INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

Faisant suite aux volumes 7 et 8 qui traitent des premières années de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, avant l'entrée en scène du Japon et des États-Unis, le présent ouvrage expose l'évolution de la politique canadienne vers le milieu de la guerre et plus précisément du 7 décembre 1941, date de l'attaque japonaise sur Pearl Harbor, jusqu'à la fin de 1943. Le Canada cherche toujours à définir son rôle, mais durant cette période, l'attention passe de la nature de l'engagement du Canada à titre de "deuxième puissance militaire du Commonwealth après la Grande-Bretagne" (volume 8, p. viii) à la place qu'il doit occuper au sein des alliés dont les grandes puissances dominent l'effort de guerre. Cette tentative est primordiale non seulement en raison de l'intérêt que les Canadiens portent à la conduite de la guerre, mais aussi à cause de l'influence qu'auront les précédents créés sur leurs intérêts une fois la guerre terminée. Les circonstances allaient mettre à l'épreuve la souveraineté du Canada et sa capacité sur la scène internationale et allaient permettre d'établir le degré de reconnaissance auquel le Canada pourrait s'attendre pour sa contribution à la victoire.

Au milieu de la guerre, l'organisation du ministère des Affaires extérieures reste la même que celle décrite dans l'introduction du volume 7 à la page xii. En raison de leur répercussions au pays, les plus importants changements à intervenir dans la représentation diplomatique (chapitre I) sont sans contredit la rupture des relations diplomatiques avec le gouvernement de Vichy et la nomination d'un représentant auprès du Mouvement de la France libre, d'abord à Londres puis à Alger. Règle générale, le gouvernement, conscient du manque de personnel compétent, évite d'ouvrir de nouvelles missions à l'étranger, bien qu'il se laisse fléchir dans certains cas. De plus, il y a deux initiatives qui sont liées à des buts précis de la politique canadienne. Afin de contribuer à l'évolution constitutionnelle de l'Inde au sein du Commonwealth, on pense nommer un haut commissaire en Inde mais rien n'est décidé. Puis, soucieux de promouvoir ses intérêts aux États-Unis, il établit un consulat général à New York. Certaines modifications aux conventions de la diplomatie et des raisons de prestige amènent le Canada à élever ses légations à l'étranger au rang d'ambassades, à commencer par les États-Unis. Témoinant de la complexité croissante des relations internationales du Canada, ces changements — en particulier l'établissement du consulat général — signalent la nécessité d'examiner le rôle du ministère des Affaires extérieures et celui du service des délégués commerciaux du ministère du Commerce en vue d'éviter les conflits et la confusion quant aux responsabilités. Aussi résolut-on d'instituer un comité interministériel chargé d'étudier la question et de faire des recommandations sur la coordination des services.

Il va sans dire qu'en 1942-1943 la guerre est au premier plan des préoccupations diplomatiques du Canada (chapitre II). L'attaque sur Pearl Harbor met un terme aux démarches diplomatiques décrites dans les chapitres VI et VII du volume 8 et ajoute un nouveau théâtre de guerre qui allait bientôt éprouver les Canadiens lors de la chute de Hong Kong. On se méfie désormais des Japonais du Canada et il semble que leur avenir posera des problèmes sur le plan des relations extérieures. Or, en 1942 et 1943, le Canada n'est pas directement impliqué dans la guerre du Pacifique et, au nombre des conséquences de Pearl

INTRODUCTION

Volumes 7 and 8 of this series covered the Second World War prior to the entry of Japan and the United States. The present volume deals with the evolution of Canadian policy during the middle years of the war, from the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, until the end of 1943. During those years, attention shifted from working out the bases of Canada's participation, as "a belligerent second only to Britain as a Commonwealth military power" (Volume 8, p. ix), to an attempt to define this country's place in an Allied war effort dominated by much larger nations. That effort was important not only because Canadians were concerned about the conduct of the war itself but also because precedents were being established which would profoundly affect their interests once peace returned. It was a time for testing Canada's sovereignty and for determining the recognition which this country might expect for its contribution to victory.

During the middle years of the war, the organization of the Department of External Affairs did not change from that described in the Introduction to Volume 7 (p. xiii). Because of their domestic ramifications, the most important changes in diplomatic representation (Chapter I) undoubtedly were the termination of relations with the Vichy government of France and the appointment of a representative to deal with the Free French, first in London and later in Algiers. Otherwise, the Canadian government, concerned about the shortage of qualified personnel, sought to avoid proliferation of diplomatic missions, although some pressures proved irresistible. In addition, there were two initiatives related to particular goals of Canadian policy. Plans were made to appoint a High Commissioner to India in the hope of contributing to the constitutional evolution of that country within the Commonwealth, but they were not carried out. To promote Canadian interests in the United States, the first consulate general was opened in New York. Changing conventions of diplomacy, combined with a keener sensitivity to considerations of status, led to the decision to raise the legations exchanged between Canada and foreign countries to the embassy level, beginning with the United States. Reflecting as they did the growing complexity of Canada's international relationships, these changes — especially the establishment of the consulate general — suggested the need for examination of the roles of the Department of External Affairs and the Trade Commissioner service of the Department of Trade and Commerce in order to avoid conflict between the two services and confusion over lines of authority. Consequently, an interdepartmental committee was established which studied the problem and made recommendations for the co-ordination of activities.

The overriding preoccupation of those concerned with Canadian external policy in 1942 and 1943 was, of course, the conduct of the war (Chapter II). Pearl Harbor ended the diplomatic manoeuvres described in Chapters VI and VII of Volume 8 and added a new theatre of war, of which Canadians soon had bitter experience at Hong Kong. It also brought suspicion on the Japanese-Canadian community and suggested that its future might become an important issue in external relations. Yet Canada was not deeply involved in the Pacific theatre in 1942 and 1943, and it was the other consequence of Pearl Harbor, the entry into the war of the United States, that had the greater impact on this Harbor, c'est l'entrée en guerre des États-Unis qui a eu le plus grand impact. La question primordiale est celle de la place que veut occuper le Canada auprès des Anglais et des Américains qui dirigent l'effort de guerre allié par l'entremise des organisations de guerre composées établies à Washington et à Londres. Le Canada ne veut pas être membre de toutes, mais seulement de celles qui l'intéressent de près, comme la Commission sur la répartition des munitions et la Commission composée de l'alimentation à Washington. Pour convaincre les Anglais et les Américains qui veulent limiter la représentation alliée sur ces commissions, le Canada fait valoir le principe de représentation proportionnelle suivant lequel l'adhésion d'un pays à une organisation internationale doit être fonction de sa contribution. Les grandes lignes de cette position furent établies par Hume Wrong le 20 janvier 1942 (document 135), puis reprises par le Premier ministre devant la Chambre des Communes le 9 juillet 1943. Or, des divergences d'opinion au sein du Cabinet retardent l'élaboration d'une position ferme sur la question et la Grande-Bretagne et les États-Unis se montrent réticents lorsque la position canadienne leur est finalement annoncée, de sorte que les résultats avaient de quoi décevoir les plus exigeants. On obtient l'admission au sein de la Commission composée sur la production et les ressources et, plus tard, l'admission au sein de la Commission composée de l'alimentation, mais seulement une participation limitée aux travaux de la Commission sur la répartition des munitions.

La seconde conséquence pour le Canada de l'entrée en guerre des États-Unis est le fait que plusieurs aspects de son effort de guerre, jusque-là limité au cadre du Commonwealth, revêtent un caractère plus international. Le déploiement des forces canadiennes se trouve désormais lié aux décisions du Comité mixte des chefs d'états-majors et aux ententes entre les dirigeants des grandes puissances. On étend le Plan d'entraînement aérien du Commonwealth britannique aux autres pays alliés qui sont invités sans tarder à en étudier les perspectives d'avenir lors d'une conférence internationale tenue à Ottawa. La collaboration financière du Canada à l'effort de guerre dépasse le cadre du Commonwealth avec l'institution en 1943 de l'Aide mutuelle à l'intention de tous les pays alliés. Enfin, de par sa contribution à la recherche atomique, le Canada entre dans le jeu assez délicat des rapports entre les équipes de recherche américaines et britanniques. En même temps, en raison de certains arrangements pris au début de la guerre, l'appartenance du Canada au Commonwealth conserve son importance au point de vue militaire. Il en résulte parfois des frictions entre le Canada et la Grande-Bretagne, notamment au sujet de la mise aux fers des prisonniers de guerre après l'attaque sur Dieppe.

Bien que la conduite de la guerre soit le principal souci de la politique extérieure du Canada en 1942 et 1943, les succès alliés rendent de plus en plus urgent l'élaboration d'une politique d'après-guerre (chapitre III). Les préparatifs en vue du règlement de la paix soulèvent les mêmes problèmes quant à la représentation canadienne que la question des organisations de guerre composées. Les Canadiens constatent que leur pays doit s'intéresser aux préparatifs pour le règlement de la paix en Europe mais à la fin de 1943, le gouvernement n'a pas encore décidé ce que sera sa contribution matérielle exacte. Par conséquent, il est assez difficile pour le Canada de réclamer l'admission au sein de la country. Most important of all was the question of Canada's relationship to the Anglo-American direction of the war effort through the combined war organizations established in Washington and London. The Canadian objective was membership not in all the organizations but only in those dealing with matters in which this country had a major interest, particularly the Munitions Assignments Board and the Combined Food Board in Washington. The Canadian effort to overcome Anglo-American reluctance to open the boards to broader Allied membership was based on the functional principle – the idea that membership of an international body should be determined by a country's contribution to its work – suggested in this context by Hume Wrong on January 20, 1942 (Document 135) and endorsed by the Prime Minister in a speech in the House of Commons on July 9, 1943. Differences within the Canadian Cabinet, however, caused difficulty in formulating an approach on membership on the combined boards, and Britain and the United States proved reluctant to accept the Canadian case when it was made. Together, these circumstances produced a result which fell short of the ambitions of those who favoured a strong line: membership in the Combined Production and Resources Board and eventually in the Combined Food Board, but only limited association with the work of the Munitions Assignments Board.

A second consequence of United States involvement in the war was that many aspects of the Canadian effort which hitherto had been dealt with in a Commonwealth context assumed a broader international character. The deployment of Canadian forces was affected by decisions of the Combined Chiefs of Staff and by agreements between the leaders of the major powers. The British Commonwealth Air Training Plan was extended to include Canada's other allies who were invited to an international conference in Ottawa to discuss its future. Canada's economic assistance to co-belligerents extended beyond the Commonwealth with the inauguration of Mutual Aid, applicable to all allies, in 1943. In contributing to the development of atomic energy, Canada became involved in the uneasy relationship between the British and American research projects. At the same time, as a result of arrangements worked out in the earlier years of the war, the Commonwealth connection remained important to Canada's military role. The operation of those arrangements was the subject of intermittent disagreement between Canada and Great Britain, most seriously in connection with the shackling of prisoners of war after the Dieppe raid.

While the conduct of the war was of necessity the central concern of Canadian external policy in 1942 and 1943, the improving fortunes of the Allies gave urgency to post-war planning (Chapter III). Arrangements for the peace settlement involved problems of status for Canada similar to those encountered in connection with the combined war organizations. Canadians recognized that their country had an interest in plans for the European settlement but, by the end of 1943, the government had not reached conclusions about the material contribution it should make. Consequently, it was difficult to press claims for membership of the European Advisory Commission and the Advisory Council for Italy, which were established as a result of the Moscow conference in October 1943. There was, moreover, danger of challenge to Canada's international position from the Soviet Union, which refused to participate in the United Commission consultative européenne et du Conseil consultatif pour l'Italie, qui sont institués suite à la Conférence de Moscou d'octobre 1943. De plus, il reste le danger de voir la place du Canada contestée par l'Union soviétique qui refuse de participer aux travaux de la Commission des Nations Unies sur les crimes de guerre parce que les républiques soviétiques fédérées ne sont pas représentées alors que les pays du Commonwealth le sont. Ces problèmes sont de moindre importance cependant dans les entretiens sur les questions économiques de l'après-guerre comme le commerce, les finances et l'aviation civile. Toutefois, le Canada craint que les consultations entre pays du Commonwealth ne donnent l'impression qu'on préparait un front commun en vue des discussions avec les États-Unis. Bien qu'on en reste au stade préliminaire en 1943, on s'empresse d'étudier ces questions de près, ce qui permet au Canada d'apporter une contribution considérable aux discussions internationales, comme notamment un document sur l'organisation monétaire internationale (pièce jointe, document 594). On verra certains résultats de ces efforts dans le volume 11.

Vers le milieu de la guerre, il semble de plus en plus certain que, la paix restaurée, le groupement des quelques "nations unies" formera le noyau d'une organisation mondiale, sentiment que confirme la Conférence de Moscou tenue en octobre 1943 (voir section e de la partie 1 du chapitre II). À la fin de 1943, l'élaboration des plans pour une telle organisation n'est pas encore très avancée, mais on peut se faire une idée du rôle qui sera dévolu au Canada en tenant compte des arrangements établis pour l'Administration des Nations Unies pour le secours et la reconstruction (UNRRA) et la Commission provisoire pour l'alimentation et l'agriculture (chapitre IV). En tant que puissance économique reconnue, le Canada s'attend à participer activement aux travaux de ces deux organisations et à obtenir une représentation équivalente. Il obtient satisfaction en ce qui concerne l'Organisation pour l'alimentation et l'agriculture: le président de la délégation canadienne, G. S. Barton, est nommé membre du Comité directeur de la conférence d'organisation tenue en mai et juin 1943 à Hot Springs, en Virginie, et L. B. Pearson devient président de la Commission provisoire. Le Canada n'a pas le même succès avec UNRRA cependant. Sa demande de représentation sur le Comité central aux côtés de la Chine, de la Grande-Bretagne, de l'Union soviétique et des États-Unis n'est pas acceptée et bien que la présidence du comité des approvisionnements offre une certaine compensation, on craint que ces arrangements n'établissent un précédent qui, à l'avenir, exclurait le Canada de la direction des organisations des Nations Unies présentant pour lui un intérêt particulier. À l'extérieur du cadre des Nations Unies, les questions de statut n'entravent pas la participation du Canada aux conférences internationales dans lesquelles il a un rôle reconnu ou un intérêt évident (chapitre V). Il lui est cependant plus difficile de revendiquer la participation aux rencontres inter-américaines auxquelles il ne s'était pas intéressé auparavant. C'est d'ailleurs la raison pour laquelle le Canada n'est pas invité à la réunion des ministres des Affaires étrangères des Républiques américaines à Rio de Janeiro en décembre 1941.

Bien qu'ils compliquent les relations extérieures du pays, les liens avec le Commonwealth (chapitre VII) sont encore estimés, mais ne sont plus aussi Nations War Crimes Commission because Commonwealth countries, but not the Soviet Federated Republics, were represented. Such problems were not pressing in discussions dealing with post-war economic questions — trade, finance and civil aviation — although there was concern in Canada lest Commonwealth consultation give the impression that a common front was being formed for dealings with the United States. While consideration of these issues did not go beyond the preliminary stage in 1943, they received close and urgent study. As a result, there were significant Canadian contributions to international discussion of the subjects concerned, for example in the paper on international monetary organization (enclosure, Document 594). Some of the fruits of these efforts will be seen in Volume II.

During the middle years of the war, it became apparent that the loose grouping of “united nations” was likely to form the basis of a world organization once peace was restored, and that objective was endorsed by the Moscow conference in October 1943 (see Section e in Part I of Chapter II). Detailed plans for such an organization were not far advanced by the end of that year but indications of Canada’s future role might be found in the arrangements for two specialized agencies, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration (UNRRA) and the Interim Commission on Food and Agriculture (Chapter IV). As an important economic power, Canada expected to make a major contribution to the work of both these bodies and sought commensurate representation. These hopes were satisfactorily borne out in the Food and Agriculture organization: the Chairman of the Canadian delegation, G. S. Barton, was a member of the Steering Committee of the organizational conference at Hot Springs, Virginia, in May and June 1943, and L. B. Pearson was named Chairman of the Interim Commission. With UNRRA, on the other hand, there were more difficulties. Canada’s claim to membership of the Central Committee (with China, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and the United States) was not accepted and, although chairmanship of the Supplies Committee might be partial compensation, there was concern lest these arrangements set a precedent for exclusion from the direction of future United Nations bodies of importance to this country. Outside the United Nations context, problems of status did not interfere with Canada’s participation in international conferences in which it had an acknowledged role or an evident interest (Chapter V). It was more difficult, however, to establish a claim to participate in inter-American discussions, in which Canada hitherto had not been closely involved. As a result, Canada was not invited to the meeting of foreign ministers of the American Republics at Rio de Janeiro in December 1941.

The Commonwealth relationship (Chapter VI), although a complicating factor in Canadian external relations, was still valued but, because of the changed character of the war, was of less importance than it had been between 1939 and 1941 (see Volume 7, Chapters III-V). Relations with the United States (Chapter VII), on the other hand, assumed even greater significance now that that country was a co-belligerent. While the transition undoubtedly was aided by arrangements worked out during the years of United States neutrality (Volume 8, Chapter I), it was not without its resentments and anxieties. Most serious, perhaps, were those arising from United States involvement in defence projects in importants que ce qu'ils étaient de 1939 à 1941 (voir le volume 7, chapitres III-V) à cause de l'allure que prend la guerre. Désormais, les relations du Canada avec les États-Unis (chapitre VII), maintenant cobelligérants, s'intensifieront. Si la transition est facilitée par certains arrangements pris lorsque les États-Unis étaient neutres (volume 8, chapitre I), elle ne s'opère pas sans heurts. Le plus grave, sans doute, vient de la participation américaine à certains projets de défense au Canada, surtout dans le nord du pays, où elle suscitera des inquiétudes non seulement au sujet de la propriété des aménagements, mais aussi de la souveraineté territoriale elle-même. Parmi les autres pays, les relations avec la France (chapitre VIII) sont encore d'une importance considérable. Deux grands problèmes se posent: l'affaire Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon en décembre 1941, épisode pour le moins délicat des relations tant avec les États-Unis qu'avec la France, et la position à adopter à l'égard des autorités françaises en Afrique du Nord après le débarquement allié de novembre 1942. Autrement, sur le plan des relations bilatérales, la guerre du Pacifique semble prépondérante, puisqu'elle amène le Canada à nouer des liens sinon toujours harmonieux, du moins plus étroits avec ses deux grands alliés de la région, l'Australie et la Chine.

Le choix des documents est conforme aux directives énoncées au volume 7 (pp. viii-x). Comme le dit si bien mon confrère dans son introduction (p. viii), la guerre a donné lieu à un accroissement tel des communications qu'il ne saurait être question d'inclure tous les documents importants. Pour la compilation des présents textes, la tâche était d'autant plus ardue qu'il fallait rassembler tous les grands sujets dans un seul volume. Il faut dire que certains caractères propres à la période étudiée et propres aux documents de l'époque nous ont été d'un grand secours. Tout d'abord, les modalités de la participation du Canada à la guerre étaient déjà établies à la fin de 1941, ce qui nous a permis de traiter la conduite de la guerre en un seul chapitre alors que le volume 7 y est presque entièrement consacré. Deuxièmement, on commençait à peine à étudier les questions compliquées de l'après-guerre de telle sorte que les chapitres III et IV sont courts. Enfin, puisque d'une part on n'est qu'au début de l'élaboration des politiques d'après-guerre et que d'autre part il n'y a pas eu beaucoup de conférences internationales à cause de la guerre, il y a peu d'historiques et de rapports volumineux. Par conséquent, si le nombre de documents publiés est plus élevé que dans les volumes précédents, les documents sont cependant plus courts en général. Il semblait donc préférable, d'autant plus que les dossiers sont maintenant ouverts aux historiens, de condenser le tout en un seul volume offrant un résumé des principaux événements de la période et pouvant servir de guide pour la recherche dans les archives. De plus, compte tenu des coûts de production, la publication en deux volumes aurait retardé non seulement la parution de la moitié des textes reproduits ici, mais aussi celle des volumes suivants.

Non seulement avons-nous recherché la concision dans le choix des textes, mais nous nous sommes permis d'omettre certains sujets, notamment sur la conduite de la guerre. Bien sûr, en temps de guerre, la différence entre les opérations militaires et les relations diplomatiques est ténue; néanmoins, nous avons voulu nous en tenir le plus possible aux questions diplomatiques. C'est pourquoi certains épisodes bien connus de la guerre sont tout simplement

Canada. The most acute problems were in the North, where they gave rise to concern not only about the ownership of property but about sovereignty itself. Among other countries, relations with France (Chapter VIII) still had the greatest significance. Two issues were of special concern: the crisis over St. Pierre and Miquelon in December 1941, an awkward moment in Canadian relations with the United States as well as with France, and the development of policy towards the French authorities in North Africa after the Allied landing in November 1942. Otherwise, the most significant determinant of bilateral relations perhaps was involvement in the Pacific war, which brought closer, if not always harmonious, connections with Canada's two major allies in the area, Australia and China.

In selecting documents for this volume, the guidelines quoted in the Introduction to Volume 7 (pp. ix-xi) have been followed. As the editor of that volume observed (p. xi), the growth of communications was so great during the war that by no means every important document could be included. Indeed, the selection here has had to be even more rigorous in order to accommodate the main subjects within a single volume. To some extent, economy was aided by certain characteristics of the period and of the documents themselves. In the first place, many of the terms on which Canada participated in the war had been worked out by the end of 1941, making it possible to deal with the conduct of the war, the subject of most of Volume 7, in a single chapter. Secondly, the complicated issues of post-war planning were only beginning to receive consideration, with the result that Chapters III and IV, dealing with those subjects, could be kept fairly brief. Finally, partly because post-war planning was in its early stages and partly because the war discouraged the proliferation of international conferences, the number of lengthy briefing papers and reports is modest. Thus, although the total number of documents published here is larger than in any previous volume, many of them are short. In these circumstances, and because the record is now open to scholars, it seemed desirable to produce a single volume which, it was hoped, would offer a summary of the main events of the period and serve as a guide to archival research. Because of rising production costs, to have attempted two volumes would have delayed the appearance not only of half the material reproduced here but also of later volumes in the series.

As well as striving for economy in the treatment of subjects included in this volume, it has been decided to omit others entirely. The reasons for doing so, particularly with respect to subjects affecting the conduct of the war, may be of interest. Obviously, the distinction in wartime between military and diplomatic matters is sometimes a fine one, but the effort has been made to confine attention to the latter. Thus, some well-known incidents of the war are omitted altogether and others are dealt with in limited fashion: the Dieppe raid, for example, appears in the context of negotiations over prisoners of war, the fall of Hong Kong as a problem in Anglo-Canadian relations (the release of British documents to the royal commission of inquiry), and the Sicilian operation as an irritant in Canada's relations with its allies as a result of unsatisfactory publicity arrangements. Readers requiring a full account of the participation of Canadian forces in the war will wish to consult the relevant volumes of the official army and navy histories and, when it is available, the companion work on the écartés, tandis que d'autres sont traités de façon accessoire: l'attaque sur Dieppe est abordée dans le seul contexte des négociations sur les prisonniers de guerre, la chute de Hong Kong figure comme source de difficultés dans les relations anglo-canadiennes (remise de documents britanniques à la Commission royale d'enquête) et la campagne de Sicile, comme cause de frictions entre le Canada et ses alliés par suite de différends au sujet des arrangements pour l'annonce des exploits alliés. Le lecteur désirant un compte rendu détaillé de la participation des forces canadiennes à la guerre pourra consulter les histoires officielles de l'armée et de la marine et celle de l'aviation lorsque disponible.¹ Aussi, un certain nombre de questions de grande importance pour les Canadiens ont eu peu de conséquences sur les relations extérieures. Par exemple, l'épisode de la conscription n'est abordé ici que sur le plan des visées des pays alliés souhaitant étendre au Canada l'application de leurs lois. D'autre part, en dépit de ses répercussions ultérieures (partie 10 du chapitre II), le sort réservé aux Canadiens d'origine japonaise demeurait encore en 1942-1943 un problème essentiellement interne. Aussi, bien que le ministère des Affaires extérieures s'y soit intéressé de près en 1942-1943, les questions touchant les prisonniers de guerre ne sont pas traitées de façon détaillée pour trois raisons: elles relèvent à bien des égards du domaine militaire, les négociations, menées par des tiers, furent laborieuses sans toujours donner de bons résultats et le travail, malgré son importance, était surtout d'ordre administratif. Les négociations qui ont entouré la mise aux fers des prisonniers après l'attaque sur Dieppe semblent les plus intéressantes et les plus importantes et on espère que les documents sur celles-ci sauront donner une juste idée du genre de difficultés qui se sont présentées lors des autres négociations tant avec les alliés qu'avec l'ennemi. Un autre sujet que l'on passe sous silence est la guerre politique, bien qu'elle ait beaucoup préoccupé les responsables du ministère des Affaires extérieures à l'époque. C'est qu'une fois de plus, la question empiète sur le domaine militaire et la documentation, tout en montrant l'attitude du Canada à l'égard des territoires occupés par l'ennemi vers lesquels la propagande était dirigée, semble effleurer les principales questions politiques. Enfin, même si les chapitres II, III et IV traitent amplement de ce que s'attendait le Canada en retour pour sa contribution matérielle à l'effort de guerre, on trouve peu de passages sur des ententes particulières sur la coopération pour la production de guerre. Cependant, les documents sur l'énergie atomique, probablement la plus importante et la plus exigeante des ententes de ce genre, serviront peut-être d'exemple.

Les lecteurs désireux de continuer leurs recherches trouveront dans le coin supérieur droit de chaque document un symbole indiquant la provenance. Le système adopté est le même que dans le volume 12 (p. xxxvi), et la liste intitulée "Provenance des documents" donne l'explication des symboles. Une mention dans les en-têtes accompagne les extraits. Un dague (†) à la fin d'une référence à un autre document indique que le document en question n'est pas reproduit air force.¹ Again, a number of issues which assumed great importance for Canadians during these years had limited impact on external relations. The conscription question, for example, is represented here only as it affected the desire of allied countries to apply their own laws in Canada. The treatment of Japanese-Canadians, despite its significance for future external relations (Part 10 of Chapter II), was a matter of primarily domestic importance in 1942 and 1943. Prisoner-of-war questions were of much concern to the Department of External Affairs in 1942 and 1943 but are not dealt with here in their full variety for three reasons: to some extent they may be regarded as military matters; negotiations, conducted at length and through third parties, were often inconclusive; and much of the work, important though it was, involved routine administration. The most interesting and important negotiations, perhaps, were those involving the shackling of prisoners after the Dieppe raid and it is hoped that the documents dealing with them will offer an example of the kinds of problems involved and the difficulties encountered in negotiations on this subject — with allies as well as with enemies. Another subject which is not treated here, although it consumed much time in External Affairs, is “political warfare.” This again was seen as an adjunct to the military effort and much of the documentation, although no doubt indicative of Canadian attitudes towards the enemy-controlled territories to which propaganda was directed, seems peripheral to major questions of policy. Finally, although there is a good deal in Chapters II, III and IV about the quid pro quo which Canada expected from the commitment of its resources to the war effort, there is little about specific arrangements for co-operation in war production. Perhaps, however, the documents on atomic energy, arguably the most significant and also the most difficult such arrangement, will serve as an example.

To assist readers wishing to do further research, the source of each document is indicated by a symbol printed at the upper right-hand corner. The system followed is similar to that described in Volume 12 (p. xxxv), and the symbols are explained in the Location of Documents list. Indication is given in the caption when extracts only are printed. A dagger (†) after a reference to a document indicates that it has not been printed. In the text of a document, suspension points within square brackets [. . .] indicate an editorial omission. For the same reasons as in Volume 12 — the cost involved and the desirability of freeing space for additional documents — the list of documents which appeared in earlier volumes has been omitted. No attempt has been made to standardize spelling from one document to another, but obvious errors have been corrected.

As in Volumes 7 and 8, most of the documents published here are from the files of the Department of External Affairs and the Mackenzie Papers but, as the Location of Documents list indicates, a variety of other collections is represented as well. I am grateful to the Honourable J. W. Pickersgill for granting unrestricted access to the King Papers, and to the following for permission to make use of other collections in the Public Archives of Canada: Mr. William dans ce volume. Dans le texte d'un document, des points de suspension entre crochets [. . .] indiquent une omission par le compilateur. Pour des raisons déjà énumérées dans le volume 12 — préparation coûteuse et le besoin d'espace vu le nombre de documents pertinents — il n'y a pas de liste des documents. Enfin, sans négliger les erreurs flagrantes, nous n'avons pas cherché à normaliser l'orthographe d'un document à l'autre.

Comme dans les volumes 7 et 8, la plupart des documents reproduits ici sont tirés des dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures et des documents de W. L. Mackenzie King, mais, comme le montre la liste "Provenance des documents," nous nous sommes servis d'autres sources. Je dois toute ma reconnaissance à l'honorable J. W. Pickersgill, qui m'a autorisé à consulter à loisir les documents King, et aux personnes et organismes suivants pour m'avoir permis de consulter d'autres collections des Archives publiques du Canada: M. William Howe et la Commission de contrôle de l'énergie atomique (Documents C. D. Howe), le sous-ministre de l'Industrie et du Commerce (Documents du ministère du Commerce) et Mme Georges P. Vanier (Documents Vanier). M. Louis Rasminsky m'a permis de consulter ses documents et de lui poser certaines questions. Beaucoup d'autres personnes ont eu l'obligeance de mettre à ma disposition leurs collections, mais dont nous n'avons pas tiré de document. Je suis particulièrement reconnaissant au directeur et au personnel du Massey College pour l'aide consentie dans la consultation des Documents Vincent Massey. La publication des documents tient compte des limitations touchant l'application de la "règle de trente ans" mentionnée par le Premier ministre lors de sa déclaration à la Chambre des Communes le 1^{er} mai 1969. Ainsi, deux documents 1540 et 1542 ne sont pas reproduits en version intégrale. D'autre part, à cause de négociations en cours lors de la préparation de ce volume, certaines modifications ont été apportées à la section a de la partie 5 du chapitre VII. Les documents 1239 et 1245 ne sont pas reproduits en version intégrale et deux documents datés du 15 décembre 1941, un memorandum sur les conclusions d'un comité interministériel sur les frontières sur la côte de l'Ouest et l'avant-propos (DEA/10471-40) furent omis. Ces quatre documents pourront être consultés une fois la question résolue. Autrement, aucun document ne fut sujet à des restrictions de la part du ministère des Affaires extérieures ou de qui que ce soit.

La préparation du présent volume était déjà en marche lorsque j'ai accepté les fonctions de compilateur. J'ai beaucoup profité des conseils de M. G. W. Hilborn et du travail consciencieux de M. Douglas Waldie lors de la sélection initiale des documents. La Direction des affaires historiques du ministère des Affaires extérieures a rendu des services inestimables; je suis reconnaissant à son ancien directeur, M. A. E. Blanchette et à ses successeurs, M. A. F. Hart et M. H. H. Carter, et au directeur adjoint, M. D. M. Page. M. F. J. McEvoy s'est révélé un collaborateur précieux pour recueillir les documents et les renseignements dont nous avions besoin. Il a aussi préparé la liste des personnalités et l'index. Avec sa compétence habituelle, tant technique que linguistique, M. Michel Rossignol a préparé le manuscrit pour l'impression. À l'extérieur du ministère, j'ai apprécié d'une façon particulière la collaboration du personnel des Archives publiques du Canada et de la direction historique du ministère de la Défense nationale. Je remercie le professeur Patricia Roy qui a bien voulu me signaler le Howe and the Atomic Energy Control Board (C. D. Howe Papers), the Deputy Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Department of Trade and Commerce Records) and Madame Georges P. Vanier (Vanier Papers). Mr. Louis Rasminsky permitted me to consult his papers and answered my questions about them. Various other collections, from which no material was selected for publication, were kindly made available by their owners. Of these, I am particularly grateful to the Master and members of Massey College for their assistance in dealing with the Vincent Massey Papers. The publication of documents is governed, of course, by the considerations affecting application of the "thirty-year rule" mentioned by the Prime Minister in his statement to the House of Commons of May 1, 1969. As a result of these considerations, two documents (Nos. 1540 and 1542) are not printed in full. Section A of Part 5 of Chapter VII was also affected since the subject was under negotiation at the time this volume was in preparation. Documents 1239 and 1245 are not printed in full and two documents dated December 15, 1941, a memorandum of conclusions of an interdepartmental committee and its covering letter (DEA/10471-40), were omitted. These four documents will be available for consultation in full once the matter is resolved. Otherwise, no documents were subject to restriction by the Department of External Affairs or other owners.

Work had already begun on this volume when I assumed responsibility as editor. I have benefitted much from the advice of G. W. Hilborn and from the very able work of Douglas Waldie in the early selection of documents. The staff and facilities of the Historical Division of the Department of External Affairs were of inestimable value in producing the volume; for ensuring their ready availability I owe much to the former Director, Dr. A. E. Blanchette, his successors as Director, A. F. Hart and H. H. Carter, and to the Deputy-Director, Dr. D. M. Page. F. J. McEvoy was of great help in locating documents and looking up answers to my many queries; he was also responsible for the List of Persons and the Index. Michel Rossignol prepared the manuscript for the printers with his customary expertise, technical and linguistic. In working outside the Department, I benefitted particularly from the co-operation of the staffs of the Public Archives of Canada and the Directorate of History of the Department of National Defence. Dr. Patricia Roy kindly directed my attention to Document 512. Responsibility for errors and omissions, of course, is mine alone as editor.

The editor of Volume 7 directed the attention of readers to two works of lasting value to anyone interested in Canadian external relations in wartime: The Mackenzie King Record, Volume I: 1939-1944 by J.W. Pickersgill (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1960), and Arms, Men and Governments: The War Policies of Canada, 1939-1945 by C.P. Stacey (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1970). Two more recent publications have been of much value to me in preparing this volume: In Defence of Canada: Peacemaking and Deterrence by James Eayrs (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1972), and Canada's War: The Politics of the Mackenzie King Government, 1939-1945 by J. L. Granatstein (Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1975). Canadian relations with Newfoundland are covered in a separate volume: Documents on Relations between Canada and Newfoundland (Volume 1: 1935-1949, Defence, Civil Aviation and Economic Affairs) edited by Paul Bridle (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1974).

document 512. Il va sans dire qu'à titre de compilateur, j'assume toute la responsabilité des erreurs ou omissions.

L'éditeur du volume 7 avait signalé aux lecteurs intéressés aux relations extérieures du Canada pendant la guerre deux livres d'une importance capitale: The Mackenzie King Record, Volume I: 1939-1944 par J. W. Pickersgill (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1960), et Armes, hommes et gouvernements: Les politiques de guerre du Canada, 1939-1945 par C. P. Stacey (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1970). Deux livres plus récents m'ont beaucoup aidé dans la préparation de ce volume: In Defence of Canada: Peacemaking and Deterrence par James Eayrs (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 1972) et Canada's War: The Politics of the Mackenzie King Government, 1939-1945 par J. L. Granatstein (Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1975). Pour les relations entre le Canada et Terre-Neuve, voir Documents relatifs aux relations entre le Canada et Terre-Neuve (volume 1: 1935-1949, défense, aviation civile et affaires économiques) compilé par Paul Bridle (Ottawa: Information Canada, 1974).

Ottawa, October 17, 1942

CONFIDENTIAL. His Majesty's Government in Canada propose to appoint a Minister to the Governments of the following Allied countries in London: Czechoslovakia, Greece, Norway, Poland and Yugoslavia. The intention is to accredit the same Minister to the five countries referred to and to Belgium and the Netherlands to succeed Mr. Jean Désy.

It is requested that the wishes of the Canadian Government be submitted for His Majesty's approval. When His Majesty's approval has been received, it is requested that each of the Governments of the first five countries referred to above be advised as follows: Quote

His Majesty's Government in Canada have come to the conclusion that it is desirable that the handling of matters at London relating to Canada should be confided to an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary accredited to the Government of (name of country).

Such a Minister would be accredited by His Majesty the King to the (Head of State of country) and he would be furnished with credentials which would enable him to take charge of all affairs relating to Canada. He would be the ordinary channel of communication with the Government of (name of country) on these matters. The arrangements proposed would not denote any departure from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the Empire, that is to say, the principle of consultative cooperation amongst all His Majesty's representatives as amongst His Majesty's Governments themselves, in matters of common concern. The methods of dealing with matters which may arise concerning more than one of His Majesty's Governments would therefore be settled by consultation between the representatives of His Majesty's Governments concerned.

In proposing the establishment of a Canadian Legation, His Majesty's Government in Canada trust that it will promote the maintenance and development of cordial relations, not only between (name of country) and Canada, but also between (name of country) and the whole British Commonwealth of Nations. End Quote.

In advising the Governments concerned as referred to above, it might be added that it is proposed to accredit the same Minister to them all and to Belgium and the Netherlands.

As regards second paragraph of this telegram, I should be obliged if you would advise me as soon as His Majesty's approval has been given.

Prime Minister approves your appointment as representative of the Government of Canada to the French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers.² It is intended that Dupuy should return to London to act as Chargé d'Affaires to the five Allied Governments still there and that you would continue to act as Minister to the Greek and Yugoslav Governments in Cairo. You would technically remain Minister to the Allied Governments there as no letters of recall would be presented. *Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] July 18, 1942

Attached is a copy of a memorandum by Pearson of a conversation which the Minister and he had with Mr. Sumner Welles on July 15th.

You will note that Mr. Welles returned to the question of the extension of Canadian diplomatic representation in Latin America. There is no doubt in my mind that the two countries he mentions, Mexico and Peru, should be the next American countries with which we exchange representatives. I do not think, however, that the suggested arrangement of accrediting one Minister to Chile and Peru would be satisfactory. This time last year the United States Under-Secretary of State, in urging us to establish direct diplomatic relations with Chile, was sure that the Minister appointed to Buenos Aires could be acceptably accredited to Santiago as well. In the event, this arrangement has not been very satisfactory. The distance between Buenos Aires and Santiago is too great for convenient commuting, though it is not as great as the distance between Santiago and Lima. Mr. Turgeon has only been able to go to Chile once since his appointment, and he has found the journey rather strenuous. When we get around to opening Legations on the west coast of South America, I think it would be better to have a Minister with only one Secretary for each country than to attempt to combine the two posts.

CONVERSATION WITH MR. SUMNER WELLES: JULY 15, 1942

The Minister asked Mr. Welles whether he would like to say a word about the Latin American situation. Mr. Welles made a few general remarks and then proceeded to discuss the Canadian position in Latin America. He said that he realized that certain people in Ottawa were somewhat disturbed when Canada was not invited last January to the Inter-American Conference at Rio. He explained this — as indeed he has explained it before — as being due to the reluctance of certain of the Latin American States to agree to an invitation being sent to Canada. This reluctance, he said, was due to the fact that Canada had never shown any great interest previously in Latin America, apart from questions of trade.³

Mr. Welles felt therefore that if we could develop our political relationship with Latin American countries through the establishment of Legations, it would have a very useful effect, as indicating Canada's interest in Latin American countries and her desire to improve her relations with them. Mr. Welles said that the United States would most heartily welcome such a development. He felt that if we opened a Legation in Mexico and one in Peru that is all that could be legitimately expected at the present time. He thought that one Minister might be accredited to both Chile and Peru.

Mr. Pearson asked Mr. Welles if the delay in the sending of a Minister to Ottawa by Chile was due to her disappointment at sharing a Canadian Minister with the Argentine, where indeed he has spent most of his time. Mr. Welles thought that this was not the case, — that the Chilean delay was due to political difficulties there. He thought that neither Peru nor Chile would feel slighted if one Minister were accredited to both countries.

The political difficulties in Chile mentioned above arose, according to Mr. Welles, out of the struggle going on in that country on the question of maintaining neutrality or joining other Latin American States in breaking relations with the Axis. He said that there had recently been indications that the latter course might before long be adopted by Chile.

Mr. Welles also discussed generally the relations between the United States and "Fighting France," and "Vichy France," but said nothing of significance. He felt that the "Fighting French" movement was on a better foundation than it had been, but he was emphatic that many French elements most anxious to resist the Axis were almost equally determined not to accept de Gaulle's political leadership. He felt that de Gaulle's record as a political leader justified these doubts. This, however, did not apply to his military leadership, which he thought all French elements would be willing to accept.

Dr. Liu, the Chinese Minister, called this morning on instructions from his Government to say that China hoped very much that Canada would soon be able to open a Legation in Chungking. The Chinese Government appreciated the difficulties in the way of our doing so, but they hoped we could find a way to overcome them. Representation of Canada in Chungking, alongside the representation of other United Nations would be a new encouragement to the Chinese people at this critical time.

The Minister referred to the expected appointment of a Canadian Minister to the U.S.S.R. and said that his Government hoped that we would be able to confirm our alliance with China as well as with the U.S.S.R. by making an appointment to Chungking as soon as we made one to Kuibyshev.

In deference to persistent Chinese pressure we had promised some months ago that we would not appoint Minister to U.S.S.R. until we were also ready to name Minister to Chungking. Present delay in announcement has become embarrassing to our Government and may appear discourteous to U.S.S.R. Chinese Minister here has cabled his Government urging prompt action on Agrément. Mr. Massey reports that the Czecho-Slovak Ministry of Foreign Affairs in London have enquired whether the Canadian Government would be willing to receive a Czecho-Slovak Legation in Ottawa, with Dr. Pavlasek, the Czecho-Slovak Consul-General in Montreal, as Chargé d'Affaires of the Legation. In asking Mr. Massey to transmit this enquiry, the Czecho-Slovak Government referred to conversations on this subject which Mr. Masaryk had had during his visit to Ottawa.

We have agreed to receive diplomatic representatives from the other European Allied Governments. The Polish and Norwegian Ministers are already established here; the Greeks and Yugo-Slavs have named their Ministers, who are expected to arrive in Ottawa shortly. In the circumstances I assume we will agree promptly to receiving a Czecho-Slovak representative.⁶ It will be, I am sure, a very modest office. They do not propose to name a Minister. Dr. Pavlasek, who will be Chargé d'Affaires, is a very decent, kindly little man, who has always been on very good terms with this Department. May we say he will be persona grata?⁶

SECRET. Your telegram No. 2369 December 13th.[†]

Shortly after Weygand's dismissal the South African Accredited Representative was instructed to inform us that the Union Government thought there was little to be gained by maintaining diplomatic relations with Vichy, and to ascertain the views of the Canadian Government.

In view of the importance that Churchill had attached to maintenance of Dupuy's contact with Vichy, which was believed to depend on our continued reception of French Minister here, the Prime Minister asked the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom whether in view of changing circumstances he still thought it worthwhile for us to permit French Legation here to function.

Churchill's view, communicated to us through United Kingdom High Commissioner here, and I believe also to the Government of South Africa, was that for the time being and pending a satisfactorily decisive outcome of the Libyan campaign, it would be wiser not to disturb existing relations.⁸

We have informed Union Government that we will keep them advised of any impending change in our relations with Vichy.

PRIVATE AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 5, 1942

Dear Mr. King,

I have learned from a most reliable source that there has been received by the Vichy Consul in the City of Quebec an article by Admiral Darlan entitled: "Why I Hate The British". The article, I am told, is being distributed.

⁷Voir aussi les documents 1496, 1497 et 1498.

⁸Voir le volume 8, documents 419, 420 et 422.

⁷See also Documents 1496, 1497 and 1498.

⁸See Volume 8, Documents 419, 420 and 422.

Now, it occurs to me that this article must have come through the diplomatic mail via the French Ministry [Legation] in Ottawa — otherwise it would have been picked up by the censor — and that it has been deliberately sent down there to be used circumspectly to add fuel to the fire of the adherents of Vichy among the French-Canadians that are creating trouble afresh.

I understood from you that all mail addressed to the French Minister here in Ottawa was carefully censored and observed but this would indicate that, if it came through by mail at all in the regular way, it was not censored or, if it came through the diplomatic mails, that it was allowed to pass. This article is apparently being used for propaganda purposes and I think that is most deplorable.

I would ask you to have enquiries made in regard to this matter. I believe I can get evidence of the truth of the statements that the article was received by the Vichy Consul at Quebec and that copies are being circumspectly distributed, if such evidence is absolutely necessary. In any case, I think you should have this looked into and at once.

Yours faithfully,

R. B. HANSON

[Ottawa,] March 8, 1942

On Friday afternoon, after receiving from you Mr. Hanson's letter about Mr. Ricard, French Consul in Quebec, I asked Mr. Ristelhueber to come and see me. He was ill with grippe, so I asked Mr. Lageneste, First Secretary of the Legation, to come instead. I told Mr. Lageneste that in view of the accumulating evidence of Consul Ricard's propagandist activities in the Quebec district, the Government could not continue to accord him the provisional recognition as Consul which he had received since his arrival in Canada, and that it was desired that the necessary steps to effect his return to France would be taken as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lageneste enquired whether what I had said to him was to be taken as a warning or as the announcement of a decision already taken. I said that the decision had been taken. I told him that I knew that you had on a number of occasions advised his Minister very seriously about the mischief which would follow from any propagandist activities by Vichy diplomatic or consular representatives in Canada. He agreed that this was so, and said that Mr. Ristelhueber had made a point of warning all consuls, including Mr. Ricard, to refrain from political meddling and carrying on propaganda. He knew that Mr. Ricard had been circulating French publications in Quebec City which were forbidden by the Canadian censorship and the matter had been brought by us to the Minister's attention. The Minister had received an undertaking from Ricard that he would not circulate publications which had not been passed by the censor. I told him that the decision to ask for Mr. Ricard's recall was not related to any breach of this undertaking, but to the fact that he had been spreading defeatist propaganda in the Quebec area. He asked if I meant "anti-British propaganda". I said "No" — what we had in mind was clearly anti-Canadian propaganda, calculated to divide us from our allies and to play the enemy's game.⁹

Mr. Lageneste asked whether Ricard was an entirely exceptional case or whether there were any complaints about the Consuls in Vancouver, Winnipeg and Montreal. I said we had nothing to say about the conduct of the Consuls in Vancouver and Winnipeg, which we thought had been correct. Speaking quite privately, I said we were not at all satisfied with the reports which we had received from reliable sources about the activities of Mr. Coursier, the Consul-General in Montreal. In the circumstances it would be desirable that the Minister should issue a new and strict warning to all the French consular and diplomatic officials remaining in Canada, instructing them to refrain scrupulously from any propagandist or political activities.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following from the Prime Minister for your Prime Minister, Begins: In conversations in Washington, from which I have just returned, the Acting Secretary of State of the United States in advising me of his Government's decision to recall Admiral Leahy from Vichy, expressed the hope that we would not take any immediate step to alter the status of French representation in Canada. I had told him that we took a serious view of the possible consequences of Laval's return to power and were prepared, if you were of the same opinion, to bring about the immediate withdrawal of Vichy diplomatic and consular representatives from Canada. He felt, however, that pending further clarification of the situation, it would be helpful if we could continue to receive the French Minister. He added that he would give us a week's notice of eventual United States decision to break off relations with Vichy so that we could synchronize our actions in this matter.

⁹Dans sa réponse du 8 mars à Hanson, le Premier ministre indiqua qu'il ne croyait pas que Ricard avait reçu le pamphlet en question par l'entremise de la légation de France et suggéra qu'il l'avait probablement apporté de France dans ses bagages.

⁹In his reply to Hanson on March 8, the Prime Minister expressed doubt that Ricard had received the offending pamphlet through the Legation of France and suggested that he had most likely brought it from France in his private luggage.

I should be very glad to have your views on recent developments in French position and in particular to know whether you feel that a useful purpose is still being served by our maintaining Dupuy as Chargé d'Affaires to Vichy and continuing to receive a French Minister here. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 115. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: Thank you for your message about the Vichy Minister in Ottawa. We note that you are in touch with Washington in the matter and that United States authorities have suggested that it would be helpful if you could continue to receive the French Minister. In all the circumstances we should agree if you thought that the best course would be to allow the present position in regard to Vichy representation in Canada and Canadian representation at Vichy to continue unchanged until the position becomes clearer.

We understand that General Smuts is anxious to get rid of the Vichy Minister in South Africa. It seems to us that there would be no serious disadvantage in the adoption of a different policy in Canada and South Africa on this matter. We are advising General Smuts of your views and United States views as set out in your telegram and are also letting him know that we for our part would have no objection if he thought it best to ask immediately for the recall of the Vichy Minister in South Africa. Ends.

Ottawa, April 23, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Reference WA-747[†]. The Prime Minister will be asked when the House meets this afternoon whether he is prepared to say anything about Canadian relations with France. He plans to say simply that the question is a grave and critical one, that he is in close communication with the United Kingdom and United States Governments and that he will make a statement to the House on the matter when it reassembles on Tuesday, April 28th.

He would like you to see Mr. Hull or Mr. Welles today and explain to them that the pressure on the Government to break off relations with Vichy is very great and will undoubtedly be increased as news of South Africa's action becomes known. He himself doubts whether action on our part can be deferred until next week. He appreciates the United States assurance that Canada would be given ample notice of any decision by the United States to ask for the recall of French diplomatic and consular officials and would not like to have Canada take any step which might make it more difficult for the United States to pursue its present policy of maintaining diplomatic relations with Vichy.

You should explain to the Department of State that our continued reception of French Minister here has, up to now, been made possible by Churchill's explicit and public assurance that he felt the desirability of and welcomed such action on our part. As you will have seen from his message to the Prime Minister of April 21st, he has not renewed this assurance but has left it to us to determine whether we wish to continue to receive a French Minister.

In the circumstances the Prime Minister is of the opinion that the severance of diplomatic relations with France is becoming unavoidable. Unless the United States felt that such action on our part would occasion them serious embarrassment, it would be desirable to take the necessary action within the present week.

SECRET. My telegram No. 91 of April 21st. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: We have now reviewed afresh the question of the maintenance of relations between the Canadian Government and the Vichy Government in the light of Laval's recent statement of policy and of the decision of the Union Government to sever relations with Vichy.

2. You will have noted that Laval repeatedly said that he would seek a policy of understanding and reconciliation with Germany, and that he went out of his way to deliver a bitter attack upon Great Britain.

3. The further clarification of the situation for which Mr. Welles asked you to wait has thus, it seems to us, now been given, and our advice would be that the time has come for the Canadian Government to terminate their relations with Vichy. The maintenance of these relations is only really of benefit to Vichy.

4. We are apprehensive lest Laval whose skill is remarkable may succeed in persuading the United States Government to maintain an attitude of tolerance towards him. We have accordingly instructed Halifax to put in a word of warning at Washington, although we are not actually pressing the United States Government to break off relations for the present at any rate.

5. There is of course the further disadvantage that Canada would be the only part of the Empire still maintaining relations with Vichy.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 225

SECRET. His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington reported discussion about Vichy policy with United States Secretary of State on April 26th. Secretary of State described Laval as "unadulterated Hitlerism" and received favourably suggestion that he might make some counter statement to Laval's speech. His Majesty's Ambassador is of opinion that there is no danger of Hull being beguiled by Laval. As regards public opinion, Ambassador has no doubt that Secretary of State will continue to make plain United States Government's view of which recall of Admiral Leahy is clear expression.

Conversation then passed to question of United States representation at Vichy. Secretary of State felt it important that they should be in position to defend themselves against any domestic criticism which might be based on the ground that the United States were maintaining relations with Vichy against what appeared to be general view of British Commonwealth. He suggested that we should agree to some kind of joint or separate statements on lines that whilst both Governments were at one in their view of present Vichy Government they were also united as regards United States maintaining contact. His Majesty's Ambassador has been informed that we favour maintenance of United States relations with Vichy for following reasons (which unfortunately cannot be used in public)

- (1) Provision of intelligence;
- (2) Maintenance of status quo in French North Africa until time comes for United Nations to change it

(3) Because rupture would depress French people.

At the same time in order to help United States Government against domestic criticism, we should hope to be able to associate United Kingdom Government with statement somewhat on lines suggested by Secretary of State and have asked that we might see the draft of the proposed statement.

RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

36. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported recent developments.

The Prime Minister had said in the House that a statement of policy would be made upon the return of the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires, M. Dupuy.¹⁰ M. Dupuy had now arrived in Canada.

On April 24th, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, in answer to an enquiry by the Canadian government, had suggested that Canada might now cease to receive the French Minister. On April the 29th, on the other hand, a message from the U.K. government, reporting conversations on the subject with the United States, had contained a statement of reasons for the maintenance of Franco-American diplomatic relations in the same circumstances. These same reasons, in part at least, applied also to Canada. Joint or simultaneous statements along these lines by the British and American governments were in contemplation.

It would put Canada in a strange position if such public statements were to coincide with our dismissal of M. Ristelhueber.

In the circumstances, it was felt that as an immediate step, the French consulates might be closed, but the Legation permitted to remain so long as the United States did not break off relations. In any event, the further views of the U.K. and U.S. governments should be obtained.

(Dominions Office telegrams Nos. 95 and D.225, Dominions Office to External Affairs, April 24 and 29, 1942).

37. THE MINISTER OF FISHERIES felt convinced that the Consul in Montreal was engaging in Vichy propaganda. The sooner the consulates were closed, the better.

38. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES expressed the view that public feeling favoured getting rid of the French Minister. Our maintenance of formal relations had been accepted largely on the basis of Mr. Churchill's previously expressed view. Now that this view had changed, there was little upon which to base a continuance of relations.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. With reference to Wrong's message WA-868 of May 2nd[†] concerning relations with the Vichy Government, I had a discussion of the position with Mr. Hull this morning. He asked that no action should be taken by Canada until after the question of Martinique had been settled. He said that Admiral Robert seemed ready to agree to the United States demands but felt that he must submit them to Laval. Laval had asked for a delay because of the absence from Vichy of Marshal Pétain, and the United States Government had agreed to a delay extending not beyond midnight tomorrow night.

2. I gathered from Mr. Hull that the demands made on Admiral Robert included the immobilization of the naval vessels at Martinique, the landing there of United States personnel to supervise this immobilization, and the dismantling of the wireless station.

3. Mr. Hull confirmed that he had felt a certain irritation over the action of the United Kingdom Government in advising the Canadian Government to terminate their relations with Vichy without prior consultation with him. He feels that none of the interested Governments should move without a preliminary exchange of information. His irritation was directed towards London, not Ottawa. He expressed himself as satisfied with the statement made by Mr. Eden in his speech at Edinburgh on May 8th to the effect that London and Washington were in constant and close consultation on policy towards Vichy and that there was no difference between them over the maintenance of diplomatic relations with Vichy by the United States. He thought, however, that this might have been said publicly some time ago.

4. Wrong learned at the British Embassy today that Mr. Hull told Halifax a few days ago that the joint statement on policy towards Vichy which he had suggested (see your EX-735 of May 1st[†] and our WA-868 of May 2nd) was no longer required, since he had made his proposal on the understanding that a Canadian breach with Vichy was imminent.

5. I hope to discuss the Vichy situation more fully with you during my visit to Ottawa this week.

RELATIONS WITH THE VICHY GOVERNMENT

1. THE PRIME MINISTER read a telegram sent the previous day to the United Kingdom and other Commonwealth governments, in anticipation of a breach of relations between Vichy and the United States, as a result of the landing of American forces in French North Africa.

As an alternative to breaking off diplomatic relations, it had been suggested that an appropriate and helpful alternative course would be refusal to recognize the Vichy government as the government of France, on the ground that it had ceased to have any effective independent existence.

The Canadian Minister in Washington had been instructed to communicate this view to the U.S. Secretary of State.

(External Affairs telegrams, 246 to Dominions Office, 206 to Canadian High Commissioner, Canberra, etc., November 8, 1942; also teletype EX-2838 to Canadian Minister, Washington, November 9, 1942).[†]

2. MR. KING said that, following word that the Vichy government had, in fact, broken off diplomatic relations with the United States, further consideration had been given to the course which should be taken by the Canadian government.

The distinction between a severance of relations with the Vichy government and withdrawal of recognition of that government as the de jure government of France was of fundamental importance. The latter course would avoid the danger of a declaration of war by a recognized legal government of France, and, at the same time strengthen existing opposition to the collaborationist policies of Vichy.

The U.K. government had felt that any initiative in this sense should be taken by Canada, in consultation with the United States.

Mr. McCarthy had, this afternoon, communicated personally with Mr. Hull; and the President, to whom Mr. King had spoken this evening, by telephone, had felt that the course suggested, on the part of Canada, would be altogether appropriate and helpful in the circumstances.

3. MR. KING then read a draft statement, the contents of which it was proposed to communicate immediately to the French Minister, and, thereafter, to the press; it read as follows:

“The fact that the men who have been in nominal control of the Government of France have ordered the armed forces of France to offer resistance to military forces of the United Nations sent to assist in the liberation of France from Nazi domination makes it perfectly clear that there no longer exists in France a government that has any effective independent existence — in other words, that there no longer exists in France a legal or constitutional government in any sense representative of the French people, but only a German puppet government.

In these circumstances, the Canadian Government has ceased to recognize the present Government at Vichy as being the de jure Government of France and diplomatic relations with Vichy are accordingly terminated.”

A draft telegram to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, instructing him to inform the King of the Canadian government’s action was also submitted.

(External Affairs telegram to the Canadian High Commissioner, London, November 9, 1942).[†]

4. THE CABINET, after discussion, approved the course proposed by the Prime Minister for withdrawal of recognition of the Vichy government.

The meeting adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

Le secrétaire d’État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre de France
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of France

Ottawa, November 11, 1942

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the fact that the Government which you represented has ordered the Armed Forces of France to offer resistance to military forces of the United Nations sent to assist in the liberation of France from Nazi domination. This makes it perfectly clear, that there no longer exists in France a government that has any effective independent existence. In other words, that there no longer exists in France a legal or constitutional government in any sense representative of the French people, but only a German puppet government. In these circumstances, the Canadian Government has ceased to recognize the present government at Vichy as being the de jure Government of France and diplomatic relations with Vichy are accordingly terminated.

2. Arrangements will be made to issue special passports enabling you, your wife and family, and the members of your mission, and their wives and families, to depart from Canada. Accordingly, I should be grateful if you would furnish me with a list of the names and addresses of the secretaries, attachés, and other officials of your mission, and their wives and families, and of French nationals in your household who may claim allegiance to the government which you represented. Due to the existing lack of steamship communication or air transport between Canada and France, it may be necessary to make special arrangements for their repatriation. If so, the matter can be taken up at a later date.

3. The Government of Canada desires to accord to you and to the members of your mission, on the basis of reciprocity, every consideration and courtesy compatible with the safe-guarding of our national interest.

4. Accordingly, sufficient time will be allowed before your departure for the settlement of the personal affairs of yourself and the members of your mission, the storage of furniture, the settlement of outstanding obligations and similar matters, and for the sealing of your archives. As a practical arrangement, all diplomatic and consular archives may be transferred to the representative of a neutral Power, who may be selected to look after the interests of the government which you represented in Canada. They will be held in Canadian territory for the time being, in the custody of such representative, and may only be removed with the consent of the Government of Canada. Facilities will also be given to such representative to act as a Protecting Power for French nationals who may claim allegiance to the government which you represented. At the same time, the Government of Canada expects corresponding facilities will be accorded for the protection of the property of the Government of Canada now in France, and of the interests of Canadian nationals. I assume that you will inform me, as soon as may be practicable, of the name of this representative.

5. The Censorship authorities will be instructed not to permit communications by post or telegraph; but facilities for any necessary communications with your government, or elsewhere in Canada or in France, may be arranged with this department.

6. The premises, property, and quarters of consular officers, as well as of diplomatic officers, will not be searched, and members of consular office staffs will be treated in the same manner as consular officers themselves.

7. Special precautions will be taken for the protection of the Legation, your person and property, and the premises in which you live. Protection will also be afforded to the persons and property of the members of your mission until their departure. Similarly, protection will be accorded to the household goods left in storage. It is assumed that, pending departure from Canada, you will communicate with this department on any matter on which you may desire further information or advice.

Accept etc.

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Mr. Ristelhueber came to see me this afternoon at 4 o'clock. He was very upset by the press comment about the position of his Legation and about his own future movements. He brought a great sheaf of clippings with him and asked if we could not invoke a censorship to prevent their recurrence. I glanced through the newspaper despatches of which he complained. For the most part they were not ill-natured, nor was their comment on a confused and perplexing question, of undoubted public interest, unfair. I told him that the Government could not prevent the Canadian newspapers from writing news stories and publishing comments on this country's relations with France or about the present position of the French Legation. A large part of the hostile comment was really directed at the Government and at you. The Government and you would not use the Censorship to protect the Government from political criticism.

He showed me a draft press statement he had prepared for issue by the Legation regretting speculation and comment in the press on the position of the Legation and its officers, and explaining that they were "awaiting instructions, to which they would conform". I suggested that if he issued such a statement, the first question would be from whom were the "instructions" expected, which would at once reopen the questions he wished to close.

Mr. Ristelhueber was obviously hoping that a government would be set up in North Africa which he could regard as a direct successor of the Marshal's Government at Vichy, and which he could continue to represent in Canada. We had at this time neither of us received word of the organization which was being established under Admiral Darlan at Algiers, and I told him I could see no grounds for believing in the resurrection of a national government at Vichy which could be recognized by the Government of Canada. We had deferred for four days presenting him with the note which you had communicated to him in draft form on Monday, November 9th. In the circumstances, I felt I had to hand it to him. He was reluctant to take it, but he finally accepted it, murmuring something about the "die being cast".

Within an hour news of Admiral Darlan's proclamation¹² at Algiers was in the evening newspapers and Mr. Ristelhueber came back with the note I had given him. He saw in Darlan an acceptable successor to Marshal Pétain, whom his conscience would permit him to follow. From Darlan he felt he and his Legation could receive instructions which they could obey.

I agreed that Darlan's proclamation, issued under American auspices with the support of General Nogues and of the Governor General of Algeria, had injected a new and important element into the situation which we would have to take into account. In the circumstances, I was willing to take back our note until I had had an opportunity of consulting you. I told Mr. Ristelhueber that we were very glad to see the elements of a French opposition coalescing in North Africa, though I personally did not share his enthusiasm for Admiral Darlan. However, in a time of crisis like this it was important for all elements of French resistance to cooperate, regardless of their past political differences, and I assumed that the group organized under Darlan in Algeria would work together with the other Fighting French forces which had been fighting for France and against the Nazis since the armistice. He rather flared up at this suggestion, and repudiated the idea that Darlan should be associated with General de Gaulle and the French National Committee.

I think Ristelhueber sees himself as the representative of a Vichy Government transplanted to North Africa and in direct apostolic succession to the

¹²See chapter 8, Part 2.

Marshal. I do not think we should be in any hurry about recognizing him in this capacity. It is to be noted that the scope of Darlan's proclamation was limited to North Africa and that it did not purport to set up a provisional government for these territories, let alone a provisional French government. I am afraid that the American Army and State Department have acted without consultation with the United Kingdom or any of their Allies in achieving a minor coup d'état in Algiers. Darlan's is not a name to conjure with inside or outside of France. He has been identified with some of the uglier features of Vichy policy and the collection of Generals who are named as supporting him in North Africa are mostly Tories and reactionaries, who found the quasi-fascist atmosphere and policies of Vichy very congenial. To my mind, they do not represent the spirit of the real France nearly as faithfully as do the Fighting French, whose earnestness of purpose has been tested during the last two years. I think it would be both disloyal and shortsighted to throw them overboard now and rush to recognize Darlan and his associates as the continuing government of France. In this war we must welcome and work with all kinds of allies, and the adhesion of Darlan and his Generals may prove to be a real source of military strength in North Africa. It may also prove to be a certain liability on the political plane.

I feel very strongly that we should wait and see how the situation develops and how Darlan's proclamation is received in France and overseas before committing ourselves to any recognition of a provisional government under his leadership in Algeria or of any representative he may designate in Canada as "French Minister".

High Commissioner in Great Britain to Minister of Switzerland in Great Britain

London, December 4, 1942

The High Commissioner for Canada presents his compliments to the Swiss Minister and has the honour to refer to His Excellency's communication of the 16th November[†] regarding the protection of French interests in Canada.

Mr. Massey has now been instructed by the Canadian Government to state that they have no objection to the assumption by the Swiss Government of the unofficial protection of certain French interests in Canada. The Swiss Government will appreciate that the Canadian Government regard this arrangement as one of a purely practical character whereby the French Diplomatic and Consular archives may be transferred to the Swiss Consul General at Ottawa. It is further understood that the Swiss Consul General will take charge of the interests of any French Nationals who may claim allegiance to the former Vichy Government.

Similarly the Canadian Government expect that corresponding facilities will be accorded for the protection of the property of the Government of Canada now in France and of the interests of Canadian Nationals there.

It has been explained to Mr. Ristelhueber, the former French Minister in Canada, that the Consul General of Switzerland will, in his representative capacity be looking after the interests of the Government which Mr. Ristelhueber formerly represented in Canada.

SECRET. It is proposed to name Brigadier George P. His position would be similar to that of the two United States representatives to the National Committee in London.

Please ascertain whether General de Gaulle would welcome the creation of this post and whether he would be agreeable to the appointment of Brigadier Vanier.

My telegram No. 2964 of November 29th¹³. In welcoming Brigadier Vanier's appointment, General de Gaulle says that no choice could be more agreeable to the French National Committee than that of Brigadier Vanier. De Gaulle's letter of acceptance goes on to say, "The French National Committee hopes that the nature of Brigadier Vanier's mission will make it possible for the French National Committee to concert (de se concerter) with the Canadian Government on questions affecting the general interests of France in the war at the same time as on particular points concerning the cooperation of the Free French forces with the Canadian Army".

The wording of de Gaulle's reply is ambiguous but might be interpreted as including political questions for discussion. It is not intended, however, that Vanier's consultation should go beyond what is defined in my telegram of November 30th, No. 2213.

I suggest that you answer de Gaulle to the effect that the intention is to provide for consultation not only on co-operation of Free French Forces with the Canadian Army but also on all matters of mutual interest relating to the conduct of the war. It would be undesirable to answer more directly the question in the way in which he puts it.

London, December 15, 1942

Your No. 2310 of December 12th and your No. 2308 of December 12th¹, Vanier's appointment. I have discussed with United States authorities here the arrangements for their consultation with the French National Committee. It appears that the United States Government have appointed Admiral Starke as naval representative to the French National Committee and General Clark as military representative. These representatives have in turn appointed two liaison officers, Commander Kitteredge for the Navy and Colonel Waite for the Army, who have day to day contact with the French National Committee. The appointment of United States representatives to the French National Committee gives them authority to discuss all matters concerned with the conduct of the war and this extends to the discussion of diplomatic, economic and political problems. In the phrase of one of the representatives, theirs is "a para-diplomatic appointment".

In practice I should say on the basis of our experience in this office that it would be quite impossible to separate the discussion of military questions with the French National Committee from other questions of a political and diplomatic character. Indeed, strictly military questions play a very small part in our relations with the French National Committee. It seems clear therefore that Brigadier Vanier will have to have wide and flexible terms of reference in order to deal with all the questions arising from contact with the French National Committee.

With regard to your telegram No. 2310 it occurs to me that, subject to your views, it might be as well not to reply to de Gaulle's letter. Our reply would only lead to an exchange of formulae which are rendered meaningless by the facts of the situation as outlined above, namely that even though Vanier's title may be that of military representative in effect he would inevitably be largely concerned in his dealings with the French National Committee with political and diplomatic questions.

CONFIDENTIAL. Following from Vanier for Robertson, Begins: French No. 22. Confidential. My letter of May 29th[†] regarding representation North Africa.

As this question will arise immediately, I venture to suggest that consideration be given to it at once as it would appear proper, as largest French speaking community outside of France is to be found in our country, that Canada should be amongst the very first, if not the first, to appoint representative. Remembering the confused thought in Quebec following collapse of France, such decision without delay would appear particularly desirable as French Committee of National Liberation represents all Frenchmen outside of France and I believe overwhelmingly those in France as well. I feel that any delay in making appointment would be very disappointing to all Canadians. Ends.

CONFIDENTIAL

London, August 3, 1943

My dear Norman [Robertson],

You will remember that on the 29th May I wrote to you with regard to Canadian representation in North Africa,[†] and gave certain reasons for which I hoped to be appointed there. As I have not heard from you in this connection, I feel that I should write again, more particularly as events are moving so quickly that there is no telling how soon the French Committee of National Liberation will be established in Metropolitan France.

I appreciate that it is difficult for the Canadian Government to give recognition to the French Committee before the United Kingdom and United States Governments do so, but as I assume that such recognition, in some form or another, will be forthcoming soon, this will mean that Canada, which so far has had neither representative nor observer in North Africa, will have to appoint a representative without any further delay, because I imagine that any such delay would expose the Government to serious criticism.

I know it will interest you to read the two leaders[†] which I enclose from The Times of Saturday, July 31st, and Monday, August 2nd., concerning the necessity for recognition of the French Committee at once. The whole of the United Kingdom press is clamouring similarly for recognition.

You know as well as I that there is no comparison between the importance for Canada of the work that can be done in North Africa and in London with the Allied Governments. Although I consider it a great honour to have been appointed to the Allied Governments, the task here is one largely of representation, whereas in North Africa the first chapter of the history of the Fourth Republic is being written. The union of the armed forces of France has now been achieved and there is talk of the setting up of a Consultative Assembly, composed of members of the French Parliament who have escaped from France since the armistice. The idea is that the Consultative Assembly should work in collaboration with the French Committee.

May I venture to suggest that it would be a mistake to appoint a Chargé d'Affaires or anyone below the rank of Minister because many countries, if not all, will appoint Ministers and it would be inappropriate, I submit, for Canada whose population is almost thirty percent French speaking, to be placed in a position of inferiority. Besides, I feel sure that the French Committee would expect this mark of appreciation and courtesy.

It is possible that you may consider the fact that I am accredited to other Governments as an obstacle to my appointment. Frankly I do not see in what way. The various Governments would understand perfectly if they were informed of the fact, which most of them know already, that I was Canadian Minister to France before and during the war and that it was the intention of the Canadian Government to give me my old appointment as soon as this was feasible. I, for my part, would be only too pleased to carry the message, with a word of explanation, to each one of the Foreign Ministers.

If you did not wish to appoint another Minister immediately to the Allied Governments, you might appoint a Chargé d'Affaires as you did for so long to Belgium and to Holland.

The drafting of this self-plea is most distasteful but I have forced myself to the unpleasant task because I feel very deeply that my place is in North Africa and later in France where, with Pauline, I may be able to help in a humble way in its rehabilitation. As I said in my letter of the 29th May, France will require the sympathetic and understanding assistance of all her friends.

Please forgive me for the vanity of adding that many of the members of the French Committee have been known to me for several years, some since the Geneva days of 1930, and I feel that it would be possible to give good service to Canada as well as to France.

If you feel so inclined you may show this letter to the Prime Minister. I would like him to know, in any event, how deeply I feel about representing Canada in North Africa, and later in France.

Yours ever,

GEORGE [VANIER]

I submitted Vanier's name this morning to Major Bonneau, so that he could secure the agreement of the French Committee of Liberation.¹⁷ He expressed considerable gratification over his selection. I sent you recently a note[†] of a talk with him last week, in which he had passed on to me a suggestion from the Committee of Liberation that it would not be welcome to them if persons who had been associated in any way with the Vichy government were appointed as foreign representatives in Algiers. Of course Vanier meets their views completely on this point.

Vanier has telegraphed to urge the deferment of any announcement of his appointment for the present, and even wished us not to submit his name to the French until the end of the month. I have answered that we could not defer clearing the matter with the French as otherwise we could not proceed with the necessary arrangements for establishing his office. I told him that we would try to give him a considerable period of warning between the receipt of the French agreement to his appointment and its public announcement, so as to give him a chance of explaining, personally, to the Foreign Ministers of the Allied Governments that he was leaving London for Algiers after a comparatively short stay in London. I mention this in case you might find it possible, when his appointment is confirmed by Council, to emphasize the need for complete secrecy until public announcement is made. It will take a little time for Vanier to make his explanations, as he has so many different Governments to see and he cannot begin until we have had word from Algiers.

I am returning the letter of December 11th[†] which you received from Mr. H. S. L. Polak¹⁹ about Canadian-Indian relations, as well as a draft reply[†] to Mr. Polak for your signature.

Mr. Angus has prepared the attached memoranda on two of the points raised in Mr. Polak's letter, viz., the appointment of a Canadian representative to India and the granting of the franchise to British Indians in British Columbia.²⁰ The argument of these memoranda seems to me important and convincing, and to justify further consideration of Government policy on both heads.

... I might add, as a footnote to Mr. Angus' memorandum on the East Indian franchise question, that when Lord Halifax was in Ottawa six weeks ago he spoke to me about the position of the British Indians in British Columbia, which he had previously been discussing with Mr. Polak. Halifax said that, in his personal opinion, anything we could do at this juncture to clear up the status of this handful of Indian immigrants would have a very helpful influence on Indian opinion and would create the friendliest of feelings toward Canada.

du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures*
*Memorandum by Special Wartime Assistant to

Ottawa, December 26, 1941

1. The purpose of this memorandum is to draw attention to the case for the early appointment of a Canadian High Commissioner to India.
2. It is hardly necessary to emphasize;
 - (a) The importance of the wholehearted co-operation of India in the conduct of the present war: or ¹⁹Le secrétaire honoraire, Indians Overseas Association.

²⁰Voir le document 906.

¹⁹Honorary Secretary, Indians Overseas Association.

²⁰See Document 906.

(b) The importance of a healthy political development in India during and after the war: or

(c) The importance of India being able to cooperate in the peace settlement side by side with China as a nation which is not white, not European in civilization and not Christian in religion.

3. What is less generally realized is the unique part which Canada might play in promoting these three objectives.

4. India is faced with two major political problems:

(a) The attainment of satisfactory international status.

(b) The evolution of a political system which can combine respect for the appropriate autonomy of territorial and religious minorities with national unity.

5. There is a dangerous tendency in India to overemphasize the first of these two problems and to forget that the second is the more important and, as the experience of the United States, of Canada and of Australia shows, is by far the more difficult of solution.

6. Of these three countries Canada can contribute most to India by placing her experience before India because:

(a) Canadian political evolution has been continuous and (during the last 100 years) peaceful.

(b) Canadian statesmen have dealt with both problems concurrently and have avoided the dangerous interval which occurred in the United States before a Federal Constitution was adopted.

(c) The minority problem has been of peculiar importance in Canada.

(d) Canada is free from any suspicion of imperialism on the one hand and of any suspicion of anti-British sentiment on the other.

(e) Canada, as part of North America, is closely associated in thought with the United States, a country which enjoys great prestige among Indian politicians.

7. In these circumstances a representative of Canada in India might play an invaluable role in Indian political evolution, provided that:

(a) He refrains scrupulously from meddling in Indian politics.

(b) He keeps on good terms with British official society in India but does not become absorbed in it.

(c) He cultivates Indians of all political parties and makes personal friendships among them.

(d) He makes it clear that Canada is ready to accept India as a sister dominion, but is not concerned with imposing this status on India.

(e) He interprets Canadian political evolution and the way in which Canadian statesmanship has let the facts of evolution set the pace and precede the changes in political formulae.

(f) He emphasizes the value in world reconstruction of the willing collaboration of India and of the positive and inspiring "historical mission" which lies before India, and of the prestige which a nation enjoys if it has succeeded in solving peacefully the two great political questions of status and internal organization.

(g) He is on the alert to discover opportunities in which Canada may assist Indian development in various spheres e.g. education (perhaps by receiving Indian students), in industry and in commerce, or in the development of social services.

8. A resultant of the efficient execution of this task would be that, when India does emerge as a full fledged nation, it will be without feelings of enmity towards other countries but with a wish to collaborate with them economically and otherwise and with confidence in her ability to collaborate. There will be a great danger after the war or in its later stages of bitter racial feelings against Japanese and those being expressed in ways which will alienate sympathies in China and India. It is immensely important to stress the solidarity of civilized and "democratic" peoples in such a crisis and therefore important that India should have contacts with other democratic nations besides the United Kingdom.

9. Canada could make this gesture without incurring great expense and without assuming any embarrassing responsibilities.

10. If the suggestion is approved the first step would naturally be²¹ to discuss it informally and very frankly with the United Kingdom authorities so as to avoid any possibility of a misunderstanding as to Canada's intentions.

You may remember that I transmitted this proposal to you and that you asked me to tell Mr. Amery that you did not think the time had come for such a step.²²

In his recent letter Mr. Amery refers to the fact that since the original correspondence the United States has received an official representative from India at Washington, who seems to bepersona grata there, and he also points out that the war in the Pacific will have changed the problem to which you referred in your letter about the Asiatic vote in British Columbia.

As you will remember he feels very strongly that the exchange of representatives between India and Canada will be very helpful in its relation to some of the problems of administration in India itself.

Mr. Amery also referred in his letter to the heroic joint defence of Hong Kong by Canadians and Indians.²³

As I mentioned to you in the War Committee on Thursday, Mr. McCarthy reported that morning that Mr. Sumner Welles had spoken to him very earnestly about the importance the United States attached to the establishment of direct diplomatic relations between Canada and Mexico. He thought that an immediate indication of our willingness to receive a Mexican diplomatic representative and of our intention to reciprocate, would be very helpful, following Mexico's entry into the war.

I reminded Mr. McCarthy that it was now nearly a year since we agreed to exchange representatives with China, and that for some months we had been committed to establishing a Legation in Moscow, but that so far we have not been able to find the right men to staff the new Missions. In these circumstances I thought you would be reluctant to make a decision about establishing a Legation in Mexico until you could see your way to going through with it pretty promptly.

Mr. McCarthy would like to be able to tell Mr. Welles that he has transmitted the message to you and that the Government is giving serious and sympathetic consideration to it.

Dear Mr. Wilgress,

In your letter of July 15¹ you said that you would like me to indicate to you the sense in which I think Mr. MacKinnon might convey to Dr. Tudela the attitude of the Canadian Government towards the exchange of Ministers with Peru. I should be inclined to state the opinion of the Government somewhat as follows:

“The Canadian Government appreciates greatly the desire of the Peruvian Government to establish direct diplomatic relations with Canada. The Canadian Government shares the desire of the Peruvian Government for closer relations between our two countries. It would very much like to establish immediately direct diplomatic relations with Peru on a reciprocal basis but because of special circumstances which have been fully explained to the Consul General of Peru it regrets its inability to do so at the present time. When these circumstances change, the Canadian Government will be glad to examine with the Peruvian Government the question of the establishment of direct diplomatic relations. If it should unfortunately prove impossible for Canada to consider the establishment of direct diplomatic relations during the war, the Canadian Government feels certain that after the conclusion of hostilities it will be possible for Canada to establish a Legation in Lima and to welcome the establishment of a Peruvian Legation in Ottawa.

Peru, in view of its situation, its great resources, and its special importance to Canada, holds a special place in the minds of the Government and people of Canada and the Peruvian Government may be assured that the Canadian Government greatly values the close and friendly relations which happily exist between Canada and Peru and which the Canadian Government trusts will be made even more intimate as a result of the conclusion of a Trade Agreement³¹ between the two countries.”

Ottawa, July 30, 1942

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 848 of April 3, 1941,³² in which you report that the Peruvian Ambassador had expressed to you the strong desire of his Government to exchange diplomatic representatives with Canada.

Since the receipt of your despatch the Canadian Government has given a good deal of consideration to the question of the establishment of direct diplomatic relations with Peru but unfortunately the Government found it difficult to arrive at a final decision.

Recently the question was raised afresh by a letter of July 6, 1942,[†] to the Minister of Trade and Commerce from Dr. Francisco Tudela y Varela, Chairman of the Foreign Political-Economic Commission of Peru. I enclose a copy of this letter. I also enclose a copy of the reply of July 25 from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Dr. Tudela.[†] Paragraphs two and three of this letter were drafted in this Department.³³

For your own information I may say that one reason we have told Peru that we regret our inability to establish immediately direct diplomatic relations is that we feel we cannot make any formal commitments to Peru until we have made a decision on the exchange of diplomatic representatives with Mexico nor can we very well take action with respect to any additional Latin American country until we get the legations at Moscow and Chungking established.

I think it might be advisable if the next time you are speaking to the Peruvian Ambassador you would discuss with him the exchange of diplomatic representatives between Canada and Peru along the lines of the letter of July 25 from the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Dr. Tudela.

Dear Mr. McCarthy,

I have your letter of December 17th,[†] enclosing a further enquiry from the Peruvian Ambassador as to when we will be ready to exchange diplomatic missions with his country.

When the Prime Minister announced, in the debate on External Affairs Estimates in June³⁴, that the Government looked forward to the establishment of Legations with Mexico and Peru, he hoped that action would have been taken before this. There have been two reasons for our delay, neither of which could really be passed on to the Peruvian Ambassador. In the first place, we cannot appoint a Minister to Peru until we are ready to make a simultaneous appointment of a Minister to Mexico. The Prime Minister has, therefore, to find two suitable nominees, available at the same time. In the second place, the establishment of these new Latin American offices, plus the probable appointment of a High Commissioner to India, will require some reshuffling of our other senior representation abroad. Such shifts and transfers are not easily effected under present conditions.

I know that the Prime Minister hopes very much to make appointments to all these vacant posts before the House meets, i.e., within the next few weeks.

In the meantime, I do not think you can say anything more to the Peruvian Ambassador than that the Canadian Government shares his Government's desire to effect an exchange of missions at the earliest opportunity, and is particularly looking forward to the reception of a Peruvian Minister in Canada. You might also tell him that the Peruvian Consul General in Canada, Mr. Fernandez Davila, has not failed to keep us reminded of his Government's interest in this matter. Señor Davila, who has been a very pleasant and competent representative of Peru in Canada for these last three years, has an uneasy feeling that his Government may suspect that he has been less than zealous in urging us to complete the exchange of representation which had been agreed on, in principle, for some time. I hope that no such impression exists in the minds of the Peruvian Government, because Señor Davila has been, I think, an excellent representative of his country here, and can in no way be held responsible for any delays on our part.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, December 31, 1943

Dear Sir Shuldham [Redfern],

As you are aware, the Governments of Mexico and Peru have approached the Canadian Government, on several occasions, on the subject of the exchange of diplomatic missions. The Canadian Government has now come to the conclusion that it would be desirable to accept these proposals, in order that such measures as they may desire may be taken by the Governments of Peru and Mexico for the establishment of missions in Ottawa. It is possible that action will not be taken immediately for the reciprocal establishment of missions in those countries, but this will no doubt be done in the near future.

It is requested that the wishes of the Canadian Government should be submitted for His Majesty's approval, and I should appreciate it if you would bring this to the attention of His Excellency, in order that he may take the necessary action.

Yours sincerely,

SECRET. As a complementary step to appointment as Canadian High Commissioner in New Zealand of Dr. W.A. Riddell, whom we have been so happy to welcome here in that capacity and whose appointment has unquestionably proved to be to the mutual advantage of Canada and New Zealand, the New Zealand Government have been considering for some time past the appointment, as a reciprocal measure, of a New Zealand High Commissioner in Canada.

In pressure of business resulting from the outbreak of war, renewed and intensified with its extension to the Pacific, you will understand that it has not been easy to release from his immediate duties here a suitable person for this appointment.

I am happy now to advise you that we are in a position to appoint to this post, the Honourable Frank Langstone. Mr. Langstone has been a Minister of the Crown since the formation of Savage Government in 1935 and at present holds portfolios of Lands and Native Affairs. For some time past he has been in North America as representative of this Government for supply and other purposes and as he has not yet returned to New Zealand, he could take up his new duties at a very early date.

I should be most grateful to learn whether these proposals are acceptable to the Canadian Government.

I thank you for your telegram which has reached me at Washington and hasten to assure you that we shall be delighted to welcome Mr. Langstone to Ottawa as High Commissioner for New Zealand in Canada.

I had the benefit of a word with Mr. Nash yesterday concerning this appointment and after consultation we have agreed that announcement of the new appointment should be made forthwith.

I recall the pleasure I had in meeting Mr. Langstone during his visit to Ottawa some months ago. I am very glad to know that we shall now have reciprocal representation in our respective capitals, and I hope it may continue to be of growing assistance in our joint prosecution of the war effort. Your telegram No. 1684 of October 31st,[†] and my despatch A. 454 of November 13th,³⁵ Russian Consuls. Maisky has now proposed a written Agreement for an exchange of Consuls between Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Following is draft of text of proposed Agreement as put forward by Maisky, who states that he has full power to sign on behalf of his Government, Begins:

The Government of the U.S.S.R. and the Government of the Dominion of Canada have reached an agreement as follows:

- (1) The two Governments have agreed to exchange Consular representatives, the number and residence of which will be decided by subsequent negotiations between them.
- (2) The present Agreement comes into force immediately after its signature and is not subject to ratification.
- (3) The present Agreement is drawn up in two copies, each of them in the Russian and English languages. Both texts have equal force. Ends.

I may point out that I have always given Maisky clearly to understand that reciprocity in exchange of Consuls was only mentioned as a question of principle, and that so far as I was aware the Canadian Government had no immediate intention of appointing Consuls in the U.S.S.R.

It may, however, be considered desirable to pin the Russians down now in the matter of reciprocity in case the Canadian Government at a later date should find it expedient to take advantage of proposal.

The United Kingdom Government are, as I explained in my despatch under reference, interested in establishment of principle of exchange of Consuls with the U.S.S.R. as this would strengthen their hand in negotiations to obtain the appointment of British Consuls in the U.S.S.R.

The South African and New Zealand Governments have also been approached by the U.S.S.R. As far as South Africa is concerned, the proposal is for appointment of a Russian Consul General in Durban or Capetown. So far the proposal has only been put to the South African High Commissioner unofficially, but in the event of an official proposal, General Smuts has authorized him to accept a Russian Consul but to insist upon reciprocity. While South Africa has apparently no immediate intention of appointing a Consul, they may find it convenient to do so later, and consider that a South African Consul in the U.S.S.R. could play the additional role of an observer on behalf of the British Government, much as Dupuy has done at Vichy.

New Zealand has been unofficially approached in the matter, but New Zealand Government have not yet made up their minds.

I should be grateful to receive your instructions as to whether you desire me to sign the above Agreement on behalf of the Canadian Government, either in its present form or modified in any particular manner.

I should be most grateful for early instructions.

Ottawa, February 27, 1942

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION IN THE U.S.S.R.

Under the Agreement concluded in London on February 5th between Canada and the U.S.S.R., provision was made for the exchange of consular representatives, the number and residence of which was to be decided by subsequent negotiations between the Canadian and Russian Governments.

2. On February 12th Mr. Massey advised that the Russian Government wished to open a Consulate General at Ottawa with a Consular Agency, subordinate to the main Consulate, at Halifax. Mr. Maisky requested a decision at the earliest possible moment as to whether such an arrangement would be agreeable to the Canadian Government. On February 13th a reply[†] was sent indicating that the Canadian Government approved this arrangement.

3. The question of the precise nature of Canadian representation in the U.S.S.R., however, has not yet been solved. I think there is a great deal to be said for putting forward a suggestion that an exchange of ministers rather than of consuls should be considered. So far as Canada is concerned, our interest is fundamentally to obtain all possible information regarding the Russian conduct of the war and the nature of Russia's views on reconstruction in the post-war period. Questions of present and post-war trade will be important, as will independent accounts of political conditions and developments within Russia itself. For this reason it is important that Canadian representation in Russia should be on the same level as the representation of the United Kingdom, the United States and other Allied countries. Further, there is evidence that the general public would find it extremely difficult to understand why our representation in Russia should take the same form as our representation in Greenland and St. Pierre.

³⁶L'accord fut signé le 5 février. Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1942, N° 9.

³⁶The agreement was signed on February 5. See Canada, Treaty Series, 1942, No. 9.

4. Conversely, there is every reason to believe that following the recent establishment of direct diplomatic relations with Poland, Norway and Yugoslavia, and the elevation to ministerial rank of the former Consuls General of these three countries, Russia, one of our strongest and most powerful Allies would welcome the opportunity of modifying the Agreement of February 5th in order to provide for a diplomatic rather than consular exchange.

5. There are, therefore, two possible courses of action:

- (1) to raise the question of an exchange of ministers with Russia; and
- (2) to leave the question of such an exchange for the moment and to proceed at once with the appointment of a Consul General.

Ottawa, March 15, 1942

As you may be aware, His Majesty's Government in Canada and the Government of the U.S.S.R., as a result of negotiations between the Canadian High Commissioner and the representative of the U.S.S.R. in London, signed an Agreement recently concerning the exchange of consular representatives. We have come to the conclusion that it is desirable to proceed to the establishment of a Canadian Legation in the U.S.S.R. on a reciprocal basis.

It is requested that the wishes of the Canadian Government be submitted for His Majesty's approval.

When His Majesty's approval has been received, it is requested that the Government of the U.S.S.R. be advised as follows: Quote

His Majesty's Government in Canada have come to the conclusion that it is desirable that the handling of matters in the U.S.S.R. relating to Canada should be confided to an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary accredited to the Government of the U.S.S.R.

Such a Minister would be accredited by His Majesty the King to the President of the Praesidium of the Supreme Council of the Union and he would be furnished with credentials which would enable him to take charge of all affairs relating to Canada. He would be the ordinary channel of communication with the U.S.S.R. Government on these matters. The arrangements proposed would not denote any departure from the principle of the diplomatic unity of the Empire, that is to say, the principle of consultative co-operation amongst all His Majesty's representatives as amongst His Majesty's Governments themselves, in matters of common concern. The methods of dealing with matters which may arise concerning more than one of His Majesty's Governments would therefore be settled by consultation between the representatives of His Majesty's Governments concerned.

In proposing the establishment of a Canadian Legation, His Majesty's Government in Canada trust that it will promote the maintenance and development of cordial relations, not only between the U.S.S.R. and Canada, but also between the U.S.S.R. and the whole British Commonwealth of Nations. End quote.

In advising the Government of the U.S.S.R. as stated above, it might be added informally that the Canadian Government assume that the Government of the U.S.S.R. will wish to reciprocate by establishing a Legation in Canada.

I am informing Mr. Massey of the above in order that he may advise Mr. Maisky informally of the steps now being taken.

The Swedish Consul General saw the Prime Minister this afternoon on instructions from his Government. He informed him that the Swedish Government is desirous to change its Consulate General in Canada into a Legation and to request, in the near future, agrément for a Minister, the Swedish Parliament having granted the necessary appropriations. Mr. Wijkman wished to make it clear that, though his Government would very warmly welcome the appointment of a Canadian Minister to Stockholm, they were not raising the question of reciprocity. The Prime Minister assured him that we would be glad to receive a Swedish Minister and that he hoped we would eventually be able to accredit a Canadian Minister in Sweden. In the meantime, there were a number of other countries, among which he mentioned Mexico, to which we were under some obligation to accredit a Minister before undertaking an exchange of diplomatic representatives with Sweden.

I told Mr. Wijkman that I hoped it would be convenient for the announcement of the Swedish Legation to be made simultaneously here and in Stockholm, and it was desirable that the announcement be planned for 3 p.m. on a weekday afternoon so that the announcement from Ottawa could be made on the Orders of the Day.³⁸

I am attaching an extra copy of the High Commissioner's telegram No. 1437 of June 28¹ transmitting an enquiry from the Turkish Government as to whether the Canadian Government is agreeable to Turkey opening a Legation in Ottawa.

On August 4th we asked Mr. Massey to inform the Chargé d'Affaires of the Turkish Embassy in London that the Canadian Government appreciated the proposal of the Turkish Government and hoped to send a final answer soon. I see no particular advantage to be gained from the reception of a Turkish Minister here. At the same time I see no reasonable ground for objecting to their doing so. We have agreed to receive a Swedish Minister without question of reciprocity and presumably a Turkish representative would come on the same footing.

I think you had it in mind to mention the question to Mr. Churchill informally to see if he thought in the present stage of the war our acknowledgement of a friendly gesture from Turkey would be helpful. Did you have any opportunity to mention the matter to Mr. Churchill?³⁹

An Ankara report in today's New York Times reports that Turkey will shortly appoint an Ambassador to Washington and would meanwhile accredit here the Turkish Ambassador in Washington. This report is obviously incorrect and the proposed arrangement would be quite unacceptable. Its currency, however, makes it desirable to clear up the question quickly by returning an early answer to the Turkish Government's enquiry.⁴⁰

It is our understanding that the Turkish Government in proposing the establishment of a Turkish Legation in Canada, is waiving the question of the reciprocal establishment of a Canadian Legation in Ankara. Recent press reports from Ankara indicate that the Turkish Government may have in mind designating their Ambassador in Washington to be also their Minister to Canada. To avoid any misunderstanding or subsequent difficulty on this point, it might be helpful if you would explain to the Turkish Ambassador that such an arrangement would be quite unacceptable to Canada.

CANADIAN CONSULATE GENERAL IN NEW YORK

SUGGESTION FOR OPENING AN OFFICE IN CONNECTION WITH THE ACTIVITIES OF THE WARTIME INFORMATION BOARD

The question of establishing a Canadian consular service in the United States, which has been surveyed for some time, acquires urgency in view of the decision to open a New York office of the Wartime Information Board.

Mr. Vining is of the opinion that there might be a tendency in some quarters to regard such an office as merely a temporary propaganda agency unless it were attached to an established governmental service. As it is to be located outside the capital it cannot be attached to the Legation in Washington. To be an adjunct of the Canadian Government Trade Commissioner's Office in New York would give rise to the inference that its functions were primarily commercial.

The only remaining expedient would be to attach the office to a Canadian consulate general, which is what Mr. Vining urges.

From the legal standpoint, no obstacle exists since, as was done under the authority of P.C. 2111 of May 21st, 1940,⁴³ in respect to the consulates in Greenland, Paris and Tokyo, the establishment of the consulate general in New York would be submitted for approval to His Majesty, who would issue the necessary commission. Indubitably no objection would be raised by the United States authorities.

The only matter requiring consideration is whether or not the general effect and the advantages to be derived by the Wartime Information Board would be sufficient to justify the opening of a consulate general at this juncture.

Until general consular instructions can be drafted and issued, and the relationship between the Commercial Intelligence and consular services definitely determined, it would be impossible for a Canadian consulate general to take over all the functions presently exercised on behalf of Canadian interests by the British consular service and the Canadian Government Trade Commissioner's Office in the New York district.

⁴³Volume 7, Document 158.

However a consul general and his staff could (a) relieve the legation in Washington of much of the burden of issuing and renewing passports, and granting visas, (b) attend to such matters as authentication of documents and accepting declarations of intention to maintain Canadian domicile, (c) answer the many inquiries arising from wartime legislation and conditions, (d) provide Canadian nationals with the varied forms of assistance which fall within the scope of consular activities and (e) generally handle all the strictly non-commercial matters now attended to by the Trade Commissioner's Office.

In order that the organization of the Wartime Information Board be not delayed, Mr. Vining is anxious that policy in this matter be established at the earliest possible date.

Ottawa, February 22, 1943

It is proposed to establish a Consulate General in New York and to appoint Mr. Hugh D. Scully, at present Commissioner of Customs, as Consul General. The United Kingdom Government has been informed by our High Commissioner in London of the Government's plans. The Consulate General will perform the duties in relation to Canadian interests and Canadian nationals which are now performed by the existing British Consulate General in New York.

It is possible that this course of action may be followed elsewhere, and it is therefore desirable that a procedure should be followed which would meet with His Majesty's approval.

Before submitting formal advice with regard to this matter, an informal discussion is desirable because it concerns a field in which His Majesty is interested and in which there are no Canadian precedents.

It is thought that it would be desirable, in view of this being the first important consular office to be established, that His Majesty should be requested to approve the establishment of the Consulate General in New York.

It is assumed that His Majesty would not want to be directly concerned with the establishment of consulates or vice-consulates, or even with additional consulates general within a country such as the United States of America, in which he would have already approved the establishment of a consulate general. It might be a convenient practice, therefore, for the Government to inform the Governor General in such matters, in the same way in which the Government of the United Kingdom would inform His Majesty with regard to the extension of the British Consular service.

It is proposed that all appointments of Consuls General and Consuls should be made by commission passed under the Great Seal of Canada, in the name of His Majesty the King, signed by the Governor General, with the counter-signatures of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State of Canada.

The basic lines that will be followed in these matters will of course be embodied in the Royal Instructions upon the next occasion upon which they are revised. Meanwhile, it is thought that we should be able to deal with the New York consulate general upon an ad hoc basis.

Ottawa, March 2, 1943

1. The establishment of a Consulate General in New York and the appointment of Mr. H. D. Scully as Consul General raises a question of procedure.

2. On February 17th the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote to the Secretary to the Governor General[†] informing him of the proposal and asking for the Governor General's approval which was given on February 20th.[†]

3. On February 22nd the attached memorandum was sent by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to the secretary to the Governor General.

4. My comments are as follows:

(i) In so far as the Governor General is The King's representative, approval by the Governor General is tantamount to approval by The King.

(ii) As the Governor General has already approved the proposal, reference to The King is unnecessary as His Majesty could not very well be asked to approve something which his representative has already approved in His Majesty's name.

(iii) Whether this or, in fact, any other matter has to be referred to The King for approval or whether the Governor General can give approval on His Majesty's behalf is, I suggest, a matter for The King to decide. The practice in other Dominions is not irrelevant because The King might not, for instance, wish to delegate certain powers to the Governor General of Canada without delegating similar powers to the Governor General of Australia, South Africa or New Zealand. In any case it is a matter of arrangement between The King and the Governor General which matters have to be referred to His Majesty personally and which have to be dealt with by the Governor General on The King's behalf. So far as the Canadian Government is concerned it may be assumed that once a matter has been referred to the Governor General, it has ipso facto been referred to The King.

If, however, the Canadian Government requests that any matter should be brought before The King personally, it would be the duty of the Governor General to comply with such a request.

(iv) The Governor General as The King's representative performs a dual function. He relieves The King of a heavy burden of official business and he also enables the Canadian Government to go ahead with a large volume of official business without the delay involved in reference to London.

It follows that it is in the interests of the Canadian Government that The King should delegate as much as possible to his representative.

5. On the above basis I suggest the following procedure might be adopted in the establishment of Consulates General and other Consular Offices and in the appointment of officers to fill these posts.

(a) Consulates General

The establishment of new Consulates General and the appointment of Consuls General should be referred to the Governor General for approval as was done in the case of Mr. Scully and the new office at New York.

The Governor General will, as a matter of routine, inform The King of such approvals. (The Governor General will give formal approval later as Governor General in Council and the matter will come to his attention as a Minute of Council in the ordinary way).

(b) Consulates and other Consular Offices and the appointment of personnel to these offices.

The Government will inform the Governor General as a matter of routine. His Excellency would not normally inform The King of such establishments but any unusual extension of the consular service would be brought to His Majesty's notice as a subject of general interest.

(c) Commissions

All appointments of Consuls General and Consuls should be made by commissions under the Great Seal of Canada, in the name of His Majesty the King, signed by the Governor General with the countersignatures of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State for Canada.

With reference to my teletype of February 18, 1943, No. EX-585.[†] Canadian Consulate General, New York City.

The Governor General's approval of the proposal to establish a Canadian Consulate General in New York City has now been received. The Secretary of State for External Affairs intends to recommend the appointment of Hugh Day Scully as Consul General, of Douglas S. Cole as Consul, and of Leland H. Ausman as Vice-Consul. Mr. Cole will also carry the title "Chief Trade Commissioner in the United States” and Mr. Ausman will still occupy the position of “Assistant Trade Commissioner”.

Will you please inform the United States authorities that we wish to establish the said Consulate General and ask their approval. You may inform the State Department of the nominations mentioned above but ask that the whole matter be treated as confidential until we are ready to announce the establishment of the office.

The area of responsibility and jurisdiction of the new Consulate General will be the same as that of the British Consulate General in New York namely the States of New York, Connecticut and New Jersey with the exception of the Counties of Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester, Ocean and Salem.

It is hoped that the Consulate General may be opened in the month of April. thus an early indication of United States approval would be greatly appreciated.

My dear Robertson,

With reference to the appointments of Consuls General, I referred to Buckingham Palace the points mentioned in the Memorandum I left with you on March 3rd.⁴⁴ The Private Secretary to The King agrees that there was no necessity to seek The King's formal approval for this appointment.

As regards the proposed procedure for Canadian Consular appointments in general, the main point seems to Sir Alexander Hardinge to be whether the Commissions should be signed by The King or by the Governor General. The Government of the Union of South Africa (the only Dominion that has hitherto had its own Consular Officers) invariably submit such Commissions for The King's signature, the basic reason for the practice being that a Commission signed by the Governor General probably would not, in the eyes of the foreign Government concerned, command the same attention and respect as one signed by The King. On the same principle, The King's personal exequatur for a foreign Government's Consular Officer is not in general given save on a Commission signed by the Head of the foreign State in question.

If the Canadian Government should decide to follow the example of the Union Government in this matter, the always intricate problem of Seals arises. The Union Government has its own Royal Great Seal, established under its Royal Executive Functions and Seals Act, of 1934. Canada has no such Seal. But I am informed on excellent authority that the main purpose of using a seal on such documents (i.e. the authentication of the Sovereign's signature — a historical survival from the days when all documents were sealed and not signed) is in practice effected, even without a seal, by the countersignature of the responsible Minister. So perhaps the Seal problem could be solved in this case by not using one at all.

In the United Kingdom, Consular appointments are not, as a matter of general practice, submitted to The King for prior approval, and His Majesty is only made aware of them when he signs their Commissions of Appointment. Consequently there would not seem to be any constitutional necessity for the Governor General to be asked to give his prior approval, though this may be desirable on other grounds. It is, according to Sir Alexander Hardinge, certainly unnecessary for the Governor General to inform The King of such approvals.

Apart from these two points, the procedure suggested in my memorandum is acceptable to Buckingham Palace.

Would you kindly let me know if you have any comments on the above. I should anyhow like to inform Sir Alexander what are the views of the Canadian Government as regards the signing and sealing of the Commissions.

RE: APPOINTMENTS OF CONSULAR OFFICERS

May I refer to your letter dated April 15, 1943, in which you let me know the results of discussions with Sir Alexander Hardinge.

I note that the Private Secretary to the King agrees that there is no necessity to seek the King's formal approval for the appointment of the Consul General at New York. I feel justified in assuming, therefore, that in future cases it will not be essential to bring prospective appointments to the attention of the Governor General.

Sir Alexander Hardinge has raised the question as to whether the Commission should be signed by the King or by the Governor General. He points out that the Government of the Union of South Africa submits such Commissions for the King's signature, the basic reason for the practice being that a Commission signed by the Governor General will not, in the eyes of the foreign government concerned, command the same attention and respect as one signed by the King. He points out that, on the same principle, the King's personal exequatur for a foreign government's consular officer is not in general given save on a Commission signed by the Head of the foreign State.

I think that the Government would prefer that such Commissions should be signed by the Governor General and passed under the Great Seal of Canada. The Commissions as drafted are Commissions from His Majesty the King appointing the officer in question. In the cases presently under consideration, I am satisfied that the Government of the United States will not question the validity of a document issued in the name of the King and under the Great Seal of Canada appointing a consular officer. The recognition of such a document by the Government of the United States will establish a weighty precedent for future cases. I do not think that other governments will be inclined to question such Commissions, if the precedent has first been established in the case of appointment in the United States of America.

The Government would, I am sure, be disinclined to follow any course which would appear to question the authority of an Instrument issued under the Great Seal of Canada and signed by His Excellency the Governor General with appropriate ministerial countersignature. Such an act is an act of the Crown, having the same legal validity as an instrument under The Sign Manual and Signet. Under our constitution (B.N. A. Act s.9) the executive government and authority of and over Canada is vested in the King. The King exercises his constitutional authority directly and indirectly. Apart from rare and exceptional instances the King has, by Letters Patent constituting the office of Governor General, by the Commission appointing the Governor General, and by Royal Instructions provided for the exercise of this authority by the Governor General, carried on the government of Canada on behalf and in the name of the King. When the King is in Canada he may and will ordinarily exercise, himself, many of the authorities which are normally committed to the Governor General, but, when he is not in Canada, geographic facts compel him to exercise his constitutional authority for the most part through his representative the Governor General.

The actual Instrument, whereby the constitutional authority vested in the King is exercised is merely evidence of the legal act. In some instances, the legal act may be evidenced by an Instrument passed under the Great Seal of the Realm or under the Signet; in other instances, by an Instrument under the Sign Manual, but in most cases it will be evidenced by an Instrument passed under the Great Seal of Canada, signed by the Governor General and countersigned by an appropriate Minister.

You will therefore understand that the Government would be disinclined to cast any doubt upon the authority of a Commission issued under the Governor General's signature, and would prefer to take the responsibility of satisfying the foreign government concerned that the Commission was in every sense of the word an appointment by the Head of the State.

You also refer to the question of Seals and suggest that Canada has no seal comparable to that established by the Government of the Union of South Africa. I am inclined to think that Sir Alexander Hardinge may have overlooked the provisions of The Seals Act 1939. This Act was submitted to His Majesty the King for approval before introduction in the Canadian House of Commons. Under its terms it is possible to use the Great Seal of Canada for any Instrument which under present practice is issued by or in the name of the King and passed under the Great Seal of the Realm or under one of the Signets. Such Instruments may be issued by or with the authority of His Majesty the King and consequently may be issued in the way in which we are proposing to issue the Commissions of Appointment. Pending the establishment of a special Royal Seal, the Great Seal of Canada is available for such purposes; and you will remember that it was used during the King's visit in 1939 for Instruments of Ratification of Treaties and Agreements.

There is therefore no essential difference between the Canadian and South African position. We can prepare an Instrument and send it to England for signature by His Majesty, impressing the seal either before or after signature depending upon which course is preferred by the King. We could in the alternative issue the same Instrument here, providing for its signature by the Governor General. Legally there would be no difficulty and no difference in the effect of the Instruments. It would of course be in accordance with constitutional practice to obtain the King's approval before establishing a substantial change in practice.

I should be grateful if you would bring these points to the attention of Sir Alexander Hardinge, and I am sure that he will agree that there is now no barrier to proceeding by appointment under the Great Seal of Canada, following the procedure which we had in contemplation. You will of course understand that, in intimating the preference for this course, I do not intend to suggest that there would be any disinclination to provide a different procedure if such a course was desired by the King.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

There is no necessity to seek the Governor General's approval for these appointments, but he will presumably approve of them in due course when he signs the Minutes of Council in which the appointments are made. It would, however, be appreciated if as soon as such appointments are decided upon, you would let me have an informal note for His Excellency's information so that he knows about them before they appear in the Press.

Please arrange for His Majesty's Minister at Berne to approach Swiss Government on behalf of the Canadian Government to request that the Swiss Legations at Berlin and Rome take over the protection of Canadian interests from the United States Embassies at those capitals.

It is assumed that when taking over as protecting power for British interests in Berlin and Rome, Switzerland will take over in Finland, Denmark, Rumania, Hungary, and Bulgaria. In any event the Minister's communication to Swiss Government on behalf of the Canadian Government should conform to that made on behalf of the Government of the United Kingdom.

Communications to the British Legation at Berne from this Department will be routed as stated in my above-mentioned telegram.

Your telegram of December 11th, No. 1994. British Minister at Berne is being instructed today by telegram from Foreign Office

(a) To ask the Swiss to take over protection of Canadian interests in Germany, Italy, Poland, Denmark, Norway, Belgium, The Netherlands, Luxemburg, occupied France, Greece and Yugoslavia.

(b) To act similarly in regard to Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria and Finland if and when relations between the United States and these countries are severed.

A similar communication has been made on behalf of the United Kingdom Government, except that they include unoccupied France in category (b) as above.

In view of Dupuy's position, it is assumed that you do not wish to include unoccupied France. South Africa is in a similar position to ours in this respect and has not included unoccupied France in their request.

In the event of severance of relations between the United States and Vichy, however, it is assumed that you would wish the Swiss to take over the control of Canadian interests in Vichy-controlled Africa. Please confirm on this point.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 24 of January 26th and to confirm that the Swiss Legation at Rome has taken over the protection of Canadian interests in Italy.

As regards the protection by the Swiss Government of Canadian interests in Italian-occupied territory, the Italian Government have not officially and specifically signified their agreement to the assumption by the Swiss Government of the protection of British interests in Greece and Yugoslavia, owing no doubt to the fact that the question of the division of the control of Greece and Yugoslavia between the German and Italian Governments is a delicate one.

Nevertheless, the Swiss Consul in Athens has been allowed to take over the charge of all interests previously protected by the United States Government and the protection of British interests there.

The Swiss Government have informed me that they feel confident that the Swiss Representatives in those countries will be able to ensure the protection of British and Dominion interests there by treating each question as it arises on an ad hoc and practical basis.

The position is the same in regard to the protection by the Swiss Government of United Kingdom interests in Italian-occupied territory.

In accordance with your instructions a note was taken by hand to the Special Division this morning, the text of which reads as follows:

"I have the honour to inform you that in view of the termination of diplomatic relations between the United States and Vichy, the Canadian Government have asked the British Minister at Berne to enquire whether Switzerland would agree to undertake the responsibility of protecting Canadian nationals and Canadian interests in non-occupied France. As in the past it is presumed that the United States Chargé d'Affaires at Vichy, France will have transferred provisionally the protection of our interests to his Swiss colleague there. In bringing this information to your attention I have been requested by the Canadian Government to express their gratitude and deep appreciation for the services rendered in the protection of Canadian nationals and Canadian interests in non-occupied France since the summer of 1940.

Accept, Sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration. Signed, Leighton McCarthy." Ends.

You will note from the concluding paragraph that the thanks of the Canadian Government was expressed for services rendered in the protection of Canadian nationals and Canadian interests in non-occupied France and that no mention of French territories was made.

In view of the Déclaration made by President Roosevelt and by the Chief of the United States forces which landed in North Africa to the effect that their coming was to drive away the invader, it is felt there is a great possibility of the United States Consulates remaining open in North Africa. My telegram No. 43 of December 19.[†]

Understand Argentine Government has not received with favour suggestion by the British Ambassador that they should hand over to the Swiss Government the protection of British interests in the Japanese Empire and Manchuria. His Majesty's Minister at Berne reported by telegram received today that Swiss authorities were prepared to take over, but in view of the reported attitude of the Argentine Government and as the existing arrangement is entirely satisfactory to the Canadian Government, it is not proposed to make any change unless a proposal to the contrary should be received from the Argentine Government.

If you think that any hint may have reached the Argentine authorities that the Canadian Government might propose that they should hand over to the Swiss, you should at the first convenient opportunity inform the Argentine Foreign Office that, in view of the cordial relations existing between Canada and the Argentine and of the recent exchange of Ministers which provides a satisfactory channel of communication, the Canadian Government does not desire any change unless at any time the Argentine Government should wish to relinquish the responsibility for the protection of Canadian interests.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs has informed me that the Thailand Government has agreed to representation of British interests in Thailand by Switzerland.

I should be grateful if you would inform the Swiss Government that it is understood that this includes also the protection of Canadian interests in Thailand and express the gratitude of the Canadian Government to the Swiss Government in the usual form, if this has not already been done.

London, March 4, 1942

My telegram No. 533 of February 25th.[†]

Protection of Canadian interests in Far East. British Ambassador at Washington reported February 27th that Under-Secretary of State had approached him regarding continuance of Argentine representation of British interests in Japan.

Under-Secretary of State said that Argentines were pressing United States to let them send Ambassador-designate to Tokyo and were urging this in part on grounds that they had to represent British interests. Under-Secretary of State added that he would be glad if the United Kingdom Government would deprive the Argentines of this excuse. He considered it "in the highest degree anomalous and undesirable" for the Argentines to continue to maintain their present position (meaning presumably their anxiety to improve their representation in Japan). As you will recall from second paragraph of my telegram No. 456 of December 22nd,[†] British Ambassador has already given Under-Secretary of State to understand that Switzerland would take over British interests after Rio de Janeiro Conference. Lord Halifax now asks for further instructions.

Meanwhile Foreign Office have consulted British Embassy, Buenos Aires which reported on March 2nd that:

- (a) Swiss appear also to be in charge of Japanese interests in London;
- (b) Swiss Government have apparently bowed meekly to Japanese expulsion of their Consular officers at Hong Kong and elsewhere;
- (c) That with only a Minister and assistant at Tokyo it seems doubtful whether they can cope with British as well as United States interests;
- (d) Consequently the Swiss Government seems to be using the Japanese Legation in Berne who may not pass on inconvenient representations.

On the other hand Argentine Government have

- (a) Handled British enquiries promptly and championed British interests in Tokyo with energy;
- (b) Announced publicly their representations to Japan both at Tokyo and at Buenos Aires on behalf of civilian and military prisoners at Hong Kong.

British Embassy, Buenos Aires, go on to say that the Canadian Government have signified their desire not to change their representation until and unless the Argentine Government expressly wished this to be done.

British Embassy are further convinced that United States Ambassador, Buenos Aires, already realizes no action on the part of the British or even United States pressure can shake the Argentine Government's determination to remain neutral until they have seen how Germany and Japan fare during coming summer offensives.

British Embassy therefore suggest that before asking Argentine Government to give up British interests, it would be advisable to make sure Switzerland has at least equal machinery and desire to force Axis hand over question of British prisoners and other British subjects in the Far East, including now, it would seem the Americans.

Although further instructions have not yet been sent to British Ambassador, Washington, it seems likely that in the long run United Kingdom authorities will feel that they must give way, however reluctantly, to American pressure in this matter.

Your telegram No. 45 of March 2.¹ We have informed the Canadian High Commissioner, London, of the instructions sent in my telegram No. 55 of Deember 29 and of the substance of other telegrams exchanged between this Department and yourself, relative to the protection of Canadian interests in Japan.

I am informing the High Commissioner by telegram today that we are quite satisfied with the way in which the Argentine Foreign Office and the Argentine Embassy at Tokyo are serving our interests in Japan.

It is felt that any approach to the Argentine by the Canadian authorities with a view to having them relinquish the protection of our interests, would be contrary to our policy of developing friendly relations between the two countries. You should therefore continue to act in accordance with the policy outlined in this and in my telegram No. 55 of December 29.

London, April 1, 1942

SECRET. My telegram of December 28th, Circular D. 778.†

Question of transfer of representation of our interests from Argentine to Swiss Government has been discussed once more at length with United States authorities to whom disadvantages of such action were explained.

His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington has now received letter from Welles strongly reiterating his desire that we should withdraw charge of our interests from Argentine Government on following grounds:

(1) In view of form of resolutions of Rio Conference regarding severance of relations between American Republics and Axis Powers, activities involved in representation of British interests by the Argentine were inconsistent with whole intention of resolutions.

(2) Representation of British interests in Japan merely serves as additional pretext for unwillingness of the Argentine Government to break off diplomatic relations with the Axis Powers.

(3) In reply to our fears that interned British subjects and prisoners of war would suffer by transfer of our interests to Switzerland of whom it was obvious Japanese took no notice, Welles considered it was highly unlikely Japan would be influenced in its treatment of British prisoners by the fact that one nation rather than another was in charge of our interests. Letter concluded by stating that it was their firm belief that we would be rendering real service to the cause of the United Nations by requesting non-American Governments to represent British interests in Japan.

Matter has been further considered in the light of United States views and we feel it will be necessary to ask the Swiss Government to take charge of United Kingdom interests in Japan and Manchuria; Switzerland at present have no representative at Manchuria but we have asked them to make best arrangements possible as long as they do not recognize Manchoukuo.

We learn from His Majesty's Ambassador at Buenos Aires, who had been instructed to keep in touch with his Canadian colleague in earlier discussions, that notwithstanding your telegram of December 16th, No. 258,[†] Canadian Government do not desire change of their representation unless the Argentine Government expressly wish such change, and in the circumstances we assume you will not desire any approach to be made to the Swiss Government in the matter.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. With reference to Dominions Office telegram No. Circular D. 183 of April 1st relating to the protection of British interests in Japan in the last paragraph of which reference is made to the statement reported in my telegram to yourself No. 430 of March 7th,[†] second paragraph beginning, "If you think" sent in an instruction to the Canadian Minister at Buenos Aires.⁵⁰ This statement should be read in context. The Canadian Minister had reported that the Argentine authorities might take offense if a request were made to them to relinquish the protection of Canadian interests in Japan. He had previously indicated that the Argentine authorities might wish to relinquish the protection of Canadian interests. Our statement was not intended to imply that at no time would the Canadian authorities consider the transfer except at the request of the Argentine Government. The Canadian Minister reported that he had not found it necessary to communicate a statement in these terms and therefore had not done so.

The Canadian authorities find themselves in a very awkward position. No indication has been received from the United States authorities that they wish the transfer of Canadian interests from the Argentine and as indicated in previous telegrams we fear that an approach by the Canadian Minister at Buenos Aires might damage the cordial relations which we have been attempting to foster. We would, therefore, prefer to take no initiative and to await developments. On the other hand too long a delay by the Canadian authorities in following the example of the United Kingdom in transferring the protection of British interests to Switzerland might focus unfavourable criticism on Canada.

We are replying to the last paragraph of the above-mentioned telegram from the Dominions Office to the effect that the British Minister at Berne might inform the Swiss that a similar request for the assumption of the protection of Canadian interests in Japan may be anticipated.

Please explain position to United Kingdom authorities in the light of this and previous telegrams and report their views by cable.

Your telegram No. 732 of April 14th. Position as outlined in your telegram under reference and previous correspondence has been explained to United Kingdom authorities. United Kingdom Government state that they realize that their decision to transfer protection of British interests to Switzerland has created difficulties for the Canadian Government, but as explained in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 183 of April 1st, they had no alternative in view of pressure by the United States Government. United Kingdom authorities now feel that if the Canadian Government decide to transfer from the Argentine to Switzerland, United Kingdom Government would welcome this step. If on the other hand the Canadian Government feel that in view of their cordial relations with the Argentine they would prefer not to make any change, United Kingdom Government would not feel able to raise any objection.

The Foreign Secretary proposes to inform the Argentine Ambassador on April 28th of the decision regarding the protection of United Kingdom interests.

Meanwhile with reference to the last paragraph of your telegram No. 108 of April 14th to Dominions Office,⁵¹ the British Minister at Berne has been instructed to proceed as suggested therein.

Argentine Government have indicated no views on the question of Canadian transfer. I am of opinion they will not of their own accord express any wish to relinquish.

Official communiqué from Argentine Foreign Office published on April 30th states that transfer of interests of the "United Kingdom and Dominions" has been announced in London. Foreign Office immediately enquired of me by telephone to confirm if Canada was included, at the same time betrayed no feeling on the subject. They are awaiting our answer.

Canadian Government have decided to take parallel action with the United Kingdom for the transfer of protection of Canadian interests in Japan to Switzerland.

The Canadian High Commissioner, London, is being asked to cable the text of the statement which is to be made by the Foreign Secretary to the House of Commons on May 5th and if possible a similar statement will be made simultaneously by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Ottawa. The Argentine Minister at Ottawa will be informed today that the Canadian Government are appreciative of the services rendered by the Argentine Government and by the Argentine Embassy at Tokyo in the protection of Canadian interests in Japan but that it is felt that it would be more convenient at this time for Canada to have its interests in all enemy countries handled by a single protecting power especially by the same protecting power as is being used by the other countries of the British Commonwealth.

Leave to your discretion exact terms of reply to enquiry from Argentine Foreign Office but suggest that you inform them that this Department will today inform the Argentine Minister at Ottawa of their desire to make the transfer. Please express strong appreciation of the services rendered by Foreign Office and by Argentine Embassy in Tokyo and in particular refer to the arrangements made by the Embassy to send liver extract by air to Hong Kong. If Argentine Minister agrees, statement will probably be made in the House of Commons, Ottawa, tomorrow simultaneously with that being made by the Foreign Secretary in London.⁵²

Kuibyshev, July 8, 1943

Sir,

Pravda of June 17th, 1943, published a statement to the effect that the Governments of the Soviet Union and Mexico had agreed to raise their respective diplomatic representations to the rank of Embassies. The Presidium of the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. have appointed Mr. K.A. Oumansky to the position of Soviet Ambassador to Mexico and the Mexican Government have nominated Mr. Luis Quintanilla as their Ambassador to the Soviet Union.

2. This step is a triumph for Mr. Quintanilla, who soon after his arrival here last March commenced to work for his elevation from the position of Mexican Minister to that of Ambassador. He first of all persuaded the Soviet authorities to send to Mexico a more important representative than the Soviet Consul General at New York with the result that Mr. Oumansky was nominated to the post at Mexico City. The departure of Mr. Oumansky at the end of May was attended by a terrible tragedy in that his young daughter, of whom he was very fond, was shot shortly before the plane was due to leave.

3. Mr. Quintanilla is now awaiting the receipt of his credentials as Ambassador. His Greek colleague has already received his credentials and is waiting until Mr. Kalinin⁵³ will be able to receive him. When these two representatives formally assume the position of Ambassador there will be fourteen diplomatic representatives to the Soviet Union holding that rank out of twenty foreign missions including the semi-diplomatic mission of the French Committee of National Resistance [Liberation]. The remaining legations are those of Australia, Bulgaria, Canada, Cuba and Sweden. The position of the Cuban Legation is a peculiar one in that the Cuban Ambassador at Washington came to Moscow in May, presented his credentials as Minister, then returned to Washington, leaving the mission here in charge of a Chargé d'Affaires.

4. With Canada the only American country represented in Washington by a legation and with the dwindling number of legations in the Soviet Union, you may be giving consideration to the possibility of raising our representation in either Washington or Moscow or both to the rank of embassy. I have no strong views on this subject and have no personal desire to be promoted to the position of Ambassador. In fact I am finding it difficult enough to discharge adequately my responsibilities as Minister. The only advantage I can see so far as this post is concerned is that such a step would help emphasize to the Soviet people our growing importance in world affairs and that we follow a foreign policy independent of that of the United Kingdom.

Ottawa, September 8, 1943

Dear Dana [Wilgress],

I cannot comment officially on your despatch No. 85 of July 8th in which you report the raising to the rank of Embassies of the Mexican Mission in Russia and the Soviet Mission in Mexico. The current seems strongly set in favour sooner or later of the universal substitution of Ambassadors for Ministers. The United States Government has now exchanged Embassies with all Latin American countries and with all the Allied European countries. There only remains in Washington a curious collection of Legations made up of the Missions from the Dominions, those from the smaller European neutrals and those from the small Asiatic and African countries. We learned informally the other day that it was the intention of the State Department after the war to propose the exchange of ambassadors to all countries now represented in Washington by Ministers.

It has already been intimated to us informally on the highest authority⁵⁴ that there would be no objection in Washington to our raising our Legation to the rank of Embassy at any time. If this is done, it will clearly be desirable to take similar action in Moscow and in several other capitals, including the Latin American capitals, in which Canada is directly represented. No decision has yet been taken by the Government. If, however, it is correct to assume that envoys heading diplomatic missions will before long all be given the rank of Ambassador, there is something to be said for our taking action in advance of this development. The information given in your despatch about the situation in Russia is useful in helping a decision to be taken in Ottawa.⁵⁵

Yours sincerely,

[Ottawa,] September 12, 1943

RE MY LETTER TO WILGRESS OF SEPT. 8TH (COPY RETURNED)

Now that the United States Government is receiving Ambassadors from all the Latin American countries, irrespective of their size and importance, and has raised all its Latin American Legations to the rank of Embassies, the status of the Canadian Legation in Washington, as one of the larger and more important diplomatic missions of the United Nations, has become more anomalous in appearance at least.⁵⁷ If the situation in Washington alone is considered, there seem to be fairly compelling reasons for turning our Legation into an Embassy.

Apart from the altered rank of the missions of the smaller Latin American countries within the last two years, the United States Government, by agreement with the Allied European governments, has raised the status to Embassies of the Allied European Legations in Washington and has accredited Mr. Biddle as Ambassador to all the Governments in London. The Soviet Government and the United Kingdom Government have simultaneously raised the status of the missions they exchange with the smaller European Allies.

This has left a curious collection of countries which are represented in the principal capitals by Ministers only; Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa from the British Commonwealth, the few remaining European neutrals, Sweden, Switzerland and Portugal; Denmark; and a few other small states such as Iran and Iraq. These changes in the status of missions have reduced the importance — never large in recent years — of the distinction between Legations and Embassies.

The fact that the British Commonwealth is represented in Washington by one Ambassador and four Ministers, not to mention the Agent General for India who is shown on the Diplomatic List on the staff of the British Embassy with the rank of Minister, tends to create an impression that the British Ambassador is the leader of the flock who speaks on occasion for them all. This impression is strengthened by the fact that the United Kingdom Embassy, under war conditions, has no less than six Ministers on its staff — all given the rank of "Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary", i.e., the same as heads of Dominion missions. From the constitutional standpoint, I think that events have destroyed any validity that there may have been in the argument that the King could only be represented by one Ambassador in any country. This argument rests on the ancient doctrine that an Ambassador represented the person of the Sovereign in a way which gave him readier access to the Head of the foreign state.

⁵⁷Marginal note:

The evident Russian misunderstanding of the Commonwealth constitutional position, which Wilgress and the Australian Chargé d'Affaires have been trying to clear up,⁵⁸ may have something to do with this senior-junior relationship between the diplomatic representation abroad of the United Kingdom and the other Commonwealth countries.

It seems to me there is a prima facie case for raising the status of the Canadian Minister in Washington and Moscow if one looks at the position in these capitals alone. If, however, one examines the effect of this change elsewhere, it seems likely that we should have to take complementary action at other posts and probably also in Ottawa as well.⁵⁹

It would, I think, be difficult for us to receive a United States Ambassador here while refusing to exchange Ambassadors with Brazil, Argentina and Chile. If we agree to an exchange of Ambassadors with the United States and the U.S.S.R. alone, I feel sure that we should receive requests from these countries and probably from all the other countries whose missions in Washington and London are now Embassies.

It seems not improbable that the distinction between Ambassadors and Ministers, having become purely formal and in some ways quite invidious, will disappear by general agreement. If so, the method of disappearance is almost certain to be through the alteration of all remaining legations to embassies. When we have Haiti represented by Ambassadors throughout the American continents and a country as small as Norway represented by Ambassadors in Washington and London, there is not much to be said for preserving an artificial distinction which now serves only to create an impression of inferiority which is not justified in fact. I understand this is, in fact, the intention of the United States, which plans to raise all of its heads of missions who are not now ambassadors to that rank immediately after the war. This would involve the transformation into embassies of the legations now operating in Afghanistan, Australia, Canada, Denmark, Egypt, Finland, Iceland, Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Liberia, New Zealand, Portugal, Saudi Arabia, Sweden and South Africa.

Since this change appears to be inevitable, I should not like to see Canada "promoted" in this last odd lot, and I think we might better initiate some action ourselves.⁶⁰

My dear Mr. President,

I have been giving further thought to the suggestion which we mentioned at our meeting last spring that the time had now come when it might be desirable to raise the Canadian Legation in Washington and the United States Legation in Ottawa to the rank of Embassies. I have concluded that such a change would be welcome and that the sooner it can be brought about the better its effect will be. I do not, of course, intend that this change in title would mean an alteration in the Canadian representation in Washington; Leighton [McCarthy] would only alter his style from Canadian Minister to Canadian Ambassador. I am sure that there will be universal public recognition that the importance of the relations between Canada and the United States amply warrants an exchange of Embassies.

I should be glad if you would let me have a personal word, as soon as possible, confirming my impression that this proposal is acceptable to you and that you are in accord with my view that it should be carried out without delay. When I know this, I shall immediately take the necessary steps to bring it into effect.

Following for your Prime Minister from Prime Minister, Begins: The Canadian Government has been considering raising the Canadian Legation in Washington to the rank of Embassy and has now decided that such a change would be desirable. You will recall that this matter was discussed with the President in your presence last spring and I have now been in touch with him again on the question. The change would, of course, be reciprocal, involving raising the United States Legation in Ottawa to an embassy.

It is probable that steps will be taken to have the change in rank made at a very early date. No change in personnel is contemplated.

The creation of a Canadian embassy in Washington may foreshadow a similar change in the status of other Canadian legations. Ends.

Le Premier ministre au Gouverneur général
Prime Minister to Governor General

I have had under consideration the desirability of providing for a change in the rank of certain of the Canadian Ministers abroad to that of Ambassador, and to this end it is desired to make a submission to His Majesty the King seeking his approval for the policy of raising Canadian Ministers to the rank of Ambassador in such cases as the Secretary of State for External Affairs deems it expedient to recommend a change in rank. It is contemplated that the first post in which immediate change will be desirable is that in Washington.

The United States Government is now receiving ambassadors from all the Latin American countries, irrespective of their size and importance, and the status of the Canadian Legation in Washington, as one of the larger and more important diplomatic missions of the United Nations, is becoming increasingly anomalous.

If a change is made in Washington, it may become necessary to make a similar change in respect of the Soviet Union and China and of other countries in which Canada is represented. It is clear, moreover, that the difference between legations and embassies is tending to disappear, and this is reflected in a more and more general promotion of legations to the status of embassies.

In these circumstances, I should appreciate it if Your Excellency would make an informal submission to His Majesty of the desire of the Canadian Government to receive approval of the policy of raising the rank of the Canadian Minister in Washington to that of Ambassador.

I should appreciate it if this matter could be brought to His Majesty's attention at an early date, and if you would inform me as soon as an indication is received of His Majesty's pleasure. Formal documents of submission are being prepared and will be forwarded for disposition when I receive word that His Majesty has informally approved the policy indicated.

Ottawa, November 8, 1943

SECRET. PERSONAL. The Canadian Government has come to the conclusion that the Canadian Legation to the United States should be raised to the rank of Embassy. In Washington, where all the Latin American countries and Allied Governments in the United Kingdom are represented by ambassadors the continued designation of the Canadian representative as Minister has become unsatisfactory. In a number of other countries an analogous situation prevails. In consequence, the Canadian Government has agreed with the United States Government on the desirability of arranging an exchange of ambassadors rather than ministers, and is submitting a proposal in this sense to the Governor General for transmission to the King in order to secure his approval.

While the present proposal with respect to raising the status of Canadian ministers has particular reference to Washington, this action will imply a willingness to extend the change so as to include, ultimately, all Canadian ministers abroad. Among other considerations, it is felt that the difference between ministers and ambassadors is no longer a real one. There is a clear tendency toward the elimination of legations in favour of embassies.

It is not contemplated that these changes will of themselves involve a change in personnel. The present Ministers will become Ambassadors. No change is contemplated in the position of Canadian High Commissioners.

The Prime Minister has taken the matter up personally with President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill but I should appreciate it if you would confidentially inform the United Kingdom Government of this change which it is expected will be announced very shortly. The Governments of the other Dominions are also being informed.

CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATION; LEGATIONS; EMBASSIES

1. THE PRIME MINISTER submitted a recommendation to Council for authorization of recommendations to the King for raising the status of any Canadian Minister abroad to that of ambassador.

The particular case of Washington had been discussed with the U.K. Prime Minister, who had seen no objection. President Roosevelt favoured such a step in respect of Canadian representation in the United States and wished to raise the U.S. Legation in Ottawa to an embassy. Accordingly, a recommendation in this respect had been made to the King and approved. This change would give appropriate recognition to Canada's importance in Washington, and it was planned to announce it the following day.

Approval of the policy of taking similar steps in relation to other nations was desirable for the better representation of Canadian interests abroad, in accordance with the growing importance of Canadian participation in international affairs. Subject to the views of the government concerned, it would probably be advisable, in the near future, for the Canadian Ministers in the U.S.S.R., China and Brazil to be given similar rank. Consideration would also have to be given, at a later date, to similar action with regard to Belgium and Holland.

2. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the Prime Minister's recommendations and, thereupon, passed the submission made, as Order in Council P.C. 8699, dated November 10th.

Décret en Conseil
Order in Council

Ottawa, November 10, 1943

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated November 10, 1943,[†] from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, representing that it is desirable for the better representation of Canadian interests abroad in accordance with the growing importance of Canadian participation in international affairs that he should be authorized, in cases where he deems it expedient, to recommend to His Majesty the King that the rank of any Canadian Minister accredited to a foreign sovereign or government should be raised to that of ambassador, subject in all cases to the agreement of the foreign sovereign or government to the exchange of ambassadors.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, advise that His Majesty the King be humbly moved to approve the policy of raising the rank of Canadian ministers to that of ambassador, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs be authorized to make recommendations for specific alterations of status in accordance with that policy in such cases as he deems expedient.

The Committee further advise that the usual steps be taken to submit this matter to His Majesty.

My dear Norman [Robertson],

I now enclose a copy, for your records, of the memorandum on the procedure

Mémorandum du secrétaire du Gouverneur général

Memorandum by Secretary to Governor General

Ottawa, December 3, 1943

RAISING OF LEGATIONS TO EMBASSIES

PROCEDURE

1. The Prime Minister requests the Governor General to make an informal Submission to The King for approval of the policy of raising the status of certain Legations to Embassies.

2. The King's informal approval is followed later by a formal Submission.

3. In the meantime or simultaneously with the request referred to in para. 1, the Prime Minister requests the Governor General to obtain The King's approval for the issue of a Commission, under the Great Seal of Canada and signed by the Governor General, to the individual whose appointment as Ambassador is desired.

4. The Letter of Credence is, in each case, sent by the Prime Minister to the Governor General for transmission to London for His Majesty's signature.

5. To summarize, The King's approval is obtained informally for the promotion of a Minister to the rank of Ambassador and the raising of a Legation to that of Embassy. A formal Submission is subsequently made covering this and a Letter of Credence follows for The King's signature. A Commission is issued under the Great Seal of Canada and signed by the Governor General to cover the promotion of the Minister to Ambassador.

In cases where a Legation is to be raised to the status of Embassy, but the same Minister is not to continue as Ambassador, it may be desirable to have separate formal Submissions to The King or, alternatively, the one Submission may simply be modified as required. The Letter of Credence and Commission will be issued as before.

6. The King's approval is thus required for three purposes:

(i) The general policy of raising Legations to Embassies. (This has been obtained and need not be referred to again).

(ii) The application of (i) to a specific Legation.

(iii) The promotion or appointment of an Ambassador.

(ii) and (iii) may be combined in cases where a Minister is promoted on his Legation becoming an Embassy.

*Mémorandum du troisième secrétaire*⁶¹*Memorandum by Third Secretary*⁶¹

Ottawa, December 28, 1943

Sir Shuldarn Redfern called on Mr. Robertson on the afternoon of December 27 to say that a letter had been received by the Governor General from Lascelles concerning the formal submission which was sent under date of November 10 for signature of the King, requesting approval for the policy of raising Canadian ministers to the rank of ambassador "in such cases as the Secretary of State for External Affairs recommends". According to Lascelles, the King has expressed concern with regard to this submission in connection with two points:

(a) It does not say to whom the Prime Minister must recommend an elevation of status in order that the legation may be changed to an embassy.

(b) There is also the possibility that it might be suggested that approval of this submission would be interpreted as a curtailment of the prerogative right to examine each and every recommendation for the elevation and approve it or not as the King saw fit. The thought is that in approving the submission the King would thereby commit himself in advance to giving automatic approval to all recommendations for change in legations to embassies. Lascelles pointed out that while there was no apprehension in this connection with regard to advice which might be tendered by Mr. King, there was some fear as to the possibility of advice received from a minister with less experience in foreign affairs than the Prime Minister. Lascelles suggested that the approval given by the King to four elevations in status⁶² is now sufficient to indicate approval of the policy without any formal approval of the general submission referred to.

Mr. Robertson recognized the points raised by Lascelles. He thought that the practice that had been followed in four cases now might be regarded as a "gloss" on the terms of the formal submission and said that, although it was not explicitly stated, nevertheless the intention was that recommendations in all cases should be made to the King. He agreed that the practice in four specific cases was now adequate to indicate approval of the general policy. The intention in preparing the general submission had been that it should be a prior document establishing the foundation for later specific recommendations. He thought that in actual practice there would be no harm done if the recommendation were signed by the King or, alternatively, if it were dropped. He outlined to ⁶¹R. G. Robertson.

⁶²L'élévation des ministres au Brésil, en Chine, en Union soviétique et aux États-Unis. L'échange d'ambassadeurs avec la Belgique fut approuvé aussi mais, malgré l'élévation du ministre de Belgique au rang d'ambassadeur, le rang du représentant du Canada auprès du gouvernement belge en exil ne changea pas.

⁶²The elevation of the Ministers in Brazil, China, the Soviet Union and the United States. The exchange of ambassadors with Belgium was also approved but, while the Minister of Belgium assumed the rank of Ambassador, the rank of the Canadian representative to the Belgian Government-in-exile was not changed.

Sir Shuldham the view that had been taken here that the tendency in diplomatic representation is in the direction of equating all representatives to the status of ambassador. The real distinction is dying out and the view put forward by Lascelles seemed to indicate an over-emphasis of the ancient distinctions between ranks of diplomatic representatives which are now almost meaningless.

Sir Shuldham stated that he would pass on to the Governor General for transmission to Lascelles the information received, particularly to the effect that if it was desired by the King there would be no harm in dropping the formal recommendation.

Dear Mr. Master,

You will recall our recent conversations on the advisability of setting up a small joint committee to study the problems involved in the various proposals for the establishment of a closer relationship between the External Affairs Service and the Commercial Intelligence Service of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The recent establishment of the Canadian Consulate General in New York with personnel drawn from the two Services presents an example of the kind of thing that may happen in a number of other instances in the comparatively near future. It crystallizes also some of the problems that will require consideration if the two Services are to work to the best mutual advantage and, in particular, if amalgamation should eventually become a practical proposition.

Under the circumstances I think that it would be desirable to form the suggested Committee at once and for our part I have decided to nominate Mr. John Read, Legal Adviser, and Mr. H. L. Keenleyside, Assistant Under-Secretary, as the representatives of the Department of External Affairs. If you will let me have the names of your nominees an early date for the first meeting can then be arranged.

As for terms of reference, I would suggest that they be left very broad in order that the Committee may have a free hand to explore the whole field. Perhaps something like this might do:

“The Committee is directed to examine the relationship of the External Affairs Service and the Commercial Intelligence Service, and to prepare recommendations designed to improve the efficiency of Canadian representation abroad.”

Yours sincerely,

1. Mr. Read stated that there were two memoranda[†] before the meeting — Dr. Keenleyside's, which advocated amalgamation of the two services, and the memorandum prepared in the Department of Trade and Commerce, which advocated close coordination, short of amalgamation. Mr. Read asked Dr. Keenleyside to elaborate his points, in the light of discussions held in London and in the United States.

2. Dr. Keenleyside said he had discussed the question of coordination or amalgamation with Mr. Hickerson of the State Department, and that the latter was strongly for complete unification. The U.S. had gone a long way towards amalgamation of the State Department, the diplomatic service, and the consular and trade services. In theory, the amalgamation was complete. In practice, it was almost complete. The Americans have found that there is more efficiency in organization with one body, and that there are better relations between the personnel if they are all on the same basis. In the U.S. they have gone even farther than in the U.K. Technical personnel (such as representatives of the Department of Agriculture) in offices abroad must opt for the foreign service or return to the U.S.

3. Dr. Keenleyside said he had discussed the question with Mr. Ashton-Gwatkin of the Foreign Office, who spent twenty-five years in the foreign service, and was now in charge of the organizational set-up to institute the reforms of the British White Paper, in collaboration with Mr. Mallett of the Administrative Section of the Foreign Office. Dr. Keenleyside's impressions, after talking to these men, were:

(a) That it is impossible to bring about complete amalgamation of the British trade and political representation abroad because of the historic position and vested interests of the Department of Overseas Trade which is run jointly by the Foreign Office and the Board of Overseas Trade. There would also be great opposition from some quarters to treating representatives in the Dominions on the same basis as representatives in foreign states.

(b) Subject to these limitations, it is government policy, and the Foreign Office is doing everything possible to unify all British representation abroad.

(c) If the British were starting afresh without too heavily vested interests, they would certainly unify all representation abroad.

(d) Under the new British scheme, there will be common recruitment, a scholarship period, and common activities for 6-10 years; then specialization to be followed by reunion at the highest levels. At no time will it be impossible or unusual for a man to move from one branch of activity to another.

(e) There is to be a complete interchangeability between the Foreign Office and the offices abroad for clerical as well as officer staff.

(f) The U.K. is arranging an allowance system for men who return to the Foreign Office from abroad, as it is felt that there is too great a difference between the remuneration of officers at home and abroad;

(g) Either Mr. Ashton-Gwatkin or Mr. Mallett will visit the U.S. shortly to discuss organizational problems and would be glad of an opportunity or invitation to visit Canada. Such an invitation would be accepted and a visit from either would be useful.

Dr. Keenleyside did not have an opportunity to discuss the question of amalgamation with the representatives of the trade departments of the U.K. or the U.S. governments.

4. Mr. Master stated that there was no evidence that the placing of all representation abroad under one department had made for a more efficient foreign service in the U.S. He did not think that the American and British position was comparable to the Canadian. Canada had developed one of the best foreign trade services in the world. In view of the relatively few[sic] number of exporting firms, our trade commissioners could get to know all the firms exporting, and could establish direct contacts for these firms abroad. From the intimate relationship between the exporters and trade commissioners had grown up a mutual confidence which might be destroyed if trade commissioners ceased to be in a separate service. The British and U.S. can throw aside their trade service with far less loss, for neither had this intimate and direct contact between exporters and trade commissioners. Mr. Master stated that in his view amalgamation of the two services would not guarantee the continuity and effectiveness of this work.

5. Mr. Master stated that there had been a great deal of pressure on the Department of Trade and Commerce to announce its position on post-war trade plans, and that neither he nor his Minister felt that the announcement on reorganization of the foreign service could be delayed any longer. He felt the matter should be decided this week.

6. The Chairman read over the Department of Trade and Commerce memorandum, with a view to seeing whether it would be suitable as a recommendation from this Committee. Several amendments were suggested, and will be incorporated in Mr. Read's redraft. If the plan is accepted, it was felt that the details of working it out could be left until the Committee which it envisages is set up. One major suggestion made by Mr. Read was that the plan recommended that a committee be set up to coordinate the service outside Ottawa, and to study the administrative problems involved, but that no suggestion had been made with regard to coordination of broad policy in Ottawa on economic matters. Consideration might be given to the setting up of a separate policy committee.

7. Mr. Read stated that the Department of Trade and Commerce memorandum would have to be considered by representatives of External Affairs, before a decision could be reached as to whether it should constitute the plan to be submitted by this committee.

8. Mr. Master reiterated that it was felt that his Minister should make a public statement at the earliest possible date. It was agreed that the Committee should meet at 4.00 p.m. on Wednesday, November 17th, unless it was found possible to arrange a meeting on Monday, the 15th.

CONFIDENTIAL

PROPOSALS FOR CO-ORDINATION OF EXTERNAL SERVICES, EXTERNAL AFFAIRS, AND TRADE AND COMMERCE

This Committee, representative of External Affairs and of Trade and Commerce, was appointed to consider problems which have been latent for several years. These problems were emphasized by the establishment of the Canadian Consulate-General at New York.

I. In his letter to the Acting Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce of May 27, last, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that the New York appointment crystallized "some of the problems that will require consideration if the two Services are to work to the best advantage and, in particular, if amalgamation should eventually become a practical proposition".

The terms of reference, suggested in the letter from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs as the directive for this Committee, were readily accepted by Trade and Commerce in the light of the above reference. It seemed clear that the purpose was to further a closer working relationship between the two Services, and that amalgamation was regarded as an eventual possibility, not necessarily as a matter of immediate or early concern.

II. The Committee studied the developments which had taken place in the external services of the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Australia, South Africa and other parts of the British Commonwealth, and was assisted by consultations with representatives of the United States service; of the United Kingdom Foreign Office, Dominions Office and Department of Overseas Trade; and of other Commonwealth Governments. A marked trend towards complete amalgamation of diplomatic and commercial services was observed, and it was noted that this trend was not confined to English-speaking countries but was of world-wide extent.

III. The Committee considered two proposals for close co-ordination between the External affairs and the Trade Commissioner Services. They were:

(a) Complete merger of existing External Affairs and Trade Commissioner Services under the administration of a re-organized Department of External Affairs, with transfer to the reorganized Department of appropriate executive officers and staff.

(b) Administrative reform with a view to promotion of co-ordination and co-operation of the services; and co-operation and interchange of personnel, without loss of identity by either department or service.

IV. There was a difference of opinion with regard to the proposals. Certain members of the Committee considered that the first proposal was in accordance with the world-wide trend in such matters and would lead to substantial gains in efficiency of administration, in the raising of Service morale and the solution of personnel problems, in the improvement of conditions for the wise formulation of policy and in the centralisation of responsibility. On the other hand, they recognized that the second proposal, assuming that the first was unattainable, would be preferable to the present state of affairs, and would lead to improvement in the effectiveness of Canadian representation abroad which would become progressively greater with the passing of the years.

Other members of the Committee thought the first proposal was not feasible, as it would cause too much disruption to the existing departmental organization and they feared that it would impair the effectiveness of the trade promotional activities of the existing Trade Commissioner Service. They therefore preferred the second proposal, being largely influenced by these main considerations.

(a) They recognized the value of close co-ordination between the External Affairs and the Trade Commissioner Services.

