In the spring of 1941, after eighteen months of war, the Canadian Government found that, in spite of the shipment of gold, the sale of foreign assets and of Canadian securities abroad, the ban on pleasure travel in the United States and the prohibition or reduction of imports of many commodities under the Foreign Exchange Conservation Act, it had placed orders for war materials in the United States for delivery during the next twelve months two or three hundred million dollars in excess of its capacity to pay, without borrowing abroad. In these circumstances the United States, under the Hyde Park Agreement of April 20th, 1941, agreed to purchase Canadian goods to a value of between two and three hundred million dollars in order to permit Canada to pay for these materials. This arrangement has apparently, by tacit consent, continued to operate and by the end of 1942 expenditures under it had reached three hundred and fifty million dollars. Presumably Canadian purchases in the meantime gradually dropped off and United States exchange began to accumulate.

It appears that there is an interdepartmental group of officials in Washington, of which Dr. White is a member, that has been concerning itself with the reserves of gold and United States dollars which are to be held by Canada, the United Kingdom and others of the United Nations. From the United States point of view it would, of course, be difficult to justify the maintenance of their policy of placing orders here, particularly if these orders are more or less artificial, if we continue to accumulate considerable quantities of United States exchange.

In January of this year Dr. Clark proposed directly to Dr. White that the Canadian reserve of gold and United States dollars should not be allowed to exceed $430,000,000 nor to fall below $400,000,000. (The reserve at the outbreak of the war was $390,000,000). The Committee agreed that the Canadian reserve shall not fall below $300,000,000 nor rise above $350,000,000 and that net sales of Canadian securities in the United States may be used for the reduction of Canadian indebtedness in the United States.

It must be emphasized that this is a very sketchy outline of the position as no record of the arrangement has been communicated to this Department and we have only fragmentary accounts of the discussions held and conclusions reached.

Following our discussion on Thursday I outlined our difficulties to Mr. Deutsch and asked him to look up any teletype messages that may have been exchanged on the subject, get in touch with Dr. Mackintosh and any other Finance Department officials who have special knowledge of the arrangement and prepare a memorandum setting forth its terms and analysing it in sufficient detail to enable officials of this Department, and of the Canadian Legation in Washington, to form a clear understanding of its general purpose and how it works in practice. I have asked him to proceed with it as rapidly as possible as we have an immediate problem in deciding what attitude should be adopted on a number of important questions involving exports which would produce United States dollars or gold. In addition, of course, there is the broader question, which might be considered also, of deciding whether or not it would be worth examining this arrangement and its implications in the light of our foreign policy generally. Some aspects of the arrangement appear to involve such fundamental issues as equality of sacrifice — seeing that we continue to subject ourselves to restrictions such as a ban on imports and on travel which Americans do not impose on themselves and that while we have paid off our indebtedness to the United Kingdom we refrain from a similar policy with respect to the United States. As war orders in the United States are rapidly falling off and questions of commercial exports are again coming to be considered, the time may have come for a re-appraisal of the position. My suggestion, in any case, would be that the best course to follow would be to defer our meeting until Mr. Deutsch's memorandum is complete when it could be used as a basis for discussion.

[Ottawa,] September 25, 1943

Under the arrangements negotiated with the United States Treasury in February last, the United States agreed to take steps to see that Canadian holdings of gold and United States funds did not fall much below $300,000,000, on the understanding we would take steps to see that these holdings did not exceed $350,000,000, and that we would maintain our existing exchange controls and restrictions. In the course of the year our United States exchange position has grown steadily stronger and we now have a very sizeable accumulation of United States funds in excess of the upper limit of $350,000,000 contemplated in the original Treasury arrangement. The additional receipts of United States funds which have swollen our holdings are, in large part, the proceeds of deliveries to the United States of munitions and equipment ordered from War Supplies Limited by the United States Government for Lend-Leasing to the United Kingdom and other parts of the British Commonwealth. The Administration in Washington has always been worried lest it be criticized for buying goods from one part of the Commonwealth to give away to other parts of the Commonwealth. They were willing, under the Hyde Park Agreement, to place war orders in Canada to meet their own requirements and for Lend-Leasing to other countries up to the value required to match our war requirements of United States funds. They were unwilling, however, to place orders here which would enable us to put up United States funds while they were giving assistance to other Allies under Lease-Lend. This was the reason for their stipulation that our holdings of United States funds should not be allowed to go above a certain figure. Their reason for asking us to maintain our existing exchange control regulations was similar, i.e., they were worried about the political consequences of the United States Government spending in Canada on a scale which would, for example, have enabled the Canadian Government to relax the prohibition on pleasure travel.

As a consequence of these arrangements with the United States and of our undertaking to meet the Canadian dollar requirements of the sterling area, we are now in a rather peculiar financial position. One aspect of this position was explained in the note I gave you the other day[†] about some of the problems of export policy with which we are confronted, e.g., we receive no increment to our national income from additional export sales either for United States dollars or for sterling.

Another very important aspect of the present position directly concerns our relations with the United States. In the ordinary course, an easing of our exchange position would enable us to relax or remove the emergency restrictions which were necessary to preserve our exchange position under the financial strains of the first three years of the war, e.g., we could think about removing travel restrictions, rescinding import prohibitions or removing the War Exchange Tax of 10 per cent ad valorem, which is now levied on all imports from outside the sterling area. Under the arrangement with the United States Treasury, however, we cannot take any of these measures until after consultation with them. I explained the financial relations between our countries in general terms to Mr. Atherton last week before he went to Washington, stressing the damaging effects on long term Canadian-American relations of the indefinite continuance of restrictive measures which we had had to take to his country's hurt, but which we could not now undo without his country's concurrence, and suggested to him that there was perhaps a broader American interest in our early removal of the War Exchange Tax and import prohibitions or relaxation of travel regulations than the purely financial considerations which had led the United States Treasury to insist on our retaining these restrictive measures. The longer the import restrictions were in force the harder it would be to remove them because, inevitably, and in spite of all our protestations about their temporary character, they would become assimilated to ordinary tariffs in the minds of firms and individuals benefitting from the incidental protection which they gave. I reminded him of the difficulties we had both had in removing the 3 per cent Special Excise Tax, and thought it likely that the 10 per cent War Exchange Tax would be just as hard to get rid of if it was permitted to operate after the emergency conditions which had made its imposition necessary had ceased to exist.

The travel restrictions were in rather a different case. Neither Canada nor the United States wished to encourage any kind of pleasure travel under war conditions, but there was now no more mischief in north-south travel than in east-west travel, which both countries permitted, though under increasing restrictions and discouragements. I did not think we should restore "pleasure travel" as such, but I thought we might work out an overall policy of discouraging unnecessary travel on scarce rail and bus facilities, etc., which would supersede the specific border restrictions on travel which Canada had originally put on to conserve United States exchange. I told him that we were worried about the problem of enforcing restrictions which no longer had behind them the great sanction of public opinion, which had helped to make them operative in the first phase. We did not like having laws on the statute books that were not enforced, but at the same time found it increasingly difficult to justify the oppressive and exemplary measures which any serious attempt at enforcement would require. Our position in enforcing the travel restrictions in the border cities was alarmingly like the United States position in the years immediately preceding the repeal of prohibition. This was a special reason why we would like to have the travel regulations pretty thoroughly revised.

Mr. Atherton, on his return from Washington today, told me that he had had an opportunity of discussing the points I had made in a general way with officials of the Department of State and had found them very receptive. It was a situation, however, which they would have to examine or explore with the United States Treasury. This they proposed to do, and he hoped to give me an informal, preliminary indication of the United States attitude toward the whole question within the next few weeks.¹⁵⁴

WASHINGTON, D.C., ON JANUARY 30TH AND 31ST, 1942

The next item discussed was possible arrangements for continued utilization of the fur seal resources of the Pribilof Islands. Representatives of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service indicated that plans were being made to take seals on the Pribilof Islands as usual and that the chief problem was to determine the scale of possible operations in comparison with former years. The abnormally large take in 1941 was mentioned, but difficulties likely to affect operations in the coming summer were said to involve increased labour costs, transportation, accommodations for personnel and supplies, and the problem of military protection for the Pribilof Islands.

Mr. Sturgeon called the meeting's attention to the need for a new agreement between the United States and Canada, to replace the expired Convention of 1911¹⁵⁵, and to make at least temporary provision for the taking and disposition of seals on the Pribilof Islands. It was recognized that the share of seal skins formerly going to Japan may now be subject to division between Canada and the United States, and there was in conclusion discussion of a basis for the division. It was mentioned that the Soviet Union had not received any share of the skins under the expired agreement, and it seemed to be the consensus of opinion, therefore, that the situation might be dealt with by means of a simple form of agreement between Canada and the United States.

For the purpose of tentative discussion, Mr. Bevans of the Treaty Division, Department of State, supplied a draft fur seal agreement[†] which he made clear was only to facilitate the development of views as to what might be practicable to include in a later proposal.

In line with this procedure the Canadian representatives indicated their approval of a number of suggestions relating chiefly to possible provisions for pelagic sealing in emergency, scientific investigations, and methods of controlling the size of the resources. The preferable course appeared to be one which would least disturb established principles of conservation and administrative practices while providing for the needs of the emergency period.

January 31, 1942

Consideration was given immediately to the draft fur seal convention which was presented to the Conference on the previous day. Mr. Whitmore made numerous suggestions in regard to the draft, which were incorporated therein. Some discussion was had regarding the question as to whether the draft convention provided that each Government would have the right to operate expeditions for restricted pelagic sealing or whether each Government might contract with a private firm for the take of seals for scientific purposes. Several other points concerning the agreement were raised and it was agreed that the Department of State would very shortly present, through the Canadian Legation, a copy of the draft agreement for further consideration of and recommendations by the competent authorities of the Canadian Government.

DESPATCH 1147

Washington, May 12, 1942

Sir,

With reference to my Despatch No. 359 of February 11, 1942[†], and subsequent correspondence[†] with regard to the desirability of concluding a provisional arrangement for the preservation, protection and utilization of the fur seal herd of the Pribilof Islands, I have the honour to enclose herewith copies of a Note dated May 7th from the Honourable Cordell Hull[†], Secretary of State of the United States, which contains a brief summary of the changes in the wording of the Convention of 1911, as discussed at the meetings that took place at the Department of State on January 30th and 31st, 1942. The note contains also the terms of the provisional Fur Seal Agreement which the Government of the United States is prepared to enter into with the Government of Canada, based on the Convention of 1911.

2. It is noted that the United States Government proposes that the Canadian Government's share in the annual take of seal skins on the Pribilof Islands may be increased to 20 per cent. During the discussions at the meeting on January 30th it was recognized that the share of seal skins formerly going to Japan would be subject to division between Canada and the United States, and although no conclusion was reached on a basis for division the Canadian representatives were hopeful that the United States would propose a division in excess of 20 per cent.

3. Unfortunately the Legation is unable to check the changes made by the United States authorities in their draft agreement which was submitted for discussion. Nearly all of these changes were suggested by Dr. Finn and Mr. Whitmore. The latter took with him the draft on which the changes were noted.

4. I also enclose a copy of formal acknowledgment of Mr. Hull's Note[†] and I shall be glad to be informed in due course of the views of the competent authorities of the Government in respect of the proposals submitted by the Secretary of State and to receive instructions as to the nature of the further reply that should be returned to the United States Government.

Ottawa, July 2, 1943

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I desire to refer to your Note of May 15th[†] enclosing copy of Despatch No. 1147 of May 12th from the Canadian Legation at Washington, to which is appended Note dated May 7th from the Honourable Cordell Hull[†], Secretary of State of the United States, containing the terms of Provisional Fur Seal Agreement which the Government of the United States is prepared to enter into with the Government of Canada, as well as a summary of changes it includes arising out of conversations in Washington in January last.

I am authorized to say that the terms of the Note and the Provisional Agreement are generally acceptable to this Department. In accepting such, this Department would like there to be interpretation of certain specific points in the manner outlined hereunder. There was general agreement to such interpretations at further conversations between officials of the two Governments held at Montreal on June 10th.

1. That the increase in the Canadian share of fur seal skins taken at Pribilof Islands from 15 to 20 per cent. by adding a part of the share formerly received by Japan is an arbitrary figure, not arrived at on a calculated basis, and that our agreement thereto is provisional only, based on prevailing abnormal circumstances; also, that such increase in the Canadian share recognizes the principles underlying the 1911 Convention, in addition to the cooperation of the Canadian Government in scientific arrangements for the conservation of the fur seal herd and the need for further cooperation in scientific study of the fur seals.

2. That the word "North" as used in "North Pacific Ocean" in Article I, is redundant and may be dropped in view of the context immediately following.

3. That consultations between the two Governments from time to time regarding the level of population at which the seal herd is to be maintained, provided for by Article VIII, shall also include other important phases of management or policy relating to the herd.

4. That the Agreement through Article X shall be retroactive for the 1942 season; also, that it shall remain in effect for twelve months after the end of the present emergency unless either Government enacts legislation contrary to its provision or until twelve months after either Government shall have notified the other Government of an intention of terminating the Agreement.

I am attaching two copies[†] of the Provisional Agreement with the word changes contemplated by the foregoing embodied in the several provisions affected.¹⁵⁶

Yours truly,

CANADIAN FISHERIES AND INTERNATIONAL LAW

1. A meeting of the Fisheries Advisory Committee of Canada and the United States was held in the Roosevelt Hotel, New York City, on Monday, June 14. Those in attendance were

FOR CANADA:

Dr. D. B. Finn, Deputy Minister of Fisheries

A. J. Whitmore, Supervisor of Western Fisheries

H. L. Keenleyside, Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

FOR THE UNITED STATES

L. D. Sturgeon, Department of State

Mr. Zimmerman, Department of State

C. E. Jackson, Assistant Director, Fish and Wild Life Service, Department of the Interior

Dr. Deason, Fish and Wild Life Service, Department of the Interior.

2. The discussions fell into three parts. The first had to do with the Great Lakes Fisheries. The second was concerned with the Conference on Northern Fisheries which the United Kingdom is calling¹⁵⁸. The third encompassed a discussion of North Pacific Problems and developed into a consideration of a proposal which I advanced in the field of International Law.

...

5. North Pacific Problems: The United States representatives had indicated that they wished to discuss the post-war protection of the North Pacific (extra-territorial) Fisheries. It will be recalled that before 1941 the Japanese had been invading this area and that on one occasion the Canadian and United States Governments had made representations in London to stop a British factory ship from entering this zone. The essence of the problem is found in the fact that the waters in which protection is required are part of the high seas. The right of Canadian and American fisheries to the exclusive exploitation of the fisheries is based on equity and arises from the fact that until recently no other nationals were active in these waters. Canada and the United States had joined in self-denying regulations without which the fisheries in question would long since have been exhausted.

¹⁵⁸See Document 793.

6. The facts of the situation are all clearly understood; the problem is to find some means of maintaining Canadian and American rights against foreign interests who rely on the simple assertion that high-seas fisheries are open to all. After some discussion I put forward a proposal which I had been developing in my own mind but which I had never committed to paper or discussed with any officer of the Canadian Government. I had intentionally refrained from consulting with anyone in Ottawa on this matter in order to be able to say that it was purely an idea of my own and that in advancing it for discussion I was not in any way committing the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Fisheries or any other agency or individual connected with the Canadian Government. The proposal in question would constitute, if generally accepted, an addition to the body of international law. I suggested that in the first instance it should be agreed upon and announced as a basis of Canadian and United States policy with an invitation to other countries to adhere. It is in general terms and would be generally applicable.

7. Somewhat to my surprise both the Canadian and United States representatives accepted the idea, subject to subsequent more detailed consideration, with something approaching enthusiasm. It was felt that it was soundly based on equity, that it would be readily applied and that it would probably be acceptable to most if not all the major fishing countries. Obviously the proposed doctrine will have to be further examined and be refined in detail. Our United States colleagues asked that it then be transmitted officially to Washington with a request that the Government of the United States consider the advisability of

- (a) the acceptance of the principle involved and
- (b) the issuance of a joint declaration or the adoption of some other means of making the acceptance effectively known.

8. A copy of the draft proposal is attached. A copy of the draft Great Lakes Convention¹ is also attached.

A DRAFT OF A DOCTRINE DESIGNED TO APPLY TO CERTAIN FISHERIES OUTSIDE TERRITORIAL WATERS, SUGGESTED FOR ADOPTION BY THE GOVERNMENTS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES AND FOR SUBSEQUENT ACCEPTANCE AS AN ADDITION TO THE BODY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW BY ALL COUNTRIES

[Ottawa,] June 17, 1943

Any fishery conducted on the high seas by the nationals of any country shall be open to the nationals of that country alone when the following conditions exist:

- A- The fishery is conducted in waters contiguous to the national domain.
- B- The fishery has been conducted habitually, continuously, exclusively, and over a reasonable period of time by the nationals of the country concerned.

C- The fishery has been conducted under regulations designed to conserve and protect the species concerned.

D- The fishery is conducted in a clearly defined area.

Provided that when nationals of two or more countries have been engaged in any single fishery, and when the conditions outlined above apply to all those thus engaged, the two or more countries, if unanimous, may claim the right to the joint exclusive exploitation of the fishery concerned.

[Ottawa,] July 20, 1943

I am returning the papers entitled "Canadian Fisheries and International Law", under your reference of June 17, together with a note prepared by Mr. Willis.

2. I had hoped to have a chance to discuss this with you before you left for the West, but there was not time.

3. Mr. Willis has analyzed the difficulties presented by this proposal. At the moment we could get away with a scheme of this sort, but I am not so sure that it would be practicable to do so over a long period of years. In view of the fact that we would be attempting to assert an exclusive proprietary right on the high seas, I am certain that we should be faced with long-term unrelenting opposition of the United Kingdom Government.

4. I should think that there would be more likelihood in obtaining general acceptance for a policy of this sort, if we limited our claim to an assertion of the right to police and regulate the fisheries on the high seas, where such policing and regulation was essential to the preservation of the territorial fisheries.

5. The difficulty arises from the need for the establishment of a new rule of International Law. A new rule can be established in the following ways:

(a) By the building up of a usage generally recognized and accepted by the nations of the world. Usages of this sort are not ordinarily the result of deliberate action, but there is no real reason why policies should not be carried out with the conscious objective of a new rule of International Law.

(b) By the embodiment of the new rule in a multilateral agreement.

(c) Legislative action by an organization of nations endowed with such powers. At present there is, to all intents and purposes, no such organization, but in the future it is probable that a world organization will be established, having some law-making power.

(d) By bold and lawless action by a powerful State or States, ultimately reluctantly acquiesced in by the nations of the world unwilling to challenge their action.

It is the last way, namely (d), that is envisaged in the present proposal.

6. The real question is whether we could get away with this sort of action, and it involves an appreciation of the probability of its being challenged within the near future.

Mémorandum de l'adjoint spécial

Memorandum by Special Assistant

[Ottawa,] June 22, 1943

COMMENTS ON DRAFT DOCTRINE DESIGNED TO APPLY TO CERTAIN FISHERIES ON THE HIGH SEAS

1. The doctrine suggested would reserve in essence, an exclusive right of fishery to the nationals of any country in any sea area contiguous to that country which has been "occupied" by its national fishermen and fished by them under regulations designed to preserve the species of fish concerned. When the representatives of the United States and Canada in New York felt "that it was soundly based on equity", they meant, I take it, that where a country subjects its fishermen to conservation regulations in any fishing area it should in fairness be able to protect them from unfair competition in that area by foreign fishermen who are not bound by those regulations.

2. Foreign nations would not be slow to point out that the doctrine goes much further than is necessary to carry out the "equity" on which it is said to be based. It is, I can hear them saying, quite fair that foreigners who share in the bounty produced by the self-denial of national fishermen should be forced to exercise a similar right of self-denial, but how is it fair to exclude foreigners altogether? We might, they would say, just possibly consider adherence to a new principle whereby a country would have power to impose outside its boundaries on fishermen unconnected with it its ideas of conservation but we would immediately reject as a shameless grab any principle that excluded foreign fishermen altogether; we might admit, for these special circumstances, your jurisdiction to regulate our fishing on part of the high seas, but we would never admit your right to prevent us from fishing at all on part of the high seas.

3. Previous efforts to conserve the supply of fish have taken the form of (a) agreements between all the nations concerned but that is not contemplated here (b) unilateral declarations by a single nation that its territorial waters extend beyond the generally accepted three-mile limit, Portugal for instance claiming six miles, and Russia twelve. Riesenfeld, Protection of Coastal Fisheries under International Law, 1942, pp. 177-180, and 161-164, but no such unilateral declaration has ever been recognised by any foreign nation otherwise than by treaty. Great Britain, and Canada in particular have always except in the case of sedentary fisheries such as oysters adhered to the three-mile limit. No nation has ever yet suggested that because (a) its fishermen had "occupied" ("occupation" of any part of the high seas being impossible in international law) a defined area of the sea for fishing purposes and (b) it had made wise use of the area "occupied" by putting conservation regulations in force there, this area should for fishing purposes belong to its nationals exclusively. The reason why no such suggestion was ever made is, surely, that it could never have any hope of success.

4. In my opinion, therefore, the principle proposed to be jointly enunciated by Canada and the United States is (a) not justified by the equity on which it is rested and (b) opposed to the well recognised principle of international law that a nation's right of exclusive fishery is confined to its own territorial waters, and is therefore unlikely to obtain recognition by any foreign nation. It could of course, be made binding on any foreign nation by agreement with that nation.

5. The following verbal changes are suggested:

(i) Instead of the word "fishing" in the first line of the doctrine, the word "fishery" which is used elsewhere throughout.

(ii) Instead of the phrase "high seas", in the heading and in the first line of the doctrine proper, it might be wise to use the phrase "outside territorial waters". The doctrine would then appear to be (what it is) an extension under certain specialized circumstances of the admittedly exclusive right of fishery in territorial waters and not an attempt to interfere with the jealously guarded "freedom of the seas". The change makes no legal difference, but the new wording might put fewer backs up than the old.

(iii) Instead of the words "national domain" the words "territorial waters" might be more artistic.

DESPATCH 788

Ottawa, July 21, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

At the meeting of the Canada-United States Advisory Committee on Fisheries Problems which was held in New York on June 14, 1943, the members and technical personnel present gave consideration to a proposal advanced by Mr. Keenleyside of the Department which has now been prepared in draft form for consideration as a possible addition to the body of international law. In the discussion in New York it was suggested that the proposed doctrine might be examined with a view to its initial adoption by Canada and the United States and that subsequently it might be recommended for more general acceptance.

2. The proposal as now drafted is set out in an annex to this despatch. I attach also a brief memorandum on the subject prepared by the Legal Adviser and a copy of the note prepared by Mr. Willis to which Mr. Read refers.

3. It is suggested that the Legation transmit a copy of Mr. Keenleyside's draft informally to the State Department and seek an early opportunity for a discussion of it with the interested officers there. It should be indicated that the Canadian Government has not come to any conclusions as to either the practicability or the desirability of the proposal, but that it is considered worthy of discussion and that the views of the State Department in regard to it would be read with great interest here.

4. You will have observed that the Prime Minister was interrogated in the House on July 9th in regard to certain fisheries problems by Mr. Reid and that in reply he said "The Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries have been looking into the problem of the Pacific Coast fisheries, both the halibut and salmon fisheries. I shall be very glad to take careful note of what the honourable member has said and I welcome from any source suggestions that may be helpful." As has been indicated to you in previous despatches the whole question of our fisheries policies has recently been receiving considerable attention and it would be useful if the consideration of the proposal referred to in this despatch could be advanced with as much expedition as its importance will permit.

Washington, July 27, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I should like to refer to your despatch No. 788 of July 21, 1943, enclosing a draft doctrine of international law regarding fisheries outside territorial waters.

2. Copies of the draft doctrine were handed today informally to Mr. Hickerson of the European Division of the State Department. Mr. Wershof of the Legation spoke to Mr. Hickerson along the lines of paragraph 3 of your despatch No. 788. Mr. Hickerson is to let the Legation know as soon as the State Department is ready to have an informal discussion with the Legation of the draft doctrine.

3. Mr. Hickerson said that the draft doctrine has already been studied by several members of the State Department, having been brought back by the State Department representatives from the meeting of the Fisheries Advisory Committee held on June 14, 1943. His own reaction to the draft doctrine was not only favourable but enthusiastic. He said that members of the State Department are looking into the factual question of whether there are any fisheries in the world, other than the North Pacific Fishery, that would in practice be affected by the draft doctrine. If the North Pacific Fishery is the only one that would be affected, no country except Japan would have a real reason to oppose it.

DRAFT DOCTRINE ON HIGH SEAS FISHERIES

1. Following the New York meeting of the Canada-United States Fisheries Advisory Committee a separate meeting was held which was attended only by Messrs. Dooman¹⁵⁹ and Sturgeon of the United States and Finn and Keenleyside of Canada to discuss the proposal of a new doctrine to govern certain high-seas fisheries which had been submitted to the United States by Canada a few weeks ago.

2. As a result of the discussion it was apparent that the United States Government had come to the conclusion that they would be prepared to join with Canada in accepting and announcing the proposed doctrine. They indicated that they would like to make one or two minor additions or changes and they suggested the addition of one rather long supplementary proposal designed to meet a situation affecting United States relations with Mexico.

3. In the course of the discussion we were able to point out to the State Department officials that their proposal for the solution of their Mexican problem was not in fact necessary and had arisen from a misapprehension of the way in which it had been intended that the original doctrine should apply. Dooman and Sturgeon agreed with our views in regard to this matter and stated that they would look into the whole position again as soon as they returned to Washington.

4. We were assured that the State Department, including the Legal Division, were in agreement with the general principle of the new doctrine and it was indicated that a United States answer to our note on the subject might be expected very shortly.

¹⁵⁹ Adviser, Department of State.

5. It was felt that it would be useful to have a technical paper prepared and published in say the American Journal of International Law at about the same time that the two governments announce their adherence to the proposed doctrine. I agreed to undertake the preparation of this paper and have been promised the assistance of the State Department as well as our own Department of Fisheries.

Dear Merchant [Mahoney],

I have received your letter of November 23, 1943[†] and the memorandum from Max Wershof[†] on the subject of international law relating to fisheries outside territorial waters which accompanied it.

The situation is as follows. We have discussed the proposed formulation with the United States members of the Fisheries Advisory Committee at three different meetings. In addition we sent to the State Department through the Legation a copy of the new "doctrine" and at that time the officers of the Legation proposed that discussions might be initiated in Washington. As a result of these steps the United States became fully seized of our ideas and we were told that legal officers of the State Department were working on the problem. We were also told that we might expect an official communication from the State Department about it.

At the meeting of the Fisheries Advisory Committee held in Montreal on September 24th and 25th (a copy of the minutes[†] was forwarded to you with our despatch of November 19[†]) the matter was again considered in some detail, and we were assured that an official communication from the United States would shortly be forthcoming.

I don't think that any good purpose would be served by having the Legation pursue the matter any further until we get the question of United States cooperation in the Northwestern Atlantic worked out.¹⁶⁰ I hope that some progress in this direction will be made when Mr. Hickerson comes to Ottawa next week to talk about the Northwestern oil situation.¹⁶¹

Yours sincerely,

*Le président, le comité canadien, Comités économiques conjoints,

*Chairman, Canadian Committee, Joint Economic Committees,

Ottawa, March 3, 1942

Dear Mr. King,

I enclose herewith two resolutions adopted by the Joint Economic Committees of Canada and the United States on February 27th last.

The first¹⁶² recommends that the movement of used agricultural machines and their operators and of seasonal farm labour across the international boundary be facilitated. If crops are small, this may be unimportant but if they are large, its importance may be substantial. This is particularly true in the western areas where movement of machines and their crews with the progress of the harvest is a common feature of American agriculture.

The second recommendation¹⁶³ is of much greater importance. Briefly, it is that, in setting their agricultural production goals, Canada take into account the need of the United States for oats, barley, flax and the United States Canada's need for soy beans and soy bean oil. The obligation to be undertaken is that of endeavouring to produce adequate supplies, not the delivery of a stated quantity of the products.

The Joint Economic Committees considered it of major importance that advantage be taken of this opportunity of recognizing complementary, rather than competitive aspects of Canadian and United States agriculture. It was considered better that we should produce for each other's needs and get away from the present embargoes and other restrictions. The arrangement, if entered into, will contribute greatly to the supplies of vegetable oils needed by Canada. It will provide an assured market for any surpluses of oats, barley, and flax which we may have. In this respect, the recommendation is merely an extension of the policy of encouraging the production of these grains which I understand the Government is contemplating.

The undertaking of the United States not to impose additional restrictions on the importation of oats, flax and barley would be substantial as it would prevent the operation of a section of the Agricultural Adjustment Act which has already been applied against wheat. The reciprocal undertaking by Canada with reference to soy beans would be nominal.

It is contemplated that the detailed agreement, embodied in whatever instrument seems desirable, should be arranged through the regular channels with both Departments of Agriculture participating.

¹⁶³ Enclosure 1.

It is necessary to stress that it is of the utmost importance that no announcement of any kind be made concerning this recommendation or any agreement which might result from it, without the full concurrence of the United States Government and particularly of the Department of Agriculture in the form and content of the announcement. You will recognize readily that, in view of the recent history of agricultural policy in the United States, a proposal to encourage the importation of such common products will require careful handling by the United States Department of Agriculture.

I add for your information that officials of both Departments of Agriculture participated in the sub-committee which formulated these recommendations.

Yours very truly,

W. A. MACKINTOSH

Resolution 8 of Joint Economic Committees

February 27, 1942

WHEREAS, The United States and Canada are confronted by a serious shortage of fats and oils due to inability to obtain customary imports owing to war operations and the shortage of shipping, increased wartime requirements, and the necessity of supplying substantial quantities of these products to the United Nations, chiefly the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and

WHEREAS, The United States and Canada, in addition to meeting their own expanded requirements, have each undertaken to supply the United Kingdom with extensive quantities of livestock products involving the necessity of increasing the supplies of feed grains; and

WHEREAS, An increased supply of oil can be obtained by expanding the acreage of soy beans in the United States and of flax-seed in Canada; and

WHEREAS, A material increase in feed supplies can be obtained by expanding the acreage of oats and barley in Canada; and

WHEREAS, The facilitating of such a program of expansion would contribute to the joint war effort of the two countries, and at the same time encourage a more effective use of their respective resources;

THEREFORE, The Joint Economic Committees of Canada and the United States recommend:

A. That the Governments of the two countries, through their appropriate departments or agencies, undertake the following:

(1) The United States to increase its acreage of oil-producing crops with the object of alleviating the impending shortage of oils in both the United States and Canada.

(2) Canada to increase its acreage of flax-seed to provide as large a volume as possible for domestic needs and an excess to offset in part the reduction in North American imports of vegetable oil and oil seeds.

(3) Canada to increase its acreage of oats and barley with the object of obtaining adequate supplies of feed grains for the expanded livestock program of Canada and supplementary supplies for the United States.

B. That in order to encourage such a program, while at the same time providing necessary assurances in the matter of market outlets, the respective Governments agree, effective from next autumn, that:

(1) Canada shall facilitate the delivery in the United States, at the then current United States prices, of whatever quantity of flax-seed, oats, and barley Canada may be in a position to supply;

(2) The United States shall not impose additional restrictions on the importation of flax-seed, oats and barley moving from Canada to the United States;

(3) The United States shall facilitate the sale to Canada, at the then current United States prices, of whatever quantity of vegetable oils or vegetable oil seeds the United States may be in a position to supply;

(4) Canada shall not impose additional restrictions on the importation of vegetable oils or vegetable oil seeds moving from the United States to Canada.

Résolution 9 des Comités économiques conjoints

Resolution 9 of Joint Economic Committees

February 27, 1942

The Joint Economic Committees of Canada and the United States recommend that the Governments of the two countries take suitable action:

(1) To permit used agricultural machines and their operators or normal crews, to move across the border without payment of duty, with a minimum of restrictions, and with such regulations as either country may consider necessary to insure that the machines or members of the crews return within a specified time to the country from which they came.

(2) To facilitate the seasonal movement of farm labor across the common boundary under such rules and regulations as will further the efficient distribution of labor for peak requirements.

The reasons for these recommendations are:

Shortages of agricultural machines and of farm labor skilled in their use impede the wartime agricultural programs both in Canada and in the United States; and scarcities of steel and other metals limit the current output of labor-saving machinery. The movement of machines within each country has contributed to economies in the use of machines and labor and achieved greater efficiency of agricultural output. The removal of such regulations and restrictions as now impede the movements across the common boundary of both farm machines and the labor associated with them, would further increase their efficient use, thereby contributing to the common war effort.

Seasonal requirements for farm labor especially in adjacent areas of Canada and the United States ordinarily occur in a time sequence that gives opportunity for the movement of such labor, especially at planting and harvest time when labor shortage caused by the war might have serious effects on farm production in many localities on both sides of the border.

RE: CANADA-U.S. JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES — RECOMMENDATIONS
REGARDING AGRICULTURAL POLICY

Attached are two important resolutions adopted by the Joint Economic Committees, along with the original letter of transmission from Mr. Mackintosh, as Chairman of the Canadian Committee.

You will observe that the Joint Committees give great importance to these recommendations, and their adoption by the two governments. Mr. Mackintosh also emphasizes the importance of giving no publicity to the proposals, or to any action which may result, without full agreement of the U.S. government.

In view of the nature of the recommendations, I propose to have them submitted, at an early date, to the full Cabinet, rather than to the War Committee. Meantime, I am sending copies to members of the Cabinet Wheat Committee.¹⁶⁴

Washington, June 15, 1942

You will recall that the Joint Economic Committees recommended that agricultural machinery with their normal crews and seasonal farm labor should be allowed to move freely across the border.

The State Department have been studying the administrative action necessary to implement these recommendations and have approached us informally with the following proposals:

1. Agricultural machine crews and seasonal farm labor. The passport requirement would be waived and a blanket waiver of the contract labor law would be obtained. However, as these people will be spread over rather extensive territory, it is believed that some documentary control should be instituted and it is suggested that border-crossing cards be issued by either United States Consulates or Immigration offices at the border, whichever is more convenient for the persons concerned. The concurrence of the Department of Justice would be obtained to enable such persons to remain in the United States for longer than 29 days. The State Department will require assurance that these people will be readmitted into Canada on the termination of their temporary employment. It is suggested that this be arranged by obtaining from the Canadian Immigration officials at the border, a written statement that the holders of these border-crossing cards will be readmitted into Canada upon presentation to the Canadian officials of the United States border-crossing cards.

This should take place in the presence of a United States Immigration official, who would then be able to take up the border-crossing card. Alternatively, if the Canadian officials do not wish to follow this procedure, it is suggested that the Canadian authorities issue cards of identity upon which the equivalent of a border-crossing card is printed, for completion by a United States Consular or Immigration officer.

2. Agricultural machinery. There is no duty on the following items:

Tractors, either gas- or steam-propelled;
 Combines and threshing outfits;
 Reapers and binders;
 Plows;
 Harrows, tooth or disc;
 Drills; Cultivators;
 Rollers and packers;
 Ensilage cutters;
 Feed grinders;
 Hay-making machinery;
 Portable elevators.

These items are said to include everything except motor trucks, on which the duty is 25 per cent if valued over $1000.00 and 10 per cent if less than that.

Section 308, paragraph 5 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides for the free importation under bond, for exportation within six months, of automobiles, motorcycles, bicycles, et cetera, which are brought temporarily in o the United States by non-residents for touring purposes or for the purpose of taking part in races or other specific contests. It seems highly doubtful whether this provision could be construed sufficiently broadly to cover the present problem but this is being looked into further. If, as expected, the duty cannot be waived on trucks, it might be possible to arrange for United States trucks to meet these people at the border or to introduce in Congress a Bill covering this specific item.

State Department would be glad to learn whether these proposals commend themselves to the Canadian authorities and what reciprocal arrangements the Canadian authorities are prepared to make. It will probably be necessary to work out the various aspects of this scheme in some detail.

TELETYPE EX-1313

Ottawa, June 24, 1942

Your WA-1338 of June 15 and WA-1422 of June 22¹, implementation of the resolution of the Joint Economic Committees regarding agricultural labour and farm machinery.

Canadian authorities propose to go ahead with the scheme. Commissioner of Customs is prepared to permit temporary entry of used United States agricultural machinery without duty and taxes on import and without bond or deposit, it being the duty of the Customs Collector concerned to see that the machinery is duly returned to the United States within the time allowed. Trucks or vehicles carrying the implements or the agricultural machine crews are to be admitted without duty on Travellers' Vehicle Permit.

Canadian immigration authorities prefer that border-crossing cards be issued by United States officials to Canadian farm workers wishing to enter the United States under the scheme. Canadian immigration officials would readmit workers into Canada upon presentation of border-crossing card endorsed "seasonal farm labour". The Director of National Selective Service is prepared to co-operate fully in permitting available seasonal farm labour to go to the United States in accordance with the purposes of the recommendation.

United States seasonal farm workers would be admitted into Canada if they establish, to the Canadian immigration officers at the points of entry, that they are United States citizens. In the case of naturalized United States citizens they would be required to show their naturalization papers. An alien would have to be in the possession of a certificate which would ensure readmission into the United States. Of course, enemy aliens would not be admitted into Canada. In view of the treatment of persons of Japanese origin in both countries we assume that it is contemplated that such persons should not enter into the movement in either direction under the scheme.

Each country will wish its own residents to return when the purpose for which they were allowed to enter the other country was fulfilled. Because of different wage scales residents of the United States will have an incentive to return to the United States while residents of Canada may not have an incentive to return to Canada. What arrangements are contemplated to ensure that the Canadian farm labourers will return to Canada?

With regard to the United States duty on trucks it would in practice be desirable if the duty could be set aside. Perhaps it might be possible to do so under the recent Presidential order whereby the Secretary of Agriculture can recommend the removal of duties for emergency purposes.

TELETYPE WA-1583

Washington, July 2, 1942

Your EX-1313 of June 24th, movement of agricultural labour and farm machinery. A meeting was held yesterday with representatives of the Departments of State and Agriculture at which the following points came up:

1. Canadian Customs and Immigration procedure. United States authorities find this most satisfactory.
2. United States Customs procedure. Unfortunately the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to recommend the removal of duties for emergency purposes apply only to bona fide imports where the title passes to a United States entity. It cannot therefore be used to facilitate temporary entry of trucks. The truck question has been studied carefully here and the United States authorities regret that they cannot find a way of admitting Canadian trucks temporarily duty free. They feel that all that can be done is to arrange for United States trucks to meet Canadian trucks at the border.
3. United States Immigration procedure has not yet been discussed in detail with the Immigration authorities. This will be done soon.
4. Methods of bringing supply and demand together. Department of Agriculture will probably have their county agents (who are joint Federal-State officers) handle details and want to know with what offices in Canada these county agents should correspond. The suggestion is that local offices on each side of the border will write back and forth to each other advising as to where labour is required and where it is available. Department of Agriculture will attempt to get a rough estimate of the Canadian labour that might be required and would be grateful if a similar Canadian figure could be compiled.

5. Foreign Exchange Control. The United States authorities would like an assurance that United States labour on returning to the United States after working in Canada will be permitted to buy United States funds. Presumably the Foreign Exchange Control Board can instruct its authorized dealers to sell United States funds to such persons. There is a problem here of identifying the transients who are entitled to this privilege but it is probable that the necessary safeguards can be worked out locally by the banks. Alternatively, the Canadian Immigration authorities might issue a card to each transient labourer admitted which could be used as proof of his status.

6. You inquire what arrangements are contemplated to ensure that Canadian farm labourers will return to Canada. Both the Immigration authorities and the Selective Service authorities have an obligation in this respect. The United States authorities ask us in turn, what arrangements are contemplated to ensure that United States trucks going to Canada will be returned, to which we replied that the Canadian Customs authorities were responsible for securing compliance with the law.¹⁶⁵

State Department have now discussed the details of immigration procedure with the Immigration Service. Two points emerge.

(1) Department of Agriculture say that the demand in the wheat country will be almost entirely for combines and other machines with their crews. These crews are usually small, not more than three or four men. Immigration Service would like to restrict the operation of the agreement to such small groups for the following reasons. Speedy arrangements are essential as this movement in the wheat country may be expected to start within two weeks. There are problems in connection with the posting of departure bonds for large numbers of farm labourers which cannot be solved within the time available. (This is being worked out on the Mexican border and it is expected that satisfactory arrangements can be applied to the movement of large groups of potato harvesters later in the summer). Will the Canadian authorities agree to this limitation?

(2) Immigration Service are afraid that security authorities will object to the entry of enemy nationals and will even have doubts about naturalized Canadians of enemy origin.

Apprehension about the latter group appears needless in view of the supervision exercised by the Canadian authorities. The United States authorities have tentatively agreed that the scheme will be applied to (a) United States and Canadian nationals (by birth or naturalization), (b) aliens residing in either country who are not enemy aliens. Is this agreeable to you?

United States authorities agree that Japanese should not participate.

Department of Agriculture are today sending to the Immigration Service a letter which sums up the immigration and employment aspects of the scheme. The letter reads as follows:

“Your attention is directed to the arrangement between the United States and Canada, announced by the President on April 10, 1942, which included a provision for facilitating the exchange of agricultural machinery and seasonal farm labor between the two countries. This department is interested in implementing that arrangement as soon as possible.

“We are informed by the Farm Placement Section of the United States Employment Service that the number of inquiries from farmers seeking labor in the northern wheat producing states is heavily in excess of the labor supply now available. We understand from Canadian sources that the labor situation there is perhaps more unfavorable than on this side of the line.

“It is recognized that in view of the short time available, it will not be possible to work out a general program covering the movement of all types of seasonal agricultural labor between now and the start of the wheat harvest in our northern border states. It is hoped, however, that some plan can be agreed upon by July 15 which will apply to the movement of men and machines for handling that crop. Our proposal regarding this limited implementation of the agricultural arrangement, subject to the approval of the Canadian authorities, is:

1. Each country permit the entry, without bond, of grain harvesting machinery and necessary crews, comprising the owner or lessor of the machinery and not more than 4 helpers.
2. Persons admissible to either country under these special terms shall be nationals of either country (other than nationals of either country of Japanese ancestry) and aliens residing in either country who are not citizens of enemy countries.
3. Requests for foreign labor to help with the grain harvest shall be made to the nearest office of the United States Employment Service in the case of the United States farmers, and to the corresponding Canadian service in the case of Canadian farmers. Such requests may be made direct, or through the County Agricultural Agent, the County War Board, or other qualified agency.

4. When the employment authority of either country engages workers under this proposal for employment in the other country, that authority shall furnish the immigration officers of the host country at the port of entry nearest the point at which the work will be performed with the following information:

A. Name and address of owner or lessor of the harvesting machinery in question.

B. Names and addresses of all helpers in each party.

C. Statement of citizenship of each member of each party.

D. Name and address of employer or employers.

E. Approximate length of time each party will spend in the host country.

5. If while in the host country a harvesting crew secures employment as harvesters in addition to or other than that for which entry was originally granted, the employment authority of the host country shall be so informed. That authority shall in turn inform the Immigration authorities of the host country of any such change in working status.

6. The employment authority of the supplying country shall provide each worker engaged under this arrangement with some means of identification which can be checked by the Immigration authorities of the host country with the information supplied them by the employment authority of that country. It is proposed that entrants from Canada have border-crossing cards marked 'Seasonal Farm Labour'. Passport requirements will be waived by the State Department."

There is one catch in connection with the nationality problem. The Visa Division of the State Department assert that a Presidential Proclamation includes among enemy aliens those who were natives or denizens of an enemy country even if they have been naturalized elsewhere in the meantime. There are apparently endless complications in the way of bringing such persons into the United States and it therefore looks as though Canadian citizens by naturalization who originally came from enemy countries will not be able to participate in the scheme.

Your views on the contents of this message and of WA-1607 of July 4th, would be appreciated. Ends.

1. Pending time to work out a general arrangement Canadian authorities agreeable to limited implementation of the scheme as suggested by Department of Agriculture.

2. Methods of bringing demand and supply together. United States proposals are acceptable. On our end, the Canadian Department of Agriculture is sending out a request to the Provincial Departments of Agriculture in the three prairie provinces asking the deputy ministers and their local provincial agricultural representatives to act as points of contact and to arrange details for the operation of the scheme. It is suggested that the United States authorities wishing to obtain Canadian machines and crews should get in touch, in the first instance, with one or other of the provincial deputy ministers of agriculture or local representatives. These officials would determine whether or not machines and crews are available and who and where they are. The provincial department or local representative, after having found available machines and labour, would make application to the local Canadian employment office for permission for the owner or lessor of the machinery and not more than 4 helpers to proceed to the United States for a specified period of time. The Canadian employment officer would provide each worker with a means of identification and forward information suggested in the United States proposals to the United States immigration officers at the port of entry nearest the point at which the work will be performed. At the United States end, with whom should the Canadian authorities get in touch when they wish to secure machines and crews from the United States? It would be convenient if there were some central points of contact, either federal or state, over and above the county agents.

3. Return of machines and labour. When the time specified for the stay in the United States has expired, Canadian labourers should not be allowed to proceed to another job or to remain in the United States without further express permission from the Canadian authorities. We understand that both the United States Immigration and Selective Service authorities have an obligation to see to it that Canadian labourers return to Canada within the period for which they were allowed to go to the United States.

4. Return of United States trucks. The Canadian customs collectors are responsible for seeing to it that the trucks are returned within the specified time.

5. Proposal that persons admissible to either country under this arrangement shall be nationals of either country (other than nationals of either country of Japanese ancestry) and aliens residing in either country who are not citizens of enemy countries, is acceptable to Canadian authorities. Persons entering Canada under the scheme from the United States must be able to provide evidence that they will be permitted to return to the United States.

6. Foreign Exchange Control. Foreign Exchange Control Board will grant permission to United States labour to convert their net Canadian earnings into United States funds provided there is a means of identification and check on the amounts converted in each case. It is suggested that the identification card to be issued by the United States employment authorities to United States labour going to Canada under the scheme should contain a blank space upon which the authorized dealers of the Board could insert the amount of United States funds purchased. The presentation to a local authorized dealer of such an identification card showing that the holder has come to Canada for employment under this arrangement for a certain period would enable the labourer to convert his net Canadian earnings into United States funds. If this proposal is not acceptable the Foreign Exchange Control Board would be glad to furnish special forms to the United States authorities for distribution to labourers going to Canada under the scheme. These forms when properly filled out and presented to the local authorized dealers would enable the labourer to convert his net Canadian earnings into United States funds.

Reference my immediately preceding teletype[†] concerning the movement of agricultural labour and farm machinery. I wish to draw the following points to your attention.

1. The group of persons eligible for entry into the United States from Canada has been changed. They are citizens of Canada or British subjects domiciled in Canada, except those who are natives of an enemy country, and non-enemy aliens domiciled in Canada. Passports and visas will be waived for all and special identification cards will be issued by the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service at the port of entry to each and every one of them. There will be no need of the men taking photographs with them to the border.
2. There will be three forms A, B, and C for United States men going to Canada and three forms A, B, and the Immigration Identification Card for Canadian men going to the United States.
3. The arrangements made for the entry of trucks and motor cars engaged in hauling the harvesting machinery and crews into the United States have been completed as indicated in the above quoted directive. The cars and the trucks enter the United States free of duty and may bring back the men and the machinery at the end of the time spent in the United States. They may not cart men and machinery between points of employment in the United States. The trucks and cars may either remain at the first point of employment until the crew is done or return to Canada, coming back later to pick up the men and machinery under the same free entry. In fact, it is quite possible that if the trucks and cars remain at the first point of employment during the whole period, they may when the job is finished go to point of employment B, C or D to pick up workers and machinery and bring them back to Canada.
4. May we be informed at the earliest opportunity that the Canadian authorities concerned are prepared to proceed on the arrangements made to date. The United States authorities would be very grateful if they could be given copy of the Canadian directives, similar to the American ones transmitted in my immediately preceding telegram.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In continuation of my Teletype Messages, Nos. 66 and 68 of January 6th[†], I enclose herewith a brief report on the proceedings of the Canadian-United States Food Production Conference, held in Washington, January 4th to 6th, 1943.

This report is based on notes made during the course of the two general meetings, at which the Legation was represented. It was anticipated that the United States Department of Agriculture would furnish a statement of the recommendations of the joint sub-committee as revised at the second general meeting. However, I am now informed that no statement will be issued beyond the press announcement which was released at the conclusion of the conference.

No doubt you have already received a more complete report from the Canadian Delegation¹⁶⁶, as I understood from Dr. Barton that on their return to Ottawa a report would be prepared and sent to you. If so, it will perhaps contain

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF STATE:

E. T. Wailes, Division of European Affairs(1)
 Constant Southworth, Division of Commercial Policy and Agreements(1)

AGENDA:

- (1) Consideration of United States and Canadian agricultural production goals for 1943.
- (2) Possible arrangements for United States-Canadian exchange and utilization of farm and food products in the wartime mobilization of agricultural resources.
- (3) Desirability of establishing a standing joint policy committee on wartime agricultural production and food supplies.

The January 4th meeting began at 4:30 p.m.

In a general discussion of the first two items on the agenda, Mr. Secretary Wickard outlined the difficulties which the United States Department of Agriculture would have to face in increasing or even maintaining production during 1943 at levels sufficient to meet all requirements including the anticipated needs of re-occupied countries. The burden might become increasingly onerous during the year. It was therefore desirable in his opinion that 1943 agricultural production of Canada and the United States should be re-examined with a view to eliminating duplication and to ensure that each country would concentrate on the items for which they were best suited. A dovetailing of agricultural resources in this way, and any revision of production goals resulting therefrom, would assist in determining how labour and equipment, as well as Government financial support, could be used to best advantage.

Reference was then made by Mr. Wickard to a number of specific United States problems including increased livestock production in the face of a feed-stuffs shortage, and augmented production of dairy products, which might merit detailed joint study by officials of both Departments of Agriculture. Mr. Gardiner then outlined in general terms Canada's position in respect to wheat and the programme for increased production of coarse grains (oats and barley), and to Canada's commitments to meet the United Kingdom's requirements of bacon, cheese and eggs. This led to a brief discussion regarding United States feed requirements and possibilities of importing feed wheat or other grains and feedstuffs from Canada during 1943.

Other apparent problems to which reference was made and which were considered suitable for detailed study were:

Possible duplication in the production of cheese by both the United States and Canada, for the United Kingdom.

Production of beans in both countries to meet United Kingdom requirements.

Increased production by Canada of hayseeds to meet United States requirements.

A number of questions were raised by members of the United States delegation regarding Canada's rationing programme, and Mr. Wickard requested figures which he could use if need be, before a Congressional Committee, showing normal per capita Canadian consumption of food items in scarce supply, as compared with quantities now available under rationing or other forms of control.

Mr. Taggart offered to supply these data.

Arrangements were made for a joint committee to meet the following day to examine in detail the problems discovered at this meeting, as well as any others which might come to light, and to report at a general meeting on the morning of January 6th.

No discussion took place at this meeting regarding Item 3 on the agenda — (Standing Joint Policy Committee on agricultural production and food supplies).

The focus of the second general meeting (January 6th) was discussion and ironing out of the recommendations submitted by the joint sub-committee which recommendations were explained to the meeting by Mr. Leslie Wheeler. The discussion resulted in a revision of the recommendations and an arrangement under which the proceedings of the Conference were announced to the press in a joint press statement[†], copies of which are attached hereto.

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister*

[Ottawa,] February 22, 1943

A reference was made in the Speech from the Throne¹⁶⁷ to an agreement to appoint a joint committee representative of the Departments of Agriculture of Canada and the United States to coordinate the efforts of the two countries in the production of food for the United Nations. This arose directly from a meeting between Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Wickard early in January and the prospective appointment of the committee was mentioned in a joint press release[†] given out by them at the end of their meeting in Washington. There had been intermittent discussion of the project for some months before this announcement was made.

We have now received from Washington suggestions for the terms of reference of the Committee and for the United States personnel. The terms of reference proposed by Mr. Wickard are as follows:—

“To keep agricultural and food production and distribution in Canada and the United States under continuing review, in order to further such developments as may be desirable in reference to those phases of our wartime agricultural and food programs that are of concern to both countries.”

The personnel on the American side would be as follows:—

- L. A. Wheeler, Director, Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations.
- R.F. Hendrickson, Director, Food Distribution Administration.
- J.B. Hutson, President, Commodity Credit Corporation.
- M.C. Townsend, Director, Food Production Administration.

Mr. Wheeler would act as the Chairman of the United States Section.

Their proposal is that reports and recommendations of the Committee should on the U.S. side be addressed to the Secretary of Agriculture and on the Canadian side “to the Minister or other appropriate Canadian authority.”

The Department of Agriculture is anxious to have the committee established as soon as possible, as they have, among other matters, an urgent problem respecting protein feeds for livestock which they wish to take up through this channel.

I think that the committee can serve a useful purpose and may help to keep the agricultural policies of the two countries more closely in line. The terms of reference seem to be satisfactory.

The question arises, however, whether other agencies beside the Department of Agriculture should be represented on the Canadian Section. The United States Department of Agriculture has a wider field than the Canadian Department, and has authority in the area covered here by the Foods Administrator of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and the Canadian Wheat Board. The terms of reference include matters which are within the competence of the Foods Administration and matters which come before the interdepartmental Food Requirements Committee. It seems to me that the Canadian panel might include two officials from the Department of Agriculture (the senior of whom would be chairman), the Foods Administrator or his nominee, and a fourth member from the Food Requirements Committee. It might be desirable that this fourth member should be Mr. H.F. Angus of this Department who is chairman of the Food Requirements Committee.

I assume that the committee should be appointed by Order-in-Council and I think that it would be desirable for this to be done on your motion.¹⁶⁸ That is the procedure that was followed in establishing the Joint Economic Committees and the Joint War Production Committee. If you agree, I shall have the papers prepared.¹⁶⁹

NORTH PACIFIC PLANNING PROJECT

Ottawa, December 17, 1942

Dear Mr. Heeney,

The Joint Economic Committees of Canada and the United States have agreed to sponsor a study of the extent to which post-war collaboration between Canada and the United States can contribute to the development of the North Pacific area, namely, Alaska, Yukon and Northern British Columbia.

The study will have as its minimum objective the provision of a broad basis of fact on which decisions can be made as to the post-war use of the various wartime facilities which are being built up in that area and which would to some degree be useless if both countries were to revert to their pre-war statutes and regulations. Beyond this, the study would give definite leads as to ways in which a joint pattern of development might be followed so that such expansion as is possible and desirable might take place with a minimum of overhead cost and a maximum of effectiveness.

The study is one which falls very clearly within the terms of reference of the Joint Economic Committees, and as it is not proposed that the Canadian government should make any considerable expenditure of funds, specific government approval of the project has not been sought. However, the matter has been discussed with Dr. Camsell and Commander Edwards who have promised such assistance as their departments could give in the course of their regular operations. It has also been explained to the Premier of British Columbia who has readily promised the assistance of his officials. The actual direction of the study is in the hands of Mr. James C. Rettie who is in charge of the office at Portland, Oregon, of the Natural Resources Planning Board of the United States, which has undertaken to bear the cost of the study.

It is proposed that when the results of the study have been drafted, any suggested measures for dealing with post-war problems in this area shall be discussed with the departments or agencies concerned with them in both countries, probably in a series of joint conferences. If it is possible in such a way to reach some substantial measure of agreement, the Joint Economic Committees will then turn the proposals over, with their own recommendations, to their respective governments so that any international agreements which may seem desirable can be worked out by the State Department and External Affairs.

I am making this explanation now because it has come to the point where those actively concerned with the study think it would be helpful to them if a brief press announcement could be made. While the study is wholly within the competence of the Joint Economic Committees, it would be well that the Prime Minister, and if he thinks best the War Committee, should learn of the study directly rather than in the press, and also should have the opportunity of making any comments they desire concerning the announcement.

I would be glad, therefore, if you would let me know whether there is any objection to the announcement being made. I might add that the announcement as drawn would be for simultaneous release here and in Washington.

I am,

Yours very truly,

W. A. MACKINTOSH

CANADA-U.S. JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES —
STUDY OF NORTH PACIFIC AREA

8. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that the Joint Economic Committees had agreed to sponsor a study of post-war collaboration between Canada and the United States in the development of the North Pacific area, namely, Alaska, the Yukon and northern British Columbia.

The study was to be undertaken, at American expense, by J. C. Rettie of the U.S. Natural Resources Planning Board. In this connection, a draft press release had been submitted for consideration.

(Letter, Chairman, Canadian Committee, Joint Economic Committees to the Secretary, and enclosure[†], December 17, 1942).

9. MR. KING expressed the view that announcement that a study of such large areas in Canada was to be made under the direction of an American agency would be resented and would give rise to suspicions as to the post-war intentions of the United States.

10. THE MINISTER OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH enquired whether the government of British Columbia had been consulted.

11. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, agreed that the proposal be referred back to the Canadian Committee of the Joint Economic Committees, on the ground that it was not satisfactory to have this study undertaken under U.S. direction, with the suggestion that the government of British Columbia be consulted in this respect.

CANADA-U.S. JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES —
PROPOSED STUDY OF NORTH PACIFIC AREA

22. THE SECRETARY reported that, in accordance with the decision of the War Committee on December the 23rd, he had communicated with the Chairman of the Canadian Committee. A letter from Dr. Mackintosh had now been received, together with an amended draft press release.

Dr. Mackintosh explained that the ultimate direction of the study would come from the Joint Economic Committees and would, therefore, be international. Choice of Mr. Rettie, as director, had been made because he could be obtained on loan, whereas no Canadian of the desired training or experience, not otherwise engaged in war work, was available.

The government of British Columbia had been informed of the proposed study and had undertaken to facilitate it in every way and to designate certain officials to assist the director. The draft press release had been revised in order to emphasize the international nature of the project.

(Letter, Dr. Mackintosh to Mr. Heeney, December 30, 1942)[†].

23. THE PRIME MINISTER expressed the opinion that the proposed arrangement was still not satisfactory. If joint planning of the kind proposed were to be carried on by Canada and the United States, it should be on a basis of equal participation.

This was one example of a general situation. The Canadian public would expect the government to safeguard Canadian interests and to avoid even the appearance of American control where Canada was directly concerned.

24. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES agreed with Mr. King, and emphasized the great importance of having clear agreement upon the post-war position in respect of all U.S. undertakings in Canadian territory. Every care should be taken to provide for protection of Canadian rights.

25. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that it was desirable that a qualified Canadian be appointed co-director of the proposed study.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, January 4, 1943

My dear Hansen,

With further reference to the proposed press release on the North Pacific Project, I have run into certain delays here. In seeking approval of the press release, I encountered an unexpected opinion in the Cabinet that for the sake of appearance at least there ought to be in the project a Canadian Co-director. I think it is not doubted that the project in itself would be successfully and acceptably carried out under our present arrangements but general considerations to which Cabinets are susceptible incline them to the view that we ought to adhere more strictly to the joint pattern.

I have been working on an arrangement which I think might be acceptable to you and to Mr. Rettie, and would meet both the Cabinet view and the request which Mr. Rettie has made a number of times that we might appoint a Secretary or other official here who would be available to act as liaison man with him and maintain contact with Canadian officials and Canadian sources of information. The primary assumption from which I start is that the work which Mr. Rettie is already engaged on will not be upset or delayed but rather facilitated by additional arrangements. It is not yet clear, but I think it is possible, that we can persuade Dr. Camsell to accept a position as Co-director giving him a Research Assistant who would do the spade work and a liaison man leaving Dr. Camsell to keep his eye on developments and be available for consultation and for consideration of the larger aspects. I have a meeting of our Committee tomorrow to consider this, but it will probably take some days thereafter to work out a definite plan.

I take it that this sort of arrangement would be acceptable to the United States Committee as it would be my view that it would not involve any essential change of plan. I am sending a copy of this letter with explanation to Mr. Rettie so that he may be informed.

In the meantime, it will, unfortunately, be necessary to hold up the press release for some days further.

I am,

Yours very truly,

SECRET AND CONFIDENTIAL

JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

1. The Joint Economic Committees were appointed in 1941 in an effort to meet certain immediate difficulties and in the hope that they might contribute towards the solution of prospective — particularly post-war — problems of joint or concurrent interest.

2. In the autumn of 1940 the channels of communication between Ottawa and Washington were unable to provide for that degree of coordination and rational integration of the war industries of the two countries which was felt to be essential for the adequate handling of the economic and military problems which had arisen or were obviously in prospect. (See memorandum HLK/JG, December 27, 1940). In an effort to meet this situation the Permanent Joint Board on Defence had recommended that supply members be appointed by each Government to its respective Sections, but this recommendation had, and in my opinion wisely, been turned down. The existing arrangements, however, which had been developed chiefly by the Department of Munitions and Supply were less than satisfactory for immediate purposes, and were not designed for the consideration of post-war problems.

¹⁷⁰ The press release was issued in Ottawa on January 25.

3. It was in these circumstances that a series of informal meetings and discussions took place in the office of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs during the months of October, November and December, 1940, and January, 1941. In addition to Dr. Skelton and myself those participating in these discussions were Dr. W.C. Clark, Mr. Victor Sifton, Mr. H.R. MacMillan, Mr. R.A.C. Henry, Colonel O.M. Biggar and two or three others. All of the participants, but particularly Dr. Skelton and Mr. Henry, were impressed with the importance of providing machinery through which problems of the kind experienced and envisaged could be adequately handled.

4. At about the same time informal discussions of the situation were initiated with Mr. A.A. Berle, and a very cordial response was received (See Mr. Reid's letter of January 13, 1941¹).

5. At a meeting of the Cabinet War Committee on January 21, 1941 Mr. Henry was authorized to prepare a memorandum for the Government "dealing with the coordination of war industrial activities with the United States", as well as with the long-term and post-war problems referred to above. In Mr. Henry's absence, and at his request, a memorandum was prepared by Mr. Goldenberg and myself which reflected Mr. Henry's views and which became the basis on which the Committees were eventually established. (See memorandum February 25, 1941).¹⁷² On February 28, on the recommendation of the Honourable Mr. Howe, the proposals made in this memorandum were approved and negotiations with the United States were authorized. In presenting the Canadian views to the United States on March 18, 1941¹⁷³ the following explanation was given:

"It is the belief of the Canadian Government that the promotion of economy and efficiency during the present period of crisis, the solution of the problems which will be posed during the period of transition from war to peace, and adequate and effective provision for the continuing requirements of hemispheric defence, all demand that early and detailed study be given to this question.

The Canadian Government attach great importance to the proposal. If it is accepted by the Government of the United States, they consider it desirable that an early start should be made by the Joint Committees of Inquiry, since the tasks to be assigned to them will inevitably involve protracted study. It is intended that the duties of the Committees should be strictly confined to investigation, study and report, and that decisions as to any action that may be required should be taken by the respective Governments after the Committees' reports have been presented."

¹⁷² Voir le volume 8, document 180.

¹⁷³ See Volume 8, Document 182.

While discussions with the United States were still under way the Hyde Park Agreement of April 20, 1941¹⁷⁴ was announced by the Prime Minister and the President, and pursuant thereto the Minister of Munitions and Supply arranged for the establishment of the Material Coordinating Committee. The creation of this body provided coverage for part of the area that it had been intended to assign to the Joint Economic Committees, but a large and important field for immediate activity as well as for long-term planning still remained.

7. [sic] On June 6, 1941 the United States accepted the Canadian proposals with certain modifications made necessary by the establishment of the Material Co-ordinating Committee. These modifications were accepted by the Canadian Government and public announcement of the appointment and functions of the Committees was made on June 17. That statement read as follows:

"The Government of Canada and the Government of the United States of America today announced that they have established joint committees of inquiry to explore the possibility of a greater degree of economic cooperation between Canada and the United States. They will be known as the Joint Economic Committees.

The Committees have been instructed to study and to report to their respective governments on the possibilities of (1) effecting a more economic, more efficient and more coordinated utilization of the combined resources of the two countries in the production of defence requirements (to the extent that this is not now being done) and (2) reducing the probable post-war economic dislocation consequent upon the changes which the economy in each country is presently undergoing.

It is the common belief of the two governments that such studies and reports should assist the governments and peoples of each country in formulating policies and actions for the better utilization of their productive capacities for the mutually greater welfare of each, both in the present emergency period and after the emergency has passed.

This joint inquiry marks one further step in the implementation of the declaration made by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Mackenzie King at Hyde Park on April 20, 1941.

The members of the United States committee will be Mr. William L. Batt, Mr. Harry D. White, Professor Alvin H. Hansen and Mr. E. Dana Durand. Mr. A.A. Berle, Jr., Assistant Secretary of State will sit with the Committee from time to time as occasion may render desirable.

The members of the Canadian Committee will be Mr. R.A.C. Henry, Professor W.A. Mackintosh, Mr. J.C. Bouchard, Mr. Alex Skelton. Mr. Keenleyside of the Department of External Affairs will sit with the Committee from time to time as occasion may render desirable.

¹⁷⁴ Voir le volume 8, document 191.

¹⁷⁴ See Volume 8, Document 191.

In order that the Secretary of State may be kept closely in touch with the activities of the committees, Mr. Leroy D. Stinebower has been appointed as liaison officer from the Department of State. A liaison officer from the Department of External Affairs will also be appointed shortly." (Mr. Angus was subsequently appointed.)

8. Owing to the sudden illness of Mr. Henry the chairmanship of the Canadian Committee passed before the first meeting to Dr. Mackintosh.

9. During 1941 and the first three or four months of 1942 the Committees met with reasonable regularity and made a number of useful recommendations to the two Governments. Some attention was paid to the long-term responsibilities which had been assigned to the Committees and the first two drafts of a Report in this field were prepared. The responsibilities of the Committees were further restricted however by the acceptance by the Government of a recommendation from the Committees themselves that the appropriate elements of their duties should be transferred to a Joint War Production Committee. This was done on October 31, 1941.¹⁷⁵

10. By the spring of 1942 it was apparent that the Joint Economic Committees were becoming progressively less important in the Canada-United States complex. The subject matter of their deliberations was becoming less and less significant and no serious and extended attention was being given to post-war problems. The technical assistants who had been employed were drifting to other tasks and there was a growing and understandable tendency on the part of other Government agencies to ignore the Committees. This was due, in my opinion, to the following factors:

- (a) Weakness of personnel on both Committees;
- (b) Preoccupation of able members with other tasks;
- (c) The growth in number and influence of alternative agencies; and, above all,
- (d) a belief on the part of certain Canadian members that the Joint Economic Committees were not the proper instruments to use for the purposes which had been assigned to them.

11. At a meeting held on June 9, 1942 certain members of the Committees gave consideration to their position and agreed upon a formula for their subsequent activities. This agreement was embodied in the following memorandum:

"Each Committee shall give consideration to reorganizing its membership with the object of having effective contact with the more important agencies concerned with post-war planning.

2. Without abandoning their broad terms of reference, the Committees will direct their attention to post-war problems. They will deal with wartime collaboration only as matters are referred to them for consideration or as opportunities are seen of improving a neglected phase of collaboration.

¹⁷⁵ Voir le volume 8, documents 209 et 210.

¹⁷⁵ See Volume 8, Documents 209 and 210.

3. The Committees will take as their future agenda the areas of collaboration set out in their draft report.¹⁷⁶ They will endeavour to ensure that adequate work is being done in those areas, either by their own staff or other agencies, and each will inform the other Committee of the work in hand and the progress made.

4. To the extent that its own circumstances require it, each Committee shall report to its Government on its progress during the past year and inform its Government of the work which it is undertaking unless otherwise instructed.

5. Joint Meetings shall be held at the call of the Chairmen. As far as possible, each shall be devoted to a single topic and specialists who are not members of the Committees may be invited to participate in the discussions.

6. To the fullest possible degree, and as soon as practicable, each Committee undertakes to make available to the other Committee information concerning proposals and copies of relevant studies in the field of post-war planning made by the agencies of their own government. The Committee receiving such studies will communicate them to the appropriate agencies of their own government and may transmit such views and comment as may seem appropriate.

7. In the field of post-war collaboration, the Committees shall make advisory reports rather than formal recommendations to their Governments, and, as deemed appropriate, they may report jointly or separately.

8. The Agricultural Sub-committee shall be continued but shall clear its recommendations through the Chairmen who shall be empowered to report them direct to the Governments unless, in their opinion, it is desirable to submit them to the main Committees for consideration.

9. These proposals shall be presented by the Chairmen to their separate Committees for confirmation.”

Neither Committee, except in one or two particulars, has carried out the terms of this understanding.

12. The United States Committee did eventually revise and strengthen its membership. That Committee has also initiated one or two useful studies. In the past year, however, there have been only two joint meetings. At the first of these the Committees agreed to support the proposal of the National Resources Planning Board of the United States for a study of the Northwest.¹⁷⁷ At the second the United States members described various post-war economic studies under way in Washington. At neither meeting was there any particularly useful contribution from the Canadian Committee nor have the Committees made any serious attempt to initiate or to stimulate others to initiate any large-scale post-war planning. The draft Report has apparently been completely abandoned.

13. It may be that the Joint Economic Committees are not the proper agencies through which to handle the problems described in their terms of reference. If this is the case I think we should say so and clear the Committees of the responsibilities which they have accepted but about which they are doing nothing. If the Committees continue to operate with their directives unchanged, however, a

¹⁷⁷ Voir le document I 183.

¹⁷⁶ Not located.

¹⁷⁷ See Document I 183.

serious effort to meet their responsibilities should be made. It is obvious now that the duties of the Committees in the field of wartime co-operation are not likely to be of the first importance. Other channels have been opened, other agencies created, which can handle most if not all that needs to be done in this area.

14. It is in the realm of planning for the transition period and for the post-war that the Committees have had the greatest responsibilities and that the least has been done. There have been excuses for this. International collaboration in the field of economics must depend very directly upon national policies, and so far neither Canada nor the United States has reached any very solid conclusion as to the character of its own post-war economy. This in turn has been, in part at least, due to the inability of either Washington or Ottawa to forecast with assurance the general terms of international economy in the post-war world.

15. Now, however, the situation is changing. The terms and conditions — the strategic outlines though not the tactical details — of the post-war economic set-up, both national and international, are likely to come much closer to definition during the next few months than has heretofore been the case. Nationally, the revivification of the Economic Advisory Committee in Canada and the work being done by the Treasury, the State Department and other agencies in the United States, have led to the hope that some serious results in the form of practical post-war programmes may be expected to emerge in both countries. If this expectation is even partially realized, the possibilities for the useful employment of the Committees will be greatly expanded. It is impossible to arrange for really effective co-operation until the potential co-operators are known. When that time comes the Joint Economic Committees, reformed and revitalized, might properly be expected to serve a useful purpose.

16. The work that is being done in the way of definition of transition and post-war national policies in Canada and the United States depends in turn, in some measure at least, on what is accomplished in the larger field of international economic agreement. Here the recent talks in London and the prospective general and commercial conversations in Washington offer hope of significant developments.

17. All this leads to the conclusion that current and prospective developments make it possible for the Joint Economic Committees to play a more useful role in the next eighteen months than has been the case since the spring of 1942. If full advantage is to be taken of this increased opportunity for service it will be necessary for the personnel of both Committees to be revised in the hope of making them a more efficient tool for the tasks that they may be expected to perform.

18. In one field in particular the Canadian Committee should, in my opinion, be giving most serious study to post-war possibilities. Some Canadian war-fostered industries can survive United States competition in days of peace without great difficulty. Others will survive, if at all, only by Government assistance or by the conclusion of working arrangements with United States competitors. If such industries are not to be maintained at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer or the Canadian consumer, arrangements for their rational integration into the economic fabric of the continent are essential. I feel strongly, therefore, that the Joint Economic Committees, or some other agency, should be organizing, with the assistance of the responsible leaders of industry from both the United States and Canada, a long series of specialized industrial studies.

19. This does not mean that the Joint Economic Committees should sit in a hotel room and decide on the division of industrial functions and markets for the post-war era. It means that they or some other agency should foster the establishment [of] and keep in close touch with small industrial committees organized for the specific purpose of working out viable schemes for their respective components in the North American post-war scene. It is reasonable to assume that this proposal would be welcomed by many industrial leaders. Berle and other members of the United States Committee have expressed their willingness, and indeed their anxiety, to approach the problem in this way. But it is primarily the responsibility of the Canadian Committee. It is for the most part Canadian welfare that is at stake. If we are not willing to make an effort the United States members cannot be expected to worry unduly about it.

20. If it would be better to have this problem handled in some other way we should say so, and try to ensure that it is so handled. If it can be done best through the Joint Economic Committees action should be initiated at once; we have already wasted a great deal of time. We cannot guarantee that the end of the war will await our convenience.

21. If revised and strengthened Committees are to be kept in active being the following duties might be accepted as their agenda during the next year. They should:

- a — be free to intervene in the field of wartime co-operation as this may, in any particular instance, appear useful.
- b — support, and receive reports from the Directors of the Study of the North-west Regional Project.
- c — revise, in the light of new conditions and prospective developments, and eventually present to the Governments, the long-term Report on Economic Co-operation between Canada and the United States which up to the present, because of the insecurity of the assumptions and hypotheses upon which it is predicated, has been little more than an interesting academic study.
- d — act as the agency through which plans for post-war co-operation or rationalization of production in specific industries and trades are developed.
- e — act as an agency through which consultations on major economic policies can be conducted as and when national policies are clarified in Washington and Ottawa.

22. If the Joint Economic Committees are not to concern themselves with a programme of this nature there is little excuse for going through the motions of continued animation. As mere channels for the passing of information (as at the last meeting in Montreal) they are cumbrous and inefficient. There are three possibilities. The Committees can:

- (a) work on a programme such as that outlined above;
- (b) agree that they have no particular function to perform and disband – in effect if not in form.
- (c) continue with the present policy of drift.

In my opinion these possibilities are listed in their order of desirability: (a) would constitute an intelligent effort to meet our responsibilities; (b) would be evidence of an honest decision; (c) has nothing to recommend it. The present situation has been allowed to last far too long. We are quite justly being judged as unco-operative and unwise by our United States colleagues, and by others on both sides of the boundary. It is difficult at present to dispute this view.

RE: JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Thank you for sending me a copy of your memorandum of September 2nd.

I agree entirely with you that the Committees should either disband or be revived with specific new functions relating to the transition and post-war periods.

I am not certain however, that your suggestion does not involve a certain amount of overlapping with the post-war functions of the Economic Advisory Committee. I do not think that in so far as Canada is concerned, a clear line can be drawn between post-war studies on a national basis and post-war studies on an international basis.

Accordingly, I would recommend that there be first a clarification of the respective functions of the Economic Advisory Committee and the Joint Economic Committees as well as a clarification of their relationship.

It might be that, in the light of the overall authority on post-war studies conferred upon the Economic Advisory Committee, a working sub-committee of this Committee might perform the functions which you recommend for the Joint Economic Committees – with a corresponding sub-committee, if it exists or can be created, in the United States.

If you care to do so, I shall be glad to discuss this further with you.

Washington, September 17, 1943

Dear Carl [Goldberg],

In your capacity as Assistant to the Chairman of the Joint War Production Committee, U.S. and Canada, I would like to confirm our long conversation in Ottawa last week on the following subject.

On November 5th, 1941 this Committee was brought into being by an announcement by the President and our Prime Minister, which took the form of a Press Release under that date. This Press Release stated that the resolution of the Joint Economic Committee was being accepted to the effect that a Production Committee should be formed. The Terms of Reference might roughly be divided into two general heads. First, we were asked to undertake the practical day-to-day operation of integrating the productions of the two countries; second, we were asked to work closely with the Joint Economic Committee in carrying out surveys and studies "particularly with regard to the objective of minimizing post-war economic maladjustments."

For nearly two years now, this Production Committee has been very active in carrying out the first of these two directions, but has never been at all active in the second direction.

Some time in 1942, the Joint Economic Committee decided to adjourn sine die, and I believe I am right in saying they have only met once since then, so that even if the Production Committee had been anxious to work along the lines of this second direction it had, in substance, no one with whom to work.

We are now very definitely entering into a new phase of the war where production for munitions proper will be slowing down in volume, and there will be appearing in parallel to this production, a new type, semi-civilian if you like, to meet the ever-growing demands for rehabilitation in our allied countries, particularly the re-occupied territories. This new type of production which is on us now, savours so strongly of ordinary commercial export business that we have to get ourselves prepared to handle it intelligently, otherwise our very happy position of complete integration with the United States may be jeopardized by extraneous commercial interests creeping into the picture.

For this reason, I would strongly recommend that the Joint Economic Committee become active again. Incidentally, we are facing in the next few weeks, a reorganization of our executive staff opposite the executive staff of Mr. W. L. Batt, Vice-Chairman of the War Production Board in charge of U.S.-Canadian operations. Before we go too far in this direction, I would like to have an expression of opinion from Dr. Mackintosh on this suggestion.

I would further recommend that if the Joint Economic Committee becomes active again it might take back into its own fold the Term of Reference on economic studies, all as set out in paragraph 3, of the Press Release above referred to. At this stage, I think it would be a little foreign to the operations of the Production Committee to start out on studies of this kind. The Economic Committee could do it very much better.

I have discussed this whole question informally with Mr. Batt. He has a small staff of economists available on his side for any such studies, and if this work is to be done it should be started almost immediately.

All of the above I have discussed with Mr. Carmichael and he agrees with me that you might, on his behalf, approach Dr. Mackintosh and discuss the contents of this letter with him so that he, in turn, can discuss the matter with Alvin H. Hansen in Washington.

If I might make so bold as to give a suggestion to Messrs. Mackintosh and Hansen, it would be, that one of the first items on their agenda should be the desirability or otherwise of enlarging the Joint Economic Committee to include United Kingdom representation. In the last six months the trend down here has been in this direction. Canada is very active in the Combined Production and Resources Board. Our discussions on materials are all becoming tripartite operations. We are in the process of attempting to form a Combined Export Markets Committee, also on a tripartite basis, and my personal opinion is that no harm could be done, and perhaps considerable good, if economic studies were on the same basis. I realize, however, that this is a matter for the two Chairmen to discuss and hardly a matter for D.M. & S.

When you have seen Dr. Mackintosh and discussed the matter again with Mr. Carmichael, I will be very glad to hear from you.

Yours sincerely,

J. B. CARSWELL

Dear Mr. Goldenberg,

I have read your letter of September 22nd[†] and Mr. J. B. Carswell's letter which you attached.

Mr. Carswell is not quite correct in his statement of the relations between the Joint Economic Committees and the Joint War Production Committee. The latter was required to transmit surveys, studies, etc., so that the Joint Economic Committees might be aware of the post-war implications and take them into account. There was no suggestion, however, of collaborating on post-war problems.

I would not expect to be able to achieve any success in converting the Joint Economic Committees into a tripartite body. If the United Kingdom were to agree, it would be only after much delay.

I think that what we are facing is the transfer of many of these questions from an interdepartmental to an intergovernmental level. The proposal to reach intergovernmental arrangements on the programming of exports and the application of priorities and allocations beyond the border was made in the Joint Economic Committees nearly two years ago, but was rejected in favour of the interdepartmental arrangement between M. & S. and W.P.B.¹⁷⁹

The two major problems at the moment would seem to be the programming of exports which can be handled by the Export Markets Committee and equitable sharing of civilian supply on which the authorities in each country can act in collaboration with C.P.R.B.¹⁸⁰ What is immediately necessary here is improved coordination within our own agencies so that a consistent line of policy can be approved.

There may be some later questions as to post-war use of over-expanded industries, but I think neither country has studied its own situation sufficiently to be able to discuss collaboration at this point.

I do not see what the Joint Economic Committees could do other than set out certain general views such as those suggested above.

Yours very truly,

W. A. MACKINTOSH

*Memorandum by Chairman, Canadian Committee,

[Ottawa,] October 8, 1943

MEMORANDUM ON THE JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEES OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

1. Since reading Mr. Keenleyside's memorandum of September 2nd, I have given renewed thought to the future of this body in whose relatively ineffective operation I feel more than a little personal responsibility.

¹⁷⁹ War Production Board.

¹⁸⁰ Combined Production and Resources Board.

2. The Committees were given two fields for study and report: (a) wartime collaboration in the use of the combined resources, and (b) reducing probable post-war dislocations consequent upon wartime changes. I have always had some feeling that the proper interpretation of the instruction did not include post-war planning as such but that it was rather that we should study means of wartime collaboration

- a) so that the most efficient use of resources could be achieved, and
- b) so that post-war dislocations should be minimized.

I have not, however, at any time urged this strongly.

3. The Committees encountered a number of difficulties, quite aside from questions of the membership of the Committees and some divergence of view as to their functions.

(a) There was no disposition on the part of External Affairs or the State Department to use the Committees. In my recollection only a couple of minor matters were referred to the Committees. Virtually everything that was done was initiated by the Committees themselves. In a number of cases, the intervention of the Committees was not welcomed. I do not interpret this as arising from any unfriendly disposition toward the Committees but as evidence of the difficulties which others, as well as the Committees, found in using this instrument.

(b) It proved difficult on both sides to get responsible collaboration with the Departments concerned. On the U. S. side, it was difficult to determine what was the responsible agency and on the Canadian side, the Department of Munitions and Supply had early developed its own relations with Washington and its own Materials Co-ordination Committee. Other agencies also preferred to maintain direct contacts with related agencies in Washington. That there was much to be said for this is indicated by a number of recommendations of the Joint Economic Committees that such direct contacts should be set up.

(c) Experience might well have proved different if Mr. R. A. C. Henry had remained the Canadian Chairman. Relations with the most important Canadian department, that of Munitions and Supply, would then have been much more dependable and the knowledge of the Committees much more up-to-date than proved to be the case under my chairmanship.

(d) Nearly all the broader problems of collaboration, both wartime and post-war, proved to extend beyond Canada-U.S. relationship. Even such problems as were bilateral had to be worked out within much wider relations for the consideration of which the Committees had no mandate. The whole development of the Combined Boards and our attitude toward them demonstrates this.

4. Whatever the appropriateness of the Joint Economic Committees as an instrument in the circumstances in which they were first envisaged, it is my opinion that experience has shown that, in the realities which developed, they were not a practical tool. In so far as they were expected to assist in the working out of the Hyde Park Declaration, that possibility evaporated with the hasty development of the direct contacts under the control of Munitions and Supply.

5. It appears to me that they were based on a false assumption, namely, that the desideratum was a fresh contact between the two governments. On the contrary, the problem was the rapid multiplication of contacts and the inability of External Affairs and the State Department to exercise an effective co-ordinating influence, at least in the period of most rapid expansion. External policy was being established right and left by a multitude of agencies. The problem never was to establish joint relations but to co-ordinate them. Any hope that the Joint Economic Committees could achieve this co-ordination seems to me completely unreal. The original members were drawn from the Federal Reserve Board and the Bank of Canada, the Treasury and the Department of Finance, the Tariff Commission and the Department of Agriculture, the Office of Production Management and Munitions and Supply. External Affairs and the State Department were represented only by senior officers, who had the right to attend meetings, and by liaison officers. In fact, the representatives of both Departments were in all respects fully active members, but the formal arrangement indicates the original conception. It appears to me quite unreasonable to suppose that Committees of this kind could exercise real co-ordinating influence, or that Departments would have accepted their position.

6. It would have been possible for the committees, given adequate staff, to make a number of studies of a quasi-academic type which probably would have been useful. This would, no doubt, have fitted in quite comfortably with United States practice where different offices and bureaux make public reports and studies recommending or supporting the most divergent policies. I may be wrong, but I have never felt that Canadian officials could participate in this effectively without raising implications of policy which are considered to be the prerogative of Ministers. The North Pacific Project is an experiment of this sort and while I think we were right in undertaking it, its completion will not be without its embarrassments.

