection with some of these problems whether there has been any evasion of export and import controls with regard to Rhodesia? My second question—I think I will end my consideration of Rhodesia at this point—is this: Is the minister about to use this act in order to pursue a program of economic sanctions against any other country?

Mr. Winters: I am not clear as to the purport of the first part of the question. Would the hon. gentleman mind repeating it?

Mr. Churchill: I was asking whether there had been any evasion of export or import controls with regard to Rhodesia. The Leader of the Opposition indicated there were articles for sale in this country which obviously originated in Rhodesia.

Mr. Winters: I am sorry; I understood the word as "invasion". I heard the exchange between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister earlier this afternoon but I was not aware of the reported evasions. Nor am I aware of any other evasions. There could possibly be some but I am not aware of any. So far as I am concerned our application of controls under this policy with respect to Rhodesia is working.

The second part of the question was whether or not the government intends to use this act to apply sanctions to any other countries. I must say I am not aware of any such intentions at the moment. I am not equivocating. It is just not a matter which has come up for consideration.

Mr. Nesbitt: I gather the minister is relying on the particular section of the act which refers to intergovernmental agreements for the imposition of this economic warfare on Rhodesia. Would the hon. gentleman indicate to us whether the intergovernmental agreement to which I presume he is referring is the agreement between Canada and Great Britain or whether it relates to the resolution passed at the United Nations to which Canada was a party?

Mr. Winters: I am not as fully versed in all the legalistic implications of this statute as the hon. member for Oxford is. But this action falls legally within the framework of that part of the statute which deals with intergovernmental arrangements and it is related to the intergovernmental arrangement between the United Kingdom and Canada respecting the program of exports to and imports from Rhodesia.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have here the order in council. One of my hon. friends has been good enough to pass me a copy. It does refer to the intergovernmental arrangement between Britain and Canada dated November 26, 1965.

As I recall it, when this matter was being discussed on a previous occasion in the house it was requested that further particulars of this intergovernmental arrangement be made available to hon. members. I believe the communications were tabled and, to the best of my memory, rather than constituting an agreement between the governments of Canada and the United Kingdom the correspondence involved a pious expression of hope on the part of the United Kingdom that Canada would fall in line with some kind of arrangement to provide for economic sanctions against Rhodesia. Again, this becomes somewhat legalistic, but if the minister and his colleagues are relying on this section of the act to implement economic sanctions against Rhodesia it seems to me an intergovernmental agreement should be clarified by an exchange of notes or some formal, signed document rather than being, as I recall it, a mere expression of hope that Canada will conform with the wishes of the government of Great Britain.

This is probably one of the principal reasons why a number of members of this house have felt that these actions have, certainly in a technical sense, fallen short of strict legality. Moreover, as my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre has pointed out, it was made perfectly clear when this act was passed in the first place, and in the debates which took place in the house not only then but on later occasions, that these discretionary powers were only to be exercised with great care and in a very limited way. But here we have the government of Canada taking a brand new step on foreign policy, one having nothing to do directly with the Department of Trade and Commerce, in other words, declaring economic warfare against a country because they do not like the method by which it obtained its independence or because they do not like the internal policies of its government and using this particular act as an instrument. I submit it is most improper not only legally but morally for the government to use an act which was clearly to be used in the most limited way for the purpose of carrying out foreign policy, and taking a brand new step in foreign policy at that.

Certainly such a course was never envisaged in all the debates which took place when this measure was up for discussion over the years. I am sorry in a sense that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is at a disadvantage in this respect. This whole matter concerns foreign policy, a field which is not within the particular purview of the hon. gentleman. However, the act which comes under his jurisdiction is being used for other purposes. It is most improper. It is a pity that the hon. gentleman should have to try to answer these questions. Perhaps he is not in a position to reply to some of them. But I am surprised that when this matter was brought up it was not suggested to him that if it was intended to use acts which came under his jurisdiction for other purposes then at least they should be amended so as to give a much more legal basis for the activities proposed.

Mr. Churchill: Has the minister a list of those countries which come under these controls?

Mr. Winters: Yes, I have.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. gentleman read it?

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Winters: Yes, I can give that list. It includes Albania, Bulgaria, China—including Manchuria but excluding Taiwan—Czechoslovakia, Estonia, Germany—Soviet zone only—Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Mongolia, North Korea, North Viet Nam, Poland, Roumania, Sinkiang, Tibet, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and now Southern Rhodesia.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Churchill: Is Southern Rhodesia the only Commonwealth and non-Communist country on that list?

Mr. Winters: I think it is safe to say that the character of the other countries is as mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: I am interested in the shipment abroad of strategic materials from Canada. Has the minister anything at hand which would enlighten the committee with regard to the extent of shipments abroad of strategic materials and the countries to which they are going? Has he the number of permits issued for that purpose?

Mr. Winters: I have a quick rundown of the number of permits issued on an individual basis for all purposes. In 1962 there were 8,246 export permits and 178 import permits. In 1963 there were 8,544 export permits and 60 import permits; in 1964, 9,124 export permits and 74 import permits and in 1965, 8,182 export permits and 196 import permits. I do not have them broken down as to the nature of the commodities covered under those particular permits.

Mr. Churchill: If the minister cannot reply to some of these questions perhaps he will follow the course he adopted in March and write me a letter on them.

Mr. Winters: I would be very glad to do so.

Mr. Churchill: I would like to know what has been shipped abroad from Canada by way of arms and ammunition, and to what countries. My second question is, have machines called by the trade name "Shervic" been exported to Israel?

Mr. Winters: I will get the information, although I am not familiar with that code name or trade name.

Mr. Churchill: To enlighten the minister so that he will not have to search too diligently, it was used a few years ago to conceal the fact that the machine was a Sherman tank without the guns on it and it was described to me as being for agricultural purposes, like a tractor.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Under section 4, for example, in the case of China and the U.S.S.R. with whom we do some trading what are the criteria used by the governor in council in placing countries like these on the area control list? What are the factors the government takes into consideration in making decisions of this type?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I shall have to review that with my colleagues in the government. I am not able to give a clear answer which would satisfy my hon. friend in all respects at this time. Perhaps I can inform myself more fully on this and speak to him.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Perhaps the minister would have the appropriate officials give us some information on the list of goods in the export control list coming under section 3, and with respect to the list of imported goods under section 5.

Mr. Winters: I can give the hon. member some information on that but they are very long lists indeed. Perhaps it would be better if I sent them to the hon. member rather than putting them on Hansard.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): There does not appear to be any provision for laying before parliament the decisions which the governor in council makes under sections 3, 4 and 5. Has any consideration been given to providing some machinery for placing this type of information before parliament since it does not appear to be contained in the annual report which the minister lays before parliament under section 26?

The minister will understand that it is difficult to review the act when we are not able to obtain information. I am not criticizing the minister, because the matter is highly involved and technical, but I think the annual report should give the designated items under these various sections so that we can review the operations of the act when discussing the minister's estimates.

Mr. Winters: Under section 26 there is provision for placing a report before the house. The section reads:

> As soon as practicable after the 31st day of December of each year the minister shall prepare and lay before parliament a report of the operations under this act for that year.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): I have the report for the year ended in 1964 before me but it is of a very general type. It lists the total applications received and the total applications granted. It does not enter into any detail and does not provide sufficient information to make a critical analysis of the act. We could get this information every year by way of questions on the order paper but that would clutter up the order paper with long, detailed questions. The minister might consider the advisability of making this information available by some other method. As has already been mentioned, the act gives him quite extensive powers and it is not inconceivable that it could be used as a screen behind which governments—I do not say this one—could carry out decisions which are not economic at all but are essentially political in character. The official opposition has already made reference to this point in connection with Rhodesia. Although our party agree with the action which the government took in the case of Rhodesia, it is an example of what is really a political decision being carried out under an act which was essentially designed for economic purposes.

Is any consideration being given to a form of appeal under sections 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11? These sections give the minister wide powers to grant exemptions both for export and import purposes, and there do not appear to be any regulations laid down respecting the manner in which he does this. Is there provision for an appeal from his decision in cases where exemptions of this kind are granted?

Mr. Winters: I do not believe there is any formal machinery for appeal but people do appeal occasionally. With respect to the hon. member's previous question, he may know that the lists of goods under control are established by order in council. They are tabled and published in the Canada Gazette and so are a matter of public knowledge.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

• (4:40 p.m.)

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING AUTHORIZED CAPITAL AND BORROWING CAPACITY OF CORPORATION

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Farm Credit Act to increase the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from twenty four million dollars to forty million dollars and thereby to increase the maximum borrowing capacity of the said corporation from six hundred million dollars to one billion dollars.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, as the resolution states it is proposed to amend the Farm Credit Act to provide an additional $16 million capital for the Farm Credit Corporation and to increase the maximum borrowing authority of the corporation, from time to time as required, by a further $400 million. The total capital at present is $24 million and the Minister's authority to lend to the corporation is now limited to $600 million. It is estimated that the $400 million which will be provided by this amendment will be sufficient to meet the needs of farmers for a period of about two and a half years.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, we are pleased to have this increase in the capital and borrowing capacity of the Farm Credit Corporation because the expenses of farmers are higher than ever before in the history of Canada. When we speak about $1 billion in lending capacity in respect of the Farm Credit Corporation we are speaking of something which a few years ago was not applicable. We did not expect that the Farm Credit Corporation would have to have $1 billion available for the many farmers across the country. However, times have changed considerably.

While I was home over the Easter recess I noticed that some of the land which had been sold by farmers had been sold for amounts which nobody ever expected. For instance, an ordinary, good farm comprising half a section of land had been sold for $45,000. I well remember the years when I bought my first half section of land. At that time the price was $5,000 and it was a very high price to pay. So times have changed.

This increase will help place the farmers in a position to avail themselves of larger amounts to buy land through borrowing from the Farm Credit Corporation. But what about the farmer who is starting out, the young farmer who is perhaps not able to take on where the old man left off? He wishes to go on farming the same as his father, his grandfather and others of his family have done in the past. I think there must be some other solution to the problems of the young farmer. As I said yesterday, there is the high cost of farm machinery and the high cost of living. This applies, of course, to every Canadian citizen.

However, I should like to impress the minister with the fact that there is another side to the picture. The farmer needs not only the opportunity to borrow large amounts of money through the Farm Credit Corporation but also must be placed in a position where he can repay the amounts he borrows from the corporation. This applies to all farmers from the west to the east.

[Mr. Greene.]

Again I should like to stress the second point I emphasized yesterday under other circumstances, that is, that the Minister of Agriculture must take steps to improve the income of the farmer so that he will be in a position to be able to repay these loans.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I wish only to add to what the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale already has said. I should like to congratulate the minister for introducing these amendments which improve the lending capacity of the corporation. I think the Farm Credit Corporation has done a tremendous job over the years. I believe most hon. members in all parties are very satisfied with the manner in which the corporation has operated and the co-operation which has been given to farmers making applications. While some applications perhaps have not been accepted too readily in the first instance, the corporation and its officials have gone out of their way to give every possible consideration to applicants who are deserving. I think this reflects great credit on the corporation and originally, of course, on the minister of agriculture of the day who was responsible for setting it up.

There is one thing I should like to recommend to the minister which I think is quite important. I do not know whether this has occurred to the minister or whether, if it has, he has not been able to convince his colleagues, but I wish to suggest not only that the lending capacity of the corporation be increased but also that the ceiling on the amount of the loans be increased. At the present time the maximum amount of a loan is $40,000. In practice, of course, another $14,000 can be borrowed under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. While this is in a different category so to speak and under another administration, nevertheless farmers can obtain up to $54,000 at the present time.

I think these arrangements were very good when they were made but, as has been pointed out by the last speaker, farm operations like other operations in Canada have changed very greatly in the last few years. Certainly in southwestern Ontario, the part of the country from which I come, farming units have increased greatly in size and area for a number of reasons. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by going into these reasons. I am sure hon. members know why farm units have increased in size. There are such things as the use of expensive machinery because of the shortage of farm labour, and so on.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The fact of the matter is that because of the increased size of farming units, particularly dairy farms in southwestern Ontario and eastern Ontario, capital costs have greatly increased. Land value has gone up, the cost of machinery has gone up and, as has been pointed out, there is a tendency for farmers to acquire a greater variety of equipment. Various types of farming operations require larger and more equipment. This is particularly true of the dairy industry for the handling of milk and other products.

I hope the minister can convince his colleagues on the treasury benches that further alterations and changes should be made to the Farm Credit Act so that the size of loans to individual farmers can be increased from $40,000 to perhaps $50,000 or $60,000. This would be very helpful to farmers.

In certain parts of Canada there is a tendency on the part of individuals to get together and operate farms on a partnership basis. I have in mind one recent partnership formed in my own area. Under the terms of this act partnerships are only entitled to the same size loan as an individual farmer. Since there is a growing tendency in Canada toward partnership farming operations—fathers and sons, brothers and even friends—using the same equipment, I suggest that the minister should give consideration to extending the size of loan that the corporation can extend to this type of operation as well as to the individual farmer.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the legislation before us has been anticipated for some time. The proposed increase in the authorized capital of the Farm Credit Corporation from $24 million to $40 million will increase the lending capacity of the corporation and thereby increase the borrowing authorization from $600 million to $1 billion. This is all related to the changes now taking place in the agricultural industry.

The transition that is now taking place in the farming industry is causing an obvious trend toward larger operations. This change in the method or mode of farming has some obviously desirable features but I say with certainty that there are a number of undesirable features as well.

It would not be necessary to increase the amount of loan capital available to the Farm Credit Corporation if we had a better agricultural prices program in this country. Agricultural prices and farm incomes are not as high as they should be in relation to our economy. For this reason I believe it is incumbent upon the government to do something to increase the amount of farm credit available. Farm operators must enlarge the size of their operations in order to achieve a higher economy. Governments at the federal and provincial level have been increasing the amount of credit capital available to farmers and there has been a steady though not alarming increase in debt on the part of farm operators.

Since it is a fact that our agricultural pricing mechanism is deficient and inadequate, we are not in a position to oppose an increase in farm credit. But we certainly want to say that we have some misgivings in this regard because this is a poor substitute for proper pricing and increased income.

The hon. member for Oxford made a plea to the Minister of Agriculture to amend the legislation so as to increase the size of loans available to farm operators. I suggest that a good deal of consideration and study should be given to the possibility of easing the requirements because many small operators are not able to meet them for the purpose of obtaining credit. These are the people who need capital in order to increase their incomes by increasing the size of their operations. I am sure all hon. members who represent farming constituencies realize that the younger generation of farmers are unable to obtain loans from the Farm Credit Corporation because they cannot meet the requirements laid down by the existing legislation.

In addition to the plea made by the hon. member for Oxford, I ask the government to give consideration to the easing of the requirements under the Farm Credit Act. I realize there must be some limitation because if prudence were not exercised the corporation would find itself in a position of extending loans without security and with little likelihood of repayment. This would be just as harmful to the farmers obtaining these loans as to the corporation itself. In conclusion let me say that with certain misgivings we support this proposed legislation because under present circumstances additional farm credit is necessary for a healthy Canadian agricultural picture.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words about the proposed amendments to the Farm Credit Act. I am fully aware of the fact that while this is an important change it is a relatively simple one in that it increases the capital by $16 million, thus authorizing the government to extend the amount of credit available to the Farm Credit Corporation from $600 million to $1 billion. For that reason it may be improper to review all the regulations in respect of the Farm Credit Act.

• (5:00 p.m.)

The minister said that the government anticipates this expansion of the money available to the Farm Credit Corporation will be sufficient for two and a half years. I suggest to him that if the price of land and farm machinery continues to rise as rapidly during the next two and half years as it has in the last two and a half years this extension will not provide the capital required by farmers in the next two and a half years.

I think that perhaps one of the real problems and paradoxes in the extension of farm credit under the Farm Credit Corporation is that every time parliament increases the amount of money available to individual farmers you find there is an almost concurrent or immediately following increase in the price of land. The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale spoke of the very high price, the almost astonishing price I think he said, paid for a farm in his area. This has happened in almost every other part of Canada as well.

I have come to believe that one of the reasons for the increase in the price of land is that very recently the maximum amount available from the Farm Credit Corporation to an individual applicant was increased. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we are partially defeating the purpose of the act in increasing the maximum amount available. I do not believe, however, that the amendment now before us will have this effect because it does not in fact increase the maximum amount available to an individual; it simply increases the over-all amount available to the corporation and will therefore allow them to process and deal with more applications for loans.

I am apprehensive about the suggestion made by the hon. member for Oxford that the time has come again when we should increase the ceiling on individual loans, because I believe that only two years ago there was an increase of 100 per cent from $20,000 to $40,000 under the Farm Credit Act and from $7,500 to $15,000 under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. I do not believe that two years after a 100 per cent increase another increase is necessary. One of the problems that follows these increases and the high prices paid for land and machinery is, of course, that the capital cost, interest charges and other things that a farmer must bear increase substantially.

One of the greatest problems—here I agree with the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Springfield and I believe the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale also mentioned this—is that we need to be even more concerned about finding ways and means of seeing that farmers have an opportunity to repay these loans. I know that an increasing number of well-established farmers are today getting into financial difficulty and have been for the last two or three years because of the so-called cost-price squeeze.

Every time land, capital investment or the price of farm machinery goes up substantially without a corresponding increase in the farmer's receipts, the cost-price squeeze, of course, becomes even more acute. Therefore I am not in full agreement at the moment that the ceiling per individual application should be raised so soon after the last increase which, as I said, was 100 per cent. Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I fully realize that the capital investment for a farm large enough to produce a reasonable standard of living continues to go up and up and up. Therefore we have to bear in mind that it now takes $50,000, $60,000 or $70,000 of capital investment in land, machinery, livestock and so on for a farmer to have sufficient production to provide a reasonably adequate standard of living.

The situation is perhaps not so difficult for well established farmers who have accumulated the necessary capital, but it is extremely difficult for a young farmer to obtain this amount of capital. If the young farmer does not obtain the capital he is unable to obtain the productivity necessary to provide a reasonable standard of living; his net income is not sufficient.

If we refer to the records of the Farm Credit Corporation we find that the regulations applicable to young people who wish to start farming have perhaps been a little too rigid. In this connection I refer to the matter mentioned by the hon. member for Springfield, namely, that some of the security requirements as to assets are perhaps too high and too rigid and do not allow a young farmer to qualify for a loan. I think the end result will perhaps prove that this is so, because in the Farm Credit Corporation annual report for the year ended March 31, 1965, they show an operating loss for that year of only $529,000. The year before it was $1,118,000 and the year before that it was $1,080,000. Therefore the operating loss of the Farm Credit Corporation for the last fiscal year for which statistics are available was cut by about 50 per cent.

There is no explanation for this in the report but I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very small amount of the total amount of money lent by the Farm Credit Corporation and perhaps this in itself is an indication that they are not being sufficiently adventurous, or whatever word may be more suitable, taking into consideration the capabilities of young people who want to farm and are placing too much importance upon the firm or fixed assets they may have. Therefore I would urge the minister, in view of this very low loss, to prevail upon the Farm Credit Corporation to be more lenient, if that is the right word, or perhaps they could pay a little more attention to the qualifications and capabilities of young people who do not have a large amount invested in fixed or capital assets which can be put up as security.

At the outset of my remarks I said that I wanted to say only a few words. Perhaps we have strayed a little from the terms of the amendment, but there are a number of other areas respecting the handling of farm credit that ought to be considered very carefully. Even though I may be slightly out of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to impress upon the minister that we in this part of the house are very concerned about the deteriorating net income of farmers across the country, because from this net income they will have to repay these loans in the future. Certainly we have a responsibilty to look into this question and see whether something can be done so that once the money has been lent there will not be a great many people in difficulty in attempting to pay it back.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Finally, I want to say that there has been an alarming increase in the price of farm machinery. We had a manifestation of the concern in this regard yesterday in the house. I am wondering whether there has not been an increase in the price of farm machinery because the maximum amount available to an individual farmer was raised from $7,500 to $15,000 only a short time ago. I wonder whether one of the first steps the minister could take in connection with this matter would be to have the people responsible for combines investigations look into the situation to ascertain if there have been any agreements made between the various farm machinery companies to raise prices. If there have not been, it seems a little difficult to understand why all of them decided to raise their prices substantially within the last 15 to 18 months. We would hope that there has not been any agreement to raise prices simply because there is more money available. I conclude by saying that I feel the minister has a responsibility to do something to convince farmers across the country that there is some justifiable cause for the very large and significant increase in farm machinery prices which we have noted recently.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I just want to add a few words to support that resolution and point out some problems related to the application of Canadian farm loans.

I know that most civil servants responsible for implementing decisions concerning loans which must be granted to farmers, especially in the Quebec area, are aware of one of the fundamental problems of agriculture as a whole in eastern Quebec, namely the consolidation of farms.

I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the fact that the civil servants who are responsible for the application of farm loans and who already understand the problem should consider helping the farmers who request loans to consolidate various properties liable to ensure economic operations.

In the past, farms were divided to ensure only the survival of the farmers and those living on the farm. Today, it has become necessary to ensure economic operations. Most farms in eastern Quebec have not been enlarged and besides, considering the cost of farm mechanization, it is absolutely possible to make of all our farms agricultural entities and units capable of giving their owners the equivalent of the average income of industrial workers.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Agriculture is able to understand that problem. It is a problem which, under section 96 of our constitution, comes under federal jurisdiction. Its application is, of course, extremely difficult because it is impossible to talk about expropriation, but I sincerely believe that if special consideration were given to farmers anxious to consolidate their farms, to have farms large enough to be economical, we could thus bring a basic solution to the main problems of agriculture in eastern Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Kindt: I have a few points, Mr. Chairman, which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister while the matter of farm credit is before the committee. First, in his view how long will it take before we reach the point when the fund set up under this legislation, which will now amount to a billion dollars, will become a sort of revolving fund? In other words, farmers borrow from the Farm Credit Corporation and each year a certain amount of the money they borrow is paid back. Eventually the farm credit fund should shake down to the point where it is functioning more or less as a revolving fund. When this point is reached it should not be necessary to increase the size of the fund for lending purposes.

The purpose of this bill is to increase the amount of the fund to a billion dollars. I see nothing wrong with that; in fact, I am very much in favour of it. All I am asking is, have the people engaged in the administration of the Farm Credit Act given consideration to the period of time that will be necessary before the funds repaid to the corporation will balance the amount of money lent by the corporation? In other words, the fund would then shake down to a point of equilibrium. I hope that the minister and his officials will provide an answer to that question.

Second, since there is no mention in the resolution that the interest rate of 5 per cent on the first $20,000, which was set in the old act, will be raised, I assume it will remain and that on any amount borrowed at above this figure interest will be charged at thé going rate. I ask the minister if he has any idea what the rate of interest will be on the amount borrowed above $25,000 or $27,000, which if my memory serves me correctly was the amount established in the old act. Has the minister taken any steps to familiarize himself with what this rate will be?

There is one other point in that connection. Because of the recent increase in the cost of farms and the need for capital to purchase additional land to create an economic unit, it is becoming more and more apparent that farmers will have to go over the $27,000 limit, if that was the limit established in the old act. If a farmer does borrow above this limit he will have to pay the going rate of interest. The point I am raising is that the additional interest that will be charged by the Farm Credit Corporation becomes very important to the practical farmer. I shall not hold up the discussion of this resolution any longer.

[Mr. Laflamme.]

• (5:20 p.m.)

I simply wish to say that I think we can see what a sound move it was to set up a farm loan agency and corporation administered by the Minister of Agriculture. It used to be administered by the Department of Finance and I for one spoke against that relationship. I felt all along that it should be under the direction of the Minister of Agriculture and now it is. I hope that its efforts in giving assistance to the farmers will be maximal.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I know the mood of the house is to get this resolution adopted by six o'clock so I am not going to take a great deal of time. I rise to express my complete support for the purposes of the resolution.

I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member of Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale. I always appreciate what he has to say because he is a genuine farmer and knows what he is talking about. Whether or not we disagree over other matters, I always know that he has his feet on the ground.

I was also interested in what the hon. member for Medicine Hat said. You might think he was a chemist but that is not the case. He is a farmer who has made a success of farming and knows what he is talking about. The hon. member for Kootenay West is a farmer also and is very proud to be a life member of the Agricultural Institute of Canada. I wrote my thesis on farm credit before the first world war. I do not know whether or not the minister was born then. I also speak as president of the Canadian Tree Farmers Association which is very interested in this legislation.

This is one of the pieces of legislation for which we must give the former government credit for bringing into the house. I believe in giving credit where it is due and speaking harshly when I feel otherwise.

As I said before, Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in this subject since before the first world war. I have studied the practices used in Sweden, Norway, Britain, France and various other places. The first time I spoke on the need for an improved farm credit arrangement was in the house in 1945. I was very pleased, as I have said, when the former Progressive Conservative government introduced the Farm Credit Corporation legislation to supersede the farm loan act.

Mr. Ricard: The farmers were too.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, that is right, and they have expressed their pleasure in many ways, especially in western Canada.

The Farm Credit Corporation Act was introduced, I understand, largely as a result of the experience gained under the Veterans Land Act administration with respect to supervised credit. It is no use extending credit to people unless they have an opportunity to meet their obligations. Credit can only be extended as long as you have an assured production and a reasonably assured income. That is the other aspect of the question which I hope the minister will deal with in the days ahead.

While I am speaking on this subject I should like to give him credit for what he has done in connection with the price of milk. I have heard from a good many farmers in eastern Canada whom I have come to know in recent years that they appreciate the action taken by the government with respect to stabilizing the price of fluid milk. Anything of that sort helps the rural producer.

At this point I should like to say that I think this corporation is well managed. When the old farm loan act was in operation you could get very few loans if you were living in the interior of British Columbia. I am talking about the east and west Kootenay now. I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay East will back me up in this. I have followed very carefully the management policy in east and west Kootenay since this act has been in operation.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Kootenay East is not even listening.

Mr. Herridge: He is pretending not to but is taking in every word because he will repeat them later. He knows that what I say is right. I receive newspaper accounts of the hon. member's reports to his constituents and he is quite willing to give credit where it is due. He knows that this act has been of great advantage to many farmers in this country and I am sure he is supporting this resolution.

I have travelled from farm to farm and I know something about land values. I do not talk on any question I know nothing about. I am not a lawyer and I do get out of my depth on legal questions, but I have lived all my life on a farm. I know how farming people think, I know their approach to life, and I know that generally speaking they are somewhat conservative, with a small "c". They can be conservative with a small "c" in matters of finance and yet be socialistic in philosophy, which is a combination some people cannot understand.

An hon. Member: Is that what you wrote your thesis on?

Mr. Herridge: No; mine was based on the quite unorthodox practices of those days, which would consider a farmer as being in heaven with an act like this to cover his credit requirements. I have been on farm after farm, Mr. Chairman, and I must give the corporation management credit for a job well done. They have managed with a sympathetic approach to the farmer's needs, problems and requirements so far as loans are concerned, and I am very glad to see that the minister is continuing in the same vein.

Looking now to the future, we are particularly interested in having a policy that meets the needs of the young farmer. Circumstances are changing. Farms are growing larger in area, necessarily so, in order to be farmed efficiently. I might say that in contrast to the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who speaks for these very large farms and for farmers who ride around on huge combines listening to a radio playing while they are driving, I represent farmers who have had to make their living as a result of their acquaintance with the grub hoe, the crosscut saw and the walking plow. These are different methods of farming which you meet in various parts of our country.

I suggest that what we have to consider are the needs of our young people and relate those needs to the efficient family farm unit. Following the second world war many young men left the farms and went to work in industry because the wages were attractive. However, during the last five to seven years I have noticed a drift back to the farm of these young people, in some cases to their parents' farm and to other farms. They are willing to sacrifice certain material advantages so far as wages are concerned for what I call the farming way of life and the stability and other advantages this life brings with it.

I also suggest that the minister should give some consideration to increasing the amount of loans available to sound partnerships which are farming in most cases a larger area than the average individual farmer would farm. Consideration should be given too to loans to family corporations. Quite a number of farmers have found it to their advantage to form a family corporation, pooling their auditing, bookkeeping, income tax and other things. I think provision should be made for loans for farming purposes in respect of the total holding of a corporation. I am not talking of large companies or anything like that but of family corporations which operate family farms. In some cases you have a father and three or four sons who have owned individual farms forming a family corporation which they farm as one unit. That is the sort of thing which should be encouraged, and I trust that amendments will be made to the act in light of the experience which has been gained in recent years.

• (5:30 p.m.)

There are some regional problems which bear mention. It is amazing to see the great differences which can occur in this country between farms a short distance apart. I am speaking of my own district and of Fauquier on the Arrow Lakes where Delicious apples are grown which are nice and red, apples which will win prizes in Great Britain or at fairs across the country. However, 50 miles farther north that variety cannot be grown satisfactorily. Twenty five miles to the south, peaches and grapes can be grown commercially. These regional differences can be very localized and I suggest to the management of the corporation that attention should be paid to them. Management would then be in a position to advise young men beginning to farm, or anxious to extend their farming operations, on the basis of this experience of localized differences affecting varieties of fruit, grain and other crops.

I also suggest there could be greater flexibility in the administration of the act to meet particular circumstances of the kind I have outlined. I agree that the management of the corporation have not acted like bureaucrats but have administered the act sympathetically in the interest of the farmers concerned. But I suggest there could be greater flexibility so as to provide for differing conditions which can be found within a comparatively small area.

Finally, I suggest that the management would be well advised to keep in touch with farmers at the local level, not just address the Canadian Federation of Agriculture at its annual convention of the farmers unions at their annual meetings but have the officials go out to the local farmers institutes and union branches to obtain their co-operation in this respect. I have had experience along these lines and I am sure that if the officials get the co-operation of local people who are able and willing to advise on the circumstances which exist in their own area the corporation would become an even greater success than it is today. I am speaking about participation at the local level.

I mentioned this years ago with respect to the National Housing Act. The officials were afraid to go out into the country because they thought they might get involved in questions of policy. However, in recent years they have been giving talks to farmers institutes and similar organizations. They tell the story; they are not as restricted as they were years ago. Their action has been welcomed by the local organizations and communities concerned. It has been of advantage to the corporation as well as to the advantage of the communities and borrowers directly involved.

That is all I have to say now. I repeat that this act has been well administered and that the officials deserve to be congratulated on what they have done to date.

[Translation]

Mr. Éthier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join the other members of the house with regard to this resolution, in asking for an increase in the amount of money assigned to farm credit which is to be made available to farmers.

I also wish to echo some of the recommendations made by other members to the minister. With regard to my own riding, first of all I wonder if it might not be possibe to reduce the initial payment required by the corporation when it agrees to grant a loan to a young farmer, because it is very difficult today to operate a farm unless one has a working capital of $30,000 to $35,000.

According to the act as it now stands, a young farmer needs $15,000 in cash to set up that type of operation. Farmers very seldom have that much money. And so, we lose a great number of highly qualified farmers who, on the other hand, are not as qualified to enter the labour market. They are denied the opportunity of becoming good farmers

Second, in my riding, loans were refused several times under total loan No. 3. To qualify, the farmer must not be over 45 years of age.

Now, I would ask the minister to bring this fact to the attention of the corporation to determine whether it would not be possible to extend the age limit to 50 years. On account of this, we are losing good farmers who have operated small units for some years, but who, because they are refused a loan to enable them to earn their livelihood, are forced to leave their farms.

Another point I should like to bring to the attention of the minister concerns the maximum which was increased two years ago from $22,500 to $27,500. To my mind, a small increase to $35,000 at 5 per cent interest would be desirable, in view of the recent amendments to the act. As a result, a larger number of farmers could qualify for a loan. I think this is the only way a farmer can obtain money to settle on a farm. Nobody lends money to farmers nowadays, except the Farm Credit Corporation. It is desirable to improve the act so as to enable the majority of farmers to benefit from it.

Aware of the good sense of the Minister of Agriculture—I believe that his riding is similar to my own riding of Glengarry-Prescott and that the problems I am bringing to his attention have already been brought home to him by the farmers of his own riding—I shall rely on him to intervene with the corporation so as to solve these problems satisfactorily.

[English]

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I believe the committee generally is agreed that there should be an increase in the borrowing capacity granted to the Farm Credit Corporation. There is no question about that. I enter this debate to say that I am very pleased this action is being taken.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I will confine my remarks to support for what the hon. member for Oxford has said. In future the minister might well consider increasing the maximum size of the loan. Expressing another opinion, the hon. member for Springfield told us that in his opinion the loan ceiling might be lowered. I believe one important factor was overlooked by those putting forward arguments in favour of both a higher and a lower figure, namely, the, fact that the staff which serves the Farm Credit Corporation is made up of extremely able and dedicated civil servants. This has been shown throughout the years. In other words, regardless of the ceiling the loan has to be based on a good background. Otherwise no loan is made, and that is all there is to it. It does not matter whether the application is well below the ceiling or above it. The field staff take a look at all applications and deal with them promptly and efficiently.

In the Okanagan I had occasion within the last ten days to listen to the manager of the Farm Credit Corporation for the province of British Columbia, as did a number of extraordinarily good orchardists, and we were all exceedingly pleased with the manner in which he explained the corporation, its aims and objectives, and how applications were handled. He satisfied us with his well prepared speech and with the easy and able answers he gave to all questions, no matter how difficult. Incidentally, in that area many of the questions were difficult because many applications have had to be turned down.

The reason I am stressing this is that with the growth of farm units in Canada over the last number of years, with the increased cost of farm machinery, so ably stressed by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, and the resulting increased capital that has to be put into a farm, it may well be necessary for the minister to examine the question of increasing the maximum amount of loans that can be made. The hon. member for Oxford emphasized the dairy industry as one requiring exceedingly large capital to finance it. No doubt this will be pointed out to the minister by his staff.

But once again I would point out that no matter what maximum is fixed, and I believe the present maximum is a fairly good one, the staff of the Farm Credit Corporation are not going to turn all the money loose and say: Farmers, come and get it. They will ask what kind of units farmers have, the purpose for which they require the money, and then with their experience in all fields they will help them.

From its inception the corporation and its method of making loans have been far superior to the old farm loan board. The statute was introduced by a Conservative government and it is one of the better ones we have in Canada.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words to say about the Farm Credit Corporation which was set up by the previous government and which on the whole has worked very well. I am all in favour of increasing the amount of money. This is absolutely necessary in the high cost, high production age in which we are living, with the high cost of buildings, machinery and equipment.

One thing which concerns me is that it appears to be much harder for a small farmer to get a loan than a big farmer. I know a few cases in point. I shall not go into detail on them but one in particular, a dairy farm, seems big enough to me to be able to guarantee the loan sought. The buildings and equipment are good for half the loan and the land without the buildings is almost worth the other half. I wonder whether there is a tendency to go against the small farmer because of his smaller productivity and not take into account the help he receives from his family growing up on his farm.

On big farms there is the labour factor involving the cost of wages but in the particular case I have in mind the farmer does not have to employ any labour at all and so has a terrific advantage. I ask the minister to examine this point. Surely we want to keep our young boys and girls on the farms in rural Canada. Surely we do not want to discriminate against the small operator if his productivity is sound. Mistakes have been made in this regard and I think I can prove the point. A small farmer with a milk contract and family help can have an economic unit.

The milk of human kindness should be showered upon the small farmer. Otherwise he is the fellow for whom we will have to dig into our purses in order to rehabilitate him when he moves off his land. We will have to buy his land when we should be trying to keep him on it.