(b) Owing to exceptional conditions, Canada has been able to develop the most efficient Trade Commissioner Service in the world, and it was feared that there would be no gain and that there might be serious loss if the present standing and identity of this organization as a specialized commercial service were impaired.

(c) The economy of Canada depends in a peculiar degree upon export trade, and it was feared that the export community would look with disfavour on any move which might be regarded as likely to weaken rather than to strengthen Government aid in the promotion of export trade.

(d) The proposals for co-ordination and co-operation between the services could provide the framework for continuous study of ways and means of securing more effective co-ordination of the two services by officials who would have the best opportunity to detect weaknesses in existing methods of operation and the strongest incentive to correct them.

V. The Committee was able to reach the conclusion that, in view of the opinions of the members referred to in the preceding paragraph, the only practicable course would be to recommend measures based upon the second proposal. There was general agreement that such a proposal would bring about substantial improvement in the co-ordination of the activities of the two services and in the promotion of co-operation between them. It was also recognized that such a course would not preclude the adoption of measures based upon the first proposal if, after a period of experiment it was possible to reach general agreement that such a course would be desirable.

VI. The Committee therefore recommends that the following proposals for co-ordination of the activities of the External Affairs and Trade Commissioner Services, and in the promotion of co-operation between these services in all matters relating to Canadian representation abroad and related problems of home administration, be put into effect forthwith.

PROPOSED FRAMEWORK OF CO-ORDINATION

1. METHOD OF OPERATION:

In order to attain the maximum degree of efficiency and also to regularize the ad hoc arrangements of past years, the External Affairs Service and the Commercial Intelligence Service should be co-ordinated, and the whole considered the External Service of Canada.

The two existing Services should continue to operate under present departmental auspices with the functions of each maintained as heretofore, that is, the External Affairs Service being responsible for diplomatic and political work and the Commercial Intelligence Service for commercial and allied work and both services being responsible, as heretofore, for general economic work within their respective fields.

2. COMMITTEE FOR ADMINISTRATIVE CO-OPERATION:

The co-ordination of the two Services in Ottawa would be effected by a standing Personnel and Administration Committee appointed to consider such questions as (1) selection and training of officers; (2) assignments to posts at home or abroad; (3) transfers and promotions; (4) correlation of salaries, allowances, leave regulations and similar matters; and (5) general administrative problems.

This Inter-departmental Committee should consist of six appointed members, three representatives to be named by each Department, with the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce as members, ex officio.

As its first duty the Committee should conduct a detailed survey of the personnel of the External Affairs Service and of the Commercial Intelligence Service with a view to presenting proposals, to take effect at the time co-ordination is instituted, with regard to —

(a) which officers, if any, of each Service should be recommended for retirement;

(b) which officers, if any, of each Service should be recommended for transfer to another branch of the Public Service;

(c) which officers should be continued as members of the Co-ordinated Services.⁶³

3. INTERCHANGEABILITY OF OFFICERS:

The officers of the two Services should be interchangeable so far as this can be attained. To permit this to be done, the ranks and salaries of the two Services should be correlated. Thus, the salary of a Counsellor should be the same as that of a Trade Commissioner of top grade. Admittedly, some difficulty would be encountered in the early stages of co-ordinated Service, but with common recruiting and uniform training of junior officers, this difficulty would soon disappear.

Complete interchangeability will be difficult at the outset, due primarily to lack of knowledge of officers of either Service of the detailed duties of the other, but this difficulty will be less acute than that which would be faced by recruiting personnel who have no knowledge of the Government Service or of procedure abroad. Thus, a senior Trade Commissioner who has had experience in a Legation would presumably be well qualified to serve as Consul General, or, if occasion required, as Counsellor. In general, Trade Commissioners would perform commercial work but they would be available as Counsellors or Secretaries under special conditions such as those in London, Pretoria, and St. John's, where Trade Commissioners are now acting as Secretaries to the offices of High Commissioners. With a change in the method of recruiting and basic training, co-ordination would become progressively more complete.

4. COMMON RECRUITING:

There should be common recruiting by means of competitive examinations, both written and oral, at such times as the Inter-departmental Committee may recommend. Appointments would be made to a classification such as "Probationary Officer, External Service" and after a probationary period in this grade

⁶³La note suivante était écrite à côté de ce paragraphe:

⁶³The following note was written beside this paragraph:

I've objected to this. N. A. R[OBERTSON] candidates would be considered for appointment as Third Secretaries, Vice-Consuls, or Assistant Trade Commissioners. During this probationary period, the candidates would spend part of their time in External Affairs and part in the Commercial Intelligence Service, where their work and aptitude would be carefully watched so that the Personnel Committee could decide whether they should be appointed and if so to which branch of the External Service each should be assigned.

The foregoing method of recruiting would not ordinarily be followed in the case of the selection of specialists, whose services are required primarily for work in Ottawa but who may, as occasion requires, be assigned to overseas posts for special duties.

5. ASSIGNMENTS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES:

On assignment to capitals where there is a Canadian diplomatic mission, a commercial officer would be given a rank dependent upon his standing in the Service, ranging from Assistant Commercial Secretary to Commercial Counsellor. In other foreign cities the commercial officer would have a standing dependent upon his rank in the Commercial Service, ranging from Vice-Consul and Assistant Trade Commissioner to Consul General and Trade Commissioner, but he would in respect of standing be interchangeable with officers posted to diplomatic missions or to offices in Commonwealth countries.

6. ASSIGNMENTS WITHIN THE BRITISH COMMONWEALTH:

In these countries the commercial officers would normally retain the title of "Canadian Trade Commissioner". Where, however, they were assigned to duty in the capital they would receive a standing dependent upon their position in the Service, ranging from Assistant Commercial Secretary to Commercial Counsellor. Their relationship with the High Commissioner would be substantially the same as the relationship between corresponding officers and heads of diplomatic missions in foreign countries.

7. ESTABLISHMENT OF CONSULATES:

In the establishment of Consulates, the "ranking" officer would normally be determined by the nature of the work to be done. If the work were predominantly of a commercial nature, the Consul General would normally be selected from the Commercial Intelligence Service, with a consul or vice-consul from External Affairs, whereas the reverse would apply if the work of the Consulate were quasi-diplomatic. Most, if not all, of the present Trade Commissioners have had considerable experience in consular work in general dealing with such subjects as Canadian customs and immigration regulations, distressed Canadians, passports, pure food certificates, witnessing oaths and affidavits, etc.

8. DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONNEL FOR HIGHER APPOINTMENTS:

It would be expected that, in the early stages of career, the personnel in both Services would be freely interchanged. After several years the Personnel Committee would presumably decide to which branch of the External Service a recruit should be assigned. During succeeding years, those who were assigned to the commercial side would be under Trade and Commerce and would be engaged predominantly in trade promotion and similar work; those who were assigned to the political side would come under External Affairs and would be concerned principally with the work of diplomatic missions and with the political side of consular work. During this period it would be necessary, in planning movements of personnel, to provide for periodic interchanges for the purpose of training and experience. It would then be possible to ensure that, when personnel reached a stage at which they were suitable for appointment to senior posts, they would have sufficient experience on both political and commercial sides to ensure that they were well equipped for undertaking such duties.

If such a programme of periodic interchange were followed, it should be practicable to make the appointment to senior posts available to suitable personnel, both on the commercial and on the political side.

It would be desirable to extend existing arrangements for Trade and Commerce personnel, under which they are provided with opportunities to become fully acquainted with conditions in this country during leave periods and periods between change of assignment, so that they would be applicable, with necessary adaptations, to External Affairs personnel. This would have the double advantage of keeping such personnel in touch with the economic background in its relation to Canadian representation abroad and of enabling them to maintain contact with this country, and thus be in a better position to represent Canadian interests.

Submitted on behalf of the Committee.

J. E. READ

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES

1. A consideration of these problems brought out the urgent need for co-ordination and co-operation in economic matters at the home offices. There is an obvious need for an economic organization which would be charged with the responsibility of considering the results of the economic reporting made available by the above proposal and facilitating the translation of these results into economic policy by the interested departments of the Government. This would presumably involve other departments besides External Affairs and Trade and Commerce, and the Committee did not regard it as a matter upon which it should report.

2. The membership of the Committee consisted of the following:

J. E. Read
H. L. Keenleyside
W. D. Matthews

Department of Trade and Commerce

O. Master
C. M. Croft
F. Sim

CONFIDENTIAL

Edmonton, December 4, 1943

Dear Mr. King,

I have just received a copy of the Report, forwarded to me from Ottawa, containing the recommendations of the officials of External Affairs and of Trade and Commerce, who have been giving close study to the manner in which the Foreign Services of the two Departments can best be co-ordinated in future.

I understand that this Report is already in your hands and that in submitting it to you Mr. Robertson had a reservation to make in regard to one recommendation, i.e., the part of Section 2 under VI, which appears at the top of page 4. The reservation which Mr. Robertson has made in respect of this section is one in which Trade and Commerce would readily concur.

My purpose in writing you is to let you know that I am well satisfied with the recommendations made by the Committee, and with the "proposed framework of co-ordination" which the Committee has submitted. It represents, I think, a thoroughly practicable method of ensuring the closest co-operation between the External Affairs offices abroad and the Trade Commissioner offices, and it provides a most useful means of regular consultation between the senior officials of the two Departments at Ottawa.

I am rather anxious, therefore, that this plan should be put into effect as soon as possible — especially so as it will facilitate progress in some measures of re-organization which I have in mind in connection with the Commercial Intelligence Service and which I think should be carried through with the least possible delay. I hope, therefore, that it will be possible for you to give early consideration to these recommendations.

Yours faithfully,

J. A. MACKINNON

NOTES ON PROPOSED JOINT DECLARATION OF ALLIED POWERS

I. PREAMBLE:

(i) The segregation of Great and Small Powers in the preamble is novel and open to some objection. The classical diplomatic arrangement is in French alphabetical order. Any departure from this order is bound to be troublesome and invidious. In terms of war potential or of immediately effective contribution to the struggle, it is difficult to put what is left of Free China in a separate and higher category than that which will contain Canada, The Netherlands and India.

(ii) The omission of India from the proposed list of signatories is still, Mr. McCarthy reported, under consideration in London. I note that India and Burma were separately represented at the Inter-Allied meeting in London, held on September 24th, 1941. With the turn the war is taking, it would seem wise to take advantage of every opportunity for the recognition of their developing international status rather than reverse the trend which is already in process of establishment.

(iii) The omission of Luxembourg, which was also represented at the Inter-Allied meeting in London, is probably inadvertent. It has as much claim to be included in the list as some of the tiny Central American republics which have declared war against Germany and Japan in the last fortnight.

(iv) More important is the studied exclusion of any recognition of the Free French Movement. General de Gaulle, as "Leader of Free Frenchmen" was represented at the London Conference. The Free French Movement is making a more effective military contribution at the present time than a number of the Allied Governments whose status and legitimacy is [sic] unchallenged. The colonial territories under its control are also of very considerable economic and strategic importance. In the particular circumstances in which the Declaration was drawn up in Washington, it is understandable that no provision was to be made for the Free French Movement in the list of immediate signatories. It would, I am sure, be a mistake, however, to slam the door finally against their reinstatement, and I think the adhesion clause of the Agreement should be so drafted as to permit Free French accession to a declaration of principles for which they are doing a good deal more active fighting than many of the nominal signatories.

2. The draft revision of paragraph 2 which you suggested in Washington² is, I think, much more logical in its order than that contained in the text. Revised, it would read as follows:

Being convinced that they are now engaged in a common struggle against savage and brutal forces seeking to subjugate the world and that complete victory over their enemies (or complete subjugation of these forces) is essential to defend life, liberty, independence and religious freedom, and to preserve human rights and justice, not only in their own lands but everywhere,
DECLARE

3. The meaning of sub-paragraph (1) would be clearer if after "full resources" it read "whether military or economic" or, alternatively, "military and economic".

In commenting on this passage of the Declaration in the War Committee of the Cabinet this morning, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom made it clear that, according to his understanding, each Government was the best judge of how its full resources could be most effectively employed against the enemy. The obligation to employ the "full resources" of a country did not imply an obligation to use any particular method of organizing the national effort such as conscription.

I gave you a note on Monday about the proposed Joint Declaration which had been prepared for early signature by Allied Governments in Washington. Attached are two telegrams on the subject, No. 625[†] and No. 626[†], received last night from our Minister in Washington, together with a revised text of the Joint Declaration,³ incorporating all the modifications mentioned in telegram No. 626.

The inclusion of India, which is all to the good, may make the omission of Burma more pointed. Technically, their constitutional status is similar, and Burma was, like India, separately represented at the last Allied Meeting in London. I have mentioned the position of Burma informally to Earncliffe, as it is just possible that its omission from the list of signatories is inadvertent.

You will note that Mr. McCarthy wishes to be informed, as soon as possible, whether the draft Declaration as revised is acceptable to the Canadian Government.

Ottawa, January 14, 1942

When General Macready was in Ottawa recently he indicated to Chiefs of Staff here that machinery would be set up in Washington and London to ensure maximum degree of efficiency and co-operation in prosecution of common war effort; that co-ordination in Washington would take following general form

- (a) Small war council to make decisions in respect of war policy;
- (b) Joint service planning committee;
- (c) Joint service allocation (material supply) committee;
- (d) Joint supply committee, covering wide field of raw materials, production and transportation.

Macready rather assumed that Canada would not be separately represented on the Planning Committee but that Canadian representatives would be part of British Commonwealth delegation which would act vis-à-vis the United States. It was not clear whether Canada would have a separate independent representation on the other committees or form part of British Commonwealth representation. Naturally we see difficulties in any form of representation which would not take Canadian interests fully into consideration and would not provide for a Canadian representative with full rights of participation at discussions where Canada was directly concerned. Without, however, bringing up the question of our attitude toward these matters at the present time, it would be most useful if you could ascertain whether Macready was expressing an official British viewpoint when he was in Ottawa; whether discussions have been taking place between the United States and the United Kingdom on this matter and, if so, what stage those discussions have reached. It would seem that if the matter had developed as far as Macready indicated we should have been consulted before this. Certainly sending him to Ottawa to talk informally to our Chiefs of Staff would hardly be considered adequate consultation. It would also be interesting to know if the Australian Minister had any information on these matters and whether the Australian Government had expressed any viewpoint concerning them.

RE SIR JOHN DILL'S VISIT

Wrong has just reported a conversation he had with Dill this morning about the arrangements for coordinating the general war effort which have developed out of the Roosevelt-Churchill and parallel Joint Staff conversations of the past three weeks. Dill confirmed, in general, the accuracy of the information which our Chiefs of Staff had obtained from General Sir N. Macready, and which Mr. Ralston had reported to the War Cabinet (vide para. 9 of the Minutes of January 14th[†] and our telegram to the Canadian Minister at Washington No. 30 of the same day). He stressed, however, the importance attached to the fact that the organizations to be set up in Washington would have their exact counterpart in London and that it was contemplated that participation of the countries of the British Commonwealth and of the European Allies in the planning of the general war effort would be effected through their membership of the London Committee rather than the Washington committees. I suspect that Churchill himself would welcome the coordination of Commonwealth representation in London and, from a talk that Casey, the Australian Minister, had with President Roosevelt, it is clear that the latter is of much the same mind. He gave Casey to understand pretty clearly that Australian requirements and views about war strategy should be cleared through the proposed London Committees rather than be taken up directly by the Australian representative in Washington.

Wrong pointed out to Dill that the Canadian position was quite different in a number of respects from that of any other country of the British Commonwealth. We had, for example, a primary interest in plans for North American defence which could hardly be cleared through a London committee, but would have to be taken up directly between Canada and the United States. At the same time, the Government was bound to be interested in the work of the London Committees as well because it would be interested in the planning of operations in any theatre of war where any Canadian troops were engaged, and the bulk of Canadian forces were now in the European theatre, for which the Joint Staff Committees established in London would be responsible. Dill appeared to recognize the reasonableness of these considerations, and threw out the suggestion that, while contacts between the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, India, etc., might reasonably be centralized in London, which was responsible for the strategic direction of the war in Europe and the Middle East, there might be room, not for a Joint Commonwealth Mission in Washington, but for a Joint United Kingdom-Canadian Mission, which could maintain closer contacts with the United States Service authorities than a comprehensive and therefore cumbersome mission could do.

In connection with the rest of our military representation in Washington, I learned from the Chief of the General Staff today that it is planned to bring Brigadier Letson, who has done extremely well as Military Attaché in Washington, to Ottawa to be Adjutant General and to replace him in Washington by Major-General Pope, who is also a very good man. Pope will not be designated as Military Attaché, but would be the obvious representative of the Chief of Staff in any top level military discussions in Washington.

Mr. Keenleyside and I, along with Mr. Heeney, attended a meeting this morning with the Chiefs of Staff and Field Marshal Sir John Dill.

Sir John Dill outlined various proposals that had been made in Washington during Mr. Churchill's visit for the establishment of machinery for joint co-operation, as follows:

1. JOINT SHIPPING BOARD. This was accepted by the President and the Premier. It was designed to ensure the most efficient use of the shipping of all the united nations, something according to Sir John very much to be desired, in view of the present divided control in this vital matter, which is now the rule in the United States. It would be a Board of two members, Sir Arthur Salter, representing the United Kingdom, and probably an Admiral, representing the United States, and it would have complete authority over all American and British shipping.

2. RAW MATERIALS COMMITTEE. This has also been agreed to by the President and the Premier. It was to be a Joint United States-United Kingdom Board for planning the most effective utilization for the prosecution of the war of the raw materials of the united nations. The United Kingdom member of the Board would be Sir Clive Baillieu (under Lord Beaverbrook as Minister of Supply), while the United States representative might be Mr. Donald Nelson. In its mission of organizing the production and utilization of raw materials, the Board would collaborate with the other united nations concerned, conferring with them when necessary.

3. JOINT ALLOCATION BOARDS. There were to be two such Boards, one in London and one in Washington. The Joint Board in Washington would be presided over by Mr. Hopkins and would consist of representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The Board, however, would report through the Chiefs of Staff and not direct to Mr. Hopkins. This procedure is to be given a month's trial.

It was recognized that other allies would have an interest in the activities of the above Board. These allies were divided into two categories, those "protégés" of the United Kingdom and those "protégés" of the United States. The first included all Empire countries, Free France, Norway, Yugoslavia, Holland, Belgium and Czechoslovakia, the latter, China, Russia and Latin American states.

It appeared from discussion that no real consideration has yet been given in Washington to the position of Canada in relation to these allocation Boards. As they were visualized at present, it seems that Canada might have to submit her claims both to the London Board and to the Washington Board. It was pointed out that our special interest in this matter would seem to justify separate Canadian representation on the Washington Allocations Board, and Sir John Dill accepted this point of view. He thought possibly Canada's special interest might be recognized by the establishment of a Joint United Kingdom-Canadian Allocations Board in Washington, the representatives of which would represent the British Empire on the Joint Allocations Board referred to above. The difficulty here would be that Australia and New Zealand would not be likely to accept this machinery.

On the other hand, it might be argued that Australia and New Zealand would recognize Canada's special position on these supply matters in the same way that it is proposed that we should recognize their special position by accepting Australian and New Zealand representation on the Council of Governments which it was proposed to set up in London to deal with Far Eastern matters. Canada would not be represented on this Council.

In any event, it was made clear to Sir John Dill by the Canadian participants in this meeting that Canada would certainly expect to be consulted on all decisions regarding allocation which affected her. As the third most important supplier to the war effort of the Allies, she would be justified in taking this stand. Such a stand would not prejudice in any way the principle of the pooling of all supplies and using them where they were needed most at any given time.

4. JOINT PLANNING BOARD. Sir John Dill had little to say about this. He thought it might be difficult for Canada to be separately represented because the Board must be kept small and if Canada were represented the other Dominions would expect representation. At the same time, he agreed that Canada should be kept carefully and continuously informed of the work of the Committee. This might be done by having Canadian Staff Officers attached to the British Staff Mission in Washington.

Washington, January 20, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In our Telegram No. 44 of January 17th[†] and my letter of January 16th[†] I gave you the chief points arising from discussions with Sir John Dill and the Australian Minister, respectively, concerning the proposed arrangements for the co-ordination of the war effort. Doubtless Sir John Dill during his Ottawa visit has filled in the outline so that fairly complete information is now available in Ottawa on the results in this field of the discussions between the President and Mr. Churchill and their Staffs.

In this letter I want to bring up informally a number of questions which have occurred to me in connection with the Canadian place in the arrangements which are now in process of completion. I am enclosing with it a copy of a draft report which has been prepared by the British Joint Staff Planners[‡], who are the senior Staff officers attached to the representatives in Washington of the British Chiefs of Staff. This plan, if it is approved by the British Joint Staff Mission, will be tabled at a meeting of the Combined Staff Planners. The word "Combined" is used to indicate an international body, and the word "Joint" is used to indicate an inter-Service body which is not international. The enclosed paper is interesting in itself, but my principal purpose in forwarding it to you is because of the light it throws on the method of operation of the new Combined bodies.

The paper will be sent to the Canadian Chiefs of Staff direct by the Service Attachés of the Legation.

The information brought to Ottawa by General Macready, which was summarized in your Telegram No. 30 of January 14th, was accurate on the whole but misleading on one or two points. It may be that the position here changed after his departure for Ottawa. The chief difference between the outline given in your telegram and the situation which has now developed relates to the first international body, which he described as a "small War Council" to make decisions in respect to war policy. It was understood in Ottawa from him, I think, that this would not be a Service body but would be on the political level. It appears, however, that what is contemplated is the organization in London and in Washington of Combined Chiefs of Staff — i.e., a body on the highest Service level.

The principal question causing me concern is the nature of the Canadian representation which should be sought and the status with respect to their British and U.S. colleagues which should be claimed for Canadian representatives on any of the combined organizations. There are now 26 Governments at war with the Axis Powers, and there are also the Free French to take into account. Of these, 10 Governments and the Free French have substantial forces in the field — the United Kingdom, the United States, U.S.S.R., China, Netherlands, India, and the four Dominions. Poland, Belgium, Norway, Yugoslavia, Greece, and Czechoslovakia all have a reasonable claim to participate to some degree in the direction of the war. Any Allied war organization which gave full representation to all the belligerents would be like the Assembly of the League of Nations and would inevitably be so ineffective that it could not exercise real control. (We may have to have some such body with a resounding title and no power as a sort of face-saving device.)

How far, then, is Canada entitled to go in pressing a claim to participate in inter-Allied bodies which are designed to co-ordinate the war effort? It is easy to state the general principle, but remarkably difficult to apply it. The principle, I think is that each member of the grand alliance should have a voice in the conduct of the war proportionate to its contribution to the general war effort. A subsidiary principle is that the influence of the various countries should be greatest in connection with those matters with which they are most directly concerned. Among suppliers of war materials for the use of the United Nations, Canada ranks third and only after the United States and United Kingdom. In her direct military contribution of trained fighting men, Canada ranks perhaps fifth or sixth, but comparison here is very difficult. With regard to her direct interests in the conduct of the war, Canada is most immediately concerned with, first, the defence of North America, and, secondly, with operations in any theatre of war in which a substantial number of Canadian forces are engaged.

It is apparent, I think, that during the visit of Mr. Churchill to Washington full consideration was not given to the means of integrating in the combined organizations the other belligerent Governments. The matter of first importance was undoubtedly to develop an effective scheme for co-ordinating the policies of the United Kingdom and the United States, and it may be that the question had to be faced from this point of view alone before the broader aspects could be carefully examined. No one should blame the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom for concentrating on the effective co-ordination of the war machinery of their own countries. Complaint becomes justified only if the legitimate rights of other belligerent Governments are ignored as the machinery is developed or if decisions vitally affecting a particular Government are taken without consultation with it, as the Dutch claim was the case in the establishment of unified command in the South-west Pacific.

One can think of a large number of permutations and combinations to provide for Canadian representation on the combined bodies which are in process of formation. I do not possess sufficient knowledge of several important aspects of the problem to enable me to formulate definite suggestions. Here are some of the possibilities:

1. To seek Canadian representation on all the combined bodies, both in London and in Washington, with the Canadian representatives at least formally equal in status to those of the U.S. and the U.K. If this were done, several other Governments could justly claim equal treatment, and I think that such a proposal would be rejected both here and in London.

2. To seek Canadian representation on all the combined bodies either in London or in Washington. To this there is the grave objection that the bulk of our troops are in the United Kingdom theatre of war, whereas we are vitally concerned in the defence of North America, which will inevitably be directed from Washington. I have gathered that the President and Mr. Churchill reached the conclusion that the influence of the Dominion Governments and of the Governments-in-exile in the United Kingdom should be exerted in London. At any rate, the Australian Government has been so informed.

3. To seek representation only on those combined bodies, either in London or in Washington, with whose activities Canada is most vitally concerned. Clearly any process of selection, however, is very difficult. We might easily forego any representation on the proposed Combined Shipping Organization, and we might be satisfied with representation on the body in Washington concerned with raw materials. The Combined Service bodies, however, in both capitals (which present the most serious problems) will all be dealing frequently with matters of immediate concern to Canada.

4. To seek representation on all or most of the combined bodies in collaboration with the United Kingdom representatives or as part of a general Commonwealth representation. This presents obvious political difficulties, but it may be the best way out, especially since it would help to avoid claims for equal treatment from belligerent Governments outside the Commonwealth. The combined organizations must be kept small if they are to be efficient and rapid in action. Through joining forces on them with the British, we ought to be able to ensure that we are fully informed of their activities and can participate in their discussions when our interests are directly involved. If this is the line we adopt, the question will become in the first place one for arrangement between Canada and the United Kingdom.

5. To refrain from pressing for representation on any of the combined bodies and to seek to exert our influence through separate channels in both London and Washington. This seems to me to be quite impossible, for both political and military reasons which are sufficiently obvious. We might be able to handle questions concerning the defence of North America in this manner, but we would be in constant danger of being faced with decisions already taken by the United States and United Kingdom after consideration at top Staff levels. These decisions would doubtless involve from time to time the employment of Canadian forces.

I appreciate that there are other possible alternative courses, and it is probable that whatever is agreed upon will not correspond to any of the alternatives which I have mentioned. I have also not discussed in this letter the possibility of the evolution of some sort of Supreme War Council on the political level. There is, of course, no such thing as a Supreme Council, since its supremacy would involve the surrender of sovereignty by the participating States. I think that there is no intention to constitute a consultative inter-Allied body here on the political level. There may be fresh suggestions from London on the advisability of setting up a British Commonwealth War Council there to play a part in the machinery of inter-Allied co-operation.

I conclude by saying that I think that this letter is not particularly helpful. These matters are much in my mind. I hope you will be able to keep us fully informed on what goes on in Ottawa in this connection.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

CANADIAN ARMY REPRESENTATION WASHINGTON

1. As previously arranged, I duly paid a three-day visit to Washington in order informally to explore the situation with regard to the nature and scope of our proposed Army representation vis-à-vis the British Joint Staff and the United States Chiefs of Staff.

2. I arrived in Washington on 22nd January and proceeded to the Canadian Legation Annex where I met the Canadian Military Attaché. I informed Brigadier Letson that my visit was purely of an exploratory nature and I gave him a brief resumé of the position as we saw it in Ottawa, that is to say, as outlined in your draft memorandum of 12th January¹. Brigadier Letson at once gave me to understand that he fully agreed with your plan of achieving an appropriate measure of Canadian representation in Washington and that I would probably find that very similar views were held not only at the Canadian Legation but also by General Wemyss of the British Joint Staff.

3. I then called on Mr. Hume Wrong with whom I discussed the question at some length. It was at this stage that I telephoned you in order to ascertain if, as a result of your conversations with Field Marshal Sir John Dill in Ottawa and Montreal on Wednesday, 21st January, your views had changed or been modified in any way. As you will recall, it was on this occasion that you told me that the Field Marshal had said that he proposed to telegraph the British Chiefs of Staff in London an outline of how he thought the Canadian Army representative might work with the British Joint Staff.

4. On Friday morning, 23rd January, I called on Lieut.-General Wemyss, the Commander of the Army branch of the British Joint Staff, to whom I first carefully explained the informal and exploratory nature of my visit. I then gave him a brief summary of how we thought that the Canadian Army could share in and contribute to the work he was engaged in. Wemyss, as usual, was friendly. He was also careful in what he said and I understood him to infer that the telegram Sir John Dill was sending to London would not necessarily bring about a speedy British approach to Ottawa.

5. I have not outlined the conversations I have so far mentioned because Wemyss arranged that I should meet the Field Marshal later in the day so that I might obtain the latter's views at first hand.

6. Accompanied by Brigadier Letson, I called on Sir John Dill late on Friday afternoon by whom I was cordially received. I began saying that my object was solely to ascertain how the question in our minds was viewed by the interested parties actually on the spot. So far as Canada was concerned, I said that there was no thought in our minds of claiming an equal voice in the direction of the united war effort in respect of theatres in which we had but a general and perhaps somewhat remote interest. On the other hand there were theatres, of which the Western Hemisphere was one, in which we were directly and vitally concerned and in respect of which we did expect to be represented on the highest Service level. I observed, moreover, that from our point of view the question was not without important political aspects.

7. This being the case, I continued, we were desirous of sitting in with the Chiefs of Staff when questions affecting Canada were under discussion and it therefore followed that it would be of advantage for us to be represented on the Joint Planning Section and probably on the Joint Intelligence Section as well. Both of these Sections form part of the British Joint Staff. The need for active participation in the work of the Allocations Committee was, of course, clearly apparent; indeed, as he was aware, a Canadian officer (Colonel Mavor) was already in Washington in an unofficial capacity but nevertheless actively participating in the business in hand. So far as the proposed shipping Committee was concerned, I had little or no information but felt that as and when the general principle of Army representation was agreed upon, a satisfactory solution would follow as a natural consequence.

8. Sir John then said that he was fully alive to the importance of the political aspects of the question and he clearly indicated that he had in mind not only those of the moment but also those that might become apparent during the post-war period. As for the Canadian Army representative, he entirely agreed that in addition to his own office in the Canadian Legation Annex he should be provided with a desk in the building housing the Army Branch of the British Joint Staff; that he should be kept fully informed as to all that was going on and that not only should he alone represent the Army side when questions of direct Canadian concern were under discussion with the United States Chiefs of Staff but that it seemed to him but natural that on other occasions when questions farther afield were being considered, the Canadian representative might well represent the Senior British Army Member, should the latter for any reason be unable to attend.

9. As regards the Joint Planners, Sir John remarked that the Army section consisted of a Grade one staff officer and two second grade. He reminded me that some ten or twelve years ago I had served in the War Office as a second grade staff officer in the Directorate of Staff Duties and he suggested that the present situation might be looked upon as being somewhat parallel, namely, that one of the grade two Joint Planners might well be a Canadian officer. Otherwise, Sir John went on, if a Canadian officer were appointed to Washington solely to work on matters connected with the defence of the Western Hemisphere, he might be idle for an appreciable part of his time. It therefore would seem preferable all round that he should take his share of the work of the Section irrespective of the theatre of operations. Such an arrangement, he thought, would actually work out to the advantage of everyone concerned. A similar arrangement he felt might also apply to Canadian representation in the Joint Intelligence Section should it be considered desirable to appoint a Canadian officer to that body.

10. So far as the Allocations Committee was concerned, the position was clear. He was aware that Colonel Mavor had already come to Washington. In view of the importance of Canada's war production, he saw the Canadian member of the Allocations Committee filling a distinct role as Canada's representative in this particular field. Indeed, as with the Senior Canadian Army representative, he would be entirely free to report to Ottawa whatever he might wish.

11. Sir John told me that he had drafted, but had not yet dispatched, a telegram to the Chiefs of Staff in London in this connection. In answer to my question, he said he did not think its form was such as to bring about a British reference to Canada.

12. With regard to the measure of participation which the other Dominions might desire, he was without information. Australia and New Zealand would in all probability wish to be represented, South Africa possibly not at all. It would be for them to say. Sir John made no mention of the suggestion reported by Mr. Wrong to the Department of External Affairs that Australia might be represented chiefly in London rather than in Washington.

13. I feel I should not conclude this report without referring to some points which will require clarification should the plan sketched out commend itself to the Canadian Government and perhaps I might add to that of the United Kingdom. The first has to do with nomenclature. The British organization in Washington is now known as the British Joint Staff. Should Canada and possibly one or more of the other Dominions associate themselves in the work being carried out in Washington, I suggest that the title British Commonwealth Joint Staff should prove acceptable. Again, as each of the heads of the three British Services are respectively charged with the responsibility of representing the British Chiefs of Staff vis-à-vis the United States Chiefs of Staff, so I would suggest that the Canadian Army representative be similarly considered as being the representative of the Canadian Chief of Staff.

14. A second point would be the relationship between the Canadian Army representative and the Canadian Military Attaché. I suggest that while there should be the closest liaison between the two, their duties lie in different fields and that consequently the latter should continue to report to the Canadian Minister and to the Director of Military Operations and Intelligence as heretofore.

15. Not having been instructed to do so, I have made no inquiry as to the action which may be taken to provide for the further representation of the R.C.N. and R.C.A.F. in Washington.

16. Nor have I included any remarks on the question of the proposed Committee on Raw Materials as I gathered the impression that this Committee, if created, would be set up outside the Military field.

17. In conclusion, I would add that Mr. Wrong, to whom I have read the draft of this report and who was good enough to offer several helpful suggestions, suggested to me that I should not come to Washington officially until such time as both the Canadian and British Governments have reached agreement on this question.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to my letter of January 20th, I saw Sir John Dill this morning, at his request, for a further discussion of the question of Canadian Staff representation here. He began by expressing his keen pleasure over his recent visit to Ottawa, which he said was both productive and enjoyable. After his return here, he had a talk with Major-General Pope, who has doubtless furnished you with a copy of his report on his visit, of which I saw a draft.

Sir John had told General Pope that he would telegraph to London, giving his views on the best procedure to adopt in arranging for Canadian participation in the combined Service organizations here. He read me a draft of his telegram, which he later said he would revise in the light of his talk with me. Evidently his mind has been dwelling on the practical difficulties, of which I gave you a summary account in my previous letter. He told me that General Marshall had recently emphasized again to him the need for reducing to a minimum the number of persons present at the meetings here of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. These are now attended on the British side by Sir John Dill, Admiral Little, General Wemyss, and Air Marshal Harris, and on the U.S. side by Admirals Stark and King and Generals Marshall and Arnold. There are also present members of a joint secretariat. Sir John considers that it would not be wise to increase the number of persons present at these meetings, but he expressed himself as perfectly ready to have a Canadian officer present in place of one of the British representatives whenever matters of special concern to Canada were under discussion. Similar considerations affect the composition of the other Staff bodies at lower levels.

Starting from the assumption that the most effective means of protecting Canadian interests is through co-operation with the British Joint Staff Mission, Sir John left me with the impression that he would support a change in its title to "British Commonwealth Joint Staff Mission". He is puzzled, however, over the status and responsibilities of the Canadian representatives. He seemed at one time to have in mind that the senior Canadian representatives would be at the level next below the representatives of the British Chiefs of Staff. I told him that I felt that this was inadmissible from our point of view, and he seemed to be impressed by the case as I put it to him.

He also suggested that as a possible idea he himself might be charged with a sort of superior authority over all representatives of Commonwealth Chiefs of Staff in Washington. I said that this also seemed to be difficult, since he was not responsible to the Canadian Government and our military representatives could not avoid by any mechanism the fact of their responsibility to Ottawa.

He then mentioned the position of Canadian Staff officers other than the representatives of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff who might be put to work in the various committees. He wondered, for instance, what the position would be of a Canadian Staff officer working on the Joint Intelligence Committee. Whose orders would we take, and to whom would he be responsible? I answered that in my civilian ignorance I thought it ought to be possible for such an officer to work as a full member of the Joint Intelligence Committee, not concerning himself solely with matters of interest to Canada but accepting the direction of British officers if this were necessary, while at the same time not defining his status as one of subordination or independence. I added that I felt that any Canadian officers serving here might technically be a Canadian section of a Joint Mission, while in fact they were working as full partners in a joint enterprise.

He then raised the question of the position of other members of the Commonwealth, pointing out that a tentative decision had been reached (apparently between Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt) that the war effort of the Commonwealth should be co-ordinated in London. He was very receptive to my arguments that this did not meet the Canadian case, and he seemed to feel that equally it did not meet the Australian case in view of the latest development in the war. The conclusion from this would seem to be that it would have to be left open, at any rate to Australia, to parallel whatever pattern of representation may be adopted for Canada.

He ended by assuring me that he would think the matter over further and re-draft his telegram to London. Our discussion throughout was most friendly and was in the nature of an effort to find an acceptable solution to a very tricky problem of organization. I think that he would have telegraphed sooner to London if it had not been that on going through the files he had found the record of the discussion in Ottawa last June, when Admiral Little, General Wemyss, and Air Marshal Harris were told at a meeting there that the Canadian Government had decided in favour of a separate Canadian Military Mission here.⁴ I said to him that I felt that circumstances had so altered since then with the entry of the United States into the war and the spread of the war to the Pacific that he should not regard this decision as still binding, especially since its execution had been opposed by the United States Government.

A satisfactory solution of the whole problem might be easier to secure if it were possible for the three Canadian Services to agree on one representative only at the top Staff level who could speak at this level for the Canadian Navy, Army, and Air Force. I do not know whether this would be feasible, but Mr. McCarthy and I both feel that it is worth study and consideration.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 39

London, January 27, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My immediately succeeding telegram contains texts of three memoranda of agreements reached at Washington between the Prime Minister and President Roosevelt regarding setting up of joint organizations for control, supply and shipping questions.

We are urgently considering how best to implement these plans so as to ensure that fullest machinery is available for consultation with Dominion Governments on these matters, and our proposals will be telegraphed to you for your consideration at the earliest possible moment.

I regret it was not possible to communicate these texts to you before, but the President's telephonic concurrence in their final form has only just been received. He has also just informed us that he proposes to publish document immediately.

It is proposed to appoint Lord Beaverbrook as Chairman in London of "Munitions Assignment Board" and Mr. Henry L. Hopkins as Chairman in Washington.

London, January 27, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text, Begins: To further coordination of Allied war efforts the President and the Prime Minister have set up bodies to deal with munitions assignments, shipping adjustment and raw materials. The functions of these bodies are outlined in the following documents. These bodies will confer with representatives of the U.S.S.R., China and such others of the united nations as are necessary to attain common purposes and provide for the most effective utilization of the joint resources of the united nations.

(a) Munition Assignments Board.

1. The entire munition resources of Great Britain and the United States will be deemed to be in a common pool about which the fullest information will be interchanged.

2. Committees will be formed in Washington and London under the combined Chiefs of Staff in a manner similar to the South West Pacific Agreement. These Committees will advise on all assignments both in quantity and priority whether to Great Britain and the United States or other of the united nations in accordance with strategic needs.

3. In order that these Committees may be fully apprised of the policy of their respective Governments, the President will nominate a civil Chairman who will preside over the Committee in Washington, and the Prime Minister of Great Britain will make a similar nomination in respect of the Committee in London. In each case the Committee will be assisted by a Secretariat capable of surveying every branch and keeping in touch with the work of every Subcommittee as may be necessary.

4. The civilian Chairmen in Washington and London may invite representatives of the State Department, the Foreign Office or Production Ministries or agencies to attend meetings.

(b) Combined Shipping Adjustment Board.

1. In principle the shipping resources of the two countries will be deemed to be pooled. The fullest information will be interchanged.

2. Owing to the military and physical facts of the situation around the British Isles, the entire movement of shipping now under the control of Great Britain will continue to be directed by the Ministry of War Transport.

3. Similarly the appropriate authority in the United States will continue to direct the movements and allocations of United States shipping or shipping of other Powers under United States control.

4. In order to adjust and concert in one harmonious policy the work of the British Ministry of War Transport and the shipping authorities of the United States Government, there will be established forthwith in Washington a Combined Shipping Adjustment Board consisting of a representative of the United States and a representative of the British Government who will represent and act under the instructions of the British Minister of War Transport.

5. A similar Adjustment Board will be set up in London consisting of the Minister of War Transport and a representative of the United States Government.

6. In both cases the executive power will be exercised solely by the appropriate shipping agency in Washington and by the Minister of War Transport in London.

(c) Combined Raw Materials Board.

A planned and expeditious utilisation of the raw material resources of the united nations is necessary in the prosecution of the war. To obtain such a utilisation of our raw material resources in the most efficient and speediest possible manner we hereby create the Combined Raw Materials Board.

This Board will:

(a) Be composed of a representative of the British Government and a representative of the United States Government. The British member will represent and act under the instructions of the Minister of Supply. The Board shall have power to appoint the staff necessary to carry out its responsibilities.

(b) Plan the best and speediest development expansion and use of the raw material resources under the jurisdiction or control of the two Governments and make the recommendations necessary to execute such plans. Such recommendations shall be carried out by all parts of the respective Governments.

(c) In collaboration with others of the united nations, work toward the best utilisation of their raw material resources and in collaboration with the interested nation or nations formulate plans and recommendations for the development, expansion, purchase or other effective use of their raw materials. Ends.

London, January 28, 1942

town, No. 25. My telegram of January 27th, Canada, No. 22,⁵ New Zealand, No. 68, Union of South Africa, No. 23.

1. In connection with proposals put forward for consultation here on Ministerial level, we have also considered possible means of improving machinery for consultation below Ministerial level so as to ensure that every possible opportunity is given for such consultation at all stages before policy is finally settled.

2. With this in view, as regards defence questions, to agree that any Dominion Government which so desires should appoint a Service Liaison Officer or officers to keep in touch with Chiefs of Staff organization here. Such an arrangement would ensure that the Dominion representative in London would be informed of any plans that might affect the Dominion at an early stage before finality is reached, so as to afford an opportunity for expression of views while matter is still in a formative stage. It would be desirable that officer or officers should be of an appropriate rank, neither too junior nor too senior, and it is suggested that level of Colonel or Lieutenant Colonel in the army would be most suitable.

3. You will no doubt inform us if you wish for representation of this kind.

4. As regards foreign affairs, there is already machinery whereby special Dominion Officers appointed for the purpose can make contact with the Foreign Office. We are, however, examining machinery in the Foreign Office to see whether any improvement can be made to facilitate liaison of this kind.

5. As regards supply questions, see my telegram Circular D.39,⁶ paragraph 2. The following are our proposals:—

(1) Raw Materials.

It is proposed to form a clearing-house here under a Ministerial chair, on which Dominions and India and the Colonies would be represented, to cover supplies from all the Empire and needs of all the Empire. This clearing-house will make it possible to present Empire position as a whole in Washington through Sir Clive Baillieu, the Ministry of Supply representative there.

(2) Munitions Assignments.

The Committee in London referred to in paragraph 3 of agreement⁷ will consist of service representatives under Chairmanship of Lord Beaverbrook. It is proposed that Dominion Service Liaison Officers should be taken into consultation by this committee and its sub-Committees.

(3) Shipping.

It is proposed to continue and, as necessary, develop existing arrangements whereby shipping resources and needs of the Dominions are co-ordinated in London with our own.

6. There is also the question of allocation of productive capacity. It is proposed that a fairly senior United Kingdom officer, thoroughly conversant with machinery of defence and service Departments, should be appointed as a Liai-

SUMMARY OF MEMORANDUM ON CANADA AND COMBINED U.S.-U.K. BOARDS

(a) PLANNING AND MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS.

These are both "Service" in character, with three British and three American members.

Four alternative forms of Canadian association with their work are

- (a) Full and complete representation.
- (b) Representation by participation as members of a "U. K.-Canada" or "Commonwealth" Joint Staff, which would have Canadian as well as United Kingdom members.

(c) Remaining outside the Combined Boards but providing special Canadian Liaison machinery with them in Washington and London.

(d) A combination of (b) and (c), e.g. Canadian officers attached to the British Joint Staff, but senior Canadian service representation outside that Staff, to whom the Canadian members could report and who would at the same time act as liaison between the Combined Boards and Ottawa.

One officer representing the Chiefs of Staff or the Minister of National Defence could fill this position. He should have both the ability and the rank to command the respect of the top U.K. and U.S. Service people.

(b) RAW MATERIALS BOARD.

This is civilian in character.

Canada's association to it would be through U.S.-Canadian machinery already in existence. In other words, it would become a U.K.-North American Board as the Assignments Board might become U.S.-Commonwealth.

(c) SHIPPING BOARD.

No special machinery is needed for Canadian representation.

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'Etat adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] February 2, 1942

UNITED STATES-UNITED KINGDOM COMBINED WAR BOARDS

Six United States-United Kingdom Combined Boards or Committees are now being organized to ensure the maximum degree of co-operation between the two Countries in the prosecution of the war.

As it was found impracticable to centralize this co-operation and control in either capital, all the Combined Boards (except that on Raw Materials) will have branches in London and Washington.

It is proposed that the London Boards will co-ordinate the war effort of the British Empire and of those nations whose Government is now in the U.K. The area to be covered from London will be Europe, Near and Middle East, and the Indian Ocean.

The Washington Combined Boards will cover the war effort in China and the Far East and will be responsible for consultation with the Latin American States, China and Russia.

It should be pointed out that neither Australia nor New Zealand have, so far as we know, accepted the proposal that all Empire questions should be cleared through the Boards in London. There is some indication that they may be reluctant to do this. The Far Eastern Political Council, for instance, was to have been set up in London. But Australia and New Zealand, who are on this Council, are both anxious to have it meet in Washington.

Furthermore, those responsible for the proposal that Empire co-ordination should be centred in London do not seem to have given adequate consideration to the nature and importance of U.S.-Canadian relations.

As at present proposed, however the set-up is as follows:

(a) Combined U.K.-U.S. Chiefs of Staff Committees in Washington and London.

(b) Combined U.K.-U.S. Planning Committees in Washington and London.

(c) Combined U.K.-U.S. Munitions Assignments Boards in Washington and London, with Mr. Harry Hopkins and Lord Beaverbrook, as chairmen. The members of these Boards, however, will represent and report through their Chiefs of Staff.

(d) Combined Shipping Adjustment Boards in Washington and London.

(e) Combined Raw Materials Board – to sit in Washington, only, with Chairmen, Mr. William Batt and Sir Clive Baillieu.

The agreement between the U.K. and U.S. setting up these Boards makes it unmistakably clear that they are to consist of representatives of two governments only.

There is, however, a provision in the agreement for associating other of the United Nations in the work of the Boards, as follows: "These bodies will confer with representatives of the U.S.S.R., China and such others of the United Nations as are necessary, etc."

This is the only reference, even by implication, to Canada in the agreement except a sentence of the section dealing with the Raw Materials Board, which reads: "in collaboration with others of the United Nations, work towards the best utilisation of their raw materials, etc."

On the other hand, the agreement does not purport to give any of the Boards set up authority or control over the resources of any other state than the United States and United Kingdom, without the consent of that state.

For instance, the Munitions Assignments Board, in theory at least, controls the munitions resources of Great Britain and the United States only. Canada's production is not covered.

It is most likely, however, that the Munitions Assignments Board expects to allocate the production of the U.S. and the whole of the British Empire — including Canadian production for Canadian use.

It is perfectly true that the Board, as at present constituted, has in theory no power to do this. In practice, however, some way will have to be found to make it possible. Canada cannot very well adopt an independent attitude on this question. The Board's activities will, therefore, doubtless cover eventually:

(1) All completed war equipment of British or U.S. standard type ordered in the U.S. by Canada.

(2) All completed War equipment manufactured in Canada whether to Canadian, British, U.S. or other order.

Present plans are that the Washington Board will allocate total production in bulk either to the U.S.A. or to Great Britain. The London Board will then allocate the British Empire share to the various parts of the Commonwealth.

It is on the understanding that this will be the system put into operation, that the suggestions made below with respect to Canadian representation are made.

Up to the present, the general Canadian position in respect of consultation or association with the above Boards has been obscure.

On January 28th the U.K. telegraphed proposals for machinery to ensure consultation within the Commonwealth on these matters.

These proposals seem to refer to consultation in London only and provide for Dominion Liaison with, but not membership of, the above organizations, as follows:

(a) A Service Liaison Officer or Officers from each Dominion to keep in touch with the Chiefs of Staff Organization in London, to ensure that the Dominions would be informed at an early stage of any plans that might affect them.

(b) Raw Materials — "A clearing house under a Ministerial Chair" to be set up in London with Dominions representation to cover supplies from all the Empire — so that the Empire position as a whole might be presented at Washington.

(c) Munitions Assignments Board. Dominions Service Liaison officers are to be appointed to this Board in London.

(d) Shipping Board. Existing arrangements in London are to be developed whereby Empire shipping resources are co-ordinated.

Certain features of the British proposals stand out:

(1) They deal with consultation in London only and do not provide for association with the work of the Washington Combined Agencies.

(2) They do not take into account Canada's special position as a producer and supplier of raw materials and munitions.

(3) They ignore the special arrangements Canada has already made with the U.S. in the field of raw materials co-ordination.

(4) they do not establish any Commonwealth machinery, with the Dominions as integral parts thereof; merely liaison with U.K. Machinery.

(5) Even less do they provide for Dominion representation on any combined U.K.-U.S. Boards. They visualize the Empire speaking as one on such Boards but speaking through the U.K. representative.

What we have now to decide is whether these above arrangements are satisfactory: if not, what changes should be made to them?

I think it may be taken for granted that proposals which only deal with consultation in London will not do. How, then, are we to be associated with the work in Washington and London?

In this connection, I feel that our interest in the work of the Combined Shipping Boards is not sufficient to warrant any special provision for representation. So far as the Joint Staff, Planning and Munitions Assignments Boards are concerned, there are four alternatives for Canada, as follows:

(a) to request full and separate Canadian representation on three Boards or on any one of them.

This cannot, I think, now be secured. Full, formal representation on any of these Boards would mean that the Roosevelt-Churchill agreement would have to be amended and "U.S.-U.K." become "U.S.-U.K.-Canada". It is not likely the United States would agree to this. They would dust off and bring out the old argument that other states would demand similar representation.

(b) We can secure representation by attaching Canadian service representatives on various levels to the United Kingdom Joint Staff in Washington. This would, in fact, make that Staff a "Canadian-United Kingdom Joint Staff" or, if the other Dominions adopted this course, a "British Commonwealth Joint Staff".

On the planning side, this would work in practice as follows:

The Combined Staff Committee has six members — three from each side. Whenever a question was to be discussed that affected Canada, one of the British "three", would be a Canadian. In other words there would be a "panel" of British Empire representatives.

A similar procedure would be followed for the Munitions Assignments Board, both in Washington and London.

This arrangement by which Canadian representatives would become part of a British Commonwealth side of the Combined Boards would undoubtedly be the simplest and most easily worked of the possible alternatives. It is recommended by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff who add, however, the Proviso, "our representatives should act as representatives of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff, through whom they would have the right of appeal to the Canadian Government in the event they consider that at any time Canada's needs are not being adequately met."

In theory, this dual position of Canadian representatives might seem to present difficulties. In practice, those difficulties should not be any greater than those which exist in the case of a Canadian Corps Commander in a British Army. General McNaughton takes his orders from General Brooke, but he can always appeal against those orders to Ottawa. There has been up to the present no trouble over this divided military responsibility.

A more serious objection possibly, is that Canadian representation through a "Commonwealth", or "U.K.-Canadian Staff" would make impossible our association with the U.S.A. in questions where our interests were closer to Washington than London. An assignments Board of three might often result in a U.S.-Canada vs U.K. line-up on certain issues. It will be difficult for the Canadian representative to take any such position if we are part of a Commonwealth representation.

The answer to this argument is, however, that we can make our own special position felt in the Commonwealth discussions prior to meetings of the Combined Boards; that only by associating ourselves with the British can we, indeed, be sure of participating in all these discussions.

In short, if we want to know what is going on, and give the maximum protection to our special interests, we should have Canadian representatives actually part of a British Joint Staff, rather than rely on separate consultation outside the U.K.-U.S. Boards, as outlined in the third alternative discussed below.

(c) The Third alternative would be the maintenance of an independent position outside the three Combined Boards but the provision in Washington and London of adequate liaison machinery for consultation with them whenever our interests are affected.

This is, in essence, the solution advanced by the United Kingdom for the London end of the Combined Boards. It could also be extended to cover the Washington end. It would, in fact, merely be an extension of the status quo; at least so far as our participation in the planning and conduct of the war is concerned.

Before December 7th, 1939 [1941?], there was no intention of setting up any special Joint U.K.-Canada Staff, Planning or Production Committees in London. It may be argued, therefore, that there is no reason now why we should claim separate representation in any combined U.K.-U.S. Committees or Boards, either in London or Washington.

After all, none of the Boards mentioned above can commit Canada to anything without our consent. If we leave the initiative to the United Kingdom and the United States in these matters, they will have to consult Canada whenever Canadian co-operation is required. In the case of the Assignments Board, at least, this consultation will be almost continuous.

No new or special machinery for it will be necessary in London. We already have Navy, Army, and Air Force staff representation there.

So far as the Washington end is concerned, the ideal course would be a Canadian Military Mission there with a formal existence separate from the British Chiefs of Staff though working, of course, in close co-operation with them. But the Americans do not want this.

Alternatively representatives of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff might be attached to the Legation or become a Washington Office of the Canadian Section of the Joint U.S.-Canadian Defence Board.

It is true that this arrangement would put Canada, in theory, in exactly the same position as any of the other United Nations, so far as the Combined Boards and Committees are concerned. In theory, no account would be taken of our special position. In respect of the Assignments Board, however, the facts themselves would soon dictate such a special position for Canada.

Liaison machinery with, rather than specific membership of the U.K. Joint Staff would be best in theory. Whether it would be best in practice is doubtful.

(d) There is a fourth alternative which is a compromise between (b) and (c).

Canadian officers would become part of the British Joint Staff but above them and outside that Staff would be a Senior Canadian officer or officers — possibly attached to the Canadian Legation.

I should think there is much to be said for having one officer represent the Minister of National Defence in this connection; and acting for all three Services. If this is impossible, then presumably there would have to be three, acting as Washington representatives of their respective Chiefs of Staff. Consideration might be given to using the existing attachés for this purpose in Washington, where the duties are not so important as to warrant a separate appointment. In London, we already have Navy, Army and Air Force Headquarters available to which liaison officers could be attached, if new appointments were necessary.

My own view is that this fourth alternative would be the most satisfactory. If we appoint a Canadian officer (or officers if all Services have to be represented) who by their position and abilities will command the respect of the top-level men on the Combined U.K.-U.S. Staff, we will help to ensure that Canadian interests are not disregarded. If at the same time we attach Canadian officers directly to the U.K. Joint Staff, we will ensure that this senior officer is kept accurately and continually informed of detailed developments in the work of the Combined Boards which could be of interest to Canada.

THE RAW MATERIALS BOARD.

This deserves special consideration, for three reasons:

(1) It deals with matters in which the position of Canada is of special importance.

(2) There is already in existence Joint U.S.-Canadian machinery for the co-ordination of the production and use of raw materials.

(3) This Board will meet only in Washington.

Proposals received from the United Kingdom suggest that the Empire is to be considered as a whole by the British representative on this Combined Board and that, for this purpose, a "clearing house" representing all parts of the Empire will be set up in London.

Information from Washington indicated, however, that the United States hope to deal with total North American, rather than merely United States, production through Mr. Batt, their representative on the Board. If this is the case, the Canadian approach to association with the Board would be from the North American rather than Empire angle; our "clearing house" would be in Washington with the Americans, not in London with the British.

This is all the more reasonable because we have already Canadian-United States machinery for such a purpose in the Joint Raw Materials Co-ordinating Committee, of which Mr. Batt is also the United States member.

It is felt that we would have a better chance of making Canada's position felt and getting Canada's needs supplied by associating ourselves with the United States rather than the United Kingdom side of the Raw Materials Board. This would be the reverse procedure to that adopted in the case of the other Boards but that should not cause any difficulty.

In conclusion, I think it is important that the United Kingdom be informed as soon as possible of our attitude to Canadian association with the work of all these Boards, both in London and Washington. We should also make our position clear to the Americans. They are, I think, at the moment almost as ignorant of Canada's desires in this matter as we are of their plans, if any, for Canada's inclusion in the new set-up.

That set-up is now liquid to the point of confusion. If we wish to participate in it, except as merely one of 20 odd "United Nations", we should make our proposals for such inclusion known both to Washington and London at once. Otherwise the present fluid situation will harden and we will be frozen out.

Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States, to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, February 3, 1942

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I gather that there is a general feeling in the Department (and presumably elsewhere in Ottawa) that the position of Canada has not been fully recognized in the establishment of the new bodies for the co-ordination of the conduct of the war.

It is possible to make a strong case for this view, and we may have some cause for resentment. Resentment, however, is not a useful emotion in winning a war.

There are also strong arguments on the other side. I am writing to you personally because we have so often talked over the role of Canada in international affairs. I know that we think much alike on these matters and also that you are in a position to help other people get the situation in proper perspective.

In the first place, the primary duty of the President and Mr. Churchill has been to work out the machinery with respect to their own countries. We only have cause for resentment when that machinery is used without our participation so as to affect Canadian interests. Up to the present it does not seem to have been employed in a manner to affect Canadian interests as the Government has regarded them since the outbreak of the war.

Secondly, the business of running a grand alliance in wartime is too difficult to combine efficiency with constant respect for the status of each of the members of the alliance. This was abundantly illustrated in peacetime by the record of the League of Nations, in which respect for the status of the Member States prevented effective action by the League as a whole.

Thirdly, what has happened so far with regard to Canadian participation in these bodies does not seem to me to be at variance with the position hitherto taken by the Canadian Government. You and I know of a hundred instances since the war began in which Canada has refused to take responsibility for decisions of policy with which we were not immediately concerned. One difference now is that these decisions tend to be joint decisions of the United Kingdom and the United States in place of decisions by the United Kingdom alone. If Canada has been satisfied before, and if the means of consultation have been as effective as the Prime Minister maintains, should this change cause dissatisfaction now?

I advance these arguments only to plead against a spirit of resentment and recrimination in Ottawa. I am not for a moment satisfied with the part which we have played in the conduct of the war, and I believe that in fact we shall be compelled to play a greater part, no matter what the machinery of consultation may be. I believe that we would have played a greater part long ago if there had been heavy casualties in the Canadian Army. In the panorama of the war today the Hong Kong affair is a minor skirmish, yet it seems to have caused more interest among the Canadian public (and even among the Canadian Cabinet) in our part in determining the strategy of the war than anything that has happened in the last two and a half years. The sole reason, of course, is that Canadian lives were lost and Canadian soldiers taken prisoner. When the bulk of the Canadian Army gets into action, opinion in Canada will compel the Government to take an active part in determining the use to which the Canadian forces are put. That is perhaps the chief political lesson to be learned from Hong Kong.

Mainly for reasons of internal political balance the Government has hitherto adopted in these matters what may unkindly be called a semi-colonial position. With the entry of the United States into the war we are not as well placed to influence the conduct of the war as we were when the United States was neutral. Canadian influence can be greatest when there is a divergence of policy between the United Kingdom and the United States. Now that they are partners, we become only a junior member of the partnership. If we had sought earlier to undertake more extensive political responsibilities, it would be easier now to maintain our status. We have tended, however, to be satisfied with the form rather than the substance. Are we still looking mainly for the formal preservation of our status, or are we actually seeking to exert greater influence on the conduct of the alliance?

I cannot answer this last question. I do not yet know what the real desires of the Canadian Government are in this respect. I feel inhibited in talking to both the British and the Americans on these matters because we have had no sure guidance from Ottawa.

In any case, let us not sulk or be querulous. We have done well in the provision of fighting forces, munitions, supplies, and money. We have done little hitherto in the direction of the joint war effort. We must not now endanger our direct contribution by indulging in recriminations and charges that we have been left out.

I conclude by saying that this letter has no particular purpose, except to enable me to blow off some steam in your direction.

Yours ever,

HUME [WRONG]

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS

11. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY reported that officers of his department had been concerned as to Canada's relationship to the new combined U.K.-U.S. Raw Materials Board which had been set up in Washington.

Canada, at this time, should refrain from pressing for representation on this Board. Officials of Munitions and Supply had, accordingly, been instructed not to sit upon sub-committees or agree to Canadian representation at the lower levels, but to retain their independence of action.

So far, no request had been made to Canada to pool her resources in raw materials, with the United States and the United Kingdom; in present circumstances, the government should not agree to do so, for it was far better for Canada to retain her present trading position and let any initiative come from the United States. Washington might contemplate the common pool as already including Canadian raw materials, but it did not do so.

12. MR. HOWE said that, with regard to allotments of munitions and war equipment, he had expressed a similar view to the Chief of the General Staff. The government should not seek to have Canada represented on the Munitions Assignments Boards.

This was not, however, a matter for Munitions and Supply which ceased to have an interest when the goods were manufactured.

13. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS referred, briefly, to the various bodies set up in Washington and London to deal with combined strategy, allotments, shipping, and raw materials.

The U.K. government had made certain suggestions for improving the machinery for consultation with the Dominions in London. Canada had not, however, been consulted either by London or Washington in regard to the combined organizations set up as a result of the Churchill-Roosevelt conversations. The information received through Sir John Dill and other British officers, and through the Legation in Washington, had been wholly informal.

14. THE SECRETARY drew attention to the fact that the U.K.-U.S. combined Munitions Assignments Boards, Shipping Adjustment Boards and Raw Materials Board did not, as announced, purport to deal with other than British and American interests. There was provision for conference with "representatives of the U.S.S.R., China and such others of the united nations as are necessary to attain common purposes and provide for the most effective utilization of the joint resources of the united nations".

15. THE PRIME MINISTER said that he had informed Sir John Dill that, while Canada realized the practical necessity of limiting representation upon combined bodies for the efficient conduct of the war, and would not seek to complicate the situation by unreasonable requests, at the same time Canada had been in the war for more than two years and Canadians would expect that their interests would not be ignored in any of these fields.

The present position was unsatisfactory but there was, at present, no useful initiative that Canada could take.

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I was glad to get your letter of February 5th[†] with its voluminous enclosures on the position of Canada with respect to the new U.K.-U.S. organizations. You ask for my comments, and I may have some more to send in a day or two.

All I want to say now is that I am not sure that the alternative which you suggest on pages 8 to 9 of your memorandum of February 2nd⁹ would prove to be feasible. Your idea is that we should infiltrate Canadian officers into the British Joint Staff Mission (which would remain the British Joint Staff Mission but should have preferably one senior officer or, if necessary, three officers representing the Canadian Chiefs of Staff). There would be a danger that this plan would not be acceptable to the United States authorities inasmuch as the senior officer or officers would constitute in effect a Canadian Military Mission. He or they would have to be known by some descriptive title in which the word "Canadian" would appear.

Furthermore, we would have to settle the status of this officer or group of officers before they came here and ensure that they had in fact the right of access at a high level on problems with which Canada is directly concerned.

In short, I fear that this suggestion might prove to be a blind alley and that to follow it further might lead only to delay in reaching a decision on a matter which is becoming constantly more urgent. It is becoming more urgent because the procedure for the actual operation of the Combined Committees is being developed. Colonel Mavor came to see me about this yesterday with regard to his position in relation to the Munitions Assignments Board. I suggested to him that he should report his views direct to the Master General of the Ordnance and should suggest to the latter that he take the question up urgently with the Minister of National Defence.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, February 10, 1942

SECRET. Your telegram No. 25 of January 28th. Proposals for Commonwealth consultation in London. It is noted that these proposals refer only to the London end of the work of the combined Boards referred to in your Circulars D. 39 and 40 of January 27th. The Washington end is, of course, of equal importance for us, especially in view of arrangements we have previously made, both domestically and jointly with the United States, covering the production and use of munitions and raw materials for defence. We are now giving careful consideration to ways and means by which these arrangements can be co-ordinated with those to be made through the United Kingdom-United States Boards now set up to deal with munitions and raw materials produced by the United Kingdom and the United States of America. You will, of course, appreciate Canada's interest in, and indeed, importance to, the problem of the maximum production and most effective use of war supplies in view of our position as a producer of such supplies. It is clear that some way must be found for associating Canada closely with the work of the Munitions Assignments and Raw Materials Boards in Washington and also, though possibly to a lesser degree, with the other agencies for United States-United Kingdom co-operation now set up.

So far as the Raw Materials Board is concerned, the joint machinery already in existence for co-ordinating production and use of essential raw materials of Canada and the United States would have some effect on our relationship to the proposed "clearing house" in London covering Empire production and needs.

So far as the Combined Shipping Board is concerned, the present Canadian liaison machinery with the Ministry of War Transport is working satisfactorily and probably will require little change.

I would be glad to receive further information on first, the proposals for consultation on the Ministerial level mentioned in paragraph 1 of your telegram No. 25 and second, information on the question of allocation of productive capacity mentioned in paragraph 6.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION — "COMBINED" U.K.-U.S. WAR ORGANIZATIONS

29. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE pointed out that, so far, no invitation had been received for Canadian participation in the various "combined" bodies which had been set up in Washington and London as a result of the Churchill-Roosevelt conversations, nor had the government made any representations to that end.

The U.K. and U.S. governments, however, were already proceeding on the basis of pooling their resources and, apparently, it was assumed in Washington that Canadian production and requirements would be dealt with by the Anglo-American allocations machinery.

The Deputy Minister of Munitions and Supply had been informed that a clause would be added to contracts for purchase in the United States of Canadian Army automotive requirements providing that deliveries be subject to the authority of the Quartermaster General of the U.S. Army under the new system of allocation by the Combined Chiefs of Staff. This information had been passed on by Mr. Sheils to the Master General of Ordnance.

This was a suggestion with serious implications. If such a clause were to be inserted in U.S. contracts, consideration would have to be given to inserting a similar stipulation in our own contracts.

30. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY referred to the position regarding raw materials. Canada had not been invited to be represented on the Combined Raw Materials Board nor upon the Munitions Assignments Board, nor had the government ever agreed to pool Canadian resources under these Boards' authority.

Canada was, however, in a strong position in having more to sell to the United States than she required to buy from her and, in the present confused situation, the government should take no initiative. Munitions and Supply representatives in Washington had been instructed not to become involved in the organization of the combined boards and to act on the assumption that Canada was not affected.

The particular difficulty to which the Minister of National Defence had referred regarding a clause in our U.S. contracts should not have been referred to the Master General of Ordnance. The Department of Munitions and Supply would undertake to straighten this matter out with the U.S. authorities.

At the same time, it should be remembered that officials in Washington were anxious to work out common problems with us, and satisfactory solutions of these problems would be found.

31. THE SECRETARY described the arrangements suggested by the U.K. government for liaison in London with Lord Beaverbrook's Committee (Munitions Assignments Board). A Committee with Dominion representation, to evaluate Empire demands on North American production and to present a united case for the Empire in Washington, was in contemplation; allocations within the Empire to be made in London.

Liaison arrangements with the other bodies in London had also been suggested, and an interim reply on these proposals had been sent to the Dominions Office.

(Telegram No. 25, Dominions Office to External Affairs, January 28, 1942; telegram No. 39, External Affairs to Dominions Office, February 10, 1942.)

32. MR. RALSTON expressed the view that it should, at once, be made clear to the U.K. and U.S. governments that Canada had not yet been consulted with regard to participation in the work of the combined bodies set up in London and Washington, and that, in consequence, Canada was not included in the arrangements which had been made for the allocation of munitions and raw materials.

It should also be pointed out to the United Kingdom that the only approaches which had been made to the Canadian government, in this connection, were by way of informal conversation with members of the British Staff in Washington, and that these discussions had been on the basis of direct Canadian representation in respect of the allocation of production.

33. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed that a draft telegram to the U.K. government and to the Canadian Minister in Washington for transmission to the U.S. government, in the sense suggested by Mr. Ralston, be prepared by External Affairs, for approval of the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

Mémoire des chefs d'état-major aux ministres de la Défense nationale
Memorandum from Chiefs of Staff to Ministers of National Defence

[Ottawa,] February 14, 1942

As a result of the British Prime Minister's recent visit to Washington, specific machinery has now been set up in London and Washington to ensure the maximum degree of co-operation in the prosecution of a common war effort.

2. It was found that effective co-ordination and control could not be exercised either from Washington alone or from London alone, but that it would have to be done from both London and Washington. It is understood that London will co-ordinate the war effort of the British Empire and of those nations whose seat of government is now in the United Kingdom. Co-ordination from London will be concerned with the European, Near and Middle Eastern and the Indian Ocean theatres. Washington, it is understood, will co-ordinate the war effort of the United Nations in China and in the Far East. The position to be assumed by Australia is not clear.

3. The machinery now set up in London and Washington in which the Canadian Armed Services are most concerned comprises the following:

(a) Combined Joint Planning Committees composed of Service representatives only.

(b) Combined Joint Munitions Assignments Boards composed of Service representatives with civilian Chairmen.

4. It may be noted that the terms "Joint" and "Combined" have now been standardised. "Joint" refers to a national committee comprising representatives of different Services. "Combined" refers to an international committee comprising representatives of two or more countries. The term "Combined Joint" is a combination of both.

5. (a) THE COMBINED JOINT PLANNING COMMITTEES.

The Washington Committee consists of the U.S. Chiefs of Staff and the representatives of the U.K. Chiefs of Staff.

The London Committee comprises the U.K. Chiefs of Staff and the representatives of the U.S. Chiefs of Staff. Each of these committees has the necessary staff composed of Planning Officers from the Services.

6. In our opinion, Canada is not in a position to press for equal representation in planning except where Canadian interests are vitally concerned. On the other hand we must be kept fully informed of what is taking place in order to determine when our interests are affected. When this is so, we must take a leading part in discussions which result in decisions and the consequent preparation of plans. In order to achieve this, we consider our senior representatives should act as representatives of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff and that they should work in the closest liaison with the representatives of the Chiefs of Staff of the United Kingdom and of such Dominions as may nominate representatives. In order that their line of direct responsibility back to Canada should not be impeded, we feel that they should not be looked upon as forming an integral part of the British (Commonwealth) Joint Staff in which, even if for reasons of rank alone, they would find themselves on a lower level than that of their British colleagues. On the other hand we feel that good purpose would be served by having their assistants form part of the Commonwealth Joint Staff.

7. Although the question has not previously been raised, it would now appear desirable, in view of the increasing size of Canadian Armed Forces in Great Britain, that Canada should be similarly represented on the London Planning Committee. So far we have had no part in the planning of the disposition and employment of Canadian Forces allocated to United Kingdom control, except for ad hoc discussion with Senior Canadian Commanders as and when emergent conditions required to be confronted.

8. (b) THE COMBINED JOINT MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS.

Under the recently introduced system, the Washington Committee allocates in bulk, either to the United States or to Great Britain, all finished war equipment of U.S. and British types manufactured in the U.S.A. whether ordered under Lease-Lend or by the U.S. War and Navy Departments for their own use. It is to be noted that both the London and Washington Munitions Assignments Boards will have civilian Chairmen, whose principal duty will be to keep in view political considerations. The Committees will nevertheless report through the Chiefs of Staff of the two Nations direct to the Prime Minister and the President.

9. The Canadian position in respect to pooling and allocation has not been defined. In our opinion the principles involved in respect to pooling are as under:

(i) Completed equipments should be distributed in accord with strategic need.

(ii) The Canadian Government cannot, in spite of (i), divest itself of responsibility regarding the equipping of our forces at home and abroad.

10. The principles defined above are in conflict, and can only be reconciled in application by Canada insisting upon equal representation with the U.K. and the U.S. on the Joint Munitions Assignments Boards in Washington and London. If equal representation is agreed to by the U.S. and the U.K., then we consider that Canada should join the U.S.-U.K. pool in respect to:

All completed armament and war equipment manufactured in Canada whether to Canadian, British, United States or other order.

11. If equal representation on the Joint Munitions Assignments Boards is not agreed to by the U.S. and the U.K., then the only alternative is for Canada to retain the right of allocation in respect to all completed armament and war equipment manufactured in Canada whether to Canadian, British, United States or other order.

Washington, February 16, 1942

I telephoned to Robertson this afternoon to ask the position about our relationship to the Combined Boards. He said that he felt that the position was quite unsatisfactory but there was a probability that General Pope and Mr. Pearson would come to Washington later this week in an effort to get something definite settled. One reason for the unwelcome delay has been a divergence of view between the Department of Munitions and Supply and the Defence Departments. The Department of Munitions and Supply have been inclined to remain aloof from the Raw Materials Board, apparently on the ground that Canada is so important a supplier of several materials that the Board will have to come to us. I do not like this attitude particularly, as it seems to have an element of pique in it. The Defence Departments have not expressed any very clear ideas, and I rather gather that the outcome of last week's discussion in the War Committee was an agreement to request further information and consideration. A telegram destined for both London and Washington was drafted after this discussion, but has not yet been sent because its despatch was subject to the approval of Mr. Ralston and Mr. Howe, and the latter has been in North Bay.

I told Robertson that I thought we were in some danger of missing the boat. Drury said to me this morning that Captain Hastings of the Joint Staff Mission had remarked to him that we had better get Pope down soon or we would be missing out. The Netherlands Military Attaché had told him that he was eagerly accepting the suggestion that the Netherlands military representatives should have an office in the Public Health Building, where the Combined Chiefs of Staff are housed, and had asked what Canada was doing. I said to Robertson that without some indication of the policy of the Government we felt precluded from even pressing enquiries here, as we were in no position to answer any questions on what Canada wanted.

telegram to Dominions Office, No. 39 of February 10th, on proposals for Commonwealth consultation in London arising out of establishment of United Kingdom-United States Combined Boards. I would be grateful if you would supplement this telegram by making clear to the United Kingdom Government our present position in this matter. We appreciate that Combined Boards already set up represent United Kingdom and United States governments only and that production and use of Canadian raw materials and Canadian war supplies does not fall within the competence of the Combined Boards. There has as yet been no agreement to pool Canadian resources with those under the Boards' authority. If proposals are to be made to that end, the initiative will no doubt be taken by the United Kingdom or United States Governments. Meanwhile it should be made clear that this has not yet been done. The only approaches that have been made to Canada in this matter have been in telegrams from the Dominions Office outlining machinery for Empire liaison in London and by informal conversations with certain members of the British staff in Washington. From these conversations we had the impression that it would probably be proposed that we agree to have Canadian production included in the activities of the Combined Boards and that, in this event, provision would be made for direct Canadian representation on these Boards. We have, however, received no such proposals.

Please do not give the impression that we are being querulous in this matter. What we wish to ensure, however, so that there will be no confusion now or later, is that the facts above stated are clearly understood and appreciated. Canada's position is that of a large-scale producer as well as a substantial consumer of raw materials.

That confusion seems already to have developed is shown among other things by the fact that while the United Kingdom Government in London have suggested a "clearing house" there for raw materials covering Empire production and needs, we have also been informed from Washington that it has been proposed to form there an Empire Committee to function as a "clearing house" with Sir Clive Baillieu.

Please emphasize in your discussions on this matter that we are, of course, actuated by the sole consideration of how we can best ensure that Canada will make her most effective contribution to the common cause. Ends.

SECRET. Your telegram of February 10th, No. 39.

We are grateful for views of Canadian Government. We have always had in mind the special position of Canada in relation to the Combined Boards in Washington and the proposals for Commonwealth consultation in London but did not mention this in telegram No. 25, since this dealt generally with the Dominions position and it seemed obvious that some little time would be required to examine the questions of Canadian association properly.

2. We were ourselves about to consult you on the position of Canada and Canadian production in the general scheme for munitions assignments. We have set out our views for your consideration in my immediately following telegram.

3. We shall be glad to receive the further views of the Canadian Government in relation to the Raw Materials Boards. We are making arrangements for setting up the proposed clearing house in London.

4. As regards the last paragraph of your telegram, the proposals for consultation on the Ministerial level mentioned in paragraph 1 of my telegram No. 25 were those in my telegram No. 22 of January 27th¹¹ regarding representation in relation to the War Cabinet.

5. We will communicate with your further on the second question mentioned in the last paragraph of your telegram.

London, February 18, 1942

SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram.

The machinery for munitions assignments as outlined in the agreement between the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the President of the United States of America is now being established in Washington and London and we wish to consult you about the position of Canada and Canadian production in the general scheme.

2. As you know the entire output of finished munitions of war whether produced in the United States or Great Britain is to be regarded as a common pool to be allocated in accordance with strategic needs. The scheme assumes that all existing commitments such as yours to China will be met by allocations from this pool. The allocation will be done by two Boards, one in Washington and one in London, both acting under the general strategical direction of the combined United States and British Chiefs of Staff. There are a very large number whose requirements have to be taken into account in making allocations and some practical scheme must be worked out for presenting their claim and securing their interests. If each claimant for material from the common pool puts forward requirements both in Washington and in London, confusion will result. The broad principle on which it is proposed to work therefore is that the United Nations should be divided into two groups, one of which would obtain its requirements from the London Board and the other from the Washington Board. It would be the responsibility of Great Britain to present at the Washington Assignments Board the demands for allocations to the British group of nations. Similarly it would be for the United States to present in London demands from their group.

3. The procedure would be that acting on strategical directions from the combined Chiefs of Staff, the Board in Washington would allocate the United States output in bulk as between the United States and British groups of United Nations. Acting on the same directions the Board in London would allocate the British production in bulk between the United States and British groups. It would then be for the Board in London to sub-allocate among the British group of nations the bulk allocations received from both British and United States production.

4. Assuming that Canadian production is to be brought into the common pool the two questions for consideration are:

- (a) Should it be included in the Washington or the London pool;
- (b) Should Canada be included in the British or the United States group of nations.

5. We think that it is essential that the whole of the Canadian production should be in one pool or the other. It would be impracticable to divide it between the two on the basis of whether the material had been ordered on Canadian or British contracts on Lease-Lend or on United States contracts. In some cases the same articles are being made on more than one type of contract and it would be impossible to differentiate the output.

6. If this view is accepted we think there would be great advantages in dealing with Canadian production in the British pool. In the first place the great majority of the output of finished munitions is of British type and is for use by the British Empire and the Allies who fall naturally into the British group. In whichever pool the output was included the greater part of it would thus be allocated to Canada, Great Britain or other of the British group of nations. It would therefore appear simpler to deal with it in the first place in London. Such comparatively small allocations as would be required for the United States group of nations would be demanded in London by the United States representative.

7. We also suggest that Canada like the other Dominions should be included in the British group of nations. This would mean that all Canadian requirements for munitions wherever produced would be communicated to London and demands for allocations from the Washington Board would be put across by the British representatives. Canadian requirements would be dealt with by direct consultation in London between Canadian and British representatives at all appropriate levels. Similarly Canadian representatives would take their full part in drawing up the combined demands to be made in Washington and would if they so desired be able to reinforce these demands in Washington through their own representatives there. We feel this would be much the most advantageous arrangement for Canada and would be one which would continue the close contacts on these matters already established in London on allocation questions.

8. Nothing in the new scheme will affect the supply to Russia by the United States of America or ourselves of war material promised under the Moscow Protocol.¹²

9. We would very much welcome an early expression of your views on these proposals. It is entirely for you to decide the way in which you associate yourselves with the machinery, but we have stated our views because we are convinced that the arrangement we propose will produce the best results.

London, February 21, 1942

We received yesterday through Mr. Massey further observations of the Canadian Government as to their position in relation to the Combined Boards in which inter alia attention is drawn to the fact that as yet no agreement has been reached to pool Canadian resources with those resources which will come under the authority of the Combined Boards. It is understood that these observations were formulated before the receipt of my telegrams Nos. 37 and 38 of February 18th. We hope that the Canadian Government will have appreciated from my telegram No. 37 that there was no intention on our part to assume that a decision in favour of such pooling had been reached by the Canadian Government, although the reasons which in our view would make such an arrangement advantageous in the case of munitions have been set out in my telegram No. 38. In case it should not have been sufficiently clear from my telegrams under reference we should like to emphasize again that Canada's special position both geographically and as an important producer has always been very much in our mind and that our telegram No. 38 was intended to be read as an invitation to agree in principle to a policy of pooling munitions. In view of the urgent need of developing the most effective machinery in these matters we should be grateful for an early expression of the Canadian Government's views.

2. My immediately following telegram sets out for your consideration in some detail the machinery we have in mind for dealing with the allocation of aircraft, engines, bombs and other ancillary air equipment.

3. A further message¹³ will follow as to raw materials after an exploratory meeting has been held here on February 24th.

London, February 21, 1942

My immediately preceding telegram. We have been considering the machinery that it would be desirable to set up in London under the Munitions Assignments Board to deal with the allocation of aircraft, engines, bombs and other ancillary air equipment, and are proposing the following arrangements to the Governments concerned. It is desired to get the machinery into operation at the earliest possible date.

2. Our proposal is that an Air Assignment Sub-Committee should be set up under the Chairmanship of the Air Member for Supply and Organisation including representatives of Empire countries and Allies within the British group and a representative of the United States Chiefs of Staff. The object of the Committee would be to formulate requirements and agree on allocation of the resources available. In the event of disagreement on any important item the matter would be referred to the Munitions Assignments Board in London under Ministerial Chairmanship, and if for example the difference of opinion were to affect a particular Dominion the representative of that Dominion would be present at the Munitions Assignments Board when the matter was considered.

3. We envisage the first task of the Air Assignment Sub-Committee as being to establish a provisional plan of allocation of combat aircraft for say three months ahead and a firm allocation for the month of March. The Air Ministry are preparing proposals for the sub-allocation of combat aircraft among the countries in the British group in the light of their knowledge of the stated requirements and planned aircraft production of these countries and for a provisional allocation of United States combat aircraft to the British group during 1942 which has been tentatively discussed between the Chief of Air Staff and the Chief of the United States Army and Air Forces.

4. Once an agreed plan of allocation of combat aircraft has been reached, we contemplate that the Sub-Committee should meet as often as may be necessary to deal with any variations in requirements. To take account of any changes in the production forecast in the British group or in the anticipated deliveries from the United States group. To revise the previous allocations as may be necessary and to decide on any representations to be made regarding the allocation of aircraft from the United States group.

5. In the light of the agreed plan of allocation of combat aircraft the requirements of the different countries in other items of aeronautical equipment, e.g., bombs, would be formulated and the Sub-Committee would seek similarly to reach an agreed allocation for these items and subsequently to review the allocations periodically.

6. We should be grateful if in considering their policy towards the question of munitions assignments the Canadian Government would take into account the question of Canadian representation on this Sub-Committee. It would be appreciated if the Canadian Government would consider the nomination of an authoritative officer to attend the meetings of this Sub-Committee.

Ottawa, February 27, 1942

SECRET. Your telegram No. 524 February 25th.[†] Combined United Kingdom-United States Boards. You will be wondering why no reply has yet been received to your telegrams on this matter. The question is, however, a most complicated one from the Canadian point of view and government policy here is not yet definitely settled. Pearson has been in Washington securing information on working of Boards there and Mr. Howe goes to Washington this weekend. It is hoped that on his return some definite policy may be announced. For your own information, there is a division of opinion as to whether it is desirable or necessary to pool Canadian production and if it is pooled whether this could be in Washington or London. One view is that Canadian production for United States order would be included by United States in its figures and for United Kingdom order in United Kingdom figures, leaving only Canadian production for Canadian use which need not be included in pooling or allocation arrangements. It is also felt that much can be said for the view that Canadian requirements for finished munitions should be submitted and met through the Washington Board rather than the London Board. In fact, Canadian Ordnance Officers are already sitting along with United Kingdom officers on the Army Section of that Board in Washington and submitting requirements for Canadian share of United States production. So far as raw materials are concerned, the feeling is that our approach to the Combined Raw Materials Boards should be through existing Canadian-American joint arrangements already made rather than through an Empire Clearing House in London. It is difficult for us to see how Canada can function effectively in the raw materials co-ordination field otherwise than in Washington. Any detailed information from you as to how the Empire Pool there is meant to work and also on the procedure and operations of the Munitions Assignments Board in London would be helpful. Is it contemplated, for instance, that Canada should make known her munitions requirements in London, that these should then be submitted to the Combined Boards in Washington, and that after a British Empire bulk allocation is made there, Canada should appear before the Board in London to request her share of that allocation? Is this not a cumbrous procedure? In the figures for United Kingdom production submitted to the London Assignments Board is Canadian production for United Kingdom order included? Are the United Kingdom throwing into the London pool their total production for allocation or merely that portion in excess of their own requirements?

Following for Wrong from Pearson, Begins: A study of the various communications and memoranda seems to me to indicate that there is no clear idea as to the exact scope of the activities of the Munitions Assignments Board. For instance, your Teletype WA-121[†] quotes Self's view that if Canadian production were pooled this would include all production, except that required for our own use. That exception is important and I doubt if it was visualized in the Dominions Office telegrams dealing with pooling. Mr. Ralston in his memorandum to Howe[†] takes the view that the Washington Board deals with all United States production and also Canadian production to United States order. Colonel Mavor, on the other hand, in his conversations with me over the weekend indicated that the Washington Board covered Canadian production to United States order but not United States production for Canadian order. Mr. Howe in his letter to Robertson understands that pooling Canadian production applies only to that portion of our production which is manufactured on direct orders from United States or United Kingdom Governments.

I think it is essential in attempting to solve this problem that we get a clear understanding as to what pooling Canadian production actually means in terms of the working of the Assignments Board. Ends.

London, March 3, 1942

SECRET. Your telegram No. 383 of February 27th. Following are answers as supplied by United Kingdom authorities to three questions at the end of your telegram under reference, regarding workings of Munitions Assignments Board in London:

A. United Kingdom Government state that on assumption that Canadian production was placed in British pool, and that Canada formed one of British group of nations, the procedure would be as follows: (for purposes of simplification the month of April has been taken as an example).

Early in March representatives of British group would meet in London in the appropriate sub-Committees to frame their bids for allocations from United States production. The facts would all be put on the table, i.e. forecast of United States production of each item for April, the stocks held by each claimant and their requirements for every purpose. These would be scrutinized to ensure that everyone was working on the same basis (e.g. scales of ammunition) and to weigh up relative urgency of various requirements put forward. As a result of this meeting, a combined bid, backed up with full reasons would be telegraphed over to Washington to British representatives on Washington Assignments Board.

The Washington sub-Committees would then meet and allocate United States production for April. The case for the British group's bid for each item would be put by British representatives supported by arguments received from London. The requirements of the British group would have to be set against those of the American group and allocation would be made strictly in accordance with merits of each case, bearing in mind any strategic directions received from combined Chiefs of Staff. Allocations made by sub-Committees would be confirmed or modified by the Board itself and communicated to London.

On the receipt of allocation figures, the London sub-Committees would meet to sub-allocate not only amounts received from Washington but also the entire output for April of the British group. The latter on United Kingdom hypothesis would include whole Canadian production. In those cases, and they would be very many, in which the allocation received from Washington coincided with the bid made, the sub-allocation would be automatic. If, however, there was a deficiency, this deficiency would have to be shared round between the various claimants. Same would apply to a surplus. At this meeting American representatives would put forward any claims which they might have from the British group. In existing circumstances these would obviously be few.

The above procedure has been in partial operation for a good many months in such things as army equipment and small arms ammunition. The allocations of American equipment for March have actually been done on this system.

Although this system seems complicated, United Kingdom authorities consider it does not prove so in practice and that in their opinion it is the only practical way to handle the matter. It will be observed that the whole of the work is done in the sub-Committees by experts with full knowledge of crucial details affecting allocations. The main Boards in London and Washington would only give confirmation over the whole range of allocations, and settle points of difference or matters of great importance. United Kingdom authorities state that if the Canadian Government think it desirable it would of course be open to Canadian representative to attend the sub-Committee meetings in Washington to reinforce the argument put over on their behalf by British representatives.

B. With regard to inclusion in figures for United Kingdom production of Canadian production for United Kingdom orders, the answer to this question is stated to depend upon whether the Canadian Government place the whole of Canadian output in British pool or not. If they do, then the figures submitted to London Munitions Assignments Board would include the whole Canadian production, irrespective of how orders were placed. For example, the output of factories in the United States, established and paid for with British dollars, is included in the United States pool for allocation in exactly the same way as the output from United States War Department factories or of United States contracts or contracts placed under Lend-Lease.

C. The inclusion of total United Kingdom production in common pool.

The United Kingdom authorities state that explanations given above will have made it clear that entire United Kingdom production is thrown into London pool. They further state that it would be contrary to the whole principle of the United Kingdom [sic], reached between President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, if either party made a unilateral decision as to what their own requirements were. The test applied is to be whose need is the greater.

Minister in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Washington, March 3, 1942

IMMEDIATE. Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: Your message EX-108 of March 2nd. I agree that understanding of what pooling of Canadian production actually means is essential in order to decide our relationship to the Munitions Assignments Boards here and in London. I doubt, however, that we can get any clear answer to this question yet in Washington. The answer, indeed, must depend on what the Canadian Government is prepared to accept.

2. Literally and logically Canadian production of munitions includes all finished military stores produced in Canadian plants. Certainly when reference is made to United States and United Kingdom production in this connection, this is what is meant. The United States and United Kingdom authorities in calculating their own production do not deduct from it, for example, production in their countries on Canadian orders. If we follow their practice we should therefore consider Canadian production as meaning what is physically produced in Canada.

3. It is true that the United States authorities seem to be counting as part of their production munitions produced in Canada to their order. The United Kingdom authorities are probably doing the same thing, particularly with respect to aircraft. This is a matter, however, for us to arrange with the Governments in question.

4. The simplest position is that which Mr. Howe is inclined to favour — that Canadian production on Canadian Government account is not subject to pooling, that the Department of Munitions and Supply acts merely as contractors for British and United States orders placed in Canada, and that the United States and United Kingdom authorities should count as part of their own production for pooling purposes the munitions produced in Canada on their orders. This solution, which might well be acceptable to the United States and United Kingdom, would make our position unimportant in this respect, and it would not disturb the present methods of placing orders in Canada. Our approach to the Munitions Assignments Boards would become primarily that of a consumer of munitions seeking to draw from the pool in order to complete our requirements of articles that we do not produce. With regard to British orders, however, this would have the curious result that under the billion dollar gift payment would be received by Canada for Canadian munitions deducted for pooling purposes from Canadian production and treated as United Kingdom production. With regard to United States orders, financial considerations are important, as we must be sure of our continued receipts of United States dollars from our sales here, whether for United States use or to be lease-lent to other countries.

5. There is a possibility that a wide gap in the combined organizations may be filled by the appointment of a combined Munitions Production Board. At present, combined organizations have been set up looking to the common strategic direction of the war, the allocation of finished munitions, the control of shipping, and the provision of raw materials, but no new body has been created to direct the war production of the united nations in accordance with their joint interests. If such a body is effectively established, might it not become necessary to eliminate British and United States orders in Canada and to have the Canadian Government the sole munitions contractor in Canada, just as the United States and United Kingdom Governments are becoming the sole contractors in their own countries? This would involve, of course, a fundamental change in our financial relationships in order to protect our United States dollar position.

6. In the present state of the war, with acute deficiencies of nearly all finished military stores, the question of who placed a particular order, perhaps a year ago, should not matter in determining the final disposition of the product. Relative urgency of need is the only sound criterion. Canadian production of universal carriers for example, is now covered by large orders from the United Kingdom, Canada, and the United States. Suppose that an urgent need arises for the immediate delivery of universal carriers to a fourth country, such as Russia, the fulfillment of which would seriously upset production schedules on current orders. May we not find ourselves in an involved triangular dispute over whose deliveries under existing contracts are to be delayed or cancelled in order to meet Russian needs, unless our total production of universal carriers is allocated by the Munitions Assignments Board? The solution suggested in paragraph 4 above would seem not to meet this type of problem very effectively. It can also be argued that this solution would make Canada a sort of sub-contractor to the "arsenals of democracy" in the United States and United Kingdom — a position which does not accord with our fine record in this sphere.

7. With regard to your comment on Self's views, I think that you are right in assuming that the Dominions Office telegrams did not mean to except from the pooling proposals Canadian production for Canadian use. Self said, indeed, that he had tried out his formula on London, where it had not been viewed with favour. It seems to me, however, that there is really an implicit reservation in the pooling arrangements whereby producing countries will meet their own essential minimum requirements from their own production and will in practice pool only what is surplus to these essential minimum requirements. The words "essential minimum" are important, and their interpretation should depend on the strategic position as a whole.

8. I think that the draft telegram to London quoted in your message EX-96 of March 2nd¹⁴ would be helpful towards clearing up these difficulties, especially if a question about the financial consequences of pooling is added. I have discussed the terms of this message with Colonel Mavor. Ends.

Le ministre des Munitions et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire du Cabinet Minister of Munitions and Supply to Secretary to the Cabinet

Dear Mr. Heeney,

RE: JOINT U.S.-U.K. BOARDS FOR ALLOCATION OF FINISHED MUNITIONS, DISTRIBUTION OF SHIPPING, AND DISTRIBUTION OF RAW MATERIALS

While at Washington on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd of March, I held some exploratory conversations to determine the position of Canada in relation to the three Joint Boards. I had interviews with Sir John Dill, General Burns and Sir Henry Self, of the Joint Allocations Board, with Sir Arthur Salter, of the Joint Shipping Board, and I attended a full meeting of the Joint Materials Board, where I secured an allocation to Canada of 2500 tons of crude rubber per month for the months of March and April, the situation to be reviewed again before the end of April. I also attended a meeting of the British Supply Council in North America, and a small dinner given by Messrs. Batt and Baillieu, of the Joint Materials Board.

As a result of these contacts, I feel that there is nothing in the Joint Boards situation that should be disturbing to Canada's war effort. I cannot see that our position has changed materially, and I think the course that we should pursue toward the Joint Boards is clear in all particulars. The U.S. membership of the Joint Boards are all men that in the past have worked closely with Canada in developing the very satisfactory relations that have been developed for munitions production, and I have every assurance that their relations will be as helpful in the future as in the past.

Regarding the Joint Allocations Board, both the American membership and the British membership seem to accept the position that munitions ordered by the United Kingdom of Canadian manufacture will be included in the United Kingdom pool, and munitions ordered in Canada by United States agencies will be included in the United States pool. Munitions manufactured in Canada for the armed services of Canada will be at the sole disposal of Canada. The only difference of opinion seems to have to do with munitions ordered in Canada by U.S. authorities for lend-lease to U.K. Sir John Dill and Sir Henry Self say that if these could be included in the U.K. pool, any objections they have to Canada's present position would be removed. I pointed out that this must be a matter for the Joint Board itself to settle, our only interest in the disposition of equipment ordered by either the U.K. or the U.S. being that of shipping instructions.

This Board will welcome a Canadian representative when Canadian matters are being discussed. Our people feel that the inclusion of our Colonel Mavor in the British Secretariat should be a satisfactory contact for the purpose of keeping Canada advised and for forwarding Canadian representations to the Board.

Regarding the Joint Shipping Board, we are in a weak position, as we have at present no ships included in the pool, but I have the assurance of Sir Arthur Salter that, as the organization of the Board proceeds, a satisfactory channel of approach will be arranged for Canadian representations. Here again, both Admiral Land and Sir Arthur Salter have been most considerate of Canadian requests in the past.

As far as the Joint Materials Board is concerned, the Board expressed a wish that Canada's contact would be through Canadian-U.S. Joint Materials Board, as in the past. This is most satisfactory, as we will have Canada's two-man Board dealing directly with the U.S.-U.K. two-man Board at the top level. Our dealings on raw materials will be almost exclusively with the Washington Board, and, as far as the Board in the United Kingdom is concerned, Mr. Banks, the representative of this Department in England, will be able to provide satisfactory contact.

I think that we are now in position to reply definitely to the several cables from the Dominions Office and outline Canada's position in relation to the three Joint Boards. I will be glad to assist Mr. Robertson to that end after the War Committee has discussed the situation in the light of my report.

Yours truly,

C. D. HOWE

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité de guerre du Cabinet, au Comité de guerre du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet War Committee, to Cabinet War Committee

SECRET

RE: CANADA'S RELATIONS TO U.K.-U.S. COMBINED BOARDS

1. COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF

Full and formal Canadian membership cannot be secured.

Full right of representation before the Board when any question that affects Canada is under consideration, can be secured.

For this purpose there should be one service representative stationed in Washington with his office in the Combined Boards building.

He will keep in close and continuous contact with the Combined Staffs and the Combined Planning Committee.

He could represent the Canadian Chiefs of Staff, or the Minister of National Defence or the War Committee.

2. MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS

A decision has to be taken on the principle of pooling Canadian production and requirements.

Against

- (1) The present position is satisfactory.
- (2) Equipment for our own needs would not be ensured by a United Kingdom-United States Board acting on directions from a Combined Staffs on which we were not represented.
- (3) We are only interested as a producer of equipment on specific order.
- (4) Allocation of orders by a Combined Board might prejudice our United States exchange position by diverting United States orders from Canada.

For

- (1) Pooling of all resources for assignment as the strategic situation dictates is the only efficient way to fight the war.
- (2) If we don't accept pooling for our production, this will weaken our position when we request from the Board assignments from United Kingdom or United States production to meet our deficiencies.
- (3) If we accept pooling, we can secure the same right to participate in the deliberations and decisions of the Board when Canadian requirements and production were under consideration, as the United Kingdom and United States members now possess.
- (4) We can't lose anything by pooling, because in any event the decisions of the Board are only recommendations to the governments concerned.

If we do not pool, the position will be that munitions ordered by the United Kingdom of Canadian manufacture will be included in the United Kingdom pool and munitions ordered in Canada by United States agencies will be included in the United States pool. Munitions manufactured in Canada for the Armed Services of Canada will be outside the Board and at the sole disposal of Canada. The assignment of munitions ordered in Canada by United States authorities for lend-lease to the United Kingdom will remain to be decided by the Board itself.

If we do pool, there remains to be decided whether we would pool in London, in Washington, or in both places.

If we pool in London, the procedure would be as follows:

Each month representatives of the British group of nations would meet in London and estimate what will be required from United States production to make up their own deficiencies after taking into consideration, (a) the stocks held by each claimant; (b) their requirements for every purpose; and (c) the relative urgency of the various demands put forward. The resulting bid for allocation from United States production on behalf of all the nations of the British group, would then be telegraphed to the British representatives on the Washington Board.

British and Canadian representatives would then appear before the Washington Board to support that bid, with arguments received from London and Ottawa. The requirements of the British group would have to be set against those of the American group and allocation would be made strictly in accordance with the merits of each case, on the basis of strategic directions received from the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

The allocations made by the Washington Board, together with the entire production of the British group for the month in question, would then be sub-allocated by the London Board among the various nations of the British group. At the meeting in London, representatives of the American group would put forward any claims which they might have from the production of the British group.

The Americans might object to this procedure on the ground that by it Canadian production to their order would be allocated from London. This objection is, however, neither more nor less valid than the British objection that production in the United States to their order would be allocated in Washington.

If we pool in Washington, the procedure indicated above would simply be reversed. This would mean, in practice, that Canada would join the United States representative in claiming from British production what was required to meet the needs of the United States and Canadian forces; these requirements to be sub-allocated in Washington between the United States and Canada along with the total production of the two countries.

If we dealt with both boards, the following arrangements might be satisfactory:

Canada's requirements for her overseas forces would be made from Canadian and British production after discussion with United Kingdom authorities. These requirements would be cleared through the London Board as part of the requirements of the British group.

That part of Canada's production not required for the above purpose would be pooled in Washington. Canada would secure from this pool through the Washington Board requirements for her home forces.

3. COMBINED RAW MATERIALS BOARD

Canada's association with this Board should be through Joint United States-Canadian arrangements already working effectively.

4. COMBINED SHIPPING BOARD

Liaison with this Board is already satisfactorily established and no new machinery is required.

Extract from Minutes of Cabinet War Committee

CANADA'S RELATION TO U.K.-U.S. COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS- MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS

1. THE SECRETARY reported that further information had been obtained through the Canadian High Commissioner concerning the procedure to be followed if the government accepted United Kingdom proposals for Canada's participation in the work of the Munitions Assignments Board in London. These proposals and alternative methods of Canadian co-operation with the combined allocations machinery had been considered by the Ministers of National Defence and Munitions and Supply, and with officers of the Service Departments.

A decision was required, in the first place, on the principle of pooling Canadian production and requirements and, in the second place, if it were decided to pool, whether Canada's participation should be in London, as proposed by the United Kingdom, or in Washington, or by a division between the two based upon overseas and home requirements.

In this connection, a memorandum[†] prepared by the Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) was circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum re Canada's relation to U.K.-U.S. Combined Boards, March 11, 1942 — C.W.C. document 115).

2. MR. HEENEY read a report by the Minister of Munitions and Supply following Mr. Howe's recent conversations in Washington with British and American representatives concerned with allocations and the work of the Munitions Assignments Boards.

In this report, Mr. Howe expressed the view that Canada's position had not changed materially as a result of the establishment of the U.K.-U.S. combined organizations in Washington. British and American members of the Washington Assignments Board seemed to accept the position that munitions ordered by the United Kingdom, of Canadian manufacture, would be included in the U.K. pool, and munitions ordered in Canada by U.S. agencies would be included in the U.S. pool. Munitions manufactured in Canada for the Canadian forces would be at the sole disposal of Canada. The only difference related to munitions ordered by the United States for lease-lend to the United Kingdom; in this respect the U.K. representatives suggested that these be included in the London pool.

There would be no difficulty in having a Canadian representative received by the Board in Washington, when Canadian matters were being discussed. As to the Combined Shipping Board, Canada at present had no ships in the pool, but there would be no difficulty in arranging for presentation of Canadian representations.

The Combined Raw Materials Board had expressed the wish that Canada's contact continue to be through the Canada-U.S. Joint Materials Board as in the past, and this was satisfactory.

Mr. Howe suggested that a communication along these lines be addressed to the U.K. government. Copies of his report had been circulated.

(Letter, Minister of Munitions and Supply to the Secretary, March 5, 1942 — C.W.C. document 112).

3. THE ASSISTANT UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (Mr. Pearson) read a telegram from the Canadian High Commissioner, describing the procedure which would be followed if Canada accepted the U.K. government's proposals for Canadian participation in the work of the Assignments Board in London.

(Telegram 599, Canadian High Commissioner, London, to External Affairs, March 3, 1942.)

4. MR. HOWE expressed the opinion that it would be impossible to have Canadian production for U.S. account dealt with through the Board in London. Canada could not do business for the United States on this basis. If all Canadian production were to be allocated in London, Canada would not receive essential American exchange for munitions exported to the United States. This was an important additional argument against acceptance of the U.K. government's proposals.

At present, Munitions and Supply accepted and filled orders for the United Kingdom and the United States, as customers. They could agree between themselves as to the allocations of Canadian production for their accounts. Munitions ordered by the United States for lease-lend to Britain, however, offered some difficulty.

Canada should not participate in the pooling arrangements. Apart from the United Kingdom and the United States, all other participating nations had deficiencies rather than surpluses. The government's duty was to look first to the defence of Canada and then provide her surplus production for British and American use.

5. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE referred to the importance to Canada's war effort of the maintenance of exports for which U.S. dollars were received. Officers of his department had reported that a serious deficiency of U.S. exchange was likely in the coming year, in the neighbourhood of 100 million dollars. Other sources were tending to dry up or were precarious; reliance was being placed upon exports of war materials.

To change the present basis of U.S.-Canada financial relations to lease-lend or by asking U.S. credit would slow up our industrial war effort and produce undesirable results. If munitions ordered for lease-lend went to the London pool, it was unlikely that they would be paid for in hard currency.

6. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE said that the Services were not altogether satisfied with the principle that Munitions and Supply's sole responsibility was to supply their customers. It should be understood that the right was reserved to take Canadian production for Canadian use, notwithstanding contracts, if and when circumstances made it necessary in the national interest.

Such a reservation was specifically stipulated in U.S. contracts so that deliveries, for example of automotive equipment for the Canadian Army were subject to release by the Quartermaster General of the U.S. Army. Munitions and Supply were, however, opposed to any such stipulation in our contracts with the United States.

7. MR. HOWE said that any such reservation in Canadian contracts would not be feasible and any attempt to insert such a clause would prevent our obtaining American orders.

Nevertheless, it was understood that there was an underlying reservation based upon the inherent right of Canada to take over munitions being manufactured within the country, in case of emergency.

8. MR. RALSTON described existing informal arrangements in Ottawa, whereby allocations of production between the United Kingdom and Canada were agreed upon by Canadian and British Service representatives. So far as Canada was concerned, ad hoc arrangements here and in Washington were working well.

With regard to exchange, Canada's position as a merchant must not be allowed to interfere with her position as a belligerent. Allocations should be made by the Services, not by Supply Departments. Only the Services knew the strategic needs which should determine the destination of war material. This had been admitted in the U.K.-U.S. organizations.

It was not sufficient simply to rely upon our final right to take our own production by strong arm methods. We had to work by agreement.

9. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR said that he would be prepared to take the stand recommended by the Minister of Munitions and Supply, if he were satisfied that Canada was in a strong independent position. The government should be informed exactly to what extent the Canadian Forces were dependent upon articles supplied by the United States and the United Kingdom before making any such decision.

10. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS suggested that, if it were decided that Canada should not participate in the pooling arrangements, care should be taken to avoid opportunities for representing the Canadian position as a refusal to co-operate.

11. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that a communication to the U.K. government, to the following effect, be prepared for despatch, upon approval by the Prime Minister, the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Munitions and Supply:

Informal arrangements in Ottawa for allocation of production by agreement between U.K. and Canadian Service representatives are at present working satisfactorily.

With regard to Canada's relation to the Munitions Assignments Boards, it is suggested that munitions of Canadian manufacture, ordered by the United Kingdom, be included in the London pool, and munitions ordered in Canada by U.S. agencies be included in the Washington pool. If, however, it is thought to be of the highest importance that Canada participate fully and directly with the United Kingdom and the United States in the work of the Boards, the Canadian government feel that considerations of geography, specifically ease and speed of communication, would make it desirable that Canada's main participation be in Washington, rather than in London as proposed by the United Kingdom; in this connection it is recognized that, in respect of equipment supplied to Canadian overseas Forces, direct access to the Board in London may, in any event, be necessary.

CANADA'S RELATIONS TO U.K.-U.S. COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS —
COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF

12. THE PRIME MINISTER referred to the question of Canada's relation to the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington.

It was said that full and formal Canadian membership could not be secured, although the right of representation, when any question that affected Canada was under consideration, could be obtained. For this purpose, a senior Service representative, stationed in Washington, should be appointed to keep in close and continuous contact with the Combined Staffs and the Combined Planning Committee.

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE observed that the Canadian Chiefs of Staff were not inclined to agree that one Service officer should represent all three Services in relation to the Combined Staffs. The same objection would not, however, apply if one Service officer were appointed to represent the War Committee.

14. THE ASSISTANT UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS (Mr. Pearson) said that the alternative to one representative was none at all. If, however, one officer were appointed he could and would send for officers of the other two Services where they were involved, and meantime keep continuously in touch with the Combined Staffs. 15. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed that Major-General Maurice Pope be appointed as the representative of the War Committee in Washington, for the purpose of maintaining continuous contact with the U.K.-U.S. Combined Staffs and the Combined Planning Committee, and to represent the War Committee before the Combined Staffs when questions affecting Canada were under consideration.

It was understood that, when matters of concern to Canada, specifically Navy or Air Force in character, were before the Combined Staff, a Naval or Air Force officer, named for the purpose, would replace General Pope.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: I gave to Colonel Mavor copies of your message EX-162 of March 9th¹⁵ and EX-169 of March 10th[†] dealing with munitions assignments and asked him to discuss the position of Canada with the United States and United Kingdom officers with whom he is working. The substance of his conversations is reported below.

1. He showed your messages to Brigadier Campion on March 10th. Campion agreed that the explanation of the procedure given in London telegram No. 599 of March 3rd described what was at present being done, and he was personally of the opinion that if Canada tabled her total production in the United Kingdom this procedure was workable from the point of view of the assignment of finished military stores produced in Canada. Campion was personally of the opinion that a satisfactory arrangement could be made from the same point of view if Canada tabled her total production for assignment by the Munitions Assignments Board in Washington. He did not agree in detail with your draft of an arrangement for tabling Canadian requirements in Washington because the mere substitution of Washington for London in the text of London telegram No. 599 did not cover the situation thoroughly. In general, Campion recognized that there were many points in favour of tabling Canadian production in Washington and thought personally that this course presented no more difficulties in allocation than tabling in London.

2. Later Colonel Mavor met Brigadier-General Aurand of the United States Army in Campion's office and had a frank and informal discussion of your messages with him in Campion's presence. Aurand expressed the definite personal opinion that all Canadian production should be tabled and assigned in Washington, and he used the following arguments to support his contention:

(a) Arising from the Hyde Park Declaration, it was agreed in the recommendations of the Joint War Production Committees (approved by the Canadian and United States Governments in December, 1941) that "The production and resources of both countries should be effectively integrated and directed towards a common program of requirements for the total war effort. Each country should produce those articles in an integrated program of requirements which will result in maximum joint output of war goods in the minimum time". He referred also to the recommendation for the elimination of legislative and administrative barriers impeding the flow of war materials between the two countries.¹⁶

(b) The shipping of finished military stores from Canada and the United States to theatres of war was a problem which could not be dealt with separately from their assignment. Shipping arrangements and allocations therefore ought to be considered jointly, or at least in the same place. General Aurand said that it was the fixed policy of the United States Government to ship finished military stores from the United States to the authorities of the country to which they had been assigned. Stores assigned to the Dutch, for example, for use in the Netherlands East Indies were now being shipped to the Netherlands representative in Australia. The original assignment stood, but the shipping instructions had to be varied in accordance with the fortunes of war. If these stores were used by Australian forces, that would be a matter for arrangement between Australian and Dutch authorities.

(c) The assignment of finished military stores produced in North America could not, in practice, be dealt with partly by the Board in London and partly by the Board in Washington. It was necessary, in particular, that Canadian production should be treated for assignment purposes as a whole, irrespective of the government which had originally placed the orders in Canada.

(d) The production of finished military stores in Canada and in the United States was so interdependent that it was not practical to allocate Canadian production in London and United States production in Washington.

3. General Aurand stated unofficially that he felt that the United States War Department would agree to the following procedure if the Canadian Government were to present to the United States Government a proposal to table the total Canadian production for assignment in Washington:

(a) Canada should have equal representation to the United States and the United Kingdom on the main Munitions Assignments Board in Washington of which Mr. Hopkins is Chairman.

(b) Canada should have a representative on the Army Ground Sub-Committee of the Munitions Assignments Board (which deals with the assignment of finished military stores other than those used by the Army Air Corps and Navy), and the Canadian representative should act as joint chairman with the United States representative of this Sub-Committee.

(c) Canada should have a representative on the United States Defense Aid Supply Committee in order to channel orders from the United Nations (or at any rate from governments other than the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada) through one organization and allocate these orders to the most desirable production facilities in Canada and the United States for example, it was undesirable that China or Russia should place orders directly in Canada unless the matter had first been considered in consultation with the United States authorities.

4. Lieutenant-General Macready joined in this discussion with Aurand and Campion towards the end and said that he did not feel that it mattered a great deal where the assignment of Canadian production was made. The discussion developed along broader lines and it became evident that those present felt that there was a general trend towards the idea of assigning finished military stores by territorial war zones rather than to individual governments. This idea may develop rapidly and something concrete may be evolved in the near future. At present, however, the method of allocation by two Boards sitting in London and Washington is all that can be considered.

5. Colonel Mavor recommends that the Canadian Government should approach the United States Government, stating that Canada is willing to table her total production in Washington provided that Canada is represented along the lines suggested by Aurand in the process of munitions assignments. I feel that serious consideration should be given to the adoption of this course. In addition to the arguments outlined earlier in this message, it is probable that we can get more effective representation on the Washington Assignments Board than we could secure on the London Board, where there would be greater pressure to treat all Dominion Governments on a basis of equality.

6. Colonel Mavor requests that a copy of this message should be passed to the Master General of the Ordnance as soon as possible for his information.

Could you see to this today, since Mr. Sifton is leaving Ottawa shortly to attend meetings of the Tank Committee? Ends.

CANADA'S RELATION TO U.K.-U.S. COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS

3. THE PRIME MINISTER read from the Minutes the decision taken by the War Committee on this subject at the meeting of March the 11th.

4. THE SECRETARY explained that agreement upon the terms of the communication to be sent to the U.K. government had not yet been reached by the Ministers whose approval was required.

Since the last meeting, however, a message had been received from the Canadian Legation in Washington, reporting that the question had been further discussed there with U.S. and British officers concerned.

This message expressed the view that all Canadian production should be tabled and assigned in Washington, and that the U.S. government would, in such event, agree to Canada having equal representation with the United States and the United Kingdom on the Munitions Assignments Board and related committees. It was recommended, therefore, that the government approach the United States in this sense, it being pointed out that effective Canadian representation was more likely in Washington than in London. (Teletype WA-278, Canadian Minister, Washington, to External Affairs – March 13, 1942.)

5. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR favoured adoption of the course recommended through the Canadian Legation. By pooling in Washington, rather than in London, more consideration was likely to be given to the needs of North American defence.

6. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE stated that the Chief of the General Staff was agreeable to pooling in Washington with full Canadian representation on the Assignments Board there. It might later be found desirable to have equipment of Canadian manufacture for Canadian overseas forces earmarked as such. It was not anticipated that the U.S. Services would have any serious objection to such a course.

7. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY favoured participation in pooling arrangements in Washington.

8. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed that, instead of communicating to the U.K. government in the sense agreed upon at the meeting of March the 11th, a message be sent to the following effect:

The government, after careful consideration, have come to the conclusion that, because of the close relationship of Canadian and U.S. war production, existing joint arrangements between the two countries, the common shipping problem and relative ease and speed of communications, Canada should participate in the combined pooling arrangements for finished munitions in Washington, rather than in London, and that, to this end, it is proposed to communicate to the U.S. government, suggesting Canadian representation on the Washington Munitions Assignments Board; before doing this, however, the government wish to have the views of the United Kingdom.

Ottawa, March 20, 1942

Our telegram No. 502 March 14th.[†] Certain parts of message to be conveyed to the United Kingdom Government, as outlined in the above telegram have been changed. The amended message follows below. I would be glad if you could deliver it to the United Kingdom Government. Further consideration is being given to the points raised in your telegram No. 753 of March 18th,¹⁷ but this need not, I think, alter the text of paragraph 2 of the message in its present form. Message begins:

1. The Canadian Government have been giving careful thought to the proposals for improving the machinery for Commonwealth consultation outlined in your telegram No. 25 of January 28th, and more especially for associating Canada with the work of the Combined United Kingdom-United States Boards outlined in your telegrams No. 37 and 38 of February 18th and Nos. 41 and 42 of February 21st.

2. So far as liaison on Defence questions is concerned, consideration is being given to the question of appointing from Ottawa or from existing Canadian naval, army and air establishments in Great Britain special liaison officers to keep in touch with the Chiefs of Staff organization in London. We are also making appropriate arrangements for Service liaison with the Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington, details of which we hope to be able to cable you very shortly.

3. So far as liaison with the Foreign Office is concerned, referred to in your telegram No. 25 of January 28th, we feel that existing arrangements are working satisfactorily, but we are glad to note that it is proposed to appoint a special liaison officer whose sole duty would be to keep in touch with the Dominions Office and the Offices of the Dominion High Commissioners.

4. We have given special consideration to the work of the Combined Munitions Assignments Board and have carefully examined methods by which

¹⁷ See Document 166.

Canada can be associated most effectively with that work. In this regard, we are of the opinion that Canada should participate in the arrangements worked out for pooling of resources and requirements of finished munitions; but that this participation should be through the Washington rather than the London Board. In our view the following considerations make this preferable to the procedure outlined in your telegram No. 38 of February 18th to the Secretary of State for External Affairs:— (a) the close relationship between United States and Canadian war production (b) existing joint Canadian-United States arrangements between the two countries in this and related fields (c) the common shipping problem (d) ease and speed of communication with Washington.

5. The major difficulty in pooling our production and requirements in London, is that it would be, for us, extremely inconvenient and round about. It would seem to mean that Canada would have to go to London to make representations regarding Canadian requirements for inclusion in an Empire bid; then go to Washington to support this bid, and finally to London again to present claims for reallocation for Canada out of Empire allotments from the United States as well as Empire production. There might also be difficulty in securing United States approval of assignment from London of munitions manufactured in Canada for United States order and often from materials produced in part in the United States.

6. In participating in the work of the Washington Board we would expect full representation thereon along with United Kingdom and United States Governments and full powers of deliberation and decision on any questions affecting the assignment of Canadian munitions production.

7. The delay in replying to your telegram on this question is regretted, but we feel sure you will realize that this delay has not, in fact, caused any practical difficulties in respect of making Canadian assignments and meeting Canadian requirements, both of which have been dealt with through informal but satisfactory arrangements in Ottawa and Washington, worked out by United Kingdom, United States and Canadian Service representatives.

8. We would be grateful for an early expression of your views on the arrangements indicated in paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 above.

9. So far as the Combined Raw Materials Board is concerned, it is felt that Canada's association with the work of this Board should be through Joint United States-Canadian arrangements which have already been working effectively for some time in Washington. It is desired, however, that Canada should be represented on the Empire Clearing Committee in London for purposes of giving and receiving information and discussing raw materials questions of mutual interest, and we would be glad to make provisions for such representation.

10. So far as the Combined Shipping Boards are concerned, we feel that existing arrangements for liaison are satisfactory. Ends.

War Committee of the Cabinet have appointed Major-General Maurice Pope as military representative of the War Committee in Washington for the purpose of maintaining continuous contact with the Combined Staffs and the Combined Planning Committee, to represent the War Committee before the Combined Staffs when questions affecting Canada are under consideration. It is understood that when matters of concern to Canada, specifically Navy or Air Force in character, are under consideration by the Combined Staffs, a Naval or Air Force officer named for the purpose will replace General Pope.

London, March 28, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. We have given careful consideration to paragraphs 4 to 8 of telegram No. 547 of March 20th from the Department of External Affairs, and have discussed the matter with your representatives in London. We hope you will be able to talk the matter over with Macready in the light of this telegram.

2. Since both the Washington and the London Boards work on the same principles, and assign according to strategic directives, laid down by the same authority, there should in theory be no difference in results whether the work is done in Washington or in London. The question of where to deal with Canadian production therefore mainly depends upon practical consideration of machinery. That centre should be chosen where it is most easy to marshal the relevant facts and thus to make the best appraisal of requirements.

3. We still adhere to the view which we previously expressed in telegram No. 38,¹⁹ paragraph 6, from Dominions Office, that the advantages to our combined war effort would be greatest if Canadian production were pooled in London. We fully recognise the predominant interest of Canada in disposing of her own production and whatever arrangement is made this must be given full weight.

¹⁸ Ce télégramme fut rédigé par le Dominions Office.

¹⁹ Document 151.

But we must not lose sight of the fact that a very great part of that production was planned and developed as part of the Imperial war effort long before the entry of the United States of America into the war and today far the larger proportion of your current output is being delivered to us. We still rely upon receiving that part as an essential factor in the equipment and expansion of Imperial forces. We must assume of course that it would be assigned to us if the production were pooled in Washington, but we should in that case be under the necessity of sending across to our representatives in Washington a mass of information in the form of briefs in support of bids for this material. If the assignment were done in London the information would be available on the spot.

4. The Lancaster heavy bomber may be quoted to exemplify what we mean. The production of this bomber was planned in Canada as part of the scheme on which the expansion of the R.A.F. depends. If Lancasters are placed in the pool in Washington and if there is a bid from any claimant other than ourselves we are then put to the necessity of briefing our representatives in Washington on the whole of the expansion programme, in order to substantiate our claim to receive the bombers. Taking the whole range of navy, army, and air force equipment of British type manufactured in Canada the administrative disadvantages of assignment in Washington are clearly very great.

5. A further point to which we have not previously referred is that the placing of Canadian production in the Washington pool will mean that a much wider range of equipment of British type will be assigned in two places. Assignment presents little difficulty when the whole production of one particular type is dealt with in one place. It will become extremely complicated if British types on a large scale are partly assigned in London and partly in Washington.

6. We feel that the difficulties foreseen in paragraph 5 of telegram No. 547 have been over-estimated. If your production were pooled in London you would bid direct in London for all your needs from British and Canadian production. As to your needs from United States production it is true that they would be placed together with ours and with those of the other members of our group and presented together in Washington. But we think this would be greatly to your advantage as we should all be speaking with one voice and all supporting the claim of our group with full knowledge of our combined case. If on the other hand you pool your production in Washington and bid there direct you will be competing not only against the United States but also against the rest of the British Empire who for lack of knowledge will be unable to support your claim.

7. We appreciate the point made in the last sentence of paragraph 5 of telegram No. 547 but we think it is far outweighed by the much greater interest which we have in Canadian production on account of the mass of British type orders to which we have already referred. While recognising the close relationship between Canada and the United States both on production and on defence matters generally, we think that there are also extremely close ties between Canada and the United Kingdom alongside whose forces the greater part of the Canadian forces are operating.

8. We do not think the shipping problem is much affected by where the assignment is made. Direct shipment to destination is always allowed for.

9. The point mentioned in paragraph 6 of your telegram No. 547 would of course have to be dealt with in making a final decision on this matter. You can be sure that you would secure at least as acceptable an arrangement in London as you would in Washington.

10. We have set out our views fully because we think it important that your decision should be reached after full appreciation of the facts as we see them. We would reiterate that as stated in paragraph 2 above we suggest inclusion in the London pool simply on account of the far greater practical convenience in so doing.

11. Finally, whatever may be decided in regard to completed munitions ready for transfer to the fighting services our production departments regard it as vital that they should be free to continue to make arrangements direct with the Department of Munitions and Supply regarding components of all kinds. These components are part and parcel of a composite Canadian-British production. Shipping or other conditions may prevent them coming forward in a perfectly even flow, but we should be free to draw upon them as urgency dictates. It would produce chaos if the balance of our production programme had to be conducted through the necessarily complicated machinery at Washington.

Your telegram No. 680 of April 5th.[†] Have informed United Kingdom authorities of General Pope's appointment in accordance with your instructions. May I take this opportunity of referring to my telegram No. 753 of March 18th[†] in which I recommended similar appointment here. Although all 3 services have headquarters in London for forces serving in the United Kingdom, there is no contact with Chiefs of Staff organisation here such as will be provided by General Pope in his new capacity. The relations existing between these headquarters and corresponding services of Ministry here deal largely either with administration, with munitions and equipment assignment, or with operations in this theatre. There is no officer in any of the three Canadian services here whose duty it is to keep in touch with Chiefs of Staff organisation and familiarise himself with matters of strategy and general conduct of the war. I recommend that favourable consideration be given to appointment here of an officer with qualifications similar to those of General Pope who would be attached to this office and act under instructions similar to those given to General Pope. I feel sure that such an appointment would be of great value.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL. Your telegram 945, April 7th. We have been pressing the National Defence Department for some time for their views on the suggestions made in your telegram regarding Canadian liaison with Chiefs of Staff in London. A reply is expected soon, but Chiefs of Staff Committee stated yesterday, informally, that they felt that such liaison could most effectively be conducted through the Service Headquarters in London. They do not feel that the problem in London is the same as in Washington, where there were no Canadian Service headquarters or Military Missions of any kind. For your own information they do not approve of the terms of Pope's appointment as they felt that each service should have its own representative in Washington reporting to its own Chief of Staff. I think they will object strenuously to any one officer acting in a similar capacity in London. I am sure you will appreciate the difficulties in this regard.

Will you transmit to the Dominions Office the following message in reply to your telegram No. 859 of March 28th, Munitions Assignments Board, Begins:

1. Very careful consideration has been given to your observations on our telegram No. 547 of March 20th on the work of the Munitions Assignments Board. We have also had the advantage of a discussion on this subject with General Macready.

2. We appreciate the force of your observations and have taken them into consideration in the modified plan which is outlined below. We still feel, however, that tabling our production in Washington rather than London is the most effective course, all things considered. The United Kingdom will, of course, be represented on the Washington Board in the same way as on the London Board. We would not anticipate that the Washington Board would be likely to take a position in respect of either Canadian or United Kingdom requirements to be met from Canadian production different from that which would be taken by the London Board.

3. As to the inconveniences of making a bid for this material in Washington, these are, I suppose, similar to those mentioned in our telegram No. 547 which we would incur if we pooled in London. In our case we would have had to traverse two sides of the triangle in submitting our total bid, including that for home requirements, to London, where it would become part of a Commonwealth bulk bid to be met from United States production and then would be returned to London for reallocation from that bulk assignment.

4. We agree with the point you make in Paragraph 11, that wherever completed munitions may be assigned your production Departments should be free to continue to make arrangements direct with the Department of Munitions and Supply regarding components.

5. The point you make in paragraph five regarding the disadvantages of assignment of British types in two places is appreciated and will be met, we hope, at least to a substantial extent, in the revised proposals we are making below.

6. These proposals are as follows:

All Canadian production should be tabled in Washington along with United States production. Canadian bids from this North American production for finished military stores to be used for Canada's forces in the North American area would be made in Washington. The bulk bid made on Washington from the London Board should cover the requirements for all of the British Commonwealth, except those of the Canadian forces in the North American area. In other words this bulk would include the separately stated requirements for Canada's naval, military and air forces overseas.

7. Inside the bulk allocation made for the British Commonwealth, the Washington Board would state the specific allocations for Canada's forces overseas. No change would be made in the allocation of this specified quantity by the London Board except with the concurrence of appropriate Canadian authorities. Naturally in considering whether concurrence should or should not be given the Canadian authorities would keep in mind the general military situation, and the advantage in certain cases of supplying Canadian forces overseas from United Kingdom rather than North American production.

8. In carrying out the above arrangements, we would expect full representation on the Washington Board as stipulated in paragraph 6 of our telegram No. 547 of March 20th. We would also expect representation on the London Board similar to that given the other Dominions. Ends.

MEETING OF PACIFIC WAR COUNCIL, AT WASHINGTON, D.C.,
 WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1942

The Council commenced its proceedings shortly after three, the President presiding. Others present: (1) Sir Ronald Campbell; (2) Dr. T.V. Soong (China); (3) Dr. Alexander Loudon, (The Netherlands); (4) Dr. H.V. Evatt (Australia); (5) Rt. Hon. Walter Nash (New Zealand), and (6) Mr. Mackenzie King, (Canada).

Evatt said he thought that Canada should be represented on the Munitions Assignments Board, and that both he and Nash of New Zealand were quite prepared to say that Canada's representation there would be all that was needed to watch their interests. I said that we, of course, felt that Canada should be represented on the Munitions Assignments Board, but that we would not wish this representation on the score of being there to protect the interests of any particular parts of the Empire. Rather, we felt that our right to representation grew out of our being the third largest producer of war supplies. It was rather as a country producing war supplies than as one seeking to be supplied that we felt we should be on any board which dealt in a large way with supply allocation.

With respect to representation on and functions of the Assignments Board, the President said he would be having a talk with me at some length at night.²⁰

Evatt suggested that Canada should be represented on all boards, raw materials, munitions, etc.

The President then spoke of our having the Joint Board on Defence, and asked if it had an office in "the secret building". He mentioned that many matters were dealt with by that board.

(1) We have given careful consideration to proposal in telegram No. 715 of April 9th and we have discussed the matter fully with General Macready.

tions Assignments Board along with United States and United Kingdom representatives. As to your representation in London, requirements for Canadian forces in North American areas from United Kingdom production would have to be presented in London as part of bulk bid from Washington, otherwise Canada would be bidding direct in both centres at the same time for similar items, and it would be impossible for either London or Washington to make fair assignment without knowing what other was doing. Canada would of course be represented on London Munitions Assignments Committee to support her portion of the bulk bids on London from Washington and to take care of requirements of Canadian forces in the United Kingdom.

(4) Reference to your paragraph 7. We assume that appropriate Canadian authorities to which you refer are Canadian representatives on London Munitions Assignments Committees. With reference to specific allocation for Canadian forces overseas inside bulk assignments made in Washington for British Commonwealth of Nations, we would point out that Canadian Air Force in the United Kingdom are an integral part of our operational [forces]. It would not therefore be practicable for us to make a distinction between requirements of Canadian Air Force in the United Kingdom and those of the remainder of the Air Forces here. We therefore assume your stipulation concerning specific allocations refers to army requirements.

(5) Please confirm that Canada will bid in Washington for aircraft required for all training purposes in Canada, both for Joint Air Training Plan and for transferred schools.

(6) Reference your paragraph 4. We note with satisfaction that you agree that our production departments will be free to continue to make arrangements direct with Department of Munitions and Supply regarding components.

(7) We have asked Washington for full details each month of meeting of Washington Munitions Assignments Board and Sub-Committee, showing production tabled and assignments made. For strategic reasons this is essential so as to keep us fully apprised of production and disposal of North American munitions, and we are confident that you will facilitate the provision of this information from Washington.

Washington, April 30, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to my WA-631 of April 13th[†] and your EX-687 of April 27th[†] concerning proposals to establish further Combined Boards in Washington to deal with war production and food, I have now had a chance, through the kindness of Mr. Carswell, to read the telegrams which have been exchanged recently between Washington and London on this subject. The telegrams are very lengthy and I have not had them copied. This letter contains a résumé of the points of principal interest to Canada.

On April 8th two telegrams were sent to London by Lord Halifax, Sir John Dill, and Mr. Morris Wilson,²¹ addressed to Mr. Eden, Mr. Lyttleton, and the Chiefs of Staff. The first telegram said that consideration had been given by the British representatives here for some time to the need for completing the Allied organization necessary to integrate the American and British war effort. Four Combined Boards had been created and their operations had already shown the need for further Combined organizations. In the military area, the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the Munitions Assignments Board covered the full field, but in the non-military area the field was not large enough and the work was not sufficiently integrated to ensure the proper functioning of the total war effort. The need was recognized for closer co-operation among the United Nations, but it was felt that, inasmuch as the United States and Great Britain must (with Canada) continue to supply almost the whole of the war production available for distribution to the United Nations, the problems of integrating the production of the U.S. and U.K. could not be facilitated merely by enlarging the existing Boards. What was needed was not the creation of cumbrous multiple-nation boards, but the streamlining of the Combined machinery to assure prompt and more intelligent action. They felt it urgently necessary to perfect the Anglo-American machinery, no matter what steps were taken to secure greater co-operation among the United Nations. They therefore recommended the creation of three new Combined organizations and suggested that the matter should be discussed with Mr. Hopkins during his London visit. They also suggested that Mr. Lyttleton should come to Washington without delay.

Their first proposal was to establish a Combined Production Planning Board to integrate the production programs of the two countries. First, it was necessary to determine the supply to Britain of machine tools, steel, and other component parts in relation to the American program. Except for the Joint Aircraft Committee, there was no machinery for deciding promptly on the creation of capacity for vital British requirements of non-common types. Secondly, it was of the highest importance that the problems of adjusting the production program of the two countries in the light of the strategic needs of the war should be faced. This necessitated the closest relationship between the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the Munitions Assignments Board on the one hand, with the planning of production. There should be in the inter-Allied field an organization similar to the Joint War Production Staff established in London by Mr. Lyttleton. It was also necessary to integrate production programs with the work of the Raw Materials Board.

A Combined Food Board was required to treat more comprehensively the whole question of food supplies in the light of Russian requirements, the loss of food-producing territory, and especially the shortage of shipping. A centralized authority was needed for the purchase abroad of essential foodstuffs and for their handling and shipment so as to reduce the demands on tonnage to the minimum consistent with the maximum war effort. The considerations which had led to the creation of the Combined Raw Materials Board applied also in the case of food. The Board should make recommendations to the executive authorities in each country.

²¹ Lord Beaverbrook's representative in Washington.

Thirdly, a Combined Shipping Priority Agency was required. The tonnage shortage would certainly necessitate major changes in civilian programs. The choice might be compelled between the reduction of food shipments to a dangerous level or of raw materials to a point at which munitions production would fall off. There might also be a choice between military expeditions and the shipment of supplies. Some authority had to consider these questions in their entirety. An Agency under a U.S. Chairman was therefore proposed, the normal function of which would be to compose differences between the non-military Boards on questions involving changes in the shipping programs. Another function would be to keep the Combined Chiefs of Staff and the Governments constantly informed on the effects of strategic decisions on the total war effort and on the shipping problems created by such decisions. The Agency would have to work in very close touch with both the military and civilian Boards.

These recommendations ended in a paragraph saying that it was essential, if complete confusion was to be avoided, to determine at what point the co-ordination of action was to take place. It was felt that, in the adjustment of strategy to armament production, this could be accomplished by the day-to-day integration of the work of the Combined Staffs with the proposed Combined Production Planning Board. Where the use of shipping on strategic grounds affected seriously civilian programs, the Combined Shipping Priority Agency would have to see that the military and civilian representatives were fully consulted so as to present well-rounded recommendations to the President and the Prime Minister.

These telegrams were answered from London on April 22nd in two telegrams from Mr. Lyttleton addressed to Lord Halifax, Sir John Dill, and the Chairman of the British Supply Council. The reply said that they were in agreement on the necessity of completing the Allied organization and that their discussion with Mr. Hopkins had shown that the United States was not satisfied with the present arrangements. He, however, was definitely of the opinion that further Combined Boards should not be established without a definite focus for their work.

Hopkins had told them that the organization in Washington was causing anxiety. There were now too many Committees operating, without a central focus. He had in mind that it would be helpful to set up a single authority for all the Combined Boards except the Chiefs of Staff — a sort of top committee, of which he himself might be Chairman for a while, with a British Cabinet Minister perhaps as his colleague. The most difficult problems of production and shipping priorities could be carried to this committee, which would cover all supply organizations and shipping and would bring in the Military Boards when necessary.

Mr. Churchill, after the discussions with Hopkins, cabled the President generally endorsing the views expressed by Hopkins but leaving it to him to make proposals to the President in order to avoid an appearance of interfering in U.S. internal affairs. Hopkins clearly wished to get his "focus" established before any new Combined Boards were set up.

Mr. Lyttleton gave him a memorandum before he left London, saying that the proposals would leave responsibility for British relations with the United States in three sections: diplomatic and political, handled by the Ambassador; strategic, handled by the Combined Chiefs of Staff; and all supply activities, handled by the suggested new organization. To relate the whole program to strategy, the direct personal association of Hopkins and the British Cabinet Minister in Washington with the Combined Chiefs of Staff was needed. In production planning, a Planning Board in Washington could be most effective if it had a small permanent staff and if there were constant visits from the United Kingdom of those actually engaged in armament production. In London, arrangements could be made for the participation of United States representatives in the work of the Joint War Production Staff.

So far as I know, no reply has yet gone from Washington to these London cables of April 22nd. Mr. Donald Nelson sent a letter to the Honourable R.H. Brand (Acting Chairman of the British Supply Council), received by the latter on April 24th, the contents of which bear on this whole subject. The letter states that the War Production Board is reviewing the requirements for 1942 and 1943 in order to establish objectives ensuring balanced utilization of industrial resources in the manner best serving the strategic needs. They are pressing on with this review as quickly as possible and are now engaged in weighing the probable supply of critical materials and items against the demands for them. These critical items include copper, nickel, steel plates, forgings and castings, turbines, and certain machine tools. Mr. Nelson says he is giving his personal attention to the work and hopes for close British collaboration. He asks that he should be provided with a full and authoritative representation of British views on the issues involved, with the purpose of maximizing the joint production in both countries. While the immediate adjustments of the programs for 1942 and 1943 depend on the supply and demand situation for the items that I have mentioned, the British needs for certain other supplies enter importantly into the picture. The letter gives a list of some 25 metals, minerals, fibres, and chemicals which are at present critically short in the United States. Mr. Nelson concludes by asking for a forecast of British production until the end of 1943.

I understand from Mr. Carswell that it is expected, as a result of this review, that it will be necessary to reduce the target programs for certain munitions because of the shortage of raw materials.

I have just sent you a teletype on this general subject, in which I draw your attention to an article in the New York Times of April 30th by Mr. Reston which clearly reflects the result of the discussions between Messrs. Hopkins and Lyttleton in London. On the assumption that action will be taken along these lines, it would seem that the probable developments will be:

(a) the creation of a top-level civilian Combined Board made up probably of Mr. Hopkins and a British Minister, which would act as the focus for the civilian

Boards concerned with supply and shipping and as the link between them and the military Boards;

- (b) later, the creation of a Combined Production Planning Board;
- (c) the creation later of a Combined Food Board, and
- (d) the creation later of a Combined Shipping Priority Agency.

It would seem almost impossible that Canada could secure direct representation on (a). I should think, however, that there is a very strong case for direct Canadian representation on (b) and (c). In any event, if war organization is developed along the lines set out in this letter, there will be a greater centralization in Washington of strategic direction in the broadest sense, and I think that we shall have to give very careful thought to the part which we can play most effectively in order to ensure that Canadian interests are protected and that our war planning is closely related to that of the United States and the United Kingdom so as to produce the maximum joint effort.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD — CANADIAN REPRESENTATION —
CANADA-U.S. FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

12. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE reported that the special committee, appointed at the last meeting to consider financial aspects of Canadian participation in the work of the Munitions Assignments Board, had agreed upon a proposal to be submitted to the U.S. government.

It was recommended that the U.S. government be asked to undertake that American purchases from Canada of war materials would equal in dollar value Canadian war purchases in the United States. This would mean, in effect, an exchange of war goods of equal value between the two countries. It would be a practical extension of the principles of the Hyde Park Agreement which would solve the Canadian problem of U.S. dollar exchange.

The committee had agreed that this proposal should be put before the U.S. Treasury in advance of any formal communication to the State Department regarding Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board. It was suggested that the matter be taken up in Washington through personal conversations with the Secretary to the Treasury.

13. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY supported the recommendation put forward by Mr. Ilsley. An agreement of this nature between Canada and the United States would greatly facilitate solution of the problem of future American orders from Canadian production. If the U.S. government agreed to the proposal and committed themselves to buy in Canada, to the extent suggested, actual orders would tend to follow.

14. The War Committee, after further discussion, approved the recommendation submitted by the Minister of Finance and agreed that he should proceed to Washington for discussions with the U.S. Secretary to the Treasury, with a view to obtaining agreement along the lines recommended; meantime, formal communications to the U.S. and U.K. governments regarding Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board be deferred.

Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: With reference to my secret letter of April 30th and our telephone conversation of last night, concerning proposed Combined Production Planning Board, Mr. E.P. Taylor said during discussion yesterday that he expected this Board would be created in the near future and that it would prove very helpful in rationalizing use of capacity in the United Kingdom and the United States especially with regard to production of British-type weapons.

(2) Board would probably consist of about 6 United States members representing, including [sic] War Production Board, army, navy and Maritime Commission, and of about 4 British members. He thought Board itself would only become important if it were necessary to compose serious differences of opinion and that main work would be done in technical committees responsible to it.

(3) His own view was that Canada should not be represented on Board on grounds that existing arrangements between Canada and the United States centring in joint war production committee could handle matters satisfactorily on a continental basis. Board's main function would be to plan production as between United Kingdom on the one hand and the United States and Canada on the other hand.

(4) Taylor thought proposed combined Food Board should be tripartite saying that Canadian participation on it was justified by size of our exports of food-stuffs which were a much larger proportion of total than our exports of munitions.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD — CANADIAN REPRESENTATION —
CANADA-U.S. FINANCIAL PROBLEMS

9. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE reported conversations, on these questions, in Washington on May the 6th, with the U.S. Secretary to the Treasury and certain American officials. The Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Deputy Minister of Finance had taken part, Dr. Clark remaining for further discussions the following day.

Mr. Morgenthau had appeared to have no knowledge of the working of the Munitions Assignments Board, and had felt that pooling on Canada's part, in the manner contemplated, might well lead to a decrease of American orders in Canada and the consequent loss of U.S. exchange. It had been suggested, however, that the problem be examined further by Treasury officers with Dr. Clark.

On May the 7th, Dr. Clark, accompanied by members of the Legation staff and the Washington representative of Munitions and Supply, had conferred with officials of the U.S. Treasury, officers of the War Department and other American officials concerned.

10. MR. ILSLEY read Dr. Clark's report of these further conferences.

It stated that General Aurand, U.S. representative on the Munitions Assignments Board, and also Chief Procurement Officer of the U.S. War Department, had made it clear that the United States were anxious to have Canada pool all Canadian war production in Washington. Canada had no reason to fear any reduction in U.S. orders as a result of such pooling, rather the contrary. Munitions manufactured in Canada to American order should be pooled as part of Canadian, rather than United States, production.

General Aurand had emphasized that the function of the Munitions Assignments Board was the allocation of finished military stores; the Board would not interfere in any way with production. Procurement officers would continue to place orders exactly as in the past, and production would follow accordingly. There had been confusion on this last point.

Finally, General Aurand had stated clearly the United States would continue to pay U.S. dollars for orders placed in Canada, irrespective of any diversion which might be made by the Board.

As a result of these conversations, Dr. Clark was satisfied that Canadian participation in the work of the Munitions Assignments Board in Washington, and the pooling there of Canadian production, need not lead to the financial difficulties which had been feared. The United States were fully aware of the Canadian exchange problem and the way was open for further discussions on a satisfactory basis if the need arose later on.

If it were decided that Canada should participate in the work of the Board in Washington, it was important that the distinction between production and procurement, on the one hand, and assignment of finished military stores on the other, should be clearly maintained. Organization based upon this distinction between the respective functions of Munitions and Supply officials and officers of National Defence should work satisfactorily.

(Deputy Minister of Finance's memorandum "Canadian Dollar Exchange Problem", May, 1942;† also teletype WA-915, Canadian Minister, Washington, to External Affairs, May 8, 1942).†

11. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY agreed that the assurances given by a responsible officer of the type and position of General Aurand were a great help. In the circumstances, Munitions and Supply were prepared to withdraw their strong objections to the pooling of Canadian production and full Canadian participation in the work of the Washington Board. General Aurand's view that the United States would continue to pay for finished munitions, regardless of their diversion by the Board, was a great relief.

Mr. Ilesley's trip to Washington had been most important and most helpful. The U.S. government now had a proper appreciation of the dependence of the Canadian production programme upon the continuance of American orders.

12. MR. ILSLEY said that he had told Mr. Morgenthau that Canada, similarly, if she participated in the work of the Board, would be prepared to pay for goods which she had ordered in the United States and which were subsequently diverted by the Board. The Minister of National Defence was satisfied that this should be so, inasmuch as Canada would herself be represented fully on the Board, whose judgments of various needs would be based solely on strategic considerations.

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE pointed out that Canadian representation on the Board would provide an assurance of adequate consideration of Canadian interests. The distinction between the functions and responsibilities of Munitions and Supply and Defence with regard to procurement and allocations should be carefully maintained. On this question he had corresponded with Mr. Howe.

14. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR said that it would be difficult to estimate requirements and place orders if all allocations were to be dealt with by the Board.

15. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed that Canada participate in the work of the Munitions Assignments Board in Washington, that Canadian production be pooled with the Board there, and that a formal request for Canadian representation on the Board be forthwith made to the U.S. government, in accordance with the conditions already agreed upon with the U.K. government.

With regard to Canadian membership, the Secretary was directed to prepare, for consideration at a subsequent meeting, draft instructions to the Canadian representative defining the scope of his responsibilities and his relations to the War Committee, the Chiefs of Staff and the Department of National Defence.

CONFIDENTIAL. Further your telegram No. 1203, May 2nd[†], Munitions Assignments Board.

Please inform the United Kingdom Government that we have transmitted to the United States Government proposals contained in our telegram No. 715 of April 9th and requested representation on the Washington Munitions Assignments Board and its navy, army and air committees. Details regarding Canadian representation on the Washington Board are being forwarded shortly. There will also be a representative or representatives appointed on the London Board from Canadian Service Headquarters overseas. These representatives would be the appropriate Canadian authorities referred to in paragraph 7 of our earlier telegram. We agree that Canada's requirements for her forces in North American areas to be made from United Kingdom production, should be presented in London as part of bulk bid from Washington; also that the specific allocation made in Washington for Canadian forces overseas as part of the British Commonwealth bulk assignment should not cover the Canadian air force overseas in view of circumstances mentioned in paragraph 4 of your telegram.

We also confirm that Canada will bid in Washington for aircraft required for all training purposes in Canada.²²

No. 317

Washington, May 13, 1942

Sir,

For some time the Canadian Government has been giving serious consideration to the question of how Canada can most effectively be associated with the work of the Munitions Assignments Boards in Washington and in London.

It will be recalled that in announcing on January 26th the formation of these Boards President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill specifically stated that they were to consist of the representatives of two countries, the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada, therefore, has not been a member of the Boards, nor was she asked, at the beginning, to pool her munitions production with that of either the United Kingdom or the United States for assignment by the Boards.

Notwithstanding the above, the two Governments constituting the Boards have in fact recognized that the other members of the United Nations were interested in and affected by the work of the Boards and that provision should be made for their association with that work in certain circumstances.