7. I have reached the conclusion that the Joint Economic Committees cannot in their present form perform a function sufficiently important to justify their continued existence. It would seem to me, subject to the judgment of others who have more direct experience, that there is a function to be performed by a different kind of body. It appears to me desirable both now and after the war

(a) to maintain and develop many of the direct contacts between Ottawa and Washington agencies which have grown up during the war, but

(b) to bring them all, step by step, more fully under the eye of External Affairs (and the State Department), and

(c) to institute regular reviews of the whole range of economic relations and problems, both independently in Ottawa and if the U.S. is willing, jointly with Washington.

8. I, therefore, suggest that a new Committee might be established to undertake these functions. It should be headed by a senior officer of External Affairs, fully familiar with all our relations with the United States. It should include representatives of those Departments which have most active contact with Washington: Trade and Commerce, Munitions and Supply, Prices Board, perhaps Agriculture and Finance. Other departmental representatives and one from the Economic Advisory Committee could be brought in for discussion of matters of interest to them. There might need to be additional members from External Affairs and representatives from other joint bodies.

9. Such a body could review fortnightly or monthly the whole range of events in Canadian-U.S. relations, obviate a good many ad hoc meetings, give direction to other departments in their consultations with U.S. agencies, look ahead for the problems on the horizon and initiate examination of them in the appropriate departments or by ad hoc groups. In doing these things it would coordinate all such activities under the direction of External Affairs.

10. In examining problems which have emerged or seem likely to emerge, a Committee such as this would initiate studies of longer and wider range than are possible in the day-to-day work of the Department of External Affairs. Whether such studies were carried out by a secretarial staff drawn from External Affairs, by another Department or by a special interdepartmental committee would be decided according to the particular circumstances of the problem. The Committee could thus serve one of the purposes which it was contemplated that the Joint Economic Committees would serve, which they have not to any important degree served and which in my opinion they could not serve effectively. A concrete example will, I think, make this clear. It was obvious to everyone that arrangements with the United States on civil aviation would be an important and unavoidable problem. Under any broad interpretation of its functions, the Joint Economic Committees should have undertaken a study of it. The decision has been that it should be studied by special bodies and an attempt of the U.S. Committee to take the initiative was promptly checked. This was the right practical decision. The Joint Economic Committees could not have handled the problem successfully, because, first, there is too much emphasis on their joint character and the problem required to be examined nationally first; second, it did not appear to anyone as a problem to be examined under the joint chairmanship of a Federal Reserve Board advisor and a Department of Finance official; and, third, the Joint Economic Committees are too loosely connected with External Affairs. The decision in this case was a clear decision that the Joint Economic Committees were not an instrument which could be used for one of the purposes for which they were created.

11. The same problem could have been handled quite readily by the proposed organization. Preliminary discussion under a chairman familiar with the background would have established the urgency of the problem and suggested the formation of an ad hoc committee, the appointment of which in such an important subject should be made by War Committee. The proper decision could have been made without any violation of existing machinery. The point, if any, at which joint examination should be undertaken with the United States would be directly under the control of External Affairs, subject to War Committee's instruction.

12. There will be many economic problems which require more extended examination than is now given to them. The difficulty of making ad hoc decisions will demonstrate this and suggest the need for making an extended examination of the facts before the occasion for further decisions arises. In a few cases, joint examination by officials of the two countries can be begun at once, but in most cases independent examination in one, or both, countries prior to any consultation will be desirable. The point at which any study becomes a joint study should always be decided by External Affairs.

13. It would be necessary for External Affairs to provide an adequate secretariat for such a body, though work on some topics should be undertaken in other Departments. The secretariat should have time to make substantial background studies of emerging problems and should obtain the direction of senior officers in the Department or other Departments.

14. The suggested body could operate readily within our system of government because it would be geared to the responsible Department. The present form of the Joint Economic Committees is not seriously ill-adapted to United States practice, but it places Canadian government officials in a thoroughly anomalous position in which the difficulties of maintaining collaborative relations with their own government Departments far exceed those of coming to reasonable agreement with United States officials who have not the same departmental responsibility.

15. Such a Committee would serve a useful purpose even if it had no U.S. counterpart. Its usefulness would be considerably enhanced, however, if there were, say, quarterly meetings with a similarly constituted U.S. Committee and with the two Ministers or their representatives.

16. The negative conclusions of this memorandum are to me very clear. The positive suggestion is less firmly based and there are, doubtless, considerations which I have overlooked. I am, however, convinced that the major problem is not to establish or maintain a link with the United States Government (there is a multitude of such links); it is to co-ordinate existing relations, re-establish the responsibility of External Affairs, and provide the means for looking at our economic relations in a wider framework and with a longer view than the day-to-day conduct of business permits.

17. If any change in the status of the Joint Economic Committees is contemplated, it ought to be initiated quickly and not through the Committees themselves but directly from External Affairs to the State Department.

Dear Sir,

RE: JOINT WAR PRODUCTION COMMITTEE OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES AND TRUCKING IN BOND ACROSS ONTARIO

At the last meeting of the above-noted Joint Committee held in Washington, D.C., on Monday, March 16, the United States Section of the Committee sought the concurrence of the Canadian Section in a Resolution dealing with the above subject.

On behalf of the Canadian Section it was pointed out:

(a) that this was a matter which had already been dealt with in Canada on a higher level than this Committee, i.e., by the Privy Council of Canada¹⁸¹ and that, consequently, the Canadian Section had not the authority to deal with it without reference to the said higher body, and

(b) that in the form in which it was submitted the Resolution did not come within the terms of reference of the Committee in that no statement or claim was made to the effect that the granting of the concessions mentioned would in any way accelerate or increase war production and that, therefore, the Canadian Section were not in a position to deal with the said Resolution even to the extent of referring it to higher authority.

On behalf of the United States Section these arguments were accepted and it was agreed that the Resolution would be amended so as to bring it within the purview of the Committee and it would be re-submitted to the Canadian Section for action by them as above noted.

The revised Resolution has now reached me and is attached hereto. It will be noted that it now contains a definite statement to the effect that the granting of this concession "would help to speed war production in the United States". In view of this statement and of the responsibility of this Committee with respect to war production, the Canadian Section feel they must refer this Resolution to the appropriate higher authority, and request a directive as to the reply which should be addressed to the United States Section.

MEETING MARCH 16, 1942, FEDERAL RESERVE
CONFERENCE ROOM, WASHINGTON, D.C.

WHEREAS the President of the United States and the War Cabinet [sic] of Canada have approved a Statement of War Production Policy for Canada and the United States providing for the elimination during the war of international barriers to the movement of goods important in the war effort;

WHEREAS Governmental regulations in Canada hamper the movement of goods by truck across Ontario from Detroit to Buffalo and other points;

WHEREAS the extreme scarcity of rubber and other materials makes it wasteful for goods to be moved in truck by the longer route around Lake Erie; and

WHEREAS use of the shorter truck route across Ontario would help to speed war production in the United States;

THEREFORE, the U.S. Section of the Joint War Production Committee, United States and Canada, recommends that the regulations which prevent the free movement of goods in truck across Ontario from various points in the United States should be suspended for the duration of the war.

Ottawa, March 30, 1942

Dear Sir,

RE: TRUCKING IN BOND ACROSS ONTARIO

Canada must face the fact that a great deal of pressure will be brought by the United States to obtain trucking-in-bond privileges across Ontario, particularly between Buffalo and Detroit. A pressure group is at work, and, by using the war requirements as a basis for propaganda, can make the situation very uncomfortable for Canada.

The group behind the campaign are Canadians, although they have acquired American associates with considerable influence at Washington. The Canadian group have had a lobby at Washington working up pressure for the past two years.

I enclose copy of a letter dated March 25th from my Deputy Minister, who is also Canadian Chairman of the Joint War Production Committee of Canada and the United States. I understand that the resolution adopted by the United States Section of the Committee was proposed by Mr. Lauchlin Currie on instructions from the White House.

It seems to me most illogical, at a time when manufacture of trucks and truck tires has been suspended in Canada, when we are campaigning for reduction in the use of gasoline and tires, and when Canadian trucking is being controlled and coordinated with these ends in view, that a new Canadian trucking company should be brought into being, particularly in a service that is now being taken care of by five lines of railway. A suggestion has been made that our Board of Transport Commissioners be instructed to study the situation and report to the Government in the matter of convenience and necessity. The subject matter of the resolution is outside the jurisdiction of the Board, but I presume that the Board can make a report under special instructions from the War Committee.

As this is a matter of great interest to the Department of External Affairs, I suggest that a report should be obtained from that Department, and the whole matter placed before the War Committee of the Cabinet.

Yours very truly,

7. THE SECRETARY read a communication from the Minister of Munitions and Supply, suggesting that the War Committee refer to the Board of Transport Commissioners, for examination and report, the proposal that, for the duration of the war, regulations preventing the free movement of trucks across Ontario, particularly between Buffalo and Detroit, be suspended.

This proposal had been urged by the U.S. Section of the Joint War Production Committee, apparently at the instance of the White House. The Canadian Section had not concurred, and the Minister regarded the proposal as illogical, particularly in view of war conditions in respect of truck construction, rubber and gasoline, and because railway transportation in this area was adequate. A brief note had been circulated.

(Letter, Minister of Munitions and Supply to Secretary and enclosed documents, March 30, 1942; also Secretary's note, March 31, 1942 — C.W. . document 131[†]).

8. THE PRIME MINISTER said that this question had been discussed by the full Cabinet. The Minister of National Revenue was examining, with the Law Officers, the question of a reference to the Transport Commissioners, and would present an appropriate submission to Council.

Sir,

May I refer to a conversation you held with the Secretary of State in Washington on April 17, 1941, during which he discussed the advantages to national defense that would ensue from being able to move goods from Detroit to Buffalo and back via motor truck in bond, as well as to subsequent conversations between Canadian and American officials in Ottawa on this general subject.

Although in your letter of August 26th you indicated the difficulties that made the Canadian Government reluctant at that time to alter its practice, the increasing volume of war supplies being turned out in the United States and the need of moving them swiftly between Detroit and Buffalo during war time has impelled the transportation authorities of my Government to hope that the Canadian Government will re-examine its position in the light of these new developments. I understand that many of the big shippers of war supplies from Detroit have expressed an interest in this accommodation and that Mr. Eastman, the Director of Transportation in the United States, has written Mr. Howe of the importance he attaches to the availability of this additional route for speedy transportation in our joint war efforts.

Reference trucking in bond through Ontario.

The Board of Transport Commissioners, at the request of the Government, have investigated this matter and have now presented their report. An Order-in-Council¹⁸² will be passed shortly granting authority, for the duration of the war, for the transportation of war materials in bond from points in the United States to other points therein through Ontario by motor vehicles between designated Canadian points of entry and exit.

The privilege will be granted to United States truckers, both private and common carriers. In the case of the latter they must have authority from the Interstate Commerce Commission to operate over this route. It is intended to manage the scheme in such a way as not to permit the monopolization of the privilege by any one organization.

Yesterday a meeting was held in Ottawa between departmental representatives, the Ontario Department of Highways and W.Y. Blanning, Director of Motor Vehicle Division of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Walter Petty, Assistant Collector of Customs at Detroit and Mr. B.A. Flynn, Chief of the Division of Entry and Appraisal of the Bureau of Customs in Washington. The meeting discussed the details of the scheme and methods of control with regard to customs, the licencing of operators, immigration and security. Mutually satisfactory arrangements were worked out. In the case of immigration and police questions it was agreed that the methods of control should be determined by the immigration and police authorities of the two countries. This will be done by further communications through the Legation in Washington.

When the Order-in-Council referred to above is passed I shall inform the United States Minister here of the action of the Canadian Government and of our understanding of the methods of operation of the scheme. At that time we shall send you further details. Ends.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Mr. Moffat's note No. 708 of June 25th concerning the movement of goods from Detroit to Buffalo and back via motor truck in bond through the Province of Ontario and to inform you that the Canadian Government have ordered that, for the duration of the present war, war materials in transit from a point or points in the United States of America to another point or points therein, shall be permitted to be entered for transportation "in bond" through the Province of Ontario by motor vehicles, without payment of duties and taxes, and under such regulations as the Minister of National Revenue may prescribe.

The regulations to be prescribed by the Minister of National Revenue were discussed at a meeting held in Ottawa on July 13th between representatives of Canadian Government Departments, the Department of Highways of the Province of Ontario and, Mr. W.Y. Blanning, Director of Motor Vehicle Division, Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Burt A. Flynn, Chief, Division of Entry and Appraisal, Bureau of Customs and Mr. Walter S. Petty, Assistant Collector of Customs, Port of Detroit. The proposed regulations governing the movement of war materials through Ontario were satisfactory to the United States representatives present.

Under the regulations, the privilege of transporting war materials in bond through the Province of Ontario will be available only to persons or firms operating motor vehicles in the transportation of goods, either on their own behalf, on behalf of one or more particular shippers, or on behalf of shippers generally. The motor vehicle operators desiring to become bonded carriers shall make application to the Commissioner of Customs, Department of National Revenue, Ottawa, for the privilege. If the operator proposes to transport war materials on behalf of one or more particular shippers or on behalf of shippers generally, the applicant shall furnish a certificate issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission to the effect that he is authorized to operate as a common carrier in the United States and over the Canadian route referred to in his application. The personnel in charge of the motor vehicles operating through Ontario shall be restricted to citizens of the United States and to citizens or residents of Canada. In the case of United States citizens they shall be in the possession of border-crossing cards, with photograph and description attached thereto, issued by the United States Immigration Service.

Upon approval of the application referred to above, the applicant shall be required to submit to the Department of National Revenue a bond, in approved form, of a Guarantee Company acceptable to the Canadian Government. Operators of motor vehicles authorized as bonded carriers of war materials over the highways of Ontario shall be required to pay a fee or charges to the Government of the Province of Ontario equivalent to the provincial gasoline tax. This provision is similar to that now in effect with respect to United States passenger buses operating into the Province.

The regulations are drawn so as to avoid delay and to facilitate the movement in every way possible consistent with the maintenance of necessary safeguards. The limitation of goods to war materials will be interpreted in a manner which will not impose undue restrictions upon the operation of the scheme.

Ottawa, August 21, 1943

Sir,

May I refer to Mr. Moffat's note, No. 708 of June 25, 1942, and to your reply, No. 111 of July 17, 1942, concerning the trucking of war materials in bond through Ontario between Michigan and New York points.

Under instructions of my Government, I now have the honor to enclose a copy of a letter addressed to the Secretary of State on August 6, 1943 by the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation proposing a liberalization of the regulations governing this traffic. I have been informed that Mr. Eastman's letter was drafted following meetings under his chairmanship at which the Department of State as well as the War and Navy Departments, the Customs Bureau and the Petroleum Administration for War were represented. It is understood that at the present time approximately twenty-five trucks daily are using the Ontario route but that, if the proposed liberalization of the regulations is effected by the Canadian Government, approximately one hundred trucks daily will use the route. The saving in gasoline, motor equipment, rubber and manpower which would thus be effected is obvious. I have been directed to say that it is recognized in the Department of State that the Canadian Government may well find it impossible to comply with the suggestion made in paragraph 4 of Mr. Eastman's letter. It is hoped, however, that consideration of this suggestion will be without prejudice to the other important points covered in the letter and that some alternative may be possible to provide adequate service facilities on the Canadian route.

With respect to the minor difficulties alluded to in paragraph 5 of Mr. Eastman's letter, I have been directed to say that in the Department of State no objection is perceived to direct consultation between the appropriate officials of the two Governments, and it is understood that such consultations will be initiated.

In bringing Mr. Eastman's letter to the attention of the Canadian Government, I have been directed to endeavour to secure a modification of the present regulations in the sense desired. In doing so, I have been directed to emphasize that this matter has been the subject of careful study by the agencies of the United States Government interested in wartime transportation and that the matter has been considered solely from the point of view of effecting economies in the interest of the war effort.

I should appreciate being informed of the decision of the Canadian Government in the premises.

Washington, August 6, 1943

My dear Mr. Secretary,

Through the cooperation of the officials of the Canadian Government, regulations governing the use of certain Ontario Highways between Detroit and Port Huron, Michigan, and Buffalo and Niagara Falls, New York, have been issued. These regulations make available to American motor truck operators the use of shorter Canadian routes between these points. My Office has been interested in studying the effect of operations under these regulations, which have been in effect for several months, with particular reference to the conservation of manpower, vital motor transport truck equipment, gasoline, and rubber.

Through members of my District Field Offices and the District Office of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Bureau of Motor Carriers, a study has been made of the operations of some of the trucks now using the highway, and of the volume of traffic which could be moved over this shorter route if the present Canadian regulations were liberalized. As a result of this study, I am convinced that further important conservation could be accomplished if the Canadian officials could be persuaded to amend the present regulations.

At the present time the Canadian regulations permit only full truck-loads of war materials to be transported across the Ontario Highways. If a truck-load consists of war materials and goods less directly associated with the war effort, it is impossible to make use of this shorter route for the transportation of such a mixed load. Our experience indicates that the vast majority of all commodities moving by motor transport today are war materials or commodities otherwise essential in a wartime economy. The Canadian regulations should be amended to permit all types of traffic to move across the shorter route, including mixed loads. The maximum conservation of vital transport equipment can be accomplished only in this way. The situation has become so pressing as to require our consideration of the trucks themselves as "war material."

The American operators have experienced difficulty in the purchase of gasoline and repair parts in Canada. This difficulty results from the inability of carriers to secure, under rationing regulations, the necessary petroleum supplies and spare parts in Canada which are necessary to their continued operation. It is respectfully suggested that the Canadian authorities also be persuaded to permit the operation of an American service station and repair depot mid-way on the Canadian route so that proper services to trucks may be obtained, and so that no delay will be occasioned to operators who have agreed to use the shorter route. In the event that this suggestion does not prove workable, a Canadian service station might be made available to serve exclusively these American trucks and its supplies could then be replenished periodically from American stocks.

There are minor difficulties surrounding the use of leased equipment which could be satisfactorily adjusted by conference with the Canadian Customs officials. The entry requirements and time consumed in clearing the shipments through the customs could also be the subject of discussions between the Canadian and American officials so that the shipments could be speeded up materially.

The negotiations covering the use of the Ontario Highway have been quite lengthy, and both the Canadian and American officials who have participated in them are fully informed of the facts. I am convinced that the regulations should be further liberalized, and I am hopeful that you will be able to persuade the Canadian officials of the desirability of this action.

Very sincerely yours,

J. B. EASTMAN

Ottawa, September 3, 1943

In conversation this morning Mr. Atherton mentioned the note he had given us last week about the trucking in bond situation. His Government are very anxious that the facilities granted last year should be further liberalized so that maximum use can be made of the economies in time, gas and tires offered by the existence of the direct trucking route from western New York to Michigan through southern Ontario. Copies of his note have gone to Customs, Munitions and Supply and Transport, and I sent an additional copy this morning to the Minister of Labour, who had asked if any recent representations had been received on this subject.

Atherton emphasized that his Government was only pressing us on this subject because of the importance it had in the organization of defence industries, but he recognized that it might conceivably have a wider and more lasting importance, for the purely economic advantages of a direct trucking route would, of course, still be valid in peace-time. He hoped, therefore, that we could consider their request both in its immediate terms and as related to the desire of both countries to facilitate simpler and easier border traffic.

1. This morning at the request of Colonel Gibson, Minister of National Revenue, I attended a meeting in his office called at the request of representatives of the members of certain railway unions interested in the question of trucking in bond across Western Ontario. In addition to the representatives of the unions, the following were present:

The Honourable Humphrey Mitchell
The Honourable J.E. Michaud
Mr. David Sim,¹⁸³ and
Mr. P.L. Young.¹⁸⁴

2. The Labour representatives were particularly anxious to receive an assurance that the Government would not fall in with the new requests from the United States for freedom of transit of all goods — not only war goods as in the past — across the Ontario peninsula. They knew of Mr. Joseph Eastman's attitude and the efforts that he has been making to persuade the United States authorities to insist upon this right of transit. They pointed out that there are now only fourteen trucks per day travelling on this route and that the railways can easily handle additional traffic. They believed that if special concessions are made now it will be extremely difficult to withdraw them after the war.

3. The Ministers present pointed out that the Government had not changed its attitude and that before any change is made the railways and the unions will be given an opportunity to be heard. They stressed the fact that not very much information had been received from the railways operating across the affected part of Ontario, and rather more than hinted that representations from the railways, including the United States lines, would be useful in helping them to withstand pressure from the United States.

4. After the union representatives had left I had a further word with the three Ministers. They are opposed to granting any additional concession to the United States, but are afraid that Mr. Eastman will obtain the ear of the President, and that Mr. Roosevelt may commit himself to the argument advanced in the Note from the United States Minister, dated August 21, 1943. They suggested that it might be useful if the Prime Minister would take an early opportunity to have a word with Mr. Roosevelt about this matter in order that the President may be warned against committing himself without having a full knowledge of all the facts. I took it that Colonel Gibson will speak to the Prime Minister along this line but it might be useful if you were to mention it also.

5. On my return to the office I found that our reply to the United States Minister's Note, dated September 20,[†] had not been despatched. I sent copies of our reply by hand to Colonel Gibson, Mr. Michaud and Mr. Mitchell and asked them to let me know whether they approved of the terms in which it was drafted.¹⁸⁵

Ottawa, October 16, 1943

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the proposals made in your Note of August 21, 1943, No. 7, and in the attached letter from the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation, for a liberalization of the present regulations governing the trucking of war materials in bond through Ontario, have been given careful consideration by the interested agencies of the Canadian Government.

2. With reference to Mr. Eastman's suggestion that the present regulations should be amended to permit all types of traffic, including mixed loads, I have been directed to call your attention to the fact that at the conference of United States and Canadian Government officials which preceded the adoption of these regulations this question was discussed at some length. It was agreed at that time that, although the term "war materials" would be used in the Order in Council authorizing the movement, in the administration of the Order the Canadian Customs Branch would permit the passage of trucks carrying mixed loads, provided that war materials formed 75% of the load. The regulations have been administered in that spirit. In the event, no full load of merchandise of any description has been rejected at the frontier. All loads offering have been allowed to proceed, although it has been necessary in some cases to call to the attention of trucking companies the fact that they were not living up to the spirit and intent of the regulations in that only a very small portion of certain loads represented war materials as contemplated in the regulations. The Canadian Government, therefore, feels that the regulations at present in effect, and as administered, offer full facilities for the transportation of war materials in bond through the Province of Ontario.

¹⁸⁵ La note suivante était écrite sur ce mémorandum:

I'm not sure we're right in fighting this concession so hard - however, I don't really know enough about what's involved to hold any strong view on the question. N. A. R[OBERTSON]

3. While it has been represented to the United States Government that only twenty-five loads per day are being moved under this arrangement, the Canadian Customs Branch reports that during the months of July and August last (the peak months of the movement) the average number of trips daily at the two ports chiefly used was fourteen at Windsor and twelve at Fort Erie, and this despite the fact that thirteen of the largest trucking companies in the United States now enjoy and operate under this privilege. Even if the regulations were broadened to permit the movement of merchandise of all kinds, it is very doubtful whether the other trucking companies which might take advantage of this privilege and who could use the route would be able to increase the number to one hundred trips per day.

4. With respect to paragraph four of Mr. Eastman's letter, I am advised by the Minister of Munitions and Supply and the Minister of National Revenue that there would be no difficulty in arranging for stocks of parts manufactured in the United States to be stationed at points along the route. The necessary steps will be taken if the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation will advise at what point or points these parts should be made available.

5. Regarding the purchase of gasoline, the Oil Controller states that he has no information, nor have the United States Government inspectors travelling the route made any reports to him, which would indicate that trucks operating under the present regulations have experienced any difficulty through shortages of gasoline. Up to the present it has been the practice for these trucks to carry all the gasoline required for the full trip. The Oil Controller has arranged that, should the trucks become involved in an accident and lose their supplies of gasoline, a sufficient quantity of gasoline can be made available to permit them to proceed to their destination. In such a contingency the truck driver notifies the nearest Provincial Police officer who, in turn, gets in touch with the Oil Controller. If it should be considered advisable to permit United States trucks to purchase gasoline in Ontario, it would be necessary to obtain the concurrence of the Provincial Department of Highways, since under present arrangements between that Department and the Oil Controller gasoline cannot be supplied to any motor vehicle from the United States which does not carry an Ontario license plate. It is felt, however, that experience to date does not demonstrate the need for Canadian sources of gasoline supplies for these trucks.

6. The Canadian Government would have no objection to the initiation of direct consultation between the appropriate officials of the two Governments with respect to the minor difficulties alluded to in paragraph five of Mr. Eastman's letter.

MR. SCOTT said he had come to Ottawa to discuss with Canadian officials the possibility of liberalizing the existing regulations pertaining to the movement of United States goods by truck through Ontario. He said that Mr. Eastman, Director of ODT, hopes that the Canadian authorities would find it possible to remove certain restrictions which would enable a greater use of this route. The main thought in the mind of the United States Transportation authorities is the conservation of the existing trucks and tires. Trucks are now handling about 18% of the total freight movement in the United States and are therefore an extremely important factor in the transportation situation. Everything possible must be done to conserve the existing supply of trucks and to keep them running. The trucking companies have not been able to obtain new trucks for some time, the existing trucks are becoming old and the first replacements are not likely to be available until late in 1944. Hence the United States authorities regard the saving of truck mileage as very important. An increased use of the Ontario route would result in a significant saving in mileage.

MR. SCOTT said that the United States authorities had no complaint to make with respect to the treatment accorded under the existing regulations. The restrictions of the movement to "war materials" was being liberally interpreted. Nevertheless there is an impediment against any efforts to obtain a greater use of this route owing to the increasing difficulty of distinguishing between "war materials" and non-war materials. At present, 65% of the total freight movement in the United States is directly related to the war effort and another 30% is indirectly related to war or is essential for the maintenance of the civilian economy. Only about 5% is doubtful. Consequently very nearly the whole of the present freight movement is essential in one way or another. It would be very helpful if the definition which is applied to the Ontario highway route could be broadened to something like "materials necessary for the prosecution of the war or essential for the maintenance of the civilian economy." Furthermore, owing to the great importance of conserving the existing highway transportation facilities, the United States authorities would regard the trucks themselves as "war materials."

MR. SCOTT informed the meeting that Mr. Brown, former head of OPA, who represented certain associations of railway employees had made some objections to Mr. Eastman against the liberalization of the conditions governing the use of the Ontario highway route. Mr. Brown's clients feared that such a move would result in a diversion of freight from the railways. Mr. Eastman assured Mr. Brown that this would not happen. No traffic beyond that already carried by trucks is involved. It is simply a question of changing from the longer to the shorter route for the purpose of saving mileage. There would be no changes in rates and hence no direct incentive for diversion. Any saving in cost would accrue to the truckers who are badly in need of it. It has been suggested that the railways are in a position to handle any freight which needs to be moved across Ontario. It is felt, however, that the railways as a whole are now operating to full capacity. Any additional cars and locomotives which might be used for the Ontario short-cut are badly needed elsewhere, i.e. for the carriage of grain. There is an overall shortage of rolling stock. One of the main considerations in the minds of the railway employees is the possible effect of the truck movement upon the position of the railways with respect to the post-war period. MR. SCOTT said that the United States authorities would be agreeable to any limitations which might be desired with respect to the post-war situation. The United States authorities are considering this arrangement as purely a wartime matter.

MAJOR KELLER added that the War Department also regards the conservation of trucks and tires as an urgent matter and therefore is anxious to support any efforts to obtain a saving of mileage by the fullest possible use of the shorter Ontario route.

MR. YOUNG described the experience with this movement during the past year. It is clear from the instructions to the Canadian customs officers that there was no intention to take a narrow attitude. The reverse is true. Not one United States truck has been refused admission because of the merchandise carried although a considerable amount of miscellaneous freight was included which could not be regarded as "war material." There was one case of a full truckload of magazines and several others where full loads of liquor were carried. Even in these instances the trucks were admitted but certain warnings were given to the companies concerned. In view of this liberal interpretation it is doubtful that any significant increase in traffic would follow from any changes in the existing definition of the merchandise that may be admitted.

MR. SIM said that about 8,000 vehicles had used the Ontario route since its inception. The movement had shown a steady increase and the highest number of vehicles for any month was 957. It is now running at an average of about 30 trucks a day. The information available does not indicate the possibility of a substantial increase. The instructions to the customs officers state that trucks whose loads consist of "war materials" to the extent of 75% of the total may be admitted. If, as Mr. Scott says, 65% of all United States freight is directly essential to the war effort and an additional 30% is indirectly essential, then it would seem that the existing regulation should cause no difficulty.

MR. SCOTT felt that an important psychological factor was involved owing to the fact that it was becoming increasingly difficult to give any precise definition to the term "war materials." Although a large proportion of all freight is of a "war" character an area of uncertainty arises when an attempt is made to define it. The truckers who have posted bonds are reluctant to take any chances and hence do not use the route as fully as they might otherwise do. Furthermore, the Office of Defence Transportation wishes, in the future, to direct truckers to use the Ontario short-cut. If that is done, there is little doubt that the traffic could be increased to an average of something like 100 trucks a day. However, ODT is hesitant to give such directions under the present regulations. If trucks which are directed over the Ontario route are held up at the Canadian border owing to differences of opinion regarding the "war material" content of the loads, a conflict would arise between the governmental authorities of the two countries. It is clearly desirable that this should be avoided.

MR. SIM thought that the psychological factor and the desirability of avoiding conflicting instructions to the truckers are matters of substance to which due regard will be given by the Canadian authorities in their consideration of the United States request. The implications of this movement with respect to the Canadian practice of not permitting truck transportation of bonded goods is one of the important factors affecting this question. Owing to the great importance of the railways in the Canadian economy, the Canadian authorities must also take into account the possible effects upon the railways and railway employees, particularly with reference to the post-war period.

MR. SIM expressed appreciation of the manner in which the United States representatives presented their proposals and said that he would prepare a report of the discussion for his Minister. It is probable that the Minister would wish to have the matter considered by Cabinet. The United States authorities will be informed of the decision in due course through the Department of External Affairs.¹⁸⁶

*Mémoire du sous-ministre du Revenu national

Memorandum from Deputy Minister of National Revenue (Customs and Excise) to Minister of National Revenue

Ottawa, December 30, 1943

Order in Council P.C. 6129 of 16th July, 1942, granted authority for the duration of the present war for the transportation of war materials in bond by motor vehicle through the Province of Ontario under regulations which you have prescribed, as per copy attached (appendix 1)[†].

This operation started at first rather slowly, but gradually picked up until today there are moving through the Province, mainly via the ports of Windsor and Fort Erie, approximately 30 truck-loads per day. I attach a cumulative statement of this traffic (appendix 2)[†].

The Department has co-operated fully in this movement, and although many of the motor vehicles which crossed undoubtedly contained a generous proportion of ordinary merchandise, not usually regarded as "war materials", every vehicle was allowed to proceed, and only in glaring instances of clear violations of the spirit of the regulations have we written to the transportation companies concerned asking for an explanation and for a discontinuance of the carriage of such loads, in order that space might be reserved for bona fide war materials, and cautioning the companies that these violations endangered the concession which they enjoyed.

Since August last the Director of the Office of Defense Transportation, Washington, has been concerned over what he has described as a "liberalization" of the regulations governing this traffic, and on the 6th of that month he wrote the Hon. Cordell Hull, as per copy attached. Under date of August 21st, Mr. Lewis Clark, then First Secretary of the United States Legation here, wrote to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, and Dr. Keenleyside referred the correspondence to us on the 28th August last, as per copy attached¹⁸⁷. It will be observed that the main point of this correspondence was the appeal for the general carriage of all classes of merchandise instead of "war materials", which term was claimed to be too restrictive.

It will be observed that Mr. Clark proposed a consultation between appropriate officials of the two Governments. Dr. Keenleyside, in his reply¹⁸⁸ acceded to this proposal, and as a result Mr. J.G. Scott, Counsel of the Defense Transport Board of the Office of Defense Transportation, Major J.E. Keller of the United States War Department, and Mr. Clark visited this Department and interviewed me on Thursday, December 16th.

I attach a copy of the minutes of the meeting prepared by Mr. J.J. Deutsch of the Department of External Affairs, who was present along with Mr. Young, Mr. Bunker and the undersigned.

In the discussions at the meeting it was clear that the United States authorities had no complaint to make with respect to facilities afforded by the Department or the manner in which the regulations had been administered. As a matter of fact they were quite ready to congratulate the Department on the co-operation which had been extended. The point which was stressed, however, was their request that the term "war materials" used in the Order in Council be replaced by a phrase such as "materials necessary for the prosecution of the war or the maintenance of essential civilian economy". In a strict interpretation it would indeed be difficult to indicate what goods would be excluded in such a description. The reasons which they gave in support of their representations are set forth in Mr. Deutsch's minutes.

All three visitors were most explicit in their assertions that they are not interested in motor vehicle transportation after the war, but they expressed themselves as concerned only with wartime operations.

At the conclusion of the interview I advised Mr. Clark that the matter would be referred to you and that the Department's decision would in due course be communicated to the Embassy through the usual channels.

In submitting the matter for your consideration I agree with the representations submitted with respect to the continued necessity for conservation of gasoline and tires. I also agree that as production under wartime conditions expands, non-essentials are gradually being eliminated, so that most goods now produced directly or indirectly contribute to the war effort. Further, it must be correct that both in Canada and in the United States our fleets of motor vehicles must be gradually wearing out, and as their age increases we should co-operate in lengthening out their service by every means possible, including the use of shorter routes between any two given points.

The approximate mileage to be saved by the shorter routes is given in the following statement of distances:—

BETWEEN	One Way Mileage Via U.S. Highways	One Way Mileage Via Canadian Highways	One Way Mileage Savings
Buffalo and Detroit	364 miles	267 miles	97 miles
Niagara Falls and Detroit	386 miles	248 miles	138 miles
Buffalo and Port Huron	421 miles	225 miles	196 miles
Niagara Falls and Port Huron	443 miles	200 miles	243 miles

It is readily conceivable why the Office of Defense Transportation should desire to be in the position to order vehicles over these shorter routes as occasion demands, although the argument that motor vehicle transportation companies are reluctant to apply for these bonded privileges and use a route through a foreign country, through fear of forfeiture of their bond or vehicles for some minor infraction of the Canadian laws, loses some of its force in view of the broad interpretation and full co-operation which this Government has extended to this service ever since it was first inaugurated.

The possibility of danger to the revenue with any prospective increase in this business is not supported by the experience gained in the past fifteen months, during which time almost 8,000 vehicles made the through trip. There was only one seizure (for smuggling cigarettes) and there have only been 8 or 10 accidents, only one or two of which necessitated unloading and reloading in another vehicle under Customs supervision.

I feel that it would be most difficult to refuse the present request without displaying apparent disinclination to assist an Ally in plans for the economical wartime transportation of essentials, and I believe that agreement with a broad interpretation of the term "war materials" would not affect the Order in Council, which in its present form cannot be cited as a precedent for post-war transportation of war materials in bond, while our action in this respect would at least enable the Office of Defense Transportation to endeavour to effect the utmost in those gasoline, tire and motor truck economies for which they are striving.

It would not appear that it would do violence to the spirit of the Order in Council if we joined with the United States authorities in regarding the trucks themselves as "war materials".

It is my opinion that it is unnecessary to amend the Order in Council as suggested, but I believe that in view of the pressing nature of the representations, the basis of which is the furtherance of the war effort in which the two countries are allied, that it might be possible to interpret the term "war materials" used in the Order in Council along the lines suggested, broad as the term may be, thereby indicating to the United States Government our continued good faith and our continued co-operation.

I am mindful of your undertaking with certain railway interests that no change in the Order in Council would be made without consulting with them, and possibly you would wish to arrange for a consultation with them before considering further the broader interpretation suggested herein, even though it may not involve a change in the Order in Council.

AIR TRANSPORT TO ALASKA

Information has reached the Department that Northwest Airlines Inc., are likely to obtain a contract for the operation of an air service through Canada to Fairbanks, Alaska, using the facilities created by this Department during the past few years. No official request for any permit has yet come before the Canadian Government but if there is any truth in the information reaching the Department this is likely to be received at any time.

The Department has facilitated in every possible way the transit of military planes through Canada by this route, and has given full information and all possible assistance to United States forces using the route, which was built at the request of the Joint Defence Board. The introduction of a United States commercial air transport company however, to fly a regular service over the route, is quite another matter, and should receive very careful consideration before any permit is granted.

The ambition of Northwest Airlines, and to a lesser degree, Western Air Express, to be allowed to use this route have been known to the Department for some years, in fact ever since we undertook its development. No encouragement has been given to these two companies or to any other company, except Pan-American, who now operate a service using part of this route between Seattle and Juneau and thence via Whitehorse to Fairbanks, Alaska, by either the United States or the Canadian Governments up till the present. It now appears possible that the military authorities in the United States may wish to make a contract with Northwest Airlines similar to that made with Northeast Airlines for the conveyance of military personnel and supplies to Newfoundland, and our attitude towards such a service requires definition.

The whole development of this route is purely Canadian. The route was discovered, surveyed and developed by Canadian forces with Canadian money at very considerable expense and effort on our part. It seems only right that some of the benefits accruing from this effort and expenditure should come to some Canadian organization rather than that Northwest Airlines should be allowed to reap where they have not sown. In addition, no American airline company is experienced in the conduct of flying operations in the far north to the same extent as companies such as Trans-Canada Air Lines or Yukon Southern Air Transport Ltd. They have no personnel experienced in such pioneering work where the facilities common to transcontinental service in settled country are not available. The risk attending the conduct of such a service by inexperienced personnel has been clearly shown in the many accidents which have occurred during the past three months on the northwest airway, to military planes, whereas our own civil planes have operated the route for many years with comparative safety and freedom from casualty.

If the United States Government can release the aircraft necessary to operate a daily service to Alaska to Northwest Airlines, it is considered that they should be able to do so to an experienced Canadian firm now operating in these districts and who will, in all probability, provide a much more reliable service and whose personnel have shared in the development of the airway from the outset and understand the operating conditions.

An effort should be made to convince the United States authorities that equity demands that consideration be given to the claims of Canadian airline operators to undertake such a contract rather than hand it over to an American airline company which is only too anxious to extend the scope of its operation to the detriment of the Canadian operator.

It should be clearly understood that the Canadian Government has from the outset been quite prepared to grant reciprocal rights over this airway to an American operating company and has assisted Pan-American Airways in their operation over Canada to Alaska in every possible way for many years, and that our objection is to the interjection of a new competitor which has taken no part in the pioneering work and is not in the same position to give efficient service as our own operators.

Minister of Munitions and Supply to Commander, Ferry Command, United States Army Air Corps

Ottawa, March 7, 1942

Dear General Olds,

Regarding our conversation on Monday, March 2nd last, re air and ground transport facilities, across Canada to Alaska, I beg to confirm:

(1) that all existing airway facilities, including landing fields, meteorological service, radio ranges, radio communications ground to air and point to point, etc., together with all the facilities of the Department of Transport and all assistance which this department can give, will continue to be made fully available for use by the United States armed forces.

(2) that similar privileges and service will be accorded to any commercial plane whilst under charter to the United States Government and engaged in the transportation of United States Government personnel and material along the route.

In this reference, it is understood that, while in the early stages these planes may be flown by civilians, the United States will, as soon as possible, either enlist the pilots in the Air Corps or replace them by Air Corps personnel.

It is also understood that, insofar as these particular chartered planes are concerned, they will fly along U.S. airway systems to Great Falls and join the Canadian airway system at Lethbridge, Alberta, thence they will follow the Canadian Airway system via Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Ft. St. John, Ft. Nelson, Watson Lake and Whitehorse and that they will conform in all respects with the regulations pertaining to the operation of civil aircraft in Canada. It is understood that the Canadian Customs and Immigration authorities are prepared — if they have not already done so — to set up an organization whereby these planes will be handled in an expeditious manner at this point.

(3) The Department does not, at this moment, favour any proposal for the licensing of a United States commercial carrier to operate commercially on the route other than Pan-American Airways, which now operates from Seattle to Juneau across Canada under a temporary permit.

(4) The question of existing and additional meteorological and radio facilities along the route is now under discussion between the technical officers of the Department of Transport and of the United States.

Generally speaking, the Department is disposed to the opinion that the enhanced Canadian meteorological service now being established in this area will be adequate to look after all the requirements.

On the radio question, we are not yet in a position to express an opinion pending the outcome of the above discussions.

Extension of airports:

(5) The technical officers of the Department will, any time you wish, discuss with your officers the technical aspects of extensions to existing runways or new runways which you may have in mind. It is, however, I think, in the highest degree desirable that the above construction of any such extensions should be undertaken by the Department of Transport rather than by the United States Government. Our contractors are still on the different jobs finishing off the existing work and we think that any additional work would best be handled as an extension of the existing contracts.

Road from head of steel to Alaskan boundary:

(6) Brig.-General C.L. Sturdevant was in Ottawa on February 16th and discussed the matter fully with the department. All information available was given him and our facilities were placed at his disposal. Members of his staff have already been along parts of the route with our Departmental engineers.

Should it be decided to use contractors or other than military personnel on the construction, the United States will give consideration to Canadian contractors and Canadian workmen.

In this reference it is observed that there is a ceiling on wages, etc., in Canada, and that any contracts or work performed by civilians in this country will be subject to the Canadian laws governing the same.

I regret to see the notices which keep appearing in the United States press suggesting that Canada is not cooperating in the fullest extent with the United States, in connection with the Alaska Route and I hope that you, with full knowledge of the facts, will take every opportunity to discredit such reports.

Yours faithfully,

C. D. HOWE

Ottawa, April 18, 1942

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your teletype WA-386 of March 23rd¹ concerning the extension of the Canadian air service from Whitehorse to Fairbanks. I am in full agreement with your recommendation that the best procedure would be for you to take this matter up through diplomatic channels with the State Department which could then, if necessary, consult the other Departments concerned.

I am enclosing herewith a copy of a memorandum prepared by the Canadian Department of Transport which can serve as a basis for the Aide Mémoire which you will require for presentation to the State Department. The memorandum may require some adaptation in order to be presented in the most persuasive form.

Mémorandum du ministère des Transports
Memorandum by Department of Transport

[n.d.]

APPLICATION OF CANADIAN AIR CARRIER FOR LICENSE TO OPERATE AN INTERNATIONAL SERVICE BETWEEN WHITEHORSE, Y.T. AND FAIRBANKS, ALASKA.

1. Article III of Executive Agreement Series 159 effective August 18th, 1939, recognizes the principle of reciprocity in regard to international services between United States and Canada. In a subsequent Agreement, known as

Executive Agreement Series 186, signed December 2nd, 1940, effect was given to certain International services under authority of Article III, previously noted; and it was decided, among other things, that "Further decisions with respect to routes and services to Alaska to be reserved for future considerations."

2. It is considered in the public interest, that additional air transportation facilities should now be provided to serve the constantly increasing traffic between Alaska, the Yukon Territory and points on the airway system of North America, connecting the principal centers of Government, commerce and industry in Canada and the United States.

3. The necessity for establishing such a service appears from the following facts:

(i) Pan American Airways is now operating a daily service from Seattle to Fairbanks via Prince George and Central B.C. to Juneau, Alaska and thence via Whitehorse, Y.T. to Fairbanks, Alaska. That portion of the route lying over British Columbia is operated under temporary permit from the Department of Transport. The international section between Whitehorse, Y.T. and Fairbanks, is operated under a regular Canadian license. Because of congestion on its services, Pan American Airways is unable adequately to serve traffic over Canadian airlines at Whitehorse bound to and from Alaska.

(ii) The Canadian Government has gone to great expense to establish airports, radio ranges and meteorological stations between Edmonton and Whitehorse. Plans have been made for the further development of existing facilities and the addition of further facilities, on this route. Construction work and the further development of the airway is being proceeded with as fast as physical and climatic conditions permit.

(iii) The Wartime Development of the Northwest is making necessary a reliable means of communication by air between Whitehorse and Fairbanks and the nearest points where supplies and services are readily available, viz.: Edmonton and Winnipeg. The development of the Alaska Highway will centre on Fairbanks, Whitehorse and Edmonton, and it is particularly desirable that rapid communication be maintained between the latter Canadian points and Alaska.

(iv) As further evidence of the necessity for additional air services over this route it should be noted that the United States War Department, with the consent of Canada, has engaged the services of certain United States Commercial Airlines to operate on their behalf to assist in handling the large volume of military traffic.

4. It is accordingly represented that the existing traffic situation between Whitehorse and Fairbanks is such as to warrant the licensing of a second commercial service between these points; and, having regard to the fact that the existing license is held by a United States carrier, it is submitted that a license for a second service should be granted to a Canadian carrier approved by the respective administrations.

Washington, May 22, 1942

SECRET. With reference to our despatch No. 1074 of May 5th[†], forwarding copies of an aide mémoire[†] given to the State Department requesting agreement in the establishment of a Canadian civil air service between Whitehorse and Fairbanks, we have good reason to believe that the United States authorities will not concur in this request. The main reason for their objection is likely to arise from the taking over by the United States army of the civil aviation services in the United States and the consequent sharp reduction in civil air transport. This development was not anticipated when our request was made. It might help in securing later favourable consideration if we were to withdraw the request because of this change in conditions rather than await the expected refusal of the United States Government.

2. We understand that the United States Army in Alaska is now being served by a daily contract service operated by Northwest Airlines and also by a United Airlines contract service, operating at present perhaps twice a week but likely to be increased in frequency. They intend to look after all their own needs in this way and not rely on commercial services. They therefore have no interest in the establishment of a Canadian service to Fairbanks. The operation of the two contract services seems to weaken the case for establishing a new commercial service, unless the congestion at Whitehorse is still continuing as described in the letter from the Deputy Minister of Transport of April 27th[†]. Is this the case, or has the situation been relieved by the transfer of all United States military traffic to the contract services?

3. We assume that the Canadian service, if approved, would require additional equipment. If this is not the case, it might be worth while for us so to inform the State Department. While this would be unlikely to make any difference in their attitude, it would forestall any accusation that Canada was seeking additional civil aircraft for commercial services when the United States was reducing by half the aircraft so employed. Ends.

Deputy Minister of Transport to Under-Secretary of State

Ottawa, May 28, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Thank you for your forwarding minute of May 23rd[†], enclosing copy of teletype message No. 1072, of May 22nd, from the Canadian Minister to the United States, relative to the request that a Canadian air carrier should be granted a permit to operate between Whitehorse, Y.T., and Fairbanks, Alaska.

The attitude of the United States authorities reflected in this message is greatly regretted. In our opinion it is based on a complete misconception of the situation. Reference is made to the sharp reduction in civil air transport in the United States. While this is admitted, it does not appear to have any bearing on this particular service, as the latest time-table received from Pan American Airways System, Alaska Division, shows that United States civil air transport on this particular route has materially increased. Pan American Airways who, before the war ran three times a week between these points, now operate a daily service and are adding on June 1st an extra service three times a week.

The need for co-ordination of civil air transport services in the United States arose from the many competing services which exist in that country. For instance, they operate four transcontinental lines, and numerous companies compete in business between the main centres of population and industry. In Canada, this feature is entirely absent. There are no competing lines anywhere in Canada today, and the transcontinental service is wholly owned and controlled by the Canadian Government.

The operation by Northwest Airlines and United Air Lines under the United States Army Air Corps to serve military needs does not appear to lessen the pressure on the civil air services operating in that area. As an instance, priorities over Trans-Canada Air Lines were requested from Washington yesterday for passage of 16 United States Army Officers, including one lady, from Vancouver to Edmonton. These services have been welcomed by the Canadian authorities who have given every assistance in their operation, but the greatly increased construction activity in that area appears to this Department to fully justify the additional service into Fairbanks now requested.

The statement that the United States authorities have no interest in the establishment of a Canadian service to Fairbanks is quite apparent from their general attitude towards air operations in this district. In the last few days, without any reference to the Canadian Government, Western Air Express extended their present licensed operation between Great Falls, Montana, and Lethbridge, Alta., and are now operating into Edmonton, without permission, in breach of the Air Transport Agreement between the two countries. This operation parallels the present Canadian route operated by Trans-Canada Air Lines between Lethbridge and Edmonton, on which there are two round trips a day and on which there is ample space available to take care of additional traffic. This extension by Western Air Express is clearly a redundant service using United States aircraft which could be used to better advantage elsewhere, as Trans-Canada Air Lines offers excellent facilities for travel between Lethbridge and Edmonton.

In addition, it has been brought to our attention that the Civil Roads Administration are endeavouring to organize a civil air transport service for their operations between Edmonton and Fairbanks. We have therefore a situation in which, on a route developed and paid for by the Canadian authorities, there are four major operations by United States air carriers, two of which are military, and a fifth is in process of organization. Canada and Canadian air carriers who have established these routes and made possible their efficient operation have been completely ignored.

To summarize the situation, this whole area was until recently one of the most inaccessible parts of North America, and it is only because of the introduction of air services that the great activity in the area is now possible. There is no alternative means of transportation. Pan American are now operating between the Pacific Coast and Alaska and are increasing their service. A principle of reciprocity has been established between the two countries and additional transportation is urgently required. The United States have increased their air activities, military and civil, very greatly and the legitimate desire of Canadian interests to participate in such activities should be recognized. While the Pan American service gives ready access to Alaska from the Pacific Coast, there is no direct through route from points east of the Rocky Mountains, which the proposed Canadian service would supply.

Yours faithfully,

C. P. EDWARDS

Dear Sir,

Thank you for your forwarding minute of June 4th[†], enclosing copy of cypher teletype No. WA-1199, of the same date, from the Canadian Minister in Washington.

In the meantime, my Minister has returned from Washington where after discussing the matter in detail with the Canadian and United States authorities he reached the decision that, in the circumstances, it would be better not to press our negotiations leading up to a formal application for a license to operate an air service between Whitehorse and Fairbanks.

I am accordingly directed to request that the United States authorities be informed that we do not propose to proceed further with these negotiations at the present time.

I do not think the correspondence with the United States to date constitutes a formal application, but if you think it might be so construed then you may deem it desirable to formally withdraw the same.

Developments have since taken place which have caused the Canadian Government to reconsider the question. In the light of this reconsideration it has been decided not to proceed with the proposed airline extension at the present time and accordingly the Legation's Aide-Mémoire of May 5th requires no further action for the time being.

Sir,

aeronautical authorities of Canada and the United States. The third recommendation made by the aeronautical authorities is to the effect that at least six months prior to December 31, 1942, a further conference should be called for the purpose of considering a revision or modification of the recommendations.

As the war situation has made it almost impossible to call such a conference I should appreciate it if you would discuss with the appropriate United States authorities the question of keeping the arrangements effected by the exchange of notes of November 29th and December 2nd in force from year to year until the end of the war unless some special situation arises in which one of the parties considers it desirable to re-open the whole question. This prolongation of the agreement might conveniently be affected by an exchange of notes containing a proviso that a further conference may be called on six months' notice by either party.

Sir,

The Department refers to an informal communication of July 21, 1942 from Mr. R.M. Macdonnell of your Legation's staff to the Chief of the Division of International Communications of this Department, concerning the conditions under which the agreement on the allocation of air transport routes to United States and Canadian air carriers for operations between the United States and Canada, as entered into by an exchange of notes dated November 29 and December 2, 1940, may be kept in force.

It is the view of this Government that this agreement should remain in force until the end of the war, with the understanding that should some special situation arise in the meantime as the result of which either Government might wish to reopen the matter, the question of a review would be left for the determination by the two Governments.

You will observe that the above suggestion proposes keeping the arrangement in force for the duration of the war without the necessity of an extension from year to year as apparently contemplated in Mr. Macdonnell's communication. It is also felt by this Government that a provision for the calling of a conference on six months' notice is unnecessary and that it would suffice merely to have an understanding to the effect that the matter of any review of the existing arrangement during the period of the war would be determined by both Governments at the time the question arose.

I shall appreciate it if you will inform me whether the proposal of this Government as above set forth is acceptable to your Government.

Ottawa, October 13, 1942

Your message WA-2681 of September 23[†] and your despatch 2370 of the same date[†] concerning the extension of the agreement between Canada and the United States on the allocation of air transport routes to United States and Canadian air carriers.

Please discuss with the State Department desirability of our having a formal exchange of notes in which the Canadian note would read as follows:

“I have the honour to refer to the agreement between the Governments of Canada and the United States on the allocation of air transport routes to United States and Canadian air carriers for operations between the United States and Canada, as entered into by an exchange of notes dated November 29 and December 2, 1940. This agreement became effective on December 3, 1940, and remains in effect until December 31, 1942. It provides that, at least six months prior to December 31, 1942, a conference of representatives of the competent aeronautical authorities of the two Governments shall be called for the purpose of considering any revision or modification of the allocation of routes and any new problems pertaining to air transport services which may have arisen in the interim.

2. The Canadian Government proposes that, in view of the special circumstances which exist at the present time, the conference of aeronautical authorities provided for in the 1940 agreement be postponed indefinitely, and that the agreement be maintained in force for the duration of the present war, provided that either Government may terminate it earlier on six months' notice in writing to the other Government.

3. If these proposals are acceptable to the Government of the United States, this note and your reply thereto accepting the proposals will be regarded as placing on record the understanding of our two Governments concerning the matter.”

The formula given in the second paragraph of our draft note seems to me to be more precise and more satisfactory generally than the formula suggested by the State Department. Ends.

Minister of United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

No. 811

Ottawa, December 28, 1942

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

Under instructions of my Government, I have the honor to bring the following to your attention:

In accordance with the terms of a confidential contract between the United States Navy Department and Pan American Airways, Incorporated, all of the aircraft of the company now operated between Seattle and Alaska, including those being operated as commercial aircraft under certificates of convenience and necessity issued by the United States Civil Aeronautics Board, are owned by the Navy Department and are under its direct control. Under this contract both the military aircraft and the so-called commercial aircraft being operated by Pan American Airways Incorporated in the area mentioned are now being operated primarily to meet military air transport requirements, although of course urgent civilian requirements are also met to the extent possible.

Under certificates of convenience and necessity issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board, Pan American Airways Incorporated is now required to operate the so-called commercial aircraft between Seattle and Whitehorse via Juneau and from Whitehorse to Fairbanks and thence to various points in Alaska. Because of the unfavourable weather conditions at Juneau, the Navy Department has now requested the Civil Aeronautics Board to permit Pan American Airways Incorporated to operate the so-called commercial aircraft in the same manner as the military aircraft are being operated, that is, directly between Seattle and Whitehorse without stopping at Juneau, and in addition to conduct a shuttle service between Whitehorse and Juneau in order to afford to Juneau through air transportation via Whitehorse to other points in Alaska and to the United States.

The Navy Department has urged that this procedure should result in substantially increased service between Alaska and the United States which military necessity now requires.

I have been directed, therefore, to bring the foregoing to the attention of the appropriate Canadian authorities with a view to obtaining their concurrence in the proposed new procedure which would result in the establishment of a shuttle service between Juneau and Whitehorse and in by-passing Juneau on the flights of the so-called commercial aircraft of Pan American Airways Incorporated between Seattle and Whitehorse.

I should appreciate, therefore, being informed whether the Canadian authorities have any objections to the procedure outlined.

Accept etc.

Le secrétaire d'État des États-Unis au ministre aux États-Unis
Secretary of State of United States to Minister in United States

Washington, December 31, 1942

The Secretary of State presents his compliments to the Honourable the Minister of Canada and refers to negotiations between the Governments of the United States and Canada for the purpose of agreeing upon a formula for continuing in effect the arrangement between the two Governments, entered into by an exchange of notes dated November 29, 1940 and December 2, 1940¹⁹⁰, for the purpose of giving effect to Article III of the Air Transport Arrangement between the two Governments concluded on August 18, 1939.¹⁹¹

As stated in the Department's note of September 22, 1942, it is the view of this Government that the agreement should remain in force until the end of the war, provided that if either Government should desire a reconsideration of the matter prior to that time such reconsideration will be undertaken by the two Governments. It is suggested that it might be agreed that after the end of the war the 1940 arrangement could be reviewed by the two Governments.

With reference to the proposal submitted informally by Mr. R.M. Macdonnell of the Canadian Legation on October 14, 1942¹⁹², this Government feels that it would not be fair to the air transport operating companies to place them in a position of conducting services under an agreement which could be terminated within the short period of six months. Since there seems to be little likelihood of additional transport aircraft becoming available to the commercial companies for the inauguration of additional services before the end of the war, it would seem unlikely that any differences of views would arise which could not readily be adjusted by discussions between the two Governments.

There is attached a suggested form of a note which the Department might send to the Canadian Legation if the Canadian Government is now willing to concur in this Government's point of view, it being understood that on receipt of the proposed note, the Canadian Government would reply in similar terms in order that the note of this Government together with the Canadian reply might constitute the understanding of the two Governments.

of Canada for the conclusion of a reciprocal undertaking continuing in force the arrangement between the two Governments, entered into by an exchange of notes dated November 29, 1940 and December 2, 1940, for the purpose of giving effect to Article III of the Air Transport Arrangement between the two Governments concluded on August 18, 1939.

It is my understanding that it has been agreed in the course of the recent negotiations, now terminated, that the understanding referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be as follows:

Having in mind the fact that because of the war situation it was impracticable for the aeronautical authorities of the United States and Canada to hold a meeting six months prior to December 31, 1942 as contemplated by the arrangement between the two Governments entered into by an exchange of notes dated November 29, 1940 and December 2, 1940, for the purpose of drawing up new recommendations relating to the allocation of air transport routes to United States and Canadian air carriers for operations between the United States and Canada, it is now agreed that the 1940 arrangement as herein referred to shall continue in force until the end of the war; provided, however, that if either Government should desire a reconsideration of this decision prior to that time such reconsideration will be undertaken by the two Governments.

It is also agreed that after the termination of the war a conference between representatives of the two Governments will be held for the purpose of reviewing the situation as it may then exist with respect to the application of the terms of the arrangement covered by the exchange of notes dated November 29, 1940 and December 2, 1940.

I shall be glad to have you inform me whether it is the understanding of your Government that the terms of the undertaking agreed to in the recent negotiations, now terminated, are as above set forth. If so, it is suggested that the undertaking become effective on date. If your Government concurs in this suggestion the Government of the United States will regard the undertaking as becoming effective on that date.

Reference your WA-128 of January 9^t, Air Transport Agreement.

Please inform the State Department that we have given careful consideration to the views set forth in their note of December 31, 1942, enclosing the text of a proposed note to be addressed by the Secretary of State of the United States to the Canadian Minister in Washington with the view to continuing in force the arrangement between the United States and Canada concluded by an exchange of notes signed November 29 and December 2, 1940 giving effect to Article III of the Air Transport Arrangement between the United States and Canada signed August 18, 1939.

According to Article X of the Air Transport Arrangement of 1939, it is now terminable on six months' notice given by either Government to the other Government. The Arrangement of November-December, 1940 supplements the Air Transport Arrangement of 1939. It would therefore appear to be reasonable that the supplementary arrangement should be terminable on the same notice as the main arrangement. Consequently we are of the opinion that the proviso at the end of the third paragraph of the draft note from the State Department should read somewhat as follows:

“provided that either Government may terminate it earlier on six months' notice in writing to the other Government.”

You may tell the State Department informally that we would have no objection to accepting the informal suggestion of Mr. Latchford of the Division of International Communications, that a clause be added to the effect that notice of termination could be given only for important reasons and would be preceded by six weeks' discussion between the Governments. Ends.

My WA-357 of January 25th[†], Air Transport Agreement. State Department today gave us informally a proposed revision of the proposed note to be addressed by the Secretary of State to the Canadian Minister. The proposed revision is identical with the proposed note which the State Department sent us on December 31st and which you have, down to the phrase “It is now agreed that the 1940 arrangement” in the middle of page 2. Following is the text of the proposed revision commencing with this phrase, Begins:

It is now agreed that, subject to the provisions of the succeeding paragraph, the 1940 arrangement as herein referred to shall be considered to have remained in force from December 31st, 1942, and shall continue in force until the end of the war. It is also agreed that after the termination of the war a conference between representatives of the two Governments will be held for the purpose of reviewing the situation as it may then exist with respect to the application of the terms of the arrangement covered by the exchange of notes dated November 29th, 1940, and December 2nd, 1940.

Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, it is agreed that the present undertaking may be terminated before the end of the war on six months' notice given in writing by either Government to the other Government for important reasons of public policy when the conditions thereof or the actual practice thereunder is no longer regarded by the Government of the country giving such notice as being in its interests. Such notice of termination shall be given by either Government to the other only after consultation between the two Governments for a period of at least sixty days.

I shall be glad to have you inform me whether it is the understanding of your Government that the terms of the undertaking agreed to in the recent negotiations, now terminated, are as above set forth. If so, it is suggested that the undertaking become effective on this date. If your Government concurs in this suggestion the Government of the United States will regard the undertaking as becoming effective on this date. End of proposed revision.

It seems to me that this proposed revision is a satisfactory compromise.

The State Department now suggests that, if the proposed revision is satisfactory to you, there is no need to have any further interim correspondence between the State Department and the Legation. If the proposed revision is satisfactory, the formal notes can be prepared and signed. The two notes of course will bear the same date.¹⁹³

RE: U.S. MILITARY AIR TRANSPORT OVER CANADA

The Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation reports as follows:

“Normal commercial air services between Canada and the United States are governed by an exchange of notes of 1940 which it is proposed to renew for the duration of the war. In addition to these services a number of United States military transport services are operating into and across Canada. Some of these are operated by Military aircraft, others by commercial airlines under charter to the United States Armed Services.

There is no overall agreement covering these military services and some confusion has resulted. Permission has been granted for the operation of some but not for all those which are now operating. The channel by which permission has been given has varied.

It would appear that United States military aircraft are operating transport services on at least nine routes across Canada and that formal permission was not granted in six of these cases. Likewise six commercial airlines are operating special military transport services into Canada on behalf of the United States Armed Services but have not obtained permission from Canada in every case, and in some cases where permission has been obtained the routes have been varied and expanded without permission.

¹⁹³ L'échange de notes a eu lieu le 4 mars. Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1943, N° 4.

¹⁹³ The notes were exchanged on March 4. See Canada, Treaty Series, 1943, No. 4.

Moreover in the discussions of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence the assurance was given that the military services operated by United States commercial lines would be taken over by the United States government and completely militarized as soon as possible. This understanding was set forth in a letter of March 7th, 1942 from the Honourable C.D. Howe to Brigadier-General R.E. Olds of the United States War Department. This militarization has in no instance taken place and some of the airlines serving the United States Armed Forces in Canada are fostering the impression that their present war work will become a basis for post-war operations.

RECOMMENDATION

In order to avoid any misunderstanding regarding United States rights in this connection, and to clarify the existing situation, it is recommended that Canada propose to the United States an overall agreement, which could be made public, regarding the operation over Canadian and United States territory of air services by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of both countries along the following lines:

Aircraft of the Armed Services of either country may during the present war fly to, over, and away from Canadian territory and United States territory including Alaska, and may use all airway facilities which are available including those operated in Newfoundland by Canada or the United States, subject to the concurrence of the Newfoundland government.

For a period of six months, aircraft operated on behalf of the United States Army and Navy by commercial air lines may fly to, over and away from Canadian territory along the routes which they are now flying (as specified in an annex to the agreement) and may use all airway facilities subject to the following conditions:

- (a) That the traffic on the aircraft be limited to United States Government personnel and material;
- (b) That no commercial passengers or cargo be transported in the aircraft;
- (c) That the aircraft conform in all respects with the regulations pertaining to the operation of civil aircraft in Canada;
- (d) That the functions performed by the aircraft be taken over as soon as possible, and in any event not later than six months from the date of this Note, by aircraft of the United States Armed Forces, these aircraft to be operated and maintained by air and ground personnel of the United States Armed Forces.

The agreement will be for the duration and may be terminated before the end of the war by either government on six months' notice. It will have the effect of compelling militarization of the commercial lines it covers, within six months."

RE: PAN AMERICAN AIRWAYS — APPLICATION TO OPERATE TO WHITEHORSE

The Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation reports as follows:

“Pan American Airways has, for some time, operated a service from Seattle to Fairbanks, Alaska by way of Juneau and Whitehorse in the Yukon. The service from Seattle to Juneau passed over international waters and therefore did not require Canadian permission. The service from Juneau to Whitehorse and to Fairbanks was carried out under formal permission given by the Department of Transport.

In 1940, Pan American Airways requested permission to establish an emergency overland route from Seattle to Juneau, crossing British Columbia via Prince George without stopping. In view of the fact that this was a temporary request and involved merely an alteration of what had previously been a coastal route, this permission was granted but expired on May 31st, 1942. Thus, at the present time, Pan American Airways has no right to fly over Canadian territory from Seattle to Juneau, but has permission to operate from Juneau to Whitehorse and Fairbanks.

The United States has now requested, on behalf of Pan American Airways, permission to operate a “so-called commercial service”, directly from Seattle to Whitehorse without going to Juneau. A shuttle service would be operated from Whitehorse to Juneau. The request points out that the aircraft would be owned by the U.S. Navy and under its direct control and primarily concerned with meeting military requirements, although urgent civilian requirements would also be met if possible. Since, however, it is still to include some commercial services, it would be in direct competition with the service to Whitehorse now operated by Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

It is recommended that if an overall agreement regarding U.S. military air transport over Canada is concluded, it should apply to this proposed service by Pan American Airways. In the meantime, however, it is recommended that temporary permission be granted to Pan American Airways to operate the service requested for a period of six months, on the understanding that it be limited entirely to military service and that no commercial traffic be carried.”

U.S. MILITARY AIR TRANSPORT OVER CANADA

20. THE SECRETARY submitted a report and recommendation from the Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation.

U.S. military air transport over Canada was being carried out in part by U.S. military aircraft and in part by U.S. commercial air lines under charter. It appeared that permission had not been granted to cover the operation of these services in every case and that some overall agreement was required. Moreover, undertakings given by U.S. officials that U.S. commercial air lines performing military transport duties in Canada would be militarized had not been carried out.

It was recommended, therefore, that informal proposals be made to the United States for the conclusion of an overall agreement to cover operation over Canadian and U.S. territory of air services by or on behalf of the armed forces of both countries. It would be proposed that military aircraft be given rights to fly over both countries and use available airway facilities. Commercial aircraft operated on behalf of the U.S. services would be given permission to fly over Canadian territory and use Canadian facilities for six months, on condition that no commercial traffic would be carried, and that, within six months, these services would be taken over and operated by the U.S. Services.

An explanatory document had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Feb. 16, 1943 — C.W.C. document 413).

21. THE MINISTER OF MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY felt that it was very important for Canada to clarify its relations with the United States in this matter. Almost a year ago assurances had been received from the U.S. War Department that the American commercial services in question would be militarized but this had not been done.

22. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR agreed that it was highly desirable that an approach to the United States should be made along the lines suggested.

The whole problem of civil aviation should receive the serious consideration of the government at an early date, and a statement on government policy should be prepared to cover both the domestic and international situation.

23. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion approved, in principle, the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Committee as a basis for an informal approach to the U.S. government.

PAN-AMERICAN AIRWAYS — PROPOSED SERVICE TO WHITEHORSE

24. THE SECRETARY submitted a second report from the Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation dealing with an application from Pan-American Airways to operate directly from Seattle, Wash., to Whitehorse, Y.T.

Pan-American Airways, at present, had permission from the Canadian government to operate from Juneau, Alaska, to Whitehorse, in the Yukon, and on to Fairbanks, Alaska. It had also received temporary permission to operate from Seattle to Juneau over British Columbia, but this permission had expired. The new application would provide a direct Pan-American service from Seattle to Whitehorse in Canada, without stopping at Juneau. While the service was to be operated on behalf of the U.S. Navy, the application covered commercial services as well.

It was recommended by the Committee that Pan-American Airways be given permission to operate to Whitehorse from Seattle for six months, on the understanding that no commercial traffic would be carried, and that, if an overall agreement were concluded with the United States regarding military transport (as recommended in the Committee's earlier report), Pan-American Airways would be brought within its general application.

An explanatory document had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Feb. 16, 1943 — C.W.C. document 414).

25. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion, approved the Interdepartmental Committee's recommendation.

No. 26

Ottawa, March 5, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Mr. Moffat's note of December 28, 1942, No. 811, in which permission was requested for the operation of "so-called commercial aircraft" by Pan American Airways Incorporated, directly from Seattle to Whitehorse without an intervening stop at Juneau. Agreement was also requested to the proposed establishment of a shuttle service between Whitehorse and Juneau. It was pointed out in the note under reference that all of the aircraft operated by this Company between Seattle and Alaska, "including those being operated as commercial aircraft", are owned by the United States Navy and are under its direct control, and are operated primarily to meet military air transport requirements, although urgent civilian requirements are also met to the extent possible.

2. Previous to September, 1940, the Pan American Airways service between Seattle and Juneau always followed a coastal route. No permission from the Canadian Government was therefore required. In September, 1940, Pan American Airways requested the Department of Transport for permission to establish "an emergency overland route to Alaska" over Canada from Seattle to Juneau via Prince George and Dease Lake. In view of the temporary nature of the permission requested, and in view of the fact that the request was merely that planes normally operating on a coastal route should be permitted to deviate from that route when weather conditions rendered it unsafe, the Department of Transport gave Pan American Airways permission to fly non-stop (except for emergency landings or refuelling) between Juneau and Seattle via Prince George and Dease lake when the coastal weather conditions were unsafe. Permission was granted for a period of six months from December 1, 1940, subject to cancellation by the Department of Transport at any time on sixty days' notice. Subsequently, the permission was extended on the original conditions but the last extension expired on May 31, 1942. Thus, at the present time, Pan American Airways Incorporated is not actually authorized to fly over Canada or Canadian territorial waters en route from Seattle to Juneau.

3. Pan American Airways Incorporated has, however, been granted a license by the Department of Transport of Canada to operate a commercial service between Juneau, Whitehorse and Fairbanks, and the terms of this license permit Pan American Airways to operate a shuttle service between Whitehorse and Juneau.

4. I assume, in view of the facts set forth above, that the request contained in Mr. Moffat's note is that Pan American Airways Incorporated be granted permission by the Canadian Government to fly into, through and away from Canada en route from Seattle to Whitehorse.

5. The Canadian Government will shortly be proposing to the United States Government the conclusion of an overall agreement concerning the operation over the territory of Canada and of the United States of air services by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of Canada and of the United States. The Canadian Government is of the opinion that the permission to Pan American Airways which it is prepared to grant should be subject to the conditions of the proposed overall agreement. To cover the period until the overall agreement is concluded, the Canadian Government is glad to grant permission for a period of six months from the date of this note, subject to the provisions of the succeeding paragraph, for the operation by the United States Navy either directly or through Pan American Airways Incorporated of an air transport service between Seattle and Whitehorse on the understanding that neither the Navy nor Pan American Airways carry passengers, goods or mail for hire or reward.

6. In accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph all rights acquired by the United States Government or Pan American Airways Incorporated under this note shall terminate for all purposes on the date of the coming into force of the overall agreement mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Accept etc.

Dear Mr. Hickerson,

You will recall that at the last meeting of the Defence Board we found that we held differing views in regard to the alleged obligation of the United States authorities to militarize the Northwest Airlines service through Northwestern Canada to Alaska. It was my opinion that such an obligation existed, whereas you believed, and in this were supported by certain of the Canadian members of the Board, that no obligation of this sort had ever been undertaken.

Since returning to Ottawa I have been checking the file with regard to the Northwest service and, although I find that the obligation was not spelled out in the Defence Board Journal, it is very clearly stated in other documents relating to the inauguration of this service.

You will perhaps recall that the agreement by which the Northwest Airlines were permitted to fly across Northwestern Canada to Alaska was reached in a discussion between the Hon. C.D. Howe and General Olds. This discussion took place in Washington on March 2, 1942, and the terms of the agreement reached were set forth in a confirmatory letter from Mr. Howe to General Olds dated March 7, 1942. In that letter Mr. Howe wrote, in part:

“In this reference it is understood that, while in the early stages these planes may be flown by civilians, the United States will as soon as possible either enlist the pilots in the Air Corps or replace them by Air Corps personnel.”

On March 12, 1942, a meeting was convened in the office of the Director of Air Services, Ottawa, for the purpose of discussing Northwest Airway facilities. Among the participants in this discussion were the Director of Air Services, two representatives of the Royal Canadian Air Force, the United States Air Attaché to Canada, two United States Army Air Corps officers, the Controller of Civil Aviation, and a representative of Northwest Airlines. From the minutes of this meeting I quote the following excerpt:

“The route would ultimately be operated strictly as a military venture but in the initial stages the transportation would be handled by Northwest Airlines under a contract with the United States Government. The aircraft would be owned by the Government and would consist in the initial stages of D.C. 3's and later D.C. 4's and Constellations. As soon as possible all pilots operating the aircraft would also be militarized.”

A further meeting was held in Ottawa on June 25, 1942, for the purpose of continuing the discussion of airway facilities along the route from Edmonton to Alaska. Among those in attendance at this meeting were the Assistant United States Military Attaché in Ottawa, eight officers of the United States Army Air Forces and the appropriate Canadian personnel. The following is a quotation from the minutes of this meeting:

“Colonel Flynn (United States Army Air Forces) stated that the United States Army Air Corps Ferry Command is now handling all the activities of the A.A.C. and is responsible for communications and services. He explained that all United States air equipment operating in the Northwest is the property of the Army and personnel will all become Army personnel.”

In conversations with the interested officials of the Department of National Defence for Air and the Department of Transport, I find that there is unanimous agreement that there has been complete understanding on both sides from the beginning that Northwest Airlines would be militarized as soon as possible. Militarization, as used in this context and as clearly demonstrated from the quotations given above, means the placing of the operating personnel in military uniform. It also involves the removal of civilian insignia and the substitution of military insignia on the planes and on offices or other buildings.

As I said in Montreal, I have no desire to make a formal issue of this matter but it does seem to me that the time has now come when steps should be taken to carry out those terms of the agreement which have not already been effected.

Yours sincerely,

[H. L. KEENLEYSIDE]

Ottawa, March 10, 1943

Dear Mr. Hickerson,

You may remember that when we were talking in Montreal about the Northwest Airlines, I mentioned that we had been supplied with documentary evidence which seemed to indicate that, in one instance at least, Northwest had violated its undertaking in the carriage of civilian traffic. I said then that I would forward photostatic copies of this evidence.

I now enclose one photostat copy of each of the following documents[†]:

1. United States Federal Works Agency Warrant No. WAPR 31, V89, issued to Yukon Southern for transportation of D. Oakes from Edmonton to Fort St. John and return.
2. Letter of February 2, 1943 from Northwest Airlines to Yukon Southern enclosing the warrant and requesting Yukon Southern to sign a waiver form.
3. Waiver, dated February 3, 1943.

From these documents it would appear that:

1. Mr. Day Oakes submitted a United States travel warrant to Northwest Airlines, on November 10, 1942, in St. Paul, Minneapolis, requesting transportation from Edmonton, Alberta to Fort St. John, B.C. and return, but that the warrant was made out in the name of Yukon Southern.

2. Northwest Airlines gave Mr. Day Oakes ticket No. 407288, in exchange for this warrant on form No. 0-32.

3. Northwest Airlines forwarded the warrant to Yukon Southern in Edmonton, under form letter dated February 2, 1943, requesting Yukon Southern to sign a waiver form under the same date, in order that the Northwest Airlines might in turn obtain payment for the sum of $65.00 in Canadian funds.

4. The waiver form states that "a ticket providing for transportation called for on this order, was furnished by Northwest Airlines to Mr. Day Oakes, from Edmonton, Alberta to Fort St. John, B.C. on November 10th, 1942".

I have also sent copies of these documents to Lewis Clark and suggested that they might be brought to the attention of the State Department. If Northwest Airlines is actually carrying on as these documents would seem to indicate, they are doing so to the disadvantage of your Government as well as of ours.

Mr. Clark may have reported to you that a Member of the House of Commons, on Monday of this week, asked questions of the Ministry which indicated quite clearly that he had been informed by someone who seemed to be in touch with the situation that Northwest Airlines had carried civilian passengers for profit.

Yours sincerely,

Mémoire du ministère des Affaires extérieures à la légation des États-Unis

Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Legation of United States

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 16, 1943

MEMORANDUM FROM THE DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS TO THE UNITED STATES LEGATION IN OTTAWA PROPOSING AN OVERALL AGREEMENT CONCERNING THE OPERATION OVER THE TERRITORY OF CANADA AND OF THE UNITED STATES OF AIR SERVICES BY OR ON BEHALF OF THE ARMED FORCES OF THE UNITED STATES OR THE ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

1. United States aircraft operating in Canada, apart from licensed commercial carriers, fall into three categories: (i) service craft, including transport planes owned and operated by the United States Army, Navy and Coast Guard; (ii) planes operated by commercial airlines under contract to, and in the service of, the United States Army and Navy; (iii) planes operated by a contracting firm which needs to use its own aircraft to transport personnel and supplies in order to complete a construction contract with the War or Navy Departments of the United States.

AIRCRAFT OF A UNITED STATES CONTRACTOR

2. At the present time only one aircraft comes within the third category, the aeroplane of the Morrison Knudson Company, Incorporated, which has, under an exchange of letters[†] of January 28, February 1, and February 12, 1943, between the Department of External Affairs and the United States Legation, been permitted by the Canadian Government to fly between Prince George (B.C.) and Anchorage (Alaska). Any further requests of this character can be dealt with through diplomatic channels.

SERVICE AIRCRAFT

3. Two general agreements have been made between Canada and the United States covering the flight of United States service aircraft over Canada:

(a) The confidential exchange of notes of December 16, 1940, providing for a simplified procedure for the travel of public vessels and service aircraft between Canada and the United States when engaged on matters in connection with joint defence, and

(b) The confidential twenty-second recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, passed on December 20, 1941 and approved by the President of the United States on December 24, 1941 and by the War Committee of the Canadian Cabinet on January 14, 1942.

4. The exchange of notes of December 16, 1940 provides for the following:

“(1) Passage, upon local notification, of United States vessels through Canadian waters and United States service aircraft over Canadian territory while en route between United States ports and Alaska or United States bases in Newfoundland.

(2) Visits of public vessels and service aircraft of either of the two countries to ports of the other country, upon local notification, when engaged on matters connected with the joint defence of Canada and the United States.

(3) Upon local notification, flights of Canadian service aircraft over that part of the State of Maine which lies along the route between Quebec and the Maritime Provinces when such flights are on matters pertaining to the joint defence of Canada and the United States.

(4) Upon local notification, flights of United States service aircraft between points in the United States over the Ontario peninsula, including the prohibited area.”

In subsequent notes of March 27, 1941 and April 18, 1941, the two Governments set forth what they meant by ‘local notification’.

5. The paragraph on the twenty-second recommendation in the Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence reads as follows:

“The Board considered the possibility that in the prosecution of the war, situations can arise suddenly requiring immediately the further integration for joint defence of the military forces of the United States and Canada, advance preparation therefor, or the movement of military forces or equipment of one country into or through the territory of the other. The Board, therefore, approved the following as its TWENTY-SECOND RECOMMENDATION:

That the United States and Canadian Governments now authorize the Commanders named in paragraph 12 of ABC-22, or their duly authorised representatives, to effect by mutual agreement any arrangements they deem necessary for the perfection of preparation for the common defence, including, but not limited to, the installations of accessory equipment in the territory of either, the transit of armed forces, equipment or defence materials into or through the territory of either, and the utilization by either nation of the base and military facilities of the other.”

6. These two agreements clearly cover occasional or emergency flights of United States Service aircraft over Canada. It is questionable, however, whether they could reasonably be interpreted to cover continuous or permanent arrangements for the operation of the kind of air services which United States service aircraft, including transport planes, are now flying in Canada. It is understood that the routes which these aircraft are now flying in Canada are:

(1) Fairbanks to Juneau, Alaska (Permission granted by Canada under an exchange of notes of July 12 and 13, 1940);

(2) Selfridge Field (Mount Clemens, Michigan) to Cleveland, Buffalo and Toledo (Permission granted by Canada under an exchange of notes of July 12 and 13, 1940);

(3) United States to Alaska from Great Falls via Edmonton, Whitehorse and Fairbanks (Permission granted by Canada in a letter of March 7, 1942, from the Hon. C. D. Howe to Brigadier-General Robert R. Olds);

(4) United States to Alaska via British Columbia and the Yukon (Permission granted by Canada under an exchange of notes, September 18 and 19, 1940, and June 18 and June 30, 1941, but the agreement embodied in these notes lapsed on June 30, 1942 and was not renewed);

(5) United States to Alaska via the Northwest Staging Route and originating in the United States at points other than Great Falls, Montana;

(6) Fargo-Regina-The Pas-Churchill;

(7) Detroit or other United States points to Montreal (United States Army Air Services Ferry Command ferrying planes to the Royal Air Force);

(8) Presqu'île, Maine-Newfoundland-Labrador-Greenland-Baffinland-Southampton Island- Churchill-The Pas (These points are not covered by a single service);

(9) Edmonton-Norman Wells (serving the Canol Development). No record has been found of specific permission having been requested by the United States Government for the establishment of routes 6-9 inclusive.

MILITARY CONTRACT AIR TRANSPORT SERVICES

7. No general agreement has been made between Canada and the United States setting forth the conditions under which United States commercial airline companies might engage in transport service in Canada on behalf of the United States armed forces.

Northeast Airlines

8. The first request from the United States Government for permission from Canada to establish a military contract air transport service over Canada was made on January 20, 1942, at a meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The relevant paragraphs of the Board's journal read as follows:

"The Board was informed of the proposal of the United States War Department to negotiate with Northeast Airlines for a temporary military contract air transport service between the United States and its bases in Newfoundland, for the movement of military personnel, or civilian personnel directly concerned with the construction or operation of United States bases; for the movement of military mail, express and freight, and to facilitate the operation of the United States Army [Air] Corps Ferry Command.

It was reported that the United States War Department had requested Canadian approval for extending the contract service described beyond Stephenville and Argentia to serve its forces at Newfoundland Airport, to provide communications to its base command at St. John's, and to Goose Inlet Field whenever required for military purposes. It was contemplated that Canadian personnel of the categories above indicated, would be carried if desired, to the extent that space was available on the basis of a mutually agreeable financial arrangement. The Canadian members of the Board approved the use by the proposed contract service of the airports at Gander Lake, Tor Bay and Goose Inlet for the purposes described."

9. Approval by the Canadian members of the Board did not, of course, constitute approval by the Canadian Government. On January 31, 1942, however, the Secretary of the Canadian section of the Board sent a message to the Secretary of the United States section, reading as follows:

"Reference paragraph 2 of the Board Journal for January 20th, Canadian Government has approved United States War Department contract with Northeast Airlines for temporary military contract air transport service to Gander Lake, Tor Bay and Goose Inlet for the purposes described in the Journal. Newfoundland is being informed today of this action. Word is being sent direct by our Air Force to General Olds."

Northwest Airlines

10. The second request from the United States Government was made on February 25-26, 1942, at a meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. The relevant paragraph of the Board's Journal reads as follows:

"The Board was informed that the United States War Department wishes to have the necessary arrangements made for a military air transport service over the inland route to Alaska from both Great Falls, Montana, and Fargo, North Dakota, to Edmonton, Alberta, thence through Whitehorse to Fairbanks. The War Department proposes that this military air transport service be conducted either by military transport type aircraft operated and maintained by military air and ground personnel or by a contract to be signed by the War Department with qualified selected air line operators whose traffic would be limited strictly to United States Government personnel directly connected with the prosecution of the war and such military mail, express and freight as may require air transportation between the United States and Alaska and vice versa. The permission desired from the Canadian government is for the duration of the war only and is not to include the transportation for hire of commercial passengers or cargo.

The Canadian members of the Board agreed to take up this matter at once with the appropriate authorities of the Canadian Government with a view to its being approved by them.”