Mr. Rapp: Surely the minister is going to give a short reply.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, first of all, I wish to thank hon. members who, with their constructive and valuable contributions, have helped me in respect of the suggestions they have made with regard to the administration of the act. On behalf of the officials of the Farm Credit Corporation I also acknowledge the pleasing comments made by members on all sides about the efficiency of their administration. There were one or two specific questions which did not involve policy and which I might answer. Though there were many suggestions in the policy area with which I might personally agree, needless to say questions of policy are a matter of cabinet responsibility.

The question was asked what size the fund would have to be in order to become a self-sufficient revolving one. I believe it was the hon. member for Macleod who asked that question. At the present time 27 per cent of the funds that are available for lending come from repayments by farmers. The rest comes from additional capital such as that which we are providing here. The officials of my department estimate that the fund will become a fully self-sustaining revolving fund when it is in the neighbourhood of $2 billion. I am not actuarially sure of this figure but it is the best estimate my officials can give.

The hon. member for Macleod also asked a question with regard to that part of the repayment bearing an open interest rate rather than the fixed rate, in other words, in relation to the excess above $20,000 under Part II and above $27,500 under Part III. The rate has to be approved by the governor in council and now is approved at 6⅜ per cent which I think is probably under the market in most other areas but certainly is above the 5 per cent paid on the first portion of the loan.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Useful suggestions have been made from all sides of the house. May I say that since my term of office as Minister of Agriculture commenced I certainly have been most fortunate in receiving co-operation from all sides of the house, not on a partisan basis but apparently in all cases because of what hon. members felt was in the best interest of the farming community. I may say this is something which has been most heartwarming and encouraging. Not only in respect of this house where I would expect to find that kind of co-operation but also in working with the provincial departments of agriculture and provincial organizations I may say that universally I have found this same spirit. All persons engaged in public life, both at the political level or at the level of public service, provincially and federally, seem very anxious to work in the best interest of the agricultural community.

At no time have I had any impediment in doing my job because of anyone acting in a partisan rather than a public spirited way on behalf of the farmers. If I do not succeed in doing an adequate or satisfactory job on behalf of the agricultural community, certainly I will have no cause for complaint that it was because of lack of co-operation or lack of good will on the part of persons of other political stamp who are involved in the problems of agriculture. I do wish to thank hon. members not only for their co-operation in respect of this bill but also for the very valuable help and the suggestions I have received from them at all times in respect of agricultural problems.

I was extremely interested to hear suggestions such as that with regard to the partnership aspect and the possibility of increasing the loans in respect of partnerships. I said earlier that family corporations now are eligible for loans. Off the top of my head may I say I really am not familiar with whether the loan is increased by reason of the corporation aspect. To the best of my knowledge I think that while a family corporation is eligible for a loan it is eligible only for the present maximum loan which an individual could obtain.

If I understood it correctly, I think the suggestion made by several hon. members was that partnerships and family corporations should have available to them larger loans because of the number of persons or the number of families involved, the size of the holding and the number of viable agricultural units which would comprise that holding. I shall be very interested to look into this aspect of the matter because I think these are very worth-while suggestions.

I was also very interested to hear of the concern of hon. members with regard to young people going into farming and the availability of more ready capital and the possibility of making farms available to them by means of a lower down payment through greater flexibility in the Farm Credit Corporation. I believe the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott (Mr. Ethier) very forcefully made that point. I think this is a very worth-while matter and one we should look into. I think all of us are somewhat concerned by the fact that the incidence of older people is more prevalent in farming than it is in other fields of economic endeavour in our country. It is very difficult for a young man to get started in farming, possibly by reason of the cost-price squeeze which has been referred to so forcefully by hon. members.

It is possible that young people have not found it too attractive to go into farming in past years. Surely if our farm economy is to be sound we must do everything we can to encourage young people to enter the agricultural sector of our economy. I shall be very pleased to look into this aspect of the suggestion made by hon. members.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Greene thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-171, to amend the Farm Credit Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now, by leave.

Mr. Greene moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Capital.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I just now have the bill before me and I see that it consists of only one clause. Substantially it is the same as the resolution and increases the capital of the corporation to $40 million from the present $24 million. A rough calculation would show that this is an increase of about 70 per cent. This reminds me of a discussion I had last evening concerning other 70 per cent increases. There was the 70 per cent increase in the cost of the pavilion for the performing arts at Expo '67, which the Prime Minister classified as not being inordinately high in the light of construction costs. There also was an increase of about 70 per cent in the bids on the grain elevator at Prince Rupert over the estimate of the cost of that elevator extension, which the minister classified as being inflationary. Because of this he decided it would not be desirable economically to proceed with the grain elevator extension. Last evening he made reference to the Budget and the announcement there to the effect that the construction activities of the federal government would be curtailed by about 10 per cent because of their contribution to inflation.

• (6:00 p.m.)

I agree with the purposes of the bill now before us. The Minister now lauds this bill and urges us to accept it so that by unanimous consent it can be given third reading and passed. I have no objection to that procedure because of the merit of the proposal but I do submit that it is in effect a contribution to the inflationary trend. We will be putting more money into the hands of the people who will borrow under this act, giving them greater purchasing power, which undoubtedly they will use and thereby pumping more money into circulation and contributing to any potential inflation. That is exactly the spectre the minister says is confronting him.

Several things have happened in recent days which I wish to point out. The position taken regarding the extension to the Prince Rupert grain elevator, when compared to the purposes of the present bill, creates an illogical situation. On the one hand the minister is asking us to endorse a bill which will contribute to inflation while on the other he is telling us that he cannot proceed with the extension to the grain elevator because this would contribute to inflation. It seems to me that he cannot have it both ways.

I do not object to the contents of the bill but I do object to the government wearing two coats. The government is acting like Janus, the ancient god after whom a month was named, who had two faces and could look fore and aft at the same time. That is what the government is doing, I submit.

I have taken the opportunity of speaking at this time simply to draw attention to what I consider to be illogical positions advanced by the minister, namely, his position in regard to the bill now before us compared with the position he took last night regarding the extension to the Prince Rupert grain elevator.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I referred last night—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps in the light of the importance of this bill we should not see the clock for a few minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the suggestion advanced by the hon member, that we continue with the business now before us?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

The Deputy Chairman: There does not seem to be unanimous agreement.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think that agreement can be reached if we have some idea as to the length of time required for the passage of this bill.

An hon. Member: Half an hour.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I asked the committee whether there was unanimous consent and it did not appear to be given. In view of that fact, it now is my duty to leave the chair.

An hon. Member: I think there is unanimous consent.

The Deputy Chairman: I ask again whether there is unanimous consent of the committee to proceed with the business now before us?

Mr. Starr: I think unanimous consent can be given if we agree to carry on for another ten minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has now unanimously agreed to proceed with the business before us for another ten minutes.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Skeena on a number of occasions has drawn the minister's attention to the importance of the extension to the Prince Rupert grain elevator. I am sure he must by this time, if not before understand how persistent and persuasive the hon. member for Skeena can be.

Perhaps this whole problem could be settled by the Minister of Agriculture if he could find some clause in the Farm Credit Act whereby the corporation could build this extension. It might be easier for the minister to find such a clause than it would be to persuade the Minister of Finance and his colleagues on the treasury benches to exempt this project from the axe to which he referred last night.

The Minister of Finance is in his seat and I should like to take advantage of the fact and suggest that he could settle this question quickly and relieve the Minister of Agriculture of any embarrassment by announcing to the committee that the blockade in respect of the Prince Rupert elevator will be lifted. I am trying to be helpful by making these suggestions through you, Mr. Chairman, to the two ministers with the hope that this whole matter can be expedited. Perhaps we can have an answer from one or both of them at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been very interested in the minister's replies to the various observations made by hon. members during the debate on the resolution. Before the bill is passed will the minister give consideration to increasing loans available to partnerships when there is a sound basis for doing so? In many cases a number of families are involved in farm communities and I suggest this would be ample reason for increasing the size of loans available. Will the minister also consider providing farm communities with a greater understanding of the act by seeking the co-operation of not only national bodies but local units of various farm producer organizations?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister one question relating to the fears now held in many agricultural areas because of the tight money policy. Can he assure us that there will be no closing down on applications for credit through the Farm Credit Corporation or pressure put on those individuals who wish to borrow money such as has taken place in banking and other lending institutions? Will loans be granted on the same basis in the future as they have been in the past few years?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think the best evidence of the government's intention in this regard is the fact that we have now placed this bill before the house. we have done so to make sure that these loans will be continued. There certainly is no change in the policy of making loans available in the best interests of the agricultural community.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: the hon. member for Trois-Rivières—Trade —shortage of copper in Canada; the hon. member for Kootenay West—Expo '67—refusal of permission to record R.C.M.P. band; the hon. member for Cumberland—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Nova Scotia—arrest of member of force.

• (6:10 p.m.)

It being after six o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we have encroached by some ten minutes upon private members' hour, I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent to carry on with private members' hour until ten minutes past seven?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to continuing private members' hour until 7.10?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker. That has not been the practice in the past and I do not think we should be breaking new ground now.

Mr. Starr: That is entirely wrong, Mr. Speaker, because the same thing occurred yesterday and by unanimous consent we continued private members' hour until 7.25.

Mr. Barnett: That item was a very important resolution introduced by a colleague of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr).

Mr. Stewart: Don't discriminate.

PRIVATE BILLS

BANK OF WESTERN CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. C-111, to incorporate Bank of Western Canada—Mr. Richard—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, some of us are rather disturbed about the incorporation of the proposed bank. In the initial presentation two or three years ago the proponents of the bank engaged in a little misleading propaganda in order to try to convince those who might just look at the surface that the bank would be publicly owned. I do not mean publicly owned in the sense of government ownership but owned by members of the general public as distinct from ownership by corporate entities.

The proponents of the bill exhibited this tendency to propagandize by setting out in the bill of previous years the names of sundry individuals who were listed as shareholders. The names of those individuals covered two pages of the bill introduced at that time. Together with the names of the individuals who were listed as shareholders was a designation of their profession. We find listed in the bill a number of people who were classified as persons from what we might call the ordinary walk of life. Architects, solicitors, a couple of executives, farmers, physicians, a professor and an investment dealer were listed and I think they even had a blacksmith listed at one stage. I shall not read the names and occupations of the individuals listed in the previous bills and classified as the major shareholders except to say there were about 100 of them.

Inasmuch as these names and professions were contained in the first clause of the bill presented to us at that time, I submit it was designed to leave the impression that here was a true people's bank, that not only was it to be a bank dedicated to the advancement of banking interests in western Canada with its headquarters in Winnipeg but it would also be owned and controlled by the common people.

In the bill before us at the present time those who will control the Bank of Western Canada have dropped that subterfuge and list in clause 1 merely the names of a few top flight individuals, namely, James Elliott Coyne, executive; Sinclair McKnight Stevens, solicitor; Maxwell Bruce, one of Her Majesty's counsel, all of the city of Toronto in the province of Ontario. Then there is listed one Edward Rex Plewman Nesbitt, executive, of the city of Winnipeg in the province of Manitoba, and John Leslie Bodie, executive, of the city of Edmonton in the province of Alberta, followed by the words, "together with such persons as become shareholders in the corporation by this act created, are, incorporated under the name Bank of Western Canada hereinafter called 'the Bank.' "

I say that the subterfuge of broad participation by people has been dropped and we see that of the five individuals listed, who incidentally shall be the provisional directors, three come from the city of Toronto, one from Winnipeg and one from Edmonton. The names and occupations of common people have been dropped. I think it is a little more honest to do it this way than was the case previously.

I believe some consideration should be given to the manner in which this bank is effectively owned or controlled. The proceedings of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee which considered the bill and dealt with it in some detail—in fact the detail ranged over the period of three or four sittings—show the extent to which the proposed Bank of Western Canada is owned and controlled by other than common people. I might say that the information was not easy to obtain. I was not on the committee and was not able to attend its hearings, but a reading of the evidence and the information elicited by such individuals as the member for Lapointe, the member for Acadia and others who asked searching questions of the witnesses indicates that it was difficult to obtain full information about the company.

In the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 1 of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee there are extensive references stretching over quite a number of pages which show that the ownership or effective control of the Bank of Western Canada is by way of quite a bit of involvement with other companies. Perhaps I could read briefly from page 14 of the proceedings. Mr. Stevens was giving evidence and pointed out the following with regard to raising the money for the bank:

• (6:20 p.m.)

This money was originally raised in February and March, 1964 and is broken down as follows: first, over 5,000 people placed $6,450,000 in trust with the Canada Permanent Trust Company for future investment in the proposed bank.

One might think 5,000 people would constitute a broadly based ownership of a company such as this. Then he said:

Second, a further 2,000 people put in trust $3,750,000 to be invested by the Wellington Financial Corporation in the proposed bank.

We will have more to say about the Wellington Financial Corporation in a moment.

A further 2,600 people bought shares in Canadian Finance and Investment, which in turn is committed to investing $2,250,000 in the proposed bank.

We will also have more to say about Canadian Finance and Investment in a moment.

I should have mentioned that Wellington is a Toronto based company originally established in Guelph, Ontario, in 1926. The Canadian Finance and Investment is a Winnipeg based company originally established in 1926 in that city. The York Trust and Savings Corporation of Toronto is committed to investing $495,000 in the bank, and the proposed provisional directors of the bank are committed to a further $37,500.

This statement was followed by extensive questioning as will be seen from a perusal of pages 14 to at least 32 and subsequent pages as well. I am just going as far as page 32 because I think the gist of the ownership is shown there. There are some rather involved answers given to questions asked by the hon. member for Lapointe. Finally Mr. Stevens, the witness, answered some of these questions as follows:

> The bank will be owned by four different main groups. The first group is a group which owns shares directly in the bank and are now holding trustee certificates. Now, all together they number a total of about 5,100 odd. The next largest shareholder in the bank will be the Wellington Financial Corporation, which owns approximately 30 per cent of the proposed bank.

We know, as a result of studies made by people concerned about the ownership of corporations, that a 30 per cent ownership of a corporation in the hands of one group or one individual can be used to control rather effectively the operations and activities of that particular company. Here we have the Wellington Financial Corporation, one of the companies which Mr. Stevens said was going to put some money into the bank, owning about 30 per cent of the proposed bank.

Then there were some questions put by the hon. member for Acadia. He asked Mr. Stevens about his connections with Wellington Financial Corporation, about his connections with Canadian Finance and Investments Limited and his connection with York Trust and Savings Corporation. These three corporations are involved in one way or another with the proposed Bank of Western Canada. Mr. Stevens answered these queries by saying he was president of all three corporations. The hon. member for Acadia then went on to ask about another corporation, and I am quoting from page 30 of the evidence:

> What is your connection with British International Financial (Canada) Limited?
>
> Mr. Stevens: I am also president of that company.

There follow extensive questions and answers which eventually elicited the information that the large shareholder, British International Financial (Canada) Limited, through some of the companies it controls, has absolute or effective control of this bank. We find that British International Financial (Canada) Limited will own the Bank of Western Canada directly or indirectly to the extent of almost 50 per cent.

The hon. member for Acadia put this question directly to Mr. Stevens:

> Would I be right in assuming that you would have nearly 50 per cent of the paid in capital of the $13 million in this proposed chartered bank?
>
> Mr. Stevens: You mean in our various companies?
>
> Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes.

Then Mr. Stevens went on to rationalize this by saying:

> At the beginning that was true. As you will recall, it was contemplated in the proposed amendment to the Bank Act that was introduced in the last parliament, and is also referred to in the Porter Commission report, that initially there should be an exception made when a new bank is starting. In other words, while it may be considered desirable to have the share ownership of banks spread around into relatively small holdings and certainly no large block, it is accepted, I believe, that initially some organizational group is likely—and in fact it would be very difficult not to do it otherwise—to have a very dominant block in any new bank that is being formed. Our intention is that while we should start with, say, effective control, in all likelihood it would not be maintained, and the suggested changes in the last Bank Act are quite acceptable to us in the sense that we would divest our holding if asked to do so by the Treasury Board or whoever is in authority. We would also agree not to exercise rights or warrants in this type of thing to maintain our position.

I submit that on the face of it this is not really very acceptable. We all know that the only effective way of preventing the consolidation of ownership or control in the hands of a few is to prohibit it by statute, either directly in the bill currently before us or by way of an amendment ot the Bank Act. This provision should preclude the possibility of any one, single financial group or company being able to control such a corporation. I gather from reading Mr. Stevens' remarks that he really is not in favour of effective control of the Bank of Western Canada. He would like to see a situation prevail in which there was a wide distribution of ownership. He would like to see the Bank of Western Canada owned and controlled by individual shareholders and he would be happy if some authority in government would come along and tell him subsequent to the passage of this measure, if it ever is passed, that is what he has to do.

• (6:30 p.m.)

I believe the situation is not as Mr. Stevens paints it. Mr. Stevens pointed out he was president of British International Financial (Canada) Limited in Toronto which has assets somewhere in the neighbourhood of $90 million. British International Financial (Canada) Limited, either by absolute control or by effective control, is the dominating influence in 21 separate financial institutions. These include Wellington Financial Corporation, York Centre Properties Limited, Cardiff Investments Limited, British International Finance Trust Limited, Timed Investors Limited, Timed Investment Fund Limited, Globe Auto Leasing Limited, Maritime Mortgage and Loan Company, Scarboro Finance Corporation Limited, and so it goes on and on.

I submit that a company president who appears before a committee and says "We do not want control of the Bank of Western Canada" is not telling the full facts concerning his intentions and desires when the company of which he is president owns in many cases 100 per cent and in the great bulk of cases more than 50 per cent of several other companies and has effective control over a few others to the extent of 21 mortgage, loan and finance corporations. He is asking the committee and parliament to accept the incredible, and I for one cannot accept it.

Assuming that Mr. Stevens really felt sincerely that this was a desirable course of action and that he and those who will control the Bank of Western Canada were going to divest themselves of their holdings, there is no guarantee that some other group will not move into the picture in order to be able to bring about effective control of the bank. In fact, in answer to another question by the hon. member for Acadia, reported at page 31 of the proceedings, Mr. Stevens went on to say with respect to ownership and effective control:

> The second thing that is probably more likely to happen is that the ownership being so widely spread, you would quickly find a fight for control and some group, completely unknown to parliament, could potentially come in and take over the bank. In that sense parliament would have no control over who owns the bank.

Then the hon. member for Acadia asked:

> What you are saying is that you are better than an unknown factor.

To which Mr. Stevens graciously replied:

> At least you know us.

I do not know if I am able to differentiate between one type of effective controller and another in the field of banking and finance and trust and loan companies. I think they are all within the classification of what Will Rogers called loan sharks and interest hounds. That is what comes first, not the interests of people.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I want to say at the outset that I have been greatly interested in banks in Canada for a number of years. I have followed the applications of several of the banks which have been before this house and the other place over the last two years. I have become particularly interested in this bank for the reason that it is proposed to call it the Bank of Western Canada, which immediately arouses interest in western Canada.

I am one of those who believe in free enterprise. I believe that in competition with one another under the free enterprise system the greatest savings can be made and the greatest efficiency brought about. I think the same theory holds true with regard to banks. Therefore, basically I am all for more banks in Canada.

On the other hand, as a member of parliament I feel that the right to be granted and to operate a bank charter is a great privilege. I do not think that I or other members of parliament should take our office lightly and grant a charter to anybody who may want to apply for one. It is our duty to examine every applicant and to make certain first of all that he is worthy of the charter, second, that he is capable of carrying it out and, third, that he will be sincere, once he has obtained the charter, in working for the general advantage of Canada. I do not expect him to lose money or to take money out of his own pocket to foster, promote, or continue to promote, a bank of which he holds the charter. But I do believe that in operating a bank in Canada under a charter which has been granted by parliament the operator should work for the general advantage of Canada along with making a profit for himself, though perhaps a limited one.

I believe that a bank charter is something similar to a licence to operate a public utility. It is similar to the right to transport oil or gas across Canada as in the case of Interprovincial Pipe Line or Trans-Canada Pipe Line. They have the charters to move oil or gas across Canada. We have also set up a National Energy Board to make certain that the monopoly we have granted them is controlled and will work for the general advantage of Canada. This is why I examined the proposed application for this charter to the best of my ability in the committee.

I am in no way opposed to the creation of more banks in Canada, but I want to establish first the three principles which I think are important and which I should like to repeat. First of all, the applicants must be worthy. In other words, they must accept the responsibility which this house places upon them with a great deal of care, sincerity and dedication. Second, they must also be capable. In other words, though you and I, Mr.

Chairman, may not be capable of operating a chain of banks across Canada under a charter there are financiers who are capable of doing so. Third, they must be prepared to operate a banking system in Canada which works for the general advantage of Canada, not solely for the general advantage of themselves. These are the three basic principles upon which my questioning was founded and upon which I shall continue to question this particular application.

I am not going to quote from the committee proceedings; I want to deal in generalities. We have an application before us for a bank charter to set up a bank with a capitalization of $25 million. Money has been obtained in trust to the tune of something like $13 million. How has that money been appropriated? Under my criterion that a bank charter should work for the general advantage of Canada, if I alone were granted such a charter I would be more inclined to work for the general advantage of myself because this venture would perhaps be my sole interest. But the general application of my thinking is that the broader based the applicant, the greater the possibility he will continue to work for the advantage of different segments of industry and different parts of the economy of the country. I place a great deal of importance on the fact that such a charter as this should work for the general advantage of Canada and that the applicant should be broadly based, therefore enabling him to work to a greater degree for the general advantage of Canada.

• (6:40 p.m.)

When I was examining this matter initially I was greatly concerned because we were told in committee that the applicants had put up something like $6 million or more to be placed in trust in the event of the charter being awarded and that this amount had been quickly taken up by shareholders in eastern and western Canada, most of them in western Canada. We also found that the greater portion of the $13 million was controlled by finance houses owned or controlled by three individuals in Toronto. I said in the committee and I say again to this house: If 50 per cent of the amount they wanted to raise was quickly taken up by proposed shareholders in this bank, why did they not let out a little more? Why did they not let out 70 per cent? The remaining 30 per cent would still provide for effective control of any company. But they wanted to make sure of absolute control by retaining 51 per cent, 52 per cent or 53 per cent. This raised some doubt in my mind whether these people were prepared to work for the general advantage of Canada or for the general advantage of themselves.

Consider the title of this bank—the Bank of Western Canada. We were told in committee that western Canada is a deposit surplus area. I would not have believed it. I would have thought that we westerners were spending every nickel we get. But the highest banking officials in Canada including a former governor of the Bank of Canada tell us they believe western Canada to be a deposit surplus area. With this in mind we must consider the fact that 53 per cent is to be owned and controlled in the city of Toronto and that something like 20 per cent of that 53 per cent is owned by trust and finance companies in eastern Canada. Then we should ask: Who will benefit? Where is western Canada's deposit surplus likely to go?

I am not a man who is suspicious by nature. I may be a born optimist. But when I link these two things together I have a tendency to become suspicious. It may be said that finance houses and trust companies are institutions of which many people are suspicious to begin with. I do not think I can be classified in that group. But throughout these proceedings I asked questions in an attempt to set aside the fears which were evidently in my mind with regard to the present application. At no time were these fears set aside by the witnesses.

It is well known that in the course of this summer parliament will have to deal with the Bank Act. Consideration of amendments to this legislation has been postponed for two years. Why should this application not wait until the Bank Act has been dealt with. This would clear up the doubt about foreign ownership and about the limitation on the interest rate. We would know how this application would fit into the new Bank Act. We would also know whether or not the applicants are trying to take advantage of the situation in which we find ourselves today in Canada where those granted bank charters may charge interest only up to a maximum rate of 6 per cent. In other words, they may want to get in while the going is good and then, should the maximum committee interest rate be increased to 7 per cent, they would be in a position to take advantage of it.

Mr. Walker: Is the hon. member aware that this bank has expressed a complete willingness to comply with any regulations which might be made consequent upon the revision of the Bank Act?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am aware of that. Statements of that kind were made time and time again in the committee. But remember that more than $6 million has been placed in a position where substantial capital gains, non-taxable gains, can be made depending upon what this parliament does with regard to the Bank Act. Basically we are considering a proposition which would enable three Toronto financiers to make a substantial capital gain depending on the interest rate permitted under the Bank Act say a month from today.

What is the rush? This application has been before parliament for two years. Let us wait another month or month and a half by which time we shall be in a better position to know what we are doing.

I do not believe these people should not make a profit. I believe in making a profit. I know that all the banks now operating in Canada believe in making a profit. They always have from me, and I know this is really their basic interest. But by operating a network of banks across Canada they also work to the advantage of the public generally.

• (6:50 p.m.)

In this application we have to examine whether the intent is to serve the advantage of the public. If that intent is not present then parliament will be making a terrible mistake in granting these people their charter solely because we need more banks in Canada and this is one of the applications for a new bank charter. We may have 25 other applicants next year.

To me a charter to operate a bank is a privilege. It is a privilege to get into the banking business, a privilege we should not grant lightly to operate a monopoly under certain controls and rigid confinement. We must examine whether or not the applicants are worthy and whether or not they are efficient.

From my examination of the efficiency of the applicants, I would say that, if they can operate as many trust and finance companies as they do and remain in business as long as some of these companies have, they must be reasonably efficient and qualify in that respect. But for the present I am not examining them on that basis at all. I am examining whether they are worthy and will work for the general advantage of Canada. They have not proven themselves to me on either point, and these two points are closely linked.

Are these applicants worthy? To prove worthiness they must prove desire and intent. Time and time again I questioned them in the committee. Time and time again I wanted them to say that they believed the banking system in Canada was similar to a public utility but they never did. Time and time again I wanted them to say that they were prepared to let more shareholders in but they said no.

The interesting thing in this case is that from the first time these people applied for a bank charter until this day, instead of showing evidence of where they have dispersed some of their holdings the three people involved gave evidence before the committee which convinced me that they had taken it upon themselves to gobble up more of the outstanding shares being held in trust to establish the bank. They admitted quite frankly that western Canada had quickly bought up the shares released from trust where they had been placed for the establishment of the bank. But if this is so, why did they not release more? Why did they have to keep absolute control? These are questions upon which they have failed to answer fully and conclusively in order to convince me that I should wholeheartedly endorse their application. I want to do so. I want to be on record as supporting more banks in Canada, but I take my job here seriously and I want to examine all applicants to make sure that they wish to work for the general advantage of Canada and not just for themselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Chairman, I only have one question to ask.

The only thing I want to know is whether a private bill, passed by a committee, must be referred back to the house for consideration? What is the use of calling witnesses before committees, hearing their testimonies for days, and then waste the time of members of parliament? I am asking the house, which is master of its own procedure, to vote on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, I was unable to attend the first meeting of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee when it discussed the Bank of Western Canada. However, a perusal of the proceedings of the committee reveals some rather interesting facts and the lack of some other facts.

I am particularly interested in the discussion that was held between Mr. Stevens of the provisional directors of the bank and one of the members of the committee. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had this to say:

> Mr. Stevens, you stated this morning that there were over 5,000 persons who actually control a block of 430,000 shares. There is another block of shares that you control, and as I can see they are the majority. You control the majority of shares in the second block. How many persons does that second block represent?

It is interesting to see the manner in which Mr. Stevens avoided answering that question, even under repeated requestioning. Mr. Stevens said at that point:

> What might be helpful, Mr. Comtois is a chart that has been prepared. At this morning's session it was suggested we might prepare some kind of chart to show how these companies fit together. In the luncheon adjournment we made photostats of a chart which is taken out of the centre page of our British International Annual Report for 1964. If the Chairman wishes, we can circulate these charts now and with the aid of those charts I think I can describe just how these companies fit together.

I have here the chart to which Mr. Stevens referred and it is interesting to see that the companies set forth in it are apparently—Mr. Stevens did not deny this—those which own 51 per cent or more of the stock of the proposed Bank of Western Canada.

We have been told that one of the purposes of organizing this bank was to have a financial institution in western Canada, based in western Canada, owned by people in western Canada and directed by people in western Canada. But what do we find? We find at the head of this chart British International Finance (Canada) Limited, Toronto, with assets of $90 million. Below we have Canadian Finance and Investments Limited. They are in Winnipeg but have only $5 million. Then there is Alberta Fidelity Trust with $5½ million. After that we go back to Toronto to the Wellington Financial Corporation Limited with assets of $68 million; York Centre Properties Limited, Toronto; Cardiff Investments Limited, Toronto; British International Finance Trust Limited, Nassau, Bahamas; Timed Investors Limited, Toronto, and apparently descending from Timed Investors Limited there is Timed Investment Fund Limited, Toronto, with assets of $3 million.

Going back to the other side of the chart we find ourselves in Winnipeg again with the Fort Garry Trust Company, Winnipeg, assets $2 million, and the Bank of Western Canada, Winnipeg, proposed equity $13 million.

Going down to the bottom line we see Canadian First Mortgage Corporation, Toronto, assets $7 million; York Trust and Savings Corporation, Toronto; The Lambton Loan and Investment Company, Sarnia; the Wellington Credit Corporation, Toronto; the Interior Credit Corporation Limited, Toronto; Simcoe Retail Acceptance Limited, Toronto; Wellington Bank of Canada International Limited, Nassau, Bahamas, and it has a child, the Wellington Bank of Canada Limited, also of Nassau, Bahamas; Scarboro Finance Corporation Limited, Toronto; Maritime Mortgage and Loan Company, New Brunswick; Globe Auto Leasing Limited, Toronto, and The Lambton Trust Company Limited, Sarnia.

Obviously this bank is not only going to be directed by three eminent financiers from Toronto but is going to be owned substantially by residents of central Canada, not of western Canada. I have no objection to people of central Canada owning property such as this but I do not think they should masquerade as residents of western Canada devoted to the interests of western Canada. This is one of the things that give me some concern.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being seven o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

• (7:00 p.m.)

INCOME TAX

IMPLEMENTATION OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED KINGDOM

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-154, to implement an agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to taxes on certain classes of income and to implement a supplementary income tax agreement between Canada and Sweden.

Mr. Lambert: In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps we should have a statement from the minister which would be helpful in delineating precisely the terms of what he conceives to be the impact of this agreement. He might indicate any changes or improvements that were made on prior agreements, or conversely areas which are not now covered. I think there are many Canadian holders of British securities who would be very interested in knowing the exact details of what the government of Canada has been able to negotiate in this regard.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, as its title indicates, is to give legislative effect to the recently signed income tax agreements with the United Kingdom and with Sweden. For convenience the bill is divided into two parts, the first dealing with the new agreement with the United Kingdom signed last December, and the second dealing with the supplementary agreement signed last January that amends the agreement signed with Sweden in 1951. In substance the bill is similar to the bills implementing income tax agreements or supplementary income tax agreements between Canada and other countries that have been approved by the house since 1942. Canada now has in force 12 comprehensive income tax agreements—with the United States of America, New Zealand, France, Sweden, Ireland, Denmark, West Germany, the Union of South Africa, the Netherlands, Australia, Finland and Japan.

Part I of the bill approves and gives the force of law to the agreement with the United Kingdom, which is set out in schedule 1. This agreement is considerably less comprehensive than the agreements to which I have just referred, although like them, its object is to avoid double taxation, or to reduce taxation, of the income received by individuals and corporations of one of the countries from sources in the other country. It is an interim agreement limited to four classes of income on which action could be taken pending consideration of the forthcoming report of the Royal Commission on Taxation and appraisal of the consequences for tax agreements of the recent major changes in the British tax system. Since the agreement is of an interim nature it may be terminated by either government giving six months notice, but both governments have expressed the hope that it will be replaced by, or expanded into, a comprehensive agreement as soon as this is feasible.

Hon. members will recall that the former income tax agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom signed in 1946 was terminated in accordance with its terms when Canada gave notice of termination in June 1964. This was after negotiations, held over a three year period with a view to amending the agreement in accordance with Canadian policy, had proved unsuccessful. The main point of difference leading to the termination of the old agreement was the fact that it prevented Canada from imposing any tax on dividends paid by a wholly owned subsidiary in Canada to its parent company in Britain.

The new agreement establishes a general rule, similar to that in other Canadian tax agreements, that all pensions and annuities will be taxable only in the country where the recipient of the pension or annuity is a resident. This differs from the old agreement in which the rule was that pensions paid in respect of British or Canadian governmental or military services could be taxed only in the country of source.

There are exceptions to the new general rule that preserve the position that persons in receipt of such governmental pensions had under the old agreement, if they prefer to retain that position. The provisions of the agreement concerning the tax treatment of recipients of pensions will benefit some 15,000 Canadian residents receiving pensions from United Kingdom sources and some 2,500 recipients of Canadian pensions living in Britain whose financial position has been affected by the termination of the old agreement.

The other classes of income with which the agreement deals are profits of an enterprise earned by a permanent establishment, for example a branch office, profits from the operation of ships or aircraft, and copyright royalties.

The agreement contains the usual rule, adopted by all the members of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, that the industrial or commercial profits of an enterprise of one of the countries shall be taxed in the other country only if the enterprise has a permanent establishment in that other country and only to the extent that they are attributable to that permanent establishment. This exempts a taxpayer of one country from taxation in the other country, if he merely buys goods there. It also protects a taxpayer who only sells goods in the other country through an independent agent or an agent who merely takes orders and does not conclude contracts.

The agreement provides that the profits of an enterprise from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic shall be taxable only where the enterprise is resident. This provision is similar to that in most other agreements.

The agreement provides that copyright royalties and similar payments in respect of the use of literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work, not including royalties for motion picture or television films, shall be exempt from tax in the country of source. Canada exempts such payments to non-residents in its Income Tax Act but, following the termination of the old agreement, Britain has been imposing its standard 41¼ per cent tax on these royalties paid from sources in Britain to Canadian residents. Persons in Canada who receive such royalties will thus obtain relief.

The provisions of the agreement are designed to come into operation on the dates the old agreement ceased to have effect. For Canada this will be January 1, 1965 and taxation years ending in or after 1965. Refunds will be made where taxes contrary to the new agreement have been levied during the period from the date of the termination of the old agreement to the date of the coming into force of the new agreement.

The new agreement will come into force after each contracting government has been notified that all the things that have to be done to give the agreement the force of law in Canada and the United Kingdom respectively have been done. The government of the United Kingdom has notified the government of Canada that it has completed the necessary actions. The agreement will accordingly come into force when the royal assent is given to this bill.

Part II of the bill deals with the supplementary agreement between Canada and Sweden. The purpose of the supplementary agreement is to make several amendments to the income tax agreement between Canada and Sweden signed in 1951. The change of most importance for Canada is the deletion of a provision that prevents a non-resident withholding tax of more than 5 per cent controlled subsidiary company in one of the countries to its parent company in the other. Each country continues to agree not to impose a withholding tax on dividends in excess of 15 per cent. The normal rate imposed by Sweden when there is no tax agreement is 30 per cent. This change will bring the Canada-Sweden agreement into conformity with the announced policy of the Canadian government.

The supplementary agreement will come into force on the date when the exchange of instruments of ratification takes place, and will be effective in Canada for the taxation year 1966 and subsequent taxation years. The effective date for the replacement of the 5 per cent maximum withholding rate by the 15 per cent maximum withholding rate on certain dividends will be April 1, 1966. I am hopeful that the supplementary agreement will enter into force before many more weeks have passed.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that the government of Canada has come forward with this particular bill, because we were getting more and more anguished cries, and I think legitimate ones, from many Canadians who were holding investments in British concerns—and this of course is something which is to be encouraged. Canadians do hold interests in operations abroad, but since 1964 of course they were subject to the penalties of double taxation. This frankly does not enhance our attractiveness to British investment in Canada or to Canadian investment abroad. There certainly is no incentive to Canadian coporations to establish operations in the United Kingdom. Not only does this have an effect on the industrial and business field, but it has an effect on the thousands upon thousands of new Canadians—that is an odd term—of British origin who settled here after world war II. Many of them are veterans and are entitled to service pensions, either for reasons of disability or otherwise, yet they are very seriously penalized. The fact that they could take their pensions and come to Canada under the former tax agreement was one of the major considerations which led them to come here in the first place.