Of all the United Nations not represented on the Boards, Canada is, perhaps, the country most directly concerned with their work. In the first place her requirements of munitions to be met from production outside her borders are great and growing. These could under the new arrangements be met only through the Boards. Secondly, Canada is, apart from the United Kingdom and the United States, the largest producer of munitions for the use of the United Nations. Canada is, therefore, vitally concerned with the question of the assignments of these munitions.

Before the Munitions Assignments Boards had been in existence many weeks, it became apparent that, though Canadian production was not formally covered by their terms of reference, that part of this production which was for the United States and the United Kingdom was being taken into consideration by the Boards in their allocations. This situation was bound to result in some doubt and confusion, which could be cleared up in one of two ways: first, by tabling Canadian production to United States order with the Washington Board and Canadian production to the United Kingdom order with the London Board while the Canadian Government would itself determine how the remainder of Canada's production would be assigned and used; secondly, through acceptance by Canada of the invitation, which was extended by the United Kingdom Government in February of this year, to pool all her production along with that of the United States and the United Kingdom.

The Canadian Government felt that from the point of view of the most effective use in the common interest of Canada's munitions production, the latter course should be adopted.

There then arose the questions whether Canadian production should be included in the Washington or the London pools and, arising out of this, whether Canada should be included in the British or United States group of nations for munitions assignment purposes.

It was not easy to answer these questions. On the one hand, Canadian forces are serving with United Kingdom forces overseas and are supplied with British types of munitions and equipment. This is particularly true of the R.C.A.F. On the other hand, Canada and the United States are so interdependent in respect of the production of finished military stores that there are obvious advantages in dealing with the assignment of such production on a continental basis. In this connection, it will be recalled that a resolution of the Joint United States-Canada War Production Committee, approved by the Canadian and United States Governments in December, 1941, stated that "the production and resources of both countries should be effectively integrated and directed towards a common programme of requirements for the total war effort".

With the above considerations in mind, the Canadian Government now desire to make certain proposals to the United States Government regarding Canadian participation in the work of the Munitions Assignments Board. I may add that these proposals have been discussed with and agreed to by the United Kingdom Government. They were also discussed with and agreed to informally by the President during the Prime Minister's recent visit to Washington.

The proposals in question are:

(1) All Canadian production of finished military stores would be tabled in Washington along with United States production.

(2) Canadian bids from this total North American production, to be used for Canadian forces in the North American area, would be made in Washington.

(3) That part of Canada's requirements for her naval, military and air forces overseas which is to be met from North American production, would be included in a bulk bid made on the Washington Board from the London Board. This bulk bid would cover the requirements of all of the members of the British group of nations. In other words, while all Canadian production would be pooled in Washington, Canada's requirements would be met partly through the Washington Board and partly through the London Board.

(4) In return for the pooling of her total production in the Washington Board, Canada would receive full representation on that Board and on its naval, ground, and air committees. As a result, Canada would have the same powers of discussion and decision in respect of the work of the Board in Washington as that now possessed by the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada would also be represented on the Munitions Assignments Board in London.

I shall be in a position to supply you very shortly with more detailed information in respect of Canadian representation on these Boards, in the event of the above proposals proving acceptable to the United States Government. The effect of the proposals will be that the Munitions Assignments Board in Washington will henceforth represent three instead of two governments.

It is hoped that the United States Government will approve these proposals and that, on such approval being given, announcement to that effect will be made from Washington and the necessary changes made in the directives already issued covering the work and organization of the Board.

Accept etc.

London, May 23, 1942

1. Your telegram No. 936 of May 12th Munitions Assignments Board. United Kingdom authorities note with satisfaction arrangements now made by the Canadian Government in your telegram under reference for pooling Canadian production and making assignments to Canadian forces. They consider that the arrangements should form the basis for harmonious working of assignments. United Kingdom representatives in Washington have been instructed to do whatever may be necessary to support Canadian Government's communication to the United States Government regarding representation on the Washington Munitions Assignments Board and to help in the working of the scheme to the mutual benefit of the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments. As regards London Munitions Assignments Board, United Kingdom Government note that steps are being taken to appoint appropriate Canadian authorities to fulfil the task referred to in paragraph 7 of your telegram No. 715 of April 9th. United Kingdom authorities agree that as suggested in paragraph 8 of your [telegram no.] 671¹ these Canadian representatives would continue on the same footing in regard to the work of the London Board as representatives of other Dominions.

2. United Kingdom authorities understand from their representatives in Washington that, when matters have been agreed with the United States Government, an announcement setting out the arrangements in Washington is contemplated. They wish to make a simultaneous announcement here including a reference to the association of Canada with the work of the London Board, and they would like to inform the United Kingdom representative in Washington of its terms in advance in order that it may be correlated with the Washington statement. They suggest that reference to London Board might be in the following terms "in London, the Canadian Government's representatives will continue to be associated with the work of the London Munitions Assignments Board and will be taken fully into consultation on the same basis as the representatives of the other Dominions".

3. They would welcome your views on the proposed statement²³ as early as possible in order that they may inform United Kingdom representatives at Washington.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

Mr. Wrong phoned me from Washington that the Minister had seen Mr. Harry Hopkins yesterday regarding Canada's membership on the Board.

²³ No such statement appears to have been made.

Hopkins states that, contrary to our impression, the President feels that he had not made any definite commitment to Mr. King on his recent visit to Washington that Canada would become a full member of the Board. Mr. McCarthy would be very glad to get Mr. King's views on this statement as there seems to be some misunderstanding on the matter. Mr. Hopkins added, however, that he was working on a scheme for Canadian participation in the work of the Board which he hopes will be satisfactory to both Mr. King and Mr. McCarthy. He did not give the Minister any idea what this scheme was, but said that he would show it to him this afternoon (May 29th).

Before seeing Mr. Hopkins this afternoon, the Minister is most anxious to get Mr. King's views on the conversation he had with Mr. Roosevelt regarding Canada's membership on the Board.

Ottawa, May 29, 1942

I spoke to the Prime Minister this morning about Mr. McCarthy's report of his conversation yesterday with Mr. Harry Hopkins about Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board.

The Prime Minister said that what the President said to him on the subject, when he was in Washington on April 15th and 16th, was that he thought Canada should be given representation on the Board and that he would take the matter up with Hopkins as soon as the latter returned from England. The President's remark to McCarthy, when asked about the Munitions Assignments Board, that he had forgotten to speak to Hopkins about it as he had intended, confirms Mr. King's impression of the conversation.

Mr. King's understanding was that the President always intended to discuss the question with Hopkins and did not mean to decide the question before he had had an opportunity of going into it with Hopkins.²⁴

CANADIAN SERVICE REPRESENTATION, WASHINGTON

1. THE SECRETARY reported that, with Mr. Pearson, the Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, he had attended a meeting of the Chiefs of Staff, at which this subject had been reviewed.

The Chiefs of Staff would favour the establishment in Washington of a Canadian Joint Staff Committee to consist of Major-General Pope, as Chairman, and the senior R.C.N., and R.C.A.F. officers.

If such a Committee were formed, it would be satisfactory to the Chiefs of Staff to have General Pope act as their representative in relation to the Combined U.K.-U.S. Staff, and also as Canadian representative on the Munitions Assignments Board, on the understanding that his Air and Naval colleagues would be associated with him when matters were under consideration affecting their Services.

This seemed to afford a satisfactory solution of the domestic difficulty regarding Service representation. Meantime, however, there had been no reply to the formal request to the U.S. government for Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board. This was at present under discussion in Washington between the Minister and Mr. Harry Hopkins.

2. The War Committee, after discussion, approved the formation in Washington of a Canadian Joint Staff Committee, along the lines set out above, and the appointment of General Pope to represent the Canadian Chiefs of Staff in Washington, and as Canadian representative on the Munitions Assignments Board. The Secretary was directed to prepare draft instructions,[†] accordingly, for General Pope.

U.K.-U.S. COMBINED PRODUCTION AND RESOURCES BOARD AND COMBINED FOOD BOARD

11. THE PRIME MINISTER referred to the announcement by the President of the United States of the establishment of a Combined Production and Resources Board, and a Combined Food Board.²⁵ The former, to integrate the production programmes of the United Kingdom and the United States; the latter, to consider and formulate plans in regard to all food questions in which the two Nations had a common concern.

Mr. Roosevelt was reported to have said that the U. S. representative on the Combined Production and Resources Board would "speak for North America", including Canada. A statement regarding Canada's relationship to the new Boards had been promised to the House of Commons.

12. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY said that, so far as the Production Board was concerned, he would be satisfied with representation through Mr. Nelson. The best procedure for Canada, in relation to the new Board, would be through the existing U.S.-Canada Joint Production Committee.

The interests of Canada could best be served by this course because of her peculiar position and her reliance upon U. S. orders, to produce necessary American exchange. In such circumstances, full membership on the Board would be inappropriate and would endanger existing arrangements. We had not and should not accept lease-lend assistance from the United States. The present position was satisfactory.

13. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE queried the soundness of accepting silently a position of exclusion from these large U.K.-U.S. organizations. This was a far-reaching principle, not hitherto acknowledged in other spheres.

Canadian representation on the Combined Boards might be an embarrassment to the United Kingdom and the United States; on the other hand, exclusion might have serious implications for Canada in the post-war settlement.

To remain out of the Production Board would put Canada in the position of a mere supplier, rather than that of a partner in a great enterprise. Canada's need of American dollars was recognized by the United States; her financial contribution to the United Kingdom was the billion dollar gift, and such extension of these arrangements as might be made later on.

Certainly, Canada should not accept lease-lend assistance. This would inevitably result in a position of subordination to the United States.

²⁵ Announced on June 9.

14. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES expressed the view that Canada was entitled to representation on the Combined Food board. Her position, from the United Kingdom point of view, was the most important of all. Either we should be represented, or it should be made clear that we did not fall within the Board's jurisdiction.

15. THE SECRETARY pointed out that, at the moment, the U. S. government were considering the Canadian request for full membership on the Combined Munitions Assignments Board. The grounds urged in support of this request were, in large part, applicable to the new Boards under discussion.

16. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE suggested that the Canadian public would expect Canadian representation. If it were not achieved it would be felt that Canada was being ignored by the United States and Great Britain who would appear to be taking charge of all phases of the war.

17. THE PRIME MINISTER submitted a draft statement to be made in the House, regarding Canada's relationship to the new Boards, describing their functions as relating only to the United Kingdom and the United States, and leaving open the matter of Canadian representation.

18. The War Committee, after further discussion, approved, with amendments, the draft statement submitted,²⁶ and agreed that it be suggested to the U.S. government that a Canadian representative be added to the Combined Food Board.

*Le ministre aux États-Unis au président,

Minister in United States to Chairman, Munitions Assignments Board

Washington, June 13, 1942

Dear Mr. Hopkins,

It has occurred to me that it might be of assistance to you in the consideration which you are giving to our Note No. 317 of May 13th to the Secretary of State, which deals with Canada's association with the work of the Munitions Assignments Board, if I attempted informally to clarify and to some extent amplify certain proposals we have formally made therein.

The operative part of our note consists of four proposals, itemized on pages 3 and 4 of the note. I assume that of these proposals, No. 4 is the one which is causing you some uneasiness. It reads:

"In return for the pooling of her total production in the Washington Board, Canada would receive full representation on that Board and on its Naval, Ground, and Air Committees. As a result, Canada would have the same powers of discussion and decision in respect of the work of the Board in Washington as that now possessed by the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada would also be represented on the Munitions Assignments Board in London.”

By “full representation” the Canadian Government did not have in mind equality in numerical representation with the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom on the Washington Board. We felt that one Canadian representative would be capable of looking after the interests of our three Services, and we appreciated that the addition of three members to the Board might well make it unwieldy and less effective than it is at present. Similarly, in respect of representation on the Naval, Ground, and Air Committees of the Board, we do not desire to add to those Committees more than the minimum number of Canadian officers required for the discussion of the technical questions involved; discussions in which at present these Canadian officers are taking part informally.

I would be glad, therefore, if you would interpret the phrases in our note, “full representation” and “the same powers of discussion and decision”, in the light of the above explanation.

Also, I should emphasize that any Canadian representation on the Board would be quite separate from United Kingdom representation. Indeed, the fact that we are requesting representation on the Washington rather than the London Board indicates our view that the subjects under discussion are in many respects of greater common interest to the United States and Canada than to Canada and the United Kingdom. Canada’s representative, therefore, will in no sense be a member of any British Commonwealth delegation on the Board.

I feel that you may be somewhat uneasy in your mind lest the presence of a representative of my Government may complicate the procedure for settling disputed points which may be referred to you as Chairman of the Board. In this connection, I can assure you that in cases of this kind where the United States and the United Kingdom are alone involved, and where you may wish to refer the point at issue to a small committee or subcommittee, the Canadian representative would not be concerned and would not therefore interfere with any procedure already established. In short, I feel sure that if Canada became a member of the Board, your position as Chairman in respect of any points in dispute which might be submitted to you would not be prejudiced or made more difficult.

I hope the above observations, which are passed on to you informally, may be of some assistance to you in bringing this matter to a satisfactory and speedy conclusion.

Yours sincerely,

LEIGHTON MCCARTHY

TELETYPE EX-1226

Ottawa, June 18, 1942

CONFIDENTIAL. With reference to your message No. WA-1258 of June 9th, concerning your conversation with Hopkins on the Munitions Assignments

Board, I should be glad to learn whether there have been any later developments in this connection and, also, to receive your estimate of the reasons which have led Mr. Hopkins to oppose Canadian representation on the Board.

2. For your confidential information, the Government have been considering our position with respect to the new Combined Production and Resources Board and Combined Food Board. With regard to the Production Board, it is felt that the Canadian production programme is now integrated with the programmes of the United Kingdom and the United States and that means of liaison with the new Board are already in existence which should prove to be satisfactory for the time being at any rate. It is not, therefore, proposed to seek Canadian membership on this Board.

3. The position is different with respect to the Combined Food Board. From early in the war, the Canadian food production programme has been developed in close consultation with the United Kingdom authorities. A beginning has been made through the recent recommendations of the Joint Economic Committees to adjust the planning of food production between Canada and the United States on the basis of most effective utilization of resources. Our contact, however, with the United States authorities on matters concerning the supply of foodstuffs for the use of the United Nations has not been nearly as intimate as has been the case in other aspects of war production. The Canadian Government, therefore, feel that a Canadian member should be added to the Combined Food Board. The importance of Canada as an exporter of foodstuffs would seem in itself to justify this attitude apart from any other consideration.

4. It is intended, therefore, to take up with the United States and United Kingdom Governments the question of adding a Canadian member to the Board. Before instructions are issued to this effect, however, it is important that we should know the reasons for the present impasse concerning the Munitions Assignments Board. Has there, for example, been any indication that Hopkins is determined to try to restrict full membership in all the Combined Boards to the United States and the United Kingdom alone? It would be embarrassing for a Canadian request for representation on the Food Board to be rejected, especially since there is some feeling in the House of Commons and in the press that the Canadian contribution to the war effort of the United Nations has not been adequately recognized in the constitution of the new Combined Boards.

5. It is not desired that you should approach the United States authorities on this question until further instructions have been issued after consideration has been given to your reply to this message.

Washington, June 26, 1942

Following is text of letter from Hopkins (with enclosure) to me on Munitions Assignments Board, Begins: "I have thoroughly examined from every angle the suggestions made to relate Canada's problem of production of munitions in an appropriate way to the Munitions Assignments Board.

"In so far as the Munitions Assignments Board is concerned, it seems to me that paragraph 4 in your original memorandum of May 13 could be accomplished by a paragraph reading somewhat as follows:

'That, in order to insure that the needs of Canada are given proper consideration in the determination of the distribution of available resources, the representatives of Canada will be given full opportunity to present their needs and their views to the Munitions Assignments Board, its staff, and the Departmental Munitions Assignments Committees.'

"It seems to me that actual membership on either the Sub-Committees or the Munitions Assignments Board itself, whether by one member or several, can lead only to many difficulties. This is due to the fact that other nations do produce munitions, though not in the quantity of Canada, and, indeed, in modest ways some of these munitions are exported.

"My own feeling is that it is far more important that Canada be related properly with the Combined Production and Resources Board which has just been organized and I am attaching a letter which I wrote today to Mr. Nelson about this."

(SGD.) HARRY L. HOPKINS, ENDS.

Text of enclosure addressed to Donald M. Nelson is as follows:

"Mr. Leighton McCarthy, the Canadian Minister, has been discussing with me for some weeks the proper relation of the Canadian Government with the Munitions Assignments Board.

"The bulk of their problems, I believe, relate primarily to production and the proper relation of their production with our own and that of Great Britain.

"I wonder if you could call up Mr. McCarthy and arrange to discuss this with him or some of his associates at an early date."

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Reference my preceding message WA-1498 Munitions Assignments Board. After thinking the matter over carefully, I wish to suggest that, before I see Mr. Hopkins again, further consideration should be given in the light of Hopkins' letter, to Canada's representation on the various Combined Boards. I have therefore merely acknowledged Hopkins' letter and indicated that I am bringing it to the attention of the Canadian Government, who will, in my opinion, be disappointed in its terms.

2. As has already been pointed out, Hopkins' attitude seems [to] be based, first, on the view that our munitions production is not relatively of great importance and that a high proportion of that production is paid for by the United States, and secondly, that our membership on the Board would cause complications both in regard to procedure and by prompting similar requests for membership from other states.

3. Does the Prime Minister regard Hopkins' position as not being in accordance with his arrangement with the President? If so, would he think it wise to put his position in this matter in writing, so that it might be communicated either directly or through me to Hopkins and/or the President?

4. You will note Hopkins' view that our relationship to the Combined Production Board is more important than that to the Munitions Assignments Board and that he has written Donald Nelson about this. As Nelson may get in touch with me, as suggested by Hopkins, I would appreciate instructions on what line I should take. Similarly, I feel that if Canada desires representation on the Combined Food Board, steps should be immediately taken to that end. It looks now as if the Munitions Assignments Board matter may drag on for some time. I therefore suggest that, if action is required in respect to the Food Board, such action should not be postponed until the Munitions Assignments Board difficulty is cleared up.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD — CANADIAN REPRESENTATION

1. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE referred to recent correspondence with the Minister of Munitions and Supply, regarding the pooling and assignment of munitions ordered by the United States through War Supplies Limited. Copies of memoranda[†] exchanged between the Ministers had been circulated.

Mr. Ralston had taken the view that, if Canada were represented on the Board in Washington, all Canadian production should be tabled there, as such, irrespective of who placed the orders. Mr. Howe, on the other hand, felt strongly that munitions ordered by the United States, through War Supplies Limited, should, for purposes of pooling, be excluded from Canadian production and dealt with as production of the United States. He would prefer to accept a refusal of our proposal for participation in the Washington Board, and deal with allocations on a basis of the contractual obligations.

Mr. Ralston, himself, would not for a moment consider the pooling of Canadian production unless Canada were represented on the Board.

(Ministers' memoranda, June 24, 25, 26 and 29, 1942 — C.W.C. documents 206 and 213).[†]

2. THE SECRETARY reported that, in view of the attitude taken by Mr. Hopkins, the Minister in Washington had requested further instructions.

A draft telegram to Mr. McCarthy was submitted, amplifying the reasons which had led to the Canadian proposal for participation in the Washington Board, and setting out the points to be made in further discussions on the subject with United States representatives. Copies had been circulated to the Defence Ministers and the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

(Teletype WA-1499, Canadian Minister, Washington, to External Affairs, June 26, 1942).

3. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE referred to Mr. Howe's continued anxiety as to the financial implications of pooling Canadian production. There had been no formal assurances given by the United States in this connection; admittedly, this aspect of the question was a cause of concern.

4. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, approved, with certain revisions, the draft telegram to the Canadian Minister, submitted to the meeting.

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre aux États-Unis
Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister in United States

Ottawa, July 2, 1942

IMMEDIATE. Your messages WA-1498 and 1499 of June 26th. The position taken by Mr. Hopkins in his letter to you calls for an extensive reply. The following points should be made to Mr. Hopkins. You can judge best in what manner your reply should be given;²⁷ perhaps the most effective method would be to discuss the matter with him and leave a memorandum in confirmation. A discussion of the position with the President, the Secretary of State or Mr. Welles along these lines might also be helpful, since it would seem that Hopkins may not appreciate fully the important national considerations involved.

1. There is considerable public feeling in Canada, which has found expression in Parliament and in the press, that the Canadian contribution has not been adequately recognized in the constitution of the bodies which have been created by the United States and the United Kingdom Governments with the object of providing effective organization of the war effort of the United Nations. It would be unfortunate if this feeling should be allowed to grow through the refusal of the United States Government to accept carefully considered plans for the direct association of Canada in the operation of these boards in whose work we believe that we have the strongest claim to participate.

2. After having secured the agreement of the United Kingdom Government to the proposals made in your note of May 13th to the Secretary of State and after the position had been discussed with the President and with others in Washington concerned with the operation of the Munitions Assignments Board, we had good reason to believe that our proposals would be acceptable to all concerned and we proceeded to plan our arrangements in considerable detail on this assumption. Our request for representation on the Board is known to the Canadian public and it would be difficult to explain why it has been rejected unless stronger arguments are advanced than those employed in Mr. Hopkins' letter to you.

3. We appreciate the difficulties inherent in the operation of multi-national boards and we have throughout considered the Canadian relationship to the Combined Boards with these difficulties in mind. In spite of the substantial contribution made by Canada to the naval, land and air forces of the United Nations and our profound interest and concern in the strategic direction of the war, we have not sought direct representation on the Combined Chiefs of Staff and have limited ourselves to ensuring means of contact with that body. We have also not sought direct representation on the Combined Shipping Adjustment Boards and on the Combined Raw Materials Board. In the case of the Munitions Assignments Board, Canada, after the United States and the United Kingdom, is so much the largest contributor among the United Nations of finished military stores for the common cause that we feel confident that our request for direct representation can be accepted without raising serious difficulties with other Governments.

4. The redraft of paragraph 4 of your note of May 13th which Hopkins has proposed in fact seems to concede nothing to the Canadian point of view which was not already implicit in the statement accompanying the original announcement in Washington and London on January 26th of the establishment of the Board. This announcement provided that members of the Washington and London Boards would confer with representatives of the United Nations when necessary "to attain common purposes and provide for the most effective utilization of the joint resources of the United Nations".

5. The redraft implies that Canada is concerned only with the work of the Board in order to meet her own needs. On the contrary our proposals were based on the pooling of the entire Canadian production in Washington for assignment by the Board. Actually, of course, the volume of our contribution to the pool as a producer of munitions would far exceed the volume of our withdrawals from the pool as a consumer. The redraft is not acceptable to the Canadian Government and if its language represents the considered view of the United States Government, we shall have to re-examine the proposals in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of your note of May 13th in the light of this situation.

6. It should be emphasized that our proposal in paragraph 1 to pool for assignment in Washington all Canadian production included all finished military stores produced in Canada whether the original orders had been placed by the Canadian, United Kingdom, United States or other Governments. This is in accord with the practice followed by the United States Government which is tabling for assignment in Washington, as part of United States production, munitions ordered in the United States by the British, Canadian and other Governments. A similar practice is followed by the British Government with respect to tabling British production for assignment by the London Board. It is true that for accounting reasons in tabling Canadian production in Washington, it may be necessary to show in a separate column the figures of production on United States orders. If this is done, it does not alter the general principle that what is tabled by each country participating in pooling is the actual physical production in the country in question.

7. With regard to your statement that Hopkins considers Canadian munitions production as not relatively of great importance, the following figures show the Canadian share of the total North American production of three important items.

(a) Comparable field guns (Canadian 24 pounder and United States 105 millimetre): June production Canada 72, United States 394; estimated production July through September Canada 240, United States 773; total four months Canada 312 (21%), United States 1167 (79%).

(b) Comparable machine guns (Canadian Bren and United States .30 calibre) June production Canada, 3,500, United States 11,300; estimated production July through September Canada 10,500, United States 47,300; total four months Canada 14,000 (19%), United States 58,600 (81%).

(c) Comparable Rifles (Canadian .303 Lee Enfield and United States .30 M 1903 and .303 Lee Enfield) June production Canada 18,000, United States 57,000; estimated production July through September, Canada 70,000, United States 227,773; total four months Canada 88,000 (24%), United States 284,773 (76%).

These items have not been selected as being specially favourable to Canada, and the list could readily be lengthened to show further similar results. If desired Colonel Mavor can provide you with additional figures.

8. With regard to Mr. Hopkins' suggestion that Canada should be "related properly with the Combined Production and Resources Board" our feeling is that we have developed reasonably satisfactory methods for co-ordinating our production programme with the programmes of the United Kingdom and the United States and for the present we are not inclined to seek membership on this Board. We regard this Board as being primarily a means of co-ordinating production in the United Kingdom and in the United States and thus filling a gap in the arrangements between the three countries. We wish, however, to reserve our position with respect to membership in the Board so that we shall be free to advance a request for membership if developments show this to be desirable.

9. With regard to the Combined Food Board, there seems to be a very strong case indeed for full Canadian membership and we expect shortly to instruct you to take this up with the United States authorities. Our food production programme has been developed in close association with the United Kingdom Government. There is a growing need for integrating it more fully with the programme of the United States. The constitution of the Combined Food Board on a tripartite basis would seem to be the best means of ensuring constant co-operation and the most effective utilization of our joint resources.

10. In general we feel that the trend of Hopkins' argument reduces Canada to a position of undue subordination in a vital aspect of the organization of the war effort. Does he realize that in effect he is asking Canada to make available for assignment in Washington her entire production of Munitions (including those needed for our own forces overseas, for home defence and for training) without giving Canada any voice in their disposition beyond the promise of a full opportunity for Canadian representatives to present to the Board "their needs and their views"? It seems to us that if there is to be bona fide pooling the Governments which pool in any volume must, in order to discharge their own responsibilities towards their own forces and for their own defence, have a direct voice in the disposition of the pool. This principle applies with special force to a country which, on balance, is a substantial producer of munitions for the use of others among the United Nations.

I am enclosing, for your approval, draft instructions to the Minister at Washington regarding Canadian representation on the Combined Food Board.²⁸ A similar message will be sent simultaneously to the High Commissioner in London, so that he can take the question up with the United Kingdom authorities. This draft is in accordance with the decision of the War Committee²⁹ and has been checked with the Departments of Agriculture, Fisheries, Trade and Commerce and Finance.

The question for consideration is whether we should press vigorously for full membership on the Board or agree to cooperate through the various technical subcommittees which are to be set up under it. The latter course is the one which the British and United States representatives on the Food Board in Washington would prefer to have us follow.

If we apply for membership on the Board, we are likely to be turned down. If our application is rejected, we would be at liberty to deal with the Board as a piece of machinery set up to coordinate United Kingdom-United States relationships in this field. We would not have to recognize it as an over-all planning agency to guide the food production and distribution policies of the United Nations.

In the circumstances I am inclined to send this message forward, but before doing so I thought I should bring to your attention the probability that our representations will be unsuccessful. In this case we would have to consider what kind of public statement could be made about the Canadian relationship to the Combined Board. You will recall when the question of Canadian representation was first raised in the House of Commons, that there was general feeling on all sides that Canada was entitled to participate fully on such a Board.³⁰

Combined Food Board. Please submit immediately to the United States Government, through whatever channel you consider most appropriate, a request for full Canadian membership on this Board, incorporating a statement of our position along the following lines. Mr. Massey is being instructed to take the matter up simultaneously with the United Kingdom Government.[†]

1. The Canadian Government have considered their position with respect to the Combined Food Board recently established in Washington. From the outset of hostilities the production of foodstuffs for the United Kingdom has been an important part of the Canadian war effort. The Canadian authorities have proceeded on the policy that the entire food resources of Canada and the United Kingdom were in a common pool. To this end Canada has taken effective steps to achieve substantial increases in the output of the staple foods that were most urgently required. Simultaneously Canadian domestic consumption of certain essential products was subjected to limitations to make sure that the United Kingdom's basic food requirements would be met. As a consequence the export of Canadian farm produce to the United Kingdom has more than doubled since 1939. During the present year, the foodstuffs made available to the United Kingdom will take from 25 to 30 per cent of the total Canadian agricultural production, compared to 6 to 8 per cent in the case of the United States.

2. As a result of this wartime programme Canada has become a very important factor in the British food situation. Canadian shipments now constitute approximately one-third of the total United Kingdom food supplies obtained from overseas, including virtually all of the wheat and flour, three-fourths of the bacon, one-half of the canned salmon, nearly one-fourth of the cheese, nearly one-sixth of the eggs and significant proportions of other essential requirements.

3. The Canadian food production programme has been developed to meet the needs of the United Kingdom as they were known to the Canadian authorities. More recently, through the Joint Economic Committees, a beginning has been made for the closer co-ordination of Canadian and United States agricultural production, particularly with respect to products for which there is special need. The machinery, however, for consultation and collective consideration of needs has not been adequate. The Canadian authorities have had little opportunity to see the total picture of requirements and available supplies so as to enable the most effective utilization of their food resources. The development of arrangements with the United Kingdom regarding major items such as wheat, bacon and cheese has been reasonably satisfactory but many difficulties have been experienced in the case of other products which Canada is in a position to supply. There has been considerable uncertainty concerning quantities required and requests for supplies are frequently made at the last moment when it is too late to ensure delivery.

³⁰ The following note was written on the memorandum:

P[rime] M[inister] approves despatch of instructions as drafted.(done to Wash[ington]) R[OBERTSON] R[OBERTSON]

4. Furthermore, Canada's position in relation to Lend-Lease supplies from the United States has not been clear. Sometimes products are obtained under the Lend-Lease Act which Canada could produce with a more economical use of scarce resources. There has not been adequate provision for the co-ordination of the agricultural production of Canada and the United States so as to prevent duplication and the wasteful expenditure of effort.

5. The possible use of dehydrated products may be cited as an illustration. Canada has pioneered in this field in the production of products on a commercial scale and has produced sizeable quantities of certain items which meet the required specifications. Canada is in a position to supply considerable amounts of such concentrated foodstuffs and in anticipation of a demand, has arranged to continue some production with Government assistance. The Canadian Department of Agriculture has been in touch with the British Ministry of Food who, before the work was started, enquired as to the possibility of obtaining a substantial quantity of these products from Canada. Recently advice has been received that the construction of dehydration plants is contemplated in the United Kingdom and it is doubtful if any supplies will be required from Canada. In the meantime, according to a statement issued from Washington, dehydrated products are being exported to the United Kingdom under the Lend-Lease Act. Within the last few days, however, Canada has received requests for substantial amounts of certain dehydrated items, which, owing to the nature of previous information and the lateness of the season it will be difficult to meet.

6. The lack of knowledge concerning the overall food position of the United Kingdom and the other United Nations, the continued uncertainty regarding Canada's relation to the Lend-Lease supplies and the absence of sufficient prior consultation have made it very difficult to plan and to carry through a satisfactory programme of agricultural production in Canada. The establishment of the Combined Food Board for the purpose of achieving the best utilization of the food producing capacities of the United Nations appears to provide the opportunity for a more effective and co-ordinated use of Canadian agricultural resources.

7. In view of the vital importance of Canadian food supplies to the United Kingdom and the adjustments made in Canadian agriculture to meet British needs, and in view of the fact that Canadian contacts with United States authorities on matters concerning the supply of foodstuffs to the United Nations has not been nearly as intimate as has been the case in other aspects of war production, the Canadian Government feel that provision should be made for full Canadian membership on the Combined Food Board.

8. The Canadian Government are strongly of the opinion that participation of Canadian experts in technical sub-committees would not, by itself, constitute a satisfactory relationship to the Combined Board. Participation at the technical level and consultation with respect to individual subjects would not enable the development of comprehensive policies and the formulation of general plans for the most effective use of our common resources such as is required at this time owing to increasing shortages and expanding needs. The desired objective, in view of the magnitude of the Canadian contribution, could only be attained through direct consultation, on all aspects of the problem, at the highest level.

9. Next to the United States, Canada is by far the most important contributor of foodstuffs to the common pool of the United Nations. The constitution of the Combined Board on a tripartite basis should neither be cumbersome nor embarrassing but on the contrary would greatly facilitate the establishment of such a common pool as a workable reality. The problem of planning production so as to ensure that the needs of the United Kingdom, Russia and other United Nations can be met out of the common supplies is largely one of co-ordinating the agricultural programmes of Canada and the United States. The Canadian Government feel that this can best be achieved by full Canadian membership on the Combined Board.

10. It is hoped that this proposal will receive the support of the United States Government. The proposal is also being presented to the United Kingdom Government by the Canadian High Commissioner in London.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference our [EX-]1493 of July 13th and subsequent telephone conversation concerning Combined Food Board, I see no objection to changes as follows in accordance with your suggestions: —

Paragraph 1, sentence 3. Either delete this sentence or alter to read "The Canadian authorities have proceeded on the policy that the entire food resources of Canada should be made available for the best use of the United Nations."

Paragraph 1, last sentence. Omit comparison with the United States.

Paragraph 5, sentence 3. Omit "some" before "production".

Paragraph 9, first sentence. Instead of "to the common pool of the United Nations" read "for the needs of the United Nations". Also delete "such" before "a common pool" in second sentence.

I think the second sentence of paragraph 4 should stand. For example, milk products are "scarce resources" and these might be more economically used by manufacture of cheese in Canada and butter in the United States for export to the United Kingdom.

Since Mr. Massey will probably present our proposals in London before you have a chance to do so in Washington, I think you might show them in confidence to the British Food Mission which will probably be asked by London for their comments.

CANADA AND THE COMBINED BOARDS

It seems clear now that our inability to secure membership on any of the Combined Boards is due to the determination — that is hardly too strong a word — of the United Kingdom and the United States not to depart from the two-power basis on which all such Boards and the Combined Chiefs of Staff are organized. If Canada's special claim for membership on one Board is recognized, China or Norway or Australia or The Netherlands, or some other state, might demand membership — if not on the same board — at least on one of the others. This would probably result in the transformation of practically all of the Boards from a two — to a multi-power basis.

The desire of the United Kingdom and the United States to prevent any such transformation is understood. Personally, I doubt if their policy in this regard can be altered. I do not think we will ever alter it merely by complaining about the way we are being treated. It might indeed be better frankly to accept the inevitability of "two-power" war control in theory and see how we can protect our own interests in practice within this limitation.

I appreciate the fact that it is irritating to have the United Nations idea exploited as a great principle, when in practice the United Nations apart from the United States and the United Kingdom, have little to do with the running of the War. As a speaker, Michael Straight, put it at the recent meeting of the American Academy of Political and Social Sciences:

"To the peoples of the British Empire Hitler is saying, 'This war perpetuates your inferior status.' To the peoples of Europe Hitler is saying, 'This war being fought in the name of United Nations is nothing more than a means of perpetuating Anglo-American domination.' To the peoples of Russia Hitler is saying, 'Two hostile, imperialist nations are banding together against you.'

"Because there is some truth in these words, the people of India, of Australia, of New Zealand, of China, are angry. We must understand their anger. We must realize that it is not only in America that defeatists are crying 'Make this an America-first war.' In other lands, other defeatists are crying, 'Make this a China-first, an Australia-first, a Britain-first, a Russia-first war.' Every time we deny equality of participation to the United Nations we strengthen the influence of these defeatists all over the world."

Even if the above conception of equality cannot be fully recognized in practice — it certainly could be recognized more often in theory. Very little effort has up to the present been made to do this.

The original announcements of the establishment of the Combined Boards have almost without exception been drafted in such a way as unnecessarily to irritate the Governments of the United Nations not directly represented on these Boards. This seems to have been especially true in the case of the Combined Food Board. Here a carefully drafted statement had been prepared by United States and British officials which would have recognized the interests of all the United Nations in this Board and indicated that steps would be taken to see that these interests were safeguarded. This was, however, ignored, and a hastily prepared public announcement made at a White House press conference. Similarly, documents are continually being circulated among the Combined Chiefs of Staff which in their language at times almost seem to emphasize the subordinate position in this war of all countries except the United Kingdom and the United States. It should surely be possible to convince the British and the Americans that much later irritation would be avoided if care were taken in Anglo-American pronouncements to recognize the right of all the United Nations to exercise complete control over their resources and their armed forces.

This is, however, all in the realm of theory. Of more immediate importance is what action can be taken to remedy the present situation, so that control can be exercised by very small bodies but the rights of all the other United Nations safeguarded?

In this connection we should not overlook that from a practical point of view Canada is in a better position than most of the other small Allied Nations. We have a special standing in Washington and there is, almost always, a real desire there to assist us in our war problems. Indeed, we are often thought of as virtually another state in the Union. This may at times have irritating political consequences but it also has certain practical advantages. I think it should be recognized that we may lose some of these advantages if we are not careful about the manner in which we claim recognition in theory and practice for our special position. It is unfortunate, but it is true, that there are certain people in Washington who even in peace time would be pretty ignorant of Canada's independent status within the British Commonwealth, and who in war time look impatiently on any arguments advanced on that basis. Indeed, while from a practical point of view we may be in a favoured position, from a constitutional point of view we are sometimes at a disadvantage. We are not always considered as an entirely separate state on the United Nations side. We are often included in the British Empire as an entity; or alternatively, in "the Dominions" collectively; or, finally, as part of the "North American area".

The argument most often used, however, against our membership on these Boards is that such an addition to them would decrease their effectiveness.

Therefore, though we should continue to explain to London and Washington our difficulties over non-association with certain of the Combined Boards, we should, in so doing, emphasize that these difficulties can be met in such a way as not to diminish, but even increase, the effectiveness of these Boards.

How can this be done?

I am inclined to think it can be done by abandoning the principle of membership for that of representation. Without claiming formal and full membership we should claim the right to attend any meeting of any Board when questions of immediate interest to Canada are being considered. Any decisions reached on such questions should not be taken except after consultation with, and approval of, our representative. We should also, in respect of certain Boards, where it seems necessary, have the right to send observers to all meetings to ensure that we would know what is going on and not be confronted by a fait accompli at meetings where we are fully represented.

We should, finally, keep in the closest possible touch with the Secretariats of all the Combined Boards, and should be fully represented on all the working committees of all Boards where Canadian interests are concerned.

This problem is not peculiar to Canada and is arousing just as much interest and anxiety among others of the United Nations. In this connection would it be possible for the British and United States Governments to issue a formal statement explaining how the rights and interests of all the United Nations are being safeguarded in the organization and working of all the Combined Boards? Even better, would it be possible to call a meeting in Washington of representatives of the United Nations to discuss this matter? Probably some document or charter could be issued from such a meeting, which would make clear to the world that this is really a United Nations War, both in its operation and in its control.

This is, of course, getting a long distance from the immediate problem of Canadian representation on two or three of the Combined Boards. As, however, we do not seem to be making much progress in our individual effort, it might not be a bad thing for Canada to take the lead in widening the area of discussion of the problem of the relationship of the smaller nations to the Combined Boards, and indeed, to the general conduct of the war. From the political point of view I should think a great deal could be said for Canadian initiative in this direction.

The problem of the relationship of Canada to the Combined Chiefs of Staff is a special one. Liaison with the top level of that Board seems to be now satisfactorily established. Difficulties, however, are constantly arising over deliberations on the lower levels which concern Canada. This is particularly true in respect of air matters. It has been suggested that we can best protect our interests by securing full representation on all the Combined Staff Committees. I doubt whether this is possible, because these committees only rarely discuss matters of any major and direct importance to Canada.

From the practical point of view, much could be said, I think, for our approach to these committees being made through the British or the American side. If this is undesirable, on constitutional or other grounds, then I think the best procedure would be for Canadian officials to keep in the closest possible informal contact with the staff committees in question, such as is done now by the Canadian Army with respect to the Munitions Assignments Army Committee.

This means, above everything else, sending the right men to Washington to represent the Services; men who will not only be aware of the implications for Canada of the documents they see and discussions they overhear, but will be able, on lower levels, to exercise such an influence, that changes can be made which will avoid controversies later on higher levels. "Whining" to the United States and British staffs in Washington that we are continually being ignored in matters — especially in allocation of equipment — will be the worst way of correcting this situation, even though we often have very just cause for complaint. The one thing to be avoided in these cases is ill-feeling and controversy. Even when we are in the right, we won't win our case very often, if ever, by insisting on our full rights.

It is, in a sense, humiliating to admit this, but, nevertheless, I think it is a fact.

In Service discussions in Washington, therefore, and in the protection of Canadian defence interests, nearly everything will depend on the personal qualities of our officers there and the personal relationships they are able to establish with their opposite numbers in the British and American staffs.

MEMORANDUM ON CANADIAN COLLABORATION WITH THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD

1. The Canadian Government have put forward a demand for full membership on the Combined Food Board.
 2. In the case of the U.K. the Canadian note makes certain complaints against, and criticisms of, the Ministry of Food. The Ministry no doubt will be concerned partly to make its defence but mainly to see that Canada has no cause for complaint in the future. Since however the actual work of procurement will not be any part of the Combined Food Board's task, remedies in this field must be sought in closer relations between the Departments and Boards concerned with food in Ottawa and the British Food Mission in North America through its office in Ottawa under Mr. Pinsent. This office was opened with the object of providing the Canadian authorities with all information they might require and generally acting as a close tie and intermediary between them and the Ministry of Food.
 3. The U.K. and U.S. Governments have not, I believe, yet consulted together with regard to the question of principle raised in the Canadian note. But my knowledge of the position convinces me that difficulties arising solely out of the exigencies of the war situation exist with regard to the full acceptance of the Canadian Government's request, not in any way because the greatness of the Canadian war effort in the food sphere, as in other spheres, is not fully recognized.
 4. The "Combined" machinery in Washington has arisen out of the urgent necessity to find some means of closer working together and of making speedier and more coordinated decisions by the two largest combatant nations outside Russia. It is an effort to bridge the Atlantic, whether in the making of strategic plans or in the division of weapons according to need in the different theatres of war, or in the best possible use of shipping as a whole, or in the production in all parts of the world, and the best allocation among all claimants of raw materials and food, and the limitation as far as possible of their carriage by sea.
- The Combined machinery is in no sense a North American machinery. It is a world machinery. The Combined Food Board for instance is concerned not only or even perhaps mainly with production but also with consumption and particularly with the world allocation of scarce materials and the reduction to a minimum of the carriage by ship of foodstuffs from or to any part of the globe. It is concerned not only with shipment of foodstuffs from North America but with even greater shipments from other parts of the world.
4. [sic] The Combined machinery has just started to work. It is bound in certain spheres to meet with very great difficulties. It is therefore very important to enable it to get going properly. If a breach is now made in it which will encourage similar claims from other United Nations either in respect to the Combined Food Board or other Boards, the effects on the development and efficiency of this machinery might be unfortunate.

5. The Ministry of Food and the Dominions Office requested me to visit Ottawa to see whether it might not be possible to meet Canada's needs politically and materially not by having full membership on the Food Board but by other means.

6. It might be as well to explain very shortly the present organization that the Combined Food Board is, with the Ministry of Food, in the process of setting up. There will be no parallel Board in London. Any committees of the Board in London will make recommendations to the Food Board in Washington. But there will be a London Food Committee, not a committee of the Board (formerly the Empire clearing house) representing the Dominions, the Colonies, India, the Middle East, Belgian Congo, Free French, etc., which will provide information for and make tentative recommendations to the Food Board and through which its members will keep in close touch with the work of the Board. Apart from the Dominions, the other participants will be represented by the Colonial Office, India Office, Ministry of War Shipping, and so on.

When necessary the Combined Food Board will appoint its own committees in London, e.g. on tea. In such cases an American will sit as a member and recommendations from such a truly international committee of the Board will no doubt be more or less final.

In Washington the Board is appointing through its Secretariate various committees, e.g. on imports in general, on oils and fats, on meats and meat products, on agricultural seed, on sugar, etc., to all of which Canada is being asked to appoint a member.

The Board itself is not an executive body but makes recommendations. On the United States side its recommendations will be made through the Secretary of Agriculture to the Food Requirements Committee of the W.P.B.³¹, on the U.K. side by the head of the Food Mission to the Minister of Food.

7. Nevertheless I recognize that there is a certain political question with which the Canadian Government is faced. Mr. Norman Robertson has suggested this might be met by some method of general endorsement of the Combined machinery by some or all of the United Nations either through some sort of constituent assembly or through diplomatic correspondence. This a sphere which does not fall within my competence. Subject to this aspect of the problem, I believe that Canada's material interests can be fully secured by recognition of her geographical situation and by her cooperation being found not by representation on the London Food Committee with other Dominions but by a connection of the following kind with the Combined Food Board's organization in Washington, for example by —

(i) the formation of a joint Agricultural Policy Committee of the U.S. and Canada as a Committee of the Board, sitting in Ottawa.

³¹ War Production Board.

(ii) representation on any Committees formed within the Board's organization and affecting Canada, e.g. on Oils and Fats, Meats, Sugar, and on a General Imports committee.

(iii) right of a Canadian Ministerial representative to be kept fully informed of the Board's proceedings and to be present, but not as a member of the Board, at discussions where Canadian interests are directly affected. Thus there would be no recommendations of the Board affecting Canada except after full consultation with a Canadian representative. The Canadian representative might be kept fully informed by the Board's organization keeping in close touch with the Canadian Legation. This is a matter to be discussed.

8. Suggestion 7(i) has to be agreed by Mr. Wickard and I have to refer to proposals under 7(ii) and (iii) before any final commitment to London.

9. I should be glad to know, however, whether on such a basis the Canadian Government would feel in a position to withdraw their request for a definite seat on the Board.

COMBINED FOOD BOARD — RELATIONSHIP OF CANADA

1. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported upon conversations in Ottawa, over the past few days, between interested Canadian officials and the Honourable R.H. Brand, Chairman of the British Supply Council and U.K. member of the Combined Food Board, and other British and U.S. officials.

A memorandum on Canadian collaboration with the Combined Food Board, prepared by Mr. Brand, was read to the meeting. The memorandum set out what were regarded as difficulties in the way of acceptance of the Canadian government's request for full membership. It went on to explain the organization of the Board and its various committees, and suggested Canadian participation through a joint U.S.-Canada agricultural policy committee of the Board, Canadian representatives on the Board's committees, and arrangements for Canada to be kept fully informed of the Board's activities.

(Mr. Brand's memorandum, July 28, 1942).

2. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY expressed himself as opposed, in principle, to the proposals put forward.

Experience with others of the combined organizations in Washington had shown the ineffectiveness of Canadian participation in the work of the Boards at any but the highest level. In case of raw materials, a satisfactory solution of the problem had been found through the Canada-U.S. Joint Materials Co-ordinating Committee, the Canadian members of which met with the members of the Combined Raw Materials Board to deal with questions affecting Canada. In this sphere, no Canadian representatives now sat on committees of the Board, as it had been found that such representation tended to interfere with direct negotiations at the top level.

In regard to the work of the Combined Food Board, it should be possible to provide for Canadian participation through machinery similar to that which had proved satisfactory in respect of raw materials.

3. THE PRIME MINISTER, commenting upon the memorandum submitted, observed that the arguments presented against Canadian membership on the Board had also been advanced in respect of other combined organizations. Rather than accept an unsatisfactory position within the Board, it would be preferable to collaborate in the manner suggested by Mr. Howe.

4. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that the proposals submitted by Mr. Brand, for Canadian collaboration with the Combined Food Board, were unsatisfactory, and that the establishment of machinery similar to that operating in regard to raw materials would provide a suitable alternative.

Washington, August 5, 1942

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Reference my WA-1976 of August 4th.[†] Following is text of message sent by General Pope on Munitions Assignments Board and which I have just received, Message Begins:

1. General Burns, C.M.A.B. Executive and acting Chairman pro tem called on me today and said that Mr. Hopkins had proposed to offer Canada, through Mr. McCarthy, full membership on the Board when the assignment of Canadian production was being discussed. Mr. Hopkins had now asked him (Burns) to do so on his (Hopkins) behalf.

2. Continuing, Burns observed that Canadian production was not now being tabled in Washington and he presumed that the acceptance of this offer by Canada naturally implied that this would be done. To this I expressed assent.

3. On my part I suggested to General Burns that the expression 'full Membership' implied membership of the Naval, Ground and Air Committees. Burns said that he had not thought of this aspect of the question. I therefore argued that the greater must surely include the less and pointed out to him that it could hardly be contemplated by anyone that Canadian production should be assigned by a committee composed only of United Kingdom and United States representatives. Burns immediately saw the point and asked me to repair with him to his office where he could refresh his memory from the file.

4. On looking over the file Burns saw that membership on the committees had been included in Mr. McCarthy's letter of 13th May to the Secretary of State and said that he was disposed to agree. Before doing so, however, he called up Brig.-General Aurand, formerly Chairman of the Ground Committee, who warmly supported the view I had put forward. He then called in Col. Stratemeyer of the Air Committee, who also agreed. Admiral Reeves of the Naval Committee could not be reached.

5. I then brought up the question of the Canadian members of the three committees being empowered themselves to bid for items off United States production required by Canadian forces in the North American area. After a short review of this aspect, which Col. Stratemeyer supported, Burns agreed that we should have the right to place these bids in our own behalf.

6. Burns then enquired how we should formalize his offer. I suggested that perhaps he might let me have a note covering the points we had discussed. To this he agreed and said he would write a letter which he would go over with me in draft form and when we both agreed he would sign it.

7. During the whole of our talk Burns' manner was as cordial as it could possibly be. His only concern was the possibility of some adverse reaction from Australia and New Zealand but in this respect Aurand apparently was able to assure him.

8. I have not yet had the opportunity of discussing this matter with my colleagues but in view of its importance I feel it should be transmitted to you this evening to the end that your observations may be received without delay. I have however discussed with Pearson, who agrees that Burns has conceded every point we originally made excepting the one that Canada should have a voice in the assignment of United States production bid for by countries other than herself. This as far as I can see is hardly a vital consideration and as the present offer if committed to writing goes much farther than that outlined by Macready (See J.S.2)[†] it is all that we are likely to get.' Message Ends.

CANADA, THE UNITED NATIONS, AND THE COMBINED BOARDS

I. THE ORGANIZATION OF THE UNITED NATIONS.

Some three weeks after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbour the phrase "The United Nations" was invented to describe collectively the countries at war with the Axis. President Roosevelt was the inventor of the title, which was first used in the heading of the declaration signed in Washington by representatives of twenty-six countries on January 1st, 1942. By this declaration the signatories bound themselves to employ their full resources against the Axis states with which they were at war, to co-operate with each other and not to make a separate peace or armistice. All the signatories have also subscribed to the principles embodied in the Atlantic Charter. The Atlantic Charter and the Declaration of January 1st, 1942, are the only formal documents binding together all the United Nations in the war. Since January the roster of the United Nations has been increased to twenty-eight by the addition of Mexico and the Philippine Islands.

The undertakings to employ all resources in the war and to co-operate with the other governments require international organization before they can become fully effective.

There has, however, been no meeting of the representatives of these twenty-eight countries. Deeds have been established to co-ordinate the war activities of the United Nations. The approval of the United Nations has not been sought for these developments. The principal bodies have been established by agreement between the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, which alone are represented on them. There are, however, some other international bodies concerned with the problems of certain theatres of war on which other Governments are represented. The chief of these is the Pacific Council and another example is the Far Eastern Supply Council.

The machinery for co-ordinating the general direction of the war tends to be centered more and more in Washington in the six Combined Boards created there by the United States and the United Kingdom Governments. There are also two Combined Boards in London (Munitions Assignments and Shipping Adjustment), which match corresponding Boards in Washington. If the boards grow in authority and prestige, as it is to be hoped that they will, their work will affect more and more the interests of other United Nations not represented on them. Canada is already concerned with the activities of all of the Boards. The prospect is that we will become progressively more concerned. The Boards are advisory bodies, the proposals of which can be accepted or rejected. If they are to operate effectively, however, it is clear that their recommendations must command such weight that they will normally be carried out by all authorities concerned. The Boards in some degree supplement and in some degree replace the normal means of conducting international business.

In the establishment of the Combined Boards such consideration as was given to the position of the other United Nations seems to have involved the assumption that they were divided into two groups, one dependent on London and the other dependent on Washington, with Russia in a special position. The London group would include the Governments-in-exile, the Middle Eastern states, India and the Dominions. The Washington group would be composed of Latin American countries and China. It has been obvious from the first that Canada does not fit into this pattern. Australia and New Zealand have made it evident that for most war purposes they feel closer to Washington than to London. The Dutch and some of the other European allies are also concerned with strengthening their position in Washington. The effort to divide the free world into two parts and to concentrate through the United Kingdom and the United States their contact with the Combined organizations has not been satisfactory. It is now fairly generally recognized in both London and Washington that Canada in particular cannot maintain her contacts through London, and must in some fashion have direct links with the Combined Boards in Washington. There is, however, evidence of a strong desire in both capitals not to depart from the two-power basis of membership on the Boards.

The Soviet Government is not represented on any of the Combined Boards nor has it close contact with their operations. It is in a position distinct from that of all the other United Nations. There is frequent complaint in Washington and London that the Russians tell them little or nothing. The Soviet authorities have shown no disposition to take part in joint deliberations, preferring to make their position known through diplomatic channels. Their attitude may in part be occasioned by a desire to give no pretext to Japan to open hostilities against them. Such strategic consultation as takes place is outside the sphere of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. Supplies for Russia are furnished in accordance with special arrangements negotiated directly with the United States and the United Kingdom. The provision of these supplies, however, inevitably is a principal concern of the Munitions Assignments Boards, the Raw Materials Board, the Food Board and the Shipping Adjustments Board. It is understood that the fulfillment of commitments to Russia is granted the highest priority by these boards. Should the Soviet Government at any time decide to seek membership on any or all of the Combined Boards, it would seem to be almost certain that the United States and the United Kingdom Governments would promptly have to grant their request.

2. WHAT ARE THE COMBINED BOARDS.

There follows a summary taken from official documents of the functions of each of the Combined Boards, and a statement of their present composition. Those parts of the extracts from official statements which bear on the relationship of the Boards to the United Nations have been underlined.

(a) THE COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF. This body was established during Mr. Churchill's visit to Washington in January. There was at first some intention to keep its existence secret and its creation was not announced simultaneously with that of the three other Boards then set up. Mr. Churchill revealed its existence in a speech in the House of Commons on his return to England, after which the War Department in Washington issued a public statement on February 6th. The Canadian Government has never been officially advised of the creation of the Combined Chiefs of Staff. The following extracts are taken from the press release of the United States War Department.

“The ‘Chiefs of Staff’ group has been established by the United States and Great Britain to insure complete coordination of the war effort of these two nations, including the production and distribution of their war supplies, and to provide for full British and American collaboration with the United Nations now associated in prosecution of the war against the Axis powers.”

“While the action of the Combined Chiefs of Staff on broad strategical questions will be in the form of joint recommendations to the heads of their respective governments, in minor and immediate matters relating to current operations they are prepared to take action without delay. The setup therefore amounts to a Combined Command Post for the conduct of all joint operations of the two governments in the war. It will be the control agency for planning and coordination. In addition, it will provide a medium for adjusting such joint operations as involve other governments of the United Nations, such as China, the Netherlands East Indies, Australia, and New Zealand at the present moment. The representatives of these governments will participate with the Combined Chiefs of Staff in the consideration of matters concerning their national interests."

The Combined Chiefs of Staff is composed at present of Generals Marshall and Arnold and Admirals King and Towers on the United States side, and of Field Marshall Dill (representing collectively the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff), Admiral Cunningham, General Macready and Air Marshall Evill on the United Kingdom side. Several important committees are dependent on it.

(b) THE MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS. The establishment of these Boards was announced in Washington and London on January 26th in a statement which covered also the Raw Materials Board and the Shipping Adjustments Boards. The text of the announcements was simultaneously cabled to the Canadian Government by the Dominions Office. The official statement declared that all the Boards had been set up by the President and the Prime Minister "to further coordination of the United Nations' war effort". It continued: "Members of the Boards will confer with representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, China, and such other of the United Nations as are necessary to attain common purposes and provide for the most effective utilization of the joint resources of the United Nations."

The following extract indicates the principal functions of the Munitions Assignments Boards:

"1. The entire munition resources of Great Britain and the United States will be deemed to be in a common pool, about which the fullest information will be interchanged.

2. Committees will be formed in Washington and London under the Combined Chiefs of Staff. . . . These Committees will advise on all assignments both in quantity and priority, whether to Great Britain and the United States or other of the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs."

Mr. Hopkins is Chairman of the Washington Board and Mr. Lyttleton of the London Board. The other members are senior officers of the Services.

(c) THE COMBINED RAW MATERIALS BOARD. The announcement of the creation of this Board on January 26th was prefaced by the statement: "A planned and expeditious utilization of the raw material resources of the United Nations is necessary in the prosecution of the war." The duties of the Board are described as to plan the development, expansion and use of the raw material resources under the jurisdiction or control of the two Governments, and:

"In collaboration with others of the United Nations work toward the best utilization of their raw material resources, and, in collaboration with the interested nation or nations, formulate plans and recommendations for the development, expansion, purchase, or other effective use of their raw materials."

The Board is composed of Mr. W.L. Batt of the War Production Board and Sir Clive Baillieu, Head of the British Raw Materials Mission in Washington.

(d) THE COMBINED SHIPPING ADJUSTMENTS BOARDS. The establishment of these Boards in Washington and London was also announced on January 26th. The announcement was prefaced by the statement that, in principle, the shipping resources of the two countries would be deemed to be pooled. The Ministry of War Transport would continue to direct the entire movement of shipping under United Kingdom control and the appropriate United States agency (now the War Shipping Administration) would act similarly in respect of shipping under United States control. There is no special reference in the announcement to the interests of the other United Nations.

The Washington Board is composed of Admiral Land, Chief of the War Shipping Administration, and Sir Arthur Salter, Head of the British Merchant Shipping Mission. The London Board is composed of Lord Leathers, Minister of War Transport, and Mr. Averill Harriman.

(e) THE COMBINED PRODUCTION AND RESOURCES BOARD. On June 9th there was announced in London and in Washington the creation of this Board and of the Combined Food Board. The Canadian Government was simultaneously informed by telegram from the Dominions Office. The Board is made up of Mr. Donald Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, and Mr. Oliver Lyttleton, Minister of Production. Its duties are described as to:

“Combine the production programs of the United States and the United Kingdom into a single integrated program, adjusted to the strategic requirements of the war, as indicated to the Board by the Combined Chiefs of Staff, and to all relevant production factors.”

The announcement continues;

“In this connection, the Board shall take account of the need for maximum utilization of the productive resources available to the United States, the British Commonwealth of Nations, and the United Nations, the need to reduce demands on shipping to a minimum, and the essential needs of the civilian populations.”

Other passages in the announcement develop the theme that the Board is to be closely linked with the agencies concerned with strategy. The only reference to the United Nations is that quoted above.

(f) THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD. The announcement of the creation of the Combined Food Board on June 9th included a statement that, in principle, the entire food resources of Great Britain and the United States would be deemed to be in a common pool about which the fullest information would be exchanged. The duties of the Board are described as to consider and formulate plans with regard to any food questions in which the United States and the United Kingdom Governments have a common concern. These questions would relate to the supply, production, transportation, disposal, allocation or distribution “in or to any part of the world”, of foods and food producing equipment. It is also described as a duty of the Board:

“To work in collaboration with others of the United Nations toward the best utilization of their food resources, and, in collaboration with the interested nation or nations, to formulate plans and recommendations for the development, expansion, purchase, or other effective use of their food resources.”

The Board is composed of Mr. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, and Mr.

R.H. Brand, Head of the British Food Mission in Washington.

3. METHODS OF CANADIAN ASSOCIATION WITH THE COMBINED BOARDS.

(a) COMBINED CHIEFS OF STAFF.

Contact has been established with the Combined Chiefs of Staff through the Canadian Joint Staff in Washington. General Pope in his capacity of Representative of the Canadian Chiefs of Staff can attend meetings of the Combined Chiefs of Staff when matters of concern to Canada are under discussion. The representatives of the Chief of the Naval Staff and the Chief of the Air Staff can also attend when naval and air matters of concern to Canada arise. The arrangements for associating the Canadian Joint Staff with the work of the various committees dependent on the Combined Chiefs of Staff are now under discussion between the Joint Staff and the Departments of National Defence and need not be dealt with here. It is important that effective means of contact with these committees should be developed.

The pattern of our association in this case has been determined. Canada does not seek representation on a body which must for efficiency be as small as possible, but has means of participating in its work when this is necessary to safeguard Canadian interests. The development of further contacts with the Combined Chiefs of Staff organization will be primarily a matter for the military authorities. Provided that the members of the Canadian Joint Staff are officers who command respect in Washington and Ottawa, our position should be reasonably satisfactory. The personal qualities of our Service representatives will be all important in this connection.

(b) THE MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARDS.

The Canadian relationship to these Boards has been a most complex problem. The Boards were set up to allocate the munitions produced in the United Kingdom and the United States. The question of the method of allocating Canadian production at once came to the front. After a lengthy examination of various alternatives and discussions in both Washington and London, it was decided that the best course would be for all Canadian production to be pooled in Washington and assigned by the Washington Board, provided that Canada was fully represented on that Board. This proposal was made formally to the United States Government on May 13th. Its acceptance was resisted by Mr. Hopkins, the Chairman of the Washington Board, and the proposal has not been formally accepted. General Burns, the Executive of the Board, however, on August 4th approached General Pope with a solution which appears to be acceptable. Under this scheme Canadian production would be tabled in Washington and a Canadian member would be added to the Board when Canadian production was being assigned. Similarly Canada would be represented on the naval, ground and air committees of the Board which do the detailed work of assignment. These Canadian members would also have the right to bid for munitions produced in the United States and required by the Canadian forces in the North American area. It was earlier agreed that the needs of the Canadian forces overseas from United States production should be included under certain safeguards in a bulk United Kingdom bid in Washington. These proposals have not been received in writing but they meet our main points.

The Canadian position respecting the Munitions Assignments Board is a special one as Canada is the only one of the United Nations, apart from the United Kingdom and the United States, which produces munitions in volume for the use of other countries. Canadian production obviously ought to be assigned on the same strategic grounds as production of the United States and the United Kingdom. To permit its assignment without Canadian representation would have amounted in effect to surrendering control of Canadian production. That our right to be represented on the Washington Munitions Assignments Board seems likely to be admitted does not mean that similar requests with regard to other boards will be granted.

(c) THE COMBINED RAW MATERIALS BOARD.

Canadian interest in the work of this Board is obvious, in view of the great importance of Canadian production, especially of metals and minerals. We have not, however, requested full participation in the Board. When the Board was established the Joint Materials Co-ordinating Committee had already been at work for over six months on the task of arranging for the development and supply of raw materials between Canada and the United States. The Department of Munitions and Supply has felt that Canadian contact with the Combined Board should be through the Joint Committee. Mr. Batt is both Chairman of the Board and a member of the Committee, and this circumstance has undoubtedly served our interests. For a time Canadian representatives sat with the various committees of the Board but these were later withdrawn on the ground that this type of representation tended to interfere with direct negotiations at the top level. The Metals Controller, however, maintains a representative in Washington, who keeps intimate contact with the work of the Board and its Committees.

It seems desirable to keep the way open for a later request for a more direct association on the Board. If the Board develops its authority into control of the flow of raw materials to the United Nations, the present informal link through the Joint Committee may not be adequate.

(d) THE COMBINED SHIPPING ADJUSTMENT BOARDS.

Canadian contact with the Board in Washington is maintained through the representative in Washington of the Canadian Shipping Board, supplemented by frequent visits of the Director of Shipping and other Canadian officials. In London contact is maintained through the London representative of the Canadian Shipping Board. No request has been made for further means of contact. Since there is very little maritime shipping under Canadian registry Canada has little to offer as a contribution to the pool of allied shipping. When the merchant vessels now under construction for the Park Shipping Company commence operations, Canada will be in a stronger position. The question will probably arise whether Canadian maritime merchant shipping should be part of the pool, and, if so, whether it should come within the scope of the Washington Board. In that event Canada will be interested in the Board as an operator of ships. Her present interest is almost entirely as a user of the ships of other countries. It is understood that the Norwegians have sought representation on the Combined Board and that the request has been refused.

(e) THE COMBINED PRODUCTION AND RESOURCES BOARD.

No request has been advanced for Canadian membership but in communications to Washington and London the Canadian position in this respect has been reserved. In fact it seems that this Board can be regarded as being an agency of the United States and United Kingdom Governments charged with functions of direct concern only to those countries. If the Board develops its activities beyond these limits, Canada will have a better claim than any other country to be a member of it.

Mr. Donald Nelson has suggested that a new Canadian-United States body might be created to parallel the work of this Board, especially in order to ensure that Canada is consulted at an early stage in production planning. A two-man Board composed of Mr. Donald Nelson and the Minister of Munitions and Supply would be a useful supplement to the existing agencies. Although the functions intended for such a Board would seem to fall within the scope of the Joint War Production Committee, that body is in fact too large to maintain the sort of contact required; its main task has been to co-ordinate through its technical sub-committees the production programs of the different war industries of Canada and the United States. Should Mr. Nelson's idea be adopted, some changes will become necessary in the terms of reference of the Joint War Production Committee, or alternatively that body might be merged in the new two-man Board.

(f) THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD.

The High Commissioner in London and the Canadian Minister in Washington were instructed on July 13th to present identical requests to the United States and the United Kingdom Governments for full Canadian membership on this Board.³³ No reply has yet been received. The Chairman of the British Food Mission in Washington, Mr. Brand, and the United States Executive Secretary of the Board, Mr. Wheeler, recently visited Ottawa to discuss the request. They indicated that there were very serious difficulties in the way of full Canadian membership. Their chief argument centered around the contention that if Canada were added to the Board, several other countries would have an equal claim to membership. An alternative scheme was advanced by Mr. Brand which involved the right of a Canadian representative to full information on the Board's proceedings and to be present at discussions when Canadian interests were directly affected. It was suggested that Canada should be fully represented on the Committees depending on the Board, and also that a joint Agricultural Policy Committee should be set up between Canada and the United States in Ottawa. The chief items in Mr. Brand's compromise have been held by the Government to be unacceptable on the ground that top-level participation in the work of the Board is essential. It was felt that if membership on the Board is refused a method of co-operation like that in effect in respect of raw materials and like the suggestion of Mr. Donald Nelson respecting the Production Board might meet the situation. This could take the form of a small Canadian-United States Committee tied in with the Combined Board at a high level by overlapping membership on the United States side. No action has yet been taken to pursue this matter.

There has come under consideration at the same time the proposals under discussion in Washington for the creation of a United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The draft of these proposals suggests the establishment of a United Nations Council consisting of a representative of each of the United Nations. Between sessions of the Council (which would be held infrequently) a Policy Committee would exercise the Council's powers and would be made up of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, the U.S.S.R. and China. We have taken the position that this does not provide for adequate representation of Canada, since Canada will be expected to contribute largely to post-war relief. This attitude has been made known to Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, who is in Washington discussing the proposed organization with the United States authorities.

4. POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE COURSES.

The Combined Boards are technically agencies of the United States and the United Kingdom Governments alone, although they are charged with giving due weight to the interests of the other United Nations. Their members are Ministers and officials of these two governments, all of whom are charged as well with important national duties. The staffs attached to the Boards also consist of officers of the two governments most of whom perform other national duties. Other countries are represented only by members on some of the committees dependent on the Boards.

One course which might be followed would be to maintain and emphasize the two-power character of the Boards and perhaps to arrange for a clarifying statement to this effect to be issued in London and Washington. It could then be said that our entire concern in connection with them was to ensure that Canadian interests were borne in mind in framing their recommendations so that such of these recommendations as concerned Canada would be more readily adopted by us. This might be acceptable to the United Kingdom and the United States Governments, but it would not be a desirable solution of the problem. The more effective the Boards are, the more must their proposals carry the consent of all the United Nations concerned with them. To emphasize that they were agencies only of two governments would be to invite constant departures from their recommendations. One attraction of this solution would be that we could match the Combined Boards with our own joint arrangements with the United States, but this would be more a talking point than a reality.

Both in their terms of reference and in the proposals since advanced in Washington and London there are frequent expressions of a desire to ensure that the other United Nations are appropriately associated with the work of the Boards. This in practice seems to mean that there is some readiness to invite participation by representatives of other countries when the direct interests of these countries are involved in the particular matter under discussion. The intention seems to go no further than this. If we are satisfied with some machinery for bringing our direct interests to the notice of the Boards, this might be developed through arrangements for all the Boards similar in general to those which have been worked out for the Combined Chiefs of Staff. This method, however, inevitably reduces the role of the other United Nations to that of auxiliaries. It excludes them from participating in major decisions of policy and it would also leave it to the Boards themselves to decide when the direct interests of another country were at issue. In our contact with the organs for the direction of the war, should we be content merely with protecting our interests?

It seems desirable and important that the question should always be approached from the point of view of efficiency, and that considerations of national status and prestige should not be given undue weight. It is obvious that the Boards would lose all influence if they were to be made up of representatives from all the United Nations. We have been careful to seek membership only on the two Boards to the work of which we could make the greatest contribution. In each case the importance of Canada among the United Nations is so much greater than the importance of the next country in line that preferential treatment can justly be claimed. Our purpose should be to improve the efficiency of the Combined machinery, not to secure a better position for Canada as an end in itself.

There seems to be a growing feeling that the current arrangements for the direction of the war are altogether too much an Anglo-American monopoly. This feeling is to be found in several other of the United Nations, notably China, Australia, New Zealand, The Netherlands and Norway. If the Combined Boards grow in importance, this sense of exclusion from the inner circle of control may increase until it amounts to frustration and has serious effects on the war effort. When the Canadian Army is in action, public interest in our part in the high direction of the war will increase. Similarly as shortages in Canada grow more stringent, public interest will increase in our part in the international control of raw materials and food. A broader question therefore arises. Has the time come when an attempt should be made to embody in some type of international organization the principle expressed in the phrase "United Nations"? If this question is answered affirmatively, it would be appropriate for the Canadian Government to take the initiative in putting forward proposals. These proposals might have the double objective of recognizing through membership in some new body the partnership of all countries at war with the Axis, and of giving to the Combined Boards (and perhaps to other regional bodies concerned with the direction of the war effort) a mandate in the name of the United Nations.

One possible form of organization would be the creation of a Council of the United Nations on which all should be represented. The Council itself would be called to meet rarely and then principally for the performance of formal acts such as the issuance of declarations of purpose on the lines of the Declaration of January 1st, 1942. At its first meeting the Council might establish a series of bodies concerned with particular aspects of war organization. There might be, for instance, a Food Council of the United Nations composed of representatives of the six or eight most important countries either as producers or consumers of foodstuffs. The Combined Food Board might become the standing executive agency of the Food Council and thus be turned into an inter-Allied body. The Food Council could itself meet every two or three months, preferably in Washington, and between its meetings the Combined Food Board would have full power to carry on its work. Similar schemes could be developed in the spheres occupied by the other Combined Boards.

There are, of course, great difficulties in the way of the adoption of any such scheme. The special position of Russia would in itself be a serious obstacle. Undoubtedly the development of the scheme would require long negotiations. Even if it were expected that these were unlikely to come to fruition, it might still be worth while to put forward the idea. The advancement of so large a proposal might bring about the adoption of smaller measures which would yet be a considerable improvement on the present position. For Canada to take the initiative would also help to remove the constant misconceptions about the standing of Canada. Canada is still too often considered in some quarters as being a dependent part of the British Commonwealth, while in other quarters there is a tendency to treat us as being virtually a dependency of the United States. At times as well we figure awkwardly as a unit in the group lumped together as the Dominions.

In principle each of the United Nations should contribute to the direction of the general war effort in proportion to the value of its contribution to that effort. The principle is easy to state but difficult to apply. It has not been applied in the organization of the Combined Boards. Resentment, however, is not a useful emotion towards winning the war. Though we may have good cause for complaint over the manner in which the combined organizations have been built up, the aim must now be to improve the machinery even though we may not altogether like its pattern. If the view is not accepted that it is important to make the direction of the war more of a United Nations matter, then probably we ought to be satisfied with minor changes in the present arrangements, so that we may be assured of a constant flow of information on the work of the Combined Boards and of the right of easy approach to them when direct Canadian interests are involved.

METHOD OF ASSOCIATION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT WITH THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD

The Combined Food Board, composed of Mr. Claude R. Wickard, United States Secretary of Agriculture, and Mr. R. H. Brand, Head of the British Food Mission in Washington, was established on June 9, 1942. The duties of the Board are to consider and formulate plans with regard to any food questions in which the United States and the United Kingdom have a common concern, and also "To work in collaboration with others of the United Nations toward the best utilization of their food resources, and, in collaboration with the interested nation or nations, to formulate plans and recommendations for the development, expansion, purchase, or other effective use of their food resources". The decisions of the Board are to be rendered in the form of recommendations to the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States.

The machinery for the operation of the Board is as follows:

Joint Executive Officers: For the United States, Leslie A. Wheeler, Director of Foreign Agricultural Relations, U.S.D.A.; for the United Kingdom, Maurice I. Hutton of the British Food Mission.

Advisers: Paul H. Appleby, United States Under-Secretary of Agriculture, adviser to Mr. Wickard, and E. Twentyman, adviser to Mr. Brand.

Commodity Committees: The problem of allocating foods and food materials in short supply among the United Nations will be dealt with in the first instance, by Committees on specific commodities or groups of commodities. The membership will be on the technical level and will consist of representatives from the United States and United Kingdom government agencies concerned. Representatives from other United Nations will be invited to become members in cases where their direct interests are involved. Five commodity committees have been established in Washington: agricultural seeds, fats and oils, meat and meat products, spices, and sugar; two in London, on tea allocation and United Kingdom agricultural policy. Additional committees will be established as needed. The Committees will make recommendations to the Board on the commodities assigned to them.

Committee on Sources of Supply and Distribution: It has been proposed to establish a committee to develop means of ensuring that the sources of supply and distribution of foods are arranged in such a way as to minimize the amount of shipping required for food transport. It is suggested that this committee, when set up, would consist of representatives from United Kingdom and United States government agencies and from other United Nations directly concerned.

Inter-agency Committee: This Committee, under the chairmanship of the Joint Executive Officers of the Board, is composed of representatives of United States Government agencies — State Department, Board of Economic Warfare, Office of Lend-Lease Administration, Food Requirements Committee, Agricultural Marketing Administration, War Shipping Administration — a representative from the Combined Shipping Adjustment Board and representatives from the British Merchant Shipping Mission, the British Food Mission, and the British Embassy. The inter-agency Committee will consider and advise upon recommendations proposed to be made by the Board and the members will indicate the attitudes of their agencies toward the proposed recommendations.

London Food Committee: This committee consists of representatives from the Government of the United Kingdom, the British Dominions (except Canada), the British Colonies, India, Belgian Congo and the French Colonies in Africa under the control of the Fighting French. This committee is established in London and is not a committee of the Board. The purpose of the London Committee is to collect information and make provisional recommendations to the United Kingdom member of the Combined Food Board regarding the needs and resources of the Empire as a whole and also of the Allies and neutrals outside the Western Hemisphere. Because of direct contacts with Washington, Canada has indicated that she does not wish to become a member of the London Food Committee.

On July 15th the Canadian Government addressed a request to the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom for full membership on the Combined Food Board. No formal reply to this request has been received but Mr. Brand has presented an alternative proposal. He proposed (i) the formation of a joint Agricultural Policy Committee of the United States and Canada as a Committee of the Board, sitting in Ottawa; (ii) Canadian representation on any committees formed within the Board's organization and affecting Canada; (iii) right of a Canadian representative to be kept fully informed of the Board's proceedings and to be present, but not as a member of the Board, at discussions where Canadian interests are directly affected.³⁵ Mr. Brand was told that his proposals were not considered satisfactory by the Canadian Government which continues to adhere to its original request for full membership.

In the meantime the Board has set up several commodity committees and Canada has been asked to send representatives. It was arranged that Canadian representatives could participate informally in the work of the committees but no formal appointments were made so as not to prejudice the Canadian position respecting membership on the Board itself. It has been arranged that Mrs. Turner will attend the meetings of the Fats and Oils Committee, Mr. L.W. Pearsall the meetings of the Meat and Meat Products Committee, Mr. Nelson Young the meetings of the Agricultural Seeds Committee, Mr. Peart the meetings of the Fertilizer Committee, and Mr. Hobbins the meetings of the Sugar Committee. These Canadian officials will attend for the purpose of giving information and receiving information but are not to be regarded as representatives of Canada on the committees.

When Mr. Brand was informed that his proposals were not acceptable he wished advice as to what he should do. It was suggested to him that he should take no further steps for the moment until he had received a reply to his memorandum. In connection with the preparation of a reply it might be desirable to consider various alternatives. If it is felt that Canada's attempt to obtain full membership is hopeless, at least in the near future, perhaps a satisfactory method of association with the Combined Food Board, for the time being, could be worked out along the lines of the Munitions Assignments Board. In the case of the latter it is suggested that a Canadian member would be added to the Board when Canadian production was being assigned and that Canada would be represented on the working committees of the Board. In the case of the Combined Food Board the arrangement might be as follows:

1. Canada to become a member of the Board whenever matters directly affecting Canada are under consideration. At an interdepartmental meeting held on August 6th it was suggested that Canada should seek full membership on the Board so far as it concerns all commodities produced in North America. Alternatively Canada might seek full membership so far as it concerns commodities that are exported from both Canada and the United States.

2. Canada to be kept fully informed of the Board's proceedings. The specific arrangement for doing this is to be worked out. One of the purposes would be to ensure that Canada would be in a position to know when matters of direct concern to her will be under consideration.

3. Canada to be represented on all the committees of the Board in which she is interested.

4. Canada to appoint an official to be located in Washington whose functions and status would be similar to the two Joint Executive Officers of the Board. This official would co-ordinate the activities of the Canadian representatives on the committees of the Board, perhaps attend most of the meetings of the committees and generally act as liaison and clearing house on Canadian food matters in Washington.

5. The formation of a joint Agricultural Policy Committee of Canada and the United States. The composition and purpose of such a joint committee would be similar to that of the Joint War Production Committee. The joint Agricultural Policy Committee would be asked to study and to make recommendations on the co-ordination of the production goals and agricultural production programmes of Canada and the United States. The committee would consist of officials responsible for planning and for carrying out production policies in the two countries; on the United States side, the Director of the A.A.A., the Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which is the planning organization in the United States Department of Agriculture, and a representative from the United States Food Requirements Committee; on the Canadian side perhaps, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, the Foods Administrator and one other official. If thought desirable, one or two representatives could be added on each side from other government departments. It would be advisable to establish such a Joint Agricultural Policy Committee regardless of the method of association of the Canadian Government with the Combined Board since the Board has no machinery for coordinating production plans and policies in the two countries. Effective co-ordination in this respect would be an important contribution to the joint war effort. The joint Agricultural Policy Committee would not be a committee of the Combined Board but it would work in collaboration with it. It would receive information from the Board regarding requirements from North America and would supply information to the Board regarding Canadian and United States production plans. The joint Agricultural Policy Committee would make its recommendations directly to the two Governments.

Mr. Pearson and Mr. Deutsch had an opportunity for an informal discussion with Mr. Wheeler in Washington. The possibility of the above approach came up in the discussion and, offhand, Mr. Wheeler thought that it was worth exploring. He emphasized the desirability of establishing a joint Agricultural Policy Committee along the above lines. He said he had briefly discussed his proposals, which he had made earlier, regarding the joint policy committee with Secretary Wickard and other officials in his department and that they had indicated general approval of the idea.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I thank you for your letter of August 17,¹ enclosing copy of a memorandum, which has been prepared in your Department, on the relationship of the Canadian Government to the Combined Food Board.³⁶

I have read over this memorandum with great interest and find that it contains a very useful summary of developments to date, but I feel that we have some reservations with respect to the suggestions put forward concerning the method of associating the Canadian Government with the work of the Board.

The most important of the suggestions is No. 1, which proposes that Canada would be a member of the Board whenever matters directly affecting Canada are under consideration. There is certainly no harm in putting forward this request; although, in the light of the ill success which has attended previous efforts to become associated with the Board, we cannot be too hopeful that even this moderate request will be agreed to by the United Kingdom and the United States.

Suggestion No. 2, that Canada be kept fully informed of the Board's proceedings, is substantially in line with one of the proposals made by Mr. Brand and should present no difficulty.

Suggestion No. 3, that Canada be represented on all the Committees of the Board in which she is interested, is in accord with the original suggestion as to the manner in which Canada should participate in the deliberations of the Board, but has been held to be an inadequate form of representation without more direct participation at a higher level.

Suggestion No. 4, that Canada appoint an official to be located in Washington, whose functions and status would be similar to the two joint executive officers of the board, would only be practicable if the United Kingdom and the United States would agree that this official should have the same status as Mr. Hutton and Mr. Wheeler — which is extremely doubtful.

Suggestion No. 5, regarding the formation of a Joint Agricultural Policy Committee of Canada and the United States, is probably the proposal which requires the most careful consideration. As Mr. Wrong has pointed out in his most excellent memorandum on Allied organizations for the direction of the war,³⁷ our main interest is not to be regarded, on the one hand, as only one of the Dominions or, on the other hand, as a dependency of the United States. For the first reason we should refrain from official participation in the London Food Committee as a means of cooperating with the Combined Food Board. For the second reason we should take care that our interests are not represented on the Combined Food Board chiefly by the United States. This is the danger that we see in the proposal for the formation of a Joint Agricultural Policy Committee of Canada and the United States. We are doubtful if there would be enough useful work for this Committee to do apart from matters arising out of the Combined Food Board. I also fear that there may be a tendency on the part of this Joint Committee, the same as of other joint committees, for the United States to use the Committee as a means of proposing policies which, while reasonable in appearance, may be politically inexpedient in Canada.

Taking all these considerations into account, we would be inclined to propose that for the present no irrevocable steps should be taken in connection with Canadian representation on the Combined Food Board. We might act upon suggestion No. 1 in your memorandum and request that Canada become a member of the Board whenever matters directly affecting Canada are under consideration, but if this suggestion is not agreed to we should then continue to confine our participation to the unofficial representation on the various Sub-Committees, which has already been arranged. This would give us time to see how the Combined Food Board develops and if it proves to be more important than we in this Department anticipate efforts could then be renewed for more adequate Canadian representation at the higher level, in a somewhat similar manner as that in which we have been attacking the problem of Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board.

Yours faithfully,

L. D. WILGESS

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have your letter of August 17th[†] and enclosure consisting of a memorandum covering the relationship of the Canadian Government to the Combined Food Board.³⁸ I am rather at a loss to make suggestions. I assume I am not expected to make any comment about the membership of the Combined Food Board because that is obviously a matter affecting high Government policy. So far as Commodity Committees are concerned, I am of the opinion that the proposed arrangements will be found to be workable, provided that the appropriate representation is appointed. I think the question of personnel on these working Committees is all important.

I must confess that I am far from clear about how the decisions of such Committees are to be actually implemented. One of the main factors still troubling me is that in certain questions there may be divided opinion between departments in Canada, in regard to what our production programme should be. Consequently, any representative on a committee dealing with such subjects would either be in a quandary to know what views to express, or would be in accord with one point of view and may not represent united Canadian opinion. It seems essential, therefore, in regard to some questions that there should first be established a means for reaching agreement among ourselves about what the Canadian policy is to be, before it is expressed elsewhere.

Yours very truly,

D. GORDON

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, August 25, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Thanks very much for yours of the 18th[†] enclosing copy of Mr. Wrong's memorandum reviewing the inter-allied machinery for the direction of the war, contacts with it already established by Canada, and the various courses which we might now pursue.³⁹ This memorandum gives a very lucid presentation of the whole problem and should be very helpful in enabling a conclusion to be reached as to the attitude which Canada should now take.

Personally, I can see no sound alternative to equal representation for Canada on the Joint Boards in those fields where Canada has much to contribute and is endeavouring to make that contribution her maximum. This point of view is not based on mere emotional resentment nor on mere considerations of national status and prestige (far less than most people, I think, do I place emphasis on status and prestige); on the contrary, it is based solely on the desire to find ways and means of securing the most efficient prosecution of the war and of laying the basis for a post-war world structure that will have some chance of safeguarding international peace and world prosperity. Over the last few months there has been developing in my mind an ever deepening sense of alarm, not only at the military course of the war, but also at the organizational developments, the ever-growing development of an Anglo-American monopoly of the direction of all war activities (except those on the Russian front) and the ever-increasing evidences that Washington and London look to a future world authority based on the two, three or four great masses of power. There is nothing in past experience to indicate that the few large powers possess all the intelligence and the foresight or that in running a world they will be solely guided by unselfish devotion to the general, rather than the national, good. There is much in experience to demonstrate that without the full and equal participation in vital decisions of all interested nations, one cannot stir the mass of the people to the depths of effort and of sacrifice behind any cause however noble.

Canada in all conscience is a country difficult to govern. Our people have been making a great war effort — what they have regarded as a hundred percent war effort — but in my opinion morale is now at a rather low ebb throughout the country, and in the next four or five weeks the first real test of what the war will mean in reduced standard of living will be faced. As we well know, there are great risks inherent in the situation but we expect to surmount them — barely to surmount them. Thereafter we expect an ever-increasing measure of sacrifice from our people. If at any time in the near future they should become conscious of the subordinate role in decisions, though not in effort and sacrifice, which we are apparently supposed to play in the war, I for one would not be prepared to answer for the consequences. I am certain that the effect on our effort would be immediate and substantial. I know also that in the post-war world we would not play the enlightened role which I am hoping we shall play.

As Mr. Wrong says, the principle is clear — each of the United Nations should contribute to the direction of the general war effort in proportion to the value of its contribution to that effort. It is, of course, obvious that while the principle is easy to state, it is difficult to apply. I think we are probably guilty of not having thought through this problem long before this and of having clear-cut proposals to make. It is high time that we should formulate specific proposals which would represent the application to Canada's case of the principle just referred to. We should then take a strong line, and if we fail in our representations, we fail — but the responsibility is on other shoulders.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Further telephone conversation (Murchie-Pope) of 19/8 re C.M.A.B.

One. I venture to suggest that in view of probable reaction of others of the United Nations, Burns' letter of 7 August⁴⁰ constitutes a generous solution of our proposals for Canadian representation, and in the circumstances it is the maximum in their power to offer to us. In this connection Burns and Macready have repeatedly said that in spite of apparent limitation in scope of Canadian representation actually they intend that Canadian member should attend all meetings in their entirety. Moreover Burns added on another occasion that as in his view every assignment question must inevitably have some bearing on the assignment of Canadian production, the Canadian representation in actual practice would be pretty well complete.

Two. As regards Canadian support in Washington for Canadian element of British bulk bid on C.M.A.B. from United States and Canadian production, I find it difficult to see how this could be given here except indirectly. It is not, I suggest, so much a matter for the Canadian representative in Washington, as it is for the Canadian representative in London. It is in London that the Canadian case in respect of any item must be argued and established. Even if such procedure was not contrary to that which has hitherto been accepted by all parties it could not be done effectively here. The logical consequence of such a proposal would be that on occasion the Canadian representative in Washington would find himself bidding against the British representative, the one for the Canadian Army in the United Kingdom and the other for the British Army in the United Kingdom and elsewhere throughout the world. In such circumstances the whole machinery would break down. Rather does it seem that the most effective course would be for the Canadian representative in Washington to support the British bulk bid, directly or indirectly as opportunity offered.

Three. On general grounds it would seem that it is much to Canada's advantage to accept the current offer. We have now an opportunity to obtain representation, on a lower scale it is true than that of the United Kingdom and the United States, but nevertheless immeasurably higher than that attained or likely to be attained by any of the smaller nations. It would put us in a class by ourselves and this we appear to have been seeking for a long time. Parity with the big two powers being beyond our reach surely it is expedient to take the next best thing particularly when that next best thing happens to be good. So far as question as to whether or not we should table all Canadian physical production or only that to Canadian order is concerned, I feel that if the latter course were adopted we would from every point of view be deliberately putting ourselves in a position of inferiority to the United States. And if the Deputy Minister of Finance came away from Washington some months ago assured that all Canadian production could be assigned here without thereby impairing Canada's dollar position we should not have any worry on that score. In any event it would seem to be a matter for the Department of Finance. In this connection much water has flowed under the bridge since Pearl Harbour. Today there are items being assigned by the C.M.A.B. as United States production orders for which were originally placed by the British Purchasing Commission and paid for by British funds. Message ends. Ends.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

6. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported the result of conversations, since the last meeting, with the Minister of Munitions and Supply and Mr. J.B. Carswell, Director General of the Department's Washington office. They were now satisfied that General Pope be directed to reply to General Burns, indicating that the proposal he had made for Canadian participation in the work of the Board would be acceptable to the Canadian government.

Mr. Carswell had felt strongly, however, that Canada should accept no responsibility for the tabling of American orders from War Supplies Limited. The product of these orders would, in any event, reach the Board through the United States, and Canada would be represented when final allocation was made.

As to the Canadian relationship to the Board when the Canadian member would not be entitled to sit, as such, both General Pope and Mr. Carswell were satisfied that continuous contact could be maintained by having the Canadian member regarded as an observer on such occasions.

7. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE said that Munitions and Supply had stipulated two conditions to acceptance of the Burns' proposal. The first had to do with the replacement of the army representative in Washington. The second was that War Supplies' orders be excepted from the statement of production tabled in Washington by the Canadian member.

The second condition ignored a vital fact, namely, that War Supplies' orders competed directly with those for the Canadian forces and, in order to determine the proportion to be excepted from the Canadian total which our representative would table, a prior allocation would, in fact, have to be made in Canada. This would cut across the whole principle of pooling and would effectively preclude Canada from bidding in Washington upon our own production.

8. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY emphasized the importance from the exchange point of view, of not disturbing the present system of orders through War Supplies Limited. If the product of these orders were to be pooled by Canada, further orders would not be forthcoming.

9. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, referred the problem to the Ministers of National Defence and Munitions and Supply, for further consideration.

SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: In further inconclusive consideration in War Committee yesterday of question of Canadian relationship to Munitions Assignments Board, there was some difference of opinion with regard to the probable consequences of including production under War Supplies orders in statement of current Canadian production of finished munitions which would be tabled in Washington if arrangements for Canadian participation in Combined Board were consummated. It was represented that if War Supplies production was not included in Canadian total, Canada would be precluded from bidding for any part of this production because allocation of global Canadian production of munitions ordered by Canadian Defence Departments and by War Supplies Limited would, in fact, have been effected in Ottawa when proportion of production attributable to each order was decided. I was inclined to argue that, under present arrangements, question of who did formal tabling was of little importance since if United States tabled War Supplies production it would do so in the same way as it tabled all domestic United States production and that Canada could bid for its requirements in Washington of War Supplies output in same way as it could bid for items of United States production needed for Canadian North American requirements. In these circumstances, I did not see much objection to meeting Munitions and Supply desire to have War Supplies orders tabled by United States instead of Canada. Would you discuss this point with Pope and Carswell and let me have your views.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Your teletype EX-1974 of August 27th, Munitions Assignments Board. I was unable to discuss this matter with Carswell who left yesterday for Canada. I have however, discussed it with General Pope who was in agreement with the views expressed below but who feels that the question is now more political than technical and as such outside his responsibility. I think you are right in the specific point you make that if War Supplies Limited orders were tabled as American production we could still bid for them in the same way that we bid for other United States production. The mere tabling of them would not in my view constitute allocating them to the United States. I do not see, however, why we should divide Canadian production in this way for munitions assignment purposes. Surely the only point involved is a financial one and I thought that this difficulty had been removed after the visit to Washington of Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Clark some time ago.⁴¹ If the Department of Finance is satisfied in this regard I do not see why the Department of Munitions and Supply should worry, as their orders would not be affected merely by tabling of all Canadian production in Washington. On the other hand it would be politically humiliating if we now had to tell the United States and United Kingdom that by Canadian production we no longer meant all Canadian production and that we were excluding from that production a very considerable proportion for United States order. We have all along argued that Canadian production meant all Canadian physical production. In fact we pointed that out specifically on page four of our memorandum of July 2nd⁴² which we delivered to Mr. Hopkins when we stated "all Canadian production includes all finished military stores produced in Canada whether the original orders had been placed by the Canadian, United Kingdom, United States or other Governments". The Munitions Assignments Board finally accepted that argument and it would be most embarrassing now to tell them that we have now changed our mind and that they are now offering us more than we can accept and that we only want representation on the Board in respect of the allocation of part of Canadian production. Furthermore if we consider Canadian production to United States order, as United States production, might not the British argue that we should consider Canadian production to their order as British production which would in that case be tabled in London.

For the above reasons I hope personally that we maintain the position set out in our despatch [note] to the State Department of May 13th and reaffirmed in the Minister's letter to Mr. Hopkins of July 3rd.[†] Ends.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

RE WA-2242⁴³

Thanks for sending me copy of the above cypher despatch from Mr. Pearson, which I am very glad to have for my file.

The position offered us is by no means ideal, but probably it is tolerable, particularly if it is intended that public announcement can be made. Certainly I believe it is the best we can now get, and I would be prepared to recommend its acceptance.

I note Burns and Macready have repeatedly stated their intention that the Canadian member of the Board should attend all meetings in their entirety. I got this impression also from Carswell last week, but two or three days ago Mavor told me that there are recent indications that this would not be the case. At least one session, called a secret session, at which the Canadian representative was or was to be excluded, was held and Mavor was inclined to think this kind of thing might happen more frequently in future.

The question as to whether or not we should table all Canadian production or, alternatively, allow W.S.L.⁴⁴ production to be tabled as U.S. production, appears difficult to get agreement on. After my last meeting in Washington I was prepared to accept Gen. Aurand's assurances but Carswell told Robertson and myself the other day that after that meeting he had talked to Aurand and that after some discussion Aurand had finally agreed with his point of view. It is difficult to determine to what extent Aurand's changed position represented merely acquiescence in what he believed to be a strongly held Canadian position. As I said, I was satisfied with the so-called Ralston formula but I must admit that the Howe formula is probably somewhat safer from the exchange point of view. On the other hand, Col. Ralston feels that the Howe formula is only necessary if you assume some selfishness around the M.A.B. table, and, if you make this assumption, the interests of D.N.D.⁴⁵ will not be adequately protected by the Howe formula. Can the opposing points of view be reconciled?

Dear Dr. Clark,

With reference to your letter of August 29th, I think you should see the latest exchange with Washington on the subject of the Munitions Assignments Board. I am therefore enclosing a copy of EX-1974 of August 27th sent by Mr. Robertson in view of last week's discussion in the War Committee of this matter, and of Mr. Pearson's reply WA-2286 of August 28th.

The question will come before the War Committee again this week, and I very much hope that we shall be able to arrive at a final decision. Mr. Pearson states very well the difficulties which would arise if we change our offer to pool all munitions produced in Canada so as to exclude production on orders of War Supplies Limited. I am not sure how much importance should be attached to the point which he makes at the end, that if we do this, the United Kingdom Government might reasonably argue that Canadian production to their order should be tabled by them in London. It would certainly be embarrassing if they were to make such a proposal, but I imagine that in view of the financial arrangements between Canada and the United Kingdom, they would be unlikely to do so.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

copy of which you sent me under date of August 17th.[†] I am reluctant to have Canada consider anything but full and equal partnership on this Combined Board. The draft suggests that Canada should have full membership whenever matters directly affecting Canada are under consideration; perhaps the more practical alternative is to have full membership when consideration is being given to commodities of which Canada is an exporter. My views in regard to representation on this Board have been somewhat re-enforced by an opinion expressed to me by Sir Frederick Phillips the other day. He was inclined to feel that our munitions production was so small in comparison with that of either the U.K. or the U.S. that we could scarcely expect full representation on such a Board as the Munitions Assignments Board, but he did express the view that in the field of foodstuffs Canada's position was probably such as to warrant full representation. I think we should take a clear and forthright stand on this whole matter. If we must begin participation in the technical sub-committees before the major question is determined, let us by all means do so with full reservation of our right to full representation on the Board itself.

I think the proposal for a joint agricultural policy committee of Canada and the United States is sound and worthwhile; it is only incidentally connected with the Combined Food Board question. It should have some representatives other than those from the Department of Agriculture as suggested in the draft memorandum.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

COMBINED BOARDS AND RELATED MATTERS

I. MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

The suggestions made by General Burns on August 5th⁴⁷ for limited Canadian membership on this Board have not yet been answered. A decision is urgently required.

II. PRODUCTION AND RESOURCES BOARD

Sir Robert Sinclair, who represents Mr. Oliver Lyttleton as United Kingdom member of this Board, said when in Ottawa on August 31st that he would be ready to support the addition of a Canadian member to the Board. He feels that this will be much more satisfactory than the establishment of a separate two-man Production Board between Canada and the United States — a proposal but forward by Mr. Donald Nelson. He considers that very close Canadian association with this Board at various levels is essential. The Board is finding it necessary to extend its scope to include civilian production as well as military production. Sir Robert has asked that the suggestion of adding a Canadian member should not be pursued until he has submitted his recommendations to Mr. Lyttleton.

III. PROPOSED COMMONWEALTH SUPPLY COUNCIL

The United Kingdom Government has proposed the establishment in London of a Commonwealth Supply Council (see Dominions Office Circular telegram D.384 of August 28th)[†]. This Council would serve —

(a) as a clearing house on questions concerning the production and supply of raw materials in the Commonwealth (absorbing the present Empire Clearing House);

(b) as a collector of information on requirements and production of non-munition supplies, in order to present the Commonwealth picture to the Production and Resources Board in Washington; and

(c) as the means of contact for Commonwealth countries with this Board and also with the Joint War Production Staff in England.

The proposed council would consist of the British Minister of Production, four other British Cabinet Ministers and the Dominion High Commissioners. In a separate telegram (No. 180 of August 28th)[†], the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs stated that the special position of Canada in relation to the Council is appreciated. He has asked to be informed of the wishes of the Canadian Government with regard to the association of Canadian representatives with the activities of the Council.

It seems that in the matters to be dealt with by the Council, Canadian interests are much more closely tied in with Washington than with London, and that it would be inadvisable for Canada to be represented on the Council. Canada has not accepted membership on the Empire Clearing House on raw materials and the London Food Committee. This question, however, is closely related to the question of the connection of Canada with the Production and Resources Board and the Raw Materials Board in Washington.

IV. FOOD BOARD

On July 15th a request for full Canadian membership on the Food Board was addressed to the United Kingdom and United States Governments.⁴⁸ A compromise proposal for associating Canada with the work of the Combined Food Board, put forward on July 20th by Mr. R. H. Brand, the United Kingdom member,⁴⁹ was rejected on July 29th by the War Committee as unsatisfactory. This information has been given verbally to Mr. Brand and Mr. Malcolm MacDonald. The United Kingdom authorities are understood to be expecting a full statement in writing of the views of the Canadian Government, and hope that we shall suggest an acceptable compromise. In the meantime, Canadian experts have been attending unofficially the meetings of the Commodity Committees of the Board. It should be decided whether any arrangement short of full membership will be satisfactory to Canada.

V. RELIEF ORGANIZATION

Draft proposals for a United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration were also considered by the War Committee on July 20th.⁵⁰ These proposals were prepared in Washington by British and United States officials. The War Committee decided that the vesting of authority in a Policy Committee composed of representatives in the United States, United Kingdom, U.S.S.R. and China was not satisfactory from the Canadian point of view. Sir Frederick Leith-Ross was so informed. The United Kingdom High Commissioner states that a written statement of the Canadian viewpoint is expected, and that it is hoped that this statement will include alternative proposals.

COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS, WASHINGTON AND LONDON

18. THE SECRETARY submitted a memorandum describing the present position in regard to Canada's relationship to the Munitions Assignments Board, Production and Resources Board, a proposed Commonwealth Supply council, the Food Board and the proposed United Nations Relief Organization. Copies of the memorandum had been circulated.

(External Affairs memorandum, undated, C.W.C. document 262).

19. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that Sir Robert Sinclair, who represented the U.K. Minister of Production as member of the Production and Resources Board in Washington, had recently been in Ottawa. Sir Robert's own personal view had been that Canadian participation in the work of this Board, at the highest level, was desirable and would prove much more satisfactory than a separate Canada-U.S. Production Board such as had been proposed by Mr. Donald Nelson.

Sir Robert would support a request for full Canadian membership and would submit a recommendation, in this sense, to Mr. Lyttleton.

This suggestion, if accepted by the United Kingdom and the United States, would provide an entirely satisfactory solution and permit of close Canadian association with the Board throughout.

20. MR. KING said that Sir Robert had also expressed the view that we should accept the Burns' proposals for membership on the Munitions Assignments Board. He had been satisfied that, despite the formal limitations suggested, the ⁵⁰ Document 195.

Canadian member would, in fact, participate fully in the work of this Board, for all practical purposes.

21. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY agreed that full membership on the Production and Resources Board would be entirely satisfactory.

The expedient of separate Canada-U.S. organizations was only second-best to top level representation on the combined organizations. It had been adopted only because full membership had, so far, been opposed by Britain and the United States.

As to the Burns' proposal for the Munitions Assignments Board, this should be accepted, but War Supplies orders should not be included in Canadian production tabled by the Canadian representative in Washington.

22. THE ACTING UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that the Legation in Washington had pointed out that the exception of War Supplies orders from Canadian munitions pooled in Washington involved a serious modification of our original proposal to the U.S. government, in which we had offered to pool all production in return for full membership.

It had also been pointed out that, if this were done, the United Kingdom might claim similar control over Canadian production to British order.

23. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE mentioned two conditions stipulated by Munitions and Supply to acceptance of the Burns' proposals, namely, the replacement of the principal Army representative dealing with allocations in Washington, and the withholding of War Supplies orders.

After reviewing the whole situation, National Defence had come to the conclusion that the present proposals for Canadian membership in the Munitions Assignments Board should be refused and existing arrangements allowed to continue, unless the conditions stipulated by Mr. Howe were to be withdrawn.

24. MR. HOWE again referred to the anticipated effect upon U.S. orders in Canada of including all Canadian production in that tabled by a Canadian representative on the Munitions Assignments Board. The U.S. Ordnance could not be expected to continue to place orders if they could not be assured of deliveries. As to Army representation in Washington, this was a matter for discussion between Mr. Ralston and himself.

25. THE SECRETARY described British proposals for the establishment of a Commonwealth Supply Council which would act as a clearing house for production and supply of raw materials and "non-munition" supplies, and as a means of contact for Commonwealth countries with the Production and Resources Board at Washington.

Canadian interests were much more closely tied in with Washington, than with London, and it would appear inadvisable for Canada to be represented on the proposed Council. The question was closely related to Canada's connection with the Production and Resources Board and the Raw Materials Board. It was recognized in London that the Canadian position differed from that of the other Dominions.

26. MR. WRONG described the proposals which had been made by Mr. Brand and by Sir Frederick Leith-Ross for Canadian association with the Food Board and the proposed Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. These proposals had involved participation at less than the highest level and had already been found unsatisfactory by the War Committee.⁵¹

The Canadian government's views had been communicated, verbally, to Mr. Brand and to Sir Frederick, but it was understood that the United Kingdom were expecting written communications in the hope that alternative proposals might be put forward.

27. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that Canada should seek to obtain full membership on the Production and Resources Board;

(b) that the Ministers of National Defence and Munitions and Supply confer further regarding Canadian association with the Munitions Assignments Board;

(c) that Canada be not represented on the proposed Commonwealth Supply Council;

(d) that U. K. authorities be informed in writing that proposals put forward for Canadian association with the Food Board and the proposed Relief organization were not satisfactory to the Canadian government.

Ottawa, September 3, 1942

My dear Mr. Brand,

I know that before you left Ottawa at the end of July you were promised by Mr. Robertson, who is now on a holiday, a written reply to your memorandum of July 28th making suggestions concerning the means whereby the Canadian Government should be associated with the work of the Combined Food Board. We have been reconsidering the whole matter, and this is the reason why it has not been possible to give you the promised reply before now.

As I told you when I was in Washington shortly after your visit to Ottawa, your suggestions had been considered by the Government and had not met with their approval. This decision has not been changed as the result of further examination of the position. The view here is that constant top level contact with the Board is essential for Canada, and that this can only be ensured by full Canadian membership on the Board.

One of your suggestions was that there should be a Canadian representative on any committees formed within the Board's organization, the work of which affected Canada. It has been our experience in similar conditions that participation at this level in practice interfered with direct negotiations at the top level. As you know, Canadian experts have been sitting with the Board's committees unofficially, but this can only be regarded as an interim measure pending settlement of the main question.

⁵¹ See Documents 195 and 664.

Another of your suggestions was that a Canadian representative should have the right to be kept fully informed of the Board's proceedings and to be present, but not as a member of the Board, at discussions where Canadian interests were directly affected. We feel strongly that this sort of junior partnership in the Board would not meet the case. For one reason, we are inevitably concerned, as a great exporter of food-stuffs, with many aspects of international food policy in which it cannot be said that Canadian interests are directly involved. I think that this method of association with the Board would prove inadequate from the point of view both of practical operation and of probable political repercussions.

Your third suggestion was the formation of a Joint Agricultural Policy Committee of the United States and Canada as a committee of the Board sitting in Ottawa. There is a good deal to be said for the creation of such a committee (although not I think as a committee of the Board), but this seems to be only incidentally connected with the main question. If such a committee were set up, it would not, in practice, help to settle the relationship of Canada with the Board.

There was one passage in your memorandum to which I feel bound to refer particularly. In paragraph 4 you imply that Canadian membership on the Board would constitute a breach in the Combined machinery. Our purpose in proposing full membership has been to make the Combined machinery more effective. The terms of reference of the Board provide explicitly for collaboration with others of the United Nations. Whether one looks at the problem from the narrow point of view of protecting Canadian interests or from the broad point of view of the actual and potential contribution of Canada to the provisioning of the United Nations, the Canadian concern with the work of the Board is considerably greater than that of any other country not represented on the Board.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, and also to Sir Frederick Leith-Ross for his information.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Minutes of a Meeting

SECRET

Ottawa, September 16, 1942

MINUTES OF MEETING HELD IN THE PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE AT 10.30 A.M.
ON SEPTEMBER 16TH TO DISCUSS THE RELATIONSHIP OF CANADA TO CERTAIN OF THE COMBINED BOARDS IN WASHINGTON

There were present the following;

- The Prime Minister (Mr. King)
- The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston)
- The Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilesley)
- The Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe)
- The High Commissioner for the United Kingdom (Mr. Malcolm MacDonald)
- The Hon. R.H. Brand, Acting Chairman of the British Supply Council in North America and Chief of the British Food Mission
- Sir Robert Sinclair, Representative in Washington of the United Kingdom Minister of Production
- The Clerk of the Privy Council (Mr. Heeney)
- The Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Wrong).
- The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was also present for the last part of the meeting.

SIR ROBERT SINCLAIR said that he had reported to Mr. Churchill the personal opinion expressed on his previous visit to Ottawa that a Canadian member should be added to the Combined Production and Resources Board. He wished to discuss the position now reached in view of the reply which he had received and of the consideration which had been given in London and Washington to the repercussions of this proposal on the other Combined Boards.

If the addition of a Canadian member to this Board were treated as an isolated question, the United States and United Kingdom authorities would agree to it. The primary task of the C.P.R.B. was to integrate the production programmes of the United States and the United Kingdom, and to adjust them to changing needs. This would be very difficult to do without including Canada in view of the close relationship between Canadian production and that of the United States. The existing Joint War Production Committee of Canada and the United States ensured through its subcommittees technical inter-development between the two countries, but did not bring about integration in a full sense.

He wished to make it clear that the addition of a Canadian member to the C.P.R.B. did not involve the appointment of a Canadian Executive Secretary to match the Executive Secretaries already appointed by the United States and the United Kingdom. If Canada were represented on the Board itself, on the Planning Committee and on other Committees of the Board, this, he thought, should be satisfactory.

With regard to the Munitions Assignments Board, the offer of limited Canadian membership made by General Burns, with the approval of the Combined Chiefs of Staff, would, in his view, give Canada a full opportunity of stating her opinions and of participating in discussions when Canadian interests were affected. There was a difference in principle between the constitution of this Board and that of the C.P.R.B. The M.A.B. was directly dependent on the Combined Chiefs of Staff and acted in accordance with directives received from that body. It would be illogical for Canada to be represented on the Board without being represented on the Combined Chiefs of Staff. As the function of the M.A.B. was to allocate production on purely strategical grounds, membership in it should not be dependent on the volume of production, to which the rightness of strategic decisions on allocation had no relationship.

He fully understood the desire of the Canadian Government to be more closely associated with the higher direction of the war. The Combined Boards differed very much in nature, and the Canadian relationship to them could not be on a uniform pattern. Canadian membership in the C.P.R.B. was desirable in itself, but the principle applicable to it did not apply to the other Boards.

MR. R. H. BRAND then outlined the position concerning the Combined Food Board. The difficulties over the Canadian request for membership on this Board arose, in his view, in part from a misunderstanding of the Board's functions. It had been created to assist in getting decisions on the allocation of food-stuffs in short supply — a difficult matter in Washington — and also to regulate the distribution of foods so as to make the most economical use of available shipping space.

Although the Board's terms of reference were very wide, these were two big problems with which it was concerned. (Mr. Brand later said that another object had been to bring about restrictions on consumption or rationing in the United States of foods in short supply). The Board did not deal with the procurement programme of the United Kingdom. With few exceptions the food-stuffs exported by Canada were not in short supply, and from the shipping point of view Canada was in a very favourable geographical position. The British Food Mission had recently presented to the United States Government their fourth Lend-Lease programme. This programme, which proposed the provision of food and tobacco to the value of $1,750,000,000, had not been lodged through the Food Board. The United Kingdom procurement programme, in short, was only indirectly a concern of the Board.

The Board had established in Washington committees on sugar, oils and fats, vitamins, agricultural seeds, meats and meat products, and fertilizers — all commodities in short supply. It had established in London committees on tea and on British agricultural policy; the last committee had been set up in order to ensure that the production programme in the United Kingdom was adjusted to the supplies available from the United States and elsewhere. The Board would shortly set up a Committee on Exports and Imports which would be charged mainly with making proposals to save shipping. It could be seen from the nature of these committees that Canadian exports were not directly affected by the work of the Board and the main Canadian interest in the Board was that of a consumer. Canada in any case had been assured that the United Kingdom would accord priority to Canada in procuring food-stuffs inside the North American area.

At one time there had been some intention of setting up a parallel Food Board in London. In place of this the London Food Committee had been established on which the United Kingdom, the Dominions (if they so desired), the Colonial Empire and certain foreign territories were represented. It was in a sense a parallel body to the Food Board, to which it made recommendations and for which it secured information.

Many of the United Nations were large producers of food. Lord Woolton felt strongly that Canadian membership on the Board would lead to a request for Australian membership and probably other requests. If these requests were granted, the London machinery would be dislocated and the Board would become a very difficult body to run. Canada might be providing more food than Australia, but Australia was suffering much more seriously from the shortage of shipping, and it was probable that a further large diversion of ships from the Pacific to the North Atlantic would eliminate or drastically reduce the exports of meat from Australia. The Australian interest in the Board's work was in fact greater than the Canadian.

Mr. Brand suggested that a Food Committee to deal with North American products might be established on the lines of the London Food Committee, on which Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom might be represented by senior officials. He also referred to a proposal for a Joint Agricultural Policy Committee of Canada and the United States.

SIR ROBERT SINCLAIR said that before any announcement was made of the addition of Canada to the Combined Production and Resources Board, it would be necessary to inform the other Dominion Governments and to make clear to them the principle on which Canada was joining the C.P.R.B.

MR. HOWE referred to the dependence of Canada on the United States for steel and components. Constant difficulties over the reduction of allocations to Canada had led Mr. Donald Nelson to propose a Production Board between Canada and the United States. The purpose of this would be to ensure as far as possible dependable supplies. Out of this suggestion had come Sir Robert Sinclair's proposal for Canadian membership on the C.P.R.B. He would be glad to accept this proposal, which had decided advantages.

After discussion, this view was generally accepted. In further discussion it was made clear that the C.P.R.B. had nothing to do with allocation, but dealt only with the planning of production.

The discussion then turned to the Munitions Assignments Board. MR. HOWE stated that arrangements had now been developed which, in his view, amounted to effective pooling of Canadian production. These arrangements included consideration by an informal committee in Ottawa of the allocation of Canadian production, and provision of full information in Washington on the volume of production and on the allocations agreed to. MR. RALSTON and MR. HOWE both expressed the opinion that this informal system provided a satisfactory method of dealing with Canadian production. It was pointed out that it had been developed since the request for Canadian membership on the Board had been advanced. MR. RALSTON explained that the Ottawa Committee in effect was an informal Assignments Board between Canada and the United Kingdom. While the United States was not directly represented, full information was provided to the United States authorities. The point was raised that it would be desirable to formalize the present arrangements in Ottawa.

There was some discussion as to how much of the United States production was in fact pooled for assignment by the M.A.B., and also of the question whether the pooling Governments in practice permitted their own Forces to be a first charge on their production. It was recognized that the countries of production had unavoidable obligations towards their own forces, which they must equip at least to minimum standards.

THE PRIME MINISTER summed up the discussion of the Munitions Assignments Board by saying that the general opinion was that it was better to keep things as they were than to accept the proposal made by General Burns. The question of formalizing the current arrangements should be considered later.

The discussion then turned to the Combined Food Board. THE PRIME MINISTER said that Canadians took a great interest and pride in their achievements in the supply of food. The name of the Combined Food Board was perhaps not altogether happy in view of the limitation on its actual functions described by Mr. Brand. The possible post-war effects of any decision now taken respecting the wartime organization of food supplies must also be considered. MR. BRAND replied that he had been instructed to say that the question of the Food Board was entirely separate from that of the proposed Relief Administration, and that nothing that was decided respecting the Food Board would prejudice the position of Canada in this connection.

MR. GARDINER said that Canadian producers were nervous lest, under the Lease-Lend arrangements with the United States, they would be deprived of the opportunity to supply the United Kingdom, and lest a Food Board composed only of representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States would tend to arrange for the procurement in the United States under the Lease-Lend procedure of the commodities which Canada was ready and anxious to supply. If, however, the Canadian exports to the United Kingdom of such products as wheat, cheese and bacon were not the concern of the Board, in fact little would be lost by the lack of a Canadian representative at the highest level. Canada was much interested in questions affecting meat, which was in short supply, and would desire to be consulted on this subject. He would also like some assurance that the United Kingdom would continue after the war to draw on the expanded Canadian productive capacity for her supplies of food.

MR. MALCOLM MACDONALD suggested that the apprehensions of the Canadian producers concerning the Board might be met by the publication of a statement on the scope of the Board which would indicate its present limited functions and repeat the assurances previously given that the United Kingdom would draw needed supplies from Canada in preference to the United States when supplies from both countries were available.

MR. ILSLEY remarked that Mr. Brand had indicated a great many things that the Board did not do. He would be glad to learn what the Board did. MR. RALSTON drew attention to the broad terms of reference of the Board.

MR. BRAND in reply indicated the present functions of the Board by reading the agenda of the last meeting. He asked whether the Canadian position would be met if it were made clear by a public statement that Canadian exports to the United Kingdom would not be affected by the lack of a Canadian member on the Board and that the assurances referred to by Mr. MacDonald would continue in effect. In addition Canada would be fully represented on the Board's committees.

After further discussion these suggestions were accepted.

The conclusions reached at the meeting may be summarized as follows:

1. That a Canadian member should be added to the Combined Production and Resources Board.

2. That the request for the addition of a Canadian member to the Combined Food Board should be dropped on the understanding that a public statement would be issued on the procurement by the United Kingdom of food supplies from Canada.⁵²

3. That there should be official Canadian representatives on all the committees of the Combined Food Board in which Canada was interested.

4. That in view of the difficulties over full Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board, the request for such representation should not be pressed and the offer of partial representation should not be accepted.

5. That consideration should be given to developing and formalizing the recent informal arrangements for the allocation in Ottawa of Canadian munitions production.

COMBINED WAR ORGANIZATIONS

1. THE PRIME MINISTER reported the result of discussions, earlier in the day, with Sir Robert Sinclair, Mr. Lyttleton's representative on the Production and Resources Board, Mr. R.H. Brand, U.K. member of the Food Board, and the U.K. High Commissioner. The meeting had been attended by the Prime Minister, the Ministers of National Defence, Finance, Munitions and Supply, and Agriculture, also by the Secretary and the Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The principal conclusions arrived at had been as follows:

PRODUCTION AND RESOURCES BOARD

A Canadian member should be added to this Board on the principal ground that this was necessary to ensure the integration of North American production with that of the United Kingdom. Sir Robert Sinclair had reported that the U.K. and U.S. governments would be agreeable to Canadian membership, if questions regarding the Canadian relationship to the other Boards were satisfactorily settled.

Mr. Howe would shortly discuss the matter further with Mr. Lyttleton himself, in London.⁵³

⁵² Aucune déclaration n'a été faite.

⁵² No such statement was issued.

⁵³ Canada became a member of the Combined Production and Resources Board on November 7, 1942. C. D. Howe was the Canadian representative.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

The Burns' proposal should not be accepted as it did not satisfactorily meet the Canadian position. On the other hand, informal arrangements for allocating Canadian production, developed since the suggestion for Canadian membership on the Board had first been advanced, were working reasonably well and might, perhaps, be further developed and formalized. The view had been expressed that these arrangements, in fact, resulted in the effective pooling of Canadian production.

It was proposed that General Pope be instructed to inform General Burns in this sense.

FOOD BOARD

Mr. Brand had described the Board's main functions as those of making recommendations with regard to the supply and allocation of food-stuffs and other commodities in short supply and for the saving of shipping space in the movement of food-stuffs. Procurement for the United Kingdom and other countries was not directly a function of the Board.

In the circumstances, it had been agreed that the government might accept the present constitution and membership of the Board, and appoint members to those committees of the Board in which Canada was interested. This conclusion had been on the understanding that a suitable statement be made public to the effect that the Board's constitution would not change the procedure for direct procurement of food-stuffs from Canada by the United Kingdom and that Britain would continue to give preference to Canada, where Canadian supplies were available.

Consideration was given to the creation of a North American committee on the lines of the London committee, a joint U.S.-Canada committee on agricultural policy, and the possibility of establishing some body in the nature of a United Nations Food Council.

2. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the conclusions reported by the Prime Minister regarding Canada's relationship to the Production and Resources Board, the Munitions Assignments Board and the Food Board.

Dear Mike [Pearson],

I have been so rushed that I am afraid I have only given you the bare bones of the developments over the Combined Boards during the last ten days. Now the pressure has eased as Norman and Tommy⁵⁴ got back yesterday.

⁵⁴N. A. Robertson, T. A. Stone.

You already know that Mr. Ralston and Mr. Howe reached agreement on rejecting the Burns' compromise and carrying on with things as they are. Arnold⁵⁵ and I did not like this and we had quite a talk with the Prime Minister on Monday the 14th. We went over with him the draft telegram to London which I have prepared and he was quite sympathetic to the general line of argument. He said that he would talk to Mr. Ralston about the M.A.B. in particular and would probably bring up the matter of the general approach to London in the War Committee before long. After this discussion I arranged to put the question on the Agenda of the War Committee for last Wednesday.

The next morning, however, Sir Robert Sinclair telephoned to me from Washington to say that he and Brand were coming to Ottawa that afternoon with Mr. Howe in order to discuss in particular the Production and Resources Board and related questions. I succeeded in putting off a War Committee meeting in favour of a meeting in the Prime Minister's office on the 16th, of which I have already sent you the minutes. The night before this meeting Malcolm MacDonald had a few people to dinner and Arnold and I found an opportunity of expressing strongly to Sinclair, Brand and Richard Law⁵⁶ our concern over the long-range effect of the continued exclusion of Canada from direct responsibility for the decisions reached on those phases of the war effort to which Canada made the greatest contribution. We found that Sinclair and Law were both responsive; MacDonald was already a good deal concerned over the matter; Brand does not take so broad a view and is the type of person who is always seeing and raising difficulties.

Sinclair and Brand at the meeting with the Prime Minister and Ministers did a good job of presentation. After Brand's exposition I was prepared to agree to dropping our request for membership on the Food Board so long as Sinclair's proposed addition of a Canadian to the Production Board went through. I felt that we were wrong in not accepting the Burns' offer on the M.A.B. but with Howe and Ralston both opposing it the best that we could do was to suggest that the existing informal assignment machinery in Ottawa should be developed and formalized. I do not yet know what will come of this but I shall see that it is not forgotten. The main results so far as the M.A.B. is concerned are that we no longer seek full membership, that we consider partial membership unsatisfactory and that perhaps we shall set up in Ottawa a sort of Canadian Assignments Board, although the form and powers of this remain obscure.

I have long been conscious that there was a strong logical ground for attacking our proposal for membership on the M.A.B. If this Board's functions are to assign munitions on the basis of strategic direction from the Chiefs of Staff, it is not logical to have governments represented on the Board which are not represented on the Chiefs of Staff. It was Sinclair who first brought up this argument and made it the chief reason for not complying with our request for full membership.

⁵⁵ A. D. P. Heeney.

⁵⁶ Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain.

It looks now as though the pattern of our relationship with the Combined Boards were pretty well determined. It may be that there will be some developments later concerning the Raw Materials Board. Sinclair has told me privately that if the Production Board really is able to do what it ought to do the Raw Materials Board will become in fact dependent on it in roughly the same sort of way that the M.A.B. is dependent on the Chiefs of Staff. We have had little difficulty with the Raw Materials Board largely, I think, because of the coincidence that Batt is its chairman and has also from the first been the chief figure in our own Joint Committee on Raw Materials with the United States. If Batt ceases to exercise this dual function, we might then seek Canadian membership on the Board. In general there are a good many details to be worked out concerning our connections with all the Boards.

It may be, however, that we shall later encourage an attempt to turn the Combined Bodies into agencies more representative of the United Nations. We had some talk at the meeting on September 16th of the possibility of setting up a United Nations Food Council representing perhaps eight governments and meeting perhaps quarterly in Washington. We may have concentrated too much attention on the Combined Boards as being the best medium for the exercise of Canadian influence on decisions of high policy, although this up to a point was unavoidable in view of the duties entrusted to them by the terms of reference. The biggest decisions are, I should think, not reached through the Combined Boards but result from direct inter-governmental consultations, and I expect that we could play a greater part there if we wished to do so.

One other point. It has been spelled out both on our side and on the British side that the acceptance by us of a minor part on the Food Board in no way prejudices our claim for a prominent place in the proposed Relief Administration. If you have any news of the point reached by Leith-Ross when he went back to England, it would be useful for us to have it. It seems to me that when the time for extending relief to territories now held by the enemy actually arrives there is certain to be a period in which the Food Board's machinery will be used for relief purposes. This makes it desirable that we should get straight our part in the Relief Administration as soon as we can.

I am sending a copy of this letter personally to Vincent Massey as he also should know some of the background to our recent discussions.

Yours ever,

HUME WRONG

Dear Hume [Wrong],

I was glad to get your letter of September 22nd dealing with developments over the Combined Boards. I cannot help but feel that our record in this matter is an unhappy one; at least in so far as the Munitions Assignments and Food Boards are concerned. The situation even now does not seem to me to be entirely clear. I had thought of attempting to draft a formal despatch on the whole subject, but I think it might be better if I wrote you personally and attached to the letter a short memorandum.

I note from your teletype EX-2316 of September 25th[†] that on the whole it is considered undesirable to communicate further with either the State Department or Mr. Hopkins. I think that this is probably the best course to adopt, but it does leave the matter very much in the air, as the attached memorandum will show.

Yours sincerely,

Mémorandum du ministre-conseiller, la légation aux États-Unis

Memorandum by Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States

Washington, September 28, 1942

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

The sequence of events in respect of Canada's efforts to associate herself with this Board is as follows:

On May 13th, by Note No. 317 to the State Department, the Legation requested, on behalf of the Canadian Government, full membership on the Board, in return for the pooling of all Canadian production with the Board. No answer has been received to this note; nor will an answer likely ever be received in view of developments.

The above application for membership was turned over to Mr. Hopkins by the State Department. Mr. Hopkins finally wrote the Minister on June 26th that actual Canadian membership on the Board or on its sub-committees was impossible, but he agreed that representatives of Canada should be given full opportunity to present their needs and views to the Board, its staff and committees, when necessary. In acknowledging this letter, the Minister merely stated that he felt that Mr. Hopkins' reply would be disappointing to the Canadian Government. That disappointment was expressed in teletype EX-1402 of July 2nd, which instructed us to reject Mr. Hopkins' proposal for partial representation, as it reduced Canada to a position of undue subordination. The Minister's reply to Mr. Hopkins based on the above teletype took the form of a letter and an attached memorandum.[†] In the letter Mr. McCarthy stated, "My Government do not feel that the suggestion contained in your letter constitutes for them a satisfactory solution for this problem. I fear, in fact, that if this suggestion is maintained as the only one practicable in the circumstances, very serious difficulties would be created in Canada for my Government." This is pretty strong language to use, and it was meant to convince the American authorities that the Canadian Government attached great importance to membership on the Munitions Assignments Board.

It seems to have succeeded in this regard, because further consideration was given to our request for membership by Mr. Hopkins and the Board itself. As a result of this, General Burns was authorized by the Combined Board to offer to the Canadian Government through General Pope full membership on the Board in the consideration of all questions which directly concerned Canada. This represented a considerable advance on previous offers and was apparently so considered by the Canadian authorities. In a telegram from External Affairs to the High Commissioner in London dated July 14th[†] it is stated: "We have not yet removed Hopkins' objections to full Canadian representation on Munitions Assignments Board, but he has receded from his original position, so that a workable compromise may be developed. The present arrangements are most unsatisfactory and we are pressing strongly for a satisfactory solution." In this connection, a decision was reached in the meeting on September 16th in Ottawa to develop and formalize these informal arrangements which, on July 14th, were stated to be working most unsatisfactorily.

Though it was thought that the Burns' offer might be considered acceptable in Ottawa, this did not in fact turn out to be the case, and it was decided not to proceed any further with the request for Canadian representation on the Munitions Assignments Board. A reply to General Burns is to be made in that sense. In view of the fact that General Burns was acting for Mr. Hopkins, no communication to the latter is considered necessary, nor is the State Department likely, in the circumstances, to reply to our original Note No. 317 of May 13th.

The reasons for the abandonment of our earlier position in respect of the Munitions Assignments Board are to be left undeclared. This, in the circumstances, is the only possible course to follow. In view of the earlier communications with United States authorities on this matter, it would be unwise to attempt any explanation of our present position.

Meanwhile, there remain, so it seems to me, a good many doubtful points and loose ends which should be cleared up.

1. Are we in fact to pool our production with the Munitions Assignments Board; are we to table our figures in Washington? Or has pooling in practice and principle been abandoned?

2. If we do not accept the principle of pooling, how are we to assign our finished production of munitions of war? Will the United States include as part of their production figures orders in Canada to their account, and the British include orders in Canada to British account?

3. How are Canadian contacts with the Munitions Assignments Board in Washington and its various committees to be maintained?

4. What will be the effect of the decision reached in Ottawa on the meeting of Canadian requirements from United States production? Will our requirements be included as part of British bids in Washington and London? Will our case be argued before the committees of the Board by British representatives on those committees? This is an important point, especially in respect of aircraft assignments. It is true that the Army has managed to maintain close informal contact with the Land Committee of the M.A.B. This has not been so in the case of the R.C.A.F. In view of the decisions reached in Ottawa, it appears that the R.C.A.F.

will have to continue to rely on the R.A.F. to place bids for them before the M.A.B. and its committees. At the present time, Air Commodore Tackeberry⁵⁷ is allowed to appear before the Aircraft Assignments Committee and its sub-committees and make his requests known. He cannot, however, remain in the committee room when those requests are under discussion. The result of such discussions he learns only later from the R.A.F. representative, who can hardly be expected to support Canadian bids on American production in the same way that a Canadian would.

I understand that the U.S. aircraft assignment position is at present unsatisfactory from the Canadian point of view. Recent decisions in Ottawa may make it even more so.

COMBINED FOOD BOARD

The Canadian Government also made a request for full representation on the Combined Food Board. This was met by an offer on the part of Mr. Brand, British member of the Board, of partial representation only. As a result of further discussions, this partial representation was extended in a way which amounted to almost complete membership on the Board; in fact, if not in theory. A Canadian representative was to have full power of discussion and decision when all questions concerning Canada were before the Board, and he was to be allowed to sit in as an observer in discussion of all other questions. The above proposal was considered in Ottawa, but was felt to be unsatisfactory. As a result, Mr. Wrong wrote Mr. Brand on September 3rd: "The view here is that constant top-level contact with the Board is essential for Canada and that this can only be ensured by full Canadian membership on the Board." In view of this position, the invitation to appoint members to committees of the board was rejected, though Canadians were allowed to attend those committees in an informal and unofficial way.

Mr. Brand went to Ottawa on September 16th, and as a result of his visit the position announced by Mr. Wrong on September 3rd was reversed and the Canadian Government indicated that it was willing to accept membership on the committees and would not pursue its claim for full membership on the Board.

It is uncertain whether this abandonment extends to the right to appear before the Board when Canadian questions are under discussion. If so, then Canadian contact with the Combined Food Board would be restricted to committee discussions. This represents an almost complete reversal of the attitude adopted up to September 16th.

MUNITIONS ASSIGNMENTS BOARD

4. THE SECRETARY reported that, subsequent to the War Committee's decision of September the 16th, the Chief of the Air Staff had pointed out that the informal arrangements in Ottawa for allocation of Canadian production did not meet the case of the Air Force.

Aircraft were not dealt with by the Ottawa committee and, furthermore, continuance of the present situation offered no satisfactory solution of the problem of presenting Canadian needs for operational aircraft from U.S. production. The Burns proposal⁵⁸ offered the only reasonable and available prospect of solution of this difficulty. The Chief of the Naval Staff was of the same opinion and felt that the Burns proposal should be accepted.

For these reasons, no reply had been sent by Major-General Pope in the sense of the War Committee's decision. An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, October 6, 1942 — C.W.C. document 308).[†]

5. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR described the limited extent of the functions of the local allocations committee. His department favoured acceptance of conditional membership on the Munitions Assignments Board as a good deal better than nothing. At present, there was no way to press, in Washington, urgent Canadian needs for operational aircraft.

Final decision would have to await the return of the Ministers of National Defence and Munitions and Supply; meantime, however, no action should be taken to reject the Burns proposal.

6. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF supported the position taken by the Air Staff. The Navy were not satisfied with things as they were. The Burns offer should be accepted.

7. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed to suspend action upon the decision taken on September the 16th, pending re-consideration of the question upon the return of Mr. Ralston and Mr. Howe.⁵⁹

Dear Mr. Pearson,

With reference to your letter of November 27th concerning Mr. Hickerson's suggestion that our note requesting Canadian membership on the Combined Food Board should be withdrawn or answered in some way by the State Department, I think that it is desirable that we should temporize for the present since we may find it necessary to renew our request for membership on the Board.

There are three chief reasons why I feel that the decision reached at the meeting on September 16th in the Prime Minister's Office may have to be reviewed. In the first place a good many practical difficulties are arising in the conduct of our relations with the Board through membership in the Board's Committees. Secondly, the Board is entering into fields other than those described by Mr. Brand at the meeting and is not confining its activities to matters concerning commodities in deficient supply in Canada. Thirdly, it is becoming apparent that the Board's machinery will be employed for relief purposes after the war or when, before the end of hostilities, extensive territories are freed from enemy occupation; the more effectively the Board performs its wartime tasks the more certain is it that it will be involved in the provision of relief supplies.

I think that you might explain to Mr. Hickerson that we have been doing our best to maintain a satisfactory relationship to the Board on the basis of representation only on the Board's commodity committees, that we are finding practical difficulties in the operation of this plan and that we are not prepared to withdraw our request for full membership until the position has been re-examined in the light of experience.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

CANADA'S RELATIONSHIP WITH THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD

14. THE SECRETARY read a report on Canada's relationship with the Combined Food Board, submitted by the Interdepartmental Food Requirements Committee.

On the understanding that the Board would not deal with all problems of food supply, but would concern itself with distribution of commodities in short supply, and would not interfere with existing arrangements for the export of Canadian food-stuffs, the Canadian government had not pressed its request for full Canadian membership on the Board.

It was now apparent that the Board was assuming functions beyond those described to the Canadian government by Mr. Brand, and that the extensions were of direct concern to Canada, particularly as they related to the development of stockpiles for relief purposes. In addition, certain administrative difficulties had been experienced in Canada's relationship with the working committees of the Food Board.

Copies of the interdepartmental committee's report^t had been circulated to members of the War Committee and to the Minister of Agriculture.

(Secretary's note, Feb. 9, 1943 — C.W.C. document 404).

15. THE PRIME MINISTER pointed out that the activities of the Combined Food Board were closely related to those of the projected United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, upon the proposed Policy Committee of which the government felt that Canada should be represented. The claim to representation on the Food Board now appeared to be equally strong, and the request put forward in this connection should be raised again.

16. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that the Food Requirements Committee be informed that the War Committee have noted their report and are of opinion that, in the new circumstances, the request for Canadian membership on the Combined Food Board should be revived.

Mémoire du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

[Ottawa,] April 13, 1943

The decision to renew the request for full membership on the Combined Food Board was taken up informally in the middle of March with Mr. R.H. Brand and Mr. Malcolm MacDonald. Mr. MacDonald later made representations on behalf of the United Kingdom Government urging that the matter should not be pressed at this time. These representations have been further considered by the Government which has decided to continue to press for membership on the Board.

The principal reasons which have led to this decision are as follows:

1. The area of operations of the Board has been constantly expanding and it is now dealing with a number of commodities of great interest to Canada as a producer; indeed, the Board has found it necessary to concern itself with nearly all food-stuffs except wheat and some other cereals, and also with fertilizers and agricultural machinery. When, last September, the Government agreed not to press their request for Canadian membership a different situation existed and the operations of the Board were confined almost entirely to commodities in which Canada was interested only as an importer.

2. Canada is directly represented on nearly all the commodity sub-committees of the Board and is the only country to be widely represented in addition to the United States and the United Kingdom. There are informal arrangements for close Canadian liaison with the Board's Secretariat. Indeed, except at the top level, the Board is in fact operating on a tripartite basis. The special position of Canada has thus already been recognized and the addition of a full Canadian member to the Board is the logical completion of what has already been done.

3. It is apparent that the Board will have to concern itself intimately both with the provision of food-stuffs for relief purposes and with the allocation of food-stuffs in the immediate post-war period to countries not in receipt of relief supplies. It is difficult to conceive that when the pressures of war are relaxed and public attention is no longer concentrated on the attainment of victory a body representing only the United States and the United Kingdom can continue to discharge effectively functions of this nature. Unless, indeed, the basis of responsibility for the Board's operations is broadened, the machinery will be likely to break down or to be superseded by some new agency.

4. We are now in an era of constantly growing restrictions on public consumption and as restrictions increase the public in each country reasonably wish to be assured that they are not being asked to make disproportionate sacrifices, and that their own Government has participated in the decisions from which the sacrifices result. To meet public criticism, such participation should be patent and formal. These tendencies are already strong and will become stronger as the restrictions increase and as victory draws nearer. After the war they will be very strong indeed. It is especially important that restrictions in the United States and in Canada should be closely related. The Food Board seems to be destined to play a growing part in determining the necessity for rationing various products. It is hard to conceive of this being done effectively by an agency representing only the United States and the United Kingdom.

5. It is intended that food-stuffs should be included in the war supplies which may be allocated to other United Nations under the Mutual Aid Bill which will shortly be introduced in Parliament. While it is not yet possible to determine how large a proportion of Canadian exports of food-stuffs will be allocated under this measure, the adoption of the Bill will serve further to differentiate the position of Canada as a supplier of food to the United Nations from that of food exporting countries other than the United States. It will also make necessary close contact between the operations of the Mutual Aid scheme and the Combined Food Board.

The objections to the addition of a Canadian member to the Board which have been advanced by the British Government through Mr. MacDonald center on the argument that this would lead to demands for full membership from Australia, New Zealand and perhaps other countries; if these demands were refused serious friction within the Commonwealth would result; if they were accepted the Board would very probably break down in operation and this might involve the breakdown of other combined boards. This is the same argument that has been advanced from the first against Canadian membership. It has been carefully weighed, but for the reasons already set forth it has not been accepted as justifying a continuation of the present situation. On the other side it can be urged that if the present situation continues, the Food Board will gradually lose its influence and authority because it is constituted on too narrow a base. Certainly it is unlikely to be able to operate effectively in the post-war period. It has been felt here that the Canadian contribution in food-stuffs is so great as to justify an invitation to Canada alone to be represented on the Board; but the Canadian Government has never adopted the position that the alteration of the Board to a tripartite form would in itself solve all the problems. They have been dissatisfied from the first over the manner in which the Boards were set up without prior consultation to act in practice if not in form as agencies of the United Nations. If the Board were to be constituted on the functional principle which the Canadian Government has advocated in connection with the Relief Administration, it would not be difficult to resist claims for membership from other countries which, by reason of their smaller production of food-stuffs or their remoteness, are not able to approach the Canadian contribution.

The following points of minor importance in the representations made by Mr. MacDonald may be mentioned briefly:

1. While it is true that in the operations of the Board Canadian interests have been taken into consideration and that the representation of Canada on sub-committees has helped to ensure this, the number of problems affecting Canada which will have to be decided by the Board itself will be bound to increase. There is no formal representation of Canada on the Secretariat but an informal arrangement is in effect whereby the Commercial Attaché of the Canadian Legation keeps in close touch with Messrs. Hutton⁶⁰ and Wheeler⁶¹.

2. It was suggested that an appropriate means of ensuring close cooperation between the United States and Canada in rationing and related matters would be to make use of the newly established Joint Agricultural Committee. This body, however, is mainly concerned with the discussion of agricultural production planning in the two countries and would not be a suitable medium for joint consideration of general rationing problems. It is, indeed, impossible to separate the questions affecting Canada and the United States in this respect from the world picture.

3. As to the effect on Canada's position in the Relief Administration of renewed pressure for membership on the Food Board, the Canadian Government has agreed to accept a compromise which falls short of their wishes and is disposed to regard the two questions as distinct. It has not recently approached the United States Government with regard to the Food Board but an approach will probably be made in the near future.

⁶¹ Officier exécutif conjoint, Commission composée de l'alimentation.

⁶⁰ Deputy member of Great Britain on Combined Food Board.

⁶¹ Joint Executive Officer, Combined Food Board.

In general it is felt in Ottawa that this question should be faced now, difficult though this may be, and that postponement will only serve to increase the difficulties; the simplest solution — the addition of a Canadian member to the Board — should not be ruled out, unless other means of broadening the authority of the Board by alterations in its constitution have been considered and found to be preferable.

Ottawa, April 29, 1943

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As he will have told you at the time, the High Commissioner forwarded to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs your memorandum of April 13th about the Combined Food Board. I have now had a telegram from the Secretary of State expressing his appreciation of the helpfulness of the memorandum to which careful study is being given.

The United Kingdom Government fully appreciate the force of the considerations which, in the view of the Canadian Government, point to the desirability of their raising now the question of Canadian membership of the Board. At the same time Mr. Attlee feels sure that the Canadian Government will recognise the difficulties from the point of view of the United Kingdom Government, and in particular the importance which the latter must necessarily attach to arriving at some solution which, on the one hand, would be acceptable to other Dominions and, on the other, would not impair the general structure of the Combined Board.

In the circumstances, it is felt that it would be very helpful if, as the next step, the whole matter could be discussed in detail between representatives of our two Governments. Mr. Attlee would suggest that a suitable opportunity for such discussion would be provided by the talks with Dominion experts on post-war commercial policy, which were proposed in his telegram D.234 of April 22nd to the Secretary of State for External Affairs⁶² and this would be the more convenient in that it would enable representatives of other Dominion Governments to be brought into consultation.

Mr. Attlee very much hopes that this procedure will commend itself to the Canadian Government and that they will be willing to agree to discuss this matter in London before carrying it further. I should be very grateful if you will let me know how you would view this suggestion and what reply I may send to Mr. Attlee.

Yours sincerely,

On April 14th I sent you copy of a memorandum stating the Canadian case for full membership on the Combined Food Board which I had given the United Kingdom High Commissioner.⁶³ I have now received the attached interim reply from the Acting United Kingdom High Commissioner, suggesting that the general question of Canadian relationship to the Combined war organizations, and particularly the Combined Food Board, might be thrashed out in connection with the talks between officials on commercial policy which they hope can take place in London toward the end of this month.

I told Sir Patrick Duff yesterday that I thought the date suggested would be a bit early for us to manage, since we have to find a delegation for the Food Conference at Hot Springs opening on May 18th. For all these discussions we have to draw pretty much on the same group of people, none of whom can be spared very easily from their departmental work in Ottawa.⁶⁴

Mr. R.H. Brand of the Combined Food Board, and Mr. J.P. Maude of the United Kingdom Ministry of Food, are in Ottawa today. We are seeing them at four o'clock and expect to take up again the question of Canadian membership on the Combined Food Board.

Since the War Committee last reviewed the position and instructed us to revive our request for full membership, the importance to Canada of adequate representation on the Board has been increased—

(1) by the progressive enlargement of the Board's responsibilities to cover the allocation of practically all important food-stuffs, and ⁶³ Document 219.

⁶⁴ La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum: ⁶⁴ The following note was written on the memorandum:

I agree. W. L. M[ACKENZIE] K[ING]

(2) by the fact that the relationship between the Combined Food Board and the Relief Organization is bound to be much closer and more important than people thought a year ago.

The Food Board has under consideration the establishment of a Sub-committee on Cereals. The Wheat Committee of the Cabinet have taken the position that Canada should not participate in such a sub-committee. It seems to me that this attitude is reasonable on tactical grounds, i.e. in order to force favourable consideration of our request for full membership on the Combined Food Board. It would be harder to justify if it were an absolute refusal to have cereals allocation brought within the scope of a general United Nations food control organization.

The immediate question therefore is —

If Canada is represented on the Combined Food Board will Canada object to that Board dealing with wheat flour or wheat itself if either of these commodities is in short supply?

We would be in a weak position if we receive membership on the Board and then contend that wheat flour or wheat should be treated differently from other food-stuffs. If we hold strongly to this position we should probably reconsider our request for membership on the Combined Food Board.⁶⁵

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN THE COMBINED FOOD BOARD

There has been a complete change in the attitude of British officials associated with the Combined Food Board towards the question of Canadian membership. When Mr. Brand and Mr. J.P.R. Maude of the Ministry of Food were in Ottawa in the middle of June they both expressed themselves as strongly favouring the addition of a Canadian member and they suggested that the difficulties anticipated with some other countries, particularly Australia, could be avoided by making changes in the organization and title of the London Food Committee. It was agreed that Mr. Maude would pursue this plan as soon as he returned to England and that the Canadian Government in the meantime should not take any further action.

The reasons for the British change of attitude are in large part the same reasons that were given by us last year when we sought to secure the addition of a Canadian to the Board. They were also concerned over the way in which the Board was operating, largely because of the division of authority over matters of food supply in Washington which has left Mr. Wickard as the U.S. member of the Board while depriving him almost completely of any real say in the allocation and distribution of food-stuffs. They felt that a Canadian representative could help greatly to improve the operation of the Board. They were also bothered about the connection between the Board and relief operations, especially if the Committee on Supplies of the International Relief Administration is established on the lines contemplated.

We have now been informed by the High Commissioner in London that the negotiations there have reached a point at which concrete proposals have been submitted to other Dominion Governments following informal negotiations with them. The High Commissioner states that the United Kingdom authorities are anxious to put these proposals into effect without delay and would like to be in a position to approach the United States Government within the next week. The proposals involve altering the title of the London Food Committee to London Food Council and giving it "ministerial status" which probably means that Lord Woolton will become its chairman. When this is accepted it is contemplated that a joint invitation should be addressed to Canada by the United States and United Kingdom to nominate a member to the Combined Food Board. There has been preliminary discussion with United States officials in Washington who according to Mr. Brand and Mr. Hutton now strongly favour the enlargement of the Board to include Canada.

It is thus by no means unlikely that we shall have to nominate a Canadian member to the Board in the near future and also appoint a Canadian chairman to the Committee on Supplies of the Relief Administration. There is a good deal to be said for both offices being held by one person as this would ensure a close liaison between the Committee on Supplies and the Food Board. It is likely that the Canadian member of the Food Board will have to spend most of his time in Washington and probably take up his residence there.

CANADA'S POSITION IN RELATION TO DIRECTION OF THE WAR

10. THE CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER observed that the Canadian government had recognized fully that the higher direction of the war could not be exercised by all of the United Nations, and was satisfied, in this respect, that authority should rest with Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt, and their Combined

Staffs. While this was so, the Canadian public were increasingly concerned that there should be adequate recognition of the substantial contribution which Canada was making to the total war effort of the United Nations.

It was widely felt that, while Canada had been at war two years before the United States, she was not being accorded, in the council of the United Nations, a role proportionate to her contribution. It was felt that in certain fields in which Canada was playing a major role her right to a more decisive voice might well be recognized.