11. Following this approach to the Canadian Government through the Board, a conversation took place on March 2, 1942 between the Honourable C. D. Howe and Brigadier-General Robert E. Olds of the United States War Department. Mr. Howe on March 7 wrote to Brigadier-General Olds confirming this conversation and giving permission on behalf of the Canadian Government for the establishment of part of the service desired by the United States. Mr. Howe's letter reads in part as follows:

“Regarding our conversation on Monday, March 2nd last, re air and ground transport facilities, across Canada to Alaska, I beg to confirm

(1) that all existing airway facilities, including landing fields, meteorological service, radio ranges, radio communications ground to air and point to point, etc., together with all the facilities of the Department of Transport and all assistance which this department can give, will continue to be made fully available for use by the United States armed forces.

(2) that similar privileges and service will be accorded to any commercial plane whilst under charter to the United States Government and engaged in the transportation of United States Government personnel and material along the route.

In this reference, it is understood that, while in the early stages these planes may be flown by civilians, the United States will, as soon as possible, either enlist the pilots in the Air Corps or replace them by Air Corps personnel.

It is also understood that, insofar as these particular chartered planes are concerned, they will fly along U.S. airway systems to Great Falls and join the Canadian airway system at Lethbridge, Alberta, thence they will follow the Canadian airway system via Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Ft. St. John, Ft. Nelson, Watson Lake and Whitehorse and that they will conform in all respects with the regulations pertaining to the operation of civil aircraft in Canada. It is understood that the Canadian Customs and Immigration authorities are prepared — if they have not already done so — to set up an organization whereby these planes will be handled in an expeditious manner at this point.

(3) The Department does not, at this moment, favour any proposal for the licensing of a United States commercial carrier to operate commercially on the route other than Pan American Airways, which now operate from Seattle to Juneau across Canada under a temporary permit.

(4) The question of existing and additional meteorological and radio facilities along the route is now under discussion between the technical officers of the Department of Transport and of the United States.

Generally speaking, the Department is disposed to the opinion that the enhanced Canadian meteorological service now being established in this area will be adequate to look after all the requirements.

On the radio question, we are not yet in a position to express an opinion pending the outcome of the above discussions.

Extension of airports:

(5) The technical officers of the Department will, any time you wish, discuss with your officers the technical aspects of extensions to existing runways or new runways which you may have in mind. It is, however, I think, in the highest degree desirable that the above construction of any such extensions should be undertaken by the Department of Transport rather than by the United States Government. Our contractors are still on the different jobs finishing off the existing work and we think that any additional work would best be handled as an extension of the existing contracts.”

United Airlines

12. The Journal of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for the meeting of April 7-8, 1942, reads in part as follows:

“The Board was informed that as the service to Alaska which could be furnished by Northwestern [sic] Airlines (under the contract referred to in paragraph 6 of the Journal covering the 26th meeting of the Board held in New York on February 25, 1942) was not adequate to meet the needs of the United States Army, a supplementary contract for additional service of the same character was being made by the United States Army Air Corps with United Airlines. It was agreed that both contracts stood in the same position.”

Northwest Airlines and United Airlines

13. The permission granted by Mr. Howe in his letter of March 7, 1942, covers a service by United Airlines as well as by Northwest from Great Falls to Fairbanks via Edmonton and Whitehorse. It did not, however, cover a service from Fargo to Fairbanks though this service is mentioned in the note of April 13, 1942, No. 648, from the United States Minister. This note refers to the request made by the United States at the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence on February 25 and 26, 1942, for permission to establish a military air transport service over the inland route to Alaska from Great Falls and Fargo to Fairbanks. It omits reference to the fact that the permission granted by the Canadian Government covered only a service from Great Falls and goes on to say:

“Under these arrangements the War Department was to conduct this transport service either by military transport type aircraft operated and maintained by the United States military air and ground personnel or by a contract to be signed by the War Department with qualified airline operators whose traffic would be limited strictly to United States Government personnel directly connected with the prosecution of the war and such military mail, express and freight as might require air transportation between the United States and Alaska and vice versa. It was further stipulated that the permission desired from the Canadian Government was for the duration of the war only and was not to include the transportation for hire of commercial passengers or cargo.

The United States War Department now proposes to sign a contract with United Airlines to carry out a portion of the above-mentioned service. The contract with the United Airlines would, in effect, provide for the leasing of some of their equipment to the Army Air Force and thereafter for the operation of such equipment with personnel of the United Airlines in the transportation of United States Government personnel directly connected with the prosecution of the war and such military mail, express and freight as may require air transportation. The United Airlines equipment used in this service will carry the insignia of the United States Air Force and United States Air Force registry numbers.”

14. The conditions under which Northwest Airlines and United Airlines were given permission to fly over Canada are mentioned in minutes of meetings held in Ottawa between officers of the United States and Canada. On March 12, 1942, a meeting was convened in the office of the Director of Air Services, Ottawa, for the purpose of discussing northwest airway facilities. Among the participants in this discussion were the Director of Air Services, two representatives of the Royal Canadian Air Force, the United States Air Attachés to Canada, two United States Army Air Corps officers, the Controller of Civil Aviation, and a representative of Northwest Airlines. The minutes of the meeting read in part as follows:

“The route would ultimately be operated strictly as a military venture but in the initial stages the transportation would be handled by Northwest Airlines under a contract with the United States Government. The aircraft would be owned by the Government and would consist in the initial stages of D.C. 3’s and later D.C. 4’s and Constellations. As soon as possible all pilots operating the aircraft would also be militarized.” A further meeting was held in Ottawa on June 25, 1942, for the purpose of continuing the discussion of airway facilities along the route from Edmonton to Alaska. Among those in attendance at this meeting were the Assistant United States Military Attaché in Ottawa, eight officers of the United States Army Air Forces and the appropriate Canadian personnel. The following is a quotation from the minutes of this meeting:

“Colonel Flynn (United States Army Air Forces) stated that the United States Army Air Corps Ferry Command is now handling all the activities of the A.A.C. and is responsible for communications and services. He explained that all United States air equipment operating in the Northwest is the property of the Army and personnel will all become Army personnel.”

American Airlines

15. The third request from the United States was put forward in a note from the United States Minister in Ottawa of April 16, 1942, No. 653. The United States Minister wrote as follows:

“The United States Army Air Corps acting through the Air Service Command is proposing to enter into a contract with the American Airlines for the leasing of equipment to the Army Air Force and for the operation of such equipment with American Airlines personnel from Presqu’île or Bangor, Maine, to Iceland and return via the Newfoundland Airport, Northwest River and Greenland.

The equipment to be used will carry the Air Force’s insignia, an Air Force registry number and in effect will belong to the Army Air Force for the duration of the contract. Only technical supplies and personnel of the Army Air Force will be carried.

In bringing this to your attention my Government expresses the hope that the Canadian Government will give its consent for this contract military service to operate over Canadian territory and to land at the Newfoundland Airport and at Northwest River, Labrador, which although in Newfoundland territory are now operated by the Canadian military forces as Canadian military airports. It would be further appreciated if the Canadian authorities were to accord permission for the contacting of weather and range stations along the route on Army frequencies.”

16. The Canadian Government replied as follows in a note of April 23, 1942, No. 58:

“As this contract is similar to those approved in the case of the operation of Northeast Airlines to the R.C.A.F. stations in Newfoundland and Labrador, and the Northwest Airlines and United Airlines into Alaska, the Canadian Government is prepared to cooperate and to assist by the provision of landing facilities at Newfoundland Airport and Goose Inlet and by making available the services of weather and range stations along the route.”

Pan American Airways

17. The fourth request from the United States was put forward in a note of December 28, 1942, No. 811, from the United States Minister and replied to in a note of March 5, 1943, No. 26. This latter note reads in part as follows:

“The Canadian Government is glad to grant permission for a period of six months from the date of this note, subject to the provisions of the succeeding paragraph, for the operation by the United States Navy either directly or through Pan American Airways Incorporated of an air transport service between Seattle and Whitehorse on the understanding that neither the Navy nor Pan American Airways carry passengers, goods or mail for hire or reward.

In accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph all rights acquired by the United States Government or Pan American Airways Incorporated under this note shall terminate for all purposes on the date of the coming into force of the overall agreement mentioned in the preceding paragraph.”

18. Thus permission has been granted, under varying conditions, by the Canadian Government for the operation of the following military contract air transport services:

(1) Northeast Airlines from the United States to United States bases in Newfoundland using the airports at Gander, Torbay and Goose.

(2) Northwest Airlines and United Airlines from Great Falls to Alaska via Lethbridge, Calgary, Edmonton, Grande Prairie, Fort St. John, Fort Nelson, Watson Lake and Whitehorse.

(3) American Airlines from Presqu’île or Bangor, Maine, to Iceland and return via the Newfoundland Airport, Northwest River and Greenland.

No record has been found of permission having been granted by the Canadian Government for the operation of any United States military contract air transport services other than the four listed above.

19. In the light of the facts set forth above it would appear desirable that an overall agreement be concluded between Canada and the United States to replace the various confidential agreements and understandings which have been mentioned in this memorandum. Such an overall agreement, which would be made public, would regularize the operation of United States service aircraft over Canadian routes and would clarify the status in Canada of the commercial airline companies which are operating military air transport services over Canada under contract to the United States Armed Forces. The publication of the overall agreement would tend to disabuse the minds of the public of misconceptions and misunderstandings which may now exist concerning the conditions under which these services are permitted to operate.

20. As a basis of discussion it is suggested that the overall agreement be embodied in an exchange of notes containing clauses along the lines of the following:

I

Subject to such conditions as may from time to time be agreed upon between the Armed Forces of Canada and the Armed Forces of the United States and subject to the provisions of clauses III and VII of this Agreement, aircraft of the United States Armed Forces may, during the present war, fly into, through and away from Canada and may use all airway facilities including landing fields, meteorological services, radio ranges and radio communications which are available to the Royal Canadian Air Force in Canada and, subject to the concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland, all similar airway facilities operated by Canada in Newfoundland territory. No passengers, goods or mail shall be carried for reward or hire on the aircraft. The traffic on the aircraft shall be limited to:

- (1) Goods owned by the Government of a United Nation;
- (2) Diplomatic mail of the Government of a United Nation; other mail not destined to a point within Canada; and
- (3) Passengers coming within one of the following categories:
 - a) personnel of military, naval or air forces of the United Nations;
 - b) government officials of the United Nations;
 - c) civilians, being nationals of the United Nations, engaged in and travelling in connection with occupations vital to the war effort.

II

Subject to such conditions as may from time to time be agreed upon between the Armed Forces of Canada and the Armed Forces of the United States, and subject to the provisions of clauses III and VII of this Agreement, aircraft of the Royal Canadian Air Force may, during the present war, fly into, through and away from the United States, including Alaska, and may use all airway facilities including landing fields, meteorological services, radio ranges and radio communications which are available to aircraft of the United States Armed Forces in the United States, including Alaska, and, subject to the concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland, all similar airway facilities operated by the United States in Newfoundland territory. No passengers, goods or mail shall be carried for reward or hire on the aircraft. The traffic on the aircraft shall be limited to:

- (1) Goods owned by the Government of a United Nation;
- (2) Diplomatic mail of the Government of a United Nation; other mail not destined to a point within the United States including Alaska; and
- (3) Passengers coming within one of the following categories:
 - a) personnel of military, naval or air forces of the United Nations;
 - b) government officials of the United Nations;
 - c) civilians, being nationals of the United Nations, engaged in and travelling in connection with occupations vital to the war effort.

III

Should the Armed Forces of the United States desire to establish over Canadian territory regular flying routes additional to those which the aircraft of the United States Armed Forces are now flying, the competent United States authorities shall first inform the Department of Transport of Canada and the Department of National Defence for Air. Similarly should the Royal Canadian Air Force desire to establish over the territory of the United States, including Alaska, regular flying routes additional to those which the aircraft of the Royal Canadian Air Force are now flying, the competent Canadian authorities shall first inform the Civil Aeronautics Board and the War or Navy Departments of the United States.

IV

For a period of six months from the date of the coming into force of this Agreement, aircraft operated on behalf of the United States Armed Forces by a commercial airline company may fly into, through and away from Canada along the routes which they are now flying and which are set forth in the attached confidential memorandum and may use all the airway facilities mentioned in clause I of this Agreement subject to the following conditions:

- (1) That no passengers, goods or mail are carried for reward or hire on the aircraft;
- (2) That the traffic on the aircraft is limited to:
 - (a) Goods owned by the Government of a United Nation;
 - (b) Diplomatic mail of the Government of a United Nation; other mail not destined to a point within Canada; and
 - (c) Passengers coming within one of the following categories:
 - i) personnel of military, naval or air forces of the United Nations;
 - ii) government officials of the United Nations;
 - iii) civilians, being nationals of the United Nations, engaged in and travelling in connection with occupations vital to the war effort;
- (3) That the aircraft conform in all respects with such regulations governing traffic control, routing and recognition as may be applicable to Royal Canadian Air Force transport aircraft in Canada;
- (4) That the functions performed by the aircraft are taken over as soon as possible, and, in any event not later than six months from the date of the coming into force of this Agreement, by aircraft of the United States Armed Forces operated and maintained by air and ground personnel of the United States Armed Forces;

(5) That aircraft operated on behalf of the United States Armed Forces by a commercial airline company shall not fly any route other than those set forth in the attached memorandum without permission being obtained in advance from Canada through diplomatic channels.

For a period of six months from the date of the coming into force of this Agreement, aircraft operated on behalf of the Royal Canadian Air Force by a commercial airline company may fly into, through and away from the United States including Alaska along routes authorized by the United States Government and may use all the airway facilities mentioned in clause II of this Agreement subject to the following conditions:

(1) That no passengers, goods or mail are carried for reward or hire on the aircraft;

(2) That the traffic on the aircraft is limited to:

(a) Goods owned by the Government of a United Nation;

(b) Diplomatic mail of the Government of a United Nation; other mail not destined to a point within the United States including Alaska; and

(c) Passengers coming within one of the following categories:

i) personnel of military, naval or air forces of the United Nations;

ii) government officials of the United Nations;

iii) civilians, being nationals of the United Nations, engaged in and travelling in connection with occupations vital to the war effort;

(3) That the aircraft conform in all respects with such regulations governing traffic control, routing and recognition as may be applicable to transport aircraft of the United States Armed Forces in the United States, including Alaska.

VI

The provisions contained in the documents listed below shall be replaced by the provisions of this Agreement and shall not be deemed to be revived on termination of this Agreement:

(a) The exchange of notes of July 12, 1940 and July 13, 1940 giving blanket permission for military aircraft of the United States to make flights over specified portions of Canadian territory;

(b) The exchanges of notes of December 16, 1940, March 27, 1941, and April 18, 1941, respecting local notification so far as these notes relate to aircraft;

(c) The communication of January 31, 1942 from the Canadian Secretary of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence to the United States Secretary of the Board concerning Northeast Airlines;

(d) The letter of March 7, 1942 from the Honourable C. D. Howe to Brigadier-General Robert E. Olds;

(e) The exchange of notes of April 16, and April 23, 1942, concerning American Airlines;

(f) The exchange of notes of December 28, 1942 and March 5, 1943, concerning Pan American Airways, Incorporated.

The provisions of this Agreement are supplementary to, and do not replace any arrangements which may have been made or which may be made consequent upon the adoption by both Governments of the 22nd Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

VII

Notwithstanding the provisions of clauses I and II of this Agreement, this Agreement may be terminated at any time on six months' notice given in writing by either Government to the other Government.

VIII

All rights acquired by either Government under this Agreement shall terminate for all purposes at the end of the present war.

IX

This Agreement comes into force on the day of, 1943.

CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, March 16, 1943

STATEMENT MADE BY MR. ROBERTSON IN HANDING TO MR.
LEWIS CLARK, UNITED STATES CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES, ON MARCH 16, THE MEMORANDUM OF MARCH 16 PROPOSING
THE OVERALL AGREEMENT ON FLIGHTS OF MILITARY AND SEMI-MILITARY AIRCRAFT

1. "The purpose of the proposed agreement is to clarify and consolidate arrangements which have previously been made between Canada and the United States concerning the operation of military and semi-military aircraft. To some extent what we are proposing is that the conditions under which Northwest Airlines were given permission to operate in Canada and which were set forth in Mr. Howe's letter of March 7, 1942, should be generalized, made more specific and enforced. The chief condition laid down a year ago for the operation of Northwest Airlines in Canada was that its service would be militarized as soon as possible. The purpose of militarization from our point of view is to ensure that there is no possibility of a company which is operating aircraft in Canada on behalf of the United States Armed Forces acquiring any presumptive right to operate a normal commercial service in Canada after the war. From our point of view serious practical and political difficulties result from the operation in Canada during the war of air services by United States commercial airline companies on behalf of the United States Armed Forces when these companies are operating over routes which are likely to be commercial routes after the war.

2. We realize that there may be practical difficulties in the way of militarization and we are therefore willing to discuss on its merits any alternative proposal which the United States may care to put forward which would achieve the objectives which we have in mind. The important thing from our point of view is to ensure that neither the airline companies nor the public in either Canada or the United States is under any misapprehension about the present position.

3. We consider this clarification of the status of the military and semi-military lines to be an essential prerequisite to any discussions which we might have with the United States Government on the general question of post-war international air transport.

Ottawa, March 16, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL. Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference my despatch No. 262 of March 16[†] concerning the proposed overall agreement with the United States on the subject of the operation over the territory of Canada and of the United States of air services by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States or the Royal Canadian Air Force.

1. Under cover of my despatch under reference I sent you four copies of a memorandum which I gave this afternoon to the United States Chargé d'Affaires and suggested that you keep one for your files and give the other three to the State Department. Mr. Hickerson has had some discussion with Mr. Lewis Clark about the proposed overall agreement and he would probably be the best person to leave the three copies of the memorandum with.

2. When you are leaving the memorandum with him you might make some of the points which I made to Mr. Lewis Clark this afternoon. I said that the purpose of the proposed agreement was to consolidate, clarify and codify arrangements which had previously been made between Canada and the United States concerning the operation of these military and semi-military aircraft. To some extent what we were proposing was that the conditions under which Northwest Airlines had been permitted to operate in Canada and which were set forth in Mr. Howe's letter of March 7, 1942, should be generalized, made more specific and enforced. The chief condition laid down a year ago for the operation of Northwest Airlines in Canada was that its service would be militarized as soon as possible. The purpose of militarization from our point of view is to ensure that there is no possibility of a company which is operating aircraft in Canada on behalf of the United States Armed Forces acquiring any presumptive right to operate a normal commercial service in Canada after the war. From our point of view serious practical and political difficulties result from the operation in Canada during the war of air services by United States commercial airline companies on behalf of the United States Armed Forces when these companies are operating over routes which are likely to be commercial routes after the war.

3. We realize that there may be practical difficulties in the way of militarization and we are therefore willing to discuss on its merits any alternative proposal which the United States may care to put forward which would achieve the objectives which we have in mind. The important thing from our point of view is to ensure that neither the airline companies nor the public in either Canada or the United States is under any misapprehension about the present position.

4. In conclusion I emphasized that we considered this clarification of the status of these military and semi-military lines to be an essential prerequisite to any discussions which we might have with the United States Government on the general question of post-war international air transport. We must first remove the present ambiguities before we went [sic] on to discuss future plans.

Ottawa, March 18, 1943

Sir,

You will recall that the United States Committee of the Joint Economic Committees (Canada-United States) at their meeting of February 10, 1943, discussed the desirability of their undertaking a study of "United States-Canadian airway cooperation".

2. This question was brought to the attention of the Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation at its meeting of March 11. The outline of the United States study[†] was presented to the Committee along with requests for certain information which had been received from the United States Committee through you. (Your messages WA-891 of February 25[†] and WA-974 of March 2[†]).

3. I would summarize our present position as follows:

a. A United States Government agency which wishes to make a study of a Canadian problem or a problem in Canadian-United States relations does not, of course, need the consent of the Canadian Government. In view of the general nature of the relations between the two governments, the Canadian Government is always willing to give to United States Government agencies such factual information about Canada and Canadian problems as is appropriate in the circumstances. Special considerations, however, arise when it is proposed that a study of some aspect of Canadian-United States relations be undertaken by the United States Section of a Joint Canadian-United States committee since there is always the possibility that such a study, even though it is a purely national study, may by the very nature of its sponsorship be misconstrued as an international study with the result that the Canadian Section of the Committee may be held responsible by public opinion for a study in which it has not participated. Therefore, as a general rule national studies of a problem in Canadian-United States relations should be carried on by national bodies not connected with a joint Canadian-United States body and joint studies should be carried on under the auspices of joint organizations.

b. There has been in existence in Ottawa for the past nine months an Interdepartmental Committee set up by the War Committee of the Cabinet to advise it on questions of post-war international air transport. So far as Canada is concerned, studies in the field of international air transport should ordinarily, therefore, be carried out under the supervision of this Interdepartmental Committee. The Interdepartmental Committee keeps other interested agencies of the Canadian Government informed of the progress of the studies which it is making.

c. The most convenient method of communication between Canadian Government agencies and United States Government agencies is through the appropriate Legation. A teletype service is in existence between the Canadian Legation and the Department of External Affairs and this service can be used for the transmission of secret communications between the Governments of Canada and of the United States. Moreover, the use of this channel means that the Legation in Washington is kept fully in touch with developments.

d. The outline of studies submitted to [sic] the United States Committee is clearly not intended to be a final outline. The subheadings, for example, under the heading "Wartime Difficulties" in section III are in places obscure in meaning and a number of other examples of wartime difficulties could be added. Moreover, a number of additional post-war alternatives could be listed under section IV(D). It is assumed that the study is to cover the Canada-Alaska border as well as the border between Canada and the United States proper.

e. The Interdepartmental Committee on International Civil Aviation would like to learn more about the relationship between the study which it is proposed should be undertaken by the United States Committee of the Joint Economic Committees and the work of the Interdepartmental Committee in Washington which is dealing with post-war civil aviation policy. While we know that Mr. Berle is Chairman of the latter committee and is also connected with the Joint Economic Committees, we would like to know whether there is any other direct relationship between the studies being done by the two committees.

4. The question of Canadian cooperation in the proposed United States study will be discussed at the meeting of the Joint Economic Committees this weekend in Montreal and I shall write you again after this meeting.

5. There is only one other point which needs to be made at the moment and that is that, since the arrangements between Canada and the United States on post-war air transport will depend in large measure on the nature of the general arrangements made between the United Nations on international air transport, it would be clearly undesirable to agree in advance that any joint study of the special problems of air transport across the Canada-United States border would necessarily result in identical recommendations being presented to the Governments of Canada and the United States.

6. I am sending you under separate cover the following documents¹ for transmission to the United States Committee:

- (1) Act to incorporate Trans-Canada Airlines.
- (2) A map of the Northern Hemisphere issued by the Department of Mines and Resources.
- (3) Memoranda of June 11, 1942, and January 11, 1943, of the Department of National Revenue listing the customs airports in Canada.
- (4) Annual Report of Trans-Canada Airlines for the years 1939, 1940 and 1941.

7. Mr. Altschul¹⁹⁵ requested a list of military airports in Canada. We are transmitting this request to the competent authorities of the Canadian Government. He also asked for a report on meteorological conditions along the principal air routes in Canada. The United States meteorological authorities have complete information on this subject which is furnished them by us. The Department of Transport will, however, supply a further synopsis if it is necessary. He asked whether Canadian carriers have applications pending for permission to fly in the United States; the present situation between Canada and the United States concerning commercial air services is frozen for the duration of the war under the recent renewal of the 1940 agreement. We are not yet in a position to give him any information about the extent of aircraft production facilities in Canada which may be available after the war for commercial purposes but this request for information is being transmitted to the competent authorities.

Dear Mr. Hickerson,

With reference to my letter of March 5, 1943, on the subject of the militarization of the United States airlines operating under Military and Naval contracts in Canada, I have now found an additional note in our files which I think might usefully be added to the record.

When the Honourable Mr. Howe visited General Olds early in March 1942, he was accompanied by the Assistant Air Attaché at the Legation in Washington. In reporting on the conversation that took place, Wing Commander Bryans included the following paragraph (written within twenty-four hours of the meeting):

“Northwest have been asked to train personnel for two Air Corps Transport Groups (three or four squadrons each). Just as soon as possible these personnel will be taken into the Army and will be the only personnel operating along the airline. There will also be no civil passengers or goods carried by these Groups. Northwest Airways will therefore have nothing whatever to do with the airline after they have looked it over thoroughly to study requirements, and then trained the necessary personnel which are being supplied to them to form the Transport Groups.”

Yours sincerely,

HUGH L. KEENLEYSIDE

UNITED STATES AIRLINES

(MILITARY SERVICE AIRLINES IN CANADA)

In the course of a conversation with the United States Chargé d'Affaires this afternoon, Mr. Clark informed me that pursuant upon [sic] the receipt of two letters which I had written personally to Mr. Hickerson regarding the failure of the United States authorities to carry out the militarization of Northwest Airlines and the failure of the Northwest Airlines themselves to remove their insignia from their planes and offices, the State Department had taken this matter up with the United States Army Air Forces, and the latter have now sent an officer to Edmonton and Whitehorse with instructions to see that all private insignia are removed from aircraft and official premises on the Northwest air route.

Ottawa, March 23, 1943

Mr. Escott Reid attended the meeting of the Joint Economic Committees at Montreal on Saturday, March 20 for the purpose of taking part in any discussion of the proposed survey of United States-Canadian airways cooperation. Mr. Berle asked Mr. Reid to discuss the matter with him before the Saturday sessions of the Joint Economic Committees and as a result of their discussions Mr. Berle told the United States Secretary of the Committee that it would not be necessary to have the question discussed at the meetings of the Committee.

2. Mr. Reid in his discussions with Mr. Berle made orally the points set forth in our despatch of March 18, No. 286, to you and then, since Mr. Berle seemed to agree with the points, he let Mr. Berle read the despatch. When Mr. Berle gets back to Washington he will after considering the matter further get in touch with you. What Mr. Berle may suggest is a joint study on post-war airway cooperation between the United States and Canada which would be sponsored by the two interdepartmental committees in Washington and in Ottawa. Mr. Reid gave it as his personal opinion to Mr. Berle that if that suggestion were made by the United States he thought that the Canadian interdepartmental Committee would be more likely to agree if the proposed study were purely factual and did not lead up to a discussion of alternative policies or recommendations to the two Governments. He also said that it would, of course, be necessary to distinguish clearly between two separate sets of problems, the problem of flights between Canada and the United States and the problem of transit rights over Canada. Not even the most enthusiastic internationalist would want to have the services between Canada and the United States run by a world organization. The second problem, however, could not be discussed except as part of the larger issue of post-war international air transport and therefore could not be settled as a result of bilateral discussions between Canada and the United States. Mr. Berle agreed.

3. I think it would be useful if you were to discuss with Mr. Berle all the comments contained in paragraphs 3 and 5 of our despatch No. 286. It might be as well, however, to assume that the United States Section of the Joint Economic Committees from the beginning contemplated a joint study and not a purely national study.

4. We shall send you later the answer to question 8 contained in your message WA-974 of March 2¹. The answer to this question was omitted by mistake.

Washington, March 30, 1943

SUBJECT: OPERATIONS OF THE NORTHWEST
AIRLINES IN CANADA

1. Attached herewith is a report covering the operations of the Northwest Airlines in Canada. This report, I believe, presents a true picture of conditions as they are at the date of the report, not as they may have been several months ago.

2. In addition to this report, I am assured by the Air Transport Command that all planes flown in Canada by commercial companies are painted as are United States Army planes; carry similar markings, and in most cases also belong to the United States Government; — that all personnel connected with the operation of these planes, whether in the U.S. Army Air Forces or civilians, wear a uniform, and that these uniforms cannot be told apart except by a very careful inspection; — that the civilians who wear this uniform carry no markings whatsoever which would indicate that they are employees of a commercial company. Where more than one commercial company operates out of any particular Canadian field, the only distinguishing feature for the operating personnel of their particular line is a number on the back of the working uniform; each company is assigned its own number, this in order that their own personnel can be distinguished.

3. The United States Army Transport Command also assures me that, to the best of their knowledge, none of these companies are in any way transporting either personnel or cargo for hire and that they are strictly complying with both the letter and the intent of the Canadian agreements under which they have been allowed to operate in Canada. Further, that the United States Army Transport Command is most anxious to see that these companies do, in every way, live up to those conditions.

SUBJECT: REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF COMPLAINTS OF CANADIANS WITH RESPECT TO OPERATIONS OF NORTHWEST AIRLINES IN CANADA

1. Pursuant to the recommendation contained in communication dated March 17, 1943[†], to Major Samuel E. Gates, The Air Transport Command, that an investigation be made with respect to the complaints of the Canadians against Northwest Airlines, Captain K.F. Montgomery and Captain Thomas Harris made such an investigation during the period from March 19 to March 28. The investigation consisted in conferences with officials of Northwest Airlines in Minneapolis, Minnesota, and in Edmonton, Alberta; conferences with officials of the Canadian Government in Edmonton; and a physical inspection of properties in Edmonton, Fort Nelson, [Fort] St. John, Watson Lake and Whitehorse.

2. The complaints of the Canadian Government fall into three categories:

- a. That Northwest Airlines is violating Canadian labor laws;
- b. That the company by its general attitude and by placing of signs over its offices, motor equipment, etc., is indicating that it is a distinct entity from The Air Transport Command and is, in fact, an American commercial air transport company operating in Canada;
- c. That it is transporting commercial passengers for hire in violation of the agreements pursuant to which Northwest was authorized to operate in Canada.

3. As to asserted violations of labor laws, a conference was had with Mr. A.O. MacLachlan, Assistant Manager, Unemployment Insurance Commission. Mr. MacLachlan was interrogated specifically as to whether there was a single instance of non-compliance by Northwest Airlines with the rules and regulations of the Canadian National Selective Service. Mr. MacLachlan said there was not a single instance of non-compliance. His supporting letter[†] to that effect is attached as Tab A. There is also attached as Tab B communications[†] from the National Selective Service to Northwest Airlines on this same subject. In accordance with the law, Northwest Airlines presently hires all of its Canadian employees through the Selective Service Office. It has done so since the establishment of the Selective Service Office. Attached is supporting indorsement of Colonel T.L. Mosely[†], marked Tab C.

a. In determining the rates of wages being paid Canadian employees under the Canadian laws, it was necessary for the contractor whose rates were not fixed in November of 1941 to apply to the War Labor Board to have his rates of pay established. Northwest Airlines applied to the Regional War Labor Board in Alberta to have its rates of pay established. The Regional War Labor Board referred the application to Ottawa. Mr. Clayton Adams, Chairman of the Regional War Labor Board, stated that it has not been determined whether the Regional Board or the National Board has jurisdiction over Northwest Airlines. Mr. Adams stated that this point of jurisdiction should be determined within the next few weeks. Mr. Adams pointed out that the rates of pay to date had been established for only two American contractors operating in Canada.

b. Although it has not been possible to obtain official approval of rates of pay for Canadian employees of Northwest Airlines, the rates of pay presently effective have not been objected to by the Selective Service system. In fact, it appears that present wage rates have the informal approval of the Selective Service.

c. With respect to future employment of Canadians, the Director of the Selective Service system recently made a ruling that Canadians are not to be supplied to American firms except in case of emergency, for limited periods, and at Canadian wage rates. A committee has been established to determine when an emergency exists. The foregoing ruling is not retroactive and, consequently, does not affect Canadians presently employed by American contractors in Canada. Again the matter of wages to be paid must be fixed by the Canadian War Labor Board.

4. As to the complaint of transportation for hire, the investigators were unable to discover a single case of transportation for hire. This matter was thoroughly discussed with many officials of Northwest Airlines, including its President, all of whom emphatically denied that there had been any transportation for hire. Attached hereto is a letter marked Tab D, from Mr. D.J. King[†], the Manager in Ottawa, stating that there has not been any transportation for hire by Northwest Airlines over this route.

a. Attached to your communication of March 17 to Major Gates was a letter to Mr. Hickerson dated March 12, 1943, from the Chargé d'Affaires, Ottawa, enclosing a letter dated March 9, 1943, from the Department of External Affairs, Canada, with respect to an asserted case of transportation for hire. The case cited was checked both with the traveler (Mr. Day Oakes) and with Northwest Airlines. The facts indicate that N.W. did not transport Mr. Oakes for hire between any points in Canada except en route from Minneapolis to Winnipeg. Mr. Day Oakes presented a United States Travel Warrant to Northwest Airlines on November 10, 1942, in St. Paul, and was issued a ticket which entitled him to travel from Minneapolis to Fort St. John. This is normal procedure. It does not imply that the traveler is to be transported on Northwest Airlines' planes beyond Winnipeg. As a matter of fact, Mr. Oakes traveled from Minneapolis to Winnipeg on Northwest's commercial service, from Winnipeg to Edmonton by train, and from Edmonton to Fort St. John on the Yukon Southern. His return trip from Fort St. John to Edmonton was on an Air Transport Command cargo ship, for which no fare was collected. Canadian Pacific Airlines, on December 15, 1942, billed Northwest Airlines (invoice No. 11182) for this transportation. This bill has been audited and is in line for early payment as a matter of course. On February 2nd, 1943, Northwest Airlines wrote Yukon Southern, requesting it to waive its claims on the travel warrant so that Northwest Airlines could obtain reimbursement from the United States Government. As Canadian Pacific Airlines had already billed for the transportation, this letter simply was a part of a routine procedure to secure payment for Northwest Airlines. Attached at Tab E is a letter obtained from Mr. Oakes^f explaining his part in the transaction.

5. With respect to the complaint that Northwest Airlines is indicating by its attitude, signs and otherwise, that it is conducting a commercial transport company in Canada distinct from the Air Transport Command, the investigation revealed that there is no sign on the offices occupied by Northwest Airlines indicating its name, and that there is no sign on any automotive equipment or on the coveralls of the workmen indicating that they are employed by Northwest Airlines. In the telephone book, under the heading, "U.S. Army Contractors", appear the names of six or seven United States Contractors. Among these names appears the name, "Northwest Airlines". At the suggestion of Colonel Thomas L. Mosely, Commanding Officer, Alaskan Wing, this name is to be removed from the telephone book and in its place is to be inserted, "Contract Cargo Carrier". In the hangar located at the Airport, on four doors, there appears the following:

Northern Division
N. W. A.

This was put there at the suggestion of Colonel Mosley for the purposes of identification. In these various offices Northwest personnel are located. While letterheads formerly used contained the name, "Northwest Airlines," the new letterheads have completely eliminated any reference to that name. Attached for your information, as Tab F, is a copy of the new letterhead. All inter-office memoranda will contain no reference to the name "Northwest Airlines." The Northwest officials expressed themselves as completely willing to take every reasonable step to eliminate possible inference that the company is conducting a commercial operation in Canada. In order properly to conduct their military operations it was suggested that it would be necessary to leave the company name on

- a. Purchase Orders (since credit is extended to Northwest Airlines)
- b. Checks (since this is a matter of identity with respect to the bank account).

These two suggestions appear entirely reasonable and should be unobjectionable to the Canadian Government.

6. Quoted in your communication of March 17, 1943, were excerpts from minutes of Joint Board meetings and a letter from Mr. Howe with reference to militarizing this operation.

- a. As indicated in the minutes of the Permanent Joint Board, February 25 and 26, 1942, "The War Department proposes that this military transport service be conducted either by military transport type aircraft operated and maintained by military air and ground personnel or by a contract to be signed by the War Department with qualified selected air line operators whose traffic would be limited strictly to United States Government personnel directly connected with the prosecution of the War and such military mail, express and freight as may require air transportation between the United States and Alaska." Such is still the intent and practice of this Command. All aircraft operated in Canadian territory by the United States, other than those operated on licensed commercial routes, are owned by the United States Army or Navy, and bear military insignia, and all personnel and cargo transported thereon are directly connected with the prosecution of the war and are carried without charge. At the present time the War Department has contracts with all of the civil air carriers, six of which operate into or through Canada, and three of which conduct operations on the Northwest route. In addition, the Navy has a contract with Pan American Airways for service through Northwest Canada. These services are conducted under the direction of the Air Transport Command, which prescribes both schedules and cargo to be carried. The employees of all the carriers under contract to the War Department wear identical prescribed uniforms, and all of the carriers have been required to remove all markings and insignia identifying them as commercial operators from buildings, equipment and facilities, etc. on the cargo routes, and to replace them with the official insignia of the Air Transport Command. Northwest Airlines, in our opinion, has complied with every directive and suggestion given by this Command to eliminate any conclusion that it is not performing a military service in Canada.

7. From the standpoint of policy this Command has been directed by the President to make full utilization of the experience, personnel and facilities of the civil air carriers in the prosecution of the war. In carrying out the directive, the War Department, on behalf of this Command has entered into contracts with the airlines to render certain contract cargo services utilizing Government-owned transport type aircraft. In addition, the services of the carriers have been employed in training military flight and ground personnel in the operation of cargo type aircraft. It is not presently planned that any additional aircraft will be assigned to the civil air carriers, but to require militarization of these services would prejudice the successful operation of military transport services, and disrupt the commercial services of these carriers within the United States. Perhaps more important, it would fail to achieve a complete utilization of the services and experience of trained operating and maintenance personnel on some of our most critical routes.

8. It is recommended, therefore, that every effort be made to retain the permission heretofore granted by the Canadians to conduct these contract services, and that any action with respect to militarization be deferred indefinitely.

Ottawa, April 7, 1943

The answer re Northwest Airlines meets a number of the specific Canadian complaints. It would probably be impossible, however, to get a satisfactory answer on what is apparently the most serious problem, namely, the general spirit and attitude of N.W.A. They may comply with the letter of the law while still fostering the impression, particularly in the U.S., that they are in the Northwest Canadian area permanently. The U.S. reply, incidentally, does not comment upon N.W.A.'s publicity policy in the U.S.

I notice that the communication sent by Mr. Hunter (President of N.W.A.) is dated March 26th in the dossier. The Vancouver Province on March 27th carried a story that Mr. Hunter had announced that initial steps had been taken to establish an all-American commercial air route from Seattle to Alaska and thence to the Orient. This is the very type of thing that the Canadians have found troublesome.

I am inclined to think that the matter should be explored further before dropping it. I don't know that the explanations regarding harmonious relations with our Selective Service office in Edmonton are entirely adequate. As you know, these regional offices have not done a particularly good job and, while the Americans may put the blame for wage difficulties on failure of the Department of Labour to give a decision, nevertheless that does not solve the difficulty.

Would it be a good idea to send or show copies of the U.S. reply to Transport, Labour, T.C.A. and possibly Canadian Pacific Airlines, and obtain their specific comments?

OPERATIONS OF NORTHWEST AIRLINES IN CANADA

On April 23rd we sent to the Departments of Transport, [National Defence for] Air and Labour and to C.P.A. and T.C.A. and the Legation in Washington the memorandum of March 30, 1943, to Mr. Keenleyside from the Senior United States Army Member of the P.J.B.D., on the subject of the operations of Northwest Airlines in Canada. Replies have now been received from Air (letter of April 30th)[†], from Transport (letter of May 7)[†], and from Canadian Pacific Airlines (letter of May 8)[†].

There was a letter from Labour[†] which seems to be omitted from the file, but in any event it does not add much to our knowledge of the question.

I hope you will be able to find time to read the letters from Air, Transport and C.P.A., since the information given in them bears on the whole problem of demilitarization [sic] of United States lines in Canada, which we asked for in our memorandum to the United States Legation of March 16th proposing a reciprocal agreement with the United States on military and semi-military aircraft.

Air repeats the arguments which they put forward in their letter of March 4th[†] that militarization would not be in the interests of the general war effort. Transport states that while there has been little trouble with any United States operations except Northwest Airlines and that while the attitude of this company has in the past given Transport a good deal of concern, the Department has had no cause of complaint during the last few months. However, the harm done by the overbearing attitude in the early period of the operations remains and however well they may behave in the future it will be difficult to dispel the original impression. C.P.A. agrees that Northwest Airlines has changed its tactics since the early days of their flight into Canada. They add, however, that they would have yet to change their advertising practice in Edmonton; that on April 28th, C.P.A. made a check of their telephone answering service and found that it is still answered "Northwest Airlines"; moreover, all purchases are still made under the name of Northwest Airlines. C.P.A. also states that it is a fact that when Government House at Edmonton was leased, all the newspaper announcements were to the effect that Northwest Airlines were establishing themselves in Edmonton. C.P.A. draws our attention to the fact that while Northwest Airlines may not have been carrying passengers for hire, they believe that they carried a considerable number of Canadians southbound at a time when Canadian carriers had available space.

It seems to me that on this last point C.P.A. has a case. The military contract services are supposed to supplement the already existing civilian service and if the civilian service has space available it should be used for civilians; otherwise what would happen is that C.P.A. would carry passengers north since the freight traffic is heaviest going north and would have to come back from the north with empty or partly empty craft.

AIR TRANSPORT CONTROL IN THE NORTHWEST

1. THE SECRETARY submitted a report of the Interdepartmental Committee on Air Transport, copies of which had been circulated.

The report contained the following recommendations regarding control of air transport in Northwestern Canada for the period of hostilities:

1. That, in order that military control may be exercised over air transport in the whole area, the Yukon Territory and those portions of Alberta and the Northwest Territories through which the Northwest Staging Route passes, be declared a prohibited area under The Defence Air Regulations, 1942.

2. That, in the area served by the Northwest Staging Route, including Vancouver — Fort St. John, responsibility for the control of Canadian air transport be delegated to the Royal Canadian Air Force.

3. That the R.C.A.F. give consideration to the extension of their air transport operations in Northwest Canada and to Alaska.

4. That allocation of traffic, assignment of priorities, and integration of services as between R.C.A.F. air transport and Canadian civil operators should be accomplished through the medium of an R.C.A.F. air transport control unit, which would maintain liaison with the Department of Transport and the Post Office Department on all matters affecting civil air operation.

5. That air transportation to meet the essential needs of the local inhabitants be maintained.

6. That priority be given at all times to the regular conveying of His Majesty's mails.

(Interdepartmental Committee's report, July 8, 1943 — C.W.C. document 560)†.

2. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR stated that the implementing of the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee had been examined in detail by the Air Staff. The R.C.A.F. were prepared to undertake the additional responsibilities involved.

(Memorandum C.A.S. to the Minister, July 15, 1943)‡.

3. MR. HEENEY drew attention to the reference in the Interdepartmental Committee's report to the possibility of arranging with Trans-Canada Air Lines to undertake any air transport work between Canada and Alaskan territory which the Air Force did not undertake themselves.

4. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after discussion approved the recommendations of the Interdepartmental Committee's report.

Memorandum from Embassy of United States to Department of External Affairs

Ottawa, November 24, 1943

Receipt is acknowledged of the memorandum, dated March 16, 1943 from the Department of External Affairs to the United States Legation at Ottawa, proposing an overall agreement concerning the operation over the territory of Canada and of the United States of air services by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States or the Royal Canadian Air Force. The Canadian draft of the proposed overall agreement contained in the aforementioned memorandum has been considered by the War and Navy Departments of the United States. The suggestions of these Departments have been incorporated in a revised draft of this overall agreement, which is submitted herewith for your consideration. Some of the suggested changes contained in the revised draft are discussed briefly in the following paragraphs.

Paragraphs I and II of the revised draft are a consolidation respectively of Paragraphs I and IV and II and V of the Canadian draft. It is believed this suggested consolidation of the separate provisions in the Canadian draft dealing with the air services operated respectively by military and civilian personnel will not only result in reducing the length of the agreement but also is more consistent with the established policy of the War and Navy Departments to treat these air services as together constituting the integrated and unified air transport and ferry services of the United States Armed Forces and to recognize, insofar as possible, no distinction between the air services operated by civilian and military personnel.

Paragraphs I and II, as well as Paragraph VIII, of the revised draft contain language limiting the application of the proposed overall agreement to aircraft operated in air transport and ferry services. This limitation appears to be in accord with the intent of the Canadian draft, the title of which speaks of "air services" operated by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada. Moreover, in the opinion of the War and Navy Departments of the United States, it would be impractical because of the unique problems involved in the tactical movement of combat aircraft to attempt to include provisions relating to these tactical movements within the scope of an agreement primarily concerned with air transport and ferry services. The tactical movements of combat aircraft are considered adequately provided for in existing arrangements arrived at in the Permanent Joint Board on Defence Canada-United States.

Paragraphs III and IV of the revised draft contain the substance of Paragraph III of the Canadian draft, and also of sub-paragraph 5 of Paragraph IV thereof, except that before establishing routes additional to those listed in the appended Confidential Memorandum or causing any contract operator to fly over routes other than the routes which they are authorized to fly and which are listed in said Confidential Memorandum, advance approval of the Government of Canada or the United States, as the case may be, must be obtained. In addition, Paragraphs III and IV of the revised draft provide a similar procedure for obtaining approval of the respective governments in the event it should become necessary to cause any new contract operator not now listed in the Confidential Memorandum to operate air services either over the territory of Canada or the United States.

Paragraphs V and VI of the revised draft contain the substance of sub-paragraphs 3 of Paragraphs IV and V of the Canadian draft. In addition, it is provided in Paragraph V and VI of the revised draft that the aircraft and civilian personnel engaged in the operation and maintenance of these aircraft shall not bear or display any identifying markings or insignia advertising or publicizing the name of any commercial airline company. This provision is included in the revised draft as a suggested substitute for sub-paragraph 4 of Paragraph IV of the Canadian draft, which requires the Army and Navy of the United States to discontinue all military air transport and ferry services operated on their behalf by contract operators over Canadian territory within six months of the effective date of the overall agreement. The Army and the Navy consider that it is neither possible nor in the interest of the successful prosecution of the war to agree at this time to the discontinuance during the war of the air services operated by the contract operators over Canadian territory. The operation of these air services by the contract operators has enabled the Armed Forces of the United States to release many combat pilots for combat duty in war areas; and moreover, these contract operators have been required to assume important responsibilities which it would be impractical and undesirable for the Armed Forces to take over at this time. However, it is believed that the ultimate purpose of the Canadian Government underlying sub-paragraph 4 of Paragraph IV of the Canadian draft will be achieved by rendering it impossible for the contract operators to publicize their identity, and by forcing upon them the complete anonymity that goes with being an integral part of the Armed Forces of the United States.

Paragraph VII of the revised draft contains the same prohibition against the carrying of passengers, goods or mail for reward or hire that appears in Paragraphs I, II, IV and V of the Canadian draft. In addition, Paragraph VII of the revised draft provides that the traffic on these aircraft shall be limited to traffic, the transportation of which is important in furtherance of the prosecution of the war. This provision is included as a suggested substitute for the language in the Canadian draft, to wit, in Paragraphs I, II, IV and V thereof, where the specific classes of passengers, cargo and mail that may be carried are specifically defined. The military air services operated by or on behalf of the Armed Forces of the United States and Canada are operated for no purpose other than to contribute directly to the winning of the war. It would, therefore, be inconsistent with the purposes of these services to carry traffic which does not require transportation in the interests of the war. However, rather than define in the overall agreement in specific terms the traffic that may be carried, it is considered preferable to define the traffic in general terms, charging the military activities responsible for loading the aircraft with the strict duty to adhere in their loading of the aircraft to the fundamental purpose of the services. The use of general language in this instance it is believed will eliminate the possibility of controversy involving the interpretation of the specific definitions and will also provide needed flexibility.

Paragraph VIII of the revised draft expressly provides that the overall agreement is not applicable to commercial air services conducted by a commercial airline company over a route for which it holds a certificate, license or permit issued by competent Aeronautical authorities of the respective governments.

It is believed this language is in accord with the intention of the Canadian draft and is included merely to eliminate possible future doubt. In this connection, it is desired to point out that Pan American Airways has a license or permit from the Canadian Government to operate certain commercial air services over the territory of Canada, and at the same time is operating aircraft for the Armed Forces of the United States along the same route. It is assumed that those ground personnel, and only the ground personnel, of Pan American Airways who are engaged in performing services in connection with both the commercial and military aircraft are exempted under Paragraph VIII from the provision in Paragraph V which prohibits personnel to display any identifying markings advertising the name of any commercial airline company.

Paragraph IX of the revised draft is similar to Paragraph VI of the Canadian draft, except that the enumeration of the precise documents, or parts thereof, which are superseded by the overall agreement has been eliminated, and in lieu thereof, it is provided generally that the overall agreement supersedes all previous documents which are inconsistent with the overall agreement. It is believed that general language in this instance is preferable to the specific enumeration because of the possibility of omitting from the enumeration some of the documents, or parts thereof, which relate to air transport and ferry services.

Paragraph X of the revised draft is a consolidation of Paragraphs VII, VIII, and IX of the Canadian draft.

The confidential memorandum appended to the revised draft is divided into two parts, to wit, a statement of the existing routes referred to in Paragraphs I, II, III and IV of the revised draft, and also a statement of the existing contract operators together with the routes they are authorized to operate, also referred to in Paragraphs III and IV of the revised draft.

PROPOSED AGREEMENT UNITED STATES-CANADA

I

Subject to such conditions as may from time to time be agreed upon between the Armed Forces of Canada and the Armed Forces of the United States, aircraft of the United States Armed Forces engaged in air transport or ferry services (including aircraft being delivered to third countries) whether operated and maintained directly by military personnel or by American civilian personnel under contract to the United States Armed Forces, may, during the present war, fly into, through and away from Canada and may use all airway facilities including landing fields, meteorological services, radio ranges and radio communications which are available to aircraft of the Royal Canadian Air Force in Canada, and, subject to the concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland, all similar airway facilities operated by Canada in Newfoundland territory, along the routes which they are now flying and which are set forth in the attached confidential memorandum.

II

Subject to such conditions as may from time to time be agreed upon between the Armed Forces of Canada and the Armed Forces of the United States, aircraft of the Royal Canadian Air Force, engaged in air transport or ferry services (including aircraft being delivered to third countries) whether operated and maintained directly by military personnel or by Canadian civilian personnel under contract to the Royal Canadian Air Force, may, during the present war, fly into, through and away from the United States, including Alaska, and may use all airway facilities including landing fields, meteorological services, radio ranges and radio communications, which are available to aircraft of the United States Armed Forces in the United States, including Alaska, and subject to the concurrence of the Government of Newfoundland, all similar airway facilities operated by the United States in Newfoundland territory, along the routes which they are now flying and which are set forth in the attached confidential memorandum.

III

The Armed Forces of the United States will not establish over Canadian territory regular flying routes for air transport or ferry services additional to those which are now being used for such purposes by aircraft of the United States Armed Forces and which are set forth in the attached confidential memorandum without first having sought and obtained the approval of the Government of Canada.

Except in an emergency not extending for a period longer than 60 days, the Armed Forces of the United States will not cause any civilian contractors additional to the contractors listed in the attached memorandum to operate air transport services over Canadian territory nor will it cause the contractors listed in said memorandum to operate services over routes other than as indicated therein, without first having sought and obtained the approval of the Government of Canada.

IV

The Royal Canadian Air Force will not establish over the territory of the United States, including Alaska, regular flying routes for air transport or ferry services additional to those which are now being used for such purposes by aircraft of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and which are set forth in the attached confidential memorandum, without first having sought and obtained the approval of the Government of the United States.

Except in an emergency not extending for a period longer than 60 days, the Armed Forces of Canada will not cause any civilian contractors additional to the contractors listed in the attached memorandum to operate air transport services over United States territory including Alaska nor will it cause the contractors listed in said memorandum to operate services over routes other than as indicated therein, without first having sought and obtained the approval of the Government of the United States.

V

Aircraft operated on behalf of the United States Armed Forces by American civilian personnel under contract with the United States Armed Forces over routes in Canada shall conform in all respects with such regulations governing traffic control, routing and recognition as may be applicable to aircraft operated in air transport or ferry services by military personnel of the United States Armed Forces and the Royal Canadian Air Force in Canada. Neither the aircraft nor the civilian personnel engaged in the operation or maintenance thereof shall bear or display any identifying markings or insignia advertising or publicizing the name of any commercial airline company.

VI

Aircraft operated on behalf of the Royal Canadian Air Force by Canadian civilian personnel under contract with the Royal Canadian Air Force over routes in the United States, including Alaska, shall conform in all respects with such regulations governing traffic control, routing and recognition as may be applicable to aircraft operated in air transport or ferry services by military personnel of the Royal Canadian Air Force and the United States Armed Forces in the United States, including Alaska. Neither the aircraft nor the civilian personnel engaged in the operation or maintenance thereof shall bear or display any identifying markings or insignia advertising or publicizing the name of any commercial airline company.

VII

No passengers, goods or mail shall be carried for reward or hire on any aircraft of the Armed Forces of the United States operated into, through or away from Canada pursuant to the provisions of Articles I and III of this agreement, or on any aircraft of the Armed Forces of Canada operated into, through or away from the United States, including Alaska, pursuant to the provisions of Articles II and IV of this agreement. The traffic of the aircraft referred to in this paragraph which may be carried shall be limited to passengers, goods or mail, the transportation of which is important in furtherance of the prosecution of the war.

VIII

The provisions of this agreement shall not be applicable to the tactical movement of combat type aircraft belonging to the Armed Forces of either Government, nor to any service conducted by a commercial airline company over a route for which it holds a certificate, license or permit issued by the competent aeronautical authorities of the respective Governments.

IX

Upon entry into force of this agreement, the provisions hereof shall supersede any undertakings between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States inconsistent therewith and pertaining to this subject.

X

Notwithstanding the provisions of Articles I and II of this agreement, this agreement may be terminated at any time on six months' notice given in writing by either government to the other government. All rights acquired by either government under this agreement shall terminate for all purposes at the end of the present war. This agreement shall come into force on the day of 1943.

PERMISSION FOR PAN AMERICAN TO FLY FROM SEATTLE TO ALASKA OVER BRITISH COLUMBIA

On June 12, 1943, the United States Embassy requested permission for Pan American to operate over Canadian territory between Seattle and Juneau for the duration of hostilities.

2. From September 1940 to May 1942 Pan American had permission to operate on this route in emergencies when their normal coastal route was unsafe, but in actual fact they have been using the overland route for the majority of their scheduled flights. They have finally admitted this in a letter to the State Department[†], repeated to us by the United States Embassy. Since May 1942 Pan American has been gaily flying over British Columbia without any vestige of permission from the Canadian authorities.

3. The attached draft note to the United States Embassy, prepared by Mr. Reid, takes the line that the time has come to settle the vexed question of getting a Canadian airline into Alaska and that we will grant Pan American's request only if the United States authorities will allow Trans-Canada Air Lines to fly from Whitehorse to Fairbanks.

4. I am in favour of being reasonably tough at this stage if we are clear that:

(1) We have the equipment or we can get it. To ask for a route which we are unable to fly could prove embarrassing.

(2) We can put forward an application to TCA without getting into difficulties. If they are prepared to fly the route themselves well and good, but if they were intending to turn their rights over to Canadian Pacific Airlines, the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington might refuse to play on grounds of subterfuge. I should like the views of Transport and T.C.A. who have had experience in pushing an application through the Civil Aeronautics Board.

(3) We are ready to conduct a vigorous public controversy in the event that our request is refused and we terminate Pan American's present unauthorized flights. There will be an inspired howl in the United States about our putting an end to a service vital to the defence of the United States and Canada and we must be prepared to argue that the proposed Canadian service to Alaska is just as vital to continental defence as the Pan American service. Reliance on arguments about commercial reciprocity will not get us far.

5. If you agree, the attached draft could be circulated to members of the Air Transport Committee before the next meeting on December 29 and the points listed above can be raised orally at the meeting. Unfortunately Mr. Symington is unable to be present and we should submit the draft note to him for his comments.¹⁹⁷

to Ambassador of United States*¹⁹⁸

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your note No. 909 of June 12^t requesting the Canadian government to authorize Pan-American Airways System on its service between Seattle (Washington) and Juneau (Alaska) to operate over British Columbia for the duration of the present hostilities. You add that such authorization would in no way commit the Canadian government with respect to post-war commercial aviation policy. In the letter of May 28, 1943^t, which you enclosed from Pan-American Airways to the Department of Transport of Canada, Pan-American Airways stated that they requested permission on the same terms and conditions on which the temporary permission was first granted by Canada in a letter of September 18, 1940 from the Department of Transport to Pan-American Airways. This letter gave the permission for the use of "an emergency overland route to Alaska" via Prince George and Dease Lake. The permission, which was renewed on October 17, 1941, was of a "temporary nature" being limited to a period of six months; it was subject to cancellation any time on sixty days' notice and allowed "planes normally operating on a coastal route to deviate from that route when weather conditions render it unsafe". Aircraft using the emergency route over British Columbia were to fly via Prince George and Dease Lake and were not to land en route except in case of emergency or for refuelling.

¹⁹⁷ The following notes were written on the memorandum:

2. The permission now requested by Pan-American Airways differs in two important respects from the permission requested in 1940 and 1941. Pan-American no longer operates “normally” on the coastal route but operates more frequently on the inland route through British Columbia than on the coastal route. Permission is desired not for a period of six months but for the duration of the present hostilities.

3. The United States Government has requested the Canadian Government to grant the application of Pan American Airways. In transmitting the request of your Government you have added that the granting of this application would in no way commit the Canadian Government with respect to post-war commercial aviation policy.

4. This would appear to be a convenient occasion on which to review some of the past discussions between our two governments on the subject of air services over Canada to Alaska and between Canada and Alaska.

5. Under the arrangement of August 18, 1939, relating to air transport services, Canada and the United States agreed to grant to air carrier enterprises of the other state permits for non-stop services through the air space over its territory between two points within the territory of the other state, “provided however that inland non-stop services between the United States and Alaska shall be the subject of a separate understanding”. That separate understanding has never been concluded.

6. The air transport arrangement of 1939 contained an acceptance by both governments of the principle of reciprocity in the granting of rights to operate international services between Canada and the United States, including Alaska. It went on to provide that “the details of the application of the principle of reciprocity contained herein shall be the subject of amicable adjustment between the competent aeronautical authorities” of Canada and the United States. The adjustment, however, which was embodied in the supplementary air transport arrangement of 1940, which was renewed on March 4, 1943, did not cover the allocation of air transport routes and services to Alaska. These were “reserved for future consideration”.

7. For the past nine years, Pan-American Airways has been operating a scheduled air transport service between Juneau, Whitehorse and Fairbanks. For the past three years, Pan-American Airways has been flying over British Columbia en route from Seattle to Juneau and has been stopping at Prince George for refuelling. No Canadian air carrier has up to the present time operated a regular air transport service to Alaska. Thus the principle of reciprocity set forth in the 1939 agreement has not been made operative so far as Canada-Alaska services are concerned.

8. In the opinion of the Canadian government the time has now come when the principle should become operative. The Canadian government therefore requests permission for Trans-Canada Airlines to establish a regular air transport service between Whitehorse and Fairbanks for the period¹⁹⁹ of the present hostilities.

¹⁹⁹ Le mot “period” fut remplacé par “duration”.

¹⁹⁹ The word “period” was replaced by “duration”.

9. In return for this permission, the Canadian government will be glad to undertake (a) to continue in effect for the duration of the present hostilities²⁰⁰ the annual permit which Pan-American now holds to operate between Fairbanks, Whitehorse and Juneau and (b) to permit Pan-American Airways to operate over British Columbia and to stop at Prince George for refueling while on route between Seattle and Juneau.

BOUNDARY QUESTIONS AFFECTING CANADIAN WATERS
IN THE WEST AND NORTH-WEST

1. More than a year ago the United States Minister made an informal approach to the Department submitting proposals for the settlement of long-standing questions relating to the delimitation of water boundaries in the Arctic and Pacific.

2. The first question concerns the extension of the Yukon-Alaskan boundary from the low water mark to the high seas. The attached plan, Appendix B²⁰¹, clearly indicates the United States proposal, and the Canadian counter-proposal is indicated by red pencil.

3. The second question concerns the extension of the international boundary line in Juan de Fuca Strait from Turning Point 12 (midway between Tatoosh Island Lighthouse and Bonilla Point) and the high seas. This proposal, which is acceptable to all of the Canadian Government Departments concerned, is indicated on the attached map, Appendix C.²⁰¹

4. The third question concerns the Line A B and Dixon Entrance. It is illustrated by the attached map, Appendix D.²⁰¹ The United States proposal is to continue the international boundary line from the end of the Portland Canal as indicated on the map B D F. The rest of Dixon Entrance would be subjected to condominium.

A suggested proposal [. . .] is indicated by the line marked with blue pencil extending F X Y Z.²⁰² This would treat Dixon Entrance as territorial dividing it between the two countries by this line. Each country would have complete rights over the whole of the area thus delimited, subject, however, to the recognition of exclusive territorial rights within a three-mile limit. The three-mile limit is indicated on the chart.

There has been a controversy between Canada and the United States for thirty-eight years as to the effect of the Alaskan boundary award in this area. The Interdepartmental Committee, which has been studying this problem with a view to presentation of the facts to the interested Ministers, has, for the first time, reached a possible solution [. . .] which would almost certainly be acceptable to the United States Government.

5. This is a very long and complicated problem, and it was thought that there was no likelihood of the Cabinet, generally, being able to devote the time to its solution which would be justified by its importance.

6. The Minister who is primarily interested is Mr. Crerar, but Mr. Macdonald also has a very important interest by reason of the effect of the solution of this problem upon naval defence. Further, Mr. Mackenzie, by reason of his knowledge of the situation in British Columbia, is deeply concerned with a large part of this problem.

7. It was thought that this Committee, which includes representatives from Fisheries, Mines and Resources (Hydrographic Service, Boundary Commission and Administration of the Northwest Territories), Justice, Naval Services, and External Affairs, might be authorized to carry on the negotiations with Mr. Moffat (and other representatives who would be sent up from Washington). This Committee, through its Chairman, would need to be in consultation with the Ministers from time to time.

It was thought that possibly the Committee might be authorized to go ahead consulting Mr. Crerar, Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Mackenzie from time to time.

8. Upon the settlement of an accepted draft in the course of negotiation, the matter would then, of course, be submitted to Council for approval.

The United States Minister asked me again yesterday when we were likely to be able to comment on their proposals for settling the outstanding questions relating to the [de]limitation of water boundaries in the Arctic and Pacific. The one urgent question is the demarcation of the boundary waters of Dixon Entrance, the passage between the Queen Charlotte Islands and Prince of Wales Island. It appears that the Americans are anxious for a definitive agreement so that they can proceed with the preparation of their naval charts of these waters. The issues involved are intricate and not desperately important. I gather our technical people and the Americans' advisers are very close to agreement. What is needed now is your approval of our Interdepartmental Committee on the question [of] proceeding with discussions with the United States Minister under the direction of Messrs. Crerar, Macdonald and Mackenzie, the Ministers most interested in the question.²⁰³

Dear Mr. Mackenzie,

RE: BRITISH COLUMBIA-ALASKA BOUNDARY

This is a matter of grave importance to the province of British Columbia, and one which cannot be settled without full representation being made so that there can be no question about the public in British Columbia and in Canada being aware of the negotiations.

The proposal is one of great seriousness to this province, because it is detrimental to our present fishing rights, it changes the boundary line already settled between the two countries, and it also proposes to change the boundary of the Pacific Ocean, which I think is an international question and could not be settled without consulting the British Parliament at least.

I will deal with the articles mentioned in the memorandum[†] forwarded to us by you, and the proposed settlements.

ARTICLE 4

The present Boundary is clearly and definitely settled by the Treaty between Great Britain and Russia (1825)²⁰⁵ fixing the boundary line between their Dominions along the 141st meridian to the frozen ocean. If it is desirable to extend the boundary into territorial waters, the prolongation along the meridian would appear to be the equitable method. The new proposal, however, causes this line to veer to the east with an initial bearing of 24 degrees to the east from the northern terminus of 141st meridian boundary on the coast at low tide to the high seas. This new line gives added territorial waters to the United States, and it is hard to see what reason there is for such a concession.

ARTICLE 2

Article two of the proposal of the United States raises a very important and difficult question. The Treaty of 1825 laid down a boundary beginning at the southernmost point of Prince of Wales Island (now settled as being Cape Muzon), thence northerly to Portland Channel, and up that Channel to 56 degrees north latitude, and thence by a vague line not more than 10 marine leagues from the coast to 141st meridian.

After many years of fruitless discussion the boundary was settled in 1903 by the Award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal.²⁰⁶ The maps accompanying that decision show the line as beginning at Cape Muzon (Point A) and thence running due east, to the entrance of Portland Channel (Point B). (See Appendix "D")[†]. It is clear that this boundary has already been definitely settled. The United States seeks by its proposal to widen that three-mile strip to the middle of Dixon Entrance all the way from North (Langara) Island to Rover Point, whence it would be deflected north-easterly and later south-easterly to the Point D, and thence to Point B at the entrance of Portland Channel. This proposition seems to boil down to the making of a new boundary line and certainly gives the rights to fish to the United States at our expense. At present the situation is that the nationals of each country have (inter alia) the exclusive rights of fishing within their strips of territorial water and the right of frequenting, in common, the intervening stretch of Dixon Entrance to fish therein. The American proposal would shut our fishermen out from the portion of Dixon Entrance lying between the medial line and the three-mile strip along the Alaskan Coast — a piece of water they have now in common with American fishermen the right to fish.

It is a very serious proposition from the standpoint of British Columbia. The waters of Dixon Entrance are at present territorial waters of Canada under the Award of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal, which set the southern boundary of the Alaskan waters as hereinbefore mentioned. It would shut off considerable area which is now Canadian, and in which the Canadian citizens have the exclusive right to fish. This is important from the standpoint of British Columbia fishermen in that it is fished for salmon by Canadian trawlers and gill-net fishermen. The area in Dixon Entrance which it is proposed should become American waters is fished very extensively and is one of the most prolific areas for the Canadian whaling fleet. A change in the boundary as suggested in the American note would certainly deprive Canadian fishermen of a considerable area of water which they are now privileged to utilize in their calling.

Article three seems to be an attempt to divide between Canada and the United States a part of the Pacific Ocean lying beyond the territorial waters of either. The line from Tatoosh Island to Bonilla Point marks the end of the Straits of Juan de Fuca and the waters to the west thereof are a part of the Pacific Ocean — in other words, a part of the highways of the world. Such an extension of boundary, or to put it the other way, reduction of the Pacific Ocean, would seem to be beyond the jurisdiction of either party inasmuch as it is an international highway.

²⁰⁶ See Canada, Treaties and Agreements Affecting Canada in Force between His Majesty and the United States of America with Subsidiary Documents, 1814-1925. Ottawa: King's Printer, 1927, pp. 153-4.

It is obvious, of course, that the British authorities should be consulted in any such proposal.

Assuming that the proposed area is chopping off the Pacific Ocean or a line was drawn which would include a great deal more of what is now the Pacific Ocean and is free as a world highway, what would the result be if a Canadian fished in what the United States claimed as their part of the Ocean under this agreement, or if an American fished in what we claim to be our part of the Pacific Ocean under the agreement? The defence would undoubtedly be that the party was fishing on the high seas. I point this out as one of the complications that would follow.

Something has been said about Hecate Strait and our claim that it is part of the territorial waters of Canada. It differs from the Dixon Entrance in that Canada owns the land on both sides, but the United States disputes the position that Hecate Strait is territorial water of Canada. It is, of course, possible that the American request for a new boundary line along the middle of Dixon Entrance might be used as bargaining agency to obtain recognition of the territorial nature of Hecate Strait. No such suggestion is made in the American proposal.

It is hard to understand why a new boundary line should be thought of. Each country has its clear rights as the matter now stands, and a new boundary, instead of clarifying what is now clear, might raise new and troublesome issues.

As far as British Columbia is concerned, any attempt to make an agreement along the lines proposed in these documents, other than by a tribunal set up to hear the matter, would lead to a very serious situation as far as this Pacific Ocean Province is concerned. Considering the proposal advanced by the United States, and looking at the maps involved in these proposals, not one of them gives any advantage to Canada, but they do give great advantage to the United States.

If the matter is pursued any further, then it is submitted that British Columbia be represented, and that full representation must be made to a tribunal appointed and sitting for this purpose.

It is not possible that such a momentous decision can be arrived at between the governments of Canada and the United States without the procedure I have just mentioned being followed.

I might add that this is not a matter which should be brought up at all when the fullest harmony and support must exist between both countries if we are going to obtain the utmost war effort.

Yours very truly,

R. L. MAITLAND

INTERNATIONAL WATERS IN THE PACIFIC AND ARCTIC

1. The Minister of Pensions and National Health, Mr. Mackenzie, gave a copy of the memorandum which had been prepared by the Interdepartmental Committee[†], to Mr. Hart, who brought it to the attention of Mr. Maitland, Attorney General for British Columbia.
2. I am enclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Maitland, dated January 20, 1942, which Mr. Mackenzie has brought to my attention.
3. This raises a new aspect to the question. On the other hand, it seems to me that it emphasizes the point that our Committee, which was a Committee of civil servants, should be authorized to consult the primarily responsible Ministers, unless, of course, Council is prepared to give consideration to the whole problem.
4. On the merits of this aspect of the question, I must admit that I am very much puzzled. If the situation had existed in the East, we would not have consulted the Nova Scotian, Prince Edward Island or Quebec Governments. If they had intervened, I think that the Government would have pointed out to Mr. MacMillan, Mr. Campbell, Mr. McNair or Mr. Godbout²⁰⁷ that this was a Dominion matter with no provincial aspects to the problem. The question would be considered by Messrs. Ilsley, Ralston, Michaud and Power as the Ministers directly concerned with the four provinces in question as well as by the two Ministers who have a substantial interest.
5. There is another aspect of the question, namely, that I feel certain that the Eastern attorneys general would have refrained from intervention.
6. As a matter of fact, we have, during the last five years, dealt with much more important problems touching on four of the provinces on the Eastern coast. We have settled all the problems relating to the St. Lawrence estuary, all the questions relating to the Bay of Fundy, Nova Scotian coast, Northumberland Strait and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The settlements have been given a very wide publicity and no question has been raised.
7. It seems to me that the most practical course would be to invite Mr. Maitland, who is a very reasonable man, to discuss this matter. It would not be worth his while for him to make a trip for this purpose. It would not be worth-while for him to have a discussion with any of the Ministers unless they understood the questions involved. I should like to know whether you think that I should write him a letter (he is a very old friend of mine) suggesting that he come in and discuss this problem on the next occasion when he is in Ottawa. I think he will almost certainly be East for the winter meeting of the Canadian Bar Association next month.

8. Mr. Maitland's letter is a very intelligent criticism of the entire proposal made by the Interdepartmental Committee. There is no point in it, however, which cannot fully be explained, and I do not believe that there is any point that Mr. Maitland would be inclined to maintain if he knew all the facts.

Legal Adviser to Minister of Mines and Resources

Dear Mr. Crerar,

May I refer to my letter of February 9, 1942[†], with regard to the report[†] of an Interdepartmental Committee which had been studying certain questions affecting the boundary between Canada and the United States in the Western Arctic and on the Pacific.

In the meantime, with your concurrence and with that of the other interested Ministers, I had a discussion with Mr. Maitland, the Attorney General of British Columbia. I explained all of the points to which he took exception and he intimated that he would discuss them with Mr. Hart. I had thought that I might receive more definite word from Mr. Maitland, but it looks as if his interest in the matter has subsided.

Even after a discussion of the matter, Mr. Maitland was not favourably inclined to the proposed disposition of the Dixon Entrance and Fuca Strait questions. On the other hand, I think that it would be fair to say that his active opposition had abated. Further, I think that I succeeded in convincing him that it was a matter in which the province had no concern, and he was impressed with the fact that we had disposed of much more important questions affecting Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island without consulting any of the Eastern Provinces.

The question as to whether we should now go ahead with negotiations with the United States is a matter that needs to be determined by the Ministers of Mines and Resources, Pensions and National Health, and Naval Services. The United States Government is pressing this Department very hard indeed. On the other hand, the discussions with Mr. Maitland indicated a possibility, or even a probability, that the people in British Columbia would treat this matter as a subject for newspaper controversy and possibly even for political debate.

In any event, before proceeding with negotiations, I think that it would be desirable that we should have a chance to discuss and explain the memorandum with you and your colleagues. It would not be practicable to deal with these matters in negotiations unless we had some indication to the effect that they met with your approval.

I should be grateful, therefore, if you would let me have your instructions with regard to these matters. I am sending a copy of this letter to the Minister of Pensions and National Health and the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services for their information.

INTERNATIONAL WATERS IN THE PACIFIC AND ARCTIC

1. It will be remembered that the United States Government had been pressing us for a long time (nearly two years indeed) to enter into negotiations to settle outstanding water boundary questions in the north-west Pacific, at Dixon Entrance and at Juan de Fuca.
2. The Dixon Entrance question has been outstanding between the two countries for nearly forty years; the other two questions are of minor importance.
3. A statement of principles[†], as a guide for negotiation, was prepared by an interdepartmental committee[. . .]. The question was submitted to Mr. Crerar, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Macdonald, as being the Ministers primarily interested in the questions.
4. The Attorney General of British Columbia has raised strong objections to any settlement of the question, either at Dixon Entrance or at Juan de Fuca. There is no provincial interest involved, and much more important questions were settled in the east, without consulting the governments of the three Maritime Provinces or of Quebec. The questions in the east involve the St. Lawrence Estuary, the position of the Gulf, Northumberland Strait, and the Bay of Fundy.
5. It seems to be likely that, if the Government authorizes the departments to go ahead with the negotiations with Washington, Mr. Maitland may stir up trouble in British Columbia. It also seems probable that the people in British Columbia may not take kindly to any settlement of these questions.²⁰⁸
6. The question that has to be decided is whether, in view of the position taken by the Attorney General for British Columbia, we may go ahead with this matter. The United States Government has been urging it, very strongly indeed, and regards the settlement of this question as being important from their point of view. On the other hand, it is not easy to see why the United States should be excited about the question, now that they are in the war. It is not certain that they would continue to urge immediate disposition of the question, if we let them know that very strong provincial opposition had arisen.²⁰⁹

Ottawa, August 28, 1942

Sir,

I have the honor to refer to the correspondence and conversations concerning the remaining unsettled boundary questions between the United States and Canadian Governments. You will remember that you brought this matter to the attention of this Department in October of 1940, and that the tentative views of your Government were set forth in a draft note[†] which was left for consideration. The questions dealt with were limited to the water boundaries in the western Arctic and in the Pacific.

2. These questions have been carefully examined by all of the departments of the Canadian Government which are interested. I had hoped that it would be possible to go ahead some months ago with negotiations along lines which were likely to be acceptable to both Governments. The intervention of the war in the Pacific, however, has raised certain difficulties which were not before us at the time when we first gave consideration to these questions.

3. It is thought that it would be desirable to postpone the disposition of these questions until after the end of the present war. Any effort to settle them now would give rise to a great deal of difficulty in the western part of Canada and might make it very difficult to bring about a satisfactory settlement now, which could be more easily achieved after the conclusion of hostilities.

4. I hope, therefore, that your Government, after considering these points, will agree with the conclusion which we have reached here, that it would be desirable to defer the negotiations for the time being. I hope that you will realize that, in suggesting a delay, the Canadian Government does not want your Government to think that there is any reluctance to bring about a fair and reasonable disposition of these questions.

UNSETTLED BOUNDARY QUESTIONS IN THE PACIFIC AND WESTERN ARCTIC WATERS

1. It will be remembered that the United States Legation was informed that, owing to war conditions, it would be necessary to postpone the discussion of the delimitation of boundary lines in the Western Arctic, Dixon Entrance and Fuca Strait, until after the war.

2. Mr. Moffat has received instructions from his Government to say that the United States Government has noted, with great regret, the Canadian suggestion for postponement. He was instructed to call the attention of the Canadian Government to the following two points:

(1) Further delay in this matter automatically holds up the completion of the Report of the Boundary Commissioners and related maps, certain of which the United States Navy and Coast Guard Patrol authorities (and presumably also the Royal Canadian Navy) are anxious to obtain as soon as possible. In this connection the file shows that Dr. Skleton on September 6, 1940, stressed the importance of having the Customs maps on the Pacific Coast, then being prepared by the Canadian Surveyor General, conform with the views of both countries.

(2) The terms of Articles I and II of the American proposal left with Dr. Skleton on October 25, 1940,[†] were drafted with the intention, not only of settling the long-standing problem of the Line AB, but also of giving the Governments of the United States and Canada a legal basis for restricting, if and when necessary, the use, in so far as third parties are concerned, of certain waters contiguous to the coast of Alaska and British Columbia. It seems obvious to the American Government that the best possible time to reach agreement on this subject and to make public announcement of such agreement is when no interested third parties are involved as is the case at present.

3. Mr. Moffat has been instructed to express the hope of the United States Government that a full consideration of these two points will leave [lead?] the Canadian Government to reconsider its suggestion for a long-term postponement and to agree that the best interests of both countries lie in reaching a mutually satisfactory settlement as soon as possible.

4. The action in deferring the negotiations was based entirely on the fact that objections had been taken by the Attorney General of British Columbia and by the B.C. press. It is possible that the Government may wish to resume negotiations, in view of the two points raised by Mr. Moffat.²¹⁰

5. Copies of this note are being sent to Mr. Crerar, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Macdonald.²¹¹

I have the honour to refer to correspondence and conversations between the officers of your Government and of the Canadian Government, concerning the remaining unsettled boundary questions on the Pacific coast, and to propose that an understanding should be reached in the following Articles:

I

Having in mind the measures being taken jointly and severally by the two Governments for the defence of the northern half of the Western Hemisphere, the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada agree that, should either Government hereafter declare that the doctrine of historic waters is to be applied to any part of the waters contiguous to the coasts of Alaska or British Columbia, within the various bays, straits, sounds, entrances, and inlets, such waters will continue to be open to the vessels, aircraft, nationals of the two countries; provided, however, that this arrangement shall neither impair nor augment in any way the rights which the nationals of each country now enjoy in the waters of the other country including the right to engage in the fisheries thereof.

II

It is agreed and declared that the line which is referred to as "the line marked AB"²¹² in the decision of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal dated October 20, 1903, being a line in Dixon Entrance from Cape Muzon to the entrance to the Portland Channel, allocated all land to the north thereof to the United States of America, and all land to the south thereof to Canada.

It is further agreed to extend the boundary between Canada and the United States of America, hereinafter in this Article referred to as the boundary, as follows:

From the entrance to the Portland Channel at the Point B in latitude 54 42' 27".933 North and longitude 130 36' 50".047 West of Greenwich, by a line 4550 metres in length with an initial bearing of South 30 36' 00" West to Turning Point 1 in latitude 54 40' 21".261 and longitude 130 38' 59".287;

thence by a line 32082.45 metres in length with an initial bearing of North 83 00' 00" West to Turning Point 2 in latitude 54 42' 24".082 and longitude 131 08' 37".639;

thence by a line 63376.86 metres in length with an initial bearing of South 63 44' 55".593 West to Turning Point 3 in latitude 54 27' 06".062 and longitude 132 01' 12".289;

²¹² Voir garde de queue, appendice D.

²¹² See back end-paper, Appendix D.

thence by a line 55,324.77 metres in length with an initial bearing of North 88 41' 04'.577 West to Turning Point 4 in latitude 54 27' 36'.303 and longitude 132 52' 22'.648;

thence by a line to the high seas at right angles to the line joining Langara Point lighthouse with Reference Monument No. 1 on Cape Muzon, with an initial bearing of North 62 14' 26'.043 West.

It is further agreed that the waters of Dixon Entrance include the waters south of the line AB and north of a line drawn between the Canadian Geodetic stations Tow Hill on Graham Island and Stephens on Stephens Island; and that, for the purpose of this Agreement, the adjacent waters include the waters of Revillagigedo Channel South of the lighthouse on Mary Island; and of Clarence Strait south of Wedge Island; and of Cordova Bay south of Kaigani Point; and of Hecate Strait south of a line drawn between Tow Hill and Stephens; and the waters between a straight line from Cape Muzon and Langara Point and the high seas.

It is further agreed that the two countries may jointly, and that each of them may severally invoke the doctrine of historic waters as applicable to the waters of Dixon Entrance; and that the part of the waters of Dixon Entrance which is north of the boundary, and which is more than one marine league distant from the coast of the United States of America, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada who may use and enjoy such waters upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America; and that the part of the waters of Dixon Entrance which is south of the boundary and which is more than one marine league distant from the coast of Canada will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America, who may use and enjoy such waters upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada.

It is further agreed that the parts of the adjacent waters which are north of the line AB, and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of the United States of America, will be open to the vessels, aircraft, and nationals of Canada who may use and enjoy such waters on a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America; and that the parts of the adjacent waters which are south of the line drawn between Tow Hill and Stephens and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of Canada, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America, who may use and enjoy such waters upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada; and that the adjacent waters which are between a straight line from Cape Muzon and Langara Point and the high seas will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of both countries on a basis of equality.

III

It is agreed and declared that the waters of the strait of Juan de Fuca to the east of the line from Tatoosh Island lighthouse to Bonilla Point are national or inland waters of Canada and of the United States of America, and that there is a contiguous belt of territorial waters to the west of that line which connects the belts of territorial waters adjacent to the coasts of the Province of British Columbia and the State of Washington.

It is further agreed to extend the boundary between Canada and the United States of America as follows:

From turning point 12 midway on a line between Tatoosh Island lighthouse and Bonilla Point, at right angles to that line, with an initial bearing of North 86 26' 40" West to the high seas.

It is further agreed that the waters which are between a straight line from Tatoosh Island lighthouse and Bonilla Point and the high seas will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of both countries on a basis of equality.

IV

It is agreed that the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the Boundary Treaty of April 11, 1908, and acting also under the provisions of the Boundary Treaty of February 24, 1925²¹³, will have authority to do all things which they deem necessary in the way of the establishment of monuments, making of surveys and publication of maps and reports, to give effect to the provisions of these Articles.

I have the honour to suggest that if these Articles meet with the approval of your Government this note and your reply thereto may be regarded as constituting an Agreement between the two Governments concerning this matter.

Ottawa, August 10, 1943

Immediately upon the receipt of Mr. Read's letter of May 4, 1943[†], enclosing copies of a draft note dated April 22, 1943 and other documents regarding the unsettled boundary questions on the Pacific Coast, Mr. Clark forwarded these documents to the Department of State for consideration.

The Minister of the United States of America has now been instructed to make the following comments regarding the Canadian draft note of April 22, 1943: The American Government appreciates the thought which the Canadian Government has given to these long-standing questions and is gratified to note that it is now prepared formally to propose a definitive settlement of them.

The American Government believes that the present is an especially opportune time for such a settlement and to that end is prepared to enter into an agreement at once by exchange of notes embodying the terms of the draft note of April 22, subject, however, to the clarification of certain matters mentioned hereafter. It is believed that although both Governments may desire that this long-standing matter be disposed of as expeditiously as possible, it is in the interest of each that some understanding be reached on each of the following points. The American Minister has been directed in discussing this matter to explain that these questions are raised only with a view to avoiding future difficulties with respect to the exchange of notes, and not in anywise to delay the consummation of an understanding.

1. It is noted that the proposed extension of the Canada-Alaska boundary, from the entrance to the Portland Canal at 'B' to the high seas in the Pacific Ocean, is indicated by the lines connecting 'B' with the Turning Points numbered 1, 2, 3 and 4 and the unnumbered turning terminus in the Pacific Ocean. This line differs from the line previously drawn, principally in locating Turning Point 3 approximately seven statute miles farther west than on the map which accompanied an earlier Canadian proposal²¹⁴. The American Minister has been directed to endeavor to obtain an explanation of this proposed shift of the line which would leave on the Canadian side considerable additional waters in the vicinity of fishing grounds used by nationals of the respective countries.