Because Canada was in some difficulty regarding the high rate of withholding tax in relation to British operations in Canada, this agreement was cast aside and allowed to lapse. This came about as one of the unfortunate consequences of the budget of 1963, and some of the things that followed.

I agree that there may be some argument that Canada should not be prepared to enter into a finite agreement pending the Carter commission on taxation, in view of the fact that Britain has also made some rather drastic changes in its structure, and we may expect more; but as an investor I would find it rather difficult to forecast the future, certainly in respect of long-term investments in growth stocks, and I would not be encouraged by the interim nature of this agreement.

By reason of article XI the whole agreement may be terminated by Canada effectively with six months' notice, and by the United Kingdom in a matter of a little more than nine months because of its tax year. Why Britain insists on retaining April 6 as the date on which it collects revenue I do not know, but in my opinion one of the negative aspects is this agreement not being made for a finite period.

With that reservation I earnestly hope that before long the government will have studied the Carter report on taxation and made up its mind on what it intends to do with regard to taxation. I hope there will not be any undue delay either on the part of the government whether this one or one formed by the opposition, in allowing the implementation of the major recommendations of that commission's report. I hope that a finite agreement can be reached expeditiously at that time.

Any further remarks I wish to make can be made more appropriately when we are considering the bill clause by clause. Once again I wish to say that I find the omnibus clauses too all-encompassing. I refer particularly to clause 2(3) which provides that—> —the Minister of National Revenue may make such orders and regulations as are, in his opinion, necessary for the purpose of carrying out the agreement or for giving effect to any of the provisions thereof.

I do not know how many times I have said that I am overly suspicious of such clauses. Administrative regulations which embody matters of policy ought first to be considered by the house, but they often find their way into legislation through a back door. For this reason I return to the point made by the committee on procedure, that there should be a committee of this house to review delegated powers. When the minister creates any regulation under the powers granted to him by clause 2(3) he should be required to come before the parliament to satisfy that body that he has not exceeded his powers or created any regulation the effect of which is retroactive to the authorization of those powers.

I urge the minister to refer this recommendation to his colleagues—because this is one of the more serious aspects that we should consider—so that regulations do not become pseudo-legislation by means of regulatory powers.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

[Mr. Lambert.]

On clause 2—Agreement approved.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think this may be the appropriate time, during our consideration of clause 2, to discuss the articles of schedule I. If the minister has any reason why we should not discuss it now I will defer my remarks. I wish to discuss only two articles about which I want to elicit some explanation from the minister.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Undoubtedly within the next few weeks we will have an opportunity of reading brochures from the Canadian Tax Foundation which may be more critical of this legislation. They should guide us for the future. I want particularly to consider article IV paragraphs (a) and (b). This article deals with related enterprises operating in both the United Kingdom and in Canada, and the definition contained herein refers to "where an enterprise of one of the territories participates directly or indirectly in the management, control or capital of an enterprise of the other territory." If there is a participation of, say 5 per cent—a matter of less than control—what is the degree of participation which will identify that connection between the operations in the two territories? Shall it be just isolated participation? Shall it be a matter of 1 per cent, 10 per cent, 20 per cent, effective control, or what have you?

Also, to what degree under paragraph (b) do the governments in question consider the participation directly or indirectly by, shall we say, the cross-election of directors? In other words, in order to benefit by the experience abroad or to get advice on operations abroad, a Canadian company may elect to its board of directors an experienced resident of the United Kingdom, an industrialist or financier, for example, and the converse situation may also apply. What degree of participation will attract suspicion of, shall we say the non-arms length aspect—I think that is a possible term to be used—in this relationship between the operations in the two countries?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I first of all point out to the hon. gentleman that this is the standard clause that is in all our tax agreements and is identical with the clause in the former agreement with the United Kingdom. So we are not breaking any new ground here. I should have thought that since the purpose is exactly as the hon. gentleman outlines it, namely an effort to be sure that these related companies operate at arm's length, the test must be one of judgment. In other words, the authorities in the two countries watch the operations of companies that appear to be related, and if their relationship is such that they are beginning to juggle their profits from one country to the other, then they can deem that the juggling does not reduce their tax in the country from which the profits have been taken, shall we say illegally.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, you say that the taxing authorities reserve unto themselves to judge whether they shall have the p.e and eat it, too?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I have one or two questions which relate to the schedule, but the schedule appears to be covered by clause 2 of the bill. Does this new agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom cover pension income? I have in mind in particular the case of people who have come here from the United Kingdom and are still drawing their pensions from the United Kingdom. Will this agreement have the effect of relieving such persons from taxes that they now have to pay in the United Kingdom?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman was here when I made my brief remarks on second reading. Perhaps I will be permitted to repeat the substance of them which deals precisely with this point. The general rule established in this new agreement is that all pensions and annuities will be taxable only in the country where the recipient of the pension or annuity is a resident. This differs from the former agreement, but in order to preserve the position of pensioners who might prefer the old rule, they are permitted to do so.

Therefore the general rule laid down by this agreement is that pensions and annuities will be taxable only in the country of residence, but if the old agreement conferred a benefit upon them that is taken away by the application of this new rule, they may retain their former position provided they were in residence in either of the countries.

Mr. Knowles: I have one more question, Mr. Chairman. If the minister tells me that he answered this question while I was out of the chamber, I can only plead that the point gets reached when it is a human desire to go out and have supper. What is the position with regard to the effective date? I have looked at article X of the agreement and think I understand it, but may I put the question this way: If a person is assessed taxation on income from the United Kingdom at the present time, will there be the possibility of that assessment being adjusted after this agreement goes through, in view of what seems to be the effective date in the case of United Kingdom income of April 6, 1965?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I think the short answer is yes.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question about article VIII. Not having the previous agreement with me, I should like to know whether the provisions of article VIII, paragraphs 1 and 2, are the same as existed in the previous agreement. This deals with disclosure of information at the request of the other contracting party. In other words, it is obvious that the two taxing authorities must be able to exchange information with regard to operations in both territories as covered by the agreement. I am glad to see that there is provision that "no information as aforesaid shall be exchanged which would disclose any trade, business, industrial or professional secret or trade process."

Following the changes made in CALURA, information is passed by the Department of National Revenue to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics with regard to operations of Canadian business. What effect has that provision in relation to article VIII? Is this procedure specifically excluded? Would the authorities in Canada who have possession of information with regard to the operations of, say a foreign principal operating in Canada, have the right to pass information which they obtain under the terms of this particular agreement to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, who may have a perfectly legitimate purpose in the future in determining for statistical purposes the size of global operations of companies or subsidiaries, business enterprises, operating in Canada?

It is conceivable that we would like to have this information at some date in the future. It may be that I am engaging in some form of wide hypothesis here, but we do know that under CALURA there is the power and in fact the duty imposed upon the Minister of National Revenue to pass on such information. This was something that I and several of my colleagues, including the late hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, objected to strenuously, when the CALURA statute was amended.

Income Tax

• (7:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: When I was the minister of trade and commerce.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, when the Minister of Finance was then the minister charged with piloting through CALURA amendments. He knows whereof I speak.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this article is not identical with the article in the previous agreement, because the scope of this agreement is much more limited than the agreement it replaces. The precise answer to the first question put by the hon. gentleman, therefore, is that the exchange of information is more limited because this article relates to the exchange of information that is necessary in carrying out the provisions of this agreement. It is not as comprehensive as the former one was.

The second point I should like to make is that the form of this article is in accordance with the recommendations of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. This is based on their model law for tax agreements.

The third point is that the only information that can be exchanged is, first of all, information necessary to the carrying out of the agreement. It is information which is at their disposal under their respective taxation laws in the normal course of administration. I do not believe it would be possible for the taxation authorities to pass on anything that they did not get in the ordinary course of administration of the taxation laws that relate to matters covered by this agreement. I do not really think that the question of CALURA is raised because, under that act, the taxation authorities were passing information along to CALURA. This relates only to the passing of information between the taxation authorities of two countries, information that is necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of this agreement. I suggest to my hon. friend that he is stretching his suspicions almost beyond belief.

Mr. Lambert: Not beyond belief; I do not believe I am necessarily chasing a bogeyman here. With respect, I point out to the minister that the information the tax authorities of this country obtained from business was for the purpose only of the administration of taxation. However, they take that self-same information and pass it on under the terms of CALURA. It will be recalled that under CALURA, as it was originally designed, there was a specified return made for the purpose of that particular act, the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Now, we simply ask for the tax report, plus perhaps some additional imformation, so therefore the Minister of National Revenue of this country is obtaining information during the ordinary course, as is disclosed by this wording, "concerned with the assessment and collection of taxes which are the subject of this agreement".

Farther on there is a reference to what is necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of this agreement. I am raising this particular point as a warning because I rather believe that some of our friends, such as auditors and chartered accountants, may raise it. I hope that I may be wrong, but there is, to my mind, at least, a question. Perhaps experience will show whether I am right or wrong.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to return to the subject matter of article VII. When the hon. member for Edmonton West was speaking during second reading he said that this article relates to pensions and has affected, I suppose, thousands of people in various parts of Canada, certainly in my own part of Canada. The minister gave the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a short answer a moment ago, but I feel this is something on which we should be quite clear, so that if this agreement comes into effect we will be in a position to answer inquiries directed to us, at least up to a point.

I understood the minister to say during the debate on second reading, that this new agreement becomes effective as of the date of the expiration of the former agreement between ourselves and the United Kingdom which lapsed for a period. As I understood him, he said that the pensioners who were resident in either country would have some choice as to whether, in future, they accepted their tax levies under the terms of the old agreement or under the terms of the new agreement. Is that so?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding of the position is that the general rule in the future will be that pensions and annuities are taxable in the country of residence of the pensioner or annuitant. However, pensioners or annuitants who were receiving pensions under the old agreement, when the rule was different, in that the country of the source of these governmental pensions was the taxing authority, will be able to retain their former status if that is more advantageous than their new status. This alternative will not apply in the future to any new pensioners.

Mr. Barnett: Following through on that, as I understand it, certain pensioners have, during the period when the old agreement lapsed, been subject to double taxation. Someone receiving a pension from the United Kingdom had to pay tax there, and then it was taxable income for the purpose of our tax laws. Will such people be reimbursed for the extra taxation that they have paid? For example, will a person who has had tax deducted in the United Kingdom be reimbursed from the United Kingdom or will he be reimbursed his Canadian tax?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding of the position, Mr. Chairman, is that they will be entitled to a refund from the United Kingdom. They should apply to that government for a refund when this new law comes into effect in Canada from January 1, 1965 and in the United Kingdom from April 6, 1965. They will have been overtaxed by the United Kingdom government and should apply to that government for a refund. I am referring to the cases which have been mentioned by the hon. member. Of course, if there are Canadians who happen to be in this group in Canada, then they apply to the Canadian government.

Mr. Barnett: Would a Canadian resident in the United Kingdom who has been taxed in Canada be reimbursed by the Canadian government?

Mr. Sharp: We do not tax pensions at the source in Canada, so no practical problem of that kind arises.

Mr. Knowles: Does that reimbursement which was just discussed go back only to April 6, 1965, or could it go back farther?

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this is a very technical question. Perhaps it would be safer if it were put on the order paper or addressed to me as Minister of Finance, so we can get a precise answer. It depends partly on the kind of pension involved. If it were a governmental pension it might be treated differently from another kind of pension. My general understanding is that it would not have been overtaxed prior to April 6, 1965. However, I hesitate to give that as a general answer because there might be exceptions.

Mr. Knowles: The minister will find in his mail a letter I wrote a few days ago covering a case where both kinds of pension are involved, governmental and non-governmental. I shall await the reply with interest.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter which arises directly under clause 2. It was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West in respect of subclause 3 of that clause and it has been a matter of discussion from time to time in regard to various bills which have been before the house. I must say that I for one found the argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West rather convincing, particularly in respect of the way this paragraph is written, at least as I see it. I would not quarrel with the fact that there must necessarily be room under a bill for the making of regulations, but reflecting upon the argument presented by the hon. member for Edmonton West it does seem to me that one particular phrase in this paragraph is unnecessary. I refer to the words "in his opinion".

I would not quarrel with the idea of granting the Minister of National Revenue the powers to make orders or regulations—and I say the same in respect to the governor in council—such as are necessary for carrying out the purposes of the agreement. But when it comes to our giving blanket authority to a minister to do whatever "in his opinion" may be necessary, it seems to me that this is extending a pretty broad power. If it ever came to the point where the minister was asked whether he had acted in accordance with the act of parliament which had been passed, he would say "Yes, in my opinion I did", as I see it. The way this subclause is phrased, that would end the matter.

It seems to me that apart from any other aspect of the matter this phrase is worthy of some consideration before we pass this bill. In fact, for the purpose of having this matter definitely discussed I would be prepared to move, and I so move:

That sub-clause (3) of clause 2 be amended by deleting from line 16 the words ", in his opinion,".

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, apparently this is an historic clause. It has been in bills to implemenit tax agreements for as long as my officials can remember. Moreover, they cannot recall the clause having been used many times. Certainly I have never heard any complaints that it has been abused.

Personally I would have no objection to the removal of those words, because in any event I think the discretion must lie with the Minister of National Revenue as to whether the orders and regulations which he makes are necessary. I think that the words "in his opinion" are really quite redundant and I do not think much hinges upon them. My only reason for hesitating a little, though I do not think I would hesitate for very long, is that these words are hallowed by history and may have some hidden significance of which I am not aware. However, as far as I am concerned I see no difference in the intent or in the meaning of this clause if the words "in his opinion" were removed.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-149, to provide for the establishment of a science council of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving that the Science Council of Canada bill be read a second time there are some aspects of its intended functions and the operation of the council, as well as other matters, which contribute to an understanding of the purpose wh ch I should like at this time to bring to the attention of the house.

Frequent reference has been made over many years, in the public press and elsewhere, to the amounts of money the government of Canada has provided to support research and development in this country, often enough drawing an unfavourable comparison with relative amounts allocated for a similar purpose by the United States, Great Britain and other countries. I believe it useful to examine past performance briefly, to consider trends and to give some perspective to the position in which we now find ourselves or which may be reasonably anticipated in the years immediately ahead.

[Mr. Sharp.]

• (7:50 p.m.)

In the United States, government expenditures on research and development which were inconsequential at the beginning of this century, expanded slowly until the early 1950's. By 1953 the total amount was about $3 billion a year. At that time the gathering momentum was such that expenditures for this purpose increased by large factors annually until by 1964 the total amounted to some $15 billion a year. At the present time there is strong evidence that a stage of levelling off has been reached and that further expansion will comprise little more than an upward adjustment related to inflation and to the so-called sophistication of equipment. It appears that little or no increase and even a slight reduction—due to completion of major capital installations—is projected for the coming year. The expenditures in the United States represent about 15 per cent of the national budget or approximately 3 per cent of the gross national product. Whether this is the correct, or the ultimate, or the maximum proportion of government funds which should be spent for research and development is a matter for conjecture; but for the present, at least, it seems to be the proportion of resources that the people of the United States are prepared to allocate for this purpose.

In Canada the situation is comparable in form but off-set in time by perhaps 10 to 15 years. Although complete statistics are not available it is well known that in the first quarter of this century the amount spent by government for research and development was exceedingly small indeed. One estimate suggests that by 1939 the total amount was about $7 million a year. During world war II there was a substantial increase and by 1953 the amount had risen to over $100 million, of which some $5 million went to the universities. Canada is now entering the period of rapid growth in this area which was experienced in the United States more than a decade ago. The expenditure in 1964-65 at $330 million is about 4.6 per cent of the federal budget—rather less than one third of the comparable ratio in the United States. All the evidence points to the possibility that within the next ten years the proportion of resources which the people of Canada will have to be prepared to spend on research and development, if we are to extend or even maintain our position in science and technology in the international scene, will be as much as three times what it is at present.

The exact ratio cannot be predicted, of course, but will be determined by circumstances and the outlook, the desires, and the imagination of the people of Canada and their willingness to participate adequately in these great enterprises.

At a recent international conference on science and economy, Dr. Alexander King, Director of Scientific Affairs of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and a long time student of science in public affairs, made the following statement:

> With regard to the place of governments in science, I would say that on the whole the main function of the government is to ensure that the necessary skills are provided, that fundamental research is supported sufficiently and that applied research is encouraged at a level of sophistication so that the total comprehension of a country as to technological future prospects is high.
>
> I would place this need to establish and maintain a comprehensive and high level of scientific awareness as a major government responsibility necessary if cultural life is to be rich and dynamic, and equally necessary for the effective use of the world's store of knowledge through industry, agriculture, health, etc., for the well-being of our societies. Its achievement requires from governments an understanding and wise development of the education system, wise legislation and fiscal policy, the building of institutions which are lively and self-critical so that the innovative spirit be fostered in the country as a whole. The understanding and enlightened action of industry is equally important.

In brief, Dr. King was saying that what really matters in the potential for advancement is the totality of knowledge and the level of comprehension in a country. I am certain that all of us would agree with this modern concept.

That we are in the early stages of a period of rapid growth with perhaps two thirds of the ultimate pattern remaining to be established provides in this country an opportunity and an obligation; an opportunity to develop the kind of pattern which will be truly Canadian and which will in the long run best serve the interest of the country, and an obligation now to examine our resources, our needs, our prospects, and to ensure that as far as possible the steps we take are guided by the concepts associated with such a pattern. This is not an easy task. It will require the effort, the consideration and the thoughtful advice of many people in the professions, in government, in the universities and in the community at large if it is to be effectively undertaken. It is the intention and purpose of the Science Council of Canada to serve as a focus for information and advice, to commission intensive studies, and to develop from these many sources of information and concepts that will be useful to the people of Canada in formulating policies and plans for the future.

In respect of the composition of the council it is the intention that the members of council shall be appointed as individuals, not as representatives, ex officio or otherwise, of any organization or group. It is further proposed that members will be drawn from government service, from industry, and from universities and that they will be people who have a knowledge of some aspect of the world of pure or applied science and have a grasp of the relationship between science and national needs.

In many respects the work of the Science Council will be analagous to that of the Economic Council. One of the functions of the latter is to ascertain the areas of our economy in which growth depends mainly on science and technology and to suggest which of these areas are of foremost importance from an economic standpoint. The Economic Council may also be expected to indicate in broad terms the proportion of our financial, physical and human resources that we as a nation might reasonably devote to research and development—they have indeed already pointed out the importance of expanding substantially the support of education in science.

The Science Council will have the purpose of delineating, again in broad terms, the fields of science and technology that may be expected to contribute most to these economic and social objectives and to indicate how their development can best be organized and supported, as well as where and by whom the resources mentioned can be most effectively employed.

In recent years, the National Research Council has been fully concerned with its university support, laboratory and industrial assistance programs, and has not been significantly involved in advising the government on the activities of other departments and agencies. The government has, of course, not lacked advice. Each department and agency offers advice on its own program but, in the nature of things, is concerned principally with its own efforts. I have discussed this problem with my colleagues in the cabinet, with present and former members of the National Research Council, and more recently with ministers responsible for science in other countries. The creation of the Science Council of Canada, as an independent advisory body with no operational responsibility, seems to offer the most effective solution.

In making this decision and offering the Science Council bill, the government has been greatly encouraged by the favourable response of professional scientific organizations in Canada. Among the societies commending the government on its proposed course are the Royal Society of Canada, the Canadian Council of Professional Engineers, the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada, the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the National Conference of Canada Universities and Colleges, the Chemical Institute of Canada and the Engineering Institute of Canada. I am grateful for this response and for the offers of assistance from many of these organizations.

The Science Council, unlike the National Research Council, the Defence Research Board and other agencies and departments of government, will have no staff, no laboratories and no authority over expenditures other than the amounts allocated for the chairman and for expenses of members when attending meetings of the council.

• (8:00 p.m.)

By utilizing the services of committees, special panels, technical specialists, appropriate government agencies, and industrial, academic, professional and other groups the council will initiate studies in depth, assemble and analyze information, and obtain opinions that will serve as the basis for recommendations and planning. The position of the science council vis-à-vis operating agencies in government, industry and the universities, could perhaps be clarified by pointing out that the council will be concerned with policy and planning for science and technology in Canada, whereas the agencies' concern is with policy and planning in science and technology—two different kinds of activity.

In Canada, as in other countries, because the money provided by the central government represents much the largest component of the total amount spent on research and development, the balance of distribution of government funds among the government's own laboratories, industrial organizations, universities, and of allocation to particular areas of science and technology exerts a most important influence on the scope and character of the entire community of science and technology in the country. Unless careful thought is given beforehand it is all too easy to drift into a situation where there is an uneven or unhealthy emphasis on one segment of science, or in one geographic area, or in one type of organization. Such an imbalance, once created, is almost impossible to correct. In this important matter the Science Council will be expected to develop principles that will assist the government in effective allocation of its resources.

As the success of any programs or plans that may be devised will inevitably depend upon there being available a sufficient number of intelligent and competent people, with adequate training and skill in science and technology, a prime objective of the Science Council will be to study the needs, the numbers and the training programs that will be required. It has been stated that in the United States some 35 per cent of all professionally trained scientists and engineers are engaged in research and development: the comparable figure for Canada is in the order of 15 per cent. This is but another measure of the relative importance attached to this sphere of enterprise at the present time, and another indication of the possible magnitude of growth in this country.

Our real objective must be, in the fields of science, in medicine, engineering, industry, the universities, to provide the exciting and challenging opportunities in the broad spectrum of science that will not only retain our best minds but induce many of those who have left to return, and thus reverse the outward flow of Canadian scientific and technical manpower.

In order that the people of Canada, and of other countries, may be kept informed of its findings, projections, and recommendations, the Science Council, upon the instruction of the minister to whom it reports, will publish statements, bulletins, and comprehensive reports. It is anticipated that this will provide the public with a factual basis on which to judge the prospect of science and technology and to make personal and corporate plans for the years ahead.

Although the council itself will have no staff, it is proposed that the science secretariat in the Privy Council office will have the responsibility of assembling and analysing information and preparing briefs and other studies for consideration by the council. The secretariat will provide professional and administrative assistance for the council, will prepare reports and undertake day to day services for the council that will ensure continuing and active relations with appropriate government agencies and with industrial, professional and other groups who may be asked for, or who may volunteer advice, assistance and information.

Provision will be made in the Privy Council office vote for general administration for the costs of operating the council, including remuneration of the chairman, travelling expenses of members, salaries of secretarial personnel, fees of consultants, and the expenses of conducting special studies and preparing reports.

The government believes that the Science Council of Canada will be in a position to perform essential and especially useful functions in assessing Canada's scientific and technological resources, requirements and potentialities. It is believed that the proposed structure and composition of the council are sound, that the duties assigned are appropriate and sufficiently comprehensive, and the objectives realistic.

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill to establish the Science Council of Canada I would like to say at once that it has my hearty approval, and I think that of all members of the house. However I am somewhat disturbed by one thing that the minister has emphasized in his careful and thoughtful speech, namely that the council will have no power. It will be purely a recommending body, but I hope the recommendations it makes will receive most careful consideration by the government. If they do not, then I am afraid it will be a quite useless body.

Like many others I have been greatly distressed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), after mentioning this proposal in two throne speeches, has taken so long to get it before parliament. Surely he must know how important this type of legislation is to Canada's future.

In society as it exists today the need for research is very evident. It is not only evident, it is essential if this country is to maintain and improve its industrial output and, of course, its standard of living. It is essential if we are to keep in the forefront of medical progress and transmit research developments into a better life for all Canadians.

I hope, and I trust my hope is not misplaced, that this council will be a factor in seeing that research in all fields receives more money. I hope too that the council will have the sympathetic ear of the Prime Minister and the cabinet. Unless it has it will be, as I say, useless.

We know there is an enormous demand for funds for research projects from every university. They know the necessity facing our country more clearly than perhaps we in this house do. Undoubtedly there would be similar demands from industry if it felt that there was any prospect of getting aid.

All research has been squeezed for funds. In consequence of this shortage of money and the second grade position that research has had we have lost, through what is commonly called the brain drain, many scientific people whom we could ill afford to lose.

The minister has quoted figures to show that in the United States something like 36 per cent of graduates are doing research, while in this country the percentage is around 15 per cent. That is much too small. Of course, he went on to point out that we are approximately 10 years behind the United States. I hope, as does he, that we can close this gap, but it is going to cost a good deal of money to do it.

Recently United States authorities provided figures which show that in a two year period from June 1963 to June 1965, of the more than 100,000 Canadians who emigrated to the United States, somewhat more than 50,000 were wage earners. Among these wage earners were 1,765 engineers and scientists. There were 1,187 technicians, 163 industrial designers, 258 university professors, 820 physicians and surgeons, 725 accountants and auditors, and 2,040 trained nurses. I think that is terrible and I am sure the minister will agree.

We cannot afford to lose these people, not only because they are our best skilled and potentially valuable people but because they indicate a heavy financial loss to us. It has been estimated that one such person has cost the state $10,000 to educate, and from this it can be seen that on the 1,765 engineers alone we lost $17 million.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Today we are spending something like 1 per cent of our gross national product on research and development. The United States is spending more than 3 per cent for this, while countries like Belgium and France spend more than 1 per cent. We are not spending nearly enough. It is far too little to produce the result we want. Of course, as a scientist has put it, science is in its adolescence in Canada. He goes on to say that it will not reach maturity for another ten years. David Spurgeon in an article in the Globe and Mail of Saturday, March 19, pointed out that in 1925 the National Research Council's expenditures were $139,000, while in 1965 they were $61 million. Naturally this leads to growing pains. We all hope that this new Science Council will help to eliminate some of these pains. It should, and I sincerely hope will, direct money to the proper research projects. It should, and I hope will, stimulate the government to largely increase its support for research.

While I do not think that any particular phase of research merits much more help than that given to any other, it might be worth while to examine one branch more exhaustively; let us pick medical research for this. This is one branch that admittedly does need help, especially since we are preparing to introduce medicare in the near future. I previously stated that Canada lost 820 physicians and surgeons in two years. Since our universities graduate approximately 1,000 of these people each year, we lost 40 per cent of them to the United States. It is no wonder we lost them since the Canadian government's aid to medical research in the past year was only about $15 million; this is about 75 cents for every Canadian. Aid from private sources and $1½ million from the United States National Institute of Health added about another $5 million to this. This does not stand comparison with the United States where the National Institute spent $1,072 million on medical research or $5.35 per capita.

The Hall report gives us a good indication why our doctors go to the United States. It tells us that the Canadian doctor who is 30 years of age and holds an M.D. and a Ph.D. is able to get a research post in the United States which will pay him $15,000 a year and give him good facilities. I hope we notice that it says "give him good facilities". If he stays in Canada he likely becomes a lecturer at a Canadian university at a salary of $7,500 without many of the facilities he would have had in the United States.

John Cowan in an article in Commentator, which he called "Brain Drain—Nobody's Fault But Ours", said that only 67 per cent of applications for grants in aid of research were approved by the Medical Research Council. He considers this rejection as dangerously high. He was most disturbed by the fact that the more expensive projects which tended to be more imaginative and to take off into new fields were most likely to be rejected. He thought this tended to create an attitude on the part of the scientists to, in Mr. Cowan's words "apply for only small things, do not try for anything new and risky, stick to good conservative research techiniques, and you will get what you apply for."

The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 19, 1966 pointed out that last January some 400 medical teachers and researchers forecast for the Prime Minister the financial aid which they thought would be needed in the next five years just to maintain present standards of medical practice. I quote from the article in the Star-Phoenix:

> New hospitals and equipment would cost about $150,000,000; staffs of medical schools and hospitals would have to be doubled in teaching and research.
>
> Research, administered by the Medical Research Council, would have to be doubled from $21,500,000 in 1965-66 to $87,100,000 by 1969-70, with Ottawa providing $80,000,000 of that amount. In addition, universities must contribute $15,000,000 annually or four times their present contributions.
>
> So a manpower shortage in medical research, teaching, and practitioners is facing us. Thus far our medical personnel requirements are being supplemented by the British Isles, Europe and Asia, but as those countries experience a fall-short, they will keep their doctors at home.
>
> Thus we may find that Canada has a national medical care plan, and the provinces have their plans administered on compulsory and voluntary bases according to the respective government policies. Unless the doctors are available to serve the people, the medical care plans lose their significance, because they are immobilized. Among the priorities we hear about, the problem of medical research, teaching, and supply of doctors, should be moved to the top of the list.

Since, then, the Science Council should be one more factor that would help us to enlarge research, it has my unqualified endorsement. More than that, not only do we need to keep the men who can do the research for us, but we need to see that these men get the space and the equipment which will enable them to do a first rate job, and which of course will keep them here in Canada.

As Dr. D. V. Bates, assistant dean for graduate studies in research at McGill University's medical faculty said—and I quote from the Ottawa Journal of January 23, 1965:

> "We can't bring scientists and show them empty floor space. How can we recruit good men? They can't work without tools."
>
> Dr. Bates said in an interview the Canadian government has said that "no mechanism exists" for capital grants to universities. He was in Toronto to attend the Canadian Society of Clinical Investigators convention.
>
> He named McGill, Dalhousie, University of British Columbia and the University of Western Ontario as the four schools. He said $4,000,000 is needed to equip the new buildings.

Lest you think I have devoted too much emphasis to a discussion of medical research, let me assure you that such was not my intention. All phases of research in chemistry, physics, the biological sciences, mechanics, and the humanities—especially in teaching —require massive doses of money with some solid assurance that programs can be set up and carried through to a conclusion. To emphasize this may I quote from an article in the magazine Contemporary, an organ of St. Francis Xavier University, published on March 15, 1966:

> Only a bold, imaginative and massive program of government-financed scientific research can save Canada from early and certain defeat in economic competition with the other industrial powers of the world.
>
> It is an urgent matter of national security, said Dr. E. M. Clark, head of the physics department of St. Francis Xavier University and one of North America's leading physicists. Canada, he said should be spending an additional $500,000,000 on crash research programs in her universities.

He went on to say:

> "We are spending huge sums on Canada's military forces in Europe...In the long run, however, the real threat to Canada is not a military but an economic one. Our scientific research should be getting at least as much money as our air force wing in Europe."

I would like to say here that I agree with him wholeheartedly. In fact that might be a good place to get the money.

> "I think we can safely say that the military situation in the world today is stabilizing", said Dr. Clarke. "But the economic war is rapidly sharpening, and in this field Canada is falling behind.
>
> "Countries like Japan and Russia are making steady inroads into world markets for industrial goods. China will soon be a new and perhaps even greater threat. And much closer to home, of course, is the U.S.A. All of these countries are expanding their industrial plant at a much faster rate than Canada. And they are able to do it because they are spending far, far more money on research."

• (8:20 p.m.)

Lest one think that Dr. Clarke holds this opinion alone I would like to direct your attention to what the brief submitted to the Commission on the Financing of Higher Education by the Association of Graduate Schools says on the subject of graduate studies. On page 11 of this brief it is pointed out that the total annual current expenditure for graduate studies in the humanities, the social sciences, sciences and engineering should be of the order of $90 million in 1964-65—certainly we are far short of that—$380 million in 1970-71, and $600 million in 1975-76. In addition to this there should be capital expenditures of $488 million for the period 1964-65 to 1970-71, and $353 million for the period 1970-71 to 1975-76.

To put it another way, the association is convinced that extremely heavy investments by the nation—some nine to ten fold higher than in the past—should take place over the next 11 years. I know that the Budget made some attempt to stimulate assistance for research, but this attempt is problematical of success and certainly will not fill the need.

I re-emphasize what I said before, and what Dr. Clarke said, that the future of this nation depends upon developing a research program which will enable industry and science to provide us with the developments which will lead us forward as an industrialized nation.

I hope that the new Science Council will be listened to by the government, and that through its efforts research will be provided with the funds to meet the needs I have outlined. I note what the Hon. Minister (Mr. Drury) said about the level of scientific advance being dependant upon the state of scientific education and the general education of the people, and I cannot agree with him more. I hope, however, that this is an indication that the government will be prepared to increase substantially not only aid to research but aid to education as well.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by joining with the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Cantelon) by indicating support for Bill C-149.

The minister gave us a very leisurely delineation of this bill. I think his delivery tonight was perhaps typical of the whole attitude that has generally prevailed about the need for a science policy in Canada. We welcome the news that we will have a council, but we cannot let this occasion pass without expressing regret over the loss of many years to the people of Canada in this regard.

There have been commissions and more commissions, and the Prime Minister on April 30, 1964, when he indicated that he would accept the first recommendation of Dr. Mackenzie's report, missed the opportunity of bringing in the second recommendation which called for the establishment of a science policy. That time has been lost and it will be increasingly difficult for Canada to make it up.

I was somewhat disturbed by the minister's statement that we must wait, or words to that effect, for Canadians to prepare for spending. The truth of the matter is that Canadians have been prepared to spend for a long time but have been waiting for the government to provide some direction in this regard. We hope that with the establishment of this organization, with the combination of the secretariat of the Science Council and the minister responsible, we will be able to accomplish in the area of science what we have been able to accomplish through groups such as the Economic Council of Canada.

To a considerable extent our experience with the Economic Council has been non-partisan. The council has performed an invaluable service to this country and has presented objective information and conducted objective research into problems in Canada. Certainly all of us hope that the new science secretariat will do the same.

I was somewhat disturbed by the minister's complacency when he pointed out that the government's efforts over the years had been increasing and that it has allocated larger and larger resources to the development of sciences in this country. I should like to quote some figures which show that in spite of the fact that the gross amount spent in the field of science has been increasing, the actual allocation to individuals working in this field has remained level, if not somewhat lower than in the past.

I should like to refer to the one area of operating grants given to people in our universities for conducting scientific research. This is the only type of grant, in most cases, that an individual conducting research can look forward to in order to continue his work. I have computed the average grant per person in physics by adding up the amount of operational grants and dividing it by the number of persons who receive grants.

By making this calculation I arrived at these figures. In 1958-59 the total amount spent was $402,000, the number of people involved was 76 and the average grant was $5,300. In 1959 to 1960 the total amount granted was $476,400, the number of people involved was 100 and the average grant was $4,800. In 1960-61 the total amount was $580,480, the number of people involved was 106 with an average grant of $5,500. I shall not read the complete list but I want to mention the last year. In 1963-64, which is the last year for which I have statistics, the total amount granted was $892,700, almost double that for 1958-59. However, the number of people involved was 181, and the average grant, instead of being even $5,300, as it was for the 1958-59 period, had gone down to $4,950. The cost of research has gone up significantly and the amount of grants in support of research should also have gone up in proportion to that increased cost, but that is not the case. These figures can be contrasted with the situation in the United States. There a young newly appointed professor of physics can expect a grant of from $15,000 to $25,000 per year. A well established professor will have a research budget of almost $100,000 per year.

There is a crisis in Canada in the sense that we are losing some of our most able people. This relates not only to the number we are losing but to the quality of the people being lost. I should like to quote from Dr. L. E. Howlett on "Physics in Canada" in which he says:

> Above all we should ruthlessly stop certain ingenious optimists who keep publishing statistics to show that the over-all statistical balance proves the loss is not a too serious one.