11. MR. KING stated that the Canadian government appreciated the full information provided from day to day through the Dominions Office, the U. K. High Commissioner, and in personal messages from Mr. Churchill to himself. In most cases an opportunity was given for consideration, in advance, by the Canadian government, where Canadian interests were affected.

Nevertheless, in some instances, decisions taken jointly by the United Kingdom and the United States, affecting Canada, had been taken and announced without opportunity for Canadian comment. Such occasioned serious difficulties for the Canadian government. It was recognized that the necessity for rapid action might compel certain decisions to be taken without there being time for consultation.

He felt sure that the Canadian position in this respect would be appreciated and that Canada would be fully consulted in advance, wherever Canadian interests were affected.

12. The United Kingdom Prime Minister expressed appreciation of the points brought forward by Mr. King.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

COMBINED FOOD BOARD — SUB-COMMITTEE ON CEREALS

This is to confirm the information which I think you may have already received, verbally, that Mr. George McIvor, Chief Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board, is prepared to accept the Chairmanship of the Cereals Sub-Committee of the Combined Food Board. It is understood that if, on occasion, Mr. McIvor is himself unable to act as Chairman, he would arrange to have either one of his fellow Commissioners on the Canadian Wheat Board — Mr. Smith or Mr. Kane — act on his behalf.

Mr. McIvor told me to-day over the telephone that he has, as yet, not been able to reach a conclusion as to who would be, in his opinion, the most suitable appointee as Secretary of the Committee; but he intimated that he hopes to be able to put forward shortly the name of a member of the staff of the Canadian Wheat Board, whose qualifications would be appropriate and whose services could be made available.

Mr. McIvor inquired whether any public announcement regarding the personnel of the Committee is likely to be made in the near future and, if so, through what channel — at the same time expressing a preference for an announcement to be made through Hon. Mr. MacKinnon. I shall be glad if you

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Question of advisability of seeking Canadian representation in the Pacific Council, whose establishment in London is announced in the press, has been under consideration here. Our present view is that Canadian participation might unnecessarily enlarge a body whose primary responsibility appears to be the concerting of common defences of the countries in the Southwest Pacific which Japanese aggression has placed in the immediate danger zone. There has, however, been a good deal of comment in the country and in the House on the exclusion of Canada from a body which purports to deal with Pacific problems generally. In the circumstances I think it would be helpful if it could be made clear from London that "Pacific Council's" function is directly related to questions of regional defence of Southwest Pacific and Southeastern Asia.

PERSONAL AND SECRET. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: You have asked for information about the scope and functions of the Pacific War Council. The following is shortly the position.

(1) The original object of the Council was to provide for the political control by the A B D A Powers of General Wavell as Supreme Commander of the A B D A area. The A B D A Powers were conceived as those who were in the zone of hostilities or immediately affected thereby, or whose troops and ships were engaged or about to be engaged. The Council was therefore to deal primarily with reinforcements, directives and general policy in relation to the south west Pacific. We are now arranging also, after discussion with the President, for China to be invited to be represented on the Council.

(2) Of course the whole business of making war upon Japan is inevitably involved in the scope of these discussions. Nevertheless, there is at the present time a marked difference between the position of Australia and New Zealand on the one hand, and of Canada and South Africa on the other. I agree with what I understand to be your view, namely, that Canada's interests are not so directly concerned that it is essential for Canada to be represented on the Council at this stage.

(3) I should be quite willing that you should state that you have been in communication with me and you are satisfied that the present arrangements for consultation in regard to the conduct of the war are adequate, and that Canada need not be represented on the Pacific Council at this stage, though of course it is open to Canada to be so represented hereafter at any time she wishes. All good wishes. Winston Churchill. Ends.

We recognize that there have been practical difficulties in the way of effecting adequate and equal representation in such a body of all the United Nations immediately affected by the course of the war in the Southwestern Pacific. In view of the course of events in recent weeks, however, we have come to the conclusion that Canada should be directly represented on the Pacific Council, whether it is to continue to meet in London as first planned or in Washington as the President has suggested, or whether there should be two Pacific Councils meeting concurrently in Washington and in London as Mr. Churchill suggested in his message to the President (See Dominions Office telegram No. 66 of March 23rd).[†] If there are to be meetings of the Pacific Council held in London, you will be designated as the Canadian representative. Arrangements for our representation at meetings of the Council which may be held in Washington have not yet been determined.

I would be grateful if you would at once advise the United Kingdom Government of the views of the Canadian Government as outlined in this telegram. The Canadian Minister in Washington has been instructed to make a similar communication to the United States Government.

DESPATCH A. 61

London, April 28, 1942

SECRET

Sir,

1. I have the honour to report that on April 21st I attended the second meeting of the Pacific War Council since my appointment as Canadian representative.

2. Mr. Churchill was again unable to attend, his place as Chairman being taken as before by Mr. Attlee, the Deputy Prime Minister. The same members were present as on the previous occasion and Mr. Waterson attended for the first time as the representative of the Union.

3. Again the meeting was without any formal business and the time was entirely taken up by desultory discussion on the progress of the war, in which various questions were asked and answered either by Mr. Attlee or General Ismay.

4. Some information was available regarding the proceedings of the Pacific Council in Washington through telegrams which had been sent by the New Zealand representative on that body to his opposite number on the London Council.

5. Attention was again drawn at this meeting to the need for the appointment of a representative of the United States. It was generally agreed by the members that this would be highly desirable and it appeared to meet with the approval of the Chairman.

6. It is clear that there is a general feeling among the members of the Council that fresh consideration should be given to the functions which this body is intended to perform. At present there is considerable vagueness about its terms of reference. If it is to serve a useful purpose it must be given some work to do. One of its functions is obviously to provide the representatives of China and the Netherlands with a formal point of contact with the United Kingdom government which will permit them to exchange views on the prosecution of the war in the Pacific area. It is of obvious importance that these states, China in particular, should be given an appropriate position in the counsels of the United Nations. For this reason it is unfortunate if the Chinese Ambassador should be asked to attend meetings which might well appear to him not to be performing the important functions which were envisaged when the Pacific Council was first established.⁶⁷

I know that Mr. Mackenzie King is assuming that in any meeting on Canadian soil he would be present throughout as host and that he would also be a party in discussions. He realises of course that the President and Prime Minister will wish to have great deal of talk between themselves or with their staffs and every arrangement would be made for this.

He also realises that he could not be a full partner in the discussions without creating awkwardness about the positions of other Dominion Prime Ministers. At the same time it would be extremely embarrassing politically to the Government here if the Canadian Prime Minister seemed to be less than a fairly full partner in a meeting in Canada and would cause undesirable comment from general point of view in Quebec and everywhere in Canada. On other hand a meeting between President and Prime Minister in Québec, with Canadian Prime Minister attending, would of course deligh everyone here, and do much solid good.

He tells me that McCarthy has left for Ottawa to explain the position to you.
3. I must say I see the difficulties as of course very little business can be done when large numbers are present. QUEBEC CONFERENCE; PURPOSES AND PROCEDURE; CANADIAN POSITION .

13. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that, shortly before the departure for Britain of the Minister of National Defence the British Prime Minister had enquired whether he (Mr. King) would be willing to receive the President and Mr. Churchill at Quebec for a meeting of the Combined British and United States Chiefs of Staff. This suggestion Mr. King had welcomed on behalf of the government and arrangements had been made accordingly for holding the Conference in the Citadel and in the Chateau Frontenac.

14. MR. KING said that the U.K. High Commissioner had recognized that the position of the Canadian government in relation to a conference in Canada, of a purely Anglo-American character, would be one of some difficulty and, on this point, had consulted his government.

It transpired that Mr. Churchill was willing not only that the Canadian Prime Minister participate in discussions with the President and himself but also that the Canadian Chiefs of Staff attend plenary sessions at the Combined Chiefs of Staff conference and had so suggested to Mr. Roosevelt. The President, however, had opposed Canadian military participation on the ground that it would cause difficulties with others of the United Nations.

It had finally been agreed that the Conference of the Combined Chiefs of Staff would be purely Anglo-American, but that opportunity would be afforded for meetings between the Canadian and British staffs before the Conference itself began. Arrangements had been made accordingly.

15. MR. KING said that Mr. Churchill had requested a 'formal British-Canadian Conference' at Quebec before the meetings of the Combined Chiefs of Staff began. Accordingly arrangements had been made to have the War Committee meet the following morning with the British Prime Minister and such other British representatives as he might wish to have with him.⁷³ The Canadian and British Staffs would meet subsequently, as required.

The U.S. Chiefs of Staff were expected to arrive in Quebec in three days' time; the President toward the beginning of the following week.

16. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted the Prime Minister's report.

Dear Mr. Massey,

I am responsible I fear for your not having received a reply before to your personal and confidential letter to Norman of the 11th September requesting information about the decisions of the Quebec Conference. Norman handed your letter to me shortly after its arrival. He was promptly laid up for a while himself and then took a much needed holiday with the result that I did not have time until yesterday to go through the papers. The pressure here, especially on senior officers of the Department, seems steadily to increase and it grows so fast that one cannot reduce it by taking in new people or developing methods of devolution inside the Department. This has a familiar result that what does not have to be done today no matter how important gets put off until tomorrow and tomorrow is generally a very a long time in coming.

You will in any case by now be familiar with the chief results of the Quebec talks over which you are particularly concerned with regard to the employment of the Canadian Army. This in fact, as you know, was not settled at Quebec where it figured only in the U.K.-Canadian discussions. The decision taken nearly a fortnight ago for the strengthening of the Canadian force in the Mediterranean was very welcome here.

The Quebec background to this aspect related mainly to the American insistence on pursuing the plans developed at the Casablanca meeting and the later May discussions in Washington. There is a greater rigidity about American strategic thinking than is found on the British side. They like to pursue an agreed scheme even if conditions have changed so as to open up unexpected alternatives. At Quebec they secured agreement that the Italian campaign should have the status of an important sideshow and should not be permitted to modify the earlier plans for a direct attack on western Europe to take place as soon as possible in 1944. It was agreed that Italy should be cleared of the enemy at least as far as the line of the Arno (you must hate as much as I do the thought of the Arno being a front line) and if conditions were favourable as far as the Alps. The commitment, however, is to be severely limited in the number of divisions employed and battle trained troops are to return from that theatre to the United Kingdom to participate in the main attack.

The Italian surrender was, of course, on its way before the Conference ended. It was then confidently expected that it would bring with it into our hands the Dodecanese Islands. I hear a good deal of comment and criticism on what looks like a failure to exploit the possibilities in the Aegean. Outside of this there appears to have been agreement at Quebec that the time had not yet come for direct action against enemy held territory in the Balkans and eastern Mediterranean. One has the uneasy feeling that we may be missing opportunities whereby risking small forces might achieve great results. Certainly I hear from some of our military people a good deal of criticism of the insistence, especially on the American side, of the most detailed and complete preparation for any new venture on the ground that the time spent in preparation may often benefit the enemy more than ourselves.

You will, also, have heard long since of one side of the Quebec discussions (also between Canada and the United Kingdom) concerning our taking over and manning naval units from the British. These suggestions from the British side have been accepted in principle on the understanding that they will not involve a net increase in the manpower programme of the Canadian Navy. They include the eventual transfer of perhaps two cruisers, two fleet destroyers and three flotillas of landing craft, together with the formation of a naval Beach Commando and Signal unit (900 men) and the provision of 120 officer candidates for training under the Royal Navy. There is also some possibility that the R.C.N. will take over and man one or more of the smaller aircraft carriers.

Another minor naval matter on which agreement was reached was the form of the monthly statements on the progress of submarine warfare which are now being given out in the name of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill. Mr. Churchill explained the agreement reached about our association with these statements in the House of Commons after his return. We have now received the draft text three or four days before the time for its release and have, therefore, an opportunity to comment on it.

You will, I am sure, have noted with interest the very general U.S. suggestions for the organization of security after the war which were brought forward at Quebec. These were summarized in one of the Dominions Office telegrams two or three weeks ago which dealt with the preparations for the Moscow Conference. You may remember our comments on them were asked but that the request was withdrawn (to my relief) by a further telegram of the same day apparently after receipt of further information from Washington that the outline would not be brought forward at Moscow. Mr. Churchill at his second meeting with the Cabinet War Committee described these proposals and said that he himself much preferred a system of regional councils, adding that he thought a strong France was essential to European stability. I do not like either the general United States scheme or an essentially regional scheme.

We were not directly concerned at Quebec with the Far Eastern aspects of military planning which, of course, received a good deal of attention. I gather that a good deal was left for later discussion in the light of detailed alternative plans to be prepared by the staff planners. Lord Mountbatten's appointment⁷⁴ was, of course, one of the immediate consequences.

Yours sincerely,

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Discussion between the President and Prime Minister has proceeded on the basis of the possibility of the document being included on agenda of forthcoming Three-Power meeting of Foreign Ministers referred to in my telegram Circular D. 623 of September 6th.[†] If this is decided upon, procedure would, we expect, be that the United States Government would informally communicate draft to us and to the Russians simultaneously before the conference takes place.

Meanwhile the Cabinet here have been giving preliminary consideration to the document. In general, the Cabinet cordially welcome declaration of this nature in view of the great advantages which it would have in proclaiming interest of United States in post-war system and in linking up Soviet Russia with United States and ourselves in a joint policy for future security.

We should be grateful if we could receive the earliest possible expression of your views on this proposal. In view of the importance of the issue we are naturally anxious to have the fullest possible consultation with the Dominion Governments in the matter before the United Kingdom representative deals with it at the proposed Three-Power Conference.

On points of detail it has occurred to us that paragraphs 3 and 4 might read better as follows:

“3. That they will take all measures deemed by them to be necessary to provide against any violation of the terms imposed upon the enemy.

4. That they recognise the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organisation for the maintenance of international peace and security based on the principle of the sovereign equality of nations”.

It has further occurred to us that the last few words of paragraph 4 in the United States draft might be an embarrassment in the future since they might encourage the smaller powers to hope that in the future planning for Europe they will be treated as in all respects equivalent to the larger powers. It is, of course, important to avoid the impression that the greater powers would ride roughshod over the smaller powers and this could, it seems to us, be achieved equally well by somewhat different wording such as “. . . a general international organisation for the maintenance of international peace and security in which all peace-loving nations, great and small, may play their just part”.

It is probable that these amendments will be put forward by us at the Three-Power meeting. Generally we think it important to adhere as closely as possible to the wording proposed by the United States.

Very grateful if we could receive your views at the earliest possible date. Ends.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the Prime Minister,

Begins: My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text, Begins: The Governments of the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union and China, united in their determination, in accordance with Declaration by United Nations of January 1st, 1942,⁷⁵ and subsequent Declarations[†] to continue hostilities against those Axis Powers with which they respectively are at war until such Powers have laid down their arms on basis of unconditional surrender, conscious of their responsibilities to secure liberation [for] themselves and people allied with them from menace of aggression; recognizing necessity of ensuring a rapid and orderly transition from war to peace and of establishing and maintaining international peace and security with least diversion of world's human and economic resources for armaments, jointly declare —

1. That their united action, pledged for the prosecution of the war, will be continued for organization and maintenance of peace and security.
2. That those of them at war with a common enemy will act together in all matters relating to surrender and disarmament of the enemy, and to any occupation of enemy territory and of territory of other States held by that enemy.

The Canadian Government welcomes the suggestion that there should be a declaration by the leading Powers along the general lines set forth in the United States proposals.

2. The text as proposed by the United States is generally acceptable. We prefer your wording of clause 3. With regard to clause 4 we would suggest a fusion of the United States and United Kingdom drafts as follows: "That they recognize the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organization based on the principle of sovereign equality of all nations for the maintenance of international peace and security in which all peace-loving nations, great and small, may play their just part".

3. Clause 5 of the United States draft appears to be open to the objection of excluding from consultation all Powers other than the four signatories. We would suggest amending it as follows: "... They will consult with one other and with other members of the United Nations acting jointly on behalf of the community of Nations". This suggestion would take into account the proposals in your telegram Circular D. 365 of June 19th⁷⁶ for the United Nations Commission for Europe.

4. We assume that the declaration set forth in clause 6 will not impair existing arrangements with regard to consultation on military questions.

5. We would suggest that clause 8 be amended to read: "That they will confer and co-operate with one another and with other members of the United Nations to bring about a practicable general agreement with respect to regulation of armaments in post-war period".

Le Premier ministre d'Australie au Premier ministre
Prime Minister of Australia to Prime Minister

Canberra, September 18, 1943

Following telegram has been sent to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, Begins: No. 244. Your telegrams Circular D. 650 and Circular D. 651. It appears to us that the positive value of a Declaration of the nature proposed lies in the fact that the three main military Powers, viz. British Commonwealth, United States and Soviet Russia would definitely commit themselves to post-war collaboration and to policing the peace settlement.

2. But the terms of obligations are of such a nature that it is extremely doubtful whether China could be regarded as capable of fulfilling them. For this reason the Declaration might lose much of its positive effect if China is included.

3. It may have been politic from the point of view of public opinion in the United States that China should be proposed as a party to the Declaration. It is noticeable that it is not proposed that China should be represented at the Three-Power Conference where the proposed Declaration is to be listed and we doubt the inclusion of China in the Declaration.

4. From the point of view of effectiveness of weight and of avoidance of future difficulties, we believe that the three major Powers only should be associated, viz. the United States, the British Commonwealth of Nations and the Soviet Union. We appreciate that this entails prior agreement between the members of the British Commonwealth, but if they cannot agree amongst themselves it is obvious that wider agreement is impossible.

5. As to the terms of the proposed Declaration:

(a) We agree to your amendment paragraph 3,

(b) We agree to your first proposed amendment paragraph 4.

We are not prepared to agree to your second suggested amendment to paragraph 4. The words "peace-loving" and "just part" may give rise to untold difficulties. They may well be regarded as permanently excluding present enemy Powers from future participation and also as contradicting a basic principle of international law – viz., the general principle of equality of States.

6. We regard paragraph 5 as of crucial importance. We consider that in order to agree to it Australia should either separately or as part of the British Commonwealth of Nations be definitely included as one of the parties to act on behalf of the Community of Nations.

Appropriate drafting should make it certain that Australia is included in the connotation of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Our view is that in this and analogous matters it is desirable to give recognition to the British Dominions who have contributed so much to the Empire war effort during the past four years. The view is held to some extent in Australia that this principle is very very important otherwise our status may decline to the position existing before the Treaty of Versailles in 1919. It is desirable to keep in mind that in 1926 the Balfour Declaration asserted the equality of status of British Dominions with the United Kingdom in external affairs.

7. Paragraph 5 of the Declaration goes to the root of the proposal. We therefore regard it as essential that the views we have expressed in paragraph 6 of this message should be given effect to in form as well as in fact. Ends.

London, September 27, 1943

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. My telegram of September 20th, Circular D. 674.[†] Four-Power Declaration. We are glad to note that principle of such a Declaration is welcomed by other British Commonwealth Governments and we have considered fully their comments on proposed wording.

2. Clause 4. After examining the various views expressed we think that it would be best to adopt following wording:

“That they recognise the necessity of establishing at the earliest practicable date a general international organisation based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all nations for the maintenance of international peace and security in which all peace-loving nations, great and small, may play their part”.

This we think would provide adequate recognition for the position and status of the smaller Powers while avoiding the danger to which Union Government’s reply called attention. We do not think that this wording need exclude present enemy Powers from eventual participation.

3. Clause 5. We agree that this would be improved by including express reference to consultation with other members of United Nations and now favour following wording:

“That for the purpose of maintaining international peace and security, pending the re-establishment of law and order and the inauguration of a general system of security, they will consult with one another and as occasion requires with other members of the United Nations with a view to joint action on behalf of the community of nations”.

We agree that word “joint” involves some risk of inaction resulting from disagreement but it also seems important to aim at preventing independent action by one of the signatories.

4. Clause 6. With reference to paragraph 4 of Canadian reply,⁷⁷ we think it may safely be assumed that this clause would not impair any existing arrangements with regard to consultation on military questions.

5. Clause 8. We agree with Canadian suggestion⁷⁷ that this should read:

“That they will confer and co-operate with one another and with other members of the United Nations to bring about a practicable general agreement with respect to regulation of armaments in the post-war period.”

6. China. As regards Australian Government’s observations on proposed participation of China,⁷⁸ we feel that from the point of view of opinion in the United States, the inclusion of China must be regarded as essential and that it would be unwise for us to suggest omitting China.

7. Dominions. We have given fullest consideration to Australian suggestion⁷⁸ that Declaration should be, so far as we are concerned, in the name of the British Commonwealth and that Australia should either separately or as part of the British Commonwealth be definitely included as one of the parties to act on behalf of the community of nations. We are of course in fullest agreement with the general idea that what we should aim at is to secure a joint British Commonwealth policy on all these matters. Australian suggestion would, however, as Commonwealth Government point out, require assent of all the Dominions and it will be that remembered, at the 1926 Imperial Conference, the idea of the ⁷⁸ See preceding document.

British Commonwealth as a single contracting unit was ruled out at the request of the Dominions as tending to obscure their separate international status. Unless therefore the other Dominion Governments were prepared to support the Australian proposal it does not appear to be practicable. In any case we do not see how other foreign countries could now be expected to accept an arrangement under which Dominions were at the same time formally parts of one of the major Powers and also separately individual members of the general community of nations. In practice the position of the Dominions in the sense which the Australian Government desire should be fully safeguarded by existing system of consultation which would ensure fullest possible preliminary consideration between ourselves and other British Commonwealth Governments of all matters which under the terms of the Declaration would come before the major Powers. In practice if not in name the United Kingdom would support a policy acceptable to all members of the British Commonwealth. Our conclusion has therefore been against the adoption of the suggestions in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the Australian reply.

8. Nevertheless we think that there would be important advantages if it could be demonstrated to the world if and when the Declaration is adopted that though it is only signed by the United Kingdom it has the approval of other British Commonwealth Governments. If this suggestion is acceptable we should be happy to consider at a later stage how effect could best be given to it e.g. simultaneous statements or possibly by a joint declaration.

9. We are now putting to State Department the amendment to clause 3 set out in my telegram Circular D. 650, the above amendments to clauses 4, 5 and 8, and also a suggestion for substituting "to liberation of other States . . ." for "of territory of other States . . ." in clause 2.

You will have seen telegram Circular D. 705 of September 27 from London on the proposed Four Power Declaration on international security. The views expressed in this telegram seem to me to make it unnecessary for us to comment on the Australian point of view.⁷⁹ Robertson sent you a draft telegram a few days ago with suggested comments and a covering memorandum. This I think can now be dropped.

In fact, they have done a good job of redrafting in London and their proposed version of Clause 5 is better than our own suggestion.⁸⁰ In preserving the position of the smaller countries, they have met all our points satisfactorily and have also answered the Australian plea for dropping China and for making the Declaration in the name of the British Commonwealth on lines which accord with our views.

If the Declaration is issued it will be a document of high importance. I think that it is desirable that we should let the United Kingdom Government know that we agree with the changes they are proposing in the draft. We have already said that we would welcome a declaration of this sort. The draft will be put forward by the U.S. representative at the Conference of Foreign Ministers in Moscow. Wilgress has reported that the Soviet Government may not agree to its publication because of the inclusion of China, but thinks that it is in general accord with their views on the post-war organization of security.

MOST SECRET

Dear Mr. Davis,

I expect that you will have seen at the Department of External Affairs in Canberra the various telegrams exchanged between London, Canberra and other Dominion capitals on the proposed Declaration which is being submitted to the Moscow Conference. If these telegrams have not come to your notice you might arrange to see them and as a guide the following are the numbers of the more important ones:

Circulars D. 650 and 651 from the Dominions Office of September 13th,

No. 18 from Canberra to Ottawa of September 18th,

No. 10 from Ottawa to Canberra of September 21st,[†]

No. 177 from Wellington to Canberra of September 21st,[†]

No. 9 from South Africa to Canberra of September 22nd,[†]

Circular D. 705 from the Dominions Office of September 27th.

There have also been some later Dominions Office telegrams[†] concerning the status of the proposed declaration.

I particularly wish to draw your attention to the Australian proposal that this important declaration should be issued in the name of the British Commonwealth rather than in the name of the United Kingdom. The practical arguments against the adoption of this course were clearly set out by the Dominions Office in Circular D. 705. The importance which Mr. Evatt at least attached to them was shown by a personal message which he sent to the Prime Minister through Sir William Glasgow on September 21st[†] in which after referring to the proposals and the Australian reply he said that if the tendency shown by the proposals were allowed to prevail, it would be most serious for Canada and Australia.

You will notice from the telegrams that a main Australian concern in commenting on the original draft was to ensure that in the execution of the policies laid down in the proposed Declaration the Australian Government should have its say through making the British Commonwealth as a whole a party to the Declaration. Our comments were also in part prompted by a desire to protect the position of Canada but they were designed to apply to all the United Nations (whether in the Commonwealth or outside of it) which were not parties to the Declaration.

Before we learnt from Dominions Office Circular D. 705 of September 27th that the United Kingdom Government had adopted all our suggestions and had refused the Australian proposal we had prepared a further telegram[†] commenting on the Australian views which was approved by the Prime Minister only after the occasion for its despatch had passed because of the receipt of Circular D. 705. This telegram began by saying that while we agreed that the inclusion of China in the Declaration was unrealistic we were not prepared to support the exclusion of China (this matter has now been looked after by the Russian objection to Chinese participation). Our draft telegram then continued as follows:

“We consider that it is not feasible for the British Commonwealth of Nations to be a party to the Declaration in place of the United Kingdom. The position of Ireland alone appears to us to make such a change impracticable, without entering into other important questions of intra-Commonwealth relationships involved in this suggestion. We have already proposed certain amendments, especially to paragraphs 4, 5 and 8, which are designed to clarify the position under the Declaration of members of the United Nations (whether in the Commonwealth or outside of it) which are not parties to it. We strongly share the Australian view that the language of paragraph 5 of the United States draft “They will consult and act jointly on behalf of the community of nations” should be altered so as to protect the position of countries not parties to the Declaration.”

It concluded by saying that the problems of intra-Commonwealth relations with respect to the Declaration might be the subject of later Commonwealth discussions.

Whatever may be the fate of the Declaration itself these exchanges are interesting in other connections. The Australian Government committed itself to the view that in an important matter the British Commonwealth should act as a single unit. We are certainly not prepared to go as far as this. Dr. Evatt presumably wants Australia to be at the same time an influential part of a great power and to maintain her independent status as a separate member of the community of nations. We feel that you cannot formalize the unity of the Commonwealth internationally (even if that is desirable which is open to question) without surrendering the right of each self-governing member of the Commonwealth to speak vigorously in its own name. From one point of view the Commonwealth is now an entente cordiale strengthened by the long historical association and by the Crown; we do not wish to see it converted into an exclusive alliance.

I send you these observations not with the intention that you should take them up with the Australian Government but purely for your own information.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

Dear Sir,

I understand that the question may arise at the Hong Kong enquiry whether Dominions Office telegram No. 162 of September 18, 1941, is the first record of any communication between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Canada with regard to the despatch of Canadian contingents for the reinforcement of Hong Kong.

I have personally searched the records of the Department of External Affairs and have made enquiries from all possible sources within the Department including an enquiry from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs as to possible communications on the occasion of the Prime Minister's visit to the United Kingdom in the summer of 1941.

There is no record of any sort with regard to the despatch of a Canadian force for the reinforcement of the Hong Kong garrison prior to Dominions Office telegram No. 162 of September 18, 1941.

I have endeavoured to find some indication of verbal discussions in case the Minister may want to know whether there were any prior to the date of the telegram in question. It is, of course, difficult to establish a negative proposition. I am satisfied in my own mind that there were no earlier communications of any sort, and I can state with certainty that I have made all enquiries reasonably practicable and have been unable to find anything that would justify an assumption that there had been an earlier communication.

No. 8

Sir,

I have the honour to state that the Canadian Government has had under review the question of compulsory military training and service in Canada and its application to nationals of Belgium and the other United Nations.

2. I am confident that the Belgian Government shares the opinion of the Canadian Government that, in view of the total demands of the struggle in which our countries are associated, it is undesirable that male Belgian nationals of military age should escape the duty of sharing in the military side of the united effort solely because of their residence in Canada.

3. It is proposed, therefore, that the Canadian regulations governing compulsory military training and service, which are at present restricted to British subjects, should be amended and made applicable to the nationals of Belgium. When this is done, all the provisions of the regulations, including the provisions regarding age groups and those respecting postponements, will be applied to Belgian nationals in the same manner as they are at present, and may be in the future, applied to British subjects.

4. It is further proposed that every Belgian national called up for training and service by the Canadian Government should have the option to enlist in the armed forces of Belgium, this option to be exercisable at any time prior or subsequent to his compulsory enrolment in the Canadian forces. (Of course, the exercise of the option subsequent to such enrolment would be subject to the exigencies of the Canadian service).

5. He would also have, like British subjects called up for compulsory service, an opportunity at all times to apply for voluntary enlistment in the Canadian Active Army, the Canadian naval forces, or the Royal Canadian Air Force. In such an event, the Canadian authorities would apply the rule already in force in respect of Belgian nationals applying for enlistment in those forces, namely, no application would be accepted until the matter had first been referred to the Belgian authorities — in order that the latter might have an opportunity to urge enlistment in the Belgian forces.

6. The Canadian Government trusts that these proposals, intended as they are for the purpose of strengthening the common cause, will meet with the approval of the Belgian Government. It is hoped, further, that no Belgian national who becomes a member of the Canadian forces, whether by conscription or voluntary enlistment, will be classified as a deserter or delinquent under Belgian law in consequence of his failure to join the Belgian forces.

RE: CONSCRIPTION OF NATIONALS OF ALLIES HAVING FORCES IN CANADA

In this memorandum I shall summarize our negotiations with the Allies which have forces in Canada, and report briefly on the situation in the United Kingdom and the United States.

Some of the letters and documents referred to in this memorandum are reproduced in full in an appendix.[†] The numbers[†] in the margin of this memorandum refer to pages of the appendix.

CANADA

On March 11 we sent a formal note to the representatives of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Netherlands, Norway and Poland, and on April 9 we sent a similar note to the representative of Yugoslavia. The note proposed that Canada's compulsory military service laws should be extended to the nationals of those countries, provided that such nationals should have the option of enlisting in the armed forces of their own country, this option to be exercisable before or after enrolment in the Canadian forces.

Belgium

The Belgian Minister replied on behalf of his government on April 13.[†] The reply does not expressly reject our proposal but puts forward a completely contradictory proposal i.e. that Canada should help to enforce the conscription laws of Belgium.

⁸⁷M. Wershof.

Czechoslovakia

No formal reply has yet been received. However, the Consul General of Czechoslovakia set out his own views in a memorandum of May 5.[†] The memorandum sets out in detail reasons why it would be better for Czech nationals to enter the Czech army than for them to enter the Canadian army. In conversations with Mr. Read and myself the Consul General made it clear that he does not like our proposal and would like, instead, to have the Canadian Government enforce Czech conscription law. In one conversation the Consul General suggested a compromise procedure under which Canada would enforce Czech conscription law to the extent of allowing the Czech authorities to call men up, provided that persons called up would have the right to opt for the Canadian forces. The Consul General felt that more Czechs would remain with the Czech forces if they were called up in the first instance for the Czech forces.

Netherlands

The Netherlands Minister sent a formal reply on behalf of his government on May 12.[†] The reply recites the reasons why it is important to have Netherlands nationals join the Netherlands forces. The Netherlands Government rejects our proposal and asks instead that we enforce Netherlands conscription law.

Norway

No formal reply has yet been received. On March 30 the Norwegian Consul General sent us a letter[†] containing his own views. He explained the reasons why it is important for Norwegians to join the Norwegian forces. He suggested that Norwegians should be called up for the Norwegian forces and then given a chance to ask the Norwegian authorities for permission to opt for the Canadian forces.

On June 2 the Consul General wrote us again[†] saying that the Norwegian Government would like to obtain an arrangement similar to that adopted in Great Britain and that he was awaiting detailed instructions from his government.

Poland

The Polish Minister sent a formal reply on behalf of his government on April 29.[†] The reply recites the reasons why it is important that Polish nationals join the Polish forces. He implies that the Polish Government would like us to enforce Polish conscription law and he states, completely incorrectly, that the United Kingdom Government in 1940 fully recognized the right of the Polish Government to enforce conscription of Polish citizens in the United Kingdom. He suggests that, if Polish nationals were called up by the Polish Government, some might be given the right to ask Polish authorities for permission to opt for the Canadian forces. The letter amounts to a rejection of our proposal.

Yugoslavia

The Consul General of Yugoslavia wrote on May 18[†] that the Yugoslav Government agrees with the Canadian Government that Yugoslav nationals in Canada should not escape the duty of sharing in the military side of the united effort. I suppose this means that the Yugoslav Government has accepted our proposal but the Consul General does not say so.

UNITED KINGDOM

On October 2, 1941 the Foreign Office proposed to the Allies that their nationals should be made liable by Act of Parliament to compulsory military service, to be performed at choice either in the Allied or British forces.

On March 23, 1942 Canada House reported[†] that it had become clear that the proposal was not satisfactory to the allied governments in the form in which it was made. The Allies considered that it was undesirable that British legislation should offer a right of option to allied citizens as this would seem to intervene between the citizens and their respective laws.

As a result of further negotiations all the Allies except Czechoslovakia agreed to a scheme which has been incorporated in a bill introduced in Parliament on June 25. This bill — The Allied Powers (War Service) Bill — states that its provisions may be applied by Order in Council to any ally. Once it has been applied to a particular ally, any national of that ally who is not a member of the allied force within two months of the “material date” will be conscripted under United Kingdom law as if he were a British subject, provided that any allied national who holds a certificate of exemption from his own government will be exempted from being conscripted by the United Kingdom. The “material date” has two meanings, — if a man is within the age groups already called up under British law, it means the date on which this Act is made applicable to his country; in any other case it means the date on which his age group is called up under British law. There is no provision in this Act for any right of option.

Canada House expects that Czechoslovakia will eventually agree to be covered by the Bill. Apparently the difficulty with the Czechs is that they wish to include Sudeten Germans as Czechoslovaks for the purposes of the Bill.

I am unable to understand why the Allies found this Bill more palatable than the opting proposal previously made to them by the British Government.

UNITED STATES

Under United States law both declarant⁸⁸ and non-declarant allied nationals are liable to service.

In the case of non-declarant allied nationals, our information is that the United States is willing to conclude with each allied government an agreement similar to the one made between Canada and the United States,⁸⁹ i.e. an agreement under which an allied national may, on being called up, opt for the forces of his own country. According to the latest information from the Canadian Legation no such agreements have yet been concluded with the allied governments in question.

I understand that it is your intention to tell the representatives of Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Netherlands, Norway and Poland, that, in view of the action of their governments in agreeing to the scheme set forth in the United Kingdom Allied Powers (War Service) Bill, and for other reasons, the Canadian Government considers it essential that they should agree either to the opting proposal we originally made or to a scheme along the lines contained in the United Kingdom Government legislation.

It would be possible, if desired, to attach one of the features of the United Kingdom scheme to the Canadian proposal or vice versa. The Canadian proposal could be altered by providing for the exemption of persons bearing certificates of exemption from their own governments. The United Kingdom scheme could be altered by providing for a right of option even after the two months waiting period.

We have never told the allied governments in question of our intention to introduce a 1st paper⁹⁰ procedure and to call up "1st paper aliens" as if they were British subjects, i.e. without any legal right of option. In practice I don't suppose that permission to opt would be refused to such persons.

RE: CONSCRIPTION OF NATIONALS OF ALLIES HAVING FORCES IN CANADA

1. On your instructions, conveyed to me through Mr. Rae, I attended today a meeting held at the Department of National Defence of representatives of the various foreign forces in Canada, except the United States. Major Breuls of the Adjutant General's Office presided, and Major J. Leal (National Defence Liaison Officer for the Foreign Forces) was present.

2. The main subject of discussion was the long-standing desire of the allied governments that the Canadian Government should enforce their conscription laws against their nationals in Canada. The representatives repeated in strong terms the reasons why the Canadian Government should help to strengthen the allied forces. The principal reasons mentioned were the following —

- (a) The strengthening of the allied forces will help to keep up the spirit of resistance in the occupied countries;
- (b) The allied forces will be very important when the continent is invaded;
- (c) Some of the allied countries need soldiers for the additional purpose of arming their merchant ships.

3. Some of those present seemed to think that the only reason why the Canadian Government has in the past refused to enforce their conscription laws was that Canada was calling up men only for home defence while the conscription laws of the allied countries were for overseas service. They felt therefore that, once the ban on overseas service is removed from the National Resources Mobilization Act, there would be no further reason for Canada to refuse to enforce allied conscription laws. Without going into details I said that there were other reasons for the decision of the Canadian Government.

4. One of the representatives argued very strongly, that, once the amendment to Canadian law goes through and Canadians are liable to be sent to fight anywhere in the world whether they like it or not, it would be unreasonable to be more considerate of the feelings of allied nationals in Canada than of the feelings of Canadians in Canada. Under those circumstances, what reason could there be for giving an allied national an option instead of telling him that he must serve in the forces of his own country?

5. The representatives urged most strongly that, if the Canadian Government will not change its decision on the basic question of enforcing the conscription laws of the allied countries, at least we should compel allied nationals (within the same age groups as British subjects being called out under present Canadian law) to serve within Canada with the respective allied forces. It was pointed out that the allied forces need a certain number of men within Canada and that, if their nationals could be compelled to serve within Canada, that would free a certain number of volunteers for overseas service.

6. I said that my expectation was that the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs would shortly call in the diplomatic representatives of each allied country to discuss the basic question with a view to reaching a final decision. I said that I did not think that the subsidiary proposal just made (i.e. that allied nationals be called up for service within Canada with the forces of their own countries) could be answered before the larger question had been definitely settled. If the allied governments should decide to accept the proposal which the Canadian Government has made to them (i.e. that their nationals be called up under Canadian law and then given the right to opt for their own forces) there would be difficulty in attaching to such a scheme the plan of compelling allied nationals to serve within Canada with the forces of their own countries.

7. The Polish representative urged very strongly that the matter be settled quickly. He said that he realized that the final decision was one for the Canadian Government to make and he thought that it should be made without further delay. Those sentiments were concurred in by all the other representatives.

8. The following estimates were given of the men available:

	Within age limits of Canadian law i.e. 21 to 35 and single	Within age limits of allied law
Netherlanders	200	400
Czechoslovaks	300	500
Belgians	200	400
Poles	?	*15,000
Norwegians	300	600
Yugoslavs	150	280

*This number is obviously wrong – perhaps it is the total Polish national population in Canada. According to the list in Mr. E. Reid's memorandum for Council in January, 1942, the number is under 4,000.

CONSCRIPTION OF NATIONALS OF COUNTRIES
MAINTAINING FOREIGN FORCES IN CANADA

A meeting was held in Mr. Robertson's office on the afternoon of July 7th, at which the following were present:—

Mr. N.A. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Baron Silvercruys, Belgian Minister to Canada.

Major J. Leal, Department of National Defence.

Mr. M. Wershof, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. S.F. Rae, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Robertson referred to the previous correspondence with the various Allied Governments with respect to the proposal that the Canadian Government should apply the provisions of the National Resources Mobilization Act to nationals of countries maintaining Foreign Forces residing in Canada. From the replies which have been received, it had been made clear that many of the various allied governments, including the Belgian Government, felt strongly that the Canadian authorities should enforce their conscription laws against their nationals in Canada. Mr. Robertson set forth the objections to this counter-proposal in the following terms:—

(1) As a country of immigration, Canada was peopled by a good many people of foreign stock who had come to this country in order to make their homes here, and who, in many cases, had children who were Canadian nationals. The only tie to their former motherland lay in the fact that they had neglected to take the legal step of becoming naturalized in Canada. It was felt that severe hardships would be inflicted on such individuals if such compulsory military measures by their former governments were put into practice.

(2) While the Belgians, together with the Norwegians and Netherlanders were probable exceptions, so far as several of the other Allied Governments were concerned, hostility existed to these Governments in the minds of many persons, who in a purely formal sense, were nationals of the countries concerned. The majority of Ukrainians in Canada would, for example, strongly object to enlisting in the Polish Forces, as would a good many Polish Jews. Many Slovaks who were anti-Nazi would still prefer to serve with the Canadian Army rather than with the Czechoslovak Army. A similar situation existed between Croats and Serbs, and would give rise to grave difficulties in the application of Yugoslav compulsory measures. These difficulties would tend to outweigh the advantages in terms of manpower.

⁹² Des réunions ont aussi eu lieu avec le chargé d'affaires des Pays-Bas, le ministre de la Pologne et le ministre de la Norvège.

(3) The position of the United States had already been made clear, as had that of the United Kingdom. In neither country had permission been given to apply the conscription laws of foreign governments, and in the case of the United States, even voluntary enlistment was prohibited. Canada had already given considerable assistance to the foreign forces, but in the light of the considerations upon which the policies of the United Kingdom and the United States were based, it was not possible to reverse the previous decision of the Canadian Government, which had been opposed to permitting the application of foreign conscription laws in Canada.

In view of these considerations, Mr. Robertson indicated that the alternatives were either the acceptance of the original Canadian Government proposal, or of a proposal similar to that advanced by the United Kingdom Government which had been agreed to by the various foreign governments in the United Kingdom.

In reply, Baron Silvercruys pointed out that he clearly understood Canada's position, but felt that, on the first point, the Canadian view was based on what might be called a pre-war attitude of mind. He referred to the conflicting fact that the Canadian Government were preparing to put through Bill 80,⁹³ even at the risk of alienating an appreciable section of public opinion in Canada. The application of conscription for overseas service might be considered necessary from the point of view of the prosecution of the war, even though objections would be raised within Canada.

While feeling that the second point had more substance, Baron Silvercruys suggested that it might be possible to work out some provision for "political objectors", along the lines of the provisions for "conscientious objectors". In addition, he doubted whether the Czechoslovaks and Poles were anxious to apply conscription here. Mr. Robertson indicated that a uniform policy would have to be applied to all the governments maintaining foreign forces in Canada, and that there could be little doubt that, were the Canadian authorities to grant such permission, all the Governments concerned would be anxious to make full use of their powers. On the third point, Baron Silvercruys said that the Belgian Government had not concurred in the United Kingdom proposals, although they had finally accepted them. It was unlikely that steps would be taken to raise the question again in the United States.

Mr. Robertson said that, in general, the view of the Canadian authorities was that as much help as possible should be given to the foreign forces, the existence of which served to rally the people of occupied countries. The object of the Canadian policy was to help the foreign forces, and yet to refrain for the reasons stated, from permitting them to apply their conscription laws to their own nationals in Canada. The views which had been expressed could be regarded as a "semi-official" indication of the views of the Canadian Government, and a

Ottawa, August 4, 1942

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to my note No. 18 of March 11, 1942,⁹⁵ and subsequent correspondence regarding the question of compulsory military training and service in Canada and its application to nationals of the Netherlands and the other United Nations.

2. In my earlier note, it was indicated that the Canadian Government has taken the position that, in view of the total demands of the common effort in which our countries are engaged, the liability for military service under the Canadian compulsory service requirements should be extended to include nationals of allied countries who are residents of Canada. At the same time it was understood that such nationals thus called up under the provisions of the National Resources Mobilization Act should have the right to serve with the forces of their own country.

3. In the course of our subsequent exchange of views, your Government and certain of the other allied Governments concerned, have suggested that the Canadian authorities should modify their position and, as an alternative, should consider permitting the enforcement in Canada, either fully or in part, of the conscription laws of the allied countries. While appreciating the force of certain of the points advanced, the Canadian authorities feel, after careful consideration, that it would not be possible to accept these alternative suggestions. Accordingly, it has been decided to proceed with the original policy outlined in my note of March 11. In making this decision the Canadian Government has taken into consideration the difficult and numerous personal problems which would be created in Canada if the suggestion of the allied Governments were to be accepted, and also the policies which have been followed by the United Kingdom and United States Governments in meeting a similar problem.

4. In informing you of this decision to call up nationals of the Netherlands in the same way as British subjects under the National Resources Mobilization Act, it is felt that this step will have the effect of strengthening our joint contribution to the common military effort. From the point of view of Canada, such action will impose a common liability for military training and service on both allied nationals and British subjects. At the same time, in view of the procedure which is contemplated, it is reasonable to assume that a proportion of the Netherlands nationals so called up will instead join the Netherlands forces. It is intended to give full publicity to this arrangement, in order that the procedure will be clearly understood by the individuals concerned.

5. In order to place in effect the proposals outlined in paragraph 2 above, it is intended to issue an Order in Council shortly which will set forth the necessary amendment to the National War Services Regulations (Recruits).⁹⁶ For your confidential information, the amendment will take the form described in the next paragraph.

6. Section 4 of the Regulations (which provides at present for the calling up only of British subjects) will be revoked and a new section 4 will be substituted. The new section 4 will provide for the calling up of all residents, other than enemy aliens, regardless of nationality. There will be a subsection along the following lines:

“No national of a country which is a foreign power within the meaning of that expression as defined by the Foreign Forces Order, 1941, shall be liable to undergo or perform military training under subsection one of this section after he files with the Divisional Registrar of the Administrative Division in which he resides satisfactory evidence that he has become a member of the Armed Forces of the state of which he is a national.”

7. It will be noted that nothing in the amendment will interfere with the right, at present enjoyed by allied governments, to send call-up notices to their nationals in Canada under their own conscription laws.

8. I should also like to point out that nothing in the amendment will interfere with the present legal right of allied governments to record as a delinquent any of their nationals who fail to answer their calls. (Such persons cannot, of course, be punished in Canada). However, as stated in my note of March 11, it is hoped that no Netherlands national who becomes a member of the Canadian forces will be treated as a deserter or delinquent under the Netherlands law in consequence of his failure to join the Netherlands forces.

9. If a Netherlands national joins the Canadian forces pursuant to a Canadian call-up notice, he will have, like the Netherlands nationals who voluntarily join the Canadian forces, an opportunity to apply for transfer to the Netherlands forces, subject, of course, to the exigencies of the Canadian service.

10. Furthermore, as stated in my note of March 11, a Netherlands national who joins the Canadian forces pursuant to a Canadian call-up notice will have, like British subjects in the same position, an opportunity to apply for voluntary enlistment in the Canadian Active Army. If he so applies, the Canadian authorities will observe the rule already in force in respect of Netherlands nationals applying for enlistment in the Canadian Active Army, namely, the application will not be accepted until the matter has first been referred to the Netherlands authorities, in order that the latter may have an opportunity to urge enlistment in the Netherlands forces.

Mémorandum du secrétaire, le Comité de guerre du Cabinet, au Premier ministre
Memorandum from Secretary, Cabinet War Committee, to Prime Minister

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 13, 1942

RE: CANADA'S ROLE IN AIR TRAINING — PROPOSED OTTAWA
CONFERENCE — BRITISH COMMONWEALTH — UNITED STATES

1. From the beginning, the government have felt that because of geographical considerations and national characteristics, Canada could take a major part in developing the air strength necessary to defeat the Axis. As a matter of policy, therefore, first priority over all other forms of military endeavour has been given to the training in Canada of combat airmen for active service wherever the enemy is to be found.

The particular Canadian position, in this respect, was, early in the war, recognized by the British and other Commonwealth governments. In December, 1939, by agreement with the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan was established in Canada as a major source of aircrew for the Air Forces of the Empire.

2. The B.C.A.T.P. has proved to be probably the most successful, certainly the most spectacular, department of the Canadian war effort, and has amply justified the emphasis which the Canadian government have continued to give to Canada's role in this respect. The original scheme has been many times expanded to meet a growing conception of the magnitude of the task of beating the Axis in the air. Despite the fact that operational needs have prevented Britain from supplying a large proportion of the aircraft and engines which were to be her major contribution to the Plan, despite other difficulties, an immense organization has been built up and the output of trained aircrew from Canada has already constituted an important factor in enabling British air forces to take the offensive.

3. The success of the B.C.A.T.P. and the wisdom of the Canadian government in devoting to it a large proportion of Canadian resources in men, money and materials is illustrated by the following:

⁹⁷ Voir aussi les documents 912, 913, 1407, 1408, 1439 et 1440.

⁹⁷ See also Documents 912, 913, 1407, 1408, 1439 and 1440.

There are in operation in Canada some 70 flying training schools of all kinds, in addition to the necessary related ground training establishments.

Total aircrew trained to April 3rd, 1942, numbered 19,388. The B.C.A.T.P. is now turning out trained aircrew at the rate of approximately 25,000 annually; of these some 11,000 are pilots, the remainder, air observers and wireless-air gunners.

(About 70% of the aircrew graduating from B.C.A.T.P. schools are members of the Royal Canadian Air Force — the remainder being British, Australians and New Zealanders).

4. In addition to the B.C.A.T.P., some 35 flying training establishments of the R.A.F. itself have been or are being transferred to Canada, and the U.K. government now wish to add substantially to this number. Such R.A.F. schools, for all practical purposes, form part of Canadian training facilities and are administered by the R.C.A.F.

5. Canada has also embarked upon a large programme of expansion of her Home War Establishment for the defence of the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts, and vital areas within her own boundaries.

6. The President's programme for the development of the United States Army Air Corps is immense. It involves enormous expansion of American training facilities and the production of trained aircrew in the current year in numbers many times those which previously existing establishments were able to train.

Further, the United States have accepted, for training, substantial numbers of R.A.F. personnel and it is said that the Admiralty would like to transfer to North America practically all training for the Fleet [Air] Arm.

7. The Canada-U.S. Permanent Joint Board on Defence (in their 23rd Recommendation, December 20, 1941) recommended:

“that the Canadian and United States governments should consider the advisability of arranging for a meeting of appropriate representatives of Great Britain, Canada and the United States to make appropriate recommendations for the co-ordination of the entire aviation training programmes to be conducted in Canada and the United States.”

8. The Commonwealth Air Training Agreement will expire in March, 1943, and consideration is being given by the co-operating governments to the terms upon which the Plan will be continued. Involved in this is the important problem of providing, in advance, for the large numbers of trainer aircraft and engines which will be needed for replacements, development and improvement in training methods, and other important questions.

9. The Canadian government have felt that discussions regarding the continuance of the Commonwealth Plan offered an opportunity for consideration of the wider problem of British Commonwealth-United States air training as a whole and for the exploration of means of co-ordinating British and American programmes. The Canadian government have, therefore, proposed, and the U.K. government have agreed to, a conference of Empire and U.S. government representatives in Ottawa, early next month to consider these questions on the highest level.

The United Kingdom favoured a preliminary meeting of Commonwealth representatives, followed by an invitation to the United States. We have contended that this would be a mistake and that the Americans should be invited to participate fully from the outset. Narrower problems of the B.C.A.T.P. could be dealt with, we felt, by a committee of the conference.

10. There is no doubt that Canada is capable of playing an increasingly important role in the development of the air forces of the United Nations. She has met and overcome successfully many of the problems of rapid expansion of air training facilities, under pressure, over the past two years. She already has a large training plant and has developed facilities and methods which have proved themselves. These facts are, perhaps, not fully appreciated in the United States.

At the same time, while supply of aircrew material in Canada is still large, and suitable candidates continue to come forward, Canadian manpower, in this respect, has obvious limitations.

Britain, for operational and other reasons, is committed to a policy of transferring the greater portion of R.A.F. training from the British Isles. The United States has, of course, enormous potential capacity, but it may be doubted whether she will be able, without great difficulty, to develop to the enormous extent, and as rapidly as is necessary, the training facilities needed for her immense programme. At the same time, the American reservoir for aircrew pupils is by far the largest in the United Nations.

11. One factor which gives added urgency to the need for an early conference is a proposal of the U.K. government to increase substantially, and beyond the period regarded by our officers as necessary or desirable, the length of training courses. This proposal is the result of serious shortages of operational aircraft (arising largely from diversions to Russia and alteration in bomber crew practice) and consequent embarrassing accumulations of trained aircrew. If it is given effect the R.C.A.F. fear that morale will suffer seriously.

It is obviously desirable that the supply of trained aircrew in relation to availability of operational aircraft should be dealt with in the closest co-operation with the United States.

12. In such circumstances, there is a strong case for a Canadian initiative in proposing the closest co-operation in British and American air training, so that the fullest and most efficient use may be made of Canadian experience and facilities and American manpower. Whether this can best be done by United States participation in the B.C.A.T.P., or otherwise, is a question which should be considered by the governments, as soon as possible. These are the considerations which have led to the Canadian proposal for an immediate conference, above the purely technical or Service level.

While the conference would meet primarily to deal with the broad problems of policy, many subsidiary questions of a more or less technical nature, such as those connected with the co-ordination of methods of training, "provisioning" and the like, would, of course, have to be considered by appropriate officers of the countries concerned.

SECRET AND IMMEDIATE

Ottawa, April 21, 1942

Dear Sir Patrick [Duff],

With reference to the forthcoming Air Training Conference, I am submitting below certain items for an Agenda which you may wish to cable to London. We would, of course, be glad to have any comments which the United Kingdom authorities may wish to make on these suggestions, as well as any additional subjects which they think should be included.

The subjects to be discussed by the conference may well fall into three main divisions:

- (a) Those of interest to all members of the conference.
- (b) Those of interest to British Commonwealth representatives.
- (c) Those of interest to United Kingdom and Canadian representatives only.

The subjects to be included under (b) and (c) will, of course, be determined to some extent by the decisions reached on those under (a), and any suggestions made below should be regarded in that light.

The following subjects are proposed for consideration by the whole conference:

1. The necessity of relating training capacity of the United Nations to the output of operational types of aircraft by those Nations.

In explanation of this item, it is pointed out that it takes at least a year to train an aircrew. Therefore, unless firm allocations of the output of operational types are made more than a year in advance, it is not possible for the ultimate users to plan their training capacity to meet requirements.

Training programmes based on provisional allocations of operational types may result in one Nation having a surplus of aircrew, and another a surplus of operational aircraft. United Nations production of operational aircraft can now be planned with reasonable accuracy. Therefore, total aircrew requirements can also be planned. It might, however, become necessary to make some inter-governmental arrangement for interchange of aircrews between Nations as aircraft allocations and aircrew requirements are varied in accordance with strategic needs.

2. Arising out of 1, the balancing of training capacity between the United Nations, with a view to ensuring a continuous flow of trainees and adequate trainer aircraft and other necessary equipment.

Under this item there would be discussed such questions as —

Should Canada take members of the United States forces into B.C.A.T.P. schools whenever surplus capacity exists? Should R.A.F. personnel from American schools be transferred to the B.C.A.T.P.?

It is felt that changing conditions and the needs of the nations concerned will affect this balance from time to time and that some procedure for readjustment is, therefore, necessary.

3. The practicability and desirability of adopting standard systems of training.

If aircrew are to be interchanged between nations in accordance with the strategical allocation of aircraft, it is desirable that aircrew of the United Nations be trained along similar lines.

4. Composition of Aircrews.

It is thought that the United Kingdom might desire to initiate a general discussion of the effect on training requirements of changes recently proposed. If these changes have been proved desirable in the light of experience, the other nations at the conference might benefit from such a discussion and their own policies might be influenced thereby in the direction of greater uniformity.

How can the present surplus of semi-trained pilots, brought about by recent decisions be absorbed?

The following are proposed as subjects suitable for British Commonwealth discussion:

1. The adequacy of British Commonwealth training capacity for its own needs. To what extent is an extension of the training capacity of the B.C.A.T.P. necessary or desirable?

2. The continued participation of Australia and New Zealand in the B.C.A.T.P. Should adjustment be made to provide for their home needs?

3. Should R.A.F. transferred schools and/or operational units, formed or planned, be incorporated in the Plan?

4. Increase of Canada's quota of output to provide for home needs.

5. The problem of the supply of manpower to different grades of aircrew. To what extent, and until what date, can participating Nations under the Plan fill aircrew categories?

6. Questions concerning commissioning of aircrews. The anomalies of the present percentage basis. Possibility of special ranks, such as pilot officers, observer officers.

7. Responsibility for provisioning of aircraft and equipment under the new scheme. Channels for this provisioning.

8. Financial basis — lump sum or percentage.

In addition to the above there may be some subjects suitable only for discussion between United Kingdom and Canadian representatives, such as,

1. Questions relating to the organization and establishment of R.C.A.F. overseas.
2. In the event of R.A.F. transferred schools and O.T.U.⁹⁸ not being incorporated into the B.C.A.T.P., but continuing under R.C.A.F. administration, should they be manned to the maximum extent possible by R.C.A.F. personnel, having regard to shipping, financial, and other considerations?
3. Should Canada's requirements of O.T.U. capacity for home war needs be separate or merged?
4. Pay anomalies for R.A.F. personnel serving in Canada at the present time.
5. Financial basis for transferred schools.

We hope to begin the conference on Monday, May 18th, though I will have to confirm this date later. Naturally, the Canadian Government will be responsible for making arrangements for accommodation for the visiting representatives. In this connection, it would assist us if you could let us know as soon as possible the size and composition of the United Kingdom delegation.

Yours sincerely,

The Conference Committee, so constituted, submits herewith the following report to the final Plenary Session of the Conference:

SPECIAL COMMITTEES OF THE CONFERENCE

I. In accordance with the decision taken by the Conference at its second Plenary Session, the following special Committees of the Conference were constituted, and immediately began the examination of the subjects committed to them:

- (1) The Committee on Standardization of Training –
Air Marshal A.G.R. Garrod, R.A.F., Chairman,
- (2) Committee on Composition of Aircrew –
Air Vice-Marshal R. Leckie, R.C.A.F., Chairman.
- (3) Committee on Co-ordination of Training Capacity –
Captain A.W. Radford, U.S.N., Chairman,
- (4) Committee on Manpower Resources –
Colonel R.E. Nugent, U.S.A., Chairman,
- (5) Committee on General Training –
The Belgian Minister to Canada, Baron Silvercruys, Chairman.

Subsequently, to meet the special needs of Norway and the Netherlands, in respect of North American Training, the following additional Committee was constituted:

- (6) Committee on Training in North America –
Air Marshal G.O. Johnson, R.C.A.F., Chairman.

REPORTS BY SPECIAL COMMITTEES

II. All of the above Committees have now completed their work and reported to the Conference Committee. Their proceedings may be summarized as follows:

(1) COMMITTEE ON STANDARDIZATION OF TRAINING

The Committee exchanged full information on methods of training employed by the United States and by the nations participating in the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan with a view to achieving a common standard of training by means of a closer relationship between the methods employed. The discussions of the Committee disclosed a wide measure of agreement in the general principles governing such items as the training of instructors, the type of relationship between visual flying, night and instrument flying, the importance of precision flying, the relationship between air and ground training, the standard desired for entrance to operational training units, and the selection of aircrew personnel.

(2) COMMITTEE ON COMPOSITION OF AIRCREW

This Committee considered the position of aircrews as at present existing in the Air Forces of Great Britain, the United States of America and Canada. In most cases the crews were identical; no major differences existed. In cases where differences existed, the members of the Committee noted the reasons, with the object of giving further consideration to the problem.

The Committee came to the conclusion, however, that in general, there was no substantial difference in the composition of aircrews between the nations of the Commonwealth and the United States of America.

(3) COMMITTEE ON CO-ORDINATION OF TRAINING CAPACITY

As a result of the discussions of this Committee the Conference Committee recommends to the Conference that the following resolution be adopted as a resolution of the Conference.

“Combined Committee on Air Training in North America

1. There shall be a Committee to be known as the Combined Committee on Air Training in North America, to consist of representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. A United States representative will be the Chairman of the Committee.

2. The Headquarters of the Committee will be in Washington, but it may meet elsewhere in the United States or in Canada, if it so desires.

3. The functions of the Committee will be advisory, and will include:

(a) The exchange of information on Air Training questions;

(b) Advice on standardization of training methods;

(c) Advice on the measures to be taken to ensure that the most effective use is made of the Air Training facilities of the United Nations in North America.

4. The Committee will submit agreed recommendations to the appropriate authorities.

5. The Committee will give opportunity to representatives of other governments concerned with Air Training in North America to appear before it whenever there are questions of interest to those Governments to be discussed.”

The Conference Committee also recommends that the text of the above resolution be embodied in a press statement¹⁰⁰ for immediate release, preceded by the following paragraph:

“The Conference has given most careful thought to the means by which the training capacity of the United Nations can be co-ordinated. Alterations in requirements, some of which cannot even be foreseen at present, may alter the position at any time, thus involving training adjustments of considerable magnitude. With this probability in view, and with the further object of ensuring a rapid and effective interchange of information regarding training generally, the Conference has approved the formation of a Combined Committee on Air Training. The text of the resolution is as follows:”

(4) COMMITTEE ON MANPOWER RESOURCES

The Committee reviewed the manpower situation as far ahead as the end of 1943 and concluded that there would be no difficulty in filling aircrew and groundcrew requirements during this period. It found that in all countries, steps were being taken to extend the employment of women to trades to which they were suited. The Committee also found that it was improbable that the need for interchange of aircrew personnel between the United Nations would arise on any considerable scale in the near future, and that the question could best be dealt with as and when it arose.

It was stated that agreement as to the transfer to their own forces of all United States citizens serving in the R.A.F. and the R.C.A.F. had been reached through diplomatic channels, and it was agreed that similar transfers in future should be dealt with in the same manner.

(5) COMMITTEE ON GENERAL TRAINING

This Committee dealt with problems concerning certain of the Air Forces of the United Nations as a result of difficulties experienced in providing adequate reinforcements for their air establishments.

This matter was placed before the Conference Committee which, after full consideration of the submission, recommends to the Conference that its record include the following statement:

“The following representations were made by the representatives of Poland and Czechoslovakia:

“The representatives of these two nations pointed out that, having set up their Air Missions in Canada, the U.K. government had agreed that if they could obtain volunteers suitable in all respects to R.A.F. standards, the U.K. government was prepared to accept for training the following number of volunteers to keep filled up the Polish and Czech Squadrons now established in the U.K.

In the case of Poland

A total of 1820 aircrews per annum

A total of 1200 ground crews per annum

Since these figures were laid down, however, the U.K. government pointed out that a new source of supply had become available from Russia and that this fact must be considered.

¹⁰⁰ Le communiqué à la presse fut rendu public le même jour.

¹⁰⁰ The press statement was released the same day.

In the case of Czechoslovakia

A total of 460 aircrews per annum

A total of 600 ground crews per annum

It was recognized that this question was outside the jurisdiction of the Conference. The representatives of Poland and Czechoslovakia were, accordingly, advised to address their representations in this respect, to the appropriate agencies of the governments concerned.

It was also agreed that, in regard to training in North America by other Allied Nations, the same procedure should be followed.

In taking note of this report, members of the Committee recorded their sincere thanks for the assistance received in the course of their deliberations from the representatives of the United Kingdom, United States of America and Canada, as well as their appreciation of the consideration given by the Conference to the situation outlined in the General Training Committee's Memorandum."

(6) COMMITTEE ON NORTH AMERICAN TRAINING

This Committee considered problems relating to the training being carried on in North America by certain of the United Nations having their own training establishments in North America. Following the discussions of this Committee, the Norwegian Delegation made representations on the subject of their manpower requirements.

The Conference Committee, after consideration thereof, recommends to the Conference that its record include the following statement:

"The following representations were made by the representatives of Norway:

1. For the period May 1st, 1942, to May 1st, 1943, the R.N.A.F. requires 900 recruits. It is considered desirable that this number be divided into monthly contingents of 75 men each.

On the basis of categories, the following are the requirements monthly and for the full year indicated.

	Monthly	Yearly
1. Pilots and Observers	30	360
2. W.O.A.G.'s ¹⁰¹	15	180
3. Other Categories: (Mechanics & other specialists)	30	360

2. In addition to the previously mentioned 900 recruits, 150 personnel are required as soon as possible to fill shortages presently existing consisting of 60 pilot and observer trainees, 30 W.O.A.G. trainees and 60 other categories.

3. The manpower requirements should preferably be met from Norwegian citizens in the United States and Canada or United States or Canadian citizens of Norwegian descent — especially those who speak the Norwegian language.

4. Although manpower requirements monthly are as shown above, the ¹⁰¹ Wireless operator-air gunner.

R.N.A.F. is prepared to accommodate an intake of upwards of 500 men at one time.

It was recognized that this question was outside the jurisdiction of the Conference. The representatives of Norway were, accordingly, advised to address their representations, in this respect, to the appropriate agencies of the governments concerned.”

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS — PUBLICATION AND DISTRIBUTION

III. The Conference Committee directs the attention of the Conference to the highly secret nature of many of the discussions and conclusions of the above special Committees. In the circumstances, members of the Conference Committee are satisfied that all delegates will share their view that the greatest possible care should be taken to prevent the disclosure of any information which even indirectly, might be of benefit to the enemy.

With due regard to these considerations of security, the Conference Committee recommends that the records of proceedings of the Conference be divided into two categories:

A. A public report containing — the names of delegates to the Conference, and the countries they represent, a verbatim record of proceedings at the first Plenary Session, and general descriptive material concerning the work of the Conference, including particularly the recommended press statement referred to in paragraph II (3) above.

B. A secret report to be made available to the governments of all nations participating in the Conference containing, in addition, — a description of the special Committees of the Conference and a general report of their discussions and conclusions, similar to that set forth above, also, verbatim, the reports of the special Committees numbers (5) and (6) in paragraph II above.

IV. In addition to the material contained in the reports above mentioned, members of the various delegations have exchanged much useful technical information of substantial value to those engaged in Air Training in the countries concerned.

V. Apart from the press statement mentioned in paragraph II (3) above, it is recommended that further publicity in connection with the work of the Conference be confined to such statements as may be made by, or under the authority of, the Chairman of the Conference, who has been charged with responsibility for public relations.

CONCLUSION

VI. In closing, the Conference Committee wishes to record appreciation of the high measure of co-operation which it has received throughout from the members of all delegations.

Respectfully submitted on behalf of the Conference Committee.

OTTAWA AIR TRAINING CONFERENCE

8. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR submitted a copy of the report of the Conference Committee as adopted by the Conference at its final Plenary Session held this morning.¹⁰²

The principal formal recommendation of the Conference related to the establishment of a Combined Committee on Air Training in North America, to consist of representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. This Committee would be a consultative body, for the exchange of information and to advise upon air training questions.

Formal reports of the Conference proceedings would be of two kinds — a public report which could be tabled in the House of Commons,¹⁰³ and a secret report to governments participating in the Conference, which would contain a description of the work of the special Committees on various questions relating to air training.¹⁰⁴

(Report of the Conference Committee to the final Plenary Session of the Conference, May 22, 1942).

9. MR. POWER said that the results of the Conference were regarded as generally satisfactory. In addition to the conclusions embodied in the report adopted by the final Plenary Session, much useful technical information had been exchanged between delegations. The general effect upon co-operation between Nations participating in the B.C.A.T.P., and the United States, should be considerable.

It was recommended that approval be given to the report of the Conference, specifically to the recommendation for the establishment of the Combined Committee on Air Training in North America, which was read.

¹⁰³ See Canada, Ottawa Air Training Conference May 1942: Report of the Conference. Ottawa: King's Printer, 1942. The Report was tabled in the House of Commons on June 24.

10. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that, not only had the Conference accomplished important practical results, but it had been significant, as well, as the first real conference held by the United Nations during the present war. Fourteen Nations had been represented.

11. The War Committee, after some discussion, approved the report of the Air Training Conference, and agreed to the establishment of the Combined Committee on Air Training in North America, as recommended in the said report.¹⁰⁵

AIR; B.C.A.T.P.; INCREASED TRAINING CAPACITY

12. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR submitted a request from the U.K. government, copies of which had been circulated, for additional training capacity in the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan. A net increase of 20 additional pupils at each Secondary [Service?] Flying Training School with a parallel increase in the Elementary Flying Training Schools, and of 1,360 navigators and 117 air bombers was sought. The U.K. authorities would be willing to provide the additional pupils.

This expansion was made necessary by the increased heavy bomber production, and by the need for crews for transport squadrons. The additional capacity was, in the opinion of the U.K. government, absolutely vital to the planned air programme, and could not be developed elsewhere in time to meet operational requirements. To carry out the present programmes in Europe and against Japan, 1,600 more pilots, 3,500 more navigators and 1,000 more air bombers per year were needed.

(Letter and enclosures, U.K. High Commissioner to Minister of National Defence for Air, Aug. 3, 1943 — C.W.C. document 584[†].)

¹⁰⁵ Following the United Nations portion of the conference, Great Britain, Canada, Australia and New Zealand began negotiations for the extension of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan up to March 31, 1945. For the text of the agreement signed on June 5, 1942, see C. P. Stacey, Arms, Men and Governments. Ottawa: Information Canada, 1970, pp. 564-8.

13. THE CHIEF OF THE AIR STAFF pointed out that the proposed increase would require 1,937 additional staff, 671 additional aircraft, a capital outlay of about $35,000,000 and annual maintenance charges of about $30,000,000. Under present arrangements, the United Kingdom would be liable for fifty percent of capital and maintenance costs.

In view of the manpower position in Canada, if the U.K. proposals were accepted it should be stipulated that the additional staff as well as pupils be supplied by the R.A.F.

(Memorandum, Chief of Air Staff to the Minister, Sept. 8, 1943[†]).

14. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved in principle the U.K. request for provision of additional training capacity in the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, on condition that the United Kingdom supply the additional trainees and staff involved.

SECRET. The Supervisory Board of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan is of the opinion that early consideration should be given to a number of major questions of policy relating to the scope and continuation of the Plan beyond March 31, 1945, the termination date of the present agreement. The Board believes that these questions can be most effectively decided by a conference of governmental representatives of the partners to the Plan, and the Board therefore recommends that a full-scale conference be held, to commence in Ottawa on January 10, 1944, the conference to be limited to the partners of the Plan, i.e. the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand, it being considered that the other powers for whom training is being carried out would be represented by the United Kingdom under whose quota they fall. The Board recognizes that an agenda should be tentatively prepared at the earliest possible date, so that supporting data for discussions would be readily available to the conference, and accordingly the Board recommends that agenda items be requested to be received by the Administrator (i.e. the Canadian Government) as soon as possible. The Board recommends that Canada as Administrator of the Plan should be responsible for the conference organization.

2. The Canadian Government has accepted the Board's recommendations, and would be pleased to convene this conference if the governments of the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand concur. The partner governments are invited to send agenda items to the Canadian Government by November 30 when a preliminary agenda will be circulated.

3. I am sending identical cables[†] to our High Commissioners in Australia and New Zealand for transmission to the Australian and New Zealand Governments.

Extract from Memorandum by Minister of National Defence for Air

Ottawa, November 13, 1943

Mr. Malcolm MacDonald who arrived from Great Britain yesterday morning called on me this morning. He stated that the people of Great Britain were extremely sanguine, that though they speak of the war lasting another year they felt that conditions in Germany due (a) to Russian victories— (b) to bombing— were such that Germany might possibly cave in at any minute.

He also stated that a friend of his had recently been in Sweden and the feeling of all shades of opinion was that Germany was in a pretty bad way.

The first subject brought up was the Air Training Conference which had been fixed for the middle of January. Mr. MacDonald asked for a delay on the following grounds:

That the United Kingdom War Committee was at the moment undertaking a strategic survey of future requirements. This survey would be completed and decisions based thereon made sometime between Christmas and the New Year. Air Ministry would require a month to six weeks in order to study the effect of decisions as they would necessarily have a very important bearing on the Air Training Plan. He therefore asked that the meeting be postponed to a tentative date, probably some time in February or March.

I stated that provided there was no objection from our Supply people I would concur in his suggestion. I stated further that if the provisioning was on a downward scale instead of upward the delay would be more readily acceptable. He stated that undoubtedly it would be downward.

He then proceeded to advise me that Air Ministry had come to the conclusion that 5 Service Flying Training Schools should be closed, and a corresponding number of Elementary Flying Training Schools. Two of the 5 S.F.T.S. should be converted into Navigation Schools. Air Ministry were quite willing that we begin by closing Royal Air Force schools and left it to Canada to decide which schools should be closed. Their reasons were:

(a) There is at present an ample supply of fighter pilots since the casualties among fighter pilots have not been anything nearly as high as expected owing to the fact that the German Air Force is not fighting to the extent anticipated. Bomber casualties continued high however and for that reason there is to be no let-up in the production of bomber crews but rather an increase;

(b) There is a great shortage of manpower in the United Kingdom and it was thought advisable to bring back personnel now manning R.A.F. schools;

(c) There is a shortage of workers and the production of aircraft in Great Britain is lower than anticipated.

(d) The changed conditions of the war being favourable to the Allies renders it unnecessary to produce pilots at the same rate as anticipated;

As a consequence of the decision that fighter pilots are not required with the same urgency, and in the same numbers as formerly, it was also suggested that pilot training be extended temporarily from sixteen weeks to twenty weeks in order to slow up output.

He stated that he had been somewhat embarrassed when these instructions were given to him because under instructions from Air Ministry he had been pressing Canada very strongly to increase its training capacity. He was somewhat apologetic at the sudden change in the point of view.

I told him the news was most encouraging, but a bit embarrassing for us particularly since even now we were in the midst of an intensive campaign for aircrew as a result of discussions which took place at the Conference in Quebec last September when great concern had been expressed at the possible reduction of aircrew input from Canada. I stated the campaign had been very successful and we now had ample aircrew to keep up the input as laid down last Summer. Under the circumstances our aircrew trainees would have to be backed up, not to speak of the embarrassment of closing schools, some of which had been opened comparatively recently.

I also stated I anticipated some difficulty in explaining matters to the Canadian public since we in Canada, following Churchill's lead, had been discouraging undue optimism of an early victory, and that if we stated that the changing conditions of the war justified our ceasing training in a number of schools, immediately the Canadian people would seize on this as a reason for slowing up. He agreed that explanations were somewhat difficult to give.

He also stated that according to his information these schools would not close for some six or seven months. I thought if that were the case the war situation would develop by that time to such an extent that there would be less difficulty in closing the schools. However, in subsequent conversation with Air Vice-Marshal Leckie, C.A.S., I gathered from him that the closing of the schools should take place almost at once, which would not be easy. In any case preparations for closing must be taken in hand immediately and these were bound to attract public attention.

He stated that the Conference would be on a very high level. That Captain Balfour would come as well as Sir John Abrahams, and that it was proposed to discuss the financial question as if a prelude to the closing of the J.A.T.P.

The other matters which we discussed before he left were we agreed matters which could be brought up at the Air Training Conference.

Aide-mémoire by Government of Great Britain

November 15, 1943

The expansion of training capacity in Canada which was asked for by the Air

Ministry in June 1943¹⁰⁶ was based on the rates of operational wastage experienced, and on the latest expansion programme approved, up to that date.

2. The altered strategical situation and the general diminution of enemy air effort in both Western and Southern Europe have, however, led to a reduction in operational wastage rates in all Commands other than Bomber Command; and on the latest information available as to the enemy's air strength and reserve potential, the Air Staff are satisfied that the wastage will continue on a diminished scale in all Commands other than Bomber Command.

The expansion programme has also had to be re-cast in the light of the new strategical requirements and of current estimates of aircraft production.

The above factors, and the fact that the manpower situation seriously limits the possibilities of further expansion have combined to cause considerable reductions in aircrew requirements.

3. This position has been reached at the same time as the manpower situation in the United Kingdom has become such as to make it urgently necessary to effect every possible saving in R.A.F. manpower. All R.A.F. Commands are at present operating with considerable deficiencies in ground personnel, and these deficiencies are likely to become more serious during 1944. In these circumstances there will be virtually no further increases after the end of this year in the R.A.F. target programme except in Bomber Command, which is the main offensive weapon of the R.A.F. and Dominion Air Forces against Germany.

4. In view of the fact that future intakes of ground personnel into the R.A.F. will be inadequate to make good the present deficiencies in such personnel, it will be appreciated that any economies that can be effected in ground personnel establishments will contribute directly to the strengthening of our future striking power.

5. Most of the Navigators of the RAF are required for Bomber Command, and the future expansion will be mainly in that Command. The navigator training capacity therefore needs to be expanded so as to produce 2300 more Navigators a year. On the other hand, the yearly requirements of pilots will be 3,400 less than the existing capacity is planned to produce, because the increased requirements of Bomber Command are outweighed by the reduced requirements of the other Commands.

6. In calculating the revised requirements, allowance has been made for the gradual cessation of the direct flow of fully-trained aircrews to this country from Australia. It has, however, been assumed that the Australian intake to the J.A.T.P.¹⁰⁷ in Canada will be maintained or, alternatively, that any deficiencies in the Australian intake will be made good by the R.C.A.F. and/or the R.A.F.

7. No alterations are required in the output of other aircrew categories from overseas training establishments because any variation in the requirements of these other categories can be met by adjustments in the training capacity of the United Kingdom.

¹⁰⁶ See Document 268.

8. The output required from the schools in South Africa and Southern Rhodesia is governed by the requirements of the O.T.U.s.¹⁰⁸ in the Middle East and India. It is not possible therefore, to reduce pilot-training capacity in either of these countries, because this would necessitate the sending of pilots from other training theatres for O.T.U. training in the Middle East and India and this would be a very uneconomical course to adopt. And it would not be possible without considerable delay, to provide in either of these countries the required additional navigator training capacity.

9. It follows that the necessary adjustments in the training capacity for pilots and navigators must be made in North America.

10. Although the R.A.F. is making use of pilot-training facilities in the United States, no R.A.F. ground personnel are employed in the United States training schools. No economy in R.A.F. manpower would be effected, therefore, by closing down such schools and, as indicated in paras. 3 and 4, it has become essential to effect economy in R.A.F. manpower.

No facilities for training navigators are available in the United States for the R.A.F. and there is no likelihood of such facilities being made available. Moreover, the U.S.A.A.F. standards of navigational training are not in accord with R.A.F. standards.

11. All these considerations combine to make it very desirable that the necessary adjustments in training capacity should be effected in Canada.

12. The adjustments required could be effected (i) by closing 5 S.F.T.Ss.¹⁰⁹ of 240-pupil capacity, on a 16 weeks' course, (ii) by deleting from the Plan one S.F.T.S. included in the 1942 Agreement which has not been formed, (iii) by making a corresponding reduction in E.F.T.S.¹¹⁰ capacity, and (iv) by forming two new Air Navigation Schools of 520-pupil capacity on a 20 weeks' course. An alternative to the closing of 5 S.F.T.Ss. for the purpose of effecting the necessary reduction in the output of trained pilots would be to extend the course at 18 J.A.T.P. schools and 9 R.A.F. schools from 16 weeks to 20 weeks.

13. The R.A.F. is faced with two problems, namely:—

(I) The effect of the developments referred to in para. 2 will be felt almost immediately in that O.T.U. and A.F.U.¹¹¹ expansion in the United Kingdom must be stopped at once. This will automatically slow down the outgoings from the Personnel Reception Centres in the United Kingdom, and this in turn makes it necessary to reduce the intakes into these Centres. An immediate reduction in these intakes can only be effected by extending the courses in Canada.

(II) The drawback to extending the courses in Canada in this way is, however, that for so long as the extension remained in force no reduction in the total amount of training capacity would be possible. Meanwhile there would be a comparatively small reduction in the number of aircrew pupils passing through ¹⁰⁸ Operational Training Unit.

¹⁰⁹ Service Flying Training School.

¹¹⁰ Elementary Flying Training School.

¹¹¹ Advanced Flying Units.

the Training Schools but there would be no other saving in manpower either for the R.A.F. or for the R.C.A.F. In view, therefore, of the urgent necessity of saving manpower the best method of effecting the required reduction in the output from the training establishments would be by closing some of these establishments, because this would release maintenance and instructional personnel who could be used to make good the shortage of personnel in the Operational Commands.

14. The closing of training establishments even if decided upon at once can, however, only be fully effected after an interval. A beginning can be made by reducing the entries into the Initial Training Wings, but the effect of this reduced entry does not make itself felt in the S.F.T.Ss. till some time later.

15. Thus, if it were agreed that an S.F.T.S. should be closed, intakes to the E.F.T.S. feeding that S.F.T.S. could be stopped in about a month (the normal voyage time, plus the time required at No. 31 P.D., plus travelling from No. 31 P.D. to the E.F.T.S.) The outputs from the E.F.T.S. would not cease for a further eight weeks (the length of the course) and the R.A.F. ground personnel at the E.F.T.S. would need to be retained meanwhile. Intakes to the S.F.T.S. would, therefore, cease after a total period of approximately three months. The outputs from the S.F.T.S. would not cease for a further sixteen weeks (the length of the course), and it would be necessary, therefore, to continue to employ the R.A.F. ground personnel at the S.F.T.S. for that period.

Outputs from the S.F.T.S. would, therefore, continue for approximately seven months from the date on which it was agreed to close the school. Allowing a further month for leave, embarkation time and voyage, there would be no reduction of the flow into Personnel Reception Centres in this country for about eight months.

16. In addition to the foregoing an examination of the requirements in G.R.¹¹² training has been completed. Present capacity in Canada provides for a total of 47 courses made up as follows:—

32 Pilot
9 Navigator(B)
6 Navigator(W)

Of this total of courses 23 are carried out at No. 31 G.R. School, Charlottetown and 24 at No. 1 G.R. School, Summerside. The revised plans have now reduced requirements to a total of 24 courses made up of,

17 Pilot
3 Navigator(B)
4 Navigator(W)

It is considered that the reduction could best be made by closing down one of these two schools.

17. The quickest possible reduction of the flow into the P.R.Cs.¹¹³ is required, and this can only be effected by extending the courses immediately.

¹¹² General Reconnaissance.

¹¹³ Personnel Reception Centre.

Similarly the earliest possible saving in manpower is required, and this can only be effected by closing schools on the earliest possible date.

18. The best method of effecting the necessary adjustments is therefore to extend courses to twenty weeks at all S.F.T.Ss., other than those which are to be closed, (and to ten weeks at the corresponding E.F.T.Ss.) forthwith; and, at the same time, to stop the intakes into the E.F.T.Ss. matching five S.F.T.Ss.; then, one month after the closing of the five S.F.T.Ss. has been effected, to revert to the sixteen weeks' course at all S.F.T.Ss. and revert to the eight weeks' course at the E.F.T.Ss.

19. The increased navigator capacity required could best be provided by converting two of the S.F.T.Ss. into Air Navigation Schools.

On this basis the number of schools ultimately to be closed altogether would be three S.F.T.Ss. and the E.F.T.Ss. required to feed five S.F.T.Ss., and 1 G.R. School.

20. It is hoped that, in the light of the considerations set out above, the Canadian Government will agree that the necessary adjustments in the training capacity for pilots and navigators shall be effected in Canada and in the manner above indicated.

21. The convenient course from the R.A.F. point of view would be to close R.A.F. schools only. An advantage in effecting the reduction in this way would be that the J.A.T.P. as originally conceived would remain intact. On the other hand, the selection of the schools to be closed might give rise to political difficulties in the localities in which the schools selected are situated.

22. If the Canadian Government agree that R.A.F. schools only shall be closed, it is proposed that the R.A.F. shall provide an increased proportion of the intake into J.A.T.P. S.F.T.Ss. This will have the effect of reducing the number of Canadian pupils required; and, as Canada has her own manpower difficulties, it may be that the relief thus afforded will be welcome.

23. In view of the differences which exist between the initial selection procedure adopted in the United Kingdom and that adopted in Canada it would be desirable from the R.A.F. point of view to concentrate at selected J.A.T.P. schools the pupils who would have gone to the R.A.F. schools closed down had these been retained.

24. The Air Ministry suggest that, in general, the present proportion of intakes as between the R.C.A.F. and the R.A.F. should be maintained irrespective of any increase or decrease in capacity. They propose also that any deficiency in the supply of pupils from Australia should, if possible, be made good proportionately by the other partners.

25. The need for the adjustment of the training capacity is extremely urgent. It is essential, therefore, that the decision as to the manner of effecting it shall not be delayed until the January Conference in Ottawa.

26. To sum up, the Air Ministry make the following proposals:—

(a) The S.F.T.S. course to be extended immediately, (on a purely temporary basis) to twenty weeks, and the E.F.T.S. course to be correspondingly extended.

- (b) Two S.F.T.Ss. to be turned over to navigator training as speedily as possible.
- (c) Immediate action to be taken to close three other S.F.T.Ss. and the E.F.T.S. capacity matching five S.F.T.Ss.
- (d) One G.R. School to be closed.

The extension of courses proposed in (a) not to apply to those schools which it is decided are to close or are to turn over to navigator training, since such extension would only delay the release of ground personnel.

27. It is desired that action on paras. 25 (a) and (b) above should be taken at once and that in order to save R.A.F. manpower the reductions referred to in para 25(c) should, if possible, be effected by closing R.A.F. schools.

28. If, however, the R.C.A.F. are anxious that J.A.T.P. schools rather than R.A.F. schools should be closed it is suggested that the number of R.C.A.F. ground personnel sent to the United Kingdom should be correspondingly increased. Otherwise the joint R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. operational effort in this country will not benefit from the reduction in training capacity.

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING PLAN; CONFERENCE

14. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR referred to the report made to the War Committee on November 10th,¹¹⁴ and stated that the U.K. government had now requested postponement of the conference until late February or March, 1944, in order that the U.K. War Cabinet might complete a strategic survey of future manpower requirements, now under way. This survey would have an important bearing upon the Air Training Plan. It was proposed to agree to the British request.

(Memorandum, Minister of National Defence for Air, Nov. 13, 1943[†]).

15. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted the Minister's report and agreed to postpone of the conference.

BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AIR TRAINING PLAN; FUTURE POLICY

16. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR reported that he had received word through the U.K. High Commissioner of serious modification of the Training Plan proposed by the U.K. government.

As a result of the altered strategic situation, a marked reduction in operational wastage rates for aircrew except in Bomber Command, and a serious shortage in R.A.F. ground personnel, it was proposed to effect a substantial reduction in pilot training in Canada and thereby release ground personnel for service elsewhere and bring output into line with requirements. At the same time it was proposed to increase training of navigators to meet the needs of Bomber Command.

¹¹⁴ Voir le document 269.

In order to produce these desired results, the U.K. government suggested that three Service Flying Training Schools and one General Reconnaissance School be closed, that two S.F.T.S.'s be transferred to navigational training, and that Elementary Flying Training School capacity be reduced accordingly (i.e. to match five S.F.T.S.'s). It was also suggested that the S.F.T.S. courses be extended temporarily to twenty weeks, with corresponding modification of E.F.T.S. training.

17. MR. POWER said that, from the U.K. point of view, the most suitable method of accomplishing these proposals would be to close R.A.F. schools only, thus releasing R.A.F. ground personnel. If this were done, the Commonwealth Air Training Plan would remain intact and the R.A.F. would provide an increased proportion of the intake into S.F.T.S.'s under the Plan. If B.C.A.T.P. schools, however, were to be closed, it was suggested that the numbers of R.C.A.F. ground personnel sent to the United Kingdom should be increased.

(Memorandum, Minister of National Defence for Air, Nov. 13, 1943 and attached U.K. Aide-Mémoire, undated¹¹⁵).

18. MR. POWER suggested that, if these substantial reductions were to be made and schools in Canada closed, it would be desirable for the Canadian and British governments to issue a joint agreed statement on the subject, rather than leave the way open to misinterpretation and serious misunderstanding both at home and abroad.

For the time being, it would not be necessary to close all the schools indicated, since the proposed extension of the training period, together with the favourable results of recent aircrew recruiting in Canada, would make it possible to make use of this capacity, for the present, for R.C.A.F. personnel.

19. THE PRIME MINISTER stated that the attention of the U.K. High Commissioner had been drawn to the situation which had arisen in the United States on the announcement recently of a reduction in Canada's Home War strength. An unfortunate impression might be created there as to U.K. intentions regarding the future prosecution of the war by the proposed modification in air training. The U.S. government should at least be informed in advance of these proposals. The High Commissioner had undertaken to bring these considerations to the attention of his government.

20. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted the Minister's report, agreed that, for the present at all events, no public announcement should be made, and deferred further consideration of the subject pending a further report from Mr. Power.

MOST SECRET. The War Office has raised through the Dominions Office an important question regarding the future employment of our forces and the following is text of a memorandum addressed to me on this subject, Begins:

It has now become necessary to put in hand advance planning for future operations outside this country involving the use of land forces on a large scale on the continent of Europe. Planning in so far as the army is concerned has been entrusted to the Commander-in-Chief, Home Forces. This raises the question of the inclusion of Canadian troops in the expeditionary force for which plans are being worked out.

The Canadian Prime Minister has made it clear that Canadian forces would be made available to go wherever their services are most needed. His Majesty's Government in Canada desire however to be consulted as to any suggestion that Canadian forces should be moved out of the United Kingdom to another theatre of operations. At the present stage the United Kingdom Government cannot commit themselves to a specific proposition in respect of the use of Canadian troops elsewhere than in the United Kingdom. On the other hand it is impossible for the Commander-in-Chief to complete his plans without knowing whether the Canadians are to be included and whether the preliminary organisation is to be worked out on this basis.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom would be grateful therefore if the Canadian Government would signify:

- (a) Their concurrence in the inclusion in the prospective expeditionary force of Canadian military forces to be under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief of the British expeditionary force;
- (b) Their agreement that arrangements may be made accordingly and that meanwhile the Canadian forces in this country available for operational duties should be regarded as under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief, Home Forces.

The arrangement that Canadian forces were under the Commander-in-Chief's operational control would of course be subject in each case to the retention by the Canadian Commander of his right of reference to his own Government. Ends.

I have communicated a copy of the memorandum to McNaughton but have not yet had an opportunity of conferring with him.

FUTURE EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS

11. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE referred to consideration of this subject at the last meeting. General McNaughton's comments[†] had now been received upon the War Office's request regarding the inclusion of Canadian military forces in a British expeditionary force under the operational control of a British Commander. They raised many practical problems relating principally to legal details involved.

After careful consideration, it was proposed to reply to the U.K. government giving the undertaking requested and reserving detailed arrangements for further discussion. It was thought that Canadian authorities should retain control over the Canadian forces in matters which did not affect operational control and unity of command. The Canadian Commander would also retain his right of reference to the Canadian government. A draft telegram to the High Commissioner, in this sense, was submitted.

(External Affairs note for the Prime Minister, June 22, 1942[†] — draft telegram, External Affairs to High Commissioner, London, June 21, 1942.)

12. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved, for despatch, the draft telegram submitted.¹¹⁶

MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 1630 June 15th, 1942, concerning War Office Memorandum.

It is desired that you should signify to the Government of the United Kingdom on behalf of the Canadian Government:

¹¹⁶ See following document.

(a) The Canadian Government's concurrence in the inclusion in the prospective expeditionary force of Canadian Military Forces to be under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief of the British Expeditionary Force;

(b) The Canadian Government's agreement that arrangements may be made accordingly and that meanwhile the Canadian Forces in the United Kingdom available for operational duties should be regarded as under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces.

That arrangement that Canadian Forces would be under the Commander-in-Chief's operational control would be subject in each case to the retention by the Canadian Commander of his right of reference to the Canadian Government.

It should also be understood that by operational control it is meant that the Canadian Forces will be placed in combination under the Visiting Forces Act and that appropriate action will be taken to ensure that the Commander-in-Chief of the British Expeditionary Force and the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces are empowered under the Act to command the combined Force. The detailed measures to accomplish these results are now being considered and we shall communicate with regard to them later. They will include such matters as control over discipline, organization, administration, training and equipment which it is thought should continue to be reserved for Canadian authorities.

For your own information the views set forth in Canmilitary telegram J 54 of June twenty[†] are being carefully examined and due regard will be had thereto in working out the detailed arrangements.

Please communicate a copy of this telegram to General McNaughton and General Montague.

TELEGRAM 1790

London, July 7, 1942

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram No. 1767, July 3rd, 1942.[†] McNaughton makes the following observations on your telegram No. 1226, Begins:

(a) Assuming that it remains the purpose of the Government of Canada to retain control of the Canadian Army overseas, then I believe it would be wise to revise the paragraph of No. 1226 which begins "It should also be understood etc." so that it will read as follows:

"It should also be understood that by operational control is meant the general direction of the military efforts of the Canadian troops in a combined force and that such direction will be exercised through, and any task or plan of operation assigned the Canadian troops as may be subject to, the approval of the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer overseas unless otherwise specified by him.

Canadian forces will be placed in combination under Visiting Forces Act and appropriate action will be taken to establish the relationship of the Commander-in-Chief of any combined force to the Canadian force.

It is considered that there should be reserved to Canadian authority exclusive control over such matters as discipline, organisation, administration, training and equipment except when in the opinion of the Senior Combatant Officer circumstances otherwise require.

The detailed measures to establish such relationship and reservations are now being considered and we shall communicate with regard to them later.

The Senior Canadian Combatant Officer has been instructed to place himself in contact with the Commander-in-Chief designate of the British Expeditionary Force and with him to concert the plans for the employment of Canadian forces. He has also been instructed to keep the Government of Canada informed of these plans as they develop."

This revision describes my relationship with the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces as I understand it, but it requires formal recognition both as regards present situation in the United Kingdom and also as regards the future on the continent of Europe.

(b) In the United Kingdom such operational control over Canadian troops in combination as should be preserved for Canadian authority is only made possible by the words with which I have concluded my orders detailing Canadian troops into combination namely, "until I shall otherwise direct". When the troops are on the continent it will be noted that under the terms of P.C. 1066 of April 3rd, 1940, they are automatically in combination, and should an extreme occasion call for their being taken out of combination P.C. 1066 would have to be amended in that regard. I doubt the practicability of this action being taken in time should an emergency require and so I think the difficulty should be obviated by the procedure I have suggested in paragraph (a) above for your consideration.

(c) In your consideration of the above I would invite your attention to the cable^f being despatched which gives you the draft of a regulation which Montague suggests will serve to implement No. 1226 as so clarified. Ends.

I concur in McNaughton's views and regard the clarification of the position as highly important. There is I feel no doubt that the proposed definition of the relationship between the Canadian Army Command overseas and the War Office will do much to ensure the continuance of full and satisfactory co-operation, and also that it would be wise to clarify the position now and not later when circumstances might make the consideration of the problem difficult.

I have in mind the consideration set forth in your telegram No. 1284 of July 5th[†] and have satisfied myself that any delay in communicating with the United Kingdom authorities will not be misconstrued. It is desirable, however, that a reply should now be sent as soon as possible, and I should therefore be grateful for an early reply to this telegram.

FUTURE EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS

8. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE referred to the reply, authorized by the War Committee on June the 24th, to the War Office's request regarding the inclusion of Canadian military forces in a British Expeditionary Force under the operational control of a British Commander.

The Canadian High Commissioner had delayed the communication of this reply to the U.K. authorities pending the government's consideration of certain observations thereon by Lieutenant-General McNaughton. These observations had now been received and considered by the Army Staff and the Department of External Affairs.

(Telegram 1790, Canadian High Commissioner, London, to External Affairs, July 7, 1942.)

9. MR. RALSTON read a telegram from Mr. Massey setting out a revision of the Canadian reply proposed by General McNaughton; also a note thereon from the Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs.

The effect of the proposed revision was to reserve to the Canadian Commander a power of veto over assignment of tasks and plans of operation. Whether such power should be reserved was a matter of policy requiring most careful consideration. It was pointed out by General McNaughton that operational control in the United Kingdom was now reserved to him by the detailing of Canadian troops into "combination" under the condition "until I (the Canadian Commander) shall otherwise direct". This position might appropriately be extended to Canadian forces elsewhere by the revision suggested. A third point in the General's message related to a difference of opinion concerning the interpretation of the Visiting Forces Act.

10. MR. RALSTON recommended that the War Committee concur in General McNaughton's suggested revision of the communication to the U.K. government, provided that steps were first taken to ensure that British authorities would regard such reservation of authority to the Canadian Commander as acceptable, in the circumstances.

The legal situation, under the Visiting Forces Act, might stand over for consideration with U.K. officials. (External Affairs note, July 8, 1942).¹

11. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the Minister's recommendation.

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 1790 July 7, 1942, secret, setting forth McNaughton's observations on our telegram No. 1226.

2. Reference Section (a) paragraphs following "as follows:" and ending with "they develop". Canadian Government agrees in principle with proposed revision of No. 1226.

3. It is considered that as this raises an important question of policy you should consult with the appropriate authorities of the United Kingdom Government when you communicate the views of the Canadian Government in accordance with No. 1226 revised as in paragraph two above. It is hoped that these views will be acceptable, but it is possible that the United Kingdom Government may want to make some observations with regard to the question of policy involved. We are naturally anxious to avoid any delay or any impression that the Canadian Government is reluctant to cooperate fully in this matter or is interposing any conditions which would give ground for that impression.

4. Reference section (c). If you will refer to the telegram which is being sent by Defensor to Canmilitary in reply to J five six[†] you will observe that the action that needs to be taken to carry out the above policy is the subject of further consideration and consequently immediate consultations will need to be confined to the question of policy involved, deferring for the time being consideration of the legal measures which will need to be adopted in order to give effect to it, which measures are the subject of J five six and of Defensor's telegram above mentioned.

MOST IMMEDIATE. Your telegram No. 1310 of July 9th, relations between Canadian and United Kingdom armies.

2. Letter was sent to Dominions Office on July 14¹¹⁷ setting forth policy in terms as settled by Canadian Government and set forth in your telegram under reference.

¹¹⁷ Voir le document suivant.

¹¹⁷ See following document.

3. Letter has been received from Dominions Office July 31, text of which is as follows, Begins:

I have now received the comments of the War Office on the questions raised in your letter of July 14 regarding the employment of the Canadian Military Forces.

As I said in my letter of July 17th the attitude of the Canadian Government in agreeing that the Canadian Forces in this country available for operational duties should be regarded as under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces and that Canadian Forces should be included in the prospective Expeditionary Force under control of the Commander-in-Chief British Expeditionary Force is warmly appreciated here. In order, however, to clear up one or two points of detail, the War Office have asked me to put the following observations to you.

It is assumed that the fourth paragraph of your letter is intended to convey that the approval of the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer overseas is required only for the general task assigned to the Canadian Forces and not for more detailed tasks or plans arising in the course of operations. The latter interpretation would be inconsistent with the placing of the Canadian Forces under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief British Expeditionary Force and it is suggested that the right of reference to the Canadian Government provided for in the third paragraph of your letter should be a reasonable and an adequate safeguard. It is therefore suggested that the text of paragraph 4 of your letter might be amended by the deletion of the words "and any task or plan of operation assigned the Canadian troops will be subject to the approval of".

It is also observed that the fourth paragraph of your letter as it stands does not provide for the case of a part of the Canadian Forces being overseas with a British Expeditionary Force leaving the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer behind in the United Kingdom. In such a case it is presumed that direction would have to be exercised through the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer with the combined force. It is therefore suggested that this point should be met by substituting for "Senior Canadian Combatant Officer overseas" in the last line of the paragraph "Senior Canadian Combatant Officer with the combined force".

As regards the sixth paragraph of your letter, it is observed that the training of the Canadian forces must necessarily be closely correlated with operational plans and the Commander responsible for operational control must be able to satisfy himself that training is being conducted in accordance with the policy which suits the intended method of employment. It is thought that the terms of the paragraph as set out in your letter are not intended to imply that the Canadian Government desire to change the existing arrangements for training Canadian Military Forces in this country under which the general policy is laid down and its execution supervised by the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces while the detail is carried out under Canadian control. In order to make the point clear it is suggested that the following amendments might be made:

(1) After "such matters as discipline, organisation, administration" delete "training".

(2) After the sixth paragraph insert as a new paragraph: "It is understood that the responsibility for training the Canadian Force included in the proposed British Expeditionary Force is, in so far as policy is concerned, that of the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces and in so far as the detailed arrangements for and execution of training are concerned that of the Canadian authority".

It is thought that the above suggestions are not inconsistent with the intentions of the Canadian Government but it seems desirable that the matter should be made clear in order to avoid possible misunderstandings.

I should therefore be glad if you would let me know whether I may assume that these amendments can be taken to represent the wishes of the Canadian Government. Ends.

4. Suggestions of Dominions Office have been considered by McNaughton, Montague, Read and myself, and I am proposing to send reply which keeps within the limits of the policy of the Canadian Government as set forth in your telegram and in my letter to Dominions Office of July 14. The sending of this reply will be deferred until Tuesday in case you have any suggestions to make with regard to it.

Text of draft reply, Begins:

I have received your letter of July 31 communicating the observations of the War Office on the points of policy presented in my letter of 14 July regarding the employment of Canadian Military Forces in the United Kingdom and as part of an Expeditionary Force. I may say that the Canadian Government hoped that their views set out in my letter of July 14 would be acceptable to the Government of the United Kingdom. At the same time it was suggested by my Government that you might wish to make some observations with regard to the question of policy involved and I was directed to assure you that my Government was anxious to co-operate fully in this matter and did not wish to impose any conditions which would stand in the way of full co-operation.

I am able to assure you that the Government of Canada and the Military Commanders responsible to it are fully appreciative of the need for unity of command, and to this end there is no doubt that all concerned will accord the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces and the Commander-in-Chief of a British Expeditionary Force the fullest support and co-operation. We are confident that the policy advanced by the Canadian Government of reserving to its Commanders the approval on its behalf of all tasks or plans arising in the course of operations will not prejudice the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief British Expeditionary Force. It is to be realised that the Canadian Service authorities are responsible to the Government and the people of Canada for the forces entrusted to their commands, and accordingly it is clear that a corresponding measure of authority and discretion must be accorded those so responsible. We have placed our full confidence in your Officers commanding combined forces and I am sure the Government of the United Kingdom is prepared to place equal confidence on the ability and good sense of our Commanders. Coordination in other spheres already exists in full measure in the prosecution of our common war effort and I am sure that our co-operation in the military sphere will be no less cordial in the future than it has been in the past.

It is for the same reasons that Canada has reserved the subject of training to the Canadian authorities. It has in fact been understood that the War Office was already in agreement on this point. I am informed that the Army Council in its War Office letter 110/Gen/5564 (M.O.2) March 21, 1940 to the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces (copy to Senior Officer C.M.H.Q.) stated in part "Control in all matters relating to training, policy, discipline and internal administration of the Canadian Forces is reserved for the appropriate Canadian Service authorities".

I am quite prepared to assure you that the Canadian authorities will be entirely agreeable to correlate training with operational plans and that the Commander-in-Chief designate of the British Expeditionary Force need have no doubts that this will be done.

There is a further point taken in your letter, namely, that when a part of the Canadian Forces is overseas with a British Expeditionary Force and the Senior Combatant Officer may still be in the United Kingdom, it should be understood that the direction of operations would have to be exercised through the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer with the combined force. I am informed by the legal advisors to the Canadian Service authorities that this point has been anticipated in the draft of the regulation to be submitted to the Canadian Government for enactment under the Visiting Forces Act of Canada to implement the policy which has been referred to in my letter of July 14. It is provided that as exigencies in general or circumstances of the moment may dictate, the Senior Combatant Officer of the Canadian Army overseas may arrange that such direction will be exercised through the Senior Canadian Officer with the combined force. Again I am confident that you will find that such arrangements will always be made in such instances as will meet the existing situation.

May I repeat that the Canadian Government and its Service authorities desire to adhere to the essential principle of unity of command in the interest of the effective prosecution of the war and the measure of control which it is proposed to reserve for Canadian authorities is only such as is considered commensurate with their responsibility to the people of Canada.

In view of the foregoing considerations I am sure you will agree that it would be undesirable to make the amendments suggested in your letter and that, for the reasons I have given, full co-operation between the forces will be assured. Ends.

5. Draft regulations in satisfactory form have been settled by Read and Orde in consultation with Canmilitary and approved by McNaughton. Read is deferring return which had been planned for Monday pending settlement of questions raised in Dominions Office letter July 31.

London, August 2, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 1464, August 1st,[†] relations Canadian and United Kingdom forces. Following is text of my letter to Dominions Office of July 14 based on my telegram No. 1790, July 7, and your reply No. 1310, July 9, Begins:

I am now in a position to let you have the views of the Canadian Government on the questions raised in the memorandum accompanying your letter of June 12.

The Canadian Government have instructed me to convey to the United Kingdom Government:

(A) The Canadian Government's concurrence in the inclusion in the prospective Expeditionary Force of Canadian Military Forces to be under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief of the British Expeditionary Force.

(B) The Canadian Government's agreement that arrangements may be made accordingly and that meanwhile the Canadian Forces in the United Kingdom available for operational duties should be regarded as under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief Home Forces.

The arrangement that Canadian Forces would be under the Commander-in-Chief's operational control would be subject in each case to the retention by the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer of his right of reference to the Canadian Government.

It should also be understood that by operational control is meant the general direction of the military efforts of the Canadian troops in a combined force and that such direction will be exercised through and any task or plan of operation assigned to the Canadian troops will be subject to the approval of the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer overseas unless otherwise specified by him.

Canadian Forces will be placed in combination under the Visiting Forces Act and appropriate action will be taken to establish the relationship of the Commander-in-Chief of any combined force to the Canadian force.

It is understood that there should be reserved to Canadian authority exclusive control over such matters as discipline, organisation, administration, training and equipment, except when in the opinion of the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer circumstances otherwise require.

The detailed measures to establish such relationship and reservations are now under consideration and a communication will be sent with regard to them later. The Senior Canadian Combatant Officer has been instructed to place himself in contact with the Commander-in-Chief designate of the British Expeditionary Force and with him to concert the plans for the employment of Canadian Forces. He has also been instructed to keep the Government of Canada informed of these plans as they develop.

I shall be glad to receive any observations that the United Kingdom Government may wish to make with regard to the questions of policy involved in these arrangements. I can assure you of the desire of my Government to co-operate in every possible way. Ends.

Proposed reply was drafted in collaboration with all concerned, including Read and Orde, but Stuart had not then arrived. I shall consult him as soon as possible.

Proposed reply will be held until I receive your further instructions. I should be grateful if you would send them at the earliest possible moment. Read is postponing his departure in the meantime.

Your telegram No. 1464 of August 1,[†] relations Canadian and United Kingdom forces. Following from Read to Robertson, Begins:

1. After consultation with Military authorities here and with Mr. Massey, I have reached conclusion that only practical scheme for establishing operational command on a workable basis is that set forth in letter to Dominions Office July 14.

2. The order which we have drafted gives effect completely to Government's policy as set forth in letter, keeping within limits discussed with Minister of National Defence before departure.

3. Dominions Office letter July 31 accepts basic principles involved in our proposals and raises three unimportant points, one already provided for in our order and the other two entirely unacceptable to our Military authorities and not workable.

4. It is my personal opinion that we should insist on acceptance of our views on these two points, namely Canadian control of details of tactical employment and Canadian control of training. If we give in on these two points it is my personal opinion that our concession would lead to friction between Canadian and British Commanders and would impair the practical and effective operational command established by our proposals. TELEGRAM 1490

IMPORTANT. SECRET. 1. Your telegram No. 1980 of August 1st and subsequent telegrams regarding relations between Canadian and United Kingdom Armies were considered today at Cabinet War Committee. Before finally approving despatch of your draft reply Committee would be glad to have your views and those of General MacNaughton on relevance of following considerations which have probably been present in your minds as well as in those of the United Kingdom authorities:

(a) Would present probability that supreme command of combined operations on Continent will be entrusted to an American General affect your views on the relationship which should obtain between British and Canadian Armies? Do United Kingdom authorities contemplate that relationship of British to American Armies in respect of interpretation of operational control, etc., should be similar to the Canadian-United Kingdom relationship set forth in your draft reply?

(b) We are puzzled by apparent conflict between a reference in United Kingdom letter of July 31st¹¹⁸ to "one or two points of detail" and the explanation in succeeding paragraph that our interpretation of one of these "points of detail" would be inconsistent with the placing of the Canadian Forces under the operational control of the Commander-in-Chief of the British Expeditionary Force.

(c) We wonder whether there would be any real difference in practice between formula put forward in your letter of July 14th and the principle of reference to Government accepted in the United Kingdom communication of July 31st since non-approval of an allotted task involving withdrawal of forces from combination would normally involve reference to Government if time permitted.

2. Canadian Government consider it most important that the Government of the United Kingdom should be assured that there is no reluctance on Canada's part to the fullest and most active participation possible in proposed operations. In this connection we are anxious to avoid the appearance of interposing what might be regarded as obstructive conditions.

3. We should therefore be grateful if you could explore informally with the United Kingdom Government the degree of importance they really attach from the point of view of effective conduct of operations to our reserving the requirement of approval of the Senior Canadian Combatant Officer overseas for detailed tasks or plans arising in the course of operations.

4. We feel it desirable that such exploratory talks should precede the despatch of your draft reply so as to preclude any possibility of an impasse arising which might conceivably result in the United Kingdom and the United States coming to the conclusion that it would be preferable to have Canadian Forces serve in the defence of the United Kingdom rather than participate in other theatres of war under conditions which they might consider constituted a divided command.

5. Pending receipt of your observations on points raised in this telegram I think it would be helpful if Read could return to Ottawa by first opportunity so that he could supplement your cabled comments on the points that are still worrying us.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 1490, August 6th. Read will be able to give you answers to most of the questions which you ask. As regards your question in (a) in first paragraph concerning relationship of British and American armies, I gather from such enquiries as I have been able to make that no formal agreement has as yet been reached on this subject and I think it likely that the matter will be dealt with only in terms of broad principle. It is quite clear however that a British Commander in relation to an American Commander-in-Chief, if such is appointed, or an American Commander in relation to a British Commander-in-Chief, would enjoy a measure of autonomy at least as complete as that which is proposed in my draft letter for the Canadian Army. The answers to (b) and (c) in the first paragraph of No. 1490 will be given you by Read.

2. The United Kingdom Government has been assured that there is no reluctance on Canada's part to fullest measure of co-operation and I feel that there is no danger of our appearing obstructive. To make sure what the reaction of United Kingdom Government would be to my draft letter, I asked General Montague to show it to those officers at the War Office whose duty it is to advise the Secretary of State on this subject. Montague now tells me that he has been informed that the Vice-Chief of the Imperial General Staff is sending a memo to the Secretary of State for War recommending that the letter be accepted when received. From this I think it safe to conclude that the terms of my draft letter can be regarded as acceptable to United Kingdom Government.

3. A point has occurred to me which I venture to suggest is not irrelevant. Sir Arthur Currie,¹¹⁹ I believe, received an order on or about August 8th, 1918, to the effect that his troops should be employed on a certain operation. According [sic] to misunderstanding of the incident he demurred to this order and made representations through Army Command which resulted in its being withdrawn. The proposal is therefore that the Commander of the Canadian Forces now should merely be given powers de jure which General Currie assumed in the last war de facto. Ends.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS — RELATIONSHIP WITH U.K. FORCES

13. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF explained the reasons why the Canadian Army Commander was anxious to have the legal relationship between Canadian and British forces carefully and adequately defined. He was asking for the same authority, on a legal basis, which had been exercised by General Currie, in fact, during the last war. He wished to be in a position, if the occasion arose, to withstand pressure for the inclusion of Canadian troops in operations which did not commend themselves to his judgment.

The War Office would not object to definition of the relationship on the basis set out in Mr. Massey's draft letter which had been under discussion by the War Committee.

14. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE said that he had wished to be assured that the United Kingdom would not regard the position taken in the draft letter as an indication of reluctance on Canada's part to full and active participation by Canadian forces. Such an assurance had now been obtained by consultation with the appropriate officers.

It had been thought that the reservation by the Canadian Commander of the right of reference to the government might, in practice, have had the same effect as stipulation for him of the right to approve or refuse tasks for Canadian troops.

¹¹⁹ Commandant, Corps canadien, 1917-1919.

¹¹⁹ Commander, Canadian Corps, 1917-1919.

If the recommendations of the Canadian Commander and the High Commissioner were accepted, the powers of the Canadian Commander vis-à-vis the British would require to be the subject of carefully prepared instructions.

15. THE SECRETARY referred to the memorandum prepared by the Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs following the War Committee's last meeting.[†]

Mr. Read had said that the Canadian Commanders expected to receive instructions, which should call for consultation with the government before any action were taken as a result of an impasse in the field, except in cases of extreme emergency.

Mr. Read placed great emphasis on the avoidance of consultation between governments on issues capable of being settled between commanders in the field. Settlement on the spot would avoid the raising of political issues and the consequent necessity of more drastic action.

Mr. Read did not feel that the formula set out in the Massey letter would interfere with the principle of unity of command, and had recommended strongly that its terms be approved.

16. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, approved the terms of the draft letter, from Mr. Massey to Mr. Attlee, as set out in the High Commissioner's telegram of August 1, 1942, and approved by Generals McNaughton and Montague, and Mr. Read, and concurred in by the Chief of the General Staff.

(Telegram 1980, High Commissioner, London to External Affairs, August 1, 1942).

It was also agreed that consequential instructions to the Canadian Commanders should be communicated through the Department of National Defence.

Le Premier ministre au Premier ministre de Grande-Bretagne

Prime Minister to Prime Minister of Great Britain

Ottawa, September 23, 1942

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister, Begins: My colleagues in the War Committee and I have given the most careful consideration today to your most secret message conveyed in Malcolm MacDonald's letter to me of September 22nd. The Minister of National Defence had already been advised fully by General McNaughton, whose views in regard to the proposed operation and whose recommendation of an affirmative reply to your request were before the War Committee.

Before I received your personal message, we had communicated with General McNaughton pointing out that it was felt very strongly that his participation in such a mission would probably be taken to imply commitment in advance, on Canada's part, to an operation, the feasibility of which was, in view of his own conclusions, open to the gravest doubts, and that notwithstanding any reservations which might be made, it might be taken as indicating our readiness to undertake such a commitment regardless of military considerations.

It was pointed out to General McNaughton that it was felt that it would be much more natural and appropriate that such a mission should be headed by a United Kingdom officer. This would follow naturally upon visits to Moscow by yourself and United Kingdom officers, and would be so viewed in the United States as well as in Britain and Canada.

I think that you would also wish to know of the following additional relevant considerations which we feel to be of importance:

It would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to keep the mission secret. General McNaughton's leadership of such a mission would, we believe, give rise, at once, to speculation of his being selected as Commander-in-Chief of a United Nations force for the opening of a second front. Concerning this, as you are aware, there has already been much public discussion, particularly in the United States and this we fear might prejudice McNaughton in his relations with the Chiefs of Staff in Britain and the United States, and also subject him to embarrassing comment in the press and elsewhere.

General McNaughton's heading of the mission would at once suggest an operation in conjunction with Russia was contemplated and that the Canadian Army would participate. It seems to us that Jupiter would be an obvious conclusion for the enemy to reach.

General McNaughton would consider, and properly so, that his paramount responsibility as Commander of the Canadian Army would be to tender to the Canadian government such advice as he might feel bound to give as to the military feasibility of the expedition. With this responsibility it might be embarrassing to you and to us as well as to him if he were at the same time to represent the United Kingdom government or Chiefs of Staffs in discussions looking to the adoption, after possible modification, of a project on which he had already expressed a considered and adverse opinion. This embarrassment might be increased by the fact that the discussions on which conclusions turned would be affected by political as well as military considerations.

McNaughton has mentioned that any plans drafted would be referred for consideration to the "three Governments concerned", viz. the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and Canada. In our view the operation envisaged is of a scale and significance which bring it within the realm of major strategy, decisions in respect of which should be shared by the United States.

You are aware of the extent to which U.S. and Canadian forces are co-operating on this Continent, as well as in Europe. Were the President not to be advised, and his approval obtained in advance, of the proposed mission, its personnel and its object, he almost certainly would feel that he should have been given an opportunity to express his views.

In all the circumstances we are of the opinion that it would be unwise to have General McNaughton singled out for the purpose suggested. Our misgivings would not be as strong if McNaughton were to be a member though not the head of a combined mission upon which the United Kingdom and the United States were represented.

I need not assure you that the views expressed above should not be construed as in any way modifying our fixed policy that Canadian forces are to be available to be used wherever they can best serve the common cause.

The Minister of National Defence and the Chief of our General Staff will be in Britain at the beginning of next week and will be able to give you our considered views in more detail. Ends.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. I am very sorry about McNaughton. I thought that at this critical juncture in Anglo-American relations with the Soviet his personality and knowledge of the subject might have got a good plan worked out with Russia and on a far better basis than that on which his own study had been made. Moreover as Commander-in-Chief of the Canadian Army he would no doubt have got access to Stalin himself, which will probably not be the case with any British general.

2. There would of course have been no question of any commitment being entered into by any Government nor would the full freedom of Canadian action have been compromised in the slightest degree.

3. It is quite true that the arrival of the Canadian Commander-in-Chief in Moscow would have led the enemy to think some joint operation for a second front in northerly latitudes was being planned. As you know, we are trying to spread that very idea as cover for "TORCH", and the Americans also are training an Arctic division with some ostentation. Thus exactly the right impression would have been given to the enemy at this critical time.

4. Moreover it so happens that this use of the "JUPITER" operation as cover for the "TORCH" would not compromise or hamper its eventual execution in reality after some months had passed. When the enemy saw "TORCH" become operative, they would conclude that McNaughton mission was part of the blind and would therefore cease to worry about the northern theatre and meanwhile if we had decided in favour of "JUPITER" our programme could continue.

5. No question had arisen or could arise between us for some time of Canadian troops being employed or of General McNaughton being selected and in fact we are preparing British divisions in Scotland for Arctic service as part of cover.

6. Apart from all the above which seem to me to fit together rather neatly we were under dire necessity of convincing Premier Stalin of our resolve to help him to the utmost of our strength. We have now to suspend PQ convoys for the sake of "TORCH". This will be another heavy blow to Stalin. Russian resistance will only be maintained on a great scale if during 1943 we are able to keep the general broad stream of supplies flowing in by the Arctic route from Britain and the United States. The whole burden of fighting these convoys through falls upon the Royal Navy (77 warships were used last time) and unless "JUPITER" or something like it cleans up Norwegian tip, the waste, loss and effort in munitions and naval power during 1943 will be paralysing to our action elsewhere. The first thing, however, was to get a good plan and find out what the Russians themselves could do. Stalin seemed very keen about it when talking in Moscow and I am of opinion he might make a great effort thus simplifying the whole business.

7. I would have put all these reasons to you when making my request if I had thought serious issues mentioned in your message would be raised simply by his visit. Of course if after hearing them you still feel McNaughton should not go, I will send someone else. I need not emphasise the extreme secrecy of all the foregoing.

Kindest regards.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. We have considered with the greatest care your message received today through Malcolm MacDonald. General

McNaughton has also informed us of his correspondence with the Chiefs of Staff.

I need scarcely say that we have had very much in mind the critical importance of everything practicable being done to encourage and sustain Russia at this time and are most anxious to give every possible assistance towards that end.

Aside altogether from any question of commitment on Canada's part, it seems to us that to have McNaughton undertake a mission of the kind contemplated without a realistic plan, in which he himself has confidence, offering at least a reasonable prospect of success, upon which military discussions could be based, would be to risk not only the failure of the mission in its immediate object, but also to risk results prejudicial to relations with the Soviet Union as well as to McNaughton's own future usefulness. From what we have before us it would seem that plans so far considered do not provide such a background.

We have endeavoured to give full weight to the important points you now mention. However, everything considered, we cannot but feel that the serious issues mentioned in my reply to your previous message would inevitably be raised by a visit to Moscow of the Commander of the Canadian Army as the head of such a mission.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY

Decisions about the grand strategy of the war have just been taken, and the moment is appropriate for looking again at the role of the Canadian Army. The Department of External Affairs has no claim to express an opinion on the purely military aspects of war strategy. The use to which the Canadian Army is put, however, will have long-range political effects of the first importance on Canadian external relations, on which I believe that this Department has the right and duty to make its voice heard.

When I was in England in November the question came up in nearly every conversation with members of the Canadian forces and Canadian civilians. Almost without exception they expressed the gravest concern over the continued concentration in England of the Canadian Army. This concern became much more acute on the receipt of the news of the landing of United States and British forces in French North Africa. I found that there was a frequent belief among the Canadian officers with whom I talked that the policy of the Canadian Government was to hold the Canadian Army together in England until it could be used as a single formation in active operations. To the statement that the Canadian Government had repeatedly assured the United Kingdom authorities that they desired the Canadian Army to be used wherever it could be most usefully employed, either as one Army or in detachments, the answer was polite incredulity that this was sincerely meant. I mention this to show that the Canadian Government is likely to be blamed, however falsely, for keeping the Canadian Army together in England.

A good deal of anxiety was also expressed by responsible persons in England about the discipline and morale of the troops if they were retained much longer in England. A common informed opinion was that they could get through this winter all right with the aid of the new battle training but that there was real danger that efficiency and enthusiasm would begin to wane in the spring, at any rate in the case of the formations which have been longest overseas. There seems no doubt that the Army is anxious to engage in active fighting soon, that they are growing increasingly sensitive over their long retention in England, and that they are inclined to blame the Canadian Government rather than the military authorities for keeping them where they are.

What is alarming many is the possibility that the Army may be left on the sidelines in England while the war is being won in Europe by Russian, British and United States troops. The consequences of this would be serious. Canada's prestige among the United Nations would be reduced; our own national pride would be hurt; and our influence at the peace settlement and thereafter would be gravely diminished. Inside the British Commonwealth the fighting record of the Canadian Army would be contrasted with that of the Australian, New Zealand and South African forces. Canada would become the object of taunts similar to that which Henri Quatre addressed to a tardy supporter who had arrived too late for the battle: "Go hang yourself, brave Crillon, for we fought at Arques and you were not there!"

It may well be that these fears are unfounded and that the Canadian Army will see action soon in Western Europe. That is General McNaughton's conviction. He told me on November 18th last that he was satisfied that the great battles of the war would begin in Western Europe in the late summer of 1943, that the North African operations, while important, could not be decisive and might absorb too large a portion of the Allied strength, that the German defences in Russia were immensely strong, and that he believed that the Germans could withdraw enough troops from Russia to stage soon a great new offensive, probably either an attack against the Middle East from the Balkans via Cyprus and Syria or a direct attack on England.

While it is too soon to speak with confidence, subsequent military events on the Russian front cast doubt on some of these forecasts. The Canadian Army as "the dagger pointed at Berlin" is playing a useful role in immobilizing German forces along the invasion coast, but this is no longer a glorious role. The fear of an invasion of England, which would give the Canadian Army the most important task of all, has almost vanished. There are many in the Canadian Army and outside it who have come to think that, unless the Army is used on other fronts, its service outside England may consist merely of the occupation of European territory after German resistance has been broken. On the Eastern front there is no evidence whatever that the Germans have been able to withdraw any troops for operations outside Russia. One must admit that there is a possibility, even if it be not rated a strong possibility, that the military defeat of Germany may take place around the periphery of Europe and may make unnecessary the costly and risky course of a direct invasion of the continent from England. Russian pressure on the East and Allied pressure from the South, perhaps with an invasion through Italy or the Balkans, may be the means to victory.

In any event it must be assumed that at the Casablanca conference firm decisions were taken on the form of the offensive operations during 1943 by forces under British and United States command. Reports from Washington have shown that up to the date of this meeting the United States Staff favoured a direct attack from the United Kingdom, whereas the British Staff maintained that the German power of resistance was still too great for this operation to be launched with a reasonable hope of success and that in any case the necessary concentration could not be effected for many months. The British Staff, therefore, were urging that the major offensive operation should be in the Mediterranean area. We ought soon to hear what view prevailed when the issues were debated at Casablanca.

I have encountered, both in England and in informed British quarters in Washington, a feeling that it is now most unlikely that the British Military authorities will take the initiative in asking that Canadian detachments should be sent from England to other fronts. It is regarded as impracticable to move the Canadian Army or a complete Canadian Corps to North Africa or the Middle East, and a Division which could serve with British or United States troops in a mixed Corps seems to be the largest Canadian formation which the military authorities think could be sent at one time to those areas. I have heard it suggested that General McNaughton has, perhaps unconsciously, created a situation in which the initiative will have to be taken by Canada if the Canadian forces are to be used otherwise than as a Canadian Army. His great prestige in the United Kingdom, his desire to perfect the Canadian Army as an unequalled modern fighting force, and his natural anxiety that it should have a fine record under Canadian command may possibly have led him to discourage in his discussions with the British military authorities any suggestions for using Canadian detachments on other fronts.

The British military authorities may in any case be quite willing to keep the Canadian Army in England. They must obviously retain there a strong and efficient force, as a constant threat to the invasion coast of Europe and as an insurance against a final German gamble in the form of a direct attack on England. If they felt that this course carried the judgment of the Canadian Army Commander, their reluctance to propose the use of Canadian troops on other fronts would be fortified.

The time may now have come to repeat in a new form the offer of the use of Canadian troops on any front on which they can be usefully employed. This might be done through the despatch of a personal message from the Prime Minister to Mr. Churchill expressing concern lest the inactive role of the Canadian Army should continue through 1943 and emphasizing the readiness of the Canadian Government to agree to its employment in part or in whole in North Africa and elsewhere. At the same time General McNaughton might be informed of this decision, perhaps through the Chief of the General Staff who is now in England, and might be asked to make similar representations at the War Office. If we learn that it was decided at Casablanca to concentrate offensive action in the Mediterranean area, the case for adopting this course immediately is reinforced.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: At the Casablanca Conference the President and I agreed as to the high priority to be given to the bombing of Germany. The United States Government have now requested that shipping should be made available for the ground personnel of the air units which they propose to send over here in the April-June quarter, and I am most anxious to accede to their request. It is, however, clear that owing to operational commitments elsewhere there will be a shortage of facilities in the trans-Atlantic movement to the United Kingdom during this quarter, and I fear that the only way in which we can lift these air forces is by delaying the lifting of 37,000 Canadian Army personnel. If the United States request is to be met it would be possible on present forecasts to lift before the end of June only 18,000 out of 55,000 Canadians to be lifted between April the 1st and August 15th. We will, however, make every effort to complete the balance of 37,000 early in the July-September quarter.

I know that any further delay in the build-up of your Army here would be a great disappointment to Canada and I am loth to raise the question with you in view of the promises you have received in the matter. But in view of the fact that we can make immediate use of the United States air forces to intensify our bombing effort I earnestly hope that you will see your way to agreeing to this postponement. I am causing every means to be investigated for increasing the lift during the April-June quarter and if any increase is possible it would be allotted to the Canadians.

I am sure that I can rely on your help in this difficulty, as so often in the past.

CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS; EMPLOYMENT;
RE-ALLOTMENT OF OVERSEAS TRANSPORT

21. THE PRIME MINISTER read a telegram received from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, stating that the U.S. government had now requested shipping for U.S. groundcrew to make possible the increased bombing of Germany, which had been given high priority at the Casablanca conference.

Owing to operational commitments elsewhere, the American request could be granted only if the movement of Canadian Army personnel to Britain were substantially postponed. It was recognized that further delay in building up the Canadian Army overseas would be a disappointment, but it was hoped that, in the interests of the bombing effort, agreement would be given.

(Telegram 56, Dominions Office to External Affairs, Mar. 14, 1943).

22. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE explained the consequences of reducing, to the extent suggested, the shipping available to Army personnel over the next few months. It would mean a serious blow to settled plans for the completion of the Army overseas and the building up of required re-enforcements; it would mean the building up in Canada of an apparent surplus of Army personnel in the face of a serious manpower shortage in other fields; it would postpone the development of the Army for employment in an active theatre and so put an added and longer strain on the morale of the troops; it would also cause criticism that U.S. personnel were being given preference over Canadians.

23. MR. RALSTON said that the Army Commander had been consulted. After discussion with the Vice-Chief of the Imperial General Staff, General McNaughton had replied that Mr. Churchill's message was apparently the result of the considered judgment and advice of the U.K. Chiefs of Staff Committee based upon strategical considerations and that, in the circumstances, there seemed nothing for us to do but to make the best of it.

If the War Committee came to the same conclusion, at least Canadian personnel should be embarked, as agreed, in two early sailings.

(Telegram GS-570, General McNaughton to C.G.S., Mar. 16, 1943)†.

24. THE CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF said that the message from General McNaughton completely changed the basis of his report to the War Committee on March 11th, on the employment of the Canadian Army. If, during the coming summer, Canadian troops were not to be employed in offensive operations from the United Kingdom, it was of the greatest importance that at least one Canadian division should move to some active theatre; otherwise, the effect upon morale and efficiency might be serious.

25. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that Mr. Churchill be informed that his proposal had come as a serious shock, particularly in the light of the recent report of the Chief of the General Staff as to the allotted role of the Canadian Army, that withdrawal of the allocated transport would postpone completion and re-enforcement of the Army as planned and that, in the circumstances, the early employment of Canadian troops in another active theatre required earnest re-examination; meantime, it was hoped that the projected change of transport would, in any event, not interfere with the two early ship movements for agreed Canadian Army personnel.

It was also agreed that the Canadian Army Commander be further consulted with regard to the effect of the proposed re-allocation of transport upon plans for the completion, re-enforcement and use of the Army overseas.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram No. 56 of March 14 came as a very serious shock to us, particularly in the light of the report we had received from the Chief of the General Staff of his recent talks with the C.I.G.S. regarding future employment of the Canadian Army. Given the task assigned to it and the probable timetable set for that task, we saw the force of the objections to the suggestion that at least part of the Canadian Forces should be employed at an early date in the North African theatre. Withdrawal of transport allocated to carry Canadian troops will postpone projected completion and reinforcement of Canadian Army and presumably entail considerable postponement of operation discussed with C.G.S. In circumstances the strong considerations, with which you are familiar, in favour of employment of Canadian troops in North Africa appear to require earnest re-examination.

We fully appreciate force of strategic considerations which require prior movement of United States ground crews required for sustained bombing of Germany. We very much hope however that projected change of transport plans will in any event not interfere with ship movements AT40 and AT41 for agreed Canadian Army allocation. Ends.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the Prime Minister from the Prime Minister, Begins: Very grateful for your telegram No. 47 of March 17. In the matter of AT40 and AT41 I can assure you that the sailings will proceed on the agreed Canadian Army allocation. Since my telegram of March 14th United States Government have reduced their minimum bid for ground personnel of the air units they are sending over, thus enabling us to increase the lift for Canadian Army personnel before the end of June from 18,000 to 24,000. Every effort will be made to improve on this figure. I am advised that the postponement of the balance until early in the July-September quarter will not affect the availability of the Canadian Army for whatever operations are undertaken this year.

2. For your personal information we contemplate sending only one more division to North Africa from this country. This is already committed and under special training. Plans are therefore too far advanced to permit of a Canadian division being sent in its place and no further divisions are likely to be required.

3. I fully realise and appreciate the anxiety of your fine troops to take an active part in operations and you may be sure that I am keeping this very much in mind.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY

11. THE PRIME MINISTER reaffirmed the policy of the government with regard to the employment of the Canadian Army. It had already been stated on numerous occasions to members of the U.K. government and to British military authorities. It was important that the government's position be clearly understood in the United Kingdom.

The government and the Army Command were ready and willing to have the Canadian Army employed, in whole or in part, at any time and in any theatre of operations in which it would be most effective. In this connection it was recognized that strategic decisions rested with those responsible for the higher direction of the war, in this case the British Chiefs of Staff; Canadian military authorities should have the opportunity of placing their views where the Canadian Army was affected.

12. MR. RALSTON emphasized the importance of using at least some of the Canadian troops in an active theatre, as soon as possible, from the point of view of morale and in order to provide necessary battle experience.

It had been understood that the Canadian Army was to be held in Britain for use as a unit in European operations later this year. If there had been any change in this plan and Canadian troops were not to be used even for limited operations this year, it would be a serious blow to the spirit of both the Canadian Army and the Canadian people.

13. MR. EDEN said that, when he had left England, plans had been based on the possibility of offensive operations in the late summer or early autumn. This did not mean that full-scale invasion during 1943 was a probability. A great deal depended on the developments in Russia and North Africa.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS

25. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE reported that the U.K. government had enquired, through the Army Commander, whether agreement would be given for the participation in a certain impending operation in the Middle East of a portion of the Canadian Army, namely one infantry division, one tank brigade and ancillary units.

The Army Commander had examined the general plans of the operation, discussed them with the British Staff and had expressed himself as satisfied that they represented a practicable operation of war. The role proposed for the Canadian force was satisfactory to the Canadian officer who would have command, and to General McNaughton.

In the circumstances and, in view of the War Committee's decision of March 17th, Canadian participation as recommended by General McNaughton had been approved.

(Minutes of March 17, para. 25; National Defence telegrams[†] G.S. 906 and 907, April 23; C.G.S. 314, April 24; G.S. 914 and 915, April 25; C.G.S. 335, April 27; and G.S. 941, April 29, 1943).

26. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted the Minister's report and approved the action taken regarding participation in the proposed operation.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. Reference Dominions Office telegrams Nos. 56 of March 14th and No. 60 of March 20th, and our telegram to Dominions Office No. 47 of March 17th, relative to the transport of Canadian troops.

There have been repeated postponements and major reductions in shipping space allotted to us. In the past we have reluctantly accepted these in the light of assurances, which seemed satisfactory under the circumstances, that such postponements and reductions were of a temporary nature and would not therefore seriously retard the final date of completion of our programme.

Originally it was planned that the Canadian Army Overseas Programme would be completed by the end of August. Shipping was promised to enable us to achieve this goal.

However, the effect of the most recent postponement, as per QM 207[†] and CGS 610[†] between Holmes and Stuart, is that completion of programme will now probably be delayed until late September.

We reluctantly accepted this final delay, but we should be grateful if you would make it clear that we feel that the responsibilities of the Canadian Army are such that we are justified in expecting that all possible measures will be taken to ensure that this latest allocation is completely maintained.

1. Wording of proposed avis to people of Metropolitan France, in which United Kingdom and United States Chiefs of Staff are said to have concurred, is thoroughly objectionable to Canada since it refers to landing of “Anglo-American armed forces”. Avis should include reference to Canadian forces or else should be couched in general terms such as Allied forces or, less accurately, forces of the United Nations.¹²⁵

2. Wording of proposed announcement to Italian people by Commander-in-Chief of Allied Forces is equally objectionable in that message purports to be issued “on behalf of the Governments of the United States and Great Britain”, thus by implication excluding Canada. If, for security reasons, specific reference to the Canadian Government is impossible, announcement should be made by Eisenhower in his capacity as Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Forces without reference to any individual Governments.

3. If, as seems likely in the light of the information contained in your telegram, Eisenhower does not proceed with proposed announcement to Italian people and message is to be sent to them by leaders of Governments whose forces are participating in the invasion, then the Prime Minister of Canada should be associated with Roosevelt and Churchill in the Proclamation. The text of the proposed Proclamation should be carefully vetted to see that offending phrases, such as that noted in paragraph 2 of your telegram under reference, are removed or altered. At the Prime Minister's request, President Roosevelt received Mr. Pearson with Mr. Harry Hopkins this evening. He was very friendly and recognized the force and reasonableness of our representations, which he thought could be met. He thought it would be much better to mention Canada and the Canadian Government specifically, rather than use the phrase of "United Nations" operations which we had suggested as a less desirable alternative to enumeration.¹²⁶

The President thought it would be very unwise to issue the proclamation to the Italian people at the moment of landing and thought it should wait for a few days until the military situation had taken shape. He was sure there would be ample time to have our point of view taken into consideration in its preparation.

I could not however agree that documents of this nature, even when concerted between the British and United States governments, and sanctioned by the United Kingdom War Cabinet, are not subject to alteration in order to meet the views of other governments profoundly interested in their subject matter.

In this connection I should like to draw your personal attention to a statement which appeared in press despatches from London of July 10th in the course of which it was announced that a monthly statement "approved by the President and the Prime Minister" is to be issued on the 10th of each month on the progress of the war against the U-boats. In view of the part played by the Canadian Navy in this aspect of the war, and the fact that the naval war in the North-western Atlantic is being conducted under a Canadian Commander-in-Chief, the people of Canada will, I believe, expect that monthly statements of the kind would be issued in the name of the three governments most concerned in operations against U-boats, and I should be glad if you would consider having arrangements changed accordingly. We shall probably find it desirable to issue, from time to time, specially authorized statements of particular incidents in the U-boat war involving Canadian naval forces.

I wish to thank you most warmly for the messages received giving immediate particulars of the landings of our own and the other forces in Sicily, with your personal observations thereon. They have been deeply appreciated. The success of the Canadian and other troops in the initial landing has greatly cheered the Canadian people.

London, July 17, 1943

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister to Mr. Mackenzie King, Begins: For your eye only.

1. Your telegram No. 114. It will not, I fear, be physically possible to guarantee that any statement agreed upon between the President and myself shall be submitted to and concurred in by the four Dominions. This would, indeed, amount to paralysis of action. Every effort has been and will be made to reach the maximum effective association of us all.

2. With regard to the statement of July 10th, I will discuss with the President the proposal which you make and will advise you. It may be that we shall have to fall back on the old plan of everyone making his own statement, though this certainly led to some confusion. Naturally I shall also be vigilant in recognizing the splendid contribution of the Canadian Navy to the Battle of the Atlantic. You will be glad to hear that we have destroyed 19 U-boats so far in the first sixteen days of this month. Of these 7 have fallen to the Royal Navy and 6 to the R.A.F., total 13, so that we hope we may be conceded a certain amount of leadership in handling such matters. You are of course perfectly free to issue any special statement about any particular instance in the U-boat war involving Canadian naval forces and I know well the care you will take that the common interest does not suffer thereby.

3. I was very sorry to see that you have been vexed about the publicity given to the presence and work of the Canadian Division in the Sicilian operations. The papers here have been full of their exploits. Indeed they have been featured far more than any single one of the British divisions engaged. The form of your remarks in the Canadian House of Commons seemed rather to suggest that Canada got better treatment from the United States authorities than from us. This was painful reading.

4. As a matter of fact we have felt somewhat at a disadvantage through the great prominence given to the United States direction and contribution. You know, I suppose, that we have far the larger share in this venture and that by formal resolution at Casablanca General Alexander was entrusted with the general planning and execution of the whole operation. He is at the present time in effective command of the Seventh and Eighth Armies which comprise the 15th Army Group. Nothing of this has been made known by us to the British public out of deference to our Allies. The main thing, however, is to win the battles and then there will be credit enough for all.

5. I have given directions to the War Office that the name of the Commander of the Canadian Division¹³⁰ is to be made public immediately. The reason this has not hitherto been done is that so far no names have been mentioned except the Commanders of armies or better. No Corps Commander, for instance, has been mentioned either by the United States or ourselves. An exception should certainly have been made in the case of your division after the long time you have had to wait on guard here before having your opportunity. I am sure you will realise how difficult it is to keep all these things straight, especially when so much else is going forward, and I know you will believe that my most earnest desire is to give the utmost satisfaction to you and to your troops on whose dramatic entry into this successful battle I offer you and your colleagues my sincere congratulations.

6. Please always, if possible, let me know if anything causes trouble as I am always most desirous of meeting your wishes and making all go well. Ends.

*Le Premier ministre au Premier ministre de Grande-Bretagne
Prime Minister to Prime Minister of Great Britain*

Ottawa, July 19, 1943

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister of Canada for Prime Minister, Begins: Personal and Most Secret. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have gone over carefully together all aspects of matter referred to in your most secret and personal communication of yesterday communicated to me last night by United Kingdom High Commissioner.

I have shown MacDonald communications received by Department of External Affairs and our National Defence Headquarters Ottawa from Washington and from Canmilitary London giving views of Troopers as well as all communications from myself and Ralston to Massey, together with his replies.

I believe MacDonald is convinced that, despite all efforts made to secure mention of participation of Canadian forces, I was placed in a position where, because of communications received from Canmilitary, London, during Friday night, July 9th,¹ I could not make any announcement as to Canadian participation without going directly contrary to views expressed by Troopers. Canmilitary was informed by Troopers on Friday, July 9th, that it was imperative, in order to avoid assisting the enemy, that no statement should be made on the participation of Canadians at the time of landing operations. The United States War Department also informed our Joint Staff Mission at Washington that word had come from Eisenhower that if the Prime Minister of Canada wished to make an announcement on participation of Canadians, he should do so only twenty-four hours after the beginning of landing operations.

As a matter of fact, if the United States War Department, shortly after midnight, had not announced over the radio that Canadian, British and United States troops had begun landing operations against Sicily, I would, for the above reasons, not have been able to give out any statement on the participation of Canadian troops until near midnight Saturday night. It was only because of the fact that the President had definitely assured me that it would be all right for me to announce the participation of Canadians, and that an announcement by the United States War Department shortly after midnight made clear that Canadians were participating with British and American troops,¹³⁸ that I felt free to make the announcement to the Canadian people which I did, when I did. To justify myself in not heeding the representations made by Troopers to Canmil-litry, I felt it necessary to say in the House of Commons that but for assurances which came from the United States, I would not have been able to say to the Canadian people that Canadian soldiers were participating in Sicily.

In reply to your message that you would be grateful for any suggestions I might make as to the kind of thing to be said, I have already transmitted through MacDonald a suggested reply[†] to such questions as may be asked. Not knowing what questions may be asked, my only other suggestion would be that the whole matter be treated as one in which all parties were looking at the situation with the best of intentions, but from their own particular points of view; that as the approval of the authorities in North Africa had to be obtained, as well as the approval of the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, it was extremely difficult and, indeed, as it proved, impossible to have final authority in time to permit of the Canadian, United Kingdom, and United States governments making simultaneous and identical announcements.

The fact that both the United Kingdom and the United States in their radio announcements did mention the presence of Canadian troops, also that the avis from Eisenhower to the people of France made mention of Canadians, makes it clear that both the United Kingdom and the United States governments had come to agree upon publicity being given to the participation of Canadians, at the commencement of landing operations.

Something might possibly be added as to three-cornered character of communications, all necessarily in cypher, crossing oceans and continents, under great pressure of time, and on the very day of the landing operations. While as between civil authorities the matter appeared to have been arranged satisfactorily, in the minds of the military authorities, there appeared to remain the necessity for extra precautions, which, unfortunately, served to cancel out the understandings between civil authorities which it was believed would permit of simultaneous announcement by all of the participation by Canadians as well as British and United States troops.

In my statement in Parliament, I was not seeking to criticize, much less to attach blame to anyone. I had, however, to make clear the grounds on which I felt justified in making any announcement. Failure of an immediate announcement of the participation of Canadians, once it was known that British and American forces had landed in Sicily, would have been fraught with the most serious consequences to the whole of Canada's war effort.

Thank you for your message and for your suggestions for a reply to question in Parliament here today. I entirely understand your position but I feel that the reply which you have suggested would be rather long for Parliamentary purposes here and might possibly lead to further discussion. Ottawa, July 21, 1943

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for Mr. Churchill, Begins: I thank you for your message enclosing copy of your reply to question raised by Douglas in British House of Commons yesterday. I agree it is most desirable to have matter disposed of without possibility of future controversy arising in press or Parliament. I therefore appreciate reasons which governed wording of your reply.

¹³⁹ See Great Britain, House of Commons, Debates, Fifth series, Volume 391, columns 689-690.

In order that there should be no misunderstanding between our two governments as to the real question which was at issue, I should point out that it was not "the publicity actually given to the presence and work of the Canadian Division in the Sicilian operations" but rather the preliminary proposed arrangements for publicity and the serious situations to which these gave rise. All the draft announcements prepared for release at the moment the invasion was launched completely omitted reference to Canadian participation. But for the representations made to both the United Kingdom and the United States governments by the Canadian government, specific mention would have been made both in the avis to France and the proposed proclamation to Italy of the participation of British and American forces, but there would have been no mention whatever of participation of Canadian forces. We took no exception to the use of the phrase "Allied forces" in the agreed communiqué to be issued from Allied General Headquarters. There developed later the situation in which, without doing violence to military directions, which cancelled out agreements reached by civil authorities, no announcement could have been made in Canada of the participation of Canadian forces simultaneously with the announcement from Allied Headquarters in Africa that British and American forces were engaged.

Referring more particularly to paragraph three of your telegram Number 121,¹⁴⁰ it was not vexation about the publicity subsequently given to the First Canadian Division which occasioned my remarks in our House of Commons. But for the strong representations made from Ottawa to London and Washington, most, if not all, of this publicity would not have appeared. Instead, there would have been, for the first twenty-four hours, no reference at all to the Canadian forces in Sicily. My remarks were occasioned by profound concern about the effect upon the whole future of Canada's war effort if no statement to the Canadian people from their government had been possible simultaneously with the announcement that British and American troops were in action.

I thank you for letting me know in your message transmitting your reply in the House that you entirely understand my position. I shall leave you to imagine what it and the position of the Canadian government would have been today if no announcement of participation by Canadian troops had been made to the people of Canada by their own government simultaneously with the announcement that United States and United Kingdom forces had landed in Sicily.

I need scarcely add that I am very conscious of the perplexing problems which surround you at all times and how difficult, if not impossible, it is to have all these things kept straight. You know, I am sure, how particularly anxious I am, on every score, not only to avoid embarrassments to you personally and to the government of the United Kingdom, but to be of help to both as powerfully and actively as I can.