2. Article I of the draft states that, in the event that the doctrine of historic waters is to be applied to any part of the waters contiguous to the coasts of Alaska or British Columbia, such waters will continue to be open to the vessels, aircraft, and nationals of the two countries. This is followed by a proviso that "this arrangement shall neither impair nor augment in any way the rights which the nationals of each country now enjoy in the waters of the other country including the right to engage in the fisheries thereof." Paragraph 4 of Article II states that the two countries may jointly or severally invoke the doctrine of historic waters as applicable to the waters of "Dixon Entrance." It is not clear whether it is meant that either Government, despite the proposed extension of the boundary line throughout the course of Dixon Entrance, has the right to declare the whole of Dixon Entrance to be historic waters, or whether each may declare to be historic waters only that part of Dixon Entrance on its side of the extended line. The matter has been somewhat confused by the fact that whereas the American Government's draft provided that the two Governments might jointly make such a declaration, Canada has inserted "or severally". This would also seem to be a matter properly to be clarified before the notes are exchanged.

3. The scope of the proviso in Article I relating to fisheries, referred to above, is a matter which is not entirely clear. It might be said that the proviso, connected as it is with the discussion of a declaration of historic waters, is to apply only in the event of such a declaration, and that immediately upon the conclusion of the agreement Canada would have a right to exclude American nationals from fishing grounds south of the extended boundary line through Dixon Entrance, and vice versa. The subsequent articles, paragraphs 4 and 5 of Article II and the last paragraph of Article III, state that the waters referred to therein will be open to the vessels, aircraft, and nationals of the two countries upon a basis of equality but they do not mention fisheries. Having expressly mentioned fisheries in Article I, which, like the articles just mentioned, also makes the waters there referred to open to the vessels, aircraft, and nationals of the two countries, it might be said that fisheries are excluded from the scope of the subsequent articles under the principle expressio unius est exclusio alterius. It might be arguable, on the other hand, that the proviso in Article I, referring as it does to "this arrangement", is applicable to the entire agreement, but it is to be borne in mind that the Article is based upon an hypothesis that the waters may be declared to be historic waters. If they are not so declared, it is equally arguable that the provision regarding fisheries has no application. The American Minister has been directed to ascertain the views of the Canadian Government in this regard and to communicate them to the Department, after which further instructions will be sent to him.

4. Finally, it is not clear what the effect of the extension of the boundary line throughout Dixon Entrance will be upon the jurisdiction of the United States and of Canada on the respective sides of the line outside their territorial waters in view of the fact that they do not now declare Dixon Entrance to be historic waters. Is it to be expected that each Government will exercise jurisdiction on its side of the line before the waters of Dixon Entrance are declared to be historic waters? It is thought that authorities of the two Governments and others will expect a clear understanding as to the meaning of the line and it appears essential to avoid a situation in which the American Government might attach one meaning and Canada another.

The American Minister has been authorized to state that his Government would be prepared at the present time to make a joint declaration with the Canadian Government to the effect that the waters of Dixon Entrance are historic waters. It is doubted whether a more opportune time than the present for the making of such a declaration will present itself. If the Canadian Government should be favorably inclined to this procedure, the proposed notes would need to be modified accordingly.

Should the Canadian Government be agreeable to the suggestion of a joint declaration to the effect that the waters of Dixon Entrance are historic waters, the notes might be further recast to clarify the questions raised in paragraphs 3 and 4. If the Canadian Government is not now prepared to make a joint declaration of historic waters, the problems of clarification may take the form of an explanatory memorandum on the points discussed above.

INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

The United States Minister and Mr. Clark called today on the Legal Adviser to discuss the draft Note sent to the United States Legation, Ottawa, May 4, 1943, and the United States Memorandum of August 10, 1943, sent in reply.

Mr. Read said that he had prepared a revised draft of our Note, to meet the suggestions for clarification made in the United States Memorandum of August 10th. Mr. Read read over our revised draft Note of September 30th (attached), and the United States Minister and Mr. Clark agreed that it met the points raised in the United States Memorandum except that there was no explanation as to why the line from B through to turning Point 4 had been changed to place Turning Point 3 seven miles farther west, leaving more water on the Canadian side. Mr. Read said this had been done as a matter of convenience so that existing geodetic stations could be used to mark Turning Point 3. The old line would be more convenient for fishermen but the new line would avoid the expenditure of several thousand dollars. Mr. Read said that if the United States preferred the old line, he thought there would be no difficulty in changing it back to the line as drawn in the original proposal.

With regard to the declaration of Dixon Entrance as historic waters, Mr. Clark said that he thought Mr. Hackworth²¹⁵ might want a simplification or elucidation of this declaration. Mr. Read said we were willing to fall in with any suggestions for simplification of the declaration on historic waters.

Mr. Clark asked what the effect was, of drawing the line in Dixon Entrance, on the jurisdiction of each country. Mr. Read said that the waters above and below the line respectively became the territory of each country and would be subject to the jurisdiction of each country, subject only to a servitude of fisheries and navigation to the other country.

Mr. Clark said he would send our September 30th draft to the State Department. If it meets with their approval, we will submit it to Cabinet, and when it is approved, we will send it to the United States Minister as a formal Note.

DRAFT NOTE — PACIFIC FISHERIES — REVISED IN ACCORDANCE WITH SUGGESTIONS MADE IN UNITED STATES MEMORANDUM AUGUST 10, 1943

I have the honour to refer to correspondence and conversations between the officers of your Government and of the Canadian Government, concerning the remaining unsettled boundary questions on the Pacific coast, and to propose that an understanding should be reached in the following Articles:

²¹⁵ Conseiller juridique, département d'État des États-Unis.

²¹⁵ Legal Adviser, Department of State of United States.

I

Having in mind the measures being taken jointly and severally by the two Governments for the defence of the northern half of the Western Hemisphere, the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Canada agree that, should either Government hereafter declare that the doctrine of historic waters is to be applied to any part of the waters contiguous to the coasts of Alaska or British Columbia, within the various bays, straits, sounds, entrances, and inlets, such waters will continue to be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the two countries; provided, however, that this arrangement shall neither impair nor augment in any way the rights which the nationals of each country now enjoy in the waters of the other country including the right to engage in the fisheries thereof.

II

It is agreed and declared that the line which is referred to as "the line marked AB" in the decision of the Alaskan Boundary Tribunal dated October 20, 1903, being a line in Dixon Entrance from Cape Muzon to the entrance to the Portland Channel, allocated all land to the north thereof to the United States of America, and all land to the south thereof to Canada.

It is further agreed to extend the boundary between Canada and the United States of America, hereinafter in this Article referred to as the boundary, as follows:

From the entrance to the Portland Channel at the Point B in latitude 54 42' 27".933 North and longitude 130 36' 50".047 West of Greenwich, by a line 4550 metres in length with an initial bearing of South 30 36' 00" West to Turning Point 1 in latitude 54 40' 21".261 and longitude 130 38' 59".287;

thence by a line 32082.45 metres in length with an initial bearing of North 83 00' 00" West to Turning Point 2 in latitude 54 42' 24".082 and longitude 131 08' 37".639;

thence by a line 63376.86 metres in length with an initial bearing of South 63 44' 55".593 West to Turning Point 3 in latitude 54 27' 06".062 and longitude 132 01' 12".289;

thence by a line 55,324.77 metres in length with an initial bearing of North 88 41' 04".577 West to Turning Point 4 in latitude 54 27' 36".303 and longitude 132 52' 22".648;

thence by a line to the high seas at right angles to the line joining Langara Point lighthouse with Reference Monument No. 1 on Cape Muzon, with an initial bearing of North 62 05' 25".38 West.

It is further agreed that the waters of Dixon Entrance include the waters south of the line AB and north of a line drawn between the Canadian Geodetic stations Tow Hill on Graham Island and Stephens on Stephens Island; and that, for the purpose of this Agreement, the adjacent waters include the waters of Revillagigedo Channel South of the lighthouse on Mary Island; and of Clarence Strait south of Wedge Island; and of Cordova Bay south of Kaigani Point; and of Hecate Strait south of a line drawn between Tow Hill and Stephens; and the waters between a straight line from Cape Muzon and Langara Point and the high seas.

It is hereby declared that the waters of Dixon Entrance are historic waters and that the part of such waters which is north of the boundary is included within the territorial waters of the United States of America and that the part of such waters which is south of the boundary is included within the territorial waters of Canada.

It is further agreed that the part of the waters of Dixon Entrance and the fisheries thereof which are north of the boundary, and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of the United States of America, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada who may use and enjoy such waters and fisheries upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America; and that the part of the waters of Dixon Entrance and the fisheries thereof which are south of the boundary and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of Canada will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America who may use and enjoy such waters and fisheries upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada.

It is further agreed that the parts of the adjacent waters and the fisheries thereof which are north of the line AB, and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of the United States of America, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada who may use and enjoy such waters and fisheries on a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America; and that the parts of the adjacent waters and the fisheries thereof which are south of the line drawn between Tow Hill and Stephens and which are more than one marine league distant from the coast of Canada, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of the United States of America, who may use and enjoy such waters and fisheries upon a basis of equality with the vessels, aircraft and nationals of Canada; and that the adjacent waters and fisheries thereof which are between a straight line from Cape Muzon and Langara Point and the high seas and are more than one marine league distant from the coast of either country will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of both countries on a basis of equality.

III

It is agreed and declared that the waters of the strait of Juan de Fuca to the east of the line from Tatoosh Island lighthouse to Bonilla Point are national or inland waters of Canada and of the United States of America, and that there is a contiguous belt of territorial waters to the west of that line which connects the belts of territorial waters adjacent to the coasts of the Province of British Columbia and the State of Washington.

It is further agreed to extend the boundary between Canada and the United States of America as follows:

From turning point 12 midway on a line between Tatoosh Island lighthouse and Bonilla Point, at right angles to that line, with an initial bearing of North 86° 26' 40" West to the high seas.

It is further agreed that the waters and fisheries thereof which are between a straight line from Tatoosh Island lighthouse and Bonilla Point and the high seas and more than one marine league distant from the coast of either country, will be open to the vessels, aircraft and nationals of both countries on a basis of equality.

IV

It is agreed that the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of the Boundary Treaty of April 11, 1908, and acting also under the provisions of the Boundary Treaty of February 24, 1925, will have authority to do all things which they deem necessary in the way of the establishment of monuments, making of surveys and publication of maps and reports, to give effect to the provisions of these Articles.

I have the honour to suggest that if these Articles meet with the approval of your Government this note and your reply thereto may be regarded as constituting in the first instance an Agreement between the two Governments concerning this matter and secondly a joint Declaration that the waters of Dixon Entrance are historic waters.

Malcolm MacDonald came to see me yesterday on his return from his flight to the Northwest Territories. He was not able to go through to Aklavik as he had hoped, but had got as far as Coppermine. This is his second trip to the Northwest within the last seven or eight months, and he has come back very concerned about the completeness of the American penetration and the absence of any apparent Canadian representation in the vast new territories which have been opened up since the war.

I gathered that, for most practical purposes, the Canadian Government's representative in local contacts with the American forces in the Northwest is the Secretary of the Alberta Chamber of Commerce and Mines, whose offices are in Edmonton and who acts as an unofficial representative of the Department of Mines and Resources. MacDonald says that he is an extremely capable and alert man, who does all that one man could do, but that he has no staff and no status and is, therefore, quite unequal to the job.

I am afraid that the diplomatic precautions and safeguards that we could take from Ottawa to make sure that American operations in this area are purely for war purposes and terminable at the close of hostilities will not amount to much if there is not an adequate local assertion of Canadian interests in the development of this part of Canada.

Probably the first step to be taken is a local survey of the situation. This might be a job for a good, vigorous Parliamentary Assistant who, with some aid from this Department, could investigate the field situation and make recommendations. These recommendations might include the appointment of some kind of a commissioner for the Northwest Territories whose business it would be to see that Canada was kept fully informed of all developments in this territory and that Canadian interests were consulted in any developments likely to have a post-war implication, e.g., selection of air routes and development of transportation, etc. To make such local representation effective, however, it would need more than one good man in Edmonton and I think they would need a really competent, technical staff, capable of collaborating with and controlling the American developmental activities in these regions.

DEVELOPMENT OF CANADIAN NORTHWEST

15. THE PRIME MINISTER invited the High Commissioner for the United Kingdom to report on his recent visit to the Canadian Northwest.

16. THE U.K. HIGH COMMISSIONER expressed concern as to the results of immense U.S. construction and activity in this area. The extensive nature of the programme of development being carried on by Americans and under American auspices could not be appreciated without actual experience. It was quite evident that these vast undertakings were being planned and carried out with a view to the post-war situation. Canadian representatives in the area were few and quite unable to keep control or even in touch with day to day developments.

The Canadian Government might well despatch a special official to the northwest to review the position and report.

17. MR. KING said that the whole problem of U.S. development in the northwest was under active consideration. The establishment of a joint board to deal with labour problems in the area had already been decided upon. The appointment of a special Canadian commissioner for the area had been discussed as a means of keeping the government in direct and continuous touch with developments.

[Ottawa,] April 6, 1943

NOTE ON DEVELOPMENTS IN NORTH-WESTERN CANADA

I have recently returned from a second visit to the Canadian North-West to see the development works being accomplished there. They leave two major impressions on a casual visitor. First, they are colossal, and their significance may be very far-reaching indeed. Second, the Americans are doing the greater part of the planning and execution of these works, and at present at any rate the Canadian authorities have too little influence on the shaping of these important affairs in Canadian territory. The situation even seems so disturbing that I venture to write this personal, informal and frank note on the subject.

There can be no question of the Canadian Government's wisdom in giving every encouragement to these enterprises. The development works are to be wholeheartedly welcomed. They will open up the North-West a generation sooner than would otherwise have been the case, and will add immensely and immediately to Canada's importance in world affairs. Moreover, the Canadian Government have been right in agreeing to the Americans doing much of the work. When so much of Canada's energy was being thrown into other parts of the war effort it was beyond her power to achieve some of these additional works quickly, and from the point of view of the military defence of North America they had to be accomplished without delay. Again, the Canadian Government have been right in announcing that the work as a whole should be an act of co-operation between the American Government and the Canadian Government working as partners together. They have been right also in insisting that after the war the Americans should withdraw from the work except insofar as the Canadian authorities might be willing for them to continue, and that every part of the development works which remained on Canadian soil then should belong in undisputed ownership to Canada.

So the Canadian authorities have nothing to reproach themselves with on the general policy. On the contrary they have acted with foresight, broad-mindedness and courage. Where things seem to have "slipped" is in the practical carrying out of the third principle of policy outlined in the above paragraph. In theory the Canadian and American Governments are co-operating as equal partners in the work. But in practice the American authorities have gained increasing control of what is done, how it is done and where it is done, whilst the Canadian authorities' influence on events is comparatively small. There are explanations for this. Circumstances have been extremely difficult for the Canadian authorities. For one thing, they have thrown so much of their best personnel into organising Canada's tremendous war effort at many other even more urgent points that they have so far not been able to spare enough good men to make their influence sufficiently felt in these perhaps rather remote North-Western developments. For another thing, on the Americans' side difficulties have been greatly increased for the Canadians by the fact that the State Department through whom the Canadian Government quite properly deal with the American Government has been largely ignored by the American Army and other authorities carrying out the works on the spot in the North-West.

But whatever may be the reason for what is happening, the facts of the situation are clear and disturbing.

II

I need not give a list of the works being accomplished or projected. When Mr. Crerar, Dr. Camsell and I visited the North-West last August there were four principal undertakings, and the Canadian and American authorities truly divided responsibility for them. There were the building of the Alaska Highway, the creation of a chain of airfields from Edmonton to Fairbanks, the production of oil at Norman Wells and the laying of a pipeline to convey the oil from Norman Wells to Whitehorse. American authorities were responsible for the carrying out of the first and fourth of these works whilst Canadian authorities were responsible for achieving the second and third. The first three were proceeding with remarkable speed and efficiency. The fourth was making disappointing progress owing to American miscalculations about the ease of transport in the Mackenzie country.

Generally speaking — though there were signs that matters might develop unfortunately — the situation from the point of view of the preservation of Canadian interests was reasonably satisfactory in August. It is since then that there has been a serious deterioration. The following are some of the developments which alter the general picture:—

1. Last August it was assumed that the chain of airfields then being built by the Canadians from Edmonton to Fairbanks along the general route of the Alaska Highway would provide, in war and peace, the principal airway from America to Asia. Since then the opinion of the American and Canadian experts in those parts seems to have changed. Of course, that opinion may swing back again. But at present it holds that, although the route through the mountains may always be important as an alternative flying route, for reasons which I need not go into a new chain of airfields from Edmonton down the Athabaska, the Slave and the Mackenzie valleys and thence across northern Yukon Territory to Fairbanks will be the more important. This air route is now being built solely by the Americans. They settle exactly where the airfields shall be; they decide where the auxiliary works shall be placed; they are building the airfields; and they are providing the equipment and administrative staffs. These new airfields are magnificent, all of them with 5,000 feet runways and some of them with runways already stretching 7,000 feet.

2. Just as the Americans have built the Alaska Highway partly as a feeder to the earlier chain of airfields, so they have now begun to build roads partly to serve this air route down the river valleys of Alberta and the Northwest Territories. The world was astonished when the Americans built the Alaska Highway 1600 miles long. But now already they are at work, and far advanced, on the construction of nearly 2,000 miles of other roads further east, from Grimshaw to Norman Wells, Fort Smith to Alexandra Falls, Fort Nelson to Willow Lake and Fort Norman to Whitehorse. The Americans are solely responsible for this road-building, and the decision as to when, where and how the roads shall be brought into existence rests mainly with them. No doubt they have yet other plans for the not distant future.

3. It is perhaps easy to overstate the danger of so much initiative and decision belonging to our American allies. Admittedly it is highly important from the point of view of the vigorous prosecution of the war that these roads and air routes should be built forthwith, and they will in any case be of immense value to Canada after the war. But it is surely unfortunate that the Canadian authorities have little real say as to, for example, the exact placing of these airfields and the exact route of these roads on Canadian soil. The Americans decide these things according to what they consider American interests. They pay no particular heed to this or that Canadian national or local interest. This aspect of the matter assumes even greater importance when one realises fully the considerations which the American Army, and the other American interests working with them, have in mind in all their efforts in the North-West. Responsible American officers will tell you frankly in confidence that in addition to building works to be of value in this war, they are designing those works also to be of particular value for (a) commercial aviation and transport after the war and (b) waging war against the Russians in the next world crisis.

4. With the same considerations in view the Americans are pushing ahead with many other development works, such as the building of oil pipelines (there are already three such projects besides the Norman Wells-Whitehorse one), the improvement of navigation on the Athabaska, Slave and Mackenzie Rivers, the extension of railroad facilities, etc. In some of these matters they engage in only a minimum of consultation with Canadian authorities.

5. There has been a very encouraging expansion of oil production at Norman Wells during recent months. The Americans are very alive to this and to the possibility that further prospecting may reveal an oilfield of considerable importance in the Mackenzie valley. American oil interests are watching the situation closely, and if developments look good they will seek to gain control there. Canadian oil interests do not seem so alert to the possibilities. I was told at Norman Wells that no senior representative of the Imperial Oil Company has visited the place for a long time past.

6. The American Army are sedulously collecting all the information that they can about the Canadian North-West. For example, their aeroplanes are flying widely over the territory photographing it. I doubt whether they recognise any limits to what they can do if they want to do it. All the information that they collect goes to the War Department in Washington. Does it come likewise to Ottawa? I doubt whether all of it does. In fact the American authorities probably now know much more about this part of Canada than the Canadian authorities do, which is a most undesirable state of affairs.

7. Do the Americans intend to surrender all control over the works which they have established after the war? There can be no question at all of the good faith of the American Administration in supporting the agreements which they have made with the Canadian Government. But certainly many influential American individuals who have had a hand in these developments in the North-West have no serious thought that the interests which they represent shall withdraw. American money, energy and labour have been spent on an immense scale whilst the Canadians have had comparatively little to do with some of the most important undertakings. One can imagine some of these people stirring up quite an unpleasant agitation in Congress circles to force the hands of the Administration, if they feel so disposed.

These are some of the worrying elements in the present situation. From them may flow other unfortunate consequences. For example, the political effect in Western Canada of these developments may be significant. Wherever you travel north of Edmonton there are large numbers of American military officers, troops and airmen and civilian workmen and representatives of American business and finance. Everywhere these Americans are talking eagerly about the development of the North-West, and their words are being translated into deeds. The American Army calls itself "the Army of Occupation". Much of this annoys the Canadian citizens of the territory, yet they cannot help realising that it is largely the Americans who are now opening up their country. The Canadian counterparts of the Americans who swarm through the country are conspicuous by their comparative absence. The inhabitants of those regions are beginning to say that it seems that the Americans are more awake to the importance of the Canadian North-West than are the Canadian authorities. This state of affairs tends to play into the hands of those Western Canadians who are inclined to assert that the West receives little sympathy and help from Eastern Canada, and that its destiny lies in incorporation with the United States of America.

III

The centre from which these various activities are generally directed is Edmonton. Some other places have also assumed a new importance, such as Whitehorse, which is the headquarters of the American builders of the Alaska Highway. But the growth of Edmonton under American stimulus in connection with these North-Western developments has been most remarkable. The Americans fill a large part of the Macdonald Hotel, they have taken over completely many other pre-existing buildings, and I am told that their Army and civilian organisations have caused the erection of eighty or ninety new buildings in the city during the last four months alone.

They have recognised the importance of the work by stationing a whole Army division in the region. Their local organisation runs to one General, eight Colonels, other high ranking officers and an assortment of civilian business executives presiding over military and civil departments established to examine, check and approve of field investigations, construction works, aerial reconnaissance, aerial photography, camouflage, public relations, postal service, legal matters, contracts, labour relations and various other branches of activity staffed by about 13,000 military and civil employees.

The regular Canadian organisation in Edmonton on the other hand consists of one man. He is Mr. Leonard E. Drummond, who is a consulting mining engineer and the secretary of the Alberta Chamber of Mines. He acts as representative of the Department of Mines and Resources, but is not strictly speaking a Government servant. Even his correspondence on behalf of the Canadian Government with the American authorities about all these works is conducted on either his Chamber of Mines or his private notepaper. I must say at once that I doubt whether any better choice could have been made as the semi-official representative of the Canadian Government. Mr. Drummond has an excellent knowledge of North-Western Canada and he is keen, industrious and tactful. His defence of Canadian interests is stout, and at the same time his relations with the Americans are excellent. American military and civilian officers alike speak in high terms of his wise and helpful advice. The extent to which he has been able to keep in touch with their multifarious activities is remarkable. But as often as not, as is inevitable in the circumstances, he only learns about these activities after they have happened, instead of being brought into consultation, as should invariably be the case, before decisions and actions are taken. He works from one small room in the Chamber of Mines office, and I believe his staff consists of one stenographer.

In addition the Department of Mines and Resources has other representatives in smaller centres in the North-West. The Commissioner for the Yukon in Dawson City and such men as Dr. Urquhart at Fort Smith and Dr. Livingstone at Aklavik in the Northwest Territories are admirable representatives of the Federal Government. They are doing excellent work as local Canadian advisers and liaison officers to the Americans in their respective districts. But they have other duties also to perform for the Department, and I expect (though I do not know) that they have insufficient staffs under them to achieve satisfactorily the many new tasks which fall to them as a result of the new developments.

Besides these permanent representatives of the Canadian Government, individual departments in Ottawa send officers to Edmonton or elsewhere in the area for ad hoc discussions with the American authorities on particular questions.

These arrangements clearly do not any longer measure up to the situation. One should not exaggerate the extent to which the Canadian authorities have lost their influence over events. The Departments concerned in Ottawa have sought to keep a keen eye on every development, and the Americans may have had to secure their authority in general terms for every project. This control from Ottawa might have worked reasonably satisfactorily if the control on the American side had remained in Washington. But, as has already been said, the dynamic American authorities in Edmonton and elsewhere in the North-West have tended to ignore Washington. At any rate, the War Department has ignored the State Department. And in any case Washington and Ottawa could only deal satisfactorily with the general principles of development policy. Speed required that much of the important detailed work should be settled in Edmonton. The Americans feel handicapped by the inadequacy of the Canadian organisation on the spot there. I understood from one of them that some time ago they offered to finance a considerable increase in Mr. Drummond's staff and office accommodation! Quite apart from other considerations, the effect of this state of affairs on the Americans' opinion of Canadian government is not good.

I am not qualified to propose the remedies. My visits to the North-West have been too superficial for me to claim any real grasp of the problems. Nor am I sufficiently acquainted with the difficulties of Canadian administration in war-time, and anyway it is no business of mine. But perhaps it would help those who read this Note if I risk censure by making some positive suggestions, however impractical or inappropriate they may turn out to be, so that they have something to "get their teeth into". In that spirit I throw out the following tentative suggestions:—

1. Someone in the nature of a special Commissioner should be appointed to represent the Canadian Government and be at the head of its organisation in Edmonton dealing, under the general supervision of the Government at Ottawa, with all questions of war-time development in North-Western Canada.
2. He should be assisted by a "general staff" living and working in Edmonton. On it should sit appropriate senior officers of all the Government Departments concerned (Department of External Affairs, Department of Mines and Resources, Department of Transport, Defence Department, Air Ministry, etc.) They should have an adequate complement of juniors, clerks, stenographers, etc.
3. This staff should be sufficiently large to allow some of its members to travel from time to time through the North-West, maintaining contact with the work in the field.
4. They should be housed in office quarters in Edmonton sufficiently imposing to impress everyone with the presence and authority of the Canadian Government.
5. They should be given appropriate powers. Their two main duties would be:—
 - a. to guard Canadian interests as such in all matters connected with the developments. They would naturally co-ordinate the efforts of all the Canadian Departments concerned.
 - b. to act as a co-operative partner organisation with the American organisation. Real consultation and co-operation between the Canadians and Americans before decisions and action are taken should be organised in every department of the work.
6. The staffs of the Government's representatives in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories should, if necessary, be increased. It might also be found desirable to appoint local representatives in some places where they do not at present exist.

These suggestions deal only with organisation. Other suggestions concerning other aspects of the situation naturally leap into one's mind. But I am very conscious that my observation of these affairs has been too cursory to make me in any way a reliable judge, and I repeat that I mention even the above suggestions diffidently on that account. This leads me to the one proposal which I do make with confidence. It is that two or three really good men should be appointed at once to proceed to Edmonton and the North-West forthwith as an official Commission to enquire into the situation and make recommendations to the Government. For obvious reasons their appointment should be rather informal and should be attended by no publicity.

I would only add that I expect some of the authorities concerned will find mistakes of fact or of emphasis in this Note. I have not consulted them on these matters because this is in no sense a formal or official document. When I started out for the North-West I did not expect to find myself writing this Note, and so did not collect information with a view to its production. However, I submit it with all its imperfections, for I believe that the general picture which it presents is true.

U.S. DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT IN CANADIAN NORTHWEST; APPOINTMENT OF GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONER

38. THE PRIME MINISTER emphasized the importance of the government being provided with complete and up-to-date information regarding the extensive American developments, and the need to establish means of more effective representation of the government in the Northwest. A special commissioner might be named to make a full report to War Committee on the present situation, with a view to the later appointment of a representative of the government with broad authority in the whole area.

39. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed in principle upon the importance of adequate government representation in the area, and, as a first step decided that the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources be asked to make a report on the present situation.

[Ottawa,] April 9, 1943

UNITED STATES ACTIVITIES IN NORTHWESTERN CANADA

1. It has recently been suggested from several sources that the very extensive activities undertaken in Northwestern Canada by the United States have had or are likely to have serious political and economic repercussions both now and in the post-war period. This fear is most clearly expressed in the "M M"²¹⁷ memorandum of April 6th, 1943. In this memorandum and in other places apprehension is expressed lest

(a) The United States may claim post-war rights on the basis of wartime expenditure, construction and operation.

(b) The loyalty of Canadians in the area affected may be weakened by the evidence that only Americans "get things done."

2. The causes of these apprehensions are

(a) The alleged failure of Canada to exercise control over American construction activities in the Northwest;

(b) the alleged absence of Canadian officials armed with authority and obviously in touch with all developments;

(c) the tremendous number and great energy of the United States personnel both military and civilian, in the area;

(d) the alleged statements of United States army officers, contractors and airline operators about the permanence of United States control;

(e) the alleged collection of photographic and other information about the Northwest by United States military and civilian personnel.

3. Although the situation is not by any means as deplorable as "M M" and some others have suggested, there is no doubt that concern over developments in the Northwest is fully justified.

4. The number of Americans in the region between Edmonton and Alaska, in the Mackenzie Valley and in Northern British Columbia is now far greater than the number of Canadians in those areas. During the coming summer there will be not less than 46,000 United States civilians and United States military personnel working in the Northwest.²¹⁸ This compares with some 7,000 Canadian civilian employees and a few hundred Canadian service (chiefly air) personnel.

5. It is true that the United States forces and contractors working in the area under consideration have made an excellent record of practical and imaginative achievement. This is particularly true of the work done on the Alaska Highway, on the construction of airfields and landing strips, and in the erection of buildings. It is certainly not true of the Canol Project proper but this is out of sight and, as it is subject to censorship, little has become known of the egregious mistakes made by Colonel Wyman and his subordinates. (Wyman and his chief assistant Woodbury have been removed). Canadians have it is true done as well on the construction of the Air Routes as the United States forces have done in any field, but in building construction the record has been less satisfactory and the deplorable fiasco of the Prince Rupert Highway (for this is how it appears to the public — however unjustly) has done great harm.

²¹⁷ Malcolm MacDonald.

²¹⁸ No copy giving the number of military personnel was located.

6. On the other hand the charge that Canada has been disregarded by the United States authorities is only true in part — and taking the picture as a whole — only in small part. There has been a tendency among the Americans to feel that once a major project has been approved that approval carries with it the right to take all necessary subsequent or contributory steps. The construction of the Alaska Highway having been approved, for example, the United States military authorities felt justified in initiating supplementary construction on a scale which, in some cases, seemed to the Canadian authorities to go beyond the terms of the original agreement. But this problem has now been pretty completely solved. The State Department and the War Department have both taken action which is resulting in a regularization of the whole procedure along lines approved by Canada. (Incidentally the difficulty in Washington has not been, as “M M” suggests, the War Department’s disregard of the State Department. It arose from the basic United States Army conception of the prerogatives of a Commander in the field. The Northwest is a “zone of operation” and in United States theory the officer commanding in such a zone has full power to take any requisite action and to commit the Government to almost unlimited expenditure. His only restraint is his own good judgment and the fear of being replaced if he does not act wisely. Thus, when the United States War Department ordered the officers commanding in the Northwest to ask for permission before they undertook any new work or the expansion of any approved project, it took some time to convince them that the new order did, in fact, supersede the theory in which they had been trained. Thus the trouble was within the War Department not between the War and State Departments.)

7. The statement that Canada has resigned control on the spot to United States authorities and that they have initiated and are carrying on extensive programmes without Canadian knowledge or approval is also only partially true. The responsible Canadian departments, in fact, have representatives posted throughout the whole area with instructions to co-operate with, and to report upon the activities of, the United States authorities in the field. There has been very little done without Canadian approval and, it is probably safe to say, nothing without Canadian knowledge. The construction of roads and the programme of aerial photography of which “M M” complains were carried out with the full knowledge and approval of the Canadian authorities. The details of Canadian official representation in the Northwest are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

G.A. Jackell, Controller and Chief Administrative Officer Yukon Territory, Whitehorse Y.T.

L. Higgins, Government Agent, Whitehorse Y.T.

C.K. Le Capelin, Liaison Officer, Alaska Highway.

L.E. Drummond, Liaison Officer, Canol Project.

Dr. J.S. Stewart, Liaison Officer, Norman Wells.

Dr. J.A. Urquhart, District Agent, Fort Smith.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A. MacEcheran, District Engineer, Whitehorse.
T. Chilcotte, District Engineer, Watson Lake.
Homer Keith, District Engineer, Fort St. John, Grande Prairie, Fort Nelson.
W.S. Lawson, District Inspector, British Columbia and Alberta.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Selective Service Officers, Dawson Creek, Edmonton.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR

Control establishments in charge at each of the Airports along the Northwest Air Route.
It is proposed to appoint immediately a Squadron Leader from the General List to act as Liaison Officer on the Mackenzie River Servicing route.

Thus it will be seen that there is no lack of Governmental representation in the Northwest. What is lacking is a clear definition of the authority of these representatives. At present there seems to be some doubt as to just how far they or any of them can go in agreeing to United States proposals and requests. Generally speaking they do not take any responsibility but act merely as observers and reporters. It is perhaps permissible to suggest that in certain cases the officers mentioned are rather lacking in personal or official prestige and that the appointment of one or more Canadians of strong personality and wide public reputation might be useful. This would be particularly helpful if such officials were to be appointed as Governmental – rather than Departmental – representatives in the area. This, however, would be useful only if the Canadian officials were given clearly defined realms of responsibility. They should understand exactly what matters they can decide on their own authority and what must be referred to Ottawa.

8. There is no misunderstanding of the post-war situation in top official circles – military as well as civilian – in Washington. It may well be that attempts will be made to obtain or retain special advantages in Canada when the crisis is over but such efforts will have to be based on equity rather than on any existing agreement or legal pretext. Canada's position is fully protected by the text of signed agreements. No suitable opportunity should be lost, however, to impress upon the Americans and to say publicly to the people of Canada that the Government intends to retain in its own hands complete control over Canadian territory after the war. (This does not, of course, mean that Canada should not enter into bilateral or multilateral agreements which might grant special rights in or over Canada on a reciprocal basis when such agreements would be to Canadian advantage.) It would be desirable also to give more effective publicity in Canada to the achievements of the Canadian participants in the development of the Northwest. The people of Canada, especially of Western Canada, should not be encouraged to think that it is only Americans who can do brilliant and effective work.

9. The following steps might be considered as a contribution towards the solution of the Northwest problem. They would meet a real and practical need and would go far towards solving the genuine difficulties which are at the base of the rather exaggerated picture drawn by "M M" and others.

A. More effective publicity should be given to the work being done by Canadians in the Northwest. This could be arranged by the Departments concerned and by the Wartime Information Board.

B. Drastic steps should be taken to complete the Prince Rupert Highway at once — if necessary by taking the whole project out of the hands of the present contractors and having it carried through by Army Engineers.

C. Members of the Government and others should take frequent opportunities to state in a matter-of-fact and incidental but positive way that there is no question of complete Canadian post-war control over all Canadian territory and facilities.

D. A small commission of prominent and able Canadians should be appointed to coordinate and supervise all Canadian activities and all liaison and observation work being done in connection with United States activities in the Northwest. This Commission — which might be known as the Canadian Northwest Commission — should be empowered to issue decisions in regard to certain categories of United States requests. Their powers should be very clearly defined and understood.

E. A formal and definitive agreement should be negotiated with the United States to the effect that every request of every kind that cannot be settled by the Canadian Northwest Commission on the spot must be presented to the Canadian Government (either through recommendations of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence or through diplomatic channels) and Canadian approval be received before any action is initiated. A proposal to this effect is already before the Defence Board and the United States members have stated that their Government will certainly agree to a proposal on these terms. They are particularly anxious that some clearly delimited authority (of however narrow a scope) be given to the Canadian representatives on the spot in the Northwest. The present lack of definition causes both Canada and the United States constant and needless trouble.

If these proposals are accepted and acted upon with resolution and imagination it is probable that most of the difficulties — real and imagined — which have aroused apprehension in "M M" and others will disappear. At least the situation will be greatly improved. It is difficult to think of any other steps which would be likely to make an equal contribution to the solution that is sought.

Mémoire du secrétaire du Cabinet au Premier ministre

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Prime Minister

Ottawa, April 13, 1943

RE: CANADIAN NORTHWEST; IMPROVED GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION

The serious situation revealed by Mr. MacDonald's report, and in recent discussions of specific problems resulting from already large and continually expanding U.S. developments in Northwestern Canada, fully justify the War Committee's conclusion last week that special steps should be taken, at once, to safeguard the Canadian position and to provide for a larger measure of Canadian participation in these activities on Canadian soil. It was agreed that adequate government representation in the area was of first importance.

The Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources is to report at tomorrow's meeting of the War Committee on the present situation. A factual statement of American projects in the Northwest area is being circulated with the Agenda.

Since the last meeting I have collected a good deal more in the way of statements of fact and opinion and, after talking the matter over with Mr. Robertson, suggest (as the problem is urgent) that the government might, as an immediate step, appoint a Commissioner, with the dual function of representing the government and, after surveying the situation on the spot, make [sic] recommendations for solution of the problems involved.

Such a Commissioner should be from outside the government service but should have attached to him competent officials from Mines and Resources, Transport, Air, Munitions and Supply, and possibly Army. An Order in Council would appoint him in general terms to represent the Federal government in all matters relating to the development of the Northwest area. This would be publicly announced as a measure of Canadian co-operation with the United States. The Order would be supplemented by confidential instructions directing the Commissioner to review the whole situation from the point of view of Canadian war and post-war interests and submit recommendations to the War Committee within a short delay. An active and competent secretary and possibly later on other experts would probably require to be appointed to assist the Commissioner, who would presumably operate from headquarters at Edmonton.

If the War Committee, at tomorrow's meeting, were to approve, in principle, action along these lines, and agree upon a man, a draft Order in Council for his appointment and draft instructions could be prepared at once.

The strengthening of Canadian Service representation in the area seems to me an additional way in which further provision could be made for the protection of Canadian interests.

*Memorandum from Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

Ottawa, April 13, 1943

RE:JOINT DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS
IN THE CANADIAN NORTHWEST

The following information, supplied by the Joint Defence Construction Projects Panel, is submitted as a factual statement of defence construction projects now under way in the Canadian Northwest.

I At the present time there are in the Canadian Northwest approximately 9,337 U.S. Army Engineer troops employed on the Alaska highway and 14,570 American civilians engaged as labourers, mechanics and domestic workers. It is anticipated that during the summer of 1943, the number of U.S. civilians will increase to 46,000. Canadian civilians employed in the Northwest number approximately 7,000 and there are a few hundred Service (chiefly R.C.A.F.) personnel.

Four Canadian government departments are represented in the Northwest. The Department of Transport has a district inspector in British Columbia and Alberta and three district engineers at Whitehorse, Watson Lake and between Grande Prairie and Ft. Nelson. The Department of Labour has Selective Service Officers at Dawson Creek and Edmonton. The Department of National Defence for Air has control establishments along the Northwest Staging and proposes to appoint a squadron leader to act as liaison officer on the Mackenzie River route. The Department of Mines and Resources has a chief administrative officer and government agent at Whitehorse, a district agent at Fort Smith, and three liaison officers at Whitehorse, Norman Wells and Edmonton. Progress reports on joint defence projects are submitted at regular intervals by field officers of the Departments of Mines and Resources and Transport and by the Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army.

II The United States has constructed, or is constructing, the following major facilities in the Canadian Northwest:

I. —The Alaska highway, including the following items:

Highway from Dawson Creek to the Alaskan boundary;

Storage and housing facilities at Dawson Creek and Whitehorse;

Rest camps and weather reporting stations along route;

Eight flight strips near Fort Nelson, Lower Post, Whitehorse, and between Burwash Landing and Snag;

Telephone and telegraph lines from Edmonton to 141st meridian boundary — completed from Edmonton to within fifty miles of Ft. St. John;

Highway from Haines Point, Alaska to Champagne, Y.T. under construction;

Survey for a road connecting Prince George and Ft. St. John;

Two pipelines; Carcross to Watson Lake — 85 miles completed; Whitehorse to Alaskan boundary — located but construction not yet begun.

The Alaska highway, constructed by U.S. Army Engineers and the Public Roads Administration was formally opened on November 20, 1942. The entire route has been constructed to pioneer standard or better. U.S. military and civilian personnel are maintaining and relocating the roads and constructing permanent bridges with a view to accommodating 2,500 to 3,000 tons of traffic daily by December, 1943.

In the exchange of notes authorizing construction of the Alaska highway, it was agreed that the United States should carry out the necessary surveys, and construct and maintain the highway, and that Canada should acquire the necessary rights-of-way, waive import duties, taxes and license fees on the materials and supplies required, facilitate the admission of U.S. personnel, and, subject to Dominion or provincial supervision, provide timber, gravel and rock.

2. The Northwest Staging route — additional facilities beyond Canadian standards and requirements requested by the United States at thirteen aerodromes from Edmonton to Snag.

These aerodromes are being, or have been, constructed by the Department of Transport and the United States has requested that its Army Air Force be permitted to take over and expand the Canadian programme, but no decision has been reached in this matter.

3. The Canol Project, including the following items:

Pipelines: Norman Wells to Whitehorse; Skagway to Whitehorse (completed and pumping begun);

New wells at Norman — (sixteen new wells added to four previously existing wells — total daily capacity of twenty wells estimated at 2,924 bbls.);

Refinery and storage facilities at Whitehorse — (fifteen of twenty-four projected tanks built but refinery not yet under construction);

Loading and storage facilities at Skagway;

Fourteen aerodromes or landing strips: major fields at McMurray, Fort Smith, Simpson and Norman Wells; emergency fields at Embarras, Resolution, Hay River, Providence and Wrigley, etc. — all fields now serviceable;

Twelve weather stations near above aerodromes;

Roads: winter roads from Ft. Nelson to Simpson, Providence to Simpson, Simpson to Norman Wells; permanent road from Grimshaw to Hay River and summer road — Ft. Smith to Providence.

Wild-cattling programme in Northwest Territory and Yukon; twelve geological parties and additional oil drilling rigs to operate during summer of 1943;

Improvement of storage and transport facilities on Mackenzie River route;

U.S. Army Engineers and Canadian and U.S. contractors are to construct the above projects.

4. Alternative Northwest Air Route:

At the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, held on February 24th and 25th, 1943, the United States proposed the development and operation of an air route to the Yukon, by way of the Mackenzie River, as a supplement to the Northwest Staging. This project, if approved, would involve the construction of new aerodromes north and west of Norman Wells, improvement of the Mackenzie River air facilities and expansion of storage facilities at Ft. Nelson. The proposed route is of great importance since it is a "low level route" and is conveniently situated with reference to the oil fields at Norman Wells and potential sources of oil on the Peel River.

5. Prince George-Alaska Railway survey: Survey completed but construction not to be proceeded with.

III In addition to the works listed above, the United States has also undertaken the following projects:

1. Development of port facilities at Port Edward and Prince Rupert — extensive storage accommodation at latter point.
2. Lease of the White Pass and Yukon Railway.
3. Mackenzie-Yukon road survey (from Fairbanks to Norman Wells).
4. Aerial photography of Canadian territory.
5. Construction of a military hospital and storage facilities at Edmonton.
6. Construction of additional facilities at Whitehorse and McRay, Y.T.
7. Meteorological stations along the Northwest Staging route and the Mackenzie River air route.

IV Authority for construction by the United States:

Requests by the United States for permission to undertake the above projects have frequently been submitted through the Department of External Affairs or the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, passed upon by Cabinet War Committee, and subsequently covered by an exchange of notes. In some cases, however, arrangements have been made between Canadian government departments and U.S. military authorities.

In a few instances, the United States has proceeded with the construction of new facilities without authority from the Canadian government. Two examples are the construction of a military hospital at Edmonton and the building of aerodromes, flight strips and other facilities along the Mackenzie River route. In the latter case, the unauthorized construction was the subject of letters exchanged between the Department of External Affairs and the U.S. Minister.

V Construction and maintenance costs:

The Alaska highway and the Canol Project with its aerodromes and landing strips are being constructed at the expense of the United States. Costs of the Northwest Staging route are to be divided; Canada is to pay for construction and defence up to Canadian standards and requirements; the United States is to assume expenses for construction and defence beyond this point. Interpretation of this stipulation as to costs has usually been left to officials of the United States, R.C.A.F. and the Department of Transport.

VI Post-war disposition:

In the exchange of notes authorizing construction of the Alaska highway, it was agreed that “at the conclusion of the war that part of the highway which lies in Canada shall become in all respects an integral part of the Canadian highway system subject to the understanding that there shall at no time be imposed any discriminatory conditions in relation to the use of the road as between Canadian and U.S. civilian traffic”.

The exchange of notes governing the Canol project provides that “at the termination of hostilities” the pipeline and refinery are to be jointly evaluated on a commercial basis, and the Canadian government is to be given first option to purchase at the price to be established. If this option is not exercised within three months, the project may be sold by public tender with the amount of valuation as a reserve price. If neither the Canadian government nor any private company desires to purchase the pipeline and refinery at the established price, the matter is to be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence for consideration. It has been agreed that the pipeline and refinery shall not be dismantled without approval of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence and that if used for commercial purposes shall be subject to any regulation laid down by Canada in the public interest.

The Northwest Staging route, the airfields built as part of the Canol Project, and any other facilities not covered by specific agreements as to post-war disposition, are subject to a general formula, set forth in the Twenty-eighth Recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, incorporated in an exchange of notes tabled in the House of Commons on February 1st, 1943. This formula provides that "all immovable defence installations built or provided in Canada by the government of the United States shall within one year after the cessation of hostilities" revert to Canada or a Canadian province; and that all "movable facilities" shall be either removed from or offered for sale to Canada or a province thereof. In the event that the governments of Canada and the United States forego their options as above, the facilities concerned are to be offered for sale in the open market and if no sale is concluded, the question of disposition is to be referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

CANADIAN NORTHWEST; DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION;
GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION

3. THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES submitted and explained, in detail, a report on defence construction in the area, copies of which had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources, to War Committee, April 13, 1943 — C.W.C. document 483).

4. THE PRIME MINISTER observed that the War Committee had already agreed upon the necessity of strengthening the representation of the Canadian government in the Northwest. This would involve the appointment of a suitable "commissioner" for the area, with appropriate staff from the departments having responsibility.

It was clearly very important that all construction projects, past, present and future should be covered by formal agreement between the U.S. and Canadian governments.

5. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS said that, in general, the formal position regarding U.S. construction projects was quite clear, provision having been made to protect Canada's legal rights. Apprehension arose rather from the practical effect of large American expenditures in the area without major Canadian participation. Canada could strengthen her position by participating more vigorously in actual planning and development; this was probably of more practical importance than financial participation.

6. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that all U.S. and joint defence undertakings in the Canadian Northwest be the subject of specific agreement between the two governments;

(b) that Canada participate as actively as possible in the actual programme of development in the area; and,

(c) that the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary, in consultation with departments concerned, prepare a draft submission to Council to provide for the appointment of a commissioner, responsible directly to the War Committee, to represent the government in the area, together with appropriate recommendations as to the instructions to be given such commissioner.

Prime Minister to Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada

Ottawa, May 20, 1943

Dear Brigadier Foster,

It is, I think, desirable that you as Special Commissioner for defence projects in the northwest, should have, in addition to the definition of your powers and duties as set forth in the Order in Council of appointment, an indication of the considerations which the government had in mind in appointing a Special Commissioner, and of the specific duties which they desire you to perform.

As you are aware, a programme of construction, extension of transport facilities, and development of certain natural resources has been undertaken in the Canadian northwest since the outbreak of war and particularly since December, 1941, largely on the recommendation of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, in order to provide for the defence of North America and the effective prosecution of the war. Canada has undertaken the construction of the Northwest Staging Route, while the United States has assumed the responsibility for the greater part of the remaining construction and development for the simple reason that Canadian resources were already heavily concentrated on other phases of the war effort when the United States and Japan entered the war. However as changes in both countries' war programmes are being made and as certain phases of the Canadian programme are being curtailed, efficient use of continental resources and obvious considerations of national sovereignty make it desirable to transfer the largest possible share of northwestern and northern defence projects to Canada.

Developments in the northwest have now reached such proportions that special action has become necessary to enable the Canadian government to maintain close and continuing contact with the programme and to ensure that it is carried forward smoothly and effectively. The introduction of U.S. labour, both civilian and military, on a large scale, the necessity of regulating wages, prices and supply, the problem of obtaining permission for new projects through the proper channels, and other difficulties attendant upon the rapid completion of such extensive undertakings have produced various difficulties and strains, mainly of a local character, both within Canada and between Canada and the United States. The Canadian government desires to facilitate the construction of defence projects in the northwest by providing machinery for rapid solution of any difficulties which may arise and by arranging for such Canadian participation therein as may be useful or desirable.

Moreover, the extent of the development has raised questions relating to the future of the area. The northwest possesses valuable natural resources and is an area of strategic importance in the event of conflict between the United States and any Asiatic nation. The Canadian government desires to ensure that the natural resources of the area shall be utilized to provide the maximum benefit for the Canadian people and to ensure that no commitments are made and no situation allowed to develop as a result of which the full Canadian control of the area would be in any way prejudiced or endangered.

With these considerations in mind, the government directs that you shall:

(1) As rapidly as possible, preferably within a period of one month, prepare a special report to the War Committee of the Cabinet on the situation in the Canadian northwest arising out of the programme of wartime development and construction that has been undertaken, this report to contain suitable proposals regarding action which might be taken by the government to carry out the purposes described above. In particular the report should recommend measures which would enable Canada to:

(a) carry out such additional joint defence or other projects or additions to existing joint projects as the government may decide to be in the national interest;

(b) assume wherever feasible the maintenance and management of joint projects already constructed or being constructed.

(2) Make regular fortnightly reports and recommendations thereafter to the War Committee of the Cabinet and carry out such instructions as may be issued to you by the War Committee.

(3) Review the existing forms of liaison established by representatives of the government with U.S. authorities in the area and make appropriate arrangements for the coordination, modification or expansion of these activities.

(4) Maintain direct personal contact with the senior officials, military and civilian, of the United States in the region.

(5) Ensure that all requests from the United States for permission to launch new or expand existing projects, except where they may be of a minor or supplementary nature, are referred by the U.S. government to the Canadian government through the established channels of the Department of External Affairs or the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. When requests have no major significance, you may decide whether the request should be granted, notifying the appropriate U.S. authorities and the Canadian government of your decision. In this connection you will recall that the U.S. government has designated the Corps of Engineers as the only U.S. agency from which requests should be entertained.

(6) Take such further action as may be appropriate under the terms of the Order in Council and the foregoing instructions.

Yours sincerely,

[W. L. MACKENZIE KING]

DESPATCH 582

Ottawa, May 26, 1943

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my teletype of May 10, 1943, No. EX-1698^t in which I informed you of the decision to appoint a Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada. The appointee, Brigadier Foster, assumed his duties in Edmonton on May 24th. You may be interested in the following information concerning the reasons for this appointment and the nature of Brigadier Foster's duties.

The background for the decision to appoint a Special Commissioner is found in the extensive programme of transportation and defence projects which has resulted from the decision of the Canadian and United States Governments to strengthen the defences of the Northwest. In the execution of this programme Canada was primarily responsible for the construction of the Northwest Staging Route, while the United States assumed the greater share of the responsibility for the remaining construction and development. However, with changes in the war programmes of the two countries it is now reasonable to assume that Canada may be able to undertake a greater share in the planning, construction and operation of the joint defence facilities which have been built or are to be built in the North and Northwest.

Developments in this area have now reached such proportions that it is necessary for the Canadian Government to maintain even closer, more effective and more continuous contact with developments than has been the case in the past in order to ensure the smooth and efficient operation of the defence programme. The introduction of United States labour on a large scale, the problems of regulating wages, prices and supply, the methods of obtaining permission for new projects and other difficulties inevitable in the rapid completion of such extensive undertakings have produced various complications, mainly of a local character, but affecting relations between Ottawa and the provincial Capitals as well as our relations with the Government and agencies of the United States.

The extent of these defence developments has also placed special emphasis on problems relating to the future of the Northwestern area, which is one of strategic importance in the event of war, and, in addition, possesses natural resources of great civil as well as military value. The Canadian Government desires to ensure that the natural resources of the area shall be utilized to provide the maximum benefits for the Canadian people, and to ensure that no commitments are made, and that no situation is allowed to develop, as a result of which full Canadian control over the area would be prejudiced or endangered.

Brigadier Foster was given the title of Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada. He is the senior representative of the Government in the Northwest and responsible directly to the Cabinet War Committee.

A soldier of distinguished record, and a former Deputy Minister of Public Works of British Columbia, he is a Construction Engineer and is well qualified to handle the various problems that may arise. While becoming established in Edmonton, Brigadier Foster is being assisted by Mr. John MacNeil, Law Clerk of the Senate who has been temporarily released to undertake this duty. Brigadier Foster's instructions are thus set forth in the Order in Council making the appointment:

It shall be the duty of the Special Commissioner to supervise and coordinate the wartime activities in the area of the various Departments of the Government and to provide for continuous and effective Canadian participation and cooperation with the United States in the conduct of these activities.

The powers hereby conferred upon the Special Commissioner shall not in any way derogate from the authority of the Northwest Territories Council and the Yukon Territorial Council.

The Special Commissioner shall report to the Cabinet War Committee.

The Special Commissioner shall be assisted by such departmental representatives, and with the approval of the Governor in Council, such other officers and employees as may be necessary for the carrying out of the responsibilities assigned to him.

It is possible that Brigadier Foster's appointment may also be valuable for domestic purposes in the Northwest area. It should do something to reduce the apprehension that seems to exist in some misinformed circles to the effect that Canada is relinquishing control in the Northwest to the United States Army and other United States agencies. This is, of course, quite untrue. We have been glad to have United States assistance in the construction and maintenance of defence facilities which have been organized for our mutual benefit but there is no misunderstanding on either side, in official circles at least, of the conditions on which the United States agencies are operating in Canada. The various agreements, of which you have received copies, fully protect Canadian sovereignty and Canadian control.

Dear Mr. Clark,

In thinking over again our recent discussion of methods for clearing United States proposals in connection with defence facilities in Canada, it has occurred to me that one point may not perhaps have been made wholly clear. I think that it is a matter of importance both in itself and in order that time may be saved that Brigadier Foster should be informed and consulted about all proposals that are to be made to the Canadian Government. The Government will naturally wish to have Brigadier Foster's views in regard to such matters and it would assist the United States authorities in making their plans and would speed up the consideration of these plans by the Canadian Government if the reference to and consultation with Brigadier Foster could take place at an early date in each instance. I am sure that you will recognize the desirability of this procedure and I shall be grateful if you will bring the suggestion to the attention of Brigadier-General Worsham and the others who are interested.

Dear Mr. Keenleyside,

I beg to refer to your letter to Mr. Clark of June 4, 1943, regarding the desirability that General Foster should be informed and consulted about all proposals in connection with defence facilities in Canada that are to be made to the Canadian Government.

Upon the receipt of this letter Mr. Clark brought its contents to the attention of the State Department, which in turn made them known to the appropriate military authorities in Washington. I have now been informed that General Robins conveyed the substance of your communication to the Division Engineer, Northwest Division, and requested that he communicate with General Foster on all matters requiring the ultimate approval of the Canadian Government on projects within the jurisdiction of the Northwest Division.

Dear General Foster,

With reference to your letter of July 9th[†], regarding the use of the flag presented to you (which from your description appears to be a Red Ensign with the Canadian Arms in the fly), I have now had an opportunity of going into the matter further, and yesterday the question was discussed in the Cabinet.

The Prime Minister felt, and Council agreed, that it would be appropriate to have a distinctive Canadian flag flying from the headquarters of the Special Commissioner for Defence Projects in Northwest Canada and, accordingly, agreed that you be authorized to display, from your office, the Red Ensign with the Canadian Arms in the fly. As you know, it is the practice to fly this flag on offices of the High Commissioners and diplomatic representatives of Canada abroad, under authority of Order in Council P.C. 134 of January 26th, 1924.

For your own information I may say that at the same time the Ministers of National Defence were requested to explore the possibility of extending the use of this flag to the Armed Forces, in cases where the Canadian Army, Navy or

DÉRIVATION DU CHICAGO/CHICAGO DIVERSION

DEA/1760-B-40

Le ministre aux États-Unis au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Minister in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELETYPE WA-4753

Washington, September 25, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL. My despatch No. 1989, August 21[†], Chicago diversion. The Committee on Rivers and Harbours of the House of Representatives has decided to hold hearings, commencing Tuesday, September 28, on H.J. RES. 148, one of the bills which propose to increase the diversion. Copies of H.J. RES. 148[†] were sent with my despatch No. 1574 of July 7, 1943.[†]

2. After discussing the matter informally with Hickerson of the State Department, I think that we can repeat the following paragraphs from our letter of September 2, 1942 to J.E. Read[†] regarding the identical bill which was before Congress at that time. We said in that letter, Begins:

“On the question of making representations to the State Department we ought perhaps to be guided to a certain extent by the views of that Department. They are of course opposed to the bill and may be able to arrange for its death in Committee on their own responsibility. On the other hand they may wish to have something from us that they can put before the Committee. In that event a memorandum from us stating our objections would probably be the most appropriate form.

“We have drawn the matter to the attention of the State Department and find that they do not give the bill much chance of success. Hickerson is going to look into the matter a little further and if anything comes of this we will let you know.” End of extract.

3. Hickerson does not think that there is any need for us to give any memorandum to the State Department at the present time. It is inconceivable that the Committee will conduct its study of H.J. RES. 148 without asking the State Department for its views. At that time, we could give the State Department a memorandum or, for that matter, the State Department could state the Canadian objection without any memorandum from us.

4. In case we ever have to give the State Department a memorandum in a hurry, I would suggest that a draft of such a communication might now be prepared in Ottawa.

5. We shall watch the hearings before the Committee and keep you fully informed of developments.

DESPATCH 2267

Washington, October 5, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

With reference to my teletype WA-4821 of September 30th[†] concerning the Chicago Diversion, I wish to report on the September 28th hearing before the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors on H.J. Res. 148. Copies of the transcript of the hearing will not be available for distribution for some time, perhaps not until the Committee is ready to report.

2. The Nelson-Olds report on the proposed increase in the diversion was put in at the hearing by the Chairman. Copies of that report[†] were sent to you with despatch No. 1989 of August 21st[†].

3. H.J. Res. 148 was supported at the hearing by the following:

- (1) Congressman Sabath of Chicago;
- (2) A representative of the U.S. Public Health Service;
- (3) The Commissioner of Public Works of Chicago;
- (4) The Assistant to the President of the Chicago Board of Health;
- (5) The Chief Attorney for the Sanitary District of Chicago;
- (6) The Engineer of Water Purification of Chicago;
- (7) Congressman Rowan of Illinois.

Their arguments were based purely on health considerations and followed the lines of the Chicago press stories we have sent you from time to time. Mr. Sabath claimed that a temporary increase would not lower the Lake levels, which are very high at present. To make extracts from their lengthy evidence would involve taking a stenographer from the Legation to the office of the Rivers and Harbors Committee; I shall do that if you think it worthwhile.

4. The following appeared to oppose H.J. Res. 148:

- (1) The Assistant Attorney General of New York State;
- (2) H.H. Naujoks, Special Assistant to the Attorneys General of the States opposed to increased diversion i.e. New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota;
- (3) The City Attorney of Milwaukee;
- (4) D.W. Hoan, President of the Great Lakes Harbor Association.

All these asked for time to prepare their evidence, and the hearing was therefore adjourned until November 9th at 11:00a.m.

5. The Assistant Attorney General of New York State said that, apart from the merits, Congress has no jurisdiction to permit diversion of water from Lake Michigan for health purposes, which are the only purposes mentioned in H.J. Res. 148.

6. Canada was mentioned twice. A committee member asked — “Do you not think that this is perhaps an international question, Mr. Sabath, in which Canada would be interested?” Mr. Sabath replied — “I am satisfied that it is not, because they sanctioned it before and agreed to it; and I had a conference with the ex-Senator from Kentucky, who is a member of the International Board, Senator Stanley, here some months ago, and he assured me that there would not be any question raised.” When Mr. Naujoks was speaking, the following exchange took place:

Mr. Naujoks: We must consider the interests of Canada . . . which has a vital interest in maintaining the integrity of the Lake levels.

The Chairman: I do not think though that Canada would want to join with you in any contest here.

Mr. Naujoks: No, sir.

The Chairman: I believe Canada relies on a treaty.

Mr. Naujoks: Yes, Canada has been relying on the Treaty of 1909 but it has been observing the situation . . . Canada feels that this is a matter for negotiation between the State Departments of the two nations and that it would not want to subject itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of this country or to the Congress of the United States.

The Chairman: Canada would go to the State Department.

7. Today a member of the Legation discussed the matter again with Mr. Hickerson of the State Department. He is confident that there is practically no chance of the Rivers and Harbors Committee reporting favourably on H.J. Res. 148. He is equally confident that, if the Committee were to contemplate making a favourable report, the Committee would first consult the Secretary of State, who would, of course, tell the Canadian Legation. That would provide a suitable occasion for Canada to present its views formally to the State Department. At our suggestion, the State Department intends to speak informally to the Chairman or Clerk of the Committee to ensure that the State Department will be consulted in advance in the unlikely event of the Committee contemplating a favourable report.

8. Mr. Hickerson sees no advantage in Canada submitting its views to the State Department until the stage described in the immediately preceding sentence has been reached, but has no objection, of course, to our acting earlier if we so desire. I agree with Mr. Hickerson; I think that Canada should, if possible, avoid incurring the ill-will of the people of Chicago. If H.J. Res. 148 can be buried without Canada’s public intervention, so much the better.

9. However, as suggested in WA-4753 of September 25th, I think that a draft Canadian memorandum might now be prepared in Ottawa, for possible future use. The occasion for its use will certainly not arise until after November 9th. I do not think that it need be a lengthy memorandum.

10. Enclosed are three copies of H.R. 3337[†], introduced by Congressman Rowan of Illinois on September 27th. The Bill provides that —

“ . . . no sewage or industrial waste shall be discharged into Lake Michigan or into any body of water flowing into Lake Michigan until such sewage or industrial waste has been chlorinated or otherwise treated so as to avoid danger to health through pollution of the waters of such lake.”

This Bill is aimed at States neighbouring on Illinois. As stated in WA-3482 of July 13th,[†] the Chicago contention is that their present troubles are in great part due to war plants in neighbouring States dumping untreated sewage into Lake Michigan.

Reference your despatch No. 2267, of October 5, 1943, in particular paragraph 9, and my reply despatch No. 1130, of October 7, 1943[†], concerning the Hearings on the Chicago Water Diversion problem.

B. Quoted in my next paragraph is the text of a memorandum, setting out the views of the Canadian Government, which may if necessary be submitted to the State Department.

C. 1 “The Canadian Government is informed that there will be Hearings in the near future before the House of Representatives Committee on Rivers and Harbours with respect to H.J. Res. 148, introduced in the House by Mr. Sabath on July 2, 1943. It is understood that the purpose of this Resolution is to seek authorization for an increased diversion of water from Lake Michigan through the Chicago Drainage Canal.

2. The Canadian Government is of the opinion that adoption of such a Resolution would have an adverse effect upon navigation in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence, and would impair the power potentialities of the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers.

3. It is understood that the present diversion authorized by the United States Supreme Court Decree of April 21, 1930, is to the effect that such will not exceed an annual average of 1500 cubic feet per second in addition to domestic pumpage. In total this amounts to an annual average diversion of approximately 3200 cubic feet per second. The Resolution on which there will be Hearings would increase the total diversion by an amount of 3500 cubic feet per second. The Canadian Government is informed by its technical advisers that the ultimate reductions in the levels of the Great Lakes and at Montreal Harbour in the present and proposed amounts is accurately set out in the table below:

Reduction in level in inches due to Existing Diversion of 3200 c.f.s.	Proposed Increase of 3500 c.f.s.	Total Diversion of 6700 c.f.s.

Lake Huron	2 1/4	2 1/2	4 3/4
Lake Erie	1 3/4	2 1/20	3 4/5
Lake Ontario	1 7/8	2 1/8	4
Montreal Harbour	1 2/3	1 5/6	3 1/2

Such reductions in level are of substantial import to Canadian as well as to United States navigation interests, particularly in years of low stage in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence System. The water levels in the Great Lakes System have been high in 1943, but many months are required for the full effect of any increased diversion which might be made at Chicago to be felt in the lower Lakes and the St. Lawrence River, and there is no assurance that the high Lakes stages of 1943 will be repeated in 1944, or for many years thereafter.

4. In its power aspect, the Canadian Government wishes to bring to the attention of your Government that the proposed increase of 3500 cubic feet per second in the Chicago Diversion would result in the reduction of the total power potentiality at Niagara and at the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River of 134,000 continuous horse-power. On the wholly Canadian reach of the St. Lawrence River the reduction would total 38,000 potential continuous horse-power. It is acknowledged that during the existing period of high water the only effect on actual power production would be at Niagara. During a period of extreme low water however, there would be a reduction of 28,000 continuous horse-power in the total produced in the wholly Canadian reach of the St. Lawrence River. The Governments of our two countries are, moreover, at present engaged in the construction of a submerged weir in the Niagara River to raise the level of the Grass Island Pool one foot at standard low water. The purpose of this construction is to improve power generating conditions at the Queenston station of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission and at the plants of the Niagara Falls Power Company. The proposed increased diversion at Chicago of 3500 cubic feet per second would thus impair the improvement to be secured from the construction of the submerged [weir].

5. The Canadian Government ventures to submit [that the] adoption of the foregoing Resolution would be prejudicial to the navigation and power interests of both countries, and earnestly hopes that the United States Government will use its influence to prevent adoption of this or any other Resolution with similar purposes."

D. Please be good enough to keep me posted concerning developments.

Washington, November 13, 1943

My WA-5654, November 12th[†], Chicago diversion. State Department informed the Legation today that the State Department yesterday received a request from the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors for an expression of the State Department's views on H.J. Res. 148.

2. Apparently the Committee wants to have the State Department's views before the hearings on H.J. Res. 148 are resumed on November 30th.

3. The fact that the State Department has been asked for its views does not (not), in my opinion, mean that there is a likelihood of the Committee reporting favourably on H.J. Res. 148. It does mean, however, that the Committee is at least taking H.J. Res. 148 very seriously.

4. As I said in paragraph 8 of despatch No. 2267 of October 5th, it would be better for Canada if H.J. Res. 148 could be buried without Canada's public intervention. However, in view of the fact that the State Department has at the present stage been asked to give its views to the Committee, I have with some hesitation come to the conclusion that now is the time to give the State Department officially the Canadian Government's views.

5. Referring to the draft memorandum quoted in your EX-4374, November 5th, I should like to make two comments. First, the reference in the draft memorandum to hearings to be held in future should, of course, be changed to a reference to the hearings now in progress. Second, I think that it might be better to omit the second half of the final sentence of the draft memorandum beginning "and earnestly hopes". It is likely that the State Department will give to the Committee the text of our memorandum; I am afraid that some members of the Committee or of Congress might resent the blunt statement by the Canadian Government that we hope that the United States Government will use its influence to prevent adoption of the resolution. I do not think that the omission of the last two lines will do us any harm; our hope will be fairly evident even if we do not expressly state it.

6. I should like to get our memorandum to the State Department on November 16th or 17th at the latest and should, therefore, appreciate an early reply to this teletype.

Sir,

Acting on the instructions of my Government, I have the honor to inform you that it has had under consideration the desirability of having a study made by the International Joint Commission with respect to the Upper Columbia River Basin from the points of view of navigation, power development, irrigation, flood control, and other beneficial public uses and purposes. It has concluded that such a study and a report by the Commission would be timely and it very much hopes that the Government of Canada may agree that an undertaking of this kind would be in the interest of our two countries.

²²³ Le comité n'a pas repris ses délibérations.

²²³ The Committee did not resume hearings.

The investigation should not, in our view, be confined to the Upper Columbia River proper, but should include such important tributaries as the Kootenay, Clark Fork-Pend Oreille, and Okanogan Rivers, and other headwater tributaries rising in either Canada or the United States and flowing across the international boundary before discharging into the Columbia River.

It is suggested that the matter might be submitted to the Commission by a joint reference of our two Governments pursuant to Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909²²⁴, and that the reference should set forth in general terms the particular questions upon which the Commission would be expected to submit its report and recommendations.

This proposal is based upon a realization by my Government that a large part of the water resources of the two countries in this important basin is being allowed to go to waste because of lack of adequate regulation and control; also upon the desirability of more effective flood control, particularly along the Kootenay River, and the improvement of these river facilities in the general interest of navigation, irrigation, power development, fisheries, and conservation of wild life.

While it is considered desirable that the Commission should be given considerable leeway as to the method of procedure and the scope of the investigation to be made, it is important that the two Governments should obtain adequate information on the several points referred to, and that the advantages to be gained in a given direction through development and control of the water resources should be weighed and compared with the disadvantages that might result in another direction, as for example, the advantages of greater storage facilities in the interests of navigation, flood control, irrigation, or power development over the disadvantages of the submersion of lands and other properties on either side of the boundary. This would, of course, include the estimated cost of any recommended action, such as provision of storage facilities and other works, as well as the estimated value of or damage to any properties that might be affected.

In accordance with established custom, the two Governments might agree to supply the Commission from their official staffs with the necessary technical, engineering, and other services needed for a complete and painstaking survey and report, such as is here contemplated.

I am directed to state that if the Government of Canada is prepared to go along with the United States Government in this respect my Government would be glad to receive any suggestions that the Government of Canada may desire to submit as to the precise form of the terms of reference.

It would be agreeable to my Government if the Government of Canada should think favorably of the proposition outlined above, to lay the matter before the International Joint Commission with a view to obtaining its suggestions, for submission to the two Governments, as to the form of reference deemed by the Commission to be desirable from its point of view.

UPPER COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN REFERENCE

1. I am enclosing for your information a copy of Note No. 41 of October 4, 1943, from the United States Legation, proposing a reference to the International Joint Commission of a study of the Columbia River Basin from the point of view of navigation, power, irrigation, flood control, and other beneficial public uses and purposes.

2. This would include the tributaries of which the Pend Oreille, Kootenay and Okanogan are the most important from the Canadian point of view.

3. The reference is to be under Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty 1909, which would result in recommendations to the two Governments and which would have no binding force until they were accepted by both Governments.

4. Particular reference is made to the question of storage facilities, flood control, irrigation and power.

5. It is suggested that the Commission might be aided by technical and engineering service personnel furnished by the Governments.

6. The United States Government proposes to lay the matter before the International Joint Commission, with a view to obtaining its suggestions for submission to the two Governments as to the form of reference.

7. The following action has been taken, after consultation with the Dominion Water and Power Bureau (Mines and Resources):

(a) Copies of the Note have been transmitted through routine channels to the appropriate authorities of the Province of British Columbia, informing ²²⁵ Ce mémorandum fut ensuite adressé au Premier ministre.

²²⁵ This memorandum was later sent to the Prime Minister.

them they will be kept in touch with anything that is done in this matter, and that Canadian Government officials will discuss the questions informally with British Columbia officials.

(b) Preliminary conferences have been held with Dominion Water and Power Bureau with a view to settlement of preliminary drafts of terms of reference.

(c) The matter has been referred to Public Works, Indian Affairs, Power Controller, and Fisheries.

8. This is the most important reference to the Commission since the St. Lawrence. The Canadian Government, for ten years, has been trying to promote an overall reference of the Columbia question to the International Joint Commission. We have taken no steps to that end, because it was felt that it was necessary for Canada to be in a bargaining position in dealing with this problem. On the other hand, we have based all of our policy in the Columbia upon the desirability of bringing to pass a situation in which the United States would be compelled to take the initiative. The present proposal by the United States is, therefore, a most satisfactory result of the long-term policy followed by the Dominion Water and Power Bureau and External Affairs.

9. This movement involves, potentially, development of storage in Canada in the interests of United States power and development of storage in the U.S.A. in the interest of Canadian power.

10. From the broader economic point of view, it gives us an opportunity to meet a serious situation. The development of the lower Columbia promises to lead to a great economic development in Oregon and Washington. We are witnessing the establishment of a great industrial area in the Northwest of the U.S.A.

There is a serious danger that such a development, if unaccompanied by a corresponding development in British Columbia, might have a serious effect upon that Province. It might, for example, result in a drain upon British Columbia comparable to the drain upon the Maritime Provinces caused by the great industrial development of New England at a time when there was no corresponding economic progress in the Maritimes. The only possible answer that I know of is the development of southern British Columbia and that development needs to be based upon power. One of the greatest sources of power in Canada is the Columbia system, and it is probably the most economical. If we make full use of the power resources of the Kootenay and the Pend Oreille, it should be possible to promote a development of southern British Columbia which would prevent the occurrence of an economic catastrophe comparable to that experienced by the Maritimes from the late sixties until the present time.

11. The course which we are proposing to follow is:

(a) After consultations with the interested Departments, we shall have draft terms of reference discussed by Webb²²⁶ in Vancouver, with British Columbia officials.

(b) We shall then propose a meeting in New York of I.J.C. in executive session with Washington and Ottawa officials to settle draft terms of reference.

(c) Our draft terms of reference would be cleared by Mr. Crerar before meeting in New York and the draft reached, after discussions in New York, would be sent to Cabinet for clearance.

12. This reference is so important that I think it should be dealt with by the following:

Legal Adviser, K.B. Bingay, representative of American Division (possibly MacKay), representative of Economic Division (possibly Deutsch).

UPPER COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN REFERENCE

A meeting was held in the Office of the Deputy at 12.30, October 25th, 1943, to discuss the Columbia River Reference before the International Joint Commission, which was attended by the following: N.A. Robertson, V. Meek, J.E. Read, D.A. Skelton, R.A. MacKay, J. Deutsch, and K.B. Bingay.

Mr. Read and Mr. Meek explained the magnitude of the proposed investigation — that it would involve the whole of the upper Columbia River Basin. It was pointed out that economic questions would be immediately involved.

It was agreed that Mr. Read should call a committee of the persons present to discuss the draft terms of reference which had been submitted by the Dominion Water and Power Bureau, and that the terms of reference should then be discussed (in consultation with the B.C. authorities) with the Joint Commission and representatives of the State Department.

It was tentatively suggested that Mr. Crerar should properly be the minister responsible. Mr. Robertson will speak to the Prime Minister about this. Mr. Robertson suggested that copies of the notes might be sent to Mr. Ian Mackenzie.

International Joint Commission

Dr. L.J. Burpee

1. In opening the meeting Mr. Read explained that it had been called for the purpose of considering Terms of Reference covering the submission to the International Joint Commission of questions regarding the development of the water resources of the Columbia River Basin. In this connection Dr. L.J. Burpee, Secretary of the Canadian Section of the Commission, had been invited to attend the meeting in an unofficial capacity. It was considered that this action would be helpful both to the Committee in drafting Terms of Reference and to the Commission in undertaking its studies.

2. Copies of Note No. 41 (See Annex A), dated October 4, 1943, from the Legation of the United States of America to the Right Honourable The Secretary of State for External Affairs, were available for study and copies of draft terms of reference entitled "Draft Amending Water and Power Bureau Draft of October 6th" (See Annex B), dated October 20, 1943,[†] were distributed for discussion.

3. Developing from the discussion of the Terms of Reference it was agreed that Messrs. Read and Meek should revise Question 1 to broaden its interpretation to include the Columbia River below the International Boundary at least as far as Grand Coulee Dam and should give consideration to the addition of a clause (e) to Question 2 to cover the matter of possible adverse effects to any interests. Subject to these amendments it was agreed that the draft Terms of Reference should form the basis of discussions with representatives of the Government of British Columbia.

4. In considering how the Terms of Reference should be broached and reviewed with British Columbia, it was agreed that Mr. C.E. Webb, District Chief Engineer, Dominion Water and Power Bureau, formed a good means of approach to the officials of the interested Provincial Departments should it be decided to raise the matter through them. However, it was felt that it might be desirable to have the original approach on a ministerial level. It was agreed that Messrs. Read and Meek place the whole matter before Mr. Crerar, Minister of Mines and Resources, and at the same time ascertain the Minister's wishes in the manner of approach to British Columbia.

5. The view was expressed that consideration of matters requiring discussion with British Columbia should be expedited and that, subject to the decision as to the manner of approaching the Province, Mr. Webb should be in a position to initiate discussion on or about November 8th. With this start it was felt that

Terms of Reference from the Canadian standpoint would be available for discussion with the United States Government and the I.J.C. by the end of November.

6. Mr. Goodspeed informed the Committee that a complete investigation of the water problems of Okanagan Lake and Okanagan River from the lake to the International Boundary is under way by a Committee of which he is the Chairman. He stated that this information would be available for use in connection with the study of the Columbia River watershed.

7. Some consideration was given to the possible constitution of the engineering board likely to develop from the reference to the Commission, it being recognized that the Canadian and United States sections should be similarly constituted. In this connection it was visualized that such a Board might be large enough to include Federal, State, and Provincial membership or [be] of a smaller and Federal nature with National Advisory Boards attached. In any event it was agreed that British Columbia should be given to understand that it would have adequate representation at all times.

8. In discussing the matter of fisheries, Mr. Rodd explained that anadromous fish in the Columbia River watershed were of no commercial value to Canada and that the Dominion Department of Fisheries had withdrawn from the area. He further explained fishery matters in this watershed were Provincial concerns except in the case of international questions.

9. It was agreed that the records in connection with the Committee's activities should be maintained at the Dominion Water and Power Bureau and that Mr. T.M. Patterson should be responsible for the preparation of Minutes.

10. The meeting adjourned at 4 P.M.

QUESTIONS RE COLUMBIA RIVER STORAGE

1. In order to secure the most advantageous use of the waters of Columbia River and of its tributaries, for domestic water supply and sanitation, for navigation, for fishing, for power, irrigation and reclamation, flood control, and other beneficial public uses and purposes, is it, from an economic standpoint, now practicable and desirable, having regard for all or any of the interests affected thereby, or under what conditions will it become thus practicable and desirable to provide additional storage facilities upon, or to take any other measures with regard to the waters of the Columbia River from its source to Grand Coulee Dam and the waters of the tributaries to the main river above the point where the said main river crosses the International Boundary, and upon waters of other streams which cross the International Boundary and are tributary to the Columbia River below its crossing of the said Boundary?

2. If it be found practicable and desirable thus to provide additional storage facilities upon, or to take any other measures with regard to waters in that part of the Columbia River Basin defined in question 1 —

(a) What additional storage facilities are recommended and what limiting elevations are recommended in each of the proposed storage reservoirs?

(b) What other measures are recommended?

(c) What provision or reservation should be made in the interest of domestic water supply and sanitation, navigation, flood control, land irrigation or reclamation, power development, fisheries, mineral lands, conservation of wild life, and other public uses and purposes?

(d) To what extent will it be necessary to acquire lands, to protect and indemnify interests adversely affected, and to construct works in order to provide for such storage, or in order to carry out such other measures, and what will be their respective costs?

(e) What interests on each side of the boundary would be benefited? What would be the nature and extent of such benefit in each case? How should the cost be apportioned among the various interests so benefited?

3. What methods of control and operation would be feasible and advisable in order to regulate the volume, use and outflow of the waters in each case in accordance with such recommendations as may be made in answer to questions 1 and 2?

4. What interests on each side of the boundary are benefited by existing storage on waters controlled by dams on the Kootenay, Pend Oreille, and Okanogan river systems? What are the nature and extent of such benefits in each case? What is the cost of such storage and how should such cost be apportioned or adjusted among the various interests so benefited?

Dear Mr. Hart,

The United States Government, in a Note No. 41 dated October 4th of this year, has proposed a reference to the International Joint Commission of a study of the use of the waters of the Columbia River System, for all purposes. A copy of this Note was sent to your Government through the usual channels and I understand that it is now under consideration.

The proposed reference would require the Commission to make recommendations to the Governments regarding the overall development of the Columbia River Basin. The recommendations would not be binding upon either Government. If they commended themselves to the Governments, it would be necessary, at a later stage, to give effect to them by Treaty.

The United States Government has asked that we should consult with the Commission with regard to terms of reference.

The proposal is being studied by the departments of the Canadian Government which are interested, and I understand that Mr. C.E. Webb, the District Chief Engineer of the Dominion Water and Power Bureau in Vancouver, has had a preliminary consultation with Mr. E. Davis, Comptroller of Water Rights for British Columbia, who is, I believe, studying the matter on behalf of the interested department of your Government.

The International Joint Commission has had before it, during the last ten or fifteen years, a number of specific problems relating to the Columbia River Basin. These include the development of storage in Kootenay Lake, the establishment of reclamation districts in the Kootenay Flats, the Grand Coulee Dam Project, and the Osoyoos River Reference. The possibility of an overall reference of Columbia River problems has been considered from time to time by the members of the Canadian and British Columbia Public Services who have been concerned in these specific problems. The general view has been that an overall reference would be desirable, but that it would be better to have it come about as a result of United States Government initiative, rather than as the result of any action by Canadian agencies.

It is planned to arrange for a meeting with the members of the International Joint Commission and United States Government representatives, towards the end of this month or early in December, for the purpose of consultation with regard to terms of reference. A preliminary draft has been prepared, and I am asking Mr. Webb to consult the appropriate authorities of your Government in order to ascertain their views as to the nature and scope of the reference. I am sure that you will agree that it would be desirable to ensure close co-ordination between federal and provincial interests in this reference. At the discussions with the Commission there will be no representative from the States concerned. I think, however, that it would be helpful if you could send an engineer to consult with the Canadian representative in these negotiations. In this way it should be possible to ensure that the terms of reference would be considered in conformity with British Columbia interests.

It is expected that the International Joint Commission will appoint an advisory committee consisting of a federal engineer from both countries. It would be our intention in such circumstances to establish direct liaison between the Commission's engineering committee and a Canadian National Advisory Board. This Board would include adequate provincial representation as well as representation of interests directly affected by the Reference.

I should greatly appreciate an expression of your views on any aspect of this problem.

Yours sincerely,

T. A. CRERAR

I have for acknowledgment your letter of the 15th ultimo, with reference to an examination by the International Joint Commission of the water resources of the Columbia River.

Mr. Davis is at liberty to attend any meetings that may be necessary in connection with the consideration of this problem.

COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN REFERENCE

The attached draft reply¹ refers generally to a study of the Upper Columbia River Basin, without defining the term, and does not refer to the U.S. suggestion that the investigation "should not be confined to the Upper Columbia River proper but should include such important tributaries as the Kootenay, Clark Fork-Pend Oreille, and Okanogan Rivers, and other headwater tributaries rising in either Canada or the U.S. and flowing across the international boundary before discharging into the Columbia River." Instead, our note suggests that the scope of the reference be settled at a meeting of U.S. and Canadian representatives with the International Joint Commission. The question whether Grand Coulee, Bonneville or the Snake River should be included, can be discussed at this meeting.

This matter has been considered by the Government of Canada, in consultation with the Canadian Section of the International Joint Commission, and it is agreed that a study and report of this nature by the Commission would be timely, and in the interest of our two countries.

It is agreed that the matter be submitted to the Commission by a joint reference of our two Governments pursuant to Article IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, and that the reference should set forth in general terms the particular questions upon which the Commission would be expected to submit its report and recommendations.

I am directed to state that the Canadian Government welcomes your proposal to lay the matter before the International Joint Commission with a view to obtaining its suggestions as to the form of reference deemed to be advisable from the point of view of the Commission.

It is suggested that the form and scope of the terms of reference be decided upon at a meeting of representatives of your Government, and representatives of the Government of Canada, in consultation with the International Joint Commission. It is suggested that such a meeting might be held early in January of 1944, on a date to be arranged informally by your Embassy and this Department after consultation with the International Joint Commission.

With regard to the Columbia River Reference, I have now been advised by our Mr. C.E. Webb that he has conferred with Mr. Davis and the heads of Provincial Departments interested in the Columbia River.

All are agreed that a Reference to the International Joint Commission is desirable, but the Provincial Authorities feel that the Draft Terms²³² should be broadened to some extent. I am attaching a copy of a letter dated December 11 from Mr. Davis to Mr. Webb expressing this viewpoint, together with a copy of some preliminary notes by Mr. Davis in regard to the detailed information he considers should be obtained.

²³² See Enclosure 2, Document 1279.