He is referring to the exodus of Canadian scientists to other countries. He then states:

> This is arrant nonsense. The quality of the people who move is the thing of overwhelming importance and this must be examined before numbers have any meaning at all.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I believe we all recognize that if we are going to keep these able people in Canada we are going to have to support them with adequate sums for research purposes. I certainly hope that the new Science Council of Canada will recognize this situation.

I have read the terms of reference of the council and they are very good, with one exception. The duties are defined as giving consideration to, and making reports and recommendations to the minister on, the adequacy of the scientific and technological research and development being carried on in Canada; the priorities that should be assigned in Canada to specific areas of scientific and technological research. I think these duties are fine. However, Mr. Speaker, this council will have to be given one further term of reference, and it is one that only the government can give it. The government will have to define the kind of objectives and the quality of the work it wants to see carried out in Canada so that the council, with the duties assigned to it, can make some intelligent decision with regard to those objectives.

Unless this or any other organization has clearcut ideas about what the national purpose is, I feel it must prove inadequate to the task; it will flounder around in all directions seeking a sense of guidance for the things this country requires. I urgently suggest to the minister and the government that they define a clearcut policy. Regarding the kind of country they want to see Canada become; whether it is to be a country just passing out a little bit to every scientist who comes along and spreading the gratuities all over, whether there is to be an emphasis on quality and whether some direction will be given to the Science Council to see that whatever Canada embarks upon, whichever courses of action are decided upon as being most advisable and which sciences shall be supported, those sciences are supported with funds which are adequate to ensure that only the highest quality work will be done in this country.

I think we would be far better off to do fewer things in Canada and do them extremely well than to try to imitate our neighbour to the south, the countries of Europe or any other country in regard to science policy. We have special problems in Canada; we have a relatively small population with a special geography. Some direction from the government in this regard would prove of great importance to the work of the Science Council.

I hope that I read the terms of reference correctly and there will be a minister of the crown who will answer to the house for the Science Council, so this house can question him on its work and he can bring before the house matters of direction that the council will require. If this is done, the house will have an opportunity of expressing an opinion. I should like to close my remarks by quoting from an article by Dr. J. Gordon Parr, Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, University of Windsor, in which he says:

> It is not, however, too early to appreciate that direction—guidance, if you prefer it—is lacking.

He was referring to the scientific secretariat.

> In what areas is industrial development most promising? In what subjects should we rely upon imported technology? In what products do we have a peculiarly Canadian advantage? To what extent should universities be expected and encouraged to contribute to a national effort?

I hope this council will solve some of these problems for the Canadian people.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) has said, I take it that all members of the New Democratic Party welcome the introduction of this legislation. Even being as pessimistic about it as one can be, I would be inclined to say that it is certainly worth a try. In other words, it would appear obvious to me that something needs to be done to co-ordinate and indeed to tabulate what is or is not being done in the various fields of research in Canada. Certainly some steps need to be taken to ensure that there is not unnecessary overlapping of effort and that there is some planning for the proper allocation of the trained personnel we have available.

My purpose in rising to take part in the discussion on this bill is to suggest that my contention that the idea of a Science Council is certainly worth a try has been borne out, as far as I am concerned, as a result of some efforts I have been making in recent months to arrive at a picture in my own mind as to what is or is not being done in a particular field of research, namely the matter of the control of pollution of our air, water and soil.

I have found it very difficult to really get any picture in my mind and have come to the conclusion that possibly no one in Canada has a complete picture of what is being done in this field, or what is really required to be done. If the establishment of a Science Council can do something to correct the situation in this particular field of research, even apart from any other very necessary fields of research that are required in our modern society. I for one am willing to support the idea embodied in this bill and hope that the council when established will, among other things, give us an assessment of the requirements and priorities in the field of research and action in the development of the control of pollution.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, by way of illustrating what I feel should be the function of this bill I shall pretty well confine my remarks on it to this particular aspect of research, in the hope that it will serve to commend the bill to the house and also focus the attention of the house and of the Science Council of Canada, when it is established, on the high priority as far as this particular field of research is concerned.

• (8:40 p.m.)

A number of rather interesting articles have appeared recently in various publications in this connection. A series of articles was published in the Vancouver Sun a year or so ago, written by their reporter in this field, Mr. Arnie Myers. I believe this was a very commendable effort in expanding our knowledge as citizens of the problem, and of setting out some of the limitations on what is being done at the present time. I am glad to notice that in recent months the Toronto Globe and Mail has also been publishing a number of quite interesting articles in this field. The article, under the byline of Mr. John Leblanc, which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail for April 13 of this year, apparently concerns an interview with the director of the University of Toronto Great Lakes Institute, Dr. George B. Langford. The author describes Dr. Langford as a veteran educator and scientist with a six foot four physique, academic credentials as imposing, and a high degree of disrespect for most politicians.

According to the article Dr. Langford had come to the conclusion that not many people in Ottawa like him. I suggest, however, that the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), other members of the government and members of the house, should not be prejudiced by their likes or dislikes in respect of words that may be uttered on such subjects as pollution and the need for expanded research by those who have the professional and technical qualifications to advise us. The article goes on to illustrate some of the remarks which, in the writer's view, may explain some of the dislike in Ottawa for Dr. Langford. Perhaps I may quote from the article:

> Proliferating Canadian and American—federal, provincial, state and international agencies dealing with the lakes outdo Parkinson's Law. (The theory is that any given number of government employees will create enough work to keep themselves on the payroll).

Later on in the article, we find this:

> His relations with most government bodies being somewhat strained, he is not surprised that his research organization's body of knowledge has not been called upon as an emerging water crisis becomes clear. On the other hand, he is not impressed by the current flurry of official action north and south of the international border.
>
> "Now that they're finally waking up to the problem, they want to dash off on their own in all directions like Don Quixote's horse."
>
> Action, it is true, is sprouting on many fronts. Until recently, there were about 77 bodies dealing with one aspect or another of the lakes. A few more are in the process of being created as the various governments initiate hurry-up campaigns to reverse, or at least restrain, the developing foulness of the lower Great Lakes.

I hope that the Science Council of Canada is not going to become simply another of these proliferating bodies to which reference is made in this article, but rather a body which may serve to co-ordinate and possibly reduce the number of bodies that are working, perhaps sometimes at cross purposes or at least without knowledge of what each one is doing, in connection with the various aspects of research work. If Dr. Langford's analysis of the situation in respect of the Great Lakes is correct, I suggest that it is, in itself a rather weighty argument in support of the establishment of something along the lines of the proposed Science Council of Canada, provided it will be given freedom and authority and that action will be taken upon its recommendation to reduce this proliferation to which Dr. Langford refers.

I am not going to read all of the article, but I quote a portion which has some significant points which emphasize to me, at least, the importance of taking a forward step in the field of scientific research. Talking about the hurry-up action in the Great Lakes situation, the article says:

> The action has been stimulated by a spreading awareness that the multiplying tonnages of human and industrial wastes pouring into the lower—and smaller—lakes are taxing the capacity of the waters to keep themselves refreshed—
>
> Eutrophication—overloading with nutrients from shore discharges—has caused an unnatural mushrooming of low forms of life such as algae over more than a fourth of Lake Erie's area. Water quality has deteriorated, more desirable forms of fish have faded away and large sections of shore have been fouled. Lake Ontario and Lake Michigan have developed similar characteristics in spots.
>
> Just what Canada will be doing about all this is not yet clear; new moves appear confined to doing more studies.

The article goes on to deal with some of the proposed actions in the United States. It is made clear that quantitatively at least the United States has been responsible for more pollution of the Great Lakes than we have in Canada so far. This is understandable in view of a comparison of our population and industrial development in the area.

Later, the author points out:

> Federal Mines Minister Jean-Luc Pepin, who carries the central government's share of water responsibility, indicates that Ottawa's activities this year will consist of some sampling of Lake Ontario and St. Lawrence River water. The Mines Department will spend $1 million and the Health Department a lesser amount. The Ontario Water Resources Commission—a provincial agency—will conduct other sampling.

Then reference is made in the article to another matter which I think will be an increasingly important subject for public action. Certainly, I think it is related closely to at least the initial stages of the work of the Science Council. The article goes on to point out this:

> Somewhat less tangible—and considerably further in the future—is a role that may be played by the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers, a federal-provincial group set up several years ago with a secretariat in Montreal.

I feel that at some point in the discussion of this bill it might be useful if the Minister of Industry were to indicate just what relationship he envisages between the proposed Science Council of Canada and the federal-provincial council of resource ministers. It does seem to me that there should be, very definitely, some form of liaison established, and it should be understood what the relationship between these two bodies is to be.

I shall just quote briefly from the article once more:

> The conference is planning a Fall convention on pollution and our environment—the group calculates water, air and soil pollution costs Canada $1.1 billion a year—and is going to begin with 100 background papers on the subject, written by experts.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that in relation to some of the figures that have been mentioned by other members concerning the current spending on research, this cost indicates to me the possibility of achieving a net saving to our country by stepping up our research in this particular field, if in no other.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The article goes on to point out that the conference will begin with 100 background papers on the subject written by experts. After that there will be another series of papers on how to control it; but this is a long range proposition, the article says. I suggest that out of that conference the Council of Resource Ministers should find considerable food for thought and study; that is, if these background papers are what I hope they will be—pretty representative of current knowledge and thought on what can be accomplished in this particular field of research.

In this connection, and to further illustrate the need, in my view, for the establishment of this Science Council, I point out that I have been trying to seek some information on what the federal government is doing in the field of pollution research. There was recently tabled a reply to an order paper question I had asked, No. 555, regarding what research is being done. I asked which departments or agencies of the federal government are conducting research into (a) water pollution control and (b) air pollution control. Then I went on to ask what amounts for each of the last five fiscal years had been spent in this field.

The reply I received was a somewhat conditional one, but rather an illuminating one in a number of ways, one which illustrates the need for some greater co-ordination and understanding of what the various arms of the federal government are doing in this area. I realize it is a little difficult in some respects to define what is or is not being done in this field specifically related to research to achieve control of pollution.

For example, the National Research Council indicates in the answer given by the Minister of Industry that the council itself is not doing research into water pollution control or air pollution control. In 1964 the National Research Council established an associate committee on water pollution to co-ordinate the interests of Canadian universities, industry and government in the matter of water pollution and to encourage research into the problem in Canada. Support was also given to researchers in the universities for scientific research in several relevant areas, the result of which could be of potential use in the field of control.

It is apparent to me, Mr. Speaker, that while the Research Council has shown some interest in this subject, it appears from the answer given that the council is not fully aware of all the ramifications of its efforts or what is being done by various universities or other agencies across the country.

An answer supplied me by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) informs me that that department does not carry out research into the control—it underlined that word in its answer—of water and air pollution. However, the department does conduct air and water pollution studies. On that basis the questions are answered in this way, and I should like to put some figures on the record because they are important in relation to the estimated $1.1 billion that the council of resource ministers suggested pollution is costing us today.

In the period 1961-62 air pollution studies represented an expenditure of $22,300; water pollution studies cost $5,000. In the period 1962-63 air pollution studies cost $22,300; water pollution studies, $5,500, an increase of $500. In 1963-64 air pollution studies cost $22,300; water pollution studies, $8,500. In 1964-65 air pollution studies cost $23,300; water pollution studies, $10,250. In 1965-66 estimated air pollution studies cost $37,300; water pollution studies, $51,750. It is to be noted that of the water pollution studies expenditure for the period 1965-66, $14,000 went to the Great Lakes Institute.

Then I had another answer from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) which informed me that the Atlantic Development Board, for the fiscal year 1965-66, spent $18,955.88 on water pollution control. Apart from those figures, Mr. Speaker, the only figures of expenditure by the federal government that I have been given on reserarch into this field relate to moneys spent by the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Fisheries and the Fisheries Research Board of Canada. These figures are, in my view, of very minor consideration indeed.

For example, the Department of National Health and Welfare has spent on water pollution control an average of between $40,000 to $50,000 per year over the past five years. The Department of Fisheries estimates that it has spent $90,000 over each of the last five fiscal years. The Fisheries Research Board of Canada, in addition to that spent by the department directly, has spent of the order of $55,000 to $60,000 per year average over the last five years. This is all in the field of water pollution control.

The only expenditures in air pollution control have apparently been made by the Department of National Health and Welfare and I should like to put these figures on the record. In 1961-62, $58,096; in 1962-63, $72,858; in 1963-64, $94,438; in 1964-65, $119,487; and in 1965-66, $112,036. Those figures represent, according to the return given me, the total amount currently being spent by the federal government in the field of pollution control, which the council of resource ministers estimates is presently costing Canada $1.1 billion a year.

If the Science Council of Canada can do something to change this situation, then I for one will be glad to see it go into operation. I should point out that the answer I was given does make it clear it is provided with the explanation that the reported activities of the department and agencies include only those which have been directed specifically toward research into water and air pollution control, per se.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Not included, according to the answer I received, are the wide ranges of departmental investigations and monitoring of water and air phenomena which directly or indirectly affect the nature, distribution or dissipation of pollutants. I think this is an answer which might properly be put on record. I do not think one could put a question on the order paper which would produce an exact answer telling us what is being spent for such purposes as the monitoring, and other studies to which reference is made. But other figures indicate that it probably represents a very small proportion of federal expenditures in relation to the necessity of dealing with this growing problem as a matter of urgency.

I hope the Science Council can also do something to keep the government and all concerned more directly in touch with what is being done in various research fields. To illustrate this point I should like to refer to a letter I received from the Minister of Forestry after I had asked some questions during his estimates about an amount of $1,700,000 granted to the Pulp and Paper Research Institute of Canada for its capital spending program.

I asked the minister whether or not this research institute was conducting any research into pollution. He said he really did not know but he would obtain an answer for me. I am glad to say he did. As a result, I had sent to me, together with a covering letter, a letter from the President of the Pulp and Paper Research Institute which outlined some of the work which this body is doing. It indicates that in a modest way at least some research has been done in the pollution field, though, apparently, "in a corner", without the minister who is responsible in this field having any direct knowledge of it. I take it that this is the kind of situation which the proposed Science Council is designed to remedy. I hope the council will be successful in its endeavours.

I am sorry there is not time to put on record the full statement made to the minister and, indirectly, to myself by the President of the Pulp and Paper Research Institute because it does contain some interesting information. However, I invite any members of the house who may be interested to have a look at the letter.

I have mentioned this in the present context because I think it illustrates how uncoordinated and, in many respects, how fragmentary our efforts have been in various fields of research, particularly in this field of research into pollution control in which I am interested, because it affects many people in the part of the country I represent. In addition, all hon. members will agree that this is a question of growing national importance.

I hope that when we get into committee of the whole the minister will be able to amplify and clarify some of his ideas as to the way in which this council may be able to assist in dealing with problems of the kind to which I have drawn attention.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): My hon. friend from Okanagan-Revelstoke was supposed to speak on this subject on behalf of the Social Credit party, but the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, is sitting at the present time and he is a member of that committee. It is therefore my responsibility to pinch hit for him tonight and make a few brief observations on this measure.

I do not consider myself qualified to make any profound contribution to the debate on this question but I venture to suggest that all members and possibly all Canadians are concerned with this matter of scientific research and development. The world is moving rapidly along this particular road and we must make sure that Canada maintains its place in the onward march.

It has been pointed out that Canada is losing a great many well qualified individuals who are moving to other parts of the world, particularly to the United States, because of the lack of adequate facilities, opportunities and remuneration here. This is a matter of real concern. We are constantly reading articles in magazines, newspapers and various periodicals drawing attention to the disastrous effect this process will ultimately have on Canada and its place in the world. Because of this we are happy to support the establishment of the Science Council as indicated in the measure before us.

However, I should like to refer to a difficulty to which attention has already been drawn—the proliferation of agencies and departments of government which are presently engaged in various pursuits which closely parallel the contemplated work of the Science Council. I believe the minister when introducing this measure said that in some way the work of the Council would parallel part of the work of the Economic Council. We hope, therefore, that in working out the programs which will result in the establishment of this agency steps will be taken to ensure that there will be no unnecessary overlapping of activity or work as between these two bodies or other bodies working in the research field.

We all recognize the valuable work which is being done in the field of research by our universities and by private industry. We look to this Science Council to become an agency which will not only promote projects and research studies but serve as a repository for information and data which are fed to it by other agencies working in this field.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I believe it essential that priorities be established for the work of the council. It will not do for it to start off in a haphazard manner and shoot off in every direction. Close attention will have to be given to the immediate, pressing needs of our nation and economy in order that they receive prior consideration.

In another context it has been pointed out that in meeting the social and economic needs of the people of Canada we must establish priorities, recognizing the fact that capital is somewhat limited and is not sufficient to meet the challenge in every field of activity and endeavour. I believe the same principle obtains in the area of science.

Just as an aside, Mr. Speaker, an hon. member, a friend of mine, made a suggestion a few minutes ago that in view of the fact development in the fields of science and research will cost so much money, one of the first projects to which the council should give attention is research into the science of finance. Even though he is not a member of the party to which I belong, he suggested it might be advisable and profitable to have research into the Social Credit financial philosophy and proposals. We believe that the adoption and implementation of our financial proposals would give the treasury of our country a certain amount of capital which could assist the development of a science program—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) expects me to intervene to remind him that the house is considering the establishment of the Science Council of Canada and this has very little to do, so far as I can judge, with Social Credit science, as the hon. gentleman calls it. I would suggest he revert to the subject matter at hand.

Mr. Patterson: With all due deference and respect, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about how to finance scientific research and development programs. This is one of the problems with which the council will be faced. Therefore, with all respect and sincerity, I submit that what I have suggested would contribute to quite an extent to the meeting of that problem and provide the finance that is necessary to move forward in these fields. I appreciate your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and with these few remarks will conclude my contribution to this debate.

Science Council of Canada

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for recognizing me for the third time today. It may be that in the consideration of certain legislation, because of certain criticism I utter, I may be looked upon by you as Daniel in the lions' den. Tonight, the lions are not in a roaring mood; to the contrary, they seem quite apathetic, considering the atmosphere of the house.

Nevertheless, I think the lions, in view of the principle of this bill, are not in the proper cage as consideration is being given to the establishment in Canada, under exclusive authority of the federal government, of a Science Council of Canada.

I am quite aware that few voices will be raised in this house to recall the provisions of the Canadian constitution, but as long as the courageous population of Sherbrooke riding continues to send me here—and I say courageous because they put up with me, as my colleagues do—I shall repeat my deep conviction that the administration of Canada cannot be conducted in utter chaos.

The provisions of the Canadian constitution must be adhered to. Now, under the confederation agreement of 1867, more precisely under sections 92 and 93, all questions of a local, regional, social, civil, religious and educational character have been given to the provinces. There is a special section of the Constitution, section 93, under which exclusive jurisdiction is given to the provinces in matters of education.

In 1937, Supreme Court Justice Duff ruled that such exclusive jurisdiction belonged to the provinces at all levels, elementary, secondary and university.

Such, then, are the guiding constitutional principles.

Oh, I know too well that during economic depressions and in wartime, the central government has crept into certain fields. But what has become unconstitutional is that in peacetime it stepped up this practice and its meddling in fields of provincial jurisdiction.

In short, the purpose of a science council is highly commendable. We have an urgent and immediate need for it; all the more so because we note that most of our scientists, graduating from our universities, are leaving the country, mainly for the United States. From 1956 to 1961, 1,239 Canadian scientists moved to the United States.

I admit that the problem is important, but I say, Mr. Speaker, that in this field, like in many others, the government should proceed in conjunction with the provinces, according to the evolution of modern-day problems.

Preparations are being made for a June conference on education. Let us see how the central government proceeded in the field of education which relates to that of science a field in which provinces have exclusive jurisdiction under the Canadian constitution. Well, it has reached a point, where it grants prizes to students, announces scholarships, prepares a national conference on education in June, and is now meddling in a provincial field without the co-operation of the provinces. In my opinion, it should have waited to put the science council project on the agenda of a federal-provincial conference on educational and scientific problems, precisely in order to establish co-operation in the evolution of the Canadian constitutional life.

The mentality is not the same as it was in 1867. We admit that. On the other hand, I am against a government, whether provincial or federal, interfering in a field coming under another government's jurisdiction without co-operating with the latter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the member for Sherbrooke when he is expressing with such eloquence his views on the resolution now under consideration, but I must remind him that the standing orders do not allow a member to make the same speech twice, and the member for Sherbrooke is now repeating substantially the same speech he already made in this house when we considered this bill at the resolution stage.

If the hon. member will refer to page 2869 of the official report, he will find there in substance the same remarks he has just made. Under the circumstances, I take the liberty of reminding him that he is not allowed, under the standing orders, to repeat remarks already made.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate you on your excellent memory, because it is true I expressed certain views in more detail on another occasion, but at the time, I had put some questions to the minister (Mr. Drury), who is now looking at me sympathetically, but he left them unanswered then.

I shall put the question more precisely today. Is there any specific agreement or consultation, in short, any approval on the part of the provincial government in this matter, or has the minister received any protest?

I should like the minister to give me a specific answer to this question.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, but I cannot resist rising to say I think all members of this house support the principle and the purpose of this bill. I wish to congratulate the honourable and gallant gentleman for accepting the C.C.F. policy 30 years late. This was the policy of the C.C.F. as enunciated by the league for social reconstruction which was more or less the Fabian society of the C.C.F. in 1935. But better late than never. We are very pleased to see that the minister in introducing this bill has accepted another of the C.C.F. or New Democratic Party, policies. If they keep going at this rate, we shall have to work on some more policies for the years ahead.

In any event I was very interested in the statement made by the minister, which I thought was quite a clear cut exposition of the principle and purpose of this bill. I am not one of those who is pessimistic. I know the minister's war record; he was a good administrator and I expect him to put the same effort into the administration of things concerning the Canadian people during a time of peace.

Someone around here said something about soft soap. I do not know whether or not that was my friend in the Social Credit party. Speaking seriously, Mr. Speaker, I am quite optimistic about this bill if the government proceeds with it according to the exposition by the minister this evening, and I am sure we will see some good results from it. As I see it, the concern simply will be—and this is my recommendation to the government—that parliament will approve these recommendations, if they agree with them, and provide the funds.

At this point I should like to mention the fact that my hon. friend from Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson) was quite in order when he suggested that with this Science Council they also would be quite justified in investigating the science of money, because this was done by Mr. Keynes' science council for the examination of finance, which reported to some organization in the United Kingdom. I am not saying I can accept all the ideas of the member of the Social Credit party, but I think it would be well to have some persons approach objectively the question of providing funds for programs designed by the parliament of Canada. I hope I have put myself in good order there.

Without a doubt research is the greatest need. That was brought to my attention very recently when I paid a visit to the University of Michigan when I was at Ann Arbor. At that time I had been invited by some of the faculty there, and had an opportunity to meet some of those persons interested particularly in the problem of the conservation of national resources, such persons as Dr. Leonard, and others like him, who were most interesting persons to speak to. During the time I spent with them I learned a great deal. Last year that university had $40 million for research. I understand they do a good deal of space research and other research for the government of the United States. Just compare that; one university in the United States last year spent something over $40 million for research. We have a long way to go in this country. As I said before, they do a good deal of research which is carried out in respect of programs designed by the United States government.

For some 20 years I have preached on this subject. I am going to put this resolution on the record before concluding, so that the Science Council will have something to get on with in the first instance:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of the creation of a water pollution control division, composed of representatives of the ten provinces, within the framework of the proposed National Resources Council, with powers and funds required to institute research programs, collect, collate and analyse water control data, and to co-ordinate the water pollution control objectives for the provinces; in addition, to further the study of water pollution control problems of a national character.

I put that down, Mr. Speaker, to bring it particularly to the attention of the minister, as one of the first problems this Science Council has to undertake. I might say also that I was invited by the Engineering Institute of Canada to attend a seminar conducted by the Young Liberals Federation of Canada at the Chateau Laurier on water resources and water pollution, and I attended it. I have to be very careful what I say now. In fairness I wish to say that I congratulate those who organized that seminar. Nearly 400 people were in attendance. I wish to congratulate them for the progressive approach taken by the delegates there. I spent a most interesting day; as a matter of fact it was a day and a half. Whoever organized this seminar organized it very well. I met a number of very bright young men to whom I intend later on to sell New Democratic Party memberships.

Now, I have one other suggestion. I suggest that sometimes scientists are inclined to get divorced from the public. The function of parliament is to keep, shall I say, the ultra type of people in touch with the ordinary people. In the administration of this act I suggest that the minister not only co-operate with the provinces, which I am sure will be done, but also co-operate with public bodies, and with the public, with a view to getting their understanding of what is being attempted and also with a view to receiving information from ordinary persons. There is many an ordinary person who does not have a degree or anything of that nature who comes up with great ideas. The council has the opportunity of getting the best result by using all the brains that are applied to this problem of research, such as program priorities and things of that sort.

With those few remarks I now take my seat.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 11—Duties of the Council.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in the course of my remarks earlier on the second reading of this bill, I endeavoured to make a distinction between planning for science and planning in science, and indicated that the role of the council was planning for science and technology whereas the role of the operating agencies was planning within science.

I would, therefore, suggest that clause 11(d) be amended by changing the first line which reads:

—longterm planning in scientific and technological research and development in Canada;

It should read: "long term planning for scientific and technological research and development in Canada".

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 11 (d) be amended by replacing the word "in" in the first line by the word "for".

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should have put my question in relation to the amendment, but my concern is whether or not the Science Council will concern itself with behavioural sciences. I am thinking of fields such as psychology, psychiatry, social work and so forth. I am not sure whether the amendment relating to scientific and technological research will cover these services. Perhaps I should address myself to paragraph (h) of this clause which refers to certain aspects of scientific, economic and social aspects of life in Canada.

I do not know whether or not the minister has considered this or not, but any discussion about elemental research or the study of personnel, manpower and social sciences will definitely affect any progress we may make. Specific measures have been considered by this house such as medicare and the Canada Assistance Plan, as well as the Company of Young Canadians and the broad question of penology. I should like to ask the minister whether the Science Council will be able to consider the behavioural sciences?

Mr. Drury: I think I made it quite clear at the outset of the discussion on the resolution that sciences and scientific research in the sense used in this bill in relation to the Science Council relate to the so-called natural sciences and not to social sciences. The natural sciences and technology in this sense as indicated in paragraph (h) relate to the fundamental work of the natural sciences rather than social sciences.

Mr. Enns: Do I understand that the question of manpower will not come within the scope of the work of this council?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, obviously in so far as sciences in Canada are concerned, the output of manpower will have a relationship and to that extent will be considered. One cannot advance scientific research and technology without increasing the number of men available. For that reason there will have to be some study made as to how best to train these men and use them.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry pertaining to clause 11 (f).

Under subsection (f), it shall be the duty of the council to assess:

The responsiblities of universities in furthering science and technology in Canada.

Could the minister tell us whether he has obtained the consent of the Quebec government or discussed the matter with that government? There are other universities in Quebec. The minister knows the Quebec mentality. Is it the duty of the council to assess the responsibilities of universities? Would the minister elaborate on this matter?

Mr. Drury: The clause under consideration entrusts the science council with the task of establishing the responsibilities of the government towards the universities. This does not mean that it will try to establish the responsibilities of the universities but rather those of the government towards the universities.

Mr. Allard: The minister knows very well that the government of the province of Quebec considers that it is its responsibility and not that of the federal government to determine the functions of those universities in every field.

Mr. Drury: I have just explained to the hon. member for Sherbrooke that we are not denying the responsibilities and the functions of the universities. The council will study the responsibilities, if any, of the government of Canada toward the universities.

Mr. Allard: In Quebec?

Mr. Drury: At the present time, the National Research Council of Canada allocates sums of money for research purposes to individuals in Quebec universities. I hope that the National Research Council will keep on making research grants to scientists in any Canadian university.

Mr. Allard: That is centralization.

[English]

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be appropriate during our consideration of this clause to ask the minister whether he can comment on or answer a question I asked during the debate on second reading as to the relationship between the Science Council and the Council of Resource Ministers. I do not wish to re-arouse any discussion on this question vis-à-vis Quebec, but have there been any discussions as to the relationship between the Science Council and provincial agencies, such as the B.C. Research Council which was set up under the auspices of the government of British Columbia?

• (9:40 p.m.)

I note that in paragraph (h) reference is made to "developing and maintaining cooperation and the exchange of information between the council and other public or private organizations." Perhaps I might pinpoint my question by asking the minister whether in his understanding "other public organizations" could, if it was the desire of the provincial governments, embrace provincial governments or agencies as far as the terms of reference regarding the activities of the council are concerned.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, in response to the first question, namely the relationship between the Science Council and the Council of Resource Ministers, there is no plan for a formal link. The Council of Resource Ministers is a policy-making body in a special sphere. The Science Council will be a policy-evolving or policy-developing body in a larger sphere. Obviously I would expect that the Science Council would look to the Council of Resource Ministers for specialized advice, and that the Council of Resource Ministers might well look to the Science Council for general advice on larger targets. A precise relationship has not been worked out.

I have taken note of the interest of the hon. gentleman and will see whether consideration can be given to his suggestion. In relation to the second question, namely whether the Research Council of British Columbia is included in the phrase "other organizations", I think the answer is yes, the Science Council will seek the kind of information and advice it needs to render intelligent opinions wherever it can best be obtained, and reciprocally, if the Science Council of Canada can render valid advice and opinions I would expect the Research Council of British Columbia to seek advice and opinions from the Science Council. But it is not anticipated that there will be any role of a regulatory character or any control exercised by the Science Council of Canada over the British Columbia Research Council or indeed any other research council.

Mr. Barnett: I thank the minister for his answer. I think the minister would agree with me that, while the Council of Resource Ministers may be concerned with a limited area of activity, it is in a sense the first federal-provincial body with a secretariat and does operate in a field in which what is being done in research is quite important. I am glad to know that the minister does envisage that there will develop at least some form of liaison, even though it is an informal one, between the Council of Resource Ministers and the Science Council. I would agree with him; I am not suggesting that it is something we could or should put in the legislation.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 11 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 12 agreed to.

On clause 13—Initiation of studies, etc.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I am having a little difficulty reconciling clause 13 with the amendment to clause 11 introduced by the minister. That amendment changed the word "in" to "for" and that portion of the clause now reads:

—long term planning for scientific and technological research and development in Canada;

I understand the amendment was made on the basis that the council does not carry on its own research but provides that it be done. Clause 13 says:

The council shall on its own initiative, or if directed to do so by the minister, conduct such studies, inquiries and other undertakings—

I am having a little difficulty, as I say, reconciling those two statements, and perhaps the minister would enlighten us.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think probably clause 13 refers rather to responsibility than actual operation. The intention here is that the council will assume responsibility for work that is done, rather than doing it itself. It will commission it, have it done through the science secretariat of the Privy Council office, endorse it as in effect being its own and carrying its judgment, and consequently qualifying under clause 13. As I indicated earlier, it will not itself have a staff or investigative agencies.

Mr. Patterson: In my view, Mr. Chairman, this wording is rather ambiguous. I wonder whether there should not be some change in the wording of clause 13 and instead of "conduct such studies" the wording should not be "provide for such studies", or something like that, in order to clarify the matter. Is the minister satisfied that the clause is clear enough so that its meaning is obvious?

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Drury: I think the meaning is sufficiently obvious. Unless one uses a verb such as "conduct", it is difficult to attribute responsibility. "Provide for" means clearly that this will be somebody else's work, but if the council is not provided with any funds to conduct any studies, clearly those studies that bear its endorsement have been carried out by someone else but are the responsibility, and consequently the judgment, of the council.

Clause 13 agreed to.

On clause 14—Council may utilize services of employees of other departments.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think it may be rather more appropriate to government organization if clause 14 (1) made provision for the designation of other government departments by the governor in council rather than by the minister.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Hear, hear.

Mr. Drury: I would accordingly suggest, seconded—by Mr. Bell (Carleton)?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Drury: —or by the Minister of Fisheries that in place of the last three words, "Minister may designate" there be substituted therefor the words "the governor in council may designate for the purpose." I think you already have that amendment in your hands, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Robichaud: I move:

That clause 14 be amended by deleting in the first paragraph the words "the minister may designate" and substituting "governor in council may designate for the purpose."

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 15—Not agent of Her Majesty.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to explain the significance of clause 15 and the disclaimer in that clause of the council's being an agent of Her Majesty. I am quite interested in the contrast in this wording compared with, for example, the act setting up the Economic Council of Canada, where specifically in clause 17 it is said:

The Council is for all purposes of this act an agent of Her Majesty.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Why is it that in the Economic Council of Canada legislation there is such an adoption of the council to Her Majesty, while in this case there is a total disclaimer of agency?

Mr. Drury: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the analogy in this case is rather to the Canada Council, in which legislation there is a disclaimer of agency in relation to Her Majesty. The members of that council are not members of the public service of Canada. I think this situation relates to the fact that the functions of the council are advisory and that its members, as members of the council, will not be members of the public service, although some of them may happen to be members of the public service. Presumably, the council will not have to carry out executive functions. There is probably no necessity for it to be classed as an agent.

There is probably some rather more profound legal reason, but I must confess I do not know it. The note I have is that this is statutory.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the minister be aware as to what the situation might be in respect of the National Research Council or the Medical Research Council? I have not had an opportunity of looking at the legislation with regard to that. I think perhaps this legislation should coincide with that of the Medical Research Council and the National Research Council.

Mr. Drury: The Medical Research Council is a division of the National Research Council.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): But set up by statute?

Mr. Drury: Yes, set up by statute. The National Research Council Act, which is very many years old, to the best of my knowledge does not make this disclaimer. However, the National Research Council has executive functions. It does, like the Medical Research Council, award grants, I think perhaps the situation is somewhat different from that of a body which will not be in the executive field.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am simply interested in seeing that we have a standard principle that is followed in relation to these measures. The matter having been raised it might, in another place, be considered as to whether this is the appropriate way to deal with this particular type of body and whether that principle might coincide with legislation of this type which we are considering, so that it might be standard.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 16 agreed to.

On clause 17—annual report.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): There is just one minor point in connection with clause 17. It seems to me rather extraordinary that it is the chairman of the council who is to transmit the report. Why is this not left to the council? I have observed that this has become a practice in draftsmanship, but it seems to me it should be the council which should transmit the report and not one particular officer of the council.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Starr: As amended, by leave now.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Drury: I wonder if I might ask the indulgence of the house? There is a small bill, entirely consequential on the adoption of the Science Council Act, which is concerned with some housekeeping amendments. It is a very short bill to amend the National Research Council Act and contains housekeeping changes.

Mr. Starr: You can deal with that when the bill comes up for second reading.

Mr. Drury: Second reading is for tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EXPO '67—REFUSAL OF PERMISSION TO RECORD R.C.M.P. BAND

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on April 20 the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) replied to the following question by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso):

Will the Minister of Labour use his offices with the American Federation of Musicians in order to obtain permission for a recording to be made of the R.C.M.P. band at Expo '67 as a cultural contribution to Canada's centennial year since this permission has been given to the United States army, air force, navy and marine corps for cultural purposes?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have used my offices in this connection. Representations have been made to the American Federation of Musicians in relation to the proposed recording of the R.C.M.P. band. The policy of the musicians union is that persons who are not members of the musicians union are not allowed to record since it would be in violation of the recording agreement between the recording companies and the union. The members of the R.C.M.P. band do not belong to the musicians union, and their participation in a recording would therefore violate the agreement between the record producers and the union.

In answer to the second part of the question, in the case of personnel of the military service bands in the United States, they are members of the union and therefore would be permitted to record.