As always kindest personal regards and warmest wishes, Mackenzie King.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS

7. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE pointed out that it had been, and continued to be, the policy of the Canadian government that the Canadian Army overseas should be employed, in whole or in part, wherever, in the judgment of those charged with the strategic direction of the war, it could make the most effective contribution.¹⁴¹

Canada did not demand an equal voice in determining the high strategy of the war, but the military advisers of the Canadian government should, in all cases, have the opportunity of passing upon operations which involved Canadian troops, reserving the right of reference to the Canadian government for final decision.

In view of the long period which most of the Canadian Army had spent in Britain, in a defensive role, and the prospect of further delay before operations would be launched from the British Isles, it was, in Mr. Ralston's own opinion,¹⁴² desirable that additional Canadian formations should be given an opportunity of participating in the Mediterranean area, possibly with the establishment of a Canadian Corps Headquarters there.

8. MR. CHURCHILL expressed his appreciation of the desirability of employing further Canadian forces in active operations at the earliest possible date. Decision in this respect, however, could not be made until the Combined Chiefs of Staff had, at their coming conference, reached definitive conclusions regarding future strategy. Thereafter, full and sympathetic consideration would be given to the questions raised by the Minister.

9. IT WAS AGREED that further consideration would be given to these matters, following the conference of the Combined Chiefs of Staff.

The Minister of National Defence wished to have added to this paragraph the following:

"At the same time we felt that in determining what was best, those responsible would want to know of any considerations which might affect that decision. In that connection the Minister, when in England, had already mentioned to Mr. Churchill that after consultation with our military advisers it seemed to us important that Canadian troops and Canadian Headquarters Staffs should if possible have the benefit of battle experience, to increase their efficiency for participation in the cross-channel operations which are contemplated eventually, and maintain the morale of the Canadian Army as a whole and of the troops overseas in particular. It would also have a beneficial effect on public morale in support of the war effort."

The Minister of National Defence indicated that he was not speaking personally, but for and as a member of the Cabinet War Committee.

SICILIAN OPERATIONS; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION; COMMUNIQUÉS

17. THE UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER referred to the difficulties experienced in including reference to Canadian participation in the early announcements of the operations.

The U.K. government had not been less anxious to meet the Canadian request than the U.S. government. It had been possible to obtain earlier agreement from Washington solely because of the greater ease and speed of communication.

Difficulties of this nature were bound to arise in connection with communiqués requiring approval of several authorities particularly where, for security reasons, they had to be issued on short notice. Further misunderstandings of this kind might be avoided if Mr. King were to communicate with him by telephone, wherever he might be.

18. THE CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER reviewed the events leading up to the issue of the initial communiqués and explained the importance, from the Canadian viewpoint, of including reference to Canadian participation. Since no assurance had been obtained from London by the preceding Thursday night (when it was thought that the landing might take place) and since the first announcement was to be made by General Eisenhower, he had then communicated direct with President Roosevelt.

ANTI-SUBMARINE WARFARE; MONTHLY STATEMENTS

19. THE CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER referred to the proposal for the issuing of regular Anglo-American statements on the progress of anti-submarine warfare.

It had been assumed that these statements would refer, in particular, to the North Atlantic, though this did not now appear to be the intention. The R.C.N. were responsible for a substantial proportion of convoying in the North Atlantic area and it appeared to the Canadian government that statements of the kind it was proposed to issue should take account of that fact.

20. THE UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER stated that the purpose of the proposal for regular release of information, which had originated with President Roosevelt, was the desire to stop confusion which resulted from frequent fragmentary statements coming from various sources.

The joint statements to be issued would deal with anti-submarine warfare in all theatres of action and he now intended to propose to the President that they contain reference to the fact that they were issued after consultation with the Canadian Department of National Defence for Naval Services.

21. IT WAS AGREED that the reference in the joint statements proposed by Mr. Churchill would meet the situation adequately.

EMPLOYMENT OF THE CANADIAN ARMY OVERSEAS

20. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE enquired as to the prospect of employing additional Canadian forces in the Mediterranean. This question had been discussed at the joint meeting held on August 11th when he had mentioned the desirability of having a second Canadian Division and a Canadian Corps Headquarters sent to that theatre.

21. THE UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER explained this question had to be considered in relation to plans for operations against Europe. In the immediate future the U.K. government were under obligation to bring back certain forces from the Mediterranean to the British Isles. If further Canadian troops were to be sent out, additional British troops would have to be withdrawn. An exchange of this kind might well be feasible.

The question would be taken up at once with the War Cabinet and the Chiefs of Staff in London and, if possible, arrangements made accordingly. If the movement were acceptable a request would be presented to the Canadian government, through the usual channels.

22. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted Mr. Churchill's statement.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. You are requested to convey to Mr. Churchill personally the following message from the Minister of National Defence. Terms of message have been discussed by Mr. Ralston with Prime Minister following meeting of Cabinet War Committee today. Message begins:

McNaughton advises that in conversation with C.I.G.S. it appeared that now no likelihood of additional Canadian Division or Corps H.Q. being sent out on account of shipping situation. He does indicate however it is contemplated that seven divisions be returned to U.K. provided situation in Mediterranean permits.

You know our desire as expressed to you at Quebec meetings with our Cabinet War Committee that another Canadian Division and Corps H.Q. be despatched to the Mediterranean in order to gain battle experience and promote efficiency for the tasks ahead.

May we ask that further, and we strongly hope favourable, consideration be given to formulating arrangements which will make this possible. It occurs to us that shipping being used for return of troops to U.K. might be utilized on outward trip for transport of Canadians. Message Ends.

1. The Cabinet War Committee have considered your telegram No. 143 of September 19th. 3. We fully realize that this does not bulk large in the overall strategy. As stated in my telegram No. 143, September 19th, we could not then see ways and means to meet your request to move a second Canadian division and Corps Headquarters to Mediterranean without disturbing quadrant¹⁴⁴ decisions. I nevertheless undertook to continue to bear your wishes in mind and I am glad to say that we now see our way to meeting them.

2. Under the quadrant decisions we are to send back three British divisions from the Mediterranean for OVERLORD. To compensate for loss of Canadian division from United Kingdom we should have to find shipping to send back a fourth British division from Mediterranean.

3. By various means and adjustments and in particular because many of our returning units are not now at full strength we can now, I think, find the shipping required to bring back a fourth British division.

4. I therefore suggest that we should exchange the personnel of Canadian Armoured Division now in United Kingdom with personnel of a British Armoured Division in Mediterranean, together with an exchange of Canadian and British non-divisional troops. A Canadian Corps would thus be formed in the Mediterranean.

5. If you agree, we plan to sail the first contingent of Canadian troops in outward convoy on October 24th, the balance would go in November and December. Ottawa, September 9, 1942

Dear Mr. MacDonald,

We have carefully considered the request for naval escort vessels contained in Mr. Churchill's telegram of which you sent me a copy with your letter of September the 5th.

We are prepared to make available a number of corvettes for this important task, on the understanding that they will be returned as soon as possible, and, in any event, not later than the beginning of April, 1943. Details will be arranged, as you suggest, between our naval advisers. The Chief of the Naval Staff is communicating tonight, on this matter, with the First Sea Lord.[†]

We are anxious that the Admiralty should understand that this decision will involve a serious risk of increased sinkings on the Canadian coasts, where the losses have recently been heavy. It will also involve the immediate closing of the St. Lawrence River to ocean-going shipping. We can spare no destroyers if we are to maintain the strength of ocean convoy escorts.

Yours sincerely,

[W. L. MACKENZIE KING]

Ottawa, September 14, 1942

My dear Prime Minister,

I telegraphed without delay to London the contents of your letter of the 9th September regarding naval escort vessels, and I have now been asked to convey the following reply from Mr. Churchill to you:

“Thank you for Canada's magnificent response to our appeal for assistance with escorting craft in our special operation. The seventeen corvettes promised by the Chief of the Naval Staff, Ottawa, in his telegram to the First Sea Lord[†] will make all the difference in the strength of our escorts.

“We fully realise the added difficulties with which you will be faced in Canadian waters whilst these ships are away and we will do our best to send them back to you as quickly as possible.”

Yours sincerely,

MALCOLM MACDONALD

London, December 17, 1942

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from the Prime Minister for the Prime Minister, Begins: I am sending you copies of my telegrams Nos. 233 and 234 (see my immediately following telegram) to the President of the United States regarding the serious position of the United Kingdom oil stocks.

2. You will have noted that the Admiralty propose that the 8 British manned escort groups should operate the trans-Atlantic convoys accepting the shorter lay-over entailed and that the 4 groups of escort vessels released as a result of opening out the trans-Atlantic cycle should comprise the 3 Canadian and 1 American groups. The Admiralty further propose that these latter should be temporarily employed together with some of the 17 Canadian corvettes you have already lent us in escorting the Torch¹⁴⁶ build-up convoys between the United Kingdom and Gibraltar in order to enable the necessary long endurance escorts to be made available for the tanker convoys.

3. A careful analysis of attacks on our trans-Atlantic convoys has clearly shown that in those cases where heavy losses have occurred lack of training of the escorts both individually and as a team has been largely responsible for these disasters.

4. I appreciate the grand contribution of the Royal Canadian Navy to the battle of the Atlantic but the expansion of the R.C.N. has created a training problem which must take some time to solve.

5. An advantage of the Admiralty proposal is therefore that until your training facilities are built up it will afford the Canadian and American groups an opportunity of using the unique training facilities available on this side of the Atlantic which their employment on the shorter voyage between the United Kingdom and Gibraltar and the longer lay-over in the United Kingdom will enable them to do.

6. I trust therefore that you will see your way to agree to these proposals since there is no question that we must put a stop to the heavy toll which U-boats are taking from our Atlantic convoys and this can only be achieved by training our escorts to the highest possible pitch of efficiency. Ends.

London, December 18, 1942

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. My immediately preceding telegram. Following from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: Following is text of message No. 233.

1. I am most grateful for the assistance you have given us by establishing a pool of oil in New York from which our tankers can draw. Without this assistance our oil position would soon have become grave in the extreme.

Unfortunately despite this new arrangement our consumption will continue to exceed imports and it is clear that very early steps are necessary not only to check this drain but also to build up stocks which are at a dangerously low level.

2. If the present situation is allowed to persist our stocks will be reduced in the coming months to such a degree that it may be necessary to restrict the movements of our warships and oil-burning ships which would affect north Russia and Torch convoys.

3. I am advised that this serious state of affairs has arisen as a result of lengthened turn-around of tankers occasioned by extension of convoy system to Gulf of Mexico and Caribbean accentuated by unexpectedly large claims of oil supplies to Torch area which under the present arrangements can only be made from United Kingdom resources.

4. Drastic measures are obviously necessary to remedy this situation and proposals which have been worked out by the Admiralty and Ministry of War Transport are contained in my immediately following telegram.

5. One of the proposed measures is that as you have assumed responsibility for civil administration of North Africa you should also assume responsibility for the supply of petroleum products both civil and military to this area. I very much hope you will be able to agree to this though we cannot offer you any assistance in providing escorts for tankers so employed.

6. In view of urgency of preventing our position from deteriorating further I should be grateful if proposals contained in paragraph 5 above and in my immediately following telegram could be given early consideration. Message ends. End of part one. Part two follows.

London, December 17[sic], 1942

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Part two. Following is text of message No. 234.

With reference to my immediately preceding telegram. Following are measures proposed for arresting decline of United Kingdom oil stocks.

2. (a) To institute direct tanker convoys every twenty days between Dutch West Indies and United Kingdom, by which we should hope to improve our imports by 100,000 tons a month.

(b) To find escorts for these convoys by a further opening cycle of transatlantic convoys from 8 to 10 days, which will enable four groups of escort vessels to be released.

3. By opening transatlantic cycle to 10 days it will be possible to operate these convoys with 8 groups of escorts by accepting a shorter period of lay-over between voyages and it is proposed that 8 British manned groups should be employed on this duty. The four groups released would therefore consist of American group and three Canadian manned groups which it is proposed should be temporarily transferred to escort of Torch build-up convoys. This would enable four long endurance groups to be released which would provide three groups of increased strength for D.W.I. to United Kingdom tanker convoys. It is necessary to have groups of increased strength for these convoys as we hope to include an escort aircraft carrier in escort of these convoys.

4. Effect on our non-tanker import programme of opening transatlantic cycle is serious in view of acute shortage of shipping in early part of next year. It is estimated it will result in a loss of 30,000 tons a month using shipping we have at present available. It is hoped however when more escorts become available in the summer of 1943 that it will be possible to restore cycle to 8 days.

5. Effect of above measures on United Kingdom oil situation combined with loading of tankers from United States Navy pool at New York will, it is estimated, do little more than arrest decline of our stocks and it is therefore necessary to consider measures to build up our stock position.

Measures for improving United Kingdom stock position.

6. The only ways that can be suggested of effecting any substantial improvements in our stock position are;

(a) By direct shipment of oil from the Gulf or Dutch West Indies to the United Kingdom using fast independently sailed United States tankers. This is quickest way of building up stocks in this country.

(b) Increasing supplies of oil in New York Navy pool for on-carriage to the United Kingdom, thus enabling more tankers of convoy speed to be employed on shortest voyage from New York to the United Kingdom.

(c) To meet oil requirements, both civil and military, of Torch area by direct shipment from the United States or Dutch West Indies, preferably by fast United States tankers.

(d) The tankers referred to in (c) above to be allowed to proceed to discharge ports in the Mediterranean.

UNITED KINGDOM OIL STOCKS—ATLANTIC CONVOYS;
 EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN NAVAL FORCES

18. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES referred to the Admiralty proposals regarding Atlantic convoys which had been brought to the attention of the War Committee on December the 23rd.

Commodore Mansfield, R.N., Chief of Staff to the Admiral Commanding the Western Approaches, had discussed the British proposals with U.S. and Canadian naval officials in Washington and in Ottawa. It appeared that the proposed changes in convoy arrangements, including substantial diversion of Canadian forces from the North Atlantic, offered the only solution for the serious shortage of oil in the United Kingdom and in North Africa.

19. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF explained the scope and purpose of the proposed re-arrangement of Atlantic convoys with particular reference to their effect upon Canadian dispositions. In the result, the majority of Canadian units would be employed on the other side of the Atlantic, namely between the United Kingdom and Gibraltar. This would permit these Canadian units to benefit by special escort duty training facilities which were to be provided in the United Kingdom.

The objections to allowing Canadian ships and personnel to pass beyond the operational control of the R.C.N., was fully appreciated. Further, it was recognized that the protection of North Atlantic trade convoys and coastal communications, rather than service in European waters, was a natural responsibility of Canada and the Canadian Navy had been developed for this purpose as a matter of policy. Nevertheless, the Admiralty's proposals should be accepted since they provided the only solution to an urgent and immediate problem.

In the circumstances, it was recommended that approval be given for acceptance of the British proposals, conditional upon return of all Canadian units to the North Atlantic, as training was completed and, in any event, after a maximum period of four months. R.N. escort vessels should also be retained on this side of the Atlantic.

(Memoranda, Chief of Naval Staff to Minister of National Defence for Naval Services, January 5, 1943).¹

20. CAPTAIN DEWOLF¹⁴⁷, who had participated in the Washington discussions, explained that the shortage of oil in the United Kingdom could not be relieved under the present system of convoys to the United Kingdom and North Africa. The proposed re-organization would substantially reduce present inefficiencies.

21. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved acceptance of the Admiralty's proposals for re-organization of Atlantic convoys, including movement of Canadian groups to European waters, on condition of return of Canadian units not later than May, 1943, and provided R.N. escort vessels now operating in western local and western support forces be retained in their present duties.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Reference your telegrams No. 264 of December 17th and No. 265 of December 18th, following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister, Begins: As First Sea Lord has been advised by Chief of Naval Services, Cabinet War Committee have agreed to the temporary transfer of four Canadian groups from mid-ocean escort force to the United Kingdom-Gibraltar convoys, on the understanding

(a) that these groups will be returned to the North Atlantic Convoys as soon as they have reached a satisfactory state of efficiency and in any case not later than May, 1943.

(b) That the Royal Navy escort vessels now operating in the western local and western support forces are retained on this side.

2. It has been our policy to build up Canadian escort forces for the specific purpose of protecting North Atlantic trade convoys in addition to our coastal communications. Public interest in the Canadian Navy is centred on the part it has taken in this task, which is without question one of highest and enduring priority upon which the outcome of the war depends. We are satisfied that the Canadian Navy can serve no higher purpose than to continue to share this task, which we have come to look upon as a natural responsibility for Canada and one which geographically and strategically we are well placed to undertake.

3. It is our desire, therefore, to concentrate all Canadian escort vessels for this purpose to which end the above conditions and the early return of the seventeen corvettes loaned for Torch are necessary. Ends.

ORGANIZATION FOR ANTI-SUBMARINE WARFARE—COMMAND
 RELATIONS; U.K., U.S., AND CANADIAN FORCES¹⁴⁸

1. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF reported upon discussions in Washington between British, U.S., and Canadian officers.

The conference had agreed upon re-arrangement of command relations, the effect of which would be to give the United Kingdom and Canada control of convoys and escort forces in the North Atlantic. Under this arrangement Canadian Naval Headquarters would have charge of routing and diverting of convoys and operational control of escorts in the Western Atlantic; the British Admiralty in the Eastern Atlantic. Command in the Canadian area would be exercised by a "Commander-in-Chief Canadian North West Atlantic Command" who would, in addition, have general operational direction of all anti-submarine aviation within the area.

This new arrangement would put a much heavier responsibility upon the Canadian Navy. It was, however, regarded as a satisfactory solution of an important and difficult problem. The Commanding Officer Atlantic Coast would exercise the Canadian Command, and, for this purpose, was moving forthwith into a combined headquarters with the Air Staff.

(Naval Signal, Naval Member Joint Staff, Washington, to Chief of the Naval Staff, Mar. 6, 1943)[†].

2. THE CHIEF OF THE AIR STAFF described arrangements in respect of air forces. It had been agreed, in Washington, that all anti-submarine operations in a given area would be under the operational direction of the naval commander; general operational control of aircraft to be exercised by an air commander. Detailed arrangements, on this principle, were being worked out for general and regional operational control of all anti-submarine aircraft in the Canadian area.

Air cover for convoys was to be provided by the United Kingdom to the limit of aircraft range from bases in the United Kingdom and Iceland, by Canada to the limit of range from bases in Labrador, Newfoundland and Canada.

(R.C.A.F. Signal, Vice-Chief of the Air Staff, Washington, to Chief of the Air Staff, Mar. 8, 1943)[†].

3. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted, with approval, the reports of the Chiefs of the Naval and Air Staffs.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN DESTROYERS

previous discussions as to employment of new tribal destroyers, reported that arrangements were being made to make available during 1943 four Canadian "tribals" for service with the British Home Fleet, and to obtain, in return, six refitted British destroyers suitable for escort work.

(Naval Signals, First Sea Lord to C.N.S., Jan. 19[†] and Feb. 23, 1943,[†] also telegram 34 Dominions Office to External Affairs, Feb. 23, 1943[†]).

5. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted, with approval, the report of the Minister.

TRANSFER OF ANTI-SUBMARINE UNITS FROM PACIFIC COAST

6. THE CHIEF OF THE NAVAL STAFF reported that the Washington discussions had given emphasis to the acute and urgent escort situation in the North Atlantic. To supplement the inadequate escort groups available for increased convoys, it was proposed to form four "support" groups. Of these the United Kingdom could supply two and the United States one. It had been suggested that Canada might be able to provide the fourth by transferring six anti-submarine vessels (Bangor minesweepers) from the Pacific, in order to release, for this purpose, six corvettes from local escort forces on the Atlantic Coast.

The vital nature of the need in the Atlantic during the present critical period would, in the opinion of the Naval Staff, justify this diversion. The risk entailed in reducing, by six, the present small force of fifteen anti-submarine units in the Pacific was minor in comparison with the danger in the Atlantic. It was, therefore, recommended that the transfer of these vessels be authorized.

(Memorandum, C.N.S., from Director of Plans, R.C.N., Mar. 10, 1943).[†]

7. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES expressed the opinion that the action recommended by the Naval Staff was urgent and imperative and should be authorized. Incidentally, the Canadian naval units employed in North African operations were now being returned.

8. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the action recommended.

MOST SECRET. The question was raised during the Quebec Conference by the British Admiralty of the transfer to the Royal Canadian Navy of certain ships of the Royal Navy and discussions have since been proceeding between the Naval authorities on the arrangements which might be made.

2. The Cabinet War Committee has now approved the transfer of the ownership of two cruisers, one training cruiser and two fleet destroyers on the understanding that these ships are to be acquired without cost to the Canadian Government. Provision for their operation and maintenance will be made in the Naval estimates for 1944-45. Pending further consultation with the United Kingdom authorities the War Committee did not reach a final decision on the point whether the ships should be provided by the United Kingdom as a gift or on loan. The Government, however, would favour the acceptance of the ships as a gift.

3. It is desired that you should now formally approach the United Kingdom Government in order to place these arrangements on the basis of an intergovernmental agreement and that you should proceed from the assumption that the ships are to be transferred permanently as a gift.

NAVY; OBTAINING OF LANDING CRAFT FROM THE UNITED STATES

1. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES referred to the decisions of September 8th, 1943 with respect to providing personnel to man three flotillas of landing craft with the object of helping to meet serious manpower shortages in the Royal Navy. Canadian personnel to man two flotillas of large infantry landing craft (twenty-four L.C.I.(L.)) would be ready to participate in impending operations.

It was desirable that the craft manned by Canadian officers and ratings should become units of the Canadian Navy. At present, they were held by the Royal Navy on lease-lend from the United States and could not, therefore, be transferred to Canada. The U.S. Secretary for Navy had, however, offered to lend the necessary craft direct to Canada, on the understanding that those in commission at the end of the war would be returned. The transaction would be distinct from lend-lease procedure. It would involve no obligation to replace losses. This proposal would entail assumption by Canada of costs of maintenance and operation.

(Secretary's memorandum, Dec. 15, 1943[†]; also teletype No. EX-4853, External Affairs to Canadian Minister, Washington, Dec. 15, 1943[†] and teletype No. WA-6265, Canadian Minister, Washington to External Affairs, Dec. 16, 1943[†]).

2. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, authorized acceptance, on loan from the U.S. government, of twenty-four landing craft (L.C.I.(L.)), on the conditions described by the Minister.

NAVY; ACQUISITION OF AIRCRAFT CARRIERS

8. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES referred to the discussion of this question at the meeting of November 10th.

It was now suggested that two Kaiser-built escort carriers be obtained on loan from the U.S. government, the Canadian Navy to man, maintain and operate them as Canadian units, the U.K. Fleet Air Arm to provide aircraft and air personnel.

9. THE PRIME MINISTER said that, while he appreciated the desire of the Naval Staff to acquire carriers and round out the Navy, he remained of the opinion that the government would not, at this time, be justified in making this continuing commitment which related directly to the postwar period and future Naval policy.

10. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS observed that, as a matter of policy, the government had avoided accepting lease-lend aid from the United States. An agreement to borrow landing craft for certain specific operations in which U.S., British and Canadian forces would be engaged together was, perhaps, distinguishable from a long term loan of larger vessels which, in the public mind at least, might seem almost identical with a lease-lend relationship.

11. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR agreed with Mr. Robertson. He had no objection to the manning and operation of carriers, but if they were to be acquired from the United States, they should be paid for.

At present, the R.C.A.F. had a surplus of aircrew which could be made available to the Navy for Naval training. Acquisition of carriers would inevitably entail, eventually, provision of flying personnel.

12. MR. MACDONALD said that the manpower involved to man the two carriers would not amount to more than 800 to 900 men. These could be supplied without over-all increase in the Navy's manpower programme, for it had been agreed with the Admiralty that the Naval shipbuilding programme in Canada should be slowed down; orders were being cancelled for all ships which would not be completed by October, 1944. This would lessen substantially the Navy's need for men.

13. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, referred the proposal to the Ministers of National Defence for Naval Services and Finance, for further examination and report, with special reference to the method of acquisition from the United States.

Ottawa, December 18, 1943

Herewith is a note I have received from Naval Services,[†] summarizing the discussions which have been taking place regarding the possible manning by Canada of two escort aircraft carriers (C.V.E.'s). This proposal, which was considered at last week's War Committee and deferred for further examination, is quite separate from the Navy's earlier scheme for acquiring aircraft carriers as bases of operations for a Canadian fleet air arm. The present proposal is that the R.C.N. should supply personnel to man two escort aircraft carriers for convoy protection work.

The central fact in the situation appears to be that the Royal Navy is running seriously short of men and unable to man needed ships, which are being provided by the United States. They have asked us if we can provide additional personnel. Naval Services properly prefers to have Canadian sailors manning H.M.C.S. ships rather than scattered through Royal Navy ships. In accordance with this policy, the Government has already approved the Canadian Navy taking over a certain number of cruisers and destroyers from the British Navy. This has been one method of helping to meet the United Kingdom shortage of sailors.

The case of the escort carriers differs, however, from the case of the cruisers and destroyers because the C.V.E.'s are vessels of American construction, lease-lent to the United Kingdom. If Canada undertook to operate them on loan from the United States, the transaction would seriously complicate the pattern of our financial relations with the United States, and would make it difficult for us to maintain that we were not receiving any Lease-Lend assistance. Apart from objections of a financial order to our operating the C.V.E.'s, there is the further consideration that their aircraft (which are their effective armament) would be furnished by the R.N. Fleet Air Arm, and would not be Canadian. I should think this would be an unsatisfactory working arrangement.

It seems to me that if the Government is, in principle, prepared to have Canadians man additional fighting ships, one method of carrying out such a policy, which would avoid the special difficulties in the C.V.E. suggestion, would be simply to transfer from the R.N. to the R.C.N. additional vessels of United Kingdom construction. At the same time, it might be possible to meet the specific escort aircraft carrier problem by agreeing to provide crews which would sail the C.V.E.'s from Vancouver to the United Kingdom, turning them over to the British for operation there. The crews which would ferry the C.V.E.'s over could be used to man any additional vessels which were being transferred from the R.N. to the R.C.N.

War Committee have authorized acceptance of loan from the United States Government of twenty-four landing craft ((L.C.I.(L)) for use in impending operations. It is understood that the craft will be manned by Canadian officers and ratings and commissioned as units of Canadian Navy. The transfer to Canada would be on the understanding that those in commission at the end of the war would be returned and that there would be no obligations to replace losses.

For reasons of general financial policy we attach great importance to avoidance of lend-lease procedure and with this point in mind have been considering whether it would be feasible to provide for the return of the vessels after the completion of the general operation for which they are being borrowed rather than at the close of the war. From Service point of view however latter arrangement is thought distinctly preferable. Ends.

MOVEMENT OF ADDITIONAL R.C.A.F. SQUADRON TO MIDDLE EAST

15. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR submitted a request from the Air Ministry for approval of the formation and movement to the Middle East of a Canadian bomber squadron. Approval had already been given for the movement of two squadrons to the Middle and Far East, respectively. This latest request had come forward through R.C.A.F. Overseas Headquarters. Approval was recommended. A departmental memorandum had been circulated.

They came forward sometimes through the Dominions Office, sometimes from the U.K. Air Ministry to R.C.A.F. Headquarters.

17. The War Committee, after some discussion, agreed that permission be given for the movement requested, but that the Air Officer in Chief, R.C.A.F. Overseas, be informed that requests of this kind should, in all cases, be made from government to government.

Ottawa, December 4, 1942

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Reference Dominions Office telegram No. 247 of December 1st[†] regarding possible despatch of two Canadian bombing squadrons to North Africa. We view with considerable concern the request now received to despatch 2 Canadian Wellington Squadrons from Bomber Command to the North African theatre since these Squadrons are required to form a Canadian Bomber Group in fulfillment of the plans agreed to during the Air Training Conference held at Ottawa in May this year. We fear that withdrawal of the 2 Squadrons will leave a small and relatively ineffectual Canadian Bomber Group.

We have, during the past year, arranged for the despatch of two Squadrons to the Middle East and Far East and though these squadrons were well commanded by specially selected officers and composed of well trained aircrews and ground crews, their displacement from a theatre of operations where their services were considered to be of some value to another theatre does not appear to have been to the general advantage of the common cause.

A Catalina Squadron which went to Ceylon early in the year, has been practically without aircraft for months and as far as is known at present, only has 2 serviceable aircraft which are located 3000 miles from their base. The Squadron has undertaken very little operational flying and as a result, is unhappy and the morale of the aircrews is not good.

Similarly, a Canadian Fighter Squadron was sent to the Middle East, the first week in June, 1942, but did not receive its aircraft until the first week in September and was then supplied with aircraft rejects from the Fighting French which were so bad that they had to be replaced by other Hurricanes. This Squadron had been an efficient Spitfire Squadron in England but was assigned to Air Patrols over the Nile Delta well behind the front line. It has not been able to get into action to date although less experienced Squadrons similarly equipped have been given an opportunity to engage in active operations in the Western Desert.

We have, as you know, only last week concurred in the request to despatch No. 407 B.R. Squadron to the Middle East.

However, in accordance with the policy of the Canadian Government not to refuse any reasonable operational request you may inform United Kingdom authorities that we are prepared to authorize the move of the two Wellington Squadrons as requested in the hope that they may be called upon to render services in North Africa as useful as those which they are now performing.

WG.401/1/128

My dear High Commissioner,

In continuation of my letter of 30th December,[†] I have now heard from the Secretary of State for Air about the Canadian Fighter (No. 417) Squadron in the Middle East, about which you wrote in your letter of 8th December.[†]

2. The reason why this Squadron was without aircraft until the first week in September was that, after its departure from here, an urgent requirement for Spitfires arose in Malta and those intended for it had to be diverted there. We are naturally sorry that this should have affected this Canadian Squadron, but I may say that five R.A.F. Spitfire Squadrons which were sent out at the same time were also affected. Indeed, two of them are still without any aircraft and, when they get their aircraft, will no longer be fighter squadrons, while, of the remaining three, only one is mounted on Spitfires. The Hurricanes with which the Canadian Squadron was equipped were left behind by the Fighting French Squadron in the Middle East when it was transferred to this country. I understand that the use of aircraft thus made available, for the purpose of equipping a squadron which is without aircraft, is a general practice, particularly during a period of working-up on a new type. But, since then, as you say, this squadron has been equipped with newer Hurricanes.

3. As regards the duties on which the Squadron has been employed, we all appreciate and admire the keenness of the R.C.A.F. to get and keep in the fight. I can assure you that, although the air defence of the Delta may be less exciting than offensive operations in the Western Desert, the Air Staff nevertheless regard it as a most essential operational duty, and would much regret it if the Squadron felt, while performing it, that they were not playing a useful role in the war.

4. I am, however, glad to say that the Secretary of State for Air now tells me that he has been in further communication with the Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Middle East, who says he can start at once to re-arm the Squadron fully with Spitfires and that he intends to transfer it to the Western Desert for operations in the near future.

5. I hope that this arrangement will be satisfactory to both the Canadian Government and the Squadron themselves.

Yours sincerely,

C. R. ATTLEE

U.K.-CANADA FINANCIAL RELATIONS—PROPOSALS FOR REDUCTION OF ACCUMULATING STERLING BALANCES

9. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE submitted, and explained, a written proposal for the reduction of Canada's mounting accumulation of sterling.

The proposal contemplated the repatriation of British holdings of Canadian securities to an amount of 295 million dollars, the conversion of nearly the whole of Canada's present sterling holdings (728.5 million dollars) into a 700 million Canadian dollar loan to be secured by the hypothecation of remaining British held Canadian securities, and the offer, as a free gift to the United Kingdom, of all "munitions of war" which could be delivered from January the 1st 1942 to March the 31st, 1943, up to a maximum of 1,000 million dollars. Further, Canada would offer to take over, at cost, U.K. capital investment in Canadian munitions plants (165 million dollars). Taken together, these amounts would correspond to the estimated U.K. total deficiency in Canadian dollars, to March the 31st, 1943.

Copies of the Finance Department's proposal had been circulated to members of the War Committee.

(Departmental memorandum, 3/12/41—C.W.C. document no. 41).[†]

10. THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE, in explaining the proposal, emphasized the importance of such an arrangement in removing the grounds for American misapprehension of the nature of Canada's dealings with Great Britain. In the United States it was still being said that, while Americans were "giving" war materials under lease-lend, Canada was being paid for everything that she shipped. A generous settlement with the United Kingdom might also help Britain in negotiations for settlement with the United States under lease-lend. Further, if a Canadian settlement were made now it would prevent the criticism that we had been forced to follow the American lead.

11. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY agreed, emphatically, with Dr. Clark. A recent U.S. ruling under lease-lend, affecting articles of Canadian manufacture¹⁴⁹, would, unless it were modified, destroy, in large measure, the effect of the Hyde Park Agreement.

12. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR said that he agreed, in principle, with the desirability of a large scale settlement of the sterling balance problem. In this connection, a written proposal that Canada assume full financial responsibility for the 25 additional R.C.A.F. squadrons overseas, estimated to March 31st, 1943 at 275 million dollars, and "set off" this sterling obligation against the U.K. dollar obligation for R.A.F. schools in this country, had been circulated to members of the War Committee.

13. MR. POWER, in explaining this proposal, argued that there was a stronger case for assuming this additional responsibility than for taking over capital expenditures and making a free gift of munitions, for:

- (1) that Canada should pay for her own forces overseas was an established principle;
- (2) Canada might eventually wish to exercise operational control over some of these squadrons;
- (3) the present situation was capable of misrepresentation;
- (4) desirable alterations in R.A.F. schools in Canada would be facilitated;
- (5) the J.A.T.P.¹⁵⁰ agreement would continue to subsist for Canadian personnel attached to the R.A.F.

If this suggestion were accepted, it would put the 25 additional squadrons on the same basis as the original 3. Further, if the Finance Department's proposal were important from the point of view of U.S. opinion, the Air Department's proposal was important from the Canadian point of view.

¹⁴⁹ Voir le document 1098.

¹⁵⁰ Joint Air Training Plan.

14. MR. HOWE expressed the view that it would be desirable to have Canada take over the U.K. government's investment in munitions plants in Canada. In the post-war period, the situation would be much easier to handle, in this event, than if British ownership were to continue.

15. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE referred to the relation of the proposals under discussion to agricultural prices. The free gift was not related to food products going to Britain. When similar suggestions were earlier considered, it was proposed that advantage be taken to obtain, from the United Kingdom, higher prices for Canadian producers. No doubt it would be argued now that negotiation of the settlement proposed was an opportunity for doing this; perhaps for higher payments for wheat.

16. DR. CLARK felt that there was no reason why, in consideration of the gift proposed, higher prices for agricultural products could not be asked where such were desired. Such higher prices would, however, in turn, raise Canadian sterling balances.

17. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS suggested that the material represented by the proposed gift need not be actually earmarked as munitions, agricultural products, or other goods delivered.

18. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE expressed the view that there might be a combination of the proposals submitted to permit of the assumption of the cost of the 25 squadrons and the taking over of the R.A.F. schools.

Consideration would also be required as to the means by which these proposals should be implemented, whether such action should await the calling of Parliament, or be announced beforehand.

19. The War Committee discussed, at some length, the proposals submitted by the Finance and Air Departments, it being agreed that some such general approach to the problem of sterling balances was desirable, and, that the Deputy Minister of Finance, in the light of the foregoing discussion, should prepare revised proposals for consideration at a meeting to be held the following day.

U.K.-CANADA FINANCIAL RELATIONS—PROPOSALS FOR REDUCTION OF ACCUMULATING STERLING BALANCES

7. THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE reviewed the course of discussion at the previous day's meeting.

A combination of the proposals of the Finance and Air Departments could be worked out, by extending the period under consideration, from March 31st to August 31st, 1943. By the latter date, it was estimated that the U.K. deficiency in Canadian dollars would amount to some 2,870 million dollars. This figure would correspond roughly to the estimated sum of British holdings of the Canadian securities to be repatriated (295 million dollars), increased U.K. capital investment in Canadian munitions plants, (say 225 million dollars), the proposed gift of munitions of war (1,000 million dollars), an increased Canadian dollar loan, (say 1,000 million dollars) and the cost of maintaining overseas, to August the 31st, 1943, the 25 additional R.C.A.F. squadrons, (say 350 million dollars).

It would, however, be preferable to proceed with this arrangement in two stages — first, to announce the gift, the loan and the repatriation, second, at a later date, to announce the assumption of the cost of the squadrons and the taking over of the British investments in plants.

8. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY agreed that the taking over of U.K. investment in munitions plants might well be deferred to a later stage.

9. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR agreed that this might also be done with regard to the maintenance of the squadrons.

10. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES observed that, because of the war in the Pacific, the U.K.-Canada financial problem might be intensified by heavily increased demands for Canadian foodstuffs for Britain, as a result of the necessary reduction in exports from Australia and New Zealand.

11. MR. CRERAR, speaking of the proposals in general, enquired whether they might not be regarded as unnecessarily generous. While it was true that the U.K. government's dollar assets were practically exhausted, there remained substantial British holdings elsewhere which should be considered.

12. DR. CLARK replied that it would be much better for Canada to hold a secured dollar loan, of comparatively reasonable proportions, than to continue to accumulate sterling balances, which would assume the proportions of a huge uncollectable war debt, with inevitable consequences of friction, unsatisfactory compromises, and involve the risk of losing U.K. markets. It was difficult to estimate any exact amount, but between 500 million and 1,000 million dollars would represent, perhaps, a maximum sum which would offer reasonable hope of satisfactory settlement.

13. THE GOVERNOR OF THE BANK OF CANADA pointed out that there would be no possibility of Canada obtaining the benefit of any of the non-dollar assets referred to by Mr. Crerar. The United States had canvassed this possibility very carefully and had decided against any such action in view of the post-war difficulties involved. Further, the countries in which these investments were located would certainly not permit Canada to take them over.

14. The War Committee, after further discussion, approved, in principle, arrangements with the United Kingdom for the reduction of Canada's accumulating sterling balances along the lines recommended by the Department of Finance, it being agreed that, if approved by Council and agreed to by the U.K. government, an early announcement be made by the Prime Minister, of the government's intention to invite Parliament to authorize the proposed gift of munitions of war. At the same time it would be announced that, for existing accumulation of debt, the government intended to make a loan to the U.K. government against the pledge of British holdings of Canadian securities and to repatriate remaining Dominion and C.N.R. securities held in Britain.

It was also agreed that arrangements for the assumption by Canada of financial responsibility for the 25 R.C.A.F. squadrons and the taking over of the R.A.F. schools and for the taking over of U.K. capital investment in Canadian munitions plants, should be deferred to a later stage.

15. DR. CLARK submitted a draft statement which might be made by the Prime Minister, in this connection. It was proposed that such a statement be made both in Canada and the United Kingdom.

(See draft statement, December 16th, 1941.)[†]

(At this point, the Prime Minister entered the meeting.)

16. DR. CLARK explained the Parliamentary action which would be appropriate for giving effect to the proposals under discussion.

17. THE PRIME MINISTER suggested that it would be helpful if the announcement could be ready for inclusion in a general statement to be made before the end of the year.

18. The War Committee agreed that, in the light of the foregoing discussion, the Deputy Minister of Finance prepare a re-drafted statement, for consideration at the next meeting of the full Cabinet.¹⁵¹

Australia is not conscious that billion dollar gift to United Kingdom and succeeding loans are for benefit of whole sterling area including Australia. If this were made plain there would probably be a happy reaction here, for Lease-Lend is becoming steadily more burdensome and productive of friction. Relations between Australian and American forces are deteriorating but not sufficiently to cause alarm. Attitude of Australian business and banking communities towards pronounced reversal of Lease-Lend is more serious. Canada could relieve strain by clarifying its own relations to Australia. Up to the present Australia has considered Canada standing aloof and being concerned only with United Kingdom.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 202 of August 28th concerning Canada's billion dollar gift to the United Kingdom. It is unfortunate and, indeed, curious that Australians are not aware that this gift is for the purpose of meeting the deficit of the whole sterling area including Australia. Probably, however, the reason for which it does not appear as a gift to Australians is that they have to pay sterling to the United Kingdom for such share of Canada's gift as they enjoy.

I do not think that we should now attempt to "make plain" the application of the gift to Australia, unless we are prepared at the same time to insist that the donated Canadian dollars should be passed on to their ultimate users. Public statements on our part to this effect would tend to cause criticism of the United Kingdom Government in Australia. It is not desirable at the present time to suggest any change in the arrangements in view of the fact that the gift is not very far from being totally exhausted. A revision will be considered when we enter into a new programme for financing the deficit in Canada of the United Kingdom and the rest of the sterling area. The conditions of the new financial arrangements are now being given serious consideration.

Your telegram No. 219 of September 24.[†]

When L. R. Macgregor, Director General of Australian War Supplies Procurement, Washington, was in Ottawa at the beginning of this month he had a discussion with Canadian officials and after his return to Washington he sent by airmail to Mr. A. C. Moore, Australian Department of Trade and Customs, a very complete statement regarding the relative advantages to Australia of securing supplies from Canada and the United States. We have not been furnished with a copy of this statement but it is understood from what Macgregor told our officials that he has endeavoured to dispel opinion prevailing in Australia that Canada's billion dollar gift was exclusively for the United Kingdom. Since London acts as clearing center for all of the sterling area billion dollar gift was intended to apply to purchases of essential supplies by sterling area as a whole and not merely by United Kingdom. Consequently Canada has been giving assistance to sterling area countries allied in the war effort on a basis even more generous than lend-lease arrangements extended by the United States.

It is true that in order to avail themselves of Canadian dollars provided for under the billion dollar gift Australian authorities have to clear through London and this means using up sterling resources which we understand Australia is anxious to safeguard, but in view of Canada's assistance to sterling area to effect purchases of essential supplies in this country we do not consider this factor should be used as a reason for diverting from Canada the supply of those classes of goods which we are readily able to provide and of which Canada was the chief source of supply of Australian requirements before the war.

ording to the last paragraph of your telegram Australia must continue the use of sterling funds in order to obtain Canadian dollars provided under the gift. This conflicts with earlier statement that the gift was to apply to the sterling area as a whole. It also conflicts, I gather, with Macgregor's understanding that financing was to be arranged by a debit against the dollars gift and not by charging against sterling funds of Australia.

It should be appreciated that if only effect of the gift is to make Canadian dollars readily available against sterling it will still be to Australia's advantage to obtain goods under Lend-Lease as sterling resources are limited.

Trade Commissioner, Sydney, is having discussions with the Customs Department regarding writing and printing papers.

Postscript. Australian officials have not raised the point, but I should like to know whether United Kingdom Government has been requested by the Canadian Government to share gift and if so on what basis. Trade Commissioner cabling his Department on certain other aspects.

(a) General Odlum came asking what Canada could do to help Australia and then Canada did nothing;¹⁵³

(b) Canada promised him (Evatt) to send munitions, but did not send them because Australia could not pay.¹⁵⁴ China paid cash and got goods;

(c) Canada makes gesture of offering financial assistance which turns out to be offer to sell dollars for sterling Australia has not got;

(d) Chaining of German prisoners;¹⁵⁵

(e) Alleged statement to press by General Odlum¹⁵⁶ suggesting danger here had lessened.

He intends to send a sharply worded reply to my aide-mémoire. It would be useful if I could avert this with an immediate clarification.

Canberra, October 14, 1942

My telegram No. 233 of October 13th. Trade Commissioner, Sydney, has received telegram from his Department^t stating "since London acts as clearing centre for all sterling area it was considered logical to confine gift to United Kingdom" and confirming that Australia will have to sell sterling to United Kingdom in exchange for dollars.

I fear that Commonwealth Government will not appreciate logic of this and will regard our message as an empty gesture which from our point of view it would have been advisable not to make at all. Moreover they will feel Macgregor was misled. We have tried to make it appear that gift applied to all sterling countries whereas in fact United Kingdom has been given dollars along with permission to sell them to other sterling countries.

This morning I found Evatt in an amiable mood. He is concerned at unsatisfactory trend that seems to be developing in relations between Canada and Australia and disappointed at apparent failure of Canada to take a practical interest in this area. He feels that he has been let down by our failure to provide certain munitions which he thought had been promised him by Howe. He mentioned that Prime Minister had held out hope of sending a complete anti-aircraft unit as a token force, but that nothing had come of it, and referred to very welcome gesture of United Kingdom sending one or two Royal Air Force squadrons.

If present interpretation of dollars gift stands, I fear it will have a very adverse effect on our relations with Australia.

Am awaiting instructions.

SECRET. I. Your telegrams No. 233 and 235. The part of Evatt's criticism requiring extended reply is that relating to billion dollar gift. For your guidance in our view any Australian criticism on this score should be directed to the United Kingdom rather than to Canada. We do not wish, however, to start a controversy between Australia and the United Kingdom and any use you make of this should be verbal and cautious.

2. The gift was to the United Kingdom in amount sufficient to meet the Canadian dollar deficit of the whole sterling area and the United Kingdom Government was informed that such would be the case, and a statement to this effect was made by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons.¹⁵⁷ We made no stipulation governing the conditions of settlement between the United Kingdom and other Dominion Governments short of Canadian dollars nor do we feel able at present to ask the United Kingdom Government to alter their arrangements with Australia. This is a matter for settlement between the United Kingdom and the other Dominion Governments. There is no foundation for your suggestion that Macgregor may have been misled since the position was fully explained to him by the Deputy Minister of Finance. The gift is nearing exhaustion and the financial arrangements to succeed it are now being studied.

3. For your own information we consider it inadvisable for you to inform the Australian Government that their complaint will be considered when the new financial arrangements are concluded as our consideration of the position has not yet gone far enough for us to undertake to give weight to their complaint.

4. With regard to Evatt's allegation that Canada did not fulfil a promise to him to provide munitions for Australia, I sent a personal message to him in Washington on April 28th¹⁵⁸ explaining that we would like to make a definite contribution to Australian defence over and above the flow of Canadian men and munitions into the United Nations pool but that shortage of equipment made this impossible. There is no foundation whatever for the allegation that Australia did not get these supplies because she could not pay for them or for any suggestion that China received supplies because she paid cash.

5. With regard to the question of Canadian troops going to Australia, we feel that all the United Nations should employ their forces to the best general advantage. As you know, General Odlum personally hoped it might be possible to have a Canadian force go to Australia. Odlum states that he had been careful not to give any undertaking. When Evatt was in Ottawa he seemed to agree that decisions of this type must be made by Combined Staffs.¹⁵⁹ Token forces are of political rather than of military value. The needs of our own forces are too pressing to permit detachment of a unit for service in Australia.

6. With regard to point (e) in your telegram No. 233, we do not know how Odlum's press conference was reported in Australia. He expressed confidence in defence of Australia against Japanese invasion unless Japanese moved heavy reinforcements into South West Pacific. He described present state of forces there as in balance permitting no decisive operation on either side.

7. I should deplore development of any misunderstandings between Australia and Canada. Please assure Evatt that the Canadian Government is deeply concerned with the problems confronting Australia and give him my personal good wishes and regards.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 246 of October 26th concerning conversation with Evatt.

I concur with the proposed interview and agree that nothing should be put in writing. Would emphasize that we put United Kingdom in position where she could provide Canadian dollars to balance of sterling area but we did not attempt to suggest terms on which she should do this because we were not sufficiently aware of all the relations between United Kingdom and other governments. As stated in my telegram No. 193, repeat 193, of October 24th, only cautious references can be made to any Australian claims on the United Kingdom.

The principal purpose of your discussions with Evatt should be to clear up the misunderstandings which have crept into our explanations of the character of financial aid Canada has been giving the United Kingdom and sterling area. In all the circumstances you should not press the argument developed in our telegram No. 175 of October 2 that Australia should make an effort to maintain purchases from Canada of goods otherwise available under Lease-Lend Agreements.

Memorandum by Department of Finance*

Ottawa, December 15, 1942

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM (AND OTHER COUNTRIES)

I. THE PRESENT SITUATION

1. At present our financial relations with the United Kingdom are governed by the War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942. Apart from that provision of the Act which provided for converting the equivalent of $700 million sterling balances accumulated by us into a non-interest bearing Canadian dollar obligation of the United Kingdom, this Act authorized two ways of meeting the Canadian dollar deficit of the sterling area:

(a) An unconditional gift to the United Kingdom of 1 billion dollars to enable the purchase of foodstuffs, raw materials and munitions of war in Canada; and

(b) Repatriation of certain Dominion direct and guaranteed securities held by British investors and estimated to amount to about $295 million.

2. This Act was assented to on March 27, 1942, and one of its provisions had the effect of making the working of the gift retroactive to early in March. At the time of the passing of the Act we had accumulated sterling balances to £244,-641,266 ($1,086,207,221.04). Of this total, $76 million was the amount found to be chargeable to the gift in respect of the fiscal year ending March 31, 1942.

The total cost of the securities repatriated under section 5 of the Act has amounted to date to approximately $292 million.

3. As at December 15, 1942, there had been paid out on account of the billion dollar gift $968 million. We had hoped, and explained to Parliament, that this gift would last until early in the new year. It is now likely that it will be fully exhausted shortly before the end of this calendar year.

4. In administering the gift, one of our requirements is that the British Government supply to us monthly reports designed to show the purposes for which the funds received have been explained [sic]. However, the United Kingdom has, in addition to our advances out of the gift, other Canadian dollar receipts from its exports to Canada, its interest and dividend receipts from Canada, Canadian military expenditures in Britain, etc., and it is impossible to segregate the use of specific dollars for specific purposes. The best we can do, therefore, is to get a report showing all of the British expenditures in Canada for various purposes and make sure that our advances out of the gift do not exceed the cost of foodstuffs, raw materials, and the munitions of war which are eligible for purchase out of the gift under the terms of section 5 of the Act.

The following table prepared from the British reports shows the expenditures made by the United Kingdom in Canada for various purposes from April 1 to October 31, 1942. (October is the latest month for which a report has been received.)

(a) Foodstuffs	$188,400,000
(b) Raw Materials	$91,900,000
(c) Munitions of War and other expenditure by Defence Departments —
(i) Expenditure through the United Kingdom Payments Office and the Canadian Dept. of Munitions and Supply	$800,200,000
(ii) Direct expenditures of Defence Depts.	$21,500,000
(d) Other commodities and supplies imported for the conduct of the war and the maintenance of the civil population of the U.K.
(i) Chemicals and drugs	$4,800,000
(ii) Machinery and handtools	$1,500,000

(iii) Machine tools.....	$800,000
(iv) Paper and cardboard.....	$6,400,000
(v) Other.....	$12,100,000
	$25,700,000
(e) Other expenditure in Canada:
(i) Transport and Communications	$30,600,000
(ii) Non-commercial, including non-defence Government expenditure	$4,500,000
(iii) Financial, including insurance, dividends and legacies.....	$18,500,000
(iv) Other, including payments o/a the rest of the sterling area .	$104,500,000
	$158,000,000
	$1,085,700,000

Up to October 31, 1942, the amount advanced out of the gift was $752,500,000. It will be noted from the table that foodstuffs, raw materials, and munitions purchased through the Department of Munitions and Supply account for an expenditure of over $880 million during the period and that in addition the United Kingdom purchased here other war materials which would be eligible for financing through our gift. It is quite clear, therefore, that our gift was used only for the specific purposes expressed in the Act.

II. THE PRESENT PROBLEM.

1. As the gift will be exhausted within two weeks, it is now necessary to work out a program which will enable the United Kingdom to meet the dollar deficit of the sterling area during the interim period prior to the passing of new legislation by Parliament, and also to formulate a long-run program to be covered by such legislation.

2. Our present estimate of the dollar deficit of the sterling area with Canada shows that this deficit is likely to reach $365 million during the first quarter of 1942, and $1,170 million for the fiscal year 1943-44. These estimates are subject to further revision. In particular they take into account an estimated expenditure in sterling by our Armed Forces overseas of $620 million during the coming fiscal year, of which the estimate for the Army alone is $564 million. These estimates of overseas Army expenditure are based on certain assumptions as to active warfare in Europe next year and may readily prove to be too high. In that case, the sterling area deficit for the next fiscal year might run up to $1,400 or $1,500 million.

On the minimum basis, however, the total estimated deficit from January 1, 1943, to March 31, 1944, is now estimated at $1,535,000,000, and to this should be added another sum of perhaps $225 million representing the accumulated liability of the United Kingdom in respect of the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan for which we have not yet received settlement.

3. What has been said above is based on the assumption that the United Kingdom will continue to be responsible for the deficit of the rest of the sterling area as well as of the United Kingdom itself. This assumption, which has been the basis of arrangements made so far, is no longer tenable. Australia has for some months been complaining bitterly that while we make an outright gift of dollars to Britain, she must pay sterling to Britain for her share of those dollars. New Zealand, more courteously, has called attention to the same situation and has pointed out that it inevitably results in pressure to divert purchases from Canada to the United States where the goods can be secured freely under the Lend-Lease Act. It is clear that if the present situation is allowed to continue, it is likely to jeopardize Canada's post-war trade with the other Dominions and other parts of the sterling area (other than the United Kingdom itself).

At the time the Act was passed, we raised the problem with the British authorities and pointed out to them that while we were not and could not be sufficiently acquainted with all the inter-relationships between the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area to stipulate the terms upon which the United Kingdom should make available Canadian dollars to other parts of the sterling area, nevertheless we realized that the basis upon which we were proposing to act was subject to certain criticisms and dangers and warned them that under certain circumstances we might find it necessary to make representations to them in regard to their arrangements with other parts of the sterling area. While the difficulties we foresaw arose some months ago in the case of Australia, we were aware of the great difficulties and possible embarrassments with which the United Kingdom would be confronted if we suggested a change and therefore we felt it wiser to let the present arrangements stand until the billion dollar gift was exhausted.

In formulating a new program to take care of the United Kingdom's dollar requirements during the next twelve or fifteen months, we are therefore faced with the necessity of making arrangements to enable the other Dominions to continue purchases in Canada, although they may also have a shortage of Canadian dollars.

4. There is another element in connection with the present arrangement which is open to objection. It relates to the shipment of Canadian materials and equipment to Russia. At present we are shipping certain wheat and flour to Russia on the basis of a long-term credit. We have also made a number of small sales of miscellaneous goods (webbing equipment, boots and shoes, etc.) direct to Russia against payment in United States dollars. However, the major part of the Canadian production which is going to Russia consists of tanks, nickel, aluminum, etc., which are purchased in Canada by the United Kingdom with funds advanced out of our billion dollar gift and then transferred to Russia. In the case of nickel and aluminum, Russia pays Britain 40% in gold (the rest in long-term obligations payable in sterling) and we have arranged with Britain to turn over the gold so received to Canada. In the case of war equipment, like tanks, it is believed that Britain gives them free to Russia under the Beaverbrook-Stalin agreement. In actual fact it is Canada which is making the free gift, but as the tanks go from Russia to Britain [sic] it seems obvious that Canada is not likely to receive even the gratitude and goodwill of Russia. Furthermore, it seems doubtful whether this type of transaction is strictly legal under the terms of our billion dollar gift legislation — certainly it is not what was intended by Parliament.

China also has purchased a good deal of war equipment and supplies from Canada but in this case the orders are placed by the United States through War Supplies Limited and we receive United States dollars in payment. This arrangement might seem to be ideal from our point of view because not only do we get the U.S. dollars but we also seem to have been fortunate enough to be rewarded with a good deal of China's gratitude and goodwill, arising apparently because it has been so difficult for China to get equipment anywhere else on any basis at all.

Certainly the situation vis-à-vis Russia must be corrected and it seems probable that we should have arrangements of a type which would be appropriate to cover goods furnished to any of the United Nations.

5. Finally, there is the problem of our financial relations with the United States. As a result of the Hyde Park agreement¹⁶⁰ we appear to have obtained a solution of our wartime problem of a deficit in our balance of payments with the U.S. with its consequent continuing loss of gold or U.S. dollars. During the present calendar year, for instance, we expect to show a gain of about $88 million (U.S.) as compared with a loss last year of $142 million (U.S.). True, the further curtailment of the gold mining and newsprint industries which is now inevitable, will reduce substantially our receipts of U.S. dollars during the remaining years of the war, and a very substantial part, too large a part, of our receipts of U.S. dollars during the past year or two has been based on sales of U.S. securities by Canadians and purchases of Canadian securities by U.S. investors, processes which cannot be expected and probably should not be allowed to continue, certainly not on their recent scale. U.S. orders for war supplies in Canada must therefore be continued and perhaps increased, if we are not to slip back again into a position of chronic deficit in our relations with U.S. and continuing loss of our U.S. reserves.

However, there has been increasing evidence during the last few months that the U.S. Treasury is concerned lest we should accumulate too large a supply of U.S. dollars and is, consequently, making suggestions to the U.S. Army and Navy officials to limit their purchases of war supplies in Canada. Recently it was agreed that all orders in excess of $1 million should be transmitted to the Treasury through the Secretary of the U.S. Section of the Joint War Production Committee, and at a meeting of the latter Committee, proposals were made which would involve the acceleration or cancellation of orders in Canada by U.S. procurement agencies, depending upon whether the Canadian dollar position appeared to be excessively drawn down or built up. It was pointed out at this meeting that the matter was one of some urgency and the Chairman of the U.S. Section of the Committee was instructed "to work out the necessary arrangements with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Chairman of the Canadian Section whereby the integration of the war production of both countries may be coordinated with the financial and exchange considerations underlying the Hyde Park Declaration.”

¹⁶⁰ See Volume 8, Document 191.

It is all very well to point out that the U.S. Treasury is unduly worried and shows a failure to understand the extent to which our present fairly healthy exchange reserves are in jeopardy as a result of new factors already at work, and the extent to which they are the result of a relatively undesirable volume of capital import (i.e. foreign borrowing). The worry on the part of the Secretary of the U.S. Treasury is a fact that exists and must be taken into account. It suggests the need of a further revision of our financial arrangements with the U.S. Fortunately, the type of solution towards which the U.S. authorities are apparently groping is one which is similar to that which we have had in mind for some time.

6. To sum up, the immediate problem is to formulate a program which will enable the United Kingdom to meet its continuing purchases in Canada. This problem, however, raises inevitably the much broader problem of financing the supply of Canadian products to all the United Nations and of financing our own purchases of war supplies in the U.S. It would now appear necessary for Canada to think through the problem of its wartime financial relationships with all the other United Nations and to work out a comprehensive and integrated program that will enable Canada to make her maximum contribution to the winning of the war and at the same time secure for her the maximum post-war benefits in the form of international goodwill and international bargaining strength.

III. RECOMMENDATIONS.

A. The immediate U.K. problem.

1. It is suggested that the U.K. should agree to turn over to Canada gold or U.S. dollars (say, $150 million) in order to tide over the immediate problem of meeting her cash deficit until new legislation can be passed by (or at least introduced in) the Canadian Parliament.

Our financial assistance to the United Kingdom has constituted a very important part of our war effort. Last year the program was brought before Parliament and passed as legislation. While it would be possible to pass an Order in Council to make a certain volume of Canadian dollars available to the U.K. (say, by purchasing the British interests in Canadian war plants), it is considered that for the two reasons already mentioned this would be unwise, particularly as there has been some criticism in Parliament and in the country of the whole program of financial aid to the U.K. There is another reason which strongly reinforces these two. The U.S. dollar balances of the U.K. have been increasing as a result of the increasing number of U.S. military personnel in Britain, and the outlook for further improvement a little later is very good. The United Kingdom is therefore in a position to use some cash to meet her deficit in Canada and, if it is ever to be used, it will be likely to stir up less unfavorable criticism against Canada from U.S. quarters if it is used during this interim period of the next weeks or so when we can give as a justification that our legislation has lapsed and Parliament will not be in session until the end of January. There is, of course, obvious advantage to Canada in obtaining some additional gold or U.S. dollars as a means of increasing our exchange reserves both for wartime contingencies and for post-war operations. It must be realized, however, that it is subject to two objections: (1) possible criticism from U.S. quarters and possible tougher treatment by U.S. in connection with any concessions asked for by us; and (2) possible resumption of the cash on the barrel head argument, as we could no longer make unqualified claims as to our generosity in meeting the entire British deficit.

This suggestion has been discussed with Sir Frederick Phillips of the British Treasury, and the British are willing to transfer about $150 million in gold or U.S. dollars, provided it is definitely understood that the interim period will not last too long and that some time in February Canada will take steps to provide dollars even though our legislation may not as yet have passed through Parliament. It was pointed to Sir Frederick that there would probably be several ways by which this could be done, for instance, by resuming the process of accumulating sterling balances or by buying the British plants after the program had been announced to Parliament. (It is believed that the purchase of the plants should be deferred until the Government is ready to announce its whole program, as this is likely to be the most popular part of the program and would be likely to carry other parts of it which may not command as widespread public support).

B. The long-run U.K. problem.

1. A solution for the continuing problem of meeting the U.K.'s huge deficit in her balance of payments with Canada must be found in a combination of several methods of providing the U.K. with Canadian dollars. Two or three of these methods will not be subject to criticism; the others are likely to be more controversial or of more doubtful expediency. The merits of the various methods will be considered in turn.

2. The purchase of the British interest in Canadian war plants is one of the methods of supplying Canadian dollars to Britain which is likely to command general support in Canada and to be wholly acceptable to the British Government. It will appeal to Canadians as a practical and sensible step to obtain complete Canadian ownership of all these plants, some at least of which should be of considerable value to Canada in the post-war period. It should result in substantial administrative advantages, particularly in respect of those plants which have been jointly financed by the British and Canadian Governments. It should also simplify the post-war problem of what disposition is to be made of plants built and owned by Governments — joint ownership would undoubtedly lead to delays in reaching decisions as to disposal and to possible friction between the two Governments. Taking over these plants, however, would not appear to have great advantages from a publicity point of view; neither the British nor Canadian people would regard it as a particularly generous act on the part of Canada. However, the need for such publicity is not as great as it was a year ago, and it could probably be met by some of the other parts of the program which will have to be agreed upon.

This proposal, if adopted, will, however, only solve the British problem for a matter of a couple of months. As at September 30, 1942, the British interest in Canadian war plants was only about $287 million. Probably the value of that interest should be taken as at April 1st, rather than September 30th, because any additions since April 1st were financed out of our gift. Another problem that will have to be considered is whether the plants should be taken over at cost or at some level of depreciated value. It seems to be the case that the prices paid for the products of the plants have not included any amortization element (except where the sales were made to War Supplies Ltd. and possibly to certain Allied Governments other than the U.K.) and, therefore, strict business considerations would lead one to buy on a depreciated basis. However, any allowance for depreciation will probably only mean that more Canadian dollars will have to be supplied to U.K. by some other method. In any case, considerable negotiation as to accounting detail will doubtless be necessary between the two Governments before a final settlement can be obtained.

Another point is whether we will wish to take over the British interest in the Aluminum Company's plants in Canada. From one point of view the argument for doing so is strong but it should be noted that it will involve the Government becoming an important creditor of the Aluminum Company.

3. The second method of supplying Canadian dollars to Britain, which is likely to command general support is for Canada to assume full responsibility for equipping and maintaining a specified number of R.C.A.F. squadrons overseas. It is understood that the plan is to establish 35 R.C.A.F. squadrons of which are to be fighter squadrons, bomber squadrons and army cooperation squadrons.[sic] The British Treasury has recently given us an estimate that to equip and maintain 25 squadrons would cost about $230 million a year of which $97 million would be for capital or initial equipment and $133 million would be for maintenance. On this same basis and assuming a similar distribution of the various types of squadrons, it would take $322 million to maintain and equip 35 squadrons for a full year.

This method of reducing the British deficit of Canadian dollars has a sound foundation in common sense. It would mean that we are in effect expanding our armed forces in accordance with our financial abilities to match the trained manpower we have been able to provide. It would mean that we are equipping and paying for our Air Force overseas just as we now are doing with our Army and our Navy. It would probably give us greater control over the handling and treatment of our Air Force men overseas and serve to expedite the process of "Canadianization" which has been announced as our policy. Initially it would not be likely to have much publicity effect — it might indeed come somewhat as a shock to the Canadian people and to other parts of the world that Canada has not in fact been paying for the equipment of its own Air Force squadrons in active service overseas. Ultimately, however, the publicity value might be substantial.

It would meet with the hearty approval of the British people overseas and it is difficult to see how it could be criticized in Canada, except by those who may think that Canada is assuming war financial burdens beyond her capacity or at least beyond her fair share.

There will be a problem as to the date from which we should take over financial responsibility. We might initiate the program now or at the beginning of the next fiscal year or might go back to the beginning of the current fiscal year.

By moving the date backward, we could provide additional dollars, but this would probably be open to objection not only on the score that we did not have control of such expenditures at that time but also because there would be no value to Canada in such a retroactive provision. On the whole, I would prefer to start as at April 1, 1943, unless the additional funds that would be provided by going back to April 1, 1942, would be necessary to avoid adopting some less desirable alternative.

4. A third and closely allied method of providing dollars to Britain involves the adoption of a suggestion made by the Department of National Defence for Air, namely, the acceptance by Canada of financial responsibility for the entire amount of pay and allowances, accommodation and maintenance of Canadian pilots, aircrew and groundcrew who are serving overseas, whether or not they are attached to R.C.A.F. squadrons. At present all we do is to supplement R.A.F. pay and allowances in such cases in order to bring them up to Canadian standards.

The Air Service strongly argues for the adoption of this proposal on the ground that it is necessary to simplify administration and to maintain the morale of the men, some of whom are said to be unfairly treated in the matter of promotions and the follow-up of pay and allowances after promotion and transfer.

It might be argued that if Canada were willing to pay and maintain her airmen even though they were serving in the R.A.F., the British would be less likely to expedite the formation of R.C.A.F. squadrons. The Air Service, however, appears to think that the argument would work the other way.

The only other objection which appears obvious relates to the magnitude, and the ever-increasing magnitude, of the burden which Canada is assuming. For the new fiscal year the total additional cost is estimated by the Air Service at about $58 million ($ million for and $ million for [sic] If the war is prolonged, it may readily run to much higher proportions in view of the ever-enlarging output of the enlarged Air Training Plan.

5. Canada may also increase to a moderate extent the supply of dollars available to Britain by increasing certain purchases in the U.K. or by assuming financial responsibility for certain activities performed for Britain in this country.

The proposed purchase of 14 destroyers in Britain has everything to commend it — under present conditions it means that Canada in effect gets the destroyers free. There may perhaps be other opportunities for similar purchases on a modest scale, e.g. the possible purchase of an airdrome site or sites looking to the ultimate establishment of a Canadian transatlantic air service, the possible purchase of buildings to accommodate the staff of the High Commissioner and other Government officials in London, etc.

There is also something to be said for Canada assuming financial responsibility for the cost of certain functions or services performed in Canada on Britain's behalf. Perhaps the best instance is the construction and maintenance of camps for prisoners of war and internees. Today the cost is shared but probably in the light of the amounts involved a disproportionate amount of time and accounting work is involved in trying to allocate meticulously the precise shares of total cost to be borne by each Government on the basis of some more or less arbitrary criterion. (Representations have recently been made to the Department of Finance as to whether it is fair to allot to Britain the cost of some of the new large camps which Canada has decided to build in Alberta to take the place of a large number of scattered, smaller camps in respect of which Britain had already incurred a considerable capital cost).

Such activities are not a part of Canada's own war effort and there was probably adequate reason for the initial decisions as to the sharing of expenditures. However, today it may be questioned whether it is worthwhile to continue the pretence in view of the large free gift which has already been made to Britain and the further amounts it may be necessary similarly to contribute.

(The suggestion has sometimes been made that in order to reduce Britain's dollar deficit, Canada might assume responsibility for the entire cost of the Air Training Plan. This suggestion, however, involves an entirely different category of expenditure and is not tenable. Britain's contribution to the Air Training Plan takes the form primarily of equipment and supplies obtained from the U.S. under Lend-Lease and could not be taken over by Canada without throwing an intolerable burden either on our exchange reserves (if we continued to buy the equipment and supplies in the U.S.) or upon our own manpower and other economic resources (if we attempted to produce them, or most of them, in Canada). The present arrangement throws most of the burden of the British share upon the U.S. economy, avoids an additional drain on our exchange reserves and, in so far as Lend-Lease articles can be obtained to satisfy the British obligation, involves no burden on the British economy.)

6. We might meet a part or all of the British dollar deficit by resuming our former practice of accumulating sterling balances.

There are fundamental objections to the accumulation, in this way, of a large debt which were fully discussed by the Minister of Finance in his speech on the billion dollar gift to Britain when the legislation was introduced in Parliament last spring.¹⁶¹ The argument against is even stronger today than it was then. It is not in Canada's long-run interest to build a huge international debt of this sort. It would create keen disappointment and disillusionment in Britain (already worrying greatly over the huge sterling balances being accumulated in London by India, Egypt and certain South American countries). It would revive the old argument that Canada was demanding "cash on the barrel head" from Britain, strengthen the hands of the opponents of Lend-Lease in the U.S., and subject us to the criticism that we were charging our Allies in full for what should be regarded as part of our contribution to the joint war effort.

As a temporary measure to get over the interim period, we might accumulate sterling balances to be cancelled when the necessary legislation is passed but it would not seem wise to use this device as an essential part of our permanent financial arrangements.

7. Another method of assisting in the solution of Britain's dollar deficit would be to repatriate the remainder of Canadian securities held by British investors and to take over Britain's direct investments in Canada.

¹⁶¹ Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1942, volume 2, pp. 1468-76.

¹⁶¹ See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, 1942, Volume 2, pp. 1416-23.

British investors still hold a substantial volume of Canadian securities issued by provinces, municipalities and private corporations, and of direct investments in Canada. The best recent estimate we have been able to make is shown in the following table:

All Canadian marketable securities or securities publicly held	$1,070,000,000
Direct investments, commercial, industrial companies, etc.	$128,000,000
Net insurance company holdings of Canadian assets in Canadian accounts (additional to above)	$26,000,000
Mortgage holdings in mortgage companies and insurance companies outside of Canadian insurers, roughly	$100,000,000
Miscellaneous, N.R.O. Companies, etc. and real estate	$75,000,000
	$1,399,000,000

This estimate excludes, of course, the British Government investment in D.M.S.¹⁶² plants and the loan of $56,000,000 to the Aluminum Company of Canada.

A breakdown by types of issue, of the securities reported in the above table, is roughly as follows:

	Sterling Securities	Dollar Securities
C.P.R.	$299 million	$ 36 million
Other railways	8 million	1 million
Industrial, etc.*	89 million	465 million
Provincial	35 million	15 million
Municipal	97 million	11 million
	$528 million	$528 million

*Includes Imperial Tobacco, $93 million; Canadian Industries Ltd., $62 million and International Nickel, $62 million.

A good many people would argue that we should take back all or most of these securities and investments in exchange for munitions, foodstuffs and raw materials supplied to Britain, to purchase which she would not otherwise have a sufficient supply of Canadian dollars. They contend that it is only straight common sense for us to pay off our debts to Britain, now that we are in a position to do so. They say that U.K. would do this if she were in the same position. Some of them allege that it is important to eliminate the power and influence of British business interests in Canadian business circles. Some of them would go on to argue that present conditions give a fine opportunity for the Government to get control of the C.P.R. looking to its ultimate amalgamation with the C.N.R., and also to make a step toward the socialistic state by acquiring a substantial Governmental interest in such large and profitable, semi-monopolistic concerns as C.I.L., International Nickel and Imperial Tobacco.

Against this course of action it is argued that the provision of war supplies, foodstuffs, etc., to the U.K. is part of our fair and reasonable contribution to the joint Allied war effort and that for us to charge our Allies for them — and particularly to charge them what the traffic will bear — is to exploit our position unreasonably, and to bear less than our fair share of the real cost of the war. It is maintained that Mr. Roosevelt has taken down “the dollar sign” and that Canada should not put it up again, especially in dealing with the Mother Country. It is maintained that if we build up a reputation for hard bargaining during the war, it may cause other countries to bargain sharply with us, both during and after the war. An important objective for the post-war period, an objective in which Canada should be greatly interested, is to get nations to take a long view rather than a short-sighted one in their international financial relations. For Canada to strip the British of all their Canadian assets in the present emergency would not, it is claimed, seem likely to encourage that development.

There is also the argument regarding trade policy and Britain’s post-war capacity to buy Canadian products. Britain’s capacity to purchase imports will be reduced if we take away from her the income accruing as interest and dividends on Canadian securities held by British investors. Perhaps if all we expected to gain was the actual exports involved in paying interest and dividend charges, the argument would not be so important except in so far as the cessation or reduction of the flow of certain exports to Britain (e.g. wheat, lumber, bacon, cheese, etc.) would cause drastic readjustments in our economy. But the record shows that trade follows investment — that the British are more likely to buy from us if they have substantial investments here and more likely also to be generous in working out trade negotiations.

On the whole, the weight of the argument seems to be against a policy of further repatriation of Canadian securities. Any substantial move in this direction would undoubtedly create ill-will in Britain and criticism in the U.S. and probably be against Canada’s long-run interests.

Repatriation of special types of securities would give rise to special problems. It would be difficult and probably unwise to attempt to sell any large blocks in the Canadian market and consequently the Dominion Government would have to hold them either directly or indirectly through a corporation. It would be unwise for the Dominion to become in this way a substantial creditor of a great many municipalities as well as of most or all of the provinces. Repatriation of C.P.R. stock would not only strike the British market as taking unfair advantage of depressed market prices but would also raise in Canada the whole question of Government ownership and amalgamation of the two railways. In Canada the criticism on grounds of both policy and price would come from both flanks.

8. We could meet the residual dollar deficit of the United Kingdom by a further gift of a billion or more dollars along the lines of the present legislation.

This would have the obvious advantage of merely continuing an arrangement already familiar and accepted, and also the advantage of simplicity and direct-ness. It is also dramatic and brings goodwill and prestige for Canada not only in Britain but also in many other countries.

However, it would appear that a gift of this type would be politically less popular today than it was a year ago, particularly as Britain is no longer the centre of the military stage. On the basis of public reaction in Canada, it would seem easier to get approval of a gift to all the United Nations than a gift to Britain alone. As already pointed out also, Australia and certain other Dominions would no longer be satisfied with a gift to Britain to meet the deficit of the whole sterling area. On the other hand, it would hardly seem feasible to provide for separate gifts to each of the United Nations in order to provide each of them with just enough dollars to enable them to make their necessary purchases in Canada. As in the case of the gift to Britain, this would require a complete accounting of the balance of payments of each country with Canada, and an elaborate set-up for accounting and administrative purposes.

On the whole, it seems wiser not to follow precisely the formula which was used a year ago but rather to adopt a variation which will be considered in the succeeding section. This variation retains the essence of the old formula but converts the gift of dollars into a free contribution of certain types of war supplies representing the surplus war production of Canada which it is suggested should be pooled and allocated in accordance with strategic need.

C. The general United Nations' problem.

1. As already indicated, we must meet this year not merely the specific problem of Britain's dollar deficit but also the much wider problem of giving assistance to a whole series of nations (Australia, New Zealand, Russia, etc.) in such a way that Canada's long-run trading interests will be best protected and that Canada will gain the maximum credit for the enormous contribution she is making to the cause of all the United Nations.

2. The suggestion which is here submitted for consideration may be briefly described as follows:

(a) The Government should ask Parliament for a single war appropriation which should be calculated to cover not only the cost of our own direct military program but also the cost of the surplus war production which we would expect to contribute to any or all of the United Nations.

(b) Our production program should be based on our own estimate of the maximum we can produce, making due allowance for our own military program. (This is not intended to interfere in any way with the present practice of determining the nature of the program on the basis of orders placed with D.M.S. by the U.K., U.S., Australia, Russia, etc., but it is assumed that the basic structure of our production facilities is now pretty well "set" and that our plants will go on for the most part making the things they are now working on. If specific renewal orders are not received in specific cases, D.M.S. might nevertheless continue output if it were found that the particular product was actually needed or likely to be needed by one of the United Nations.)

(c) The first priority in regard to our output would belong to our own Armed Forces, unless it were otherwise determined by a Canadian Committee representing D.M.S. and the Defence Departments. Current output of finished munitions and war equipment which was thus determined to be surplus to our own requirements should then be pooled to be allocated to any of the United Nations in accordance with the dictates of strategic needs. Canada would contribute this surplus freely except as hereafter provided.

(d) The only practicable machinery for this pooling and allocation of the Canadian surplus would be the Munitions Assignments Board, Washington. This Board, however, now consists solely of representatives of Britain and the U.S. and it would be unthinkable that Canada should allow its surplus war output to be pooled and given away, free to other countries on the basis of decisions made by a Board on which the Canadian Government had no representation. It would be necessary therefore to reopen this question with U.K. and U.S. and to insist on full Canadian representation. Much water has passed over the dam since the original discussions and the objections then raised to our request would appear to have lost much of any validity they may have had. It would seem difficult to see how either U.K. or U.S. could now refuse Canadian representation on the basis of such a program as is outlined above.

(The only alternative to the above machinery would be for Canada to set up a Munitions Assignments Board of its own. Such a Board, however, could not possibly have the basic data regarding current strategic needs which the Washington Board now possesses. If it tried to operate on its own, it would immediately give rise to frictions and resentment in Washington; imagine, for instance, the effect if the Washington Board had agreed to limit, say, the number of tanks sent to Australia because the need was greater on the Russian or African front and Canada then upset this considered decision by sending another 100 tanks to Australia. In this connection, it must be remembered that we are at the mercy of Washington, because if we were acting contrary to their views, they could stop or reduce their shipments of steel or other materials or components urgently needed for Canada's war production.) •

(e) Our U.S. dollar position should be safeguarded by an arrangement with the U.S. Treasury under which they would recognize a stated amount (say, $350 million) of U.S. exchange as the minimum we should have, having in mind post-war requirements, and Canada would recognise a somewhat higher amount (say, $400 million) as the maximum which we would endeavour to accumulate. This would mean that the U.S. procurement authorities would continue to place orders in Canada through War Supplies Limited and we would make deliveries in the usual way. The U.S. would agree to buy and pay for for any such supplies ordered and delivered to the point necessary to maintain our minimum reserve. If, however, our reserves tended to exceed the agreed maximum figure, we would give the relevant supplies free, even to the U.S. This should definitely encourage U.S. authorities to place contracts in Canada.

There is evidence that Mr. Morgenthau is beginning to think along lines similar to the above, and there is every reason to believe that such an agreement could be consummated (although not necessarily at the figures mentioned above).

3. It will be noted that the arrangement suggested above has many definite advantages:

(a) It is based on the belief that Canada wishes to conduct an all-out war effort and to have that effort count most heavily and most scientifically in the winning of the war.

(b) It recognizes that all others of the United Nations are fighting Canada's battle as well as their own and "takes down the dollar sign" in our relations with them in so far as the munitions and equipment of war are concerned. In this respect, it places Canada on a plane of generosity, statesmanship and leadership indubitably as high as that which the U.S. has reached as a result of Lend-Lease legislation. It should strengthen the hands of the supporters of this policy in the U.S. and perhaps also make some contribution to promoting the type of leadership and thinking that will be required in the post-war period.

(c) It makes no distinctions and plays no favorites amongst our various Allies. It should earn the goodwill of all and should give Canada the maximum benefit in post-war trading relationships which is to be gained from such goodwill.

(d) It is flexible and maintains all the essentials of the methods and techniques which have been developed in the directing of Canada's war production.

(e) It protects the priority of Canada's own Armed Forces in respect of Canada's own war output.

(f) It includes a provision for safeguarding Canada's exchange position vis-à-vis the United States — a provision which works automatically and will not require the passing of any new legislation by the U.S. Congress.

(g) While it may at first sight appear ambitious in the eyes of the Canadian public, it is no more ambitious than the facts justify or than the program we have already been following in fact, if not in form. The fact that it will mean aid to Russia, China, Australia and New Zealand, etc. as to Britain, should call to its support many sections of the Canadian people who may not have been over-enthusiastic about the gift to Britain.

PAYMENT OF R.C.A.F. PERSONNEL OVERSEAS

23. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR presented a recommendation that responsibility for payment of all R.C.A.F. personnel overseas, whether in R.C.A.F. squadrons or in the R.A.F. be undertaken by the Canadian government.

It was difficult to negotiate with the United Kingdom regarding Canadians in the R.A.F. as long as the pay remained the responsibility of the U.K. government. Moreover, under the present arrangements, Canada was not paying her fair share in the full training programme since 74% of the output of the Service Flying Training Schools had to complete their advanced training overseas at the expense of the United Kingdom. An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

24. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE pointed out that this problem was related directly to the question of general financial arrangements with the United Kingdom for the coming year. These arrangements involved a variety of complicated and delicate considerations of policy, and would constitute a major element in the war programme to be submitted to Parliament. Proposals would be submitted for consideration in the near future. Among the elements to be examined were — cash and gold payments, the acquisition of British investment in Canadian war plants, and the assumption of liability for Canadian squadrons.

25. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that the proposal submitted by Mr. Power stand over and that it be taken into consideration by the Minister of Finance in preparing and submitting proposals for general financial arrangements with the United Kingdom.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

12. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE reported that the balance of the billion dollar gift to the United Kingdom was about to be exhausted. Some action, at once, was necessary to provide for immediate British requirements of Canadian funds.

It had been ascertained that, as an interim measure, the United Kingdom would be willing to pay up to 150 million dollars in cash, provided that we were willing to meet their needs beyond that amount pending the settlement of overall arrangements for the coming year. With regard to the general settlement, it was suggested that, when its terms had been agreed upon an announcement of government policy be contained in the Speech from the Throne.

The United Kingdom were anxious to ascertain the government's intentions regarding the purchase of U.K. war plants in Canada, the estimated value of which was $250,000,000. Their early acquisition would provide a method of meeting British dollar requirements in the immediate future.

13. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR said that Canada should not give the purchase of U.K. plants priority over the proposal for the payment by Canada of all R.C.A.F. personnel overseas. This would involve only some 58 million dollars over the next year. This amount could, however, easily be increased by commencing payment at an earlier date and adding the earlier scheme for maintenance of Canadian squadrons.

14. THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE said that purchase of the plants had been suggested since it offered the quickest and easiest method of supplying the United Kingdom with a satisfactory sum of Canadian dollars, to cover the period before parliament reassembled.

15. MR. ILSLEY estimated that, after allowing for the sterling needs of Canadian forces, payment by the United Kingdom of 150 million dollars cash, the purchase of U.K. plants, and the proposals of Mr. Power regarding R.C.A.F. squadrons and personnel, the United Kingdom would still be confronted with a shortage of between 600 and 700 million dollars.

To cover this deficiency, production might, in some way, be allocated to the United Nations on a gratuitous basis. If this were done, supplies would, in the main, go to Great Britain, but some would probably move to Australia, New Zealand, the U.S.S.R. and other Allies.

It might be desirable to undertake further repatriation of Canadian corporate securities held in the United Kingdom which totalled almost a billion and a half. Such a course would be open to several objections. On the other hand we did not even demand an option on these securities, and to take no action in this respect would subject the government to severe criticism.

16. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE suggested that if Canada could produce surplus munitions to the extent indicated, as a gift for the United Nations, it might be desirable to reconsider the production programme and the wisdom of scaling it down with a view to releasing more men for the Armed Services.

17. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that the question of general financial arrangements with the United Kingdom for the coming year be referred to a sub-committee, composed of the Ministers of Finance, National Defence, Munitions and Supply and Justice, for report and recommendation; and,

(b) that upon payment by the United Kingdom of 150 million dollars cash to meet immediate needs, an assurance be given that Canada, by accumulation of sterling or by other means, would meet requirements of Canadian dollars for any subsequent intervening period pending settlement of the terms of general financial arrangements with the U.K. government for the coming year and consequent announcement of government policy.

PCO-PAC/Vol. 40

*Rapport d'un sous-comité du Cabinet
Report by Cabinet Subcommittee*

Ottawa, January 13, 1943

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM
AND OTHER UNITED NATIONS

The Cabinet Sub-Committee appointed to consider the formulation of a program to enable the United Kingdom and other United Nations to make necessary purchases in Canada, held three meetings, gave consideration to various alternative proposals, and now wishes to report as follows:

1. The main problem is, of course, to meet the Canadian dollar deficit of the U.K. itself. Pending the introduction of the new program in Parliament, the U.K. has agreed to pay us $150 million in gold or U.S. dollar balances. This should cover her needs only until the end of this month or possibly the first week in February. We must therefore find ways and means of making dollars available to U.K. to finance her deficit during February and March of this fiscal year and also her deficit during the new fiscal year beginning April 1st.

2. The Sub-Committee believes that it is not in Canada's best interest to make its contributions to other Nations in exactly the same form as was used last year. Under last year's Act, our gift was a gift to the U.K. but it was for the purpose of meeting the Canadian dollar deficit of the whole sterling area. This meant that we made dollars available to the U.K. which were later sold in part for sterling to Australia, New Zealand and other British Dominions. Furthermore, Canadian tanks were sent to the U.K. which were later given to Russia by the U.K. Under such an arrangement Canada receives no credit or goodwill from the ultimate recipients of our war materials and our postwar trading interests may be adversely affected by the tendency for such countries to switch their purchases from Canada to the United States because of the attractions of Lend-Lease. The Sub-Committee therefore recommends that any gift of surplus war production made by Canada should be made as a gift to all United Nations and not merely to the U.K.

3. For the fiscal year 1943-44 the sterling area's deficit with Canada is now estimated at $1170 million. The deficit for the first quarter of 1943 was originally estimated at $365 million. However, in view of the cash now being transferred by the U.K., we may assume that the deficit to be met during the remainder of this fiscal year will run from $200 million to $225 million. The estimate given for the new fiscal year is after taking into account the Army's own estimate of its sterling expenditures in the U.K., which estimate seems to be very high. If it proves to be too high, the deficit of course will be correspondingly larger. There is the further point that the deficit shown is the deficit only of the sterling area and takes no account of the fact that under the new program we may wish to make certain contributions of war materials directly to certain other United Nations, such as Russia and China. It seems, therefore, to be safer to assume that the problem which may have to be met in the fiscal year 1943-44 may be of the order of, say, $1300 million.

4. To reduce materially the deficit of the U.K., which after all constitutes the major part of the problem, the Sub-Committee recommends that the following steps should be taken:

(a) Canada should undertake to purchase Britain's interest in Canadian war plants, on the basis of the original cost of those plants not of their depreciated value. The Department of Munitions and Supply estimates that as at September 30, 1942, this British investment was about $200 million. This estimate excludes British loans to the Aluminum Company amounting to approximately $55 million which probably should be excluded as not representing an equity interest in the Aluminum Company's property. Perhaps, also, the British investment should be taken as at April 1, 1942, because any additions since April 1st were probably financed out of the billion dollar gift.

(b) Canada should assume as from April 1, 1943, responsibility for equipping and maintaining the 35 R.C.A.F. Squadrons now forming or to be formed in the U.K. (in addition to the 3 Squadrons for which we have already assumed responsibility). The annual cost is estimated at $71 million for capital and $216 million for maintenance, or a total of $287 million. In addition, the R.C.A.F. now point out that there are certain miscellaneous establishments (chiefly heavy bomber conversion units and personnel reception centres) established or to be established in U.K., which would have to be taken into account. These involve a capital cost of $22 million and an annual maintenance cost of $38 million, or a total cost of $60 million. This would mean a grand total annual cost for these R.C.A.F. Squadrons and miscellaneous establishments of $347 million.

(c) Canada should accept responsibility, as from April 1, 1943, for the pay and allowances, clothing and other personal necessities of all Canadian pilots and other air crew now serving in the R.A.F. According to R.C.A.F. estimates and after eliminating duplications because of the taking over of the 35 R.C.A.F. Squadrons, this would make additional Canadian dollars available to the U.K. amounting to about $35 million in the fiscal year 1943-44. The Air Force had recommended that this responsibility should be accepted as from January 1, 1943. It is understood, however, that they could not make the necessary arrangements for making payments until about April; consequently there seems to be no point in making the change-over until April 1, 1943. The Air Force had also recommended that in addition to taking over responsibility for pay, allowances, clothing and other personal necessities, we should also assume financial responsibility for capitation charges for barrack accommodation and services, fuel and light, medical services and rations, etc. (estimated to cost about $15 million annually). It does not seem necessary to go this far to attain the real objective which the Air Force is seeking, and to eliminate this factor would also seem to involve a good deal of saving in detailed accounting work as well as in bargaining over details. However, if it is desired to accept the R.C.A.F. recommendations in toto, they would involve an annual cost of about $45 million ($58 million minus $13 million duplications) and a cost for this first quarter of 1943 of about $11 million.

(d) Canada might well adopt a somewhat more generous attitude in agreeing upon an allocation, as between U.K. and Canada, of the cost of certain minor activities carried on in Canada for British or British and Canadian account. For instance, she might accept the capital cost of camps built in Canada for internees and prisoners of war. This would appear to save a good deal of detailed accounting and of bargaining over details, which now seem in some cases disproportionate to the magnitudes involved.

5. The proposals recommended above would mean that additional Canadian dollars in the amount of, say, $585 million would be made available up to March 31, 1944. Of this amount approximately $200 million could be made available during the fiscal year 1942-43, if the plants were purchased immediately. This could be increased by another $11 to $15 million if we date back the adoption of recommendation 4(c) to January 1, 1943, and adopt as well recommendation 4(d). To meet the remainder of the problem, the Sub-Committee recommends that Canada should pass an Act, somewhat similar to the United States Lend-Lease Act, under which Parliament would authorize an appropriation up to, say, $700 million to cover the cost of surplus war materials and other supplies to be given free or leased or lent to any others of the United Nations in accordance with certain stipulated conditions. A Board consisting of the Minister of Munitions and Supply, the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance would be set up to administer the Act. The Act would provide that agreements might be entered into with any governments receiving aid but the consideration asked for from such governments would be of a very general character, primarily the effective use of the contributed war supplies in the joint prosecution of the war, although in specific classes of supplies for specific governments Canada might ask for "such payment or repayment in kind or property, or reciprocal action and provision of supplies, or any other direct or indirect benefit which the Governor in Council deems appropriate" provided that "in no case should the consideration required be such as to burden postwar commerce or necessitate trade restrictions or otherwise jeopardize a just and enduring peace."

A layman's draft of a suggested Bill¹ is attached in order to illustrate the general character of the legislation which is proposed.

6. It will be noted that if we purchase the British interest in Canadian war plants immediately, accept as from January 1, 1943, financial responsibility for Canadian pilots and other aircrew even though they are serving overseas in the R.A.F., and perhaps adopt a slightly more generous attitude in allocating the respective shares of cost in certain British activities in Canada, we ought to be able to make available approximately enough Canadian dollars to meet U.K.'s deficit during the remainder of the present fiscal year. It is therefore suggested that immediate steps be taken to negotiate with the British in regard to the purchase price of the British plants. These negotiations may take some weeks or months and it would be desirable if possible to make advance payments pending final settlement in order to avoid any unnecessary accumulation of sterling balances after U.K. has used up the U.S. dollar balances she is now transferring and prior to the final enactment of all necessary legislation.

Immediately after Parliament assembles, we should announce our program and the legislation should be introduced as quickly as possible. Specific legislation is necessary only in respect of the Lend-Lease part of the program; the other parts of it can be covered by including appropriate amounts in the Supplementary War Appropriation for 1942-43 and the War Appropriation for 1943-44. If sufficient funds were available in the present War Appropriation, the plants could be probably purchased once the general program was announced in Parliament. However, sufficient funds are not now available for this purpose and substantial additional sums will be required to meet our ordinary war expenditures in February and March. The Supplementary War Appropriation for 1942-43 must therefore be brought down at once and perhaps if the War Appropriation for 1943-44 and the Lend-Lease legislation could be brought down at the same time, it might be possible to have the main war debate take place on the 1943-44 War Appropriation and have the House expedite discussion of the Supplementary War Appropriation for this year.

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM

12. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE submitted and read a draft report from the Cabinet sub-committee on financial arrangements with the United Kingdom and other United Nations.

The sub-committee were of the opinion that the Canadian contribution should not take the form of a gift to the United Kingdom, as it had last year, but rather to all the United Nations. The sub-committee's proposals were based upon this alternative.

As to the extent of the problem, for the fiscal year 1943-44, the deficit of the sterling area with Canada was now estimated at $1,170 million. For the remainder of the present fiscal year the deficit would run from $200 million to $225 million, after allowing for the $150 million now being transferred.

Canada might wish also to make certain contributions of war materials directly to United Nations outside the sterling area. It appeared, therefore, that the problem to be met in the coming fiscal year might be of the order of $1,300 million.

To meet the deficit of the United Kingdom, which constituted the major part of the problem, the sub-committee recommended:

(a) that Canada undertake to purchase Britain's interest in Canadian war plants at the original cost, estimated at about $200 million; negotiations for this purpose to be undertaken immediately in order to provide enough Canadian dollars to meet the U.K. deficit during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

(b) that Canada, as from April 1st, 1943, assume responsibility for equipping and maintaining the thirty-five R.C.A.F. squadrons now forming or to be formed in the United Kingdom, at a total cost of $287 million, and possibly certain miscellaneous establishments, involving an additional amount of $60 million;

(c) that Canada, as from April 1st, 1943, accept responsibility for pay and allowances, clothing and other personal necessities, of all Canadian aircrew now serving in the R.A.F., at an estimated cost of $35 million, and possibly capitation charges of about $15 million, in addition;

(d) that Canada undertake the cost of certain minor activities at present carried on in Canada for British or British and Canadian account, such as the capital cost of camps built in Canada for internees and prisoners of war.

Taken together these items would provide some $585 million up to March 31st, 1944.

To meet the remainder of the U.K. deficit, and to make Canadian supplies available to other of the United Nations, the sub-committee recommended that Canada pass an Act somewhat similar to the U.S. Lend-Lease Act, under which Parliament would authorize an appropriation of approximately $700 million to be administered by a board, consisting of the Ministers of National Defence, Munitions and Supply, Justice, and Finance.

If the sub-committee's recommendations were accepted, it was suggested that the programme be announced immediately after Parliament assembled, and legislation be introduced as quickly as possible. Specific legislation would be required only for the lend-lease part of the programme; the other parts could be covered by including appropriate amounts in the Supplementary War Appropriation for 1942-43, and the War Appropriation for 1943-44.

(Report by Cabinet sub-committee, Jan. 13, 1943.)

13. MR. ILSLEY also submitted and read a draft bill for the establishment of lend-lease machinery recommended, entitled The War Appropriation (United Nations War Supplies) Act, 1943.

(Draft bill, Jan. 12, 1943.)[†]

14. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved in principle the recommendations of the sub-committee and agreed to proceeding along the lines indicated in the sub-committee's report.

15. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after consideration of the text of the draft bill submitted, agreed that it be referred to the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Secretary, and appropriate officers of the Department of Justice, for redrafting in the light of the discussion.¹⁶³

PERSONAL

Dear Mike [Pearson],

In your letter of June 5th[†] you referred to various conversations relating to the need of the French Naval forces for additional naval vessels and you mentioned the possibility of something being done by us under the Mutual Aid Act. I think that there is a lot to be said on political grounds for the provision by us under this Act of some military and naval supplies to the French. The Minister of Justice has recently expressed the hope that we would be able to be of assistance in this way to the new French Council for Liberation.

¹⁶³ Le programme fut annoncé lors du Discours du Trône le 28 janvier. Voir Canada, Sénat, Débats, session 1943-44, p.1. L'assentiment royal fut accordé à la Loi sur l'aide mutuelle le 20 mai. Voir Statuts du Canada, 7 George VI, chapitre 17.

¹⁶³ The programme was announced in the Speech from the Throne on January 28. See Canada, Senate, Debates, 1943-44 Session, p.1. The Mutual Aid Act was assented to on May 20. See Statutes of Canada, 7 George VI, Chapter 17.

I believe that the best course of procedure would be for the French to approach us in Ottawa, presumably through Bonneau who represents, I suppose for the present, the Council for Liberation, with the request for Mutual Aid and a list of the supplies that they desire to secure. The sooner such an approach is made the better. There have been separate suggestions that we should furnish St. Pierre with certain goods but I think that we should not try to deal separately with the supplies requested for various parts of the French Empire.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, July 2, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. I should be grateful if the following message could be transmitted to the United Kingdom Resident Minister in Algiers, Begins: The Canadian Government have given consideration to the assistance that they could provide in the training and equipment of the French forces under the direction of the French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers. We have received intimations from several quarters that Canadian aid would be welcomed both in training aircrew in Canada and in providing war supplies for shipment to French forces in North Africa or for use of the French Navy. We feel that such requests should be communicated to us by the French Committee of National Liberation and we should be glad to give prompt and sympathetic consideration to any requests so communicated.

¹⁶⁴ See also Document 1414.

There is a possibility that we could provide facilities for training a number of aircrew and we should be glad to grant the Committee the privilege of requesting war supplies under the Mutual Aid Act.

In view of the impending visit to this continent of General Giraud¹⁶⁵ we think it advisable to approach the Committee as soon as possible so that our readiness to assist may be made known to them before General Giraud visits Ottawa. Otherwise there might be a tendency to interpret our action as resulting from Giraud's intervention. We are anxious to do nothing which would have the appearance of taking sides in the issues and personalities within the Committee in Algiers, both on grounds of general policy and for domestic reasons. At the same time we do not wish to take any action which could be construed as formal recognition of the Committee in advance of definition of United Kingdom and United States attitude toward it.

It would be appreciated, therefore, if a message could be transmitted to the Committee of National Liberation as soon as possible along the following lines:

"The Canadian Government desires to inform the French Committee of National Liberation that it is prepared to consider promptly and sympathetically any requests which the Committee may care to present for assistance in the equipment and training of the French forces under the control of the Committee. Subject to the supreme requirements of strategic need the Canadian Government, if the committee so wishes, is prepared to discuss at once (a) arrangements for the training in Canada of a number of aircrew for the French forces, and (b) the provision to the Committee of war supplies for the use of French military and naval forces, these supplies to be furnished in accordance with the procedure set forth in the Mutual Aid Act of Canada. If the Committee desires to pursue these suggestions the Canadian Government would welcome an early intimation of its wishes." Ends.

Dear Mr. Howe,

I understand that the question of providing some supplies under the Mutual Aid Act to the French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers has already come to the notice of the Mutual Aid Board. The latter point was raised with Mr. Dupuy when he was in North Africa at the beginning of last month and Mr. Power thinks that we can do something to meet their wishes. It is important that any dealings that we may have should be with the Committee of Liberation itself at this stage rather than with any of the French representatives abroad who were previously committed to the support of one or other of Giraud and de Gaulle.¹⁶⁶ As Giraud may be visiting Canada shortly it is also important that we should put these matters in train before his arrival.

MEMORANDUM ON SUPPLIES FOR CHINA

The provision of supplies to China under the Mutual Aid Act is now under active consideration. Both the method of reaching agreement with China on the supplies to be sent and the volume and character of the supplies themselves involve important questions of foreign policy, strategy and finance. It is suggested that these questions should be faced directly on their merits before further progress is made with the negotiations.

The Chinese have presented a request for a lengthy list of supplies consisting in the main of items of army ground equipment for which production facilities exist in Canada. The supplies can be shipped to India in Canadian bottoms. From India to China the only available transportation is by air mainly by transport planes of the U.S. Transport Command. Another service is maintained by United China Air Lines which is equipped with U.S. lend-lease material and in which Pan-American Airways have a large interest. In practice priorities between India and China are understood to be controlled by General Stillwell.¹⁶⁷ The tonnage that can be carried is small amounting in a recent month to around 3,000 tons of which some 1200 tons was aviation gasoline for the use of the U.S. air force in China.

The United States Government thus controls the final stage of shipment to China. It can also itself produce and transport by sea to India all the supplies that can be taken into China in present conditions. It is understood that they are anxious in Washington that these controls should not be challenged and that other countries wishing to send supplies to China should do so in accordance with plans concerted with the United States.

The major questions of foreign policy involved in the promise of Canadian supplies to China are first, our desire to aid China directly in the interest of promoting Chinese goodwill towards Canada and, secondly, our desire to avoid friction with the United States on this issue. If we were to undertake to China to make available in India a fairly large volume of Canadian war supplies, it is probable that friction would result; on the other hand this is what the Chinese Government would apparently like us to do. The United States would not welcome a substantial stockpile in India of supplies from Canada which would lead the Chinese Government to bring pressure to bear for air priorities for these supplies into Kungming where they could dispose of them as they saw fit. Considerable importance seems to be attached in Washington to this point. If we please China we run the risk of displeasing the United States.

From the strategic point of view the dominant consideration must be the effective use of the supplies against Japan. The creation of stockpiles in India which cannot be moved would be a straight strategic loss; the munitions would be immobilized and the shipping needed to transport them to India would be used to no avail. General Stillwell is now able with some degree of success to keep a string on the incoming supplies and to direct them in accordance with his appreciation of strategic needs. In view of the present condition of the Chinese armies and even the danger of diversion of incoming supplies for use against the Chinese Communist forces in the North (a diversion which would most certainly be contrary to our strategic interests) it seems desirable that we should do nothing to diminish the controls now in General Stillwell's hands.

From the financial point of view it would be foolish to devote Canadian production resources and funds provided for Mutual Aid to manufacture and move to India munitions which might get no further.

It is certainly desirable that China should receive assistance from Canada under the Mutual Aid Act. In the light of current conditions in China and of the narrow limitations of air transport over the final stage, it is also most desirable that Canadian aid to China should be provided in agreement with the United States. Even if as a matter of policy we wish to become a rival benefactor we have not the means to deliver the goods. The conclusion is that we should enter into no long-term commitment with China and that we should seek to secure the prior agreement of the United States before entering into any commitment. Otherwise we incur the danger of not only wasting our own resources but of providing a cause of disagreement with the United States without in fact contributing to Chinese resistance to Japan.

It is understood that the United Kingdom Government is not at present sending any supplies into China. They should, however, be kept informed of our intentions.

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs*

Washington, July 19, 1943

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As I mentioned to you over the telephone the other day, Mr. Lauchlin Currie informed me last week that during his recent visit to Ottawa he had taken up with Mr. Howe (and I believe he said with officials of External Affairs also) the question of setting up a joint United States-Canadian committee in Washington to ensure that the operations of U.S. Lend-Lease and Canadian Mutual Aid are coordinated, and to prevent claimant countries playing us off against each other. Mr. Currie added that Mr. Howe had supported the idea and that since his, Currie's, return to Washington, he had taken the matter up with high officials here as well as with the White House, and had been told to go ahead. He, therefore, asked me whether the Canadian authorities were willing to proceed with this joint committee and, if so, could the matter be finalized shortly so that a joint press statement might be issued. He thought that the U.S. side of the committee would represent Lend-Lease and the War Department, while our side might possibly consist of the Washington Committee of our Mutual Aid Board.

I told Mr. Currie I would take the matter up with those concerned in Ottawa and let him know the result as soon as possible. As it happened, Karl Fraser arrived in Washington the next day, Friday, July 16th, and the Washington Committee¹⁶⁸ (Pope being absent) met that morning. At first, Fraser was inclined to oppose the idea of a joint committee. He admitted that Mr. Howe had told Currie in Ottawa that it was a good idea but later, after a conversation with Fraser, Mr. Howe had changed his mind. However, this changed attitude had not been conveyed to Currie as Mr. Howe had gone on his vacation. Carswell, Taylor and I all felt that the idea of a joint committee was a good one and should be supported. Fraser then swung round to our view. Later that day, Taylor and Fraser saw Stettinius and General Burns and found that the Americans were quite enthusiastic about the joint committee idea. They had, indeed, picked their four representatives — W.L. Batt, General Burns, General Boykin Stewart, and Mr. Van Buskirk (Stettinius' assistant). Later in the afternoon the four of us had another meeting and there was some discussion as to the composition of the Canadian side of the joint committee, if and when it is set up. We agreed that this question should be left to Ottawa. It was also clearly understood that the Mutual Aid Board itself (and possibly even the War Cabinet [sic]) would have to approve of any such joint committee. Therefore we could not proceed further in the matter until such approval was given. On these points Fraser will be reporting in detail when he returns.

The next morning, Saturday, we met Lauchlin Currie and explained to him that no further steps could be taken regarding the establishment of the joint committee until the matter was cleared with the Mutual Aid Board in Ottawa. We added, however, that the Washington Committee was itself in favour of such a committee and would recommend accordingly.

Currie meanwhile had sent me a copy of a draft press statement which he thought might be issued when the committee was established. It was as follows:

“In order to assure integration of the Canadian Mutual Aid and the American Lend-Lease programs to the end that each country will supply to its common Allies weapons and materials it is better able to supply, there is as of today being instituted a Joint War Aid Committee, United States and Canada. This committee will review periodically the military requirements of various countries and will make recommendations to the appropriate officials in the United States and Canada relative to meeting those requirements.”

We felt that this draft unduly magnified the powers and authority of the committee and we suggested an alternative as follows:

“There has as of today been instituted a Joint War Aid Committee, United States and Canada, to consider problems of mutual interest arising out of the Canadian Mutual Aid and the American Lend-Lease programmes. Members of this committee are as follows: . . . ”

I feel sure that you will approve of our amendments to the Currie draft. One of the things we have to be careful in considering this joint committee is that it is not interpreted in Canada as bringing, in any way, Canadian Mutual Aid under the jurisdiction and control of any Joint or, even worse, any United States authority. Our draft press statement and the limited powers conferred on the proposed joint body in that draft should remove this danger. While recognizing that great care must be taken in setting up a joint committee of the kind indicated above, I feel myself that it could serve a most useful purpose in clearing away confusions, and even possibly conflicts, that might arise from the mutual aid programmes of the two countries. It is quite clear that Canada should maintain jurisdiction over its own programme; it is also quite clear that in carrying out that programme we will have to cooperate closely with Washington. A joint committee of the kind indicated would, I think, facilitate such cooperation.

Yours sincerely,

they agree to the issue of a communiqué as follows, Begins:

“There has been instituted as from . . . a Joint War Aid Committee, United States-Canada, to study problems which arise out of the operations of the United States Lend-Lease and the Canadian Mutual Aid Programmes, and, where necessary, to make recommendations concerning them to the proper authorities. The personnel of this Joint Committee is as follows:

The United States members: Major General James H. Burns, Executive, Munitions Assignments Board, Chairman; Brigadier General Boykin Wright, Director, International Aid Division, U.S. Army Service Forces; William L. The Canadian members: E.P. Taylor, Canadian Deputy Member, Combined Production and Resources Board (Chairman); Major General M.A. Pope, M.C., Chairman, Canadian Joint Staff; J.B. Currie wishes to clear this communiqué with the White House before it is issued, and, in the circumstances, this may take a few days. He will let me know when he succeeds, so that it may be issued jointly in Ottawa and Washington at a time to be agreed on.

[Ottawa,] August 3, 1943

It has been found desirable to establish in Washington a Joint Committee to consider the correlation of our Mutual Aid Programme with United States Lend-Lease activities. There is an obvious need for avoiding competition between the two programmes and for reaching agreement at an early stage on the type and volume of assistance to be furnished to recipient countries. We have already in Washington a Canadian Mutual Aid Committee consisting of General Pope and Messrs. Pearson, Carswell and Taylor. The United States authorities are ready to match this with a Committee of four senior officials, the combined committees forming the Joint Committee. Messrs. Stettinius and Karl Fraser would also be ex officio members.

The Mutual Aid Board has approved the creation of this Committee. It need not be set up formally by Order-in-Council as it has no executive functions and all that is necessary to launch it is the publication of an agreed press statement. The attached message of August 2nd from the Legation in Washington gives the text of such a statement which is from our point of view quite satisfactory. I think, therefore, that the statement should be issued as soon as it has secured the President's approval.¹⁶⁹

Sir,

With reference to my telegram No. 71 of August 27th[†] concerning the provision of war supplies to China under the Mutual Aid Act, it was found necessary because of the obvious transportation problems involved to engage in preliminary discussions in Washington before a definite reply could be returned to the Chinese request for war supplies. The final stages of these discussions were carried on by a newly established Joint War Aid Committee-United States and Canada consisting of a group of senior United States and Canadian officials in Washington who are concerned with the provision of munitions to Allied countries. They concluded an agreement this month containing among other features an understanding that the stockpile in India of Canadian supplies for China would not be allowed to exceed at any time 12,500 tons of material.

Until a land route is opened to China from India such Canadian supplies as may reach China will have to be carried, of course, by air over the last stage of the journey. Our latest secret information on the capacity of the air route is that the lift of goods into China under the control of the United States Army Air Transport Command has averaged nearly 2,000 tons per month during the first six months of the year. The aim to which they are working is 10,000 tons per month and it is hoped that this will be achieved by the end of September. Of the increase, however, some 75% will be required for supplies for the United States air force in China. These figures do not include goods transported by the China National Airways Corporation, but it is understood that the tonnage is small and that recently only three serviceable machines were in operation. There would seem to be no prospect of moving Canadian supplies into China either by the Sinkiang route or by pack routes via Tibet.

It is thus evident that until a land route is cleared the movement of Canadian supplies into China will depend almost wholly on the United States Army Air Transport Command which determines priorities in shipment. There is at present a United States stockpile of munitions for China in India. It is understood to amount to over 100,000 tons. In these circumstances selection has been made from the list of Chinese requirements of items produced in Canada which are capable of transport by air. I enclose a copy of a letter addressed to Dr. T.V. Soong by the Prime Minister on August 20th[†] containing a list of the items which Canada is now ready to offer. I also enclose a copy of Dr. Soong's reply of August 22nd.[†] These letters were exchanged while Dr. Soong was in Quebec which he visited at the request of Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt in order to discuss with them the Far Eastern situation during the Quebec Conference. Quantities are not mentioned in the Prime Minister's letter since quantities and specifications are now the subject of discussion with the Chinese Supplies Officers in Ottawa. For your own information, however, I attach a detailed list[†] showing the quantities of each item. You will note from this that only a small offer has been made of 40 mm. anti-aircraft guns and 25 pounders because of the difficulties of air transport in the case of these items. For the same reason no offer has been made of 3.7 anti-aircraft guns — an omission referred to in Dr. Soong's letter to the Prime Minister.

I am advised that the total value of the supplies included in the Canadian offer is something over $50,000,000. It is intended that these supplies should be conveyed to India in Canadian ships where delivery will be effected to the official designated by the Chinese Government. I should add for your personal information that it is unlikely that the first of the three ships which will be required to carry the entire list of supplies will be able to leave Canada until early in 1944.

While the details of the supplies promised to China and of their method of conveyance must remain secret for the present, it would be desirable that you should, as opportunity occurs, make known to officials of the Chinese Government the general situation revealed in this despatch. There is in fact no shortage of the types of supplies most urgently required by the Chinese up to the limits of the transport possibilities into China, and our understanding is that the United States Government would be prepared to maintain an adequate stockpile in India of supplies of their own production, except perhaps in the case of a few minor items. The Mutual Aid Board has felt, however, that long term considerations of Canadian relations with China make it desirable for Canadian supplies to be despatched in substantial volume, even though there may be a good deal of doubt whether these supplies will reach the Chinese armies within the next year or so. It is important, therefore, that the action of Canada should as far as possible be recognized and understood in China and I should be glad if you would do your best to see that this object is achieved.

MOST SECRET

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Mr. Harry Carmichael¹⁷⁰ and Mr. Karl Fraser discussed this morning with Mr. Robertson and myself a new aspect of the problem of Canadian supplies for China which surpasses in importance the questions discussed in your letter of October 11th.¹⁷¹ I shall write to you again shortly about some of the matters dealt with in that letter. The information given us by Mr. Carmichael, however, raises broader questions which must I think be examined as soon as possible.

In brief he told us that he had learnt in Washington that the United States Government proposed to supply China with complete equipment for not less than thirty divisions and for perhaps as many as sixty divisions. He ascribed this decision to two main causes.

In the first place he said that there had been gross overproduction in the United States of standard equipment for infantry divisions and to meet charges of wasteful and unnecessary expenditure or resources the United States Army authorities were most anxious to pass on this equipment as lend-lease aid to China. He said that equipment had been ordered for the U.S. Army to provide for some 11,000,000 men whereas in fact the total would not be likely to reach 8,000,000. He cited as an example the pressure from U.S. sources to despatch large numbers of .37 mm. anti-tank guns to China when reports had been received from General Eisenhower's Command stating that these guns were virtually useless. Mr. Fraser said that he understood that there had recently been a substantial increase in the actual shipments of munitions to India in spite of the word that we have received of too large stockpiles and overcrowded docks and warehouses. Mr. Carmichael told us that General Somervell¹⁷² was now in Chungking in connection with the arrangements for the provision of this enormous volume of equipment to the Chinese.

¹⁷¹ Non reproduite. Cette lettre traitait des problèmes de communication entre la Commission d'aide mutuelle et son Comité consultatif de Washington, surtout en ce qui a trait à la réduction de l'envoi d'équipement lourd demandé par la Chine.

¹⁷² Général commandant, U.S. Army Service Forces.

¹⁷⁰ Co-ordinator of Production and Chairman, Production Board, Department of Munitions and Supply.

¹⁷¹ Not printed. This letter dealt with communication problems between the Mutual Aid Board and its Washington Advisory Committee, particularly as they related to reduction of shipment of heavy equipment requested by China.

¹⁷² Commanding General, U.S. Army Service Forces.

In the second place, Mr. Carmichael enumerated a number of incidents which went to show that the U.S. authorities were anxious to monopolize the provision of munitions to China and to exclude other supplying countries. He told us that General Clay had said in his presence that the U.S. would be glad to buy from us for cash our entire offer of supplies to China so that they might lend-lease them to China themselves. He also referred to General Stilwell's jealous and exclusive attitude in this respect and to the unpopularity which Stilwell had incurred with the Chinese — which may be in part an explanation of Mountbatten's nomination as Commander-in-Chief. He said that he did not think that this attitude prevailed in the highest quarters in Washington and particularly with the President and Mr. Hopkins but that it was strongly held in the Army where it would, of course, be reinforced by their desire to rid themselves of surplus supplies.

This information has obviously an important bearing on what our own attitude should be. General Kiang¹⁷³ has been pressing very vigorously in Ottawa this week for agreement on the provision of the 25 pounders. He says that the bofors and 6 pounder guns are required really only in conjunction with the 25 pounder batteries to act as anti-aircraft and anti-tank defences for these batteries and he is not keen to have them by themselves. Incidentally, Mr. Carmichael states that a bofors gun weighs more than a 25 pounder and he cannot understand why the U.S. should be prepared to agree to our supplying bofors while refusing to agree to 25 pounders when the alleged limiting factor is air transport. The Chinese have been told that we must fall in with the views of the High Command in making supplies available. Clearly, however, we are under no obligation to fall in with U.S. wishes if they are based on the grounds set forth above and not on strategic considerations.

It, therefore, looks as though the next step to be taken is to press for a showdown with the United States on their own plans for despatching supplies to China. We have put our cards on the table pretty completely but they have not reciprocated. We feel that the Joint War Aid Committee ought to press at an early meeting for a full disclosure of the American intentions. It might also be desirable for General Pope to explore the matter from the point of view of strategic allocation in the Combined Chiefs of Staff organization.

We are asking General Odlum to report on the position as he sees it from Chungking and I shall pass on his report to you. We promised Mr. Carmichael and Mr. Fraser that we would at once bring to your attention the matters dealt with in this letter.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, October 15, 1943

MOST SECRET. My despatch No. 57 August 27th. Canadian war supplies for China. Chinese representatives are pressing us very strongly for provision of 25 pounder guns up to 24 batteries and indicate that bofors and anti-tank guns, which we have offered, are needed only for operation with these batteries. United States authorities, however, raise strong objection to provision of any 25 pounders by us on grounds that they cannot be moved to China by air. At their insistence we agreed in August to limit stockpile in India of Canadian supplies for China to 12,500 tons and not to send forward at present any field guns. Soong and his advisers are very disappointed over this.

2. We have now received secret information to effect that U.S. Army are anxious to give Chinese complete equipment for at least thirty divisions, partly because there has been gross overproduction in United States of these munitions. It is also alleged that U.S. Army desire to monopolize provision of munitions to China to exclusion of ourselves and British. There is some evidence that they would like to buy themselves from us all supplies we offer to China and send them forward under lease-lend. Stilwell is said strongly to advocate United States monopoly and I understand that Somervell is now in Chungking mainly to arrange provision of U.S. supplies

3. We desire to distribute our Mutual Aid supplies on strategic grounds but cannot regard these alleged United States motives as strategic in nature. We can easily make available the 25 pounders desired by the Chinese.

4. These problems are pressing. We should appreciate your confidential opinion on actual situation in China and on U.S. Army policies as they appear to you there. We realize, of course, that field guns cannot be moved to China until land transport is available.

Please read my despatch No. 8 of June 1st[†] and my despatch No. 128 of October 5th.[†] I believe picture and its interpretation given by you is correct. We are being crowded aside and I am convinced deliberately so. Even Canadian Red Cross in China has been told that it has no right to bring in supplies from Canada when the United States is ready to provide everything that can be carried by available transport. Latter is not treated as an Allied service, but strictly as an American one. Chinese Government has been told so often that its only hope of getting military supplies and equipment lies in the United States that it completely believes it. It has even been convinced by someone that Britain does not want to see any Chinese army fully armed. This slips out so often in so many quarters that there must be more than mere Chinese surmise behind it. I do not agree that anti-tank and Bofors guns cannot be used without field guns, but I do agree that they are all most efficient when properly used together. If so instructed, I could go direct to Chiang Kai-shek, who is the only man who matters, and tell him that Canada is ready to supply certain named equipment, including 25 pounder guns, if he can provide transport from India. Even if nothing practical resulted, it would place Canada's position properly on record and would shift incidence of responsibility. I so recommend with full concurrence of staff.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Mémorandum de la Commission d'aide mutuelle

Memorandum by Mutual Aid Board

Ottawa, November 18, 1943

MEMORANDUM CONCERNING MUTUAL AID TO WEST INDIAN COLONIES

1. In providing assistance to the United Kingdom under the Mutual Aid Act, the Canadian Mutual Aid Board, in general, is prepared to regard the Colonial Empire as, in effect, part of the United Kingdom, recognizing the Colonies' requirements for Canadian supplies as part of United Kingdom requirements, and the Colonies' receipts and disbursements of Canadian dollars as being added to those of the United Kingdom in determining the funds available to the United Kingdom for purchasing requirements in Canada. Canadian officials have indicated from the beginning of discussions on these matters, however, that the Board might wish to make an exception in respect of the West Indian Colonies, because of Canada's substantial trade with these Colonies and the possible desire of the Canadian Government to make clear to those in the West Indies that Canadian Mutual Aid is assisting them, as well as the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area, to obtain their essential wartime requirements from Canada.

2. The Board wish to see some of the West Indies' essential requirements in Canada provided directly to these Colonies under the authority of the Mutual Aid Act. Trade figures indicate that the value of exports this year from Canada to the West Indies as a whole will exceed by many million dollars the value of imports to Canada from the West Indies. The exports in question are very largely essential supplies for the maintenance of the civilian population of the Colonies, and the provision of some portion of them as Mutual Aid would be consistent with the objectives and the terms of the Mutual Aid Act. The Board are aware that the effect of providing these supplies directly to the colonial authorities as Mutual Aid, instead of providing them, or something else, directly to the United Kingdom, will have the effect of reducing the budgetary assistance afforded by Mutual Aid to the United Kingdom, and of giving a corresponding assistance directly to the budgets of the Colonies in question. The Board believe, however, that this relatively small share of the budgetary assistance afforded to the United Kingdom can reasonably be diverted to the Colonies concerned and that the United Kingdom will be in a position to take it into account and to ensure that it does not produce undesirable results, for example, in contributing to inflationary tendencies.

¹⁷⁵ Assistant Secretary, High Commission of Great Britain.

3. The Board therefore propose to offer to the West Indian Colonies (including Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago, Windward Islands, Leeward Islands, Barbados, Bahamas, Bermuda, British Guiana and British Honduras) the opportunity of securing from Canada under Mutual Aid an amount of flour up to a specified maximum value in each case. Two alternative methods of determining the maximum amount in each case have been considered and the Board would appreciate receiving the comments upon them of the United Kingdom authorities. The first basis would be to offer to each Colony a value equal to one dollar per capita of its estimated population. This has the advantage of simplicity and obvious fairness. The second, and alternative, basis would be to offer the same total amount (about $2 3/4 million) divided among the various Colonies in proportion to the value of their imports from Canada in the past twelve months. This has the advantage of relating the amount of assistance to total requirements from Canada. The Board realizes that neither of these two bases is perfect for the purpose. It feels, however, that the formula of allocation of the total must be quite simple. The Board feels it must treat the various Colonies on a basis so clearly equal that there would be no possibility of Canada being accused of discrimination.

4. If the United Kingdom Government wishes to require certain of the Colonial administrations to deal in a particular way with the proceeds of sale of the goods obtained under Mutual Aid, that is, of course, a matter for it and the Colonies concerned. Canada is interested primarily only in providing some assistance under Mutual Aid directly to these Colonies, rather than through the United Kingdom.

5. If for one reason or another certain of the Colonies would prefer to get fish or some other supplies rather than flour under the Mutual Aid, the officers of the Board would be prepared to consider such alternatives. Flour has been suggested as it is an essential and substantial item of trade with all, or nearly all, of the Colonies in question.

6. The Board would welcome any comments by the United Kingdom authorities on the proposals set forth above. Consideration has been given to the views and information already submitted by the United Kingdom authorities on this matter, particularly those in a memorandum transmitted by Major Munro on July 3rd[†] and in a subsequent memorandum transmitted by Mr. Williams on September 2nd[†]. In regard to the suggestions in the latter memorandum, the Board believes that the Canadian Parliament would prefer the Board itself to take responsibility for determining the appropriate amount of assistance which should be given to the various West Indies Colonies, and the Board believes that it cannot distinguish between the Colonies on the basis of their internal budgetary situations. The Board also believes that Canada should not interfere in the affairs of the Colonies to the extent of attaching conditions respecting the use to be made of the fiscal benefits resulting from the Mutual Aid transfer. This matter is regarded as more properly a responsibility of the United Kingdom authorities.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

I am sending herewith copy of a letter which I have received from Mr. R. Gordon Munro, Office of the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom, in Ottawa, replying to my letter of November 18th concerning the provision of Mutual Aid assistance by Canada to the West Indies. My letter outlined the alternatives considered by the Mutual Aid Board and asked for the comments of the Government of the United Kingdom. For your information, I am attaching a copy of that letter. You will note that the U.K. Government believes that the provision by Canada of flour up to a total value of about $2 3/4 million under Mutual Aid to the British West Indies is perfectly workable and that they favour its adoption. Of the two methods of apportioning the total amount between the Colonies, the United Kingdom authorities would prefer apportionment on the basis of population.

I think this was the preference of the Mutual Aid Board itself and I am not sure that it is necessary to go back again to the Board, but the minutes of the last meeting should determine this. I think if we are to go ahead on this basis, it is very largely a matter for the Director of Administration of the Mutual Aid Board and the Department of Trade and Commerce to work out together.

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

Ottawa, December 1, 1943

Dear Dr. Clark,

1. May I refer to your letter of the 18th November concerning the provision of Mutual Aid assistance by Canada to the West Indies. The text of the memorandum enclosed in your letter was immediately telegraphed to London and the High Commissioner has now received a reply from the United Kingdom Treasury in which they say that they fully appreciate your desire to provide some part of Mutual Aid direct to the West Indies in a form which can be publicly apparent. The suggestion that this should be effected by the provision of flour up to a total value of about 2 3/4 million dollars appears to them to be perfectly workable and they favour its adoption. Of the two methods of apportioning the total amount between the Colonies suggested in paragraph 3 of your memorandum, the United Kingdom authorities would prefer the first i.e. apportionment on the basis of population. On this basis the prospective quotas at rate of one dollar per head would work out, according to the latest available population figures, as follows (figures in thousands of dollars):

Bahamas	60
Barbados	156
Jamaica	1247
Leewards	121
Trinidad	506
Windwards	209
Bermuda	32
British Honduras	61
British Guiana	311
Total	<hr/> 2703

2. If in any particular case total flour imports into a Colony should turn out to be less than the amount of the allocation on the above basis it is suggested that rather than complicate the arrangements by attempting to provide other commodities under Mutual Aid, the Mutual Aid allocation should be limited to the value of actual flour imports up to the agreed value for the Colony concerned. It is felt however that this is hardly likely to arise in practice.

3. The United Kingdom authorities assume that it will be a condition that all flour, including flour not provided under Mutual Aid, will have to be obtained from Canada through official channels but we should be glad if you would confirm this assumption so that the Colonial Office may advise the Colonies accordingly. The proposal will thus not affect the method of procurement of Canadian flour by the West Indies in those cases where the flour is already bulk purchased by the respective governments.

4. So far as the proceeds from the sale of flour are concerned, the United Kingdom authorities propose that, subject to Canadian agreement, they should be used in the first place to contribute towards expenditure, if any, on cost of living stabilisation policies, and that any balance should be transferred to a suspense account for post-war use. This would minimise the danger of the proceeds being used to relieve the burden of higher taxation.

5. The United Kingdom Government assume that no objection will be raised to the physical transfer of flour supplied under Mutual Aid between the West Indian Colonies where the need arises, e.g. through the appearance of sudden local shortages. Such cases are likely to be rare and to be capable of adjustment through subsequent flour shipments but it is thought desirable that you should be aware of the possibility.

6. In the light of your memorandum the United Kingdom authorities have concluded that so far as concerns sales to Colonies other than the West Indies and also sales to the West Indies themselves of products other than wheat and flour, the Canadian Government are willing to regard the financial arrangements arising out of the provision of Mutual Aid goods as a matter for domestic settlement between the United Kingdom and the Colonies in question. In these circumstances it would appear that apart from the provision of wheat and flour under direct Mutual Aid the position of the West Indies does not differ from that of the other Crown Colonies. The Government of the United Kingdom accordingly now suggest that if you agree, the proposal made in paragraph 3 of the memorandum entitled "Further Observations, Etc."¹⁷⁶, enclosed in my letter to you of the 19th November¹ to the effect that the words "and to the Government of British Colonies other than West Indies" should be inserted in the second sentence of Article 11 of the draft Mutual Aid Agreement,¹⁷⁶ might now be withdrawn.

Yours sincerely,

R. GORDON MUNRO

Macgregor¹⁷⁷ of Australia told me yesterday that Glasgow had just received instructions from Evatt to see the Prime Minister personally about the language included in Article X of the proposed Master Mutual Aid Agreement¹⁷⁸ and especially to do his best to secure agreement on the removal of any reference to tariff reduction. The article in question reads as follows:

"The Governments of Canada and . . . reaffirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods and the expansion of international commerce by the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941, known as the Atlantic Charter¹⁷⁹.”

Glasgow came to see me later in the afternoon. He did not mention that his instructions were to take the matter up with the Prime Minister but it is possible that he will try to see the Prime Minister very shortly. I gave him the text of the latest draft of the article as above. They had previously had an earlier draft but the revisions made apparently did not meet the points made by Evatt.

I explained to Glasgow that the Master Agreement had been approved by the Mutual Aid Board and would come before Council in the very near future. On approval by Council it was proposed to submit it formally to several governments including the United Kingdom, Australia, U.S.S.R. and China. I pointed out that this article was based on Article 7 of the Lend-Lease Agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States to which Australia had adhered. As Australia was already bound by the somewhat more extensive provisions of Article 7, I could see no reason why his government should object to signing an agreement containing our proposed Article X.

To this Glasgow could only answer that when they adhered to the Lend-Lease Agreement the Japanese were a much greater threat to Australia than they are now; his Government did not wish to enter a fresh commitment in favour of tariff reduction at this time.

I told Glasgow that I thought there was very small chance of any modification being made in the sense desired, pointing out that this article had to be included in identical language in all our mutual aid agreements. I asked him whether in fact the reduction of tariffs which restricted markets abroad for staple Australian products — (such as the United States wool tariff) was not a “guiding purpose” of his government. He admitted this but said that he understood that the chief cause of Evatt’s objection was fear of criticism in the Australian House from the very strong protectionist elements inside the Australian Labour Party. He is cabling the final draft to Evatt and he anticipates renewed pressure from him.

When one considers the very general language of this article and the fact that it is included in an agreement covering the free gift to Australia of supplies which may reach a total of one hundred million dollars in the current year, the persistence of Evatt in objecting to this very mild declaration in favour of general tariff reduction is hard to justify. I attach a copy of this note since you may wish to send it to the Prime Minister in case Glasgow seeks to see him.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 4, 1943

Dear Sir William [Glasgow],

With reference to our conversation of this morning and subject to the views which the Prime Minister may express to you when you see him, I think the following points are the principal ones to be made in reply to the representations of your Government on Article X of the proposed Mutual Aid Agreement:

1. It is regarded as essential by the Ministers concerned to have a general declaration of liberal economic purposes included in the Agreement with Australia and in the Agreements to be made with other recipients of Mutual Aid. It is certain that there will be strong criticism of the Mutual Aid procedure at the next session of Parliament. It is expected that the provisions of Article X will be of considerable value in rebuttal.

2. There is nothing in Article X to which the Canadian and Australian Governments are not already bound, together with all the other Governments in receipt of Mutual Aid from Canada. It does not go as far in some respects as Article VII of the Lend-Lease Agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom. Canada has by exchange of notes associated herself with the declaration of policies in Article VII, and Australia is understood to have accepted the whole Lend-Lease Agreement. Our Article X is therefore a rather mild reaffirmation of policies already formally in effect.

3. The change in the course of the war since the acceptance of Article VII only makes it more important from the Canadian point of view that the proposed Article X should be included in the Agreement, since interest and concern over post-war economic policies are now much more acute.

4. This article must be included in identical form in all Mutual Aid Agreements and it is impossible to omit the reference to reduction of tariffs from the Agreement with Australia. It cannot be dropped from all the Agreements without weakening greatly the utility of the article as part of the reply to the domestic critics of the Mutual Aid procedure.

5. The article is a declaration of purpose and not a specific commitment. It binds the Australian Government no more and no less than it binds the Canadian Government to pursue liberal international economic policies for their mutual benefit.

Yours sincerely,

N. A. ROBERTSON

Dear Dr. Clark,

I received your letter of November 2nd enclosing correspondence with Mr. Gordon Munro about the provision of Mutual Aid assistance to the British West Indies. The system of apportioning this gift of supplies on the basis of population is simple and easy to explain and I am glad that it is the method preferred by the United Kingdom authorities.

The only comment that I have to offer is that it seems almost certain that there will be a scarcity of Canadian flour during the next year or two because of the very heavy export demands for Russia and for relief purposes. I assume that it is not intended that the extension of Mutual Aid to the West Indies in the form of flour will increase the shipment of flour from Canada to the West Indies and that it is generally understood that the flour provided under this scheme is subject to overall allocation.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Mr. Roy Peers saw Mr. Robertson and myself two or three days ago about the shipment of Canadian munitions to China. He has sent me his memorandum of the conversation and I am enclosing a copy of this. It is accurate except at one point. In the first sentence of paragraph 4, I told Mr. Peers that I understood that all shipments from North America to India and China were being delayed and not merely those from Canada alone. The position is likely to be discussed shortly by the Mutual Aid Board or by its Advisory Committee of officials which is at last likely to come into effective existence. Has the matter been discussed recently in Washington? We have not yet received an answer to my most secret letter to you of October 14th.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 7, 1943

MINUTES OF MEETING HELD MONDAY AFTERNOON, DECEMBER 6TH, 1943

Attended by:

Mr. Norman A. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Mr. H.H. Wrong, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Mr. R.G. Peers, Chinese Government War Supplies Agency

I called this meeting to suggest to Mr. Robertson and Mr. Wrong that I considered Canada was in a vulnerable position in respect to supplies to China in that it is nine months since the first promises were made verbally to Dr. T.V. Soong, Minister for Foreign Affairs for China, when he visited Ottawa, and since that time further verbal promises and acknowledgments by letter have been made to the effect that Canada would supply through their Mutual Aid Board ordnance material to China. In spite of these promises, to date no shipments have been made and up to the present time there is no definite date established as to when the first shipment can be made.

Mr. Wrong confirmed the statement that no shipments have been made, but understood that a list was being prepared but the fact is, the General Staff of the Department of National Defence have not yet approved the transfer of ordnance material from their stock that was assigned to the Mutual Aid Board for China at the meeting of the Canadian Munitions Assignments Board on October 15, 1943.

Even though Canada has not shipped any material to China, United States has still shipped Canadian material to China through War Supplies Limited. This, in my opinion, is a further reflection upon Canada's position. Mr. Wrong was under the impression that this was an old order for Bren guns now being shipped but, in fact, this is a new order for 20,000 calibre 7.92 Bren guns that was only officially executed by United States in October, 1943, and this order is being given precedence over the 20,000 calibre 7.92 Bren guns promised by Canada through Mutual Aid.

Mr. Wrong stated that word had just been received from Washington within the past few days requesting Canada not to make any shipments to China because of the congested condition of the port facilities at Calcutta, India. This is the same attitude taken by United States last spring when they stated the stockpile of ordnance material in India was around 100,000 tons of material and a congested condition existed in the port of Calcutta. However, since that time, United States' shipments have increased the stockpile in India to 200,000 tons of ordnance material and, in fact, have about completed sufficient equipment for thirty divisions of Chinese troops. In one recent month United States' shipments reached as high as 36,000 tons.

Mr. Wrong stated that in a recent communication from General Odium from Chungking[†] he mentioned that in a meeting with Dr. T.V. Soong he said that he understood why the material is not being shipped from Canada. This is difficult to imagine in view of the Chinese Mission's attitude which is one of extreme disappointment over the lack of any shipment being made. It is my opinion that Dr. Soong's remarks referred to the controversy over the non-shipment of heavy equipment such as 25-pounders, as he would not be aware there has been any question in respect to the hold-up of total shipments.

I respectfully submit this memorandum of the views expressed at my meeting with Messrs. Robertson and Wrong and trust that action may be taken on Canada's part to at least ship within this fiscal year the 12,500 tons of ordnance material that was agreed to by the United States Committee in Washington.

Canberra, December 18, 1943

Your telegrams No. 233 and No. 234 of December 11th,[†] Mutual Aid Agreement. I saw Evatt December 16th. I was informed that no decision had been reached and none would be reached until Tuesday next which is date of Cabinet meeting.

He stated that he felt that by our insistence on inclusion of proposed Article X we were attempting to drive a hard bargain with another British Dominion; that Canada had done little enough to help Australia which was bearing the brunt of the Pacific war and that it was difficult to appreciate that when we did come to their aid we should attach this condition to giving thereof.

I pointed out that there was nothing in the Article which could be construed as a bargain or exacting concessions and that it was merely a statement of a hope or a desire. I told him that it was the policy of my Government to try to bring about in post-war period a greater freedom of trade. He then commented that perhaps it was necessary for a liberal Government in Canada to follow the course you suggest.

I got no indication just what his final attitude will be, but I came away with the belief that he would be obdurate but would not object to inclusion of a clause in preamble along lines of proposed Article X.

I have written letter to him today, the text of which is set forth in my telegram following[†]. When I delivered this letter to Hodgson, Under-Secretary, as Evatt is in Sydney, he said my letter exactly expressed his views but Evatt was at variance with him. He said Evatt was suffering from a contrary fit but that he would, he said, come around all right.

Please see my despatch No. 368 of October 7th[†] especially paragraph 10 quoting Dr. Evatt's views on Article VII.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING MINUTES OF MEETING HELD MONDAY, DECEMBER 6TH

1. Relative to the Minutes of the Meeting held Monday afternoon, December 6, 1943,¹⁸¹ between Mr. N.A. Robertson, Mr. H.H. Wrong, and Mr. R.G. Peers, Chinese Government War Supplies Agency, and the request from the Washington Advisory Committee of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board for our viewpoints, I cannot understand the purpose of Mr. Peers' visit to Messrs. Robertson and Wrong, other than that he may have been concerned about the possibility of Canada being influenced not to ship the contemplated supplies to China, as the result of having received a copy of the Minutes of the Munitions Assignments Board, Washington,[†] wherein some reference was made to the congestion of traffic in Indian ports.

2. Mr. Peers was fully informed not only as to the assignments made at the Munitions Assignments Committee, Ottawa, to the Chinese, but was also aware of the day-to-day position of our efforts to secure as much of the Chinese material from surplus stocks from the Department of National Defence and of our intention to ship a full shipload of war supplies to China at the earliest possible date and that the objective date was the middle of January, 1944.

3. We were aware of the fact that the U.S. Army, International Division, Service of Supply, were moving war supplies to India for China and adding to the stockpile which they had created, which we were advised was in the vicinity of 100,000 tons.

¹⁸⁰ K. Fraser.

¹⁸¹ Document 379.

4. The Joint War Aid Committee Canada-United States under their terms of reference made a recommendation to the Canadian Government and the U.S. Government that Canada should not create a stockpile in India for China in excess of 12,500 tons. In view of this recommendation the Administration has placed requisitions for supplies which, together with assessing the possibility of supply from surplus Canadian Army stocks, will make a total quantity of war supplies for China up to 12,500 tons recommended by Joint War Aid Committee Canada-United States.

5. Production was authorized for Bofors and 6-pdrs. together with the ancillary equipment necessary to put these gun equipments in the field as battalions. That is, the quantity required above that which it was possible to secure from the surplus stocks of the Department of National Defence.

6. We have actively been concentrating on war supplies to the extent of approximately 4,500 tons, the tonnage required to send out one complete shipload by January 15th. The war supplies to make up such tonnage bearing a relation to the requirements necessary to secure it in units of complete battalions, ready for action on its arrival in India. This original shipment has been worked out to include 108 6-pdr. gun equipments, together with all the ancillary equipment to complete nine Chinese Battalions of 6-pdr. artillery and also to include 48 40 mm. gun equipments especially designed for the Chinese Army, together with ancillary equipment to make up four complete Chinese Battalions of Bofors. The above items complemented by small arms and the necessary ammunition now include 2,000 rounds of ammunition per gun for the 6-pdrs. and 2,000 rounds per gun for the 40 mm. equipments.

7. While we have heard the cross currents and remarks regarding the port conditions in India, we have gone steadily ahead with our plans to ship war supplies up to the recommended stockpile of 12,500 tons, but, as pointed out, have concentrated on getting a complete shipload away by January 15th and we will then concentrate on a second shipload. The dead-weight tonnage to be included in a coal-burning 10,000 tonner is estimated to be 4,450 tons, the shipping tonnage is estimated to be approximately 9,200 tons. If it were possible to secure an oil burner (10,000 tonner), it would be possible to increase dead-weight tonnage up to, say, 1,000 tons and a corresponding amount of shipping tonnage.

8. We have followed the policy of keeping the Chinese Government War Supplies Agency advised of progress and any hold-up has been due to the Department of National Defence ascertaining the quantity of war material which they could make available out of their surplus stocks. We received this information last week and requisitions have been placed either on the Department of National Defence for those supplies which they can make available, or with the Department of Munitions and Supply, for the balance of the items required. All the materials have been covered, including requisitions for the mileage of wire cable needed to place this equipment in a position to be used by the Chinese Government upon delivery. This material has been consigned to Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot, at which Depot the Chinese Government War Supplies Agency has appointed an Ordnance Officer, Colonel Ho, who is working in conjunction with Colonel Patrick, Commandant of the Depot, to pack and re-pack the supplies according to Chinese specifications. Manufacturers and the Department of National Defence have been given markings and consignment instructions. The ammunition will be moving directly from storage depots to ship's side rather than being consigned to the Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot. Trucks and such equipment will be consigned direct to seaboard with the necessary markings and shipping instructions, and will be timed to meet the war supplies to be moved from Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot and also to meet other material being consigned direct to seaport.

9. Arrangements are being worked out with the Canadian Shipping Board to have a ship available at seaboard at a time to meet the war material being shipped from manufacturers, Longue Pointe Ordnance Depot and ammunition depots. No effort will be spared by the Administration staff to have this material actually shipped ex Canadian seaport, as near to January 15th as it is possible to arrange in view of all circumstances.

10. RE: 7.92 MM. BREN GUNS.

There are two orders of 20,000 each filed with John Inglis Company to produce 7.92 mm. Bren Guns for China; 20,000 of these have been ordered by the U.S. War Department through War Supplies Limited, and which are an obligation of the U.S. Government to China and the Guns are being consigned to General Stilwell in India. The other order of 20,000 7.92 mm. Bren Guns has been placed by the Department of Munitions and Supply for the account of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board for supply to the Chinese Government for account of the Canadian Government. The assignment of the total production of the 7.92 mm. Bren Guns, that is, of total orders of 40,000, have to date been made to War Supplies Limited for the U.S. War Department. This assignment was agreed to by the Canadian Mutual Aid Board after discussion with General Kiang, Chief of the Chinese Government War Supplies Agency, Ottawa and acting on the request of General Kiang we allowed the assignments to be made for the above Guns. At the December 14th Meeting of the Munitions Assignments Committee, Ottawa, we agreed that the full January production would also be assigned in this manner. In so doing, we have not established a precedent that the War Supplies Limited order will be assigned in total to the U.S. Army before satisfying the requirements of the Canadian Mutual Aid Board for this weapon; this has only been an open agreement and this policy might change as early as January for February production of the above.

11. When Dr. Clark, Deputy Minister of Finance, was in Washington recently the question was raised as to whether or not the Canadian Mutual Aid Board would take over the 20,000 Bren Guns on order through War Supplies Limited for the U.S. Army for supply to the Chinese. At the Board Meeting on Monday, December 13th, the Board decided that if the Chinese Government requested that we make available to the Chinese Army and consigned to General Stilwell, the balance of the 20,000 7.92 Bren Guns on order through War Supplies Limited, that the Canadian Mutual Aid Board would take over this contract and consign them to General Stilwell but that this request would have to come to us direct from the Chinese Government War Supplies Agency.

Sir William Glasgow left with me this morning a telegram to him from Dr. Evatt, of which I attach a copy.[†] This reports a definite refusal by the Australian Cabinet to agree to the inclusion in the Mutual Aid Agreement with Canada of a clause mentioning the reduction of tariffs as a desirable mutual objective. The only alternative suggested is that the preamble to the Agreement should be expanded to include a statement that Australia and Canada have accepted in principle the objectives of the Atlantic Charter and of Article VII of the United States Lend-Lease Agreement. As the acceptance of these objectives is already a matter of formal public record, the addition of such a statement to the preamble would not contribute at all to the purpose we had in mind in proposing Article X of the Mutual Aid Agreement.

Australia is already receiving supplies from Canada under Mutual Aid and it is expected that the total value of supplies furnished out of the billion dollar vote will run close on $100,000,000. The unreasonable Australian attitude gives us a very difficult problem. If we refuse to furnish supplies to a sister country of the Commonwealth which is in need of them, we would depart from the general principle of distributing our war supplies in accordance with strategic need. If we let the supplies go forward but require payment in blocked Australian pounds, we would accumulate a war debt inside the Commonwealth. If we give in and remove Article X from the Agreement with Australia, we shall have to cut it out of the agreements with all other countries receiving Mutual Aid and we would thus surrender the political advantages of using the Mutual Aid procedure to secure a series of bilateral declarations favouring the sort of international economic policy that we desire.

I think the question should be discussed by the War Committee. I am sending copies of the enclosure to Mr. Howe and Mr. Ilsley.¹⁸³

I attach two draft telegrams to our High Commissioner in Canberra on the controversy with Australia over the Mutual Aid Agreement. The question will come before the Mutual Aid Board at a meeting at 2 p.m. tomorrow, and it would be helpful if you could let me know before then whether you agree with this approach. The telegrams have been drafted in consultation with the Department of Finance.

I also attach a copy of the Agreement. It is important that this should be signed by some of the recipients of Mutual Aid, especially the United Kingdom, before Parliament meets. The Agreement has been approved by the Mutual Aid Board and will come before Council tomorrow unless you desire its postponement. We would like to give it formally to the United Kingdom at once and to the Soviet Government next week, when the Deputy Commissar for Foreign Trade, Mr. Sergeev, will be passing through Ottawa en route from Washington to Moscow.

The draft telegrams to Mr. Davis tell the story pretty fully. It seems likely that Dr. Evatt is the centre of Australian resistance and there is some reason to hope that he will give way if we take a strong line. The issue is big enough to warrant an approach to Mr. Curtin in your name.

TELEGRAM

Ottawa, December 29, 1943

SECRET. Your telegrams Nos. 316 and 317¹ of December 18th. Mutual Aid Agreement.

1. You have doubtless received text of Australian refusal to accept Article X of proposed Agreement which was communicated by Glasgow on December 23rd. Will you please deliver personally to Mr. Curtin as soon as possible the message from the Prime Minister given in my immediately following telegram?

2. For your general guidance in your discussion with Mr. Curtin our feeling is that the Australian Government has adopted an indefensible position which they will in any case probably be unable to maintain in other connections. If they intend to pursue a course of extreme economic nationalism their commercial relations with Canada will in any event be impaired. We might as well face the issue now when very substantial benefits to Australia amounting perhaps to $75,000,000 or $100,000,000 under the Mutual Aid programme are involved.

3. We have framed our financial policy on the premise that the accumulation of war debts was undesirable and we have, therefore, furnished a great quantity of war supplies to other United Nations at the expense of the Canadian Treasury. We are not seeking to drive any bargain with Australia; we are only supporting policies under which fair trading is possible and bargaining between governments reduced to a minimum. We consider that pursuit of a reasonably liberal international commercial policy after the war is a logical consequence of the wartime methods of furnishing supplies adopted by the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom, which have been deliberately designed to encourage liberal trade policies after the war.