Mr. Webb states that he and Mr. Davis can arrange to attend the meeting in New York on January 11. You might consider it desirable to have a meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee with Mr. Davis and Mr. Webb prior to the meeting in New York to discuss the Provincial suggestions in regard to the Terms of Reference.

Victoria, December 11, 1943

Dear Sir,

COLUMBIA RIVER

In reference to the correspondence between [sic] the Under-Secretary of State to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor† and from the Honourable Mr. Crerar to the Honourable Mr. Hart²³³ respecting the development of the Columbia River basin for the mutual advantage of the United States and Canada, and to the proposed terms of reference to the International Joint Commission for examination and report, I have to advise that the "fourth draft" of the proposed terms of the reference to the Commission has been duly considered by several departments of the Provincial Government, and it is our opinion that the draft as set out appears to emphasize that the only matter to be considered is the storage of water, whereas the recital which is included in question 1 indicates that the more advantageous use of the waters is desired.

The second paragraph in the Honourable Mr. Crerar's letter of the 15th November last to the Honourable John Hart indicates that "the proposed reference would require the Commission to make recommendations to the Governments regarding the overall development of the Columbia River Basin." If it is only considered desirable "that the reference should set forth in general terms (3rd paragraph of Hon. Ray Atherton's letter of the 4th October last) the particular questions" then some of the details in question (2) of the Fourth Draft appear unnecessary. If, however, the questions should include some details, then information and data required for the development to cover the several uses should be set out.

I understand that a suggestion has been made that the enquiry should not only include the Columbia River Basin above the Grand Coulee dam but the whole of the river system from the sea to the headwaters. This, in our opinion, is desirable, as no doubt any further power development on the main river below

Grand Coulee will benefit from any improvements which might be undertaken in Canada.

Might I suggest that the terms of the reference should not require the Commission to make any recommendations but should examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances together with any conclusions arrived at? Should the Dominion Government require recommendations, it could ask for these at a later date.

Yours very truly,

E. DAVIS

UPPER COLUMBIA RIVER

In order to secure the most advantageous use of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries above the Grand Coulee dam all possible uses should be given consideration, and the cost of any works which have been or may be carried out in the future should be equitably apportioned between all the interests benefited, and those properties which are adversely affected should be duly compensated.

To enable the International Joint Commission to study this matter for report to the respective Governments, the following data and information should be secured:

PREAMBLE

In view of the fact that the natural flow of the river and of its tributaries varies considerably throughout the seasons of the year and also from year to year, and of the fact that the greatest beneficial use can be made of the waters and greater safety can be provided for the reclaimed area if the rate of flow is uniform, it would appear as a first requisite that every effort should be made to create as uniform a flow as possible.

1. Data required respecting the physical conditions and financial costs:

(a) What quantity of water could be stored at the various reservoir sites, and to what elevations the waters would have to be raised to provide these quantities?

(b) What would be the nature of the dams required and what would be their respective costs? If enlargements of present structures are suggested, give details and costs.

(c) What retarding basins could be used, if any, to automatically retard and smooth out flood peaks? What would they cost?

(d) What channel improvements are required to increase capacity and facilitate flow? What would they cost?

(e) What merchantable timber still remains uncut on the watersheds? Advise whether its removal would seriously affect the rate of run-off of the waters from these watersheds, and, if in the affirmative, what is its present-day stumpage value?

(f) What privately-owned lands and interests would be adversely affected and what indemnification would be required?

(g) What Crown or state-owned lands would be affected? Would mineral lands be affected? What public works either Provincial or State, such as railroads, highways, bridges, etc. would be affected and what will be the cost to relocate or replace them?

2. Respecting the benefits or otherwise to be derived from the regulation of stream flow:

(a) What power sites would be benefited? (a) developed sites (b) undeveloped sites. What will be the ultimate capacity considering 24-hour power in each case?

(b) What irrigable areas would be benefited? (a) at present irrigated (b) undeveloped.

(c) What wet lands would be benefited? (a) those reclaimed (b) those awaiting reclamation. What would be the safe elevations of levees required for protection? What would be the cost of raising the present levees to the safe elevations?

(d) Would navigation be adversely affected or improved? If affected, what wharves, ferries, etc. will have to be reconstructed and at what cost?

(e) Would the facilities to secure domestic water be adversely affected or improved?

(f) Would the storing of water in the reservoirs affect the ground water in the vicinity or the discharge of sewage and so adversely affect sanitation of adjoining properties?

(g) Would fish life be adversely affected? If so, what remedial measures should be taken to compensate?

(h) Would wild-fowl life be adversely affected? If so, what remedies are suggested?

3. What regulatory works at present exist on the main river or tributaries?

(a) What is the nature and capacity of such works?

(b) Whom do they benefit and for what purpose?

(c) What has been their cost?

4. What methods of control and operation would be feasible and advisable in order to regulate the volume, use and outflow of the waters in each case?

5. Summarize the cost of the respective works which should be constructed including the cost of existing works. How should such costs be apportioned or adjusted amongst the various interests so benefited?

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Ottawa, December 17, 1943

My dear Norman [Robertson],

Doubtless you have seen the letter, prepared by John Read, which I sent to Premier Hart of British Columbia under date of November 15th, and his reply of December 4th, copy of which has been sent to Mr. Read. This correspondence relates to the proposed enquiry into problems of water conservation as between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Hart's assurance of co-operation is very welcome and I should like to make the suggestion to you that it be accepted in the fullest sense, in this respect, that Mr. Davis, the British Columbia Government's controller of water rights, should be invited to attend the preliminary discussions when any interest of British Columbia was affected. I am sure that Mr. Hart would much appreciate this and it might well prove the means of avoiding difficulties, by a full consideration of them, before they become problems.

Yours sincerely,

T. A. CRERAR

RE: COLUMBIA RIVER BASIN RECORDS

With reference to your letter of December 17th regarding the proposed study by the International Joint Commission with regard to the Upper Columbia River Basin, I wish to assure you that Mr. Hart's promise of cooperation will be accepted in the fullest sense. It is intended that Mr. Davis, the British Columbia Government's controller of water rights, should be consulted at all stages.

The meeting of the United States and Canadian Governments' representatives with the International Joint Commission to settle the Terms of Reference has been tentatively arranged for Tuesday, January 11th, in New York. Mr. Davis will accompany the Canadian Delegation. In addition, it is planned that Mr. Davis should attend a meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee, before the meeting in New York, so that any suggestions made by the British Columbia Government may be taken into consideration.

Ottawa, February 16, 1943

Attached is a memorandum,[†] prepared by Mr. Gordon Robertson of our Legal Division, analysing the provisions of the Extradition Treaty with the United States, which was signed in Washington in April last and is now awaiting ratification by Canada.²³⁴

This note reviews the extradition arrangements now in force between Canada and the United States and the points at which the new Treaty will modify present procedure if it comes into force. It examines, in particular, the effect of the inclusion, as extraditable offences, of offences against securities and exchange regulations. It is to these provisions of the Treaty that very serious objections have been taken by all the Canadian mining and stock exchanges. They contend, correctly, that when the Treaty becomes law, promoters in Canada will become liable to extradition to the United States for acts connected with the sale of securities to United States citizens which, under the looser Canadian laws, would not be offences at all. The American Government's rejoinder to this contention will be that it is not in their public interest to permit Canadian promoters to invite United States capital for investment in Canada under regulatory conditions less strict than those which control invitations for domestic investment.

The conflict of interest is an important one. Its implications do not appear to have been fully apprehended and certainly they were not resolved when the Treaty was signed. In the circumstances, I am inclined to the opinion that we should try to get the Treaty modified before submitting it to Parliament for approval. The attached memorandum contains the text of a suggested supplementary Protocol which, if it were agreed by the United States, would remove the more serious objections which have been raised against the Treaty. If it is decided to proceed in this sense, the matter should be taken up with the United States quickly so that the revised Treaty may be ready for consideration by Parliament this session.

RE: EXTRADITION TREATY

Mr. J.E. Read of the Department of External Affairs and Mr. R. Forsyth of the Canadian Department of Justice had a meeting on June 9 with Mr. Hackworth, Legal Advisor of the State Department. Also present were Mr. Wershof of the Canadian Legation and the following representatives of the Securities Exchange Commission:

Edward Cashion, Counsel, Corporation Finance Division.
 Robert S. Rubin, Special Counsel of the Commission.
 Jas. W. Deer, Attorney, Corporation Finance Division.

Mr. Read explained the objections which have been made by many people in Canada, especially reputable security and bond dealers, against the provisions of the treaty dealing with extradition for security offences.

Mr. Read proposed that there should be either an exchange of notes or a reservation by Canada to the treaty, in the form set out in the attached sheet of paper.

The representatives of the SEC seemed to be greatly disturbed by the provisions of the proposed reservation. They emphasized that the people they were after are not reputable dealers who may technically infringe U.S. law; they are concerned only with crooks or occasionally with people who deliberately set out to flout on a large scale the registration provisions of the Securities Act. The Securities representatives were afraid that the provisions of the attached draft reservation would make it very difficult to extradite anybody.

The SEC representatives were especially disturbed by the following provisions of the reservation:

“NO PERSON shall be subject to extradition by reason of any offence committed at a date prior to that on which the present Treaty comes into effect which was not an extraditable offence at the time when it was committed;”

They state that there are at present a few men in Canada (some U.S. citizens and some Canadian) who are actually under indictment in the U.S. for security offences involving serious fraud. The SEC is anxious to extradite these men and the provision just quoted would make it impossible. Mr. Read said that there would be strong feeling in Canada against extraditing anybody for something which was not extraditable at the time the alleged offence was committed.

At the conclusion of the meeting it was understood that the SEC representatives would obtain the views of the Security Exchange Commission on Mr. Read's draft and send them to Mr. Hackworth. Mr. Hackworth will forward them to External Affairs.

Draft Reservations to Extradition Treaty

“It is declared that:

WHEREAS it is desired that the provisions of Article 3 of the Treaty should not extend to the extradition of persons engaged in genuine business transactions in the requested country in compliance with the laws in force therein, notwithstanding that such business transactions might involve incidental technical conflict with the law of the requesting country; and

WHEREAS it is desired that the above provisions should not extend to the extradition of publishers or vendors in the requested country of newspapers or periodicals which are published and sold for circulation in that country in accordance with its laws, notwithstanding that such newspapers or periodicals are incidentally sold or circulated in the requesting country, which sale or circulation involves incidental conflict with the law of the requesting country; and

WHEREAS it is desired that the provisions of Article 3 of the Treaty should not be deemed to make possible the extradition of any person for an offence made extraditable by the Treaty, but which was not previously extraditable, if the offence was committed prior to the coming into effect of the present Treaty;

NO PERSON dealing in securities in the requested country in the ordinary course of business and in compliance with the laws of the requested country shall, in respect of transactions in which the title to the outgoing security passes within the requested country, be subject to extradition by reason of:

- (a) sale or transfer of title to a customer in the requesting country, or
- (b) exchange of securities with such customer, or
- (c) communication of a message directed to a customer and addressed to him in the requesting country by post, by telegraph or by telephone, or
- (d) despatch of a security, after passing of title, to a customer in the requesting country unless there has been fraud by such a person or unless such a person has entered the requesting country for the purposes of the transaction; and

NO PERSON who publishes or sells any newspaper or periodical in the requested country which is primarily intended for sale and circulation in that country in accordance with its laws, shall be subject to extradition by reason of any sale or circulation of the newspaper or periodical in the requesting country, which is incidental to the ordinary course of publication and sale in the requested country, and which involves incidental conflict with the law of the requesting country relating to securities; and

NO PERSON shall be subject to extradition by reason of any offence committed at a date prior to that on which the present Treaty comes into effect which was not an extraditable offence at the time when it was committed; and also that the application and construction of the provisions of this declaration shall be subject to the laws of the requested country, and that the terms of this declaration shall be deemed to have equal force and effect as the Treaty itself and to form an integral part thereof.”

RE: CANADA-U.S. EXTRADITION TREATY

1. The general position of the Extradition Treaty was discussed informally and unofficially at the Conference of Security Commissioners in Winnipeg. They were opposed to a treaty on the same sort of grounds as the bond dealers and other persons who discussed the question with the Special Committee of the Cabinet. They did not, however, raise any definite objections which were related to their own administrative problems.

2. The terms of a reservation or of a supplementary agreement, protecting the position of legitimate Canadian business, were discussed with the Legal Adviser of the State Department and the S.E.C. representatives at Washington. There was a most helpful discussion, and the State Department is preparing a counter-draft.

3. It is now practically certain that nothing will be settled in Washington in time to enable the matter to be dealt with at this session of the House.

4. It is also clear that a very large part of the opposition to the treaty results from a misunderstanding of the U.S. legislation.

5. The U.S. legislation does not touch securities which have been on the market for one year. Further, it does not touch securities placed on the Canadian market. It only touches securities which are marketed in the U.S.A. or in which a Canadian marketing operation covers both countries. It therefore does not touch the ordinary broker-customer transaction, unless there is a direct New York market or unless the broker is in the position of being a de facto underwriter and is carrying on a campaign in the U.S.A. which could be regarded as a U.S. marketing transaction.

6. It is also clear that the U.S. authorities are interested only in two classes of people:

(a) Persons engaged in fraudulent transactions; and they do not mean statutory fraud, but they do mean real fraud.

(b) Persons who are deliberately defying their administration.

7. They are greatly disturbed about classes of persons which are hard to define but which can be readily illustrated —

(a) The promoter who proposes to market in the U.S.A. but whose documents are rejected by the S.E.C. in Washington. He completes his marketing transactions in the U.S.A. and escapes to Toronto, where he is safe.

(b) The persons, largely U.S. citizens, who are engaged in wholesale fraud. They tell me that American crooks come up and operate from border cities, particularly in Ontario, where they take buildings, install batteries of as many as fifty long-distance telephones and cover the U.S.A. with high pressure fraudulent salesmanship. They are determined to get these people and will, I think, apply the utmost pressure on the Government to force us to make them extraditable.

(c) Offenders generally, who are U.S. citizens and have committed their crimes within the United States and have fled to Canada.

J. E. READ

for the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

P.S. Referring to the first paragraph of this letter, I should have pointed out that the Commissioners take a further objection. They contend that the Extradition Treaty is unconstitutional because it touches upon property and civil rights.

*Memorandum by Third Secretary*²³⁶

[Ottawa,] July 30, 1943

THE CANADA-UNITED STATES EXTRADITION TREATY

1. Attached hereto is a copy of a confidential memorandum[†] concerning the Extradition Treaty which outlines, on pp. 1 and 2, the negotiations that had been entered into hitherto with respect to extradition between Canada and the United States. The subsequent pages of the memorandum deal with particular features of the new Treaty, and especially with items 31 and 32 of Article III concerning violations of security regulations.

2. To complete the outline of negotiations concerning the present Treaty, reference should be made to the fact that, after the Treaty was signed in Washington a number of protests were received in Canada from various brokerage interests and mining organizations, in which strong exception was taken to the inclusion of securities violations among extraditable offences. A summary of the principal statements of objection is included as Appendix A of the attached memorandum.

²³⁶ R.G. Robertson.

3. It was finally decided that the most suitable procedure would be to have a hearing before a Special Committee of the Cabinet, to give an opportunity to the organizations which had signified an interest in the Treaty to set before the Ministers the nature of their objections. A hearing was consequently held on May 18 by Mr. Crerar, Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Ilsley and Mr. McLarty. The interests represented were substantially those listed as having sent in protests in Appendix A. The nature of the objections to the Treaty was precisely similar to the objections summarized as referred to above. During the course of the hearing Mr. St. Laurent indicated that he received a letter from the Canadian Bar Association aligning themselves with the protests against ratification of the Treaty in its present form.

At the conclusion of the hearing, the various representatives were asked if their view was that they did not object to extradition in cases where the extraditable offence was committed by a person physically present in the United States at the time of his act, but that they did object to extradition in all other cases. This interpretation was not concurred in by certain of the delegation on the ground of the difficulty of knowing the American law involved. The Cabinet Committee pointed out, however, that as a general principle ignorance of the law is no excuse, and added moreover that it did not necessarily follow that because double criminality had always been the rule it must continue to be.

4. Following the above meeting, it was decided that it might be desirable to consult informally with the Securities Commissioners of the various provinces as being the governmental experts in Canada most closely concerned with securities questions in Canada. The matter was consequently brought up at a meeting held in Winnipeg (primarily to discuss other topics) and the views of the various provincial authorities were heard. The Attorney General's Department in Ontario took very strong objection to both Articles 31 and 32. They were objected to as seriously endangering the legitimate operations of brokers; as being likely to withhold venture capital from new enterprises in Canada; and as being within the provincial field of jurisdiction relating to securities questions and, therefore, not proper subjects for the conclusion of a Treaty by the Dominion. The Attorney General of British Columbia had given instructions that he was to be placed on record as objecting to the deletion of the double criminality clause.

The meeting wound up with a resolution to have a submission prepared embodying the view of the meeting that reference should be had to the provincial Attorneys General with regard to the objections raised.

5. Early in June representatives of the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Justice visited Washington to have further conversations concerning the Treaty.

In the renewed conversations the United States authorities made it clear that it had at no time been their intention that items 31 and 32 should be read in so broad a way as to endanger the legitimate business of securities interests in Canada. They stated that the persons they were particularly interested in reaching were those "bucket shop" operators who by the use of long-distance telephone solicitation and dishonest advertising from Canada, had deliberately defrauded purchasers in the United States.

A draft protocol setting forth explicitly restrictions on the interpretation of items 31 and 32 was left with the State Department representatives in Washington. They agreed to give this their consideration and, as they thought a few changes in it should be made, to submit an alternative draft. The alternative draft and the final reply of the State Department have not as yet been received. (The draft protocol left by the Canadian representatives with the State Department was substantially as set forth on page 10 of the attached memorandum.)

Dear Mr. Crerar,

You will recall that under cover of a letter dated August 18, I forwarded to you a copy of a redraft of reservations to the Extradition Treaty put forward by the United States Minister. An inquiry has now been received from the United States Chargé d'Affaires asking the present status of Canadian consideration of the proposals which were submitted.

So far as matters of drafting and the actual contents of the reservations are concerned, it seems to me that they are acceptable as an alternative to the original draft reservations left with the United States authorities in Washington last June. The redraft of the reservations deletes the paragraph which was originally included, making it clear that the Extradition Treaty should not have retroactive effect. I do not think that this need be a matter of concern, since I am clear in my own mind that there can be no possible doubt but that there is no retroactive effect whatever to the Treaty. The effective date is specifically stated in the terms of the Treaty. The only other change of any real importance seems to be the deletion of the words "the application and construction of the provisions of the declaration shall be subject to the laws of the requested country". Here, again, I do not think the alteration is a serious one.

I am communicating to the above effect with the Deputy Minister of Justice, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Assistant Under-Secretary of State. No doubt I shall receive their comments in the near future. If there are any particular instructions in connection with this matter which you wish to give, I shall appreciate having them.

Dear Sir,

ATTENTION MR. READ

RE: YOUR REF. 2354-40 EXTRADITION TREATY

In answer to your letter of November 1st, I wish to advise you that this department is not clear on the effect of the proposed reservations to the Extradition Treaty, as put forward by the United States Minister on August 17th last.

It would not appear that the two principal points raised by the mining and investment dealers' representatives, namely, the protection against a technical interpretation of fraud afforded by the double criminality principle, and a safeguard against retroactive application by reason of Section 12 of the Extradition Act, were present in the American version of the reservations.

While the draft reservations put forward by the American Minister do provide that no extradition shall be made "unless such offence involves fraud or wilful and knowing violation of the laws of the requesting country", I am not sure of the value of these words as a protection to the Canadian who commits an act which by definition in the United States Securities Acts is classified as fraud. I am quite sure that the American authorities are not interested in extraditing Canadians who are guilty only of "technical fraud" but the words suggested in their draft reservations would not appear to accomplish any such limitation, and I think that a ruling on this matter should be obtained from Justice before the treaty is submitted for ratification.

On the possible retroactive application of the treaty, while I agree with you that it would be most unreasonable for the American authorities to attempt to make use of Section 12 of the Extradition Act to cover offences committed before the treaty came into effect, it would appear that sufficient doubt upon this point has been expressed to warrant the insertion of a clause such as you put forward at the time of your Washington meeting. Even if such a clause is not strictly necessary, I do not see what harm it could do in the treaty, and if it were there, it would assist greatly in reassuring many of those in Canada who have objected strenuously to the treaty.

With regard to the reservation covering newspapers, "the circulation of which in the requesting country is only incidental to the ordinary course of publication and sale in the requested country", I am wondering what criterion is available for determining when such circulation is only incidental. Would a judge be entitled to say, for example, that 5% U.S. circulation was only incidental but 10% was more than incidental? If the question were raised in the House, would there be any definite demarcation line which could be shown as having been in the minds of the contracting parties? If this demarcation line is capable of more definite definition, then I would suggest that it be inserted.

No doubt the Department of Justice will be communicating with you on the various legal aspects of the treaty with reservations and I hesitate to go into this aspect of the matter, apart from mentioning the one question in my mind of the meaning of the word "fraud".

Yours very truly,

W. C. CLARK

In acknowledging your letter of the 30th ultimo¹ re the proposed Extradition Treaty with the United States of America, I would confirm my apology to Mr. John E. Read, K.C., for delay in answering, which delay has been due in this instance to my absence from the office on account of illness.

I have read with considerable interest the copy of the letter of the Deputy Minister of Finance dated the 9th November in which he expresses concern with respect to two features of the Treaty on the basis of the proposed reservations as presently put forward by the United States Minister. I must say that personally I share the apprehension which the Deputy Minister of Finance expresses as to whether on the basis of the terminology now employed in the proposed reservations, a Canadian might not find himself subject to extradition proceedings based on the commission of an act which might be one of "technical fraud" under the laws of one or other of the United States but which would not be regarded as fraudulent in any sense under Canadian law. It would be my view that if such a danger exists, particular care should be exercised to overcome that danger. It would also be my view that, as suggested by the Deputy Minister of Finance, the precaution would be worthwhile of pressing for the insertion in the reservations of a clause such as already proposed by your Department to make it clear that section 12 of the Extradition Act would not be invoked to cover offences committed before the coming into effect of the Treaty.

As to Doctor Clark's comments with respect to the criterion to be used in determining when circulation of a newspaper published in the requested country would be only incidental to its ordinary publication, I have some difficulty in offering any helpful suggestion. I agree that if an appropriate criterion could be defined with some accuracy, considerable uneasiness on the part of the publishers of certain Canadian financial journals would be allayed.

As you are aware, subsections 31 and 32 of Article III of the proposed Treaty were given careful consideration at a meeting of provincial officers enforcing Security Frauds Prevention Acts in Canada which was held in Winnipeg on May 31st last and at which Mr. R.G. Robertson, of the Department of External Affairs, was present. As you will no doubt also recall, the writer for some years past has been acting as liaison among the various provincial Securities Commissioners and between those Commissioners and the officials enforcing Security Fraud Prevention Laws in the United States. Also there has been established in the Department of the Secretary of State an office for the collection and dissemination of information useful or of interest to the various provincial Securities Commissioners. In these circumstances I make bold to suggest that before negotiation of the proposed Extradition Treaty is consummated, your Department might feel disposed to authorize me to invite comments from the provincial Securities Commissioners on subsections 31 and 32 of Article III in the light of the contemplated reservations. Since the offences which would be extraditable under subsections 31 and 32 would be peculiarly within the purview of the provincial Securities Commissioners, it would seem most desirable that those officials be informed of the present position and that they be afforded opportunity to submit any formal comments which they might wish to have considered by your Department.

You will appreciate that I hesitate to invite such comments from the provincial Commissioners without your approval. It is my feeling, however, that the friendly and co-operative relationship presently existing between this Department and the Securities Commissioners would be enhanced with mutual advantage if such a course might be followed.

[Ottawa,] December 8, 1941

The United States Minister called this morning to deliver an interim answer to your enquiry asking for the United States Government's observations on our tentative plans for controlling wireless transmissions from St. Pierre and Miquelon.¹ The Department of State felt that it was important to try to pin the responsibility for any possible breach of the peace that might occur on the Vichy authorities and their representatives. With this object in mind, they thought we might begin by requesting the Administrator of St. Pierre and Miquelon to see that no messages, whether by cable or wireless, were sent from the Islands in code or cypher. If he refused to give this undertaking or, having given it failed to live up to it, the United States would be prepared to collaborate with us in taking suitable steps to see that such messages were stopped. Mr. Moffat thought we might wish to consider asking de Bournat, the Administrator, to come to Ottawa for a three-cornered discussion of the situation with the Canadian and United States representatives. He thought his Government, however, would be inclined, in view of events over the week-end, to advise against taking any immediate action with respect to St. Pierre and Miquelon.

I told him that the United Kingdom Government, who had been consulted at the same time as the United States, had not yet given us their views but it was highly probable, in view of their feeling that the immediate moment was not a propitious occasion for making any change in the status of the Vichy Legation and Consulates in this country, that they would agree with the United States view that the matter might be kept in abeyance for a week or two.

CONFIDENTIAL

Washington, December 8, 1941

Mr. Wrong called at the Department of State this morning in order to discuss with Mr. Atherton, Mr. Hickerson, and Mr. Reber the proposals of the Canadian Government with respect to the control of wireless installations at St. Pierre which were included in the memorandum given by Mr. Wrong to Mr. Welles on December 5th.³

Mr. Atherton mentioned the previous approach made to the Department of State on this subject, concerning which the Department had replied on November 8th that the information had been noted and that they had no comments to make.⁴ He then said that the question had been discussed at a meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence on November 10th. At this meeting consideration had been given to a plan whereby the Canadian Government would request the Governor [Administrator] of St. Pierre to permit Canadian civilian inspectors to supervise the activities of radio stations in the islands. The request would be presented as in the interests of the Islands, since rumours were circulating that the radio stations had been used to transmit information about ship movements, rumours which the Governor himself would doubtless wish to dispel by acquiescing in the Canadian proposal. It was recognized that the Governor would probably refuse. The Canadian spokesman would then inform the Governor that unless he agreed, Canada would not permit the release of any funds to purchase supplies for the Islands. Mr. Hickerson had agreed at Montreal to recommend, on the request of the Canadian Government, that the United States Government co-operate in this economic pressure.

Mr. Atherton continued that the United States Government is strongly of the opinion that this line of action should be tried before the more drastic procedure set forth in the Canadian memorandum of December 5th is even considered. He added that the United States officials feel that there is a good chance that economic pressure would produce the desired result, particularly since the Governor could undoubtedly be led to believe that his acquiescence under protest might avert more drastic action.

Mr. Wrong replied that he did not have full information on the reasons which had led the Canadian Government to omit the possible use of economic pressure from their proposals to deal with the situation. At present, there was no direct evidence that the wireless installations were being used to transmit information about shipping movements to Vichy for German use. He had heard that the Canadian Naval authorities were concerned lest, after the initial approach to the Administrator, which would probably be rejected, the transmission of shipping information might be either commenced or extended if there was an interval of some length between the first approach and the placing of Canadian personnel on the Island. He pointed out that the Islands were only about 75 miles from Argentina and that the United States Naval authorities had a very direct interest in seeing that the use of wireless at St. Pierre was rigidly supervised. The United States officials agreed that this was true and that the United States Navy is concerned over this unsupervised radio station.

After further discussion it was suggested by the representatives of the Department of State that the following course might be adopted by the Canadian Government. The approach to the Administrator could be made in three stages, the use of the second and third stages depending on the replies made by him. It would not be necessary to allow much time to elapse between each stage, and if it were essential the entire approach might be made during one day. First, the Administrator could be interviewed by some senior Canadian representative, who could tell him in a friendly manner that there were rumours that the wireless station was being employed in a manner inimical to our interests, especially through the transmission of cypher and code messages. It could be represented to him that while doubtless these reports were unfounded, he would wish to give no possible cause for apprehension. Therefore, he was being asked to grant facilities for civilian Canadian radio inspectors to take up their residence in the Island in order to supervise transmissions from the station.

In the likely event of the refusal of the Administrator to agree, it could immediately be pointed out to him that the Islands were dependent for their economic existence on funds released from Canadian and United States control, that the Canadian Government were prepared to prevent the further release of funds until wireless transmissions were effectively supervised, and that they had good reason to believe that the Government of the United States would take parallel action. The use of this threat would give the Administrator an opportunity to reverse his decision. He could excuse himself to his own Government by saying that he had to choose between Canadian supervision of the wireless installations and starvation for the islanders, and that he preferred the first to the second choice.

In the event, however, that the Administrator still was obdurate, a third stage could be employed to bring pressure upon him. He could be told not only that the release of further funds would be refused, but also that the Canadian authorities would record every message transmitted from the wireless station, and if any of these messages were in code or cypher or contained matter of assistance to the enemy, he would be responsible for any consequences which might follow. Any departure from these conditions could, if necessary, provide an occasion for the despatch of Canadian personnel to the Islands.

Mr. Atherton suggested that at the appropriate moment the French Minister to Canada should be informed of the situation and the steps being taken to meet it. He said that he felt it important to give the Vichy authorities no ground for contending that their representative had been slighted or ignored.

Later in the day Mr. Atherton informed Mr. Wrong by telephone that he had discussed this question with Secretary Hull, who approved a cautious course for the present along the lines suggested by the United States officials.

MOST IMMEDIATE. My despatch No. 3696 of December 10th, St. Pierre.[†] State Department consider attitude of caution is no longer necessary. If Canadian Government feel that danger from uncontrolled radio station is serious, they do not object to installation of Canadian radio personnel against Administrator's wishes. They feel procedure proposed by them might still be followed, but if Administrator still refuses consent, Canadian personnel might be immediately installed.

2. Admiral Robert has assured them that all his undertakings respecting French West Indies remain in effect, and that French naval vessels there are disarmed. They would appreciate advance notice of our intentions respecting St. Pierre.

3. Pétain assured United States Ambassador yesterday of strict neutrality of France, but it is questionable how much he knows about latest developments in Franco-German collaboration. State Department undertakes, if possible, to give advance notice if they break off diplomatic relations with Vichy.

[Ottawa,] December 15, 1941

ST. PIERRE

When the United States Minister called this morning to enquire what action the Canadian Government had decided to take with regard to the radio station in St. Pierre and Miquelon which had been discussed last week in Washington by Mr. Wrong with Mr. Atherton of the Department of State, I told him that his Government's observations were being communicated to the United Kingdom Government, and that we hoped to have a reply from London shortly to our first enquiry,⁵ which was identical with that addressed to the United States Government through our Legation in Washington.

With reference to the fact that Admiral Muselier, Commander-in-Chief of the Free French naval forces, was arriving in Ottawa today, and would undoubtedly wish to discuss the St. Pierre situation, I reminded Mr. Moffat that, in conversation in June last, he had expressed the opinion that the United States Government would prefer, if the status of the Islands had to be changed, that they should be under Free French administration rather than Canadian control, and asked if this was still the view of the United States Government. He said this was not their view now. I gathered that other Departments of the United States Government, probably the Navy or the Army, had raised the question of allowing the Free French to take over the Islands for general security reasons. The State Department's view is that the arrangements for Canadian control of the radio station, which had been discussed with the Canadian Legation, would be satisfactory from the security standpoint. If, for any reason, control over communications in the Islands had to be extended to other Government activities, the United States would prefer to have this done by an American country rather than by a "Free Movement".

I said that I thought this attitude was a logical corollary of the general statement of American policy vis-à-vis Free Movements generally, which had been issued by their Government in Washington last week. I wondered, however, if we would not very shortly be compelled to think of the political future of St. Pierre in relation to the specific French problem rather than as an aspect of Free Movements generally. It seemed to me that if Vichy took another decisive step toward closer collaboration with the Nazis, then we should all have to think about recognizing General de Gaulle and the Free French Movement as an alternative to being forced into war with France. If we were to recognize General de Gaulle, it would be difficult to deny the Free French control of St. Pierre and Miquelon. I asked Mr. Moffat how he understood the message which the State Department had given our Legation in Washington on December 10th to the effect that the need for "caution" had now been removed. I thought it was at least arguable, as a result of the United States involvement in the general war, that the importance of avoiding the creation of a new political issue with Vichy had increased rather than diminished. He said he had himself been rather puzzled by the State Department message, which he thought was at least ambiguous, and he had come to the conclusion that what they meant was that they hoped Canada would hurry up and take definite action along the lines indicated in pages 3 and 4 of the memorandum drawn up by Mr. Atherton and Mr. Wrong.

London, December 15, 1941

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Prime Minister has asked me to thank you for your telegram No. 245 regarding St. Pierre and Miquelon.⁶

We too regard position there with concern. Existence on St. Pierre of a powerful wireless station connected by cable with the United States and Canada constitutes a serious threat to the security of our convoys so long as it is controlled by Vichy and a Governor who is notoriously anti-British. We fear that the solution which you propose would hardly go far enough to meet all difficulties, and our view is that nothing will afford complete security short of taking over the island entirely. Moreover, in existing conditions, it seems likely that such action would not be embarrassing to the United States Government.

Free French authorities have proposed to us that Admiral Muselier, who is now in Newfoundland and shortly proceeding to Ottawa, should, with small naval force under his command, rally islands to Free France.

This seems to us in every way the most satisfactory solution of difficulty, and we are, therefore, informing the Free French Headquarters that we see no objection to their going ahead, and are informing the United States of position. Ends.

Mr. Hayter of the British Embassy came to see me at about 10 o'clock last night to discuss a Most Immediate telegram about St. Pierre which had just been received at the Embassy. This stated that the wireless station at St. Pierre was causing the British Government great concern and that they felt that the only way to ensure security was to take the Islands under Allied protection. General de Gaulle has earnestly requested Admiral Muselier, who is now in Canada and is in command of the Free French Naval forces, to rally the Islands to the Free French. This seems to London to be the most satisfactory solution, especially since it would involve no change of sovereignty. The telegram continued that the United Kingdom authorities have informed the Free French headquarters that they have no objection. The matter is extremely urgent, as the ships under Muselier's command are required at once for convoy duty. They had asked de Gaulle to postpone action for 36 hours, which would be until tomorrow morning, December 17th. This had been done to permit the United States Government to be consulted.

Hayter came to see me on his way back from seeing Atherton. He told me that Atherton had said that, while he could not definitely speak for the Secretary of State, he could say that Dunn, Hickerson, and himself were all against the despatch of Free French Naval forces to St. Pierre.

I told Hayter that I was surprised at the way this was being done, since we had consulted London and Washington within a matter of a few days on the question of the St. Pierre wireless and Washington had commented on our proposals. We had not suggested a Free French expedition to the Islands, but had proposed to take charge of the wireless ourselves, either by persuasion or compulsion. I said that it looked to me as though there was a lack of co-ordination at London inside the Foreign Office, inasmuch as our approach to London had not been answered so far as I knew. He said that he thought that this was quite likely.

I telephoned to Mr. Robertson at 9:15 this morning. While I was speaking to him he was given a telegram just in from London, which was probably a repetition of the one received at the British Embassy last night. He said that he was seeing Admiral Muselier in three-quarters of an hour. He himself was inclined to think that the best course was to permit the Free French to take over the Islands. I told him that I had long felt that this was what we should do. He suggested that I might do some work on the State Department to persuade them to agree to this course. I told him that I thought he had better talk first to Muselier and possibly then to the Prime Minister before a further approach was made to the State Department. He agreed to this, and he will call me later in the day.

Later

Mr. Hickerson telephoned to me about 11:30 to bring me up to date on latest developments inside the State Department. The question of Free French action had come up before Hayter's approach last night on the basis of a telephone conversation from Moffat in Ottawa. Moffat yesterday afternoon saw Muselier on the suggestion of Admiral Nelles. Muselier told him that he had orders to act in his pocket, but that he wanted to be sure that the action would be agreeable to the three Governments of Canada, Newfoundland, and the United States. Atherton, Dunn, and Hickerson saw Welles after receiving Moffat's report, and Welles consulted the President this morning. He says that they are all agreed that no action should be taken in St. Pierre by the Free French, that the President approves an approach to the Administrator, followed, if necessary, by the use of force in order to ensure Canadian control over the wireless. I gather from Hickerson that their objections to a Free French coup are based in part on their preference, on security grounds, to [sic] Canadian control to control by the Free French. The President has also recently sent a message to Marshal Pétain in which he confirmed, so far as the United States was concerned, the maintenance of the status quo with respect to French possessions in the Western Hemisphere. So long as they remain in diplomatic relations with Vichy, they feel unable to give any encouragement whatever to the Free French in St. Pierre or the French West Indies.

This morning with Mr. Keenleyside and Mr. Stone of the Department I saw Admiral Muselier, Colonel Pierrené, Captain Villefosse⁷ and Lieutenant Savary, who came to discuss the problem of St. Pierre and Miquelon. I explained to the Free French representative that this problem had been worrying us for considerable time and outlined briefly for him the various considerations which affected our approach to it.

Admiral Muselier seemed to have a clear appreciation of the complications from a North American point of view. He explained to me and set forth a very good case however, for the taking over of the Islands by the Free French. This procedure was suggested, you will recall, by the United Kingdom authorities last October⁸ and it still has their full approval which was repeated in a telegram received from London yesterday. Admiral Muselier has just been in St. John's, Newfoundland, and he informed me that his proposals have also the full approval of the Newfoundland Government. This was confirmed by a telegram received this morning at Earncliffe from the Newfoundland Government urging that such action be taken immediately.

I told the Admiral that I would have to put his proposals before the Government and that in addition it would probably be necessary to have further conversations with the United States authorities. I did not go into detail regarding the attitude of the United States authorities as outlined for you in my memorandum on the conversation with Mr. Moffat yesterday.

The modus operandi proposed by Admiral Muselier is to arrange that an appeal from the pro-Free French elements of the Islands be received by him before he proceeds with the actual taking over of the Administration. In fact two such appeals have already been made from individuals on the Islands. The Admiral would propose then proceeding to St. Pierre with the three Free French Corvettes which are now in Halifax and to anchor far enough off shore so that there would be no possibility of any exchange of shots. He would request the Administrateur to issue orders that all the civilian officials on the Islands remain at their posts. The police of the Islands are reported to be pro-Free French and are apparently the only persons on the Islands who have arms in their possession.

The Admiral intends to replace the Administrateur, Mr. de Bournat by Lieutenant Savary, who would be directly responsible to General de Gaulle of the Free French Committee in London. He expressed a strong desire that our Consul should remain on the Islands as a liaison between Ottawa and the Free French Administrateur. Presumably the United States Consul would also remain.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Shortly after Admiral Muselier and his colleagues of the Free French Delegation had left the Department this morning, I received a call from the United States Minister, who had been instructed by his Government to inform you that Mr. Sumner Welles had this morning taken up with President Roosevelt the question of the steps to be taken with regard to St. Pierre and Miquelon. The President was strongly opposed to a Free French occupation of St. Pierre and Miquelon at the present time, and favoured Canadian action along the lines indicated in the memorandum drawn up after Mr. Wrong's conference with Mr. Atherton at the Department of State.⁹

The President's views were being communicated today to the British Ambassador, where they will correct the assumption on which London was proceeding (cypher No. 222 of December 15th) that Free French occupation of the Islands "would not be embarrassing to the United States Government".

Mr. Moffat, who had seen Admiral Muselier yesterday afternoon, will advise him of the United States attitude as determined by the President. It will undoubtedly be a great disappointment to the Free French, who shared the United Kingdom's confidence that the United States would not object to their rallying the Islands.

I have not seen Admiral Muselier since my conversation with Mr. Moffat, but I would prefer him to learn the United States' attitude from the United States Minister rather than from us. I think, however, when we do see him tomorrow and explain the course that is to be taken with regard to the Islands, we should make it clear that any Canadian control over St. Pierre and Miquelon will be confined to supervision of communications, and that French sovereignty in the Islands will be fully respected. I think we might also let him know that the decision on the course to be pursued has been primarily governed by prudential considerations relating to the use of the French fleet and the possession of North Africa, and that if circumstances should require a further modification of policy with regard to France and French possessions, the Canadian Government would not object to the administration of St. Pierre and Miquelon by a Free French Government.

Until the arrival of the Prime Minister[. . .], the Minister of Mines and Resources acted as Chairman.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

1. THE MINISTER OF MINES AND RESOURCES read the U.K. government's reply to the communication sent Mr. Churchill on December the 3rd regarding St. Pierre and Miquelon.¹⁰

The U.K. government agreed that the wireless station constituted a serious threat to the security of convoys. They considered, however, that the steps proposed would be insufficient, and that nothing short of taking over the islands would afford complete security. To have Admiral Muselier and a small Free French naval force rally the islands seemed the best course in the circumstances. Free French headquarters were being advised that the United Kingdom would have no objection.

2. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS said that the U.S. government had indicated quite emphatically that they would disapprove of action by the Free French. On the other hand, recognizing the danger, the U.S. State Department felt that Canada should assume control of the radio station. If this could not be done by consent, the withdrawal of economic assistance could be threatened, and, if necessary, further pressure might have to be applied.

Admiral Muselier was in Ottawa and had conferred with the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services and officials of the Department of External Affairs. The Admiral was anxious to take over the islands and, had it not been for U.S. opposition, his doing so might have proved the simpler and more effective solution, both from the short and long term viewpoint.

The Prime Minister felt strongly the importance of avoiding any action which might be made the occasion for increased German demands upon Vichy.

3. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES observed that to assume control of the radio station, without free consent would itself be an interference with French sovereignty. Further, the installation of Canadian radio personnel was unlikely to prove a lasting solution. Action by the Free French would be the most appropriate.

4. The War Committee, after some discussion, came to the conclusion that, in the circumstances, any action taken should be by Canada.

I saw Mr. Hickerson this afternoon for a more intimate discussion of the question of St. Pierre than had been possible on the telephone. He told me that the Free French proposal had been thoroughly thrashed out at the Department this morning between Welles, Atherton, Dunn, and himself, and that all had agreed that it was definitely undesirable from their point of view. He even went so far as to say that it was a most inopportune moment for a Free French movement.

I pressed him for particulars about this unsympathetic attitude and I learned from him rather more about the exchange of messages between Pétain and Roosevelt. The gist of this exchange, which was made apparently on December 13th, is that Roosevelt has undertaken not to interfere with the status of French possessions in this hemisphere so long as the Germans do not secure the French Fleet or have access to French territory for military operations against the Allies. They had in mind mainly the French West Indies, but the U.S. undertaking was broad enough to cover St. Pierre. They would regard the taking over by the Free French of the Islands as a change of status, but would not so regard Canadian control of the wireless station without interference with the civil administration. Hickerson also said positively that the U.S. Government would prefer the station to be under Canadian control rather than see it in the hands of the Free French.

As regards the French West Indies, the U.S. Government are sending at once to Martinique Admiral Horne of the U.S. Navy to discuss the position with Admiral Robert. Robert has verbally assured them that all undertakings given before the U.S. involvement in war are still in effect. They want to get this in writing and they also want Horne to inspect the French ships at Martinique. They are very definitely opposed to any Free French initiative in that area.

I was not able to get to the bottom of the suspicion apparently felt in the State Department for the Free French movement. I pointed out that they were now fellow belligerents with the Free French against the Axis, but they seemed to feel that they want to have as little to do with them as possible. They are definitely opposed to a suggestion from Admiral Muselier that he should visit Washington and have instructed Moffat to convey this to the Admiral.

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 222. I was informed today by the United States Minister that the President, while fully sharing our concern about the threat to security of St. Pierre wireless station, is strongly opposed to Free French occupation of the Islands, and favours instead early action by Canada to establish effective supervision of the wireless station. I gathered that the President's attitude is influenced by assurance given Pétain that French sovereignty in Colonial possessions in Western Hemisphere will not be interfered with so long as French Fleet and bases are not made available to the Germans. United States appear to feel that limited Canadian operation confined to supervision of wireless transmissions would have fewer political repercussions than occupation of Islands by Free French.

I had a further conversation with Admiral Muselier between 1:00 and 2:00 today when he told me about his talks with Mr. Moffat. He read me a note which he is sending to the United States Legation,[†] a copy of which will eventually reach us.

In this note the Admiral confirms that one of the purposes of his visit was to discuss the question of St. Pierre et Miquelon with the United States authorities and that he is, of course, prepared to respect their wishes in the matter of the action which should be taken to solve the problems which these Islands present. He feels it his duty, however, to point out that in his view any Canadian action with respect to the Islands will be fraught with much more danger insofar as the internal peace of the Islands is concerned and that it would have a much higher propaganda value for the enemy. The Admiral adds furthermore that any Canadian supervision of the communication system of the Islands might be used as an excuse by the Germans to demand of the Government of Vichy similar German supervision of radio stations in other French Colonies.

The Admiral is not only a little disappointed that the Free French are not going to take over St. Pierre, but he is also very worried. He says that while he knows that the police of the Islands would not obey an order of the Administrator to resist Free French occupation by the use of arms, he is not at all certain that they would not carry out such an order in the event that it was Canadian forces that they had to resist. He expressed a strong hope that we would continue to discuss the matter from all angles with the American authorities and put forward "officieusement" the proposal that a Free French corvette should carry Canadian radio technicians to the Islands.

I did not undertake to put to the Admiral the point which we were discussing yesterday that in our view any steps which we might take might be regarded as temporary measures.

I had the impression even more than at yesterday morning's meeting that the Admiral feels rather strongly that any Canadian action in St. Pierre would be an act against French sovereignty which he could not help but resent a little.

When Mr. Wrong saw Mr. Welles this morning, the latter again raised the question of St. Pierre, and made it clear that the United States attached great importance under present circumstances to maintaining its precarious bridgehead at Vichy, and would not countenance any initiative on the part of the Free French in this hemisphere which might prejudice that bridgehead. Once, however, further capitulation and collaboration by Pétain resulted in the transfer of French ships or bases to the Germans, the situation would be entirely changed and the United States would be glad to get together at once to discuss the new situation. This statement of Mr. Welles certainly qualifies the impression I got from Mr. Moffat that the United States objections to Free French occupation of St. Pierre-Miquelon were likely to persist beyond the immediate diplomatic situation. Welles went on to express the hope that Canada would put the agreed plan for Canadian control of communications in St. Pierre into force quickly. He seemed hopeful that the Administrator would agree to our limited proposals and felt that if he did not, the diplomatic repercussions would be less serious than if the Free French took over the Islands.

MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 257.¹² The President's view has been represented to General de Gaulle who agrees that proposed action should not, repeat not, now be taken.

We have again carefully considered your suggestion that steps should be taken to supervise wireless station at St. Pierre by Canadian personnel. We fully appreciate the reasons in favour of this proposal. There is, however, always danger that it might arouse hostility among Islanders. Moreover, our military advisers feel nothing short of occupation of Islands by British or Allied forces would really meet the case from military point of view. This course, however, now seems ruled out by United States attitude as disclosed in your telegram.

In the circumstances it seems wiser not to take any action for the time being.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to our telephone conversation this morning and in confirmation of the information which I gave to Mr. Pearson by telephone this afternoon, I enclose a record of a conversation with Mr. Atherton of the Department of State dealing with the agreements entered into by the United States respecting the French West Indies and their bearing on the position in St. Pierre.

Mémorandum du ministre-conseiller, la légation aux États-Unis
Memorandum by Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States

MOST SECRET

Washington, December 19, 1941

I called on Mr. Atherton this morning to enquire concerning the reported new agreement between the United States and Admiral Robert and its bearing on the projected action in St. Pierre.

¹² Document 1306.

Mr. Atherton said that the agreement merely reaffirmed, after the involvement of the United States in the war, the undertakings which had been entered into with Admiral Greenslade about a year ago for the control of French planes and ships in the West Indies. The State Department had not received a full report from Admiral Horne, who is due in Washington tomorrow, but his mission was that which Mr. Atherton had described. The chief undertakings in question on the French side were:

1. A promise to give the United States 48 hours' notice before French ships left Martinique and to cancel their movement if the United States objected;
2. Reception of an American Naval observer at Martinique and freedom to the American Consul to inspect and check the aircraft there; and
3. Permission for a daily U.S. Patrol plane to fly over the islands. (He said this had been done regularly for about a year.)

The purpose of the undertakings, which in a sense constituted an agreed infringement on French sovereignty on the Islands, was to ensure that vessels and aircraft in the Islands could not be used in a manner contrary to the interests of the United States. In return, of course, certain economic concessions have been granted to the Islands, chiefly permission to send a monthly ship to New York and also to trade in certain products with Casablanca, and the unfreezing in the United States of the funds necessary to maintain the economic life of the Islands.

I told Mr. Atherton that the Horne-Robert agreement, coming on top of the exchange of assurances between Pétain and the President of which the State Department had confidentially informed me, seemed to make it more difficult for Canada to take the initiative in establishing control of the wireless station at St. Pierre. He answered that he thought that there was a very close analogy between establishment of Canadian control of the wireless station and of the type of U.S. control already exercised in the West Indies over French ships and planes. Both would be done in the interests of public security. Both would in a sense constitute an infringement of sovereignty. Both, however, would be balanced by the continuance of the existing administration in the colonies and by economic benefits essential to the life of the colonies.

I said that we could not assume in present circumstances an acquiescence either of the local government or of Vichy in Canadian control of the wireless station. If Canadian personnel were installed by force, we might find ourselves charged with action directly contrary to arrangements just entered into between Washington on the one hand and Vichy and Martinique on the other, and Vichy might use this as a pretext for further steps detrimental to the general interests of the Allies. He answered that he thought that this was most unlikely. He was satisfied that the main concern of the Vichy Government was to protect as far as possible the integrity of the French Empire. They would much prefer to have Canadian control of the wireless station than a de Gaulle coup in the Islands. He felt that it was by no means unlikely that the Administrator would agree to admit Canadian personnel, but he agreed that if he refused, the immediate installation of Canadian personnel would be necessary and that they would have to be protected by a small Naval guard. He felt that a Free French coup would be quite likely to upset the whole delicate balance of relations with Vichy, whereas there was no great danger in the establishment of Canadian control on the lines that we had discussed.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

1. THE PRIME MINISTER reviewed the situation briefly. The U.K. government favoured action by the Free French; the U.S. government were opposed, preferring that steps be taken by Canada. In the circumstances, no action should be taken until the British and U.S. governments were agreed.

The U.K. government appreciated the reasons in favour of supervision of the wireless station, but their military advisers felt that nothing short of occupation, which was ruled out by the U.S. attitude, would really meet the case. They felt it wiser to take no action for the time being.

(Telegram No. 224, December 14, 1941, Dominions Office to External Affairs).

2. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR was inclined to feel that, while the U.K. and U.S. governments were properly consulted in the matter, the problem was primarily a Canadian concern, and decision might have to be made without waiting for agreement between the British and Americans.

3. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES referred to newspaper reports of a settlement between the U.S. government and the local authorities in Martinique. This was said to affect French possessions in the hemisphere.

4. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS stated that a full report would be made by the Legation in Washington upon the reported settlement.

5. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed to defer any action for the time being.

The French Minister called this morning to say that he had been disturbed by two rumours which had reached him within the last week of a contemplated raid on St. Pierre. One report was that the Free French had plans to take over the Islands, the other that the Canadian Government had similar plans in preparation. He was very disturbed at the prospect of either of these developments, and pressed me for a reassuring word that they were unfounded.

I suggested that the reports which had reached him had probably come from shipping and naval circles, which were undoubtedly seriously worried about the possible abuse of the Islands' uncontrolled shortwave broadcasting station to convey information about ship movements which might be of use to the enemy. He would appreciate that this was a very natural and legitimate concern on our part, which had inevitably been aggravated by the recent operations of enemy submarines very close to Newfoundland. No decision had been taken as to whether further security steps were necessary, but I said that we would count on his cooperation in any additional steps which might have to be taken.

I asked him whether he had had any word about the report, current last night, that Marshal Pétain had resigned. He did not believe this story, which he said had been denied by the Vichy Radio this morning. He was sure that Pétain would not resign in the face of German pressure. He might surrender himself as a prisoner of war, he might conceivably go to North Africa to lead opposition, but he would not resign.

I referred to the note we had received from him two or three days ago, advising us of French neutrality in the war in the Pacific,[†] and suggested that the Franco-Japanese "Agreement" for the mutual defence of Indo-China was hardly compatible with the new policy of neutrality. He shrugged his shoulders and said France's neck was in a noose, and that they were not any longer free agents in the Far East. In view of the Minister's reference to reports received over the Vichy radio, I asked him whether he had anything to say about Mr. Firmin Roz's broadcasts from Vichy, addressed specifically to French Canada. I thought it was probably natural to put the best face you could on your own defeat, but it was quite another matter to export defeatist propaganda to your Allies who were carrying on the struggle. He professed to be surprised at my characterization of Firmin Roz's broadcasts as defeatist propaganda, and offered to cable Vichy, suggesting some modification if I thought this advisable.

General de Gaulle has addressed general letter to me in which he states that National Committee learnt with surprise that a decision on this matter should have been taken upon action involving possible use of force on French territories without consulting it and that at the same time the Allied Governments apparently disapproved of rallying of these territories to Free French.

2. Letter states that one of the essential objects of the National Committee is to bring into the struggle under the French flag and for the French cause at the same time as for Allied cause, all parts of the French Empire which could be withdrawn from the Authority of a Government under enemy control. It would lose all reason for existence if it accepted infringement of French sovereignty by the Allies in any portion of France's Empire. The National Committee moreover felt it its duty to draw the attention of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to the awkwardness of the repercussions that the contemplated action would undoubtedly have upon the morale of Free French forces and upon French opinion. It would help enemy propaganda which sought to set the French against their British and American allies and was indefatigable in its efforts to convince France that the Anglo-Saxon powers coveted the French Empire. The National Committee requested that their views might be brought to the attention of His Majesty's Government in Canada.

Main development today has been plebiscite by secret ballot on this Island in which males of 18 years and over were given choice between "rallying to Free France or collaborating with Axis Powers". Results are 651 votes for the former, 10 for the latter policy, 140 ballots incorrectly completed. It is estimated that approximately 950 had franchise and total polled was slightly above average earlier elections. A United States journalist witnessed the count which was apparently quite straightforward. Plebiscites will be held Sailors' Island and Miquelon village December 26th and 27th and voting will probably be almost unanimously for the Free French movement.

dehors des parages de Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, la présence de ce bâtiment de guerre ayant été estimée de nature à créer éventuellement des incidents regrettables.¹⁶ La colonie française se trouvant ainsi complètement désarmée, pour donner tout apaisement au Gouvernement canadien, celui-ci avait par-là même, assumé l'engagement moral, non seulement de respecter lui-même le statu quo de l'Île, mais aussi de veiller à son maintien.

D'autre part, depuis de longs mois, la Légation de France avait trouvé auprès des Autorités canadiennes une généreuse compréhension à laquelle elle tient à rendre de nouveau ici hommage et grâce à laquelle la pénible situation de l'Île, notamment au point de vue alimentaire, avait pu être améliorée. Il s'était ainsi établi une véritable et confiante collaboration excluant toute idée d'un brusque changement d'attitude.

Enfin, le Gouvernement des Etats-Unis, dont les liens d'alliance avec le Canada sont particulièrement étroits, vient précisément de conclure, avec les Autorités des Antilles françaises, un accord dont le Secrétaire d'Etat s'est déclaré à Washington entièrement satisfait. Dans ces conditions, une attitude différente du Gouvernement canadien à l'égard de Saint-Pierre et Miquelon, serait d'autant plus difficile à justifier que rien ne semble actuellement de nature à lui faire adopter, dans ce cas particulier, une politique divergente.

Aussi la Légation de France est persuadée que le Gouvernement canadien voudra bien désapprouver formellement le coup de force qui vient d'être effectué et faire en sorte que soit rétablie sur les Îles de Saint-Pierre et Miquelon l'autorité du Gouvernement légal de la France que lui-même reconnaît.

N'ayant pu joindre le Très Honorable Premier Ministre avant son départ pour Washington, la Légation de France serait très reconnaissante au Ministère des Affaires Extérieures de vouloir bien lui transmettre d'extrême urgence les considérations qui précèdent afin qu'elles soient portées à sa connaissance au moment où s'engageront à Washington les discussions relatives à Saint-Pierre et Miquelon. Ces arguments ont d'autant plus d'importance que l'auteur du coup de force commis sur la Colonie française venait de s'entretenir avec les Autorités Maritimes du Canada et que les bateaux qui ont pris possession de Saint-Pierre sont partis d'un port canadien.

La Légation de France exprime d'avance ses vifs remerciements au Ministère des Affaires Extérieures pour la transmission dont il voudra bien se charger et saisit cette occasion pour lui renouveler les assurances de sa très haute considération.

IMMEDIATE. SECRET.

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I am writing to let you know that I have just received a telegram from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs referring to his telegram to the Canadian Government No. 224 of 18th December, on the subject of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Lord Cranborne states that the Free French authorities who, as you know, had been informed of the views expressed by the United States Government, as shown in your telegram No. 257 of 16th December, have now sent him a strongly worded protest against the action of the United States and Canadian authorities in approving a plan for action to be taken in St. Pierre by Canadian personnel whilst rejecting steps by the Free French to bring these French islands over to the Allied cause.¹⁷

As the Free French authorities have asked that their views on this point may be brought to the notice of the Canadian Government, Lord Cranborne feels that you should know that the Free French have reacted very unfavourably to the proposal that the Canadian authorities should take over the supervision of the wireless station at St. Pierre.¹⁸ tion as to the reasons whereby they had for some hours been unable to make contact with the radio station at St. Pierre. He said that he had telephoned to Naval Service Headquarters in Ottawa and had learned from them that Admiral Muselier had signalled a few minutes before that he had rallied the Islands to the Free French cause pursuant to instructions issued by General de Gaulle.

I managed to reach Mr. Robertson in Ottawa on the telephone without delay. He had just been informed of this development by N.S.H.Q. He confirmed that the Canadian Government had no foreknowledge of the Free French action and agreed that I should bring it at once to the notice of the State Department, making it clear that we had acted throughout with them in good faith.

I gave the information to Mr. Atherton on the telephone at about 7:45 p.m. He had not previously heard of this development and confined himself to remarking that he was afraid it would have many repercussions.

At about 1 p.m. on December 25th Mr. Robertson telephoned to say that Mr. Moffat had come to him with an urgent message from the United States Government which concluded with a request for information as to the steps that the Canadian Government proposed to take to restore the status quo in the Islands. Mr. Moffat had told him that the position had been discussed at the State Department that morning between the Secretary of State, Mr. Welles, and other senior officials. The State Department took a very serious view of the development. I said to Mr. Robertson that as the Prime Minister would arrive in Washington on the following day, it seemed to me that any decision ought to be postponed until the position had been discussed here with the President and Mr. Churchill. He told me that he was informing Mr. Malcolm MacDonald of the United States representations.

Mr. Atherton telephoned to me a few minutes later to read me the text of a statement just made public by the Department of State. This statement is as follows:

“Our preliminary reports show that the action taken by three so-called Free French ships at St. Pierre-Miquelon was an arbitrary action contrary to the agreement of all parties concerned and certainly without the prior knowledge or consent in any sense of the United States Government.

“This government has inquired of the Canadian Government as to the steps that government is prepared to take to restore the status quo of these islands.”

I replied at once that I thought that the last sentence was most unfortunate and urged him to have it withdrawn, if possible. He answered that the statement had already been given to the press. I repeated that we had no responsibility for the Free French action and that I felt it unfair for the United States Government to put the Canadian Government on the spot in this manner without prior consultation and especially in view of the meeting to take place in Washington the next day. Mr. Atherton left me with the impression that there were two main reasons for the State Department's precipitate action:

(1) their fear that the delicate balance of their relations with Vichy and perhaps of Franco-German relations would be upset by the use of Admiral Muselier's action as an excuse for breaking existing agreements and understandings; (2) their hemispheric preoccupations, which led Mr. Atherton to say to me that the whole policy they intended to place before the Conference of American Foreign Ministers at Rio de Janeiro was imperilled by the St. Pierre episode.¹⁹

I was not able to get in contact with any of the senior officers of the British Embassy until about 4 p.m. I then talked over the situation with Sir Ronald Campbell and finally with Lord Halifax. Lord Halifax told me that Mr. Malcolm MacDonald had telephoned to Lord Beaverbrook at lunchtime to inform him of the United States request in Ottawa and that Lord Beaverbrook had spoken to Mr. Churchill, who had asked Lord Halifax to furnish him with background information immediately. I went over with him a memorandum which he had prepared for Mr. Churchill. While I was with him, Telegram No. 7243 from the Foreign Office arrived, making it clear that the occupation had taken place as a result of orders issued by General de Gaulle and that he had broken faith. His Commissioner for Foreign Affairs explained his action by saying that he had heard that the Canadian Government proposed, with the agreement of the United States, to secure control of the wireless station and that if this were done the Free French movement would be completely discredited.

Lord Halifax was to see Mr. Hull at 6 p.m. yesterday to discuss the situation and to show him the telegram in question. Obviously, the Ambassador is surprised at the vehemence of the State Department's reaction.

Mr. Stone telephoned me at about 8 p.m. to ask for the latest news, so that he could relay this to the Prime Minister in Montreal. I gave him an outline of developments. He telephoned later in the evening to give me the text of a reply which had been sent verbally to Mr. Moffat in Ottawa.

Note: The chief explanation that Mr. Atherton offered in reply to my complaint that the State Department had tried to commit us to a policy just in advance of the Prime Minister's visit was that the character of the press despatches coming in from London was such that they could not leave them without an immediate answer. He made no reply when I remarked that one effect of the State Department's action was obviously to magnify the importance of the incident, which was in itself an insignificant episode in the course of the war.

[Ottawa,] December 26, 1941

MEMORANDUM REGARDING SEIZURE OF ST. PIERRE
BY FREE FRENCH FORCES

So far as this Department is concerned, the first announcement of this action was received late Christmas Eve. Early Christmas morning the United States Minister, Mr. Moffat, expressed to Mr. Robertson and Mr. Stone the strong feelings of the United States Government on this aggressive and unprovoked action. Mr. Moffat had been in touch with the Secretary of State in Washington and he took an extremely strong condemnatory line. He requested that the Canadian Government take action at once to restore the status quo in the Islands. The difficulty in any such action was pointed out to Mr. Moffat but he was told that the matter would be taken up with the Prime Minister. Meanwhile it was agreed with Mr. Moffat that it was essential to keep the matter as quiet as possible for the time being and not aggravate the situation by premature press statements.

The next development was a surprising one. About 2 p.m. Mr. Carnegie, of the Canadian Press, read to Mr. Pearson over the telephone the following statement which had just been issued in Washington:

“Our preliminary reports show that the action taken by three so-called Free French ships at St. Pierre and Miquelon was an arbitrary action contrary to the agreement of all parties concerned, and certainly without the prior knowledge or consent in any sense of the United States Government.

This government has inquired of the Canadian Government as to the steps that government is prepared to take to restore the status quo of these islands.”

This statement had been issued without any consultation with the Canadian Government; was entirely misleading in its reference to an agreement between Muselier and the Canadian Government and most embarrassing in its suggestion that the Canadian Government should at once restore the status quo.

We protested to Mr. Moffat about the unfairness of issuing any such statement. Mr. Moffat got in touch with Washington and later explained that the above statement had been issued prematurely in error. Later Mr. Wrong explained that he had been called to the State Department and Mr. Atherton had read to him the above statement. Mr. Wrong, thinking he had been called in consultation over the matter, suggested certain changes to make the statement more accurate in its references to Canada, whereupon Mr. Atherton informed him that the statement had already been issued and he was merely being informed of it. Mr. Wrong reacted strongly to this treatment.

²⁰ L. B. Pearson.

There were numerous inquiries from the press during the afternoon as to whether there was anything to be said in reply to the statement issued by Washington. They were merely told that the action of the Free French Forces came as a complete surprise to the Canadian Government; but that there was no agreement between those Forces and the Canadian Government covering the Islands, as suggested in the United States communiqué.

Meanwhile, in Washington, Mr. Wrong had discussed the matter with Lord Halifax at the Embassy, who read to him a telegram from the Foreign Office, which stated that Admiral Muselier had acted on instructions from de Gaulle because the Free French had heard rumours that Canada was to take action. Lord Halifax showed this Foreign Office telegram to Mr. Hull at 6 p.m. Lord Halifax was also drafting a memorandum to Mr. Churchill on the matter, and asked Mr. Wrong to assist him in this, insofar as it referred to things Canadian. He was going to try to take this memorandum up with Mr. Churchill during the evening, and if there were any developments, he promised to let Mr. Wrong know. Apparently there were no such developments.

During the evening Mr. Moffat once again expressed violent feelings on the whole matter, and stated that any course by the Canadian Government other than restoration of the Vichy regime, with Canadian supervision of the wireless, would be "190° removed from United States policy." He also made certain obscure observations on the unfortunate results that would ensue if Canada adopted a separate policy in this matter. Mr. Moffat was still inclined to take the darkest possible view of the consequences of the seizure. In fact, he seems to have lost his sense of proportion over the whole business. It appears possible that, at the beginning, he thought that the move had been made with Canadian knowledge and that, therefore, some question of good faith might be involved. The fallacy of this view was pointed out to him in no uncertain terms. Indeed, if the question of "good faith" were brought up, it would be impossible not to refer to an agreement made without the knowledge of the Canadian Government by the United States with the Vichy authorities at Martinique purporting to cover all the French territory in the Western Hemisphere; also the issue of a press statement that morning in Washington of the most damaging and embarrassing kind to Canada without consulting the Canadian Government.

It seemed to us that Mr. Moffat's strong and indignant feelings might not entirely reflect the attitude of the United States Government who, it was hoped, might take a calmer view of the situation. Mr. Wrong last evening, however, confirmed over the telephone, that, as he put it, "the whole State Department was 'hot' on the matter."

Mr. Robertson had an opportunity of discussing the question with the Prime Minister, Mr. Ralston and Mr. Macdonald on the way to Montreal. As the result of that discussion he was able to phone us from Montreal the following statement from the Prime Minister:

"Canada is in no way responsible for the Free French occupation of St. Pierre and Miquelon. We have kept in close touch with both the United Kingdom and the United States on this question and have always been ready to co-operate in carrying out an agreed policy. We declined to commit ourselves to any action or to take any action pending such agreement. In the circumstances and until we have had an opportunity of considering action with the President and Mr. Churchill, the Canadian Government cannot take the steps requested to expel the Free French and restore the status quo in the Islands.

This was given officially at 10 p.m. to Mr. Moffat as an answer to his request that the Canadian Government take immediate action to restore the status quo in the Islands. It was also telephoned to Mr. Wrong in Washington.

Neither the above statement nor any other report has been given to the press, pending the result of the conversations in Washington.

to Acting Prime Minister²²*

[Ottawa,] December 26, 1941

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

The French Minister called, by appointment, to see me at 10:30 this morning.

M. Ristelhueber stated that on December 24th he had received warning that the Free French Forces, under Admiral Muselier, were preparing a coup de main in the Islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. He had at once reported this to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs who had told him that the Canadian Government had discussed the situation with Admiral Muselier but had told the latter that they were not prepared to support him in any move against the Islands. M. Ristelhueber added that he went away convinced that the Canadian Government had taken steps which would be adequate to prevent any overt act by the Free French. He then telegraphed to his Government in this sense. The telegram had hardly been despatched when he received information that Admiral Muselier had, in fact, seized the Islands.

Early on December 25th the French Minister, acting on instructions from his Government, tried to get in touch with the Prime Minister but this was found to be impossible in the time available before the departure of Mr. King for Washington. M. Ristelhueber was then told that he should speak to Mr. Crerar; but, although he endeavoured to get in touch with the Minister of Mines and Resources, from five o'clock until after ten o'clock on Christmas night, he was unsuccessful. His call on me was to put on record the views of his Government in regard to the unprovoked attack on St. Pierre and to express the wish that these views should be made known to the Prime Minister in Washington before Mr. King speaks to Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill about this subject. The French Minister then went over, orally, the representations presented in his official note,²³ a translation of which is attached hereto.

I contented myself with indicating to M. Ristelhueber what he was fully prepared to accept: namely, that the Canadian Government had acted in complete good faith throughout. He felt, however, that because we had insisted upon the departure of the Ville d'Ys and had been acting cooperatively in regard to the maintenance of the Islands since that time, we were under a moral obligation to maintain the de Bournat administration at St. Pierre. I stated that while I could not myself accept the validity of this argument, and did not believe that either the removal of the Ville d'Ys or the maintenance of sympathetic relations with the Islanders placed any such responsibility upon Canada, I would nevertheless see that his representations were placed before the Prime Minister if possible before Mr. King meets the President and Mr. Churchill in Washington.

I gained the impression that M. Ristelhueber did not, in fact, expect us to attach any very great weight to the rather specious arguments which he was advancing.

Washington, December 26, 1941

The attached telegram from Lord Halifax to Mr. Eden[†] contains a report of a discussion about St. Pierre between the Ambassador and Mr. Hull yesterday evening. Attention is directed to the last sentence, stating that Mr. Churchill has in mind the possibility of finding a compromise solution by some kind of government by commission.

Mr. Tixier of the Free French Delegation in Washington called on me this morning to explain the attitude of the Free French movement here toward the episode and to enquire concerning the intention of the Canadian Government. On the latter point I told him that no decision would be reached until after the Prime Minister had conferred with the President and Mr. Churchill. I added that I personally felt that any solution involving the restoration of the status quo by the use of force in the Islands could hardly be expected. He put the Free French position very clearly and forcibly, and told me that he was going to a meeting at the State Department this afternoon on the subject. I understand from the British Embassy that Mr. Bergner, a colleague of Mr. Tixier in the Free French movement, has seen Lord Halifax this morning. I gather that Lord Halifax shares my feeling that it is in our mutual interest that the Free French case should be put forcibly to the State Department by their own representatives here.

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS

Plan should include following as essential conditions:

1. It should be such as to ensure security, especially by control over communications between St. Pierre and France. This to be done:
 - (a) by (Canadian ?) control of wireless station, including authority to pre-censor messages,
 - (b) by continued control of movement of French public vessels and similar measures.
2. It should be accepted by General de Gaulle, preferably voluntarily but if necessary under pressure. It must therefore represent his action as having assisted in solving a difficult problem. This means no forcible restoration of Vichy control at risk of bloodshed.
3. There must be no reprisals in the islands, or victimization of Free French supporters.
4. The plan must be such as not to damage seriously the prestige of the Free French movement, with consequent danger to the movement of resistance to the Nazis in France and Europe generally.
5. The plan must be such as to be acceptable without serious controversy to public opinion in Canada, the United States, and the United Kingdom.

POSSIBLE FEATURES

Plan might require status quo in internal laws and regulations as of June 15, 1940 — i.e. guarantee of civil rights etc. by restoration of status quo.

The President has suggested that an elected Council might take over the administration of the islands. This sounds a promising line to be followed up.

Economic arrangements could include understanding authorizing the marketing in the French West Indies of the product of the island fisheries.

PRELIMINARY QUESTIONS TO BE ANSWERED

- (1) What are minimum changes in regime installed by Muselier required to meet U.S. position?
 - (a) Withdrawal of Free French ships?
 - (b) Type of regime - must be acceptable to Vichy?
 - (c) Restoration of Vichy officials?

²⁴Rédigé par N. A. Robertson et H. H. Wrong.

²⁴ Drafted by N. A. Robertson and H. H. Wrong.

(2) How can a restoration of the authority of Vichy be made to accord with democratic principles of U.S. and Allies? There seems no doubt of the overwhelming Gaullist sentiment in the islands.

Washington, December 27, 1941

The Prime Minister called on Mr. Hull, accompanied by Mr. Robertson and Mr. Wrong, at 5 p.m. on December 26th. Mr. Hull explained at some length to Mr. King the policy which he had followed with respect to relations with Japan up to the outbreak of hostilities. He then said that there were two or three matters affecting relations between Canada and the United States which had been causing him great concern. The first of these was St. Pierre, and the rest of the discussion was devoted to this alone.

Mr. Hull began by saying that he had been under great pressure on Christmas day to issue a public statement about the Free French coup and had felt that he could not delay. He said somewhat apologetically that he had not thought about the political effects in Canada of the statement which he had issued. He went on to describe his policy in maintaining the bridge of diplomatic relations with the Vichy Government, emphasizing that its continuance had been strongly desired by the United Kingdom. He reviewed the position from both the political and the economic point of view, mentioning that the provision of certain essential supplies to North Africa had been successful in improving the attitude of the French in that territory. He also alluded to the agreement with Admiral Robert governing the French West Indies. He said, however, that relations with Vichy might change at any hour, and that would bring an entirely new situation.

He referred only briefly and incidentally to the Pan American aspect of the coup at St. Pierre and he did not seem to attach a great deal of importance to this.

Mr. Hull said that at his press conference that day he had attempted, off the record, to place the issue in better perspective. Hitherto, the problem afforded by the uncontrolled wireless station had not been publicly mentioned and he had brought this into the open as being a major cause of concern to the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada. He had urged the press to soft-pedal the situation in St. Pierre.

He then suggested the possibility of a compromise solution, which had already been discussed between the President and Mr. Churchill. This would include Canadian or joint control of the wireless station, an approach to General de Gaulle through Mr. Churchill, saying that his action had been helpful in bringing to an end a potential danger which had been a source of worry but that his object was now accomplished, and the restoration of civil administration in the islands under some agreed policy. Mr. King said that he felt there could be no question of putting the Administrator back in office, as he was an unreliable character with a German wife.

Mr. Hull finally said that he hoped Mr. King would talk over the matter with Mr. Churchill and the President. Mr. King told him that he had always been opposed to the use of force to solve the problem of St. Pierre and that it was necessary for any solution to be arrived at by agreement between the Governments concerned.

Mr. King and Mr. Hull then went to the White House to meet the President and Mr. Churchill. The main subject of discussion was the St. Pierre episode. Mr. Churchill advanced the idea of a compromise solution, which would involve control of the wireless station, but would place the islands under an administration acceptable to Vichy. It was finally agreed that the matter should be left to be further explored by Mr. Hull and Mr. King. Mr. Churchill expressed himself as ready to bring considerable pressure on de Gaulle to accept a solution agreeable to the United States.

Mr. King saw Mr. Hull again at 10:30 o'clock this morning and had a long general talk with him, only a part of which was devoted to St. Pierre. During the interview he sent for the French Ambassador, saying that he proposed to put up to him, for the concurrence of Vichy, an arrangement whereby the wireless station should be under proper supervision and the islands would be returned in some way or other to Vichy control. Mr. King made it clear that the reinstatement of de Bournat as Administrator was not acceptable. There was some discussion of the possibility of an elective administration — a suggestion which the President had thrown out on the previous evening. It was also made clear that there must be no reprisals in the Islands and that the plan must be acceptable to the Governments chiefly concerned. No specific or detailed scheme for "restoring the status quo" was brought forward.

M. Henri-Haye saw Mr. Hull immediately after Mr. King's departure. It is reported that, on leaving the Secretary of State's office, he informed the press that an agreement had been reached for the restoration of Vichy control, subject to regulation of the wireless station. So far as is known at the moment, this report has no foundation whatever.

Mr. Robertson and I saw Mr. Hoyer Miller and Mr. Barclay of the British Embassy later in the morning and informed them of the discussions outlined above. They were especially concerned with the effect on the Free French movement of any compromise solution and they proposed to take up the question with Lord Halifax before he saw Mr. Churchill this afternoon.

M. Tixier of the Free French headquarters called on me at about 4 p.m., his call, I think, having been inspired by the French Ambassador's statement of this morning. I gave him a general outline of the position, saying that a compromise solution was under consideration but that its terms were as yet far from explicit. So far as I knew, the French Ambassador's statement was quite unfounded and it was possible that it would have the effect of drawing a denial from Mr. Hull. He said in the most emphatic terms that he was sure that an attempt to restore Vichy control would be accompanied by bloodshed in the Islands. He also thought that if de Gaulle was asked to back down too far, he would resign and wreck the Free French movement. He is confident that there is no alternative Free French leader in sight. I told him clearly that it was after all de Gaulle who had started the trouble by sending an expedition to the Islands after he had promised to take no action. That had to be borne in mind, no matter how much the position had been aggravated by the Department of State's press statement of December 25th. I added that while it was very desirable, in my view, that de Gaulle's face should be saved as far as possible in any solution, some face-saving had to be accomplished in other directions as well. The Department of State had committed itself to restoring the status quo, and we could not press for an outcome which would damage the relations between the United States and the British Commonwealth.

M. Tixier mentioned incidentally that a Colonel of the Free French Medical Corps had been yesterday morning in the State Department discussing the provision of certain medical supplies to the Free French forces. He had been amazed to be summoned suddenly to Mr. Hull's office and treated to a violent tirade on the defects of the Free French movement, the character of de Gaulle, and the folly of the action at St. Pierre. The Colonel, who had not even heard of the affair, explained that this was no concern of his but gave a forthright answer, referring to his pride in being a Free Frenchman and saying that Mr. Hull had referred to the Free French in terms more vehement and derogatory than those which he had employed toward the Japanese after Pearl Harbor. This incident may throw some light on the atmosphere in which the statement of December 25th was prepared. M. Tixier said that he had prevented the publication of a report of the interview and that he was refusing to make any comment to the press in the United States. He could not, however, keep silence for long. He had even sought to dissuade the New York Post from publishing their strong editorial entitled "Must We Betray de Gaulle?" on December 26th.

He went on to say that he found the attitude of the Administration here toward the Free French very disturbing and confusing. The movement appeared to be regarded as a nuisance, to be ignored as far as possible. They had received no invitation to be represented at the inter-Allied meeting at the White House this afternoon. He was feeling very discouraged. I told him that at least he could feel assured that the atmosphere respecting the St. Pierre incident had changed since December 25th and that the change from his point of view was certainly for the better.

Mr. Robertson telephoned last night from Washington and stated that in discussions which the Prime Minister and he had had with Mr. Hull, and later with State Department officials, on the occupation of St. Pierre by the Free French, they found a much more reasonable attitude than that adopted by Mr. Moffat on Sunday.

There was now, he thought, no question of the United States suggesting that Canada should eject the Free French from the Islands. He thought that a solution would be worked out on co-operative lines, which would not result in the restoration of a Vichy administration.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

Late on the evening of Friday, December 26, we received a message from our Acting Consul at St. Pierre saying that he wished to transmit to us a message of so confidential a nature that he did not wish to trust it to the ordinary channels. He asked for a plane to be sent to pick it up, and stated that his American colleague was making a similar request in Washington.

The R.C.A.F. sent a plane to St. Pierre on Saturday and took the message to the Headquarters of the Eastern Air Command at Halifax. There it was opened by the Air Officer Commanding, who had it cyphered and forwarded to the Chief of the Air Staff, Ottawa, who transmitted it to me early Sunday morning.

The message as received from the Chief of the Air Staff is attached hereto.

The United States authorities did not send a plane to St. Pierre, but the R.C.A.F. plane brought back the message from the United States Consul, and it was delivered to his colleague in Halifax. It was assumed that it was similar in tenor to that addressed to us by Mr. Eberts.

A copy of the original despatch[†], which has now been received, is also attached.

TELEGRAM

Halifax, December 28, 1941

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. Aircraft carrying dispatch from Canadian Consul St. Pierre and Miquelon addressed Secretary of State for External Affairs Ottawa arrived Halifax 1915 hours AST and in accordance your instructions I have opened envelope and give hereunder full dispatch in detail. Dispatch Begins: Sir, I have the honour to refer to my telegram No. 73 of today's date[†] and to inform you of certain facts that have been brought to my attention and which it appears important to communicate to you without delay in the present circumstances.

2. I have learned from an authoritative source that Vice-Admiral Muselier feels extremely embarrassed vis-à-vis the Canadian and United States authorities over the recent turn of events in this archipelago. I understand that, if his position as a subordinate in the Free French Forces did not prohibit him entirely from doing so, he would like to explain to the Canadian and United States governments the events which led up to the occupation, in order to make it clear to them that he acted in good faith in indicating, during his recent conversations with them, that he had no intention nor desire to occupy these islands before reaching an understanding with them.

3. I have been given an account of the course of events of recent weeks which I am inclined to believe is correct. It appears that, originally when the Admiral was sent to Newfoundland and Canada by General de Gaulle, the latter gave him carte blanche as regards Free French policy in this region. On his arrival in St. John's Newfoundland he decided that it would not be desirable to take any action with regard to St. Pierre and Miquelon without first obtaining an understanding on the question from the Canadian and United States authorities, and he therefore informed General de Gaulle to this effect and that he was proceeding to Ottawa in the hope of reaching an agreement with these authorities.

4. After he had concluded his conversations the Admiral decided that in view of the attitude of the Canadian and United States governments, the question of an occupation should be deferred for the time being, and just before his departure from Ottawa he received instructions from General de Gaulle not to conduct negotiations (although he had been given a free hand and the General had known for some time that he had been negotiating), to continue his inspection of Free French naval units and then return to the United Kingdom.

5. About December 19th or 20th, when in Montreal, the Admiral received a further formal order from General de Gaulle instructing him to occupy the islands. As, during his Ottawa conversations, he had in good faith indicated that he did not intend to take any action without first obtaining the consent he was seeking, his first reaction was to feel that he should offer his resignation. It was only his sense of duty to his Commander-in-Chief and his belief that the Free French Movement would suffer a serious loss of unity and prestige if a split were to develop between the General and himself, that convinced him that he must carry out the order.

6. For obvious reasons, the United States Consul and I have been given this information on the understanding that we would not name its source and that it would be considered as most confidential by our respective governments. I imagine the source will be evident to you, but should appreciate it if, in view of my undertaking, the second condition could be fulfilled.

7. Related to the matter outlined above is the question of local defence plans which may be a rather serious one. The Admiral has stated to me with complete cordiality, but nevertheless with every indication of determination, that he feels that, in view of the results of the plebiscite, he must defend the islands against all possible attacks and that he would be unwilling to abandon them since a very large percentage of the population have now openly committed themselves to the Free French Movement and might be expected to suffer reprisals.

8. While he would only name the French forces as "possible attackers", the Admiral made it quite clear that he also had in mind at least those of Canada and the United States, and that he felt that I should inform you of his attitude. It may be added that he has spoken in identical terms to the United States Consul with a similar end in view.

9. You will, of course, appreciate that the majority of the population in these islands are too overjoyed with present events here to be able to understand the difficulties which they may entail for the Allies in the wider sphere of policy and that, particularly with the leadership of occupation forces, they might well put up a stubborn resistance to any attempt to reverse the results of the occupation and plebiscite, even if they knew from the outset that it was doomed to failure. It should perhaps be added that the Admiral's fear of reprisals against the de Gaullists in the event of his forces being withdrawn or overcome has already been substantiated to some extent. Yesterday evening, when Dr. Gau, the Chief of the health service was listening to the news of Mr. Cordell Hull's statement on the occupation of these islands, at the United States Consul's house, he said with obvious relish that there would certainly be reprisals if there was a further change here. Again, today, a thoroughly reliable informant who has on various occasions furnished useful information to the United States Consul and myself, tells me that he has had an identical reaction from Mr. Georges Landry, a local merchant. The attitude of these men would probably be typical of the pro-Vichy and rather anti-British elements here. I have the honour to be, Sir your obedient servant, Christopher Eberts, Acting Consul, Dispatch Ends. Dispatch resealed in envelope addressed Dr. Keenleyside.[. . .] End of message.

Washington, December 29, 1941

Mr. King dined alone with Mr. Hull on the evening of December 27th. The question of St. Pierre was mentioned in the course of their conversation and Mr. King derived the impression that the next step in the discussions would await a reply from Vichy to the suggestions which he had made to M. Henri-Haye.²⁶

Mr. Robertson told me yesterday morning that he had heard that some sort of a draft proposal had been given to Mr. Churchill. I have not yet been able to confirm this from British sources. I asked Mr. King before he left yesterday morning what he understood to be the status of the negotiations. He said that certainly he had not made any agreement verbally with Mr. Hull on the terms of a possible settlement and that he felt that it was for the State Department to make the next move in approaching Canada, as the matter had been returned to their hands.