Later that same day, Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister two questions, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to address two questions to the Minister of Labour, as a firm supporter of organized labour but also as a proud Canadian. My question arises out of the answer the minister gave with respect to the right of the R.C.M.P. band to record in Canada. My first question is, does the government agree with this decision of the international headquarters of the musicians union? My second question is, if not, would the minister consider discussing this matter with his opposite number in the United States in order to provide appropriate guide lines to meet this type of situation?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Then Mr. Speaker ruled me out of order.

I mention this because I have had a number of complaints about the matter. This is a question of United States influence affecting the celebration of our centennial year. I am very concerned at this attempt to prevent Canadians enjoying recordings of the R.C.M.P. band, particularly during our centennial year.

This type of situation was first brought to my attention some years ago when the band of the 48th Highlanders played for the celebration of the union of the two congresses. When I heard that the colonel of this regiment had to get the permission of brother Petrillo in the United States before he could play in public in Canada, I nearly vomitted. I know a good many other Canadians feel the same way about this sort of thing.

I am a strong supporter of trade unions. However, I am very much opposed to this practice and to this attempt to interfere with the playing and recording of bands in this country which are maintained at the expense of the people of Canada, through the federal government. Everything possible must be done to protect the musicians union and their rights, but it is going too far when they take this attitude.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Therefore, I suggest that the minister should discuss this further with the musicians union to see whether we cannot make some satisfactory arrangements for the R.C.M.P. band to be recorded at Expo '67 and at other events. We have thousands of Canadians who have never had the opportunity to hear this magnificent band. I know something about bands because I have played in a band, and I was once a band conductor of some five musicians. But many Canadians are denied the opportunity to hear a recording of this band during centennial year. I urge the minister once more to take this matter up with the musicians union and get them to see the Canadian point of view in this respect.

Failing that, if there is still no opportunity to obtain agreement I would suggest that we should form a crown corporation which would provide for the recording of music played by the R.C.M.P. band and army bands in Canada. During these recordings, in order to protect the persons concerned, all those taking part and playing in the recordings should be paid the proper union rates and dues. Therefore I shall look forward to hearing what the minister has to say about this interesting situation.

As I say, I have had many letters about this from persons who are interested in the welfare of organized labour and the work it is undertaking in Canada. Personally I strongly resent any attempt on the part of a United States labour leader to tell Canadians what they are going to do in 1967.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the house is aware, the Minister of Labour is unfortunately away on public business in the west and consequently cannot be here tonight. However, I will say on his behalf that I know he is fully seized of this question. He shares the views expressed by the hon. member that the R.C.M.P. band should be allowed to make its recordings. I think the hon. member can take comfort from the fact that the Minister of Labour will be pursuing the particular topic to which reference has been made.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.07 p.m.

APPENDIX

ORDER IN COUNCIL RESPECTING STEVEN TRUSCOTT

P.C. 1966-760

AT THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE AT OTTAWA

TUESDAY, the 26th day of APRIL,1966

PRESENT:

His Excellency

The Governor General in Council.

Whereas there has been laid before His Excellency the Governor General in Council a report from the Solicitor General substantiating

That Steven Murray Truscott was convicted at Goderich, Ontario, on September 30, 1959, of the murder of Lynne Harper and sentenced to death;

That Steven Murray Truscott appealed the said conviction to the Court of Appeal of Ontario by which court the said appeal was dismissed;

That Steven Murray Truscott thereupon applied for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada by which court the said application was refused, the court at that time having jurisdiction to entertain such an appeal on questions of law only;

That on January 21, 1960, His Excellency in Council was pleased to commute the sentence of death so passed upon Steven Murray Truscott to a term of life imprisonment in Kingston penitentiary where Steven Murray Truscott is now confined;

That on September 1, 1961, section 597A of the Criminal Code came into force whereby a person who has been sentenced to death and whose conviction has been affirmed by the court of appeal may appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada on any ground of law or fact or mixed law and fact;

That there exists widespread concern as to whether there was a miscarriage of justice in the conviction of Steven Murray Truscott and it is in the public interest that the matter be inquired into;

That for the purpose of said inquiry the question hereinafter set out should be referred to the Supreme Court of Canada pursuant to section 55 of the Supreme Court Act;

Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, with and by virtue of the authority conferred by section 55 of the Supreme Court Act, is pleased to refer and doth hereby refer to the Supreme Court of Canada for hearing and consideration the following question?

"Had an appeal by Steven Murray Truscott been made to the Supreme Court of Canada as is now permitted by section 597A of the Criminal Code of Canada, what disposition would the court have made of such appeal on a consideration of the existing record and such further evidence as the court, in its discretion, may receive and consider?"

Certified to be a true copy,

R. G. Robertson,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 27, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. KEAYS—PRESENCE IN CHAMBER DURING ADJOURNMENT DEBATES

Mr. J. Russell Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a statement made in the house by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard). I am sorry I did not get the opportunity to do it sooner. As reported on page 4155 of Hansard for April 22, 1966, the hon. member for Bonaventure said:

> In the same connection, I was here last night to answer a question and the one who raised it was not. This has happened on two occasions in the case of the member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays).

Mr. Speaker, that statement is inaccurate; instead of "on two occasions" one should read "on one occasion".

I would be very happy if the hon. member for Bonaventure would be kind enough to make the necessary correction.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say that I followed in that matter the line of thought of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) who said on two occasions: I want to discuss that question here tonight. All the members concerned were here that night to answer but he was not here himself.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, in any case, the fact is that the question was called only once.

Mr. Speaker: I hope that the hon. members will come to an agreement about whether it was on one or two occasions.

[English]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South) presented the first and second reports of the standing committee on public accounts.

[Note: Text of the foregoing reports appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I move that the first report of the standing committee on public accounts presented this day be now concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, before you read the motion we wish to make our opposition clear. We do not want to agree to the report being passed immediately, because on this side we would prefer to have a debate on it.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: If there is not unanimous consent the motion cannot be put.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I move that the second report of the standing committee on public accounts presented this day be concurred in.

Mr. Caron: I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there is not unanimous consent that the second motion may be moved.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to ask whether the motions presented by the hon. member for Wellington South a moment ago regarding the reports of the public accounts committee are debatable.

Mr. Speaker: The motions cannot be put without unanimous consent and, therefore, cannot be debated because they are not before the house.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest that perhaps argument can be submitted as to why the motion should not now be put, and on the objections that are being raised. I should also like to ask whether the hon. members who are objecting were in attendance at the committee meetings.

[Translation]

If you were here, you could attend the sittings of the committee.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, the reason why I did not attend the sitting of the public accounts committee is that I am not on it, but I object to concurrence in this report without previous discussion, because I do not give my consent to a reduction of the quorum of committees. Committees are appointed with 25 members and a quorum of 13, and we believe that the quorum should not be reduced.

Mr. Lambert: Then attend the sittings.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Unanimous consent must be obtained in order to present the motion, and there can be no debate because there is nothing now before the house.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Speaking as a private member of this house, I believe there are individuals here who continually stymie the work of parliamentary committees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: I cannot understand why, after asking for positions on these committees, when a committee report is presented for concurrence these members object to the suggestion that these committees sit while the house is sitting. As a private member of parliament I feel that the work of these committees should be carried out and that they should have the right to sit while the house is sitting. Any members who are not willing to do their work should get off the committees and be replaced by those who are willing to share the work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I protest what has just been said by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). We have rules and I always objected, in opposition, to the committees sitting while the house is in session. I have nothing against a committee sitting when there is a special reason, but I do not intend to give full powers, and I shall refuse to do so until the end of time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege. I have only one question to ask of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron). How many committees is he on, and how often have they met?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Caron: That is an unfair question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A few minutes ago the Chair expressed the opinion that there was nothing before the house and there should be no discussion, but we have managed to have one in any event. I suggest there is really no prima facie case of privilege, and I invite hon. members to continue to the next item of business.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, which is quite genuine. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) has accused those who objected to passing this report immediately with wanting to keep the other members of the house from doing their work.

I feel that accusation warrants a question of privilege. I must say to the hon. member for Ontario that we do not want to keep anyone from doing his duty; on the contrary, we want the work done well. Now, the work will be done well provided the majority of the committee members attend the meetings. That is not done by reducing the quorum. We are opposed to reducing the quorum and to having the committees sit while the house is sitting, unless exceptional circumstances warrant it. In my opinion, that is not preventing the members of the house from doing their work.

Mr. Lambert: Set the example.

[English]

REDISTRIBUTION

PROCEDURE FOR CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS FILED WITH MR. SPEAKER

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked, in the absence of the government house leader, to report on the results of a house leaders' meeting which was held this morning. This meeting considered the objections filed with Mr. Speaker pursuant to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. The house leaders have agreed:

1. That the standing orders providing for private members' hour be suspended while the motions for consideration of objections to reports by electoral boundaries commissions are before the house.

2. That the motions for consideration of objections be taken up after the orders of the day have been called.

3. That for Wednesday, April 27, the motions relating to individual constituencies in Quebec, but not the two motions proposing general changes, be taken first and be followed by the motions relating to the reports on Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in that order.

4. That subject to paragraph 3 all motions pertaining to the report on redistribution in a province be considered by the house at the same time.

I should like to ask that this agreement be made an order of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the suggestions made by the parliamentary secretary be made an order of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

PAROLE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCES

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-172, to amend the Parole Act (Power to Commute a Sentence of Death).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, this bill is not any more controversial than the one I introduced on Monday. It is corollary to the one agreed to and read the first time on Monday. If Mr. Wagner has decided to renew proceedings in the cases of Marcotte and Dion, he is wasting his time, because he will not be able to send them to the gallows.

The object of this bill is to hand over to the judicial power what should, in my humble opinion, be under its jurisdiction, and not under the executive power. According to the provisions of the bill, the Court of Appeal alone could approve a commutation of a death sentence. The board would act only on the recommendation of the Court of Appeal.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Choquette moves that the bill be read a first time.

[Translation]

Mr. Prosper Boulanger (Mercier): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the member for Lotbinière seemed to rush through his explanation, especially when he referred to Mr. Wagner, I am not sure of the words which will appear in Hansard and I know they will be rather worthwhile. Therefore, with your permission I should like my colleague to repeat his remarks so that they will be quite clear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The words spoken have been heard and will be duly reported in the official report.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The gratuitous observations of this gentleman cannot pass unchallenged. It is very interesting that he now backs away from the position he previously took, and has no trust in his own administration or the cabinet of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is obviously no question of privilege here.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member to kindly resume his seat.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I thank the Leader of the Opposition for not attempting to introduce the—

Mr. Lambert: You idiot.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière will no doubt let the Chair make a ruling first regarding the question of privilege which he raised. I must tell him that there is no question of privilege and that the matter may not be debated any further.

Questions

Mr. Choquette: The Leader of the Opposition, in spite of the rules of the house, has imputed motives to a member—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a new question of privilege or point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I must say that what the hon. gentleman has said was enveloped in noise and one was not able to understand his remarks. However, I am sure that when they appear in Hansard they will be equally incoherent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask Your Honour to intervene to bring this contest between these two parliamentary giants to an end.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Prime Minister has said, I suggest it would take someone much bigger than he.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ADVERTISING RESPECTING NEW ELECTORAL DISTRICTS

Question No. 48—Mr. Irvine:

1. Were ten pages of advertising inserted by any department or branch of the government in the Toronto Daily Star on or about June 15, 1965, regarding "proposed federal electoral districts"?
2. If so, what was the cost of such insertion?
3. How many other papers weekly and daily were used in this program?
4. What was the total lineage?
5. What was the total cost for this entire program?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As was stated in reply to question No. 148 on February 2, 1966, pages 585-6 of Hansard, the commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act do not report to the government so that the government does not have records giving the information sought in this question. Under section 10 of the act the commissions are not agencies of Her Majesty. Reports of the commissions are made directly to the House of Commons.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ALBERTA ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

Question No. 202—Mr. Lambert:

1. In what places did the Electoral Boundaries commission for Alberta hold public hearings?
2. On what date and at what hour was each such hearing held?
3. What members of the commission attended each such hearing?
4. What staff of the commission attended each such hearing?
5. Was any transcript taken of the proceedings of each such hearing and, if not, what precisely was the nature of the record made of the proceedings at each such meeting and by whom was it made?
6. By what method were members of the commission who absented themselves from any of such hearings informed of the nature of the representations made by persons appearing before the commission?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As was stated in reply to question No. 148 on February 2, 1966, page 585-6 of Hansard, the commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act do not report to the government so that the government does not have records giving the information sought in this question. Under section 10 of the act the commissions are not agencies of Her Majesty. Reports of the commissions are made directly to the House of Commons.

REASONS FOR ELECTORAL BOUNDARY CHANGES, ALBERTA

Question No. 212—Mr. Lambert:

Were any reasons for the changes made in the electoral boundaries of the federal constituencies of the province of Alberta compiled in either detailed form or in résumé and, if so, are these available for consideration by members of the House of Commons and the public?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): As was stated in reply to question No. 148 on February 2, 1966, pages 585-6 of Hansard, the commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act do not report to the government so that the government does not have records giving the information sought in this question. Under section 10 of the act the commissions are not agencies of Her Majesty. Reports of the commissions are made directly to the House of Commons.

VICTOR SPENCER—COST OF SURVEILLANCE

Question No. 413—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, is the monthly cost of surveillance as applied to George Victor Spencer?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): It is not deemed in the public interest to disclose amounts spent in security and intelligence matters.

LAND PRICES

Question No. 661—Mr. Jorgenson:

In each of the years from 1950 to 1965, what has been the average price of land in each of the following areas (a) B.C. (b) the prairies (c) Ontario (d) Quebec (e) Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The attached table sets forth estimates of the value per acre of farm land by provinces for the years 1950 to 1965 inclusive. These values are collected each December by means of a mail questionnaire survey of about 25,000 farmers situated all across Canada. About 60 per cent of these farmers reply to the following question: "What is the average sales value per acre of occupied farm land in your district? Include value of buildings in your calculations". Since the averages derived from these surveys tend to be above census levels, it is assumed that our respondents are better than average farmers. Consequently, the value of this series is as an indicator of change rather than as a measure of absolute level.

Average values per acre of occupied farm land in Canada

Year	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.
1950	55	52	51	66	75	39	26	35	87
1951	60	55	52	74	90	42	28	37	92
1952	61	54	51	76	92	43	29	37	93
1953	61	54	54	77	98	49	30	43	99
1954	59	54	52	81	101	45	29	41	102
1955	59	56	54	82	107	46	31	42	107
1956	61	59	56	86	111	48	32	43	109
1957	61	59	57	86	115	47	32	43	115
1958	64	64	60	89	123	49	33	46	120
1959	67	70	63	92	133	48	34	47	129
1960	67	69	62	95	132	52	36	50	133
1961	67	73	66	98	141	54	37	51	135
1962	70	71	63	97	147	55	40	54	138
1963	71	71	62	100	150	59	47	59	140
1964	73	74	65	104	163	66	55	66	145
1965	75	77	68	111	175	75	66	76	160

MOTOR VEHICLE PURCHASES

Question No. 969—Mr. Harley:

How many motor vehicles were purchased by the federal government in each of the past five years?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The departments have given me the following information:

1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
1639	1761	1683	2132	2478

R.C.M.P. SURVEILLANCE

Question No. 982—Mr. Mather:

How many persons are under surveillance by the R.C.M.P. in Canada?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): It is not possible to state how many, if any, persons are under surveillance at any particular time. Surveillance is an ordinary police procedure which may be applied for a variety of reasons over varying periods of time.

CANADIAN EMPLOYEES OF INTERNATIONAL AGENCIES

Question No. 994—Mr. Harley:

1. To the knowledge of the government, how many Canadians are employed full time as direct employees of the various international agencies to which Canada is a contributing member such as NATO and SHAPRE and the various agencies of the United Nations such as the world health organization and the food and agriculture organization?

2. What are the total number of employees of the above international bodies?

3. Is a break-down available showing country of origin of all of the above employees?

4. What is the total budget of the bodies listed in answer to part 1 above?

5. In regard to part 4 above, what proportion of this budget is contributed by Canada for each of the bodies mentioned in part 1?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answers to the above questions appear in the following table.

Questions

Organization	(1) Number of Canadians employed	(2) Total number employed[1]	(3) Existence of breakdown by nationality	(4) Total budget 1965 (US $)	(5) Canadian contribution %
United Nations	197	8,934	*	99,757,520	3.17
International Labour Organization	33	1,900	†	19,304,347	3.36
World Health Organization	60	2,965	†	39,507,000	2.83
International Telecommunication Union	3	406	†	4,952,894	3.26
World Meteorological Organization	3	131	†	1,768,745	2.63
Inter-governmental Maritime Consultative Organization	0	64	*	828,500	1.60
International Atomic Energy Agency	15	603	†	7,938,000	2.87
UNESCO	17	2,636	†	23,896,058	2.98
International Civil Aviation Organization	240	532	†	6,429,671	4.51
International Monetary Fund[2]	40	743	†	N/A	N/A
International Bank[2] / International Development Association	81	1,214	†	N/A	N/A
International Finance Corporation	9	154	†	N/A	N/A
Universal Postal Union	1	64	†	1,221,181	2.69
Food and Agriculture Organization	91	4,209	*	20,797,588	4.15
NATO[3]	7	922	*	9,829,572	5. 8

* = Yes.
† = Not published.

[1] The figures cited above have been supplied by the organizations concerned and include all ranks. At the junior staff levels, particularly in the stenographic and clerical grades, a relatively large number of the employees are nationals of the country in which the relevant organizations maintain their headquarters and principal offices.

[2] Canada has paid in full its subscription to the IMF, IBRD and IFC, and was not required, therefore, to make payments in 1965. As to IDA, of the commitment of $15,027,012 which represents the first instalment of Canada's supplementary contribution to IDA resources, $13,274,518 was drawn during 1965. A further sum of $2.5 million was drawn in January 1966.

[3] SHAPE is an international military headquarters to which member governments assign personnel, generally from their armed forces, for tours of duty. Most of its staff are thus not employed in the same way that the above organizations employ their personnel.

EMPLOYMENT OF CONSTRUCTION FIRMS

Question No. 1,077—Mr. Lind:

1. How many times from June 30, 1963, until the present has the Department of Public Works (Ottawa branch and National Capital Commission) employed the services of the following firms (a) Pillar Construction Ltd., Ottawa (b) J. P. Statham Construction Ltd., Ottawa (c) Lanctot Construction Company, Ottawa (d) Beaver Construction Ltd., Montreal?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

2. In each case, what was the amount of their original tender on each contract?

3. In each case, what was the final payment on each contract including all extras?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. All contracts awarded since June 30, 1963 and completed prior to March 17, 1966:

Questions

Firm	N.C.C.	D.P.W.
(a) Pillar Construction Ltd., Ottawa	2	3
(b) J. R. Statham Construction Ltd., Ottawa	32	8
(c) Lanctot Construction Ltd., Ottawa	2	17
(d) Beaver Construction Ltd., Montreal	2	2

2 and 3. In each case the original tender price and the final payment including all extras on each contract is listed below:

Firm	National Capital Commission		Department of Public Works
	Original tender	Final payment including extras	Original tender	Final payment including extras
(a) Pillar Construction Ltd., Ottawa	$ 55,051.00	$ 57,105.00	$70,607.00	$ 73,385.43
	413,257.00	in progress	92,300.00	138,042.25
			7,997.00	7,985.75
(b) J. R. Statham Construction Ltd., Ottawa	10,024.00	10,666.61	13,490.00	14,364.83
	2,645.00	2,645.00	7,390.00	7,390.00
	295.00	295.00	8,909.00	8,030.00
	228.00	228.00	12,490.00	12,825.15
	335.00	335.00	6,000.00	6,250.00
	379.00	379.00	27,790.00	32,164.20
	271.00	271.00	9,490.00	11,679.00
	638.00	638.00	6,890.00	7,086.00
	356.00	356.00
	810.00	810.00
	779.00	779.00
	1,179.00	1,179.00
	2,695.55	2,695.55
	634.00	634.00
	2,319.00	2,319.00
	2,319.00	2,457.00
	970.00	970.00
	308.00	308.00
	145.00	145.00
	498.00	498.00
	363.00	363.00
	325.00	325.00
	250.00	250.00
	250.00	250.00
	309.00	309.00
	450.00	450.00
	271.00	271.00
	810.00	810.00
	203.00	203.00
	11,000.00	in progress
	12,890.00	in progress
	12,389.00	in progress

Questions

Firm—(continued)	National Capital Commission		Department of Public Works
	Original tender	Final payment including extras	Original tender	Final payment including extras
(c) Lanctot Construction Ltd., Ottawa	66,214.00	72,217.90	22,736.00	25,092.20
	9,735.00	9,735.00	88,023.00	93,266.48
			30,800.00	35,043.35
			10,586.00	12,819.31
			6,732.00	7,179.00
			26,732.00	28,679.65
			7,736.00	7,933.00
			5,854.00	6,204.00
			5,151.00	5,151.00
			5,650.00	6,515.00
			6,788.00	6,788.00
			7,138.00	7,138.00
			6,880.00	6,880.00
			5,886.00	7,922.01
			58,346.00	66,596.21
			12,836.00	14,732.00
			7,800.00	7,800.00
(d) Beaver Construction Ltd., Montreal	1,051,701.00	in progress	27,942.02	36,289.49
	1,974,862.00	in progress	8,500.00	8,500.00

IMMIGRATION FROM WEST INDIES

Question No. 1,174—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. In what countries of the West Indies does Canada have immigration offices?

2. How many applications from intending immigrants to Canada have been received from each country of the West Indies each year since 1960?

3. How many immigrants have been admitted to Canada from each country of the West Indies each year since 1960?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. None. Applications submitted by prospective immigrants in the Caribbean area are processed by visiting examination teams from Canada.

2. Not available. Such statistics are maintained, for workload purposes, only in countries where immigration offices have been established.

3. See the following table.

Immigrant arrivals from countries of the West Indies, 1960 to 1965

Country	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Antigua	Individual figures not available prior to 1964				35	52
Bahama Islands					21	22
Barbados					422	560
Caymen Islands					—	1
Cuba					29	23
Dominica					22	22
Dominican Republic					7	22
Dutch West Indies					15	30
Grenada					32	48
Guadeloupe					3	1
Haiti					62	88
Jamaica					912	1,214
Martinique					3	3
Montserrat					17	19
Nevis					1	6
Porto Rico					3	1
St. Kitts					22	38
St. Lucia					31	41
St. Vincent					82	117
Tobago					4	5
Trinidad					467	775
Virgin Islands (British)					1	1
Virgin Islands (U.S.A.)					2	1
Other West Indies					6	5
TOTAL	1,276	1,263	1,586	2,354	2,199	3,095

SMELTER STUDY, HAY RIVER-PINE POINT AREA

Question No. 1,235—Mr. Orange:

Has the economic feasibility study to determine potentiality of a smelter in the Hay River-Pine Point area, that was announced by the government on February 25, 1966, begun and, if so (a) are any companies operating in the area sharing in the cost of the study (b) how much will the study cost (c) when will the report of the study be available (d) what are the terms of reference of this study?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes; (a) No; (b) A maximum of $160,000; (c) December 31, 1966. In this connection, it should be mentioned that a portion of the consultants' report will be classified as confidential because it will contain information regarding ore reserves which has been obtained from mining companies working in the Pine Point area.

(d) Terms of Reference for Pine Point Smelter Study: 1. In general, the consultant, Canadian Bechtel Limited, will carry out a study of the economic feasibility of providing smelting facilities for lead and zinc ores and concentrates in the Pine Point area, Northwest Territories.

2. In particular, the study will include the following: (a) An assessment of the reserves of lead and zinc ores in the Northwest Territories which are located sufficiently close to Pine Point, Northwest Territories, to enable such ores to be treated profitably at a lead-zinc treatment plant located at Pine Point. This assessment will include tonnages, grade, and types of ores in the measure, indicated and inferred categories and will also include an evaluation of the probability of developing additional reserves. The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources will endeavour to obtain commitments from all mining companies who are active in the Pine Point area to provide the consultant with whatever information he may require. Periodic re-assessments of ore reserves will be made during the course of the study as more information becomes available.

(b) An assessment of the optimum size and most suitable type of smelting facility or treatment plant taking into consideration the following: (i) Capital and operating costs; (ii) Projected markets and prices for lead and zinc; (iii) Availability of power, fuel and raw materials required in the process.

(c) An assessment of the possibility of marketing by-products from the treatment process such as sulphur or sulphuric acid.

(d) An assessment of the economic impact of a new lead-zinc treatment plant at Pine Point on the economy of not only the Pine Point area but the Northwest Territories in general.

(e) An assessment of subsidies which may be required if the study should indicate that a smelter located at Pine Point is not as economically feasible as a smelter at some other location.

(f) An assessment of the effect, if any, of recent discoveries of large deposits of lead and zinc ores in the Yukon on the possible provision of new lead and zinc treatment facilities at Pine Point.

3. In its study, the consultant will bear in mind the timing of bringing a lead and zinc treatment plant into operation at Pine Point with the bringing into production of new mines in the Pine Point area.

4. While it is realized that the time of completion of the study will depend to a large extent on the availability of information on ore reserves, the consultant will endeavour to present his final report to the Department by December 31, 1966.

5. The consultant's final report will be prepared in such a manner that a section of the report, which will contain essentially a broad interpretation of the study, may be made available to the public without revealing anything of a confidential nature. The remainder of the report which will contain confidential information and which will be available only to the government will contain a detailed assessment of the subject of the study with full supporting data.

INDIAN AFFAIRS PLACEMENT OFFICERS

Question No. 1,245—Mr. Orlikow:

How many employment placement officers does the Indian affairs branch employ in each province?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources):

	Establishment	Number of positions filled
Prince Edward Island (Served by placement officer located at Amherst, Nova Scotia)	Nil	Nil
Nova Scotia	2	2
New Brunswick	1	1
Quebec	7(2)*	2
Ontario	11(1)*	9
Manitoba (Negotiations under way for province to provide placement services for Indian residents)	1	1
Saskatchewan	3	2
Alberta	4	3
British Columbia	13(8)*	3

*The figure shown in brackets under the establishment column denotes positions for combined duties as placement and resources officers.

COST OF INDIAN SERVICES

Question No. 1,246—Mr. Orlikow:

What are the costs to the federal government of Indian services for health, welfare, education, and economic development?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: During the year 1964-65 the Department of National Health and Welfare expended a total of $19,701,230 for health services provided to the Indian population.

In so far as the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources is concerned: During the 1964-65 fiscal year, the federal government spent $16,661,499.67 in regard to Indian welfare, $35,692,976.98 in connection with Indian education and $4,113,415.23 for the economic development of the Indian people in Canada.

DIRECTOR OF NATIONAL GALLERY

Question No. 1,257—Mr. McKinley:

1. What appointments have been made to the National Gallery of Canada since January 1, 1966?

2. Has a successor been appointed to replace Dr. C. F. Comfort and, if not, has a successor as director been determined on although not yet anounced?

3. Has an acting director been appointed or arranged for?

Answer: 1. Asst. technician 3, Mr. Leo Cave; Technical officer 1, Mrs. H. White; Steno 3 (secretary), Mrs. O. Neveu; Steno 3 (secretary), Miss D. Girouard.

2. No.

3. Yes, Dr. W. S. A. Dale.

HEARING ON NATIONAL PARKS POLICY

Question No. 1,268—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. Did the government receive a communication from Jasper Residents Association dated March 18, 1966 and, if so (a) what was the nature of this communication (b) what was the government's reply?

2. Will the government give an opportunity for a full hearing into national parks policy, both to the members of the House of Commons and to residents of the national parks and, if so, when?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes; (a) A reply to my letter to the association dated January 27, 1966 dealing with national parks leasehold matters; (b) An interim reply has been sent by a member of my staff informing the association that I will reply more fully when I have had an opportunity to consider the association's comments.

2. In answer to my hon. friend's question in the house on April 4, 1966 (Hansard page 3787) I indicated that the residents of Jasper and Banff will have every opportunity of placing their comments before the government prior to the introduction of legislation and that this opportunity will be given as soon as the house progresses with its work.

HOURLY PAY RATES AT H.M.C. DOCKYARD

Question No. 1,270—Mr. Forrestall:

By classification and trade, what are the present schedules of pay for hourly paid employees at H.M.C. Dockyard Halifax, and H.M.C. Dockyard Esquimalt?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence):

Classifications	Rates
	H.M.C. Dockyard Halifax	H.M.C. Dockyard Esquimalt
Acetylene Burner & Cutter Class A	2.37	N.A.
Acetylene Burner & Cutter Class B	2.28	N.A.
Acetylene Burner & Cutter Class C	2.13	N.A.
Acetylene Generator Operator	2.24	N.A.
Air Compressor Operator Grade 1	2.38	N.A.
Air Compressor Operator Grade 2	2.30	N.A.
Air Compressor Operator Grade 3	2.21	N.A.
Armament Mechanic	N.A.	3.05
Armament Fitter	2.41-2.46*	N.A.
Automotive Component Mechanic	2.30	N.A.
Batteryman	2.19	N.A.
Blacksmith and Anglesmith	2.42-2.47*	3.15
Blacksmith Striker	2.11	N.A.
Boiler Cleaner	2.05	N.A.
Boilermaker	2.44-2.49*	3.15
Boilermaker and Blacksmith Helper	N.A.	2.79
Bricklayer	2.51	3.25
Carpenter	2.42-2.47*	3.10
Caulker Ballast Tank Testing	2.48	N.A.
Caulker Iron or Wood	2.39	N.A.
Caulker (Iron)	N.A.	3.15
Caulker (Wood)	N.A.	3.13
Cement Finisher	2.17	2.77
Chipper and Caulker	2.42	N.A.
Coppersmith	2.58	3.10
Cradleman	2.19	N.A.
Crane Operator	2.39	N.A.
Crane Operator (OEBI)	2.30	N.A.
Crane Operator (Crawler)	N.A.	3.10
Crane Operator (10 ton inside)	N.A.	2.82
Crane Operator (20 ton 50 ft. swinging boom)	N.A.	3.10
Derrick Fireman	N.A.	2.66
Derrick Operator	N.A.	3.10
Driller	N.A.	3.15
Driver	2.05	2.25
Driver (Heavy)	2.25	2.52
Electrician Automotive	2.30	N.A.
Electrician Ship or Maintenance	2.42-2.47*	3.20
Engine Fitter	2.42-2.47*	N.A.
First Aid Attendant A	N.A.	2.66
First Aid Attendant B	N.A.	2.77
First Aid Attendant C	N.A.	2.82
Fitter	N.A.	3.15
Hammersmith	2.40	N.A.
Heater (Rivet)	N.A.	2.82
Heavy Equipment Operator	2.35	2.70
Hoisting Operator (non-swinging boom)	N.A.	2.82
Holder-on	2.28	2.91
Industrial Equipment Mechanic	2.45	N.A.
Instrument Repairman	2.86	3.25

Questions

Classifications	Rates H.M.C. Dockyard Halifax	H.M.C. Dockyard Esquimalt
Iron Workers (Ships' Plater)	N.A.	3.15
Joiner	2.42-2.47*	N.A.
Labourer	2.00	2.49
Lagger	N.A.	3.10
Light Equipment Operator	2.10	2.45
Loftsman	2.64	3.25
Machine Operator	2.24	N.A.
Machine Repairman	2.42-2.47*	N.A.
Machinist	2.42-2.47*	3.15
Machinist and Fitter Helper Class 1	N.A.	2.79
Machinist Specialist	N.A.	2.95
Maintenance Machinist	N.A.	3.15
Maintenance Mechanic	2.42-2.47*	N.A.
Maintenance Mechanic (Liferaft)	N.A.	3.00
Maintenance Mechanic (Oil Burner)	N.A.	3.10
Millwright	2.45-2.50*	N.A.
Motor Mechanic	2.25	2.58
Painter	2.35	3.10
Painter (Brush)	2.07	N.A.
Painter Finish	2.46	N.A.
Painter Spray (shop)	2.05	2.58
Painter Spray	2.25	3.25
Panel Beater and Bodyman	2.25	2.58
Pattern Maker	2.61	N.A.
Pipe Coverer	2.34	N.A.
Pipefitter	2.43-2.48*	3.10
Plasterer	2.69	3.10
Plater	2.42-2.47*	N.A.
Plumber	2.43-2.48*	3.10
Refrigeration Mechanic	N.A.	3.10
Rigger	2.39-2.44*	3.10
Riveter	2.42	3.15
Sailmaker—Canvas Worker	2.21	N.A.
Sand Blasting Operator	2.25	3.10
Scaler—Boiler	2.05	N.A.
Scaler and Cleaner	N.A.	2.39
Scaler and Cleaner (When using Power Tools)	N.A.	2.82
Sheet Metal Worker	2.41-2.46*	3.10
Shipwright	2.42-2.47*	3.10
Sign Painter	2.42	N.A.
Steamfitter	2.43-2.48*	N.A.
Tank Cleaner	2.04	N.A.
Tile Setter	2.68	3.10
Toolmaker	2.62	3.25
Trades Helper	2.11	2.66
Welder	2.42-2.47*	3.15
Electro-Plater	2.15	2.85

*—The maximum rate in these ranges are paid to all employees with one or more years of service.

[Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne).]

PUBLIC WORKS—EMPLOYMENT OF CASUAL LABOUR OVER 65

Question No. 1,278—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

Does the Department of Public Works refuse to employ for casual work anyone over the age of 65 years?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

HARVEST INSURANCE

Question No. 1,302—Mr. Latulippe:

Have there been consultations recently between the federal government and provincial authorities on the subject of harvest insurance and, if so (a) with what provinces (b) when did the consultations take place?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): (a) and (b) Yes, a meeting to discuss crop Insurance with representatives of all provinces was held on February 17, 1966.

UN CONVENTION ON RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Question No. 1,303—Mr. Scott (Danforth):

1. Has the government given consideration to adopting the convention of the last general assembly of the United Nations dealing with the elimination of racial discrimination?

2. If consideration has been given, has the government made a decision to ratify this agreement and, if so, what was that decision?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (1). Yes. The Canadian government strongly supported the adoption of this convention by the United Nations and regards it as a very important document. In a statement in explanation of the vote in the third committee of the United Nations on December 15, 1965, the Canadian delegate stated that it was regarded "as another of the great pioneering instruments by means of which the United Nations is laying the ground rules for civilized life on an ever widening scale". It is, however, a general policy that Canada does not enter into binding international treaty commitments until such time that it clearly is in a position to implement its obligations in terms of its domestic law. The subject matter of this convention is such that it appears to fall not only within those areas of domestic law which are the competence of the federal government, but also, in part, within those for which the provinces are responsible. The government is therefore presently engaged in a detailed study of the legal implications of the convention as a necessary first step to the question of signature and subsequent ratification. In so far as that should prove necessary, the Canadian government will naturally consult with the provinces with a view to obtaining their assurances that they will be prepared to implement any provisions which fall within their jurisdiction.

(2). For the reasons explained in the answer to the first question, a decision has not yet been taken on the ratification of the convention.

REFUND OF PENSION OVERPAYMENTS BY EMPLOYERS

Question No. 1,306—Mr. Crouse:

Has a procedure been put into effect to refund over-payments to the Canada and Quebec pension plans made by employers as workers move from one job to another?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): No.