4. The reference to publicity in the message to Mr. Curtin is not intended as a threat. The Mutual Aid procedure will be discussed at length during the next session and the Government will have to explain why no agreement has been concluded with Australia. Such an explanation may well provoke unwelcome discussion of Australian policy here and in other countries, but we do not see how it can be avoided. Public knowledge of the Australian action would be sure to arouse doubts in other countries about the intentions of the Government of Australia, and might well impede progress in developing not only beneficial international commercial relations but also joint action in other matters.

5. For your private information there is some indication that Australia has been seeking unduly large quantities of certain supplies from Canada under Mutual Aid and we understand that the United States authorities have felt it necessary frequently to reduce Australian lease-lend requisitions by very substantial amounts.¹⁸⁴ and hope that you will find it possible to reconsider the position. We have considered the suggestion that there might be substituted for this Article a reference in the preamble to the fact that Australia and Canada have accepted in principle the general objectives set forth in the Atlantic Charter and in Article Seven of the Master Lend-Lease Agreement, but we¹⁸⁶ cannot agree to this alternative, as the question appears to us of greater importance than would be implied by a mere general reference of this character.

It seems to us logical and, indeed, essential, that the Mutual Aid Agreements should contain a re-affirmation of the main points of the general international economic policy which we are all pledged to pursue after the war by our acceptance of the Atlantic Charter and by the formal undertakings into which we have entered with the Government of the United States. Our Mutual Aid policy and Act were deliberately formulated to fit into post-war economic international relations of this character and to make them more workable by eliminating the accumulation of large war debts among the United Nations. The Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people have accepted the heavy financial burdens of Mutual Aid with this hope in view.

It is for this reason that we believe it essential that all our Mutual Aid Agreements should contain an assurance that the nations receiving this assistance also look forward to international economic relations of this character. We had naturally believed that Australia and the other countries receiving Mutual Aid subscribed to the principles in question, because they had so declared in their agreements with the United States. If, under these circumstances, the Government of Australia cannot¹⁸⁷ reconsider their decision not to reaffirm their support of these principles, I fear that we shall be compelled¹⁸⁸ to consider that the Government of Australia is out of sympathy with the general philosophy behind the Mutual Aid policy and should obtain¹⁸⁹ its requirements from Canada¹⁹⁰ on some other basis.

We have, of course, no desire or intention that the flow of essential war supplies to Australia from Canada should be interrupted. If, however, your Government is not ready to sign the Agreement, we consider that we must make new arrangements for the financing of these supplies. In those circumstances we should be prepared to provide essential supplies under a credit to be repaid within an appropriate period after the war.

¹⁸⁶ Un point fut placé après "Agreement", "but" fut rayé et les mots "feel however that we" furent ajoutés après "we".

¹⁸⁷ Le mot "cannot" fut remplacé par "should not find it possible to".

¹⁸⁸ Les mots "I fear that" furent rayés et les mots "shall" et "compelled" furent remplacés par "would" et "obliged" respectivement.

¹⁸⁹ Les mots "should obtain" furent remplacés par "therefore that".

¹⁹⁰ Les mots "would have to be obtained" furent ajoutés après "Canada".

¹⁸⁶ A period was placed after "Agreement", "but" was crossed out and the words "feel however that we" were added after "we".

¹⁸⁷ The word "cannot" was replaced by "should not find it possible to".

¹⁸⁸ The words "I fear that" were crossed out and the words "shall" and "compelled" were replaced by "would" and "obliged" respectively.

¹⁸⁹ The words "should obtain" were replaced by "therefore that".

¹⁹⁰ The words "would have to be obtained" were added after "Canada".

Any such arrangement would, as you will realize, entail a public explanation of the reasons which have prevented us from fulfilling our intention of providing essential supplies to Australia out of the Mutual Aid vote without cost to the Australian Government. Ends.

Accord sur l'aide mutuelle

Mutual Aid Agreement

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA AND . . .
ON THE PRINCIPLES APPLYING TO THE PROVISION BY CANADA OF CANADIAN WAR SUPPLIES TO . . . UNDER THE WAR
APPROPRIATION (UNITED NATIONS MUTUAL AID) ACT OF CANADA 1943.

Whereas Canada and . . . are associated in the present war, and

Whereas it is desirable that war supplies should be distributed among the United Nations in accordance with strategic needs of the war and in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war and the establishment of peace, and

Whereas it is expedient that the conditions upon which such war supplies are made available by one United Nation to another should not be such as to burden post-war commerce, or lead to the imposition of trade restrictions or otherwise prejudice a just and enduring peace, and

Whereas the Governments of Canada and . . . are mutually desirous of concluding an agreement in regard to the conditions upon which Canadian war supplies will be made available to . . .

The Undersigned, being duly authorized by their respective Governments for the purpose, have agreed as follows:—

ARTICLE I

The Government of Canada will make available under the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, to the Government of . . . such war supplies as the Government of Canada shall authorize from time to time to be provided.

ARTICLE II

The Government of . . . will continue to contribute to the defence of Canada and the strengthening thereof and will provide such articles, services, facilities or information as it may be in a position to supply and as may from time to time be determined by common agreement in the light of the development of the war.

ARTICLE III

The Government of . . . will, in support of any applications to the Government of Canada for the provision of war supplies under this agreement, furnish the Government of Canada with such relevant information as the Government of Canada may require for the purpose of deciding upon the applications and for executing the purposes of this agreement.

ARTICLE IV

The Government of . . . agrees to use any war supplies delivered to it under this agreement in the joint and effective prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE V

The Government of . . . will not without the consent of the Government of Canada sell to any other Government or to persons in other countries war supplies delivered to it under this agreement.

ARTICLE VI

The Government of Canada will not require the Government of . . . to re-deliver to the Government of Canada any war supplies delivered under this agreement except as specifically provided in Articles VII and VIII and subject to any special agreement which may be concluded in the circumstances contemplated in Article IX.

ARTICLE VII

Title to any cargo ships delivered under this agreement will remain with the Government of Canada and the ships shall be chartered to the Government of . . . on terms providing for their re-delivery.

ARTICLE VIII

Upon the cessation of hostilities in any major theatre of war, any war supplies which have been transferred to the Government of . . . under this agreement and are still in Canada or in ocean transit shall revert to Canadian ownership, except those supplies destined for a theatre of war in which hostilities have not ceased or supplies made available for relief purposes or such other supplies as the Government of Canada may specify.

ARTICLE IX

The Government of Canada reserves the right to request:

- (a) the delivery, after the cessation of hostilities in any theatre of war, for relief and rehabilitation purposes, to another United Nation or to an international organization, of automotive equipment supplied under this agreement;
- (b) the transfer to Canadian forces serving outside Canada after the cessation of hostilities of vehicles, aircraft, ordnance or military equipment supplied under this agreement to the Government of . . . if such war supplies are required for the use of such Canadian forces and are not required by the Government of . . . for military operations; and
- (c) the return to Canada after the war, if required in Canada for Canadian purposes, of aircraft and automotive equipment supplied under this agreement which may still be serviceable, provided that when the identity of such Canadian equipment has been lost as a result of pooling arrangements or for other reasons, the Government of . . . may substitute equipment of a similar type.

The Government of . . . agrees to use its best endeavours to meet any such requests on such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be settled in consultation with the Government of Canada.

ARTICLE X

The Governments of Canada and . . . re-affirm their desire to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between their countries and throughout the world. They declare that their guiding purposes include the adoption of measures designed to promote employment, the production and consumption of goods, and the expansion of international commerce by the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers, with the object of contributing to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the Declaration of August 14th, 1941 known as the Atlantic Charter.

ARTICLE XI

This agreement will take effect as from this day's date. It shall apply to war supplies furnished to the Government of . . . by the Government of Canada under the authority of the War Appropriation (United Nations Mutual Aid) Act of Canada, 1943, including supplies furnished under the said Act before the conclusion of this agreement. It shall continue in force until a date to be agreed upon by the two Governments.

[Ottawa,] December 31, 1943

Council yesterday deferred until its next meeting, probably on Tuesday, action on the order approving the Master Mutual Aid Agreement. I understand from Wrong who was called to the meeting by Mr. Crerar that the chief reason for deferment arose from the difficulty of approving the Agreement in advance of a decision on the continuance of the Mutual Aid procedure by a vote to supplement the million dollar appropriation of the last session. The present vote will probably be expended shortly after the close of the fiscal year in little more than three months. If it is decided not to continue Mutual Aid, there is something to be said for reexamining the draft agreement and perhaps eliminating from it everything which does not relate specifically to the conditions of transfer of the war supplies paid for from the current vote.

In view of this action by Council I have delayed despatching the telegrams to Australia since the arguments advanced to the Australian Government for their acceptance of the proposed Article X would look rather queer if we dropped the Mutual Aid and devised in its place some system of furnishing supplies on credit.

The most important points involved in these issues seem to me to be as follows:

1. We shall have to continue to provide supplies to other countries on other than a cash basis both as part of our general war effort and because it is impossible to discontinue production in Canada of supplies for export in quantities largely in excess of our Allies' capacity to pay without causing grave dislocation at home. As we are already receiving in payment the Canadian dollar receipts of our Allies, the alternative to Mutual Aid for this large excess would be to build up war debts.

2. The discontinuance of Mutual Aid would not affect materially our own budgetary position as we should have to finance the same amount of domestic production.

3. The only alternative to transferring supplies under Mutual Aid would be to furnish them on credit. In the case of the United Kingdom and other parts of the sterling area this would probably mean reverting to the accumulation of sterling balances. In the case of Russia, China and other foreign countries we should probably have to make a Canadian dollar loan. The real value of the obligations which we might receive from recipient countries would be dubious. The repayment of any such debts after the war would have an adverse effect on the restoration of our export trade.

4. Although no commitment whatever has been made to any other country to extend Mutual Aid beyond the current appropriation, it is undoubtedly true that a reversion in 1944 to a payment basis would be generally regarded abroad as a departure from the policy of cooperative effort enunciated in the preamble to the Mutual Aid Act as follows:

“Whereas it is necessary that the production of Canadian war industry be made available not only for use by Canadian forces but also to other United Nations in accordance with strategic needs in such manner as to contribute most effectively to the winning of the war.”

5. Such change of policy would be certain to receive a great deal of unwelcome attention in the United States and might well have a serious effect on the extension of lease-lend assistance.

In general so far as questions of external policy are concerned I think that we can get only one answer: our reputation and influence abroad would be seriously diminished by our discontinuing Mutual Aid. Admitting this one must weigh against it the strength of the domestic criticism, especially in Quebec where vocal elements are strongly opposed to further gifts to the United Kingdom in particular.

It is pretty certain that if Mutual Aid is continued an appropriation considerably smaller than a billion dollars will be needed; perhaps half this amount might suffice to cover both Mutual Aid and the Canadian contribution to UNRRA. The need for Canadian munitions will probably fall off in the next year and our sterling expenditures with action impending in Western Europe are likely to increase.

I think that it would be very desirable for Council to reach a decision on the next year's programme as soon as possible as a good many other things depend on this.

MOST IMMEDIATE.MOST SECRET.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to my letter of the 5th May[†] about the supply of Canadian wheat to Russia, I have now received a Most Immediate telegram from the Dominions Office to the following effect.

The United Kingdom authorities have been in touch with the United States Government as to the preparation of a new protocol covering supplies of all kinds to Russia for the year beginning 1st July, 1942, when the present arrangements¹⁹¹ expire. The United States Government have now asked for the immediate comments of the United Kingdom Government on a draft joint message from the President and the Prime Minister to Premier Stalin which has been approved by the President.

The draft message specifies the total amount of (1) tonnage to be made available during the year from the 1st July next and (2) the stores of the type desired by the Russians which could be made available at centres of production in the United States and the United Kingdom. The total of (1) is necessarily much smaller than the total of (2), and the proposal is that the Russians should select from (2) — and from any other supplies already ordered or to be ordered — priority items up to the total of (1). The word “stores” is intended to cover supplies of all kinds.

As regards the financial aspect, the draft message states that “The United States will be pleased to extend financial arrangements to cover its part of the proposed new protocol and all adjustments thereof”, and that the United Kingdom financial arrangements will continue as at present.

The general idea in the above arrangements, which is to canalise the Russian demands on the United Nations and to relate them to the shipping available, ¹⁹¹ Voir États-Unis, Department of State Bulletin, Vol. 5, 27 septembre 1941, pp.240-1.

¹⁹¹ See United States, Department of State Bulletin, Vol. 5, September 27, 1941, pp. 240-1.

seems acceptable. As regards the financial side, the United Kingdom authorities are suggesting the insertion of a sentence requiring the Russians to make separate financial arrangements with sources of supply outside the United States and the sterling area.

An important consideration from the Canadian standpoint arises, however, on this issue, since it is foreseen that the effect of the United States financial proposals may be to make United States wheat from the eastern seaboard available on Lease-Lend terms to Russia. These terms would be more advantageous to Russia than anything yet suggested for Canadian wheat, and might by themselves have the effect of closing the outlet for the latter.

In view of the extreme urgency of the matter it is suggested that, if the Canadian Government wish to preserve this Russian outlet, they should take the matter up immediately with the United States authorities in Washington. The United Kingdom Government are themselves sending their comments to the British Supply Council for communication to the United States Government.

Yours sincerely,

PATRICK DUFF

CANADIAN WHEAT FOR RUSSIA

22. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that the position in respect of Canadian wheat shipments to the U.S.S.R. had been complicated by the recent U.S.-U.K. Protocol for supplies to Russia, to take effect from July 1st next. The list of items to be supplied under the Protocol included 2,400,000 tons of U.S. wheat, to be made available under Lease-Lend.

Meantime, Canadian wheat was being shipped to the U.S.S.R., and, in that connection, credit arrangements were still in process of negotiation in London. Presumably the Russians would not wish to buy Canadian wheat after July 1st, when American wheat would become available under Lease-Lend.

23. The War Committee, after some discussion, agreed that, in the circumstances, there was no reason for the Wheat Board to continue credit negotiations with the U.S.S.R., in London. Canadian wheat shipped prior to July 1st would probably have to be regarded as a gift, either to the United Kingdom, or to Russia.

The settlement of this question was left to the Departments of External Affairs, Finance and Trade and Commerce.

IMMEDIATE.SECRET.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In a conversation with Mr. Pinsent and Mr. Shuckburgh last week on the subject of wheat for Russia you indicated that the Canadian Government would raise no objection if, as they anticipated, the new protocol referred to in my letter of 19th May were to result in all Russian wheat requirements after July 1st next, being met from the United States. You also said that, in view of this development, the Canadian authorities were holding back in their negotiations with the Soviet for a three-year credit and would probably abandon these altogether unless the Russians expressed a wish to receive Canadian wheat after July 1st in addition to what they will get from the United States under the protocol.

On the assumption that Russia's supplies after July 1st will come from the United States and will be dealt with under the protocol, the question remains of settling the terms of payment for the shipments which have recently been and are still being made from Canada to the Soviet [Union] at the United Kingdom's expense. This was referred to in my letters of the 26th April[†] and 5th May last.[†] I have now been asked to inform you that the United Kingdom authorities are most anxious to terminate present arrangements with effect from the 1st July, and would accordingly be grateful for the earliest possible indication of the line which the Canadian authorities would wish them to take with the Russians as regards payment.

The United Kingdom authorities feel that the present may be the last effective opportunity open to the Canadian Government of choosing between the two alternatives, (a) that the United Kingdom Government accept payment in sterling through No. 1 Account of the State Bank of the U.S.S.R. at the Bank of England, or (b) that Canada insist on all past shipments and also any further shipments prior to July 1st being covered by a retroactive credit arrangement to be negotiated between Russia and Canada. Under course (a) no question of payment in dollars would arise, while under course (b) no immediate payment would be forthcoming but the arrangement would presumably call for payment one hundred per cent. in dollars at a later date.

Other things being equal, the United Kingdom authorities would of course prefer course (b), but it must be mentioned that they have now received a further telegram from His Majesty's Ambassador at Kuibyshev stating that the Soviet authorities have now confirmed what was suggested in my letter of 26th April, namely, that the official Soviet position is that payment should be made through the No.1 Account. The United Kingdom Government fear that it is unlikely that they will be able to move the Soviet Government from this position, and the question arises whether it would be worthwhile to make any fresh attempt to do so.

If the present arrangements are to be brought to an end by the 1st July, it will be necessary to give both the Russian and United States authorities some three weeks' notice, in order to allow the Russians an opportunity of switching to the United States without interruption of shipments. This means that notice must be given by the 10th June. His Majesty's Ambassador at Kuibyshev has asked for early instructions and it would be very helpful if the authorities in London could be given an indication of the Canadian Government's views in time to enable instructions to be sent to him before the end of this week.

Yours sincerely,

PATRICK DUFF

TELEGRAM 1581

London, June 9, 1942

Reference Biddulph's telegram to McIvor regarding wheat for Russia.†

1. The Russian Government have presented draft agreement on the 10,000,000 dollar credit and verbally advised that they agree with the two British prices, namely 85¢ for July futures, 90¢ for October futures. This therefore broadly accepts all our proposals.

2. A secondary agreement on procedure, prices, etc. is being worked out with Biddulph, the Imported Cereals Division and the U.S.S.R.

3. The two agreements will both be signed in London by the Trade Delegation of the U.S.S.R.

4. No instructions have yet reached us from the United Kingdom Government to advise Russia of the impending protocol so we cannot yet issue any delaying letter to Russian Ambassador and must continue negotiations.

5. The following is the draft agreement outlined by the Russians, Begins:

A. The Canadian Government agree to give to the Government of the U.S.S.R., represented by its Trade Delegation in London, a credit of ten million Canadian dollars as a first consignment on account of the cost of the agreed purchases of Canadian wheat and/or flour by the U.S.S.R. in quantities up to two million tons, and charges for transportation of the said wheat and/or flour to the U.S.S.R. When these ten million Canadian dollars are exhausted, the additional ten million should be granted etc.

B. On instructions of the Canadian Government a special account should be opened with the Bank of Canada in favour of Trade Delegation of the U.S.S.R. in London and this account to be used by the Trade Delegation for payment for the Canadian wheat and/or flour purchased according to this agreement.

C. The amount used out of the credit is to be reckoned quarterly. The payment is to be effected at the end of three years by 4 equal semi-annual instalments extending over the following 2 years. Interest to be reckoned in every case from the date of each advance made and to be payable semi-annually.

D. Payment to be made in Canadian dollars or gold at the option of the Trade Delegation. The price of gold should be calculated at its official price in Canada. Alternatively the Trade Delegation will have the right to reckon gold at the official price in the United States of America. In this case the average rates of the Canadian dollar in New York on the day of payment (telegraphic transfers to Montreal) should be taken.

E. The agreement signed in English and Russian texts, both of which are legally equal. Ends.

6. In addition to the draft agreement, the Russian Government verbally request that this credit be made retrospective to embrace all the flour and wheat shipped to date through the Ministry of Food, which has been the subject of many cables between the Dominions Office and their High Commissioner in Ottawa and may amount to about four million dollars.

7. I would draw your attention to two points in paragraph (a) of Russian draft agreement.

(a) That the agreement be a first instalment of an eventual two million tons.

(b) That charges for the transportation include shipping charges.

8. Our original advice simply agreed to

(a) A ten million dollar credit with no mention of there being any instalment but that when exhausted the position could be re-examined and all discussions on this point were definite;

(b) On their shipping transportation cost I have already advised them that we are declining this clause as our responsibility under the credit ceases at F.O.B.¹⁹² seaboard.

9. Note also their paragraph (b). I suggest it is necessary to mention the residence or head office of Bank of Canada.

10. Note also their paragraph (c). They omit the interest percentage.

11. To ease the Russian suggestion of continued credit could you advise me what exact limit of credit you are prepared to extend to Russia beyond the ten million dollars.

12. I should be glad to have your corrections of the draft of this Russian agreement.

13. The Russians are pressing us to conclude these negotiations and request a reply from us this week.

Ottawa, June 19, 1942

Dear Sir Patrick [Duff],

In reply to your letter of June 4th concerning the sale of Canadian wheat and flour to Russia I wish to inform you that the Canadian Government has decided to continue the negotiations with the U.S.S.R. regarding the extension of a credit for the purchase of Canadian wheat and flour.

The basis of the negotiations is as follows. The Canadian Government would grant a credit of 10 million Canadian dollars without any commitment, for the present, as to the extension of further credits once this sum is exhausted. This credit is to be made retroactive to cover past shipments and also to cover any future purchases of wheat and flour which the Russians may wish to make in Canada until the credit is used up. In deciding to continue the negotiations the Canadian Government had in mind that Russia would obtain the great bulk of her requirements of wheat and flour from the United States under the impending protocol. The purpose of the credit would be to clean up the situation arising out of past shipments and to provide for any supplies of wheat and flour which Russia may wish to take from Canada in "broken stowage" or otherwise supplementary to Lease-Lend deliveries.

The successful conclusion of these negotiations would, I trust, dispose of the problem discussed in your letter of the above date.

Yours sincerely,

TELEGRAM 1192

Ottawa, June 19, 1942

Reference your telegram No. 1581, June 9th, regarding wheat for Russia.

1. Cabinet Council have decided that negotiations for extension of 10 million dollar credit to Russia for purchase of Canadian wheat and flour should be continued.

2. This credit should be made retroactive to cover all wheat and flour shipped to date through the Ministry of Food and also to cover any future purchases which the Russians may wish to make in Canada until the credit is exhausted.

3. The amount of the proposed credit is to be definitely limited to 10 million Canadian dollars, without any commitment as to the extension of further credits once this sum is exhausted.

4. It should be made clear that the Canadian Government can only undertake to deliver the wheat F.O.B. at the North American seaboard and that the cost of ocean transport is not to be charged to the credit.

5. According to the proposals outlined in the Russian draft agreement the amount used out of the credit is to be reckoned quarterly. The payment is to be effected at the end of three years by 4 equal semi-annual instalments extending over the following two years. Interest to be reckoned in every case from the date of each advance made and to be payable semi-annually. These arrangements are satisfactory. Canadian Government requests that interest be calculated at 3 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually. In case of advance made in respect of past shipments interest is to be reckoned as from the dates of those shipments or as from a convenient mid date during the period of the past shipments.

6. Prices to be paid by the Russians for wheat and flour should be the same or equivalent to those paid by the British.

7. Nature of payment suggested by Russians, namely in Canadian dollars or gold at the option of the Trade Delegation is satisfactory.

8. Canadian Government would agree to make the necessary arrangements with the Bank of Canada to open a special account in favour of Trade Delegation of U.S.S.R. in London to be used by the Trade Delegation for payment for Canadian wheat and flour purchased according to the agreement.

In agreeing to extend this credit the Canadian Government has in mind that Russia will obtain the great bulk of its needs of wheat and flour from the United States under the impending protocol. The purpose of the credit would be to clean up the situation arising from past shipments and to provide for any supplies of wheat and flour that Russia may wish to take from Canada in broken stowage or otherwise supplementary to Lease-Lend deliveries.

Accord de crédit entre le Canada et l'Union soviétique Credit Agreement between Canada and Soviet Union

[London, September 8, 1942]

The Government of Canada and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have agreed as follows:

1. The Canadian Government agree to give to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics credit of ten million Canadian dollars for the purchase of Canadian wheat and flour on a delivery basis of F.O.B. North American Seaboard. The cost of ocean transport is not to be a charge under this credit.

2. The amount used out of the credit during each quarter year is to be calculated at the end of each quarter year. The quarter years shall be deemed to end on March 31st, June 30th, September 30th, and December 31st. The total amount of the credit used during the period of three years following the date of this Agreement after which period no further advances are to be made out of this credit is to be repaid by four equal semi-annual instalments, the first instalment commencing six months after the end of three years from the date of this Agreement. Interest at the rate of 3% per annum calculated in every case on the amounts used out of the credit during each quarter year and accruing from the end of the said quarter year shall be payable semi-annually on the first day of January and the first day of July.

3. Payments by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under this Agreement shall be made in Canadian dollars or fine gold at the option of the Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Kingdom. The value of fine gold shall be calculated at its official price in Canada on the day of its delivery. Alternatively the Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Kingdom shall have the right to calculate the value of the fine gold at the official price in the United States of America. In this case the average rates of Canadian dollars in New York on the day prior to payment (telegraphic transfers to Montreal) shall be taken. While acquirement of Canadian dollars for payment in Canada in accordance with regulations appertaining to Canadian Foreign Exchange Control is not permitted except through authorized dealers of the Canadian Foreign Exchange Control Board at the published official rate Canadian dollars shall be acquired by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at the published official rate through authorized dealers of the Canadian Foreign Exchange Control Board and such official rate shall also be used for the purpose of the aforesaid calculation with respect to the official price of pure gold in the United States of America.

4. The Canadian Government agree to make the necessary arrangements with the Bank of Canada to open a special account in favour of the Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Kingdom to be used by the said Trade Delegation for payment of Canadian wheat and flour purchased under this Agreement.

5. The Canadian Government agree to make the credit retrospective to cover the value of all the wheat and flour shipped to date through the agency of the Ministry of Food of the United Kingdom to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Interest shall be payable at the rate of 3% per annum on the value of the shipments to date calculated from the end of each quarter year during which the shipments of wheat and flour were made payable semi-annually as in para. 2 hereof.

6. As regards retrospective part of the credit the Ministry of Food of the United Kingdom in conjunction with the United Kingdom Commercial Corporation, Ltd., and the Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the United Kingdom shall agree on the tonnage and dollar value of past shipments and the final statement shall bear their respective signatures to signify their agreement thereto. This statement when signed is to be passed to the Bank of Canada and will constitute the correct debit for the aforesaid shipments arranged by the Ministry of Food of the United Kingdom on behalf of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

THE AGREEMENT OF PROCEDURE AND PRICES IN RESPECT OF THE SUPPLIES OF CANADIAN WHEAT AND FLOUR TO THE UNION OF SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLICS UNDER THE CANADIAN-SOVIET AGREEMENT OF THE 8TH SEPTEMBER 1942

The Governments of Canada, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland being desirous of fixing the procedure and specific arrangements to be adopted this 8th September, 1942, have concluded this Supplementary Agreement for the shipment of Wheat and Flour under the main Canadian Soviet Agreement of 8th September, 1942, and have agreed as follows:

1. The Ministry of Food of the United Kingdom (hereinafter called the Ministry of Food) having agreed to act as agents and to perform these functions free of charge, the Governments of Canada and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agree that the Ministry of Food shall act as agents for both parties in the performance of the purchasing and loading of Canadian Wheat and Flour under the Canadian-Soviet Agreement of 8th September, 1942.

2. The actual work of the Ministry of Food as agents will inter alia consist of the following:

(a) They will provide for the shipment of Canadian wheat and flour to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by any transport facilities placed at the disposal of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

(b) They will make purchases for wheat and flour on an f.o.b. basis North American Ports for the account of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

(c) In case of need and where possible they will supply requisite quantities from the Ministry of Food's own stocks in Canadian and/or United States of America Ports, and these quantities shall be considered as purchases by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under the main Canadian-Soviet Agreement.

(d) They shall make the necessary arrangements to provide bags and bagging facilities for wheat and flour and delivery of these products to f.o.b. steamers and to arrange for all the necessary incidental work in connection with the shipments.

(e) They will check and confirm the correct charges covering the shipments that are tendered by the suppliers. It is agreed that the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics Trade Delegation are entitled to appoint their own representative for the checking of weights and grades of the wheat and flour supplied, but the invoices when checked and initialled by the Ministry of Food, or their agents Messrs. Thomson & Earle will be in order for payment.

3. It is agreed that the purchasing prices for wheat and flour to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall be the same as the prices paid by the Ministry of Food (basis futures bought from the Canadian Wheat Board) at the same appropriate time for Canadian wheat or flour. These prices are fixed as follows:

- (a) On the basis of 85 cents (Canadian) for July Winnipeg Futures, and
- (b) On the basis of 90 cents (Canadian) for October Winnipeg Futures.

On 3(a) — the purchases of July Futures must be exchanged for actual wheat or flour by June 30th, 1942. On 3(b) — the purchases of October Futures must be exchanged for actual wheat or flour by September 30th, 1942. Should the credit not be exhausted by the 30th September, 1942, arrangements shall be made as to the residue. The Canadian Wheat Board shall replace all futures used by the Ministry of Food in carrying out the purposes of this agreement on the basis of the appropriate contract price.

4. The quality of wheat and flour to be bought by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall be arranged between the Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in London, and the Ministry of Food.

5a. On wheat the Dominion Inspection Certificate is final as to quality. The Bill of Lading weight is final as to quantity. Any dispute will be subject to the usual appeal provisions provided in the Canadian Grain Act and in accordance with the custom of the grain trade.

5b. On flour the Bill of Lading weight is final. The quality is termed 'G.R. Canadian Spring Wheat Flour Export Grade' which is the exact and only quality which the Ministry of Food at present purchase.

6. The payment for wheat and flour in each case shall be effected by the Bank of Canada against approved shipping documents and the Dominion Inspection Certificate mentioned in paragraph 5a, within seven days from the date of the Bill of Lading. The invoice accompanying shipping documents will include, as far as possible, all costs up to f.o.b. loading ports, but amendments may be made to cover incidental expenses such as carrying charges etc.

7. Each shipment shall be charged against the Canadian-Soviet Credit as at the date that payment is made by the Bank of Canada.

8. The Trade Delegation of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics have the right to discontinue the present procedure by giving one month's notice to the Canadian Government through the Canadian Wheat Board and to the Ministry of Food, and in that case the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics shall submit a new procedure for joint discussion with the Canadian Government.

9. Done in triplicate in London on the 8th day of September, 1942 in the English and Russian languages, both texts being legally binding.

CONFIDENTIAL. As you know war supplies are furnished to the Soviet Government under the terms of annual Protocols to which United States, United Kingdom and Soviet Governments have been parties. The supplies produced in Canada have hitherto mainly been included in the United Kingdom commitment. Under the Mutual Aid procedure it is most desirable that Canadian supplies furnished to Russia in accordance with the Bill should be directly allocated to the Soviet Government.

We consider that this can best be done by Canada becoming a direct party to the Third Protocol which will cover supplies to be furnished during the year beginning July 1st. The Protocol is now under negotiation in Washington and I understand that Mr. Karl Fraser mentioned recently to General Burns that we might wish to become a party to it and that General Burns raised no objection.

At this stage it seems best for you to inform the Department of State of our intention to pursue the question. Mr. Fraser will be in Washington early next week and will bring with him as full information as can be assembled about the supplies which Canada expects to be able to furnish to Russia. He is familiar with the present status of the negotiations. It is desired that the Legation should work in association with him in discussing the question with American, British and Soviet officials in Washington.

We are instructing Mr. Massey and Mr. Wilgress to inform the United Kingdom and Soviet Governments of our intentions in this respect and we are also advising the Soviet Minister in Ottawa.

MUTUAL AID — PARTICIPATION IN THIRD PROTOCOL WITH THE U.S.S.R.

11. THE SECRETARY reported further developments since this matter had last been discussed.¹⁹³

The United Kingdom, the United States, and the U.S.S.R. were agreeable to Canadian participation in the protocol. Officials of the departments principally concerned had considered U.S. and U.K. drafts of the instrument and were in general agreement as to the form of Canadian adherence. Consideration had also been given, with British and American authorities, to the items to be included in a Canadian schedule.

Financial arrangements and possibly shipping arrangements would require special provisions in so far as Canada was concerned. Special provision might have to be made in a Canadian schedule in respect of wheat and flour. Other items likely to be included would be industrial equipment and machine tools, explosives, aluminum and nickel.

It was proposed that, at an early date, a statement should be made, preferably in the House, with regard to Canadian participation in the forthcoming protocol.

The administrative officer designate of the Board, Mr. Karl Fraser, was proceeding with preparation of a proposed list of Canadian items to be included, up to a suggested value of some $75 million, in consultation with other interested officials.

(External Affairs memorandum, May 3, 1943, and attached documents).[†]

12. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, noted the Secretary's report and referred for decision to the members-designate of the Canadian War Supplies Allocation Board the conditions of Canadian participation in the protocol. It was agreed, in this connection, that the Prime Minister make a statement in the House of Commons at an early date.¹⁹⁴ today[†] concerning public announcement of Canadian participation in Soviet Protocol.

1. The British draft protocol was considered this morning at an informal meeting of the Ministers who will compose the Mutual Aid Board after passage of the Bill. In view of Hopkins' favourable initial reception of the British draft as reported in your messages WA-2085 and 2087 of May 1st,[†] the British draft was taken as the basis for consideration subject to its alteration to provide separate schedules from the three supplying countries. On the whole the Ministers tend to prefer a separate Canadian schedule.

2. It was felt that on the whole the British draft was satisfactory to us. The view was expressed that Canada should be omitted from Article 3 in view of our inability to undertake any general obligations for the shipment of supplies to Russia. An addition and an amendment is suggested in Article 5. The amendment is to insert the words "by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom" after the words "supplies furnished" in the last line. The addition is to insert a clause on the following lines to look after the Canadian financial arrangements: "Any financial arrangements between the Government of the U.S.S.R. on the one hand and the Government of Canada on the other in connection with the supplies to be furnished by the Government of Canada in pursuance of the present Protocol shall be the subject of a separate agreement to be concluded between the Government of Canada and the Government of the U.S.S.R."

3. The use of this formula will make it possible for us to conclude a financial agreement with the U.S.S.R. after the passage of the Mutual Aid Bill which might embody arrangements similar to those between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union.

4. There is a possibility that the United States will wish to make a more specific shipping commitment than the United Kingdom feel they can accept. In that event the shipping commitment might be included as part of the schedule for each country. If this is done, we should have to make some provision along the following lines: "The Government of Canada undertakes to make available at the appropriate Canadian ports the goods mentioned in this schedule at the monthly rate indicated therein, subject to the provisions of Article 6 of the Protocol."

5. I understand that a meeting is taking place tomorrow morning in Mr. Acheson's office at the State Department to discuss the terms of the Protocol at which Mr. Lewellin will be present. Mr. Fraser will go to Washington for this meeting if he can secure air transportation and otherwise he will be represented probably by Mr. Roy Peers. It is desirable that you should attend the meeting if possible. If you were not able to do so could you arrange for the attendance of an officer of the Legation? We assume that this meeting will not consider the items to be included in the separate schedules.

6. On this point there has been some preliminary study and Mr. Fraser will take with him to Washington the results so far achieved. He expects to have detailed discussions in Washington next week. Mr. C.F. Wilson will go to Washington early next week in connection with the Soviet request for flour and wheat which has been the subject of separate correspondence. I am asking Mr. Fraser to keep in close touch with you and to consult you particularly on matters concerning the drafting of the Protocol.

Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Washington, May 11, 1943

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Along with Mr. Karl Fraser and Mr. Roy Peers, I attended a meeting at Mr. Dean Acheson's office in the State Department yesterday afternoon to discuss the draft Third Russian Protocol. There were also present at this meeting Mr. Rinehart, Mr. Achilles, Mr. Bohler and Mr. Parsons from the State Department, Brigadier General Spalding, who is acting for General Burns in the latter's absence in Moscow, and Colonel Llewellyn and Mr. Hoyer Millar representing the United Kingdom.

Mr. Acheson opened the meeting by expressing the pleasure of the United States Government at Canada's association with the Third Protocol. He informed me that a formal note from the State Department on this matter should reach the Legation very shortly.

We then proceeded to discuss a revised draft of the Protocol, which, with the amendments resulting from that discussion, is attached herewith.[†]

In so far as the preamble is concerned, an additional phrase "and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, desiring to assist the Governments of the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada in meeting their war needs for raw materials and other supplies" was inserted. This insertion was in lieu of an amendment to Article III, which the British desired, in order to secure some sort of undertaking from the Soviet Government that they would provide facilities for the protection of northern convoys; specifically, bases in North Russia for British airplanes. The Americans had no objection to this, but pointed out that it would undoubtedly delay the Protocol many weeks, as the Russians would object to it. Mr. Acheson felt that the provision of facilities of this kind was a matter which should be negotiated diplomatically between the British and the Russians and should not be permitted to hold up the Protocol. Colonel Llewellyn seemed impressed by this argument and agreed that Article III might stand as drafted, while the preamble could be strengthened, as indicated above. In view of the fact that the Soviet undertaking in the preamble and Article III covers "critical war materials" only and does not refer to transport and other facilities, there seemed to be no necessity for omitting Canada from this undertaking. In this respect, the present Article III differs greatly from Article III of the earlier United Kingdom draft, which talked about "assistance and facilities in connection with the conveyance and route of supplies”.

Discussion of Article I brought up the question of a single or separate schedules. Colonel Llewellyn argued once again in favour of the former. He pointed out that separate schedules would enable the Russians to play off one supplying country against the other and to apply separate pressure to each to make good alleged deficits, when in fact there might well be an over-all surplus in any given commodity. This disadvantage, to which Colonel Llewellyn thought we ought not to be subjected, could only be overcome by a combined schedule. He also thought that a single schedule would enable supplying countries to conserve shipping resources by arranging among themselves for the despatch of Protocol material from the most convenient sources of supply, having regard to routes which might be available from time to time. The Americans, however, remained adamant in favour of separate schedules, and there is little doubt that separate schedules will prevail. They did, however, agree that in Article V the words “and re-allocation as between the three supplying countries” should be inserted after “variation” to provide for the possibility of transferring the source of supplies from one country to another if conditions necessitated it. This, they thought, would provide adequate elasticity. Beyond this they would not go, rejecting the compromise that there might be a single schedule vis-à-vis the U.S.S.R. and separate schedules between the three supplying countries. The United States also propose to attach to their schedule explanatory notes,[†] a copy of which is attached. The British view this development also with some alarm, as they feel that this will make each schedule itself a sort of protocol.

In respect of Article II, General Spalding was emphatic that there should be included in the American schedule a firm shipping commitment. There was strong opposition to this on the part of the British, and even the State Department officials were lukewarm in its support. Colonel Llewellyn was strongly in favour of Article II as it now reads and felt that he could not go beyond it in respect of shipping commitments. He suggested that General Spalding have a word with Mr. Harry Hopkins on the subject, as he, Colonel Llewellyn, had felt that Hopkins favoured a general rather than a specific shipping commitment.

I did not intervene in the debate on the single vs. separate schedules, but felt compelled to say that if shipping commitments were specific in character and attached to the separate schedules, Canada would have to have a provision included in her schedule, as follows:

“The Government of Canada undertakes to make available at the appropriate Canadian ports the goods mentioned in this schedule at the monthly rate indicated therein, subject to the provisions of Article V (former Article VI) of the Protocol.”

In respect of Article IV, I proposed the addition of the following paragraph:

“Any financial arrangements between the Government of the U.S.S.R. on the one hand and the Government of Canada on the other in connection with the supplies to be furnished by the Government of Canada in pursuance of the present Protocol shall be the subject of a separate agreement to be concluded between the Government of Canada and the Government of the U.S.S.R.”

I also suggested that the words “furnished by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom” should be inserted after “supplies” in the second last line of this Article.

There was considerable discussion as to when the schedules of the three countries would be available. The Americans stated that they were ready to proceed with their figures; Mr. Fraser was of the opinion that the Canadians would be ready in a day or two, but the British thought they might not be ready before next week.

I understand that Colonel Llewellyn was disappointed at the insistence of General Spalding on a firm shipping commitment and the attachment of so much explanatory material to the American schedule. He seems to feel that it may not be possible to have a single third protocol at all, but that three will be required; each country negotiating with Russia separately. I hope his fears in this regard are not justified.

Yours sincerely,

L. B. PEARSON

Troisième protocole au sujet du ravitaillement de l'Union soviétique

Third Protocol regarding Military Supplies to the Soviet Union

The Government of the United States, the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of Canada, recognising the outstanding contribution of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in the prosecution of the war against the common enemy, and desiring to continue to provide the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with the maximum assistance possible in the form of military supplies, raw materials, industrial equipment and food, and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics desiring to assist the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada in meeting their war needs for raw materials and other supplies, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

The Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, undertake to make available for dispatch to the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, during the period the 1st July, 1943, to the 30th June, 1944, the supplies mentioned in the schedules annexed hereto¹ under the conditions stated therein.

ARTICLE II

The Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom will aid in the movement of the supplies offered, by furnishing shipping as set forth in the schedules annexed hereto, it being understood that these commitments as to shipping may be reduced if shipping losses, lack of escorts, deficiencies in the anticipated capacity of the available routes, the necessities of other operations, or the exigencies of the situation render their fulfilment impracticable.

ARTICLE III

The Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics undertakes to make available for dispatch to the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada, within the period covered by the present protocol, such raw materials and other supplies as may be available and as are desired by the said Governments in the prosecution of the war.

ARTICLE IV

The financial arrangements concluded between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the one hand and the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom, respectively, on the other in connection with the supplies furnished in pursuance of the protocol signed between the parties in Washington on the 6th October, 1942,[†] shall continue to govern the provision of supplies furnished by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom in pursuance of the present protocol.

Any financial arrangements between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the one hand and the Government of Canada on the other in connection with the supplies to be furnished by the Government of Canada in pursuance of the present protocol shall be the subject of a separate agreement to be concluded between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

ARTICLE V

The list of supplies in the schedules annexed hereto shall be subject to reallocation between the three supplying countries as they may decide between themselves in order to meet strategic, supply, or shipping exigencies. They shall, too, be liable to variation to meet unforeseen developments in the war situation. If shipping losses, production failures, or the necessities of other operations render their fulfilment prohibitive, it may be necessary to reduce them. On the other hand, if conditions permit, the Governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, will be glad to review the schedules from time to time for the purpose of increasing the quantities to be provided and delivered.

In witness whereof the undersigned, duly authorised by their respective Governments, have signed the present Protocol.

AIDE-MÉMOIRE IN CONNECTION WITH PROPOSED TRANSFER OF "TEAM 94" FROM UNITED KINGDOM TO CANADA

1. In a letter dated 6/8/42 the Lord President of the Council (Sir John Anderson) wrote to the High Commissioner asking the latter to sound the Canadian Government reaction to a proposal to transfer Team 94 and its work

¹⁹⁵ Most of the negotiations concerning the development of atomic energy were conducted orally and not recorded in correspondence. For the context of the documents printed here, see W. Eggleston, Canada's Nuclear Story. Toronto: Clarke, Irwin, 1965, M. Gowing, Britain and Atomic Energy, 1939-1945. London: Macmillan, 1964, and R. G. Hewlett and O. E. to Canada. It was pointed out that at that stage, whereas the Lord President favoured the proposal, he had not made a recommendation to Mr. Churchill, wishing, in the first instance, to find out whether the proposal would be favoured by Canada.

2. The proposal arose partly because it would appear that in many ways — with raw material at hand, etc., etc. — Canada was the most suitable location for the work, and partly because it is similarly proposed that the other Team (U 235), which is working in co-operation with the U.S.A., should transfer its activities to that country. Therefore to some extent the two propositions hang together, though it is likely that, even if the move of U 235 to the U.S. should not materialize, it may still be desirable to move 94 to Canada if acceptable.

3. Following word from Mr. Howe that he agreed in principle with the idea and that it should be explored further, and after a talk with Dean Mackenzie the High Commissioner obtained further particulars as to what London had in mind in the first instance.

4. London's present proposals may be summarized as follows:

(a) Detailed and accurate computation of expenditure involved is being worked out and will be sent later.

(b) At first the programme would consist of laboratory and semi-technical work. Whilst unable accurately to appreciate without local investigation the cost of the work in this initial stage under Canadian conditions, London estimates that this would not exceed $450,000 per annum at the outside. This figure is an estimate of "total cost including rent of laboratory and normal overhead but excluding rent for accommodation".

(c) It is envisaged sending a team of about 30, commencing with graduates and scientists (including engineers) with about 25 mechanics and laboratory assistants. Of the above London would propose to send about 22 graduates and 6 assistants (who are already trained in this work). The English salaries for all this proportion of the above proposed team would be about £14,000.

(d) It is London's idea that if the proposal goes through the enterprise should be on the basis of "an effective partnership between our two Governments". For instance, whilst present members of the team would continue to be United Kingdom employees, London hopes that Canadian members would be added to it to complete the full team. The Lord President also proposes "whilst we should be responsible for paying salaries of British members and Canadian Government responsible for paying salaries of Canadian members, other cost should either be borne by the Canadian Government or should be shared in such proportions as may be agreed."

5. If Mr. Howe agrees in principle along the above lines, the High Commissioner will so inform the Lord President, whereupon it would be proposed to send out an advance party forthwith to discuss further details.

Dear Dr. Bush,

This is just an informal note to let you know that negotiations are under way as between the United Kingdom and Canadian governments for the purpose of bringing Halban's¹⁹⁶ group to work in Canada.

Dr. Halban himself and Mr. Jackson¹⁹⁷ of the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research are on this continent, and you may have heard of their arrival. However, no definite arrangements have been made as yet.

I have been in conference with the Right Honourable Malcolm MacDonald, High Commissioner for the United Kingdom in Canada, and the Honourable Mr. C.D. Howe, who are carrying on the final negotiations from the standpoint of their own governments. Both of these gentlemen have left by air for Great Howe, MacDonald and myself that it is essential for us, if the project goes through, to have most intimate and sympathetic co-ordination as between your groups and ours.

It has also been agreed that the project, as far as Canada is concerned, would be placed under the jurisdiction of the National Research Council, and that all formal negotiations and arrangements will be made through my office, although of course there will be no suggestion that Halban's research workers will not have the greatest freedom in discussing all scientific aspects with their opposite numbers in the United States. I understand that Halban and Jackson are planning visits to New York and Chicago to see scientific friends in those cities, but it is clearly understood that formal notification of our plans and intents will pass from my office to yours.

I had intended to be in Washington this week but was unable to arrange it; we also felt that perhaps I should have the formal agreement between the United Kingdom and Canadian governments before I presented the situation to you.

Dr. W.L. Webster, late of the B.C.S.O.,¹⁹⁸ has now come on my staff as an executive assistant. As he is making a trip to Washington I am giving this letter to him to hand to you. If there are any points on which you would like information Dr. Webster would be able to provide the answers as he will be my personal aide in dealing with this project in Canada.

Dear Dean Mackenzie,

By coincidence I was just on the point of writing you a letter today, to give you some of the latest developments in regard to tube alloy¹⁹⁹, when Webster arrived and turned over to me your latest letter. The Canadian developments which you treat in that letter are of such importance and so far-reaching that I am adhering to my original intention, and this letter is therefore primarily for the purpose of bringing you up to date on some of the recent moves. I will therefore write you further as soon as I can confer with Dr. Conant and ponder over some of the points which Dr. Webster's visit has accentuated.

¹⁹⁸ British Central Scientific Office (Washington).

¹⁹⁹ Le projet de recherche sur l'uranium de Grande-Bretagne.

¹⁹⁹ Uranium research project of Great Britain.

There has now been a new organizational move in this country on this subject. As you know, in recent months the program has been divided between an Executive Committee, of which Dr. Conant is Chairman, and the Corps of Engineers which is charged with plant construction. Matters of broad policy have remained in the hands of the group designated by the President some time ago. There has now been created a new military Committee which will exercise general supervision of the entire program with particular attention to its military aspects. This committee will determine policies and procedures, and will have the advice of the Executive Committee on all scientific and engineering phases of the matter. It has an Army officer, Brig. General Groves, as its Executive Officer to correlate all portions of the work. Its membership consists of Admiral Purnell, General Styer, and either Dr. Conant or myself as Chairman. On broad matters of general policy it will still receive its direction from the group initially charged by the President with responsibility on this program. The scientific relationships will continue to reside with the Executive Committee over which Dr. Conant presides. The creation of this committee will, I feel sure, accelerate the program, provide adequate coordination between the military services and the scientific group, and assure adequate attention to all military phases of the matter.

Another step which it is important that you know concerns the status of the program itself. There are really three phases of this program at the present time. The first involves the fundamental experimental work. The second includes three pilot plants, the heavy water program, and the experiment on the cumulative effect under A.H. Compton.²⁰⁰ The third involves the construction and operation of an electromagnetic plant designed for 100 grams a day but with an actual output which is of course still somewhat indefinite. There have recently developed a series of inevitable conflicts between this program and other war programs on the subject of critical materials. The amount of material involved is indicated by the estimates: on the second phase $7,000,000., and on the third phase $25,000,000. Under the program as approved in June we have been proceeding with the first two phases, and in a tentative way only with the third phase. Two important decisions have now been reached.

The first results from the definite recommendation of the Executive Committee that the third phase should now proceed at the maximum possible speed. The second decision was taken at an important conference a few days ago, and it was there decided that this program should be given such priority, in all three of its phases, as to insure the utmost expedition, even although it was recognized that such a decision necessarily involves some interference with other important war programs. It is understood that as other phases arise, such as the possible construction of other large-scale plants, they will be evaluated at the time and on their merits, particularly in view of the interference with other war programs. Undoubtedly no further decisions can be reached along these lines until the results of present pilot plant work are in hand.

I have had some correspondence with Sir John Anderson, and I have now written him to apprise him of these latest moves. He has raised the question of closer integration of the entire effort. As one part of his letter there is raised the possibility that the group now working on the British diffusion process might possibly work with greater expedition in this country. I fear, however, that when he raised this question he was not fully informed as to our situation. In fact, he seems to have believed that we would be able to proceed, not only with pilot plant work, but also with full-scale construction along several lines without undue interference with other war programs. Such, unfortunately, is not the case. I have accordingly written him to explain more fully our exact situation, for I think that this will undoubtedly modify his point of view in regard to what may now be desirable. Dr. Simon²⁰¹ is now here and we have discussed the matter with him, and I believe that Dr. Akers²⁰² will soon visit us. It appears to me probable, however, that a decision in regard to the extent of integration of the American and the British programs can be made much more expeditiously when it can be based on a decision between the American process and the British process of diffusion on the basis of experiments which will be carried out shortly in England and the experiments in this country on the pilot plant which should be ready in April or May. The primary point to be kept in mind, of course, is to insure that the scientific personnel who are most able in this field are enabled to work under favorable conditions.

²⁰⁰ Directeur, projet métallurgique, États-Unis.

²⁰⁰ Director, Metallurgical Project, United States.

In Sir John Anderson's letter he mentions the plans in regard to Dr. Halban's program, being worked out at the moment. I assured him in my reply that we would be quite content if his discussions with you resulted in setting up in Canada a strong group on the particular aspect of the program with which Dr. Halban is concerned, and that adequate and frequent interchange would then be highly desirable. Since that time Dr. Halban and Mr. Jackson have been in contact with A. H. Compton, and I judge that the conversations are already producing the type of interchange which is desirable. On this phase of the matter I will look forward to close consultation with you as the matter proceeds, in order that all aspects of the relationships may be handled in a way that will be most helpful to your plans.

In addition to the immediate matter of technical program, Sir John Anderson has raised certain broad questions of international relationships. I have not as yet been in position to reply to his letter on this matter in any definite way. Certainly this broad phase of the whole subject needs to be worked out with the greatest care. I was particularly happy today to learn, therefore, that the Canadian organization has now become definite, for I feel that this will be of distinct aid in proceeding with the discussion of the broader phases of the relationships on this subject, on which, of course, I will need to have careful discussion with you somewhat later. Undoubtedly, however, the immediate relationships in regard to the technical program and the construction program need first to be

[Ottawa,] November 9, 1942

Dear Dr. Conant,

In reply to your telegram of November 4th, 1942,[†] I would like to outline for you the position we have reached on the establishment of Dr. Halban's group in Canada.

As you will know, already recent high-level discussions in the United Kingdom have resulted in a final decision to transfer to Canada all British activity on the project with which Dr. Halban has been associated in Great Britain. This transfer will now be carried through with the whole-hearted support of the Governments of both the United Kingdom and Canada.

We have obtained accommodation in Montreal which appears to satisfy all the requirements of the project and work will be carried on in that city as part of the National Research Council's activity.

Arrangements are now being made to transfer from Great Britain all the personnel who have been engaged there on the project and all material and equipment which have been accumulated or developed there by Dr. Halban's group. This move to Canada should be complete by the end of this year and we hope the project, greatly expanded by the addition of Canadians to the group, will be well established in Canada early in January, 1943.

It has long been recognized that the fruition of this development is bound up inseparably with the availability, to the group now to work in Canada, of heavy water. With Dr. Halban, I have considered our position in this matter very carefully since the early availability to us of quantities of this material does imply a large measure of courteous co-operation and strong support of our effort from your United States groups working on similar problems.

I believe I am safe in stating that our team, in connection with its first boiler unit with equipment for heat extraction and separation of element 94²⁰³ will be ready to use, immediately it is produced, all material which can be made available up to a total of six tons. This requirement of six tons is a present estimate based on existing data but a more precise estimate will be possible as a result of experiments carried out with increasing quantities of heavy water as they become available.

Delivery of the total quantity in successive parts, each as early as possible, will enable these preliminary experiments to be carried out while construction of the first boiler unit proceeds and while the total quantity accumulates.

I understand, however, that the meeting for which you have requested this statement is concerned only with a general exploration of the policy which is to govern the allocation of this material. It should therefore be satisfactory if you will assume our crude urgent requirement to be a total of six tons with deliveries starting as soon as material becomes available.

I am grateful indeed for this opportunity of placing our position and this anticipated requirement before you since a rapid fulfillment of this new project which we have undertaken in conjunction with the United Kingdom must depend on the early procurement of this key material.

Yours sincerely,

C. J. MACKENZIE

Dear Dr. Mackenzie,

I am sorry to say that I am not yet able to give you a final answer to the problems presented in your letter of November 9, concerning Dr. Halban's work in Canada.

I presented your letter at the last meeting of the small committee which is in charge of all phases of this work, but can only report the general trend of our thinking. A number of factors prevented the Committee from coming to a final conclusion at that meeting. I hope very much that within a month I will be able to write you finally as to their decision.

You will recognize that at first sight it seems a little unusual for the scientific group and others in charge of this work in the United States to relinquish the first year's production from the plant on which they have spent so much time and energy. Nevertheless, I am sure that all recognize that we must consider Dr. Halban's undertaking in Canada as one aspect of the total effort. Furthermore, we recognize how important it is to have the first six tons used by someone who can carry that aspect of the problem forward with rapidity. It seemed to the Committee that we in the United States might agree to your suggestion that the first six tons of material²⁰⁴ produced by the Trail Plant should be allocated to Dr. Halban's group in Canada with the following two provisos, — namely, one, that small amounts of material would be available for experimental work in the United States, and, two, that the allocation would be subject to review and possible modification in the light of new facts by a committee composed of yourself, Mr. Akers and myself. It was our thought here in the United States that such a committee which did not involve any party at issue between one group of scientists or proponents of one process or another could take a dispassionate view of the total situation from a point of view of united nations war effort. It might well be that six months from now or a year from now, new scientific results, unexpected technical developments or military considerations might make us wish to modify the total plan and revise our decision as to the best use of the first six tons of the production in question.

As I said earlier in the letter, the Committee was not ready to make a final answer at the last meeting. I should be interested in knowing, however, whether you think an answer along the lines I have indicated would be satisfactory to you.

May I once again apologize for the delay, but, as you know, such matters require a great deal of negotiation, particularly when they involve military, scientific and technical considerations.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES B. CONANT

Dear Dr. Conant,

I received your letter of November 17th and can well appreciate that your committee would feel at first sight the request we made in our letter was rather an unusual one, but knowing you realized well that Dr. Halban's undertaking in Canada is really one aspect of the total effort which might give us all much desired information at the earliest possible moment. We hoped an arrangement could be made in order to have the material utilized in the best common interest.

Your suggestion that the committee might be prepared to agree that the first six tons should be tentatively allocated to Dr. Halban's group, with the proviso that small amounts of the material be available for experiments in the United States, and that the allocation would be subject to review and possible modification by a committee composed of you, Mr. Akers and myself, seems to me to be eminently fair and generous, and it is a suggestion which I personally feel is wise and practical.

We can no doubt discuss this matter when I see you next Saturday but in the meantime I would like you to know that we all appreciate the attitude which you have taken in this difficult matter where military, scientific and technical considerations are involved.

Dear Mr. Howe,

URANIUM OXIDE

The High Commissioner's Office have told me that you are being pressed by the Americans to release to them the 15 tons of Eldorado oxide which is now held for delivery to England.

On Monday and Tuesday I discussed the raw material position in Chicago with Dr. Compton and his group. A full note[†] on this discussion will be available by this evening but, in the meantime, I think you would like to have information to enable you to deal with oxide.

I suggest that you should instruct Eldorado to deliver to the Americans, for purification by the Mallinckrodt process,²⁰⁵ the whole of the 15 tons on the understanding that the Americans will arrange to meet the Canadian requirement of 3 tons of Mallinckrodt oxide by March 1st, 1943, and also that 5 tons of Mallinckrodt material should be reserved for England pending the clearing up of the raw material position with them.

I make this last reservation because I understand that London have cabled me in Washington saying that they consider that 5 tons of the Mallinckrodt material should be sent to England. They cabled this before they had received an account of our Chicago discussions and it may be that they will reduce this

Dear Gilbert [LaBine],

RE: URANIUM OXIDE

I authorized you some days ago to ship the 15 tons of Eldorado oxide to the United States rather than to England. I have now cleared this with the British authorities, and think that you can continue to ship to the United States rather than to England, until I notify you further.

The British desire to have 3 tons purified by the Mallinckrodt process and returned to Canada by March 1st, 1943, and also wish to make provision that 5 tons of Mallinckrodt material shall be reserved for England, pending the clearing up of the British requirements. It is my understanding that the 5 tons is an outside figure, and that the actual requirement will probably be less.

I assume that the shipments to Canada and to England above mentioned have been cleared by W. A. Akers, representing the High Commissioner, and Dr. Compton of Chicago, representing the U.S. user. However, I suggest that you notify your customer in the United States that all Uranium oxide produced by your Company can be shipped to him, subject to return shipments of Canadian and British requirements above stated.

I trust that this letter will throw some light on the requirements position.

Washington, January 2, 1943

Dear Dean Mackenzie,

I am now in a position to give a definite answer to your letter concerning the assignment of the product of the Trail Plant. I am sure you will understand the reasons for the long delay, which have been a consequence of our reviewing our own program here in the United States and a number of changes which have been made in the last few days.

In order that you may understand the background for my answer to your particular question, may I first of all say that there have been two important changes in respect to the United States program since we last talked. First, we have decided to supplement the Chicago program by an intensive effort using heavy water in the production of element "49".²⁰⁶ To that end, we are going ahead with the duPont Company for the development, construction and operation of the Chicago Plant, the erection of our own heavy water plants and the design of a plant making element "49" and using heavy water. (The fact that duPont is to do this work is just between ourselves.) You will see that this decision greatly modifies the basis of our previous discussion.

The second change is an order which Dr. Bush and I have received from the top which restricts our interchange on this whole subject by the application of the principle that we are to have complete interchange on design and construction of new weapons and equipment only if the recipient of the information is in a position to take advantage of it in this war. Such a principle is, of course, in the interest of secrecy. Since it is clear that neither your Government nor the English can produce elements "94" or "25"²⁰⁷ on a time schedule which will permit of their use in this conflict, we have been directed to limit the interchange correspondingly. Where one side is well along in the development of a process or instrument, even if construction is not possible, it will be to the advantage of the common war effort to provide full interchange on this phase of the work. Thus, we are to arrange for interchange on the diffusion process.

We should very much like to have the group of scientists assembled in Canada carry on the fundamental scientific work for the use of heavy water so that duPont Company could base their designs on this experience. To this end, we would be quite ready to release all the product of the Trail Plant initially for the use of this group. We should expect that this Canadian group would direct their program along lines worked out in connection with the American engineers (duPont Company) and make all their results available to this designing group.

The application of the principle of limited interchange would mean that we should not be in a position to give to the Canadian group any information about the methods of extraction of element "49", nor the design of the plant for the use of heavy water for this purpose, nor the methods for preparing heavy water.

Under this arrangement and with exchange so restricted by order as I have stated, it would seem to us that it would be unwise to have an English or Canadian group of engineers associated with the enterprise, as this would certainly lead to conflict of authority and uncertainties as to procedure. The Canadian group of scientists would, of course, be free to interchange with Dr. Compton's group at Chicago in so far as the use of heavy water in the chain reaction was concerned and in regard to the chain reaction itself, but not in regard to the chemistry of element "49" or the separation.

I do not have to tell you how much we would appreciate the assistance of the Canadian group in this enterprise. It seems to us that the plans now adopted would provide for the maximum of assistance in what is, after all, a joint aim, —

Dear Gilbert [LaBine],

Our friends, the British Government, seem to be greatly disturbed about a report that has reached them to the effect that you have sold the output of uranium from Great Bear Lake to the United States Government covering production for the next two years. The British feel that this excludes them from this market.

I have no knowledge of any such sale and I feel sure that you would not dispose of your product in a way that would interfere with filling urgent requisitions from the United Kingdom.

In any event, I would be opposed to selling our full output of uranium for a long period in advance under present day circumstance.

Please let me have the facts as I must report to our Prime Minister on this subject.

The British Government also has information that Prager is prospecting for radium ore in the Great Bear Lake area with some success and that he will shortly start an operation in competition with yours. I cannot believe that this is true. If it is, the Government must intervene as we can only have one company in the radium business.

I am sorry to trouble you with these matters, but apparently both are considered to be serious by the United Kingdom. An early reply giving full information on both subjects will be appreciated.

Toronto, May 28, 1943

Dear Mr. Howe,

I wish to acknowledge your letter of May 26th and note that our friends, the British Government, seem to be greatly disturbed about certain reports that have reached them to the effect that we have sold the output of Uranium from Great Bear Lake to the U.S. Government covering production for the next two years, which would exclude them from this market.

In view of the reports which have reached you I think it advisable to give you a brief review of the contracts we have on hand at present:

1. Contract dated December 21, 1942 covering the refining of approximately 655 tons of ore, apparently of Belgian origin. This contract was supplemented on April 14, 1943, to cover an additional 600 tons of U308.
2. Contract dated July 16, 1942 covering 350 tons of U308 from Eldorado ore, to be delivered in the form of Black Oxide. To date, approximately 185 tons have been delivered against this contract and the balance is to be delivered after the treatment of the ore under contract (1) has been completed.
3. Contract dated December 22, 1942 covering 500 tons of U308 in the form of Black Oxide, from Eldorado ore, for delivery after completion of the two contracts above, but before December 31, 1944.

For your information we would advise that up to the end of May we have delivered approximately 420 tons of U308 against contract (1) above. Our refinery capacity at the moment is approximately 120 tons of U308 per month. With the additional equipment now being installed we hope to have this capacity increased to 145 tons per month by the end of August.

After receiving your letter of December 5, 1942, in which you outlined the requirements of the United Kingdom Government, I was of the opinion that it was good policy to accept all contracts that came our way for the refining of ore, in order to give our industry revenue and at the same time protect our company against other interests which were anxious to take on job refining for the U.S. Government.

Our verbal understanding with the U.S. Government, of which we hope to have a written agreement within the next few days which will be submitted to you,²⁰⁸ is to the effect that we will not be prevented from supplying the needs of our own Government for any of our products. It is true that at the moment we are shipping our entire output of Uranium across the line to our American friends, but we have been definitely led to believe by verbal understanding that they know this is a Canadian company and that the requirements of the governments of both Canada and the United Kingdom should be taken care of.

I trust that the above information is what you require and that it will put at rest any fears about the British Government being excluded from our production.

Yours respectfully,

Dear Howe,

I was sorry that we did not manage to meet, as we had hoped, before you left for your holiday. But I quite understand that your preoccupation with many urgent matters made that impossible.

I have to go away on Tuesday, for about ten days of engagements on the Pacific coast. But I will get into touch with you when I return to Ottawa at the end of July.

I have had a talk with Mackenzie about his meeting with Groves in New York, and he is working to get us the Oxide we want for the most economical programme we can arrange for Montreal. I believe that he may be able to get enough for our requirements up to September 1944, though the prospect is very doubtful after that. However, that matter can wait till we meet. But it is now clear that our requirements and those of the Americans together will far exceed the total output of Eldorado and there are signs that our American friends are therefore seeking to take action about other properties in the region.

I am assuming that LaBine and any others concerned, apart from Mackenzie, have been instructed to avoid negotiations of any sort with the Americans until you are back to take general charge of them.

I hope that you are having a real good holiday, and that your golf is giving you entire satisfaction.

With warm regards,

Dear Malcolm [MacDonald],

Thanks for your letter of July 17th which has come to hand on my return to Ottawa.

General Groves was in Ottawa last Monday, and I think that the situation up to September 1944 is satisfactory. Beyond that date, if all goes well there will be a shortage unless the Belgian Congo is opened up. It seems to me that this source of supply must be brought in without delay.

I am meeting LaBine tomorrow morning, and will put in hand further extensions to the refinery and an active campaign of exploration at Great Bear Lake. My understanding with Groves is that in future all dealings for the product will be Government to Government, which will give us control of the situation as far as Canada is concerned.

I will discuss the matter with you further on your return.

My dear Mackenzie King,

As a result of the discussions which the Lord President of the Council held recently in Washington it was agreed that there should be recommended jointly to the President and myself draft articles of an agreement to govern collaboration between our two Governments on the project which is known as "Tube Alloys". These draft articles provide for the setting up of a Combined Policy Committee.

In view of the part which the Canadian Government are playing in this project, I think it would be very appropriate that there should be a Canadian member of the Combined Committee. I hope therefore that, if the President is agreeable, you may be willing to appoint a representative to serve upon it.

When we discussed this matter yesterday, you told me that you would see no difficulty in this and that your representative would be Mr. Howe. I take it, therefore, that you will be agreeable to my suggesting to the President that Mr. Howe should be invited to become a member of the Committee. For myself, I should be very glad to welcome him in that capacity.

If you agree, it might be a good idea for the Lord President to have a talk with Mr. Howe about the effect of the articles of agreement before he leaves.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 1559 of September 2nd. Directly your telegram under reference was received, I got in touch with McNaughton who, of course, is not available to represent Canada at signature of Armistice. He has designated Simonds as most suitable Canadian representative at signature. Failing him, Brigadier Wyman or Brigadier Penhale in that order of preference. I have sent an urgent message to Simonds conveying this information. United Kingdom Government is not clear whether Armistice has been already signed or not.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following for the most secret and personal information of the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram of the 3rd September, Circular D. 619.[†] Surrender terms were signed yesterday by General Eisenhower's representative and General Castellano. TELEGRAM 88

The following information has been received from our High Commissioner in London based on telegrams sent by British Foreign Office to diplomatic missions in neutral capitals:

“Although hostilities have been terminated by the signature of the armistice, a formal state of war still exists with Italy. We cannot therefore re-establish official diplomatic relations with members of Italian Missions in neutral countries, at any rate for the present.

At the same time I recognise that it may be possible to secure useful information from Italian Missions, and there is no objection to your establishing personal and unofficial contacts with members of the staff of the Italian Mission at your discretion.”

The British Minister may already have informed you of the attitude which the United Kingdom are adopting in the matter and I feel that we should pursue a parallel policy.

GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR — FETTERING OF GERMAN PRISONERS IN CANADA

5. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES referred to a public announcement made by the German High Command of their intention to put British prisoners in chains, and the reply by the United Kingdom that German prisoners in British hands would be treated likewise, by noon tomorrow, if the German threat were carried out.

A request had now been received from the U.K. government that the Canadian government implement the British threat of reprisal and arrange for the fettering of some two thousand prisoners in Canadian camps.

(Telegrams 202 and 204, Dominions Office to External Affairs, October 8 and 9, 1942).[†]

6. MR. MACDONALD reviewed the circumstances leading to the present situation. Germany had alleged that the hands of German prisoners at Dieppe had been tied and that a British order to that effect had been given. In consequence, the Germans had threatened to chain our prisoners taken during the same operation. The U.K. government had publicly denied the German charges, stating that any such order, if it was issued, would be cancelled. The German threat had not then been carried into effect.

On October the 7th, however, the German government had again announced their intention of putting Dieppe prisoners into irons from mid-day, October the 8th, stating that this measure would remain in force until the British War Office had proved that, in future, it would issue true statements and that it had sufficient authority to see that its orders were carried out. This announcement had apparently been related to British commando operations in the Channel Islands.

On October the 8th, the British War Office had issued a statement, again denying the German allegations. The U.K. War Cabinet had decided upon a policy of reprisals and an announcement to that effect had now been made.

7. MR. MACDONALD said that, in fact, operational orders for Dieppe had included instructions that, wherever possible, prisoners' hands should be tied to prevent destruction of their documents. Apparently a copy of this order had been captured.

The Canadian government had not been consulted before the decision to institute reprisals had been announced in London, although Canada was most intimately concerned and action on our part would be required to give it effect. The Dieppe prisoners affected were nearly all Canadians, and German prisoners against whom counter measures would have to be taken, with the exception of some two hundred, were in Canadian camps.

The Prime Minister (who was in Toronto) had been consulted by telephone. He had felt that, in the circumstances, the Canadian government would have to comply, inasmuch as we had already been committed by London. It should be made clear, however, that we were most reluctant to take this course and that we sincerely hoped that the fettering of prisoners, on both sides, would be of brief duration.

8. THE ASSISTANT UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS explained the situation in detail and read telegrams exchanged with the Dominions Office and the Canadian High Commissioner in London.

Compliance with the United Kingdom's request would involve 1,100 German prisoners of war in Canada. Decisions on two points were required: first, as to the reply to be sent to the U.K. government; and second, as to the message to be communicated to Germany through the protecting power.

9. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES expressed great reluctance to engage in measures of reprisal which would certainly prove futile. The United Kingdom should be informed of our extreme distaste for this course and urged to take any possible initiative which offered hope for its discontinuance by both sides.

10. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE raised the question of Canadian responsibility for German prisoners of war transferred to this country by Britain.

The paramount consideration should be the effect of the course taken upon Canadians in enemy hands. Nothing should be done which would make their lot harsher, and every effort should be directed to opening a way out. In a contest of brutality we were bound to lose.

Would it be possible to defer the order for fettering of German prisoners, pending an opportunity for investigation?

11. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS said that under the Convention Canada was the "detaining power" and not merely an agent of the British government, in respect of German prisoners in Canadian camps. In consequence Canada was responsible under international law.

12. MR. MACDONALD expressed the view that, at this stage, the Canadian government would have to accept the United Kingdom's decision in order to avoid an open difference as to measures which London had already announced. Strong exception should, however, be taken to the issue of the Dieppe order and to the fact that the reprisals decision had been taken without Canadian consultation. It should be urged that the British government make an offer of complete investigation by the protecting power and make a straightforward statement of the facts regarding Dieppe.

13. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, approved the handcuffing of 1,100 German prisoners in Canada, from noon the following day, and agreed that the U.K. government be informed of the War Committee's views as to the wisdom of the policy and the exception to the announcement of the decision without prior consultation with Canada.

It was also agreed that the U.K. government be urged to make a frank statement of the facts and offer a full investigation with a view to ending the threatened contest in reprisals.

The draft telegram to the Dominions Office and the draft Aide-Mémoire for communication to the Swiss Consul General were approved, as revised. It was agreed that a statement in general terms be given to the press.

Ottawa, October 9, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Your telegrams Nos. 202 of October 8th[†] and 204 of October 9th.[†] We are prepared to take desired action and to handcuff from noon Saturday 1,100 German prisoners in Canada. See my immediately following telegram for text of notification to Germany sent through Swiss representative. We think it undesirable that any figures indicating number of German prisoners handcuffed in Canada and in United Kingdom, respectively, should be made public, only the total being given.

2. This decision has been reached with reluctance. We feel that we have been committed without proper consultation to a course of doubtful wisdom. Not only are nearly all the Dieppe prisoners Canadians but the task of applying reprisals to German prisoners falls mainly on Canada. We fear a futile contest may follow in an attempt to match with the Germans an eye for an eye. In such a contest in the application of harshness to prisoners the Germans are certain to win.

3. We consider that it would have been preferable to leave to the Germans a face-saving escape before reprisals were applied on our side. An offer might have been made of complete investigation by the Protecting Power accompanied by a threat of reprisals if such an investigation showed the German charges to be unfounded and if the Commonwealth prisoners were not promptly freed from their chains.

4. To avoid, however, an open difference with the United Kingdom Government who had already announced the measures to be taken although their execution required Canadian cooperation, we have decided with regret to take the action requested and are so informing the press.

5. We understand that there was included in the operation plans for Dieppe a sentence authorizing the tying of prisoners' hands to prevent destruction of documents. We believe that, especially since the Germans have this order, a straightforward statement of the facts should now assist in ending this unhappy contest in reprisals.

6. Can you offer any explanation of why German reprisals have been imposed at this particular time? What connection exists between them and the incidents occurring during the Commando Raid on Sark?

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Reference my immediately preceding telegram No. 214. Following is text of aide-mémoire given Swiss Consul General in Charge of German Interests, Begins: The Canadian Government and people have learnt with amazement and regret of the fettering of Canadian prisoners of war by the German authorities. The Canadian Government protests in strongest terms this action by the German authorities, which is in clear violation of Article 2 of the Geneva Convention.

Unless the order for the fettering of Canadian prisoners of war is rescinded, the Canadian Government, acting in consultation with the Government of the United Kingdom, will reluctantly take immediate counter action. Failing, therefore, an official report that the prisoners of war taken at Dieppe have been released from their fetters, an equivalent number of German prisoners of war, officers and men, will be put into chains at 12 noon Saturday October 10th. Needless to say, the Canadian Government will be very glad to cancel this order the moment that word is received that the order for the fettering of prisoners taken at Dieppe is rescinded. Ends.

London, October 9, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Shackling of German prisoners of war in Canada.

I have consulted Colonel Ralston and Mr. Howe on the question of compliance with the United Kingdom request that 2000 German prisoners of war in Canada should be shackled at noon Saturday. Ralston, Howe and I all disagree on principle with the whole policy of mutual reprisals. Ralston and myself, however, feel that as Canada has taken the stand that we are only acting as custodians for German prisoners of war transferred from the United Kingdom, there seems no alternative but to comply with the request of the United Kingdom Government. However, we are all three of us strongly of the opinion that the United Kingdom Government should be informed that our compliance with the United Kingdom request is made with reluctance, especially as we were not given an opportunity of being brought into consultation before the Cabinet decision here was made. At the same time we suggest that the United Kingdom Government might be informed that the Canadian Government consider that it should be intimated to the German Government that as their action in placing fetters on British prisoners of war is a direct contravention of Article two of the Geneva Convention, and as this measure of reprisal was taken without any prior investigation of the facts, which could have been investigated through the Protecting Power, His Majesty's Governments had no alternative but to place an equivalent number of German prisoners in handcuffs in like manner. However, the German Government should at the same time be invited to submit its charges re the tying of hands to the investigation of the Protecting Power, and should be invited in the meantime to suspend the shackling of prisoners of war on a reciprocal basis pending a report on the part of the Protecting Power.

Unless some action along the above lines is taken there is evident danger that this whole situation will develop into competitive reprisals with no limit in sight. For example you may have seen the communiqué of the German High Command that if the British announcement that an equal number of Germans will be manacled at noon to-morrow is put into effect the German High Command will have three times as many British prisoners of war put in fetters as from noon to-morrow.

The time element is obviously of vital importance in this matter and I should be most grateful for your earliest possible instructions as to whether the United Kingdom Government should be approached along the lines suggested above.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 408

London, October 10, 1942

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 405 of October 8th.[†]

1. In view of latest developments, War Cabinet have again reviewed the position. Following is statement of facts with our comment.

End of part 1, part 2 follows.

Part 2.

On 2nd September, the German High Command announced:

“The English Order captured near Dieppe states in Appendix L, paragraph 4, figure B X 2 X wherever it is possible the hands of prisoners will be bound so that they cannot destroy their papers. This extract from the English Operational Order was published among other things in the official statement of the German High Command of the 30th of August, 1942. The English Government has not defined its attitude to this. The German High Command have therefore ordered that all the British officers and soldiers taken prisoners near Dieppe will be placed in fetters as from 14:00 on the 3rd of September. The reason for this treatment has been made known to the prisoners. This measure will only be cancelled when the British Government withdraws in an official pronouncement the instructions decreed in the above mentioned order about the fettering of German prisoners of war”

End of part 2, part 3 follows.

Part 3.

The War Office issued the following statement on 2nd September:

“A German communiqué has stated that orders were given by the British in the Dieppe operations that prisoners’ hands should be tied to prevent them destroying their papers. Investigations are being made as to whether in fact any such order was issued. It is categorically denied that any German prisoner had his hands tied. Any such order if it was issued will be cancelled”

The German High Command issued on 3rd September a statement repeating the War Office statement and saying:

“On the strength of this declaration the High Command of the German Armed Forces has lifted the reprisal measures against British prisoners of war announced on September 2nd. The text of this British declaration will be made known to the British prisoners of war as well”.

End of part 3, part 4 follows.

Part 4.

On enquiries being made it was found that the Order referred to in the German statement of September 2nd had been issued. In the view of the War Office this might be held to imply that irrespective of the circumstances the hands of prisoners of war should be tied. This might be regarded as contrary to the Geneva Convention which, though it lays down nothing about tying the hands of prisoners of war, prescribes humane treatment.

End of part 4, part 5 follows.

Part 5.

On the 7th October German Government issued a further announcement as follows:

“After the abortive landing attempts at Dieppe a captured British Order demanding that German prisoners be fettered forced the High Command of the armed forces to announce suitable counter measures for the protection of German soldiers’ honour. Thereupon the British War Office declared on the 2nd September it is emphatically denied that any German prisoner has had his hands fettered. Any such order if it should have been issued will be revoked. In the meantime both declarations of the British War Office have been proved to be either frivolous, unverified assertions, or conscious lies, for the examination in court of a German Lance Sergeant, a Corporal and five privates, as well as of five men of the organisation TODT who temporarily fell into British captivity at Dieppe and who were later freed makes it clear that they had all been fettered from ten minutes to one hour and a half, either their hands had been tied on their backs or their wrists. In some instances even their individual fingers had been tied together over their chests. This was not-all. A similar dastardly incident took place in the Channel Island of Sark. On the 4th October, in the early hours of the morning, 16 British raided a German labour squad of one N.C.O.

and four men. These dressed only in their shirts, were tied up with a thin but very strong round plaited rope, prevented from putting on any further clothes and marched to the beach. When the German soldiers resisted this unheard of treatment the N.C.O. and one man were killed by shots and by thrusts with bayonet and another soldier was wounded. These facts are confirmed by the evidence of a sapper who managed to escape in the affray. The investigation has evidenced that the fettering had been prepared systematically. The German High Command of the armed forces has thus in its hands irrefutable proof of the two British War Office statements of 2nd September having been made untruthfully. The High Command of the armed forces therefore finds itself compelled to direct as follows:

As from 12:00 o'clock noon of the 8th October all British officers and soldiers captured at Dieppe will be laid in irons. This measure shall remain in force until such time as the British War Office will give evidence that in future it will make truthful statements of the fettering of German prisoners of war or that it has assumed authority to make sure its orders are enforced with the troops in future. All terror and sabotage units of the British and their henchmen who behave not like soldiers but like bandits will be treated as such by the German troops and wherever they appear they will be finished off in ruthless struggle."

End of part 5, part 6 follows.

Part 6.

The War Office issued the following statement on the same day:

"Enquiries were instituted after the Dieppe raid. All German prisoners of war brought back to the United Kingdom were interrogated and unanimously declared they had not had their hands tied and had been given humane treatment. This statement can be proved by the German Protecting Power. Any of the prisoners can be seen by the representatives of the German Protecting Power to confirm this. The evidence the enemy have adduced rests on their unsubstantiated assertions. There is full evidence of the humane treatment of prisoners of war by British troops and if the German Government carry out the threats mentioned in their communiqué the British Government will have to consider their future action. The raid on Sark was carried out by a party of ten officers and men. Seven of the party went into an occupied house and captured five Germans. The hands of the Germans were tied in order that arms might be linked with the captives. No written orders had been issued. The prisoners had to be taken past a German occupied barracks to the boats and the precautions were therefore necessary. In spite of the precautions four of the five German prisoners of war broke away shouting and had to be shot to prevent their raising the alarm."

End of part 6, part 7 follows.

Part 7.

On the next day 8th October His Majesty's Government issued a further statement as follows:

"His Majesty's Government repeat the declaration that they do not and will not countenance any orders for the tying of the hands of prisoners of war taken in the field. The action of the German Government in taking reprisals against the British prisoners of war in their hands is expressly forbidden by Article 2 of the Geneva Convention. Nevertheless should the German Government persist in their intentions His Majesty's Government will be compelled in order to protect their own prisoners of war to take similar measures upon an equal number of enemy prisoners of war in their hands."

End of part 7, part 8 follows.

Part 8.

The German High Command thereafter announced that they had put the Dieppe prisoners in chains as from noon on October 8th.

End of part 8, part 9 follows.

Part 9.

The War Office thereupon issued the following statement:

"The German Government having put into operation the illegal action threatened in their communiqué, the War Office announces that unless the German Government release the prisoners captured at Dieppe from their chains, an equal number of German prisoners of war will be manacled and chained as from 12:00 noon Saturday, 10th October."

End of part 9, part 10 follows.

Part 10.

The German High Command issued the following on 9th October:

"Since the announcement by the German High Command of October 7th in which reprisal measures against the fettering of German prisoners at Dieppe and on the Island of Sark were made known, the British Government have only made excuses, referred to statements of German war prisoners who were not manacled and declared that they do not and will not countenance the binding of war prisoners in the field. Since the British Government has not referred to the fact that notwithstanding the former and the present hypocritical statements of the British War Office, German prisoners were fettered in a crude way on October 8th. At noon 107 British officers and 1269 n.c.o's and men who were taken prisoner at Dieppe were put in fetters after they had been informed of the reasons. Chaplains, medical personnel, wounded and sick, were not manacled. In the evening of October 8th the British War Office announced that an equal number of German prisoners will be manacled and put in irons from October 10th onwards. If this should be done the German High Command will put into fetters three times the number of British prisoners of war from noon on October 10th onwards".

End of part 10, part 11 follows.

Part 11.

His Majesty's Government think that there is risk of some misunderstanding as to what is or is not allowed in this matter.

The Geneva Convention lays down the treatment to be accorded to prisoners of war. Clearly, however, wholly different conditions apply to prisoners in safe custody as contrasted with the action of taking prisoners in the course of battle.

In the latter case the tying of a prisoner's hands may be the only way of preventing him from escaping while being taken into custody, it may indeed be the only alternative to taking his life.

The German Government have now deliberately manacled prisoners of war in their custody and far removed from the battle. They have done this as a reprisal, but reprisals are specifically forbidden by the Geneva Convention.

His Majesty's Government think it desirable that an early public statement should be issued based on the above and we hope to let you have the text of this as soon as possible.

In the War Cabinet's view there is reason to think that the German action was prompted by fear of our Commando raids and aimed at making them less effective. His Majesty's Government therefore propose that if the German Government put into effect their threat to manacle three times the number of British prisoners of war, they, for their part, should increase correspondingly the number of German prisoners to be manacled. His Majesty's Government trust that this action, which has been forced upon us, will receive the approval and co-operation of the Dominion Governments. We should be grateful for earliest possible reply. End of telegram.

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 214.

We are most grateful to Canadian Government for having agreed to take action proposed and to handcuff 1100 German prisoners in Canada from noon today. We sympathise with reluctance of Canadian Government to take this action and their prompt decision is in the circumstances much appreciated. We fully agree with your view that number of German prisoners handcuffed in United Kingdom and Canada respectively should not be made public.

We greatly regret that you should feel that Canadian Government had been committed without consultation. Unfortunately the need for an immediate decision in the circumstances of the case precluded our consulting you fully as we should have wished. Like you we are most anxious to avoid a contest with the Germans in harshness to prisoners of war and we felt that the decision we took was the best calculated to put a speedy end to the matter. Our Government communiqué of October 8th was in fact designed to afford the Germans an opportunity of the face saving escape which you advocate. As regards offer of investigation by Protecting Power, War Office communiqué of October 7th provided for this, but it will be appreciated from the full statement communicated to you in my telegram Circular D. 408 that it would not be possible for Protecting Power to pronounce on anything which may have taken place at Dieppe or at Sark.

Information which is asked for in paragraphs 5 and 6 of your telegram under reference is, so far as available, contained in my telegram Circular D. 408. We very much hope that in view of full explanations there given Canadian Government will agree to take action as in my telegram No. 207 if the case should unfortunately arise and we should be grateful for earliest possible reply.

PRISONERS OF WAR — FETTERING OF GERMAN PRISONERS IN CANADA

1. THE SECRETARY read the draft minutes of the previous meeting, covering discussion of this subject.
2. THE PRIME MINISTER reported further correspondence exchanged with the U.K. government and the Canadian High Commissioner in London.

The British War Cabinet had again reviewed the position, in the light of the facts. On October the 9th the German High Command had announced their intention of fettering three times the number of prisoners put into irons by the British, who now proposed to increase correspondingly the number of German prisoners manacled and, for that purpose, the approval and co-operation of the Dominion governments had been asked.

This last request would involve the Canadian government putting handcuffs on 3,888 German prisoners of war, in all. Mr. Churchill had appealed to Mr. King to support such a move, expressing his assurance that it would be of short duration.

(Telegrams, Dominions Office to External Affairs, Circular D. 408, parts 1 to 11, also 207 and 208, October 10, 1942).

3. MR. KING said that, in reply to the message sent after the last meeting, the U.K. government had said that the need for an immediate decision had precluded their consulting the Canadian government fully, that they felt their decision had been best calculated to end the matter speedily and that it was hoped that the Canadian government would agree to take the action requested in regard to further prisoners of war.

A public statement of the facts was now being made in London, admitting the existence of the Dieppe order (but denying that it had been acted upon) and explaining the circumstances of the tying of prisoners' hands during the Sark raid.

(Telegrams, Dominions Office to External Affairs, 209 and Circular D. 409,[†] October 10, 1942).

4. MR. KING expressed the opinion that acceptance of the United Kingdom's proposal to match the German action would inevitably lead to further competition in reprisals. On the other hand, if delay could be obtained, pending an opportunity for independent mediation, an opportunity would be given to judge of German intentions, whether the Nazis were seeking merely to compel agreement to refrain in all circumstances from binding prisoners, whether their action was aimed at making commando raids less effective, or whether it was part of a general policy of terrorism.

The U.K. government should be advised frankly of the strong distaste felt by Canada for a course of further reprisal.

5. MR. KING said that the good offices of the Swiss government, as Protecting Power, as well as those of the International Red Cross had been offered to assist in bringing to an end the whole unhappy situation. It should be urged upon the U.K. government that these avenues be fully explored with the object, if possible, of overcoming the present difficulties and preventing a series of reprisals and counter-reprisals.

6. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES opposed any extension of the fettering of German prisoners in Canada. As a matter of fact, it would be physically impossible to manacle the numbers now mentioned.

Every possible effort should be made to have the practice called off by both sides. There was nothing to support the British hypothesis as to the German motive which was more likely to have related to their resentment of indignities to the German race.

7. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE remarked that the situation had been complicated because the United Kingdom had changed their ground from denial to explanation.

8. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS suggested that it might be open to the Swiss to have Britain and Germany agree upon a statement of what constituted "humane treatment" under the Convention in regard to tying of prisoners.

9. THE ASSISTANT UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted a draft telegram to the U.K. government urging that further fettering of prisoners on our part be, at least, delayed. This would permit of seeking every opportunity of settlement through the Protecting Power and the Red Cross, would enable a clearer idea of the German purposes to be obtained, and, at the same time, avoid embarking upon a series of competitive reprisals which could not, in the circumstances, prove successful.

10. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved a communication to the U.K. government in the sense of the draft telegram submitted.

Ottawa, October 10, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Reprisals on prisoners of war. We have already taken the initial measures of reprisal as stated in my telegram No. 214 of October 9th paragraph 1. With regard to the proposal in your telegrams Circular D. 408, last paragraph, and 207 of October 10th, before we seek to match the number of prisoners placed in chains by the Germans we consider that at least there should be some delay even though the Germans may already have carried out their threat to chain three British prisoners for each German fettered by us. During this delay we think that every opportunity should be taken of seeking a settlement making use of the Protecting Power and the International Red Cross. If we keep pace with the Germans step by step the probable result will be the fettering of all German prisoners whom we hold and of all Commonwealth prisoners whom they hold. We cannot equal them in this because of the great disparity in the number of prisoners held by each side.

2. Furthermore, we believe we should have a clearer idea of the purpose of the German reprisals before taking further action — whether this is (a) an effort to compel agreement to refrain in all circumstances from binding prisoners immediately after capture or (b) as you suggest an attempt to make Commando raids less effective or (c) part of a policy of general terrorism or (d) a means of distracting attention inside Germany from the Russian campaign or (e) vengeance for an alleged insult to “the master race”. Only on the first hypothesis does there seem to be much chance of getting a settlement by agreement. Light might be thrown on these points by the Protecting Power and by a study of German propaganda.

3. As an immediate step might not the Swiss Government be asked as the Protecting Power for both sides to employ their good offices to get an agreed definition between Germany and ourselves of what constitutes “humane treatment” under the Geneva Convention on the specific point at issue? We attach importance to this suggestion.

4. We have taken note of the message of the International Red Cross Committee transmitted to you by the British Minister in Berne in which they express fears that the reprisals might seriously jeopardize the entire question of prisoners of war and the Red Cross work for them. We are concerned that this may indeed be the effect of competitive reprisals and we think that the Committee’s initiative should be followed up. We also feel that the offer to the British Minister in Berne made by Pilet Golaz of intervention by the Swiss Government should be followed up. In handing to the Swiss Consul General the message quoted in my telegram No. 215 of October 9th the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed the strong hope that the Swiss Government would do its utmost to bring about an early settlement.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister, Begins: Views expressed in our telegram No. 216 to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs appear to be strongly endorsed by all shades of opinion in Canada. We agreed reluctantly to initial shackling of prisoners of war in Canada as a token protest against German reprisals — but we see nothing whatever to be gained in competition in reprisals in which dice are obviously loaded against us.

In the circumstances, I very much hope you can see your way to accepting the offers of mediation made by the Protecting Power and the International Red Cross Committee. I believe there would be an advantage in doing so before these offers have been accepted by the German Government. Ends.

TELEGRAM 9

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following telegram has been sent to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, Begins: No. 456. Secret. Matter is one of such general concern and potential danger to the large number of Australians now in hands of Japanese that we would have preferred being advised at a much earlier stage.

2. We have little faith in value of reprisals, especially in cases where burden will fall on helpless captives on both sides and where competition in cruelty can be carried on indefinitely with far more embarrassment to us than to the enemy. We are gravely concerned at consequences to prisoners held by Japanese, vide paragraph 1.

3. There seems to be a valid distinction between prisoners detained during actual progress of operations and those who are in secure custody. The validity of this distinction is clearly in dispute between belligerents within meaning of Article 87 of Convention. Therefore a conference should be suggested under Article 87 and the German Government asked in meantime to withdraw its order for manacling of Dieppe prisoners.

4. Before your decision is announced we desire to be informed of it, also of views of other Dominions so that we can determine our position.

SECRET. Reference Commonwealth Prime Minister's telegram No. 9 of October 13th and para. (d) of your telegram No. 233 of October 13th[†]. Please communicate following reply to Commonwealth Government, Begins: We are in full accord with the views expressed in your telegram to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs on the reprisals against prisoners of war and we have already notified the United Kingdom Government to this effect. We have a special interest in the question since nearly all the Dieppe prisoners were Canadians and since so few German prisoners are held in the United Kingdom that we must handcuff a large number of German prisoners transferred to Canada if the policy announced by the United Kingdom Government is to be carried out.

²¹³ E. B. Rogers.

2. We reluctantly agreed to participate in the initial reprisal and have handcuffed a number of German prisoners in our camps. We took this course because our refusal to do so would have meant an open difference with the United Kingdom Government who had announced the reprisal before they were informed of our views. Such an open difference would have been admirable material for German propaganda.

3. We have, however, informed the United Kingdom Government that we are not prepared at present to do more than we have done and we have strongly urged the acceptance by them of offers of mediation by the Swiss Government and the International Red Cross. We suggested to the United Kingdom on October 10th that the Protecting Power should use their good offices to settle the immediate point at issue about the binding of prisoners at time of capture — a suggestion which parallels that in the third paragraph of your telegram. TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 412

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Telegram Circular D. 408 and your reply²¹⁴ about prisoners of war. Prime Minister will give following reply to Private Notice Question in House of Commons at about noon British Summer Time on Tuesday, 13th of October, Begins: His Majesty's Government have never countenanced any general order for tying up of prisoners on the field of battle. Such a process, however, may be necessary from time to time under stress of circumstances and may indeed be in best interest of safety of prisoners themselves.

The Geneva Convention upon treatment of prisoners of war does not attempt to regulate what happens in actual fighting. It is confined solely to treatment of prisoners who have been securely captured and are in responsible charge of hostile Government. Both His Majesty's Government and the German Government are bound by this Convention. The German Government by throwing into chains 1370 British prisoners of war, for whose proper treatment they are responsible, have violated Article II of the aforesaid Convention. They are thus attempting to use prisoners of war as if they were hostages upon whom reprisals can be taken for occurrences on the field of battle with which said prisoners can have had nothing to do. This action of the German Government affronts the sanctity of the Geneva Convention which His Majesty's Government have always been anxious to observe punctiliously.

His Majesty's Government have therefore approached the Protecting Power and invited them to lay before the German Government their solemn protest against this breach of Geneva Convention and to urge them to desist from it, in which case the counter measures of a similar character which His Majesty's Government felt themselves forced to take in order to protect their prisoners of war in enemy hands will immediately be withdrawn.

Until we learn from the Protecting Power the result of this protest, I have no further statement to make upon the subject and I should strongly deprecate any discussion which might be prejudicial to action of Protecting Power and consequently to interests of prisoners of war of both belligerent countries. As soon as a reply is received a further statement will be made to the House. Ends.

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 415. Suggestion has been made in various quarters that situation should be dealt with by means of conference procedure provided by Article 87 of Geneva Convention for settlement of disputes between belligerents. Our view is that it would be inexpedient to follow this line. We think it important to maintain the position that the Protecting Power is concerned only with the treatment of prisoners of war after they have been securely captured and are in the effective control of the hostile Government. If we were to invite the Swiss Government as Protecting Power to concern themselves with the action taken by our troops in the course of fighting, the Germans by threatening to maltreat our prisoners could force on us neutral enquiries into all our methods of waging war.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. The Canadian Government are deeply concerned by the apparent weakening in the authority of the International Convention regarding the treatment of prisoners of war and fear that the situation which has arisen as a result of reprisals and counter measures may deteriorate further. All the evidence indicates that the Axis Governments are preparing to pursue a deliberate and concerted policy of treating prisoners of war as hostages. In the view of the Canadian Government this new development makes necessary a complete review of the attitude of the Governments of the British Commonwealth in a joint public statement by them of their policy.

We feel that a new effort should be made to terminate the present deadlock over the shackling of prisoners of war and to deprive the Axis Governments of the initiative which they are taking with their reprisals policy.

The Canadian Government therefore proposes that the Governments of the British Commonwealth should jointly and simultaneously communicate to the Protecting Power, to the International Red Cross and to the public some statement along the following lines, Begins:

The Governments of the British Commonwealth of Nations have jointly considered the situation which has arisen as a result of action taken by the enemy to inflict reprisals on prisoners of war in their hands for actions in the field of battle for which these prisoners could have no responsibility.

This policy of treating prisoners of war as hostages is contrary to all dictates of justice and humanity and is in violation of the principles explicit in the Geneva Convention.

It is the evident hope of the enemy that by doing so they can weaken the offensive spirit of our Commando troops and bomber crews and thereby restrict the effectiveness of our offensive warfare.

No action of this sort by the enemy will deflect us from waging offensive warfare and carrying it into enemy countries with the utmost vigour.

Faced with the alternative of a hideous competition in reprisals against helpless prisoners of war or the rejection of a policy of using this method of exacting penalties from captives who cannot be held responsible for occurrences in which they have no part, the Governments of the Commonwealth adhering to the Prisoner of War Convention and basing their treatment of prisoners of war in their hands firmly on its principles have decided against the policy of reprisal. They will hold the enemy Governments equally bound to fulfil the spirit and letter of the Convention.

Should the German Government or any other enemy Government persist in the policy of treating prisoners of war in their hands as hostages in flagrant violation of their international obligations and contrary to all considerations of humanity and justice the individuals responsible will not be allowed to escape the just retribution to be meted out in due course to all war criminals. Ends.

While it would be desirable to secure the simultaneous adherence of the United States, the U.S.S.R. and the other United Nations to such a declaration we do not feel that the Governments of the Commonwealth, if agreed on the policy proposed, should wait for their concurrence.

Simultaneously with this declaration the Governments of the United Kingdom and Canada would inform the Protecting Power and issue separate statements to the effect that in view of the declaration of policy on the treatment of prisoners of war which they had made jointly with the other Governments concerned and in order to implement it, each had decided as from an early date, which would be set, to unshackle all German prisoners of war in their hands and to invite the German Government in response to this action to unshackle all British and Canadian prisoners of war in their hands.

This message is being repeated to the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa and the Government of the United States is being advised of our views.

IMMEDIATE. My telegram Circular D. 423 of October 17th.[†] As we have so far received no indication from Swiss Government of result of representations made by them to German Government, His Majesty's Minister at Berne has been requested to ask Swiss Government to press German Government for early reply. Meanwhile we are collecting material regarding enemy atrocities and breaches of Conventions.

2. His Majesty's Minister at Berne reports that International Red Cross Committee have asked His Majesty's Consul at Geneva to transmit the following message to His Majesty's Government with the request that Dominion Governments should be informed. The same text has been sent to American, German, Italian and Japanese Governments and will later be given to the press, Begins:

International Committee of the Red Cross at Geneva notes with grave anxiety that growing intensity of belligerent operations and resulting tension are creating or might create serious damage to the principles of the two Geneva Conventions concerning the treatment of the sick and wounded of the armies in the field and prisoners of war which are the fundamental charters of security for a large number of war victims. In these tragic circumstances International Red Cross Committee further emphasizes that when one side invoking wrongs committed by other takes in its turn rigorous measures the effect far from settling the controversy is merely to aggravate it together with sufferings inflicted on both sides on combatants which are no longer capable of bearing arms and thus have the right to the generosity of their opponents.

Certain belligerents already express doubts as to the intention of the others to observe the principles of the Conventions which have however in the course of these three years of war constantly proved their efficacy. In view of the grave menace of this situation, the International Red Cross Committee adjures each of the belligerents to remain faithful to the letter and to the spirit of these essential texts and to the use of all possible means of assuring to the enemy wounded or prisoners a humane and chivalrous treatment. Thus integral respect by all for the Geneva Conventions will be assured. Ends.

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Examination of censorship reports on letters to Canada from officers, N.C.O.'s and men of the Canadian Army shows that majority of letters dealing with the subject of shackling of prisoners of war condemn our having engaged in counter reprisals. About 80 per cent of the letters referring to this subject express such disapproval generally in strong terms. Public opinion here is almost unanimously opposed to action of United Kingdom and Canada in shackling German prisoners by way of reprisal. One hears action widely condemned in private conversation and the subject needless to say is actively and widely discussed. Press opinion would be more outspoken along these lines had papers here not been requested by the Ministry of Information to avoid comment on subject at present.

Present policy has been adopted and maintained by Mr. Churchill personally, despite the widespread disapproval which it has met, and the subject therefore is one in which his personal prestige is involved. I gather that he takes a less serious view of the implications and consequences of the situation than is held by the great majority of people, officials and otherwise, almost all of whom regard the present position with the gravest disquietude.

Field Marshal Smuts, although he concurs in the decision of the War Cabinet conveyed in Circular D. 435, October 27th, feels that sooner or later we shall probably have to back pedal, in other words take action along lines of proposals in your telegram No. 231.²¹⁶ Smuts, however, feels that Germans should be given longer to reply. This probably represents views of War Cabinet members but I fear that the attitude of the Cabinet is simply one of waiting for something to turn up which may help. In my view there is little likelihood that the Germans will make any reply to the message sent by the United Kingdom Government and to wait longer for it may result in irremediable deterioration of the position.

We shall, I feel, have to act with the maximum degree of firmness and I should like to suggest that a further telegram be sent to Dominions Office pointing out the dangers of delay, asking that the proposals made in your telegram No. 231 should be earnestly considered forthwith and urging their acceptance.

I may say that I am in touch with Preiswerk of the Swiss Legation and have discussed with him the situation within the limits of the proprieties and that any recommendation that I have made on the subject is not without full consideration having been given to the impressions I have gleaned from him.

About the tying up of prisoners, we are, as you know, awaiting the reply of the German Government to our representations and protest conveyed to them by the Swiss Government. As soon as we receive it we will communicate with you again. In no case should we take any further measures without full discussion with you.

2. I have the strong impression that the original order for tying up prisoners came from Hitler and is a sign of his rage and fury, and that it encountered a good deal of passive opposition not only from the German Foreign Office, but from the German military authorities under whom the prison camps now fortunately are. Hitler or the German Government then sought to widen the issue by indulging in a campaign of atrocity allegations and a week ago it looked as if this might be the prelude to a general denunciation by them of the Geneva Convention with the intention of using prisoners of war for all kinds of work or for some other reason. But this again seems to have encountered considerable resistance in German military and diplomatic circles. At any rate nothing has happened yet. I have the feeling, which I must admit is based largely on instinct, that the German answer may take the form of demanding solemn assurances as to the strict maintenance of the Geneva Convention, which assurances we should of course immediately give.

3. I remain hopeful that with time and patience we shall succeed in relieving our officers and men from the affront to which they have been subjected. Ends.

His Majesty's Minister at Berne reports that M. Pilet Golaz, Swiss Minister for Foreign Affairs, informed him on October 26 that even before receipt of our request to press German Government for early reply he had again telegraphed Berlin asking for earliest possible reply. He had also on October 23 spoken to the German Minister again. He had added on his own part the proposal that shackling should cease at an agreed hour and day on both sides. Rights and wrongs of the origin of these measures could be left for subsequent discussion.

He awaited German reply.

He added confidentially that there were many proofs of Hitler's irritability and nervousness recently, for instance in the case of Denmark. He hoped that His Majesty's Government would exercise patience in the hope of a solution.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. My telegram No. 2642 of October 28th.

I feel that there is a pressing need for initiative to be taken on our part to endeavour to put an end to shackling of prisoners of war, especially as in the light of Mr. Churchill's telegram of October 28th²¹⁸ there appears to be no prospect of any action being taken by the United Kingdom Government pending a reply from Germany, nor is there any reason to suppose that any reply from Germany will be forthcoming through the Protecting Power. This raises the question of what our next step should be. It appears to me that the opportunity is now less favourable for our taking the initiative in making a statement along the lines proposed in your telegram No. 231 to the Dominions Office²¹⁹. As enemy propaganda has in the past few days dropped the prisoners of war question and the threats to denounce the Geneva Convention, [if] a statement along lines previously suggested were now made, [it] would seem too much like weakening on our side.

There seem to be three alternative policies which might be adopted in the circumstances —

(1) To continue to wait for a reply from the German Government as suggested in Mr. Churchill's telegram. For the reasons outlined above and in my ²¹⁷ Voir le document 441.

²¹⁸ Document 444.

²¹⁹ Document 440.

telegram No. 2642²²⁰ I do not think it reasonable to continue to follow a course of action which has brought no results after more than three weeks of waiting.

(2) To take advantage of the suggestion contained in Circular D. 437 of October 28th made by M. Pilet Golaz that shackling should cease at an agreed hour and day on both sides. To adopt this course we should, in agreement with the United Kingdom Government, indicate to the Protecting Power that an invitation made to both belligerents simultaneously to unshackle prisoners of war, would be agreeable to His Majesty's Governments, who would act immediately. If such an invitation were to come from the Protecting Power it would obviously provide a face saving way out for both sides.

In accepting the proposal of the Protecting Power, we could at the same time issue a public statement along the lines indicated in your telegram No. 231, denouncing the principle of using prisoners of war as hostages, confirming our adherence to the Prisoners of War Convention, and expressing our intention to hold the enemy Governments equally bound to fulfil their obligations.

(3) As a last resort it may be necessary, in order to make plain the intention of the Canadian Government, for us to notify the United Kingdom Government that having waited for an answer from the German Government for more than three weeks with no result, the Canadian Government, desirous of putting an end to the shackling of prisoners of war and adhering to the Prisoners of War Convention, proposes to make a separate notification to the Protecting Power that as from a certain date German prisoners of war will be unshackled in Canada, the enemy Government at the same time being also informed through the Protecting Power that they would be bound to fulfil their obligations in the terms and spirit of the Convention. It would naturally be essential for us in pursuing this course to avoid open difference with the United Kingdom Government, but a proposal on these lines might, if all else fails, be the most effective method of bringing pressure to bear on the Government here. The paramount consideration in our mind must of course be the welfare of our prisoners of war, and as indicated in the protest of the Senior British Officer at Oflag 7B, reported to you in Dominions Office telegram No. 425 of October 20th⁷ the shackling is having serious effects on the mental and physical health of the prisoners of war concerned.

MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following from the Prime Minister for the most secret and personal information of your Prime Minister, Begins: We are all very worried about this wretched business of tying up prisoners. The passage of days has strengthened the feeling of people in this country that we cannot match the enemy in this type of reprisal and that we should make a new effort to break the present deadlock. This opinion is clearly shared by the governments of South Africa and Australia, and, I believe also, by the government and people of the United States.

It would seem extremely doubtful that any reply from Germany will be forthcoming through the Protecting Power. In the circumstances it is becoming increasingly difficult for us to maintain and defend the action we have taken. There are additional dangers in prolonging the shackling. Within the last week we have received, through the Spanish Consul General in charge of Japanese interests, a vigorous protest[†] from the Japanese Government against the treatment of Japanese nationals evacuated from the Protected Area in British Columbia. The specific charges are wholly specious and easily rebutted. However, the language used in the protest and its presentation at this time make it only too apparent that the enemy are working up a concerted case for undermining the protection which the International Conventions now afford to prisoners of war and civilians in their power.

You will appreciate that the welfare of our prisoners of war is necessarily a foremost consideration in our mind. As indicated in the protest of the Senior British Officer at Oflag 7B quoted in Dominions Office telegram Circular D.425 of October 20th,[†] the shackling is having serious effect on the mental and physical health of the prisoners. I might add the fear of this is causing much anguish of mind to the parents and relatives of those of our men who are held prisoner in Europe and in Asia. Ends.

SECRET. Reference our telegram No. 231 and your telegram No. 435,²²¹ shackling of prisoners. The Canadian Government feel strongly that a serious and early effort should be made to break the present deadlock. We are still of the opinion that a declaration of policy along the lines suggested in our telegram under reference, followed by the immediate unshackling of enemy prisoners, offers the best prospect of early action. We are not, however, wedded to this particular proposal, though the United States and the Union of South Africa both welcomed it as a helpful initiative. We recognize that there is a risk that a declaration such as we propose, denouncing enemy conduct and threatening punishment of war criminals, might minimize the effectiveness of our offer to release prisoners and fail to bring about desired response from the German Government. As a possible alternative, consideration has been given to simply unshackling prisoners from a fixed date, reserving declaration of policy respecting Geneva Convention, etc., for a later occasion.

There is no doubt that the misgivings with which public opinion in Canada viewed our participation in a policy of reprisal have grown steadily. With the lapse of weeks, opinion on the question has hardened and the anxiety, particularly of friends and relatives of war prisoners, has greatly increased.

In order to avoid an open difference with your Government, which would certainly have been exploited by enemy propaganda, we felt compelled to apply the method of token reprisal. We cannot continue this policy indefinitely and we see no signs that it is achieving its intended purpose. In the circumstances we would strongly urge upon you the advisability of our two Governments fixing a near date, say November 10th, on which we would unshackle the German prisoners in our hands. Further consideration could be given in the meantime to the appropriateness of coupling this action with a declaration of policy in respect of our maintenance of the Geneva Convention and to the particular points which such a declaration should contain.

We would be prepared to follow the course suggested in the preceding paragraph without further communication with the enemy through the Protecting Power. It might be thought, however, that the end in view could be better attained by suggesting to the Protecting Power that it should invite both belligerents simultaneously to unshackle prisoners of war. That Government could be informed that such an invitation would be agreeable to the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments who would act immediately on its receipt. If such an invitation were to come from the Protecting Power it might provide a way out of the present impasse which would be acceptable to the enemy as well as to ourselves.

hard about these 400 prisoners²²² whom you can tie up as loosely as you please. Very great events are impending and we may feel much easier in a little while. The Hitler movement to accuse us of atrocities and to repudiate the Geneva Convention is dying down. Our firm attitude has made its impression on the German Foreign Office and German High Command. It would be a thousand pities to give in to this bully and make a feature of it at this juncture. Such an advertised surrender might well lead to a prolongation of these indignities on your men and ours. I shall certainly ask Parliament next week to wait longer for the results of the Swiss mediation and I have very little doubt that the House of Commons will accord us this help in our responsibilities and difficulties. Better days are coming. All good wishes. Ends.

MOST SECRET. Personal for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Opportunity arose yesterday for discussing with Cripps question of reprisals on prisoners. He strongly supported the initial countermeasures on ground that United Kingdom Government had good evidence that decision to bind Dieppe prisoners was Hitler's own and was opposed by German army and Foreign Office; if our reply had been only verbal protest this would have meant victory for Hitler inside Germany and might have led to treatment of our prisoners as hostages in other respects. He considers the countermeasures have kept alive differences inside Germany and have probably stopped further retaliation. The belief that German action was personal decision of Hitler was dominating factor in deciding British policy.

He said emphatically that there was no intention of allowing present situation to continue indefinitely or entering any contest with Germany; there was still prospect that German Government would reply to approach by Protecting Power especially since they might well have lost their numerical advantage in number of prisoners held as result of our Egyptian victory. Should the deadlock continue the difficulty was to find a suitable occasion for further action by us. He suggested that if no German reply arrived within a week the Swiss Government might be asked to approach Germany again and we might then untie the German prisoners as evidence of our intentions without committing ourselves not to bind them again. He considers it important to keep open the breach between Hitler and the Army on this question and to avoid giving Hitler a victory.

I believe Cripps fully appreciates the difficult position in which Canada was placed by lack of initial consultation and by some of the later moves here.

You will have noted from my telegram of even date No. 2778 that Wrong had the opportunity of discussing the problem with Sir Stafford Cripps when he met him yesterday and that Cripps was able to throw some light on the background of the decision of the United Kingdom Government.

Preiswerk²²³, whom I saw today, confirms the view that the decision to bind the Dieppe prisoners was Hitler's own and is opposed by the German Army and Foreign Office. Naturally he would not like to be quoted on this information but he told me that the German Legation in Berne had expressed itself in disagreement with reprisals policy and that the Oberkommando of prisoners of war in Germany also did not favour this policy.

Mr. Churchill was asked in the House of Commons today whether he had any statement to make and he replied that he would be making a statement shortly on the subject. I understand that he will make reference to the shackling of

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR

4. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that he had received a personal communication from Mr. Churchill, previously made known to the Cabinet, urging that any action in regard to the shackling of prisoners of war be deferred.

A reply had been sent expressing willingness to let the question stand for the moment in view of the developments in North Africa, but reaffirming the hope that some solution might be found.

(Telegrams 227, Dominions Office to External Affairs, November 4, and 242, External Affairs to Dominions Office, November 7, 1942).

5. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE reported that Colonel Clarke, who was in charge of prisoners' welfare, in the Department, urged the desirability of an open expression of Canada's intention to abide by the Geneva Convention, particularly in view of pending negotiations with the Japanese.

6. MR. RALSTON pointed out that, because of the large number of German prisoners captured in Egypt, a declaration by the United Kingdom could not now be interpreted as an evidence of weakness. The present circumstances gave added weight to the Canadian proposals.

7. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that a further communication be sent to the United Kingdom expressing the view that the successes in Egypt strengthened the case for immediate action to put an end to the shackling of prisoners, and for a joint declaration along the lines proposed in earlier communications.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 457

London, November 12, 1942

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 453 of November 11th[†], manacling of prisoners.

1. Speaking unofficially to Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs on November 10th, Swiss Minister said his impression was there were some influences in Berlin both in Foreign Office and in German High Command who would like to see this matter brought to an end but that Hitler and Ribbentrop were both obdurate. He had heard no more on subject from his Government recently but hoped very much that we would be able to avoid any public discussion here. He had much admired restraint that had been shown and he felt sure public discussion would only increase the difficulty of final solution.

2. Mr. Eden agreed and said, also speaking unofficially, that if Swiss Minister's representative should happen to ask to see one of camps where German prisoners of war were being shackled here he would probably find that hours of shackling had been reduced. Minister welcomed this move which he thought was well calculated to strengthen hands of his Government to give material to those in Berlin who disliked this whole practice. He would certainly report matter to his Government and he gave Mr. Eden to understand that Head of Special Division of Legation would take an early opportunity of seeing position for himself.

3. After thanking Mr. Eden for co-operative attitude of United Kingdom Government in this question, Minister referred to Swiss Foreign Minister's personal suggestion made to German Government that shackling should cease at an agreed hour and day on both sides. (See my telegram Circular D. 437, October 28th). Mr. Eden said he thought it a good one and if Germans were prepared to agree with it he felt confident that for our part we would be willing to do so also. He did not however get impression that Swiss Minister thought that a solution could easily be found even with new material given to him.

The steady improvement in the general military situation during the past month and in particular the very considerable increase in the number of German prisoners in Allied hands from the operations in North Africa, put us in a much stronger position than heretofore to commence the unshackling of prisoners of war. We feel the Swiss Minister of Foreign Affairs should be asked to revive his suggestion transmitted in your telegram Circular D. 437 of October 28th that shackling should cease at an agreed hour and day on both sides. We are strongly of the opinion that we should indicate to the Swiss Government that if they would propose publicly and simultaneously to us and to the Germans that shackling should cease from a near hour and day to be specified in the Swiss proposal, that such an invitation would be agreeable to our Governments who would be prepared to act on it immediately and unconditionally.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Position here as regards shackling of prisoners of war remains as unsatisfactory as ever. I was given to understand by Attlee that, as a result of your telegram to the Dominions Office No. 255 of November 20th, it has been decided to approach Swiss Government in the sense of your recommendation. It now appears that nothing at all has been done except to enquire of the Swiss how the matter stands (see Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 480 of November 26th.²²⁶) The United Kingdom Government has not altered the point of view shown in Eden's reply to the Swiss Minister in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 457 of November 12th. This was to the effect that the United Kingdom Government would be glad if the Swiss Government would make an approach to the German and British Governments asking both to unshackle their prisoners and that, if this were done, the British Government would take action on the understanding, however, that the German Government did likewise. This suggests the conditional action which was envisaged in original communication to the Swiss Government on October 13th²²⁶, and it now appears that this is the proposal which still stands and to which the Swiss are now urged to obtain a reply. Our suggestion is, of course, that we should unconditionally unshackle our prisoners if asked to do so by the Swiss. There has been some confusion of mind over the difference between the two proposals, and I endeavoured this afternoon to make clear what our suggestion was and asked that it should be given consideration. As a result of this, Attlee is sending a minute to the Prime Minister on the subject asking that our proposal should be considered. I have no expectation, however, that this will lead to any definite results, as the latter's attitude apparently has remained unchanged from the beginning. I feel now that, without some definite action on our part, the matter will drag on indefinitely with the danger of deterioration in position and that meanwhile nothing will be done which might lead to alleviation of condition of the prisoners themselves. My considered view is now that the Government of Canada should set a day on which German prisoners in their hands will be unshackled and inform United Kingdom Government that this has been decided. The Government here, of course, would have to take similar action in connection with the prisoners in their hands. I am sure that such a course would be a relief to most of those concerned here, including nearly all the members of the War Cabinet. Unless we take such action, I can see no other way of ending the impasse. As one of the Detaining Powers with a very special interest in this particular issue, both because of our Canadian prisoners in Germany and the large number of German prisoners in our own hands, we are in the circumstances I feel fully entitled to take such action.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS OF WAR

29. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES reported that a telegram from the Canadian High Commissioner in Great Britain, reporting that the Protecting Power had forwarded a reply from the German government regarding the unshackling of prisoners of war, had been received.

The German government refused to consider unshackling unless it received official intimation that the British government had issued a confession of its error and a general order forbidding any binding of prisoners in the future.

(Telegram No. 2970, High Commissioner in the U.K., to External Affairs, November 30, 1942).[†]

30. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that the United Kingdom had made no answer to the Canadian communication of November the 20th, sent in accordance with the last decision of the War Committee. Mr. Massey was of the opinion that no further action could be expected from the United Kingdom at the moment, and recommended that the Canadian government set a date on which German prisoners would be unshackled unconditionally and inform the U.K. government that this had been decided upon.

(Telegram No. 2939, High Commissioner in the U.K., to External Affairs, November 26, 1942).

31. THE SECRETARY reported that a communication had been received from the Chairman of the Wartime Information Board[†], suggesting that Canada should, if necessary, take independent action, that such a step would have a very beneficial effect on Canadian public opinion, that it would enhance Canada's stature abroad, and that it would tend to offset unfriendly talk of British imperialism.

32. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE was of the opinion that Canada should proceed at once to inform the United Kingdom that, on a given date, Canada intended to communicate directly with the Swiss government to the effect that if they extended an invitation to both sides to unshackle, Canada would comply unconditionally.

33. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that the government of the United Kingdom should be informed through the Canadian High Commissioner that, in the circumstances, the Canadian government proposed to take independent action, with a view to effecting the unshackling of prisoners of war, either by a direct approach to the Swiss government in the sense of our telegram of November the 20th, or by fixing an early date on which shackling of prisoners in Canada would cease, irrespective of action taken by the U.K. or German governments.

London, December 1, 1942

SECRET. My telegram of November 16th, Circular D. 462.[†] Following telegrams have been received from His Majesty's Minister at Berne, Begins: German Ministry of Foreign Affairs handed to Swiss Minister, Berlin, on November 24th, a bitterly controversial and uncompromising reply, concluding in substance as follows:

“In these circumstances the German Government cannot consider further the question of removal of countermeasures it has ordered before it has received through the Swiss Government an official intimation that the British Government has issued to its troops an entire confession and general order forbidding under severe penalties any binding (Fesselung) of prisoners and also possession of bonds (Fesseln) for this purpose. Should it be proved that the British Government is still unwilling to desist from the methods it has hitherto adopted in its treatment of prisoners and that British troops continue to be guilty of abuses of the nature described, the German Government will for its part also be constrained to regard the corresponding provisions of the Hague and Geneva Conventions as no longer binding.”

Following is full note handed over by the German Minister for Foreign Affairs to the Swiss Legation at Berlin:

1. The German Government sharply rejects declaration and protest made by the British Government. Both are gist of a vain attempt to evade main question which concerns treatment of prisoners of war. If either belligerent has right to protest against breaches of Prisoners of War Convention, the German Government and not the British have that right.

2. Ever since German prisoners have been in British hands the German Government have repeatedly noted the most serious offenses committed by the British against the spirit of Geneva Convention. German soldiers have been repeatedly robbed and opportunely maltreated by British troops. British guards have taken away their valuables and their possessions by force or stolen them, have torn off their decorations and badges and rank, and have tortured them in all possible ways in particular during transport and in camps. British Commandants have refused them food and medical attention in order to compel them to give information and in the course of interrogations have inflicted most ignoble treatment on them. The rights of German prisoners of war to humane treatment protection against violence and respect of their persons and honour have been continually disregarded by British troops and Commanders. The German Government have been repeatedly compelled to demand intervention of Protecting Power against this illegal action. The German High Command have given a full list of these incidents in an official declaration of opinion (not telegraphed, as text was broadcast) which proves that British troops are guilty of the most unheard of breaches of belligerent rights and in countless cases have acted against International Agreements concerning usages of war. Measures taken by British for binding of prisoners of war which have now led to countermeasures by the German Government are only a further link in the same chain of British breaches of international laws.

3. The public statements which the British Government have made concerning binding of German prisoners of war are typical of British methods. As public statements made by the German High Command explained, that the British Government have not only denied that orders were given out for binding of prisoners of war but also the fact that such binding took place. When they could no longer contradict irrefutable German proof that such orders had been issued they stated that these orders were unauthorized but still maintained that orders were never carried out. When this assertion was refuted by facts brought to light by the Germans, the British Government finally attempted to justify the binding by specious arguments and to represent that German reprisal measures were a breach of Convention. To justify their action the British Government tried to establish a difference between treatment of prisoners of war on the battlefield and their treatment when they had been brought into enemy territory, and tried to maintain that principles of Geneva Convention (group corrupt) application on the battlefield. This false interpretation of Prisoners of War Convention, which is indisputably refuted by text of Convention itself, is characteristic of conception of British Government that soldiers immediately after their capture are handed over to entirely arbitrary powers of their captors. It is clear that chief principles of Convention are applicable at and from the first moment of capture. When belligerent power, as English did in the case of German prisoners taken at Dieppe and Sark, contravenes fundamental principles of Convention, that power cannot invoke that same Convention in its favour and demand of its opponent that its own prisoners should not be treated in the same way. [That] The English interpret the Convention, according to which a belligerent power may commit the most serious breaches of International Law in handling of prisoners of war in its hands, and further refuse to discontinue such practice, while its opponent is obliged to accept this in silence and to make not the slightest alteration in treatment of prisoners of war in its hands, is absurd and would make the whole Geneva Convention illusory.

Part one ends, part two to follow. Ends.

Further telegram will be sent as soon as possible.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 494

London, December 1, 1942

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 492 of December 1st. Following is summary of rest of German note, Begins:

4. The German Government maintains that any binding of prisoners of war is completely incompatible with the most elementary rules of a humane and soldierly conduct of the war and cannot be justified by any specious arguments. Further, the particulars disclosed in publication made by the German High Command on October 16th brings out that this binding was carried out by British troops in a manner amounting to cruelty. The English attempt to present these measures as an assurance of safety of prisoners themselves can only be described as a complete distortion of the facts. The German Government is in possession of material from which it follows beyond doubt that British troops are systematically instructed in methods of binding prisoners of war. Thus the Captain Instructor for measures of close fighting at special training centre of British Army, W.E. Fairbairn, has published a book with the title of "All-in Fighting" in which detailed instruction is given by means of illustrations in methods of binding and in treacherous attacks on German soldiers.

5. A further proof that the British Government in itself [sic] presents methods of waging war, is in no way entitled to be advocate of Geneva Convention, is provided in a specially striking manner by the attached White Book on fighting in Crete in 1941. The collection of declarations under oath therein contained presents such a frightful picture of the actions of British troops towards German soldiers who had fallen defenceless into their hands, that the German Government has hitherto refrained from publishing this matter.

6. As regards statement in verbal note to the Swiss Legation that the British Government is prepared to relinquish countermeasures which it has considered justified if the German authorities desist from further unwarrantable countermeasures ordered by them, the German Government declares as follows:

As it appears above the British Government adopted a completely obscure attitude in matter of binding prisoners of war. Thus for example on the one hand it denies that it ever ordered this binding while, on the other hand, it describes this measure as occasionally necessary and seeks to justify it. In these circumstances the German Government cannot consider further question of removal of countermeasures it has ordered before it has received through the Swiss Government an official intimation that the British Government has issued to its troops an entirely categorical and general order forbidding under severe penalties any binding (Fesselung) of prisoners of war and also possession of bonds (Fesseln) for the purpose.

The German Government insists, thus providing itself with a guarantee, that in future, German prisoners of war shall not run the risk of being bound by British troops.

In conclusion the German Government must refer the following consideration should it be proved that the British Government is still unwilling to desist from the methods it has hitherto adopted in the treatment of prisoners, and that British troops continue to be guilty of abuses of the nature described, the German Government would, for its part, also be constrained to regard corresponding provisions of The Hague and Geneva Conventions as no longer binding. For it is self-evident that condition of application of International Agreements that other party to these Agreements should observe them. Ends.

Having in mind that so far as is known the great majority of prisoners shackled by the Germans are Canadians and that Canada is for practical purposes the detaining power in respect of the majority of the German prisoners who have been chained in reprisal, it seems to us quite inappropriate that the note quoted in Circular D. 505 which H.M. TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 519

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 518. Following message received tonight from His Majesty's Minister at Berne, Begins: M. Pilet Golaz communicated to me this afternoon a note (see my telegram Circular D. 520) having just previously made an identical communication to the German Minister.

2. He informed me at the same time that Swiss Government would issue a communiqué at or shortly after noon tomorrow December 8th stating generally that they were convinced that shackling of prisoners had been reluctantly resorted to by the Governments concerned and that they therefore in their quality of Protecting Power had proposed that the Governments concerned should simultaneously release all shackled prisoners.

3. M. Pilet Golaz added that in the interests of prisoners of war he attached very great importance to the following points:

(a) No leakage of any kind in the press or broadcasts or otherwise should be permitted before the communiqué was issued.

(b) Nothing should be said in Parliament or elsewhere from which the German Government could conclude or infer that the Swiss Government's action was due to the initiative of His Majesty's Government.

(c) It would thus be undesirable that the United Kingdom and Canadian Governments should release prisoners too soon after receipt of the Swiss Government's invitation. German Government might, he feared, suspect previous consultation if we release prisoners before December 12th. Ends.

In view of above we have decided to postpone proposed announcement and take no action until December 12th.

London, December 8, 1942

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 519. Following is summary of note communicated by the Swiss Minister for Foreign Affairs, Begins: Federal Political Department deplores daily shackling of large number of prisoners of war in Great Britain, Canada and Germany, and is convinced that this situation, which is contrary to Geneva Convention 1929, has come about unwillingly, resulting as it does from divergencies of opinion between Great Britain, Canada and Germany — who are all three inspired by similar desire to ensure scrupulous observation of Convention — explore its scope and application.[sic]

Switzerland therefore, as Protecting Power both of British interests in Germany and German interests in the British Empire, feels it her duty to suggest to sympathetic consideration of British, Canadian and German Governments objective which they all have in view might be pursued without infliction of further sufferings on prisoners of war deserving equal and reciprocal respect. Indeed Swiss Government feel that that aim would be more easily attained if reprisals, under which British and Canadian as well as German soldiers are suffering severely, are brought to an end.

The approach of Christmas offers the belligerent Powers an opportunity to terminate, without prejudice, matter in dispute, a state of things manifestly contrary to principle of humanity which it is the duty of the Protecting Power to safeguard. In order to facilitate agreement on a date for cessation of reprisals on both sides, Protecting Power sees no option but to propose one itself. Thus on basis and in spirit of Article 87(1) of Geneva Convention it ventures to suggest simultaneously to British, Canadian and German Governments to free all prisoners in their hands from shackling (entraves) on Monday December 14th, 1942, at 10:00 hours.

Political Department earnestly trusts that this proposal will be accepted. Ends.

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. Following most secret and personal from Prime Minister for Prime Minister, Begins: It was very pleasant to hear your voice tonight. Please refer to our telegram Circular D. 514, secret, of December 5th[†], about the Germans intending to remove all shackles during Christmas week etc. On this we had decided to advise immediate unshackling considering that this was an excellent opportunity of breaking the deadlock.

2. However since our telegram to you Circular D. 518, December 7th[†], the message set out in our following telegrams Circular D. 519 and 520 have come in from the Swiss Protecting Power. In these circumstances we propose to say and do nothing as they request until the 12th when I hope this matter will be settled in accordance with your wishes and our men relieved from the penalties they bear. Thank you so much for agreeing to this short further delay in achieving what you and we both have at heart. Having appealed to Mr. Pilet Golaz we ought to be guided by that advice as long as it promises a fruitful result. Ends.

MOST IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram No. 252 of December 9th[†], paragraph 3, (fourth). His Majesty's Minister at Berne has strongly urged that reply should be delivered not later than tomorrow December 15th.

2. In these circumstances we are instructing His Majesty's Minister to communicate following reply to the Swiss Government, Begins: His Majesty's Governments in the United Kingdom and Canada welcome the initiative of the Swiss Government in proposing simultaneously to United Kingdom, Canada and the German Governments on December 8th that prisoners of war who have been shackled in the United Kingdom, Canada, and Germany should be released from their shackles on December 15th. As evidence of desire of United Kingdom and Canadian Governments to respond fully and promptly to spirit in which Swiss proposal is made, they gave orders that all German prisoners of war who had been shackled should be unshackled without delay and those prisoners of war were freed from their shackles on December 12th. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 563

London, December 19, 1942

My telegram Circular D. 547.[†] Swiss Minister for Foreign Affairs handed to His Majesty's Minister at Berne on December 17th aide-mémoire substance of which is contained in my immediately following telegram. Minister for Foreign Affairs said that he would give German Minister later on same day a similar aide-mémoire which would contain —

- (a) The British reply;
- (b) The statement that the Swiss Government had communicated the German reply officially to the British Government;
- (c) The hope that the German Government would now un-manacle British prisoners without waiting for any further discussion of original cause of reprisals;
- (d) The information that the Swiss Government had expressed the hope that the British Government would confirm that prisoners on the battlefield were not to be manacled in the future.

2. M. Pilet Golaz said that after considerable reflection he had decided to express this hope to us officially for three reasons —

- (a) In order if possible to secure the liberation from their manacles of British prisoners of war;
- (b) In order to secure a settlement thereby maintaining the sanctity of the Geneva Conventions;
- (c) To create circumstances in which the question of severely wounded could be taken up again.

3. Minister for Foreign Affairs thought that the German Government (or rather the German leaders) would be less pleased than ourselves with the action he was now taking but he hoped that the approach of Christmas might act as a solvent. He was opposed to any publication of correspondence before negotiations had reached satisfactory conclusion.

SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Following is substance of Swiss aide-mémoire.

Receipt is acknowledged of His Majesty's Minister's note of December 15th.²²⁸

Federal Political Department has not failed so to inform German Legation, expressing hope that current negotiations would thereby be facilitated and that British and Canadian prisoners in Germany would be released without awaiting their issue. On the other hand, German Government has declared its readiness to renounce its own reprisals as soon as it knew through the Swiss Government that the British Government had forbidden, under penalty and by categorical and general order the shackling of prisoners, and possession of shackles for this purpose. Since by its note of September 3rd (see War Office statement in paragraph 3 of my telegram Circular D. 408)²²⁹ His Majesty's Legation has intimated that His Majesty's Government had cancelled order to take handcuffs into battle if such order however was issued. Department hopes that His Majesty's Government will find no great difficulty in confirming that they maintain same view thus enabling the Department to assure the German Government that British and Canadian troops have orders not to shackle (ligoter) captured combatants, taking of handcuffs (menottes) into battle for this purpose thus constituting, if it occurred, a breach of discipline.

IMPORTANT. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 590 of December 29th.[†] His Majesty's Minister Berne was informed by Swiss Government December 29th that according to telegraphic report just received from Swiss Legation, Berlin, all British prisoners were unshackled at 1700 hours on December 24th and remained unbound for rest of that day and for whole of Christmas day.

Shackling was, however, resumed on December 26th. In official note to Swiss Legation, in which this communication was made, it was stated that shackling would continue until official intimation postulated in German note November 24th (see 6 of my telegram Circular D. 494 of December 1st and my telegram Circular D. 547 of December 15th[†]) had reached German Government.

Kingdom acknowledge receipt of communication handed over by M. Pilet Gollaz to His Majesty's Minister, Berne, on December 17th informing him of attitude of German Government in regard to question of tying of hands of prisoners of war.

His Majesty's Government desires to point out to Swiss Government that whatever allegations German Government may make as to action taken by British soldiers on the field of battle, these can provide no possible justification for manacling of British prisoners of war in the hands of the German Government. Under Article 2 of International Convention relative to treatment of prisoners of war, the treatment of such prisoners as hostages and their subjection to measures of reprisal, is expressly forbidden.

His Majesty's Government's position in this matter was clearly stated in communication made by His Majesty's Minister to Swiss Foreign Minister on October 13th and announced in House of Commons by the Prime Minister on same date²³⁰, in which they declared they had never countenanced any general order for tying up of prisoners of war on the field of battle. They added, however, that such a process might be necessary from time to time under stress of circumstances and might indeed be in best interests of safety of prisoners themselves. To this statement, which is hereby reaffirmed, they have nothing to add. Ends.

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL. Your telegram No. 102 of January 22nd[†] and my immediately following telegrams Nos. 194 and 195[†] of January 26th. Shackling of prisoners of war.

I have personally discussed the shackling problem on the highest level and I feel that to enable you to have the clearest possible picture of views of United Kingdom Government on what reply should be made to the Swiss note of December 17th, I am quoting in my immediately following telegrams verbatim two documents which have been given to me in the strictest confidence. They should, under no consideration, be referred to in any communication to the United Kingdom Government. Telegram No. 195 sets out the views of the General Staff on the tying of prisoners of war hands in the field of battle and, as you will see, adduces reasons why the United Kingdom authorities cannot agree to meeting the general demand that we should give an undertaking not to tie the hands of prisoners of war under any circumstance. I should mention that I have had an opportunity now of discussing the matter with General Stuart who has also spoken personally to the Adjutant General and that he has expressed agreement with the views set out in this paper. He is cabling direct to National Defence.

As regards the text contained in my telegram No. 194, I should explain this represents a tentative text prepared by the Foreign Office. I am sending it to you in the strictest confidence to enable you to judge the kind of reply which the United Kingdom Government has in mind.

I am informed that the whole shackling problem is to be considered by the War Cabinet at noon tomorrow, January 27, when a revised text of a reply to the Swiss Government will be submitted to you if it receives Cabinet approval.

TELEGRAM 194

MOST SECRET AND STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL. Following is the tentative draft of reply from the United Kingdom Government referred to in my telegram No. 193 of January 26th, Begins: His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom acknowledge receipt of the communication handed by M. Pilet Golaz to His Majesty's Minister at Berne on December 17th informing him of the views of the German Government in regard to the binding of prisoners of war.

2. There appears to be some misapprehension as to the policy of His Majesty's Government in this matter and they desire to take this opportunity of explaining their attitude.

3. His Majesty's Government reaffirm their determination to adhere scrupulously to the provisions of the Geneva Convention and they have taken steps by the issue of orders to all Commanders in the Field, to ensure that all ranks shall be acquainted with and observe the terms of the Convention with particular reference to treatment of prisoners of war immediately after capture. In these orders the general binding of prisoners of war is strictly forbidden. Attention, however, is called to the following consideration. It is the duty of a prisoner of war during operations to escape or to impede his captors if he can do so. It is equally the duty of every soldier to prevent any such action by a prisoner of war who may be in his keeping during operations. In fulfilment of this duty special measures of restraint, such as the binding of prisoners, may be adopted if the operational conditions make it essential but measures must be carried out in a humane manner and as soon as the emergency which necessitated them is over they must be at once discontinued.

4. In the German communication it is asserted that

“His Majesty’s Government have attempted to establish a difference between the treatment of prisoners of war on the battle-field and their treatment when they have been brought into enemy territory and that they maintain that the principles of the Geneva Convention have no application on the battle-field”.

As will be clear from the orders, of which a summary is given in the preceding paragraph, the view of His Majesty’s Government is that the express provisions of Article 1 of the Geneva Convention show that a combatant is deemed to be a prisoner of war and entitled to the protection accorded by the relevant provisions of that Convention as soon as he has been captured by the enemy. On this point, therefore, it appears that there is no disagreement between the two Governments.

5. His Majesty’s Government confidently expect that in the light of these explanations the necessary orders will be issued by the German High Command for the removal of the countermeasures taken against British prisoners of war. Ends.

London, January 27, 1943

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET AND STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL. Reference Dominions Office telegram No. 21 of January 27th[†] and my telegram No. 194 of January 26th. Shackling of prisoners of war.

1. In view of the decision of the military authorities in which General Stuart and General McNaughton concur, that it is not possible to give an undertaking to the Germans not to tie the hands of prisoners of war in special circumstances in the field, it is therefore obviously impossible to give the categorical undertaking required by the Germans in the Swiss note of December 17th, reported in Dominions Office telegram [Circular D.] No. 564 of December 19th, as a result of which the Germans would unshackle our prisoners of war.

2. However there still remains the question of whether or not the reply we make to the Swiss note would give the Germans an opportunity of denouncing the Geneva Conventions, and in this connection the Prime Minister’s statement, which is referred to in the draft submitted in telegram No. 8²³¹ and which now appears to have been approved by the United Kingdom Cabinet in preference to the tentative draft submitted in my No. 194 of January 26th, might give rise to the interpretation apparently put on it by the Germans that we do not consider the Geneva Conventions as binding on the battlefield. The phrase actually employed, (see my [sic] Circular D. 412 of October 13)²³² was “the Geneva Convention upon the treatment of prisoners of war does not attempt to regulate what happens in the actual fighting”.

3. Since it is in our interest to try and keep the Germans to the Geneva Conventions so long as it is possible, I feel that a clear indication of our intentions along the lines suggested in the tentative draft contained in my telegram No. 194 of January 26th is clearly preferable to the reiteration of the somewhat ambiguous statement contained in the draft submitted in Dominions Office telegram No. 8 of January 12th.

4. I should stress again that the tentative draft which I reported in my telegram No. 194 was given to me in strict confidence and was only a proposal to the Cabinet here and of course should in no circumstances be referred to in any communication to the United Kingdom Government.

1. In view of the altered opinion given by Generals Stuart and McNaughton, we agree that undertaking demanded by Germans not to bind prisoners in any circumstances cannot be given.

2. The Minister of National Defence shares your view that the reply to the Swiss note of December 17th should be on the lines of the Foreign Office draft cited in your telegram No. 194 (with changes indicated below) in place of draft quoted in Dominions Office telegram No. 8 of January 12th which has been approved by British War Cabinet. only be countenanced when particular operational conditions make it essential in the interests of the safety of the prisoner and when any other action would be less humane; such measures must be carried out in a humane manner and must be at once discontinued immediately they are no longer required to prevent the prisoner's escape."

(c) The final paragraph of the draft should preferably be deleted.

4. We have not yet received a reply to the request for information on actual conditions of shackled prisoners which was made in paragraph 5 of our telegram 102 of January 22.[†]

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 162

London, March 18, 1943

SECRET. Following is summary of German reply, Begins: German Government has taken note of Declaration of the British and Canadian Governments as communicated by the Swiss Government on February 18th on question of shackling of prisoners of war. German Government can only conclude that these two Governments are still adopting an attitude which is incompatible with the terms of the Geneva Prisoners of War Convention, and with the most elementary rule of humane and soldierly conduct of the war.

It is indeed stated in the Declaration that shackling of prisoners is in principle forbidden to British and Canadian Senior Officers, that handcuffs might not therefore be carried by the latter, and that disregard of these orders would be punished as contrary to discipline. Declaration, however, goes on to emphasize that shackling of prisoners is permissible and even a matter of duty if it appears to be called for by particular circumstances of operations in order to prevent flight or overcome resistance of a captured soldier.

It is obvious that prohibition in principle of shackling is made completely illusory by this reservation. It is thus in practice left entirely to the full choice of British and Canadian troops to extend shackling of captured German soldiers to any extent and to act in this respect in future as they acted in Dieppe and Sark, as shown by sworn protocol published by the German Army.

If it is brought out in the Declaration that British and Canadian troops carry no handcuffs, this point has no significance. The German Government has never complained that German nationals were handcuffed; on the contrary it is clear from the protocol that captured German soldiers in question were shackled with cords by British and Canadian troops, and indeed in most brutal manner and with refined cruelty. Since British and Canadian Governments in their present Declaration hold out this conduct as being permissible and in certain circumstances even necessary, it is plain that their troops are equipped with corresponding means of shackling.

Allegation in Declaration that shackling is in certain circumstances a less evil, and in interests of security of prisoners, is an empty and specious argument. German Government can claim in comparison with British and Canadian forces an incomparably greater number of prisoners and needs no instruction in the laws and usages of war. German soldiers have never shackled British or Canadian soldiers after capturing them and have never felt the need of such a measure. It is therefore completely out of place for the British and Canadian Governments now to attempt to give lessons to the German Army. The German Government continues firmly to maintain the attitude that all shackling of prisoners of war is inadmissible, nor can it be justified by arguments of any kind. The German Government have therefore made withdrawal of reprisal measures, to which they were forced by shackling law [order?] carried out by British and Canadian troops, dependent on their obtaining security against the danger that German prisoners of war should be shackled in the future. German Government, therefore, made simple demand which indeed as matter stands is a matter of course, that British and Canadian Governments should issue to their troops a complete categorical and general order which would forbid, under severe penalty, any shackling of prisoners of war, together with possession of shackles for this purpose. This demand of the German Government is not met by present Declaration of the two Governments, on the contrary, that Declaration proves that danger of German prisoners being shackled by British or Canadian troops will continue to exist in the future. The British and Canadian Governments therefore alone bear the responsibility if measures of reprisal exercised on the German side against British and Canadian prisoners of war continue in force. Ends.

German Foreign Office have since officially notified Swiss Government that shackling ceased on November 22nd, but latter's view was that publicity for this notification would be undesirable, and, in light of this view, we have considered whether any statement at all would be wise. It is, of course, essential not to run risk of shackling being reimposed, and, since Hitler's reaction to public comment is unpredictable, absence of any publicity would appear to be safest course. We have, therefore, reached conclusion that it would be best not to make any announcement, and we understand that Canadian Government are of same view. Position is being explained confidentially to press here with request that they will refrain from publishing any reports on subject which they may receive. We should be grateful if Dominion Governments would urge similar reticence on part of their own press.

[Ottawa,] September 12, 1943

I enclose a copy of a letter[†] addressed to you by Mr. Samuel Bronfman, President of the Canadian Jewish Congress, requesting that vigorous representations should be made to the French Government on the subject of the deportation to enemy territory of Jewish refugees in unoccupied France.

Such information as we have received on this question is certainly painful. Apparently a very large number of deportation orders have been issued, the execution of which in many instances would probably be equivalent to a sentence of death. The Vichy Government seems to be in process of returning to Germany refugees from German oppression.

On September 4th the State Department announced that they had made, through their Embassy at Vichy, the most vigorous protest against these measures. We have learned, through the Legation in Washington, that this protest was accompanied by a special request to exempt from the deportation orders all Jewish refugees in possession of the necessary documents to reach another country. The Legation also stated that they had learned confidentially that Mr. Hull intended to raise the whole matter with the French Ambassador; he has probably already done so.

I had intended to ask you, before the arrival of Mr. Bronfman's letter, whether you would agree to the question of these deportation orders being discussed with Mr. Ristelhueber. This might be done by sending for him and giving him a strong verbal protest on humanitarian grounds, which he would be asked to transmit to his Government. Now Mr. Bronfman has asked us to do just this, and I should be glad to know what action you wish me to take.

Ottawa, September 14, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Mr. Samuel Bronfman, President of the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies, has approached our Minister with a proposal that Canada receive part of a group of 5,000 Jewish children in unoccupied France, whose parents are reported to have been deported by the German authorities. It is alleged that these children are in immediate danger of deportation. We are advised that Jewish organizations in the United States have approached the United States Government with a similar proposal and expect to receive a favourable decision.

The letter from Mr. Bronfman urges an immediate decision and a waiver of all "technical details" to allow the children to move at once. I expect that in the term "technical details" are included such things as the mental and physical condition of the children which are not likely to be waived either by the United States or Canada.

If we are to do anything to help in this situation, we should co-operate with the United States authorities since they have probably the only facilities now available for the examination of the refugees. If any came to Canada, they would require a transit visé from the United States and I suppose the Jewish organizations would endeavour to charter a ship and bring them as one group into a U.S. port. Will you please send a wire to Washington and endeavour to find out what the United States proposes to do about accepting some of these children and, if possible, how many. If they are going to help, I think we should do so at the same time. It might be well to enquire what facilities the United States people have for determining fitness in unoccupied France.

Yours very truly,

[Ottawa,] September 15, 1942

With regard to our conversation yesterday and my memorandum of September 12th concerning the deportation of Jewish refugees from France, I saw Mr. Lageneste this afternoon in the absence of Mr. Ristelhueber. I asked him to convey to his Government the grave concern felt by the Canadian Government over the reports reaching them from numerous sources regarding the arrests in France on a very large scale of Jewish refugees, with the object of deporting them to Germany and Eastern Europe. It seemed scarcely credible that those who had found asylum from German persecution in France should be handed over to Germany now. I expressed the hope that the reports reaching the press from Switzerland and other places were greatly exaggerated, and that it was not too late for the French Government to resist German pressure. I asked him to let his Government know that we hoped that the deportations would be prevented, and that those who had been placed in concentration camps for deportation would shortly be released.