Mr. Robertson and I agreed before his departure yesterday that we should insist, if the State Department should make a proposal, that it be in writing and in explicit terms and should not contain phrases such as "in accordance with the understanding reached between the Secretary of State and the Prime Minister".

I said that if such a phrase were used, I would ask to have an extract from Mr. Hull's record of his conversations with Mr. King, so that we would know exactly what was being referred to.

Mr. Hoyer Millar telephoned to me last night to say that Lord Halifax had sent a telegram to London outlining the proposals under consideration by the State Department, including the three points of external control of the wireless station, no restoration of the Governor, and recognition of the authority of Vichy over the Islands. He had received back from London a telegram from the Foreign Office, saying that this proposal was altogether too pro-Vichy for their liking and complaining rather bitterly about its terms. This telegram is being repeated to Earnscliffe for Mr. Churchill's information, and Lord Halifax is going to show it to Mr. Hull today. He wants to discuss the position with me before he sees the Secretary of State.

M. Tixier also telephoned to me last night to say that he had received instructions to make a protest to the State Department over the position, presumably based on consultations between the Foreign Office and de Gaulle in London. He also wishes to see me in the course of the morning.

Mémorandum du ministre-conseiller, la légation aux États-Unis

Washington, December 29, 1941

I discussed the St. Pierre situation at the British Embassy late this morning with Sir Ronald Campbell and Mr. Hoyer Millar. They showed me a telegram from Halifax to Eden dated December 27th, reporting a conversation with Hull in which he outlined a solution on lines familiar to us. The four points emphasized in the telegram as having been specially made by Hull were that the solution must be quick, that the radio station must be effectively controlled, that the Free French forces must withdraw from the Islands, and that there must be a new Governor acceptable to Vichy. This produced yesterday the attached reply from Eden.²⁷

Halifax showed this reply to Hull this morning. Hull assured him that he had never contemplated the use of force against the Free French and that he felt that a solution must include a public statement recognizing the contribution of the Free French towards meeting the problem of the radio station. Hull said that he would consult the British and Canadian Governments on receipt of a reply from Vichy to the representations which he had made to Henry-Haye. He thought that the British Government might prepare a public statement which would be acceptable to the Free French. He went on to emphasize the consequences of failure to reach a settlement with Vichy, which he said would involve the end of the contacts between the U.S. and Vichy and would gravely embarrass the U.S. at the Rio Conference because of the Havana Resolution. Hull also made a new point in saying that he anticipated that Admiral Robert would send a cruiser to St. Pierre to engage the Free French forces if they were not withdrawn. He asked Halifax what would happen then.

Halifax said to him that he felt that the outcome must not be such as to humiliate the Free French or make them too sour. They were after all providing valuable service to the Allied cause both by maintaining a spirit of resistance in France and by their military forces in Africa.

During this discussion it was agreed that on the whole it was desirable to leave the matter at present in the hands of the State Department and not to make a new approach at a lower level. It was suggested that, as soon as the State Department came to us, we might take up the matter jointly with them.

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures
Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

1. Mr. Wrong phoned from Washington to the effect that he had been in touch with Lord Halifax who has telegraphed to London reporting on a conversation he had had with Mr. Hull on the 27th. In that conversation, Mr. Hull advanced a solution of the St. Pierre difficulty, which is probably already known to you, namely, that the Free French Forces should withdraw, that the wireless should be put under Canadian control, that a new Governor should be appointed, who would, however, be persona grata to Vichy.

2. This telegram from Lord Halifax brought a blast from the Foreign Office in reply, in which the Foreign Office asks some very pertinent questions. Were the Free French to be compelled to withdraw? If not, there was no hope of them withdrawing voluntarily. If so, there might be bloodshed which would have a deplorable effect. Furthermore, the Foreign Office wanted to know on what grounds the Free French would be asked to withdraw in the light of the plebiscite which had been held. They also added that in their opinion, control of the wireless by Canada with the Vichy Governor in occupation would not be enough.

3. After receiving this telegram from the Foreign Office, Lord Halifax saw Mr. Hull this morning. The Secretary of State assured him

(1) It was never contemplated that force should be used against the Free French.

(2) If the Free French should withdraw voluntarily a public statement should be issued recognizing that the Free French had made a real contribution to the solving of the wireless problem.

(3) The United States would consult with the Canadian and United Kingdom Governments as soon as a reply had been received from the Vichy Government to whom Henry-Haye had telegraphed a possible solution along the lines indicated above. (para.1)

4. Mr. Hull asked Lord Halifax at this morning's conference what would happen if the Vichy cruiser now at Martinique sailed north to recapture the Island. He added, however, that he agreed that nothing should be done that would humiliate the Free French. Mr. Wrong had been in touch since this morning's conference with the Embassy and they had agreed that the next move would have to be made by the State Department.

Le Gouvernement français a pris acte avec satisfaction de la déclaration par laquelle le Gouvernement américain a désapprouvé l'action entreprise contre St-Pierre-et-Miquelon, mais il estime que l'état de dépendance politique et pécuniaire où se trouvent les dirigeants gaullistes par rapport aux Autorités impériales et l'appui dont l'ex-amiral MUSELIER a dû bénéficier en des terres anglaises ou canadiennes, lui impose l'obligation de demander au Gouvernement intéressé le rétablissement immédiat du statu quo ante.

Ce rétablissement comporterait au premier chef, l'évacuation du territoire par les mercenaires gaullistes et la réinstallation du Gouverneur dans ses fonctions.

Le Gouvernement français attacherait le plus grand prix à obtenir dès à présent, des précisions sur les mesures prises à cet effet par les Gouvernements intéressés.

La Légation de France présente ses compliments au Ministère des Affaires Extérieures et a l'honneur d'attirer son attention sur un entrefilet paru au bas de la première page du journal hebdomadaire Le Jour, daté du 27 décembre et ainsi conçu:

“Notre ami Jean Le Bret est absent de Montréal. Il n'est pas parti pour une partie de plaisir, mais afin d'accomplir son devoir.”

M. Le Bret est le journaliste qui, faisant partie de l'expédition Muselier, a relaté tous les détails du coup de force.

Il en résulte qu'à Montréal on était parfaitement au courant des préparatifs de ce coup de force et on en parlait d'ailleurs si librement que le bruit en était revenu à mes propres oreilles lorsque j'ai fait un court séjour en cette ville le 17 décembre.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

The French Minister called on me at 12 o'clock noon today to leave the attached Notes, Nos. 73 and 74.

Mr. Ristelhueber now informed me that his Note No. 72 should have been dated December 25th²⁹ and that it had been prepared on his own initiative and not, as I understood him to indicate at the time he delivered it, on instructions from his Government. The representations which he made today, however, were based directly on instructions from Vichy.

The French Minister is very anxious to see the Prime Minister and hopes that he may have an appointment for this purpose either today or tomorrow as he is afraid that otherwise the Canadian Government may reach a decision in regard to the fate of the Islands before he has had a chance to speak to Mr. King about it. I told him that I was afraid the Prime Minister would not be able to see him so long as Mr. Churchill is in the City but that I would make his request known. Mr. Ristelhueber then said that if it should prove to be quite impossible for the Prime Minister to see him he would like to have an opportunity of speaking to the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. I assured him that I would make this request known to you and that I expected you would be able to arrange for him to call sometime tomorrow, Tuesday, December 30th.

TELEGRAM 60

According to information gathered from French circles here, it seems that General de Gaulle's intentions in occupying St. Pierre were the following:

(1) Prevention of an agreement between Washington and Vichy concerning St. Pierre, as in the case of La Martinique, which would consolidate the French Government's position.

(2) Protest for not having been more closely associated with the conversations in Washington.

(3) Provoke complications between Washington and Vichy which might lead to severance of diplomatic relations and thus facilitate recognition of his Movement as the true French Government.

The General encountered much opposition amongst his own followers, particularly from Free French navy. Much criticism is also heard concerning his dictatorial method of a fait accompli followed by a plebiscite as it resembles too much certain famous precedents.

Personally I consider as inopportune any move which might be used by the Germans in their endeavour to obtain the French Fleet, facilities in North Africa, or other advantages against Britain and the Allies.

Washington, December 30, 1941

Dear Mr. Robertson,

Up to the moment of writing there have been no developments of importance respecting the St. Pierre episode since you left Washington on Sunday. I am enclosing two memoranda, both dated December 29th, which give an account of developments.³⁰ Such new information as is contained in them I passed on by telephone yesterday to Mr. Pearson.

All I have heard today on the matter is that the Foreign Office have asked the British Embassy to inform the State Department of the opinion of the Chiefs of Staff that nothing short of the occupation of the Islands by British or Allied forces would really meet the case from a military point of view. This is presumably done in order to provide an additional argument against a return of the Islands to effective Vichy control, subject to some supervision of the wireless station.

I had another talk with Tixier yesterday evening. He has been instructed by General de Gaulle to make a written declaration to the Department of State, and he is to see Atherton this afternoon. He showed me the declaration. It seemed to me that it would not be embarrassing from our point of view for it to be lodged with the Department of State. With the passage of time, the State Department's statement of Christmas day³¹ grows no less unreasonable. I have just been listening to Mr. Churchill's speech in the House of Commons.³² This certainly seems to make any literal compliance with the State Department's semi-ultimatum of December 25th more impossible than ever.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Mémorandum du ministre-conseiller, la légation aux États-UnisMemorandum by Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States

Washington, January 1, 1942

While seeing Mr. Berle on another matter yesterday he brought up the question of St. Pierre. The aspect which is causing him concern is the possibility of reactions in Latin America, which he regards as much more important than the question of relations with Vichy. He said that it could not be denied that the coup constituted a change by force in the status of the Islands and that if it were allowed to stand it would be a precedent that would plague the U.S. in other connections. If they accepted the coup, they would have to stand guard and be prepared to despatch ships and troops to any point in Latin America in which Nazi agitation might lead to an outbreak. It was a violation of the long-standing policy of the United States that no change in territorial control in the Western Hemisphere should be effected by force.

As Mr. Berle seemed somewhat suspicious that some authorities in Canada had been privy to the coup, I denied this with vigour, stating that neither the Canadian Government nor the Canadian Naval authorities knew anything about it whatever. I remarked that the affair was petty and that it was a mistake to turn it into an issue on the solution of which much more vital matters seemed to depend. He answered this by saying that the reaction of the French and German radio made it impossible for the United States to refrain from vigorous counter-action. I agreed with him that General de Gaulle had certainly broken faith in authorizing the coup, but I said that public opinion in Canada and the United Kingdom would certainly not stand for any solution involving the humiliation of the Free French. I added that time seemed to me to be helping in solving the issue and that pressure for an immediate solution might make matters worse. (Later I learned that Mr. Hull had telephoned to Lord Halifax yesterday, urging on him the importance of an immediate solution but making no concrete suggestions.)

Finally, I told Mr. Berle that I appreciated the force of his observations concerning the possible effects in Latin America. Canada, however, was not party to the international arrangements reached at Havana and other Conferences and had not been consulted about their terms. He could not therefore expect the Canadian people or the Canadian Government to be impressed by these arguments to the same degree as might be the case in the United States. Mr. Berle seemed to be slightly embarrassed by these observations and apologetic over the absence of consultation with Canada. He merely answered by emphasizing the solidity of the understandings between Canada and the United States in comparison with those of a Pan American character.

*Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] January 2, 1942

The French Minister called this afternoon to enquire if there were any developments with regard to the St. Pierre-Miquelon situation, and to ask if he could have an appointment with you.

He went over the ground covered in his notes of December 25th and 29th, stating his Government's case for the restoration of the status quo ante in the Islands. He argued that, in view of the withdrawal from St. Pierre last year of the training ship Ville d'Ys at the request of the Canadian Government, the Canadian Government was under a special obligation to defend the Islands against "external aggression". He thought the question put in the plebiscite was unfairly worded and tendentious, and that its results did not represent the real sentiments of the inhabitants of the Islands. The Governor had been a sympathetic and liberal-minded administrator in whom we should all have had confidence. The attitude of the Bishop of the Islands, who had opposed the Free French Movement, was also evidence of the real preference of the Islanders for attachment to Vichy. The Minister also cited the volunteered testimony of two St. Pierre residents of Canada, who, after the coup d'état, had come to Ottawa, got in touch with him and, on his advice, called at this Department. These men had said that the feeling of the Islanders was strongly pro-Canadian and pro-American, and that the only reason the majority of the Islanders had welcomed Muselier was because they assumed that his move must have British and American endorsement. (One of these independent witnesses has since been found trying to put in a long distance telephone call from Ottawa to the Japanese Embassy in Washington, and is now under R.C.M.P. surveillance. I did not pass this information on to the French Minister).

The Minister had with him a copy of Le Jour of January 3rd in which Jean Charles Harvey claimed that the whole plan for taking over the Islands had been worked out in his offices in Montreal. His special correspondent Le Bret did in fact accompany Muselier.

I told Mr. Ristelhueber that I did not think there was anything at present that you or I could say to him. His Government's special enquiries had been addressed simultaneously to London, Washington and Ottawa; we were in communication with the United Kingdom and the United States Government on the matter; and the United States Secretary of State was in touch with Mr. Henry-Haye. In the circumstances, I did not think a separate reply to his enquiries could usefully be made by Canada. The situation was complicated and presented real difficulties for all parties concerned. I recognized there was a good deal of force and logic in his representations but, under present conditions, it was rarely possible to work out practicable solutions which were entirely logical and consistent, and I hoped that his Government would not exaggerate the importance of an awkward incident.

I did not discuss with the French Minister the shape which any compromise arrangement might take or refer to Mr. Hull's preliminary request for special safeguards for communications in the Islands.

[Ottawa,] January 2, 1942

The United States Minister called this afternoon to let you know that Mr. Hull had seen Mr. Henry-Haye on Tuesday, December 30th. Mr. Hull had expected the French Ambassador to bring some concrete proposals from his Government as to the form which special security provisions relating to the St. Pierre and Miquelon wireless station might take. Mr. Hull had regarded this as a first step which presumably, if satisfactory, would lead to further steps. Mr. Henry-Haye, however, did not bring back any such proposals. Instead he started to give the Secretary of State a lecture about French sovereignty and the importance of restoring the status quo ante in the Islands. Mr. Hull had been rather impatient, and made it clear that this was not the answer he had been expecting. Mr. Henry-Haye said something about his Government expecting that security arrangements regarding the wireless station would be discussed direct with Admiral Robert.

The State Department did not regard the interview as marking any progress in the search for a solution of the problem. Meanwhile, Admiral Leahy had reported from Vichy that the Germans were beginning to use the St. Pierre situation as an additional leverage in pressing for enlarged control of bases.

I gave Mr. Moffat a copy of Eberts' secret despatch of December 26th containing Admiral Muselier's secret explanation of the circumstances leading up to the occupation of the Islands.³³ made public very soon, I called on Atherton yesterday afternoon to enquire about the status of the matter. He told me that a proposed next step was being placed before the Cabinet at the White House that day. I could not get from him any direct indication of what this was. He repeated more than once, however, that Mr. Churchill's references to the Free French and Vichy in his Ottawa speech had put the Secretary on the spot and that the Secretary did not propose to remain there. He, like Berle, emphasized on this occasion the U.S. obligations as expressed in the Convention of Havana as being the main reason for their violent opposition to the Free French coup. He talked about the episode as setting a possible precedent for the occupation of the Falkland Islands by the Argentine and of British Honduras by Guatemala. Berle said the same thing to Mr. McCarthy during a talk yesterday.

I told Atherton that I could list the conditions for a satisfactory solution of the matter, but they seemed to be mutually contradictory and did not add up to anything. It was necessary to avoid a solution which seemed like a rebuff to Mr. Hull, but it was also necessary to avoid an open humiliation to the Free French. Atherton, while seeming to agree with this, attacked the leadership of de Gaulle, saying that it was well known that 95% of Frenchmen opposed to the Axis were not ready to follow de Gaulle as a leader. I maintained that this was beside the point, since in fact de Gaulle was the only leader of the anti-Axis Frenchmen with an organized following and, whatever his defects, he was fighting our battles as an ally.

I mentioned to Atherton the unfairness of their approach on Christmas day to Canada with the suggestion that the Canadian Government should clean up a mess for which they were in no way responsible and should in effect enforce the Havana Convention, to which they were not a party and about which they had never been consulted. There is, I think, a good deal of contrition in the State Department on this score.

I impressed on Atherton the need for consulting us before another public move was made in the controversy. He agreed that this ought to be done.

Berle told Mr. McCarthy earlier that, while he was satisfied that no Canadian authorities had had foreknowledge of the coup, he could not help believing that someone in London must have known about it and have given an "all clear" signal to de Gaulle. I have passed this on to the British Embassy.

From other contacts in the State Department I have learned that there is a violent division inside the Department about the action taken in connection with this affair. I have also learned that Mr. Hull's patience snapped when he heard about Muselier's coup and that his statement of December 25th was issued in white heat.

Mr. Moffat telephoned shortly before lunch to pass on a report he had received of Mr. Hull's conversation with the French Ambassador yesterday. Mr. Hull let Henry-Haye know that he was not at all satisfied with the response he had received from Vichy to his efforts to arrange a satisfactory solution of the St. Pierre-Miquelon problem. He thought it should be settled quickly, and that the main lines of the settlement were as follows:

- (1) Vichy must recall de Bournat and select a new Administrator whose public record and general outlook should be such as to reassure the American, British, Canadian and French peoples that he was free from any partisan prejudice;
- (2) Vichy must shut down the wireless stations;
- (3) Canada would take such steps as were needed to see that the wireless stations were dismantled;
- (4) the United States would attach one or two naval observers to its Consulate in St. Pierre to make sure that the arrangements for security of communications were not abused;
- (5) Canada would also add one or two naval observers at its Consulate for the same purpose; and
- (6) the Free French would depart peacefully from the Islands when the new Administrator and the Canadian and United States observers were ready to take over their duties.

The foregoing plan had been discussed by Mr. Hull at the White House, and both the President and Mr. Churchill were understood to have approved of it in principle.

I received, over the telephone from Mr. Moffat, the attached draft statement[†] regarding St. Pierre and Miquelon, which, it is understood, has been approved by the President and Mr. Churchill and is to be cleared with the British and Canadian Governments. The text will be communicated to us officially by the United Kingdom, presumably through the Office of the High Commissioner here. Mr. Moffat has given us this text informally and unofficially so that we might have advance notice of what was to come.

Mr. Moffat did not know just when it was proposed to release this statement or what steps the United Kingdom might be taking to acquaint the Free French of the decisions reached in Washington between Mr. Churchill and the President. He did not know whether the release of this statement depended on the answer Mr. Hull received to the communication he made to the French Ambassador yesterday morning.

Mr. Moffat telephoned this afternoon to say that the Secretary of State was expected to receive the French Ambassador later in the day, and to enquire whether you had any comments to offer on the draft formula agreed between the President and Mr. Churchill.

I told him that we had not yet received the promised communication on the subject from the United Kingdom, and that you were waiting for the receipt of the draft from them. I thought it probable you would wish to discuss the proposed arrangements with the War Committee before returning an official reply.

I checked the accuracy of the reference to the "British Government" in the third sentence of the first paragraph. Mr. Moffat said he had queried this point himself with Washington, and that was the wording he had received.

I asked him if he could throw any light on the reference to the "rights of domestic self-government" which would be guaranteed to the inhabitants of the Islands. Did this include

(a) the appointment of the unprejudiced Administrator of which Mr. Hull had spoken to Mr. Henry-Haye; or

(b) the idea of leaving the local affairs of the Islands in the hands of a locally elected municipal council — an idea that the President had put forward in the first talks in Washington.

In this connection I reminded him that you had attached a great deal of importance in your talks with Mr. Hull to assurances that there would be no reprisals against or victimization of Free French supporters in the Islands.

I told Mr. Moffat that the Berlin radio was already broadcasting what was reported to be an official statement from Vichy that the St. Pierre-Miquelon situation had been satisfactorily settled and that the United States had undertaken to evacuate the Free French. I said I thought it was important, in making the best of a bad job, that the official announcement of new arrangements should come from Washington and not from Vichy or from Vichy via Berlin. I also thought it was important that the United Kingdom should clear arrangements with the Free French to make sure that there would be a peaceful transfer of authority in the Islands before there was any official announcement given out.

Washington, January 6, 1942

Robertson telephoned at about 5:30 on January 5th to say that Moffat had just approached him on instructions from Mr. Hull to urge Canadian consent to the publication that evening of the joint statement on St. Pierre. He said that a copy of the joint statement had been handed to him by Moffat on January 3rd, but that they had received no comments from the U.K. on it. Moffat had told him that Churchill had said that he would consult Canada directly on it. No decision had been reached in Ottawa pending consultation with the U.K.

Barclay at the Embassy told me that Millar had been urgently summoned to the State Department at about 5:30 with the same request that had been addressed to us. He said the U.K. Government had not concurred in the draft statement and that there had been no consultation with the Free French. The position is further explained in the telegrams forwarded to Robertson with my letter of January 6th[†].

I passed this on to Robertson at about 6 p.m. He said that the Prime Minister had in the meantime authorized him to tell Moffat that he had not yet been consulted by the U.K. Government and was not aware of their views on the draft statement.

I then saw Millar at the Embassy and read for the first time the telegrams between Churchill and Eden incorporating the statement. Millar felt that Hull's patience had snapped again for some reason yesterday afternoon. His discussion at the State Department is reported in Halifax's Telegram No. 84 of January 5th. Dunn had told him that Hull might issue some sort of a statement on his own responsibility last night. He apparently refrained from doing this on second thoughts. He had seen Henry-Haye yesterday afternoon, and that may have contributed to his irritation.

Robertson rang me at my house at about 7:30 to say that the Prime Minister had authorized him to tell Moffat further that the Canadian Government would agree to any statement respecting St. Pierre which was fully agreed between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Today I have had two conversations with Robertson on the subject. I rang him up this morning to give him the text of the amendments to the draft proposed by the Foreign Office in Telegram TAUT 376,³⁴ all of which he regards as improvements. This afternoon, having received in the meantime a copy of Halifax's Telegram No. 84[†], I telephoned to make sure of our position with respect to the last paragraph, suggesting that we should support pressure on the U.S. for a reasonable delay. We agreed that the terms of the answer given to

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE ST. PIERRE-MIQUELON SITUATION

The United States Minister telephoned yesterday afternoon, about 6:30, to say that the Secretary of State was very anxious to issue a statement on policy regarding St. Pierre that night. I told him that you had not yet received a statement from Churchill, that you wanted to be absolutely certain that the United Kingdom and the United States were in full agreement on the policy laid down in the statement, and that, if the United Kingdom and the United States were agreed as to what had to be done, the Canadian Government was ready to associate itself with the joint statement.

I have since been in touch with Mr. Malcolm MacDonald and Mr. Wrong, and learned

(1) that Mr. Churchill agreed provisionally to the draft statement, which we received from Mr. Moffat, subject to

(a) the concurrence of his Government, particularly of the Foreign Secretary; and

(b) the concurrence of the Canadian Government. He wished to have the draft approved by the United Kingdom Government before submitting it to the Canadian Government for their observations. He felt it important that it should be firmly agreed between all three Governments before communicating it to the Free French or to Vichy.

(2) The United Kingdom Government's suggested amendments to the draft statement, all additions, are shown in brackets in the attached redraft. They seem to me all improvements, and are now being discussed between the British Embassy and the State Department.

As matters stand, it will likely be another two or three days before a statement can be released.

Projet de déclaration concernant Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon

Draft Statement regarding St. Pierre and Miquelon

The United States, British and Canadian Governments view this incident as on a very small scale compared with what is going on all over the world. The problems involved relate to the safeguarding of British, Canadian and American shipping in the North Atlantic and existing international commitments. Nevertheless, it must be made clear that the Free French action was taken not only without their assent but in the face of the declared wishes of the British Government. (of all three Governments)

Accordingly, the three Governments have agreed that (while the Islands are French and will remain French) the principle that these Islands are to be regarded in the present phase as demilitarized and out of the war shall be maintained. All armed forces will be withdrawn, it being understood that at the same time adequate steps shall be taken to assure that no radio station situated on the Islands shall be used contrary to the interests of the United Nations.

The local inhabitants will be left in full exercise of their rights of domestic self-government (under a governor of their own choosing) arrangements being made both to continue the supplies from the United States and Canada on which they are dependent, and also to provide for the essential supply of fish to the French inhabitants of Martinique.

Meanwhile, in the light of the relevant facts, there should be no occasion for confusion or misunderstanding since there is no divergence of policy and there is complete cooperation and understanding between the United States, Great Britain and Canada in this as in other matters.

MOST IMMEDIATE. Atherton informed Wrong last night that the Vichy Government had replied through both Leahy and Henry-Haye to solution of St. Pierre episode suggested by the Secretary of State. His solution involved withdrawal of Free French forces, closing of radio station, appointment of Canadian and United States observers, replacement of Administrator by new nominee of Vichy acceptable to inhabitants and preferably local man, and no reprisals.

2. Vichy Government have agreed to appointment of observers and control of station, which they would wish to use for administration messages. They agree to withdrawal of Administrator for consultation and to authorize Robert to name successor. They intimated that they would consult the United States concerning nominee. They wish that somewhere in the course of negotiations the Canadian Government should recognize Vichy's sovereignty over the Islands by action such as appointment of new Consul accepted by Vichy.

3. State Department are ready to accept first two amendments to draft of joint statement which were proposed by the Foreign Office. Third amendment, proposing that Governor should be chosen by inhabitants, is under consideration.

4. British Embassy have informed State Department that de Gaulle will certainly want to name new Administrator and that they would like a British observer in the islands.

5. Secretary of State is still pressing for early solution.

SECRET. Your telegram No. 7 of January 7th.

United States Minister has explained that Atherton's reference in his conversation with Wrong to "appointment of new Consul accepted by Vichy" was intended only as a possible illustration of the sort of evidence of our recognition of French sovereignty over the Islands which Vichy might wish to receive. I suggested to him that inclusion in proposed tripartite draft statement of reference to St. Pierre and Miquelon as French and remaining French should take care of Vichy susceptibilities on this score and remove occasion for any separate or additional Canadian recognition of French sovereignty.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With regard to St. Pierre and in continuation of my letter of January 6th,[†] I enclose a memorandum dated January 9th concerning certain discussions, particularly with Berle. This does not add much to our information, but it may be of some use as indicating the attitude of mind in the State Department. You will also have received by now from Earnscliffe a copy of Halifax's Telegram No. 132 of January 7th to the Foreign Office[†], which was repeated to Ottawa as his Telegram No. 7[†]. This amplifies the information given in my Telegram No. 7 of January 7th concerning the approach to Vichy and the reply which has been received from Vichy.

I had another long talk with Tixier yesterday afternoon. He feels pretty sure in his own mind that de Gaulle will not accept a compromise which could be held by Vichy as a restoration of their control over the Islands. I went into this with him at some length, pointing out that before Muselier's coup Vichy had in fact exercised very little control, except for the local pressure applied by de Bournat, and that if de Bournat was replaced by someone not repugnant to the Free French they would in fact have won their main point. He was insistent that de Gaulle would refuse, until I asked whether he thought that from the Free French point of view the issue should be forced to a point possibly involving the Secretary of State's resignation. He at once asked me whether I thought that this was in the air and if he should so inform de Gaulle. I answered that I had no definite evidence, but it had certainly been mentioned, and I suggested that he should discuss with the British Embassy the possible despatch to de Gaulle through them (he communicates with de Gaulle via the Foreign Office) of a message saying it might come to this if a compromise could not be found.

I have been continuing to urge the press, when they have approached me on the matter, to take a moderate line and to refrain from indulging in personalities. I mentioned to you on the telephone this morning that I had had a long conversation with the Publisher of the New York Post yesterday, at the end of which he said that he would follow my advice as from Monday next. Possibly he has another attack on Mr. Hull already in print for his Sunday edition. His paper has gone to the length of suggesting that Mr. Hull should be impeached.

Yours sincerely,

Mémorandum du ministre-conseiller, la légation aux États-Unis

Washington, January 9, 1942

Mr. Berle raised with me again the question of St. Pierre during a conversation yesterday afternoon. Our talk mainly covered ground familiar to us both, but he made one or two new points and he expressed more clearly than before his suspicion of the attitude of the British authorities. In this connection he said that de Gaulle had withdrawn his assurance to the British that he would not stage a coup in St. Pierre on December 22nd. He also was curious as to the means whereby Muselier received his orders from de Gaulle, which resulted in Muselier's breaking his own assurances given in Ottawa to us and the U.S. Minister. I said that I assumed that Muselier's ships were capable of trans-Atlantic radio communication and that certainly it should not be supposed that the orders had been transmitted via a British cypher or code without clear evidence.

He expected that a proposal would be submitted to us and to the British very soon. He had been discussing the matter that morning with Mr. Hull, who was in no mood for delay. (I learned later from Hoyer Millar that Mr. Hull had told Campbell that morning that his views on the settlement had been submitted to the President and that he could say nothing about them until he received the President's comments.) Berle indicated that the plan would propose that the Governor be removed and that the normal administrative procedure in the absence of the Governor should be followed. Under this, the next senior official would act as Governor and he would be advised by an elective council, which would presumably be Gaullist. Berle had no doubt that the Islands would go Free French in any election.

Churchill's speech in Ottawa has undoubtedly increased the suspicion of the British in the State Department over this affair. Berle even went so far as to say that after listening to it he felt as though Churchill might himself have told the Free French to go ahead. I put the point to him that they were in such a strong position with the Vichy Government that they could make them accept practically anything which the U.S. might want. He made two main points in answer to this: First, the nature of the assurances which they had entered into shortly before the incident with Vichy and with Admiral Robert, especially the secret messages exchanged between the President and Pétain promising no alteration in the status quo in the Western Hemisphere so long as the French Fleet and French ports were not used to German military advantage. Secondly, to my comment that the line between Washington and Vichy was a lifeline for Vichy but merely a safety line for the U.S., he said that undoubtedly was true of perhaps half the Vichy Government, but the other half would like to see it severed in favour of a lifeline to Berlin.

I found an easy occasion to say that the appeal to Canada to restore the status quo had caused a good deal of irritation and was in my view unreasonable, especially since the appeal was based in large part on the need to enforce the Havana Convention, to which Canada was in no way a party. The best answer he could produce was that after all Muselier's ships had sailed from a Canadian port. I replied that this was accidental and there was no question of any governmental responsibility.

I also emphasized with him the importance of seeing that the solution had to be defensible on grounds of democratic principles, and pointed out that the Havana Declaration asserted that the desires of the inhabitants must be taken into account. If the incident ended in a way contrary to the declared will of this handful of fisher-folk, they would indeed be raising an issue of enormous proportions which would plague us in other parts of the world. He agreed with this rather more explicitly than I had expected.

I learned yesterday from an R.C.N. Summary for Senior Officers of December 29th that Muselier's forces consisted of the Free French corvettes Mimosa, Aconite, and Alysée and the submarine Surcouf, and that these ships sailed from Halifax on December 22nd for St. John's, Newfoundland, after rendering assistance to the British steamer Macbeth which was disabled in mid-Atlantic. Muselier must therefore have received his orders from de Gaulle to proceed to St. Pierre by the morning of the 22nd at latest, and probably a day or so before.

MOST SECRET. The following is repetition of telegram sent by Mr. Churchill to Mr. Eden last night. Halifax is by no means sure that Eden will put desired pressure on de Gaulle and thinks that suggested withdrawal of armed forces might be disguised to soften blow to Free French. Begins:

President raised the Miquelon issue with me tonight as an urgent matter. United States relations with Vichy have strengthened since German-American war. He does not wish to break sharply with Vichy. The State Department for their part are boring along on their old lines quite oblivious of the fact that the further they go against de Gaulle the worse they will fare in American opinion. Nevertheless, I am of opinion that the following proposal should be embodied in a communiqué representing the policy of the United States, Canadian and British Governments. I understand that Mackenzie King says he will agree to whatever the President and I settle. It would have to be understood that Vichy will have to conform:

- (i) The islands are French and will remain French;
- (ii) To avoid any potential threat to the shipping and interests of the Governments concerned, the use of the wireless stations on the islands will be subject to the supervision and control by observers appointed by the American and Canadian Governments and attached to their respective consulates;
- (iii) The islands shall be neutralized and demilitarized and shall be considered out of the war;
- (iv) The present Administrator shall be withdrawn for the period of the war; the appointment of an Administrator shall be withheld for the same period, and the administration of the islands shall be left in the hands of the Consultative Council.
- (v) All armed forces will be withdrawn.
- (vi) The Canadian and American Governments agree and undertake to continue economic assistance to the inhabitants of the islands and the respective consuls of those countries will confer with the local authorities as to the nature of the assistance to be given. Arrangements are being made both to continue the supplies from the United States and Canada on which the Islands are dependent and to provide the seasonal supply of fish to the French inhabitants of Martinique. End of Part I. Part II follows.

Part II

2. I think this is a reasonable compromise, and that in the circumstances it is only prudent to accept and enforce it. This means that you should tell de Gaulle that this is our settled policy, and that he must bow to it. He has put himself entirely in the wrong by his breach of faith. If he is to retain any measure of our recognition he must send orders to Muselier which the latter will obey. You should dwell on the many advantages gained by Free France and that many of the points agreed will be a bitter pill to Vichy, but however you dish it up he has got to take it. I cannot believe he will refuse to give Muselier orders or that Muselier will disobey. If he were to they are in a mood here to use force — i.e. the battleship Arkansas which the President mentioned or starvation without stint. It is intolerable that the great movement of events should be obstructed, and I shall certainly not intervene to save de Gaulle or other Free French from the consequences.

3. I hope to hear from you tomorrow that it is all fixed. Personally, I think the terms are very reasonable considering the embarrassing position in which the United States has been placed by its agreement with Admiral Robert, and the breach of faith by de Gaulle. By all means consult the Cabinet if you will, but we shall soon be flitting and I must settle this before I go. Ends.

Attached is a most secret telegram (in 2 parts) from the Legation at Washington, containing the text of a message Churchill sent to Eden on Sunday night about St. Pierre and Miquelon.

Wrong told me this morning he had learned from the British Embassy that the United Kingdom Government had agreed “reluctantly” to settlement along the lines of Churchill’s message. They propose, however, that the statement when issued would make it clear that the “Consultative Council”, which is to be responsible for the administration of the Islands, will be newly elected by the Islanders. They attach a great deal of importance to this proviso, which seems to me probably the only effective safeguard against reprisals. London also suggests that the Free French should be allowed to take the initiative in withdrawing before the terms of the settlement are made public.

I have not sent copies of this telegram to anyone, because it makes it clear that Mr. Churchill is still in the United States.

“Cabinet has considered this and, since you deem it essential, agree that I should do my best with General de Gaulle. But they doubt if it will be possible to obtain his consent and co-operation; and they would feel greatest reluctance to join in coercing him. It would be impossible to justify this to public opinion here”.

2. Reply goes on to propose substitution for “Consultative Council” in point 4 “an Elected Council”. It concludes by saying that de Gaulle will not be approached until Prime Minister has replied.

3. Attlee has also telegraphed to Churchill emphasizing difficulties with British public opinion of compelling Free French withdrawal.

Memorandum by Minister-Counsellor, Legation in United States

Washington, January 14, 1942

Hoyer Millar telephoned this morning to say that Mr. Churchill had replied to Eden's message TAUT 502 of January 13th.³⁵ The gist of the reply was that the Prime Minister had spoken to the President about this message and they had agreed to amend the scheme set forth in his Telegram GREY 305³⁶ by altering the reference in point (iv) to the Consultative Council to a reference to a Council freshly elected within ninety days. Mr. Churchill asked Eden to seek at once to persuade de Gaulle to agree to the plan.

Hoyer Millar went on to say that he was bothered about the machinery for consulting Canada if de Gaulle agreed. I said that while we had undertaken to accept any solution arranged between the U.S. and the U.K., we certainly had to know what we had accepted before it was made public. The arrangements outlined by Mr. Churchill clearly had to be expanded into a press statement. I thought it might be best if this were prepared in London in consultation with de Gaulle and telegraphed simultaneously to Ottawa and Washington.

Hoyer Millar and I agreed that while we had now reached a point at which a possible solution was being offered to de Gaulle, we did not yet know where we were in the event of his refusal. In this connection it will be noted that both Attlee and Eden have indicated that the British Cabinet would be most unwilling to apply any compulsion to de Gaulle if persuasion fails.

I later passed on a summary of the latest developments to Pearson in Ottawa by telephone for the information of the Prime Minister and Robertson. He strongly endorsed my view that Ottawa must have the full text of any press statement before its release.

4. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt had agreed as to the course which should be followed with regard to the Islands, and proposed that the principles agreed to by them be made public as representing the policy of the U.S., U.K. and Canadian governments.

The main points of agreement were: U.S. and Canadian control of the wireless stations; demilitarization of the Islands; withdrawal of the Administrator, and administration, during the war, by the Consultative Council; the withdrawal of all armed forces; and the continuance of economic assistance by Canada and the United States.

Mr. Churchill had recommended this proposal to the U.K. Cabinet as a "reasonable compromise" which should be accepted. To it General de Gaulle would have to accede; otherwise the U.S. government were in a mood to use force.

The U.K. Cabinet were prepared to accept Mr. Churchill's urgent recommendation and do their best with General de Gaulle. They had made it clear, however, that, in view of the state of British opinion, they would be reluctant to have the United Kingdom join in coercing him. They had also suggested the substitution of an Elected Council for the Consultative Council, and the Embassy in Washington were urging this upon the U.S. government.

(Telegrams 25, part 1, January 12, part 2, January 13 and 31, January 14, 1942, Canadian Minister, Washington, to External Affairs).

5. MR. ROBERTSON said that the U.S. government continued to put great emphasis upon Latin-American factor in any settlement of the problem. The relationship of the question to Vichy collaboration with Germany was regarded as of major importance, particularly as the United States felt that there had been, of late, an apparent stiffening of Marshal Pétain's attitude.

The Prime Minister had indicated that, in the circumstances, Canada would consent to any settlement agreeable to the United Kingdom and the United States.

6. THE MINISTERS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR AIR AND NAVAL SERVICES expressed the view that any attempt to compel the withdrawal of the Free French from the Islands would be received very critically by the Canadian public; any such action would have an unsettling effect upon popular opinion, particularly in Quebec where it would be exploited by that element which was inclined to favour Vichy and was less active in its support of the war effort.

7. The War Committee discussed the position at some length, it being agreed:

(a) that public opinion in Canada would be exceedingly critical of a resort to force to compel Admiral Muselier to withdraw his forces from the Islands, and that Canada should not participate in any coercive measures against the Free French; and

(b) that, if the U.K. and U.S. governments continued to regard intervention to effect a change in the present situation as absolutely essential, the administration of the Islands should be committed to a newly elected council, and not to the present Consultative Council, also that opportunity be given for the withdrawal of Admiral Muselier and his forces before any announcement were made of the decision taken.

Washington, January 15, 1942

Mr. Robertson telephoned at 11:20 this morning to say that he had just been discussing with the Prime Minister, who has not been able to attend Council meetings this week, the position which has developed respecting St. Pierre. The matter was apparently debated at some length in Council yesterday and the Legation Telegrams Nos. 25 and 31³⁷ especially formed the subject of discussion. The Ministers all felt very strongly that they could not approve the use of force, and in particular they were gravely concerned over the repercussion of the use of force on Canadian opinion, especially in the Province of Quebec. The Minister of Justice remarked that if the Free French were compelled to leave the Islands against their will, he would not face a public meeting in the city of Quebec. The general opinion was that all that has been accomplished in solidifying opinion towards the war in French Canada would be undone if the Free French were constrained to leave the Islands. The French Canadian press, with the perennial exceptions of Le Devoir and Le Droit, had welcomed the Free French coup even more enthusiastically than the English press in Canada. This is true of L'Action catholique and other clerical organs. Mr. Robertson commented that dealing with Vichy at home gave rise to an entirely different set of considerations to those involved in dealing with Vichy in Europe.

The Prime Minister had authorized Robertson to inform the Legation that he wished a message to be conveyed immediately to the President and Mr. Churchill, or to one of them, the gist of which was that there could be no question of the Canadian Government associating itself in any way in a solution involving the coercion of the Free French in St. Pierre and that he earnestly hoped that any such solution would be avoided.

Since receiving this message I have talked to Mr. Hoyer Millar, and I gather from him that the immediate urgency of action is past. I have arranged to discuss the situation at the British Embassy in the early afternoon. I think it probably desirable, in any case, that some message should be transmitted to the State Department or directly to the President conveying the gist of this note.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

As you are aware, the future of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon was discussed by Mr. Winston Churchill with the President of the United States during his visit to Washington. I have now received a telegram from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs informing me that the Prime Minister has now discussed this matter with General de Gaulle.

The Prime Minister has secured the agreement of General de Gaulle to the issue of the communiqué enclosed herein, subject to consultation with Admiral Muselier and to the final assent of the Free French National Committee which it is hoped will be obtained today.

General de Gaulle originally wished that in addition to the communiqué there should be a private agreement, not for publication, on the following matters,

(1) That a small number of Free French marines should be retained in the islands:

³⁸ Non trouvé.³⁸ Not located.

(2) That the Consultative Council would take orders from the Free French National Committee:

(3) That the Free French administration should remain but should be merged in the Consultative Council.

General de Gaulle has, however, now agreed to abandon these conditions.

I understand that the Prime Minister telegraphed yesterday to the President of the United States, seeking his concurrence in the above solution, and adding that it was important that no statement should be made public until the definite agreement of the Canadian Government had been received.

I have therefore been asked, in communicating the above to you, to enquire whether the Canadian Government concur in the proposed communiqué; and also to suggest that, if the Canadian Government agree, they should arrange for their concurrence to be communicated to the United States Government direct.

Yours sincerely,

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Washington, January 24, 1942

My dear Norman [Robertson],

Berle dined at my house last night, and I had rather an alarming talk with him about St. Pierre. I do not know how accurately he represents the views of Mr. Hull, but certainly the issue is very much alive in his own mind.

He said most emphatically that matters could not be left as they were and that, in his view, there were only two courses; either the Free French must leave the islands and a regime acceptable to Vichy must be established there, or the Government of the United States must break with Vichy completely and recognize the Free French movement. He told me that he had gone recently (presumably with Mr. Hull's approval) to see Field Marshal Dill, who had told him that the second alternative would be most unwelcome to the British Government. Berle said that he felt so strongly on the matter that he had more than once offered to resign as Assistant Secretary of State unless the policy which he advocated was accepted.

The fact which seems to be sticking most in his throat is the occurrence of the coup at St. Pierre a few days after the secret exchange of assurances between Roosevelt and Pétain in which the United States undertook that the status quo of the French possessions in the Western Hemisphere would not be disturbed. When I remarked that excitement over the affair seemed to be quieting down, he said that it was certainly not quieting down in France, as their reports from Vichy showed. I pointed out that their other preoccupation — with the possible consequences at the Rio Conference — seemed not to have been fulfilled, but he replied that there had also been repercussions there, though they had not appeared in the press. (I remain dubious whether the matter in fact has caused any real trouble at Rio.)

I think the background of Berle's agitation arises from his deep-set distrust of the British Government. He again said to me that he thought it very probable that Mr. Churchill knew in advance of Muselier's expedition. I said that I had not discovered a shred of evidence that anyone in authority in the United Kingdom was privy to the coup, to which he merely replied that he believed this evidence would be revealed some day.

I took the opportunity of telling him about the serious effects on Canadian opinion, especially in the Province of Quebec, if compulsion were used to enforce a Free French withdrawal from the islands. He seemed to have been made aware of this already, probably from Moffat's reports.

Earlier in the day I had had a talk with Hickerson on the matter, which was in an entirely different key. Hickerson said definitely that he was sure that the use of force was not contemplated by anyone in Washington, but he was positive that there would have to be some solution equivalent to a Free French withdrawal by agreement.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. WRONG

Dear Mr. Robertson,

With reference to your Telegram No. 48 of January 24th and our later telephone conversations concerning St. Pierre, we have not yet informed the State Department that the Canadian Government concurs in the publication of the proposed communiqué whenever it has been agreed to between the United States and the United Kingdom Governments. The British Ambassador received a telegram from Mr. Churchill at about 1 p.m. on January 24th instructing him to tell the President that after "a severe conversation" between General de Gaulle and himself the latter agreed to the communiqué being published in the form enclosed with my letter of January 15th[†] by the United States, Canadian, and British Governments without "our acquiescence" in the reservations or interpretations for which the General had originally stipulated. The telegram also said that the General's consent was subject to a final clearance from Admiral Muselier and the French National Committee in London, which it was hoped to secure immediately. Lord Halifax was asked to inform Mr. Hull of the instructions which he had received from London.

Lord Halifax wrote to the President in accordance with these instructions on January 24th, and sent a copy of his letter to Mr. Hull under a covering note. He has not received a reply, and he has also not yet received a telegram from London saying that Admiral Muselier and the French National Committee have given their final consent.

I enclose a memorandum dealing mainly with a talk with Mr. Tixier yesterday afternoon, which gives some further background information. Since writing this I have heard from the British Embassy that they have been asked by telephone from the State Department, first, to furnish the text of General de Gaulle's reservations which he now seems ready to abandon, and later to furnish also the text of the communiqué which is under discussion. The second request in particular seems to show that there has been a serious lack of liaison between the White House and the State Department. It had hitherto been assumed that the President had informed Mr. Hull of the discussions with Mr. Churchill on January 14th, the eve of his departure from Washington, and had given the State Department copies of the documents which were then under examination.

In my letter of January 24th, reporting a conversation with Mr. Berle on this subject, I mentioned that he had told me that he had discussed with Sir John Dill the question of the severance of relations between the United States and Vichy. I mentioned this to Sir John Dill this morning, and at first he could not recall any such discussion. After searching his memory he remembered exchanging a few remarks at a luncheon on this question with some official of the State Department whose name he did not know. The conversation, contrary to the impression given me by Mr. Berle, was both casual and brief.

I think that we should sit tight for the moment and take no further action. There ought to be further developments in the very near future, and then we can speak, if it seems desirable, in the sense of your Telegram No. 48.³⁹

Yours sincerely,

terday on another matter, he mentioned to Reber that he understood that a settlement had been nearly reached. Reber vigorously denied this and left him with the impression that the State Department would not agree to the publication of the communiqué.

2. Three citizens of St. Pierre have just arrived in New York, where they are being fêted by the New York Post. The Publisher of the Post wants Tixier to present them to the President or Mr. Hull, and says that if they are not received he will make a great fuss in his paper. This is slightly comic, but the incident may serve to revive the personal attacks on Mr. Hull.

3. General Decoux yesterday broadcast from Indo-China with the approval of the Japanese authorities an appeal to the inhabitants of the Free French islands in the Pacific (especially New Caledonia, Tahiti, and the New Hebrides) to throw out the Free French and revert to their allegiance to Vichy.

4. Some days ago Tixier was received by Mr. Hull. Atherton was present at the interview and had told him before that it would be limited to fifteen minutes and that no contentious subjects were to be discussed. After about ten minutes' general talk, Tixier asked Mr. Hull whether he would like him to expound the principles of the Free French Movement. Hull answered in the affirmative, and this began discussion which went on in all for an hour and a quarter. He says that Hull expressed warm admiration for de Gaulle and strong condemnation for the men of Vichy. He explained in detail to Tixier the reasons for U.S. policy towards Vichy, and they debated the pros and cons. Tixier found an opportunity of expressing to him his own hurt resentment over the wording of the St. Pierre communiqué of December 25th.⁴⁰ Hull repeated the lame explanation that the word "so-called" referred to the ships and not to the Free French Movement. Tixier told me that Hull twice apologized in explicit terms for the wording of the communiqué. They parted on friendly terms. He says that Atherton apparently was not at all happy over the course which the interview had taken.

5. Tixier has received no word from the French National Committee in London about the discussions between Churchill and de Gaulle which led to the acceptance by de Gaulle of the revised communiqué without the attachment of the unpublished reservations. I gave him a general outline of these developments in so far as they were known to me.

6. Tixier feels certain that there will be a renewed outburst in the U.S. press on the whole question. From some source or other there has been a leak to the effect that a settlement acceptable to the State Department is impending, and his office has been deluged with telephone calls from friendly journalists. He agreed that we should do all that we can to hold press comment in check. He expects that he himself will soon be subject to attack on the ground that he is not defending properly the Free French cause.

I have given Sir Ronald Campbell the chief points in this conversation. From talk with certain friends on January 25th I have gathered that the bitterness inside the State Department has not been allayed. I think that Berle, Dunn, Atherton, and Reber, who have all had a lot to do with the formulation of U.S.

policy towards Vichy, are continuing to advise Mr. Hull that the affair must be settled in some way readily acceptable to the Vichy Government. This constant pressure on Mr. Hull tends to prevent him from getting the matter into better proportions. There appears to be a running argument over the matter inside the State Department which has had the effect of forcing those who advised Mr. Hull over the issue of the communiqué of December 25th to maintain their position, even with increasing bitterness. To judge from Berle's tone in talking to me on January 23rd, he is now more worked up than he was several weeks ago.

Even if the draft communiqué is published, I feel — and Tixier agrees with this — that it will certainly not end the issue. It is a face-saving and therefore a question-begging document which is far from definite on all the main points at issue. I do not therefore see much prospect of the matter being closed for some time, except by some extraneous development such as the severance of diplomatic relations between the United States and Vichy.

Washington, January 28, 1942

Your telegram No. 48, St. Pierre. State Department was informed of concurrence of Canadian Government in publication of communiqué at meeting this afternoon between Dunn, Atherton, Wrong and Counsellor of British Embassy. It developed that Secretary of State has not yet seen communiqué in question, text of which had not been given to him by the President after Mr. Churchill's departure. Pending notification of Mr. Hull's views, no arrangements for publication will be completed.

Mémoire du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Prime Minister

[Ottawa,] February 4, 1942

The French Minister called this morning to enquire whether there was anything we could tell him about the status of the St. Pierre-Miquelon situation. I told him there had been no new developments since you had answered Mr.

Coldwell's question in the House of Commons,⁴¹ and you would not have anything to say on the subject until settlement was fully and finally agreed between the United Kingdom and the United States Governments.

Mr. Ristelhueber had seen Mr. Henry-Haye, the French Ambassador, in New York on Saturday last (January 31st). Mr. Henry-Haye told him that he had last discussed the St. Pierre-Miquelon situation with Mr. Cordell Hull on January 8th and 10th. At that time Mr. Hull had insisted that arrangements for settlement of the dispute would have to include the withdrawal of de Bournat as Administrator, and the establishment of observers in the Islands who could watch over the radio station. The French Ambassador said his Government would object to recalling de Bournat because this would look like an act of censure for his conduct. He agreed, however, that de Bournat would be called from St. Pierre and Miquelon to Martinique for consultation with Admiral Robert. These consultations could last indefinitely. In this way there would be a de facto withdrawal of the Administrator from the Islands, though his formal appointment would still stand. While de Bournat was in Martinique he would be replaced by an Acting Administrator of the Islands, seconded by Admiral Robert from his staff in the Antilles. Mr. Ristelhueber thought that the man sent to St. Pierre might be a naval officer.

The second point on which Mr. Hull had insisted, viz., the appointment of observers to watch over the operation of the radio station, had been agreed to by the French Ambassador, who told Mr. Ristelhueber that there were to be three observers appointed – two American and one Canadian.

I told the French Minister that he had given us some new information on both these points, that we knew nothing about plans for the replacement of Mr. de Bournat by an Acting Administrator from Admiral Robert's staff in Martinique nor that the radio observers were to be three in number, and two of them Americans. He was obviously very surprised that I did not know these particulars of Mr. Hull's conversation with Mr. Henry-Haye. I did not feel I could tell him how I believed matters to stand and, therefore, could not indicate precisely in what particulars the information he had given me represented an addition to the information we already had.

Before leaving the subject of St. Pierre and Miquelon, he returned again to the question of French sovereignty over the Islands. I said that I thought everybody was agreed that the Islands were French and would remain France, and that neither he nor his Government need worry on that score. I suggested that, even in the present confused situation, the Islands were "French" in a sense in which this could not be said of Paris or French Indo-China.

Since dictating the attached note on my conversation this morning about St. Pierre with the French Minister, I have had a talk with Mr. Pierrepont Moffat, whom Mr. Ristelhueber had called on immediately after his talk with me. Mr. Ristelhueber told Mr. Moffat of his conversation in New York with Mr. Henry-Haye in much the same words as he had used in talking to me. Mr. Moffat told him, as I did, that Mr. Henry-Haye's report of the agreement he had reached with Mr. Cordell Hull contained certain elements which were new to us. Mr. Moffat had never heard that it was agreed that there were to be three radio observers — two American and one Canadian. Mr. Moffat agreed that this was a minor difference in detail which only concerned the Canadian and American Governments, and should therefore be susceptible of easy arrangement. The other point, however, about the temporary replacement of M. de Bournat by an Acting Administrator from Martinique was of a good deal more consequence.

After his talk with the French Minister, Mr. Moffat checked the record he had received from Washington of Mr. Hull's conversation with Mr. Henry-Haye on January 8th. The formula which Mr. Hull had discussed with the French Ambassador provided for the withdrawal of the Administrator from St. Pierre, but said nothing about the designation of a successor.

Mr. Moffat told me that he had told the French Minister that he did not think anything would be gained by trying to clear up in Ottawa misunderstandings which might have originated in Washington; that piecemeal negotiations here would only further confuse the issue. He is reporting his conversation with Mr. Ristelhueber to the Secretary of State, who will be in a better position than anybody else to correct any misunderstanding which may have been left in the French Ambassador's mind following his interview with Mr. Hull.

MOST SECRET. 1. Welles informed Halifax February 9th that the United States Government had convincing evidence that Vichy authorities had assisted in provisioning Rommel's forces. They intended to take a much firmer line with Vichy while maintaining diplomatic and consular representation. Leahy is being sent stiff instructions. This accords completely with suggestions of Foreign Office.

2. Hull is leaving for long rest in Florida. His absence, together with new tone towards Vichy, should make it easier to leave Free French in St. Pierre.

[Ottawa,] April 13, 1942

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRIME MINISTER CONCERNING
ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON

I Background

1. Little or nothing has been heard of the tripartite communiqué since the report¹ of the interview between Lord Halifax and Mr. Hull on February 5th. Hull then said that the Vichy Government could not possibly accept the communiqué and that it would destroy the United States bargaining position if the communiqué were pressed upon Vichy. Mr. Hull agreed to take no precipitate action.

2. On February 13th Mr. Sumner Welles indicated at a press conference that the action of the Free French could not be regarded as a violation of the Act of Havana. This was described by Mr. Wrong as "a complete reversal of the attitude hitherto adopted in the State Department."

3. There have been occasional references in telegrams from the Dominions Office to negotiations between the United States and Vichy concerning the use of the French fleet, cessation of French supplies to the Axis in North Africa, and the exclusion of enemy submarines and aviation from French ports in the Western Hemisphere. In these negotiations the French have consistently advanced as a counter-demand that the United States should maintain French sovereignty in the Western Hemisphere and reestablish it in St. Pierre. The last mention of this point was on March 23rd.

4. We have no authoritative record of the relations between the United States and the Free French but we understand that the latter have been recognized as regards their territorial control in Africa and in the Southwestern Pacific. We do not know what bearing, if any, this recognition by the United States will have on the situation in St. Pierre.

5. The former Administrator of St. Pierre, de Bournat, and his wife were recently sent to Northern Ireland by the Free French and have, we understand, since proceeded to Vichy. The Canadian Government was consulted with regard to transportation for the de Bournats but made its replies contingent on approval by Great Britain. The actual movement took place without our immediate knowledge.

II. Immediate Problems

6. While fully recognizing that a definitive settlement of the political status of St. Pierre must depend upon the general modus vivendi between the United States and Vichy, Canada is faced with certain practical problems which have to be settled from day to day.

(a) St. Pierre is dependent on Canada for a number of necessary supplies. Under the Vichy regime these were doled out with a very sparing hand for obvious reasons. To apply a similar policy to the Free French would create constant irritation. To make an abrupt change might force a showdown with Vichy. We are trying to follow the middle course.

(b) We communicate with the present Administration through our Acting Consul at St. Pierre and of necessity deal with both civil and military questions. There are obvious difficulties in doing this while stopping short of political recognition.

7. Awkward as this position is we appreciate that Vichy could never expressly recognize the adherence of the Island to de Gaulle. To do so would injure Vichy's prestige and would expose Vichy to retaliation by the Germans. On the other hand the Free French cannot relinquish the Islands nor can we apply pressure to them. The only possible policy seems to be to leave the situation as it is until events in the other parts of the world bring about its clarification. It seems inevitable that this should happen in the course of the next few months.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. My telegram Circular D. 460.[†] Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: French North Africa.

You will have seen text of Proclamations by Darlan and Giraud which have been published.

Allied military authorities in North Africa have reported as follows:

Foremost fact is that name of Pétain is something to conjure with in North Africa. Everyone from the highest to lowest attempts to create impression that he lives and acts under shadow of Marshal's figure. Civil Governments, military leaders and naval commanders will agree on only one man, namely Darlan, as having right to assume Marshal's authority in North Africa. Esteva⁴² in Tunis says he will obey Darlan, while Nogues stopped fighting in Morocco by Darlan's order. Recognition of Darlan's position cannot be avoided. Arrangement now reached with Darlan includes assistance in taking Tunisia, organisation of French North Africa for effective co-operation and of military forces for active participation in the war. Giraud is fully in agreement and has, as announced, accepted position of Military Commander under Darlan. Acceptance of position is therefore strongly urged on military grounds, it being pointed out that otherwise:

- (a) Hope of securing organised co-operation in this region will be gone at great cost to us, in additional troops and in stagnation of operations.
- (b) All French armed forces will resist tacitly and in certain cases actively.
- (c) Hope of getting Tunisia quickly will not be obtainable.
- (d) Opportunity for gaining military assistance from remaining French naval, air and military units in North Africa will disappear.
- (e) Possibility of bringing over French West Africa (including Dakar) will be lost.
- (f) Last glimmer of hope with respect to Toulon fleet will be gone. Ends.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 466

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET AND PERSONAL. My telegram Circular D. 465. Following for the most secret and personal information of the Prime Minister. Begins: Following is substance of most secret and personal message which the Prime Minister has sent to President Roosevelt with regard to political arrangements in French North Africa as described in that telegram. Substance Begins:

We cannot say that our doubts or anxieties are removed by what is proposed, or that the solution will be permanent or healthy. But in view of the dominating importance of speed and of the fact that the opinion of the Allied Commanders, which includes that of our own officers, is so strongly expressed, we feel we have no choice but to accept the arrangements proposed for maintaining local and interim equilibrium and for securing the vital positions in Tunis. No doubt there will be further consultation as to the long-term steps. The aim always is that of uniting all Frenchmen who will fight Hitler. Meanwhile great care must be taken that we are not double-crossed. We have these men in our power and should be vigilant lest they escape from us. Substance ends.

Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary have been in touch with de Gaulle and have told him that his position is unassailable and that he need not be alarmed at the course which events are taking. It was suggested that he would be well advised not to make any strong public protest against what had been done. He felt bound, however, to issue a communiqué (now published) dissociating himself from negotiations in North Africa, the terms of which we do not regard as objectionable.

If the question is raised in Parliament it would be difficult to deal with the matter adequately without reference to the military needs which clearly could not be emphasised at the present time. We propose therefore to answer to the effect that it is not practicable to discuss this matter at the present juncture. Ends.

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa,] November 27, 1942

Mr. Ristelhueber came to see me this afternoon about replying to a telegram he had received from Algeria, suggesting that he might get in touch with the civil administration there. Since our Censorship had permitted the message from Algiers to reach him, he assumed that he would be allowed to reply, and wanted to know whether his answer could be transmitted through our Department in cypher. I said I thought it better that any reply he wished to send should go en clair, through ordinary commercial channels. If it was transmitted by the Department, it might look as if the Government had some sympathy with the suggestion that Admiral Darlan's regime in North Africa might be recognized as a provisional French government. This was an impression which we did not wish to give.

Mr. Ristelhueber referred to today's reports on the scuttling of the French fleet at Toulon, which he regarded as final confirmation of his faith that French politics in the last two years had been an elaborate "comedy", in which all the actors had been playing their parts in preparation for the day when France would re-enter the war against Germany. In support of this view he recounted a conversation he had had a few weeks ago with a Monsieur de Saint-Phalle, who had come out from Vichy during the summer. M. de Saint-Phalle had explained to Mr. Ristelhueber that the Vichy administration was divided into two parts — the civil government under Laval and the military under Pétain and Darlan. When the opportunity arose for France to resume active resistance, the military leaders, Pétain and Darlan, would fly to North Africa to organize military opposition and Laval, to whom the most difficult and ungrateful role had been assigned, would remain in occupied France to maintain a continuing government under the enemy occupation. Mr. Ristelhueber had made a memorandum of his conversation with M. de Saint-Phalle. At the time he had no particular reason to believe that his visitor had any special authorization for what he was saying. Now he was inclined to believe that de Saint-Phalle might have been a special emissary of the Marshal, assigned to give French representatives abroad a more secret explanation of the government's policy than could be communicated through diplomatic channels.

When Mr. Ristelhueber asked me if I did not agree that events had elucidated this explanation of Vichy policy, I told him that I took a less charitable view of the motives of the men who had made up his government. I thought that they had entered on a policy of collaboration with the Nazis with varying degrees of personal reluctance, that this policy had been based on the mistaken premise that Germany had won the war in June, 1940, and that it was just a question of time until our opposition would be overcome, and that the first country to compromise and make a deal with the victor would benefit by it. Now that the military situation was changing and the prospects of an Axis victory were receding, the same kind of calculation of interest that had justified collaboration with the Axis now argued for collaboration with the United Nations. I could see nothing in the pre-Armistice political records of Pétain or Laval to make me believe that they really cared about freedom or democracy. We knew that millions of French men and women had cared about these things and were ready to fight for them, but I did not think that these Frenchmen could be represented by Darlan and Pétain. Apart altogether from their enforced collaboration with the Nazis in the field of external policy, they were identified with a policy of domestic legislation that had gone far to make France a fascist nation. The internal measures taken by Vichy for the suppression of free institutions, persecution of Jews and political refugees, and abolition of trades unions bore all the hallmarks of fascist policy, and were commended to the French people by the Marshal, Darlan and Laval as a "national revolution".

With these memories fresh in everybody's minds, we would all wish to be very sure that before any new French provisional government were recognized it really stood in the great French tradition and was really representative of the true wishes and feelings of the French people. This seemed to me a much more important test of the validity and legitimacy of a government than the fact that Admiral Darlan might or might not have been acting in agreement with Marshal Pétain when he decided to support the United Nations.

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: With reference to our message No. EX-3182 of December 9th[†], we have been giving some consideration inside the Department to the question whether it would be wise and timely to propose the publication of a general statement of the attitude of the Canadian Government towards the Darlan regime. Such a statement might not be aimed directly at the present position in North Africa but could nevertheless make it clear by implication that we would not recognize Darlan, even as the head of a provisional French Government. Some of us think that there are strong domestic reasons for the immediate clarification of our position. Have you any views as to whether such a declaration would be helpful especially in view of the discussions between the British Ambassador and the State Department referred to in Dominions Office Circular D. 516[†]?

We should be glad to know promptly whether it is likely that the Mission to Algiers mentioned in paragraph 1(3) of this telegram is likely to be despatched. There may be suggestions that in the event of its despatch a Canadian representative, possibly Dupuy, should go with them.

After further discussion we feel it unlikely that a general statement of the Canadian attitude towards the Darlan regime can be made at present unless there are new developments supporting this course. There will probably be an opportunity of restating our attitude towards the Fighting French when Commandant Bonneau arrives about December 22nd to succeed Colonel Pierrené; we might make something of his arrival and of Vanier's appointment as representative to French National Committee which has already been announced. There might also be opportunity of indicating our policy towards the Darlan regime when steps are taken to

The visit, I believe, is now expected to take place soon after January 8th. The President has been rather careful to underline publicly that if de Gaulle chooses to come to Washington on his own initiative he will willingly receive him. I think that there is no strong reason why we should go further than the President. On the other hand there seem to me to be very good reasons why de Gaulle should come to Ottawa in the course of his trip. view that no general statement of the Canadian attitude toward the Darlan regime would be helpful at the present time. You will have gathered by now from messages from London and Washington that it would be extremely difficult to prevent such a statement, no matter how carefully drafted, being misinterpreted. If such misinterpretation made it appear that we were prejudicing American policy on the spot, which is still apparently in a difficult and delicate stage, considerable harm might be done. Similarly, if it were construed as support for the policy which had been found necessary by those conducting the campaign in North Africa, we would undoubtedly offend a large body of opinion on this continent and in the United Kingdom. There may be, as you suggest, an occasion to indicate our policy toward the Darlan regime later, but my own view is that nothing useful can be said at the present time. At the moment, there is an extreme sensitiveness here in certain official quarters as to criticism of present United States policy on this matter, both as to its wisdom and the suggestion that the United States authorities do not appreciate the dangers inherent in it. The line taken here towards such criticism is that, while the United States Government is just as aware of the dangerous implications of this policy as anyone else, the critics themselves do not appreciate the immediate material and military advantages that have been gained by dealing with Darlan.

London, January 4, 1943

MOST SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins:

1. In view of proposals from both sides for a rapprochement between Giraud and de Gaulle, though these have not as yet gone very far, we have suggested to United States Government that we should consider together what should be our future relations with the French Empire.

2. We assume that both United States Government and we wish to see the French Empire united as soon as possible under a single authority making its maximum contribution to the war effort of the United Nations, and that, while this result can only be achieved by agreement reached by Frenchmen with Frenchmen, both Governments will promote the desired agreement so far as they can.

3. Our experience in dealing with Free French authorities since June 1940 suggests the following conclusions, which His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington has been instructed to put to United States authorities as our tentative ideas.

4. The best solution would be the establishment in Algeria on the soil of a Department of France of a single authority in place of the French National ⁴⁴ Commandant en chef au Levant.

⁴⁴ Commander-in-Chief in the Levant.

Committee in London and Giraud's administration in Algiers. This authority would be recognized merely as a de facto administration provisionally exercising French sovereignty over certain Departments of France and over the whole French Empire (except Indo-China) pending the establishment of a Government chosen by the French people themselves. It would not be recognized as the Government or even as the provisional Government of France. It would, however, maintain relations with foreign Governments by the informal exchange of representatives. It would be treated as an Allied Power and be formally admitted to the ranks of the United Nations. Agreements relating to the various parts of the French Empire would normally be made with the central authority and not with the local Colonial administration. Economic agreements might be made on a tripartite basis like the agreements in respect of French Equatorial Africa and the Cameroons at present under negotiation between our two Governments and the French National Committee.

5. So far as French North Africa is concerned, the special powers exercised by the Allied Commander-in-Chief in virtue of his command of military operations would be redefined in a formal agreement concluded between the United States Government and the central authority, possibly on lines similar to arrangement in Madagascar. In that agreement French sovereignty provisionally exercised by the National Committee is expressly recognized and the special powers enjoyed by the Commander-in-Chief are conferred upon him by the National Committee. General Giraud has recently raised the question of respect for French sovereignty with the Commander-in-Chief and it may be taken as certain that the Fighting French element in any new administration would be no less sensitive on this point. French North Africa would therefore be regarded as Allied territory in which the Allied Commander-in-Chief is vested with extensive powers, rather than as quasi-occupied territory where he possesses administrative authority. It would be essential to require as a counterpart that the central authority should conduct itself in all respects both internally and externally, as an Allied administration.

6. It would be desirable that all links with Vichy should be severed or at any rate that any claim to unbroken succession through Darlan from Pétain should not be revived and also that a return should be made to the laws of the Republic.

We feel it to be of the highest importance that all Frenchmen actively resisting the Axis should be united under one authority and we are in full agreement with the tentative conclusions which you have instructed the British Ambassa-

We are instructing the Canadian Minister in Washington, after consultation with the British Ambassador, to inform the Secretary of State that we share the views of the Government of the United Kingdom concerning the form of the provisional administration of the French Empire outside Axis control, the establishment of which it should be the aim of the United Nations to encourage in the interests of the most effective prosecution of the war.

London, January 8, 1943

MOST SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D.5. His Majesty's Ambassador at Washington reports that he discussed with Mr. Hull on January 5th position with regard to de Gaulle and Giraud. Mr. Hull's view was that de Gaulle, while paying lip service to unity was making

⁴⁵ Les notes suivantes étaient écrites sur ce mémorandum:

I am glad of this. You knew I was doubtful. K[ING] demands for his own civil headship in North Africa and claiming that anything with Vichy influence must be liquidated before he could whole-heartedly cooperate. This attitude seemed to Mr. Hull unreasonable when the only thing that mattered was helping a critical military situation. He thought also that the impression was gaining ground that the United Kingdom Government were not dissociating themselves from what was considered in the United States to be the very intransigent attitude of de Gaulle.

2. His Majesty's Ambassador told Mr. Hull that

(a) de Gaulle appreciated the importance of the military side but that rightly or wrongly he did not think full military effect could be made without political unity;

(b) That the United Kingdom Government were certainly not tied to de Gaulle and did not want to do anything that would prejudice future liberty of French choice.

3. Mr. Hull, who was genuinely concerned to avoid any divergence, suggested that it would be of the greatest value if we could ourselves take steps to avoid any misinterpretation of our position.

4. In telegram of January 6th to His Majesty's Ambassador (which was prepared before receipt of the foregoing), we referred to our views on French policy as summarised in my telegram under reference and to importance of avoiding any divergence of policy between the United States and ourselves and said that we should value State Department's considered comments on these views. We indicated that we do not think that agreement on military collaboration between de Gaulle and Giraud can be reached without some form of political agreement. Each of the parties is at present head of a political organisation of a kind to which numerous Frenchmen owe allegiance and which is in provisional control of certain French territories held in trust for France. In our view discussions between them are bound to turn on the question of political union. His Majesty's Ambassador was requested to discuss the matter with State Department and to report their views.

5. On January 1st Mr. Hull had drawn Lord Halifax's attention to certain public criticisms in the United Kingdom of United States Government's French policy and had expressed the hope that we could take some action in this connection. Lord Halifax was requested by telegram on January 6th to reply to Mr. Hull on this subject on following lines:

(a) To check such criticism entirely would involve us in a direct attack on the freedom of Parliament and the press and that there is deep feeling in this country on what are thought to be intrigues with Darlan and Vichy;

(b) We have done our very best to help in the matter but that the Prime Minister here can no more stop such criticism than can the State Department stop Willkie, Luce, etc., when they say things which give offence here;

(c) The remedy is to agree on a policy in French affairs.

6. These instructions crossed a telegram from His Majesty's Ambassador reporting that on January 6th Elmer Davis⁴⁶ invited His Majesty's Minister (Mr. Butler) to discuss the African situation. Davis had apparently been commissioned to convey United States views reached at a meeting attended by Hull, Stimson and others. These were to the effect that:

(a) Our public apparently believe complacently that disappearance of Darlan had solved all difficulties and that de Gaulle-Giraud reconciliation was imminent;

(b) United States Government's information suggests that this is far from being the case; they foresee great difficulties in clearing up the political situation though they are determined to do so at earliest possible moment;

(c) Giraud is, however, proving less amenable than Darlan because he feels he has support of bulk of army. Eisenhower is therefore reluctant to precipitate a crisis by insisting on removal of pro-Vichy elements whilst military situation is difficult;

(d) United States therefore hoped that we would do our best to restrain press comment.

7. His Majesty's Minister undertook to report these views but drew attention to our difficulties (see paragraph 5 above). Ends.

Washington, January 9, 1943

I had a long talk last evening with Sir Ronald Campbell on North African matters. He informed me that the Embassy had carried out the instructions embodied in Circular D.5 of January 4th from the Dominions Office. Mr. Hull was given a memorandum based on this telegram, but he had made no comment on it.

The day before this interview, Mr. Hull had himself sent for Sir Ronald Campbell (in the absence of the Ambassador) and had complained to him of the tone of press comment in the United Kingdom on North African policy. The State Department had been receiving reports from their representatives in London which had disturbed and distressed him. The Secretary then launched into a long exposition of United States policy in North Africa, which he said was based simply on the necessity of concentrating all possible military force against the aggressor and putting into the background political questions. Mr. Hull felt that United Kingdom policy — and even more, that of de Gaulle — seemed to emphasize political matters, and therefore might hinder the prosecution of the war. He argued that at all costs nothing must be done to hamper military operations by stirring up political controversy.

⁴⁶ Director, Office of War Information of United States.

Sir Ronald Campbell took note of Mr. Hull's remarks and assured him that the British Government was just as anxious as the American Government to do nothing that would hinder the joint military effort in North Africa. Sir Ronald then asked for evidence of British expressions of opinion, either official or journalistic, which were having the effect that Mr. Hull complained about. He pointed out that freedom of the press existed in Great Britain as it did in the United States and that it was impossible to stifle the expression of opinion. Mr. Hull said he appreciated this, but he thought that something might be done to guide it. Mr. Hull made no complaint of the attitude and statements of British Government leaders; he had great confidence in Mr. Eden, but he thought that some of the officials of the Foreign Office had been unhelpful in their talk in London.

After his interview with Mr. Hull, Sir Ronald Campbell also saw Mr. Atherton, who took the same line but ended on a note which is sometimes heard here and which is, I think, fraught with danger — namely, that the United States would take any action in North Africa, no matter what French interests might be affected, if it saved the lives of American soldiers.

Mr. Barclay of the Embassy also saw Mr. Reber on the same subject the next day. Mr. Reber, as you know, has considerable influence in the formulation of United States policy on French affairs. He was more conciliatory than his chiefs and concentrated on the necessity of Anglo-American unity on these matters.

The Embassy later received from the Foreign Office a telegraphed reply to Sir Ronald Campbell's report of his interview with Mr. Hull. Sir Ronald took this reply to Mr. Hull yesterday, but did not get very far. London again agreed with Mr. Hull that military considerations were paramount and argued that they were guided primarily by them. It was because of the beneficial effects it would have on the military effort that they were anxious to bring de Gaulle and Giraud together. Mr. Hull still thought, however, that de Gaulle was too interested in establishing his political position, and the United States did not wish to recognize him or anyone else as the leader of a provisional government in North Africa. Sir Ronald pointed out that the British proposal also took this line. No provisional government of any kind was to be recognized, merely a centre of French authority.

On the complaint about the unfriendly United Kingdom press, the Foreign Office took a firm line. They explained the difficulties that Mr. Churchill and Mr. Eden had had in damping down public opinion on North African political developments, about which they felt very strongly indeed. They had done what they could, but there was no possibility of preventing expressions of opinion on a matter on which the British public felt so strongly. Mr. Hull ought to appreciate this, as most offensive articles had appeared in the United States press attacking the British and de Gaulle on their North African policy. (The Foreign Office is undoubtedly on solid ground here, as nothing that has appeared in the United Kingdom press could have been more unfriendly than certain press articles that have been published recently in this country.)

Sir Ronald Campbell feels that the exchange of views that has taken place has not brought the two Governments much closer together, but has been useful in bringing differences into the open. Mr. Hull's statements that he is anxious to bring de Gaulle and Giraud together for military purposes and that he has no feeling against the former undoubtedly represent his honest and sincere view, but Sir Ronald feels that there are others in the State Department who have no liking for de Gaulle and are suspicious that the British may use him to establish their own influence in North Africa and later in France. I have no doubt myself that this exists in certain quarters and may be one reason why there is disagreement.

I asked Sir Ronald whether he thought there was any divergence between the White House and the State Department on this matter. He did not think so, though the Ambassador has been apparently impressed by Mr. Roosevelt's recent remarks on the French.

Apart from the suspicion of the motives of de Gaulle and the British, it seems to me that the fundamental divergence of view now is the reluctance of the United States Government to embark on any policy of encouraging centralization of all French authority, because of their feeling that this would introduce political questions which would distract attention from military operations and might create unrest behind the lines. The Americans therefore prefer to localize French problems and deal with them separately. The British, on the other hand, feel that steps should be taken to establish a centre of French political as well as military resistance, and argue that the latter will be more effective if the former can be achieved.

Miss Gladys Arnold of the Fighting French Delegation came in the absence of Colonel Pierrené and Mlle. de Miribel to see me today about the proposed visit of General de Gaulle. She said that word had just been received from Tixier that it was almost certain that the General would arrive on this continent about January 25th. I told her that this did not accord with the impression that I had formed from press reports and other sources. It seemed likely that a meeting between de Gaulle and Giraud would take place towards the end of the month and it would clearly be inadvisable for de Gaulle to visit Washington before the meeting. Colonel Gounouilhou and Miss de Miribel had both expressed themselves strongly to me on this point and I am sure that they are right. I promised Miss Arnold that we would let the Fighting French Delegation have any information we might receive on the visit.

I thought it advisable to express the personal opinion to her that it might be best for the General when he came to Canada to make no public appearance outside Ottawa adding, however, that I might modify this opinion if he came after a successful visit to Giraud which had resulted in the reunion of Frenchmen opposed to the Axis.⁴⁸

Miss Arnold referred to the passage in Mr. Harold Macmillan's interview with the press reported this morning in which he mentioned that the greatest need of North Africa was food supplies. She made the suggestion that an offer by the Canadian Government to furnish relief supplies for North Africa at this moment might have a very beneficial effect in North Africa, in France and perhaps also inside Canada. I said to her that there seemed to be grave practical difficulties in the way of implementing any such offer as I understood that what was needed most in North Africa were commodities of which we were ourselves in short supply, especially sugar and fats and oils. They did not need cereals which we could easily furnish but we might perhaps be able to provide some salted codfish although I did not know whether that was a staple article of consumption in that territory. She suggested that we might send some condensed milk for the children there. She also said that even if little could go forward in the way of actual supplies, both because of our own shortages and because of shipping difficulties, an offer of supplies would in her view be a gesture of substantial political value. I think that there is something in this idea and that we should give further consideration to it.⁴⁹

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins; Your WA-1295 of March 19th. General Béthouart was in Ottawa from Sunday afternoon until Monday afternoon. He was accompanied by Georges Dumont⁵⁰, but the latter was not present during his discussions with Ministers and officials. Béthouart saw Minister of Justice, Minister of National Defence, Minister of National War Services and myself, and had a short talk with the Prime Minister just before he left. He also had a long and cordial conversation with Bonneau and this was mentioned in a brief statement in the press.

The first question he raised with me was the reception here of a representative of the North African administration. I said that we had hoped there would be a single mission, covering all Frenchmen fighting the Axis, but if union between Giraud and de Gaulle was delayed, I thought that the Government would agree to receive a Giraud representative; it would be most important that everything should be done to avoid an appearance of rivalry with the Fighting French Delegation. Béthouart raised with the Prime Minister the possibility of our despatching a mission to North Africa; it was made clear to him that we would give no undertaking on reciprocity at present.

If the Giraud mission discusses this matter with you, you might emphasize the point already made to Béthouart here, that we are not ready to do anything which could be regarded as provisional recognition of Giraud's administration as a government. In talk with me, he mentioned, as a remote prospect, the opening of Consulates in Canada and this of course could not be allowed. The description of any mission opened in Ottawa will have to be carefully weighed. What is the exact description of Bethouart's mission in Washington?⁵¹

Béthouart also enquired about the use of the former Vichy officials in Canada, saying that they were short of men and would be glad to employ them. He was told that it would not be desirable to employ any of them in Canada and he seemed readily to appreciate the force of this. He asked for a list of these officials and I undertook to send him one through you, but said I could not comply with his request for comments on their careers and opinions. He particularly enquired concerning the employment at once of Treuil⁵² under Hoppenot in Washington and I assured him that we should have no objection to this. As Ristelhueber was in Montreal, he did not see Béthouart personally and I believe they hope to meet shortly in Washington. I told him that the junior French officials who are now working on the payment of French pensions in Canada would continue this employment unless they themselves desired to leave.

It would be a considerable advantage if all the former French officials in Canada, except those working on pension payments, were given employment elsewhere and I hope, therefore, that Béthouart will pursue the matter promptly. The list of them will follow by teletype[†] today or tomorrow. Ends.

Mémorandum du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Mr. Georges Dumont called to see me this afternoon. He said he was calling informally on behalf of General Béthouart who was very grateful for the arrangements made during his visit to Ottawa on March 21st and 22nd. I asked him what his own position was. He said that he was a friend of General Béthouart's who was unofficially assisting him as he knew Canada well and was married to a Canadian. He had offered to arrange the General's visit through General LaFlèche with whom he was acquainted. It was all private and unofficial and General Béthouart had not expected to see all those whom he did see.

Mr. Dumont then said he wanted to ask my views on the proposal for a Giraud Mission here. I was guarded in speaking to him, but I thought that nevertheless it might be possible to use him so that the arrangements would be shaped in a form satisfactory to us. He first asked me whether I thought that the representative of General Giraud should be an officer or civilian implying strongly that he favoured a military man. I answered that I had no definite views but as Giraud bore the title of Commander-in-Chief of the French in North Africa, there was some appropriateness in a military appointment. We would, however, rather have a good civilian representative than an indifferent military one. He then came to what I think was the object of his visit — the suggestion that General Béthouart himself might be appointed to represent Giraud in Canada as well as in the United States. I told him that I thought that this would probably not be acceptable and that we had refused to agree to the accrediting to Canada of Ambassadors or Ministers accredited to the United States. He suggested that for the present matters might be arranged through visits to Ottawa from time to time by General Béthouart or members of his staff without opening a Mission here. I told him that we would not have any objection to such visits and that the question of whether they needed a mission was mainly one for themselves to decide.

I added that if a Mission were opened there would have to be prior consultation on its title. Two questions had to be borne in mind: First, that a title was proposed which would not imply the recognition of the North African administration as a provisional Government and, secondly, that the title selected did not imply that the Mission represented any French authority or group other than those in North Africa. He agreed with both these suggestions.

He went on to say that the main function of the Béthouart Mission in Washington was to secure equipment for Giraud's troops. There was no similar function to be performed at present in Canada and there seemed no necessity, therefore, for having a Giraud Mission here on practical grounds. I told him that doubtless matters would arise from time to time which the North African administration would wish to take up with us or we would wish to take up with them but that these could probably be handled via the Béthouart Mission in Washington if they did not care to proceed with the suggestion for an office here. I took the opportunity of saying that there seemed to be no occasion for them undertaking publicity or propaganda work in Canada at present and with this Dumont agreed. He also agreed that it was most desirable that there should be close cooperation with the Fighting French and spoke very warmly of Bonneau and of Béthouart's opinion of him.⁵³

I attach a translation of a letter addressed to you by General Béthouart from Washington on his return from Ottawa, and a draft reply for your signature. I also attach a note of a conversation between Wrong and Georges Dumont, an unofficial Frenchman who accompanied Béthouart to Ottawa. Dumont's standing is a matter of some doubt; he is a French lawyer in New York who has a Canadian wife and has spent a good deal of time in Canada during the last twenty years. He seems to have insinuated himself into the picture with General Bethouart but he is believed not to be in the General's confidence.

I think on the whole that it would be desirable to stall the establishment of a Giraud mission in Ottawa for a while if we can do so without giving offence, in the hope that before long there will be a close enough affiliation between Giraud and de Gaulle to permit a unified representation here.

General Béthouart, the head of the French North African Military Mission in Washington, whom you met here some weeks ago, has enquired through our Legation in Washington whether you could receive him if he came to Ottawa on Thursday. I understand he wishes to discuss with you the question of North African representation in Canada and to enquire whether the Government would see any objection to his accepting an invitation from the City of Montreal on the occasion of his next visit to Canada.