MOVEMENT TO U.S. OF CANADIAN PROFESSIONAL WORKERS

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Orlikow:

Have any Canadian scientists, research workers, engineers, university professors, and medical doctors left Canada to work in the United States in each of the past three years and, if so, how many?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Immigrant aliens admitted to United States, whose country of last permanent residence was Canada:

	Year ended June 30th
Occupation	1963	1964	1965
Scientists:	209	238	242
Agricultural scientists	9	11	10
Biological scientists	18	23	20
Geologists and geophysicists	43	35	60
Mathematicians	5	8	7
Physicists	27	29	30
Miscellaneous natural scientists	2	11	4
Chemists	105	121	111
Engineers	871	768	863
Professors and instructors	118	126	133
Physicians and surgeons	467	440	380

Note: There is no separate grouping for "research workers".

Source: Immigration and Naturalization Service, United States Department of Justice.

*EXPORT CONTROLS ON CATTLE HIDES

Question No. 1,318—Mr. Irvine:

Is it the intention of the government to establish quota controls on export of Canadian cattle hides, calf and kip skins in an endeavour to protect our export markets and prevent inflation of shoe prices in Canada?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I announced in the house on March 23, exports of hides, skins, leather and leather manufactures of foreign origin now require individual export licences. This action was taken in order to control possible diversion of United States products to off-shore destinations and to maintain Canadian access to United States supplies.

Prior to and since this announcement extensive consultation has taken place with Canadian industry concerned including the Shoe Manufacturers' Association, hides and skins dealers and brokers, meat packers, farmers' federations, agricultural associations and Canadian tanners.

The situation is being watched carefully, but present circumstances do not appear to warrant further government action.

NATIONAL BUILDING CODE

Question No. 1,319—Mr. Reid:

Does the government have a national building code and, if so (a) what act of parliament provides authority for this code (b) what industries fall under this code (c) what are the penalties for violations of this code (d) how many prosecutions have there been in the past 5 years (e) how many prosecutions have been successful (f) what was the total amount collected in fines for violations (g) is this code accepted by all the provinces and, if not, by how many is it not?

Questions

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the National Research Council is concerned, the answer is as follows: (a) A national building code has been published, under the authority of the Research Council Act, as an advisory document which may be adopted legally by Canadian municipalities as their local building regulations; (b) Subject to determination by individual municipality; (c) Subject to determination by individual municipality; (d) Information not available; (e) Information not available; (f) Information not available; (g) Of a total of 1,960 Canadian municipalities surveyed in 1964, 719 located in every province are using the code in one form or another. This represents 65 per cent of the urban population of Canada.

TRAVEL BUREAU ADVERTISEMENTS IN U.S.

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Coates:

How much was paid during January, February, March and to date by the Canadian Government Travel Bureau to the publishers of American periodicals and newspapers for the full-page advertisement entitled: "There is more than one France. The one next door is called Canada."?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): $41,284 (U.S.) was paid MacLaren Advertising Co. Ltd. who handle this campaign on behalf of the Canadian Government Travel Bureau.

*CLOSING OF EMPLOYMENT SERVICE OFFICE, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 1,352—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is consideration being given by the department concerned to the closing out of the National Employment Service office at North Sydney, Nova Scotia?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): No.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, the starred question 1,363 is not on the order paper but it is in the Votes and Proceedings of the house, and if the house is agreeable, it could be answered immediately. I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Mr. Reid.]

[English]

*CLOSING OF AUTO PARTS FIRMS

Question No. 1,363—Mr. Scott (Victoria (Ont.)):

1. Have any firms closed down operations in Canada as a result of the Canada-United States free trade agreement on auto parts and, if so (a) how many firms have done so (b) what are their names and addresses (c) how many employees are affected by these shutdowns (d) what was the total payroll losses of those areas?

2. Have any firms transferred their purchasing departments from Canada to the United States as a result of the Canada-United States free trade agreement on auto parts and, if so (a) how many firms (b) what are their names and their locations?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. No.

2. We are aware that certain of the purchasing operations of the Ford Motor Company of Canada at Oakville have been transferred to the United States. I am not in a position to say whether this action resulted from the automotive program or whether it was planned prior to the introduction of the program.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the consent of the house to drop question No. 931 which stands in my name on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary of Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 118 for the production of papers is acceptable to the government, subject to the reservations about confidential applications and about the authorization of the municipal authorities concerned.

Would Your Honour call notice of motion No. 77?

[English]

BUTTER LOSS IN FIRE, SAINT-DENIS-SUR-RICHELIEU

Motion No. 118—Mr. Ricard:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence and exchanges between the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Forestry, the Minister without Portfolio, and any officer of the Department of Agriculture on the one hand and, on the other hand, the authorities and/or the representatives of the municipality of the village of Saint-Denis-sur-Richelieu, relating to the fire that destroyed a large quantity of butter at the Conserverie Saint-Denis on November 5, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

PENSION PLAN—DEDUCTIONS AND INTEGRATION

Motion No. 77—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any Treasury Board minutes and/or letters of instructions or advice issued by any officer of Treasury Board since the 1st of September, 1965, with respect to the deduction of Canada Pension Plan contributions from the salaries or wages of members of the public service, the loan of equivalent amounts to such members of the public service, the deduction of Canada Pension Plan contributions from increases in salaries or wages paid in 1966 to public servants for periods in 1965, or otherwise dealing with the techniques proposed of integrating the Canada Pension Plan and the Public Service Superannuation Act or other superannuation acts applicable to public servants.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this motion with the hon. member for Carleton. I have indicated to him that all the documents requested ordinarily would be considered privileged. I believe he will agree to withdraw this motion.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister has convinced me that a bad precedent might be established by the passage of this motion. I want to avoid bad precedents, since I expect to be sitting on the government side of the house within a short period. Accordingly, sir, I ask leave to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw that motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know through you or through the minister when I might have an answer to question No. 766, which has been on the order paper now for over 70 days. Also, when might I get an answer to question No. 48, which tomorrow will have been on the order paper for 100 days. That is a little too long, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have had a question on the order paper since January 21.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I draw to the attention of hon. members who have just spoken that we are not now on the subject of questions, but that we have moved on to notices of motions for the production of documents.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I move that the other notices of motion stand.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, there is a notice of motion dated March 21 under the name of my colleague the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) which has not been mentioned since March 21. I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State could tell us when notice of motion No. 113 will be mentioned. Is it the intention to forget it or to reply one of these days?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I spoke to the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac on this matter, and in view of the rather long reply involved, the hon. member informed me that he intended to wait in order to obtain complete information on the question.

[English]

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have had a question on the order paper since January 21, and another question on the order paper since January 28. Those are both questions directed to the Minister of Justice. I should like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of Justice to this fact. It is important that I have answers to these questions. If these questions cannot be answered, the Prime Minister either ought to say so or get another Minister of Justice who would answer them.

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On January 20 I asked the Prime Minister a question which you ruled should be put on the order paper. That became question No. 228, and has been on the order paper since January 24. I ask the Prime Minister when I might expect an answer to this question.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I must say that, as of Monday of this week, we had answered 89.5 per cent of the questions placed on the order paper since the beginning of this session.

Mr. Lambert: That means nothing.

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, while we are discussing questions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not judge by appearances. We are not on questions at the moment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I have questions dated February 11 and February 24, being questions Nos. 607 and 824 on the order paper, to both of which I am most anxious to receive answers.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

THREATENED STRIKE OF TORONTO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the fact that apparently negotiations or discussions between the producers and the C.B.C. president and management have broken down, and the fact that there has been a virtual ultimatum that on Sunday at 10 p.m., unless the request of the producers has been met, there may well be a strike, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what action the government intends to take to bring about the assurance that these negotiations will continue? What representations, if any, again consistent with the legislation setting up the C.B.C., has the government made? The Prime Minister said yesterday that he was very anxious and willing to use his good offices in this.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, paraphrasing the reply to this question yesterday, I think I said that naturally the government was anxious to do what it could to help in this regard, subject to the desirability of not intervening in the affairs of the C.B.C. My right hon. friend will know the difficulty in respect of government action in a matter of this kind, as it relates to a crown corporation.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that a committee of the house is considering this matter today. It has before it a resolution on the very point my right hon. friend referred to, and I should like to wait to see what the committee does with that resolution this afternoon before I say anything more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister say what that resolution is to which he made reference?

Mr. Pearson: I think the resolution deals with the possibility of the government's intervening, in order to bring about a solution of this difficulty.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the future minister of manpower.

In view of the fact that the winter works period is drawing to a close and in view of the fact that several municipalities could not complete their works due to the severe weather conditions which prevailed in several regions of this country, can the minister tell the house today whether he proposes to extend the winter works period in those regions where the said works could not be completed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the department to extend the winter works period.

Mr. Grégoire: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, has the minister received any requests from municipalities about this extension? Does he not think there is discrimination against the regions where weather conditions are unfavourable to winter works?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is out of order.

[English]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT—INABILITY TO OBTAIN ELECTORAL COMMISSION REPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of proceedings in this house. I have just been handed the replies to questions Nos. 202 and 212, which incidentally have been on the order paper since January 24. In order to establish my point of privilege, which affects not only myself but hon. members of the house generally, may I read the answer which has come to both questions:

> The commissions set up under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act do not report to the government so that the government does not have records giving the information sought in this question. Under section 10 of the act the commissions are not agencies of Her Majesty. Reports of the commissions are made directly to the House of Commons.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that the questions that have been put by myself and other members of the house, particularly by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), have been answered in the same vein, and are the only way for hon. members to seek information which affects themselves. They are not directed to any particular ministry, but the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) replies for the government.

The representation commissions are emanations of this house; they are responsible to this house. Hon. members have no means of communication with the representation commissions other than through the Secretary of State, and I would put it to Your Honour, and to all hon. members, that neither the representation commissioner nor any of the representation commissions is above the legitimate demands for information from members of the house. They are not satellites that have been shot off beyond recall nor reach. I would further point out that since hon. members are now to engage in a particular debate on redistribution, it is an affront to the house to deny the legitimate information sought by hon. members whose questions have been posed in the only way they could be put, namely on the order paper and directed to the Secretary of State.

I realize that the commissions are not responsible to the government. We know this; but members on the government side are in the same position as we are, whether they be cabinet ministers or not. Therefore I would say that this is a point that affects the privileges of the members of the house. I would deem it appropriate for Your Honour to take the matter under advisement and, if necessary, that Your Honour, whose predecessor had something to do with the appointment of the representation commissions, see that they be compelled to answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I shall have an opportunity to take these suggestions under advisement as urged by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, having just returned from a lecture given by Dr. David, a great heart specialist, during which he advised members of parliament to practice serenity, I wish to address a philosophical problem to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister please inform the house how he reconciles the policy of his department with the policy of the Department of National Health and Welfare with respect to the growing and the use of tobacco?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The rules of the house do not provide for acceptance by the Chair of philosophical questions.

SPORTS

FAILURE OF CANADA TO OBTAIN WINTER OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has he received, or is he aware of the widespread general protest regarding the influence of the unreasonable and unpractical park policies he has instituted, and of their being a factor in Canada failing to get the winter Olympics for 1972?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at once that I and my department regret very much that we failed in our second bid for the winter games. We had done all in our power to convince those who were concerned over conditions in the national park that, in our view, there would be no permanent damage, and very little temporary damage done out of holding the games. Further, we have received the agreement of our representatives, who did their best to bring the games to Canada, that we had done our utmost. At the same time I wish to assure the house that this will have no effect whatsoever on the development of Banff as a prime area for winter sports. There is already a very large sum of money invested in it, and there will be a great deal more.

Mr. Thompson: As a supplementary question, would the minister not agree that the parks policies he has instituted have given the conservationists the opportunity to influence the general Olympic council?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is argumentative and cannot be accepted by the Chair.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS IN REPORT ON RUN-THROUGHS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Having regard to the manner in which he discussed the Freedman report in Winnipeg yesterday, is he now in a position to answer my question of last Tuesday as to whether he is proposing a further inquiry, or whether he intends to propose implementation of the principal recommendations of that report this session?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am sorry, but I am not, Mr. Speaker. The matter will be placed before my colleagues in the cabinet at a very early date, however.

SHIPPING

NOVA SCOTIA—ABANDONMENT OF TRAWLER AFTER FIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, and in view of the fact that I did not have time to give him notice, perhaps he may take this as notice. When the fishing trawler Karen B recently caught fire about 100 miles east of Halifax and was abandoned by her crew, why did H.M.C.S. Gatineau leave the burned out Karen B before arrival of the Halifax based tug Foundation Vigilant?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has taken notice of the question and suggests that it be put on the order paper.

Mr. Crouse: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the fact that this ship was left abandoned on the high seas has resulted in the hull being claimed by a foreign country for salvage against the insurance company, the agents and owners. The fact that the Canadian destroyer abandoned this ship has resulted in this situation. I believe this is a most urgent and important question because we could have another burned out hull on the ocean tonight, and we do not want to see this practice followed in future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has referred specifically in his question to an incident which has already occurred and about which I assume not very much can be done at this time. The second part of his question, if I interpet it correctly in the way he poses it, now becomes hypothetical.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER REDUCTION IN STRENGTH OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence. Today I shall direct it to the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact that there is under consideration a further 10 per cent reduction in the effective strength of Canada's defence forces so as to keep up with the present rate of recruitment, and in view of the forces being under strength?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker; but I suggest it is obvious, even to my hon. friend, that if escalation of wages and emoluments in Canada continues at the present rate, and the defence budget remains stable as has been planned, it will be necessary in the years ahead to reduce the number of people and increase their productivity in order to provide adequate compensation for the work being performed.

Mr. Lambert: As a supplementary question, from the nature of the answer I take it the minister will agree that such a reduction is under contemplation, or is being considered?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think that is a fair interpretation, Mr. Speaker. I think some reduction may take place, but whatever reduction there is, it will be through normal attrition because, as my hon. friend knows, during the next three or four years a large number of world war II veterans will be leaving the forces, and it will be difficult to maintain fully adequate strength to perform all tasks without planning on a reduction.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): As a supplementary question, based on the minister's statement which he made just a minute ago, do I understand a ceiling has been placed on the amount of money which will be expended for defence purposes, and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) will not give the Minister of National Defence some leeway in protecting the security of this country and fulfilling our obligations to NATO?

Mr. Hellyer: The amount for the current year is stated in the estimates, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of National Defence how one measures the productivity of a member of the armed forces.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LABOUR SAFETY CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the promise the minister gave to the Canadian Labour Congress convention yesterday, to the effect that the Canada labour safety code would be introduced at this session, can he say when notice of this legislation will be placed on the order paper?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): It will not likely be put on the order paper for another few weeks. Progress has been made in the preparation of a draft bill, but it involves consultation with the provinces because of the enforcement angle. It will be placed on the order paper as soon as we can get it there. We are making good progress.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Will it be put on by the end of May?

HOUSING

REPORTED STOPPAGE OF MORTGAGE LOANS BY C.M.H.C.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Is it a fact that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation now has stopped lending even on pre-sold houses and thereby has dried up the last source of mortgage loans for residential purposes? Will the minister say now, for the benefit of expectant householders and builders across Canada, that there is going to be some alleviation of the serious situation which has been created as a result of the virtual stopping of any additional amounts by way of mortgage loans.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I regret I cannot give that assurance. The situation is serious, but I am happy to say, as a result of studies I personally have made in conjunction with senior officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that while it is more serious in a few areas than in most others, it is not as serious as one would be led to believe by the telegrams and messages coming to members of this house. Further reports are coming in daily and it might be a matter of another few days before I can give the hon. gentleman the assurance he has asked for. However, I can say that an announcement will be made in a matter of days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In that connection would the minister say whether it is a fact that in the housing construction field this year there will be some 35,000 fewer homes built than last year.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, even if things proceed as they now are, and even with the conditions which now prevail, the situation is not as bad as the right hon. gentleman would indicate. Last year for the fourth consecutive year we had an increase in house building. We reached a record figure of 166,000 odd houses. We are not likely to reach that figure this year, but certainly we do not anticipate that it will be down by anything like the figure the right hon. gentleman has suggested. It may be down 10 or 15 per cent from last year, however, largely because of the actions of private investors.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister not agree with Mr. Herbert Hignett, the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who predicted that as many as 35,000 fewer homes will be built this year as compared to last year? Does he not agree with what the president of the corporation said?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that the question to some extent is argumentative. In any event it has been answered in a general way by the minister to whom it was posed in the first instance.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The minister has indicated the situation is critical in certain areas. Is the government giving consideration to the providing of perhaps more direct loans in those critical areas.

Mr. Nicholson: That aspect of the matter will be included in the announcement which can be expected within the next few days. In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I think I should say that the statement attributed to the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is taken out of context, it is predicated on the expectation that there might be no additional speculative loans made this fall. If no such loans were made during the fall months, as has been the case in the last three years, this forecast by Mr. Hignett will be so; but it is not anticipated that such will be the situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the explanation given by the minister, does he agree that the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation did predict that as many as 35,000 fewer homes would be built this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that in the way in which the question is put now—whether the minister agrees that the statement was made—is not in a form which might be acceptable.

FINANCE

REFUSAL OF LOANS BY INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question in respect of the Industrial Development Bank which I should like to direct to the Minister of Finance. Have instructions gone forward from the government to dry up loans from the Industrial Development Bank, thereby affecting somewhat a possible expansion in Canadian construction?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POWER TO STANDING COMMITTEES TO SIT WHILE HOUSE SITTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider giving the required notice of motion in this house so that the standing committees would be granted the power to sit while the house is sitting until consideration of all estimates referred to these committees have been considered.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to think about that question before giving a definite reply.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? In such a case, would the Prime Minister suggest attending a committee session or a sitting of the house?

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Speaker: No, I do not think the question of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) can be entertained, since it is based on the possibility or the contingency that the proposition will be accepted. It is, then, a hypothetical question and, consequently, cannot be entertained.

Mr. Grégoire: In that case I shall put a supplementary but not hypothetical question. If the right hon. Prime Minister is called on for a decision, could he state his views to the hon. members as to whether the sittings of the house or the committee sessions should be attended.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question errs in the same manner as the preceeding one put by the hon. member. It is also unacceptable.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONTROL OF IMPORTATION OF MISLABELLED FOREIGN DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I shouuld like to address a question to his parliamentary secretary, to whom I have sent notice of my question. This is a supplementary question arising out of the minister's partial answer to my question of March 24. Have checks now been completed concerning the importer of dangerously mislabelled drugs, and has the importer, the Lucas Company, been de-listed as an authorized supplier of drugs to Canada's armed forces.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I will be pleased to bring it to the attention of the minister.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. Can the minister say whether the Lucas Company, referred to by the hon. member for Simcoe East is the same company to which his Department of Industry gave tax concessions, if they would locate in the former depressed area of Windsor?

Mr. Speaker: Order; I do not think that question is acceptable. Perhaps it should be placed on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

SHOWING IN U.K. OF MISLEADING FILM ON CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he will investigate reports that a Canadian immigration department film, currently being shown to capacity audiences of prospective immigrants in the United Kingdom, presents a somewhat technicoloured picture of life in Canada which is misleading and which may lead to discontentment on the part of the immigrants when they arrive in this country.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the matter raised by the hon. member will be taken under consideration by the minister. If the hon. member wishes, he might place his question on the order paper.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AMHERST, N.S.—LAY-OFFS AT ENAMEL AND HEATING PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the minister received a telegram from the president of the union at Enamel and Heating Products Limited of Amherst with regard to impending lay-offs through a reduced work load, with a request for action from his department to prevent these lay-offs? What action does he plan to take?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any telegram.

Mr. Coates: I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. I understand that telegrams have gone forward to officials of the government regarding the pending lay-off. I wonder whether he will make a check in this regard and indicate what his department anticipates it might do to alleviate this pending situation.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, as I said before I do not have a telegram, but I will check to see whether any has been received. I do know that for some time in the past efforts have been made to maintain a sufficient work load at Enamel and Heating to enable them to continue to compete for U.S. contracts. We are continuing to do as much as possible to maintain this business, and enable the company to engage in export trade.

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGES LEMAY—REQUEST FOR EXTRADITION FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I shall put my question to the Prime Minister.

It is reported that the acting sheriff of Dade county, Miami, implied yesterday that the Canadian government had failed to apply for the extradition of Georges Lemay when he was arrested by the U.S. police. Did the government make such a request?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not so urgent that the member could not put it on the order paper.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, he is Canada's most wanted criminal and he was found by means of "Early Bird". The Canadian people must know what action was taken by the government and the Minister of Justice, when Georges Lemay was found, to have him extradited to Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The member will know in due time.

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY UNIONS—THREATENED STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. I believe it is very urgent and is one I have asked several times in recent weeks. In view of the growing threat of a rail strike and the crisis this would precipitate in national transportation and communications, is the government planning any action to avert such a crisis, and has any plan been made to provide emergency services should this breakdown take place?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as was made clear, I believe, in the house by an announcement some time ago, two conciliation boards have been set up to deal with the matters in dispute. They are to be chaired by a very able gentleman who is the unanimous choice of both the railways and the unions concerned. The first sitting of the conciliation board is to commence on May 31. The situation is serious, but perhaps not as serious as might be indicated by the wording of the question put to me by the hon. member. I think it would be unwise, in my view, to anticipate the findings of these conciliation boards, where the chairman of which has been agreed upon by both sides.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACT FOR REPAIR AND REFIT OF H.M.C.S. "BONAVENTURE"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, at this time I should like to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) as to when an announcement would be made regarding the awarding of the contract for the refitting of the Bonaventure. That announcement has been made today.

A contract has been awarded to the value of $4,913,541 to Davie Shipbuilding Ltd. at Lauzon, Que. I should point out, lest there be any misunderstanding, that there are three elements of cost in the overhaul of the Bonaventure. One involves a firm price contract in the amount of some $4,900,000 for the work, for which specifications have been prepared in advance. There is another element of work on which competitive bids were submitted on a unit price basis for unknown work which will arise in the course of the inspection which is being carried out. This amount of work has been estimated to cost approximately $855,000, and I want to make it clear that that is only an estimate.

The third element of cost relates to stores and equipment in the nature of radar, electronic gear, air conditioning equipment, evaporators, oil purifiers, mechanical stores and related items to be purchased by the Department of Defence Production on behalf of the navy, to be furnished directly to the shipyards for installation. The amount of these purchases is estimated at approximately $2,230,000.

The sum of these individual items amounts to a total estimated cost for refitting the Bonaventure of something in the order of $8 million—and not $4,900,000 as announced as the firm price contract to Davie Shipbuilding Ltd.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Do any of these contracts have any contingency clauses such as those often contained in building contracts, as a result of which padding can take place often to the extent of 10 per cent? If so, to what percentage do they exist?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, these contracts to not contain contingency clauses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FAILURE TO LIST MEMBERS IN NEW TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a brief question to the Secretary of State, asking the hon. lady why it was deemed necessary or advisable to drop the names of all hon. members of this house, except those who are heads of departments or parliamentary secretaries, from the alphabetical section of the new government telephone book just issued?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not had occasion recently to use a telephone book; therefore I am not in a position to give my hon. friend an answer. I realize that hon. members want to have their names and numbers available for constituents, at least, and I would be happy to obtain an answer for the hon. member.

• (3:40 p.m.)

REDISTRIBUTION

CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS TO COMMISSION REPORTS

Mr. Speaker: On January 24 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with me in the following terms, namely:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified.

(1) Historical connotation of the present name of the constituency of Quebec East.

(2) Possible confusion with the boundaries of a provincial constituency and city limits.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I should like an explanation about the procedure referred to earlier this afternoon, namely whether the specific points included in a general notice of objection can be discussed during this afternoon's debate, whether you have to hear motions from members concerning their respective constituencies or whether specific notices will also be debated this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member as well all hon. members kindly note that the 16 notices of objection concerning the province of Quebec will be heard seriatim, according to the order in which they were filed with the Chair. The remaining two, of a general nature, will be examined later on, after consideration of the motions concerning Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

May I point out that there were not 16 but 14 particular objections.

Mr. Grégoire: There are 16, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I merely wish to ask you to check, in future, the notices of objections submitted by some of the Quebec ridings. There are several of these notices of which one comprises four cases.

I therefore ask the Chair to study the objections in those special cases separately, and not to include them in the general objections.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will surely understand that it is impossible for the Chair to start a discussion with the hon. member or any other member of the house. The Chair will call the objections submitted to it in their chronological order.

The first notice submitted to the Chair is that of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Duquet).

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this House to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the Report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Quebec, laid before this House by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter specified.

(1) Historical connotation of the present name of the constituency of Quebec East.

(2) Possible confusion with the boundaries of a provincial constituency and city limits.

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Quebec East): I am happy to speak for the first time in the house, all the more so because I take the floor to justify the notice of objection now before the house which is to keep to the riding of Quebec East, which I represent, the name it now bears. It has been decided to change it and we feel that such a decision is unwarranted.

Mr. Speaker, on November 20, 1964, Statute 13, Elizabeth II, Chapter 31, was sanctioned under the title: Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. That legislation authorized the establishment of commissions to revise the electoral boundaries throughout the country.

In the case of the province of Quebec, that commission was presided by judge Paul Langlois, of Montreal, and was made up of Mr. François Drouin, lawyer, chief electoral officer for the province of Quebec; Mr. Nelson Castonguay, representation commissioner, in Ottawa, and Mr. Yves Caron, notary and professor of law, acting as secretary.

I would like to point out at the start, Mr. Speaker, that I do not question the competence of any of those distinguished people.

I wish to point out here that, through my notice of objection, I am not objecting in any way to the change made by the commissioners in the geographic boundaries of Quebec East but only to the new name of Limoilou.

To justify my objection, I give the five reasons that follow:

First, the geographic location of the riding; second, the possibility of confusion with the provincial riding; third, the fact that a double name cannot be considered a valid objection; fourth, the unanimous opposition against the proposed change and, fifth, the history of Quebec East.

With regard to the geographic location, Mr. Speaker, if you examine the map of the city of Quebec, you will see that the riding of Quebec East, as made up by the commissioners in their report, is bound on the east by the city of Giffard, located at the eastern end of the city of Quebec. It means that, taking into account the geographic limits of the city of Quebec, most of the riding occupies all the eastern section of the city, and geographically the name of Quebec East corresponds perfectly to the geographic reality of the place and, therefore, there is no reason why it should not be kept.

You will also note that, although the city of Quebec West was added to the riding, as suggested by the commissioners, this addition represents only about a fifth of the present area of the riding of Quebec East and the difference, that is four fifths of it, still remains in the eastern section of the city of Quebec.

In my opinion, this fact alone would be reason enough to prompt the commissioners to consider our objection to the proposed change in name and to maintain the designation of Quebec East.

The new electoral map of the province of Quebec now includes a new riding also called Limoilou. The geographical boundaries do not square at all with those of the federal riding. The population in the new constituency proposed by the commission and to be called Limoilou is not the same as in the provincial riding. This is a further reason for maintaining the name of Quebec East. Any possible confusion would thus be avoided between the provincial riding and the federal riding which bear the same name while having different geographical boundaries.

I am also told that in preparing their report, the commissioners sought to suppress double names. Even in such circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that, in the particular case of Quebec East, it would be possible to overlook this consideration.

In spite of all their good will, the Quebec commissioners were unable to follow this rule, and, in several cases, they maintained some of those hyphenated names such as Côte-Nord, Lac-Saint-Jean, Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, Mont-Royal, Louis-Hébert. These are hyphenated names and, in addition, the name of Trois-Rivières was kept. Now, if the name of the Trois-Rivières riding has been strictly maintained on account of the city of that name, I wonder why the name of Quebec East should be changed, a name designating the oldest constituency in Quebec city and, moreover, identifying it with this historic city, the capital city of the province of Quebec.

Besides, in the other provinces, the commissioners were not so parsimonious in this connection. In the province of Newfoundland are found the names of Bonavista-Twillingate, Trinity-Conception, Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador, Humber-St. George's. In Ontario, what is there to say about the names of these seven York ridings ending with East, West, South, Centre, North, etc. In Nova Scotia, you have the names of Antigonish-Guysborough, Cape Breton North and Victoria and many others. The same holds true in Alberta.

All the hyphenated names I have referred to are much more difficult to spell and pronounce than Quebec East. The elimination of hyphenated names therefore cannot justify the elimination of Quebec East.

Mr. Speaker, my fourth objection is that the people of Quebec East riding object. The people of Quebec East are insistent upon the maintenance of the name of the riding. I should like to call attention to the intervention of hundreds of constituents who have indicated to me their satisfaction with, and approval of, my objection. Indeed, I have received a multitude of representations on this question. Furthermore, at a meeting held in the constituency on January 31, those present unanimously asked that I oppose the change. I take this opportunity to thank my constituents and to congratulate them on their position on this question, which is indicative of their regard for the illustrious figures by whom Quebec East has been represented in the past.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the members of the commission will not remain indifferent to the opinion of a population of 50,000 voters.

As a last argument, I would like to bring forward the historical fact. In order to justify this motion, could I make a brief historical account of the riding of Quebec East.

On March 30, 1860, the riding of Quebec East was established by an act ratified on April 23, 1860, under the government of the hon. Cartier. My riding is thus 106 years old.

The first election in the riding took place on May 14, 1860. Notary Gabriel Huot became its first member, serving in the federal as well as the provincial government until July 21, 1867, under the government of Sir John A. Macdonald.

Notary Huot gave up his provincial mandate and was elected by acclamation, becoming the first federal member for Quebec East; he gave up this office in 1870 to become Postmaster of Quebec city.

There had to be a by-election and on July 14 and 15, 1870, Notary Tourangeau became the second federal member for Quebec East. Notary Tourangeau was re-elected by acclamation in the general election of July 29, 1872.

Mr. Speaker, I must also point out the presence of Mr. Pelletier as provincial member for Quebec East during the same period, from May 1873 to January 1874. Mr. Pelletier was representing at the same time the riding of Kamouraska in the federal government.

Mr. Pelletier had a brilliant career. Senator in 1877, he was also a minister in Mr. Mackenzie's cabinet, speaker of the Senate in 1896 and, in 1908, lieutenant-governor of the province of Quebec until his death in 1911.

In 1874, after the Canadian Pacific scandal, Sir John A. Macdonald resigned and Mr. Mackenzie took over the direction of the government. Following the dissolution of the houses, elections were set for January 1874.

Hon. Isidore Thibaudeau was then chosen as candidate against notary A. G. Tourangeau, the latter withdrawing as a candidate on January 18. On the 22nd, during the nomination, hon. Isidore Thibaudeau was elected by acclamation and became the third federal member for Quebec East.

Hon. Thibaudeau was a distinguished personality. He had been a member of the Brown-Dorion cabinet and after that of the J. Sanfield-Macdonald-Dorion cabinet.

In 1877, hon. Mr. Thibaudeau resigned as the member for Quebec East to enable right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who had just been defeated in Drummond-Arthabaska, to seek election in Quebec East, thus facilitating Laurier's return to the Mackenzie cabinet, to which he had been appointed in October, 1877.

Thus, on November 28, 1877, Laurier became the fourth member for Quebec East. Mr. Speaker, it turned out that he retained that seat for 42 years, until his death in 1919. For 32 years, he was leader of the Liberal party and for 15 years, prime minister of Canada. In the course of his brilliant career he won 11 consecutive elections in Quebec East.

On June 20, 1882, and March 5, 1891, in spite of overwhelming Conservative victories—

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I wonder whether all this discussion is in order. The hon. member has been talking for 16 minutes and we have now reached 1882, having started at 1860. If all hon. members insist on reviewing the history of their riding in such detail, the house will not be able to discuss the exact matter under consideration, that is the electoral redistribution. Since we have only 6 days for the 265 constituencies of the country, and that, after 16 minutes, we are only in 1882 as far as the constituency of Quebec East is concerned, I do not see how we will be able to consider all constituencies.

I would suggest that the hon. member be called to order so that those with real redistribution problems be given an opportunity to discuss them in these six days.

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I will tell the hon. member for Lapointe that if he were the member for Quebec East and if his riding were as historical as Quebec East, he would talk for 40 minutes instead of 16.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Duquet: I have only five or six minutes left, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to continue my speech.

Mr. Speaker: I still wish to point out to the hon. member for Quebec East, however, that I partly agree with the objection just made by the hon. member for Lapointe.

In my opinion, the question now is to determine whether the name of his riding should be changed or not. I doubt that it is in order for him to recount the whole history of his riding, and I would ask him to pass on as quickly as possible to the specific point we have to consider.

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence for a reason I gave earlier: it is not hon. members of the house whom I wish to convince that the name of Quebec East should be kept but the members of the commission who made the report.

I feel that my present speech may convince them of the importance of keeping the name of Quebec East and I ask your permission to continue, Mr. Speaker, as I only need about ten minutes more.

Mr. Speaker, to describe the whole career—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member needs another ten minutes this means half an hour per speaker and there are 16 to come. We will never finish tonight.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member said he would need another five minutes. I hope he will soon come to the point and be able to condense somewhat his remarks.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Lapointe should allow the hon. member for Quebec East to continue. It is the maiden speech of the former in the house and I think he should be allowed to go on with his historical account. In our opinion, this would seem quite feasible.

Mr. Duquet: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

It would be superfluous to relate the whole career of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; after all, he has only been dead for 47 years and we still retain a clear memory of that great Canadian.

Nevertheless, I would like to mention one small thing. During the election held on February 22, 1887, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opponent in Quebec East constituency was lawyer F. X. Drouin. Later, in 1917, Laurier's opponent in the same Quebec East county was Mr. F. O. Drouin, son of the former.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the candidate of 1887, lawyer F. I. Drouin, and the candidate of 1917, lawyer F. O. Drouin, were respectively the grandfather and the father of lawyer François Drouin who is now the general electoral officer for the province of Quebec and a member of the readjustment commission.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this historical fact will prompt lawyer François Drouin to try and retain the name of this constituency.

I would not want to give an historical account of Quebec East without recalling the leadership of Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe in that county.

In August 1919, Mr. Mackenzie King became leader of the liberal party, and in the fall of that year, another great Canadian figure appeared on the political scene, Mr. Ernest Lapointe, elected member for Quebec East, at a by-election.

Re-elected at the federal election of December 1921, he entered the federal cabinet of which he remained a member until his death, in 1941, that is during nearly for 21 years.

In my opinion we have no right to minimize the significance of such a political career. Lapointe is a name which is linked to the constituency of Quebec East; it is another of those national glories to which as French Canadians we must remain deeply attached.

Ernest Lapointe was the true champion of Canadian unity. He advocated continuously the unity of Canada, denouncing in very strong terms any attempt to break up that unity.

I should like to quote what Mr. Mackenzie King said after the death of Ernest Lapointe.

I like to think that we shared Laurier's succession. Upon me was bestowed the great honour of succeeding Mr. Laurier as head of the party, he (Lapointe) had the honour of succeeding Mr. Laurier as representative of the historic constituency of Quebec East and the distinction of becoming his people's spokesman to the rest of Canada.

I trust that Mr. Ernest Lapointe's value was so noteworthy that the name of the constituency he represented so valorously for 22 years in this house, will not disappear from the electoral map.

[Mr. Duquet.]

I suggest that that is an excellent opportunity to pay tribute to his illustrious son, his Excellency Mr. Hugues Lapointe, present lieutenant-governor of the province of Quebec.

In concluding, I should like to recall a period very much closer to us, no doubt, and quite significant, I admit, but how rewarding for all Canadians: that of Mr. Louis St. Laurent, who was elected on February 9, 1942 and who also remained the hon. member for Quebec East for 15 years.

To recall here the highlights of the career of the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent would, I am sure, offend the modesty of this great Canadian who, fortunately, is still among us.

Yet he is another prominent figure of Canadian politics who, in particularly difficult times, showed the outstanding qualities of a statesman and succeeded in leading the country with unequalled dignity.

Therefore, it is easy to understand that Mr. St. Laurent still enjoys great prestige.