Mr. Lageneste received these representations in a frank and friendly way, expressing, off the record, his full agreement. He said that he had no official information on what was being done, but thought that there might have been some confusion between the anti-Semitic measures taken by the Germans in Occupied France with the actions of the Vichy Government. I replied that it seemed clear at least that there had been a large roundup of Jews in Unoccupied France, but it was not clear whether any deportations to Germany had actually occurred. He promised that he would pass the message on to his Government immediately. He remarked that he felt sure that Pétain was not anti-Semitic and he had never heard that Laval was by conviction an anti-Semite. He had the idea that the French authorities, in collaboration with the Church, might even be stimulating resistance to the deportation measures demanded by Germany in order to be able to tell the German Government that they could not carry them out. The Pope is reported to have joined in the protest through the Papal Nuncio in Vichy.

I attach a draft letter[†] for your signature²³⁵ to Mr. Samuel Bronfman, in reply to his letter to you of September 10th[†], of which a copy was enclosed with my earlier memorandum. I have heard from the Director of Immigration that Mr. Bronfman has approached Mr. Crerar with a proposal that Canada should consent to receive five thousand Jewish refugees, especially women and children, from Unoccupied France. This is a large order which, even if we were willing, we could not meet, as there is next to no transportation available. We have asked the Legation in Washington to find out whether any action in this sense is contemplated by the United States Government.

I think it would be desirable to let the press know that we have made representations to Vichy on this subject²³⁶. If you concur, I can say something about this at the departmental press conference on Thursday morning at 11 a.m.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

Following up my note of yesterday[†] with copy of letter to Mr. Saul Hayes about the movement of Jewish refugee children from Unoccupied France, I may say that it would I think be most advisable to pass the information on to the Legation at Washington so that the U.S. authorities may be advised of what we propose to do. I have been very careful not to disclose any of the confidential information that is contained in the Washington despatch WA-2565 of the 16th ultimo in answer to your EX-2183 of the 14th ultimo.[†] We have no organization in Unoccupied France, indeed we have no facilities for examining these children otherwise than at Lisbon²³⁷ but if the movement takes place we would be quite satisfied to accept the same standards of fitness that will be required by the U.S. authorities for the thousand children they expect to bring. MEMORANDUM

The Canadian authorities have given consideration to the admission to Canada of Jewish refugee children from Unoccupied France.

The Canadian authorities have informed the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies of Montreal that they will approve an initial movement of five hundred children to Canada, which may be increased by an additional five hundred when it is definitely ascertained that the second group can be properly placed and cared for.

This approval has been given subject to the following conditions:

(1) The provision of a satisfactory guarantee by the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies that they will assume full responsibility for all costs incurred.

(2) The United Jewish Refugee and War Relief agencies will assume responsibility for the reception, placement, and after-care of children in accordance with their offer; and to ensure that foster homes are suitable before placement of children.

(3) Questions of guardianship and control of children to be dealt with in accordance with provincial legislation by organizations responsible for placement and supervision.

(4) The children to be under eighteen years and physically and mentally fit.

(5) The children to be admitted as non-immigrants for the duration of the war without any obligation on the part of the Canadian authorities to later admit parents or relatives.

(6) While the Canadian authorities will co-operate in assisting the children to proceed to Canada, no responsibility is accepted for removing them from Unoccupied France.

(7) The United States authorities will be able to co-operate in determining the fitness of the children before they leave Europe and in making the transportation arrangements.

In this latter respect, it is the understanding of the Canadian authorities that the United States authorities have been approached by similar organizations in the United States. Should the decision of the United States authorities be favourable to admitting a group of children, it would be appreciated if the United States authorities could see their way to co-ordinate the transportation arrangements of the two groups.

As regards the examination of the children before their departure, the Canadian authorities have no organization in Unoccupied France that could undertake this task; the Canadian authorities, however, would be fully prepared to accept the same standards of fitness that will be required by the United States authorities and they would appreciate it if, when the examining staff is appointed, a provision could be made for the examining of the children who are proceeding to Canada.

Washington, December 31, 1943

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 2852 of November 25th regarding admission of Jewish refugee children into Canada from Unoccupied France.

2. We have been informed that of the children who had been examined in France a few hundred succeeded in reaching port before the occupation of the whole of France by the Germans. The Americans are prepared to take all of them except twenty; these twenty are not considered as coming within the requirements established by the United States because they are all between the ages of sixteen and eighteen. The United States authorities had set sixteen years as the maximum age for the children while we had set eighteen years as a maximum. The State Department has inquired whether we would be prepared to admit these twenty young people. I have advised them that provided they otherwise satisfy the United States requirements and had sponsors in Canada, there would be no objection to the United States Consul granting them transit visas.

I have etc.

TELETYPE EX-117

Ottawa, January 13, 1943

Your teletype WA-41 of 5th January[†] regarding Jewish refugee children. Immigration authorities here a few days ago received a cable from their London Office saying that 250 Jewish children accompanied by parents were in Spain and Portugal and there was a proposal to move those under 16 to the United States and those between 16 and 18 to Canada. They immediately notified their London Office that the agreement referred to in previous correspondence to move Jewish refugee children to Canada had nothing to do with such children accompanied by parents and that the latter children who are with their parents cannot be included in the movement.

It should, therefore, be made perfectly clear to United States authorities that Canadian authorities concerned will not accept the Jewish children who are in France, Spain or Portugal with their parents, and that, if the twenty mentioned in previous correspondence consist of such children, the action must be cancelled.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister

[Ottawa,] January 20, 1943

The United Kingdom Government have instructed Lord Halifax to make a comprehensive approach to the United States Government on the acute refugee problem which has developed in Europe. The nature and urgency of the problem and possible co-operative means towards its solution are ably set forth in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 26 of January 15th[†], of which you have received a copy. A brief statement was made in the British House of Commons yesterday on the subject the gist of which appears in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 31 of January 19th[†]. The United Kingdom High Commissioner has been instructed to approach the Canadian Government on the matter. I attach a letter from Sir Patrick Duff of January 16th[†] asking whether we would feel able to make a contribution by accepting a number of refugees in Canada and, if so, to what extent.

I am asking the Director of Immigration to provide a statement showing the number of refugees which has been admitted to Canada during the war either for permanent residence or temporarily. We have twice since the war authorized special measures, once some two years ago when we agreed to accept 1000 refugees, mainly from the Far East, and again recently when we agreed to receive 1000 Jewish children from unoccupied France who had been separated from their families. The occupation of all of France took place before the arrangements to carry out the second scheme had been completed and we are not likely to receive under it more than a handful of children who had succeeded in getting into Spain or Portugal.

My own feeling is that we should make some contribution towards the solution of this pressing problem which concerns at present non-Jewish refugees probably to as large an extent as Jews. I think that the matter might come before the War Committee next week for preliminary examination. Copies of the telegrams from London have been sent to the Canadian Minister in Washington with a request for his observations on the probable policy of the United States. The problem obviously transcends the normal limits within which immigration questions are considered.

Mémoire du directeur de l'Immigration, le ministère des Mines et des Ressources, au ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Memorandum from Director of Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources, to Minister of Mines and Resources

Ottawa, January 21, 1943

I have discussed with you on different occasions since the outbreak of war various proposals submitted for the admission to Canada of refugees from Europe and elsewhere.

A new one which is really a renewal of an earlier proposal is I understand to be considered by the Cabinet War Committee on the 27th instant, and Mr. Norman Robertson has sent me some papers and asked for information which I presume will be submitted to the Committee at the meeting on the 27th. I attach a copy of my letter of this date to Mr. Robertson.[†]

The Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs recently cabled H.M. Ambassador at Washington to discuss the refugee problem with the United States Government and submitted the following information:

- (1) It is impossible to meet the refugee situation of Europe without considering the many thousands now crowding into neutral countries.
- (2) The problem is not wholly Jewish but Allied criticism is likely if any marked preference is shown to the movement of Jews.
- (3) There is a possibility that Germany may change from a policy of extermination to that of exodus as they did before the war, to embarrass other countries by flooding them with foreign immigrants.
- (4) Shipping limitations prevent meeting an unlimited demand for travel.
- (5) Neutral countries in Europe (Switzerland, Sweden, Spain and Portugal) are approaching the limit of their capacity to receive these.
- (6) Great Britain is accommodating nearly 100,000 refugees and Colonies are straining their resources in providing for scores of thousands of refugees in addition to civilian internees and prisoners. (East Africa is said to have taken in more than two and a half times its white population. Palestine has contributed substantially and recently an offer has been made to move 5,000 women and children from Bulgaria to Palestine).

(7) Owing to the food rationing, housing, transportation difficulties and lack of absorptive capacity, not many could be accepted by the United Kingdom but it is suggested that the United States might open her doors for a large but unstated number.

(8) That an agreement along these lines between Britain and the United States would open the way to approaching other Governments, such as the Dominions and South American countries for co-operation.

I have no idea what response will be made by Washington but evidently the matter is to be brought before the Cabinet War Committee on the 27th instant for some discussion or decision as to what Canada can and should do. You will notice I have not mentioned in my letter to Mr. Robertson facts which I am giving you. It is necessary in reaching a decision to recognize the bearing of the succeeding paragraphs on the general subject of admission.

While theoretically this is not wholly a Jewish problem, it has proven in our experience to be almost wholly a Jewish problem in all our dealings with refugees. This became evident shortly after the last war when a strong movement set in of what we now call refugees. The first year it was very noticeable was 1920-21, when the number was 2,763. It jumped the following year to 8,404, then receded to 2,793 in 1922-23, 4,255 in 1923-24, and 4,459 in 1924-25, and it kept up between the 3,000 and 5,000 mark until 1930-31.

The first refugee scheme organized on any scale was in the autumn of 1923 when Canada agreed to take 5,000 Jewish refugees driven out of Russia who were then principally in Roumania. Having got the door open between 7,000 and 8,000 were pressed through in that movement. Every refugee movement since 1925 with the exception of the 300 Sudeten families and 72 single men who came in 1938 for land settlement and upwards of 500 Polish and a few Czech machinists and engineers who have come within the past two years, has been predominantly, indeed almost wholly Jewish.²³⁸

You will recall that just two years ago Council agreed to give asylum to 1,000 Czech, Polish, Belgian and Netherlands refugees under a guarantee of maintenance to be given by their Governments. It was laid down that a reasonable racial balance was to be maintained. War conditions prevented the movement of the entire thousand but those who managed to come were almost entirely Jewish. We found it impossible to maintain any racial balance and so it has been year after year when dealing with refugees.

The need for cooperative action to assist in meeting the problem of refugees now in neutral European countries is stated cogently in the instructions sent to Lord Halifax which are quoted in Dominions Office telegram [Circular] D. 26 of January 15th.[†] The neutral countries chiefly concerned are Portugal and Spain and perhaps Turkey to a lesser degree. The refugees who have succeeded in reaching Sweden and Switzerland cannot be evacuated during the war and they are certainly better off than those in the Iberian Peninsula.

On receipt of this telegram the Director of Immigration was asked to furnish such data as might be available concerning the admission of refugees to Canada in recent years. Definite statistics cannot be provided since, except in the case of a few small organized movements of refugees, there is no record whether persons entering Canada have come as refugees or for other reasons.

From the end of the last war until immigration was severely restricted in 1931, 41,873 persons of Jewish origin were admitted to Canada as immigrants. A large proportion, though not all of these, were doubtless refugees from Europe. Included in this total are some 7,500 Jewish refugees from Roumania; this movement was initiated in 1923 because of the influx to Roumania of Jewish refugees from Russia. There were also small movements of Jewish children, of Armenians and of Mennonite farmers during that period.

The practice of the Canadian Government from 1931 until the present time is described as follows by the Director of Immigration:

“With the advent of the depression immigration was rigidly curtailed in the spring of 1931 when the door was shut to European immigrants save farmers with capital. At that time the practice was adopted of admitting additional immigrants by naming them in special Orders-in-Council and that practice still continues. These people have been admitted very largely as refugees on the applications of relatives or friends in Canada. The total number dealt with in this way from the end of 1930 to the end of 1942 is 10,234. Approximately one-half of those from Europe were of Jewish race.

For between two and three years before the outbreak of war, we admitted a number of Europeans with capital to establish or develop new industries in Canada. I can only estimate the total number as being more than 1,000 and the racial proportion as being at least 90% Jewish.

In addition to the immigrant movement a very considerable number of persons have been admitted as non-immigrants for the duration of the war, and a large percentage of these are Jewish refugees. The principal racial exception consists of approximately 500 Polish and a few Czechoslovak nationals belonging to the engineer and skilled worker class who were moved from Unoccupied France, Spain and Portugal to Canada and placed in war production here. This movement has been controlled by our Department working in co-operation with the Department of Munitions and Supply and the Polish authorities. The practice of admitting refugees as non-immigrants for the duration of war developed because of the difficulties in transportation, the urgency to move people quickly and the fact that many were seeking temporary shelter.”

It will be noted from this statement that admission to Canada for permanent residence has been limited to persons falling into three classes —

- (a) farmers with capital;
- (b) those named in Orders-in-Council who are usually close relatives of Canadian residents; and
- (c) a small number of persons with capital to establish new industries in Canada.

It is very unlikely that more than a handful of the refugees now in neutral countries belong to the first class and it seems questionable whether we should continue to grant preferential treatment to agriculturalists seeking admission. It is also questionable whether on the long view the practice of giving preference to close relatives is desirable in dealing with refugees; in the case of Jews this often means that the entry is allowed of Eastern European Jews of not a high standard of education and skill in preference to Jews from Central and Western Europe possessed of greater attainments. This consequence flows from the fact that the great bulk of the Jewish immigration to Canada has come from Eastern Europe.

Two special movements of refugees have been authorized since the war. About two years ago the War Committee approved the temporary admission of 1000 refugees of European origin under a guarantee of maintenance from their own governments; a good many of these were expected to come from the Far East. The full number has never been admitted and the bulk who have entered under this arrangement were Jewish. Recently approval was given for the admission of 1000 Jewish children from Unoccupied France who were separated from their parents, under an arrangement similar to that adopted in 1940 for evacuated children from the United Kingdom. The whole of France, however, was occupied before this movement began.

It will be noted that the British Government considers that the present refugee problem by no means affects only Jews and feels that no preference should be shown in removing Jews to safe destinations. The Director of Immigration considers that if the movement of refugees to Canada is authorized it will be necessary in order to avoid the advantages being used mainly by Jewish refugees to fix some ratio of Jews to non-Jews. The various Jewish organizations have had long experience and have developed great skill in helping their own people and most of the benefit of any assistance would come to Jewish refugees unless some quota system is adopted to give the non-Jewish refugees an equal chance.

There appear to be no statistics of the number of persons who have been granted asylum in Canada for the duration of the war without being admitted for permanent residence. This number includes a large porportion of Jews in addition to the Polish technicians mentioned above. It also includes about eight or nine hundred persons of Austrian and German citizenship (nearly all of Jewish race) who have been released from refugee camps in Canada after their transfer from the United Kingdom in 1940 as internees.

The Canadian Minister in Washington has been asked to consult the United States authorities on the action which they propose to take in reply to the British proposals. It appears that the British Ambassador brought these proposals to the notice of the Department of State less than a week ago and that they are now receiving preliminary consideration. The United Kingdom High Commissioner on instructions from London enquired on January 16th whether Canada would accept a number of refugees. A reply might be deferred until we know more of the action contemplated by the United States.

ADMISSION OF ADDITIONAL REFUGEES FROM EUROPE

1. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that the United Kingdom had raised the question of the admission of additional refugees from Europe.

The British Ambassador had been instructed to make a comprehensive approach to the U.S. government, pointing out that the situation had become so serious that systematic consideration of the whole problem was required on the part of the Allied governments.

The U.K. High Commissioner had asked whether the Canadian government could co-operate by accepting a number of refugees. On two previous occasions since the outbreak of war, Canada had agreed to accept a thousand refugees; under the first of these agreements, some four to five hundred had been received; the total occupation of France had prevented more than a few being sent, under the second.

Further investigation and study was being carried out, in co-operation with the Director of Immigration, and specific proposals would be submitted at a later date.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, undated — C.W.C. document 398).[†]

2. THE WAR COMMITTEE noted the Under-Secretary's report and, after discussion, agreed that caution should be exercised in working out any scheme for further acceptance of refugees in Canada.

Ottawa, February 9, 1943

I have seen your letter to Mr. Beaudry of February 2nd¹ and the earlier correspondence regarding the conditions under which refugee children may be granted temporary admission to Canada for the duration of the war. As I understand the position, the Government agreed in October last to the admission of up to 1,000 Jewish refugee children, who were then in Unoccupied France, subject to certain conditions which were laid down in your letter of October 2nd to Mr. Saul Hayes. With the severance of diplomatic relations between the United States and Vichy France, and the compulsory withdrawal of American welfare workers from Unoccupied France, the possibility of making direct arrangements for the transfer of refugee children from French territory disappeared. The immediate question seems to be whether the general arrangement approved by the Government last autumn can be regarded as applicable to refugee children in Spain and Portugal. It seems to me clear that it should certainly apply, in the first instance, to children now in Spain or Portugal to whom it would have applied if they had been in Unoccupied France, i.e., to Jewish refugee children who had been orphaned by the war or by the deportation of their parents to the Gouvernement Général. From the wording of your letter to Mr. Hayes, I should think it would also apply to refugee children who may have one or conceivably both parents with them in Spain, provided that the conditions laid down in your letter are met, particularly the stipulation that the admission of children under such an arrangement "does not constitute a basis for the admission of parents or other relatives at a later date."

I note that the United States is approving the admission of refugee children subject to this stipulation which is, in their case, secured by an undertaking signed by the parents before the United States Consul to the effect that they are prepared and willing to let their children go to the United States, and that their children's presence in the United States will not be a ground to influence the future possible application of the parents for entry into the United States. I should think that we could afford to adopt the same policy as the United States in this matter while insisting on the same safeguards.

As you know, the Government is being pressed by the United Kingdom Government to cooperate in another general effort to find temporary asylum for refugees now in European neutral countries. It is reluctant to make any commitment in this respect and is waiting to see what response the United States Government makes to a similar appeal which was addressed to it. It seems to me that our position in dealing with the general question of admission of refugees might be stronger if we did all that we could to make a reality of the Government's specific offer of temporary admission to the Jewish child refugees in Western Europe.

I am in receipt of yours of the 9th instant regarding the effort to include Jewish children with their parents in Spain and Portugal, in the movement of 1,000 children which was agreed to last autumn. I am afraid you have only got part of the story as the conclusions you have reached are quite erroneous as the following will show.

The proposal as originally made by Mr. Saul Hayes representing the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies in Montreal, was that an appalling situation had developed in Unoccupied France through the death or deportation of Jewish parents leaving children in dire distress. On the 10th September Mr. Bronfman as President of the Relief Agencies wrote[†] saying, —

“There are approximately 5,000 children aged two to fifteen whose parents have been deported eastward and who are themselves in danger of being deported. . . . The plight of these children who have been separated from their parents, perhaps forever, and who if left in France will become a legion of lost children without proper nourishment or guidance, is too horrible to contemplate. . . . The Agencies is [sic] certain that the Canadian Government which has shown its spirit of humanitarianism in admitting refugees, will give practical effect to its sympathetic consideration [of the plight] in which these innocents find themselves and will offer asylum to several hundred.”

As it was indicated that an approach was being made to the U.S. Government and that a group of 5,000 was likely to be admitted there, we asked that an inquiry be sent to Washington. The reply of the 16th September teletype WA-2865²³⁹ quoted confidentially the possibility of accepting 1,000. After we had agreed to admit up to 1,000, dependent on the ability of the Jewish organizations to provide suitable placement, the agencies gave some publicity to the scheme and all their publicity referred to the children whose parents had died or had been deported. When we became aware of the effort to include these children who were with their parents in Spain or Portugal, I wrote Mr. Saul Hayes and asked him how this proposal came to be submitted and he replied that he knew nothing of the parents being in Spain or Portugal and he wired me on the 3rd instant, —

“Children now in Spain and Portugal escapees from France do not come within ambit Government's generous concession of October second.”

More than 20 years ago we adopted the practice of dealing with European families as family units and have refused not once, but hundreds of times to separate children from their parents. It was our London office which first became aware of the attempt to include these children with the group whose admission had been authorized. There was no misunderstanding on our part and none on the part of the Committee in Montreal.

Mr. Blair resolutely sticks to his point that the Jewish children now in Spain and Portugal do not come within the terms of our agreement of last September. He is technically right but his only argument against modifying the terms of the agreement is that it is the settled Canadian policy to deal with European families as family units and not to separate children from their parents. We did exactly this of course in taking British children as "war guests" in 1940 — a scheme parallel to that proposed for the Jewish children, with the important exception that one cannot be certain that these Jewish families could be reunited outside Canada after the war since the parents are themselves refugees.

I doubt that we can do more now unless the matter is raised in the War Committee. If, however, the small group of Jewish children who were reported en route to Canada some time ago in fact arrives in New York, we might try to get them admitted as a special case.

PROPOSALS FOR ASSISTANCE TO REFUGEES

1. In January the British Ambassador in Washington was instructed to approach the Department of State to propose a systematic consideration of joint measures for dealing with the problem of refugees, especially those who had already found temporary asylum in neutral European countries. The British Government suggested that a preliminary understanding should be reached between the United States and the United Kingdom before the problem was broached to other governments of the United Nations. After an exchange of memoranda between the two Governments, an exploratory discussion took place at Bermuda towards the end of April. The report of this meeting recommends measures which fall under two main headings — measures to be taken principally at the instigation of the United Kingdom and the United States Governments to provide a haven for certain groups of refugees and measures to be adopted to secure the cooperation of other countries.

2. Under the first heading, the report reviewed the numbers and possible destinations for various groups of refugees. The chief groups are as follows:

(a) Polish civilians in Iran, now numbering some 30,000 to be moved in due course to British East Africa, India, Palestine and possibly Mexico, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia;

(b) Greeks in the Middle East, now mainly in Cyprus, Syria and Egypt, some of whom may be moved to Abyssinia and Cyrenaica;

(c) Spain, where the most urgent situation exists; the recommendation is that 14,000 French should go to North Africa if the Spanish Government will allow them to move, that a small number of men of military age, chiefly Poles, should go [to] the United Kingdom and North Africa for military service and that the remainder, amounting to 6,000 or 8,000, chiefly Jews, should be dispersed, principally among the United States, Palestine, North Africa, Jamaica and, if possible, Angola and American countries;

(d) Jews in Bulgaria, 4,500, chiefly children, to go to Palestine as soon as transport can be found and, if possible, a further 12,500 from Axis territory by July, 1943; this was the only movement recommended which would involve the departure of refugees from Axis territory, except for the removal of Jewish children from France, which is referred to below.

3. For continuing international action, the Bermuda meeting proposed the revival of the International [Intergovernmental?] Committee on Refugees founded at the Evian Conference of 1938, with broader powers, enlarged membership and increased financial support. It was recommended that the Committee should take up the following questions:

(a) arrangements to secure neutral shipping, which represents the only hope at present of moving refugees to overseas destinations;

(b) a further effort to give effect to the arrangements in train last November for the removal to the United States and Canada of Jewish children from France in cooperation with neutral governments;

(c) study of the possibilities of the reception of refugees in British Dominions and in Latin America;

(d) assistance, if necessary, in the removal of French refugees from Spain should the Spanish Government not permit their departure to North Africa; and

(e) the possibilities of large scale removal of Jews from Germany and occupied territories or of feeding them through the blockade; the meeting seems to have agreed that there was little prospect of effective action.

4. The Bermuda meeting also proposed that there should be a joint declaration by the Governments that were parties to the Declaration of December 17th, 1943, protesting against the German treatment of Jews, promising to readmit to their territories nationals displaced by the war and to facilitate the return to their homes of refugees of all nationalities. The parties to this Declaration were the Allied European Governments, the United Kingdom and the United States; the Canadian Government simultaneously endorsed the Declaration but was not a party to it.

5. On the whole, the recommendations at Bermuda went a long way to give effect to the initial proposals made to the United States by the British Government last January. One of the next steps will presumably be the advancement of suggestions for the revival and reform of the Evian Committee, and a summary of the history of this body may, therefore, be useful.

6. The Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees originated from the Evian Conference of July, 1938, convened on the initiative of President Roosevelt. It is composed of representatives of 32 countries — the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Switzerland, the three Scandinavian countries, Belgium, the Netherlands, the Dominions and nearly all the Latin American states. There is an Executive Committee, made up now of a British Chairman (Earl Winterton) and five Vice-Chairmen from the United States, the Netherlands, France, Brazil and Argentina. There is a permanent Director, with a small clerical staff. The activities of the Intergovernmental Committee were limited to persons still on German territory, including Austria, who would have to emigrate on account of their political opinions, religious beliefs or racial origin, and to persons of this classification who had left German territory without establishing themselves permanently elsewhere. Its operations, apart from the salary of the Director and the small permanent staff, were to be financed by private organizations. The small expenses to be made by Governments were to be borne according to the League scale.

7. The Intergovernmental Committee has met ten times, usually in London, and Canada has been represented at all the meetings except one, which was held in the Dominican Republic, where a small plan for the settlement of Jewish refugees had been put into effect. The present Director, as a result of a decision of the Committee, is also the League High Commissioner for Refugees, Sir Herbert Emerson. The results have been small and the Committee has, in fact, been inactive for more than two years.

8. The report of the Bermuda meeting has proposed that the following changes should be made in the composition and functions of the Intergovernmental Committee:

(a) the mandate of the Committee should be broadened to empower the Executive Committee to negotiate with neutral and Allied countries in connection with refugees from all countries instead of from Greater Germany only, and to receive and disperse for these territories, funds both public and private, rather than only funds provided by private organizations;

(b) membership of the Intergovernmental Committee should be broadened and specifically, the U.S.S.R., Poland, Greece and Yugoslavia are to be invited. The place of France on the Executive Committee would be considered vacant for the present;

(c) The member states would be expected to make contributions either on the League scale as indicated above, or as an alternative, to make voluntary contributions in addition to the funds available from private sources; and

(d) a considerable increase in the staff of the Executive Committee would also be anticipated.

9. If these changes are accepted, their main effect will be to extend the mandate of the Committee to all refugees, to increase its financial resources by providing for contributions from member governments, to add to its membership the U.S.S.R. and three European countries that have many nationals among the refugees and to give it a larger staff.

10. If the recommendations are accepted, the Canadian Government is likely to be concerned in the following matters:

- (a) a greater financial contribution towards the work of the Committee;
- (b) the efforts of the Committee to find asylum for refugees now in Spain, and especially Jewish refugees;
- (c) efforts of the Committee to bring into effect the agreement by the United States and Canada of last autumn to accept Jewish children from France for the duration of the war; and
- (d) the admission of further refugees, both Jewish and non-Jewish, from among those now dispersed in European neutral countries and the Mediterranean area.

11. It is not necessary for decisions to be taken on any of these points at present. It is likely, however, in view particularly of the very acute situation in Spain and the ever-present possibility that the Spanish Government might close the French frontier and even return refugees to Axis territory, that we shall be soon asked to agree to the reconstitution of the Intergovernmental Committee and to be represented at an early meeting of it. It will not be enough to defend our record at such a meeting, although our record in the admission of refugees probably stands up to that of the United States.

Ottawa, June 5, 1943

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am in receipt of yours of the 31st ultimo[†] with copy of "Memorandum — Proposals for Assistance to Refugees". I would not suggest any changes in this memorandum as I think the matter has been adequately dealt with. I assume that the use of such material as has been drawn from the confidential Bermuda Conference reports is in order.

Yesterday our Minister met two delegations and Mr. Jolliffe and I were present at both meetings. The first was held yesterday morning with representatives of the Canadian Jewish Congress and was headed by Mr. Sam Bronfman, President of the Congress. The first item on the Agenda, and which was stressed again and again, was that in view of the failure of the Bermuda Conference, Canada now has a wonderful opportunity to give a lead to the rest of the world by offering asylum to refugees. Two reasons were given for this suggestion, the first being that it will result in saving a large number of refugees who would come to Canada, and second, it will by the very boldness of the effort, make other countries ashamed of their negligence and compel them to follow suit. It was quite apparent that the delegation hopes to move Canada into the leading position and give wide publicity to some announcement of a refugee effort on a scale that will make all the other Allies ashamed. Those holding this view have not considered the reaction either on the public of Canada or on our relationship to other parts of the Empire and our Allies, of such a course.

This delegation pressed for the admission of children from Spain and Portugal on the ground that if they were taken out of these countries it would create a vacuum which others would fill. The delegation ignored the problems involved in separating these children from their parents, something that in my opinion should never be agreed to. If we are going to save these children we ought to deal with them as members of the families and save the other family members at the same time. Involved in the plea of the delegation was that Canada should give guarantees to Spain, Portugal and Turkey to accept refugees if they were allowed to move into the countries named.

In the afternoon another delegation met the Minister when Mr. Jolliffe and I were present. That delegation was composed of Senator Wilson, Mr. McIlraith, M.P., Mr. Henderson, M.P., Mrs. Casselman, M.P., Canon Judd of the Church of England Social Service Council in Toronto, who had just returned from England, and Miss Constance Hayward. Canon Judd spoke of conditions in England, his conversations with Sir Herbert Emerson and the belief in London that there are 200,000 refugees around the Mediterranean area who could be saved. I think Senator Wilson holds the same view that is held by the morning delegation, that there is no use waiting for the Bermuda Conference to do anything and that Canada should now make a definite pronouncement on its refugee policy coupled with an announcement that our doors are going to be immediately open for a very considerable influx regardless of what other parts of the Empire or our Allies do. I regard this as a dangerous business and [it] requires very careful handling especially as practically all the refugees we are likely to get will be of Jewish race. I think that before any reply is made to the representations by the two delegations of yesterday, the statement promised by the Prime Minister should be made. There is no use in closing one's eyes to the fact that Jewish interests are now carrying on a propaganda to belittle everything that has been done in the way of efforts to save refugees and to destroy all confidence in the sincerity of those taking part in the Bermuda Conference and in the desire of the Allies to solve the refugee problem. The Press has made this abundantly clear.

Immediately on the appearance of the semi-official statement given out by the Bermuda Conference, Rabbi Goldstein, President of the Synagogue Council of America, declared that the conference was not only a failure but a mockery. He said,—

“Victims are not being rescued because the democracies do not want them. . . . The job of the Bermuda conference apparently was not to rescue victims of the Nazi terror, but to rescue our State Department and the British Foreign Office from possible embarrassment.”

The New York Times immediately published a supplement for Canadian distribution in which they demanded a program of action, not pity. In this they said,—

“It is not true that although the British Government wants to help save these people it is in no position to do so. The truth is the dead hand of yesterday’s politics is still at the throat of the European Jews. The British Government can save these people but does not yet want to do so. . . . Is it not true that European Jews must be saved by changing the Immigration laws of the United States; or by shipping them thousands of miles overseas to Australia or South America.”

I think it is unfortunate that there is a great deal of propaganda carried on in Canada at the present moment, having exactly the background represented by the above quotations, and if care is not taken Canada will find herself pushed into a very awkward position over this whole refugee problem. I cannot see how it is possible to embark on any such enterprise as is being pressed upon us, otherwise than by association with the United Kingdom and the United States and I respectfully suggest that this should be embodied in the Prime Minister’s statement as it was in the statement made in answer to a question by Mr. Coldwell on the 5th April last.

Yours very truly,

F. C. BLAIR

SUGGESTIONS FOR CANADIAN AID TO REFUGEES

Public pressure for action by the Government to adopt new measures to assist European refugees is increasing. There is an insistent demand from Jewish agencies for action to relieve the trials of Jewish people. In so far as this is directed towards the rescue of Jews in German-controlled territory, there is nothing that the Canadian Government can do by itself. In so far as its purpose is to secure the admission to Canada of Jewish refugees who have escaped from Axis territory without finding an asylum in which they can remain until the end of the war, something can be done by admitting further Jewish refugees to Canada. Apart, however, from the Jewish appeals there is wide-spread evidence of an uneasy public conscience over the Canadian record with respect to refugees which has found expression editorially in the Winnipeg Free Press, the Globe and Mail, Saturday Night and many other journals.

²⁴¹ H. Wrong.

Certain suggestions are put forward below for consideration. These suggestions are framed within the limits of the policy set forth in the Prime Minister's speech of July 9th in the House of Commons.²⁴²

I. INTERNATIONAL ACTION.

The Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees at a meeting in London on August 4th recommended to Governments belonging to the Committee certain measures for its strengthening. At the Bermuda Conference in April last between United States and United Kingdom officials agreement was reached to press for these measures. It is suggested that the Canadian Government should promptly advise the Executive Committee that they accept the proposals. These are as follows:

(a) The extension of the mandate of the Intergovernmental Committee (previously confined to refugees from Germany and Austria) to include all Europeans who have left or who may have to leave their countries on account of their race, religion or political beliefs.²⁴³

(b) To empower the Executive Committee to negotiate with the Governments or organizations for the maintenance and transportation of refugees and to spend both private and public funds for these purposes.²⁴³

(c) To authorize the Executive Committee in due course to invite Member Governments to contribute public funds for the maintenance and transport of refugees. (Hitherto the Committee's administrative expenses alone have been borne from public funds; United Kingdom and United States Governments have agreed to underwrite for the time being the further expenses of the Committee).²⁴³

(d) To arrange that the International Relief Administration²⁴⁴ should wherever possible bear the expenses of maintaining refugees in countries in which it is operating.²⁴³

(e) To expand the membership of the Intergovernmental Committee (previously limited mainly to American and west European countries) so as to include all European States (except Germany and her allies), the Middle Eastern States, the U.S.S.R., India and South Africa.²⁴³

(f) To enlarge the permanent staff to enable the Committee to undertake its new responsibilities (a United States citizen has already been appointed as Vice-Director).²⁴³

The purpose of these changes is to make the Intergovernmental Committee a more effective instrument for dealing with the European refugee problem as a whole. Their adoption is likely to be followed in time by requests to Canada and other Member States for specific assistance to refugees.

2. ADMISSION TO CANADA OF REFUGEES

The refugee problem in its present form mainly concerns the placement for the duration of the war of refugees who have escaped to neutral or Allied territory without as yet finding an asylum in which they can remain until the war is over. There will be further escapes from Axis territory, but it is not likely that the numbers involved will be large. Attention is mainly concentrated on those in Spain and Portugal. It is suggested that the Government should grant admission to an initial movement to Canada of perhaps 200 refugee families from the Iberian Peninsula. It is likely that a guarantee of maintenance of Jewish families so admitted could be secured through the Canadian Jewish Congress if this is thought to be wise.²⁴⁵ It is important, however, that an equal opportunity of coming to Canada should be given to non-Jewish refugees. The number actually able to move will probably be very small because of transport conditions. It is suggested that no limit should be publicly set as any figure that might be mentioned would be regarded as grossly inadequate by some and as excessive by others.²⁴³

3. REOPENING OF LISBON OFFICE.

It is suggested that an Immigration Office should be reopened in Lisbon to facilitate the selection and documentation of refugees seeking admission to Canada. An announcement that the office was being reopened would be welcomed by those who were concerned over the Canadian contribution to the refugee problem.²⁴³

4. REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS FROM FORMER INTERNEES IN CANADA.

Some 900 persons of German and Austrian origin who were moved to Canada from the United Kingdom in 1940 have been granted their conditional freedom in Canada. It is suggested that the conditions imposed at the time of their release should be lifted and that they should be free to take employment where they can find it. Another consideration is that these persons cannot be admitted to the United States under United States regulations so long as the present Canadian control over their movements and occupations is maintained. Their release from internment shows that they are not regarded as dangerous and their individual records are well known to the R.C.M.P. and the Immigration authorities. The present restrictions are a constant source of complaint and seem to have a good deal to do with the agitation of humanitarian agencies and the press for further action by the Canadian Government to assist refugees. In selected cases permanent admission might be granted to Canada and in others temporary admission for the duration of the war.²⁴⁶

CANADIAN AID TO REFUGEES

34. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS submitted, for consideration, a memorandum containing certain proposals:

(a) The U.S. and U.K. governments, at the Bermuda conference in April, 1943, had agreed to press for strengthening of the powers of the Executive Committee of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. The Canadian government might accept these proposals and so help to make the Committee a more effective instrument for dealing with the European refugee problem as a whole.

(b) The government might grant admission to perhaps 200 refugee families from the Iberian Peninsula, subject to possible guarantees of maintenance. These would probably be largely Jewish, although equal opportunity should be afforded non-Jewish refugees.

(c) In this connection, it would be desirable to reopen the immigration office in Lisbon to facilitate the selection and documentation of refugees seeking admission.

(d) Conditions imposed upon some 900 persons of German and Austrian origin, moved to Canada in 1940 and subsequently granted conditional freedom, should be lifted. These persons were not regarded as dangerous and their individual records were in the hands of Canadian authorities. Present restrictions placed upon them were a constant source of complaint.

(External Affairs memorandum, Aug. 30, 1943).

35. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that the proposals put forward were within the limits of the policy set forth in his speech on July 9th in the House of Commons.

Canada, with her vast area and resources, could not stand aside and, for humanitarian reasons as well as for reasons of international co-operation, should do something to ease the refugee situation.

36. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved in principle the proposals submitted, means for their implementation being referred to the Department of External Affairs and to the Immigration Branch, Department of Mines and Resources.

In conversation with Mr. Jolliffe yesterday he told me that he had just received a cable from Mr. Cormier in Lisbon saying that there were in Portugal several hundred completely destitute Jewish refugees (I think that the figure he mentioned was either 1400 or 1800) most of them without families. He said that in executing the recent decision to admit additional refugees to Canada for the duration of the war they were having difficulty in securing guarantees of employment or maintenance. This seems to imply that the Immigration Branch is continuing its old policy of picking out primarily relatives of persons now in Canada and allowing them in when their connections in Canada will guarantee their support. My conversation with him was casual and only lasted for a minute or two but I am rather doubtful whether this was in fact what the Government intended when it decided to admit further refugees. There was some question at the time of securing a guarantee from Canadian Jewish organizations for the maintenance of Jewish families.

Mr. Jolliffe remarked that there had been no word of any sort from the Canadian organizations interested in refugees about the Government's statement of policy which Mr. Crerar issued a week ago and they were continuing their campaign apparently without relaxation. He proposed himself to issue a further statement (apparently in reply to criticisms that the Government had gone too far) emphasizing that such refugees as were admitted were coming here only for the duration of the war and not for permanent residence. It does seem to me that in present conditions of manpower we might take a chance on allowing in a few hundred healthy but destitute individuals from the Iberian Peninsula without requiring specific guarantees of maintenance especially since they would not be admitted as immigrants for permanent residence.

Dear Mr. Wrong,

As per our telephone conversation of this morning, I am furnishing you with some general information regarding the refugee situation in Portugal and Spain, as gleaned from the reports[†] so far submitted by our officer at Lisbon.

According to statements made by the various interested organizations in Lisbon there are approximately nine hundred refugees left in Portugal and they are mostly Jewish. Included in these are about eighty-four families, totalling approximately two hundred and ten souls. We think the majority of these families will be eligible for visas to Canada, provided they pass medical inspection. Figures should not be used because there is a question as to the legality of the marriages of approximately five of the couples and as to whether some of the reported childless couples have children whose whereabouts have not been disclosed.

The situation in Spain is not so clear as our officer has not yet proceeded to that country to personally deal with the matter. Mr. Creswell, one of the secretaries at the British Embassy in Madrid, in reply to a written request for information by our Mr. Cormier wrote on November 17th[†] under confidential cover, stating that of the 8,000 French refugees in Spain at the early part of last summer, the great majority have already left, and although there were about 2000 in Miranda it was hoped that the French Mission would get these out before Christmas and reduce the purely French refugee problem to the dimensions of a transit problem only. This statement also applied to the Poles; they got rid of their resident population at Miranda (which at one time numbered about 600 or 700) and now get parties of men out of Spain very nearly as quickly as they come in. Mr. Creswell further stated that the refugees proper, i.e., the stateless, ex-enemy and Jewish refugees generally, are being very well looked after by the Jewish Distribution Committee, that the present intention is to send about 2,000 of these to a camp in North Africa where they will be sorted and a number let out for work in North Africa itself and others be allowed to proceed overseas as opportunities for emigration become available. The two particular opportunities for emigration in mind were Palestine and Jamaica. Mr. Creswell adds that he does not believe that there are more than 1500 of these people now in Spain ready to leave, and it seems probable that all will be absorbed by the North African Camp.

Mr. Cormier in his reports refers to the fact that the Joint Distribution Committee is withholding the selecting of refugees for Canada until such time as the plans for a movement to Palestine have matured, the Palestine movement being handled by the British authorities and the Joint Distribution Committee and covers the permanent settlement of 400 families or single units, i.e., 200 unrestricted certificates for other than French refugees, 150 for applicants between the ages of 18 and 35 years able to do manual labour, and 50 for applicants over 35 years old having skilled occupations. The refugees to whom the certificates will be issued apparently will be drawn from both Portugal and Spain. It is further stated that transport facilities are expected to be available about the end of December. The Joint Distribution Committee are committed to at least 600 passengers in order to get a vessel, and will not divert to Canada anyone already approved for Palestine.

I mentioned this situation to Mr. Saul Hayes, National Executive Director of the United Jewish Refugee and War Relief Agencies, Montreal, when here recently. He thought that refugees who might come to Canada were hesitating to apply for visas until the Palestine movement was disposed of, they being afraid to withdraw their application for Palestinian visa in favour of a Canadian visa as they might then lose out on both.

Under date of November 30th[†] our officer said he had not had occasion to issue a single visa to any person up to that date and made the following interesting statement,—

“It seems that duration visas have less appeal in refugee circles. The universal sentiment being that the end of the war in Europe is a question of months, the urge no longer exists of going through much trouble and expense to secure temporary admission to a distant land, when the possibility of returning to former places of residence or of emigrating permanently to other countries can be awaited in safety either in Portugal, where anxiety created by the Azores incident has died out, or in North Africa.”

Mr. Hayes informed me recently that Dr. Schwartz of the Joint Distribution Committee, who had been in Portugal for some time, is now in New York and would probably come to Ottawa within the next week or so. If this visit materializes we shall probably get some further definite information on the refugee situation in the Iberian Peninsula.

Yours very truly,

DESPATCH 59

Ottawa, January 14, 1942

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence covering the Twenty-Third Meeting of the Board[†] which was held in Montreal on November 10 and 11, and in particular to paragraph 5 in which it was recorded that the Board agreed that it would be desirable that steps should be taken with a view to bringing about a practical coincidence of policy in relation to treatment of persons of Japanese racial origin on the Pacific Coast of Canada and the United States.

As you are probably aware, the Canadian Government has been under considerable pressure from British Columbia, where public opinion has been demanding that more stringent measures than those heretofore contemplated be taken with a view to removing any possibility of the Japanese population of that Province acting as a subversive influence to the disadvantage of the security of the Pacific Coast, in the event of a direct attack by the Japanese forces. As a result of this pressure, arrangements were made for holding a conference in Ottawa at which the Provincial Government of British Columbia would be represented and in which the Standing Committee on Orientals in British Columbia would participate. This conference opened on Thursday, January 8, and its deliberations were concluded today with the publication of a statement of Government policy, two copies of which are enclosed herewith.[†]

I also enclose for your information two copies of the Agenda[†] which was prepared for the conference, two copies of the list of participants[†] and two copies of the report[†] which was presented to the Government and which forms the substantial basis of the declaration of Government policy referred to above. I also enclose two copies of the Minutes[†] and two copies of a document[†] setting forth figures relating to the Japanese population in Canada.

A copy of the statement issued today will be transmitted to the Secretary of the United States Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, but you may also wish to give a copy to the State Department. I anticipate that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police will also be in touch with the Federal Bureau of Investigation in regard to this matter, pursuant to the arrangements made by Assistant Commissioner Mead and Assistant Attorney-General Shea.

I think it would be very helpful if you could get some indication from President Roosevelt of how he views the post-war position of persons of Japanese race in the United States.

The policy we have pursued since Pearl Harbor has been largely influenced by what we understood the policy of the United States to be. Both countries moved not only Japanese nationals but their own citizens of Japanese racial origin out of a wide belt along the Pacific Coast and, in general, took more drastic precautionary measures against Japanese residents than with regard to enemy aliens of other nationalities. The United States Government appears, however, to have received a little more cooperation or perhaps less opposition from State Governments than we have met with from the Provincial Governments in relocating persons of Japanese origin outside of Protected Areas. They have modified their policy with regard to the eligibility for military service of American citizens of Japanese origin and are reported to have formed a couple of mechanized fighting units from Japanese volunteers which, some months ago, were said to be ready for use in North Africa. We have exempted Canadian nationals of Japanese origin from the ordinary Selective Service provisions, do not call them up for military service and refuse applications from them for voluntary enlistment in any of the armed forces.

Opportunities for voluntary repatriation to Japan of Japanese men, women and children from Canada and the United States have been, of course, limited by shipping considerations. The second exchange ship to leave for the Far East next month may take 60 or 70 Japanese back from Canada. The first ship took less than a hundred. These numbers are too small to be of any consequence. The Japanese Government has not shown much interest in repatriating its nationals from this continent and not many of the Japanese Canadians have shown any desire to return to Japan.

We are likely, therefore, to be faced, at the close of the war, with the problem of some 25,000 residents of Canada of Japanese origin, less than a third of whom are Japanese nationals, the balance being British subjects and Canadian citizens. Most of them will then be resident in the interior valleys of British Columbia and in Alberta, where they were moved for safekeeping, and where most of them have found useful employment. The communities into which the Japanese moved accepted them with more or less grace, on the understanding that their placement was an emergency wartime measure. The communities from which the Japanese were evacuated are confident that they have gone for good and will probably resist their return. I imagine the problems of the United States in this field are very similar to those which we will have to meet.

I think we should be looking ahead to the situation with which we will be confronted when the war against Japan ends, so that we can be sure our policy with regard to the position of Japanese residents is pretty closely concerted with that of the United States. My own preliminary feeling is that we should

(1) afford every facility, including free transportation and permission to transfer funds and furniture, for the voluntary repatriation from Canada of all persons of Japanese race, regardless of nationality, who wish to return to Japan;²⁴⁸

(2) deport Japanese nationals whose behaviour during wartime made their internment necessary;²⁴⁸

(3) revoke the naturalization certificates of naturalized British subjects of Japanese origin and cancel the national status of natural-born British subjects of Japanese origin who either had to be interned under the Defence of Canada Regulations or put themselves under the protection of the Protecting Power for Japanese Interests. Such persons would then become liable to the deportation recommended under (2);²⁴⁸

(4) permit the residual population of Japanese racial origin, who would be predominantly British subjects and Canadian nationals to reside in Canada where they should not be subject to any special or peculiar disabilities with respect to place of residence, employment, civil obligations or educational opportunities; and²⁴⁹

(5) stop immigration for permanent settlement.²⁴⁸

These headings outline, I think, the main elements of a possible policy for dealing with our Japanese problem. If the United States authorities contemplate more drastic measures — and I should be very surprised if they did — to deal with their Japanese problem, pressure of public opinion would probably compel us to go along with them. In any case, it would be very helpful for us to know how their minds are moving so that consideration could be given in good time to the formulation of parallel policies and conceivably of a joint policy. The question is clearly one of joint interest, in which a joint declaration of policy might have advantages, not only with regard to a general Pacific settlement, but also in its stabilizing effect on internal political opinion in both countries.

problem in Canada and the United States which I gave the Prime Minister in Quebec in the hope that he might find a convenient opportunity for mentioning the matter to President Roosevelt. In the event, the question did not come up during their conversations there. I have now had a note[†] back from the Prime Minister, who thinks you might explore, informally in Washington, the United States attitude toward the questions touched on in my note.

Mr. King is in general agreement with the argument advanced in this memorandum, though he feels that sub-paragraph (4) on page 2 would require a good deal of consideration.

As I said, my memorandum was originally prepared with a view to the Prime Minister discussing its contents with the President. It does not, however, follow that you should try to secure any expression of the President's views. At this stage it would be enough to find out how responsible opinion in Washington is viewing the large and difficult questions of policy presented by the presence in the continental United States of the sizeable population of Japanese origin.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. My telegram of December 4th, 1942[†]. (To Canada No. 5) (To Australia, New Zealand No. 1) Saving. Following for Prime Minister, Begins: War Cabinet have decided that consideration should now be begun of problems connected with cessation of hostilities with enemy powers in Europe. These problems will concern:

1. Form of arrangements to be made for cessation of hostilities.
2. Means of giving effect to armistices or similar instruments.
3. Best system for coordinating activities of United Nations authorities, military and civil, and for maintaining order in Europe generally in period immediately following end of hostilities.
4. Prior agreement with United States and U.S.S.R. is essential if confusion is to be avoided, and Foreign Secretary has been provisionally authorised to make informal approach to United States and Soviet Ambassadors on basis of principles contained in my immediately following telegram.
5. Drafts[†] connected with cessation of hostilities with Italy have recently been communicated to your representatives who are in touch with Military sub-Committee¹, and to Combined Chiefs of Staff in Washington. These drafts are consistent with principles embodied in my immediately following telegram, but will require detailed study and will have eventually to be communicated to Russians, and subsequently to all members of United Nations at war with Italy for their concurrence. It seems likely that United States Government may object

Dominions Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 365

London, June 19, 1943

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Text of Principles, Begins:

(a) The terms to be imposed on any European member of the Axis should be presented as one comprehensive document covering all United Nations at war with that member, and embodying principle of unconditional surrender.

(b) If there exists a central enemy Government with which we are prepared to treat peremptorily, a fully accredited representative of that Government should be associated with its Commander-in-Chief for purposes of signature; or alternatively observance should not come into force until confirmed by that Government.

(c) If there is no such Government, the Armistice should be signed by the enemy Commander-in-Chief only. In that case provisions, which enemy Commander-in-Chief lacks authority to execute, would have to be omitted from the Armistice, which would thus be primarily a military document. Non-military provisions should, so far as necessary, be embodied in a Declaration or Proclamation issued by the United Nations.

(d) If there is neither an enemy Government nor Commander-in-Chief with whom we can or are prepared to treat, military resistance would presumably be brought to an end by a series of local capitulations. It would, however, probably be desirable that United Nations should issue a Declaration stating their intentions in respect of defeated power. This would be followed by a series of Proclamations issued by the Allied Commander-in-Chief, particularly instructions to the local authorities and population.

(e) The administration of any Armistice should be placed in the hands of an Inter-Allied Armistice Commission, the President to be alternately representative of the United States, U.S.S.R. and United Kingdom. The Commission would establish its headquarters in Axis country concerned, and would be responsible for controlling execution of Armistice terms; in the first place, the disarmament and demobilization of enemy armed forces, the collection and disposal of surrendered war material and other mobile property and the handing over of fortifications and other fixed property. Representatives of Armistice Commission would be despatched to liberated Allied territory to perform a similar task in respect of enemy troops there located, and to regulate their evacuation or internment.

(f) In the absence of an Armistice (see paragraph (d)), a Control Commission should administer appropriate portions of Declaration.

(g) Any Armistice or Declaration would presumably provide occupation, whether total or partial, of countries concerned. In case of Germany, exact method of organizing such occupation should be subject of technical discussions between military advisers of the United Kingdom, United States and the U.S.S.R. in the first instance.

(h) The United Nations Commander-in-Chief in any occupied country should be completely responsible for maintenance of law and order.

(j) [sic] There should be established a supervisory body entitled "United Nations Commission for Europe", composed of high-ranking political representatives of the United Kingdom, United States and the U.S.S.R., of France and any other European Allies, and if so desired of any Dominion prepared to contribute to policing of Europe. The Commission should be situated at some convenient point on the Continent. The Commission would act as supreme United Nations authority in Europe to direct and coordinate the activities of several Armistice Commissions, the Allied Commander-in-Chief and any United Nations civilian authorities that may be established; and to deal with current problems, military, political, and economic, connected with maintenance of order. A "Steering Committee", consisting of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States and the U.S.S.R. and of France, if she recovers her greatness, should be established as Directing body of the Commission. In "Steering Committee" the unanimity rule should apply.

(k) It is likely that a number of civilian authorities will be set up by agreement between the United Nations, some on a world and others on a European basis. Apart from United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, and Intergovernmental Committee which may emerge from Bermuda Conference², the establishment of a United Nations Shipping Authority and a United Nations Inland Transport Authority for Europe has been suggested. Analogous bodies may well be required to control telecommunications and propaganda, and to handle reparation and restitution and other economic problems. These Authorities might, in respect of their European activities, establish their headquarters in the same city as the United Nations Commission for Europe, to whom they would be responsible and provide the necessary technical advice. Ends.

Consideration should be given without delay to the proposals of the United Kingdom Government in Circular telegrams D.364 and D.365 relating to the procedure to be adopted at the end of hostilities in Europe and the methods of maintaining the control of the United Nations in Europe during the Armistice period.

I attach a memorandum prepared by Mr. Glazebrook and Mr. Holmes outlining the proposals made in these telegrams and giving supplementary information based on further reports received from the Government of the United Kingdom. There is no doubt whatever that these proposals if they are adopted will have important political and economic effects. The longer the Armistice the more important will these effects be and it is by no means unlikely that the suggested United Nations Commission for Europe might become the actual machinery for framing the European peace settlement. Commonwealth Governments are requested in telegram D.364 to give the United Kingdom Government their general views on the proposals and to indicate in particular whether they would wish to participate in the United Nations Commission for Europe and in the European policing system. Under the proposals (paragraph (j) of telegram D.365) only those non-European countries which were prepared to contribute to the policing of Europe would be invited to join the Commission.

The question of Canadian participation may well involve a preliminary decision on our readiness to play an active part in a new world security system. Our armies are in the European theatre and so is the bulk of our operational air force. A commitment to contribute to the policing of Europe would presumably in the main involve an undertaking to participate to some degree in providing the necessary armies of occupation. The United States and Canada may be the only overseas countries with substantial military forces in the European theatre although other Commonwealth Governments might possibly be able to contribute air forces to some degree.

The reply to be given to the United Kingdom suggestions involves consideration of large questions of political, military and economic importance. These questions cannot be answered without further knowledge of the application of the British proposals and without information on the views of the U.S.S.R. and especially of the United States. It seems to me that all we can do immediately is to send an interim reply to London showing that we fully appreciate the importance of the issues and asking for further information on some points. Telegram D.364 says that the Foreign Secretary has been provisionally authorized to make known the proposals informally to the United States and Soviet Ambassadors but we do not yet know whether this has been done.

If an answer is sent to London on the lines of the attached draft[†], I think that the further steps proposed on page 4 of the memorandum should also be taken at this time. Up to the present the telegrams containing the British proposals have only been transmitted to the Prime Minister and Mr. Heenev. Their military and economic implications require study by the Departments concerned and this study should be initiated without delay. It seems desirable that the whole question should be discussed in the War Committee at an early date.

PROPOSALS CONCERNING POST-HOSTILITY PERIOD

The United Kingdom Government have submitted draft plans for armistices, and for the machinery of control of enemy countries in the period immediately following the armistices. The plans will also be discussed informally with representatives of the United States and the U.S.S.R.

The general plan is outlined in two telegrams from the Dominions Office. Additional, and earlier, material describes the draft heads of armistices. These latter documents have been prepared by the Military Sub-Committee of Sir William Jowitt's committee.³

MACHINERY OF CONTROL

The principal feature of the proposed machinery is the provision for a single authority, with subordinate agencies for specified functions.

1. A United Nations Commission for Europe. The supreme authority, to be composed of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R., of France, and of any other European allies, and of any Dominion prepared to contribute to the policing of Europe. This larger body would have a Steering Committee consisting of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States, U.S.S.R. and of France "if she recovers her greatness". The rule of unanimity would apply to its decisions. This Commission and bodies subordinate to it would be established at some one convenient point on the Continent.

2. Bodies Responsible to the United Nations Commission for Europe

(a) Inter-Allied Armistice Commissions, one of which would be established in each enemy country to control the execution of disarmament as defined in the Armistice terms. The president of each Armistice Commission would be alternately a representative of the United States, U.S.S.R., or United Kingdom. (In the absence of an armistice a Control Commission would act).

(b) The United Nations Commanders-in-Chief, under whom would be the armies of occupation.

³ See footnote 1.

(c) Civilian Authorities, such as the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration and others which may be set up to deal with economic, military and political problems such as shipping, inland transport, telecommunications, propaganda, reparation and restitution. If these authorities are established on a world basis, they would be related to the Commission only in respect of their European activities.

PRINCIPAL FEATURES OF THE ARMISTICE PROPOSALS

1. It is evident that in conformity with the Casablanca demand of unconditional surrender, the terms of armistice or surrender will be laid down by the United Nations and will therefore not involve any contractual obligations on the part of the United Nations.
2. The terms to be imposed on any European member of the Axis are to be presented as one comprehensive document covering all United Nations at war with that member.
3. If a central enemy government exists with which the United Nations are prepared to treat at the time, they will insist that a fully accredited representative of that government be associated with the Commander-in-Chief for purposes of signature before the armistice comes into force. If no such government exists, non-military provisions will be included, not in the armistice, but in a Declaration or Proclamation of intention issued by the United Nations. If there is neither a single Commander-in-Chief nor a central government with whom to treat, the United Nations will probably state their intention in a Declaration, followed by instructions from the local Commander-in-Chief.
4. Two sets of armistice terms for Italy have been drafted, one to be used if Italy capitulates before Germany, the other to be used if capitulation takes place at the same time in both countries. Both drafts provide for slightly less drastic terms for Italy than for Germany, the principal difference being that Italy would be allowed some small armed forces to maintain internal order.

QUESTIONS FOR DECISION

The Canadian Government has been asked to:

- (1) submit its general views on the proposals;
- (2) inform the United Kingdom Government whether Canada desires to be represented on the United Nations Commission for Europe.

It should be noted that a Dominion so represented would be expected to contribute to the policing of Europe.

RECOMMENDED ACTION

In view of the importance of the United Nations Commission for Europe, and of the fact that its membership will in any case include the United States, the relation of Canada to the Commission requires full consideration. It may be assumed that the Commission will play the dominating part in the conclusion of the war in Europe and the period of immediate settlement. Whatever may prove to be the mechanism for arriving at the final terms of peace, the Commission will be in control during the critical period.

It is therefore recommended that the Canadian Government should communicate to the United Kingdom Government its interest in the matter, and its desire for further information, particularly on certain specific points. These are (1) the relation of the Steering Committee to the Commission, (2) what tentative plans have been drawn up for "policing Europe", (3) the state of conversation with the United States and the U.S.S.R.

It is further suggested:

- (1) That the relevant departments of Government should further study the questions raised.
- (2) That the High Commissioner be instructed to discuss the whole question informally with the United Kingdom authorities.
- (3) That a political officer attend, when necessary, any further meetings of the Military Sub-Committee. (Representatives of the three Services have already attended meetings).⁴

Minutes of a Meeting

MOST SECRET

Ottawa, July 22, 1943

A meeting to consider post-hostilities problems was held in Room 123, East Block on Thursday, July 22, 1943. The following were present:

Admiral P. W. Nelles, Chief of the Naval Staff.
Air Marshal L. S. Breadner, Chief of the Air Staff.
Brigadier P. Earnshaw, Deputy-Chief of the General Staff (Army).
Colonel J. H. Jenkins, Director of Military Operations and Planning (Army).
Air Commodore K. M. Guthrie, Deputy Air Member for Air Staff (Plans).
Paymaster Lieutenant-Commander G. F. Todd, Secretary, Plans Division, Navy.
A. D. P. Heeney, Clerk, Privy Council.
N. A. Robertson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
H. H. Wrong, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.
G. de T. Glazebrook, Department of External Affairs.
J. W. Holmes, Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Wrong acted as Chairman.

Mr. Holmes acted as Secretary.

1. Proposals from the United Kingdom:

Mr. Wrong outlined the development of the Military Sub-Committee in the United Kingdom and the proposals made by the High Commissioner for Canada in London⁵. He said that these informal proposals had become a matter of intergovernmental concern because of the adoption by the United Kingdom War Cabinet of the recommendations contained in Circular Telegrams D.364 of June 19 and D.365 of June 19 from the Dominions Office, copies of which had been forwarded to the Chiefs of Staff. Mr. Wrong said that the Department of External Affairs considered these proposals a reasonable basis of discussion.

2. Consideration of Draft Telegram to the Dominions Office⁶:

The meeting considered the draft telegram to the Dominions Office which it was proposed to submit to the War Committee for approval. Air Marshal Breadner stated that he was surprised to find the telegram lukewarm on Canada's taking part in post-war policing. Canada had insisted on being taken into consideration and she could not afford to withdraw from such commitments if she wished to obtain any national status. He would like the Government to say now that Canada would take part in post-war policing, the extent of this participation to be decided later. Admiral Nelles agreed with the view of Air Marshal Breadner.

Mr. Wrong said that there were certain matters which should be taken into consideration in deciding whether it was reasonable to limit participation in the proposed United Nations Commission for Europe, to Dominions which took part in the policing of Europe. In the first place, the end of hostilities in the European theatre might find Canadian forces engaged elsewhere. Secondly, the Commission would have authority over relief, and Canada would undoubtedly play a large part in this branch of its activities. Mr. Heeney raised the question as to whether Canada would not have a right to a voice if she contributed heavily to the relief programme, even though her forces did not take part in the policing. Particularly if the measure of a nation's influence in the work of the Commission should be the extent of its contribution, influence should not be solely judged by the contribution to policing. Mr. Robertson suggested that the telegram might be revised to include some positive comment along the lines suggested by Mr. Heeney. The problem of demilitarization and demobilization of the enemy might be over in a short time, and then the biggest problem would be that of economic relief and rehabilitation. The United Kingdom Government might therefore be asked for an explanation as to what was meant by "policing" and whether this was really the word they had in mind. Brigadier Earnshaw said that if policing and other matters could be bracketed together, the proposals would be satisfactory.

Mr. Robertson said it should be remembered that at the conclusion of a successful European campaign, Canadian soldiers would have been away from home longer than the soldiers of any other United Nation. Brigadier Earnshaw said that it would be possible to break up army formations and use volunteers and new troops for policing. Mr. Wrong thought that troops for this purpose would certainly be chosen on a basis of length of service.

Mr. Robertson suggested that in placing the proposals before the War Committee they should be put in perspective by pointing out that this was the first instalment in the plans for post-war world order and that a refusal by Canada to take part would mean a reversion to isolationism. He suggested that a note to this effect should be circulated to members of the War Committee along with the proposals. Mr. Robertson also asked whether the "functional principle" advocated by the Canadian Government did not mean that Canada should not demand a place on the Steering Committee of the United Nations Commission for Europe, which, according to the proposals, was to be composed of representatives of the United Kingdom, the Soviet Union, the United States, and France "if she recovers her greatness". If this were so, Canada might prove that the principle works both ways by pointing out that she does not expect membership on the Steering Committee.

3. Cooperation with the United Kingdom Military Sub-Committee.

Mr. Wrong referred to the documents¹ which had been received from the Military Sub-Committee in London. The representatives of the services said that they had not received copies of these documents from their representatives who had met in London with the Sub-Committee. Admiral Nelles produced a letter from Commander Price,[†] Canadian naval representative, who said that he had received copies but had not considered them of sufficient interest to the Naval Staff in Ottawa to warrant sending them. It was agreed that a set of documents would be provided by the Department of External Affairs to the Secretary of the Chiefs of Staff Committee who would see that copies were available to the services.

Mr. Wrong said that it seemed desirable to have members of the Services and representatives of the Department of External Affairs in London meet with the Military Sub-Committee. Mr. Massey had also asked for some guidance as to the views of the Canadian Government on the matters under consideration. The proposed telegram would give some guidance, but it might be desirable to have an organization in Ottawa, to study the plans drafted by the Sub-Committee. Mr. Heeney thought it would be sufficient to have the three Services designate officers with whom representatives of External Affairs and other departments concerned could confer. Air Marshal Breadner nominated Group Captain Hanna to act for the Air Force, and Admiral Nelles nominated Paymaster Lieut-Comm. G. F. Todd to act for the Navy. (Since the meeting, Major H. C. Grant has been nominated to act for the Army.) Consideration was given to the advisability of including persons working on problems of economic reconstruction and of demobilization and rehabilitation. The function of the working committee was to consider the documents received from London and advise the Chiefs of Staff and the Government. If important decisions were to be taken, those attending the present meeting could reassemble to consider them. Mr. Holmes was to act as secretary and look after the circulation of papers received.

Mr. Robertson suggested that it would be useful to have from the Army a note on the participation of the Canadian forces in the occupation of Germany after the last war with particular reference to the intergovernmental negotiations concerning occupation.

The meeting adjourned at 4.55 p.m.

TELEGRAM 130

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. Repeated to Australia No. 7, New Zealand No. 7, South Africa No. 5.

grams. We see no objection on our part to the adoption of the principles set forth in paragraphs (a) to (h) of telegram D.365 as a satisfactory method of procedure in bringing about the cessation of hostilities and we realize that the situation in Italy gives urgency to reaching agreement on these matters.

2. The observations which follow relate to paragraphs (j) and (k) of that telegram. In all probability the proposed United Nations Commission for Europe not only would play a dominating part in the immediate arrangements required on the cessation of hostilities, but also would affect the shaping of the terms of the European settlement and determine in large measure the pattern of international political collaboration. Canadian Government, therefore, cannot fail to be greatly interested and concerned in the proposed Commission.

3. In view of the concentration in the European theatre of war of the bulk of the Canadian army and air force, it is to be expected that Canada will contribute substantially to the pacification of Europe. The Canadian Government also assumes that its participation in relief and other civil international activities proposed to come under the direction of the United Nations Commission, taken in conjunction with the Canadian military effort, would make desirable its membership on the Commission. The nature and extent of the Canadian contribution to the "policing of Europe" would depend on the circumstances of the time and on the definition of that phrase.

4. Further information would be welcomed on (a) the tentative plans prepared for the "European policing system" and the nature and extent of the Canadian "contribution" that might be expected, (b) the formula proposed to govern the relationship of the Steering Committee to the Commission for Europe, and (c) the replies received from the United States and the Soviet Governments on the suggested arrangements.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON QUESTIONS CONCERNING ITALY

The British outline of the functions and organization of a Control Commission charged with regulating and executing the instrument of surrender was given us in telegram [Circular] D. 620 of September 3rd.[†] This was to be submitted to the United States Service authorities through the British Joint Staff Mission in Washington. We were informed by telegram D. 632 of September 7th[†] that the Combined Chiefs of Staff had approved and sent to General Eisenhower for his guidance an outline plan of organization similar to that given in telegram D. 620.

Reference to Canadian participation was made at two points in the original proposals—first, by Canadian representation on a “United Nations Advisory Council” consisting apparently of civilian representatives as the British representative was to be Mr. Macmillan and, secondly, through the provision of suitable personnel to fill some of the British share of posts on the staff of the Control Commission. We have no further information on the second point.

We do not know whether General Eisenhower has taken steps to set up the Control Commission to supervise the execution of the Armistice in those parts of Italian territory now under Allied control. The suggestion for a United Nations Advisory Council has been deferred for the time being and Eisenhower has merely been advised that it is contemplated “that provision will be made for representation of the interested United Nations at the headquarters of the Control Commission” (telegram D.632).

One reason for this change is probably the Soviet proposal for establishing a tripartite military-political commission “to consider questions concerning relations with Governments disassociating themselves from Germany”. This proposal and the British and American views thereon are described in telegram D. 625 of September 6th.⁷ Such a commission would not exercise the functions of the Control Commission but there would seem to be a real possibility that if it is established it would overlap with the Advisory Council which the British suggested should be attached to the Control Commission. Mr. Churchill has notified Stalin that he thinks that the members of the Commission would be political representatives acting in an advisory capacity and that a French member should be added while the Greeks and Yugoslavs should be consulted on questions of concern to them. The President has proposed as an alternative that a Russian Staff Officer should be sent to Eisenhower’s headquarters and he seems to be anxious that the French should take no part. We have received no suggestion that Canada would participate in any way in the Commission promoted by Stalin.

With a substantial number of Canadian troops in the Italian theatre we have good reason for pressing for Canadian participation in the Control Commission in some form on this ground alone, quite apart from other considerations. Perhaps, however, it is better to await the results of the negotiations on Stalin’s proposal before advancing our case.⁸ Certainly such questions would be easier to handle with despatch if we had a suitable Canadian representative in Algiers.⁹

London, October 25, 1943

MOST SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram October 18th Circular D. 815¹, and my telegram October 25th Circular D. 846¹. Politico-Military Commission. Foreign Secretary has reported that when Moscow Conference discussed Politico-Military Commission he suggested that arrangements now proposed for control in Italy would made it preferable to leave day-to-day Italian affairs to be dealt with locally by the Advisory Council for Italy and to make the Politico-Military Commission into an advisory body with wide terms of reference to deal with any European (including Italian) questions (other than operational questions) which the United Kingdom, United States or U.S.S.R. might agree to refer to it. This Commission to be set up forthwith in London.

2. After an interval for consideration, M. Molotov said that Soviet Government agreed in principle to establishment of the Commission in London and wished to base it, with certain amendments, on proposals communicated to you in my telegram June 19th Circular D. 365 regarding principles to govern conclusion of hostilities with European members of Axis. This Commission would be supplemented by periodical ad hoc conferences of the Three Powers. Mr. Hull agreed generally. Foreign Secretary observed that June principles should not be taken as an exclusive basis since it seemed important that this Commission should be empowered to discuss current questions as well as problems of armistice period.

3. In light of above, Mr. Eden has since telegraphed draft terms of reference which he proposes to submit to Drafting Committee of Conference. Text in my immediately following telegram. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 849

London, October 25, 1943

MOST SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram, draft terms of reference for Advisory Commission for Europe, Begins:

1. An Advisory Commission for Europe will be established composed in the first instance of representatives of the United Kingdom, United States and

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Those representatives of (corrupt groups)¹⁰ where necessary by military advisers. The Commission will meet as soon as possible in London.

2. The Commission will take into consideration any European questions, other than military operational questions, which the United Kingdom, United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agree to refer to it.

3. It will, in particular, as a first task, establish principles which should govern the conclusion of hostilities with European members of the Axis and work up practical application of those principles. It will take as a basis for its work on this subject draft statement for (corrupt groups) shown in Annex[†]. This draft will naturally be open to amendment by Commission in light of experience or further study.

4. The members of the Commission will be supplied by their Governments with all relevant information on political and military developments affecting their work. They will make joint or several recommendations to their Governments but will not have power to take final decisions.

5. Other members of the United Nations will, at the discretion of the Three Powers, be represented on Commission when matters especially affecting their interests are under discussion.

6. The establishment of the Commission will not preclude other methods of consultation among the three Governments on current issues. There may, for example, be questions calling for special consideration which may be more conveniently handled by tripartite discussion in one or other of the three capitals between responsible head of Foreign Office and permanent diplomatic representatives of other two Governments. There may also be questions calling for international or special tripartite conferences. Ends.

TELEGRAM 170

Ottawa, October 30, 1943

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. Addressed London No. 170 repeated Australia No. 12 New Zealand No. 13 South Africa No. 10.

Your telegrams D.848 and 849 of October 25. Advisory Commission for Europe.

1. We have been anxious to do nothing which would make more difficult the establishment of satisfactory working arrangements between the Governments of the Soviet Union, United States and United Kingdom. We have therefore refrained hitherto from commenting on the proposals for setting up a Mediterranean Commission which has now evolved into an Advisory Commission for Europe.

2. In your telegrams D.364 and 365 of June 19th you consulted us about your suggestions for a United Nations Commission for Europe as the supervisory body for coordinating the activities of United Nations authorities in Europe on the conclusion of hostilities. In our reply No. 130 of July 30th we informed you of our preliminary views, stating that we felt that Canadian membership on the Commission would be desirable. We assume that the proposal now before the Moscow Conference for a tripartite Advisory Commission for Europe replaces your earlier suggestion for a United Nations body of a more representative character.

3. Paragraph 5 of the draft terms of reference given in your telegram D.849 restricts participation in the Advisory Commission of other United Nations to their representation at the discretion of the Three Powers "when matters especially affecting their interests are under discussion". This would probably exclude entirely the participation of all extra-European countries except the United States. The Canadian interest in the matters to be considered by the Commission is general rather than special. Canadian forces, however, will be operating in Europe in substantial numbers at the end of the war and Canadian supplies will be desired in great volume for relief purposes.

4. While the Commission will be an advisory body, if it succeeds it will become an agency of great importance. As we said in our telegram No. 130, such a Commission "would not only play a dominating part in the immediate arrangements required on the cessation of hostilities, but also would affect the shaping of the terms of the European settlement and determine in large measure the pattern of international political cooperation". The more important the work of the Commission becomes, the more desirable will it be that it should enlist in its work the support of other governments. Should it evolve into a sort of Supreme Council for Europe, the three-power pattern of representation will make more difficult the full cooperation of other countries especially extra-European countries, in the liberation and pacification of Europe.

5. We are also concerned over the exclusion of our European Allies and especially of the French. None of the United Nations outside the area of German conquest will be so immediately and vitally affected by the recommendations of the Commission as those whose territory is still to be liberated.

6. We wish to urge that these points should constantly be borne in mind in developing the plans for the Commission, and that in public statements its temporary character and restricted authority should be emphasized.¹¹

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 885

London, November 1, 1943

MOST SECRET. My telegram of October 25th, Circular D. 848. Terms of reference for European Advisory Commission as finally agreed at Moscow Conference, Begins: The Governments of the United Kingdom, United States and Soviet Union agree to establish a European Advisory Commission composed of representatives of the three Powers. The Commission will have its seat in London and will meet in concert. The Presidency will be held in rotation by representatives of the three Powers. A Joint Secretariat will be established. The representatives may be assisted, where necessary, by technical advisers, civilian and military.

2. The Commission will study and make joint recommendations to the three Governments upon European questions connected with the termination of hostilities which the three Governments may consider appropriate to refer to it. For this purpose members of the Commission will be supplied by their Governments with all relevant information on political and military developments affecting their work.

3. As one of the Commission's first tasks, the three Governments desire it shall, as soon as possible, make detailed recommendations to them upon the terms of the surrender to be imposed upon each of the European States with which any of the three Powers are at war and upon machinery to ensure fulfilment of those terms. The Commission will take into account memorandum of July 1st¹² circulated by the United Kingdom Government to the Governments of the United States and the Soviet Union regarding principles which should govern the conclusion of hostilities with European enemy States. The Commission will also take account of experience already gained in imposition and enforcement of unconditional surrender upon Italy.

4. Representatives of the Governments of the United Nations will, at the discretion of the Commission, be invited to take part in the meeting of the Commission when matters especially affecting their interests are under discussion.

5. The foregoing terms of reference will be subject to review by the three Governments, if circumstances should arise which call for an extension of membership and competence to the Commission.

6. The establishment of the Commission will not preclude other methods of consultation on current or other issues which the three Governments think it desirable to discuss. There may, for example, be questions calling for special consideration. These questions may be handled by tripartite discussions in one or other of the three capitals (Washington, London, or Moscow as may be found most convenient) between the head of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and permanent diplomatic representatives of the other two Governments.

Moscow, November 2, 1943

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET.Your telegram No. 153 of October 31st[†]. Saw Eden yesterday and mentioned to him that you had telegraphed London about Advisory Commission for Europe. He explained that the Three Great Powers had to have machinery for consultation. London Commission would be advisory and would frame proposals for submission to the three Governments. He was very emphatic in stating that they could not indicate at this stage the possibility of the Commission being enlarged, as this would lead to scramble for places. Moreover too large a body would be unworkable. French Committee had already protested against their exclusion from London Commission, but he did not consider France yet qualified for membership. Three Powers provide the right to set up machinery for closer collaboration just as they had the right to meet in conference at Moscow. He said if Commission should grow in importance and develop into executive body for United Nations, consideration would be given to increase in membership.

2. Saw Strang today who explained the position more fully. He said London Commission was not to be confused with proposal for United Nations Commission for Europe referred to in paragraph 2 of your telegram No. 154.¹³ Soviet Government had been under the same misapprehension and this explains their attitude in Drafting Committee as mentioned in paragraph 2 of my telegram No. 248[†]. London Commission would be essentially a planning and not an executive body. They could, for instance, work out plan for United Nations Commission for Europe. Each plan would have to be referred to the three Governments for approval and other United Nations would frequently be consulted.

3. You no doubt have received text of Declaration on London Commission as approved by the Conference. General terms of reference are confined to "European questions connected with termination of hostilities". This limitation inserted to meet Soviet wishes and desire not to confuse Commission with former proposal for United Nations Commission. Particular terms of reference are terms of surrender of enemy countries and machinery for ensuring fulfilment of these terms. For this purpose United Kingdom "instruments of surrender" and experience with Italy will be taken as basis. Declaration contains provisions for consulting with other United Nations when matters affecting them are concerned and also for changing terms of reference if membership on Commission is enlarged or its competence changed.

4. In other words London Commission is of limited scope and question of Canadian representation on United Nations organisation to be established after termination of hostilities, is still open. Matters, however, should continue to be pressed in all three capitals as opportunity arises. I shall endeavour to ascertain more precisely Soviet views, because it is of interest that they appear to favour broader representation. I shall refrain, however, from formal presentation of our views unless you send specific instructions. United Kingdom Government likely to be satisfied with present arrangement whereby they represent whole of the British Empire. When consulted by them therefore we should try to make our views known not only to London but also to Washington and Moscow. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 907

London, November 3, 1943

MOST SECRET. Addressed to Canada, repeated to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. Your telegram No. 170 of October 30th. European Advisory Commission.

As regards constitution of Commission you will have seen from my telegram Circular D. 885 of November 1st that the Terms of Reference for Commission as finally agreed contain a new paragraph 5 which contemplates possibility of extension of membership of Commission if circumstances should arise. We hope that this will meet the point made in paragraph 6 of your telegram. Meanwhile so long as membership is confined to three we think that location of Commission in London will make it easier for us to ensure that interests of Canada and other Dominions are fully borne in mind in matters which come before the Commission, and we shall hope to keep in fullest touch with Dominion Governments on all such questions.

2. Paragraph 4 of Terms of Reference were [sic] settled with particular eye to the interests of European Allies. Nevertheless, Netherlands Government who (in connection with former proposal for Mediterranean Commission) appear to have had the impression that European Allies would be asked to attend Commission only in order to receive decisions already taken, have suggested that there should be permanent participation by the smaller Powers one or more at a time sitting perhaps by rotation. It has been explained in reply that while present idea is to confine membership to United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R., all three Governments are impressed with the desirability that smaller countries should play their part in ordering of European affairs. French Committee of National Liberation have also made representations. Their position is, however, somewhat different in that while we share their hopes for the early restoration of France to the councils of the nations, French Committee does not rank as a Government and process of restoration is bound to be a gradual one. In this connection it will have been noted that a French representative is to be included from outset in the Advisory Council for Italy (Circular D. 886)[†].

3. As regards your reference to our suggestions for a United Nations Commission for Europe (my telegrams Circular D. 364 and Circular D. 365 of June 19th) position is that these proposals were mentioned at Moscow and were welcomed by both the United States and Soviet delegations. It will be seen from paragraph 3 of Terms of Reference as finally approved (my telegram Circular D. 885) that Commission is to take into account United Kingdom memorandum of July 1st which was identical with my telegram of June 19th Circular D. 365. We do not therefore regard European Advisory Commission as superseding proposal in that memorandum for United Nations Commission for Europe. On the contrary, the E.A.C. may well elaborate plans for the constitution of the U.N.C. Ends.

Dear Sir William [Glasgow],

I was glad to receive the personal message from Dr. H. V. Evatt which you communicated to me in your note of November 13th. Would you send to Dr. Evatt the following reply:

“In view of the information given by the Dominions Office and reports to the same effect from the Canadian Minister in Moscow, I feel that we should not press at present for representation on the European Advisory Commission in London. My hope is that this body will provide a method for continuous political consultation of the United Kingdom and United States Governments with the Soviet Government. They do not seem to have been able to achieve this through normal diplomatic channels. So long as the creation of the Advisory Commission does not prejudice the proposal for a United Nations Commission for Europe, I think we should hold our hand. It is certainly difficult for us to plead greater concern in the work of the European Advisory Commission than the French Committee and Allied European Governments. I am inclined, therefore, to concentrate in this connection on seeking to ensure a proper place for Canada in the post-war arrangements.”

Yours sincerely,

*Mémorandum du ministère des Affaires extérieures
au Comité de guerre du Cabinet*

Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet War Committee

MOST SECRET

[Ottawa,] November 24, 1943

RE: POST-HOSTILITIES PROBLEMS

1. On July 22nd the Chiefs of Staff met with the Secretary of the Cabinet and the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to consider questions raised by the United Kingdom authorities concerning Canadian activities directed to the pacification of Europe at the end of the war.¹⁴ An informal Working Committee was established for the purpose of making further studies on which were representatives of the three Services, External Affairs and the Privy Council Office. The Working Committee has reported its view that the surrender of Italy and the possibility that the surrender of Germany might take place unexpectedly have made it urgent that the Canadian Government should consider problems which will arise during and after the conclusion of hostilities in Europe. Aside from Canada's general interest in bringing about a satisfactory European settlement, this country cannot fail to be directly involved in certain activities of the post-hostilities period in Europe.

2. In the first place Canada will be an important source of supply for relief, especially of food. The extent of the demand cannot be determined until the organization of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration has been completed, but this may prove to be the principal Canadian contribution to the tranquilization of Europe.

3. Secondly, Canada will almost certainly be asked to contribute air, land, and naval forces for occupation duty in Germany. According to tentative plans drawn up by the Post-Hostilities Planning Sub-Committee in the United Kingdom, Germany would be divided for purposes of occupation into three zones, in which predominant military control would be exercised by the forces of the Soviet Union, the United States, and the British Commonwealth respectively. It is expected that sufficient forces will be available in Europe immediately after the cessation of hostilities to handle the initial problems of occupation. For the period during which the disarmament of Germany is being carried on, (ending when Germany has been deprived of the capacity for effective military action, perhaps two years after the surrender of Germany) it is estimated that approximately twelve army divisions, twenty-eight air squadrons and a naval squadron and shore-based naval personnel will be needed in the British Commonwealth zone. During the final stage of occupation of indeterminate length the land forces might be further reduced, the naval forces withdrawn, and control exercised chiefly by air forces. If the recommendations of the London Committee which are outlined above are accepted, the use of Canadian forces, land, sea and air, during the initial and main periods of occupation is likely to be sought. Their availability will depend in part on operations still continuing in the Far East, but the main practical considerations will arise from the expected desire of the forces to return to Canada and of the Canadian people to bring them back.

¹⁴ See Document 519.

4. Thirdly, it is expected that Canada will be invited to assist in the elimination of dangerous areas in Europe to the extent of contributing to the removal of allied and enemy mines laid in European waters.

5. In the fourth place, Canada will have a national interest in taking part in the inter-allied machinery in Europe during the post-hostilities period. The Canadian Government has not pressed for membership in the Advisory Council for Italy and the European Advisory Commission in London which were established at the Moscow Conference. Canadian representation, however, would be desirable in the United Nations Commission for Europe which it has been proposed to set up to regulate inter-allied post-hostilities activities in Europe, including relief. It was intimated in the original United Kingdom proposals for this Commission¹⁵ that membership would be open to any Dominion "prepared to participate in the policing of Europe." In evaluating the extent of Canada's right to participation in this Commission, consideration should be given not only to whatever part Canadian forces might play in the occupation of Germany but also to the Canadian contribution to relief and rehabilitation and the role played by Canadian forces in the defeat of the enemy.

6. In the fifth place, Canada is directly concerned in the planning and execution of measures for the liberation and repatriation of Canadian prisoners-of-war and for providing for the needs of Canadian civilians in liberated and enemy countries.

7. On November 9th, the Chiefs of Staff, the Secretary of the Cabinet and the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs held a further meeting with the Working Committee to consider a report on post-hostilities problems which had been presented to them by the Working Committee.

¹⁵ Voir le document 516.

¹⁵ See Document 516.

8. This meeting expressed the views that:

(1) participation of the Canadian Government in any inter-allied machinery of control should continue to be pressed, as an essential condition of a Canadian contribution to the "policing of Europe" on the end of hostilities;

(2) although grave problems would arise in providing large numbers of men for occupation duties on a long-term basis, Canada should be ready to furnish at least a small occupation force;

(3) in view of the necessity for gradual repatriation and demobilization, arrangements might be made for the short-term use as occupation troops of more substantial Canadian forces as part of an orderly programme of demobilization;

(4) the extent of such participation would depend, however, on the nature and extent of Canadian forces assigned for duty in the Far East;

(5) no commitment to provide occupation troops on other than a short-term basis could be reached except in relation to the permanent establishments to be authorized for the three Services after the war; and

(6) consideration should be given by the responsible Allied authorities to contributions of occupation troops from European allies, at least at a later stage, on a larger scale than envisaged in the proposals received from London.

9. To facilitate further consideration of these problems, it was the view of the meeting that the War Committee should authorize the following arrangements:

(a) the creation of a Post-Hostilities Advisory Committee composed of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Chiefs of Staff, and the Secretary of the Cabinet with the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs as Chairman, to give direction and guidance to a Working Committee, to refer to it matters requiring detailed study, and to submit to the Cabinet War Committee recommendations on post-hostilities problems as occasion may arise; and

(b) the creation of a Working Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems, with the same membership as the present informal body, constituted as a sub-committee of the foregoing Committee, to keep the latter currently informed on post-hostilities matters, and to prepare studies or arrange for the preparation of studies which it considers necessary or which have been assigned to it by the Post-Hostilities Advisory Committee.

10. It is requested that the Cabinet War Committee should:

(a) approve the establishment of the committees proposed in paragraph 9; and

(b) give general guidance to the further studies by indicating their attitude towards the views put forward in paragraph 8.

CANADA'S POSITION IN RELATION TO POST-HOSTILITIES PROBLEMS

19. THE SECRETARY submitted a memorandum prepared by the Department of External Affairs after consultation with the Chiefs of Staff. Copies of the memorandum had been circulated.

The memorandum set out certain of the problems of the post-hostilities period which would directly affect Canada;

Canada would be an important source of supply for relief, especially food; Canada would almost certainly be asked to contribute forces for occupation duty in Germany; Canada would have a national interest in taking part in inter-allied machinery in Europe; Canada would be directly concerned in measures for the liberation and repatriation of Canadian prisoners of war and in assistance to Canadian civilians in liberated and enemy countries.

An informal working committee, composed of representatives of the three Services, External Affairs and the Privy Council Office had, in accordance with the decision of War Committee on July 15th, 1943¹, studied preliminary U.K. proposals for dealing with these and similar problems of the post-hostilities period.

After considering a report from this working committee a meeting of the Chiefs of Staff, the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary to the Cabinet submitted, for consideration by the government, certain preliminary views:

Canadian participation in inter-allied machinery of control should be an essential condition of any Canadian contribution to the "policing" of Europe;

limited Canadian forces might be used for occupation duties;

the extent of Canadian participation would depend on Canadian activities in the Far Eastern theatre and the post-war establishments of the Services; consideration should be given to use of occupation troops from European allies on a more extensive scale than envisaged in the U.K. proposals.

It was recommended in the memorandum that, to facilitate further consideration of these problems:

(a) a Post-Hostilities Advisory Committee, composed of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (chairman), the Chiefs of Staff and the Secretary to the Cabinet be established to submit to the War Committee recommendations as occasion might arise; and,

(b) that a Working Committee on Post-Hostilities Problems be established, as a sub-committee of the above Committee, with the same membership as the present informal committee, to carry on such work as might be assigned to it.

It was also recommended that the War Committee give general guidance with regard to the suggestions put forward in the memorandum.

(External Affairs memorandum, Nov. 24, 1943—C.W.C. document 659).

20. THE PRIME MINISTER expressed the view that it was important to avoid commitments which would involve the use of extensive Canadian forces in Europe after the cessation of hostilities.

After the long strains of war, the Canadian people would not be inclined to accept further heavy financial burdens for such purposes. The attitude of the Great Powers had already indicated that Canada would gain little credit by undertaking such additional commitments and would not be granted an adequate voice in important decisions of policy.

Further, the Canadian people would not be prepared to maintain large military establishments after the war.

It would be desirable to enlarge the proposed Advisory Committee to include the Deputy Minister of Finance and another senior civilian official, who should be a French Canadian.

21. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR suggested that an important element in the situation would be the strong desire on the part of Canadian forces to return to Canada and be demobilized immediately. Canada should be prepared to participate in the occupation of Germany, at least to the extent that demobilization policy permitted.

22. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES expressed the opinion that Canada could not avoid taking some share in the measures required for the pacification of Europe after the war.

23. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion,

(a) approved the establishment of an Advisory Committee and a Working Committee, as recommended in the memorandum submitted, and agreed that the former be enlarged to include the Deputy Minister of Finance and another senior civilian official, and that it report direct to the War Committee; and,

(b) deferred further consideration of the specific problems raised in the memorandum.

MOST SECRET. Your telegrams No. 153[†] and No. 154[†] and my telegram No. 252¹⁶ regarding Canadian participation in United Nations technical organizations.

1. Formation of Canadian Army Corps in Italy offers opportunity for us to present with dignity request for membership on Advisory Council for Italy. In my opinion such request should be submitted to each of the three Governments responsible for the creation of the Council.

2. Since the end of the Moscow Conference it has become clear that the Advisory Council for Italy is, for the near future, a more important body than the European Advisory Commission in London. It is to deal with current political problems relating to Italy and on termination of military control will assume executive direction of control machinery. It will be the testing ground for application of principles and experience gained will later be applied to other enemy countries. Members of the Council, therefore, will acquire invaluable experience and will have important influence in shaping future policy.

3. Until membership and competence is enlarged, European Advisory Commission is sort of continuing Committee to Moscow Conference. It is consultative and planning body without executive functions. Soviet Government have described it as supplementing diplomatic channels of consultation. Appointment of Gousev to London Commission and of Vyshinsky to Algiers Council indicates clearly relative importance they attach to the two organizations. This is contrary to original intentions of the United Kingdom Government who in this respect have been out-manoeuvred by the Soviet Government.

Canadian membership on Council for Italy would help to assure membership on European Commission when its membership and competence is enlarged.¹⁷

I have circulated for comment Wilgress' telegram No. 279 of November 25th urging that Canada should seek membership on the Advisory Council for Italy. You will find attached to it comments from Read, Keenleyside, Glazebrook and Holmes[†]. There is general agreement that we should not press for membership. Keenleyside suggests that we should reserve our position by informing the United Kingdom, United States and U.S.S.R. that we consider that we are entitled to representation. Holmes suggests that we should express our interest in the work of the Council.

I doubt that this is a good case for us to take up in all the capitals concerned. I think that the most that we might do is to tell London that we are interested in the work of the Council but do not feel that the presence of a Canadian Corps in Italy is in itself sufficient reason for us seeking membership. We might say however that we should like to receive reports of the proceedings of the Council and that our acquiescence in its present position does not mean that we are prepared to stand aside in a case of similar bodies which may be established elsewhere.¹⁸

This would leave it to London to protect our interests. I doubt that it would do any good to make a similar communication in Washington and Moscow unless we were really prepared to assume fairly general responsibilities in Europe.¹⁹

PROPOSED ATROCITIES COMMISSION

1. The United Kingdom Government is taking the lead in a proposal to establish a fact-finding commission recruited from nationals of the United Nations with suitable qualifications. The Commission's task would be to investigate atrocities committed against nationals of the United Nations and to report from time to time to the Government of these nations any cases where the Commission is satisfied that an atrocity has been committed.

2. It is proposed that each Allied Government, at the present stage, should draw up lists of criminals against whom it wishes to proceed and prepare evidence against them.

3. It is proposed that provisions should be included in armistice terms for immediate capture or surrender of wanted criminals. This would be limited to enemy war criminals, but would not include Quislings, who would be dealt with by the Allied Governments concerned.

4. It is not clear from the telegrams whether the Commission is to be set up before the end of the war, but I am inclined to think that it will not be established until the conclusion of hostilities. At the present time the British proposals are being submitted to President Roosevelt, and the British Government's policy is to be announced in the House of Lords on October 7.

¹⁸ Note marginale:

We might prepare a draft in this sense for P[rime] M[inister]'s approval. R[OBERTSON]

¹⁸ Marginal note:

¹⁹ Note marginale:

I agree. R[OBERTSON]

¹⁹ Marginal note:

5. It is suggested that the Dominion governments might be prepared to associate themselves with the proposed policy. The United States, Soviet, and Chinese governments, the Allied governments in London, and the French National Committee, are also being consulted.

6. This proposal raises the question as to the basic principles which should underlie the peace settlement. It will be remembered that, at the close of the last war, the prelude to the peace was the "Hang the Kaiser Election". Then the Kaiser was not hanged, and the Versailles settlement and post-Versailles period were confused by the clash of conflicting views. On the one hand was the view that the post-war settlement should be based upon extreme repression, and, on the other hand was the view that it should be based upon the emergence of a democratic Germany. This post-war confusion had a lot to do with the situation in which Hitler and the Nazi movement emerged. It is not fair to attribute that catastrophe to the confusion alone, because there was no similar confusion in Italy, where Mussolini and the Fascist movement developed. It is, however, not improbable that the confusion was a contributing factor to the rise of Hitler.

7. The present situation does not present a true parallel. The "Hang the Kaiser Movement" developed with victory and was spontaneous. The atrocities of the last war were relatively insignificant when compared with the atrocities of the present war. The present movement is at a much earlier stage in the war. It might be said, on the one hand, that it was too early to talk about war guilt when the capture of the criminals was in the dim and distant future. On the other hand, it might be said that a warning now would be in time to have some deterrent effect upon future atrocities.

8. If it is thought that it is undesirable to launch a war guilt "Hang Hitler" program, it would be necessary to send an immediate telegram protesting against the course which the British Government is proposing to pursue on Wednesday.

If on the other hand it is thought that the course is a prudent one, it may be desirable to associate the Canadian Government.

A third possible course would be to take no action, leaving the Canadian Government free to act, if it appeared to be advisable, at a later stage, to propose a peace program based upon goodwill and generous treatment of a defeated enemy.

WAR CRIMINALS

I suggest that an early decision should be made on whether or not Canada is to take part in the proposed "United Nations Commission for the investigation of War Criminals". The latest telegram from the Dominions Office D. 130[†] does not directly ask us whether or not we will participate, but we were previously asked this question in D. 399 of October 3rd, 1942[†]. That earlier telegram was answered by our No. 235, October 30th, which supported the policy but made no reference to Canadian participation. A draft telegram of November 30th[†] refusing representation was not sent.

I feel that this question has some significance as part of the general problem of Canadian representation in matters related to the peace settlement and post-war arrangements, and it may be that refusal to participate in some organizations may lead to our not being invited to participate in others.

The subject itself in this case is bound to be a difficult one to deal with. There is and will be an argument as to the legal aspect and probably a much more general argument on the practicability of any means of judging and punishing persons accused of crimes committed during the war. The fact, however, that it is a difficult question does not seem to be an argument for Canada abstaining. We have taken no stand against an investigation of war criminals but rather on the contrary we have so far given our approval. The more that the Commission is made up of countries with most cause for seeking revenge, the less likelihood there is of any kind of reasonable process being adopted.

In all subjects such as war criminals, reparations, penalties, unilateral disarmament and economic discrimination there will be an argument drawn from the Paris Conference. Nevertheless these subjects are bound to come up and most of them will have to be dealt with. The fact that mistakes were made on a previous occasion does not preclude the possibility of better settlement this time. Perhaps new names will be found for such processes as the demanding of reparations, but the reality will be much the same as at the end of the last war. If the Canadian Government is to abstain from all these controversial and difficult subjects it can have little influence in a peace settlement.

I very much question whether we can choose to take part only in the more pleasant aspects of settlement and reconstruction. I would not argue that it is, therefore, impossible to keep aloof from this or any other individual aspect, but I do think that this particular one and others which will follow, must be examined with such general considerations in mind. In view of the fact that Canadian troops may be expected to be operating on the Continent of Europe as now Canadian airmen are operating and Canadian sailors on the High Seas, we shall not be disinterested in respect of war crimes.

UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR INVESTIGATION OF WAR CRIMINALS

4. THE SECRETARY reported that, on October 7th last, the War Committee had approved concurrence by the Canadian government in U.K. government proposals for the establishment of a United Nations Commission. Since that time, the concurrence of other governments had been obtained, and it was now intended to call a meeting in London of national representatives to make formal arrangements for setting up the Commission.

Decision was required as to whether Canada should be represented at the proposed meeting and, if so, whether we would be willing to accept membership on the proposed Commission.

An explanatory document had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Mar. 16, 1943—C.W.C. document 444†).

5. THE PRIME MINISTER expressed the opinion that Canada should be a member of the proposed Commission. The treatment of Canadian prisoners of war in the Far East and in Europe were examples of direct Canadian interests in the work of the Commission. Certainly we were concerned in the subject matter of the proposed meeting and the government should be represented.

6. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that Canada be represented at the proposed London meeting; decision as to Canadian membership on the Commission to stand for the present.

Canadian Government has decided that Canada should be represented at the meeting of Allied Governments on war criminals which Dominions Office Circular D. 130 of March 5th¹ informs us will be called shortly. No final decision has been made as to whether Canada should accept membership on the Commission to be set up, but it is likely that we shall wish to appoint a Canadian member. Dominions Office telegram D.399 of October 3rd, 1942¹ asked us if we would associate ourselves with the policy of establishing a Fact-Finding Commission and we replied in No. 235 of October 30th, 1942, concurring in the policy of setting up a Commission.

Please convey to the United Kingdom authorities our intention to be represented at the meeting, explaining that the question of participation in the Commission is left open.

CANADA AND THE "UNITED NATIONS COMMISSION FOR THE PUNISHMENT OF WAR CRIMES"

1. The purpose of this memorandum is to state concisely the present position of Canada in regard to the projected "United Nations Commission for the Punishment of War Crimes."

2. The question of the Canadian attitude concerning punishment of war criminals, and the proposed Commission were first considered by Cabinet War Committee on October 7, 1942. At that time War Committee approved concurrence of the Canadian Government in the proposals of the United Kingdom. These proposals in essence were:

(a) The setting up of a "United Nations Commission for the Investigation of Crimes"—this Commission "... to be a fact-finding body to investigate atrocities committed against nationals of the United Nations and to report from time to time to Governments of these nations any case where they are satisfied an atrocity has been committed . . . ”;

(b) provision in the Armistice terms for immediate surrender of wanted criminals;

(c) agreement that wholesale executions were not intended, but that there would be punishment of those whose guilt violated “every tenet of humanity”. (See D.O. telegrams 359, of August 6, 1942[†], 399 of October 3, 1942,[†] and 401 of October 6, 1942[†]).

3. On 26th November, 1942, the Canadian Government was asked whether representation was desired on the United Nations Commission (see D.O. telegram No. 243[†]). The question was discussed at a meeting of War Committee in mid-March²¹ at which time it was decided Canada should be represented at the preliminary meeting of representatives of all the Allied Governments to discuss formal arrangements for the establishment of the Commission, its constitution and functions, (see D.O. telegram D.130 of 5th March, 1943[†])—the question of Canadian membership on the Commission to be left open. It was indicated, however, in our telegram No. 451 of March 20, 1943, to Mr. Massey, that Canada would likely wish to appoint a Canadian member. Deferment of a final decision seems to have been made on the ground that the conclusions reached at the preliminary meeting would provide a clearer indication what participation in the work of the Commission would mean in terms of Canadian external policy.

4. The foregoing preliminary meeting has still not been held. In the interim, however, the names of both the United States and United Kingdom representatives on the Commission have been publicly announced.

5. The present position is that because final replies have not yet been received from the Russian and Chinese Governments concerning the detailed proposals placed before them, the U.K. “cannot be certain that it will be possible for the inaugural meeting (i.e. preliminary meeting) to take place or for the Commission to be established in the near future”. (See telegram No. 1668 of July 21, 1943, from Mr. Massey[†]). The present proposal is, however, that representatives at this meeting should be of the standing of heads of Diplomatic Missions.

6. The question of appointment of a Canadian representative to the Committee is closely related to the general problem of Canadian representation on other bodies having to do with the peace settlement and post-war arrangements. If we fail to assert our right and duty to sit on international bodies of this kind, exclusion from similar bodies in the future is possible. Moreover, as Canadian forces progressively come into contact with the enemy, Canada acquires a personal interest in war crimes, that heretofore has been largely absent.

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D. 410 of the 10th July[†]. War Crimes Commission. Replies have now been received from all Allied Governments concerned. These indicate that a sufficient basis of agreement exists to enable further progress to be made, but certain questions have been raised in reply from Soviet Embassy, text of which is given in my immediately following telegram.

2. We would propose to reply to paragraphs 2 and 3 of the Soviet Embassy's note as in draft contained in my second immediately following telegram. If Dominion Governments have any observations, we should be glad to receive these at a very early date. We believe that Soviet Government are more concerned with the possibility of being out-voted on the Commission than with the constitutional position. Our reply is, therefore, designed to allay Soviet fears on this point whilst preserving international position of Dominion Governments. It will be appreciated that Soviet Government are not generally disposed to be very accommodating in negotiation and that it is desirable to go as far as possible to meet their fears.

3. In addition to sending reply to Soviet Embassy on the above lines, we propose to address note to diplomatic representatives of all United Nations in London inviting them or persons nominated by their Governments to attend an inaugural meeting in London about the middle of September, in order to take the necessary steps for the setting up of the Commission and to settle its constitution and functions. A similar invitation will simultaneously be sent to Dominion Governments. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 544

London, August 14, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D. 543 of August 13th. War Criminals Commission. Following is text of question received from Soviet Embassy referred to in paragraph 1 of my telegram under reference:

1. The Soviet Government agrees that the headquarters of the Commission shall be situated in London.

2. The Soviet Government considers the question of creation in Washington and Chungking, of the panels (or sub-committees) of the Commission of the United Nations for investigation of war criminals, should be decided upon in agreement with interested Governments, the United States and China. The question of participation in these panels of Powers who are members of the Commission should be decided at their discretion. The circumstances do not call for creation of such a panel in the U.S.S.R. The existing Extraordinary State Commission for Investigation of War Crimes in the Soviet Union is ready to present to the Commission of the United Nations all appropriate material, as the British Government was informed on November 4th, 1942.

3. Concerning participation in United Nations Commission for investigation of war crimes of British Dominions, India and Burma, the Soviet Union is ready to meet the wishes of the British Government in this connection on the condition that participation in work of Commission will be secured for Federated Republics of the U.S.S.R., namely the Ukrainian, Byelorussian, Moldavian, Lithuanian, Latvian, Esthonian and Karelo-Finski, all of which have been subjected to German occupation and have suffered horrors of Hitlerite terror, and whose populations for two years have been mobilized and are fighting in the ranks of the Soviet armies for the Allied common cause—for cause of liberation from the horrors from Hitlerite tyranny.

4. The Soviet Government consider it to be more correct to furnish, instead of one, additional four representatives at head of the Commission, namely, representatives of Great Britain, the United States of America, China and the U.S.S.R. This will enable sitting in connection with the Commission to be held under alternative chairmanship of each of the four representatives.

5. In regard to the appointment of the Soviet representative to the Commission, the decision of the Soviet Government will be communicated after the question of composition and order of work of Commission will have been settled. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 545

London, August 14, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D. 543 of August 13th. War Criminals Commission.

Following is draft reply referred to in paragraph 2 of my telegram under reference to paragraphs two and three of Soviet Embassy's note:

1. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom share the view of the Soviet Government that question of creation of panels of Commission in places other than London should be decided in agreement with interested Governments, and that question of participation in such panels of Governments who are members of the Commission should be decided at their discretion. They note in this connection that the Soviet Government consider that circumstances do not call for creation of such a panel in the U.S.S.R. and that existing Extraordinary State Commission for investigation of war crimes in the Union is ready to present to the United Nations Commission all appropriate material.

2. His Majesty's Government regards the constitutional position of member States of the British Commonwealth of Nations as being entirely different from that of the Federated Republics of the U.S.S.R. His Majesty's Government fully recognise the unparalleled sufferings to which inhabitants of occupied territories of the Soviet Union have been subjected by the German invaders and the magnificent contribution which they have rendered in the common struggle. Nevertheless, they feel bound to point out that under Soviet Constitution of 1936, the Soviet Union alone is empowered to represent its Federated Republics in international relations. The Federated Republics thus have no individual international status. In these circumstances, it could not be expected that His Majesty's Government, or indeed any other Government, would recognise these Republics as qualified to have separate representation upon an inter-Governmental Commission.

3. On the other hand, the Dominions and India have long enjoyed their own individual international status. The Dominion Governments all have power to make treaties with other states while India is recognised as an individual unit for treaty-making purposes. The Dominions and India were all separately represented on the League of Nations and have long participated on a basis of equality with other Sovereign Powers in international conferences and in work of international organisations such as the International Labour Organisation. Moreover, in the present war they have all made important contributions in men and materials to the common struggle in theatres far removed from their own territories, and in all cases their soldiers and citizens have been the victims of enemy war criminals. For these reasons they attach importance to having their own separate representation upon proposed Commission and upon those of Commission's panels dealing with areas with which they are directly concerned. In the circumstances, the claim of the Dominion Governments and Government of India that they have in principle a right to representation is question which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom regard as fully established, and it is regretted that it is not possible to arrange for them to be represented by the United Kingdom representative. On the other hand, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have reason to believe that the Dominion Governments and the Government of India will only wish to participate in deliberations of the Commission or its panels when cases directly concerning their countries are under discussion, and that they would be willing to make declarations to this effect at inaugural meeting. In that event, the representatives of the Dominions and India would, in the main, not take any part in examination of war crimes committed in occupied Europe including the occupied territories of the U.S.S.R.

4. The position set forth above is as that of the Dominions and India.²² The Government of Burma do not desire to be separately represented upon Commission, and His Majesty's Government do not claim the right of separate representation on Burma's behalf. They would propose that Burma's interests should be represented on the Commission and its panels by United Kingdom representative. In view, however, of the fact that the population of Burma, through occupation of the whole country by the Japanese, has been particularly exposed to war criminals, His Majesty's Government consider that a representative of the Government of Burma should be allowed, at the meetings of the Commission or its panels at which war crimes committed against Burmans or on Burmese territory are under consideration, to attend with United Kingdom representative as his advisor, though without any separate voice or status. 5. Subject to views of other Allied Governments concerned, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom would see no objections to Soviet member of the Commission being accompanied by persons specially informed in respect of relevant (constituency of ?) Republics of the Soviet Union when cases of direct interest to those Republics are under discussion. Ends.

Do you think Wilgress should be instructed to clear up directly with Soviet authorities misunderstanding of Canadian constitutional and international position apparent from Soviet note quoted in Circular D. 544?

I have had doubts about usefulness of proposed United Nations Commission to investigate war crimes and of wisdom of Canada accepting membership thereon. However, I should not like to see question of our participation determined or have the appearance of having been determined by Soviet contention that separate representation of Commonwealth countries would warrant or require similar representation of constituent Soviet Republics. Would reference in original Draft to "atrocities committed against nationals of the United Nations" include for example alleged Soviet responsibility for Katyn massacre? Ends.

MOST SECRET. Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Your telegram No. H-43 of the 15th August, War Crimes Commission. I am sending by tomorrow's bag copies of four Departmental memoranda[†] on this subject. We think it clearly necessary to take up immediately the questions raised by the Soviet contention in order to remove misunderstandings which, if not dealt with now, will plague us later on. For this purpose the British draft reply in Circular D.545 seems on the whole a satisfactory document. They could strengthen it by referring to Irish neutrality, but it would be impolitic for us to suggest this. The last two sentences of paragraph 3 of the draft reply, however, need consideration, perhaps by the War Committee this week. So far as we know, we have never indicated that we "will only wish to participate in deliberations of the Commission or its panels" when cases directly concerning Canada are under discussion, or that we would make a declaration to this effect at the inaugural meeting. The question of Canadian participation in the Commission was left open in the reply sent to London after discussion in the War Committee. If we approve this portion of the draft, we would seem to commit ourselves to a very limited participation at most. This would, perhaps, be a logical application of the "functional principle" but we do not like its assertion in this connection since the Russians have raised it as a matter of "Dominion status" and not as a "small Power" question. We think some formula providing generally for limited participation in the Commission by small Powers would be acceptable.

We agree that Wilgress should be instructed to take up directly with the Soviet authorities their misunderstanding of the Canadian constitutional and international position. We believe, however, that this should be deferred until after the United Kingdom has replied to the Soviet note. We might inform the United Kingdom Government that we intend to instruct Wilgress to take the matter up as soon as they have returned their answer to the Soviet note.

Read and I appreciate your doubts on usefulness of the Commission and of the wisdom of our accepting membership, but feel that if it is decided not to accept membership, the decision should not be notified to other Governments until after the issue raised by the Soviet note has been clarified.

With regard to your final question concerning the Katyn massacre, the assumption implicit in the whole scheme is that only the Axis can commit war crimes and we think that the Poles would receive short shrift if they tried to bring their charges against the Soviet Government before the Commission. IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following for Read from Robertson, Begins: Please despatch at once the following telegram to the Dominions Office prefixed immediate and important. The telegram should also be repeated to Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, Begins:

Secret. Your telegrams Circular D. 543, 544 and 545 and 577[†] War Crimes Commission. We feel that the serious misconceptions which are evident in the Soviet Government's comments must be cleared up as soon as possible, as otherwise they will return to plague us in other connections. We propose to instruct the Canadian Minister in Moscow to take up directly with the Soviet authorities their misunderstandings of the constitutional and international position of Canada, and consider that this approach would be more likely to do some good if it were made very shortly after the United Kingdom reply has been transmitted to the Soviet Embassy in London.

2. We do not attach a great deal of importance to Canadian participation in the Commission on War Crimes except in cases affecting Canadian nationals. These are likely to relate principally to the treatment of prisoners of war by Germany and Japan.

3. The general lines of the draft reply given in your telegram Circular D. 545 are acceptable to us although we should prefer not to commit ourselves to the limited participation in the Commission indicated in the last two sentences of paragraph 3 in advance of the meeting planned for mid-September at which it is hoped that the constitution and functions of the Commission will be settled. If you consider it important that a notification of limited participation should now be made to the Soviet Government we should prefer that the reference to the making of declarations to this effect at the opening meeting should be omitted from your reply. We are prepared to instruct the Canadian Minister in Moscow to give such an assurance.

4. We suggest the following further amendments to paragraph 3 of the draft reply.

(a) In the first sentence omit "and India", and for "their own individual international status" substitute "full international status".

(b) In the third sentence for "were all separately represented on the League of Nations" substitute "were all separate members of the League of Nations".

(c) In the fifth sentence for "to having their own separate representation" substitute "to their right of separate representation".

SECRET. Canadian Government telegram No. 138 of August 21st²⁴. War Crimes Commission.

1. Amendments suggested in paragraphs 4 and 5 of Canadian Government telegram have been incorporated in draft reply to Soviet Government. Beginning of paragraph 3 in my telegram Circular D. 545 of August 14th now reads "on the other hand the Dominions have long enjoyed full international status and Dominion Governments all have the power to conclude treaties with other States. India also enjoys its own individual international status and is recognised as an individual unit for treaty-making purposes. The Dominions and India were all separate members of the League of Nations".

2. As regards paragraph 3 of Canadian Government's telegram we feel that in view of importance of securing Soviet cooperation in the proposed commission as an international body which will operate in the post-war world it would be desirable to do everything possible whilst in principle maintaining international position of Dominion Governments to let Soviet Government know that their fears on the point of substance are unfounded in this case. We have accordingly retained the last two sentences of paragraph 3 of my telegram Circular D. 545 with the deletion as suggested by the Canadian Government of the words "and that they would be willing to make declarations to this effect at the inaugural meeting".

3. We note that Canadian Government will be instructing their representative in Moscow to explain to the Soviet Government their general position and we think it would be useful if the Canadian representative could at the same time give an assurance as to limited participation as suggested in the last sentence of paragraph 3 of the Canadian Government's telegram. We assume that the other Dominions will make a similar communication as regards limited participation to the Soviet Government either in Moscow or in London at the inaugural meeting or earlier.

Ottawa, August 28, 1943

SECRET. It is expected that a meeting of representatives of Allied Governments will be held in London about the middle of September to take the necessary steps for setting up proposed United Nations Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes. Canadian Government earlier agreed to send representative to the preliminary meeting without commitment as to membership on permanent commission.

2. United Kingdom Government has proposed that representatives of United States, U.S.S.R., China, United Kingdom, Dominions and Allied Governments in London compose the meeting, together with some arrangement for French representation. Reply received from Soviet Embassy agrees to London as headquarters of Commission, but raises question of Dominion representation. Following is paragraph 3 of Soviet reply. Begins:

“Concerning participation in United Nations Commission for investigation of war crimes of British Dominions, India and Burma, the Soviet Union is ready to meet the wishes of the British Government in this connection on the condition that participation in work of Commission will be secured for Federated Republics of the U.S.S.R., namely the Ukrainian, Byelorussian, Moldavian, Lithuanian Latvian, Esthonian and Karelo-Finski, all of which have been subjected to German occupation and have suffered horrors of Hitlerite terror, and whose population for two years have been mobilized and are fighting in the ranks of the Soviet armies for the Allied common cause—for cause of liberation from the horrors from Hitlerite tyranny.” Ends.

3. United Kingdom Government believe that Soviet Government are more concerned with the possibility of being out-voted on the Commission than with the constitutional position, and suggested a reply designed to allay Soviet fears on this point whilst preserving international position of Dominion Governments. After changes resulting from our comments reply will be sent to Soviet Government as soon as possible. Following is the relevant passage, Begins:

“His Majesty’s Government regards the constitutional position of member States of the British Commonwealth of Nations as being entirely different from that of the Federated Republics of the U.S.S.R. His Majesty’s Government fully recognise the unparalleled sufferings to which inhabitants of occupied territories of the Soviet Union have been subjected by the German invaders and the magnificent contribution which they have rendered in the common struggle. Nevertheless, they feel bound to point out that under Soviet Constitution of 1936, the Soviet Union alone is empowered to represent its Federated Republics in international relations. these Republics as qualified to have separate representation upon an inter-Governmental Commission.

On the other hand the Dominions have long enjoyed full international status and Dominion Governments all have the power to conclude treaties with other States. India also enjoyed its individual international status and is recognised as an individual unit for treaty-making purposes. For these reasons they attach importance to having their own separate representation upon proposed Commission and upon those of Commission's panels dealing with areas with which they are directly concerned. In the circumstances, the claim of the Dominion Governments and Government of India that they have in principle a right to representation is question which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom regard as fully established, and it is regretted that it is not possible to arrange for them to be represented by the United Kingdom representative. On the other hand, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have reason to believe that the Dominion Governments and the Government of India will only wish to participate in deliberations of the Commission or its panels when cases directly concerning their countries are under discussion. In that event, the representatives of the Dominions and India would, in the main, not take any part in examination of war crimes committed in occupied Europe including the occupied territories of the U.S.S.R." Ends.

4. We have informed the United Kingdom that you would be instructed to take up two aspects of the question with the Soviet authorities. These are:

(a) The misunderstanding by the Soviet Government of the constitutional position of Canada. You will be able to supplement the statement contained in United Kingdom Note quoted in paragraph 3. It is important that the question be clarified now or else it will lead to further difficulties later.

(b) Limited participation of Canada in Commission. We do not attach a great deal of importance to Canadian participation except in cases affecting Canadian nationals. These latter are likely to relate principally to the treatment of prisoners of war by Germany and Japan. You should assure the Soviet authorities that Canada is prepared to accept limited participation for that reason. This will mean attendance at only those meetings of the Commission when constituted in final form where matters affecting Canada are discussed. It should, however, be made clear that such limited participation is not repeat not connected with Dominion status.

5. Please take up this question as outlined in paragraph 4 with Soviet authorities. United Kingdom Government assume that other Dominions will make similar communications as regards limited participation to the Soviet Government either in Moscow or in London at the inaugural meeting or earlier.

6. You can doubtless secure further information about constitution and functions of proposed Commission from your United Kingdom colleague. We were informed on August 24th that United Kingdom reply would be given to Soviet Embassy in London as soon as possible.

Arising out of Soviet's reply to United Kingdom proposal that Dominions be members of United Nations Commission for investigation of war crimes, Australian Chargé d'Affaires has received telegram from Canberra instructing that he associate himself with me in representations to Soviet Government designed to establish clear constitutional status of the Dominions. I told him that I had not yet received your instructions. I agreed however to telegraph you requesting that when submitting instructions you give full text of memorandum which I could hand to Molotov. It would be useful if this text could be telegraphed beforehand to Canberra in order that Australian Government may agree to identical memorandum which Australian Chargé d'Affaires could present to Molotov at the same time if you are in accord with the proposal of joint approach.

Your telegram No. 109, war crimes.

2. Australian Chargé d'Affaires and I saw Mr. Molotov September 9th for an hour and twenty minutes. We first outlined the contents of the two different aide-mémoire which we left with him.

3. Mr. Molotov listened to both representations and said that we would receive in due course considered replies. He wished, however, to say at once that the Soviet Government was fully informed of and understood the international position of Canada and Australia. Meanwhile, he wished to put before us the point of view of the Ukrainian, Byelorussian, etc., people who had suffered such terrible wrongs and who were deeply interested in their representation on the Commission dealing with wrongs of which they had been victims. He wanted to know if our Governments were opposed to representation of Federated Republics on proposed Commission, and in what manner such representation would interfere with consideration of Canadian and Australian claims. If so, how was Soviet Government to explain our attitude to these people? Mr. Molotov developed these points at great length and kept continually coming back to them.

4. Mr. Whelan and I pointed out that our instructions were to make clear to the Soviet authorities the undoubted international status of our respective countries. Mr. Molotov declared that that status would not be questioned, and that what Soviet Government were concerned with was representation of Ukrainian etc., people. Their advisers saw no grave obstacles to representation of Federated Republics on such a "judicial" Commission. Soviet Government felt that an important matter of this character should not be dealt with according to ordinary standards of international practice. We pointed out that both our countries desired that wrongs of the victims to [sic] be fully considered. The method by which status of the people forming a part of U.S.S.R. was represented before Commission was a matter for the Government of the U.S.S.R. to consider.

5. Mr. Molotov said that Soviet Government had endeavoured to deal with that point in its reply to United Kingdom Government, and he would supply us with copies so that we might send it to our Governments for consideration.

6. You will see from this that the interview was very difficult, particularly as Molotov conceded our main point by assuring us that they understood fully our international status. It is clear to me that the chief aim of the Soviet Government is to demonstrate before other Governments the fact that the peoples of this country have been subjected to far greater suffering than those of any other United Nation. As with second front agitation they wish to build up credits which they will be able to use effectively at the Peace Conference to help them achieve their major objectives. It must also be remembered that public opinion in this country on subject of war crimes is very strong and is in favour of maximum retribution.

Ottawa, September 26, 1943

SECRET. Reference your despatch A.405/4 of September 2nd¹ regarding the meeting of Allied representatives which is to settle the constitution and functions of the United Nations Commission for the punishment of war crimes. I would be grateful if you could represent Canada at this meeting. The question of continuing Canadian representation on the Commission itself will depend partly on the degree of our participation in this work and partly on the character of the Commission's personnel. It is noted that the United Kingdom is designating an eminent lawyer as its representative and it may be if our share in the work is likely to be active that the Government may wish to nominate some person with judicial experience to the Commission. Similar considerations will determine whether an effort should be made to make available in London the services of a Canadian legal expert who could participate in the work of the technical committee which is to consider rules of evidence, organization of tribunals, etc.²⁵

As you will have seen from the exchange of telegrams with the Dominions Office regarding the Soviet Government's objections to the inclusion of representatives of the Commonwealth Governments on the Commission, our interest in its work will be limited to such questions as are of direct concern to Canada. We will be primarily interested in cases affecting Canadians or members of the Canadian Forces. Such cases may be expected to arise principally out of the treatment of prisoners of war by Germany and Japan.

As regards the issue of status raised by the Soviet Union it has been made clear that Canada is fully entitled to membership in the Commission and to participation in such degree as the Canadian Government considers appropriate in its work. At the same time our Minister in Moscow has informed the Soviet Government that Canadian participation in the work of the Commission will, in fact, be limited to questions of direct concern to Canada. This limitation on our participation will be a consequence of our relatively restricted interest in the questions the Commission will be called upon to consider and implies no derogation from the established international position of Canada.

Slaght, député fédéral pour Parry Sound, fut nommé conseil honoraire afin d'amasser des témoignages de crimes de guerre et de conseiller le gouvernement sur cette question. Il était assisté par un comité consultatif composé de fonctionnaires et par un membre du personnel du juge-avocat général.

[n.d.]

1. A meeting was held in London on October 20, 1943, to make arrangements for the establishment of the United Nations Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes at which the below noted were represented: Australia, Belgium, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Greece, India, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Poland, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States, Yugoslavia, French Committee of National Liberation.

2. The following were the important decisions reached at this meeting:

(a) to set up the Commission immediately with a view to its serving two primary purposes:

(1) investigation and recording of evidence of war crimes, with identification where possible of the individuals responsible;

(2) reporting to the Governments concerned cases in which it appeared that adequate evidence might be expected to be forthcoming.

Any question of the possible expansion of the scope of the functions of the Commission, it was agreed, should be reserved for future consideration.

(b) that the Headquarters of the Commission should be at London, with power to set up Panels of the Commission in other capitals, or arrange otherwise, in the light of the wishes of the Governments most closely concerned;

(c) that the question of a Chairman be left for the Commission to settle when it met;

(d) that the Commission be left to settle its own procedure;

(e) that a Technical Committee was desirable to advise the Governments concerned upon matters of a technical nature, such as the sort of tribunals to be employed for the trial of war criminals, the law to be applied, the procedure to be adopted and the rules of evidence to be followed, but that its actual establishment for the present should be deferred.

3. The meeting, in addition, authorized the adoption of a resolution, for communication to the Government of the Soviet Union, through the United Kingdom, expressing the hope of those present that the U.S.S.R. would participate in the Commission, and also in that of the Technical Committee, when it had been set up.

*Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures²⁶

*Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs²⁶
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] November 11, 1943

The attached copy of despatch No. 97 of November 1st from the Dominions Office¹ covers a disturbing communication to the Foreign Office from the Soviet Government on the Commission for War Crimes. The Soviet Government informed the British Government in July that they would agree to the participation of the British Dominions and India as members of the Commission only on condition that similar participation would be accorded to the seven Federated Republics of the U.S.S.R. which had been occupied in whole or in part by the enemy. You will remember that the suggested parallel between the international status of the Dominions and the Soviet Republics was vigorously contested by the United Kingdom Government and that Wilgress on instructions from us saw Molotov on September 9th in company with the Australian Chargé d'Affaires. Molotov assured them that the Soviet Government fully understood the international position of Canada and Australia.

On October 18th, however, on the eve of the meeting in London of United Nations Governments to establish the Commission the Soviet Government returned to the charge in the attached memorandum.¹ They were not present at the meeting on October 20th and apparently are still taking the line that they will not participate in the Commission unless the Federated Republics concerned are given the right of direct participation.

The Soviet argument is an interesting one. Its central contention is made in the following paragraph:

"Having the right independently, without anybody's approval, to establish their Constitution, possessing their territory, having their Republican citizenship, and having the right freely to secede from the U.S.S.R., the Soviet Union Republics are sovereign States in no less degree than the British Dominions. The establishment of the order of realisation of their sovereignty by the Union Republics depends solely on agreement between the Union Republics and the U.S.S.R."²⁷

Even if one could admit that the Soviet Republics are evolving towards a full international status and have now reached, as this note suggests, the position internationally of the Dominions during the last war, the Soviet argument completely ignores the provisions of their own constitution whereby all questions of foreign policy, etc., are centered in the Soviet Government. When Wilgress made this point to Molotov he answered that they were themselves the best interpreters of the Soviet constitution.

We have asked Wilgress to telegraph his views on the current situation as revealed by this communication. I doubt that there is any further action which we should take at the moment. If the Soviet Government agrees to an exchange of Ambassadors this may do something to clear the issue. I think also that unless the position has changed it might be desirable for you to take the question up with Mr. Gousev's successor here (he has not yet been nominated) very shortly after his arrival as this would be a good way of impressing on him and on his Government the importance which we attach to the complete recognition of our international status.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 156 of November 13th[†]. Commission on War Crimes. Soviet memorandum received by British Embassy on eve of Conference²⁸ and although marked for Officer²⁹ and me matter was overlooked in the confusion of the Conference.

2. I have now received letter from Vyshinsky dated November 11th[†] enclosing aide-mémoire[†] in reply to aide-mémoire which I left with Molotov on September 9th³⁰. This is long and difficult to summarize so unless you instruct otherwise I will only describe it briefly in this telegram and will send full translation by mail.

3. Aide-mémoire repeats arguments contained in memorandum submitted to the United Kingdom Government on October 18th[†] and contains statements which we cannot allow to go by default. Claim is made that Federated Republics are Sovereign States and that their participation in international organizations is permissible under Soviet Constitution. Burden of argument is that British Dominions comparatively recently commenced to participate in international organizations without any Constitutional Act, therefore Federated Republics should be permitted to do likewise. Soviet Union did not object to such participation by British Dominions, therefore Canada should not deny right of Federated Republics to participate.

4. A translation of one paragraph of aide-mémoire is given in my immediately succeeding telegram.

5. My view is that we should confine ourselves to rebutting arguments of aide-mémoire with a view to establishing our international position and right to participate without reservation on the War Crimes Commission. Under no circumstances should we question right of Federated Republics to participate since this is a matter best left with the United Kingdom Government.

6. My understanding is that Commission is sitting in London with Canada participating but without Soviet Union. Latter will refrain from participation until question of Federated Republics is cleared up.

7. United Kingdom view is that Soviet Union sees in this question an opportunity to secure recognition of their western frontier and of incorporation of Baltic States in Union. Eden discussed question briefly with Molotov during Conference and when latter raised participation of Federated Republics Eden replied simply that this gave rise to many questions. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 1077

London, December 8, 1943

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 820 of October 20th[†]. My despatch Circular D. 97 of November 1st[†], War Crimes Commission.

1. Resolution adopted at inaugural meeting of October 20th expressing hope that Soviet Government would agree to participate in work of the Commission (see my telegram Circular D. 829 of October 21st[†], paragraph 2) was conveyed to Soviet Ambassador in London to whom record of the meeting was also communicated. Soviet Government have not responded and presumably propose to await reply on general principle of their claim to separate international representation for the Union Republics. (See Soviet note of October 18th¹ enclosed in my despatch Circular D. 97).

2. We do not feel that arguments put forward in Soviet note can be accepted for following reasons:

(a) Soviet Constitution of 1936 expressly reserves to Union Government under Article 14 representation of Union Republics in international relations.

(b) It seems most unlikely that other Federal Governments e.g. United States Government, would admit right of 16 Union Republics to separate representation while United States has single vote in respect of 48 States.

(c) Acceptance of Soviet thesis would involve recognition of incorporation of Baltic States, etc., in Soviet Union by all Governments participating in International Commission.

3. His Majesty's representative, Moscow, considers that main motive behind Soviet Government's claim for separate representation for Union Republics is probably fear of being outvoted on a matter in which they are determined that very drastic action shall be taken and about which they feel other Governments may be less tough; wish to obtain backdoor recognition of incorporation of Baltic States, etc. in U.S.S.R. he considers, at most, a secondary motive.

4. In all the circumstances our view is that best course would be that any further reply to Soviet claim should not come from us alone but that question should be one for all Governments represented on the Commission to deal with. We consider that this would be best calculated to avoid causing Soviet Government to advance similar claim in connection with other International Commissions to participation in which they may attach more importance than in case of War Crimes Commission. We are putting this view also to United States Government and should be glad to learn also whether Dominion Governments agree with it.

5. If this view is accepted there is no alternative to allowing War Crimes Commission to proceed with its work without Soviet participation. Soviet Government would, however, be kept informed of the Commission's activities and decisions in the hope that Soviet procedure may, as far as possible, be assimilated to that of the Commission. It will be necessary to explain to other Allied Governments represented on the Commission reason for absence of Soviet representative.

6. We propose accordingly to consult with United States Representative on the Commission and Sir Cecil Hurst³¹ informally as soon as possible on the following points:

(a) How best to bring the other Allies represented on the Commission the Soviet Government's views as to participation in the work of the Commission and their claims to separate representation for the Union Republics.

(b) How to convey the views of the Governments represented on the Commission on this subject to the Soviet Government.

³¹ Président, Commission sur les crimes de guerre.

³¹ Chairman, War Crimes Commission.

(c) Arrangements for keeping the Soviet Government currently informed of the work of the Commission.

(d) The question of inviting the various United Nations Governments not represented upon the Commission to submit to it information regarding war crimes against their own nationals.

Should be glad if you would inform us whether you would wish to participate in these informal discussions through High Commissioner in London. If so we shall, of course, be very happy to arrange this.

An early reply to this telegram would be appreciated.

SECRET. Addressed Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs No. 197, repeated Australia No. 14, New Zealand No. 15 and South Africa No. 12. Your telegram D. 1077 of December 8th. War Crimes Commission.

1. We should be glad for arrangements to be made for Canadian High Commissioner to participate in consultations proposed in paragraph 6 of your telegram.

2. We are in general agreement with your statement of the position and with your proposed course of action. We think that there are strong arguments in favour of separating Soviet procedure for investigation of war crimes from procedure of other United Nations. It is clear that Soviet conception of justice in this connection will differ from that held in British Commonwealth, United States and Allied countries of Western Europe. To attempt close coordination of procedure through the War Crimes Commission may further complicate a very difficult problem and may lead to new differences of view with the Soviet Government which would have undesirable political repercussions. As they have already instituted their own tribunal and have refused establishment of a panel of the War Crimes Commission in Russia we think they might be allowed to go their own way without renewed effort on our part to secure their membership on the Commission. Their claim for representation of constituent republics is based on indefensible arguments about which it is impossible to compromise.

3. If continued non-participation of the Soviet Government in the Commission is accepted as a desirable policy in itself, it will not be necessary in replying to the Soviet Government's memorandum to deal at any length with their constitutional claims.

You will have seen Dominions Office telegram D. 1077 of December 8th and our reply No. 197 of December 17th which will provide you with general instructions for your guidance in proposed discussions with United States representative on the Commission and Sir Cecil Hurst. It seems to us that Soviet claim for direct representation of constituent republics on the Commission should be treated as an isolated instance in which a most unusual demand has been advanced for special reasons. Soviet Government is most unlikely to withdraw this demand but it may still be hoped that they will not raise the question in other connections. The Commission has a most difficult and thankless task and there is much to be said for welcoming Soviet abstention. If this view is shared by other Governments represented on Commission, the aim should be to close the incident by leaving matters as they are, with Soviet Government outside the Commission and the Commission organized to pursue its work.

This series of telegrams from the United Kingdom Government summarizes the discussions which have been taking place between the United Kingdom and the United States looking to the conclusion of an Agreement which would clarify and define the "consideration" which the United States is asking for in return for Lease-Lend assistance. What the United States wants is an undertaking now that the United Kingdom will cooperate with the United States in pursuing a liberal international economic policy after the war. The United States regards the abolition of import discriminations as an essential objective for workable post-war economic arrangements. The United Kingdom is reluctant to accept this objective in terms at this time because it feels that it implies the ultimate abandonment of the right of Empire countries to grant each other exclusive trade preferences.

³² Voir le volume 7, documents 643 et 644.

³² See Volume 7, Documents 643 and 644.

The United States is pressing very hard for the early acceptance by the United Kingdom of their revised draft of Article 7 (see para. 3 of attached note). They attach the highest importance to reaching an agreement in principle with the United Kingdom on this question before Congress is asked for a third Lease-Lend appropriation some time in January. The United Kingdom Government is still unhappy about the United States redraft, though it recognizes that it is very much more acceptable than the original United States draft submitted in September³³. It has instructed the British Ambassador in Washington to endeavour to get the United States Government to agree to the two Governments going ahead with the direct substantive conversations envisaged in sub-paragraph 2 of the United States redraft, without insisting on prior agreement about the ultimate objectives of the two countries' international economic policy. These conversations would involve prior consultation between the Governments of the British Commonwealth, which would "also be of a general character requiring no final decision on Imperial preference or any other large issue".

Lord Halifax has informed his Government that he is most reluctant to approach the United States in the sense of these instructions until the matter has been further considered. He thinks such an attitude on the part of the United Kingdom so shortly after the United States has come into the war would have a "most deplorable and perhaps long-lasting effect on relations between them." He argues very cogently I think in favour of accepting the United States draft now, subject to the understandings about United States policy which he has received from Mr. Acheson of the Department of State and which are being confirmed by Ambassador Winant in London. London is apparently not entirely convinced by Halifax's argument, but agrees that Article 7 might be acceptable if the United Kingdom and the United States could get together on an agreed explanation of its applicability to the question of Imperial preference which could be made public in both countries at an early date. In the circumstances the United Kingdom Government suggest that Halifax take the question up directly with Churchill and ascertain his views as to the practicability of securing an agreed interpretation of the position respecting Imperial preferences. The latest telegram in the series from London states:

"Of course we could not in any case commit ourselves without previous consultation with the Dominions to a policy of putting future Imperial preferences in the melting pot. If a satisfactory interpretation were agreed, however, it would make it very much easier to carry on our consultations with the Dominions to finality, and we should hope to be able to reach early agreement with them as to the course to be pursued".

³³ See Volume 7, Document 644.

The question at issue in these negotiations is a very big and important one which concerns a great many other countries than those directly identified with the United Kingdom-United States negotiations. On the one hand it concerns all the countries of the Commonwealth which give and get exclusive Imperial preferences. Clearly, if the United Kingdom is not to be in a position to grant exclusive tariff preferences, other parts of the Empire will not be able to continue granting tariff preferences to the United Kingdom. On the other hand, these negotiations will affect the international economic position of all countries now excluded from trading in Empire markets on terms as favourable as those accorded to other Empire countries. The interests of all our Allies, particularly of those with colonial possessions like the Dutch and Belgians, and of the countries of South America, are in more or less degree identified with those of the United States in pressing for the abolition of discriminatory treatment.

Canada's special interest in respect of these negotiations is different to that of other parts of the Commonwealth in that this country is not a direct beneficiary of Lease-Lend assistance, and is not a member of the sterling area. We have a certain interest in perpetuating whatever preferred marketing positions we can hope to maintain after the war. At the same time, I think we have a greater interest in supporting the main objectives of American international economic policy. As Acheson pointed out to Lord Halifax, the United States proposals recognize the primary importance of increased economic activity, both national and international, in employment, production, consumption and exchange of goods. It is against this background and in conjunction with it that there are added the objectives of the elimination of discriminatory treatment, reduction of tariffs and the achievement of other economic objectives of the Atlantic Charter. They recognize explicitly that a liberalization of commercial policy is a question that requires action by all participants and that high standards of productivity and consumption will be required to succeed in it.

We have been worried about the disposition on the part of the United States to determine, by bilateral negotiations with the United Kingdom, questions of policy intimately affecting us. Under present circumstances, however, I do not think we would be justified in pressing our objections on this score to the point of imperilling the direct negotiations between the United Kingdom and the United States. There is, I think, a considerable block of opinion in the United Kingdom ready to see these negotiations fail, and to ascribe the United Kingdom's inability to reach agreement with the United States to the paramount necessity of preserving preferential trade relations with the Dominions. All things considered, including the practical impossibility of putting any kind of price on the value of particular post-war preferences, I am inclined to think we should let the United Kingdom and the United States know that we are glad to see them trying to work out new arrangements governing international trade which would be of so broad a character as to make the continuance of Imperial preferences unnecessary to protect the commercial interests of the Commonwealth.

It is quite likely there will be a wave of nationalistic sentiment in the United States and also probably in the United Kingdom. There is something in the idea that these Lease-Lend negotiations could be used in order to secure an agreement helpful in resisting the onset of post-war economic nationalism.

U.K.-U.S. LEASE-LEND CONSIDERATION AGREEMENT—
INTER-IMPERIAL PREFERENCE

1. THE PRIME MINISTER read a memorandum from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs reporting the course of recent discussions between the U.K. and U.S. governments concerning the proposed Lease-Lend Consideration Agreement. A British suggestion that signature of the Agreement be accompanied by an exchange of notes, reserving inter-Imperial preferential arrangements from the undertaking to work for the abolition of discriminatory commercial treatment, had met with an unfavourable reception, and the U.S. government urged strongly the psychological importance of concluding the Agreement without any such reservation in respect of Article 7. The United Kingdom had, therefore, come to the conclusion that the Agreement, as it stood, should be signed, at once, and had asked whether the Dominion governments had any objection.

In the circumstances, it was not felt that Canada could object, and a draft telegram to that effect had been prepared for despatch to the U.K. government.

(External Affairs memorandum, February 14, 1942[†], attached draft telegram, and further memorandum of December 30, 1941.)

2. MR. KING said that the Australian government were agreeable; indeed, they now urged early conclusion of the Agreement on general grounds of British-American collaboration. Canada could hardly do otherwise in the circumstances and it was, therefore, recommended that the U.K. government be informed of Canadian concurrence in the terms of the draft telegram submitted.

3. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS explained that the Agreement provided that materials supplied under Lease-Lend, and consumed, would be wiped off the slate; what remained after the war would be returned.

4. The War Committee approved the course recommended and agreed to the despatch of the draft telegram submitted.

MOST IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Following from Prime Minister for your Prime Minister, Begins: Your telegram Circular D.86 of February 13th[†]. In all of the circumstances which have been very fully set out in your telegram under reference and earlier telegrams, and in view of the firm assurances which have been received from the United States about the mutual character of the adjustments to be made in realizing the objectives set forth in Article 7 of draft Lease-Lend Agreement, my Government does not see any objection to the United Kingdom proceeding immediately with arrangements for signature outlined in your telegram³⁵. SECRET. I. Before leaving some weeks ago for Washington, the United States Ambassador in London had a number of informal talks here. Ambassador said that while in the United States of America he proposed to ask his Government to send to London as soon as possible a small team of experts to pave the way for the conversations provided for in Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement³⁶. The Ambassador has now returned and has informed us that his proposal has met with the agreement of his Government but that they are not in a position to send a team of experts immediately, though they hope to do so in near future.

2. United States Ambassador has emphasized that the President is averse from anything in the nature of a formal conference at this stage as this would inevitably give rise to unhelpful publicity. He has therefore suggested that if a United States team comes to London it should be with the ostensible and perfectly natural purpose of seeing at first hand the workings of the Government departments here concerned with finance and trade just as other United States experts have visited this country to see the workings of our Ministries of Economic Warfare, Food, etc. No allusion would be made here to the connection between the experts' visit and the Mutual Aid Agreement.

3. We welcome and agree with Mr. Winant's proposals and have informed United States Government that we hope suggested preliminary talks between experts may be begun in the near future, it being understood that at this stage the talks would be informal, exploratory and non-committal. See my immediately following telegram[†] containing text of instructions sent to His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington.

4. The purpose of the talks would be to survey the whole field of post-war international economic reconstruction, to define in broad outline the problems which will confront us and to determine if possible the methods of approach which seem best calculated to facilitate a solution of these problems. Any conclusions reached by the experts in these informal and exploratory conversations would be submitted to the two Governments for consideration as a basis for the opening of more official discussions and would be communicated by us to His Majesty's Governments in the Dominions in order that there might be full consultation between us before further conversations were undertaken. Discussion with the Russian and other Allied Governments might also be desirable at that stage with a view to securing their general co-operation in any broad plan that might seem likely to emerge.

5. We have given preliminary consideration to the nature of the instructions which we should give to our experts in the talks. As the conversations would be purely exploratory and as there would be no question of our experts committing the United Kingdom Government in any way at this stage, we propose to give them the maximum latitude and discretion to discuss all possible lines of action which appear to them to be worth exploring. On the other hand they must have a degree of permissive authority for what they say and we have therefore approved of their putting forward for discussion certain views and suggestions on the following particular topics which are likely to be raised on either side:

(a) The possibility of international currency arrangements on new lines so as to facilitate multilateral arrangements, the stabilization of the exchange arrangements to look after debtor balances arising out of foreign trade and above all the exercise of an expansionist rather than a contractionist pressure on world trade generally;

(b) Proposals put forward unofficially in the United States for an International Economic Board and an Anglo-American Investment Board or some variant of this plan;

(c) The question of the maintenance of exchange control excluding control over movements of capital after the war;

(d) Our experts are also considering means of attempting to establish an international organisation for steadying the prices of primary products and holding buffer stocks, thus providing countries producing such products with a steady flow of overseas purchasing power in years of strong and weak demand equally;

(e) Preliminary exchanges of view arising out of the reference in Article VII to the diminution of forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce and the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers must of course also take place;

(f) Another question likely to be raised is that relating generally to nutrition including proposals for the relaxation of agricultural protection, encouragement of higher standards of consumption, improvement of livestock and the diminution of cereal production by the substitution of other output.

6. Our preliminary views on some of these topics are briefly indicated in my telegram Circular D.261.

7. From the views expressed by Dominion Governments when they were consulted on the terms of the Mutual Aid Agreement, we feel confident that they will be glad to hear of the initiative taken by the United States Ambassador in proposing that these informal talks between the United States and United Kingdom experts should be set on foot. We trust also that Dominion Governments will appreciate the reasons leading us to the conclusion that our experts should be given the fullest discretion at this stage, on the understanding that there will be no question of any commitment on either side. An unrestricted survey of the problems and possibilities on the basis proposed will, we are confident, do much both to clear the ground and to provide us all with preliminary data on which to base a fuller exchange of views. It will also give us, we hope, a most useful indication of trends of thought in the United States and of the most promising directions in which we can jointly bend our energies when the stage for Governmental discussions is reached. While therefore we do not ask that His Majesty's Governments in the Dominions should associate themselves at this stage with any of the preliminary suggestions which we have agreed to our experts bringing into the general discussion, we hope that they will share our view that the holding of such talks should prove to be a valuable step towards the clarification of the far-reaching issues involved.

8. We have carefully avoided giving to the United States administration, whether formally or informally, any indication in advance of the conversations of the subjects we have been turning over in our minds. It may well be that the United States experts will themselves put forward ideas somewhat akin to those in our minds and that discussions will mainly centre round these ideas. In any case we think it important that the conversations should attract no publicity whatever and we feel sure that we may rely upon the co-operation of Dominion Governments to this end.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 261

London, May 22, 1942

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 259. Improvement of the Organisation for the Settlement of International Obligations.

1. There is great need for a new or improved system of organisation for the settlement of international balances on current account. Such a system would not of itself rectify the disequilibria from which the world is likely to suffer at the end of the war, but it would provide a medium which, in conjunction with other agencies and actions, would give the best chance of a prosperous world.

2. A good deal of study has recently been given in this country and elsewhere to possible form of such an organisation. It is interesting to note that Mr. Feis of the United States State Department recently sketched a plan rather of this character in the January issue of the American publication Foreign Affairs. He expressly disclaimed any Governmental authority for it and we do not know whether it will figure in the conversations.

3. Meanwhile the Treasury experts here have been thinking on similar lines and have drawn the outline of a plan for a new organisation which aims at substituting an expansionist for a contractionist pressure on world trade generally and which might be styled for short an International Clearing Union. Its object would be to provide in the international sphere an organisation which would perform for participating States the functions performed for individuals by the ordinary banking system i.e., the clearing of accounts debit and credit, between different customers and the provision of overdrafts for those who need them. The suggestion would be that the principal countries of the world would adhere to this Clearing Union which would have the function of settling international balances of payments by credits and debits in a new international monetary unit having a specified gold equivalent.

4. The Clearing Union would be a centre round which other international agencies could gather. It would provide convenient means for financing post-war relief, international development schemes and commodity control schemes. It could co-operate also in schemes to control the trade cycle and thus secure the maximum degree of employment.

5. The details of such a scheme can be filled in a variety of ways. It is rather the general conception which is important. We think it unnecessary to attempt at this stage to form any final judgment on the practicability or desirability of a plan of this character. We propose to let our representatives bring it forward in such a way as may seem expedient. It would be a basis for discussion and exploration designed especially to focus attention on the need for improved methods for the settlement of international balances.

Unofficial United States proposals.

6. Professor Hansen and Professor Gulick have put forward in the United States plans for attaining some of the economic objectives in the Atlantic Charter. They propose an International Economic Board with research staffs in various centres to advise collaborating Governments in regard to international policy to promote full employment, a rising standard of living etc. They have also a more ambitious proposal for the revival of international lending through an international corporation. We do not know in what form proposals of this general character may be suggested by the United States experts and we are awaiting further information rather than attempting to frame any proposals of our own.

Maintenance of exchange control after the war.

7. The declarations in the 4th and 5th paragraphs of the Atlantic Charter and Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement are especially concerned with expansion of production, interchange of goods and improved labour standards, but at the outset any new policies will have to be applied in a period of unexampled economic difficulty in the external sphere. We shall start the peace with great liabilities and with small reserves to meet what may well be a very serious deficit in our balance of payments.

8. Exchange control may be used

- (a) For the regulation of current trade transactions;
- (b) For the control of capital movements.