He may also wish to refer to the invitation which he transmitted from General Giraud (attached teletype) for Mr. Dupuy to visit North Africa. I am not very happy about this invitation coming at this particular moment and do not intend to inform Dupuy of it until I have had a word with you on the subject.

I would see no objection to receiving a representative of the North African Administration in Canada. Technically, his position would be comparable to that of the representative of the French National Committee, Commander Bonneau. I hope, however, that they can defer the question of representation until some degree of unity between Giraud and de Gaulle has been achieved, so that there would be a single representative of Fighting France in Canada. I am afraid the establishment of two missions, representing different elements of French resistance, would recreate the confusion in French opinion which has been clearing up since the closing of the French Legation.

Ottawa, April 27, 1943

SECRET. Following for Vanier, Begins: French No. 3.

My telegram French No. 2 of April 23rd and your French No. 4 of April 26th[†]. The following is for Dupuy's guidance on his projected unofficial visit to Algiers:

(1) General Béthouart, when visiting Ottawa last month, raised the question of establishing a Giraud Mission in Canada. He will probably return to Ottawa within three weeks for further discussion on this and other matters. Our attitude is that while we do not object to the opening of such a mission, with the same status as the Fighting French Delegation, we hope that action may be deferred until a greater degree of unity has been achieved between Giraud and de Gaulle. This view was prompted not only by our desire, on general grounds, for a union between the forces of French resistance to the Axis but also by purely Canadian considerations. The establishment of two missions here, both representing French resistance, would tend to revive the confusion of minds towards French affairs, especially in Quebec, which has abated since the closing of the French Legation.

(2) It will be desirable, therefore, for you to stress the advantages of early union without, of course, supporting any particular plan as that is a matter which Frenchmen must decide. You should point out the difficulties and disadvantages of establishing a separate Giraud mission here, especially while the negotiations for union are still proceeding. If these negotiations succeed, the new French authority will, presumably, at once set up its representation, absorbing the Fighting French Delegation.

(3) If the question is raised with you (and you should not raise it yourself) of the despatch of a Canadian Mission to Algiers, you should avoid any commitment. Probably no resident Canadian representative will be despatched there until some provisional civil authority has been set up, to which other United Nations are attaching civil representatives. The present type of regime limits the political representation of other governments to those whose forces are engaged in North Africa. If the Giraud-de Gaulle negotiations result in union, we shall be glad to consider the appointment of a Canadian representative.

(4) While your visit will be private and unofficial, you should call on the British Resident Minister on arrival and keep him informed on the course of your discussions. You should also call on Mr. Murphy. Sometime before your departure from London, you should ask Mr. Massey to notify the Foreign Office of your plans.

(5) It should not be necessary to give any statement to the press, either here or in London, about your forthcoming visit. If your presence is noted in Algiers you could simply say that you are returning from your post with the Legation in London to take up duties with the Department in Ottawa and are spending a few days in Algiers while en route on an unofficial visit. The same explanation might be communicated in courtesy and confidence to the French National Committee before you leave London. Ends.

General Béthouart and Mr. Bédard paid a final visit to me this morning to thank the Department for the courtesies that they had received. They brought up one point as a footnote to yesterday's discussions. The General is rather worried that if he continues to refuse invitations to go to the Province of Quebec misunderstandings will arise there as to his own position. I should think there might be some possibility of dissentient elements in Quebec playing up his lack of direct contact with Quebec as evidence that the Canadian Government was cold-shouldering General Giraud. I said that the time factor was clearly important and that if the de Gaulle-Giraud negotiations had got nowhere in the next month, I felt that we should look at the position once more. I also suggested that in his refusal of invitations he should ascribe his inability to accept to heavy military pressure on his time. He said that he had been careful to avoid any suggestion that he was influenced by advice given him here over domestic-political problems although in fact it was this advice which guided him in refusing invitations.

General Béthouart discussed with Stone the question of arranging for the enlistment of six or seven Frenchmen in Canada who have written him offering their services to Giraud. Stone told Bethouart that it would be satisfactory if he would send an officer to Ottawa who could be put in touch with Major Bonneau. He advised the General to arrange the date of this officer's visit through the Legation in Washington.

The General also indicated to Stone that he would keep us informed of any plans for the disposition of former Vichy officials in Canada.

Ottawa, May 29, 1943

My dear Prime Minister,

The Secretary of State has asked me to inform you that a telegram dated May 26th from Mr. Robert Murphy contained the following message, which Mr. Dupuy requested be communicated to you:

⁵⁴H. Wrong.

“(1) I called Friday last on Mr. Macmillan who had just left for London with General Catroux.

(2) I spent two hours with General Giraud and lunched with him on Saturday.

(3) General Giraud told me that his reply which General Catroux was carrying to General de Gaulle was his final proposal.

(4) General Giraud told me he had insisted on the creation of a Central Executive Committee with collective responsibility. General Giraud [de Gaulle] and he would preside in turn, but each would have only one vote.

(5) The Committee would be composed of two members to be appointed by General de Gaulle, two by General Giraud, and three by the first six members of the Committee.

(6) The Committee would be temporary and would act only until the liberation of some part of continental France when the law of 15 March, 1870, regarding the conseils généraux, would be made applicable.

(7) General Giraud maintains that a Central Executive Committee cannot and will not be the Government of France.

(8) I was informed by General Giraud that a written reply only would be acceptable to him and it must not be accompanied by broadcasts or speeches of General de Gaulle.

(9) In the event that General de Gaulle replied in the negative, General Giraud said that negotiations for union with the Fighting French movement would terminate.

(10) I have gathered the impression that the National Committee in London will reply that the Central Executive Committee proposed by General Giraud be enlarged so as to permit the transfer to Algiers, either in part or in whole, of the National Committee, and that in Algiers General Giraud and a few of his collaborators would be included.

(11) I believe that reasonable elements like Catroux and Massigli will insist on accepting General Giraud's proposal. As a matter of fact, Catroux, before leaving Algiers, told me that if they were rejected he would resign.

(12) It appears likely that in London opposition will come from diehards like Diethelm⁵⁵ and Philip, who will not willingly agree to the disappearance of their authority and that of General de Gaulle into the Central Executive Committee.

(13) It is my impression that a continuation of the present system in London would be preferable to them, as it favors preparation of a pro-de Gaulle plebiscite in France through BBC [BSC?] agents who have been sent to continental France, and through advances made by the Government of the United Kingdom.

(14) I found General Giraud unprepared to play any political role but the ideal type of simple, honest, patriotic and non-ambitious Frenchman.”

I am etc.

I am enclosing copy of a message from Dupuy in Algiers, received this morning through the United States Legation here. Events seem to be moving very rapidly towards a union between the French National Committee and the Administration in North Africa. The announcement may come any day. It should, I think, be very warmly welcomed in Canada, perhaps above all other places. I have suggested to Mr. Pickersgill that he might usefully get a draft statement ready for you to issue as soon as present hopes of union are realized.

My dear Mr. Prime Minister,

I have been directed by the Secretary of State to transmit the following additional message to you from Mr. Dupuy which was received from Algiers and was dated June 1, 1 a.m.:

“(1) The arrival of de Gaulle was peaceful. Although a few of his adherents paraded Sunday afternoon the population did not appear greatly interested.

(2) There took place this morning the first official meeting with a view to the creation of the Central Executive Committee. De Gaulle's assistants were Philip and Massigli; Giraud's assistants were Jean Monnet, formerly of the British Purchasing Commission at Washington, and General Georges.⁵⁶

(3) Catroux was likewise chosen as the Committee's seventh member. The last two members of the Committee have not yet been chosen. It is possible that seats on the Committee will be kept open for prominent citizens from the Continent.

(4) News of Georges' escape from the Continent and arrival in Africa to place himself at the orders of Giraud have greatly strengthened the latter's position.

(5) Notwithstanding the collapse of 1940, General Georges still has the confidence of French forces. In two conversations with him lasting about four hours I found him as brilliant as ever. Under existing circumstances his experience and political sense should be important assets.

⁵⁶ Commissaire d'État.

⁵⁶ Commissioner of State.

(6) The presence in Algiers of Mr. Churchill, although kept secret, has been excellent in its effect upon the negotiations between de Gaulle and Giraud.

(7) Giraud has accepted President Roosevelt's invitation to go to Washington some time after June 10. In case you would like him to pay a brief visit to Ottawa I suggest that you advise me before next Thursday as I am ready to leave on Friday."

Secretary Hull's statement quoted in my WA-2784 of June 9th[†] cannot be regarded as the U.S. reply to a request for recognition by the new Committee. The statement is interpreted as the blessing of Mr. Hull on the work of the Committee and the acknowledgment of the fact that both French factions in the U.S. had got together in presenting the note.

Mr. Dunn⁵⁷ told the British Embassy that this statement was to be considered as an interim one which would give them time to consider their attitude. This might be interpreted as the kind of recognition which is to be given and the type of representation to the new Committee after it is recognized.

One thing is certain; in view of the internal struggle which appears to have developed in Algiers in the last few days no hurried decision will be taken.

A further report will be sent on Monday after consultation with the British Embassy. Ends.

Attached is a copy of a letter received yesterday from Commandant Bonneau, representative in Canada of the French National Committee, transmitting the text of the declaration establishing the French Committee of National Liberation and requesting the recognition of it "as the body qualified to ensure direction of France's war effort together with the care and defence of all French interests".

Similar communications are being addressed to all the United Nations. In Washington and London the message was delivered jointly by the representatives of the French National Committee and of the North African Administration. Most of the Allied Governments established in the United Kingdom have accorded formal recognition to the new Committee and have indicated their intention of accrediting diplomatic representatives to it. The United Kingdom, in a telegram of June 9th[†], said they hoped to telegraph their views regarding recognition after consultation with the United States Government. In the meantime, they hoped we would agree to defer our reply.

Mr. Hull has replied to this communication to the effect that the United States Government "had continuously hoped for the unification of all French resistance in a common effort against aggression, wherever it may be found throughout the world. He warmly welcomed the spirit in which the French National Council of Liberation had been formed." The press statement containing the United States reply and the French request for recognition does not make it clear what form or degree of recognition the United States Government proposes to give the Committee. We have asked the Legation in Washington to try to secure further particulars about the American attitude.⁵⁸

Sir,

ALGIERS NO. 2

I have the honour of forwarding you herewith the original and two copies of a letter which I received in Algiers from the Chief of Staff of the French Air Force in North Africa on the possibility of sending their cadets to Canada for training purposes.

Since I received this letter, I had several conversations with a friend of mine, General Bouscat, after he had been promoted Commander-in-Chief of the French Air Force in North and West Africa. He asked me to insist on the importance of this question. Several thousand young Frenchmen, all eager to fight, are ready to start or complete their training, but conditions do not permit it in Africa. An arrangement has already been reached with the United States authorities, who are now receiving fifty French cadets a month, but this solution is far from meeting the needs of the French Air Force. If Canada could also accept a certain number of these cadets, this valuable help to the French war effort would be greatly appreciated by the Committee, as General Bouscat was appointed by both General de Gaulle and General Giraud.

Personally, I think that such a decision would be an excellent preface to the resumption of our relations with the French people, and the repercussions in Canada might also be interesting. I have etc.

Étant donnés les liens d'amitié traditionnels qui unissent le Canada et la France, liens qui ne pourraient qu'être renforcés si certains de nos jeunes gens allaient dans votre pays se préparer au combat pour la cause que nous défendons en commun, nous aurions été particulièrement heureux de voir les écoles d'aviation canadiennes recevoir et entraîner une partie des élèves-pilotes d'Afrique française.

[Ottawa,] July 14, 1943

With regard to our discussions this afternoon on Canadian representation in Algiers a decision on this is presumably closely related to a decision on the question of recognition of the Committee. It looks as though Washington may be intending to stall indefinitely on recognition. London telegraphed a few days ago that they were pressing Washington for immediate action and thought that it could appropriately be taken while Giraud was on this side. We have heard no more of this approach. Circular telegrams D. 421[†] and D. 423[†] of July 13th, however, relate to the matter and the information in them is in accord with various intimations dropped by Roosevelt and Hull at press conferences.

According to telegram D. 421 the U.S. is informing the Argentine Government in writing (presumably in response to an enquiry) that their policy is "to refrain from recognition of Committee as even a Provisional Government of France" until the liberation of France. It has not, however, been suggested by the Committee that it should be recognized as a Provisional Government of France. The note to the Argentine Government goes on to say that it is too early "to define our relationship" with the Committee and that this will depend on the acceptance by the Committee of certain considerations to be presented to them.

Telegram D. 423 shows that the State Department at first would only agree to Hoppenot's taking over from Robert on the understanding that he would be "the ultimate authority" in the French colonies. They have, however, rather backed down from this point of view and have apparently recognized that Hoppenot is responsible to the Committee. Until these matters are cleared up it might be difficult for us to appoint a civil representative in Algiers. We should either have to give recognition independently of the U.S. attitude on the lines adopted by most of the Allied Governments in London or we should have at this late date to appoint someone in a capacity similar to that of Murphy and Macmillan. The case for sending a representative is, of course, strengthened by the presence of substantial forces in the Mediterranean but this would not justify our demanding the right to appoint a civilian adviser to General Eisenhower.

Thus a complicated matter seems to be becoming even more complex.

SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegrams Circular D. 342 of June 9th[†] and Circular D. 358 of June 16th[†].

1. Question of recognition of French Committee of Liberation is still in suspense. As indicated by my telegram Circular D. 421[†] the United States Government appear reluctant to take any action at present. In the meanwhile, however, it seems appropriate to consider the procedure to be employed in case recognition should at any time appear desirable at short notice.

2. With reference to paragraph 3 of my telegram Circular D. 358, precise wording of recognition formula which we should employ cannot be settled now as it would depend on prevailing circumstances and views of the United States Government. We would, however, communicate final text of our formula to you if question of recognition becomes immediate.

3. As regards channels of communication, we contemplate that our recognition would be conveyed by our Resident Minister in Algiers to the French National Committee on behalf of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom. As regards recognition by His Majesty's Governments in the Dominions, alternative methods would be:

(a) That Resident Minister should deliver separate notes on their behalf, or
(b) That they should reply to requests for recognition (see my telegram Circular D. 342) which have been or will be addressed to them on behalf of French Committee of National Liberation in Algiers.

4. Should be glad to learn which procedure would be preferred by your Government. In either event, we hope that you will consider question of attaching reservations to your recognition similar to those which we finally decide to employ. Ends.

TELEGRAM 1236

Ottawa, July 17, 1943

Please pass copy to Vanier. General Giraud will return to Algiers via United Kingdom leaving Montreal probably Sunday and spending about two days in London.

He arrived Ottawa from Detroit July 15th and went to Montreal for dinner July 16th. Prime Minister of Quebec gave dinner in his honour last night. This morning he is visiting war industries at Sorel. After luncheon given by City of Montreal he will inspect officer cadets this afternoon and attend a reception by the French community.

On arrival in Ottawa he attended reception by Canadian Army followed by Government dinner. Chief features of yesterday's programme were Press Conference, inspection of Uplands Air Station and reception by Commandant Bonneau. He has been received primarily as a distinguished French General and the military character of his visit has been emphasized both in his reception and in his public and private statements.

The visit has gone well with emphasis in press on attainment of unity among Frenchmen. Bonneau acted as French representative in Canada. Ristelheuber was present at Government dinner and other functions. Giraud undoubtedly has made a fine personal impression and his speeches have been helpful. He did not, however, mention de Gaulle in any public statement.

His main theme has been the necessity of building up the French Army and in discussion and private conversations he has expressed his strong desire for training of French pilots in Canada and despatch of Canadian equipment to North Africa. Just before leaving Ottawa he had long talk with Prime Minister about which I shall inform you separately if other matters of importance were raised.

DESPATCH FRENCH NO. 24

London, July 19, 1943

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I beg to refer you to my telegram, French No. 36 dated 17th July¹, in which I informed you that an imposing and representative body of public and official opinion in this country favours recognition of the French Committee of National Liberation.

2. The Press is almost unanimous in its request for recognition. I thought you would be interested in reading some of the press comments and views, in addition to the quotation from the Manchester Guardian Weekly of the 16th July which I telegraphed. I am enclosing, therefore, leading articles[†] from The Times, The Economist, The Spectator and another one from the Manchester Guardian Weekly. I might have collected similar news cuttings from a dozen other papers favouring recognition but these, to a large extent, would be variations on the same theme and arguments.

3. Personally, I remain of the opinion expressed in my telegram, French No. 22 dated 9th June, 1943,[†] that recognition is the only solution to an already confused situation.

4. If we do not wish to develop in the French people generally a feeling of deep resentment against us, which may be lasting and which may eventually throw France into the arms of the Soviet Union, it is essential that such recognition be no longer delayed.

5. I am passing a copy of this despatch to the High Commissioner.

FRENCH COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL LIBERATION

8. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reviewed developments since the establishment of the French Committee of National Liberation and reported upon the present position.

The U.K. government favoured a policy of qualified recognition of the Committee by the United Nations but wished to act in concert with the United States. The U.S. government, on the other hand, were not prepared to grant even limited recognition at this time.

A report from the British Resident Minister at Algiers expressed the fear that if recognition were long delayed the Committee would not survive; if this were to happen it could only give place to a purely Gaullist administration, since de Gaulle had the support of an overwhelming majority of Frenchmen. Both Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Murphy were concerned at the lack of progress in regard to recognition. The U.K. government were raising again with the United States the desirability of immediate interim recognition of the Committee.

(Dominions Office telegrams, Circulars D. 432, 436[†] and 437[†], July 16 and 17, 1943).

9. MR. ROBERSTON said that this was a question in which Canada had an important interest and responsibility. The argument was strong for early action to assist in strengthening the French Committee by at least qualified recognition, and representations to this effect might be made to the U.S. government urging common action by Britain, the United States and Canada.

10. THE PRIME MINISTER said that General Giraud, when in Ottawa, had suggested that it would be helpful if Canada were to appoint a representative in North Africa accredited to the Commander-in-Chief, as was the case with Mr. Macmillan and Mr. Murphy.

11. MR. ROBERTSON felt that while this might have been helpful some months ago, it would now be construed as an alternative to recognition of the Committee, which would have an adverse effect.

12. THE SECRETARY referred to requests which had been made by General Giraud to the Prime Minister and other members of the government, for supplies from Canada to French forces in Africa; mechanical transport, aircraft, small naval ships and clothing; also the training in Canada of French airmen.

In accordance with a decision of the War Committee at a meeting held on July 2nd,⁶² a submission to Council was being prepared for the designation of the French Committee as an authority associated with Canada in the prosecution of the war and as such available for Mutual Aid under the Statute.

13. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that an approach should be made to the U.S. government urging that early concerted action should be taken to strengthen the French Committee of National Liberation by some form of at least interim recognition on the part of the United Nations.

With regard to French requests for Mutual Aid, it was agreed that such should be formally submitted to the Canadian Mutual Aid Board as from the French Committee.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. Addressed Washington No. EX-2862. Repeated London (copy to go to Minister to Allied European Governments) No. 1278.

We are concerned over delay in replying to request of French Committee of National Liberation for recognition by Allied Governments. States Government to take this step. We feel it important that recognition along the general lines suggested by the United Kingdom Government⁶³ should be granted as soon as possible. Will you please, therefore, explain the views of the Canadian Government to the Department of State as follows:

“The Canadian Government has delayed its reply to the request of the French Committee of National Liberation for recognition⁶⁴ because it was considered desirable that recognition should be extended by Governments of the United Nations as far as possible at the same time and in agreed terms. The Canadian Government which is deeply interested in the early return of France to her high place among the nations, is becoming increasingly concerned at the delay in extending recognition of the Committee. In its view it is likely that the effect of further delay will be to diminish the authority and usefulness of the Committee, inside which at last the forces of French resistance have come together and are beginning to exert a collective responsibility. Delay too must discourage Frenchmen both inside and outside France who saw in the union within the Committee of the forces of active resistance the best hope and essential condition of an important French contribution to the liberation and restoration of France. Furthermore delay in recognition tends to emphasize the personal issues and disputes inside the Committee at a time when the common interest demands that they should be played down. In the long run failure to extend recognition may compromise the relations of the United Nations with France during and after the period of liberation and may add to the difficulties of effecting an enduring settlement.

There are in addition of course practical reasons for regularizing relations with the Committee, in order to facilitate the conduct of business with it on questions such as the provision of war supplies, the legal position of members of the French Forces within other jurisdictions and similar matters.

The Canadian Government thinks that recognition of the Committee should be accompanied by suitable reservations which would make it clear that the Committee was not being recognized as a Government. It is felt, however, that in addition it might be advisable to include expressly in any communication to the Committee a direct reference to certain passages of the declaration of June 3rd[†] constituting the Committee which is the basis of its request for recognition. In particular, it might be useful to note the Committee's intention of handing over its authority to a provisional government to be set up in accordance with the laws of the Republic as soon as the liberation of French territory from the enemy has been effected. Similarly, it might be well to note the Committee's solemn undertaking to re-establish all French liberties, the laws of the Republic and the Republican form of government, and to destroy entirely the regime of autocratic personal authority to which France is now subject.

The inclusion of these provisions in the formal instrument recognizing the Committee would, it might be hoped, make it clear that recognition of the Committee's trusteeship for French interests was linked with the explicit undertaking of the Committee to surrender its authority to a legally constituted democratic government in France. This should strengthen the position of all those within the Committee and among its supporters who can be relied on to do everything in their power to establish a liberal and democratic regime in France and to resist effectively any efforts which might be made to impose a personal or military regime."

In presenting the views expressed in the preceding paragraphs in an aide-mémoire to the Department of State, you may find an opportunity of supplementing your representations orally along the following lines:

It seems to us quite probable that the reluctance of the United States to take earlier action on this question has been due to misgivings, for which we agree some grounds exist, that General de Gaulle may be hoping to impose his personal authority in France after the war. In our view the best assurance against such an unwelcome development lies in strengthening the position of the Committee, which already contains a group of able, patriotic and disinterested Frenchmen. We feel that it is very important to strengthen and support the prestige and collective responsibility of the Committee and to stress its symbolic importance as the outward sign of the union of French forces of resistance.

Another consideration which has, we think, a very definite bearing on the present issue, is the effect which delay may have on the Soviet Union's influence within France and perhaps within other countries now under enemy occupation. Even if the possibility of the Soviet Union extending recognition to the Committee in advance of agreement with the United Kingdom and United States is excluded, the fact that it is becoming known that the Soviet Union has been ready for some little time to recognize the Committee and has been restrained by representations from other countries, may of itself have an unwelcome effect on French opinion.

While we have not wished to emphasize in the aide-mémoire to be left with the Department of State the particular domestic interest of Canada in French questions, you will not be unmindful of the paramount importance to Canada of the consolidation and unity of the French forces resisting the enemy and of the maintenance of cordial and confident relations between the French people and their Allies.

London, July 21, 1943

MOST SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D. 432 of July 16th. Following is draft formula for recognition of the French

Committee of Liberation which has been put to the United States Government for consideration, Begins:

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are happy to recognize the French Committee of National Liberation as administering those parts of the French Overseas Empire which acknowledge their authority, and as having assumed the functions of the former French National Committee in respect of territories in the Levant. They also recognize it as the body qualified to ensure conduct of French effort in the war within the framework of inter-Allied cooperation as well as, in principle, administration and defence of French interests. The practical application of this principle to different categories of French interests must be reserved for consideration in each case as it arises.

His Majesty's Government have taken note of Committee's determination to continue common struggle in close cooperation with all Allies until the French and Allied territories are completely liberated and until victory is complete over all enemy Powers. They count upon the Committee to afford such facilities in military and economic sphere in territories under their administration as may be required by the Governments of the United Nations for prosecution of the war. In respect of certain of these territories, Agreements already exist between the French authorities and British or United States authorities. The creation of the French Committee of National Liberation may make it necessary to revise these Agreements, and pending their revision all such Agreements concluded since June 1940, except in so far as these have been automatically made inapplicable by the formation of the French Committee of National Liberation, will remain in force. Ends.

Pearson saw Mathews, the new Chief of the European Division of the State Department, who arrived only today from London, Hickerson and Bonbright⁶⁵ this afternoon, and left with them a memorandum in the terms of the relevant paragraphs of your telegram, and which will be passed on to the Secretary of State. Unfortunately, Dunn, who is concerned with these matters could not be present this afternoon, but Pearson said he would be glad to discuss the memorandum with him tomorrow. Pearson also made supplementary oral representations along the lines of the last three paragraphs of your telegram. He emphasized that the Canadian memorandum had not yet been shown to or discussed with any other Government; that the Canadian Government was most anxious to continue to coordinate their French policy with that of the United Kingdom and the United States, and had, indeed, given ample evidence to this effect. They were, therefore, the more anxious that they should be informed in advance of any change in policy regarding recognition that might take place in Washington so that they would not be placed in the position of having to follow later with recognition from Ottawa. If there were no disposition here to grant some form of provisional and qualified recognition, the Canadian Government might be faced with the necessity of independent action, but this, of course, they were anxious to avoid. The State Department officials concerned professed to appreciate our position in the matter but were not forthcoming about their own. Pearson was unable to secure from them any definite information as to whether they were contemplating recognition, and, in turn, did not indicate to them that we knew anything about recent exchanges of telegrams between Algiers, London and Washington on this matter.

IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. Your telegram Circular D. 444 of July 2 1st.

1. We are not altogether happy about certain passages in the draft formula for recognition of the French Committee of Liberation, particularly the last sentence of the first paragraph. While some such reservation is necessary the suggested form of words may cause difficulties in Algiers and may also give rise to controversy over its application to "different categories of French interests" both with the Committee and between Allied Governments. Could not this passage be changed to read somewhat as follows: "From time to time as occasion may arise it will be necessary to consider in consultation with the Committee the practical application of this principle in relation to particular interests".

2. The opening sentence makes no reference to the special position of mandated territories except indirectly by mention of the arrangements in effect in the Levant. Is it not desirable to refer to all French mandated territories? Presumably we regard the Committee as having inherited temporarily the obligations and rights of France as the mandatory power in Syria, the Lebanon and French Cameroons and Togoland.

3. We consider that the formula of recognition should be extended so as to take note of the references to the Declaration of June 3rd[†] constituting the Committee, which were included in our representations to the United States Government of July 22nd, the terms of which have been communicated to you by the Canadian High Commissioner. There is uneasiness over the possibility that elements within the Committee might use their power to establish an authoritarian regime in France. We feel that the incorporation in the instrument of recognition of the Committee's own statement of purposes would have both a good immediate effect on opinion and perhaps a restraining influence on any Frenchman who may be inclined to place personal loyalties and ambitions above the establishment of a liberal and democratic government in France.

4. The reference in the second paragraph of the draft formula to agreements with the British or United States authorities should, in our view, be extended to read "agreements . . . between the French authorities and the authorities of the United Kingdom, United States and other United Nations", so as to cover all such arrangements effected with the French authorities now merged in the Committee.

5. The references in the first two sentences of paragraph 2 of the draft formula to military cooperation between the Committee and the Allies in our view give all the safeguards which it is wise to seek and we should welcome their retention without alteration.

6. We have been glad to learn from your telegram Circular D.454 of July 23^f and from reports of the Canadian Minister in Washington (to whom this telegram is being repeated) that the reluctance of the United States to recognizing the Committee seems to be disappearing. Please bear in mind the importance of the Canadian announcement of recognition being made simultaneously with the announcement in London and Washington.

London, July 26, 1943

Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular D. 444 of July 21st. Draft Formula of recognition of French Committee of National Liberation. As a result of further consideration it has been decided that the references to French interests in the second and third sentences of the first paragraph of the Formula might give the Committee grounds for maintaining that we had in effect recognised its claim to administer and defend all French interests which are the prerogatives of a legally constituted French Government. Paragraph 1 of our draft Formula has accordingly been revised to meet this objection and safeguard our position and now reads as follows:

2. "His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom are happy to recognise the French Committee of National Liberation as administering those French Overseas Territories which acknowledge its authority and as having assumed the functions of the former French National Committee in respect of territories in the Levant. They also recognise it as the body qualified to ensure the conduct of the French effort in the war within the framework of inter-Allied co-operation. His Majesty's Government take note, with sympathy, of the desire of the Committee to be recognised as the body qualified to ensure the administration and defence of all French interests. The question of the extent to which it may be possible to give effect to this request in respect of the different categories of such interests must, however, be reserved for consideration in each case as it arises”.

3. We have also made the following other amendments:—

(a) In the first sentence the words “French Overseas Territories” have been substituted for “parts of the French Overseas Empire” in order to cover Algeria which is part of Metropolitan France.

(b) In the last sentence of the second paragraph

(1) Between words “these Agreements and” and words “that pending” insert the words “His Majesty’s Government assume”

(2) At end of sentence add the words “as between His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom and the French Committee of National Liberation”. Ends.

*First Secretary, Legation to the Allied Governments, London,⁶⁷

Ottawa, July 28, 1943

Dear Prime Minister,

I thought you might be interested in receiving a memorandum on your conversation with General Giraud on Friday, 16th July, at your office. I hope I did not forget any of the important points.

With regard to the question of Canadian representation in Algiers, I consider that General Giraud’s suggestion of appointing someone at General Eisenhower’s Headquarters should not be retained. Although such an appointment would now appear fully justified from a military point of view, as Canadian troops are now fighting under General Eisenhower’s command, there exists an objection from the diplomatic point of view. Diplomatic Advisers were attached to General Eisenhower by the United Kingdom and United States Governments before the creation of the French Committee of National Liberation, but the latter is now applying for recognition by foreign governments. Therefore, if at this stage the Canadian Government were to accept General Giraud’s suggestion the French Committee would certainly interpret that as a lack of confidence in their ability to represent French interests.

In my opinion, the best solution would be an early recognition of the Committee by all the United Nations. Otherwise, any further delay might result in a deep and justified resentment inside and outside the Committee. If, however, the decision were to be postponed for a certain period, I would suggest that Canada adopt a "de facto" solution. Commandant Bonneau has been appointed by M. Massigli as Delegate of the French Committee in Ottawa, although the Canadian Government does not recognize the French Committee. Along the same lines, the Canadian Government could well send someone on a mission to Algiers without asking for his "de jure" recognition by the French Committee. Relations would thus be re-established without any commitment, between Canada and North Africa, while the door would be left open for any decision the Canadian Government might wish to make at a later stage.

⁶⁷ Pierre Dupuy était alors à Ottawa.

⁶⁷ Pierre Dupuy was then in Ottawa.

Yours faithfully,

PIERRE DUPUY

*Memorandum by First Secretary, Legation

Ottawa, July 28, 1943

MEMORANDUM ON A CONVERSATION BETWEEN THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
W. L. MACKENZIE KING AND GENERAL HENRI GIRAUD.
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS, 4:00 P.M. 16TH JULY, 1943

General Giraud started by expressing his gratitude for the cordial reception he had had in Ottawa on the part of the Prime Minister and other members of the Cabinet. He had been particularly touched by the favourable manner in which the questions of French air cadets and war supplies for the French Army had been examined by the Canadian Government.

Mr. King said that he and his colleagues had been happy to welcome General Giraud and that his visit was an inspiration to everyone.

General Giraud continued by saying he was glad of this opportunity for a confidential conversation with the Prime Minister, because there were subjects which could hardly be treated in public. He immediately referred to the French Committee in Algiers and affirmed he had made almost every concession in order to reach unity with General de Gaulle and his followers. He had even conceded to them the majority within the Committee and given General de Gaulle practical control over civilian affairs. Nevertheless, circumstances had since shown that unfortunately some Frenchmen were putting their own personal interests above their country's future. (In French: "Néanmoins ce qui s'est passé depuis a montré que des Français font passer leurs intérêts personnels avant l'avenir de leur pays").

General Giraud went on to say that at this stage the problem for France was a military one above all. Everything depended on the liberation of French continental territory. Therefore, he considered that the main duty for any patriotic Frenchman now in a position to fight was to do so without selfishness. The French Forces would not, or course, be strong enough to play the leading roles on the battlefield. They would have to co-operate with the British and United States Armies, but the larger their share, the better for France from a domestic as well as an international point of view. "When our country is liberated", added General Giraud, "then, and then only, will the French population decide freely on the political regime they wish to adopt".

General Giraud gave as the reason for his crossing to this continent the necessity of obtaining more and more equipment for his troops. He had been successful in Washington since 230,000 tons of war material would reach North Africa in August. He was also most grateful for the Canadian Government's proposals.

Mr. King explained that Canada's contribution could only be made subject to the approval of the authorities appointed by the United Nations for the distribution of war supplies. General Giraud said he understood it the same way. The Prime Minister then asked what series of equipment General Giraud would be mostly interested in. The latter replied by mentioning a) aircraft, b) military lorries, c) corvettes. The Prime Minister said that the question of aircraft might be a difficult one, since our whole production appeared already promised. With regard to military trucks and corvettes, he said he would enquire with Mr. Howe and the War Production Services.

General Giraud expressed the wish that relations between Canada and North Africa be established in the near future, because Canada was in an excellent position to render services to all concerned. When asked whether the French Committee would soon be recognized by Washington, he answered that his impression was to the contrary. For this reason, he suggested in order not to lose too much time that a Canadian representative be appointed to General Eisenhower's Headquarters, according to the British and United States precedent. Now that Canadian troops were fighting under General Eisenhower, the above solution appeared to General Giraud much more advisable than heretofore.

The Prime Minister then enquired about General Giraud's views concerning the progress of the war, and more particularly concerning the possibility of an Allied landing on the western coast of Europe. General Giraud replied that the enterprise would be a risky and costly one, if launched separately. The Todt Services had built strong fortifications from Holland down to the south of Brittany. Even in case of success, it would be paying a very high price for a bridgehead without being certain to develop it against massive German reserves. There is no doubt that the enemy will fight well. He is seasoned, hard and still disciplined. At the same time, General Giraud said he had to think of the French people's present ordeal. Although Madame Giraud is now under the Gestapo's constant surveillance, she had managed to send news of the family.

As far as they were concerned, they had enough to eat. Their morale was excellent, but she wrote it was vital that the French population be delivered before next winter. Otherwise they would all be in mortal danger.

The Prime Minister asked General Giraud how such liberation could be achieved within the above mentioned delay. General Giraud replied that in his opinion the whole of Sicily would likely be occupied by the Allied Forces early in August. Italy would then have to be dealt with, and he considered a few weeks would be sufficient to conquer the peninsula, as the military campaign would be greatly facilitated by developments on the Italian domestic field. General Giraud hoped that major operations would become possible against the Germans in the second fortnight of September. Then a strong French Army would be available to join the Allies in Northern Italy for an attack against German Forces in France. This would coincide with events in the Eastern Mediterranean and a Russian offensive in the East. German reserves would have to be rushed in every direction and the time would soon be opportune for an Allied landing on the Channel coast.

Mr. King made the remark that this plan was in harmony with what he had heard in the course of his recent conversation with Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt in Washington.

General Giraud concluded that he had good reasons to believe that a fair part of France would be liberated this year, but he considered it safer to expect the final blow on Germany to be struck some time in 1944, although pleasant surprises had from now on become possible.

The Prime Minister then presented General Giraud with two volumes of his works with dedications, and the General was deeply touched by this further proof of sympathy. Mr. King said: "We will pray for your success and safety during the coming months", and he asked General Giraud to present his respects and wishes to Madame Giraud whenever possible. It was with emotion that General Giraud repeatedly thanked the Prime Minister for all his kindnesses and expressed his happiness in seeing that France was so well understood by her Canadian friends.

General Giraud, accompanied by the Prime Minister, stopped for a few moments at the Memorial Room of the Tower. On the door-steps of Parliament Buildings, the Prime Minister and General Giraud shook hands cordially for a last time. "À Paris", said General Giraud. "I shall remember the invitation", added the Prime Minister.

London, July 29, 1943

MOST SECRET. Your telegram No. 122 of July 26th, question of recognition of French Committee of National Liberation.

1. We are most grateful to Canadian Government for suggestions contained in your telegram. Position as regards particular points raised therein is as follows:—

(a) Paragraph 1 of your telegram No. 122. Please see amendment in paragraph 2 of my telegram Circular D. 459 of July 26th. It is hoped that this will meet the point which the Canadian Government have in mind.

(b) Paragraph 2 of your telegram No. 122. We had this point in mind but considered that mandated territories other than Syria and the Lebanon were adequately covered by the phrase "French Overseas Territories" for the purpose of the general statement contemplated. The Cameroons and Togoland are for all practical purposes French territories.

(c) Paragraph 3. We understand and share the Canadian Government's views on this matter, but fear that the adopting of the particular suggestion made would imply that it was our intention to agree that the Committee should function in France during the stage between the landing of Allied forces and the establishment of a Provisional Government to which it would hand over its authority. We feel therefore that it would be better to avoid at present saying anything which would lead the Committee to claim that we had admitted this. Does not the fact that we should recognise the Committee as administering only "French Overseas Territories" adequately safeguard the position as regards the French mainland?

(d) Paragraph 4. We agree that "United Kingdom" should be substituted for "British". We specifically referred to the "United States authorities" in order to cover our rights in North and West Africa under the Clark-Darlan and Eisenhower-Boisson arrangements. We are not aware of any comparable Agreements between the French authorities and other members of the United Nations, and in any case we think it preferable that each United Nation should itself deal with any Agreements it may have with the French authorities.

(e) Paragraph 5. We note view of Canadian Government with which we are in agreement.

2. We note importance attached by Canadian Government to simultaneous announcement in Washington, Ottawa and London of recognition when decided upon.

TELEGRAM CIRCULAR D. 491

MOST SECRET. Following for your Prime Minister, Begins: My immediately preceding telegram. Following is revised draft formula.

The Government of the United States and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom desire again to make clear their purpose of co-operating with all patriotic Frenchmen looking to the liberation of the French people and French territories from oppression of the enemy.

2. The two Governments accordingly welcome the establishment of the French Committee of National Liberation. It is their understanding that the Committee has been conceived and will function on the principle of collective responsibility of all its members for the prosecution of the war. It is also, they are assured, common ground between themselves and the Committee that it will be for the French people themselves to settle their own Constitution and to establish their own Government after they have had an opportunity to express themselves freely.

3. On this understanding, the Government of the United States and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom wish to make the following statement:

The Government of the United States and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom recognize the French Committee of National Liberation as administering the French Overseas Territories which acknowledge its authority and as having assumed the functions of the former French National Committee in respect of territories in the Levant. The two Governments also recognize the Committee as the body qualified to ensure the conduct of the French effort in the war, within the framework of inter-Allied co-operation. They take note, with sympathy, of the desire of the Committee to be recognized as the body qualified to ensure the administration and defence of all French interests. The question of the extent to which it may be possible to give effect to this request in respect of the different categories of such interests must, however, be reserved for consideration in each case as it arises.

The Government of the United States and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom welcome the Committee's determination to continue the common struggle, in close co-operation with all the Allies, until French and Allied territories are completely liberated and until victory is complete over all enemy Powers. The Committee will, of course, afford whatever military and economic facilities and securities, in territories under its administration, as are required by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom for prosecution of the war.

In respect of certain of these territories, Agreements already exist between the French authorities and the United States or United Kingdom authorities. The creation of French Committee of National Liberation may make it necessary to revise these Agreements; and the Government of the United States and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom assume, pending their revision, all such Agreements concluded since June 1940, except in so far as these have been automatically made inapplicable by the formation of the French Committee of National Liberation, will remain in force as between the respective Governments and the French Committee of National Liberation. IMPORTANT. MOST SECRET. 1. Your telegrams Circulars D. 490 and 491 of August 3rd. We note that an important change in the new draft formula for recognition of the French Committee of National Liberation is that it provides for recognition by the Governments of the United States and the United Kingdom by means of a joint declaration which contains no provision for the participation of other Governments. We had assumed that when recognition was accorded the procedure would be for each Government to convey through an appropriate channel to the Committee a notification of its recognition expressed in identical or similar terms. In view of the change now proposed in the draft formula we have decided to regularize the Canadian relationship with the Committee and we, therefore, propose to address a note to the French Delegate in Ottawa probably on August 7th. The substance of this note will not be in conflict with the ideas expressed in your telegram D. 491 and we shall transmit to you its exact text in a later telegram.

2. We have been anxious to grant limited recognition to the Committee of Liberation from the time of its inception and we have only delayed through our desire to pursue a common policy with the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States. This change in the draft formula appears to us to remove any remaining reason for further delay with a view to concerting action.

I most earnestly beg that you will not proceed with your proposal to recognise the French Committee of National Liberation until you can discuss the matter with the Prime Minister. He is proposing to explore the whole situation with the President and hopes to reach an agreement with him for the recognition of the Committee. What we are aiming at is simultaneous recognition of the Committee by ourselves, the Dominions, the U.S. Government and the Soviet Government. China and Brazil are also waiting for us. The fact that our revised formula of recognition was cast for convenience in an Anglo-American form does not mean that the recognition itself was to be an exclusive Anglo-American act. Unilateral action by the Canadian Government in these circumstances would certainly not be understood by the Soviet Government with whom we are also in consultation; and it would obviously make agreement between the Prime Minister and the President much more difficult.

I do hope that you will suspend action until after you meet the Prime Minister.

FRENCH COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL LIBERATION

32. THE UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER explained the difficulties that had been experienced in finding a common basis for agreement in regard to recognition of the Committee.

Despite the difficulties encountered in regard to de Gaulle, there was no gainsaying his identification with the forces of French resistance. In the circumstances, there was no object in delaying the clarification of our relations with the Committee, and he intended to urge the President to agree to prompt action. If agreeable to the Canadian government, he would tell Mr. Roosevelt that Canada was anxious for early settlement of the French position. If definitive agreement was not reached at Hyde Park, the question would be taken up during the coming week, with Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. King at Quebec.

33. MR. CHURCHILL said that he had thought of suggesting to the President that de Gaulle be invited to join them at Quebec. Would this be helpful from the Canadian point of view?

It was hoped that Canada would take no action with regard to recognition of the Committee until agreement on common policy had been reached with the United States, and that recognition would then be simultaneous and couched on similar terms.

34. THE CANADIAN WAR COMMITTEE were of the opinion that a visit by General de Gaulle, at this time, might have a disturbing effect.

35. IT WAS AGREED that no action be taken with regard to recognition of the Committee, pending discussions between Mr. Churchill, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr.

King, and that recognition, when agreed upon, should be simultaneous and on similar terms.

Malcolm MacDonald told me last night that Eden had tried to see you yesterday afternoon to report the conversation which he and Cadogan had been having with Hull, Atherton and Dunn regarding the recognition of the French Committee. Discussion had been difficult and has made no progress. As Mr. Hull told you, he could not agree to the use of the word "recognition," however qualified.

Eden felt that the United Kingdom could not accord the United French Committee of National Liberation a lesser status than that which the United Kingdom had in fact conceded to the former French National Committee in London. Eden and Hull are reporting this deadlock back to Mr. Churchill and the President.

Eden feels that, if agreement is not reached (and Cadogan told me he thought the odds were 100 to 1 against Mr. Hull modifying the position he had taken) then the United Kingdom will have to go ahead with a separate statement, extending to the French Committee on behalf of the United Kingdom the measure of recognition to which they had been trying to get the United States to agree. If his recommendation is accepted by Mr. Churchill, then the United Kingdom will notify all the other governments which it had asked to defer recognition, pending the conclusion of an understanding with the United States, that it proposes to recognize the Committee and send a note to the French Committee on the 25th or 26th of August, though to keep the contents of this note confidential for two or three days longer so that the other dominions and other governments, including the U.S.S.R. will be able to take simultaneous action.

I expect to receive this morning from Malcolm MacDonald the text of the United Kingdom formula, which is the counterpart of the United States formula,[†] which Mr. Hull gave you yesterday.

POSITION OF FRENCH COMMITTEE OF NATIONAL LIBERATION

If the declaration defining our prospective relations with the French Committee of National Liberation is to be a narrowly drawn legal document, studded with safeguards and qualifying clauses, then it seems to me that you must put in a positive statement of recognition — if only to have something to subtract from.

As far as I can see, the only way in which the word “recognition” can be omitted is to couch the whole statement in more general and more generous terms, leaving it to the individual countries to insert the specific safeguarding reservations which they think necessary in separate and subsequent exchanges of letters with the Committee, e.g., the United Kingdom could make its reservations respecting the position of French territories in the Levant and antier arrangements made with the French National Committee, and the Canadian Government could make its reservations regarding its position as trustee for French gold in Canada in separate and appropriate instruments.

I doubt the wisdom or necessity of attempting to define precisely the status and responsibilities of the French Committee. In recognizing the Czechoslovak Government and in continuing to recognize, for instance, the Greek and Polish Governments, we did not think it advisable or politic to spell out the very real de facto reservations which we all regard as limiting the powers of those Governments to make commitments on behalf of their peoples. These real reservations are continuously operative and recognized by the Governments-in-Exile themselves, just as much as by their Allies. The character of their relationship with us, and their dependence on their Allies for their equipment, supplies, finance and communications facilities mean that, in practice, they are unlikely to kick over the traces and do foolish things. They are not deterred from unwise or unfriendly policies by any formal limitations on their status or recognition, but by the facts of their association with their greater Allies in the common struggle, in which their own most vital interests are involved. If it should be decided not to grant recognition in terms and not to define expressly the conditions under which we are prepared to cooperate with the French Committee, then I think the more general and more generously worded declaration, which seems to be the only alternative, should be completed at once by the announcement, preferably simultaneous, that the Governments which have thus far taken no action to accredit representatives to the French Committee intend immediately to appoint representatives in Algiers and are prepared to receive representatives of the Committee so that they can collaborate more effectively with the Committee in working toward common ends.

[Quebec,] August 24, 1943

After the conversation with Mr. Hull about general questions of commercial policy which I have reported in another memorandum,[†] I asked the Secretary of State whether he thought it was going to be possible to clear up the position of the French Committee before the conferees left Quebec. He said nobody was more anxious than he was to get this question settled because nobody had suffered more misrepresentations than he had over French questions during the past two years and a half. The settled policy of the United States which the President and he had made public on many occasions since the fall of Paris was the reconstruction of a strong and free France. From this goal they had not wavered but their efforts to achieve it had been persistently misrepresented and misunderstood. He complained that the task of all American policies toward France had been made more difficult by the propaganda of the French National Committee which ultimately had been financed out of funds advanced to the Committee by the United Kingdom Government. He had gone to a good deal of trouble to discourage attacks in the United States on British policy in India, Burma and Palestine. The United Kingdom had not made any similar efforts to silence criticism of American policy with respect to France. On this theme he spoke with a good deal of feeling, referring to the "slime" with which he had been smeared.

He did not say anything about the present status of his discussions with the United Kingdom about the drafting of a joint declaration defining their relations with the French Committee. He did say that he had been very glad to receive from you a copy of the draft Canadian note[†] on this subject and did not take any exception to the language we had thought of using.

I said I thought it would be very unfortunate if the present meetings were to come to a close without regularizing in some way our several relations with the Committee. We hoped that it would be possible for the countries which had thus far deferred their recognition to take similar and simultaneous action. In this connection I pointed out that it would be rather difficult for the Canadian Government to tag along behind a joint U.K.-U.S. declaration and much more satisfactory from the Canadian point of view if each of the countries would make its own separate and similar communication to the Committee.

I mentioned again the special Canadian interest in the position and future of France reminding him that you had pursued a policy exactly parallel to his own, often under a good deal of savage political criticism, but that that policy had played its part in uniting French Canada in support of general Canadian war effort. The American landings in North Africa and the collapse of the Vichy regime and its representation abroad had undoubtedly cleared the air in French Canada. People here were not much interested in the personalities or the doctrinal differences which divided the French movement of resistance. They did, however, regard the new Committee in North Africa as in some way a trustee for French interests which they were anxious should not be neglected. They were not much exercised about the niceties of recognition or with the formal style which we might give our representatives to the Committee, but they hoped that we would work with it and give it enough recognition to enable it to mobilize French interests and resources overseas so that Frenchmen could feel they were making some direct contribution to the liberation of France.

Mr. Atherton telephoned this morning to say that the United States had now settled on the text of the statement they were going to issue about their relations with the French Committee of National Liberation. The text of this message is being communicated today by United States missions abroad to other countries which have been deferring any action of their own with regard to the Committee until learning the views of the United States. This American declaration, the text of which I hope to receive very shortly, is not a document agreed with the United Kingdom. The latter are planning to issue themselves, presumably at the same time as the United States, the formula of recognition of the French Committee which Mr. Eden sent you last night.

TELEGRAM H-95

IMMEDIATE. SECRET. Following is text of notification to be addressed to Bonneau on August 26th, Begins:

The Government of Canada has welcomed the establishment of the Committee of National Liberation. It has been and remains the intention of the Government of Canada to co-operate with all patriotic Frenchmen in freeing France and the French people from the oppression of the enemy. This Government is deeply interested in the early return of France to her high place among the nations and regards the institution of the Committee as an important contribution to that end. Early in July the Committee was informed that Canada was prepared to consider promptly and sympathetically any requests which the Committee might care to present for assistance in the equipment and training of the French forces under its control.⁶⁸ It is understood that the Committee will operate on the principle of the collective responsibility of all its members for the prosecution of the war. It is also understood that the Committee is in accord with the view of the Canadian Government that the French people themselves, as soon as they have an opportunity of freely expressing their wishes, should establish in France the Government of their choice.

⁶⁸ Voir le document 363.

On this basis the Government of Canada recognizes the French Committee of National Liberation as administering the French overseas territories which acknowledge its authority and as the body qualified to ensure the conduct of the French effort in the war within the framework of inter-Allied co-operation. It notes with sympathy the desire of the Committee to be recognized as the body qualified to ensure the administration and defence of all French interests. It is the intention of the Canadian Government to give effect to this request as far as possible while reserving the right to consider in consultation with the Committee the practical application of this principle in particular cases as they arise.

The Government of Canada warmly welcomes the Committee's determination to carry on the common struggle in close co-operation with all the Allies until French and Allied territories are entirely liberated and complete victory over all enemy powers has been achieved. It is understood that the Committee will afford in territories under its administration whatever military and economic facilities are required by the Governments of the United Nations for the prosecution of the war. I asked Commandant Bonneau, the representative in Canada of the French Committee of National Liberation, to call this afternoon to receive the note recognizing the Committee, which you signed this morning. I also gave him a French translation of the note, which had been prepared for the use of the press. The text of the Canadian Government's statement is being released for press and radio at 8 o'clock tonight, the same time as the United States and British statements.

Commandant Bonneau was very happy to receive your statement, which he is cabling at once to Algiers. In the meantime, he wished to say again how much the French Committee appreciated the sympathy and cooperation which their efforts for the restoration of France had received in Canada and from the Canadian Government. We told Bonneau that the United States and United Kingdom statements, defining their respective relationships with the Committee, would also be made public this evening. There would be some differences in form and content; although their release was synchronized, their substance was not identical. I thought the French Committee would be well advised not to dwell too much upon these differences or ponder over their possible significance. I thought they related more to the recent past than to the future. Given the tolerance and mutual respect which must exist between Allies, we hoped that the new arrangements between the Committee and our countries, which these declarations signalized, would lead to more cordial and harmonious cooperation than there had been in the last few months.

Minutes of a Meeting

Ottawa, September 1, 1943

INCLUSION OF FRENCH IN FOREIGN FORCES ORDER
RECRUITING FOR FRENCH FORCES IN CANADA

Record of meeting held in Room 123 of East Block on August 31st, attended by:

Major Leal, National Defence
C. Henry, National Selective Service
G. de T. Glazebrook, External Affairs
S. F. Rae, External Affairs
K. B. Bingay, External Affairs to discuss the general questions raised by the recognition of the French Committee of National Liberation by Canada.

I. FOREIGN FORCES ORDER

It was agreed that the Foreign Forces Order should be amended to include the French. It is not clear whether the French will actually train a force in Canada or whether they will continue simply to recruit and send the men directly overseas. (We have agreed to train French aircrew in Canada, which means that the French should come under the Order for this purpose). In any case, it is desirable to include them in order to regularize their present position. (They have in practice been treated very much on the same basis as the Foreign Forces). Inclusion in the Order will mean, inter alia, that we can legally assist the French in picking up deserters.

It was decided to recommend that the Foreign Forces Order (1941) should be amended by an Order in Council, designating the French Committee of National Liberation as a foreign Power under the Foreign Forces Order, rather than use the more complicated method adopted by the United Kingdom, and suggested last year for Canada, of designating the French Committee as a foreign Authority, and amending the Order throughout. This latter method was the only one which could be used at that time without giving the French a form of recognition by implication which we were not willing to grant in fact. As the Canadian Government has now officially recognized the French Committee, its status, vis-à-vis the Canadian Government, is clear, and there is no question that our designation of the Committee as a "foreign Power" will be interpreted as recognition of it as a Government. There is only one clause in the Foreign Forces Order which refers to "the Government of the foreign Power". This is Clause 8, which provides that the Minister of National Defence, if requested by "the officer commanding a foreign force or by the Government of the foreign Power" may direct members of the home force to arrest members of a foreign force.

2. POSITION OF FRENCH NATIONALS UNDER NATIONAL SELECTIVE SERVICE REGULATIONS

Technically, French nationals have been in the same position as neutral aliens under the Selective Service Regulations, with no right to opt. (In practice, some have been allowed to leave the country in order to enlist with the French recruiting mission in Washington). If the French Committee is designated as a foreign Power under the Foreign Forces Order, there will be no necessity to amend the Selective Service Regulations, as the French will automatically come under Section 3(2)(i) which gives them the right to opt for their own forces.

3. RECRUITING FOR FOREIGN FORCES

The conditions under which Foreign Forces may recruit are not set out in an Order in Council. They have been laid down in Notes from External Affairs to the heads of the foreign missions concerned.⁶⁹ It was agreed that External Affairs should draft a Note to the appropriate French authority outlining the conditions under which the French may recruit, and that this Note be considered by the Canadian Service Departments concerned before despatch. This Note will also cover the question of transfers from the Canadian forces. It was felt that correspondence on French military questions should, so far as possible, be channelled through the official representative in Canada of the French Committee of National Liberation.

4. ENLISTMENT OF CANADIAN NATIONALS AND BRITISH SUBJECTS IN FOREIGN FORCES

The policy established at an interdepartmental meeting held on October 1st, 1941, was that Canadian nationals and British subjects could not be enlisted in a Foreign Force unless (a) they were naturalized Canadians whose former nationality was that of the Foreign Force, or (b) they were persons of dual nationality — that is, possessing both Canadian nationality and the nationality of the Foreign Force. It was pointed out that Canadian Army Routine Order 3120 is not strictly in accordance with this policy, for it provides that Canadian nationals and British subjects are permitted to enlist if by reason of their racial origin or defective knowledge of English or French, they would make more efficient soldiers in the Foreign Force. It was agreed that External Affairs should draft a suggested amendment to Routine Order 3120, for consideration by Major Leal.

⁶⁹ Voir le volume 8, documents 700, 716, 815 et 856.

⁶⁹ See Volume 8, Documents 700, 716, 815 and 856.

5. AMENDMENT OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL
REFERRING TO FOREIGN FORCES

If the French are included in the Foreign Forces Order by designating the Committee as a "foreign Power", the French will automatically come within the provisions of P.C. 10959 of December 1, 1942,[†] which provides for the administration of estates of members of the Foreign Forces.

P.C. 2/3869 of May 10, 1943,[†] which made provision for National Defence to act as agent in providing transportation, supplies, stores, etc., to the French National Committee, covers also any other French organization which has Forces operating against His Majesty's enemies. There is, therefore, no need to amend this Order in Council.

6. REHABILITATION OF MEMBERS OF THE FOREIGN FORCES

It was pointed out that no action had yet been taken to apply the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act and other rehabilitation legislation to the Foreign Forces. After an interdepartmental meeting in January of this year, Pensions and National Health had agreed to do a survey of the question on the understanding that the problem would be submitted to War Committee. The question has been submitted to the Minister of Pensions and National Health.

TRAINING OF FRENCH AIR CREW

1. This matter was first raised by the Chief of the Air Staff of the French Air Force in North Africa, who suggested it might be possible to send French cadets to Canada for air training (see Mr. Dupuy's letter of June 30th to the Prime Minister).

2. On July 2nd, War Committee agreed, in principle, subject to concurrence of the Minister of National Defence for Air, that Canadian air training facilities should be extended to French military personnel.

3. On July 2nd, we cabled Macmillan in Algiers, through the Dominions Office,[†] suggesting that there was a possibility that facilities for training could be provided to a number of air crew. The Canadian authorities were prepared to discuss this promptly and sympathetically, subject to requirements of strategic needs.

4. On July 9th we consulted, by cable,[†] the other Commonwealth Governments concerned. If suitable arrangements could be completed, it was expected that they would provide for a monthly quota of French cadets, who would be trained under the B.C.A.T.P.⁷¹ as members of the French forces, and who would return to North Africa for service on completion of their training. French cadets should be chargeable to the Canadian quota.

5. On July 10th, the Dominions Office advised[†] that Macmillan had reported that the French Committee were grateful and hoped to be able to take up the question as soon as possible. It was agreed that no publicity should be given to the Canadian offer until preliminary discussions with Commonwealth Governments were completed.

On July 12th the New Zealand Government sent their approval[†] and on July 27th the Australian Government concurred.[†] On August 5th the Dominions Office replied[†] as follows:

(a) R.A.F. programme includes 7 French squadrons already formed or being formed;

(b) training arrangements already made cover training in Canada of French personnel for these squadrons. To man these squadrons, about 3,800 French air crew personnel will be needed, (over 2,000 of whom must be basically trained over the next 12 months). These must come from French sources outside the United Kingdom, as French manpower resources in the United Kingdom will soon be exhausted. In addition to air crew, between 1,000 and 1,500 French aircraft maintenance and administrative personnel will be needed;

⁷¹ British Commonwealth Air Training Plan.

(c) insofar as French air crews are available in excess of these requirements, the United Kingdom authorities suggest they might be absorbed in any units of the old French Air Force which still exist, or in the Allied air forces. The United Kingdom authorities expressed the hope that the 7 R.A.F. (French) squadrons would have first claim on French air crews trained here.

6. On September 14th, the Department of National Defence for Air reported^f that the Chiefs of the Air Staffs of Canada and the United Kingdom had discussed this question in Quebec. Sir Charles Portal said it was planned that Free French Air Force personnel should be trained in sufficient numbers to fill the 7 Free French squadrons serving with the R.A.F. and that some of these would be trained in Canada. No further commitments for training additional French air crew personnel should be made against Canadian training facilities, as all training capacity in Canada is needed to meet R.A.F. requirements (including therein training for the French squadrons serving with the R.A.F.).

7. The United Kingdom authorities appear to agree to the training of French personnel in Canada provided that allocation of trained pilots is made in accordance with requirements stated above. It should be noted that we have received no formal or detailed request from the French authorities in North Africa.⁷²

General Béthouart had agreed with this but Letu has not yet left. I added that we had not

If these were of such a character as to look after the French supply of pilots and aircrew we would not feel in the least put out because our offer had not been acted upon. Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the subject of recruitment in Canada for the forces of the French Committee of National Liberation, and to state that the Canadian Government is pleased to approve recruitment for and training of these forces in Canada subject to the following conditions:

(1) All enlistments will be on a voluntary basis, and no person, whether of Canadian or foreign nationality, may be compelled to join the French forces.

(2) Notices of liability for military service may be sent to French nationals, but as indicated in (1) above, no compulsive measures may be taken to enforce enlistment.

(3) Canadian nationals and British subjects will be permitted to enlist in the French forces only if (a) they are naturalized British subjects whose former nationality was French, or (b) they are persons of dual nationality, possessing Canadian and French or British and French nationality.

(4) No propaganda may be conducted by the French authorities to induce Canadians of former French nationality or persons of Canadian and French or British and French nationality to join the French forces. No notices may be sent to such persons, who may be enlisted only if they apply or appear personally before a Recruiting Officer of the French forces. The Canadian Government will, however, announce through the press that such persons may, if they so desire, enlist in the French Forces.

(5) In no case may a Canadian national under nineteen years of age be enlisted in the French forces.

Note. When seeing Bonneau I had not read Mr. de Carteret's letter of September 14th.[†] Perhaps we had better let the matter rest, as the Board have not followed it up. H. W[RONG]

(6) Transfers of Canadian naturalized ex-Frenchmen, and persons possessing Canadian and French nationality or British and French nationality, from the Canadian forces to the French forces, may be permitted, providing such individuals themselves desire to be so transferred, and providing the Commanding Officer of the applicant for transfer is prepared to agree that such action would not be detrimental to the Canadian war effort.

(7) Applicants for enlistment into the Canadian Army and Air Force who are French nationals (and not also Canadian nationals) will not be accepted for such enlistment until their cases have been referred to the French authorities.

(8) Although the Canadian Government will accept no responsibility, financial or otherwise, for the recruiting, training, organizing and equipping of the men enlisted in the French forces, the Canadian Government will, within the limits set down in Order in Council P.C.2/3869 of May 10, 1943,[†] do all in its power to provide transportation, supplies, stores, equipment and services, it being understood that any expenditures thereby incurred shall be recoverable from the French Committee of National Liberation.

(9) The Canadian Government will accept no responsibility for pay and allowances, transportation costs, rations or quarters of the men enlisted for the French forces, nor for return transportation to Canada after hostilities cease or in the event of any of the men being discharged.

(10) It is understood that the French authorities will not accept for enlistment persons who are regarded by the Canadian Government as working in essential occupations.

(11) The Canadian Government will accept no responsibility for hospitalization or medical treatment while the men are serving in the French forces, or for pensions or other similar indemnity to those who may join the forces.

(12) While the Canadian Government is free of any responsibility as noted above, the forces organized and all members thereof must, subject to the provisions of the Foreign Forces Order, 1941, conform with Canadian law and regulations and Canadian authority, civil and military, relating to or controlling armed forces in Canada.

(13) It is understood that the French authorities will take steps to bring the foregoing matters to the attention of prospective recruits.

It would be appreciated if all correspondence concerning French forces in Canada were, if possible, channelled through you as the official representative in Canada of the French Committee of National Liberation.

RE: INCLUSION OF FRENCH IN FOREIGN FORCES ORDER

Although the French Committee of National Liberation has not been recognized as the Government of France by Canada, on August 26, 1943, Canada accorded the Committee a degree of recognition which warrants inclusion of the Committee in the Foreign Forces Order as a Foreign Power. In my view, inclusion of the French in the Foreign Forces Order would clear up a situation which has been unsatisfactory for some time. The United Kingdom Government has already taken action in this matter, and has put the Forces of the French Committee on the same basis as the Forces of Yugoslavia, Belgium, etc., under the Allied Forces Order.

This question has been discussed with Commandant Bonneau, the representative of the French Committee of National Liberation, and he has been informed that it is our intention to include the French in the Foreign Forces Order.

It would be appropriate if the Recommendation to Council were made by the Minister of National Defence. I enclose two copies of a draft Order[†] for your consideration. If this draft meets with your approval, it is assumed that you will take the necessary steps to bring it before Council.

At the time this question was discussed with Commandant Bonneau, he was handed a copy of a Note dated November 2, 1943, (a copy of which is enclosed), setting forth the conditions of recruiting and training of a French Force in Canada. This Note incorporates all the provisions of our Notes sent to other Powers which are recruiting and training Forces in Canada.

CANADIAN POLICY ON EXPORTS TO ARGENTINA

At the end of February we asked the Legation in Washington to find out what policy the United States was adopting towards Argentine requests for munitions. The Legation reported that the United States was refusing requests for munitions and, while it was trying not to give the impression of imposing economic sanctions, it was letting Argentina be shorter of supplies of other commodities than the other American Republics. An official of the War Department bluntly stated that, since the policy of purchasing goodwill in the Argentine had not succeeded, it had now been decided to try to encourage better relations by a non-cooperative attitude.

At the beginning of April Mr. Duggan, Political Adviser of the Department of State and especially charged with Latin American Affairs, explained the United States policy frankly to Mr. Wrong. He said that the Argentine Military Mission, which had visited the United States at the beginning of the year, had been told that the United States did not propose to meet the Argentine requests unless the foreign policy of Argentina was changed from one of collaboration towards the Axis powers. As for civilian supplies, Mr. Duggan said that the policy of the United States Government was to provide Argentina with only the minimum quantities necessary to provide for national health and essential services such as transportation. They had, of course, found the task of determining the minimum of essential supplies difficult for they did not wish to give the Argentine Government ground for public agitation in Argentina to the effect that the United States was starving the Argentine people of their essential needs. Mr. Duggan said that experience had shown that the breach of relations with the Axis did, in fact, expose the Latin American countries to certain dangers such as attacks on their ships; therefore, as the United States had urged the policy of diplomatic breach, they felt it incumbent on them to assist the countries which had adopted this policy to defend themselves.

The United States then formally asked us to cooperate with them in their policy towards Argentina, and pointed out that it would clearly not redound to the benefit of the United Nations or their allies if the deficiencies suffered by Argentina as a result of United States policy were fully compensated by the shipment of offsetting amounts of certain strategic materials from Canadian sources.

We replied assuring the United States Government that we are prepared to cooperate fully in the policy which the United States had set forth, and in response to an invitation by the United States to take part in discussions on specific commodities we sent Mr. Stone to Washington. Discussions on specific commodities are now proceeding satisfactorily.

Our Minister in Argentina reported on April 9 in answer to an enquiry from us that Argentine reaction had been adverse to the United States action in imposing veiled economic sanctions and had been favourable to the Argentine Government's policy of continued neutrality. The Minister in Rio, in response to a similar enquiry about opinion in Brazil on the subject, said that Brazilian censorship had prevented the newspapers in Brazil from making any comments on American-Argentine relations and more particularly about the measures which the United States had taken in the military and economic fields. He added:-

“These measures have caused no surprise in Brazilian quarters who, at the end of the Rio Conference and in view of the Argentine attitude, advocated such measures and even more rigorous ones, adding that these were the only means of bringing Argentina to reason. Argentine opinion having become still more suspicious towards Brazil since the Rio Conference, the Brazilian Government have been endeavouring to prevent anything being said in public or published which might be harmful to the relations between the two countries. Apart from that governmental attitude, there are, of course, free expressions of opinions and some will not conceal their satisfaction at the measures taken with a view to bringing down Argentina to terms. Officially, however, Brazilians never miss an opportunity to praise continental solidarity and point out their solidarity between their country and Argentina.”

In view of these recent developments, you may wish to give Mr. Coldwell confidential information to supplement that contained in your letter to him of March 4th. I enclose a draft letter to Mr. Coldwell^l.

Buenos Aires, January 21, 1943

In view of Chilean rupture with the Axis, I believe the policy of Washington as expressed through the United States Embassy here will be to exercise moral pressure upon the Argentine Government by public statements and otherwise, at the risk of offending this Government and creating a hostile situation even to the point suggested in paragraph 17¹ of my despatch No. 14 of January 7th.[†] In view of this situation, would appreciate advice as to policy to be followed by us towards the Argentine on question of its relations with the Axis.

I gave statement to the press today, by request, text of which is in immediately following telegram.[†]

TELEGRAM 5

Ottawa, January 25, 1943

SECRET. Your telegram No. 5, January 21. Argentina's position in the light of Chile's break with the Axis.

The line which the United Kingdom Government is taking with the press is that the United Kingdom welcomes Chile's action especially since Chile has thereby shown that she understands the true issues which are being fought out at such tremendous costs in money, material and human life; it is further being suggested to the press that in commenting on Chile's break they might appropriately refer to the regret of her many friends and well-wishers in Britain that Argentina which has long been regarded as having the closest relations of all Latin American countries with Great Britain (on whom she depends for so much of her economic prosperity and whom the practice of her neutrality so much injures, e.g. Graf Spee, internees, sinking of ships) should alone among the nations of the New World apparently fail to understand these issues and should persist in remaining in relations with the enemy powers.

I suggest that you should not seek opportunities to discuss this matter but that when it is raised you should take this general line, adding our regret that Argentina has separated herself from the other free nations of the hemisphere. The position of the remaining neutrals on the continent of Europe is not really analogous since if they broke off relations they would run immediate danger of invasion.

The statement you gave the press[†] was fully in accord with our policy. If the reference in the third paragraph of your statement to "internal situation" should be misinterpreted in Argentina to mean that we have any sympathy with Argentina's policy of neutrality please let me know immediately so we can consider whether a further word is needed to make the Canadian attitude clear.

The main thing to be avoided is that there should be any excuse given for Argentines to say that Great Britain, the United States and Canada are not united in their regret that Argentina continues to maintain relations with our common enemies.

The press cables received up to 2.30 indicate that the revolutionary coup d'état has been successful in Buenos Aires and that President Castillo has "transferred his seat of Government" to a warship. We have no information about the reaction from the rest of the country and very little information about the organization and leadership of the revolt. It is said to have been a military coup, under the leadership of General Ramírez, who, up to now, has been Minister of War in the Cabinet of President Castillo, to whose foreign policy he presumably subscribed. The crowds in the streets of Buenos Aires are celebrating the overthrow of the Government as a democratic victory, but it would be well, I think, to wait until we have direct official information about what has taken place before making any statement. I attach a memorandum from Mr. Soward[†] on the political background of today's events in Argentina.

The news from Argentina continues to be very confused and General Rawson, first Provisional President after the revolution, has already resigned and been replaced by General Ramírez who was Minister of War in Castillo's Cabinet. The General first designated as Foreign Minister has resigned and has not yet been replaced.

Putting together the press despatches and the telegrams we have received from Turgeon it looks as though the popular Liberal opposition to Castillo which had supported the army coup and led to his overthrow had been dished by the junta of generals now in power. There is no evidence yet as to the foreign policy which the new regime plans to pursue and some indications [it] may not be very different from that of Castillo.

All things considered I still think it would be advisable to defer making any statement until the situation is clearer.

Monsieur Spaak, the Belgian Foreign Minister, is going to head the Belgian representation at the first meeting of the Relief Council which opens at Atlantic City on November 10th. The Belgian Minister has informed us that M. Spaak hopes to leave London about October 30th by plane and to go direct to Washington and then to Atlantic City. He is expected to remain on this continent until the Relief Council concludes its meeting early in December.

Silvercruys has heard from M. Spaak that if he can get away from the Atlantic City meeting he would like to pay a brief visit to Ottawa, probably during the latter half of November. I gather that he particularly wishes to discuss plans for international organization in the light of your speech in the House of Commons on July 9th which interested him greatly. Silvercruys says that Spaak would not want to pay a formal visit but merely to come here for discussions with you and with officers of External Affairs on questions of international organization, not accompanied by speeches or official functions.

I think that it might be useful to take this chance of going over these matters with Spaak as a leader of one of the more important smaller countries. Silvercruys was diffident about suggesting any addition to the long list of important visitors from abroad whom we have entertained in 1943. Spaak, however, comes within the category of those whose visits may contribute directly to the prosecution of the war and the planning of peace.⁵

I sent you a note some time ago saying that M. Spaak, the Belgian Foreign Minister who has been heading their delegation at the Relief Council, would like to visit Canada unofficially before he went back to London. Baron Silvercruys has let me know today that M. Spaak has suggested to him a stay of a couple of days in Ottawa around the 6th, 7th and 8th of December on his way back by air to England. He referred again to M. Spaak's desire that there should be no formality and no official entertainment during his visit. M. Spaak wishes an opportunity of discussing a number of matters with you and some of your advisers. I think that it would be useful to see him and to try to find out the general line which the Belgian Government is likely to take on matters of mutual interest concerning the post-war settlement.

M. Spaak is anxious to make definite plans and would, therefore, like to receive as soon as possible some intimation whether the proposed dates for the visit are acceptable from our point of view. He is a youngish man of vigorous personality and it is quite likely that he will exert considerable political influence in Belgium for a good many years. I think, therefore, that he should be encouraged to come.⁶

I am attaching copy of a note of our conversation with Spaak and Silvercruys on questions of international commercial policy.[†] The negotiations for a customs union between Belgium and the Netherlands, which are now well advanced, should lead to important results, and strengthen the forces which are working for freer trade in western Europe.

I am also enclosing copy of a note which M. Spaak left with me when he raised the question of an exchange of Embassies between Canada and Belgium.[†] I told him I had discussed this question with you before your departure, and was authorized to say that his proposal was cordially welcomed by the Canadian Government. He had hoped that the announcement of our intention to exchange Embassies could be given out during his visit to Canada, but I explained the procedure under which the submission had to go forward to the King for his approval. This would inevitably involve a few days delay. As in the case of the other countries with which we were exchanging Embassies, the rise in rank of a particular mission would date from the presentation of the Ambassador's credentials. It would, therefore, be possible for the Belgians to accredit Silvercruys as Ambassador here without waiting until we are in a position to name a new Ambassador to the Allied Governments in the United Kingdom.⁷

Ottawa, July 7, 1942

Dear Mr. Désy,

I appreciate very much the care which you have taken since your arrival in Brazil to keep us fully informed about the relations between the British and the United States embassies and communities in Brazil. So far as Canada is concerned, this is clearly one of the most important aspects of the current Brazilian scene. Your despatches on the subject have been extremely interesting and illuminating.

[†]Voir le document 124, note 62.

We have read with particular care your despatch No. 103 of April 9th[†] and your telegram No. 80 of April 29th[†] concerning black list policy in Brazil, as well as your despatches Nos. 124 of April 24th[†], 146 of May 6th[†], 145 of May 14th[†], 161 of May 26th[†], and 166 of May 27th[†]. The picture painted in these communications of apparently increasing tension between the British and the United States embassies and communities in Brazil is disturbing.

The existence of this tension must frequently place you in a difficult position. This is fully realized in the Department, and I do not want to add to your difficulties and embarrassments by trying to suggest a precise course of action to you from this distance and without first-hand and full knowledge of the local situation. What I do want to do, however, is to let you know that we realize that you have been given a difficult assignment; one which calls for a good deal of patience and tact if you are to meet with success in your efforts to establish better relations between the British and the United States officials and communities in Brazil. If you do make some progress in this task you will have justified the establishment in war-time of a Canadian diplomatic mission in Brazil.

In the rest of this letter I shall try to make some observations which I hope you may find useful: first, on the British Ambassador's telegram of April 24th on black-listing; secondly, on the general and basic question of what are Canada's national interests in Brazil; thirdly, on the measures which might be taken to promote the establishment and maintenance of good relations in Brazil between the United Kingdom and the United States.

So far as the specific problems about black-listing are concerned, there is, I think, no action which we can usefully take at the present time either in Ottawa, London or in Washington. I did, however, make our general attitude clear to Mr. James Currie of the British Embassy in Rio when he was in Ottawa and, from what he said, I am hopeful that the major cause for disagreement will shortly be removed by the United Kingdom leaving to the United States the final responsibility for determining the common policy on black-listing in Brazil.

I note that you sent me a summary of the British Ambassador's telegram of April 24th[†] without any comments of your own. I should be grateful if you would, at your convenience, send me your comments on the telegram and on the issues which it raises. I hope that you will continue to send us summaries of important telegrams to the Foreign Office which the British Ambassador is good enough to show to you, and that you will feel free to add your own comments.

Your comments, both general and on any aspects that involve Canadian interests, would be useful in giving us an adequate appreciation of the situation under discussion. For example, the British Ambassador's telegram summarized in your telegram of April 29th was, in certain respects, a little puzzling. I should have thought that it would not be news to the Foreign Office that both the United States and Brazil consider the United States as the senior partner in Latin America of the alliance of the United Nations. It seems to me clear that the Foreign Office has for a year or more recognized that on the United States rests the major share of responsibility for bringing Latin America into line with the powers at war with the Axis.

One thing that puzzled me in the Ambassador's telegram was his loose use of the word "Americans" and "United States". It is not always possible to distinguish when he is using the word "Americans" to mean United States business men and other private United States citizens and when he is using it to mean officials of the United States Government; and whether, when it is used of officials, the Ambassador implies that they are acting without instructions from Washington, in accordance with instructions from Washington, or contrary to instructions from Washington. What, for instance, does he mean when he refers to the "United States intention to undermine" the British position in Brazil? Any light which you could throw on these points would be welcome. (You will have noted the opinion of our legation in Washington that "the difficulties in Rio arise more out of the personality of the United States Ambassador than they do out of any instructions sent from Washington by the State Department". Despatch No. 1374 of June 5th, sent to you on June 8th).

Your despatches and letters indicate clearly that Canada's role in Latin America is not an easy one, especially if the two countries — Great Britain and the United States — with which we are most closely associated should get seriously out of step. In view of the difficulties of our task in Latin America during the next few years, it may be time for us to try to formulate a statement of policy covering the principal national interests of Canada in Brazil. As a tentative basis for discussion I suggest the following, and I should appreciate your suggestions for revision:

(1) Immediate and direct national interests:

- (i) The fostering of cordial relations with the Brazilian Government.
- (ii) The maintenance of good relations in Brazil between the United Kingdom and the United States.
- (iii) The adoption by Brazil of measures and policies which will contribute most effectively to the defeat of the Axis.

(iv) The protection of Canadian nationals in Brazil.

(2) More remote or less pressing interests:

(i) A general political and economic interest in supporting efforts by the United States to bring political and economic stability and prosperity to Latin America. Latin America needs the assistance of a strongly industrialized, democratic and wealthy nation in order that it may itself become better organized, more industrialized and more democratic. The only nation which can give Latin America this assistance is the United States. The better organized and the more industrialized Latin America becomes the more effective will be the contribution which Latin America can make to the peace, prosperity and civilization of the world and of Canada.

(ii) A special economic interest in securing for ourselves a position of equality of commercial opportunity with the United States in accordance with the traditional doctrines of the Department of State in Washington so that we may expand our trade to the mutual benefit of Canada and Brazil.

(iii) The creation of friendly feelings towards Canada in Brazil and of respect for Canada in Brazil.

(iv) The protection of Canadian investments in Brazil.

Perhaps the most contentious point in this statement is that it is not in Canada's interest to oppose the growing economic power of the United States in Brazil. It may well be in the interest of the United Kingdom to oppose that process. That is for the United Kingdom to decide, but there is, so far as I can see, no indication of an impelling national interest which would require Canada to take the initiative in seeking trouble with the United States by opposing its efforts, so long as the United States Government adheres to its present principles of international commercial policy.

Your reports show very definitely that a basic Canadian interest in Brazil at the present time is to prevent Brazil from becoming a sore spot in United Kingdom-United States relations. Obviously, what is necessary in the long run is a resolving of differences between the two countries in Brazil. That may require major decisions on policy which can be taken only by the governments in London and Washington. In the short run, however, the best remedy is the establishment of friendly and intimate personal relations between the British and United States Ambassadors and their staffs. From what you have said and left unsaid clearly the chief obstacle at the present time to the establishment of such relations is the attitude adopted by the United States Ambassador. From other sources I have heard that he has become recently a difficult man to get on with, that his excellent reputation has gone to his head, and that he has become somewhat overbearing. Nevertheless, this, even if true, does not constitute an insuperable obstacle to the establishment by the British Ambassador of friendly personal relations with him.

In any event, even if an approach to friendly relations with the United States Embassy through the United States Ambassador is difficult, it should be both easy and pleasant to make the approach through Mr. John Farr Simmons⁸ who is not only a good friend to Canada, but an intelligent and conscientious foreign service officer, no anglophobe and, as you say, disturbed by the bad relations between the British and United States communities in Brazil. If Mr. Simmons and the British Ambassador could become good friends, this should help to settle some of the immediate outstanding differences between Great Britain and the United States in Brazil in spite of the efforts of the Axis.

I suppose one difficulty is that some officials of the Government of Brazil may be tempted to play the Axis game, not consciously but unconsciously. Brazilian statesmen naturally do not want Brazil to come too much under the domination of the United States, and Brazil cannot at the present time play Germany off against the United States. The only country Brazil can play off against the United States is the United Kingdom, and, to a lesser extent, Canada. Excessive zeal in playing this game might lead to attempts on the part of some Brazilian officials to stir up dissension between the United States and the United Kingdom, for example by assuming as good friends of one party the unpleasant task of repeating to members of the staff of its embassy uncomplimentary statements supposed to have been made by representatives or nationals of the other party. The only feasible method of effectively dealing with such tactics would appear to be some informal agreement by the staffs of the two embassies to report to each other on such mischief-making, and to make it clear to their informants that they were certain that there was some misunderstanding as to the offending statement, which was contrary to the fixed policy of the United States (or United Kingdom) Government to cooperate fully with the United Kingdom (or United States) Government. If the two Ambassadors were to make it crystal clear that there is no use trying to drive a wedge between them, such attempts may be given up at least for the duration of the war.

⁸ Counsellor, Embassy of United States in Brazil.

We do not presume to suggest to you the ways and means by which you can help both to establish more friendly relations between the British and United States embassies and also to foil any efforts which conscious or unconscious Axis agents may take to drive a wedge between them and between the countries they represent in Brazil. That is a matter on which you are alone competent to decide in the light of your knowledge of the local situation and of the personalities involved. I can assure you, however, that we recognize here the urgent necessity from the point of view of the national interests of Canada of your doing whatever lies in your power. It is clear, of course, from your report that you are fully aware of this need, but it may help you to know that you have our warm support.

I shall look forward to hearing from you further on this matter.

With all best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Santiago, January 21, 1942

Señor Riveros, Minister of Commerce, asks me to cable you requesting on his behalf that arrangements be made for Chile to purchase in Canada by means of sterling instead of dollars. Expect to have £2,500,000 available between now and June 30th, proceeds of goods shipped Great Britain. Chile requires from Canada glass, automobiles, trucks, tires, iron, chemical products, yarns, machinery, cellulose, worsted etc.

TELEGRAM

Ottawa, January 27, 1942

Following for Turgeon, Begins: Your unnumbered telegram January 21 request of Minister of Commerce. Please inform Minister of Commerce that Canadian Government is most anxious to increase trade between Canada and Chile. It regrets, however, that it cannot accept the proposal put forward by the Minister of Commerce. As you are aware the supply of large quantities of war materials by Canada to the United Kingdom has resulted in Canada accumulating large sterling balances and we could not contemplate adding to these balances by supplying goods to Chile, or to any other country outside the sterling area, in return for sterling. Many of the goods mentioned in your telegram are now in short supply and we have difficulty in granting export permits owing to our need to conserve materials for the manufacture of war supplies.

No. 314

Ottawa, September 13, 1943

Sir,

I have the honor of making known to your Government that the Government of Chile, desirous of giving fuller expression to the excellent relations existent between both our countries, have authorised me to enter into negotiations with you regarding the possibility of reaching a Cultural Agreement to supplement our Treaty for mutual Trade and Commerce, now awaiting ratification.

My Government find a cultural rapprochement with Canada to their interest since Canada has won deserved renown through her scientific and intellectual achievements and through her Institutes of academic research and education, and they further feel that our own efforts to better our corresponding institutions and their organisation and accomplishments, may be of interest to Canadians.

I fully understand that Canada's state of war negates full execution of the provisions of such a Treaty, as it likewise affects the Commercial Treaty, but, in my opinion, a Declaration of common determination to further the aims of these Treaties by both our Governments, would lay the basis of complete cooperation in the post-war world.

Should your Government share the views of my own, and agree in effecting this projected Cultural Agreement, it would, in my opinion, be most opportune that the mentioned Agreement be signed during the visit of the Hon. Joaquin Fernandez Fernandez, Minister of Foreign Relations of Chile, to Ottawa. The expression of mutual desire on the part of both Governments, to ratify both Treaties, would redound not only to their benefit in Chile, and also, I believe, in Canada, but would be an event of major significance to the other nations of the American hemispheres.

I take the liberty of herewith enclosing the project of the Cultural Treaty¹, of which I have made mention, and in which an attempt has been made to solve basic needs in a practical manner, and I take the liberty of requesting that you give it your attention.

May I, in concluding, assure you of my deepest consideration, and highest esteem.