Quebec East will always remember Louis St-Laurent with fervent devotion.

Feelings of admiration for Mr. Louis St-Laurent have so often been warmly expressed throughout the world, in Canada and especially in Quebec East, that to add to them would be overdoing it; possibly because he is so much closer to us, we should keep the name of Quebec East closely knit with the career of that great statesman, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent.

Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, I should like to read a letter Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent sent me on February 16 last. I quote:

Dear Mr. Duquet,

I congratulate you for endeavouring to prevent the name of the Quebec East riding from being changed to that of Limoilou.

As you know, that riding has always been called Quebec East, ever since the first elections after Confederation. Only three members have represented it from November 28, 1877 to the general elections of March 31, 1958. This is probably a record of electoral stability over 81 years. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was the member for Quebec East until his death in 1919, having been elected in two by-elections and nine general elections. He was replaced by Hon. Ernest Lapointe who was also elected in two by-elections and six general elections.

After the death of Hon. Ernest Lapointe, in November 1941, I was asked to replace him as Minister of Justice and I was elected to the House of Commons in a by-election, on February 9, 1942, and re-elected in four general elections.

I was very proud to have had as predecessors Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. Ernest Lapointe and I am convinced that you are yourself prouder to be the member for Quebec East than you would be to represent another riding.

I trust that the Electoral Boundaries Commission will not persist in its project to remove that historical name from the list of electoral constituencies in our province and I sincerely hope that you will succeed in your endeavour.

I know that you have the support of our friend hon. senator Dessureault, who helped me with such dedication in all my campaigns, as he had done for my immediate predecessor Mr. Lapointe.

Kindly accept, my dear Mr. Duquet, the assurance of my best wishes for your own career. I remain as always,

Yours very truly,

Louis St. Laurent.

I have, Mr. Speaker, another letter from Hon. Dessureault which I add to the file and which is written practically along the same lines.

I will therefore conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, with the argument that the illustrious men who presided over the destiny of Quebec East are men whose names we must remember. I think the removal of the name of Quebec East from the electoral map would be an insult to the memory of those illustrious men who, for more than 100 years, represented so well in this house the riding of Quebec East.

It will appear to some that I indulged in sentimentality, Mr. Speaker. It may have looked that way but duty overrides sentimentality. We must know how to go back to the spiritual values which can often inspire us. We must not forget our origins. We must keep and honour the memory of those who, before us, through their efforts and sacrifices, built the beautiful country in which we live.

Laurier, Lapointe, St. Laurent were among those and it is our duty, Mr. Speaker, as representatives of the people, as members of Parliament, to see to it that the memory of those dominating figures of our great Canada is kept alive. Failing to do that, would be to disregard history.

I conclude my remarks with the conviction that I have done my duty, that I have expressed the views of my constituents as well as those of all enlightened people in our country and in the province of Quebec.

In the province of Quebec in particular, taking the only stand I could to remain true to the spirit and the letter of our province's motto, which wants us to remain devoted to tradition and which, on behalf of all, I am happy to state in this house "I remember".

Mr. Asselin: Would the hon. member for Quebec East allow me to ask him a question?

Redistribution

Since several parishes of the previous Quebec East constituency are to disappear to be included in the new constituency of Limoilou, as the commissioners want, and in view of the encomium bestowed on the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent by the hon. member, if the commissioners refuse to keep the names of Quebec East and Limoilou, would it not be better to suggest to the hon. member that the name of the constituency of Limoilou be replaced by that of St. Laurent?

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. I believe it is excellent, ant it could very well be submitted to the commission members; in fact, I would like to see it included in the report to be made to the commission after my speech.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should also like to direct a question to the hon. member.

Since there is already a constituency which bears the name of "St. Laurent" that of St. Lawrence-St. George, considering there is also a riding called Laurier, and in view of the fact that I have moved that the name of Lapointe be changed for that of Jonquière, would the hon. member be ready to accept the name of Lapointe instead of Limoilou for his constituency? That would maintain the name of Lapointe in Quebec East. Would the hon. member be ready to accept this suggestion rather than that of "St. Laurent" since a riding already bears that name?

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe, I believe that, following the speech I have just made, the letter from Mr. St. Laurent, I have put on the record, and with the plain common sense which they must necessarily show, the commissioners will understand that those names are related to the constituency of Quebec East and not to the ridings of Limoilou, "St. Laurent", or Lapointe.

Besides, I would be happy to rid the hon. member for Lapointe of the name of his constituency, but I would rather keep Quebec East, which is really an historical name, since I believe the Lapointe constituency will never become an historical name under the present member of the house.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does this complete the consideration of Objection No. 1?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the Objection and also a copy of the debates of this house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

The house will now proceed to consideration of Objection No. 2 on the list given to the house. This is listed in the pamphlet as Objection No. 3.

On February 4 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of Trois-Rivières:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, on the grounds set forth hereafter:

Objections to the new boundaries of the constituency of Trois-Rivières:

The petition is filed in order that the town of Trois-Rivières-Ouest may continue to be a part of the federal constituency of Trois-Rivières for the following reasons:

(a) the town of Trois-Rivières-Ouest is a part of the physical and demographic entity of greater Trois-Rivières;

(b) its problems at all levels are, for all practical purposes, identical with those of Trois-Rivières;

(c) pursuant to the policy of the provincial Department of Municipal Affairs, Trois-Rivières-Ouest will soon have to merge with the city of Trois-Rivières;

(d) the municipal council of Trois-Rivières-Ouest has filed a formal petition for the purpose of remaining within the federal constituency of Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask that this objection stand in the absence of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain)?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that in the absence of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) this objection stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask for how long the objection will stand. As you know, our time is limited to six days, and not full days at that. The house leaders have agreed that certain times should be allotted to these debates. I do not know whether I would agree that it stand. If the hon. gentleman is not here we should proceed without standing this particular objection.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) whether he would agree that this motion stand, and if there is time left at the end it can be discussed, without any obligation being entered into by the house? As the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is an independent member he would have no house leader, and perhaps was not aware of the conventions established between the house leaders of the various parties. That may be the reason he is not here.

Mr. Starr: With the understanding that they will be discussed if sufficient time is left after all these objections have been dealt with, then I would be agreeable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the Chair would like to be very clear about what we are doing here. Does the hon. member for Ontario mean that all of the objections have to be completed before those which are stood are taken up, or all of the objections for the province of Quebec?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could make this suggestion, that the motion you have just put be called as the last motion from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Starr: No. I understood the hon. member who spoke last to say that this should be discussed as the last motion from the province of Quebec. That is not what I have agreed to. If all motions have been disposed of from all provinces and there is sufficient time left to deal with this one, then and only then do I agree it should be discussed.

Mr. Grégoire: Very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Do I take it that the house agrees that if some objections are stood these will be taken up after all other objections have been considered, if time permits?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Objection No. 3 stands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed, therefore to objection No. 3 on the list given the Chair, which is listed as No. 4 in the pamphlet.

On February 9 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of Lapointe:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, on the grounds set forth hereafter:

Changing the name of the "Comté de Lapointe" into "Comté de Jonquière".

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my speech will be brief. The purpose of my motion is to have the name of the Lapointe constituency changed to that of Jonquière.

In order to shorten the debate, I should request that the speech I made on December 4, 1964 and which is recorded on page 10865 of Hansard be tabled and printed in the official report as having been delivered today, and expressing the remarks I intended to make on this subject. If the members are agreeable this would save the time of the house and leave room for many other speakers.

I request unanimous consent of the house to have this speech inserted in the record.

Mr. Laflamme: The hon. gentleman could give a summary.

Mr. Grégoire: I might sum up my main arguments, but this will require several minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Choquette: I remember the speech made at the time. There was some heckling. Does the hon. member wish to include the heckling that occurred?

Mr. Grégoire: I have read it over. There was one intervention, a question from the former minister without portfolio the former member for Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville, who asked whether the other towns in the constituency agreed. To which I answered: Yes.

If the hon. members of the house give their unanimous consent to have this speech printed in Hansard—

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I think that the request the hon. member for Lapointe is making is one that we should look at carefully. As I understand it, he is asking that a speech he made on a previous occasion be printed in Hansard without his having to make the speech again. Obviously that would require unanimous consent. I think this would be a most unwise practice. What could flow from this is really tremendous.

I would think that it would be sufficient for the hon. member in the speech he is now making, which after all is directed to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, to ask the members of that commission to look at his previous speech. He could give them the date it was made, and the pages in Hansard in which it appears. Otherwise, if all those who have objections have their former speeches included in Hansard, it will result in an awful situation. Today's volume of Hansard would be tremendously thick.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a wrong precedent for an hon. member to be allowed to have included in Hansard a speech he has not made in this house. Perhaps we could go one step farther than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested. Perhaps the house would give consent for Mr. Speaker to include this former speech with the documents which are sent back to that commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the responsibilities of the Chair in this matter are, under section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer to the Boundaries Commission the consideration which is being given to the objections at this particular time. I believe that to refer to any speeches which have been previously made would not now be appropriate. I would think that if Mr. Speaker would refer to the commission what is being said today, he would thereby have fulfilled his duty as far as the redistribution act is concerned.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: If I understood correctly, you will supply them with a copy of Hansard for that day.

My intention was to save time and thus enable others to bring their objections forward. I will summarize what I have said:

I ask that the name of the constituency of Lapointe be changed to that of Jonquière.

Such is the hope and wish of the entire population of the riding. Jonquière is the major city in the riding, the seat of the constituency. The Chamber of Commerce, the municipalities, the school boards have been asking for such a change for years. The previous members of the riding have also requested it.

In such circumstances, since it is the unanimous wish of the constituency, the commission should not object to change the name of the constituency in order to give it a more appropriate geographical name, that is the constituency of Jonquière.

It is the constituency's name at the provincial level. At the federal level the constituency would be called Jonquière. In addition to being the wish and the desire of all my constituents, it would also be an advantage for the population, both from the standpoints of tourism and of knowledge of the constituency.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does this complete the consideration of Objection No. 2?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

Mr. Ricard: Was that No. 3?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I for clarity, suggest to the house that when referring to the objections in the order given to the Speaker, that I refer to the number on the Speaker's list and also to the number on the list in the pamphlet.

Mr. Lambert: That is the best way.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We shall now take objection listed as No. 4 on the Speaker's list and as No. 6 in the pamphlet.

On February 11 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

[Translation]

Proposed Electoral District of Stanstead:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, on the grounds set forth hereafter:

We have made representations before the commission in Sherbrooke, on July 13, 1965, in order that Compton be allowed to keep its name, since 75 per cent of the parishes are located in Compton. These representations have been made to prevent Compton from being replaced by Stanstead.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the constituency which I represent, we have received from many municipalities protests against the deletion of the name Compton. The name Compton had been replaced by Stanstead. The Compton parishes account for more than 75 per cent of the area. However, it was proposed to call it Stanstead.

I have here several resolutions of municipalities opposed to this change of name. The constituency of Compton-Frontenac comprises three quarters of the future constituency of Stanstead. I hope that the name of the area which will be entrusted to us will be Compton because that name is our best asset during election time, and the people of the constituency have always voted at Compton; therefore, I protest against calling it Stanstead.

Several aldermen and mayors suggest that the name of Compton be kept. Furthermore, it is asked that the size of the riding be reduced. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) told me he did not object to keeping in his county the following municipalities: Stanstead, Rock Island, Dixville, Barnston, Barnston West, Ogden, Ayers Cliff and Beebe Plain.

The reason for this request is to meet all the needs expressed by the voters and economic and agricultural interests. Highways 9 and 50 separate the counties of Compton and Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Speaker, we ask the Commission to revise its decision so that the parishes I have just listed remain in the riding of Brome-Missisquoi and all further divisions be determined by highways 9 and 50 which separate the counties of Compton and Brome-Missisquoi. There would be no highway to cross in going to a parish, which could represent a fair distance and create difficulties for many people. It would be better to leave these parishes in Brome-Missisquoi than to include them in the county of Compton.

Thus, once more, let us keep the name of Compton and of the parishes I have already mentioned. These parishes should remain in the constituency of Brome-Missisquoi.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does this complete consideration of Objection No. 4 on the Speaker's list?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of the Speaker pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the Objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for consideration thereof.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The house will now proceed to Objection No. 5 on the Speaker's list, No. 8 on the pamphlet. The text of the objection will be found on page 18 of the pamphlet.

On February 14 last a notice of an objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of Côte Nord:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

(1) Meaning of the present name of the electoral district of Saguenay. It is a misleading name, which may be confused with the area of Chicoutimi and Lake St. Jean.

(2) Recommendation is made that the name Côte Nord proposed by the commission be replaced by that of Manicouagan.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this motion of objection be treated in the same way as the motion concerning Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member wish this motion to stand?

Mr. Stewart: That is correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to stand the motion?

Mr. Starr: With the same reservation as applied to the previous one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Objection No. 8 stands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to Objection No. 6 on the Speaker's list, No. 12 on the pamphlet. The text of the objection will be found at page 23 of the pamphlet.

On February 15 a notice of Objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of Abitibi:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

Objections to the new boundaries of Abitibi County:

Petition is made in order that the following townships: Quévillon, Comtois, Franquet, Fraser, Desjardins, Bruneau, be removed from the proposed constituency of Abitibi and replaced by the following ones: La Motte, Lacorne, Landrienne, Duvernay, Castagnier and Coigny.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief for the time being. I have raised an objection to the boundaries of the proposed constituency of Abitibi, because the commission or who devised these electoral boundaries has taken no account of its geography. It seems its only concern was the population.

So, when we consider these boundaries, the member of the proposed constituency of Abitibi will have to travel 65 or 70 miles in the next constituency which will be called Villeneuve, to visit certain areas of his constituency. So, Mr. Speaker, you will understand, and I hope the commission will also understand, that this is an impossible situation.

So here is the suggestion I have sent to them: that the following counties: Quévillon, Comtois, Franquet, Fraser, Desjardins, Bruneau, which are located north of the boundary set for the proposed constituency of Villeneuve, and which belong to the proposed constituency of Abitibi, be transferred to the proposed constituency of Villeneuve.

All those townships are now included in the Villeneuve riding. Replacing the single town of Quévillon which belongs to that township, is part of the town of Senneterre for commercial and business purposes and is much closer than many others would cause no inconvenience.

Redistribution

I suggest that the townships located west of the proposed Villeneuve riding and adjacent to the proposed Abitibi riding, near the town of Amos, namely the La Motte, Lacorne, Landrienne, Duvernay, Castagnier and Coigny townships be withdrawn from the proposed Villeneuve riding and transferred to the proposed Abitibi riding, so that the change of population would be roughly the same. This would not change the population of the neighbouring riding very much. The towns of Castagnier, St. Maurice and Landrienne, located in the commercial centre of the town of Amos, would be transferred to the proposed Abitibi riding.

Mr. Speaker, if the commission is willing to study my proposal, I think it will be seen as geographically preferable to the one which is now recommended; it would also meet with the wishes of the population which is requesting the change.

It would also facilitate the work, not only of the present member for Chapleau, but also for those who—I hope it will not be too soon—eventually, will replace him. Besides, it would also prevent confusion.

I therefore ask the commission to study my proposal, and I feel confident it will understand the situation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I believe the remarks of the hon. member bring to a close considerations concerning Objection No. 12.

The house having considered this objection, it is my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report to the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

We will now take up Objection No. 19 which is recorded at page 34 of the pamphlet you have before you:

On February 17, 1966, notice of objection—

An hon. Member: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The motion before the house deals with the constituency of Dorchester.

[English]

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I make in this case the same request that I made in reference to the previous instance of Côte Nord, that is, that this stand following the precedent in the case of the constituency of Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house agree to follow, with respect to this objection, the same procedure as for the others?

Objection No. 19 stands.

We shall now carry on with the consideration of objection No. 21, on page 35 in your pamphlet, which was filed on February 17, 1966 with respect to the electoral district of Témiscouata.

I am given to understand that the hon. members of the house could accept the suggestions made by the Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Stewart) to the effect that we should proceed in the same way as we have done as regards the objections not considered as such at this stage by the hon. members of the house.

Objection No. 21 stands.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Could I simply ask that the government delegation be present in the house? They are only a small group of six or seven and almost all of them have representations to make. They knew very well what would be the procedure this afternoon; let them come to the house. After all, other members based themselves on the procedure that was to be followed and are doing their work. The procedure was established and there are other members who are not in their seats.

I call on the indulgence and the devotion of the government whip for him to gather government members so that each of them make his own representations.

It is very unfair to others, as we say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The house will now consider objection No. 8, on page 35 of the pamphlet, with respect to the electoral constituency of Témiscouata.

I apologize to hon. members; we must now consider the objection dealing with the electoral district of St. Henri.

Proposed Electoral District of St. Henri:

That, pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

(a) By changing the name of the constituency in its last report, the commission has created a certain amount of dissension in the midst of the population. Some would like to keep the name of St. Anne, others would like that of St. Henri.

In order to cure this feeling of uneasiness, I suggest that the constituency be given the name of "Marguerite Bourgeois". On her arrival in Canada in 1662, Mother Marguerite Bourgeois devoted herself to the education of the children of our first settlers. She founded the first school in 1668—the same school where the daughters of the settlers received their education until 1881. This historical monument, erected in 1668, still exists and the Congregation of Notre Dame has just converted it into a museum. I am pleased that the constituency includes within its boundaries this testimony to our history; that is why, after conducting an investigation among the electors. I am making this proposal on their behalf.

(b) In the report, on page 30, section 57, at line 22, let the following words be stricken out "from there to the south-west up to LaMontagne Street", and also the words "and the east" on the following line. Here are the reasons:

I request that the line of Windsor Street at the Notre Dame intersection be continued up to the southern boundary (Wellington intersection). This will have the result of increasing the size of the population by giving it 600 other electors. This sector was always a part of the constituency, the more so as in the east up to St. Lawrence Street there are no electors. Furthermore, this sector is the most important part of the parish of St. Anne, which is situated on the other side of La Montagne Street; this places its residents in a constituency other than the one in which the church which is opposite their door is located.

The representative of St. James constituency thinks that my proposal is quite logical.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Ricard: Témiscouata is stood.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say to set out the reasons for my objection to the new name proposed in the second report of the commission, that of Saint-Henri.

All citizens of the constituency were more than satisfied with the first report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, which kept the name of St. Ann.

This constituency was established in 1892, and we were satisfied with that report. From a small Montreal riding, St. Ann became the second largest in the province of Quebec.

In the second report of the commission, however, the name of Saint-Henri is proposed. I have nothing against that name; I was born myself in Saint-Henri, in Montreal. However, Saint-Henri which is to be in the new riding, does not constitute the major part of the latter. The riding of Saint-Henri was established under the redistribution act of 1924, whereas, as I said earlier, St. Ann exists since 1892. Before that, it was called Montreal Centre, the greater part of which became St. Ann. But since 1892, the riding has always been called St. Ann.

I object to the new designation of Saint-Henri. A petition was started after the time limit expired for the public hearings to be held by the commission in Montreal. We were unable, therefore, to submit a request to be heard and to present an objection.

As I was saying earlier, I have nothing against the name of Saint-Henri; it is a distinguished name. The riding is called "St. Ann" in the first report and "Saint-Henri" in the second. This makes me a bit uneasy, because some of the people want to keep the name of St. Ann, while others prefer the name of Saint-Henri.

To reconciliate everyone, I thought of proposing a third name, that of Marguerite Bourgeoys. Here is why. Everybody is familiar with the life of Marguerite Bourgeoys who came to Montreal in 1662. She happened to take her first steps on Canadian soil in St. Charles, in the riding of St. Ann.

In 1668, Marguerite Bourgeoys built a school to educate the daughters of the colonists. Consequently, from 1668 to 1681, this same school, built by Marguerite Bourgeoys, was used to educate the daughters of our colonists. This same school is still in existence today and was designated as a historic monument. This building is a few steps from my home and the members of the order of Notre Dame who are the followers of Marguerite Bourgeoys have made it into a museum, after recently modernizing it.

To my mind, it would be a fine thing if the riding were given the name of Marguerite Bourgeoys.

When I saw that I would have to oppose the name, I took the opportunity of asking for a minor correction to the boundary.

As I said a few minutes ago, with the new boundaries St. Ann's will become the second largest riding in Quebec, population-wise. I ask that the boundaries be slightly extended, since only a correction is involved. On the plan, the boundary of this riding is, on the east, Windsor street; St. Catherine street on the north; St. Rémi street on the west and the St. Lawrence river on the south. The correction would occur starting from the northeast, that is to say from St. Catherine and Windsor streets southward; instead of turning west as the map now indicates, I would like to request that the boundary on Windsor steet be extended from the north southward so as to connect with Wellington street. With the fork the map-makers designed on the map, the majority of the parishioners of St. Ann's are eliminated and this is one of the oldest churches in Montreal.

On the west side of Mountain street, we see St. Ann's church, while the residents on the east side of the same street are included in another constituency. This is why I request that the Windsor street line from north to south be drawn as far as Wellington street instead of Notre Dame street.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. At the present time, we are completing the remarks on an objection concerning the Saint-Henri constituency.

The house having considered this objection, it is the Speaker's duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for consideration thereof.

We must now proceed with consideration of objection No. 22 appearing on page 37 of the pamphlet concerning the electoral constituency of Maisonneuve.

Proposed Electoral District of Maisonneuve:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966 for the reasons hereinafter specified:

1. That the commission proposed boundaries which will give rise to administrative problems due to all these detours, thus making it more difficult to contact constituents located near the said boundaries.

2. That it is possible to have straighter limits while abiding by the criterion of 25 per cent, more or less.

3. That the 1961 census showed for Maisonneuve a population of 76,479 and for Hochelaga, adjacent constituency to the west, 76,765.

4. That, in spite of this slight difference for Hochelaga, this constituency had only 222 polls (about 46,000 electors), while Maisonneuve had 305 (1965 Election) for 66,100 electors.

5. That consideration be given by the commission or by the house to the minor suggestion that the limits between the constituencies of Maisonneuve, Hochelaga, Lafontaine, St-Michel and Gamelin may be made straighter while adhering to prescribed standards.

[Mr. Loiselle.]

6. That any other objection of the undersigned members may be considered valid under the provisions of the said Act.

Dated this 18th day of February in the year of the Lord 1966, at the House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada.

Mr. Antonio Thomas (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, I registered an objection to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the riding of Maisonneuve-Rosemont.

This objection is neither against the necessity of new constituencies nor against the population quotient established in order to proceed to a readjustment of boundaries. On the contrary, I realize the merits of this project. Its main object is to ensure more equitable representation of urban ridings.

However, in the light of my experience of more than 35 years as an organizer of electoral compaigns, I want to point out certain topographic anomalies. These may have very little importance for the layman but they give rise to serious problems for the electoral officers as well as for the voters.

The points on which I formulated an objection take into account the homogeneity of the population with regard to its needs, as well as the urban character of that same population with regard to the boundaries of the neighbouring municipalities.

I noticed that the proposed new boundaries for my riding are made of turns and curves which complicate needlessly the electoral organization and the identification of the riding by the elector. And when I speak of curves, Mr. Speaker, I am not thinking of the feminine curves which caused such a stir in the house not so long ago.

It seems to me that the main consideration which presided over the redistribution of the ridings is the population figure at the time of the 1961 census. Well, that is not a valid criteria because the above mentioned census gave for the riding of Hochelaga, the riding next to mine on the west, 76,765 people in 1961, including 46,000 electors divided in 222 polls at the time of the last elections, whereas in my riding it was set at 76,479 people in 1961 including 66,100 electors in 1965 divided in 305 polls.

Therefore, Hochelaga had 286 people more but 20,000 electors less in 1965. If I submit that the population criteria is not valid it is because the percentage of electors in proportion to the population is not the same, as I have just shown with regard to two neighbouring ridings.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to give you the most important factors I noted when the bill which concerns us at this time was considered.

First, the number of electors by riding, which I just gave as an example proving that it is inaccurate.

Second, an abnormal situation which already existed and was not corrected. As a matter of fact, at the north end of my riding, according to the new boundaries, there are some 250 families along the limits of the city of Montreal. Well, the proposed riding of St. Michel includes only the populations of the cities of St. Michel and of St. Léonard, excluding those along the limits of the city of Montreal, between the middle of Belanger street and the southern boundaries of the cities of St. Michel and St. Léonard.

There are about 250 families living in that area, that is in my riding, separated from their fellow citizens; they have the same demographic and geographic problems as in the rest of my riding, although they are isolated in a riding made up of two great identical entities. I would have thought that such discrepancies would have been corrected through setting of the present boundaries.

A third and last point to which I want to call your attention is that the new boundaries, are highly fanciful; their weird shapes, their scallops, could easily compete with the eccentric creations of fashion designers. It is hard enough already to organize an election, as much for the electoral officers as the political parties, without complicating it by boundaries which have no practical value. To the two groups I have just mentioned can be added also the electors for whom we make it enormously complicated to identify their riding.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I will spare you, Mr. Speaker the details of a new readjustment. However, I have read the bill submitted to the house and I think it can be amended according to the basis I have indicated; in short, it would provide

(a) a better identification of the number of voters

(b) a redistribution according to population, taking into account the 25 per cent tolerance factor and

(c) a less fantastic geographic boundary.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I am not asking for any special favour which would help me to get re-elected, but for boundaries which would help me to serve better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The remarks of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Thomas) bring to a close the debate on objection No. 22. The house will now consider the following recommendation:

That, the house having considered this objection, it is my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the Commission for consideration thereof.

The house will now resume consideration of objection No. 26—

An hon. Member: No. 25.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): No. 25, on pages 41, 42, 43 and 44 of the document—

An hon. Member: On page 40.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): On page 40, concerning Rimouski county.

On February 18, 1966, notice of objection, in the form of a motion, was submitted to the Speaker in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral District of Rimouski:

That, in accordance with Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), this house should consider the matter of the objections to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by the Speaker on January 19, 1966, for the reasons hereinafter stated:

That Rimouski constituency, for social and economic reasons, continue to comprise

(a) the town of Trois-Pistoles;

(b) in Rimouski county, the municipalities of the parishes of Saint-Eugène-de-Ladrière, Saint-Fabien, Saint-Mathieu-de-Rioux, Saint-Simon, Saint-Valérien and Trinité-des-Monts; the municipalities of Biencourt, Lac-des-Aigles, Saint-Guy and Saint-Médard; the territory having no local municipal government, the northeastern boundary of which is the extension of the demarcation line between the townships of Flynn and Varin as far as the southern boundary of Rimouski county.

Mr. Duquet: As mover of this objection, in view of the absence of the member of Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc), I should like to give the necessary explanations to justify this objection.

To those who are familiar with the Lower St. Lawrence, there are two main regions or rather, three main regions: the Gaspé-Peninsula, Rimouski and Rivière-du-Loup.

Now, since new boundaries have been suggested by the members of the Commission, it is obvious that the proposed riding, as now set up, will remove from the Rimouski riding many parishes which should remain in it. In the Lower St. Lawrence and Rimouski region, the people have grown used to moving, economically and socially, depending on where they live, toward the towns of Rivière-du-Loup or Rimouski.

All the parishes, as well as the town of Trois-Pistoles, mentioned in the objection filed by the member for Rimouski, do business directly with the Rimouski area. Their removal from the area and the Rimouski riding, to join them with another riding would upset completely the topography of the area. This could be detrimental to its particular activities and this is why this objection has been filed by the persons concerned so that the parishes mentioned in the notice of objection remain in the Rimouski area and riding.

I trust that the commissioners will take into consideration the special situation and circumstances prevailing in this area and that this objection will be given the consideration it deserves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member's remarks conclude the consideration of objection No. 25, concerning the electoral riding of Rimouski. Now that the house has studied the objection, it is my duty according to the act, to send back the report to the elections boundary commission with a copy of the objection and a copy of the debates of the house, so that it may reconsider the matter. We will now continue our consideration of objection No. 26 appearing on pages 41, 42, 43 and 44 of the pamphlet.

Proposed Electoral Districts of Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and St. Jean:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, statutes of Canada 1964-65), and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the electoral boundaries commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

Whereas the town of St. Lambert of the riding of Longueuil has filed an objection before the commission to being included in the proposed constituency of Laprairie, because it shares a larger community of interests with the constituency of Longueuil.

Whereas the cities of Châteauguay, Châteauguay Center and Châteauguay Heights of the riding of Beauharnois-Salaberry have filed an objection before the commission to being included in the proposed constituency of Laprairie, because it shares a larger community of interests with the constituency of Beauharnois.

[Mr. Duquet.]

Whereas the municipalities of St. Philomene, St. Urbain, St. Clothilde, St. Chrysostome, County of Châteauguay; the townships of Havelock and Hemmingford, the village of Hemmingford, county of Huntingdon; the village of Lacolle, Notre-Dame-du-Mont-Carmel, county of St. Jean, have filed an objection before the commission to being included in the proposed constituency of St. Jean, because they share a larger community of interests with the other municipalities of the counties of Châteauguay, Huntingdon and Laprairie.

Whereas the municipalities of St. Martine, St-Paul-de-Châteauguay, Howick, Très-St-Sacrement de Howick, Ormstown, St. Malachie d'Ormstown, St. Antoine Abbé, county of Châteauguay; the townships of Elgin, Franklin, Hinchinbrook, Godmanchester, the town of Huntingdon, Huntingdon county, have filed an objection before the commission to being included in the proposed constituency of Beauharnois, because they share a greater community of interests with the other municipalities of the counties of Châteauguay, Huntingdon and Laprairie.

Whereas the geographical factor of the five proposed ridings of Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and St. Jean, situated between the St. Lawrence river, the Richelieu river and the United States border, allows a distribution of the electoral district boundaries without prejudice to the interests of the other ridings.

Whereas the population standards, established by the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (13—Elizabeth II—chapter 31) allows a slight change to be made in the boundaries of the ridings of Beauharnois-Salaberry, Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, Chambly-Rouville, Longueuil, St.Jean-Iberville-Napierville.

Whereas the commission has not taken into account the objections, suggestions and the alternative plan proposed by the above-mentioned municipalities.

Whereas the readjustment of the boundaries of the ridings of Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and St. Jean, as proposed by the commission, is, according to the representations of the 25 above-mentioned municipalities, against the interests of the population of the area.

And whereas the municipalities in the present electoral districts of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie and of Beauharnois-Salaberry have objected to the disappearance of the historical names of Salaberry, Châteauguay and Huntingdon.

It is proposed:

(a) that the commission should take into consideration the arguments and suggestions of the above-mentioned municipalities and carry on its mandate according to section 13, paragraph C (i) and (ii) of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

(b) that the boundary readjustment of the proposed electoral district of Beauharnois be revised in accordance with the present boundary of the electoral district of Beauharnois-Salaberry, and that the proposed name of Beauharnois be changed to that of Beauharnois-Salaberry. (See annex A).

(c) that the boundaries of the proposed electoral district of Laprairie be revised to conform to the present boundaries of the existing district of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie, that is to say, by including all the municipalities of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie and by excluding the towns of Châteauguay, Châteauguay Centre, Châteauguay Heights, Lemoyne, Lery and St-Lambert from the proposed riding of Laprairie, and by adding to the existing district of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie the towns of Greenfield Park and Préville, and that the proposed name of Laprairie be replaced by that of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie. (See annex B).

(d) that the boundaries of the proposed district of Chambly be revised by excluding, in Laprairie county, the municipality of Notre-Dame-du-Sacré-Cœur; in Chambly county, the city of Chambly and the municipality of the parish of St-Joseph-de-Chambly; in Rouville county, the municipality of the village of Richelieu, the municipalities of the parishes of Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours and St-Mathias; and by adding the towns of Lemoyne and Laflèche. (See annex C).

(e) that the boundaries of the proposed district of Longueuil be revised by excluding the town of Laflèche and by adding the town of St-Lambert. (See annex D).

(f) that the boundaries of the proposed district of St-Jean be revised by excluding, in Châteauguay county, the town of Ste-Philomène, the municipality of the village of St. Chrysostome and the municipalities of the parishes of St-Urbain, Ste-Clothilde, St-Jean-Chrysostome; in Huntingdon county, the municipality of the village of Hemmingford and the municipalities of the townships of Hemmingford and Havelock; in St-Jean county, the municipality of the village of Lacolle and the municipalities of the parishes of Notre-Dame-du-Mont-Carmel (Cantic), St-Bernard-de-Lacolle; in Laprairie county, the municipalities of the parishes of St-Isidore, St-Philippe, St-Mathieu; and by adding, in Chambly county, the city of Chambly and the municipality of the parish of Chambly; in Rouville county, the municipality of the village of Richelieu and the municipalities of the parishes of Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours and St-Mathias. (See annex E).

(g) that the commission give consideration to the human factors involved and to the varied communities of interests, as detailed in the memorandum submitted to the commission by the said municipalities at the public hearings;

(h) that no valid reasons justify drastic changes in the boundaries of the existing districts, and, in order that changes be reduced to a minimum, that the commission should accept the suggestions contained in the said alternative proposals submitted to it, or in the modified proposals hereby submitted.

ANNEX A

Municipalities included in the revised constituency of Beauharnois-Salaberry.

Beauharnois-Salaberry:

(a) The cities of Beauharnois and Salaberry-de-Valleyfield.

(b) The towns of Maple Grove, Châteauguay, Châteauguay Centre, Châteauguay Heights and Lery.

(c) Beauharnois county.

(d) The municipalities of the parishes of Sainte-Barbe and Saint-Anicet in Huntingdon county.

POPULATION: 70,191

ANNEX B

Municipalities included in the revised constituency of Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie.

Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie:

(a) The townships of Huntingdon, Brossard, Candiac, Delson, Laprairie, Greenfield Park and Préville.

(b) Châteauguay county.

(c) In Huntingdon county: municipalities of the parishes of Dundee, Elgin, Franklin, Godmanchester, Havelock, Hemmingford, Hinchinbrook; the municipality of the village of Hemmingford and the St-Régis Indian reservation;

(d) In Laprairie county: municipalities of the parishes of Ste-Catherine d'Alexandrie-de-Laprairie, St. Constant, St-Isidore, St. Mathieu, St-Philippe and the Caughnawaga Indian reservation, No. 14;

(e) In St. Jean county: municipalities of the parishes of Notre-Dame-du-Mont-Carmel and St. Bernard-de-Lacolle and the municipality of the village of Lacolle.

POPULATION: 70,537

ANNEX C

Municipalities included in the revised district of Chambly.

Chambly:

(a) The towns of Beloeil, Boucherville, Laflèche, Lemoyne, St-Bruno-de-Montarville and St-Hubert;

(b) the county of Verchères;

(c) in the county of Richelieu: the municipality of Saint-Roch de Richelieu parish;

(d) in the county of Chambly: the municipalities of Ste-Famille-de-Boucherville and St-Basile-le-Grand parishes.

POPULATION: 72,058

ANNEX D

Municipalities included in the revised district of Longueuil.

Longueuil:

(a) The city of Jacques-Cartier;

(b) the towns of St-Lambert, Longueuil and the area in the town of Préville which is surrounded to the north, south and west by the city of St-Lambert and to the west by the town of Greenfield Park.

POPULATION: 79,469

ANNEX E

Municipalities included in the revised district of S-Jean.

St-Jean:

(a) The cities of St-Jean and Chambly;

(b) the town of Iberville;

(c) in the county of St-Jean: the municipalities of Lacadie, St-Blaise, St. Jean-l'Évangéliste, St-Luc, St-Paul-de-l'Île-aux-Noix and St. Valentin parishes;

(d) the county of Napierville;

(e) in the county of Rouville: the municipality of Richelieu village and the municipalities of Notre-Dame-de-Bon-Secours and St. Mathias parishes;

(f) in the county of Chambly: the municipality of St-Joseph-de-Chambly parish;

(g) in the county of Laprairie: the municipality of St. Jacques-le-Mineur parish.