Utilisation of exchange control in connection with (a) can be highly discriminatory and the objective must therefore be to relax or eventually to abolish its use for this purpose. But maintenance of control for the purpose of (b) appears desirable since there seems little prospect that in the immediate post-war period such complete security will be restored as to eliminate economic and political distrusts giving rise to speculative movements of capital which were so disruptive in the nineteen thirties and which ended in the United States becoming the depository of the main part of the world's stock of monetary gold. The regulations necessary to prevent private investment on foreign stock exchanges and private subscriptions to foreign loans on a scale inconsistent with the state of our balance of payments cannot be fully effective in the absence of postal censorship but will need to be maintained as adequately as circumstances permit. From our point of view it would be desirable though it may well prove impracticable that the United States should also establish a regulative system.

Primary products and buffer stocks.

9. We hope to be in a position to communicate to Dominion Governments soon the results of the consideration we are giving to this question.

Barriers to international trade.

10. We think it probable that the United States experts will wish to discuss the use of particular devices such as protective tariffs, preferences, import quotas, anti-dumping duties, export subsidies, centralised purchase of staple commodities and bilateral payments agreements. Whether the ambitious schemes mentioned above are adopted or not we think it doubtful whether we or many other countries could afford entirely to forego all such forms of control of trade without grave risk of economic and financial collapse and without reversing the probable trend of our domestic social policy. The United States may equally need to avoid committing themselves not to use such devices and we hope to ascertain their preliminary views. On our side while emphasising our desire to work towards the restoration of a system of multilateral trade, we propose to explain the dimensions of our special problem and to discuss the intrinsic difficulties involved in the possible elimination of safeguarding devices. If it should appear that a substantial clash of views is likely to arise all question of the formal commitments we could afford to enter into on this subject would be deferred until after exploration of the constructive economic arrangements and new international institutions or practices which might be established after the war. To the extent that discussion of Imperial preference may be necessary at this early stage, discussion by our representatives of this, as of other topics, would be entirely ad referendum.

Nutrition.

11. At present there is little evidence of the nature of probable proposals in the field of nutrition.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 383

London, August 26, 1942

SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 259 of May 22nd. Owing to difficulties on the United States side it has been impracticable so far for proposed informal and non-committal talks with United States experts about post-war economic policy to take place and we think it possible that they will have to be deferred until after the elections in November.

We feel, however, that this delay can be turned to good account since it will we hope give us an opportunity for an informal exchange of views and ideas with Dominion authorities before the talks with the United States experts begin. Such a pooling of ideas would we feel be most valuable even though at the present time, before we have any indication of how the United States delegates are likely to approach the large issues involved, any discussions would necessarily be of a general and exploratory character. The question of post-war economic policy is however so complex that it would, we feel, be difficult in the time available to achieve the object we have in mind by exchanges of telegrams and documents and we feel therefore that Dominion Governments will share our view that the most fruitful way of pressing forward with the preliminary survey of the various problems would be by means of direct discussion. For this purpose we should like to suggest that it would be to our mutual advantage if one or two high officials or experts from each of the Dominions could come to London in the near future for an informal exchange of views with our officials and experts who have been working on these problems. We do not of course intend that in the course of such discussions Dominion officials should be asked or authorised to commit their Governments in any way. Our purpose is rather that our respective officials and experts should talk over in a preliminary manner the general economic background against which our own policy and that of the Dominions will have to be considered in due course in relation to that of the United States.

If, as we greatly hope, this suggestion should be acceptable to Dominion Governments we should endeavour to make arrangements for the meeting of Dominion representatives to take place some time about the end of September. The idea would be that the exact date should be fixed according to the convenience of the Commonwealth and New Zealand Governments whose representatives have furthest to travel.

We very much hope that Dominion Governments will be willing to cooperate in plans for such a meeting and an early reply would be greatly appreciated.

I believe Robertson had a talk with you last week about our participation in proposed exploratory talks in London on post-war economic policy. These were suggested in circular telegram D.383 of August 26th, of which I enclose a copy for reference. I also attach a copy of Massey's telegram No. 2176 of August 28th[†], suggesting that the sending of officials from Canada for these talks is unnecessary. Despite Massey's views, I think there is a great deal to be said for having a couple of people from Ottawa go to London for the talks. Clark shares this view; his only doubt is whether these talks might give the impression of the creation of a Commonwealth front before the United Kingdom-United States talks begin, after the November elections in the United States.

I attach, for your approval, draft replies to the Dominions Office³⁸ and to Massey[†]. You will note that I have tried to deal with Clark's point, which is a good one, in the telegram to the Dominions Office.

Clark would be the best man to go on our side, but he tells me that he is much concerned over his health, and does not feel able to accept. He hopes to take a holiday soon and there is an outside chance that after this he might be able to go. If he does not go, Mackintosh could go. As Mackintosh is the Canadian Chairman of the Joint Economic Committees, he is very familiar with current ideas in the United States on post-war policy. Robertson thinks that Keenleyside or myself should go from this Department. I gather from him that you felt that there should be no representative from the Committee on Reconstruction; Malcolm MacDonald tells me that he has had a telegram from London urging that those sent should be Departmental officials and not outside experts or bankers.

Do you wish the question to be discussed in the War Committee? London has asked for an early reply so that a date for the meeting can be set.³⁹

We are prepared to send officials to London to participate in the proposed informal talks on post-war economic policy. We note that it is not intended that Dominion officials should be asked or authorized to commit their Governments in any way in these discussions. It would be most unfortunate if any impression were to be created that an attempt was being made to establish a common Commonwealth front before your talks with the United States begin. There have already been prolonged discussions between officials of Canada and the United States on this general question, conducted mainly through the medium of the Joint Economic Committees. The proposed Commonwealth discussions in London must, from our point of view, be complementary to our direct talks with United States officials.

I shall inform you of the names of the Canadian representatives when the date of the meeting has been set. It is intended that they should be departmental officials and not experts from outside the Government Service.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. My telegram No. 194 of September 19th¹, post-war economic talks. We are not yet able to confirm whether third week in October will be practicable for other Governments, but in meantime it may be useful for your Government to receive a clearer indication of the agenda of the proposed conversations than was possible at the date when telegram Circular D.383 of August 26th was sent. Since the despatch of my telegram Circular D. 259 of May 22nd which outlined in general terms the nature of the instructions we should give to our experts in the conversations which were at that time anticipated, proposals have been prepared by the Treasury in regard to the group of topics referred to in paragraph 5 (a) of that telegram under the general description of "Proposals for an International Clearing Union" for establishing a new system of international currency associated with gold for post-war purposes. These proposals which have received Cabinet approval as a basis for informal discussion with the United States authorities are all of a far-reaching character and are being discussed at an early stage of consideration of post-war policy because if adopted they will provide a pivot around which much else could turn. Although, as stated in my telegram Circular D. 383, it has so far been impracticable for the preliminary conversations to take place, there has been some informal and unofficial discussion between Sir F. Phillips and the United States Treasury and State Department. In the course of these discussions, a document outlining these "Clearing Union" proposals has been communicated to the United States Treasury and the State Department in Washington informally but with the indication that if circumstances had not delayed the opening of the discussions foreshadowed in Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement these proposals would have been put forward as a basis for discussion officially. They are now under preliminary and informal discussion between Sir F. Phillips and the American Departments and we understand that their reception has on the whole been sympathetic. It would therefore be particularly valuable before we proceed to a further stage in discussion with the United States, which is likely to take place after the American elections, to have more intimate consultation on the proposals with representatives of the Dominions as we have proposed at an informal level and without the commitment of any Government being involved. There are certain other matters which we may also be ready to discuss with Dominion representatives, in particular methods by which prices of primary products might be stabilized. But these are not so far advanced as the proposals for the Clearing Union.

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH MR. NORMAN ROBERTSON,
 UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

I had a very serious talk this morning with Norman Robertson and pointed out the bewilderment felt in Washington at Canada's reluctance to sign the exchange of notes embodying the economic objectives that should govern post-war talks based on Article 7 of the master Lease-Lend Agreement⁴⁰. We were bewildered in part because the Canadian Government did not seem either to attach the same importance to this as did we, and partly because the delay in taking a position on something to which we did attach prime importance from June 26th to date seemed excessive.

I reminded Mr. Robertson that when I had first spoken to him in June he had pointed out that the Canadian Government could not yet decide whether to continue the present policy of being outside lease-lend or whether Canada should join the procession by signing a reciprocal lease-lend agreement. Mr. Robertson replied that this was still an open question. I countered by indicating that it might remain an open question for a long time to come. Furthermore, there was nothing inconsistent between signing Article 7 now and later signing a reciprocal lease-lend agreement. It might not be quite as neat a bit of procedure but between that and having Canada outside the line-up there was in our opinion no doubt but that it was better to move ahead at the moment.

Mr. Robertson reminded me that he had also pointed out that Article 7 was in the case of other nations given as a quid pro quo for lease-lend supplies. It would look, if Canada signed Article 7 alone, as though she alone were making a contribution without quid pro quo. I replied that Article 7 was certainly not a "concession" or a "contribution" on Canada's part, and suggested that he re-read the draft exchange of notes[†]. It was a statement of economic objectives which Canada had already inferentially accepted but which for unaccountable reasons she seemed hesitant publicly to proclaim.

On July 21st I raised the subject again, only to be told that the Cabinet was so busy at that moment with a series of highly controversial matters that consideration would have to be postponed for ten days to two weeks.

⁴⁰ Voir le document 572.

⁴⁰ See Document 572.

When next the subject came up Mr. Robertson was away on leave, and thus matters had gone [sic] and as far as I could make out very little real consideration had been given in highest quarters.

Mr. Robertson then referred to the coming U.S.-U.K. talks on post-war planning and pointed out that because of their postponement until after our elections the British had suggested, and Canada had accepted, a series of talks in London at the end of October on the upper civil servant level. Professor Mackintosh and Hume Wrong would leave for London shortly. A telegram had come in from London today⁴¹ indicating a desire to include in the latter some fairly concrete financial proposals; a financial expert might be added, but this had not yet been decided. Canada was not too happy about holding these talks before the U.S.-U.K. conversations. Canada was equally unhappy at direct U.S.-U.K. conversations from which she would be entirely excluded.

I said that far from seeming to me a reason for delaying a signature of Article 7 these impending British-Canadian talks made it more than ever imperative to sign in order that, to the public at least, we would all be working within the framework of the same publicly proclaimed objectives.

Mr. Robertson inquired why we were not satisfied with Canada's go ahead signal to Great Britain in February of this year⁴², together with Mr. King's statement giving the agreement signed on February 23rd his public blessing⁴³. I said that there was all the difference in the world between an official endorsement of an agreement reached between two other parties and a direct Canadian signature. No one could answer the question why Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, etc., not to speak of a whole series of others among the United Nations, had signed this expression of post-war economic objectives whereas Canada had still declined to do so. We could not believe that there was any ulterior motive in Canada's hesitation, but the inference was inevitable that Canada did not attach the same importance to these objectives as did the rest of us. This was a most unfortunate inference. I could not help feeling that Mr. King had not as yet thought the thing through from the points of view I had raised and that he had been treating as a routine proposition something that all, but Mr. Hull in particular, considered of very deep import. Mr. Robertson did not controvert the latter statement but gave me his promise that he would take it up with Mr. King over the weekend, go over the pros and cons, and see that it was really studied in Cabinet.

Your telegram No. 198 of October 1st. Post-war Economic Talks.

1. Since discussions seem likely to center round proposals for International clearing union, it would be helpful for us to receive before Canadian representatives leave for England the document on this subject which Sir F. Phillips has communicated informally to the United States authorities.

2. Are we correct in understanding that the London talks are likely to be confined to the subjects set forth in paragraph 5(a) of your Circular D. 259 of May 22nd and possibly those in 5(d)?

3. It is known to the United States authorities in Washington that these Commonwealth talks are to take place and we are informed that certain quarters there may be interpreting them as attempt to confront United States representatives in later talks with common Commonwealth front. We feel such a development would be unhappy however unreasonable this interpretation may be. One method of avoiding it would be direct Canadian participation in the subsequent conversations with United States.

4. We shall telegraph names of Canadian representatives for London talks as soon as we receive further information on agenda and confirmation of opening date.

Special Assistant to Deputy Minister of Finance to

Ottawa, October 5, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have your letter of October 5th[†] enclosing the text of the United States suggestion for an exchange of notes[†] with Canada defining the objectives of our post-war international economic policy⁴⁴.

When we were discussing this matter the other night, I completely lost sight of the fact that Article 7 provides not merely a statement of objectives but also an agreement to enter at an early date into conversations. It appears to me that we might take advantage of this to make the agreement to enter into conversations the substantive part of the exchange, reducing the principles to a mere recital of what has been accepted.

⁴⁴ See Document 572.

Looking at it the other way, it may be quite undesirable that we should blow cold on this proposal since, in fact, the post-war conversations are likely to be based on Article 7, and we might seem to be rejecting an invitation to participate. In other words, we can think of this exchange of notes as a means by which a country not a Lease-Lend recipient may be brought into discussions which, technically, will occur out of Lease-Lend agreements. It seems to me highly probable that this is actually what was in the mind of the State Department.

I would suggest, accordingly, that the draft note be revised beginning at the third paragraph in some such fashion as follows:

“The Government of the United States has already agreed with the governments of the United Nations receiving aid from the United States under the Lease-Lend programme on cooperation in formulating a programme of agreed action, et cetera, et cetera.

“The Government of Canada has already approved these principles, and has agreed to facilitate their adoption. As between themselves, the Governments of Canada and the United States have agreed to provide mutual aid both in defence and economic matters through the Ogdensburg and Hyde Park Agreements. The Government of Canada itself is providing to the United Kingdom, and through the United Kingdom other United Nations, food, materials and munitions of war free of cost.

“Our Governments have, therefore, to a degree similar interests in post-war international economic policy, and reaffirm the principles which have already been approved with regard to post-war economic settlements. They undertake to enter at an early, convenient date into conversations between themselves and others with a view to determining, in the light of governing economic conditions, the best means of attaining these objectives by agreed action on the part of our two Governments and other like-minded governments; and as to the possibility of two contiguous countries, with a long experience of friendly relations, furnishing to the world concrete evidence of the ways in which agreed action towards such objectives may be achieved for the mutual benefit of our countries and of other countries.”

Though the wording of the above is hasty, and it may be desirable to eliminate the reference to Lease-Lend, it seems to me that we could accomplish two things:

- 1) make the sort of move which Clark suggested⁴⁵; and
- 2) pin the United States down to including us in post-war conversations, if not in conference with the United Kingdom and others, at least bilaterally with the United States herself.

I think we should be very careful about rejecting a suggestion which involves an agreement to enter into conversations for we may later be complaining that we were left out of such conversations.

I am,

Yours very truly,

W. A. MACKINTOSH

TELEGRAM 203

London, October 8, 1942

Your telegram No. 207 of October 3rd, post-war economic talks.

1. It has now been confirmed that end of third week of October is acceptable to other Dominion Governments and it is accordingly proposed that discussions should open here on Thursday, October 22nd.
2. We should be glad to learn names of Canadian representatives and hope they will regard themselves as our guests while they are here.
3. The subjects mentioned in paragraph 5(a) and 5(d) of my telegram Circular D. 259 of May 22nd are likely to be principal matters for discussion but other questions may be raised and the agenda will not necessarily be limited to these two items.
4. Necessary documentation is being prepared here for communication to Dominion representatives on arrival and this will include document on International Clearing Union which we feel would best be circulated in this way rather than in advance since a full understanding of its contents would hardly be possible without oral explanation and presentation of the general background.
5. We quite agree that it will be very important to avoid any impression in Washington that the talks are designed to confront the United States representatives with a common Commonwealth front. We are drawing attention of Sir F. Phillips to your comments on this point with a view to his removing any possibility of misunderstanding.

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister

[Ottawa,] October 19, 1942

You will recall that Mr. Moffat spoke to you at the last Canadian Club luncheon about the proposed joint declaration by Canada and the United States in the field of international economic policy. Attached are –

- (1) the draft note which the United States suggested that their Secretary of State should send to our Minister in Washington. An acknowledgment by him on behalf of the Canadian Government, concurring in this statement, would complete the joint declaration.
- (2) a re-draft of the United States proposal which has been worked out in consultation with the Departments of Finance, Trade and Commerce, Bank of Canada and the Foreign Exchange Control Board.

I saw no objection in principle to our subscribing to the proposed declaration of policy, but was a little worried about the misconstruction that might be put upon Canada accepting in terms a commitment which the other United Nations had given as a more or less direct quid pro quo for Lease-Lend assistance. You will note that the language of the United States draft follows with minor variations that used in Article 7 of the Lease-Lend Agreements.

Our counter-draft is intended to achieve the purposes which the United States had in mind in first proposing the joint declaration, and would at the same time differentiate the Canadian position from that of the beneficiaries of Lease-Lend assistance, and stress the special relationship between Canada and the United States which will continue to influence our post-war economic relationships⁴⁶.

Sir,

I have the honor to set forth below my understanding of the conclusions reached in conversations which have taken place from time to time during the past year between representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada with regard to post-war economic settlements.

Our two Governments are engaged in a cooperative undertaking together with every other nation or people of like mind to the end of laying the bases of a just and enduring world peace, securing order under law to themselves and all nations. They agree that post-war settlements must be such as to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between them, and the betterment of world-wide economic relations.

To that end the Governments of the United States of America and of Canada are prepared to cooperate in formulating a program of agreed action, open to participation by all other countries of like mind, directed to the expansion by appropriate international and domestic measures of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods which are the material foundations of liberty and welfare of all people, to the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce and to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers; and in general to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the joint declaration made on August 14, 1941, by the Presi-

Our Governments will accordingly enter at an early convenient date into conversations with a view to determining in the light of governing economic conditions the best means of attaining the above stated objectives by agreed action on the part of our two Governments and other like-minded governments.

Redraft of Note from Secretary of State of United States to Minister in United States

Sir,

I have the honour to set forth below my understanding of the conclusions reached in conversations which have taken place from time to time during the past year between representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada with regard to post-war economic settlements.

The United States of America has extended and is continuing to extend to the United Kingdom and other United Nations aid in resisting aggression pursuant to the Act of Congress of March 11th, 1941. Canada with the same object is providing to the United Kingdom and through the United Kingdom to other United Nations food, materials and munitions of war free of cost to the recipients.

Our two governments are engaged in a cooperative undertaking together with every other nation or people of like mind to the end of laying the basis of a just and enduring world peace, securing order under law to themselves and all nations. They have agreed to provide mutual aid both in defence and in economic matters through the Ogdensburg and Hyde Park Agreements and subsequent arrangements. They are in agreement that post-war settlements must be such as to promote mutually advantageous economic relations between them and the betterment of world-wide economic relations.

To that end the Governments of the United States and of Canada are prepared to co-operate in formulating a program of agreed action, open to participation by all other countries of like mind, directed to the expansion by appropriate international and domestic measures of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods, which are the material foundations of liberty and welfare of all peoples; to the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce and to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers; and in general to the attainment of all the economic objectives set forth in the joint declaration made on August 14, 1941, by the President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom.

Our Governments have in large measure similar interests in post-war international economic policy. They undertake to enter at an early convenient date into conversation between themselves and with representatives of other United Nations with a view to determining in the light of governing economic conditions the best means of attaining the objectives set forth above by agreed action on the part of our two governments, and other like-minded governments. In the conversation to be undertaken between the Governments of the United States of America and of Canada they will seek to furnish to the world concrete evidence of the ways in which two neighbouring countries with a long experience of friendly relations and a high degree of economic interdependence may promote by agreed action their mutual interests to the benefit of themselves and other countries.

If the Government of Canada concurs in the foregoing statement of conclusions, I would suggest that the present note and your reply to that effect should be regarded as placing on record the understanding of our two Governments in this matter.

Accept etc.

U.S. DRAFT NOTE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC POLICY

12. THE PRIME MINISTER read a draft note, submitted by the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, to be addressed to the Canadian Minister in Washington by the U.S. Secretary of State.

It provided for Canadian approval of the principles set out in the joint declaration of August the 14th, 1941, ("the Atlantic Charter"), by the President and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, regarding co-operation in post-war economic policy. Canada and the United States were to enter into conversations at an early date between themselves and with other United Nations, with a view to determining the best means of obtaining the objectives set forth, namely the expansion of international and domestic measures of production, employment and consumption, and the elimination of discrimination in international trade.

(Draft note, Secretary of State of the United States to Canadian Minister, Washington, undated).

13. THE WAR COMMITTEE approved the terms of the draft note, agreeing, however, that no reference should be made to aid provided to the United Kingdom, and that the second paragraph should be omitted.

Ottawa, November 21, 1942

Dear Mr. Towers,

I am enclosing the latest revised draft of the note the United States Secretary of State plans to send our Minister in Washington, proposing a joint declaration by our two Governments of their general objectives in the field of post-war economic policy. This draft, which is acceptable to the United States, differs from that last circulated by —

(1) the deletion of what was then our second paragraph, which referred to the United States assistance to the United Nations under Lease-Lend and to Canada “providing to the United Kingdom, and through the United Kingdom to other United Nations, food, materials, and munitions of war free of cost to the recipients”; and

(2) the insertion in the last sentence of the fourth paragraph after “relations” of the phrase “a high degree of economic interdependence”.

I raised with Moffat the desirability of stiffening the language of the general undertaking by inserting the phrases that Berle and Hawkens had used in their speeches on post-war international economic policy, reported in recent issues of the *Department of State Bulletin*⁴⁷ to which you had drawn my attention. He agreed that they would give a more positive and realistic character to the proposed statement of policy, but found after checking with Washington, that his Government was most anxious to keep the general language of the proposed agreement with Canada in exact conformity with the language used in the comparable agreements with others of the United Nations. They thought of the present agreement with Canada as completing a series and not an instrument in which they could break new ground.

In the circumstances and having in mind the desirability of concluding the exchange of notes fairly quickly, I think we should agree to the present draft, which closes no doors and leaves us free to take the next step forward as soon as the Government is ready for it.

Present plans are to have the exchange of notes concluded in time for release to the press on Wednesday, December 2nd, the day on which the Prime Minister is addressing the Pilgrims in New York. His speech that evening should be a

REPORT OF THE CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVES AT THE POST-WAR ECONOMIC TALKS IN LONDON⁴⁹

The Canadian representatives at these conferences were Mr. Hume Wrong of External Affairs, Dr. W.A. Mackintosh of Finance, and Mr. L. Rasminsky of the Bank of Canada. The discussions were purely informal and the Canadian representatives made it clear that they were not in a position to do more than to participate in the discussions in a noncommittal way.

The United Kingdom was represented by officials of the Treasury, the Foreign Office, the Board of Trade, the Dominions Office, the India Office, the Ministry of Agriculture, the Colonial Office, and the War Cabinet. In addition to the United Kingdom and Canada, representatives were present on behalf of Australia, New Zealand and India.

(1) International Clearing Union.

The establishment of an International Clearing Union after the war was the main topic. The United Kingdom representatives had prepared a document[†] outlining their scheme for the creation of a Clearing Union. The purpose of the Union is to ensure that when peace returns, machinery can be put into operation at once to ensure stable exchange conditions. If such measures are not taken, international trade will be paralyzed by a return of even worse exchange conditions than those that prevailed after the last war and again in the early thirties. The Clearing Union will be a sort of pooling of financial resources to enable the weaker countries to engage in international trade without having to resort to exchange control or to currency depreciation or to the type of special trade-and-exchange agreement such as had become so common in the ten years preceding the outbreak of war — as, for example, the agreements which Germany had with almost every country, including Canada.

The United Kingdom officials have taken the lead in working out the Clearing Union scheme because they are convinced that it is vital to have such a scheme in operation if international trade is to be restored. They feel that while questions of commercial policy are very important, the first essential is to get a financial basis on which it will be practicable to do business at all.

Subject to differences of view on matters of detail, those attending the London conferences were pretty well agreed that a Clearing Union must be set up. The British officials will shortly be discussing the subject with United States authorities to whom the outline of their proposals has already been given.

(2) International Regulation of Primary Products.

This was the second main topic. On this subject also the British officials distributed a prepared document,⁷ but their ideas of what should be done have not been as fully developed as in the case of the Clearing Union.

It is proposed to set up a Council for Commodity Controls representing both exporting and importing countries. The Council would name basic prices for major primary products, with the object of seeing that producers would not get less than “a reasonable international economic price”. In case the price for any given product should fluctuate by more than 10 per cent either above or below the fixed basic price, the Commodity Control would step in to deal with the situation. It would have power to purchase and withhold surplus supplies from market, to enforce export quotas and generally to prevent disorganized marketing of the primary products that enter most largely into international trade.

The British officials were rather strongly wedded to the idea of having the Commodity Control scheme tied in very closely with the Clearing Union — having it in mind that the Clearing Union would supply the funds to finance the Commodity Control measures. The Canadian officials took a different view, urging that the Clearing Union should not be saddled with functions that are not, strictly speaking, part of its own basic purpose.

The United Kingdom officials are going to make extensive revision of their document on commodity controls. Meanwhile, the proposals on this subject are being kept strictly confidential, particularly in regard to the United States and will not, until a later stage, be communicated to any of the Governments.

(3) (a) Post-War Commercial Policy, (b) Post-War Relief,
(c) Statistics of National Income, etc.

The discussions on post-war commercial policy were very brief. No paper had been prepared in advance for consideration because the British take the view that the first problem as regards post-war trade is not one of commercial policy but one of setting up some form of Clearing Union as the fundamental need in any trade program. Brief as the discussions were on commercial policy, I would like to direct attention to the notes on pages 32 and 33 — especially to the reference to the fact that “it was generally accepted that the United States would press strongly for the abolition of British preferences”.

No particular reference need be made here to the discussions on national income statistics. As Mr. Wilgress' letter[†] indicates, we shall probably hear directly from the Finance Department with respect to what has to be done at our own Bureau of Statistics to provide acceptable statistics in this field.

The discussion on post-war relief centered around steps that have already been taken to draft an agreement for the creation of a Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. The staggering size of the relief work that will have to be undertaken is indicated by the figure of £2,000,000,000 — mentioned by Sir Frederick Leith-Ross as being the amount that might be required to meet the needs. While British officials have been active in taking the preliminary steps toward having an adequate relief organization created, the attached report (page 31) refers rather significantly to ‘the slow progress made by the British Government in giving Ministerial attention and approval to the plans under consideration’.

[Ottawa,] February 8, 1943

There was a discussion in my office this morning on the progress of the negotiations between the United States and United Kingdom Governments on international economic reconstruction. Those who took part were Mr. Redvers Opie of the British Embassy in Washington, Mr. Gordon Monro of the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office, Mr. Mackintosh, Mr. Angus and myself.

The situation respecting the International Clearing Union and the alternative American proposals is that a revised and improved draft of Mr. Harry White's original scheme has been submitted by Mr. Berle to the United Kingdom, Soviet and Chinese Governments with a request for their comments. A copy[†] was given to Dr. Clark when he was last in Washington and it was intimated that Canadian comments would also be appreciated. Opie said that they were surprised and rather perturbed that this revision of their own scheme had been presented to other governments while the revision of the British Clearing Union scheme was also under discussion. In fact the principles on which both plans were based were very similar though the application of the principles differed substantially.

After the last discussion of the Clearing Union scheme which took place, I think, some weeks ago they had asked the American experts to submit written questions to which they had returned written answers after consultation with London. The British in Washington were intending to attempt a synthesis of the two plans which would show how closely they resemble each other in purpose and what were the substantial differences of method.

Mr. Opie asked whether it would be possible for us to prepare a complete plan of our own which would take account of the British and American proposals. Mackintosh said that this was already being considered by an informal group consisting of Rasminsky, Bryce, Turk and himself⁵⁰. He was not yet sure what the result would be.

Mr. Berle had indicated in his letter forwarding the American redraft that they contemplated discussing it with other United Nations. Opie was afraid that a large conference would get nowhere but it was not clear whether they had it in mind to proceed by the conference method or by a series of bilateral discussions. The suggestion which was thrown out by Berle when he was last in Ottawa of a formal conference summoned by the Secretary of the Treasury had apparently been discarded and it was probable that the next stage would still be at the level of meetings of experts.

With regard to the British proposals for the stabilization of the prices of primary products which had been discussed at London, the redraft of the original scheme presented to the London meetings by Lord Keynes had just been received. This had not yet received ministerial consideration in London but Opie hoped that it would be approved very soon. It had not yet been taken up with the United States authorities although they knew that the British had been formulating proposals on this subject. We had some discussion to clarify the attitude of the Canadian experts towards the Keynes draft.

Opie said that they thought it best to leave to the Americans the initiative in presenting proposals for an international lending authority since this would be a matter mainly of concern to the United States. He enquired whether we felt that it would be desirable for them to approach the Americans on commercial policy. This, too, was regarded as a matter in which the United States had an especial interest in view of the emphasis placed on commercial policy by the Secretary of State and of their own program for the renewal of the Trade Agreements Act. He thought, however, that if the initiative were left to the United States entirely their proposals, when they were produced, would be disappointingly conservative. The matter had received much attention in London in recent weeks and they were prepared to support plans far more extensive than those of the United States were likely to be. These plans might include an over-all ceiling on tariff rates of 25 or 30%, methods for reducing specific duties to an ad valorem basis, and suggestions for achieving tariff reductions by multilateral agreements. He wanted our advice on whether they should informally let the Americans know what was in their minds. In this case they were dealing with Acheson and not with Berle. Partly in view of this we advised him that we thought there would be no danger and perhaps considerable advantage in his having a frank exploratory talk with Acheson. He seemed relieved to hear this, as he said it accorded with his own judgment. He has found Berle to be extremely cautious in putting forward any concrete scheme whereas Acheson is much more ready to debate pros and cons, to countenance the discussion of bold plans and to advise on methods. We all agreed that a bold approach was desirable although there should be no striving after novelty for its own sake.

London, February 24, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 383, August 26th, 1942 and connected telegrams. Following on exploratory discussions here with Dominion experts last autumn revised version of clearing union plan in form communicated to Dominion delegates before their departure⁵¹ was given informally by Sir F. Phillips to United States authorities. Latter asked for elucidation on certain points and their reactions have since been awaited. We have now taken steps to communicate the plan also to Soviet and Chinese Governments and are proposing similarly to give text confidentially to European Governments in London, with a view to informal discussion on a study circle basis in which we hope that representatives of Dominion High Commissioners here will take part.

2. Meanwhile the Americans have unexpectedly sent to us, Soviet Government and Chinese Government a draft proposal for American international stabilization fund. Covering memorandum states that this fund is only one of the appropriate agencies to deal with monetary and economic problems. Memorandum anticipates that a draft proposal for an international agency for capital reconstruction and development will be submitted (presumably by United States). It also discloses that United States are against a single agency for dealing with monetary stabilization, relief, capital development, prices of primary products, and other economic problems. They believe that each agency should be kept free of the extraneous duties for which it was not devised and is unsuited.

3. It is difficult to summarise United States draft proposal, but, though draft has been sent to us without apparent relation to clearing union draft, United States objectives would appear in general to have much in common with our own. Though method of approach is different and on certain points important issues of principle arise, at first sight resemblances cover several important features which we had feared that United States Government [might?] find difficult owing to political reasons, e.g. acceptance of exchange control for capital movements and provision for fixing exchange rates. On the other hand limitation of the liabilities of creditor nations is not well handled. We are sending you copies of United States draft[†] immediately by air mail, together with an analysis of the main points[†] which we have prepared for convenience in comparing their draft with our own.

4. Question arises whether United States draft could not be conveniently collated with clearing union draft into a single agreed document, but preliminary examination suggests that this possibility could only be considered after several obscure points have been cleared up and several issues of substantial importance have been settled. Our view is that it is not desirable to attempt this collation at present stage before differences of substance have been thoroughly debated, and that best course would be for experts from United Nations concerned to be invited to Washington as soon as possible to discuss main points of difference between the two drafts. We have asked Phillips to put this suggestion to United States authorities in discussing with them their ideas as to future procedure and will telegraph further as soon as their reactions are known.

IMPORTANT. SECRET. My telegram Circular D.109. Precise procedure contemplated by United States Government for discussion of Clearing Union and Stabilization Fund Plans is still not clear, but it would appear that they have in mind a preliminary period during which countries would be studying the two plans individually and possibly later in groups and a second stage involving general discussion at a conference of experts. They assume that in the preliminary period individual countries will wish to seek elucidation of the two plans by informal questions and this would help to clear the ground for discussion at second stage. We do not know precisely how these ideas fit in with recently expressed intention of United States Administration to summon shortly a conference of United Nations Experts to consider post-war economic problems. We have not as yet received from Washington authoritative interpretation of recent speech at Toronto by Mr. Sumner Welles.⁵²

2. In the meantime meeting was held here on 26th February at which Clearing Union Plan was communicated to Finance Ministers of Allied Governments in London as basis for discussion along with similar plans having similar objectives. Meeting was attended by Dominion representatives as well as by

My dear Mr. Minister,

I am sending for your examination a preliminary draft of a Proposal for an International Stabilization Fund of the United and Associated Nations¹. This draft was prepared by the technical staff of the United States Treasury in consultation with the technical experts of other departments of this Government.

The document is sent to you not as an expression of the official views of this Government but rather as an indication of the views widely held by the technical experts of this Government. I hope you will examine the draft and submit it for critical study by the technical experts of your Ministry and your Government. After you and your experts have had opportunity to study it, you may wish to send one or more of your technical experts to Washington to give me your preliminary reaction to the draft proposal, and to discuss with our technical experts the feasibility of international monetary cooperation along the lines suggested therein, or along any other lines you may wish to suggest. We are informed that the technical experts of the British Government have also been studying the question and will doubtless make their views available.

It seems to me that the enclosed draft proposal points the way to an effective means of facilitating through cooperative action the maintenance of international monetary stability and the restoration and balanced growth of international trade. It is my hope that as a result of unofficial discussions involving no commitments, we may find a sufficient area of agreement to warrant proceeding on a more formal basis.

Very truly yours,

Your telegram Circular D. 109 of February 24th and Circular D. 121 of March 2nd. Advice received regarding progress of discussions on post-war international financial policies indicates development of a situation which we had hoped could have been avoided. Parallel discussion of the United Kingdom and United States proposals with individual countries may lead to confusion and may put the two draft plans into competition with each other, which would be highly undesirable. We would suggest that the parallel discussions now under way should be explanatory [exploratory?] only, which we assume to be the case, and that as soon as possible a conference of experts of the United Nations be held in Washington to consider the proposals contained in the two draft plans.

The basic principles and objectives of the two plans are very similar and we would expect that a plan embodying features of both would emerge from any successful conference. For our part, we would be prepared to take either plan as a basis for discussion. But, in order to avoid the appearance of competition and of differences in principle we feel that the best method of approach would be not to debate the differences between the two plans but to take the United States plan as the basis for discussion. The United Kingdom would naturally reserve the right to suggest changes in the United States draft which would bring it closer to the clearing union plan. Every country would have opportunity to submit and debate any amendment which it wished to propose.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 43. It had been our hope that the United States experts who had had the Clearing Union before them for many months would have continued discussions with Sir F. Phillips to the point at which a single draft could have been put forward. Some of the implications of the Stabilization Fund are still obscure to us and we hope that further discussions between Sir F. Phillips and the United States experts will elucidate them. Until that is done we would regard it as premature to decide that Stabilization Fund should be only basis for discussions. Indeed we believe that the first stage of the discussions need not take the text of either of the two plans as its basis. On the points where the two plans differ there could be a discussion as to which was preferable in substance; on the points where they agree it could be discovered whether others concerned are also in agreement. In the light of the views which are expressed as to what we are aiming at in substance, we could then decide at a later stage in what institutional form they can be best embodied.

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom agree generally with the views expressed by the Canadian Government in the first paragraph of your telegram.

IMPORTANT. Reference your Circular D. 154 of March 16th[†]. We regret that circumstances have made it appear necessary for you to publish the Clearing Union paper in the fairly near future when discussions with other Governments have proceeded so short a distance. 2. From our point of view it would be desirable for it to be arranged for United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa to make available to the press copies of the Clearing Union paper simultaneously with its release in London.⁵³

3. We have no objection to the announcement of fact that informal discussions between United Kingdom and Dominion experts on the Clearing Union Paper took place last October. We assume that the proposed announcement will be so worded as to make it clear that the discussions were informal and exploratory, that nothing in the nature of a formal conference was held and that no commitments were entered into by governments.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, April 8, 1943

Dear Mr. Morgenthau,

With reference to the Stabilization Fund Plan, a copy of which you sent me some weeks ago, I have learned from Dr. W. C. Clark that he advised your officials that we are about ready to discuss this plan with your experts and that your officials have expressed a wish that the Canadian Government should send expert officials to Washington next week for informal discussion of the plan.

⁵³ Le plan britannique fut publié dans le Commandement 6437 d'avril 1943 et le texte du plan américain fut publié dans le New York Times du 7 avril 1943, page 17. Les deux plans furent présentés à la Chambre des Communes le 14 avril. Pour les différents projets des plans voir J.K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund, 1945-1965: Twenty Years of International Monetary Cooperation. Washington, D.C.: International Monetary Fund, 1969, volume 3, pp. 3-96.

⁵³ The British plan was published as Cmd. 6437 of April 1943 and the text of the American plan appeared in the New York Times of April 7, 1943, page 17. Both plans were tabled in the House of Commons on April 14. For various drafts, see J.K. Horsefield, The International Monetary Fund, 1945-1965: Twenty Years of International Monetary Cooperation. Washington, D.C.: International Monetary Fund, 1969, Volume 3, pp. 3-96.

I shall be very glad to arrange to send to Washington suitable officials to participate in such discussions on whatever dates next week are convenient to your experts. I am, however, disturbed over the events of this week. I recognize that circumstances ultimately made the publication of these plans unavoidable and that they are not, in the minds of those responsible for working them out, rival plans. I am, however, seriously worried lest forces beyond the control of governments should set them up as rivals to the prejudice of future agreement. Because I feel this so strongly, I am venturing to suggest to you an alternative procedure.

I make the suggestion because the Canadian Government has a vital interest in the problems for which both the Stabilization Fund Plan and the Clearing Union Plan propose solutions. We are less impressed with the differences between the plans than with the fact that both proposals are directed to the development of arrangements which will facilitate the progress of multilateral trade and to the elimination of the occasions for these import restrictions, clearing agreements and other devices by which, in the decade before the war, countries throttled world trade in ruinous endeavours to balance their transactions with individual countries.

Our officials believe it is possible to arrive at suggestions which would incorporate the best features of the two plans. With this in mind, I suggest, therefore, that there might be a substantial gain in the rate of progress if, in place of the discussions between the officials of our two Governments, there might be held an entirely informal meeting, say in the week of the 19th of April, in which officials of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada might participate. It would not be the object of such informal discussions to develop immediately a common plan, but rather that there should be an exploration of the contributions which certain features of each plan might make to the solution of the essential problems and of the lines of discussion which might be followed most usefully with other countries if the desired result of final agreement is to be achieved.

If this suggestion does not commend itself to you, I shall be glad to arrange for Canadian officials to go to Washington next week, but I hope that you will give sympathetic consideration to my proposal which is put forward in the desire to assist in what I fear may prove a difficult situation.⁵⁴

Yours very sincerely,

[J. L. ILSLEY]

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 234

London, April 22, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. As you know it is expected that Food Conference in United States will form part of a general programme of separate but interrelated discussions covering in pursuance of Article 7 of the Mutual Aid Agreement the whole field of post-war monetary and economic policy. We feel, therefore, that we must be prepared for very early conversations with the United States in regard to other subjects in the programme and in particular in regard to post-war commercial policy.

2. Lord Halifax has recommended that so far as commercial policy is concerned, our best course would be to make a very early approach to the State Department on the official level with a view to testing their reactions. He would propose, in conjunction with such an approach, to speak himself to Mr. Hull with a view to paving the way for an exchange of ideas, and he feels that the appropriate moment for such an initiative would be immediately after Congress has passed the Bill to renew the Trade Agreements Act i.e. probably at the end of May at the latest.

3. We concur generally in Lord Halifax's view that we should take the initiative in this matter, and after careful consideration of the lines on which a preliminary and exploratory approach might best be made, we are sending him a draft aide-mémoire which, subject to what follows, we suggest he should hand to Mr. Hull when the time comes. Texts of draft aide-mémoire and of supplementary instructions[†] indicating line on which he might speak to Mr. Hull are contained in two immediately following telegrams.

4. At the same time it has been explained to Lord Halifax that we are most anxious, unless our hands are unavoidably forced, that the subject should not (not) be broached in any way with the United States until there has been opportunity for an exchange of views with Dominion Governments. He has been told that we are approaching you immediately with a view to arranging for such an exchange of views and that in the meantime he is to take no action on the draft aide-mémoire or to open the subject in any way without further instructions from us.

5. We feel that the best and most expeditious procedure for such an exchange of views which must necessarily at this stage be of an entirely preliminary and non-committal character, would be through the holding, as early as possible, of an informal conference on the official and expert level similar to that which took place last autumn on the clearing union and buffer stock plans. Such a conference would, we feel, have great value in enabling our experts

(a) To explain more fully than can be done by telegram the general background as seen here, the main issues likely to arise and the way in which our thoughts are turning on these issues;

(b) To exchange ideas with Dominion representatives in regard to those aspects of broad policy to which individual Dominion Governments are likely to attach special importance without at this stage going into matters of detail;

(c) To obtain the benefit of such constructive suggestions as Dominion representatives may, on their part, be able to put forward either in regard to the preliminary approach to the United States or to subsequent procedure.

6. We hope that Dominion Governments will share our view that such a joint meeting of experts on a purely informal exploratory and non-committal basis would be very valuable at this stage. In view of the possibility that matters may now develop rapidly in the United States we are most anxious that such a meeting should be held at the earliest possible date. We should be most grateful, therefore, for very early intimation whether Dominion Governments would be prepared to send experts to London to take part in discussions here which we suggest should open in say the third week of May.

7. A telegram on similar lines is being sent to the Government of India.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 235

London, April 22, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text of draft aide-mémoire, Begins:

As has been stated on many occasions His Majesty's Government favours a commercial policy designed to promote general economic expansion and joint action directed towards the removal of the obstacles to international trade. While during the transitional period immediately after the war when we are seeking to restore our balance of trade we may have to retain some special measures of control, we hope that we and other countries will be able to emerge from this stage without undue delay. It is with this in mind and as a contribution to the conversations to which we are committed under Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement that His Majesty's Government submits for consideration the following points which form a practical approach to this problem and which might prove suitable for discussion among the United Nations.

(I) An international commercial policy capable of helping towards the solution of the post-war economic and political problems would have to be accompanied by some form of multilateral financial clearing and the adopting of a system which allows and encourages an expansive world economy.

(II) The policy should also be based on the assumption of the multilateral commercial agreement embracing as many countries as possible. As Great Britain is compelled to rely on imports for a large proportion of its food and raw materials some modus for exporting an equivalent amount is absolutely essential. Mere bilateral agreements, however advantageous, cannot meet the situation, whereas a multilateral agreement laying down certain principles for the freer exchange of commodities can be of great benefit.

(III) The United Kingdom, both by tradition and by experience, regards an increased freedom of trade as particularly in her interest. We shall join in any movement to secure it, and when it comes down to practice we should have every motive to encourage it both from our own point of view and on account of the general international benefit. Our sympathy is entirely with those who are seeking to remove barriers to trade. Any qualifications we may have to make will be due to the special difficulties of the immediate post-war period and the present uncertainty as to what will in fact lie within our power and that of other countries.

(IV) We would accept a moderate ceiling for tariffs for incorporation in a multilateral agreement.

(V) We should be prepared to make all our arrangements, including particularly quantitative restriction of imports, on a basis of mutual non-discrimination. Preferences which we do not regard as discriminatory in a strict sense of the word are dealt with below.

(VI) Quite apart from our own position a general plan should leave room for special arrangements within political and geographical groups since these are likely to be asked for and could be properly conceded in many cases. As part of a comprehensive scheme for the betterment of the trade of the world as a whole, we should be prepared to play our full part in any general scheme for reducing preferences.

(VII) We consider that the quantitative regulation of imports should not ordinarily be employed for the primary purpose of protecting home industries but rather regarded as a mechanism appropriate and useful for special purposes including among others, the safeguarding of a country's balance of payments and for implementing approved international commodity agreements and on security grounds. We should be prepared to agree from the outset that such regulations should be on a non-discriminatory basis. In so far as quantitative regulation is used for safeguarding a country's balance of payments, we suggest that common agreement might be reached concerning a more or less automatic and objective test of the conditions under which such action should be permissible. For example, it might be found that the statistics resulting from the creation of an international monetary authority could be used for this purpose.

(VIII) We should be prepared to agree to measures designed to prevent export subsidies.

(IX) Room should be left for State trading but it would be desirable that it should be conducted in accordance with a code to be agreed.

(X) We believe that these points could best be covered by the formulation of a general commercial code to which all countries would be invited to subscribe.
Ends.

*Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] April 26, 1943

The United Kingdom proposal, set forth in their telegrams of April 22nd, for an early approach to Washington on post-war commercial policy appears to be one which it is strongly in Canada's interest to encourage and support. Their approach, on the basis of a multilateral Convention of Commerce providing for tariff reductions and the removal of other barriers to the exchange of goods, is the only really sound and comprehensive method of securing satisfactory conditions of trade and perhaps, in the long run, of political security. It is in line with the general commitments, or statements of intention, which Canada has made in subscribing to the principles of the "Atlantic Charter" and in the Exchange of Notes of November 30th, 1942, with the United States⁵⁵. It is, indeed, of special importance to Canada because of the inadequacy, from our point of view, of the Trade Agreements Act, even if that Act is renewed. While the United Kingdom and most other countries could still secure considerable reductions in their favour by direct bilateral negotiations with the United States, practically all the benefits that can be secured under its provisions have already been granted to Canada in the Trade Agreements at present in force. We would have very little, therefore, to gain by further negotiations on a bilateral basis and must look to a multilateral convention, on the broad lines of the British proposal, if we are to secure ready access to the United States and to world markets. We should, therefore, I think, throw our whole weight behind the British proposal.⁵⁶

There is a good deal to be said, also, for a prior exchange of views on the various issues which the adoption of such a programme would raise⁵⁷. Existing tariffs vary considerably as to height, methods of valuation for duty purposes, the relative importance of specific and ad valorem duties, degrees of protection to different categories of goods, industry versus agriculture, etc. Customs restrictions are even less uniform and more complicated. A reasonable maximum tariff level in the varying circumstances of the different countries is by no means easy to determine. Moreover, the reduction of tariffs to a generally satisfactory level, even when the level itself is agreed upon, would give rise to a considerable administrative problem. Either it would be necessary to persuade signatory countries to adopt a uniform tariff system or, if they are incurably wedded to their own administrative arrangements, to find some satisfactory objective test of the relative levels of tariffs erected and applied on different bases. Some process of progressive reduction spread over a period of years would undoubtedly be necessary in any case. A simple and fair formula to govern the pace and extent of reductions is, however, not easy to find. Reduction by equal absolute amounts would mean very much to a low tariff country and very little to a country with a high tariff, whereas reduction by proportional amounts would seem little to a low tariff country and would seem unfair to a high tariff country even though such a reduction would leave relative heights unchanged. Some compromise between equal and proportional reductions would have to be found.

Another point of concern would be to see that the programme outlined is adopted integrally. Care would be necessary, for example, to see that attention is not centred on the abolition or reduction of particular features of the present system, such as Empire preferences, which benefit us considerably but undoubtedly less than would universal low tariffs, but is also extended to the abolition of discriminatory preferences by other countries (as, for example, between the United States and Cuba) which act as a barrier to our export trade. It would be necessary to ensure, also, that full consideration was given to the reduction of excessive tariff rates and to the abolition of quota and quantitative restrictions, even though they are general in their application.

On these and many similar problems, discussion with British and other Commonwealth countries might be very valuable both in clarifying their approach and ours to what is a very complicated and important problem and in avoiding saddling ourselves with unnecessarily cumbersome or difficult adjustments in the application of general principles which in themselves are advantageous.

If the views set forth above are accepted, it would seem desirable to ask the Interdepartmental Committee on Post-War Trade, which has just begun to look into the question as part of the general approach to the Post-War Economic Settlement, to study the problem and prepare a brief that might serve as instructions for the Canadian officials at the meeting.⁵⁹ the U.K. government proposed to make an early approach to the U.S. government on the subject of post-war commercial policy. A draft aide-mémoire for presentation to the U.S. Secretary of State had been communicated to the Dominion governments and an early informal conference of Commonwealth representatives in London, to discuss the question, was proposed.

The U.K. proposals constituted a comprehensive approach to the United States on the basis of a general commercial code, to provide for freer exchange of commodities, broad agreement with regard to tariffs, mutual non-discrimination in regulation of imports, prevention of export subsidies, and special provision for state trading.

It would be in Canada's interests to encourage and support such an approach to Washington. It was in line with Canadian policy. Further, a multilateral convention on the broad lines of the British proposal would be of special importance to Canada which had already secured practically all the benefits available through the bilateral system under the U.S. Trade Agreements Act. We should certainly participate in a preliminary conference on the various issues arising out of the adoption of such a programme.

Rapport du Comité consultatif sur la politique économique
Report by Advisory Committee on Economic Policy

MOST SECRET

Ottawa, May 14, 1943

REPORT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC POLICY ON TRADE POLICY
 (DOMINIONS OFFICE TELEGRAM OF APRIL 22, 1943)

The Advisory Committee on Economic Policy is of the opinion that the negotiation of a multilateral convention of commerce, providing for tariff reductions and limitations and the removal of other barriers to the exchange of goods, is the soundest method of securing satisfactory conditions of trade between nations after the war. It is especially in Canada's interest, first, because our trade extends over many countries and it would be difficult, if not actually impracticable, to achieve any pattern of bilateral agreements which would serve our interest so effectively, and, second, because the United States will undoubtedly press for the removal of preferences, even though under the Trade Agreements Act, should it be renewed, there is comparatively little that she can offer as a quid pro quo to Canada. In general terms, it is in Canada's interest to encourage and support an early approach to Washington along the lines of the draft aide-mémoire set forth in the telegram of April 22nd from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs⁶⁰.

The endeavour of officials discussing this document in London should be to obtain as clear statements as possible concerning certain paragraphs noted below and concerning the background of ideas which is implied in the document. Beyond this, they should contribute to some modification of the draft in line with our special interests. This would be subject to the specific reservation that, regardless of what Canadian officials contribute to the final draft, it shall remain a purely United Kingdom document to which the Canadian government will not be in any way committed.

The Canadian government has concurred in Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement between the United States and the United Kingdom and has reached a similar understanding with the United States as set forth in the exchange of notes of November 30, 1942. The Canadian experts might be empowered, therefore, to speak officially on one point and transmit the Canadian Government's assurance that it has no objection to the United Kingdom putting forward those paragraphs of the tentative proposals which deal with preferences, provided that it is understood clearly that the Canadian Government is not committed to any view on the final proposals which may emerge. The assurance should also be qualified by the reservation that reduction of high tariffs to a reasonable level is to be considered an essential part of any agreement looking to reduction of preferences. In transmitting such assurance, officials should make clear that preferences are of great importance in Canadian trade and that substantial reductions could not be regarded lightly. Nevertheless, the Canadian government is willing that the United Kingdom, despite its obligations under the existing trade agreement, should put forward these proposals in a preliminary and exploratory way in the hope that the whole body of proposals ultimately developed will prove beneficial to Canadian trade and that of other countries.

The Economic Advisory Committee, through the medium of a special sub-committee, has examined the terms of the draft aide-mémoire and offers the following comments:

Para (1) "An international commercial policy capable of helping towards the solution of the post-war economic and political problems would have to be accompanied by some form of multilateral financial clearing and the adopting of a system which allows and encourages an expansive world economy."

The principle here set forth is considered a sound one. It should be noted that the United Kingdom attaches great importance to three distinct aspects of the clearing union plan: (a) a clearing system by which each country agrees to accept an international unit of account (bancor) in payment of its exports, etc., thus relieving each debtor country of any concern about its balance of payments with any other single country; (b) a system of overdrafts giving limited short-term credit to countries whose balances of payments are temporarily dislocated and relieving them of the necessity of taking immediate and restrictive action to right the balance though requiring them to take more gradual and fundamental steps to achieve equilibrium; (c) provision for an expanding international currency whose expansion would at least keep pace with annual gold production and would not be interrupted by the development of a slump in any country. The principle is important for the United Kingdom and equally for Canada. It is probable that the United Kingdom will consider that a clearing union or stabilization fund arrangement embracing all three features is a sine qua non for an effective multilateral trade convention.

Para (2) "The policy should also be based on the assumption of a multilateral commercial agreement embracing as many countries as possible. As Great Britain is compelled to rely on imports for a large proportion of its food and raw materials some modus for exporting an equivalent amount is absolutely essential. More bilateral agreements, however advantageous, cannot meet the situation, whereas multilateral agreement laying down certain principles for the freer exchange of commodities can be of great benefit."

This paragraph is taken to mean that the purposes of a multilateral convention would be defeated unless most important countries adhered to it, and that the decided advantages of such a convention, for the United Kingdom as for Canada, would depend on its embracing most of the world.

It should be noted as a drafting point that though it will be necessary for the United Kingdom to balance its international payments account, and this is likely to involve the necessity of increasing her exports in relation to her imports, it is not necessary for her to "export an equivalent amount", as she will still have some offset in interest on her investments, and her shipping, financial and other earnings.

Para (3) "The United Kingdom, both by tradition and by experience, regards an increased freedom of trade as particularly in her interest. We shall join in any movement to secure it, and when it comes down to practice we should have every motive to encourage it both from our own point of view and on account of the general international benefit. Our sympathy is entirely with those who are seeking to remove barriers to trade. Any qualifications we may have to make will be due to the special difficulties of the immediate post-war period and the present uncertainty as to what will in fact lie within our power and that of other countries."

Canada's interest would, to a great extent, agree with the United Kingdom's interest in the reduction of trade barriers. Officials should ascertain as fully as possible the sort of qualifications which the United Kingdom might contemplate on account of "special difficulties of the immediate post-war period and the present uncertainty as to what will in fact lie within our power and that of other countries".

Para (4) "We would accept a moderate ceiling for tariffs for incorporation in a multilateral agreement."

"A moderate ceiling for tariffs" is taken to mean an agreed level or levels to which existing tariffs would be progressively reduced, not a mere "tariff truce" or freezing of pre-war rates, as the current use of the word "ceiling" in Canada might suggest. An elaboration and clarification of the paragraph should be sought so as to state this more explicitly.

Exploration should be made of the sort of formula contemplated, e.g., a series of maximum rates for different categories of goods, a single top rate and percentage reductions of rates below the ceiling, or a single maximum rate.

There are serious practical difficulties in defining and interpreting such limitations and the relation to the formula chosen of divergent systems of nomenclature and valuation, the conversion of specific to ad valorem rates and other technical features of tariff-making should be explored in a preliminary way to the point of forming some judgment on the feasibility of the proposal.

Enquiry should also be directed to ascertaining what view is taken of subsidies for maintaining domestic production and whether, converted to comparable form, they also would be subject to the "moderate ceiling for tariffs".

Para (5) "We should be prepared to make all our arrangements, including particularly quantitative restriction of imports, on a basis of mutual non-discrimination. Preferences which we do not regard as discriminatory in a strict sense of the word are dealt with below."

Non-discrimination has already been agreed in principle under the exchange of notes of November 30, 1942, and consideration should be given to including under this paragraph, not only rates and quotas, but also discriminatory application of such devices and requirements as: customs procedures, import licenses, processing regulations, customs valuation, tariff item definitions, exchange regulations, quality and grade specifications, anti-dumping clauses, health and sanitary requirements, and state and other monopoly buying.

Para (6) "Quite apart from our own position, a general plan should leave room for special arrangements within political and geographical groups since these are likely to be asked for and could be properly conceded in many cases. As part of a comprehensive scheme for the betterment of the trade of the world as a whole, we should be prepared to play our full part in any general scheme for reducing preferences.”

This paragraph would seem to contemplate a moderate reduction of preferences, perhaps even a limitation on the preferences which might be permitted to political or geographical groups. It is to be noted that the “elimination” of preferences implied by Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement has been converted to a reduction.

It should be made clear that general reduction of preferences would be conditional on high tariffs being substantially reduced under para (4) as well as on preferences being reduced by other countries and that such a basic change in the structure of our trade could be made only if a widely effective agreement of extended duration were assured.

The central object of the tentative proposals under discussion is the reduction of tariff barriers and the increase of international trade. It should accordingly be emphasized that, where preferences which have some substantial effect on trade are to be reduced, the most desirable method is by the reduction of non-preferential rates rather than by the raising of preferential rates. The tariff ceiling contemplated under para 4 would itself operate to reduce preferences. While some countries may be unable or unwilling to reduce certain preferences by reducing non-preferential rates (and this would apply in certain cases to Canada) it should be urged that it would be better in such cases not to insist on more than moderate narrowing of preferences if by doing more the only result achieved would be a substantial increase in the rates effective against countries enjoying preferential treatment. Thus a Canadian rate against the United States might be 35%, while the British preference rate is 20%. A “ceiling” of 30 per cent would reduce the rate against the United States and narrow the preference. It would be proper for the United States to press for a further narrowing or even elimination of the preference by a reduction of the rate against the United States to 23 or even 20 per cent. If, however, Canada feels unable to do this in the face of the difficulties and the reciprocal advantages offered, she should not be pressed to eliminate the preference by raising the B.P. rate from 20 to 30 per cent. Possibly, this general approach might be harmonized with the United Kingdom proposal that moderate preferences be recognized for political and geographical groups.

It should also be borne in mind that any reduction of preferences which would affect adversely the trade of other countries should be distributed equitably among countries. There may be a tendency for other Commonwealth countries to agree in conceding to the United States the preferences which they grant to Canada while preserving those granted to others.

Para (7) “We consider that the quantitative regulation of imports should not ordinarily be employed for the primary purpose of protecting home industries but rather regarded as a mechanism appropriate and useful for special purposes including among others, the safeguarding of a country’s balance of payments and for implementing approved international commodity agreements and on security grounds. We should be prepared to agree from the outset that such regulations should be on a non-discriminatory basis. In so far as quantitative regulation is used for safeguarding a country's balance of payments, we suggest that common agreement might be reached concerning a more or less automatic and objective test of the conditions under which such action should be permissible. For example, it might be found that the statistics resulting from the creation of an international monetary authority could be used for this purpose."

What is proposed essentially is that quota restrictions should not be permitted unless (a) they carry the approval of an international authority such as the Clearing Union or an approved commodity control authority or (b) on security grounds.

There is no exception to be taken to the first test but the latter requires clarification. It may be as narrow as the control of imports of munitions of war or broad enough to cover the protection of United Kingdom agriculture and a new Safeguarding of Industries Act. Questions should be directed to discovering what, if any, legitimate reason there is for this exception. Unless it should be made clear in discussion that "on security grounds" is given an extremely narrow meaning, or conceived as operating only under international authority, it should be argued vigorously that such an exception would cast doubt on the effectiveness and dependability of the convention and could be so abused by some signatories as to defeat the purposes of the convention. It should be borne in mind that Canada would probably have less possibility of using such a basis for exception than any other country.

Para (8) "We should be prepared to agree to measures designed to prevent export subsidies."

Export subsidies may be defined narrowly to cover only such government payments as result in an export price lower than the domestic price or broadly to include a great variety of governmental encouragements to export trade. Under the broader definitions, the Canadian freight rate structure, with its low export rates, would probably be held to involve export subsidies. There are serious difficulties in achieving a definition sufficiently precise to be workable. On the whole, it would in Canada's interest be necessary to have subsidies as narrowly defined eliminated as there is a danger of them being employed by such countries as the United States, Australia, and South Africa in such a way as to make it difficult for Canada to compete in export markets in certain products.

Para (9) "Room should be left for State trading but it would be desirable that it should be conducted in accordance with a code to be agreed."

State trading must be a recognized system of international exchange of goods under any multilateral convention signed by Soviet Russia, and other countries as well will probably wish to continue some bulk purchase arrangements. It is desirable, as suggested, that it should be regulated by a code.

The following additional points should be raised in discussion, though some of them are matters of detail hardly suitable for inclusion in the draft aide-mémoire:

- (a) provision for the accession of new members;
- (b) relations between adhering and non-adhering countries and the contemplated status of most-favoured-nation obligations; how far will non-adherents enjoy the benefits of the convention without assuming its obligations?
- (c) the status of export duties and embargoes;
- (d) consideration of a standard anti-dumping duty clause;
- (e) provision for simplification of customs procedures;
- (f) discrimination in shipping laws and practices;
- (g) the use of the taxing power to evade the limitations imposed by the proposed convention on tariff duties;
- (h) consideration of the need for an international trade authority to give judicial decisions within the terms of the convention;
- (i) the extent to which such a multilateral convention would leave any place for generalized bilateral agreements.

In the above paragraphs, the exploration of many points has been suggested and there have been frequent references to particular Canadian interests, for it is desirable that officials should obtain as full and detailed a view as possible of the background and ultimate content of the United Kingdom proposals. The number of the suggestions should not, however, be interpreted as detracting in any way from the Committee's view that the approach proposed by the United Kingdom to the discussion of post-war trade policy is a most desirable approach which should be encouraged and supported.

2. A fairly complete record of the discussions[†] has been prepared. The following is a summary of the most important points of substance:

(a) Resources of the Fund

The U.S. representatives would have preferred a larger Fund with larger American participation, but felt that the greater the American contribution the more difficult would it be to get Congressional approval. Mr. Morgenthau is committed to asking for such approval. As experience is gained and the Fund produces benefits, inter alia to the U.S.A., the Americans felt that a greater contribution would be possible. Unlimited commitments are an impossibility and the Fund must not be used as a grab-bag.

In defending the proposed size of the Fund, the U.S. representatives took several lines. First, it was argued that world net deficits on current account in 1936-8 amounted to only about $2.5 billion. Then the point was made that the U.S.A. will probably carry out an expansionist policy after the war and may have an unfavourable balance of payments on current account. Finally, very considerable stress was laid on the possibility of the Fund borrowing scarce currencies.

On the last point we tried to find out whether the United States would be prepared to accept a proposal for additional mandatory loans over and above the original subscription. It is not possible to say definitely what their attitude will be: at one point they appeared to think there would be merit in such a provision, under safeguards, but at another point they gave the impression that it would be unacceptable.

(b) Composition of the Fund

There was considerable discussion about the inclusion of securities as part of the original capital subscription. The purpose of this was (1) to meet the position of certain countries which would have difficulty in raising local cash, (2) to provide earning assets to the Fund and (3) to increase the Fund's resources available for use in any part of the world. As regards (3), the Americans intended that the securities of one country might be disposed of in external markets to produce any currency the Fund needed. They ultimately agreed that this would have to be reconsidered inasmuch as the securities of all countries are not equally marketable abroad.

(c) Organization of the Exchange Market and Exchange Control

The American position is that exchange control is not necessary for the operation of their scheme and they contemplate a restoration of free exchange markets with commercial banks, etc. able to marry off purchases of one currency against sales of another currency. When asked how any country would be able to certify, without prior scrutiny of all exchange transactions, that its purchases of foreign exchange from the Fund were in fact for the purpose of meeting a current account deficit in the balance of payments, they replied (1) that they would rely a good deal on improved statistics, including statistics to be furnished by countries into which capital might move, (2) they would not be concerned with small amounts of capital transfers, (3) the Fund would take steps to deal with countries utilizing the Fund's resources in large amounts for this purpose by requiring the imposition of exchange control, and (4) the establishment of the Fund would remove the incentive for capital flight. When asked how free exchange markets, including e.g. Canadian banks selling sterling in New York to produce American dollars, could be reconciled with the part of the plan which limits any country's ability to purchase foreign exchange from the Fund to the amount of its current account deficit with the country whose currency is being purchased, the Americans first replied that this was intentional and that if Canada had a surplus of sterling on current account she should buy more from the sterling area or sell less to it. White first took the position that this was not bilateralism, but he subsequently moved from this position and indicated that the limitation referred to would be removed from the American plan.

On exchange control generally, the facts would appear to be that the American officials do realize that a control over capital movements is necessary on the part of borrowing countries and that they will raise no objection to member countries retaining exchange controls for this purpose so long as they are non-discriminatory on current account, but that they do not want to be responsible for widespread imposition of exchange control by making this a condition of entry.

(d) Fixing of Exchange Rates

There was a long but inconclusive discussion of the unilateral power given to the Fund to fix exchange rates. It was recognized by the Americans that a country would have to know and be satisfied with the exchange rate fixed before joining the Fund. They were anxious that the Fund should not authorize any changes in exchange rates in the first years of its operation, and evidently have it in mind that the rates to be fixed will be the de facto rates prevailing when the Fund is set up.

(e) Veto Powers

The Americans stated that they expected the U.K. to ask for, and obtain, a quota large enough to give them a veto power under the proposed voting arrangements. They said that they had put in the four-fifths voting provision to cover any point where they thought an important American interest was involved and that they were open to suggestions regarding the elimination of some items. The points to which they apparently attach most importance and wish to retain the veto are: (1) change in the value of gold, (2) change in the value of the American dollar, (3) change in the quotas of member states. As regards (3) they showed interest in our weighted voting formula⁶¹; as regards (2) it should be possible to meet them by a provision under which no country would be required to change the initially-agreed value of its currency without that country's consent. The American plan makes no provision at all for a general change in the value of gold; this is, apparently, one of the main British objections.

The Americans explained that in his explanations to the Senate committees, the Secretary of the Treasury had frequently fallen back on the American veto power to prove that American interests will be safeguarded. There is no doubt that, unless some effective substitute for the veto can be found, there will be important political opposition in the United States to any change.

[Ottawa,] May 29, 1943

We have been working with the Finance Department and the Bank of Canada on plans for an international stabilization and clearing fund which would combine and reconcile the best features of the United Kingdom and United States plans. The diplomatic and technical difficulties in the way of reaching general agreement on either the British or American scheme are great. The only country which might conceivably put forward a third scheme with some hope of the others accepting it is Canada. Our experts in this field are really very good. In their previous discussions with both the United Kingdom and the United States Treasuries they have put forward a good many practical and helpful suggestions which were recognized as such by their opposite numbers and incorporated into the United Kingdom and United States schemes respectively. I think there is a good deal to be said for them now trying to work out a new and synthetic scheme which might, if the Government approved of it, be put forward for confidential consideration by other Governments as a distinctively Canadian contribution to the solution of this difficult and very important question.

PROPOSED STEPS IN THE FUTURE DISCUSSION OF THE CLEARING UNION AND STABILIZATION FUND PROPOSALS

1. Discussions up to date

Certain Canadian officials (Wrong, Rasminsky, Mackintosh) together with other Dominion representatives, discussed the United Kingdom Clearing Union proposal with Treasury and other officials in London last October. The discussions were entirely non-committal but several suggestions were made which were adopted in the draft subsequently published⁶². In April last, Canadian officials (Rasminsky, Deutsch, Mackintosh) discussed the Stabilization Fund proposal with the United States Treasury on an equally informal and non-committal basis. Here too various suggestions were made though, in the main, effort was directed to an elucidation of the Treasury proposals. Since then, a good deal of study has been given to the two plans with the object of reaching a clear view of the appropriateness of the various features of each to the problems which they are intended to solve.

2. Discussions in Prospect

Up until recently, indications from the United States have been that they proposed to continue a series of discussions with other countries (Netherlands, Australia, Mexico, etc.) on their Stabilization Fund proposal before beginning any discussion with the United Kingdom or considering the discussion of the two plans on anything wider than a bilateral basis. The Minister's suggestion to the Secretary of the Treasury for a tripartite discussion⁶³ was rejected. Recently, however, it has been intimated by Plumtre that the Treasury would like to resume discussions with Canadians about June 15th, and would widen them to include the United Kingdom and possibly Australia, Brazil and Mexico. It has been intimated that it would be appropriate for us to advance any substantive proposals.

3. Chief Objects of the Two Plans

The two proposals have broadly the same objects though differing in method and scope. They attempt to provide a system by which the adjustments which countries may be forced to make in their international balances of payments, by reason of varying crops, differences in the rate of technical progress, variations of the trade cycle and fortuitous circumstances, can be made gradually and without necessity of taking drastic and destructive action to defend the external value of the countries' currencies or alternatively great variations in exchange rates. Broadly, the object is to remove much of the incentive to the adoption of measures of a discriminatory, trade-throttling, or "beggar-my-neighbour", character by countries, which wish to expand employment at home and fear that an excess of imports or flight of capital may frustrate their efforts. These may be particularly important in the uncertain period immediately after the war, but will also be of continuing significance.

⁶² Voir le document 582.

⁶³ Voir le document 583.

Both plans attempt to do this by combining an automatic system of short-term credits with provision for suitable pressures on each country to re-adjust its position when necessary but over a longer period than would be available to it under any other system.

Both plans are multilateral, that is, they would permit us, in Keynes' words, "to apply what we earn from our exports, wherever we may be selling them, to pay for whatever we may buy, wherever we may buy it."

4. Basic Differences

Though similar in object, the two plans have distinct differences in structure and operation and these have been exaggerated somewhat in the public mind by the suggestion of rivalry in publication.

The least important difference is that the Stabilization Fund is a fund requiring a cash contribution by each member country and giving a right to draw against the fund within prescribed limits and under prescribed conditions. The Clearing Union requires only a set of books and an undertaking by members to accept unused credits on the books as payment for goods and services. It would operate by the familiar British system of overdrafts. Either system can be made to work, though the British proposal is simpler in operation and gives a clearer picture of results.

The most important difference is that, in the Clearing Union plan, each country agrees to accept "bancor" (the international unit of account) as payment for its exports and other credits and thus there is no limit to the extension of credit by one country to the rest except the decision of that country to use its "bancor" to buy imports and pay other debits. In the Stabilization Fund plan, each country contributes gold and its national currency to the Fund and that strictly limited amount apart from arranged loans is all that is available to meet the unfavourable balances of other countries. This limitation of commitment is a point of great importance in the eyes of the United States Treasury.

A related point is of equally great importance. The overdraft privileges of the Clearing Union plan are very generous, probably over-generous. The United States Fund is of distinctly narrow proportions and the present suggested figure of $5,000,000,000, modified to an uncertain degree by borrowing powers, is quite inadequate for the purposes set out in the plan. The British figures are easily scaled down, but the United States figure involving as it does a cash contribution will be much more difficult to raise. However, it is thought that it is not hopeless to attempt it.

The Stabilization Fund requires a 4/5 vote for all important decisions and thus gives the United States a veto. This is a wholly unacceptable provision and one that is quite unnecessary for the protection of United States interests. It can probably be modified but it has already been pointed out to Congress as a safeguard and it will not be easy to remove.

There are many detailed provisions in both plans concerning conditions and operations which are important but appear amenable to adjustment after discussion.

5. A Canadian Plan

It seems tactically wise, and more effective in presenting our own point of view, to put forward our suggestions in the form of a complete Canadian plan or rather of a Canadian merger of the two plans.

The reasons are:

(a) For reasons set out in your letter to Mr. Morgenthau, it is essential at an early stage to bring the two plans together, since separate discussions put us in the position of taking sides in an Anglo-American argument if we advance suggestions for the modification of each plan singly. The desired discussion between the British and the American can best be achieved if there is put before both groups a proposed merger of plans which will concentrate attention on the problems rather than the rival provisions of the plans. Our suggestions, if put forward as a whole in an integrated plan, will make clear that we are neither pro-London nor pro-Washington. It would contain approval and criticism of some features of both plans and might resolve the present dilemma.

(b) It would probably relieve many smaller countries of embarrassment. They do not wish to oppose either plan nor seem to take sides. A Canadian plan would bring discussion into the open and probably establish some merger of the two plans as to the desirable model.

(c) The United States Treasury does not command a great deal of support either in the country or in Congress. Canada has, on the other hand, an almost embarrassingly high position in banking and financial circles in the United States and is not without reputation in Congress where we at least have no taint of the New Deal about us. The numerous American banks have a significant political weight, in contrast to our own concentrated banking system. A Canadian plan would probably attract more support in the United States than a Treasury plan. It would give rise to no instinctive opposition such as a British plan.

The Canadian plan should be put forward purely as a proposal for discussion with no government commitment. This would be identically the attitude taken by the United Kingdom and the United States to the plans of their Treasuries.

The main features of the Canadian plan would be —

- (a) the adoption of the American form, i.e., a Fund;
- (b) the enlargement of the Fund by larger contributions and by agreed lines of credit to the Fund;
- (c) the elimination of the United States veto through providing in less objectionable ways for safeguarding the interests of the United States and other creditors;

- (d) modification of the rigidity of the United States plan without accepting the complete flexibility of the United Kingdom plan;
- (e) various detailed amendments designed to make the plan completely multilateral and to make the operative sections workable.

INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE STABILIZATION

18. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE reported that the U.S. government proposed that representatives of the United Kingdom and the United States, Canada and Australia, Mexico and Brazil meet in Washington during June for informal discussion of the British and American draft plans.

The government's financial advisers felt that the prospects of international agreement on exchange stabilization were being prejudiced by the rivalry between the two plans. It was suggested, therefore, that the presentation by the Canadian representatives at the Washington meeting of a third plan to combine certain features of both the British and American documents would serve to bring the two groups together and enhance the possibilities of agreement.

19. THE PRIME MINISTER saw no objection to the course proposed, as long as the "Canadian" plan were not put forward as an official document expressive of government policy, but merely as the result of the studies of Canadian experts.

20. MR. ILSLEY said that it was not suggested that the plan should be put forward as representing government policy. It would be intended only for discussion with other representatives. The government would in no way be committed and would remain free to modify, revise or even repudiate it entirely.

21. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, approved participation of Canadian representatives in the Washington discussions, and the presentation thereof by Canadian representatives of specific proposals, it being understood that the proposals so presented would in no way commit the government.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS OF CANADIAN EXPERTS ON PLANS FOR POST-WAR MONETARY ORGANIZATION

- 1. Officials of the Canadian Government have had an opportunity of examining the United States Treasury Department Preliminary Draft Outline of a Proposal for a United and Associated Nations Stabilization Fund, and have received explanations of this proposal from American officials. A similar procedure was followed in connection with the paper containing proposals by British experts for an International Clearing Union. The discussions with both British and American officials have been entirely exploratory and the Canadian Government has not been committed to any course of action as a result of these conversations. The American and British experts, for their part, have laid stress on the fact that their proposals are tentative in character, and have made it clear to representatives of the Canadian Government (as well as to those of other Governments) that they would welcome critical comment and constructive suggestions. Canadian experts who have been studying the British and the American proposals are, therefore, led to make certain observations of a general character and to submit an alternative plan. Like the British and the American plans, the proposals of the Canadian experts are provisional and tentative in character; they incorporate important features of both the American and the British plans and add to them certain new elements.

2. The main objectives of the American and the British proposals appear to be identical, namely, the establishment of an international monetary mechanism which will aid in the restoration and development of healthy international trade after the war, which will achieve a high degree of exchange stability, and which will not conflict with the desire of countries to carry out such policies as they may think appropriate to achieve, so far as possible, economic stability at a high level of employment and incomes. To aid in the achievement of these objectives, the British and American experts have proposed the establishment of a new international monetary institution. Their proposals are large in conception, but no larger than the problem itself. There is every reason to improve the structure and operation of the monetary mechanism on the basis of experience. But there is no reason why proposals should be based exclusively on the limited, and on the whole, bad experience of the last two decades. Unless dependable exchange and credit relations between countries can be achieved before the stresses and strains of the post-war period begin, there is little likelihood that irreparable damage can be avoided.

3. If plans for international monetary organization are to be successful, other problems — by no means less difficult or less important — will also have to be faced and solved by joint international action. It would, indeed, be dangerous to attach too much importance to monetary organization of and by itself, if this resulted in neglect of other problems which may be even more important and difficult, or in a misguided faith that with a new form of monetary organization the other problems would solve themselves. In the international field alone (to say nothing of the innumerable domestic problems involved in the profound changes in the structure of production and employment which have taken place in all belligerent and many non-belligerent countries due to the exigencies of the war) it will be necessary to attack frontally such problems as commercial policy, international investment, the instability of primary product prices — to name but a few. No international monetary organization, however perfect in form, could long survive economic distortions resulting from bilateralist trade practices, continued refusal of creditor countries to accept imports in payment of the service on their foreign investment or to invest their current account surplus abroad, or enormous fluctuations in food and raw material prices such as characterized the years between the two wars. But the fact that there are many problems to be faced cannot be used as an excuse for facing none. A start must be made somewhere, and for the reasons given in paragraph 5, we believe that the problem of international monetary organization is a logical and fruitful starting-place.

4. The establishment of an international monetary organization is no substitute for the measures of international relief and rehabilitation which will be required as the war draws to its conclusion and afterwards; and in view of the Canadian experts any monetary organization which is set up should not be called upon to finance transactions of this nature. Some continuing and stable arrangements regarding international long-term investment are also clearly essential if equilibrium is to be achieved and maintained. Nor should it be thought that the proposed international monetary institution is merely an instrument of the transition period from war to peace. True, it has special importance in this period but it should be designed as a permanent institution and not as a stopgap to function during a relatively short period of time.

5. An important, perhaps the most important, feature of the British and the American proposals is the provision in both plans for the extension of credit between countries. The two plans differ as regards the precise techniques to be used in extending credit and as regards the amounts which may be involved; but both plans provide that foreign credits are to be available under certain conditions to countries having need of them, and that they shall be made available through an international monetary organization rather than through bilateral arrangements between pairs of countries. The provision for credit extension is nothing more nor less than a straightforward and realistic recognition of the fact that at the end of the war a large number of countries, whose import requirements will be considerable, will not have immediately available a sufficient reserve of foreign assets to enable them to expose themselves to the risk of participation in a world economic system. An interval will be needed to give time for adjustment and reorganization. If the penury in foreign means of payment of certain important countries is to be allowed to fix the pattern of post-war trading and domestic policies, then all can look forward to penury — no country, rich or poor, will escape the impoverishment resulting from the throttling of international trade which will result.

6. It is useful to consider what would happen if no action were taken to set up international machinery of the general character suggested by the experts of the United States and the United Kingdom. Theoretically, one alternative would be immediate cash settlement for all international transactions. But how can cash be produced for purchases abroad? Only by selling goods or services abroad, or by disposing of acceptable foreign assets such as securities and gold. The facts regarding the distribution of the world's monetary gold reserves and the changes which have taken place in the course of the war in various countries' holdings of foreign securities are too well known to require elaboration. Broadly speaking, and allowing for certain exceptions and time-lags, a cash basis for the settlement of international transactions would mean that any country's capacity to export would be limited to the amount of its own currency it made available to foreign countries through its imports and other current payments abroad — in other words, trade would in effect be reduced to barter. In point of fact, however, there is no possibility that countries would for long allow themselves to be confined in such a strait jacket. Faced with the problem of an unsalable surplus of export goods and with consequent domestic unemployment, they would refuse to accept the penalty of disorganization of export trade if that penalty could be avoided, even temporarily, by the extension of credit. Countries would embark on bilateral credit arrangements, no doubt linked with deals relating to the purchase and sale of goods; and as soon as certain countries began to adopt this course others would find that they had to follow suit to protect their trade interests. It is difficult to imagine a more fruitful source of international dissension than a competitive trade and credit extension programme of this character.

The Canadian experts believe it to be true, therefore, that the Stabilization Fund or Clearing Union plans do not involve a decision as to whether foreign credits shall be extended or withheld. In some form or other, credit will in fact be extended; and the decision which has to be taken relates primarily to the method employed. For the reasons given above, international arrangements are greatly to be preferred to bilateral deals.

7. This leads to the question, how much credit should be made available through the international monetary mechanism? A vital feature of any plan of this sort is the provision it makes for the borrowing power of each participant and for the contribution to the resources of the organization by the participating countries through the provision of capital, the accumulation of balances or through loans. Some concern has been expressed in regard to the size of the commitment which may be assumed by prospective creditors. It is probable that Canada will be a creditor country on current account, and the Canadian experts have therefore given careful thought to this aspect of the arrangements.

8. There is one preliminary observation which should be made in this connection. It would be a distortion of the realities of the situation for any country, or its citizens, to regard the willingness to provide resources to an international organization of the general character proposed by the British and the American experts as an act of generosity which is performed for the sake of foreign countries. Resources are provided to the organization first, because all have a stake in re-creating a functioning international economic system and secondly, because for each individual country the realistic alternatives in the form of trade disorganization are costlier than the provision of resources. Moreover, and most important of all, the resources provided are not given away; they are fully secured by the organization's holdings of gold and national currencies. It can only lead to confusion of thought to regard participation in such plans as these as in any way similar in character to participation in international relief schemes, important and necessary though the latter may be.

9. It seems apparent that, in one way or another, substantial unregulated movements of capital between countries will be prevented. In these circumstances, countries will, by and large, lose or gain foreign exchange to the extent, but only to the extent, of the imbalance in their current account transactions with the rest of the world. If a country is building up a substantial credit position, it will know that this situation is produced because it is selling more goods and services abroad than it is buying abroad. If it is dissatisfied with this position, if it wishes to reduce its credit balance, it has through participation in the proposed organization lost no single one of the courses of action ever open to it. True, it is by no means easy for a country, acting alone, to solve problems of imbalance. But as a last resort a country can find a solution by unilateral action. It can do the only things it ever could do in these circumstances; it can buy more abroad — goods, services or investments; or it can sell less abroad. It is therefore quite wrong to assume that countries participating in the proposed institution would, because of this participation, be left without control over their international commitments. It may be, and no doubt is, useful to erect danger signals at various stations along the road followed by both debtors and creditors. Such signals are useful reminders. But there is nothing to prevent either creditor or debtor from taking remedial action at any time.

10. If the foregoing is a correct analysis of the situation — and it would appear to be a simple statement of fact — creditors need not be unduly concerned about the possible size of their investment in the Fund, knowing that the ultimate actual size of their stake can be determined by their own course of action from day to day and from year to year. Nevertheless, even the appearance of an unlimited commitment is probably undesirable and in the tentative proposals of Canadian experts, a limit is placed on the obligation of each participant to provide resources to the institution. But there is less real danger to the interests of creditor countries in the establishment of a Fund or a Union whose potential resources are unnecessarily large (and may in consequence never be entirely used) than there is in the establishment of an institution whose resources are obviously too small. The interests of all will best be served by providing a fair degree of latitude, a satisfactory breathing-space — to debtors and creditors alike. If its objectives are to be achieved, the resources must be large enough to permit time for basic readjustments to be accomplished; they must be such that the organization will command general confidence in its own stability. For if this is not the case, what will happen? It will be believed that certain currencies are likely to become “scarce” currencies — a belief which will be reinforced by the reduction in the institution’s holdings of that particular currency. Countries which are likely to require a “scarce” currency will hasten to make their purchases which are payable in that currency. As the holdings of the “scarce” currency are used up, as discussions and arguments commence regarding an enlargement of the quota or some other form of extension of credit, grave misgivings in regard to the international situation will arise. The position will be very much akin to that of a bank whose cash reserves are feared to be insufficient. There will be a run on that currency in the institution; and if the currency concerned is an important one, the international effects will be very serious indeed. No form of international monetary organization can continuously compensate for chronic maladjustments in the current account balance of payments of the countries which may be concerned, but it would be most unwise to set up machinery which stood a fair chance of facing a crisis at a comparatively early date.

11. To avoid misunderstandings it should be emphasized that it would be extremely dangerous to use short-term credits as a device to cover up basically unsound positions. This would be no less disastrous in the international than in the domestic field, and any monetary system which made such an attempt on a large scale would inevitably break down. A chronic imbalance in current account balances of international payments which is not matched by voluntary long-term capital movements — lending abroad by creditor countries, and borrowing abroad by debtor countries — is symptomatic of a deep-seated maladjustment which has to be dealt with if equilibrium is to be restored. No debtor country can live beyond its resources indefinitely; and no creditor country can persistently refuse to lend its surplus abroad or make other adjustments to its creditor position without ripping the international fabric. But time is required for adjustments to be made and for remedial measures to have their effects, and the contention of this paper is that the time allowed must be adequate. More time may be purchased at a smaller real cost than less time.

12. There is one final observation of a general character which should be made. The new international monetary institution which it is proposed to create will be neither omniscient nor omnipotent. It should create conditions in which member countries are free to carry out sound economic policies for the welfare of their own people and in which they will not be induced or forced, for lack of organized co-operation, to pursue policies which impoverish themselves and contribute to the impoverishment of the world. The organization should be international and not supernatural. Nations should enter into the proposed agreement for common purposes and advantages, realizing that without such agreement the common purposes cannot be achieved. In their national policies, countries should be limited only by their own will in entering and remaining in the organization. If the proposed institution functions well, it will have at its disposal more information regarding the currents of international financial transactions and the causes of disequilibrium than has ever been available before. It will be in a position to offer informed and disinterested advice to its members. It may be hoped that the quality of the advice offered will be such that it will carry great weight. But no member state should be asked to bind itself in all circumstances to follow the advice given by the organization. Moreover, if a country feels at any time that its national interests are being jeopardized by actions of the organization, and is willing to sacrifice the advantages of continued membership, it should be free to withdraw, after making provision to liquidate its obligations to the organization or, if the country is a creditor, it should have returned to it its original contribution to the resources of the organization. The proposals here advanced are put forward in the belief that a soundly conceived international agreement can give greater scope for national policies than can exist outside it.

13. To sum up these general observations, it is suggested that:

(a) An international agreement for the establishment of an international monetary organization which involves the extension of credit is essential if international cooperation in the post-war period is to be achieved.

(b) Such machinery will deal with only one of the numerous problems which must be faced, but it is a logical and convenient starting place for joint international action.

(c) The credit made available through the international monetary organization should be adequate to deal with that portion of current account surpluses and deficits which is not met by relief and other concerted international action in the years immediately after the war; it should be sufficient to provide a firm basis on which multilateral world trade can be re-established after the war; and it should provide time to countries which find their international accounts unbalanced to take the necessary corrective measures to adjust their position.

(d) The extension of credit is not a cure-all; it merely provides time for adjustments; and unless unbalanced positions (except those accompanying long-term capital movements) are brought into equilibrium, any arrangements made will break down.

(e) No country participating in the arrangements loses control of the size of its international commitments, since it can determine their size by its own action, if it wishes to do so.

(f) No country participating in the arrangements loses control over its domestic economic policies.

Projet de propositions pour une Union de stabilisation du change étranger
Draft Proposals for a Foreign Exchange Stabilization Union

SECRET

Ottawa, June 1, 1943

I. PURPOSES OF THE UNION

1. To stabilize exchange rates and provide an orderly method for their determination.

2. To provide a convenient clearing mechanism to settle balances in international payments.

3. To provide to all countries access to foreign exchange resources in order to reduce the danger that economic and commercial policies in the period immediately after the war will be largely determined by a shortage of foreign exchange and to enable countries thereafter to be guided in their economic and commercial policies by long-run considerations when faced with a temporary reduction of foreign markets.

4. To aid in the achievement of international equilibrium by measures designed to prevent excessive short-term borrowing through the Union or the excessive accumulation of uninvested foreign surpluses.

5. To contribute to the re-establishment and development of a multilateral trading system and to the elimination of discriminatory trading and currency practices.

II. RESOURCES OF THE UNION

Member countries shall agree to make the following resources available to the Union:

1. A capital subscription to the amount of the quota assigned to each member country, the aggregate of such quotas to be $8,000 million.

Detailed provisions regarding 1 – Quotas and Capital Subscription:

(a) Determination of quotas

The quota for each member country shall be determined by a formula which will give due regard to the following factors: international trade, national income, and holdings of gold and foreign exchange convertible into gold. A special assessment may be levied in any case where this formula would be inappropriate.

(b) Payment of capital subscription

The capital subscription of each member country shall be paid up in full on or before the date set by the Board of Directors of the Union on which the Union's operations are to begin. Each member country shall pay in at least 15 per cent of its quota in gold and the balance in national currency; a country may substitute gold for national currency in meeting its quota requirements. The Union may make such arrangements as it deems appropriate to provide a period of time within which countries having less than $300 million in gold or foreign exchange convertible into gold may pay up their gold contribution in full. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsequent paragraphs the Union shall sell foreign exchange to such member countries for the purpose of acquiring gold to pay their capital subscriptions.

(c) Change in quotas

The Board may from time to time change the quotas of particular member countries, provided, however, that in voting on proposals to increase quotas the voting strength of each member shall be increased or decreased to take account of the Union's net sales or purchases of the currency of each member country in accordance with the weighted voting formula set out in IX.3 below. No increase shall, however, be made in the quota of any country without the consent of the representative of the country concerned.

2. Loans to the Union, as required, in amounts not exceeding 50 per cent of the quota of each member country.

Detailed provisions regarding 2 – Loans to the Union:

(a) Conditions of borrowing

The terms and conditions of loans made by member countries to the Union under the provisions of paragraph II.2 shall be set out in the rules and regulations of the Union. The Union's authority to borrow from member countries up to 50 per cent of their quotas shall be a revolving authority. Such loans may be made in gold or national currency at the option of the member country. The Union shall not exercise its right to borrow until it has used its available gold resources to acquire additional supplies of the currency in question. Subject to the provisions of the preceding sentence, the Union must exercise its right to borrow when its holdings of the currency of any member country have been reduced to 10 per cent of the quota of that member country. When the Union exercises its right under the provisions of paragraph II.2 to borrow additional supplies of the currency of any member country it shall have the duty to attempt to increase its disposal over the currency concerned by acquiring gold or the currency in question from the holdings of other member countries.

(b) Conditions of Repayment

The Union shall have the right to repay loans contracted under the provisions of paragraph II.2 at any time. The member country making the loan shall have the right to demand repayment in gold to the extent of the Union's gold holdings at any time and shall also have the right to demand repayment in its national currency provided that such repayment does not reduce the Union's holdings of that currency below 50 per cent of the quota of the member country. Member countries shall agree to give 30 days' notice of demand for repayment of loans made to the Union under the provisions of the present article.

III. MONETARY UNIT OF THE UNION

1. The monetary unit of the Union shall be the Moned⁶⁴ and it shall consist of 137 1/7 grains of fine gold. The accounts of the Union shall be kept and published in terms of Moneds.

2. The value of the Moned in terms of gold shall not be changed without the approval of four-fifths of member votes.

3. Member countries shall agree with the Union the initial values of their currencies in terms of gold or Moneds and, except as provided in paragraph IV.2 below, shall undertake not to alter these values without the approval of the Union.

4. Deposits in terms of Moneds may be accepted by the Union from member countries upon the delivery of gold to the Union. Such Moned deposits shall be transferable to other member countries. They shall be redeemable in gold and the Union shall maintain a 100 per cent reserve in gold against all Moned deposits.

IV. EXCHANGE RATES

1. The Union shall fix, on the basis of exchange rates initially agreed between it and each member country, the rates at which it will buy and sell one member's currency for another's and the rates in local currencies at which it will buy and sell gold. The spread between the Union's buying and selling rates for member currencies and for gold shall not exceed 1 per cent. Except as provided in paragraph IV.2 below, member countries shall agree not to change the initially agreed exchange rates without the approval of the Union and any country which alters the value of its currency without the consent of the Union shall be declared in default of its obligations and become subject to the penalties provided in XI.1 below.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph IV.1 above, any member country which has, on the average of one year, been a net purchaser of foreign exchange from the Union (for other than capital account purposes) to the extent of 50 per cent of its quota shall be entitled to depreciate its exchange to the maximum extent of 5 per cent; provided, however, that the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any country which holds independent official reserves of gold and foreign currencies freely convertible into gold in amounts exceeding 30 per cent of its quota. No country shall be entitled to repeat the exchange depreciation provided for in this paragraph without the specific approval of the Union.

3. No change in the value of the currencies of member countries shall be permitted to alter the value of the assets of the Union in terms of gold or Moneds. Thus if the Union approves a reduction in the value of the currency of a member country, or if a country depreciates its exchange under the provisions of the preceding paragraph, or if in the opinion of the Board a significant depreciation in the value of the currency of a member has in fact occurred, that country must on request deliver to the Union an amount of its local currency equal to the decreased value of that currency held by the Union. Likewise, if the currency of a particular country should appreciate, the Union must return to that country an amount in the currency of that country equal to the resulting increase in the value of the Union's holdings.

V. OPERATIONS OF THE UNION — PRIVILEGES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF DEFICIT COUNTRIES

1. The Union shall have the power to sell to the Treasury of any member country (or exchange fund or central bank acting as its agent for the purpose) at the rate of exchange established by the Union, currency of any country which the Union holds, subject to the following provisions:

(a) Without special permission, no country shall be a net purchaser of foreign exchange from the Union except for the purpose of meeting an adverse balance of payments on current account and the Union may at any time limit the amounts of foreign exchange to be sold to any member country which it has reason to believe is permitting significant exports of capital while having an adverse balance of payments on current account.

Detailed provisions regarding (a) — Restriction of Right of Deficit Countries to Purchase Foreign Exchange to amounts required to meet an Adverse Balance of Payments on Current Account.

(i) A country shall be regarded as a net purchaser of foreign exchange if as a result of the Union's purchases and sales of currencies the Union's holdings of its currency rise above the amount originally provided to the Union by way of capital subscription.

(ii) The Union may require any member country which is a net purchaser of foreign exchange to furnish at periodic intervals statistics of its balance of international payments on current account and on capital account and statistics of gold and foreign exchange holdings, public and private. Each such member country shall agree to furnish officers of the Union with detailed explanations of the bases on which such statistics are computed. If at any time the Governing Board has reason to believe that an outflow of capital from any member country is resulting directly or indirectly in net purchases of foreign exchange by that country from the Union, it shall have the right to require a control of outward capital movements as a condition of making additional sales of foreign exchange to such country. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Union shall normally require any member country which has been a net purchaser of foreign exchange to the extent of 25 per cent of its quota to impose restrictions on outward capital movements if none exist.

(iii) In considering applications from countries which have been net purchasers of foreign exchange from the Union for the special permission referred to in paragraph V.1(a) to purchase foreign exchange for purposes other than the meeting of an adverse balance of payments on current account, the Governing Board shall give careful attention to applications for foreign exchange to facilitate the adjustment of foreign debts where this is deemed to be desirable from the point of view of the general economic situation and shall also give special attention to applications for foreign exchange by member countries not in default on their foreign obligations for the purpose of maintaining contractual principal payments on foreign debt.

(b) In order to promote the most effective utilization of existing stocks of gold and foreign exchange, no member country shall have the right to be a net purchaser of foreign exchange from the Union so long as that country's holdings of gold and foreign currencies freely convertible into gold (including private as well as official holdings) exceed its quota.

Detailed provision regarding (b) — Restriction of Right of Countries holding Large Independent Gold and Foreign Exchange Reserves to Purchase Foreign Exchange from the Union

In interpreting this provision the Governing Board shall give special consideration to the position of certain Asiatic countries where gold has long been used as private treasure.

(c) In general, the Union shall have the power to sell foreign exchange for domestic currency to member countries up to 200 per cent of the quota of each such member country. Net sales of foreign exchange shall not exceed 50 per cent of the quota of each member country during the first year and the aggregate net sales shall not exceed 100 per cent, 150 per cent or 200 per cent during the first two, three and four years of the operation of the Union.

Detailed provision regarding (c) — Restriction of Sales of Foreign Exchange to Specified Limits.

On special vote of the Governing Board, in which voting strength shall be weighted to allow for the Union's net purchases and sales of each member country's currency in accordance with the provisions described in paragraph IX.3 below, the Union may purchase any currency in excess of these limits provided that (a) the country whose currency is being acquired by the Union agrees to adopt and carry out measures recommended by the Union to correct the disequilibrium in its balance of payments, or (b) it is the view of the Governing Board that the country's prospective balance of payments is such as to warrant the expectation that the excess currency holdings of the Union can be disposed of in a reasonable time.

(d) In order to promote the most effective utilization of existing stocks of gold and foreign exchange the Union may, as a condition of selling foreign exchange to any member country in amounts exceeding 50 per cent of its quota, require such a country to sell it, for its domestic currency, appropriate amounts of any reserves it (or its nationals) may hold of gold or foreign exchange acceptable to the Union.

(e) When a member country is exhausting its quota more rapidly than is warranted in the judgment of the Governing Board, the Board may make such recommendations to that country as it thinks appropriate with a view to correcting the disequilibrium, and may place such conditions upon additional sales of foreign exchange to that country as it deems to be in the general interest of the Union.

2. A charge of 1 per cent per annum payable in gold shall be levied against member countries on the amount of their currency held by the Union in excess of the quotas of such countries.

VI. OPERATIONS OF THE UNION — PRIVILEGES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF SURPLUS COUNTRIES

1. In order to promote the most effective utilization of the available and accumulating supply of gold and foreign exchange resources of member countries, each member country shall, on request of the Union, sell to the Union, for its local currency or for foreign currencies which it needs, all gold and foreign exchange in official reserves in excess of the amounts held immediately after joining the Union.

Detailed provision regarding 1 — Accumulating Supplies of Gold and Foreign Exchange

For the purpose of this provision, including computations, only free foreign exchange and gold are considered. To help achieve the objective set out in this paragraph each member country shall agree to discourage the unnecessary accumulation of gold and foreign exchange by its nationals and to furnish the Union with periodic reports of gold and foreign exchange holdings, public and private. The Union shall inform any member country when in its opinion any further growth of privately held gold and foreign exchange balances appears unwarranted.

2. When the Union's operations have resulted in excess sales of the currency of any member country to the extent of 75 per cent of the quota of that country the Union may, in order to increase its resources of the currency in question, attempt to arrange with the member country a programme of foreign capital investment or repatriation and may sell foreign exchange to facilitate such capital movements.

3. When the Union's holdings of the currency of a member country are being exhausted more rapidly than is warranted in the judgment of the Governing Board, the Board may make a report on the situation. Without restricting the generality of the foregoing, whenever the Union's operations have resulted in excess sales of the currency of any member country to the extent of 85 per cent of the quota of that country, the Union has the authority and the duty to render to the country a report embodying an analysis of the causes of the depletion of its holdings of the currency and recommendations appropriate to restore the equilibrium of the international balances of the country concerned. Such recommendations may relate to monetary and fiscal policies, exchange rate, wage policy, commercial policy and international investment.

Detailed provision regarding 3 — Report on Countries whose Currency is becoming Scarce

The Board member of the country in question shall be a member of the Union Committee appointed to draft the report. The report shall be sent to all member countries and, if deemed desirable, made public.

4. The Union shall have the right at any time to enter into arrangements with any member country to borrow additional supplies of its currency on such terms and conditions as may be mutually satisfactory.

5. The Union shall have the right to make special arrangements with any member country for the purpose of providing an emergency supply of the currency of any other member country on such terms and conditions as may be mutually satisfactory.

6. Whenever it becomes apparent to the Governing Board that the anticipated demand for any currency may soon exhaust the Union's holdings, the Governing Board shall inform the member countries of the probable supply of this currency and of a proposed method for its equitable distribution together with suggestions for helping to equate the anticipated demand and supply.

Detailed provisions regarding 6 — Rationing of Scarce Currencies

(a) The provisions of paragraph VI.6 shall come into force only after the Union has exercised in full its right in paragraph II.2 to borrow additional supplies of the currency of the member country and after the Union has taken such further steps to increase its supply of this currency as it has deemed appropriate and found possible.

(b) The privilege of any country to acquire from the Union an amount of other currencies equal to or in excess of its quota shall be limited by the necessity of assuring an appropriate distribution among various members of any currency the Union's supply of which is being exhausted.

(c) In rationing its sales of any scarce currency the Union shall be guided by the principle of satisfying the most urgent needs from the point of view of the general international economic situation. It shall also consider the special needs and resources of the various countries making the request for the scarce currency.

(d) Member countries shall agree that restrictions imposed by other member countries on the importation of goods from a country whose currency is being rationed by the Union shall, for the duration of such rationing, not be regarded as constituting an infraction of the most favoured nation obligations of commercial treaties except in the case of countries holding reserves of gold and/or the scarce currency, in amounts exceeding 30 per cent of their quotas.

7. Whenever the Governing Board has, under the provisions of the preceding paragraph, taken steps to ration the Union's supply of the currency of any member country, it may require the remaining member countries to prevent the sale by their nationals of each other's currencies, including bills of exchange, in the country whose currency is being rationed. In addition, whenever the Board has taken steps to ration the Union's supply of the currency of any member country, it shall have the duty to re-examine the exchange rates initially fixed and to recommend such changes as it may regard as appropriate to the changed circumstances.

VII. POWERS OF THE UNION — GENERAL

1. The Union shall have the powers to take such actions as are required to carry out the operations enumerated in the preceding paragraphs. For greater clarity, the Union shall have the power to buy, sell and hold gold, currencies and government securities of member countries; to accept deposits and to earmark gold; to issue its own obligations and to discount or offer them for sale in member countries; and to act as a clearing house for the settling of international movements of funds and gold.

Detailed provision regarding 1 — General Powers of the Union

Member countries agree that all of the Union's local currency holdings shall be free from any restrictions as to their use for payments within the country concerned.

2. When the Union's holdings of the local currency of a member country exceed the quota of that country the Union shall have the power to resell to the member country, upon its request, the Union's excess holdings of its currency for gold or acceptable foreign exchange.

3. The Union shall have the power to invest any of its currency holdings in government securities of the country of that currency, provided that the Board representative of the country concerned approves.

4. The Union shall have the power to buy and sell currencies of non-member countries, but shall not normally hold the currencies of non-member countries beyond 60 days after the date of purchase.

5. The Union shall have the power to levy upon member countries a pro rata share of the expenses of operating the Union, such levy to be made, however, only to the extent that the earnings of the Union are inadequate to meet its current expenses.

6. The Union shall make a service charge of one-quarter per cent on all gold transactions.

7. In conducting its own operations the Union shall have the power to deal only with or through (a) the Treasuries, exchange funds or fiscal agents of governments, (b) central banks with the consent of the member of the Board representing the country in question, and (c) any international banks owned predominantly by member countries. The Union may, nevertheless, with the approval of the member of the Board representing the country concerned, sell its own securities directly to the public or to institutions of member countries.

8. The Union shall have the power and the duty to cooperate with such other institutions of an international character as may exist or be established to deal with international economic matters such as international investment, commercial policy, etc.

VIII. ABNORMAL WARTIME BALANCE

During the first two years of operation the Union shall have the right to purchase abnormal wartime balances held by member countries in other member countries for the national currency of the country selling such balances or for foreign exchange needed to meet current account deficits in such country's balance of international payments, in amounts not exceeding in the aggregate 5 per cent of the quotas of all member countries. At the end of two years of operation the Governing Board shall propose a plan for the gradual further liquidation, in whole or in part, through the Union, of abnormal wartime balances held by member countries in other member countries and other financial indebtedness of a similar character. If the Governing Board feels unable to recommend that the Union's resources be used for this purpose it shall have the duty to propose some other method by which the problem can be considered.

IX. VOTING POWER

1. Each member country shall have 100 votes plus one vote for the equivalent of each 100,000 Moneds of its quota.
2. All decisions, except where specifically provided otherwise, shall be made by majority of the member votes.
3. Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding paragraph, in any vote on a proposal to increase the quota of any member country, member countries shall acquire one additional vote for each 100,000 Moneds of its contribution to the resources of the Fund (by way of original capital subscription or by way of loans made under the provisions of paragraph II.2) which has been utilized, net, on the average of the preceding year by the Union for sale to other member countries; and member countries shall lose one vote for each 100,000 Moneds of their net utilization of the resources of the Union on the average of the preceding year.

X. MANAGEMENT

1. The administration of the Union shall be vested in a Governing Board. Each government shall appoint a director and an alternate who shall serve for a period of three years subject to the pleasure of their government. Directors and alternates may be reappointed.
2. The Governing Board shall select a Governor of the Union and one or more assistants. The Governor shall become an ex officio member of the Board and shall be chief of the operating staff of the Board. The Governor and his assistants shall hold office for five years and shall be eligible for re-election and may be removed for cause at any time by the Board.
3. The Governor of the Union shall select the operating staff in accordance with regulations established by the Governing Board. Members of the staff may be made available upon request of member countries or of other institutions of an international character for consultation in connection with international economic problems and policies.
4. The Governing Board shall appoint from among its members an Executive Committee to consist of not fewer than eleven members. The Chairman of the Board shall be the Chairman of the Executive Committee and the Governor of the Union shall be ex officio a member of the Executive Committee. Meetings of the Executive Committee shall be held at least once every two months and more frequently if the Executive Committee shall so decide.
5. The Governing Board shall hold an annual meeting and such other meetings as it may be desirable to convene. On request of member countries casting one-fourth of the votes the Chairman shall call a meeting of the Board for the purpose of considering any matters placed before it.

6. Net profits earned by the Union shall be distributed in the following manner:

(a) 50 per cent to reserves until the reserves are equal to 10 per cent of the aggregate quotas of the Union;

(b) 50 per cent to be divided each year among the members in proportion to their quotas.

XI. WITHDRAWAL AND EXPULSION FROM THE UNION

1. A country failing to meet its obligations to the Union may be suspended provided a majority of the member votes so decides. While under suspension the country shall be denied the privileges of membership but shall be subject to the same obligations as any other member of the Union. At the end of two years the country shall be automatically dropped from membership unless it has been restored to good standing by a majority of the member votes.

2. Any country which has been a net purchaser of foreign exchange from the Union may withdraw from the Union by giving notice and its withdrawal shall take effect one year from the date of such notice. During the interval between notice of withdrawal and the taking effect of the notice such country shall be subject to the same obligations as any other member of the Union.

3. Any country which has not been a net purchaser of foreign exchange from the Union may withdraw from the Union by giving notice and its withdrawal shall take effect 30 days from the date of such notice. During the interval between notice of withdrawal and the taking effect of notice such country shall be subject to the same obligations as any other member of the Union; except, however, that no country which has given notice of withdrawal shall be required to make loans to the Union under the provisions of paragraph II.2 above.

4. A country which is dropped or which withdraws from membership shall have returned to it an amount in its own currency equal to its contributed quota plus other obligations of the Union to the country and minus any sums owed by that country to the Union. The Union shall have 5 years in which to liquidate its obligation to such country.

XII. POLICIES OF MEMBER COUNTRIES

In addition to the obligations assumed under the preceding paragraphs, each member country shall undertake the following:

1. To maintain by appropriate action the exchange rates initially agreed with the Union on the currencies of other countries and not to alter exchange rates except under the provisions of paragraph IV.2 above, or with the consent of the Union and only to the extent and in the direction approved by the Union. Exchange rates of member countries may be permitted to fluctuate within a range not exceeding the spread fixed by the Union itself for its own purchases and sales of foreign exchange.

2. To abandon, as soon as the member country decides that conditions permit, all restrictions on foreign exchange transactions other than those required effectively to control capital movements with other member countries; and not to impose any additional restrictions, except for the purpose of controlling capital movements, without the approval of the Union.

Detailed provision regarding 2 – Abandonment of Exchange Control other than on Capital Movements

The Union may make representations to member countries that conditions are favourable for the abandonment or relaxation of foreign exchange restrictions other than those required effectively to control capital movements and each member country shall agree to give consideration to such representations.

3. To cooperate effectively with other member countries when such countries, with the approval of the Union, adopt or continue controls for the purpose of regulating international movements of capital.

Detailed provisions regarding 3 – Cooperation in enforcing Approved Exchange Controls on Capital Movements

Cooperation shall include, upon recommendation by the Union, measures that can appropriately be taken

(a) not to accept or permit acquisitions of deposits, securities or investments by nationals of any member country imposing restrictions on the export of capital except with the permission of the government of that country and the Union;

(b) to make available to the Union or to the government of any member country full information on all property in the form of deposits, securities and investments of the nationals of that country; and

(c) such other measures as the Union may recommend.

4. Not to enter into any new bilateral foreign exchange clearing arrangements nor engage in multiple currency practices except with the approval of the Union.

5. To give careful consideration to the views of the Union on any existing or proposed monetary or economic policy the effect of which would be to cause a serious disequilibrium in the balance of payments of the country adopting such policy or of other countries.

6. To furnish the Union with all information it needs for its operations and to furnish such reports as it may require in the forms and at the times requested by the Union.

7. To adopt appropriate legislation or decrees to carry out its undertakings to the Union and to facilitate the activities of the Union.

TELETYPE EX-2192

Ottawa, June 10, 1943

IMMEDIATE. Following for A.F.W. Plumtre from W.C. Clark, Begins: We have despatched today by special air mail diplomatic bag fifteen copies of strictly confidential Draft Proposals of Canadian Experts for an International Exchange Union⁶⁵. After Council tomorrow I will teletype or telephone you again advising you whether you can release the document as indicated herein. If I advise you affirmatively you should call on Mr. Harry White and leave with him several copies of this document, saying that we have accepted his suggestion that we put our comments on his Stabilization Fund proposals on paper and that in order to make them intelligible and show how they hang together we have put them into the form of an integral plan. You should tell him that the essential features of the proposal suggested in this document will form the basis of our comments during the discussion of the stabilization fund plan next week. You should then go on to say that we feel as a matter of courtesy that we should provide this document to the others who are going to be present at the meetings next week. As we understand the British are to be there, you will be providing them with a copy after you have seen Mr. White, and you should find out from him what others will be present at the meeting next week so that you may provide copies to them. After seeing White, I would suggest you hand or send two copies to Phillips or Robertson⁶⁶ for the United Kingdom, explaining our intentions about it. Then you might provide copies to the representatives of the other countries who White tells me are going to be present at next week's meeting, with a suitable explanation of our intentions. You should emphasize of course that the proposals are only tentative draft proposals of experts and have not been approved by the Government which is not committed to them in any way.

I am sending some additional copies of this document by regular diplomatic bag leaving today, but I am forwarding the first set by air mail in the hope that this will enable you to provide them to Mr. White and others on Friday. If there is any question that occurs to you about the matter, I would be glad if you would get in touch with me either by wire or by telephone.

⁶⁵ Le document 594, y compris la pièce jointe, fut publié avec quelques modifications par la Commission d'information en temps de guerre. INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE STABILIZATION

1. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE referred to the discussion of this subject at the previous meeting.

Canadian officials had now prepared specific proposals for presentation to representatives participating in the Washington discussions. These proposals would be laid before the War Committee, beforehand, if it were so desired.

2. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that, in view of the fact that the proposals would be presented in such a manner as to avoid any commitment on the part of the government, it would not be necessary to have them submitted to or examined by the War Committee.

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au Premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister

[Ottawa,] June 11, 1943

Mr. Malcolm MacDonald saw Dr. Clark and me this afternoon on instructions from his Government, who were very anxious that the draft proposals of the Canadian experts for an International Exchange Union should not be circulated to the officials taking part in the monetary talks which are being held in Washington next week. Lord Keynes had seen a preliminary draft of our scheme[†] and felt that if it were submitted for consideration the United States would refuse to examine the British scheme. The United Kingdom objected in particular to a number of points in our proposals and felt that if they were communicated to the Americans the latter might accept them and reject the United Kingdom alternatives. We were planning to have Plumtre give Mr. White of the United States Treasury an advance copy of our tentative plan today so that he could go over it before the meeting met. We also planned to give a copy at the same time to Sir Frederick Phillips, the United Kingdom Treasury Representative in Washington. In view of the importance the United Kingdom appeared to attach to their representations, we told the Legation in Washington to hold the draft until further instructions had been received. We told MacDonald that no decision could be taken in the matter of our going ahead with our expert plan until tomorrow.

We feel that if we hold up our plan, the discussions in Washington will be centred exclusively on the American proposals and probably degenerate into a not very profitable debate between the United States and the United Kingdom experts. The latter appear to be hopeful that they can persuade the United States to abandon certain essential features of the American plan. Our feeling is that this is most unlikely and that, while there is some chance of the United States accepting our proposals, there is none of their accepting the United Kingdom proposals. We also feel that the chances of their accepting our proposals would be greater if our scheme were put forward for consideration at an early stage rather than held over as the United Kingdom experts wish.

It is quite possible that Malcolm MacDonald will receive instructions tomorrow to raise the general question with you yourself.

MOST IMMEDIATE. Following for Robertson from Mackintosh⁶⁷, Begins: Saw Sir David Waley⁶⁸ with Snelling⁶⁹, Keynes out of town. As result of discussion, I recommend that formal presentation of Stabilization Union Plan and informal circulation beyond United States and United Kingdom be deferred until it is possible to make decision during and in the light of the developments of the Conference. United Kingdom fears the finality and finished quality (flattery) of our plan may prevent adequate discussion on their points. They would also like to be satisfied in conference on United States attitude before abandoning their position.

The two points of substance where they feel our proposals fall short are first, inability to sell any second currency to the funds for unitas⁷⁰ when control rules out market transactions and second, rigidity of exchange rates in which they feel that Clearing Union probably went beyond what they and Parliament are now willing to accept.

They hope for drafting committees after Conference and perhaps after fur-

I emphasised that if we deferred circulation we should be perfectly free to circulate draft at any time during Conference which we judged to be desirable.

I feel the whole question raised can best be decided after it is seen how the Conference develops and Phillips has put forward his case.

TELEGRAM 1059

Ottawa, June 19, 1943

SECRET. The United States Chargé d'Affaires has enquired, on instructions from Washington, whether there was any information the Canadian Government could give him about the Commonwealth conversations on commercial policy now taking place in London. He was assured that the talks were informal and exploratory and that no specific decisions or commitments were likely to develop out of them. They would cover the general field of international commercial policy and would it was hoped be a preparation for the wider discussions envisaged under Article 7 of the Lend-Lease Agreements and corresponding provisions of the Canadian-United States exchange of notes on international commercial policy. The elaborate system of intra-Commonwealth commercial agreements made preliminary Commonwealth discussions almost a prerequisite to progress in the general direction of freeing trade on which all our governments were agreed.

Mr. Clark had received a copy of the instructions on this general subject sent the United States Ambassador in London, in which Mr. Winant had been asked to maintain the closest possible liaison with the conferees and to suggest, if he thought it advisable, that the United States Government might designate an observer to be present at the Commonwealth talks. I shall be glad to learn whether he has in fact put forward this suggestion and how it has been received. Since the discussions in London will be very largely concerned with the general conditions under which international trade can be restored after the war and will not deal with the consequential revision of individual Commonwealth trade agreements, we cannot see any serious objection to the presence of a United States observer. In fact the presence of a United States representative at the present talks in London might, from the Canadian viewpoint, have advantages over the procedure contemplated in earlier Dominions Office telegrams on the subject from which it appeared that the United Kingdom had in mind initiating bilateral discussions with the United States after the conclusion of Commonwealth talks.

Dear Mr. Mackintosh,

I thought it might be helpful to you to send you a short summary of what took place at the currency discussions in Washington, June 15 to 18th. The meeting, at which eighteen countries were represented, had no specific objective other than an informal exchange of views between experts on the principal issues involved. Hence nothing concrete was decided at the meeting regarding the various plans or future procedure. The meeting was simply one stage in a series of informal expert discussions and as such constituted a useful opportunity to hear at first hand the views of the experts of the different countries on the main features of the proposals. Furthermore it provided a convenient occasion for letting the representatives of the various countries get off their chests what they have to say.

When we received your message copies of the Canadian plan had already been given to White and Phillips. White was evidently pleased that we had gone to the trouble of putting our ideas into the form of a plan. Phillips continued to advise against circulation and thought it most unwise to put our plan forward at this time. We agreed to follow your recommendation. However, during the evening before the meetings began White asked us for sixty copies for circulation among those attending. He explained that in drawing up his agenda he had referred to each of the three plans, including the Canadian, under each item listed for discussion. Under the circumstances it would have been awkward to delay and inadvisable to refuse his request. Consequently copies of the Canadian plan were distributed on a confidential basis at the beginning of the first meeting to all present. During the meetings the provisions of the Canadian plan were discussed alongside the relevant proposals in the C.U.⁷¹ and S.F.⁷²

White presented a revised version of S.F. The revised version contains a number of improvements on the technical level. The most notable changes from the previous draft are 1) increase in the proportion of the gold contribution to ⁷¹ Clearing Union.

⁷² Stabilization Fund.

50% of the country quotas; 2) choice of national currency or securities for remainder of quota and 3) a number of special provisions for occupied countries. There was pretty general opposition to the suggested increase in the gold contribution. The aggregate of quotas in the revised S.F. is the same as in the earlier draft, namely, at least five billion. However, White indicated privately that he is convinced that a larger fund will be necessary and he mentioned the figure of ten billion. Opie of the British delegation made a statement in favour of the Clearing Union overdraft approach which received support from Australia, Poland and one or two other European Allies. White made an extended reply stating that limitations on commitments were necessary and if that is the case there is no basic difference between the two methods of approach. The overdraft scheme would be misunderstood in the U.S. and consequently if agreement was ultimately to be reached it was necessary to take the S.F. as the basis of discussion.

Soon after our arrival in Washington we were confirmed in our belief that the British have not yet had their bilateral discussions with the Treasury. This, we believe was an important element in their attitude toward the meeting and in their opposition toward the circulation of our plan. Naturally the British wished to forestall any crystallization of the matter until they have had their day in court and have had an adequate chance to explain their point of view. Consequently in considering future procedure we felt strongly that the U.S.-U.K. bilateral discussions should be held at the earliest opportunity. Before any further progress can be made it is absolutely essential for the British and Americans to come to some understanding on the main features of the proposals and that the British should learn for themselves the limits imposed by practical and political considerations in the United States. We urged both parties to get on with the bilateral discussions and before we left we learned that they were to begin on June 22nd. The Russians have not yet had their bilateral discussions and we suggested likewise that these be held as early as possible.

The Dutch and Belgians were anxious to establish a drafting committee in order to detach the national labels and to hasten the progress of the development of an acceptable plan. We felt that it was too early for this and thought that the British and Russian bilateral discussions should be gotten over first. Furthermore White thought that it would be inappropriate for a drafting committee to come out of an informal meeting which was not representative of all the United Nations. White also wished to have more time to assess the practical and political possibilities in the United States. White suggested to us privately that after the British and Russian bilateral discussions are over it might be possible to get together a small group who would try their hand at a draft. This small group, which might consist of the British, the Americans, ourselves and one or two others would proceed informally and see how far they could go in drawing up an agreed draft. We agreed that this would be the best course.

Yours sincerely,

JOHN J. DEUTSCH

Your telegram No. 1059 of June 19th, conversations on commercial policy.

I have raised the question of a United States observer with the United Kingdom authorities, who have handed me the following note on the subject, Begins:

On the 21st June the United States Ambassador approached the Foreign Secretary, on instructions from the State Department, asking to be kept closely and currently informed on the talks on commercial policy which it was understood were taking place in London. The Ambassador added that the State Department had given him authority to appoint an observer to the talks who would be either Mr. Riefler or Mr. Penrose. In reply it was suggested to the Ambassador that the Embassy should get in touch with the Board of Trade in the matter. The Board of Trade have not yet received any enquiry from the Embassy. Should they do so, it is proposed to invite the Embassy's attention, in a friendly way, to the explanation already given to the United States Government regarding the exploratory and non-committal talks now proceeding with Dominion experts (see Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 353)[†] and to say that it would appear from the State Department's enquiry as if they had misunderstood the character of these talks. There are many questions of commercial policy, some arising out of Article 7, which affect the relations between the different parts of the British Commonwealth and require discussion between them as a preliminary to discussion on any wider basis. The informal and exploratory talks now proceeding are thus of a quasi-domestic character.

2. It is expected that the talks will terminate at the end of this week. Ends.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Your telegram No. 1411 of June 24th. Discussions on commercial policy. While undoubtedly there are considerations regarding the place of Commonwealth preferences in post-war commercial policy which require discussion by the Commonwealth countries alone, we are somewhat concerned over explanations which the Board of Trade intends to give to the United States Embassy if they are approached on the subject of a United States observer at these discussions. We have not received since the talks began any report on their scope and progress but our understanding has been that matters of general policy apart from Commonwealth preferences would be the central subject. In any case we do not like the description of the talks as “of a quasi-domestic character”, and suggest that such a description should, if possible, be eliminated from any reply.

Following from McKinnon, Begins: Your telegram No. 1102 of June 25th, post-war commercial policy.

We are of opinion it would be highly undesirable for us to inform Riefler or Penrose of course and content of discussions. In view of the emphasis on confidential nature of these, it would be necessary for us to apprise other participants of our intentions to inform the United States. Moreover, as meetings are being held in this country, and enquiry respecting discussions here have been addressed to United Kingdom authorities, it would seem appropriate that they should reply or communicate desired information⁷³. SECRET

Ottawa, July 16, 1943

I INTRODUCTION

1. The discussions were held at the invitation of the Government of the United Kingdom in order that officials of the Governments of the British Commonwealth might consider tentative proposals to be made by the United Kingdom to the United States as set out in Dominions Office Circular Telegrams 234-236⁷⁵. The talks were informal, and it was clearly understood that the views expressed by individual participants were in no way to be taken as representing the views of their Governments. The meetings were held at the War Cabinet Offices under the chairmanship of Sir Arnold Overton.

2. Mr. P. Liesching and Mr. J. E. Meade of the Board of Trade were the principal expositors of the United Kingdom proposals and together with Sir Arnold Overton carried the burden of the discussion for the United Kingdom. There were also present at most or all the meetings the following United Kingdom officials:

Mr. R. M. Nowell and Mr. R. J. Shackle, of the Board of Trade;
Mr. A. Mullins and Mr. A. M. Wiseman, of the Department of Overseas Trade;
Sir David Waley, of the Treasury;
Mr. P. A. Clutterbuck and Mr. S. L. Holmes of the Dominions Office;
Sir William Croft, of the India Office;
Mr. N. B. Ronald, of the Foreign Office;
Sir Alfred Hurst, of the Reconstruction Secretariat;
Mr. A. R. Manktelow, of the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries;
Sir Frederick Leith-Ross, Chief Economic Adviser;
Sir Henry L. French, of the Ministry of Food;
Mr. G. L. M. Clauson, of the Colonial Office;
Mr. A. W. Snelling, of the Dominions Office and Miss S. P. Barlow of the Board of Trade who acted jointly as secretaries.

3. Australia was represented by Dr. H. C. Coombs and Mr. J. Fletcher, and, from the fifth meeting on, by Mr. E. McCarthy. Mr. R. M. Campbell of the High ⁷⁴ Les représentants étaient J.S. Macdonald, W.A. Mackintosh, H.B. McKinnon, président, Commission des tarifs, ministère des Finances, et Y. Lamontagne, directeur, section des traités commerciaux, ministère du Commerce. Les discussions ont eu lieu entre le 15 et le 30 juin.

⁷⁴ The representatives were J.S. Macdonald, W.A. Mackintosh, H.B. McKinnon, Chairman, Tariff Board, Department of Finance, and Y. Lamontagne, Director, Commercial Treaty Section, Department of Trade and Commerce. The discussions were held between June 15 and 30.

Commissioner's Office in London represented New Zealand, and was assisted by Professor A. G. B. Fisher of Chatham House, who had been retained by the New Zealand Government for the discussions. South Africa was represented by a large delegation headed by Dr. J. E. Holloway. It included in addition Dr. H. J. Van Eck, Mr. F. J. du Toit, Mr. B. W. Kirby, Mr. R. Jones, Mr. D. G. Malan, and Dr. A. J. Beyleveld. India was represented by Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, assisted by Mr. B. Lall and Mr. E. M. Jenkins. Mr. W. C. Robertson representing Southern Rhodesia attended as an observer.

4. Eleven full meetings and one meeting of the heads of delegations were held. All of these were devoted to the discussion of post-war commercial policy and specifically to the proposals set out in the draft aide-mémoire circulated by the Government of the United Kingdom. The discussions were, on the whole, frank and friendly throughout. In the open meetings, they were restricted by the failure of the United Kingdom representatives to give full introductory expositions of the several proposals made. The unwillingness of the United Kingdom over the past year or more to facilitate the negotiation of an Australia-United States trade agreement occasioned a degree of tension between the two delegations which resulted in discussion at times being more guarded and less informal than might have been desired.

II DOCUMENTATION

5. The basis and the course of the discussions are set out in five documents which are available for examination:

(a) Dominions Office Circular Telegrams Nos. 234-236. The first of these set out the intention of the United Kingdom to take the initiative in proposing to the United States the direction which discussions on post-war commercial policy under Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement should take. The second is a draft aide-mémoire outlining certain principles which the United Kingdom would be prepared to accept. The third[†] consists of supplementary instructions to Lord Halifax pointing out that the tentative proposals are to be considered as part of and subject to arrangements in other economic and in politico-strategic fields, and, further, that the proposals represent broadly the views of the United Kingdom as to what they would propose in the light of the interests of many nations and what they think there is likelihood of other nations accepting.

(b) An outline[†] to illustrate the draft aide-mémoire. This was put forward at the conference as an illustration of how the principles proposed might be worked out. The United Kingdom is not committed in any way to its details.

(c) The minutes of the discussions.[†]

(d) Summary of discussions[†] prepared after the completion of the discussions on the draft aide-mémoire as a summary record of the points of view put forward. Of this, the final draft is not available at the time of writing.

(e) Revised draft aide-mémoire[†] in which certain paragraphs were elaborated and clarified.

III THE COURSE OF THE DISCUSSIONS

6. After a general statement by Sir Arnold Overton in which he stressed the informal and non-committal character of the discussions, Mr. P. Liesching made a statement on the attitude of the United Kingdom to Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement. They welcomed both principles of Article VII, viz., general expansion of production, consumption and economic activity and reduction of trade barriers and discrimination. He pointed out that some progress had been made with the Clearing Union proposal and with relief arrangements and that the results of the Food Conference had been encouraging. They attached great importance to taking the initiative in the field of commercial policy as a wrong start might lead to very unhappy results. Three considerations led them to this conclusion: (a) Few in the United States appeared to appreciate the scope of the measures which would be required. Indeed, the renewal of the Trade Agreements Act was referred to in the United States as "a major contribution". (b) Bilateral agreements were too slow and the generalization of benefits under the most-favoured-nation clause without concessions by third countries made it difficult for a country with such wide trading interests as the United Kingdom to go very far along these lines. (c) There might be a tendency for the United States to demand a ruthless cutting of preferences while offering very inadequate concessions in return.

7. In response to a request for a general statement of the attitude of each delegation to Article VII, Mr. McKinnon made a statement which is reported verbatim in the minutes. He made three main points: (a) The two aims of Article VII, expansion of production, consumption and employment and the reduction of trade barriers should be pursued as complementary, not alternative, aims. Neither can be fully achieved without the other. (b) Reduction of trade barriers commensurate with the language of Article VII cannot be accomplished by a succession of bilateral agreements. The method is too slow and the further power of the President too limited. (c) It is essential that consideration of the reduction of preferences should not at any time be divorced from consideration of the reduction of high tariffs and other impediments to trade. For these reasons, he stated that he was prepared to encourage and support, within the limitations of the discussion, an approach to the United States on the lines proposed.

8. Dr. Coombs, for Australia, attached very great importance to the positive (expansionist) aims of Article VII and implied that agreement on these should precede agreement on reduction of trade barriers. He advocated a conference, like the Food Conference, on problems of full employment. (Subsequently, in conversation, he modified this to a consultation of experts). With reference to trade, he recognized the value of a broader approach but insisted that Australia had much to gain by a bilateral agreement with the United States and suggested that the multilateral approach might be more acceptable after all parts of the Commonwealth had more nearly exhausted the possibilities of the United States Trade Agreements Act. The United States would then see the inadequacy of the trade agreements approach.

9. Mr. Campbell, for New Zealand, raised a number of queries but stated that the New Zealand Government would probably favour the imposition of an upper limit on tariffs and that he was in general agreement with the idea of a commercial code. He asked whether consideration had been given to the possibility that the United Kingdom and the Dominions might abolish preferences as a gesture of goodwill without asking any quid pro quo.

10. Dr. Holloway, for South Africa, made a long and not always relevant statement, in which he rightly complained of his difficulty in avoiding a network of platitudes. His substantive statements were that he preferred the bilateral as the first approach to the problem and that a moderate ceiling on tariffs would be desirable but that step by step reductions were not equally appropriate to all countries.

11. In speaking for India, Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar avoided an explicit statement of his attitude but pointed out India's need for industrialization and the limited nature of India's protective tariff system. He did say that India would not be able to agree to proposals which constituted an impediment to a reasonable measure of industrialization.

12. Mr. Clauson, speaking for the Colonial Office, pointed out that a careful promotion of industrialization was a necessary and desirable part of colonial policy.

13. The subsequent discussions did not follow an orderly pattern, but in the main they were directed to the individual paragraphs of the aide-mémoire, supplemented by the illustrative outline. The broad lines of the proposal as elaborated and explained are as follows:

A multilateral convention of commerce should be negotiated, establishing a Commercial Union and embodying a commercial code. To this, the adherence of all friendly countries would be invited and that of present enemy countries might be required. The benefits of the conventions would be extended only to members though there was some question as to whether a member should be forced to refuse most-favoured-nation treatment to non-members. The convention would provide: (a) that all protective tariffs should be reduced by y per cent of their level at the outbreak of war provided that no duty should remain above x per cent ad valorem and no duty need be reduced below 10 per cent ad valorem. This would not affect revenue duties as such and would be subject to exception, approved by the Commercial Union in consultation with an international political authority, in the case of industries necessary on grounds of security; (b) that preferential margins should be reduced by z per cent but need not be reduced below 5 per cent ad valorem and that new preferences in existing preferential areas and new preferential areas could be established only with the approval of the Commercial Union. (c) That export subsidies or state trading which result in the sale of goods in foreign markets at prices lower than those corresponding to the prices charged in the home market should be forbidden but that over and beyond the protection permissible within the tariff ceiling, countries should be free to encourage home production by direct subsidies. (d) For a two-year period after the war, governments should be free to use quantitative import restrictions subject to consultation with countries which consider they are injured thereby and to conciliation by the Commercial Union. At the end of two years, countries would be obligated to remove import restrictions progressively over a three-year period except—

- (i) in respect of obligations of international commodity agreements approved by the Commercial Union;
 - (ii) on ground of balance of payments difficulties, as determined by some agreed objective test.
 - (iii) subject to the approval of the Commercial Union in consultation with a political international authority, for the protection of industries necessary to security.
- (e) Subject to the above, all arrangements should be on a non-discriminatory basis as defined in the commercial code. (f) State trading should be governed by rules of non-discrimination along the lines laid down in the United States Trade Agreements. (g) Provision should also be made for a quasi-judicial fact-finding body, under the Union, to which aggrieved states might appeal on matters of discrimination or non-compliance with the code. Each aggrieved country would be free to protect itself pending decision of the case.

14. In general, we strongly supported these proposals and made a number of suggestions in accordance with the report of the Economic Advisory Committee.⁷⁶ Many of the questions raised in that report were answered by the fuller explanations given during the discussions. Throughout, we insisted on the necessity of considering reduction of preferences as part of a general plan to reduce trade barriers. We argued that the interlocking of preferential arrangements made multilateral action the only feasible one in reality and that by accepting the bilateral form we should greatly weaken our position by frittering away our bargaining power vis-à-vis the United States. We questioned the exception, in respect of both the tariff ceiling and the quantitative import restrictions, in favour of industries necessary to national security, though we were willing to accept it if it were strictly safeguarded. We argued against the proposal to leave subsidies on home production unrestricted both because it would provide a method of unrestricted protection and because it would appear to the United States as a protective device more adapted to other countries than to their own. We urged that it would be necessary that all adherents to the convention assure each other of most-favoured-nation treatment, and urged, though not strongly, that it should be refused to non-members. We also suggested that it might be considered whether some limited exception to the tariff ceiling should not be made for recognized infant industries.

15. The attitude of the Australian delegation was broadly opposed to the whole aide-mémoire⁷⁷ though they opposed it in detail rather than as a whole and obviously did not want to find themselves in isolation. It appeared that their opposition arose from four circumstances: (a) Australia has a relatively high tariff and a tariff ceiling would require her to reduce it; (b) They think it possible to conclude a trade agreement with the United States giving them a 50 per cent reduction in the duty on wool; (c) They wish to be free to protect new secondary industries to which they look for post-war employment; (d) They contemplate reliance on import quotas in case of exchange difficulties. The whole discussion was coloured by differences which had arisen between the Australians and the United Kingdom over the desire of the Australians to push through their agreement with the United States and an unwillingness of the United Kingdom to facilitate this. The whole argument of the Australians was directed to minimizing the importance of the multilateral approach, urging the need for prior assurance on full employment policies and leaving the way open for their own bilateral negotiations.

⁷⁷ The following note was written on the original, above the word aide-mémoire:

16. The position of the South African delegation was not easy to define. They wished to retain freedom of action on quantitative restrictions because of their peculiar arrangements on steel. They wished freedom to protect new industries because of their wasting resources. They were sceptical of the possibilities of defining a tariff ceiling. They also were interested in pursuing their bilateral negotiations. On the other hand, they repeatedly urged that we proceed to the detailed drafting of a commercial code and seemed anxious that a precise and agreed document should result from the discussions. It was chiefly to meet their request for drafted results that the "summary of discussions" was prepared.

17. New Zealand did not take a definite position, but Mr. Campbell generally favoured the tariff ceiling, and seemed quite unconcerned about the problem of preferences. He asked a large number of leading and not always relevant questions.

18. Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar, for India, was less opposed to the proposal than might have been expected. He desired some greater latitude for industrialization in agricultural countries, while disclaiming interest in excessive tariffs. He opposed the home-production subsidy proposal. On the other hand, he favoured the multilateral approach and was very effective in criticizing the Australian position.

19. One session was devoted to the discussion of the relation of current bilateral discussion to the United Kingdom proposal. The Australian and United Kingdom representatives were the chief contributors. Australia wished to go ahead without regard to the multilateral approach. The United Kingdom obviously preferred that the Australian negotiations be dropped for the time being. There was a good deal of tension between the two groups. The United Kingdom insisted that bilateral negotiations were of little interest to them and could do little to ease their balance of payments problem, which was a problem of the whole sterling area. It was ultimately taken as the sense of the discussion that Australia would allow a reasonable interval for the United Kingdom to make its approach and discover the reactions of the United States, but that, on the other hand, the United Kingdom would not hold up the Australian negotiations indefinitely.

20. From outside discussions, we ascertained some significant information: (a) The aide-mémoire has been approved by War Cabinet and there was, therefore, a good deal of reluctance to alter the draft in any way. There is, within the Government, strong opposition to this approach, particularly in the Ministry of Agriculture where a continuation of import control and the present system of planned production programs is strongly favoured. It seemed clear, however, that the Treasury and the Board of Trade were strong in support of the proposed approach to the United States and that there was a definite Government commitment to push it vigorously; (b) The British support of a multilateral convention seems to be influenced a great deal by the necessity they will be under of expanding exports in many countries, particularly on the continent of Europe. A broad agreement with the United States and the generalization of treaty rates would leave them without bargaining weapons for dealing with other countries. Their proposal that ex-enemy countries might be compelled to adhere to the proposed convention is probably very important to them; (c) Overton and Liesching indicated that they attached great importance to taking the initiative and that, if the United States were willing, they were prepared to go ahead with their proposal, even though some parts of the Empire such as Australia and South Africa should decide to stay out. They professed to consider Canada's attitude of decisive importance and Liesching expressed the hope that, if the United States would agree to some exploration at the expert level, the first discussions should include United Kingdom, United States and Canada.

IV CONCLUSIONS

21. On the final day of the discussions, the United Kingdom put forward certain amendments to the draft aide-mémoire designed to take account of some of the suggestions made during the discussions. The paragraphs as amended follow, with amendments by addition or substitution underlined and those by omission in double brackets:

(1) An international commercial policy capable of helping towards the solution of the post-war economic and political problems would have to be accompanied by international policies conducive to a high level of employment, production and consumption; to improved standards of living; and, in general, to an expansive world economy. It requires some system for the free convertibility of currencies for trading purposes. Further, an essential condition of success is the development of effective political and strategic plans for the achievement of security.

(2) The policy should also be based on the assumption of the multilateral commercial agreement embracing as many countries as possible. As Great Britain is compelled to rely on imports for a large proportion of its food and raw materials, some modus for exporting an equivalent amount is absolutely essential. Mere bilateral agreements, however advantageous, cannot meet the situation, whereas a multilateral agreement laying down certain principles for the freer exchange of commodities can be of great benefit. The multilateral convention would not, of course, exclude supplementary bilateral agreements within the framework of the multilateral agreement.

(4) We would accept a moderate ceiling for tariffs for incorporation in a multilateral agreement. The question should be considered whether special provisions could be devised to meet, on a reasonable scale, the temporary needs of infant industries.

(5) We should be prepared to make all our arrangements, including particularly quantitative restriction of imports, on a basis of mutual non-discrimination. Preferences (which we do not regard as discriminatory in a strict sense of the word) are dealt with below.

(6) Any multilateral commercial arrangement should be compatible with the conduct of external trade by the State or by State-sponsored organizations, as well as by private enterprise. But it would be desirable that forms of trading promoted by State action should be conducted in accordance with a code to be agreed.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 467

London, July 29, 1943

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Post-war Commercial Policy.

We have derived great benefit from recent informal exploratory and non-committal exchange of views between our experts and Dominion delegations, and much appreciate action of Dominion Governments in sparing their officials for this purpose. We have now reviewed, in the light of these discussions, the whole question of the best immediate procedure for opening the matter with the United States and following represents method of approach which we now feel would be best calculated to further general aim we have in view.

2. As a result of points made by Dominion delegates, the draft aide-mémoire, contained in my telegram Circular D. 235, has been amended in certain respects and text as now revised is contained in my immediately following telegram. We have come to conclusion, however, that instead of presenting aide-mémoire in these terms forthwith as originally contemplated, it would be preferable to put it forward in the context of a broader approach to United States Government on the general programme under Article 7 as a whole. Recent indications from Washington suggest that the time is now ripe for such a move. This would have many advantages from our standpoint and we have reason to believe that the United States Government would welcome an initiative on our part which would assist them to clarify their ideas on the whole field of international economic relations and to draw up an orderly programme of discussion covering all the topics arising under Article 7, instead of leaving them to be dealt with piecemeal as hitherto. Further, by making such approach now, we should be able to take advantage of the favourable atmosphere created by the successful outcome of the Food Conference.

3. We accordingly propose to make very early approach to United States Government in following sense, if His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington concurs, Begins:

Having now been able to carry further our examination of the various topics, we feel that the moment has come to initiate with the United States Government informal and exploratory talks on the whole field covered by Article 7, and that it is important for these talks to start without delay. We see great advantages in handling the essentially interrelated matters covered by Article 7 as a coherent whole. We would accordingly propose, if the United States Government sees no objection, to send to Washington, not later than the first half of September, a strong delegation of officials, led by a Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, which would be capable of dealing with all these subjects, including monetary policy, international investment, the regulation of primary products and commercial policy. We suggest that the primary object of such talks should be to obtain broad United States-United Kingdom agreement on an orderly agenda for the discussion of Article 7. We continue, as in the past, to regard with the greatest importance the attainment of prior agreement on such matters between our two Governments before they are discussed in a wide international field. If this suggestion is agreeable to the United States Government, we would proceed to nominate our delegation forthwith. Ends.

4. Under this procedure, which we hope will be acceptable to United States Government, development of our ideas on post-war commercial policy would be left until our delegation reaches Washington. This would have great advantage that our proposals could then be seen and studied in their proper perspective as an essential feature in the general solution of the problems covered by Article 7, and full weight would be given to essential interdependence of those problems. Intention would be that when dealing in these discussions with commercial policy, our delegates would be in a position to open their conversations with the United States authorities on the lines of the revised draft aide-mémoire. Concurrently they should be able to carry forward talks on monetary policy, international investment and regulation of primary products as a preliminary to broader international discussion, and also perhaps explore any other means of working towards the general objectives of maintenance of production and full employment.

5. We feel confident that such an exchange of views should do much to clear the air and also to avoid dangers which might arise from launching of Conferences on difficult and controversial topics without any agreed programme or adequate preparation. We will telegraph further as soon as we are able to say whether United States agree to our suggestion for despatch of delegation.

6. As regards commercial policy in particular, we appreciate that in the case of certain Dominions, negotiation of bilateral agreements with the United States under the limited powers of the Trade Agreements Act might offer substantial practical advantages, even though on a longer view much more comprehensive arrangements will be needed. At the same time we consider it of the utmost importance to bring home to United States Government circles, at this juncture, that a programme of bilateral agreements will fall far short of the necessities of the case, if real progress is to be made under Article 7, and we believe that Dominion Governments will share this view. Our proposals are not, in fact, incompatible with the negotiation of such agreements as an interim measure, if this should be regarded as desirable as a first step towards a wider goal. Position as we see it is that any suggestion for the resumption of bilateral negotiations if made to the United States before we had had an opportunity of developing to them the broader approach, would be bound to prejudice the reception of our more far-reaching proposals; on the other hand care must be taken so to develop our proposals as to leave room for resumption of the limited bilateral trade discussions, if this should prove in common interest, concurrently with exploration of wider conception of a multilateral commercial convention. We will keep these considerations very much in mind in developing the multilateral idea. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 468

London, July 29, 1943

SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram, paragraph 2. Following is revised text of aide-mémoire, Begins: As has been stated on many occasions, His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom favours a commercial policy designed to promote general economic expansion and action directed towards the removal of the obstacles to international trade, and is especially desirous to cooperate with the Government of the United States in joint endeavour to promote these aims. While, during the transitional period immediately after the war when we are seeking to restore our balance of trade, we may have to retain some special measures of control, we hope that we and other countries will be able to emerge from this stage without undue delay. It is with this in mind, and as a contribution to the conversations to which we are committed under Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement, that His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom submits for consideration certain points which form a practical approach to this problem, and which might prove suitable for discussion among the United Nations. It will be seen that the ground covered is somewhat wider than that which would be relevant to discussion of a normal bilateral trade agreement. This is not because His Majesty's Government is unmindful of the importance of the method of bilateral trade agreements or of the extent to which this method has already contributed to clearance of the channels of trade, but rather because it is felt that there are certain problems which are less susceptible to treatment in this manner, which nevertheless deserve consideration in point of view which Article VII invites us to take. The following are points which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom wish to present:

(i) An international commercial policy capable of helping towards the solution of the post-war economic and political problems would have to be accompanied by international policies conducive to a high level of employment, production and consumption; to improved standards of living; and in general to an expansive world economy. This requires some system for free convertibility of currencies for trading purposes. Further, an essential condition of success is development of effective political and strategical plans for achievement of security.

(ii) The policy should also be based on the assumption that a multilateral commercial agreement embraces as many countries as possible. As Great Britain is compelled to rely on imports for a large proportion of her food and raw materials, it is essential that she should be enabled to pay for these imports by means of exports. Bilateral agreements by themselves, however advantageous, cannot in our view fully meet the need, either of our own or of general situation; whereas a multilateral agreement, laying down certain principles for the freer exchange of commodities, can be of great benefit; the multilateral convention would not, of course, exclude supplementary bilateral agreements within the framework of multilateral agreement.

(iii) The United Kingdom, both by tradition and by experience, regards an increased freedom of trade as being in the interests of general world economy. We shall join in any movement to secure it and, when it comes down to practice, we should have every motive to encourage it, both from our own point of view and on account of the general international benefit. Our sympathy is entirely with those who are seeking to remove barriers to trade. Any qualifications we may have to make will be due to special difficulties of the immediate post-war period and the present uncertainty as to what will in fact lie within our power and that of other countries.

(iv) We would accept an upper limit of moderate height for tariffs for incorporation in a multilateral agreement. The question should [be] considered whether special provisions could be devised to meet, on a reasonable scale, the temporary needs of infant industries.

(v) We should be prepared to make all our arrangements, including particularly quantitative restriction of imports, on a basis of mutual non-discrimination. Preferences are dealt with below in (vi).

(vi) Quite apart from our own position, a general plan should leave room for special arrangements within political and geographical groups, since these are likely to be asked for and could be properly conceded in many cases. As part of a comprehensive scheme to betterment of the trade of the world as a whole, we should be prepared to play our full part in any general scheme for reducing preferences.

(vii) We consider that the quantitative regulation of imports should not ordinarily be employed for the primary purpose of protecting home industries, but rather regarded as a mechanism appropriate and useful for special purposes, including, among others, the safeguarding of a country's balance of payments. We suggest that common agreement might be reached concerning a more or less automatic and objective test of the conditions under which such action should be permissible; for example, it might be found that the statistics resulting from the creation of an international monetary authority could be used for this purpose.

(viii) We should be prepared to agree to measures designed to prevent export subsidies.

(ix) Any multilateral commercial arrangement should be compatible with conduct of external trade by the State, or by State (group corrupt) sponsored organization; as well as by private enterprise. But it would be desirable that form of trading promoted by State action should be conducted in accordance with a code to be agreed.

(x) We believe that these points could best be covered by the formulation of a general commercial code to which all countries would be invited to subscribe. Ends.

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, August 2, 1943

I have read with interest and much concern Circular D.467 of July 29 from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs and in an accompanying letter[†] dealing with the proposed conference on post-war air transport I have made some personal observations which I shall not repeat here.