POPULATION: 66,297

Mr. Paul Beaulieu (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): As member for the riding of Saint-Jean, I make the following objections from the riding of Saint-Jean and from the representatives of municipalities, of school boards and all parishes in the riding of Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville, which comprised the former riding which becomes the riding of Saint-Jean. All object to the withdrawal of all the parishes of the riding of Iberville, except the town of Iberville.

We have no objection, and all those who met to consider this boundary readjustment do not object to the addition of all centres: Napierville, Chateauguay and Laprairie.

However, we have serious objection to the fact that in the riding of Iberville, only the town of Iberville will be included in the riding of Saint-Jean.

There are there six parishes, the farthest being merely 10 miles from the town of Saint-Jean, and there is added to the constituency of Saint-Jean some parishes that are as far away as 40 to 45 miles.

Under these circumstances, we respectfully request that the commission give consideration to maintaining within the boundaries of Saint-Jean constituency, all the parishes that it contains at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The remarks of the hon. member conclude consideration of objection No. 26 concerning the municipalities of Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and Saint-Jean.

Now that the house has discussed the objection, it is my duty, according to the act, to send back the report to the elections boundary commission, with a copy of the objection and a copy of the House of Commons Debates, so that it may reconsider the matter.

We have concluded consideration of the objections that have been submitted in respect of the boundaries of some constituencies in the Province of Quebec and we shall proceed with consideration of objections dealing with Prince Edward Island's constituencies.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a suggestion to which I think the house might give unanimous consent. We have a speaker to the objection formulated in respect of the constituency of Trois-Rivières. While it was agreed that this objection should stand until the end of the proceedings, perhaps we might reconsider that decision and as there is in the chamber a speaker to the objection in relation to Trois-Rivières he might be allowed to speak now.

Mr. Starr: We have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker, if he is here now. With regard to any of the objections that were stood, if the hon. members are here now I think we should hear them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house agree to hear the hon. member in respect of the objection in relation to the constituency of Trois-Rivières?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Objection No. 3 concerning the constituency of Trois-Rivières.

Proposed Electoral District of Trois-Rivières:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, on the grounds set forth hereafter:

Objections to the new boundaries of the constituency of Trois-Rivières:

The petition is filed in order that the town of Trois-Rivières-Ouest may continue to be a part of the federal constituency of Trois-Rivières for the following reasons:

(a) the town of Trois-Rivières-Ouest is a part of the physical and demographic entity of greater Trois-Rivières;

(b) its problems at all levels are, for all practical purposes, identical with those of Trois-Rivières;

(c) pursuant to the policy of the provincial Department of Municipal Affairs, Trois-Rivières-Ouest will soon have to merge with the city of Trois-Rivières;

(d) the municipal council of Trois-Rivières-Ouest has filed a formal petition for the purpose of remaining within the federal constituency of Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Speaker, with regard to this objection, I think the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) would like certain explanations to be given.

It is simply a question of making the members of the Commission understand that the part of Trois-Rivières called Trois-Rivières-Ouest, which the new boundaries readjustment has removed from the riding of Trois-Rivières, should for major reasons remain in that riding, since Trois-Rivières-Ouest is to be annexed by the Quebec government to the city of Trois-Rivières itself.

Practically speaking, the problems of Trois-Rivières-Ouest are the same as those of Trois-Rivières. Trois-Rivières-Ouest is soon to be made part of the city of Trois-Rivières. The municipal council of Trois-Rivières-Ouest has even formally requested to remain in the riding of Trois-Rivières-Ouest remain in the riding of situation if tomorrow Trois-Rivières-Ouest were outside of the Town of Trois-Rivières even while annexed to it and, likewise, if Trois-Rivières-Ouest were outside of the territorial boundaries of the city of Trois-Rivières.

I believe these objections should be submitted to the Electoral Boundaries Commission and I think consideration will be given to the request of the member for Trois-Rivières that Trois-Rivières-Ouest remain in the riding of Trois-Rivières as suggested by the members of the municipal commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The comments of the hon. member close the study of objection no. 3 concerning the electoral riding of Trois-Rivières.

The house having considered this objection, it is my duty, in accordance with the Act to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

I am informed that the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Blouin) wishes to raise at this time against objection No. 8 which appears on page 18 of your booklet.

Proposed Electoral District Côte Nord:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964- 1965 and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Quebec, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966.

(1) Meaning of the present name of the Electoral District of Saguenay. It is a misleading name, which may be confused with the area of Chicoutimi and Lake St. Jean.

(2) Recommendation is made that the name Côte Nord proposed by the commission be replaced by that of Manicouagan.

Mr. Gustave Blouin (Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, on February 11, I submitted objections when the Electoral Boundaries Commission suggested to replace the name of Côte Nord by that of Saguenay.

I suggested later that the present name of Saguenay is confusing, in that the Saguenay area is often referred to at the same time as Chicoutimi and Lake St. John. For instance, people talk about the development of the Saguenay, the Saguenay area. I know my hon. friend, the member for Lapointe— he is not at his seat right now—takes pleasure in referring to the Saguenay area and there is always confusion as between that and the riding of Saguenay I have the honour to represent.

Therefore, following several resolutions from Chambers of commerce, municipal councils and other public organizations in my constituency, I had suggested the name of Manicouagan. The suggestion I am making at this time to the commission concerning the name Manicouagan, to replace that of Côte-Nord as proposed, is a lot more up to date. The name Manicouagan is known all over the world and is famous for the tremendous work now being carried out there.

I believe Manicouagan is the right name for the new constituency instead of Saguenay. While expressing the opinion of the Chambers of Commerce, municipal councils and other bodies in my constituency, once more, Mr. Speaker, I put forward the name of Manicouagan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The remarks of the hon. member for Saguenay close consideration of objection No. 8, and I should report accordingly.

The house having considered this objection, it is my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of Hansard, for further consideration.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

This terminates the objections related to the constituencies of the province of Quebec for today. It was understood earlier that if some time remains after the objections have been heard, the remaining objections will be submitted at that time. We will now proceed to the question . . .

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

I should like to clear up a situation, Mr. Speaker, to the effect that consideration of all the objections dealing with the province of Quebec is not necessarily concluded, for there remain two general objections in the order of filing of objections Nos. 18 and 21 which must be considered later.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Sainte-Marie is right. We have considered the specific cases and we will later take up general considerations.

[English]

We will now proceed to a consideration of Objection No. 5 concerning Prince Edward Island. You will find this on page 6 of your pamphlet. On February 10, last, a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms, namely:

Proposed Electoral District of the Province of Prince Edward Island:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, S.C. 1964-65) and for the reasons hereinafter specified, consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the following provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Prince Edward Island, laid before the house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19th, 1966.

The objections to the provisions of the said Report are as follows:

1. In dividing the province of Prince Edward Island into four constituencies, to which it is entitled, the commission obviously failed to give consideration to the relative rate of growth of the population of the Said Districts.

2. The commission failed to take into consideration that the boundaries of the electoral districts as they existed prior to redistribution were in accordance with the common interests of the people living therein, and thereby made it possible to have adequate representaation in the parliament of Canada.

3. In assigning names to the districts, the commission failed to select names with sufficient significant application to the areas which they are intended to designate.

4. That in failing to retain the dual riding of Queens the commission aggravated the "relative rate of growth" problem and disrupted a long established and quite satisfactory pattern of representation.

5. And such other objections that the undersigned members may deem necessary to carry out the spirit and terms and conditions of the Act in question.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on behalf of myself and my colleagues who filed objections to the proposed electoral districts for the province of Prince Edward Island, I wish to explain briefly, and as clearly as I can, for the benefit of the commission and the members of the house, the basis of our objections. Our first objection is as follows: that in dividing the province of Prince Edward Island into four constituencies, to which it is entitled, the commission obviously failed to give consideration to the relative rate of growth of the population of the said districts.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Prince Edward Island is almost unique as compared with other provinces, with the exception of New Brunswick, with regard to redistribution because, as a result of amendments to the British North America Act in 1915, we are permitted a minimum of four members. For this reason the electoral quota for Prince Edward Island is much lower than that of most provinces. Since it is highly unlikely that the increase in population in Prince Edward Island will ever be rapid enough to entitle the province to more than four seats, it follows that the problem of adding to or subtracting from the present number of seats will almost certainly never arise in the foreseeable future.

The problem of the Prince Edward Island commission was obviously one of dividing the present population into the four constituencies taking into account, of course, the probable shifts of population concentration within the province in the near future. There will be no question of having to add additional seats or subtract seats in future redistributions, so that this problem does not arise. Since the tolerances allowed in the act were not great enough to allow the county boundaries to be retained as constituency boundaries, it would then appear obvious that the objective of the commission should be to have four constituencies as close to the electoral quota as is practical or if there were to be a variation in the population of the constituencies it should have been in such a way that the constituencies with the greatest growth should have been smaller than the electoral quota, and those with a relative shrinking population should have been above the electoral quota so that the passage of time would cause the population of the constituencies to approach the quota rather than diverge from it.

Surely the objective of the commission should have been a redistribution which would satisfy the requirements of the act for as long a period as possible, without the necessity of additional redistributions after every census. But what is the situation we find in the proposed electoral districts? There are two main centres of growth in Prince Edward Island, namely Charlottetown and suburbs, and Summerside and the surrounding districts. Prince Edward Island is not immune from the national trend of the diminution of the rural population and an increase in the urban population. However, we find the proposed constituency of Hillsborough, with a population in 1961 of only about 2,600 below the maximum allowable, is the constituency which contains the growing city of Charlottetown and practically all its suburbs. I would venture to guess that the population of this proposed constituency is now very close to, if not over, the maximum allowable. Almost certainly it will have to be reduced in size at an early redistribution, probably after the next census.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret).]

The same situation occurs in the proposed constituency of Egmont, which is about 3,000 below the maximum allowable and contains the rapidly growing town of Summerside. It follows, of course, that the proposed constituencies of Cardigan and Malpeque are well below the electoral quota for the province. We contend that in order for this redistribution to last for a reasonable period of years, the population of the constituencies should be as close to the electoral quota as possible. If they depart from it, then those constituencies with the greatest growth potential should be below the quota.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Our second objection was that the commission failed to take into consideration the fact that the boundaries of the electoral districts as they existed prior to redistribution were in accordance with the common interests of the people living therein, thereby making it possible to have adequate representation in the parliament of Canada.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that ever since confederation the constituency boundaries of Prince Edward Island have coincided with the county boundaries, with the exception of a short period around the turn of the century. Much of the administration of the activities of the federal government in Prince Edward Island is organized by counties. The National Employment Service and the federal Department of Public Works are two examples, and I am sure there are many others. There are many governmental organizations, and non-governmental organizations as well, that are organized by counties and thereby coincide with the boundaries of federal constituencies.

On examining the proposed federal electoral districts I am at a loss to think of a single community of interest that coincides with the boundaries of any of them. The community of interest criterion has little or no application to the proposed districts. While it is recognized that county boundaries could not be retained under the terms of the act, it is believed that some partial satisfaction of the community of interest principle could have been achieved.

Our third objection was that in assigning names to the districts the commission failed to select names with sufficient significant application to the areas which they are intended to designate. The names appear to have been taken from four bays along the shoreline of Prince Edward Island. None of them has any general application to the districts to which they are attached. As a matter of fact, the greater part of Malpeque bay lies in the proposed district of Egmont, whilst Hillsborough bay is surrounded, not by the proposed constituency of Hillsborough, but by the constituencies of Cardigan and Malpeque.

In a brief presented to the commission other carefully thought out suggestions have been made, and I should like to cite some of them. It was suggested that historical Indian names might have a more apt application to the proposed new constituencies. It was formally proposed to the commission that the names they suggest be replaced by four Indian names—Malpeque, Bedeque, Tracadie and Pisquid.

It was further suggested that the names should be those of personages who have had a very special claim to fame in the history of our province, and the names suggested, reading from east to west, were those of Whelan, who was one of the Fathers of Confederation, MacDonald, Holland and Gallant. I am not going to go into the reasons cited for claiming that these would be more suitable names. In any case none of these suggestions found sufficient favour with the commissioners for them to change their original suggestions.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I would strongly recommend that the commission reconsider the naming of the constituencies and revert to variations of the present names, which have been used continuously since confederation. I should mention the exception, that when Prince Edward Island had five seats there were slight variations in these names of Kings, Queens and Prince, used to designate those five ridings. I believe that this could again be done.

Our fourth objection, Mr. Speaker, was that in failing to retain the dual riding of Queens the commission aggravated the relative rate of growth problem and disrupted the long-established and quite satisfactory pattern of representation. I feel that the commissioners, or the ones who are natives of Prince Edward Island, would probably have had some considerable hesitation departing from this old historic custom of having the dual constituency of Queens. They may have been overawed by the bureaucratic administrative mind which looks upon people as so many ciphers to be put into neat bundles, with even less regard for the traditions and feelings of these people than the sorter would have in the average stockyard for sheep.

This is an old tradition. There has been a dual constituency in Prince Edward Island ever since confederation, with the exception of this same short period at the turn of the century when there were five single ridings in the province. Dual ridings in the maritimes have a special application. In the maritime province of Prince Edward Island all of the provincial constituencies represented in the provincial legislature are dual constituencies. People are accustomed to voting for two members. The same is true with variations in both Nova Scotia and in New Brunswick.

I do not see any great difficulty in retaining the dual riding, but I do see a number of advantages in so doing. By retaining the dual riding, and making the proposed constituencies of Malpeque and Hillsborough one, you would retain not only the dual riding but the historic constituency of Queens. The boundaries would not coincide with the county boundaries precisely, but they would approximately, and the constituency would still contain the city of Charlottetown, which has been historically the centre of that dual constituency.

At the same time, it would also automatically solve the problem of the variation in the population of the constituencies about which I have spoken under the title of an earlier objection. It would go a long way toward solving that problem anyway. There would still perhaps be some other adjustments which would have to be made, but it would solve the greatest problem. It would also partially solve the problem of names, because if the dual riding were retained the name of Queens would be the most acceptable, it being the present name.

I am in a slightly difficult position, Mr. Speaker. I have made suggestions which would meet the objections which we have made, but I have no means of knowing whether any or all of them, or none of them, will be acceptable to the commission. Therefore I have to hedge a bit by suggesting alternative improvements if the improvements I have already enumerated are not accepted.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I turn now to the fifth paragraph under our general objection, which refers to other objections that the undersigned members may have. I object, Mr. Speaker, to the approach of the commission in dividing the eastern half of Prince Edward Island into two constituencies. My objection is to the way that the division was made. While it is true that here you are just west of the city of Charlottetown, and that the division would divide the population of Charlottetown approximately equally into two halves, it does not follow that the methods used by the commission in dividing this eastern half of the population into two constituencies is the most logical one. It would appear that the commission attempted to make a predominantly urban riding and a predominantly rural one. However, they did not succeed in their attempt, because the urban area by itself was not sufficient to constitute a constituency. Therefore, some rural area was added to it.

I should like to point out that the city of Charlottetown is not an urban area in the sense that we think of an urban area, or of an urban constituency which is in the heart of some large highly industrialized metropolitan area which has a community of interest entirely disconnected with that of the surrounding countryside. I should be the first to agree that there is a minimum community of interest between the people of downtown Toronto and those living 40 or 50 miles away in the countryside.

That is not so in the city of Charlottetown. Our province is one whose industries are all primary. Our main industries are agriculture, fishing, and of course the tourist industry. Charlottetown is the administrative and servicing centre, and is also the social and cultural centre for a large rural area. Although it is an urban area, it has a close community of interest with the surrounding countryside this area being chiefly composed of Queens county and Kings county.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a more logical division of the eastern part of Prince Edward Island which has been divided into the constituencies of Cardigan and Hillsborough, could have been made. It could have been divided in a different way. That is one possible solution. It should be remembered that the city of Charlottetown has recently been divided into two provincial ridings, one of them being the eastern part of Charlottetown and suburbs, the other the western half and suburbs. I believe it would have been far more logical to have taken one of these provincial constituencies. What could have been taken is the western part of the city, and that part of Queens county lying south of the Hillsborough river, plus the required number of census divisions which, in Prince Edward Island, are the lots, in the southern part of Kings county. One constituency could have been made of that.

All those persons in the areas I have mentioned have a community of interest radiating from the service centre, which is the city of Charlottetown. The remainder of Kings county and the remainder of what is now suggested should be the constituency of Hillsborough would of course be in another constituency. With the division I have suggested, I think the community of interest principle would be satisfied to a much greater extent than under the present designations.

Before I sit down, may I make one final point, Mr. Speaker. From a practical point of view, to encourage the interest of the public in the government of its country, both federally and provincially, I think it is desirable that unnecessary complications should not be introduced into the electoral system. With the exception of something what happened at the turn of the century, during the last 60 years there has been no instance in Prince Edward Island where a provincial constituency lay partly in one federal constituency and partly in another.

No attention apparently has been paid, in this redistribution, to where the boundaries of federal constituencies are relative to the boundaries of the provincial constituencies. In several cases, proposed federal boundaries go smack through the middle of a provincial constituency, there being no relationship at all between them.

This is something that I think ought to be considered. In several cases which have already been presented to the commission, by making a very minor change and following the division line between provincial constituencies a more logical division between proposed federal constituencies would have been arrived at. Then we would have had constituencies with a population nearer the desired quota than we have in the present suggestion.

Having summarized these things as briefly as I can, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in support of my colleague the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), and make some additional comments in support of the many which he has already made about redistribution as it affects Prince Edward Island. In doing so I should first of all like to deal with something that is not actually in the report but which pertains I think to the whole spirit, shall I call it, and problem of redistribution.

It is interesting to note on this occasion that when redistribution was brought before us and made an issue in this house, it was decided that that redistribution should be carried out by an independent commission. In many ways I think this was a good concept, although I am not competent to deal in detail with the many supplementary issues. One of the disturbing things about the many reports that will come before us during the next few days will be the fact that, in general, the commission in many instances failed to take into account the particular communities of interest that existed in many different parts of the country.

This most assuredly is true when it pertains to Prince Edward Island because I think, in light of the suggested boundaries being drawn in that tiny province, it is an indication of recognizing only certain factors, almost all of which are tied to population, and not looking closely at other factors that relate to communities, and community of interest, which are of great importance to the people of P.E.I.

This can be readily realized in the fact that for many, many years it has been the custom of the people of P.E.I. to accept the fact of a dual riding for Queens, and a single riding for Prince and Kings. With the disruption of a dual riding it has fixed the commission with trying to establish a new community of interest, and in an agrarian area like P.E.I. this is a most difficult task to achieve. I remember from my own church experience, when we were trying to amalgamate congregations into larger groups, it was always difficult to evaluate all the factors that come into play in establishing a closely knit community.

The commission was not overly aided by the interest and concern of the people of P.E.I. because, according to the report, only three private briefs were presented to it. Why should this be? Surely redistribution is an important matter. But I think in the minds of many people in P.E.I. they saw this as something affecting the rest of Canada and not their province. After all, we have had redistribution come and go in the rest of the country, but it has left inviolate the constituencies of Prince, Queens and Kings.

Now, for the first time in 50 years, we have seen a disruption of this principle, and I think if the commission were to meet again in P.E.I. to call for reaction to the proposals it has presented, and conduct its hearings so that many people could take part in them, it would discover there was great reaction against arbitrarily establishing four ridings which in no way bear relationship to the three now in existence.

Just to give one example that to my mind seems to run contrary to a community of interest, it is that under the proposed redistribution part of the suburban territory directly west of Summerside is now in the eastern riding, and in effect the representative who will come from the western Egmont riding will be hopping over the other riding which intervenes. It certainly does not establish any kind of homogeneity and community of interest.

Another fact which has disturbed me is one already mentioned by my colleague, that now we are to have two large constituencies, Egmont with a population of 29,672 and Hillsborough with a population of 30,050, while Cardigan will have a population of 23,081, and Malpeque a population of 21,826. I would suggest there is greater discrepancy in the population of these constituencies than has existed previously because in the present situation we have two ridings that are somewhat similar in size, and a third smaller one.

What is even more disturbing, to me at least, is the realization that the proposed new two larger constituencies are the main centres of growth and, if the discrepancy is great according to the figures now before us in 1966, what will it look like for a future federal election, whether it comes in 1967, 1968, 1969, 1970 or 1971? I can but say that I think if there was need to create any constituencies, which in the case of P.E.I. I very much doubt, it should have been done on a much more equitable basis than we have before us in this report.

Then there is the matter of names. I suppose a name is about as subjective a thing as anyone can put forward. We all have certain ideas about what names should be, and I know there is certain geographical validity, although it can be argued both ways, that the names suggested—Cardigan, Egmont, Hillsborough and Malpeque—are significant for these new constituencies. But, considering the history and, may I say, the great men who have represented these ridings—and I would exclude myself from that reference—surely to lose the names of Queens, Prince and Kings would be somewhat tragic not only to the people of P.E.I. but to Canadians generally.

If we must institute new names I suggest we consider maintaining the three we have at present, and adding an additional fourth in line with the same sense as these names, such as Royalty, or something like that. But if we are to abandon the traditional names, could we not have names significantly related to the history of P.E.I.? Obviously there are significant events and people connected with P.E.I. Why should they not be enshrined in the names of these new constituencies, as has been done at other times and in other places?

Then there is the matter of redistribution itself. We are told that according to the B.N.A. Act every ten years, after the census is taken, there should be an examination and a redistribution. We are now approaching very close to 1967. We are well over half way through from the time of the last census. In the light of the fact that things are changing so rapidly in this country one wonders whether we have achieved what we wanted to achieve by this particular redistribution, and why in effect in many cases if there was to be a wholesale abandonment of present constituencies of long standing, it might not have been done after much consultation and after an examination of other factors that come into play.

I quote from R. MacGregor Dawson, one of the great political scientists of our country, who many years ago wrote the following:

> Two important principles have been generally accepted in Canada as justifying a departure from the general rule of the approximate equality of the constituencies. First, municipal and county boundaries should be followed when at all possible. It is considered far wiser to over or under-represent an area than to dismember districts which have established traditions, long history, and strong local pride and character.

All of this suggests to me that there are other factors that are more important to people than mere numbers. There is the sense of a representative really being theirs, in order that they may have a dialogue that goes on not only between themselves and their member of parliament but with each other. If this is to happen, a constituency must be some kind of homogeneous unit, and I fail to find much homogeneity in the new constituencies outlined to us.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, we will be flexible enough to realize that while there may be certain problems for the chief returning officer of the country with regard to dual ridings, surely in a case as unique as P.E.I.—and I think it is unique alone in the fact that we have only four representatives, apart from everything else—we should have the courage and adventurous spirit to be able to develop in these circumstances which make it necessary—yes, important and valid— a method to continue the concept of the dual riding. This in many ways has contributed in no small measure to the uniqueness and the value of the representation of the province in parliament.

These are my comments with regard to the matter of redistribution, and I would hope they and other comments, which I am sure have been submitted by the people of P.E.I., will be taken into account by the commission when it makes its final analysis of the problem of redistribution in P.E.I.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to present arguments along the lines of those presented by my two colleagues, not that I have less interest than they but that I have great confidence in and complete support for the arguments they have advanced. They are cogent, intelligent, reasonable and appropriately applied to the question. I therefore support them wholeheartedly. We have discussed this matter on more than one occasion. I am happy they have spoken so well, and I hope the commission will afford the proper attention which such good arguments deserve.

• (5:40 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. This terminates the consideration of Objection No. 5 in respect of Prince Edward Island province. The house having considered the objection, it will be my duty, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report to the Boundaries Commission with a copy of objection, and also a copy of the debates of the house, for reconsideration thereof.

We now shall proceed with the considerations and objections concerning the province of Nova Scotia, Objection No. 15 found on page 26 of the pamphlet. On February 16 last a notice of objection in the form of a motion was filed with Mr. Speaker in the following terms:

Proposed Electoral Districts of Halifax, Halifax-East Hants and Dartmouth-Halifax East:

That, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act (chapter 31, Statutes of Canada 1964-65), consideration be given by this house to the matter of an objection to the provisions of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of Nova Scotia, laid before this house by Mr. Speaker on Wednesday, January 19, 1966, on the grounds set forth hereafter:

Objections to the new boundaries of the constituencies of Halifax, Halifax-East Hants and Dartmouth-Halifax East.

The petition is filed in order that the boundary lines of the three constituencies may conform more to recognized municipal divisions in the area concerned, for the following reasons:

(a) that Dartmouth-Halifax East be extended to the Guysborough County line because the residents of Halifax East, now left outside, by custom, tradition, economic and business interests, and transportation are part of the physical and demographic entity proposed to be established in Darmouth-Halifax East.

(b) that the boundary in the city of Halifax between Halifax and Halifax-East Hants follow the boundaries of the present ward 7 to prevent political confusion.

(c) that if change (a) is agreed upon, that the area west of Bedford Basin proposed to be included in Dartmouth Halifax-East be placed in Halifax-East Hants because by custom, tradition, economic and business interests and transportation, that area is part of the physical and demographic entity proposed to be established in Halifax-East Hants.

(d) that the boundaries of Halifax-East Hants run to the western boundary of Halifax County because the inhabitants along the eastern shore of St. Margaret's Bay have stronger commercial, political and business ties with the area immediately east than the area to their west.

(e) that Halifax-East Hants be named Uniacke for historical reasons, and to prevent confusion with the name of the riding of Halifax.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): First of all, Mr. Speaker, before I proceed with my few remarks which I should like to make about the six changes which we in Halifax at least feel should be pursued with, perhaps I should read these into the record:

(a) that Dartmouth-Halifax East be extended to the Guysborough County line because the residents of Halifax East, now left outside, by custom, tradition, economic and business interests, and transportation are part of the physical and demographic entity proposed to be established in Dartmouth-Halifax East.

(b) that the boundary in the city of Halifax between Halifax and Halifax-East Hants follow the boundaries of the present Ward 7 to prevent political confusion.

(c) that if change (a) is agreed upon, that the area West of Bedford Basin—

Known as Bedford.

—proposed to be included in Dartmouth Halifax-East be placed in Halifax-East Hants because by custom, tradition, economic and business interests and transportation, that area is part of the physical and demographic entity proposed to be established in Halifax-East Hants.

(d) That the boundaries of Halifax-East Hants run to the Western boundary of Halifax County because the inhabitants along the Eastern shore of St. Margaret's Bay have stronger commercial political and business ties with the area immediately East than the area to their West.

(e) That Halifax-East Hants be named Uniacke for historical reasons—

Which I will touch on in a moment.

—and to prevent confusion with the name of the riding of Halifax.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to pay some tribute to Mr. Justice Pottier and his commission, including Mr. Muggah, Mr. Grant, and their secretary Mr. Donald D. Anderson. Their job was a very difficult one I know, because I have been through much of the work they have done, for other purposes and on other occasions. During the course of the hearings in Halifax there were 11 presentations to the commission made up substantially of the political interests as they now exist. These representations were in some general accord. There were no sharp divisions of opinion and they centered around largely, as has been pointed out here earlier this afternoon, the necessity of maintaining identity and common purpose. When you are taken away and removed from those areas whose traditional motivation is in one direction, it is a little difficult to remove them, as in the case of Bedford Basin, from the natural Halifax orientation to the Dartmouth orientation. There is no logical or geographical reason, nor has there been any historic reason.

Mr. Speaker, the time is getting on today and I know that my colleague from Halifax (Mr. McCleave) will deal in depth with many of these points I have raised. In the few remaining moments left I wish to deal with the suggestion that the Halifax-East Hants riding as proposed by the commission be renamed and that it be renamed in honour of a great Nova Scotian, one of the untiring champions of constitutional rights in the province of Nova Scotia and perhaps truly one of the fathers of responsible government in Canada. I refer to that famous attorney general of the province, Mr. Uniacke.

Mr. Uniacke's whole history, his whole life in Nova Scotia, was one of merit and reward, both to himself personally and to the people with whom he worked and lived in his time, as well as the people who have followed in that great province since then. Mr. Uniacke was an Irishman born in Cork in 1753. He came to Canada in 1774, was admitted to the Nova Scotia bar on April 3, 1781, and in 1782 was appointed solicitor general of that province. In 1783 there ensued a period of 25 years of devotion and service as a member of the house of assembly. Mr. Uniacke was first elected to represent the township of Sackville. While that is not immediately in the riding, the latter years of his life were spent in the heart of what, if the changes are to go through, will be known as Halifax-East Hants.

Not only because of his 25 years of service as a member of the legislative assembly, but also because of the many other warm human traits that he brought to light in our province in those years, the dying years of the 1700's, we wish to give him recognition in this manner. He spent the last 15 years of his life at Uniacke House, and the area subsequently has been named Mount Uniacke. We find historical reference to him in many ways and in many centres within the new riding and within the adjoining area of the city of Halifax.

If the commission could consider the changing of the name from Halifax-East Hants to that of Uniacke, I am sure they would encourage the good will of the many thousands of residents in the suburban areas surrounding Halifax and through the area of Hants East.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I have one other brief thought I should like to put forth this afternoon regarding this question of redistribution of the boundaries in Halifax, and it involves in a very minor way the absolute numbers or quotas that would be affected by two of the changes that have been mentioned, particularly with regard to Halifax-East Hants.

In reference to the change of the Dartmouth riding from the area known as Bedford, back to the western riding, which I hope will come to be known very favourably as "Uniacke", in all a total of 2,100 voters will be involved. This falls well within the allowable percentage of deviation above or below the quota and should impose no difficulty from that point of view.

On the other side of the ledger, the removal of this number of people from the Dartmouth riding will in no way impair it. In fact, the growth on the Dartmouth side of the harbour is such that the removal of 2,100 votes will not make much difference, because during the five year period since these figures were accumulated I am sure the growth has been such as to bring it within the allowable limits.

Out in the extreme western end of this new riding to the Hubbards and St. Margarets bay area, along the shore line of St. Margarets bay to Peggy's Cove, we find people whose natural orientation and business pursuits are best accommodated in Halifax. As I say, their natural orientation is in this direction, and it would be useful to these people and the maintenance of order in the new constituency if the boundary could be left as it now exists in the present dual constituency.

I should like to make one final point before I conclude my remarks. Like the dual constituency in Prince Edward Island, Halifax has enjoyed representation by two members, elected by the people of Halifax, since the time of confederation. As evidence of the good representation of that city, one can point to the fact that not less than three prime ministers of this country at some point in their lives pursued their careers in that city, sought election there or served in the house of assembly. I would be remiss, as the last new member from that constituency, if I did not pay tribute not only to those men who rose to heights in the parliament of Canada but to the many who came and gave of their time and devotion, serving to the best of their ability. When the constituency disappears we will have seen the last of the constituency in which responsible government in Canada was born, fostered and nurtured.

Viewpoints raised by myself and my colleague are considered to represent the tripartison views of the existing political interests in Halifax. There is no major conflict involved. Indeed they are shared by municipal, provincial, business and social interests. To cross over these lines and disarrange them to the extent proposed, I suggest will create some undue difficulty in federal, provincial and municipal efforts and interest, and it is not our intention to swerve from that difficulty at this time.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, since it is very close to six o'clock I wonder whether we could call it six o'clock. I can assure the house that within a very few minutes after the commencement of the debate tomorrow afternoon yet another province will be out of the way, because I am sure I can complete my remarks in approximately seven minutes.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that any member who wishes to speak to the objections raised in respect of the changes in Nova Scotia be allowed to speak at this time so that we can complete that part of our job this afternoon? I am sure this would take only about 12 or 15 minutes.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very good suggestion. Perhaps you will not see the clock until we have completed this province.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: I promise I will keep my eye on the clock and take not more than seven or eight minutes to complete my remarks.

My colleague has covered much of the ground in his remarks that we compiled for presentation to the commission, and I shall not deal with those areas again. I should like to point out, however, that there was agreement among the political parties regarding the general presentation to the commission when it met in Nova Scotia.

The new boundaries that we propose conform to the municipal lines in the province of Nova Scotia. These are lines which have been in effect for generations and which, of course, determine the set-up of the political organizations. I am advised by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) our colleague from the adjoining riding of Antigonish-Guysborough, that he would have joined us had we asked the commission to take another look at the suggested redistribution of Nova Scotia as it affected the whole province. Unfortunately our efforts were confined to the one county of Halifax, which in the future will have three members and include part of a fourth and fifth riding.

This is perhaps understandable when one realizes that the population served, as of the last census, was 225,723. Halifax, even though a dual riding, is one of the largest in the country. To elaborate on the figures given by my colleague, if the changes were made as have been suggested, creating the Halifax-East Hants riding by adding part of the east shore of St. Margaret's bay and Bedford, the member would represent a population of approximately 77,866, which is within the permissive limitation of 67,000 plus the variation. The riding of Dartmouth-Halifax East, adding the eastern end of Halifax county, would then have a population of 74,950. It should be pointed out that Dartmouth is a growth area so the number would be larger than that. However, we are bound by the figures of the last census.

What effect would these changes have on the adjoining seats from which the proposed areas would be taken? Again we must check the figure for Central Nova and the south shore. We would find that these are still within the acceptable population limits.

The argument has been advanced by my colleague, with the regard to the suggested change, that the area near the head of St. Margaret's bay should not become part of the south shore area but should remain in the proposed Uniacke riding.

• (6:00 p.m.)

I should like to deal with two other points. First, with regard to the city of Halifax, we suggest to the commission that it do one of two things. The northwest corner of Halifax is taken out to go into the riding immediately west. We suggest that to avoid political confusion the commission follow the ward 7 boundaries in the northwest section of the city. The boundaries determined by the commission have no relation to the ancient ward system of Halifax. Alternatively, if it will not consider making the change to satisfy municipal lines, we suggest that it make the change to satisfy the new provincial lines set up since the commission sat and since we presented our petition. This would be to take out and put in the western riding that area bounded by Windsor street North and Chebucto, and the Dutch Village road.

There is a population of about 2,000 at the eastern end of Halifax county which we suggest remain in the Dartmouth-Halifax East riding, rather than go into Central Nova. Our submission is that this area is not a viable unit attached to Pictou county and part of Colchester county. There is a cross-country road between these areas but it is a small one; the major roads in the area run along the coastline. The area has its economic interest identified with Halifax and Dartmouth and its political roots—and politics, of course, are important to Nova Scotians—are tied in with the area immediately to its west.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would hope the commission would pay some heed to the wishes of the inhabitants of that area and would take a look at the various points we have presented. We have presented them in a non-partisan way, trying to make units as compact and as nearly identifiable with existing units as possible. With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, and with our fingers crossed, we send these speeches to the commission through Your Honour. I would point out that I was right on the dot of seven minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does this complete the consideration of Objection No. 15?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house having considered this objection, it will be the duty of Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, to refer the report of the Boundaries Commission, together with a copy of the objection and also a copy of the debates of the house, back to the commission for reconsideration thereof.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I would seek the permission of the house to revert to routine proceedings for a moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to routine proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

Third report of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts —Mr. Basford.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn I would point out that it was arranged that the individual representations from Quebec, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick would be considered today. I would assume that since all these representations have been considered except those in connection with New Brunswick, representations in respect of New Brunswick will be heard first tomorrow, in addition to any others that the house leaders might decide upon at their meeting tomorrow morning.

Mr. Stewart: I understand that is acceptable to the government house leader, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

It being at seven minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

END OF VOLUME IV