[Ottawa,] September 14, 1943

When the Chilean Minister called this morning he left with me the attached note No. 314 of September 13, proposing the conclusion of a Cultural Agreement between Canada and Chile. I told him that the Canadian Government had every sympathy with efforts to facilitate the interchange of students and teachers between Canada and Latin America, and welcomed plans for the exchange of educational films; and would be glad if opportunity offered to see that representative Canadian publications found their places in the national university libraries of the countries of Latin America. We were not, however, in a position to conclude any formal intergovernmental agreement on the subject of intellectual cooperation. I explained to him that education was particularly the responsibility of the provinces and that the Dominion Government was not in a position directly to finance or facilitate exchange arrangements between universities of Canada and other countries, and that we could not make an agreement in this field without trespassing on provincial rights and susceptibilities. I told him, confidentially, that the Brazilian Government had recently approached us with a similar object in mind and that we regretted very much we had not been able to meet their wishes. I was sure, however, that his Government's interest and initiative in these questions would be reciprocated in Canada and that the Canadian Government took a benevolent interest in all efforts to bring about a closer understanding between Canada and the countries of Latin America.

Ottawa, September 29, 1943

Following signature of commercial treaty¹¹ this afternoon, the Chilean Foreign Minister announced that he was conferring the Grand Cross of the Chilean Order of Merit on the Canadian Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and that lower grades of the same order would be awarded to other Canadian officials. Rather than create difficulties in the presence of a number of witnesses including publicists, the Prime Minister allowed it to be assumed that the decorations would be accepted intending to straighten the matter out later.

¹¹ Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1941, N° 16.

¹¹ See Canada, Treaty Series, 1941, No. 16.

At a press conference held shortly after the ceremony of the signing of the treaty, the Chilean Foreign Minister announced that the awards were being made.

We have asked the press to refrain from mentioning this matter and the Prime Minister hopes tonight to have an opportunity to explain the Canadian policy in such affairs to the Chilean Foreign Minister and to ask him to withdraw the awards.

I shall give you a further report later.

CONFIDENTIAL

[Ottawa,] September 30, 1943

In view of the unforeseen developments at the exchange of ratifications with the Chilean government yesterday, it may be useful to place the following information on record:

1. No intimation had been given to the department in advance that the Chilean government had proposed to confer decorations on the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.
2. In his press conference the Foreign Minister of Chile made the suggestion that Canada and Chile should conclude a cultural treaty. Such a proposal had previously been placed before Mr. Robertson by the Chilean Minister to Canada and had been politely declined. A memorandum to that effect was sent to the Prime Minister on September 14.
3. Before the Chilean Foreign Minister arrived in Ottawa, the First Secretary of the Chilean Legation visited the department with the request that he should be informed in advance of the general line that would be taken in the speeches given by the Prime Minister and others at the two luncheons and dinner in honour of the Chilean Foreign Minister. He explained that Dr. Fernandez was anxious not to be taken by surprise by any unexpected comments from a Canadian public spokesman!

Ottawa, October 25, 1943

AUTHORIZATION BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA FOR THE CHANGE IN FLAG OF A PETROLEUM SHIP TO BE ACQUIRED BY CHILE.

1. Present situation in the distribution of petroleum and gasoline in Chile.

Chile is not a producer of petroleum; she depends for her needs upon a quota set by the International Petroleum Cartel which is transported from the port of Talara (Peru) to the ports of Northern Chile, Valparaíso, and San Antonio in tankers belonging to the Standard Oil Co. These tankers cannot proceed any further south.

2. Distribution of these products within the country.

By an agreement between the Standard Oil Co. and the Compañía de Petróleos de Chile (COPEC), petroleum and gasoline used to be distributed in Southern Chile by Chilean cargo vessels. These products were packed in galvanized iron drums, but because of the war, these drums are becoming scarcer every day. This has brought on a crisis in the distribution of petroleum in the southerly and extreme southern zones of Chile where they are vitally needed in industry (the production of coal, wool, meat, etc.). These zones have no means of communication with the rest of the country. By sea, the distance from Valparaíso to the Straits of Magellan is 1500 miles.

3. Purchase of a tanker in Canada.

The Standard Oil Co. is unable to solve the problem because it cannot furnish any ampler means of transportation. In view of this situation which is seriously compromising the economic life of Chile, COPEC (Compañía de Petróleos de Chile) has tried to find a tanker of small tonnage capable of performing this essential service of distribution. After prolonged search, a small tanker (of 18,000 bbl. capacity) has been found here in Canada; it has been used up till now in the transportation of petroleum from the Great Lakes region to Montreal. However, because of the freeze-up on the waterways during winter, it would be tied up for that period. This boat belongs to a Montreal firm which has reached an agreement to sell the vessel to COPEC for $375,000. The sale naturally falls under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government insofar as it involves a change of flag.

4. National interest in the aforesaid purchase.

The government of Chile has given me precise and urgent instructions to the effect that I should inform the Canadian government that Chile considers this commercial transaction to be in the national interest, and requests the Canadian government to permit the change of the boat's flag.

5. Antecedents.

As an antecedent to this request, I must draw your attention to the fact that the government of Chile authorized the sale of her three best motorships so that they could be turned into troop transports for the United Nations. The ships, having an average speed of 18 knots, were built in Europe in 1937, and will now accommodate 4,000 men each. Chile received in exchange four vessels (Liberty-type ships) which have helped augment the transportation of raw materials to the United States; however, their cargo capacity is still inadequate. This matter is brought up here as proof of Chile's good faith towards the United Nations and her firm resolve to contribute both in production and in transportation to the common cause.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your memorandum respecting the question of whether or not authorization could be granted for the sale of a Canadian tanker, the S.S. Itororo with transfer of registry to Chile.

Applications for permission to sell the S.S. Itororo were made to the Canadian Shipping Board, once, in the spring of 1942, when a United States company desired to purchase the ship, and, again, earlier in the present month, when the nationality of the purchasing line was not known. In both cases the Board felt that it would not be justified in recommending that the necessary authorization by the Minister of Transport should be granted.

Careful consideration has been given to the representations you have made and, in view of the interest of your Government in the matter, a further survey has been made of the existing shipping situation, particularly tanker capacity and the ships scheduled for delivery from the yards, on the one hand, as compared with the imperative demands which have to be filled, on the other. From our examination of the situation, in the light of most recent information, it is clear that the demand for tankers of this class is so great that the Canadian Government would not be justified in permitting the sale of the ship under present conditions. I greatly regret that circumstances do not make it possible to give a more favourable answer to your enquiry but conditions, as I am sure you will appreciate, do not leave us any alternative in the matter.

Sir Patrick Duff telephoned me on Friday evening to say that Earncliffe had received a preliminary message from the Dominions Office indicating that the United Kingdom Government were worried about the transfer of the Itororo to Chilean registry, and asked if the ship had already left Canadian waters. I told him I thought she had, but would make enquiries. On Saturday evening Mr. Garner of the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office called to read me a further message on the subject which they had received from the United Kingdom Government. They anticipated an acute shortage of small tankers in the spring, and would be very glad to have the Itororo themselves if the ship was in fact surplus to Canadian requirements. They were disturbed about her transfer from a war zone to Chilean service, and strongly urged the Canadian Government to cancel the sale if this were in any way possible.

I had had a word with the Prime Minister after receiving Sir Patrick Duff's message, and told Garner that, according to our information, the Itororo was out of Canadian waters and on her way to New Orleans, where she was to be handed over to a Chilean crew. In the circumstances, I did not see how the Canadian Government could possibly reverse its position. He asked me if he could transmit this as a definite reply to their representations, and I said that he could.

IMMEDIATE AND SECRET

Dear Mr. Robertson,

May I invite reference to my letter of the 24th February[†] and previous correspondence about the proposed Order in Council regarding extraterritorial jurisdiction over British subjects in Occupied China. When the latter Order in Council is made, it will be necessary for a second Order to be made providing for the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction in Free China. Occupied China includes all areas where large numbers of British subjects and commercial enterprises are, and Shanghai, seat of the Supreme Court. The present judges and Crown Advocate are under detention in Japanese hands. In Free China the number of British subjects and commercial enterprises is small and a less elaborate organization is necessary.

The draft Order which has been prepared provides that judges of the Supreme Court may be either qualified lawyers or consular officers. Consular officers will probably be appointed judges in the first place but the question whether professional judges must be sent out is being considered. The full court, which under the existing Orders is composed of judges from Hong Kong or elsewhere, sits with the judge of the China court and hears appeals from the China court, must be abolished. The China Supreme Court will hear appeals from provincial courts and appeals from the Supreme Court can only go to the Privy Council. Juries are to be abolished and assessors substituted. The power to impose the death penalty and to pronounce dissolution or nullity of marriage is taken away. Provision is made for the removal from China of registered offices of British companies registered at Shanghai under Hong Kong law, and all articles dealing with these British China companies are suspended. To effect the above mentioned changes a number of provisions of the China Order, 1925, are suspended and temporary provisions substituted therefor. The Ambassador is given power to certify at any time what areas must be considered as Free China and therefore subject to Court.

For the issue of such an Order the consent of the Dominions will, of course, be required, and subject to their agreement, the United Kingdom Government would propose the inclusion in the preamble of a recital on the same lines as that suggested in my letter to you under reference. You will observe that a similar suggestion is being made as regards the proposed Order relating to extraterritorial jurisdiction in Ethiopia about which I am writing to you separately to-day.[†]

The United Kingdom Government hope that it may be possible to make the proposed Order relating to Free China at a Privy Council meeting to be held on Thursday, the 5th March, and they would accordingly be grateful to learn at the earliest possible moment whether the Canadian Government concur in the proposals outlined above. Meanwhile, the other United Kingdom High Commissioners are approaching similarly the other Dominion Governments concerned.

Yours sincerely,

IMMEDIATE AND SECRET

Ottawa, February 28, 1942

Dear Mr. MacDonald,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter (516J/66) of 26th February 1942 regarding proposed Orders-in-Council concerning extraterritorial jurisdiction over British subjects in China.

It is noted that when the Order regarding Occupied China is made, it will be necessary for a second Order — outlined in your letter — to be passed providing for the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction in Free China, and that, in this Order, it is proposed to include a recital setting forth the consent of the Governments interested.

I am inclined to think that it would be unwise to proceed with this matter without the most careful consideration. It would be impossible to deal with the question in time to enable action to be taken next week, and it would, of course, be impossible to proceed without the concurrence of the Canadian Government.

It would be greatly appreciated if you could ascertain the views of your Government upon certain aspects of this question which gave us immediate concern.

China has just established a diplomatic mission in Canada, and we are reluctant to take part in action which might be regarded as a reflection upon the Chinese Government. It is not clear whether the United Kingdom authorities have ascertained that there would be no possibility of any objection, either tacit or expressed, on the part of the Chinese Government.

The taking of action of this sort, even if it is taken with the approval of the Chinese Government, might be open to misconstruction. I do not know whether your Government has considered fully the effect upon world opinion of doing this immediately after the conclusion of General Chiang's helpful mission in India.

Some concern is also felt with regard to the effect upon general world opinion and upon opinion in this country. There is a general impression that the united nations are committed to a post-war world in which extraterritorial jurisdiction of this sort would not exist. It would undoubtedly disturb this impression if an Order in Council were put through next week which appeared to fasten this system upon free China.

Some concern is also felt with regard to the use which might be made of the proposed Order in Council by enemy propaganda. It is thought that, apart from its merits, it might offer too great an advantage to Dr. Goebbels.

I have offered these suggestions not as indicating any definite opinion held in this country, but merely to raise the points for the purpose of ascertaining the views of your Government.

Yours sincerely,

Attached is a copy of a letter I have sent today to the United Kingdom High Commissioner as an interim reply to his enquiry whether Canada is ready to be associated with a new amendment to the China Order-in-Council, reaffirming British extraterritorial jurisdiction in Free China. It seemed to me neither timely nor appropriate to reassert, at this juncture¹², a claim to jurisdiction in Free China which, for all practical purposes, is unlikely to be exercised in any important degree but which could be very easily construed by enemy propagandists as evidence that the Commonwealth countries were not in earnest in their promise to reconsider their position on the extraterritoriality question after the war.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I am writing in reply to your letter of the 28th February to let you know that your comments on the proposal to pass an Order-in-Council concerning extra-territorial jurisdiction over British subjects in Free China were duly telegraphed to the Dominions Office on the 1st March.

The High Commissioner has now received a reply stating that the comments of the United Kingdom authorities on your observations will be sent as soon as possible, but that meanwhile it is not proposed to present to the Privy Council this week the draft Order relating to Free China.

It may be assumed, however, that the proposed Orders-in-Council relating to occupied China and to Ethiopia (see your letter file 927-34C of the 28th February)[†] will be passed by the Privy Council at their meeting on Thursday the 5th March, with the inclusion of the recital set out in the third paragraph of the High Commissioner's letter of the 24th February.[†]

PERSONAL

Ottawa, September 17, 1942

My dear King,

It has been in my thoughts for some time to speak to you about Canada's position vis-à-vis China. The civilized world, and particularly the United States and Canada, is filled with admiration for the splendid resistance China has made to Japan. There is little doubt that British prestige in the Far East has suffered very greatly. Intelligent and educated Chinese — whose numbers increase steadily — feel that there has been a good deal of blundering on the part of Britain. Amongst the evacuees from Japan exchanged recently was one of our immigration officers, a Colonel Doughty, who had been in Hong Kong for twenty years. He was through the whole Hong Kong experience. His home was in British Columbia and he had held a Colonel's Commission in the Great War. He is quite critical of the way the British Command handled matters in Hong Kong and his opinion supported what I said a moment ago about the loss of British prestige.

On the other hand, the United States stands very high. The practical aid which the United States is giving to China naturally makes a strong appeal to the Chinese. People are always more affected by their own problems than by those which are remote from them, and the Chinese fail to appreciate fully the burdens which Britain has had to carry for the past three years.

I am convinced that Canada's standing in China at the present time is not good. As you know, the Chinese always have felt that our Chinese Exclusion Act treats them unfairly. This arises, not so much from a refusal to accept Chinese as residents of Canada, as from the feeling that we have placed formally upon them by legislation the badge of inferiority. In the second place, our failure to appoint a Minister to China is hurting their susceptibilities.¹³ I know how much concerned you have been with getting someone to go to represent Canada in China, but this difficulty does not weigh with the Chinese.

As you know, Edgar Tarr has had in the past many contacts with both China and Japan. Those with China still remain. In a conversation with him a few weeks ago he made a suggestion which appeals to me more, the more I think of it. He thought that if Canada could send an Air Force Squadron to China to help them in their struggle against Japan it would have a dramatic and powerful effect. If, at the same time, we could give an assurance to the Chinese Minister here that the Chinese Exclusion Act would be removed from our statute books, there is no doubt in my mind of the fine reaction we would get from the Chinese Government. It appears to me that this is not only simple justice but goes beyond that. When the war is over, and the Axis Powers are defeated, China will be one of the countries where great development will take place, in the material sense, and, when that time comes, it will be worth much to Canada to have goodwill in that country. So far as trade with China is concerned, we are more advantageously located than is the United States. We should endeavour to put ourselves in at least as good a position as the United States to share in that trade and development. So far as the repeal of the Exclusion Act is concerned, I see no reason why that should not be done at the next session of Parliament, leaving then until after the war the working out of whatever arrangements may be necessary to control the admission of Chinese to this country. The 'Gentleman's Agreement' under which we have operated for many years with Japan will undoubtedly go overboard, and the whole situation in this respect can be considered in the light of after-war conditions.

I hope you will not mind my mentioning these matters to you in this way.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, September 18, 1942

My dear Crerar,

I am wholly sympathetic to the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act. Some years ago, I did my best to have the Act repealed, and an arrangement effected whereby numbers would be limited by agreement. I am wholly in favour of having action taken to repeal the Exclusion Act at the next session of Parliament. It may be that its introduction, at this moment, might occasion things to be said in debate which are unfortunate, but that is a matter to which we can give consideration.

As to sending an Air Force Squadron to China, you know, as I do, that the allocation of fighting forces is a matter not of decision by individual governments but by arrangements affecting all the United Nations. I personally should prefer our making individual contributions in cases such as that of the Chinese, but I am sure that any attempt to do this would not be an easy matter to arrange.

I wish you would get your friend Edgar Tarr to accept the position of Minister to China. As you know, we have been anxious to secure him for the post, but he has not found it possible to accept. If you would have Mr. Tarr suggest the names of possible appointees, I should be glad to see that the names he might suggest would be carefully considered.

London, September 18, 1942

IMPORTANT. SECRET. We have received through the United States Ambassador a message from the United States Government to the effect that the development of American opinion on the subject of extraterritoriality in China makes it desirable to take up the question at an early date. While they admit that the moment is not the most opportune, they think that no better occasion is likely to occur in the near future and that it is wise to take the initiative while we still have it.

2. Their proposal is that the United States Government and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom should now approach the Chinese Government jointly with an offer to negotiate brief treaties for the relinquishment of extraterritorial and related rights and for the adjustment of a few broad questions closely connected therewith. At the same time draft treaties on these lines would be presented to the Chinese Government for their consideration.

3. It is indicated that the American treaty would probably cover the following points:-

(a) Relinquishment of extraterritorial and related rights, including those in the International Settlements at Amoy and Shanghai as well as those granted by the 1901 Peking Protocol.

(b) Satisfaction of contractual obligations entered into with American nationals by the authorities of the International Settlements at Amoy and Shanghai and the Diplomatic Quarter at Peking.

(c) Safeguards for existing landownership by Americans, replacement of perpetual leases by Chinese deeds and immunity from retrospective land taxes, fees, etc.

(d) Right of travel, residence and trade throughout China except in areas closed for national security as in the United States.

(e) Reciprocal provision for Consular representation with exequaturs.

(f) Undertaking to enter into negotiations for a comprehensive treaty of establishment, commerce, navigation, etc., on modern lines upon request of either side or in any case within six months after the end of the hostilities. In the meantime questions in dispute where not covered by existing treaties to be decided on accepted principles of modern International Law.

4. The United States proposal is to explain to the Chinese that it is not considered desirable to embark forthwith on the fuller negotiations referred to in (f) above because of the difficulties of the war situation, the extra time required, and the danger that enemy propaganda would exploit any differences of view that might become apparent between China and her Allies. If, however, the Chinese wished to negotiate these modern treaties forthwith, the United States idea is that we should agree.

5. We have replied welcoming this proposal for joint action and stating that subject to the concurrence of the Dominion Governments, which is being sought, we shall be glad to consult with the United States Government in the preparation of a draft treaty on the lines suggested for presentation to the Chinese Government at the appropriate moment. As regards the modern treaties of commerce, etc., we agreed that these should be left until after the war, but we suggested that for the reasons given we should insist on postponement even if the Chinese asked for their conclusion now.

6. As regards Shanghai we stated that although the Chinese Government would require the return of the whole area to unfettered Chinese rule, we believed that they would be ready to accord Shanghai a special status to enable the development of the port to continue with the co-operation of foreign commercial interests. We suggested that the proposed treaties might make some mention of this question.

7. The rendition of the British concessions at Tientsin and Canton with safeguards for public and private property rights and the taking over of municipal obligations would presumably be covered by separate agreement, but some reference to it would have to be made either in the treaty or in an annexed exchange of letters.

8. The proposed joint approach with the United States Government should, we hope, discourage the idea that we are acting from weakness and enable us to secure better terms than we could get alone.

9. I should be glad to learn at an early date, if possible by September 30th, whether proposals set out above are agreeable in principle to your Government. As regards procedure it is suggested that, as in the case of convention relating to abolition of capitulations in Morocco and Zanzibar, treaty should be signed between His Majesty in respect of United Kingdom and President of China and that arrangements should be made for its application to Dominions by means of separate exchanges of notes between Dominion and Chinese Governments.

10. We are consulting His Majesty's Ambassador at Chungking as to the terms of a suitable draft treaty. United States Government have asked for particular secrecy in regard to our intentions, and His Majesty's Ambassador has therefore been requested not to give Chinese any hint that matter is under consideration nor to discuss it with his United States colleague pending further communication with United States Government.

Ottawa, October 6, 1942

IMPORTANT. SECRET. Your telegram Circular D. 391, September 18, extraterritorial rights in China. Canadian Government welcomes and fully approves proposal to relinquish extraterritorial and related rights in China.

2. As for the suggestions which you have made to the United States Government (paras. 6 and 7 of your telegram), Canada's interests are not sufficiently important to justify our joining in these suggestions, but neither do we oppose them.

3. Procedure outlined in para. 9 of your telegram, while technically satisfactory, does not commend itself to the Canadian Government in the present case. We should prefer to have a separate treaty between Canada and China; it would be in the same terms as the treaty between the United Kingdom and China and could be signed on the same day. In view of the historic importance of the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights, I think that this procedure would be more appropriate and more acceptable to the Chinese Government than the procedure suggested in your telegram.

4. I should be glad to know whether the negotiations will commence in Chungking; if so, the British Ambassador can be authorized to speak for Canada, pending the arrival of a Canadian Minister. On the other hand, if negotiations start in London and Washington respectively, we can discuss with the Chinese Minister here the conclusion of a similar treaty between Canada and China.

5. I should be grateful if you would keep me fully informed and if you would send the draft treaty as soon as possible.

Keenleyside and I saw the Chinese Minister this morning. I told him that the Canadian Government had warmly welcomed the initiative which the United Kingdom and the United States had taken in proposing the negotiation of agreements ending the extraterritorial rights which British and American nationals have enjoyed in China for many years. In view of the direct diplomatic relations now in effect between Canada and China, you had thought it would be more appropriate if the ending of the old regime, so far as Canada is concerned, could be accomplished by a treaty between Canada and China, which would be similar in content and signed at the same time as those the United Kingdom and the United States are prepared to negotiate with China. Dr. Liu said that he was sure his Government would appreciate Canada's readiness to cooperate in ending the old capitulatory system. The decision to open negotiations now, instead of waiting until after the war, would be of very great psychological and political importance to China, and would encourage her people in their struggle. He said he would advise his Government by cable at once, and had no doubt that they would warmly reciprocate it.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION ACT

We have recently been giving consideration to the problems of our relations with China and in particular to the possibility of recommending some course of action which would enable the Government to remove the stigma placed upon the Chinese by the Chinese Immigration Act of 1923 without throwing Canada open to a renewed influx of persons of Chinese race.

As you know, the Chinese have always felt that our Act discriminated unfairly against them. Canada is the only country that has excluded Chinese immigrants — and Chinese immigrants only — in this specific way. In addition, the existence of the Act and the regulations which it has made necessary have resulted in a number of unfortunate incidents at Canadian border points. This fact has aggravated the situation to such an extent that when the Institute of Pacific Relations recently initiated discussions concerning a possible semi-official conference on Pacific questions which Chinese delegates would pass through the United States to attend, the Chinese Ambassador to the United States, Dr. Hu Shih, expressed the hope that the meeting would not be held in Canada.

When our Minister goes to Chungking he will suffer under the handicaps which arise from the situation outlined in the preceding paragraphs. Under these circumstances it seems to me that it might be useful if we could authorize our Minister, as his first act in Chungking, to enter into conversations with the Chinese authorities with a view to reaching an agreement which would in fact retain the ban on permanent Chinese immigration into Canada but would do so in such a manner as to spare Chinese sensibilities.

In 1934 or 1935, when Keenleyside was in Japan, he prepared and sent home a draft treaty with China which was designed to meet the conditions mentioned above. We did not proceed with the treaty at the time but it seems to me that it might now be revived with beneficial results. The draft was originally approved and strongly supported by Sir Herbert Marler,¹⁴ and more recently Keenleyside has discussed it with Sir George Sansom who is now British Minister in Washington, particularly charged with responsibilities in relation to the Far East. In a letter dated September 30th[†] Sansom wrote:

“I have gone carefully through your draft treaty looking for weak spots but I confess that I cannot find any! On general grounds I do not see how the Chinese Government could find anything to object to.”

The basic principle of this treaty is reciprocity. Its practical working would not interfere with Canadian activities in China but would maintain the barrier against Chinese immigration to Canada.

The method by which these desirable results would be obtained is as follows: Canadians of certain categories, including missionaries and business men, and Chinese of certain approved types would be admitted to China or Canada on permits valid for two years but renewable. Persons thus admitted to either country would have to engage in a specified treaty occupation and if they should leave that occupation, they would have to return to their country of origin. In any case, they would not be permanent residents. They could not count the period of residence under permit for purposes of naturalization and children born to them would acquire only the nationality of their parents. Chinese na-nationals resident in Canada and Canadian nationals resident in China at the time of the ratification of the treaty would be required within a period of five years either to enter a treaty occupation under permit, apply for a special permit authorizing them to continue in their present vocations, or return to their native land. Third generation Chinese of Canadian nationality in Canada would acquire all the rights of their national status for themselves and their descendants. First and second generation Chinese of Canadian nationality in Canada and Canadians of Chinese nationality in China would relinquish their claims to Canadian and Chinese nationality respectively. It is intended that the treaty occupations would be of such a character as to require relatively high standards of education and some financial backing. This, together with a prohibition on acquiring land for agricultural purposes, would prove a barrier to Chinese applicants for permits who would have a depressing effect on the Canadian labour market.

A copy of the draft treaty¹⁵ is attached for your examination.

If a treaty along the lines of the draft should be approved, the Canadian Government could then go ahead with the rescinding of the Chinese Immigration Act without fear of a large post-war influx of Chinese immigrants. Such a development should have an exceedingly beneficial result upon our relationship with China.¹⁶

Dear General Odlum,

I am sorry that I have not answered your recent letters, but, as Collins will have told you, I was laid up for a few days with influenza.

With regard to the matter of Chinese immigration, I do not believe that there is very much that I can usefully give you in the way of guidance at the moment. I had hoped that by this time we would have been able to initiate discussions here with the Chinese Minister with a view to the eventual negotiation of a treaty on this subject. You have seen and approved of what we would propose to include in such a treaty. Unfortunately, however, we have not yet been able to complete our negotiation of the extraterritoriality treaty and until this is out of the way, there will be no chance of our getting on to a more difficult subject.

In general, I think that the line you should take when questions of immigration are raised is something like this: Canada is anxious to deal with every country on a basis of friendship and equality. In regard to immigration we feel that it is necessary to retain complete control over our own policies and we recognize that other countries have similar rights. We do not throw open our gates to the people from any country, even from other parts of the British Commonwealth. With regard to China, there are many people in Canada who feel that the Act of 1923 was a mistake and the Canadian Government is, in fact, prepared to consider the rescinding of that Act. At the same time, it is necessary to be realistic in these matters and to recognize that political feeling in British Columbia would make it impossible for us to accept Chinese immigrants. Under the circumstances, we feel that it would be wise and just to enter into an agreement with China which would admit certain categories of Chinese to Canada and certain categories of Canadians to China for legitimate purpose but on a temporary basis. Such an agreement would be completely reciprocal in form and in effect and, while it would maintain a barrier against permanent Chinese immigration, it would allow the admission to Canada of small numbers of Chinese who can find useful occupation in this country. The result should be acceptable to the people of British Columbia (because it would preclude permanent immigration) and should be acceptable to the people of China (because it would be based on reciprocity and would, in fact, admit to Canada most of those who would have any reasonable prospect of leading successful lives in the Dominion).

You will know how to ring the changes on these basic principles. The alternative, from the Chinese point of view, is to be faced with a continuance of the present discriminatory legislation. They may as well recognize that there is no likelihood of obtaining freedom of immigration to Canada. The alternative is between a fair system, which will be reciprocal in its working and which will, in fact, admit small numbers of legitimate visitors, and a continuance of the present unfair discrimination.

We have read your letters[†] about the various Chinese personalities you have met and about your visit to the Jewish Rally with great interest. I hope that you will continue to write to me informally as well as to send us official despatches on matters which should be officially recorded.

I hope that you will find it possible to get away this weekend and that your journey will be comfortable and fast. With kindest regards and every good wish, I am

Yours sincerely,

CHINESE EXTRATERRITORIAL TREATY

(1) On December 7, 1942, we handed the Chinese Minister a simple draft treaty[†] covering (a) abrogation of existing treaties granting extraterritorial rights; (b) agreement to cooperate in abandonment of special privileges in Peiping, Shanghai, Amoy and Tientsin; (c) protection of existing Canadian property rights in China.

(2) On March 17, 1943, we received a Chinese counter-draft[†] which covered the points in (1) above, but which also included (a) provision that each country would accord to nationals of the other rights to travel, reside, and carry on commerce within its territory, and treatment no less favourable than that accorded its own nationals; (b) provision regarding obligation of local authorities to inform consuls of the other country when their nationals are arrested; and (c) agreement to enter into a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation, and consular rights on request of the other country, or in any case within six months after the war.

(3) On May 5, 1943, we wrote Dr. Liu[†], stating that the Canadian Government's announcement¹⁸ that we concurred in abandonment of extraterritorial rights by the United Kingdom, coupled with the termination of the unequal treaties, ended in fact any special Canadian rights; that we had concurred in termination by the United Kingdom of the Orders in Council which had implemented the original treaties; that the only reason for negotiating a treaty was to formalize an existing position; and that it was desirable either to abandon the idea of proceeding with a formal treaty, or to confine the treaty to the scope of our original draft.

(4) On July 17, 1943, Dr. Keenleyside wrote a personal letter to Dr. Liu[†] asking whether there had been any further developments, and stating that we were anxious to have this treaty concluded in order to proceed with discussions on immigration.

(5) On July 19, 1943, the Counsellor of the Chinese Legation indicated that there would be further delay as Chungking was studying the South African draft treaty. He asked whether we would consider going on with the immigration discussions while waiting for the Chinese Government's decision on the extraterritoriality agreement. Dr. Keenleyside stated that we preferred to have the extraterritoriality problem settled before starting discussion on immigration questions, although he did not definitely refuse either to reverse the order, or to discuss the two matters simultaneously.

¹⁸ Press release of October 10, 1942.

(6) On July 30, Dr. Liu presented us with a new draft of Article V[†] dealing with the right to travel, reside and carry on business. At this meeting Dr. Liu asked whether we had come to a final conclusion as to the kind of treaty we would be prepared to sign. We evidently did not reiterate our stand that it should be a treaty limited in scope to our original draft or none at all, but simply stated that we were doing a comparative study of the several drafts. Dr. Liu stated that he was anxious to have the treaty concluded. It appears that since this time we must have advised the Chinese Minister that in our view it was not practicable to proceed with the treaty, and that we were considering a unilateral declaration regularizing the position, for on October 30th the Chinese Minister asked if we would consider effecting such an arrangement by an exchange of notes incorporating the provisions of Articles V and VII of the Chinese Draft Treaty. Article V of the Draft deals with the right to travel, reside and carry on trade. Article VII is a promise to negotiate a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights.

(7) Both Australia and South Africa have been presented with omnibus treaties which they feel they cannot accept. On August 14th we were advised that Australia was considering ending matters by a unilateral declaration.

(8) There are four courses of action open to us:

(a) to end the matter by a unilateral declaration dealing only with extraterritorial rights;

(b) to drop the matter entirely;

(c) to have an exchange of notes on extraterritoriality which incorporates Articles V and VII;

(d) to effect a compromise between the Canadian and Chinese draft treaties.

(9) The objections to a unilateral declaration are:

(a) that the Prime Minister announced on October 10, 1942, that we were going to negotiate a treaty with China for relinquishment of extraterritorial rights;

(b) that it is diplomatically difficult to end negotiations by a unilateral declaration when we are in the course of negotiating a treaty; (it appears, however, that this has been done informally); and

(c) that a unilateral declaration will not protect Canadian property interests in China. In D.O. telegram of November 30, 1942,[†] it is stated that if the treaty with China were confined to a simple declaration of abrogation of treaty rights, it should be borne in mind that it would probably have the effect of depriving British subjects in China of certain rights which they now enjoy. In General Odlum's despatch of August 14, 1943,[†] it is stated that some Chinese officials are taking the view that with the extinction of rights under the unequal treaties, Canadian Missions lose their former treaty right to own land, and even lose the right to sell what they have. (See also General Odlum's despatch No. 141 of October 9, 1943,[†] regarding the difficulties Canadian Missions are having in selling their properties in China). Actually, we have lost these rights, and have admitted as much to the Chinese Minister, (see (3) above), but it is doubtful whether the Chinese realize this, and they appear to be willing to grant us these rights in their draft treaty. It may be felt that we can bargain for these property rights when the Chinese approach us on immigration questions. The advantage of a unilateral declaration is that it can be done right away and be made public before embarrassing questions are asked as to why the treaty has not been signed. Attached as "A" is a draft note[†] which might be used as the basis for drawing up a final note, if the course of making a unilateral declaration is decided upon.

(10) The second alternative (dropping the matter entirely) must, I think, be rejected, as the objections to a unilateral declaration apply even more strongly to this course of action.

(11) It seems to me that the remaining alternatives (an exchange of notes incorporating Articles V and VII, or a compromise between the Canadian and Chinese draft treaties) amount in fact to the same thing. I think there is something to be said for a formal treaty accomplishing this, in view of the Prime Minister's announcement that there would be a treaty. It is doubtful whether it would take any longer to negotiate a treaty than to agree on the terms of an exchange of notes.

(12) In view of the fact that we have stated to the Chinese that we are willing to enter into discussions on immigration, it seems to me that we can go a lot further in meeting the Chinese position than we were prepared to go when this matter was first discussed. The points on which we have failed to come to an understanding are Articles V and VII. Article V of the Chinese Draft originally read: "Each of the High Contracting Parties shall accord to nationals of the other the rights to travel, reside and carry on commerce within his territory . . ." When this Article was first considered, it was felt that the right to travel and reside implied the right to enter, and, in view of our Chinese Immigration Act, we felt we could not agree to it. In July the Chinese presented us with a new draft of this Article, reading: "The Government of Canada having long accorded the rights to nationals . . . of China within . . . Canada to travel, reside, and carry on trade, . . . China agrees to accord similar rights to Canadian nationals." (For complete text see "B" attached.[†] As this re-draft implies no new commitments on the part of Canada, I can see no reason why we should not agree to it. The United States agreed to a clause almost identical with this, before the Chinese Exclusion Bill was brought up in Congress.

(13) Article VII of the Chinese Draft is an undertaking to enter into negotiations for a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights on the request of either party or in any case within six months after the war. At the time this clause was first suggested, it was felt that a modern treaty of commerce would involve commitments regarding immigration, and that we therefore could not undertake to enter into such a treaty. I have checked several examples of these treaties and have found that a most favoured nation clause on immigration is not necessarily included. (For examples, see Annex C attached.)[†] We clearly could not enter into a treaty identical with our Treaty of Commerce with France of 1933, for in that treaty we accord most favoured nation treatment on immigration. On the other hand, in the United States-Finland Treaty of Friendship and Commerce of 1934 the right of entry and residence is limited to the purpose of carrying on trade, except where the local law permits entry for other purposes. Generally, treaties of Friendship and Commerce deal with right of entry only with regard to nationals engaged in commerce and navigation. Our treaty with China could therefore be limited to allowing entry of merchants for the purpose of carrying on trade if this limitation is thought desirable. (Merchants are now admitted to Canada under the Chinese Immigration Act.) So long as the Chinese understand that an undertaking to enter into a Friendship and Commerce Treaty will not pledge us to granting a most favoured nation clause on immigration, I can see no reason why we should not agree to Article VII.

(14) The United States agreed to Article VII at a time when there was virtual exclusion of all Chinese. The repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Laws (which appears imminent) will mean that the Chinese will be on a quota system. In a sense this grants China parity with other nations, although in fact only 105 immigrants will be admitted each year.

Conclusions:

1. A unilateral declaration should be avoided for the reasons given in (9) above.
2. In my view we can agree to Articles V and VII of the Chinese Draft, without committing Canada to any positive steps on the immigration question, except in so far as entry of merchants is concerned. I think it would be better if this were done by a treaty as originally planned. An exchange of notes would amount to the same thing, but would not be such a tribute to the Chinese.¹⁹

TREATY WITH CHINESE ON EXTRATERRITORIALITY AND CHINESE IMMIGRATION

Record of meeting held in N. A. Robertson's Office, November 15th, attended by N. A. Robertson, J. E. Read, H. L. Keenleyside, H. F. Angus, H. F. Feaver, M. Bridge²⁰, K. B. Bingay.

Extraterritoriality

1. In view of Miss Bingay's memorandum of November 9th, the suggestion that we might close our negotiations with the Chinese by a unilateral declaration was rejected. It was agreed that we should proceed, not by exchange of notes, but by a Heads of States treaty, which would include not only the clauses in the original Canadian draft (including the clause protecting Canadian property interests in China), but also Articles V, VI and VII of the Chinese draft. Article V, dealing with right to travel, reside and carry on business will involve no new commitment, as it will read: "Canada having long accorded rights to nationals of China to travel etc . . ." Article VI deals with obligation to notify consuls when nationals are arrested, and will be of advantage to Canada. Article VII is an undertaking to enter into a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, etc.

2. It was agreed that Miss Bingay should prepare a draft treaty, in Heads of States form, together with an explanatory memorandum, outlining the commitments involved (including the implications of a treaty of friendship, commerce and navigation), and including a reference to the immigration question. Mr. Robertson will discuss the draft treaty with the Prime Minister before speaking to Dr. Liu.

3. It was agreed that we should inform Australia, South Africa, and London of our proposed action. Miss Bridge will prepare the communications.

4. It was agreed that General Odlum should negotiate the treaty. I have since discovered that a full power has already been issued (January 21, 1943)[†] in the name of Mr. King.

Chinese Immigration

5. It was agreed that extraterritoriality and immigration should be dealt with as separate matters, (although Mr. Robertson thought the departmental views on Chinese Immigration should be clarified before he speaks to the Prime Minister with regard to the extraterritoriality treaty.) Although it was agreed that the extraterritoriality treaty should be disposed of first, Mr. Robertson thought that the present was the best time to remove discrimination against the Chinese, although this is a more difficult matter to accomplish in Canada than in the United States. It was agreed that Dr. Keenleyside should circulate his draft Chinese Immigration Treaty in the Department, and that it should then be discussed with Justice, State and Immigration. After circulation of the draft Treaty, the following questions would be considered:

(1) Whether a treaty is necessary, if the discriminatory legislation is repealed. (Repeal, without special legislation for the Chinese, would mean that the wives of Chinese in China would be Canadian nationals. They would not, however, be Canadian citizens under the Immigration Act.)

(2) Whether an Immigration Treaty with China would create a precedent so that other countries asked for immigration treaties. (India).

(3) Whether we should frame a whole new immigration policy based on national quotas, instead of negotiating a treaty.

(4) Whether the Chinese Immigration Act should be repealed ab initio, or whether it should be used as a bargaining counter.

(5) How far federal legislation (implementing an Immigration Treaty with China) could go in forbidding the provinces to enact anti-alien, or anti-racial legislation.

Projet de traité sur l'immigration
Draft Treaty on Immigration

TREATY BETWEEN HIS MAJESTY AND THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India, in respect of Canada and the National Government of the Republic of China being equally desirous of controlling for their mutual benefit the emigration of their respective peoples each to the territory of the other, have resolved to conclude a Treaty for this purpose and have named as their plenipotentiaries:

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN CANADA AND CHINA
ON EXTRATERRITORIALITY

We are now considering the conclusion of a short treaty which would cover the points embodied in our original draft, namely:

- (1) renunciation of extraterritorial rights
 - (2) agreement to cooperate in the abandonment of special privileges in Peiping, Shanghai, Amoy, Tientsin and Canton
 - (3) protection of existing Canadian property rights in China
- and which would, in addition, meet the Chinese request and include articles providing for:

- (4) right to travel, reside and carry on commerce
- (5) notification by local authorities to consuls of either country when their nationals are arrested
- (6) agreement to enter into a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights.

2. The wording suggested by the Chinese for the articles covering points 4 and 5 is almost identical with that employed in the United Kingdom treaty, while the article covering point 6 follows almost exactly paragraph (1) of Article VIII of the same treaty.

3. A new draft, embodying the points listed above, is being prepared, in consultation with the Departments of Justice and Immigration, and should be ready very soon for submission to Council. The other Commonwealth Governments have been informed of the steps under consideration.

4. The difficulties presently being encountered by the Canadian Missions in China in connection with property sales have indicated the desirability of going beyond a simple renunciation of extraterritorial rights and of concluding a more comprehensive agreement which would, among other things, protect existing property rights. Recent international developments — particularly the action taken by the United States with respect to Chinese immigration — coupled with a modification in the phrasing of the original Chinese counter-draft of the Article on the right to travel, reside and carry on commerce, have made the prospects of agreement considerably brighter than they were a few months ago.²¹

My telegram No. 22 of January 30, 1943[†], Chinese extraterritoriality.

2. After intermittent discussions extending over a period of several months, we are now considering the conclusion of a short treaty which would cover the points embodied in our original draft, namely:

- (1) renunciation of extraterritorial rights
- (2) agreement to cooperate in the abandonment of special privileges in Peiping, Shanghai, Amoy, Tientsin and Canton
- (3) protection of existing Canadian property rights in China, and which would, in addition, meet the Chinese request and include articles providing for:
 - (4) right to travel, reside and carry on commerce
 - (5) notification by local authorities to consuls of either country when their nationals are arrested
 - (6) agreement to enter into a comprehensive modern treaty of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights.

3. The wording suggested by the Chinese for the articles covering points 4 and 5 is almost identical with that employed in the United Kingdom treaty, while the article covering point 6 follows almost exactly paragraph (1) of Article VIII of the same treaty.

4. A new draft, embodying the points listed above, is being prepared, and if it is approved, the full text will be communicated to you in due course. In the meantime, you might inform the Australian Government of the action which we are considering.

5. You might also explain that the difficulties presently being encountered by the Canadian Missions in China in connection with property sales have indicated the desirability of going beyond a simple renunciation of extraterritorial rights and of concluding a more comprehensive agreement which would, among other things, protect existing property rights. TELEGRAM 287

Canberra, November 27, 1943

SECRET. Your telegram No. 217 of November 20th, Chinese extraterritoriality. Substance of your telegram was transmitted immediately to Minister for External Affairs. Dr. Evatt has requested me to send the following telegram in reply to the Prime Minister, Begins:

The Australian Government has noted with concern that you are considering negotiation of a treaty with the Chinese Government on extraterritoriality in which three contentious clauses of United Kingdom Treaty (Clauses 6, 7 and 8) are to be included.

We still adhere strongly to the view expressed to you by the Australian High Commissioner in Canada in February last, that we would negotiate a simple treaty of abrogation only or preferably make a simple exchange of notes. You will recall that your reply of February 17th[†] stated that the Canadian policy was substantially the same as Australian and that you had no intention of including anything in the treaty beyond abrogation of extraterritorial rights. On footing of your assurance we had maintained that position consistently. Should you now negotiate a treaty on terms indicated you would leave Australia in position of being the only country with diplomatic relations with China which has not formally abolished extraterritoriality and would weaken considerably our position. We have good reason to believe that failure of the Chinese Government to reply to our desire to exchange notes was because they hoped Canada would accept treaty on British lines — in other words, persuade Canada to depart from policy indicated by you on February 17th last.

In the circumstances we suggest Canada should not complete matter nor commit itself to proposals which may subsequently prove of great embarrassment to our countries. I need not remind you that it was Australia which first suggested abolition of extraterritoriality and we are perfectly willing to exchange notes with that end in view; but I am certainly not agreeable to vague general propositions which may be used as a basis for China's calling into question so fundamental a national policy as that of 'White Paper'. Ends.

Your reply of February 17th to which Dr. Evatt referred was not received by this office, but substance of your telegrams No. 22 of January 30th,[†] No. 189 of October 21st, 1942[†], was sent to him.

Please see my despatches No. 372 of October 11th[†] regarding Australian-Chinese relations, and No. 404 October 28th[†] and No. 394 October 22nd[†] on immigration into Australia.

Proposed Sino-Canadian Treaty.

Australian Legation has shown me, in confidence, copy of telegram received from Canberra giving text of Australian message to you concerning treaty situation. As I am not where all factors can be assembled for study, and balanced judgment formed, I submit the following for consideration only. It is too late for Canadian action on immigration to win China's goodwill or to deflect, even to minor degree, strong sentimental bias towards the United States which will be dominant factor in post-war trade. Any concession now made will be accepted as showing lack of individuality and initiative, and as giving further evidence that Canada is, as China believes, completely under American domination. Public sentiment in Canada, which I know to be strongly pro-Chinese, may compel action. Moreover, position of Canadian Missions as property owners is awkward, but not serious. While annoyance and delays continue, I do not think the Government will either take or permit confiscatory action. Balancing Canadian public sentiment and the position of the Missions on one side and any weakening of Canada's control of her own immigration policy on the other, I think Canada has more to gain than to lose by standing solidly with Australia in opposing an enlarged treaty at the present time. Canada can amend her immigration laws without treaty and no treaty will win material goodwill today. Opportunity to score heavily was before the United States repealed the Exclusion Act. China's pride is satisfied and nothing Canada does will either help or injure her standing. China will be actually, though not officially, indifferent. Chinese will continue to trade wherever there is the greatest profit, as witness her present trade with the Japanese, but she will give preferred consideration to goodwill. I have not discussed treaty situation, either recently with the Australian Minister or at any time with any member of the Chinese Government.

TELEGRAM 226

Ottawa, December 3, 1943

1. Your telegram of November 27, 1943, No. 287. Chinese Extraterritoriality. Please reply to Dr. Evatt along the following lines.
2. When we communicated with Australia on this subject in February 1943 we were not aware that the Chinese interpretation of the simple act of abolishing extraterritorial rights would lead to the placing of missionary and other Canadian property rights in China in jeopardy. There is evidence now that this is the case and as our property holdings are very extensive it is essential that they be protected. You will remember that Dominions Office took this view in Circular D 489 of November 30, 1942.[†]

3. At that time also we were under the impression that the inclusion of a "travel, reside and carry on commerce" clause would involve rights of entry which we were not prepared to accord. We have since been informed, and the text of our present draft assures, that this clause refers only to such rights as have been "long accorded" to Chinese nationals by Canada.

4. Finally, public opinion in Canada has been modified by considerations similar to those which in the United States have resulted in Congress according an immigration quota to China.

5. Under these circumstances we are disposed to conclude an agreement with China which will preserve our essential property rights in that country and yet, without conceding any vital principle, meet some parts of the Chinese case.

6. In the treaty which we now propose to conclude the only changes from our original intention are the inclusion of articles which:

- (a) provide protection for Canadian property rights in China;
- (b) provide for consular notification in the case of the arrest of Canadian nationals in China or Chinese nationals in Canada;
- (c) recognize, on a reciprocal basis, the right of Chinese to "travel, reside and carry on commerce" in Canada insofar as those rights have already been "long accorded";
- (d) commit both countries to enter into negotiations, after the conclusion of the war, for the conclusion of a "comprehensive modern treaty or treaties of friendship, commerce, navigation and consular rights."

Of these (a) and (b) are obviously in our favour; (c) is a gesture as it merely confirms present practice, and (d) refers to a plan which in any case we would be disposed to favour. (In connection with (d) it will be noted that a reciprocal clause granting most favoured nation treatment in regard to immigration is not a necessary element in such a treaty and no such clause will be included in any agreement we may make with China.) In other words, it is our view that in agreeing to the conclusion of a treaty of this kind we will be strengthening our own position in a very material way, without conceding any rights which could be invoked to our disadvantage. There are no "vague general propositions" in our text and while we may not be wholly cognizant of the Australian point of view, we can see nothing in the principles involved in the proposed Treaty that would in any way affect the maintenance of, for example, the "White Australia" policy.

7. It is hoped that these fuller explanations will remove Dr. Evatt's fear that the early conclusion of a treaty along the lines proposed between Canada and China would embarrass the Australian Government.

8. In connection with this whole matter you should inform Dr. Evatt that we propose shortly to discuss with the Chinese Minister the conclusion of an Immigration Agreement which, if accepted by the Chinese, would enable us to rescind the Chinese Immigration Act against which considerable hostility has been aroused in Canada as well as in China. Our proposed agreement would prohibit immigration entirely but would permit the reciprocal admission of restricted numbers of persons of specified categories for limited periods and defined purposes. A more detailed description of our proposals will be given to the Australian High Commissioner in Ottawa shortly for transmission to Canberra.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION

1. A meeting was held in Mr. Robertson's office at 11 a.m., Friday, December 3, to discuss the draft of the proposed treaty with China on immigration which had been previously circulated by Mr. Keenleyside.²³ The following attended:

Mr. N. A. Robertson
 Mr. J. E. Read
 Mr. H. L. Keenleyside
 Mr. H. F. Angus
 Mr. H. F. Feaver
 Miss K. B. Bingay
 Miss B. M. Bridge
 Dr. E. H. Coleman
 Mr. A. L. Jolliffe

2. By way of introduction Mr. Robertson stated that the government is anxious to get this question cleared up as quickly as possible. The Prime Minister feels that, quite apart from general considerations, the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Acts by the United States has made some action here urgently necessary. The present is probably the easiest time to get such action accepted by the Canadian public. Mr. Read added that through the whole country east of the Rockies there is a rising resentment on the part of all people of the old-time liberal faith against the government's policy which is likely to break loose in a national political issue of an unpleasant type unless something is done soon. Mr. Keenleyside said that he was rather disturbed by a recent telegram from General Odium²⁴ in which he stated, in effect, that the result of the American action was such as to make it rather unnecessary for Canada to do anything. The Chinese were so impressed and pleased by what the Americans have done that they would take little notice of what Canada did subsequently. In fact, action by Canada at this time might be taken as an indication that Ottawa merely follows in the steps of Washington. The views expressed by the Minister here are at variance with earlier reports that he had encountered in China much criticism of Canadian policy with respect to Chinese immigration. Mr. Jolliffe was of the opinion that after the present enthusiasm for the American action waned, criticism of the Canadian position would be renewed. In any event, the question is coming up in a small way every day. The Chinese with whom the Immigration Branch has to deal are very antagonistic. There is the added consideration that our present policy is being widely and critically discussed in the press.

²² B. M. Bridge.

3. Mr. Keenleyside said that the latest draft of the proposed treaty incorporates the changes suggested last year by the Prime Minister and by the Immigration Branch. The text was then discussed in detail.

Article I: There was considerable discussion over the restriction of the power to issue permits to a Commissioner of Immigration and to the Governments of China and Canada respectively. It was felt by some that the Embassies and Consular Officers should not be excluded. Since, on the Canadian side at least, it is probable that there will be set up one central authority for the issuance of permits, it was decided that applications for permits might be made to the Embassy or to Canadian Consular Officers in China who would forward them to the central authority. It was suggested that the text of the present Article should be changed by inserting some such phrase as "or other authorized representatives" after "the National Government of China" and "Canadian Government".

Mr. Keenleyside said that the significant phrase in the Article was "... after a full investigation of the circumstances surrounding the application". For instance, if a Chinese doctor wished to come to Canada the investigation would cover such points as where he intended to practice, the size of the Chinese community there, and the number of Chinese doctors already in the area. If the circumstances did not warrant the admission of another Chinese doctor to that district, his application would be rejected. The provision would therefore, in effect, give us control not only of the number of immigrants but also of their distribution.

With reference to the last sentence, a visa would be granted only after the applicant had secured an Immigration Permit. Visas would be granted by Canadian or British Consular Officers.

Article II: The list of Treaty Occupations was extended by the addition of nurses and members of religious orders. Clerks and business assistants were to be admitted for employment only by their own nationals engaged in Treaty Occupations. It was decided that, while it was very necessary to spell out definitions of the various Treaty Occupations, this should not be done in the treaty but in an exchange of notes concurrently with the signing of the treaty. It was considered advisable to delete the sentence reading "This list of persons to whom Permits may be issued may be reduced, extended or interpreted by exchange of notes" because it might provoke embarrassing questions in the House from British Columbia members.

Article III: Mr. Keenleyside explained that this Article had two primary purposes: (1) to protect Canadian church and medical interests in China which have recently been experiencing considerable difficulty over titles to property, and (2) to prevent Chinese in Canada from acquiring large tracts of agricultural land. (The figure 10,000 inhabitants had been taken direct from some existing Act.) It was suggested that the text of this Article should be checked by some competent authority to determine whether or not it covers the position of church and medical interests adequately.

Article IV: It was agreed that the sentence "The visa will in each case be granted without cost" should be deleted, after Mr. Robertson had questioned the advisability of giving one country special treatment and had suggested that we should not exclude the possibility of partially financing the Consular Service in the future by visa fees.

Mr. Jolliffe pointed out that this Article would make it impossible to exercise supervision over indentured coolie labour passing through Canada en route to the West Indies and the United States. Under the provisions of the Chinese Exclusion Act the arrangement was to have coolie labourers pass through on bonded trains. Under the proposed treaty they would be permitted to go through as tourists and there was no adequate means of ensuring that they would reach their destination. Various methods of meeting this difficulty were discussed, the most satisfactory of which seemed to be Mr. Read's suggestion that there should be included in the Immigration Act or Regulations a general provision for control of aliens in transit through Canada under contracts of indenture. Such a provision would have no specific application to Chinese as such. Mr. Read and Mr. Jolliffe were to look into this in greater detail.

Article V: The effect of this Article is that children born in Canada of Chinese nationals shall be deemed to be Chinese nationals and shall not by reason of their place of birth acquire Canadian nationality or citizenship. This brings up the old difficulty in respect of Canadian nationals, Canadian citizens and the status of a British subject. As the Article is now worded such children would still be British subjects under Section 3 of the Naturalization Act. The following drafting changes were suggested: insertion of the word "hereafter" in line 1 ("Children born hereafter in China . . ."), substitution of "citizens" for "nationals" throughout the Article, and alteration of the last line of sentence 1 to read ". . . shall not, by reason of their place of birth, become Canadian citizens or British subjects." Dr. Coleman pointed out that this Article overturns both the Naturalization Act and the Common Law. There would be no legal difficulty, however, if the treaty is ratified by legislation. Mr. Read and Mr. Jolliffe agreed to give immediate consideration to the question of clearing up the present anomalous position with regard to the use and interpretation of the terms "Canadian national" and "Canadian citizen".

Article VI: The text of the present draft was agreed to be satisfactory.

Article VII: Mr. Angus asked whether it was proposed that the fellowships would have to be held at a university. Mr. Keenleyside said that such had been the intention. Mr. Robertson expressed some concern over the possibility of generalizing from this agreement. He had in mind particularly Latin America.

4. Mr. Jolliffe said that it was essential that the present practice should be continued whereby Chinese leaving Canada to visit China must register. This could be made a reciprocal administrative arrangement.

5. A brief discussion followed on the possible alternatives to the proposed treaty. The suggestion of a "Gentleman's Agreement" along the lines of that which we had with Japan was agreed to be unsatisfactory. The establishment of a quota system would be attended by innumerable difficulties and would, in addition, require years of study. A third alternative — that of trying to apply the Immigration Act by solving each individual case separately — was not considered feasible. Although the proposed treaty appeared to be the most hopeful approach to the problem, Mr. Keenleyside was not very sanguine of Chinese acceptance now. A few years ago there is little doubt that they would have welcomed it. In presenting it to them we shall have to make it clear that this is about as far as we can go. The only alternative is a continuation of the present regime or something like it.

6. The question was raised of the effect of this treaty upon the East Indians. It was suggested that an agreement along similar lines might be worked out for them.

Canberra, December 18, 1943

SECRET. 1. I had a talk with Dr. Evatt yesterday as a result of an appointment requested by me. His attitude most friendly. Purpose of my visit was to have general talk on Mutual Aid difficulties, but before I could say anything he raised question covered by your telegram No. 226 of December 3rd, Chinese Treaty.

2. His attitude towards China very antagonistic. He stated that in his opinion war between China and Japan was at an end and that Japan had complete control of the situation. He stated further that Chinese were not to be trusted and were not dependable Allies and that no concessions made to them in this matter would eventually satisfy them, but would be used merely as stepping-stones to further demands for more concessions. If door opened in slightest degree permitting entry of Chinese, that by a deliberate policy of infiltration they would form a very serious problem. He stated that in his opinion China was using Canada as a lever to force Australia to enter into a similar Treaty.

3. It is quite apparent that he does not intend to go any further than relinquishment of extraterritorial rights in China.

4. He then suggested that Canada had made a complete volte-face on its Chinese policy and stated that an agreement had been reached between Canada and Australia whereby concessions would be limited to relinquishment of extraterritorial rights. I pointed out that this was incorrect, as we never agreed to anything, but merely advised them of what we intended to do. He then agreed that this was as far as we had gone.

5. He then went on to say that in his opinion fulfilling Canada's proposed action was not in her own interests and that he did not believe in subterfuge, and that action of the United States, and now of Canada, might be deemed to come within this appellation or, in other words that, by circuitous methods not open and above board, Canada and the United States were arriving at a certain result, viz., virtual exclusion, without stating the objective. As an example of what he had in mind, he stated that the New York Times recently carried a statement by President Roosevelt on repeal of Chinese Exclusion Act wherein he lauded this action, and that in another column of the same issue was another statement by the President that this action would not mean much, as result would only admit one hundred odd Chinese a year. His feeling is that if Chinese are to be excluded this should be stated as definite national policy and not attained by these means.

6. He then stated that in any event this was none of his business and that in reality whatever Canada did was her own affair and that no doubt our proposed action might be necessary under Canadian conditions and that he thoroughly understood that under such conditions we might have to take our proposed action.

7. If we took our proposed action, he said that he would not comment publicly upon it unless situation here made it necessary, when he would try to comment in such a way as to embarrass Canada as little as possible. He indicated that if he was forced to comment he would say that Canada at one time had indicated she was only going as far as relinquishing extraterritoriality but for reasons best known to herself she had found initiative to go further than she intended.

8. I then suggested to him that if he had to comment he could well distinguish Canada's position from their own by drawing attention to the fact that both United States and Canada had specific Acts dealing with Chinese immigration, whereas Australia had no such Act, but Australia's laws were of general application, applying to all nations alike. He thanked me for suggestion and said it might be very useful.

9. The sum total of my talk is that he expects Canada to go ahead as indicated by you but that Australia will not follow suit and if necessary to comment here on Canada's action it will be explained along lines suggested by me. I believe he is reporting our conversation to Glasgow.

10. My personal view is that your proposed action is in interests of Australia. Nothing can change geographical position of China and Australia. Nothing can change (word omitted) factor. China is going to be Great Power in the Pacific and Australia must live with her. Therefore it is better for the future that complete goodwill be created now between China and Australia and that if Australia's Chinese exclusion policy can be attained by mutual agreement and with goodwill it is infinitely better than attainment of this policy by present unilateral policy which is resented. If our action forces their hand under the circumstances we will have done this land a service. I do not know if I am expected to express opinions on policy but that is how I feel.

Dear Mr. Keenleyside,

This is merely for the purpose of recording our discussion of the 15th instant relative to the proposed Immigration Treaty with China.

It was understood that whilst Article I authorizes the issuance of Immigration Permits by the Canadian Embassy in China, such documents would actually be issued by an immigration official after investigation. This procedure would be necessary as this Service is responsible for the administration of the Immigration Act and Regulations.

The use of the term "Canadian citizen" in Article V was discussed at some length. We agreed that as the Article now reads a child born of Canadian parents in China would be admissible to Canada as a matter of right irrespective of the Immigration Act and that this fact would place such a child in a preferred class as compared with the children born in other parts of the world of Canadian parents. I believe you intend discussing this with Mr. J.E. Read.

I mentioned Chinese who are now in Canada under permit, as for instance, the children born in China of Chinese women who are permanent residents of Canada and who were visiting in China at the time of the children's birth; as the family were Canadian residents we allowed the entry of the Chinese born children under permit, which document is extended from year to year. I believe you considered that this class could not be dealt with under the Treaty.

The matter of the registration outward of Chinese residents of Canada intending to visit in China was also examined and it was decided that this should be considered by Mr. Read. Unless such Chinese register under some procedure such as is now required under the Chinese Immigration Act, it would be impossible for this Service to prevent the illegal entry of Chinese by misrepresentation. Further, many of the Chinese naturally would not register unless some statutory provision cancelled their right to return if they left Canada without registration.

The matter of Chinese passing through Canada in bond was examined and I think you intended asking Mr. Read for his opinion as to what could be done to continue handling this traffic under some government control.

Yours very truly,

A. L. JOLLIFFE

MOST SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: My telegram Circular M. 131 of July 2nd, 1941. Dr. Benes²⁵ has pressed for some further declaration by His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to make clear that reservations set out in paragraph 6 of my telegram under reference implied no difference in status between Czechoslovak and other Allied Governments. In view of trials through which Czechoslovak people have been passing since death of Heydrich,²⁶ we think it desirable for psychological reasons to give Benes such satisfaction as is possible, and propose that further communication should be made to Czechoslovak Government in terms set out in my immediately following telegram. We contemplate that second part of communication would not be published until arrangements had been made for addition of Sudeten German representatives to Czechoslovak State Council.

2. We understand moreover that Czechoslovak Government are considering post-war reduction of Sudeten German minority as they consider that present 3 [and a] quarter million Sudeten Germans are too large for successful absorption in Czechoslovak State of some 15 million inhabitants. Their general idea at present is to agree to transfer to Germany of certain small districts of little strategic importance and inhabited almost exclusively by 600,000 to 700,000 Sudeten Germans. They then hope by expulsion of some Sudeten Germans as war criminals and transfer of additional million to reduce Sudeten German minority to about 1,000,000. It is proposed that in discussions with Benes and Sudeten German representatives we should indicate that United Kingdom Government approved in principle transfer to Germany after war in appropriate cases of German minorities in central and southeastern Europe, but special care will be taken to make it clear that principle approved related only to transfer of populations and did not commit us as regards transfer of territory. MOST SECRET. My immediately preceding telegram. Following is text of communication, Begins: In a letter to Czechoslovakian Minister for Foreign Affairs dated July 18th, 1941, His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs stated the King had decided to accredit an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Dr. Benes as President of Czechoslovakian Republic. Mr. Eden went on to explain that this decision implied his Government in the United Kingdom now regarded juridical position of President and Government of Czechoslovak Republic as identical with that of other Allied Heads of States and Governments established in this country.

The Prime Minister had already stated in a message broadcast to the Czechoslovak people on September 30th, 1940, the attitude of his Government in regard to arrangements reached at Munich in 1938. Mr. Churchill then said Munich agreement had been destroyed by the Germans. This statement was formally communicated to Dr. Benes on November 11th, 1940.

The foregoing statement and formal act of recognition have guided the policy of His Majesty's Government in regard to Czechoslovakia but, in order to avoid any possible misunderstanding, his Government now desires to declare that as Germany had deliberately destroyed arrangements concerning Czechoslovakia reached in 1938, in which His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom participated, his Government regard themselves as free from any engagements in this respect. At final settlement of Czechoslovak frontiers to be reached at the end of the war, they will not be influenced by any changes effected in and since 1938.

2. His Government also desire to assure Czechoslovak Government that upon receipt of a notification from that Government that adequate Sudeten representation has been arranged in State Council and that Sudeten representatives have taken their seats in Council, his Government will be prepared to withdraw reservations regarding relationship between Czechoslovak Government and certain categories of former Czechoslovak nationals now in British territory contained in Mr. Eden's second letter to M. Masaryk of July 18th, 1941. Ends.

[Ottawa,] July 10, 1942

With regard to Dominions Office Circulars D. 324 and 325 of July 8th, so far as I can judge from this file Canada has lagged behind other Allied Governments and especially the United Kingdom in recognizing the Government of Czechoslovakia. It appears that no further action has been taken since October 23rd, 1940, when we recognized the Provisional Czechoslovak Government.²⁷ Since then the British Government has taken the action described in Circular M. 131 of July 2nd, 1941,[†] and now proposes to take further steps to place the Czechoslovak Government on the same status as the other Allied Governments.

I agree with Mr. Robertson's comment that we have been remiss in not taking action. An opportunity for catching up with our Allies in this respect will arise almost at once. Yesterday a telegram[†] was sent to London saying that we were prepared to announce immediately the establishment of a Czechoslovak Legation in Ottawa. This provides us with as good a chance of stating our attitude towards the Benes Government as will occur.

Before taking the matter up with the Under-Secretary, I should be glad to have your opinion on the legal position.²⁸

With reference to my immediately preceding telegram²⁹ and to Dominions Office Circulars D. 324 and 325 of July 8th, advantage was taken of announcement of appointment of Czechoslovak Minister to bring Canadian recognition of Czechoslovak Government into line with that accorded by United Kingdom. Our last formal act in this respect was recognition in October 1940 of the Provisional Czechoslovak Government. You might inform United Kingdom authorities of action now taken as set forth in paragraph 3 of my preceding telegram.

RECOGNITION OF ETHIOPIA

In December, 1938, the Canadian Government, in concert with the United Kingdom Government and most other members of the League of Nations, recognized the sovereignty of the King of Italy as Emperor of Ethiopia. Ethiopia is now once more free and independent. The United Kingdom Government have recognized Haile Selassie as Emperor and his country has been accepted as a member of the United Nations.

In a note of December 12th[†], the Ethiopian Minister in London informed our High Commissioner officially that "a proclamation has been promulgated by the Imperial Ethiopian Government declaring that a state of war exists between Ethiopia and Germany and Japan as well as Italy."

In view of the fact that Ethiopia has declared war on the three principal Axis powers and in view of its acceptance as one of the United Nations, it would seem desirable that Canada should formally withdraw its recognition of Italian sovereignty over this country and recognize Haile Selassie as its rightful sovereign.

If this action is approved, recognition could be most appropriately effected by a note from our High Commissioner in London to the Ethiopian Minister there. I enclose a draft[†], for your approval, which we might authorize Mr. Massey to send.³¹

IMMEDIATE

Dear Mr. Robertson,

In paragraph 11 of his telegram to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Circular D. 116 of the 2nd March[†], the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs outlined a programme of relief shipments of wheat or flour for Greece which it had been decided to carry out in addition to the temporary relief measure which had already been agreed upon.

I have now received a telegram from Mr. Attlee on the subject of this wider scheme. The position is that the United Kingdom Government are still awaiting a reply from the Axis Governments to the proposals which the Swedish Government have put to them on the lines set out in the telegram to which I have referred. In the meantime they have been considering the procedure to be followed from the financial standpoint in the event of Axis consent to the scheme being secured.

The Swedish Government have undertaken to pay the expenses of the Control Commission, but it will of course be necessary to reimburse them for the use of their ships. The present view of the United Kingdom Government is that the money for this purpose should be found by the Greek Government themselves, and it is hoped to arrange this with them. There remains the cost of the wheat, and the United Kingdom Government would like, for political reasons, to offer this to the Greek Government free of charge. Indeed, from the propaganda standpoint, it is as much in our own interest as in theirs that we should make a practical contribution towards the scheme and one which will be publicly known.

The matter is not free from complications, however, since on technical grounds the United Kingdom Government are advised that the wheat to be supplied should come from their stocks in Canada. The amount involved would be of the order of 15,000 tons a month. There are two sources from which this might be drawn; it might come from the balance of the United Kingdom stocks in Canada which have been paid for in sterling, now to be converted into the Dollar Loan; or it might come from later purchases, the cost of which would be charged against the Canadian Government's billion dollar gift. In the former case it is hoped that there would be no objection to the United Kingdom Government transferring the wheat to the Greek Government free of charge, even though the replacement of the United Kingdom's own needs would come from the billion dollar gift, and would thus be made at Canadian expense. On the other hand, in the latter case the gift to the Greeks would in effect be a Canadian gift, and the United Kingdom Government would actually be making no financial contribution. In such circumstances it is felt that the Canadian Government might prefer the gift to be regarded as coming from Canada and to offer the wheat to the Greek Government direct.

I have been asked to obtain the views of the Canadian Government on this matter urgently. The United Kingdom Government will be entirely ready to fall in with whatever procedure they prefer. The main preoccupation of the United Kingdom Government is that the wheat shall be supplied for shipment to the Greek Government without charge and if the Canadian Government should wish in the circumstances to take direct responsibility for the supply, they would of course be wholly content with this suggestion. In this event, however, it is hoped that the Canadian Government would agree as a matter of convenience to the necessary negotiations being conducted by the United Kingdom Government on their behalf.

Yours sincerely,

PATRICK DUFF

SECRET AND IMMEDIATE

Ottawa, April 11, 1942

Dear Sir Patrick [Duff],

I wish to refer to your letter of March 30th regarding arrangements in contemplation for relief shipments of wheat and flour for Greece and to inform you that the Canadian Government will be glad to be associated with the proposed gift of wheat to Greece. As you will be aware, the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States, Australia, Argentina and Canada are on the point of subscribing to a Memorandum of Agreement looking toward the conclusion of a comprehensive international wheat agreement.³² This Memorandum of Agreement provides, inter alia, for the immediate establishment of a pool of wheat and flour for relief in war-stricken and other necessitous areas so soon as the international situation permits. Article VI of the draft Wheat Convention which is to become operative as soon as the Memorandum of Agreement is initialled, provides that the Governments of Canada, the United Kingdom and the United States of America give to the relief pool "as and when required by the Council" (which is to be set up under the Agreement), 25,000,000 and 50,000,000 bushels respectively of wheat or its equivalent in whole or in part of flour, f.o.b. seaboard port in the country of origin. The Canadian Government are of the opinion that the proposed arrangements for the provision of relief wheat to Greece could, with advantage, be related to and form a first instalment of the plan for the provision of free wheat to war-stricken and necessitous areas which has been worked out by the countries participating in the Washington wheat negotiations. It is not suggested that deliveries of wheat to Greece should be deferred until the Memorandum of Agreement has been initialled and the Council contemplated under Articles VI and VII of the Draft Convention set up. In view of the desperate food situation prevailing in Greece, it should be possible to secure the interim concurrence of the other countries associated in the wheat negotiations to the wheat shipments proposed under the arrangement which the United Kingdom Government is negotiating, going forward at once from Canada as the first Canadian contribution under the proposed relief pool.

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I duly communicated to the authorities in London the contents of your letter of the 30th March³³ about relief shipments of wheat to Greece. I have now received a reply to the following effect.

³³ Ceci est une erreur. La lettre en question est celle du 11 avril, le document précédent.

³³ This is an error. The letter in question is that of April 11, the preceding document.

The United Kingdom Government welcome the readiness of the Canadian Government to provide wheat at once for Greek requirements. The Canadian Government will, however, realise that the United Kingdom Government are willing to allow limited quantities of cereals to go to Greece through the blockade only because they regard the desperate food situation there as entirely exceptional. Similar concessions are not being made to other Allied Governments and it is most important that these Governments should not be given an opportunity to claim this transaction as a precedent nor be put in a position where they could be blamed by their countrymen for not so claiming.

Furthermore, owing to the great delicacy of the question of sending relief through the blockade, the United Kingdom authorities would not wish to bring the Argentine Government into this matter at this stage.

In these circumstances the United Kingdom Government would greatly prefer that the wheat should be made available to Greece on an ad hoc basis. They would, however, see no objection to the Canadian Government, at a later stage, asking the Governments concerned to regard these shipments as part of the Canadian contribution to the relief pool when it is instituted. For their part, the United Kingdom Government would be ready to agree to the shipments being so regarded.

It is very much hoped that the Canadian Government will agree with the foregoing, and I am asked to enquire whether in that event it may be assumed that the wheat will be a gift from the Canadian Government and will not be financed from the billion dollar gift to the United Kingdom. I am also asked to express the hope that the wheat will be available without delay. The Italian Government are understood to have agreed to the scheme put to them by the Swedish Government and the German reply is believed to be awaited in Stockholm any day now.

Dear Sir Patrick [Duff],

I would like to refer to your letter of April 20th and our previous correspondence on the subject of relief shipments of wheat to Greece. On reconsideration of this question and in the light of the views expressed in your letter, it has been decided not to press the original suggestion, outlined in my secret letter of April 11th, that the contribution of wheat from Canada should be related to the plans for the international wheat relief pool. In the circumstances, the Canadian Government are prepared to make a free gift of 15,000 tons of wheat a month from Canadian stocks. I am to add that the Canadian Government were glad to learn that the United Kingdom Government, for their part, would be ready to regard this gift of wheat by Canada as an instalment of the Canadian contribution under the proposed Wheat Relief Pool.

I am bringing this decision at once to the attention of the Canadian Wheat Board and asking the Board to make the necessary arrangements for shipment without delay.

Yours sincerely,

WHEAT FOR GREECE

When you receive the Greek King and Prime Minister Tsouderos this morning, it would be appropriate to say something to them about the provision which the Canadian Government is making of 15,000 tons of wheat a month as a free gift for the relief of the desperate food situation in Greece.

The negotiations for the establishment of the relief scheme have been worked out in consultation with the United Kingdom Government and the Swedish Government, with the collaboration of the International Red Cross. The Italian and German Governments were at first unwilling to accept the safeguarding conditions it was necessary to impose, but they have now agreed to do so. The principal point of difficulty was the composition and status of the Control Commission which was to supervise the distribution of relief in Greece. The International Red Cross worked out a formula which, while leaving in existence as liaison with the occupying powers the present Athens Relief Committee, on which the Axis Red Cross are represented, gives independent powers of control and reporting to a purely neutral body of Swiss and Swedes. The way now seems to be clear for the scheme to be introduced and the Swedish Government have asked the Italian and German Governments for safe conducts for the first three Swedish ships to sail from the Baltic to Canada to load wheat.

The Swedish Government have urged strongly that no publicity should be given at present to the proposed sailing of these three vessels lest this should give rise to further difficulties with the Axis for the granting of safe conducts.

The Greek Minister told me last night that his King would like to express his country's gratitude for the Canadian share in these relief arrangements in the broadcast which he is making tomorrow and it would be easier for him to do so if you raised the question in your conversation with him and Tsouderos this morning. So far as we are concerned, the arrangements have not been negotiated at any stage with the Greek Government itself. There could be no objection to the King of Greece officially acknowledging, on behalf of his country, the assistance which the Government of Canada is arranging to give.

RELIEF WHEAT FOR GREECE

During the past year Canada agreed to make a donation of 15,000 tons of wheat a month, to be shipped by Swedish vessels, for relief distribution in Greece. Owing to shipping difficulties, it has not been possible to transport this full amount during this year, and we have now received an inquiry from the United Kingdom authorities as to whether the Canadian Government would be willing to carry forward 12,000 tons of this deficiency. It is suggested that this amount should be shipped during the year ending in September 1944 as an addition to the present programme of 15,000 tons a month. The quantity of wheat already authorized as a gift to Greece would include this additional amount for 1944 and no further financial burden would arise. The Wheat Board has reported that the additional 12,000 tons could be made available, if approval is given.

The following is a quotation from a report by Mr. Deutsch on the Greek relief scheme:

“At the UNRRA Conference at Atlantic City I had the opportunity of a conversation with Dr. Mohn, former Chairman of the Swedish-Swiss Relief Commission in Athens, concerning the distribution of Canadian relief wheat in Greece. Dr. Mohn was most emphatic regarding the importance of this contribution in avoiding serious starvation on the part of a large section of the Greek population. He said that the Canadian wheat shipments provide an average of from 500 to 700 calories a day to about 3,000,000 people. This constitutes from 1/3 to 1/2 of the average total consumption of foodstuffs available to this population and makes up all the difference between subsistence and starvation. He said that the food provided by the Canadian wheat could not be obtained from any other source. Dr. Mohn assured me that the Greek people are keenly aware of the assistance given by Canada, for which they are most grateful.

Dr. Mohn said it was very urgent that the 15,000 tons a month should go forward as regularly as possible. Since there are no local reserves, any delays in arrivals would cause much difficulty. There were some delays during the past year owing to shipping difficulties which the Relief Commission hopes can be made up by additional shipments in the near future. This would appear to be the origin of the British suggestion for an increase of 12,000 tons in the shipments during 1944.”³⁴

Le Premier ministre au secrétaire d'État
Prime Minister to Secretary of State

Ottawa, April 8, 1942

My dear Colleague,

For some time now the Netherlands Minister to Canada has been increasingly anxious to reach a settlement of the position of Netherlands assets in Canada, a problem which has been the subject of much consideration by the Deputy Custodian and Assistant Deputy Custodian, as well as by the Department of External Affairs, for almost two years. Continual postponement of any solution has given rise to much embarrassment, and I think it would be most desirable if you could give this matter your attention with a view to resolving a very complicated situation.

The principal difficulty arises out of the fact that by Order in Council P.C. 1936 of May 11, 1940, the Netherlands was declared proscribed territory, and Netherlands assets in Canada became vested in the Custodian, which position came into conflict with that which the Netherlands Government sought to establish under a Royal Decree of May 24th, 1940.³⁵ The Royal Decree vested in the Netherlands Government all assets in Canada, as well as elsewhere abroad, which belonged to persons resident in the occupied Netherlands. A further Decree of March 6, 1942, did the same with respect to assets of Netherlands citizens resident in the Netherlands East Indies. Thus, under our Order in Council the assets vest in the Canadian Custodian while from the Netherlands point of view they should and do vest in the Netherlands Government.

Precisely the same situation arose in the United Kingdom, and negotiations have been carried on there in an effort to settle the problem. Some progress has been made, I believe, although our information is indefinite. Our latest communication from the High Commissioner in the United Kingdom stated that negotiations are still in progress.

As a matter of policy there seems to be much in favour of making some concession to the Netherlands point of view, inasmuch as their Government receives full recognition as a member of the United Nations in opposition to the Axis. Certainly anything which we can do to remove unnecessary friction without impairing the Custodian's position, or that of Canadian nationals, would be very desirable.

I should much appreciate it if you would consider this matter and let me have your opinion as soon as possible as to whether it is practicable to do anything to meet the views of the Netherlands Government.

Le secrétaire d'État au Premier ministre

Secretary of State to Prime Minister

Ottawa, May 8, 1942

My dear Prime Minister,

The subject raised in your letter to me of the 8th ultimo, the question of Netherlands assets in Canada, is one to which I have been giving attention and study.

I am sure you will recognize that it is but one aspect of a difficult problem. It seems to me that any action taken in respect to the suggestion of the Netherlands Minister would necessarily involve, sooner or later, a similar policy being followed in respect to Norwegian, Belgian, Yugoslav and Greek assets, for all of these countries have governments established in London and at least two of them, the Norwegian and Belgian Governments, have promulgated decrees similar in general purport to the Decree of the Queen of Holland of May 24th, 1940. I would anticipate also that sooner or later we would have similar proposals from the Polish and Czechoslovakian Governments and, possibly, from a Free French Government, should one be set up. Of course, from the point of view of the value of the assets now vested in the Custodian, the three most significant countries are the Netherlands, Belgium and France.

The problem in relation to the Netherlands is a very complicated one. It is a notorious fact in financial circles that, until the invasion of the Netherlands in May 1940, banks, trust companies and holding companies incorporated in Holland and, conspicuously, companies and firms identified with the Amsterdam Stock Exchange, were the depositaries of enemy capital and of what President Roosevelt some years ago described as "hot money". In other words, sums of money and securities which stood in the books of Canadian banks and corporations in the name of Dutch companies, banks, banking partnerships and investment trusts, constituted monies and securities which, in a great many cases, were held in trust for undisclosed clients. In a few cases the Canadian Custodian and the British Custodian have been able to establish that the Netherlands corporate structure has been a mere shell and that the beneficial owners are enemies. It seems clear, therefore, that in relation to a very considerable proportion of the monies and securities held in Canada, nominally for Netherlands institutions and partnerships, the actual interest of Dutch subjects can scarcely at present be ascertained.³⁶

There is a further difficulty which I have ascertained is present in the minds of the authorities in the United Kingdom. In the Netherlands financial world, many of the leading banking houses were partnerships. The securities in the names of these houses – securities which, as I have suggested, are held for clients in most cases – were deposited with banks and trust companies in Canada and in England, as well as in the United States, subject to withdrawal on the signatures of two or more specified partners. In the case of one of the large banking firms, two partners escaped from Holland and are now in the United States. My information is that there were six partners in this banking firm, which operated somewhat along the lines of the old firm of J. P. Morgan and Company. It happened that neither of the two partners who escaped is a signing partner. In 1941, the Netherlands Government in London, by decree, amended the partnership articles to confer on the two partners who had escaped the signing powers of the partnership. The banks and trust companies in England and in Canada, however, take the position that the decree of the Netherlands Government in London cannot, in law, discharge them from their contractual obligation to recognize only the signatures of the partners specified in the contract of deposit. Unless, therefore, they are bound by some legislative Act or an Order-in-Council, valid under Canadian law, which would be sufficient to protect them from actions for breach of contract, it is not probable that Canadian banks and trust companies would assume the risk of paying over either to the Netherlands Government or to persons nominated by that Government monies or securities held for Dutch holders and now vested in the Custodian under the Order-in-Council of May 11th, 1940, even if our control should be relinquished.

It must not be overlooked that by the Order-in-Council of May 11th, 1940, the Government of Canada took action to protect and preserve Dutch assets, and still maintains these assets. The effect of our action at that time has been that the Germans who have ransacked safety deposit boxes cannot, by duress, compel Dutch holders of shares in such companies as, for example, International Nickel, to execute transfers which will be recognized by the transfer officer of the Company.

I have recently been in New York and I have ascertained from responsible sources there that the attitude which may be taken by the Enemy Property

³⁶ La note suivante était écrite sur cette copie de la lettre:

We have not suggested transfer to Neth[erlands] Gov[ernment].

³⁶ The following note was written on this copy of the letter:

Custodian in the United States has not yet been determined. I have also ascertained from the Controller of the Trading with the Enemy Branch of the Treasury and the Board of Trade in the United Kingdom, who is presently on this continent, that no final determination has been reached in the United Kingdom. It is the view of this officer, who has had a great deal of experience in relation to enemy property in England that it might be embarrassing to the United Kingdom authorities and to the United States authorities if Canada, without further consultation, should take action which could be interpreted as granting full force and effect to the Decree of the 24th May, 1940.

I am aware that, before the United States entered the War, a Court in New York, in a decision, appeared to recognize the Decree but this was in relation to litigation where the claimant was a purchaser from a German Commissar who, so far as could be ascertained, had appropriated the property from the Dutch owners. This decision, I am informed, is now under review by the Court of Appeals of the State of New York and, no doubt, will later reach the Supreme Court of the United States. It is not yet apparent how far the policy of the Custodian of Enemy Property may be influenced by the course of this litigation.

As I am sure you will understand, I do not find, in any quarter, lack of sympathy with the Netherlands Government and the Netherlands people, who have made such heroic sacrifices in the common cause. The situation is, however, that I fear if the Custodian were to relinquish control of Netherlands assets in Canada we might be taking a step which might have serious repercussions in other allied nations.

I am not sure whether you have been informed that in relation to Dutch Government property and to the Netherlands Shipping Mission the Custodian has consistently refrained from taking any action under the Trading with the Enemy Regulations. We have felt that the operations of that Mission are under Allied control and that we should not impede in any way the operations of the Shipping Mission.

Following the action taken in declaring the Netherlands to be proscribed territory, on the 11th May, 1940, and the announcement of the Decree of the Queen of Holland on the 24th May, a meeting was held in the office of the Deputy Custodian, attended by the Netherlands Minister, by the Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs, and by a representative of the Bank of Canada, at which assurances were given the Netherlands Minister that in the case of Dutch trading companies which had transferred their seat from the Netherlands to the Netherlands West or East Indies, releases would be given on a certificate from the Netherlands Minister that he was satisfied that an effective change had taken place. The Custodian's Office is adopting a similar action in respect to Netherlands companies which had transferred to the Netherlands East Indies. Many of these companies, before the occupation of the Netherlands East Indies by the Japanese troops, transferred their head offices from the East Indies to the Netherlands West Indies.

The amount of ordinary trade debts is comparatively small and in respect to these I feel it should be relatively easy to work out a solution. It is only in respect to the monies and securities held under the conditions set out in the third paragraph of this letter that I feel gravely concerned.

I understood from the Controller of the Trading with the Enemy Branch of the British Treasury and Board of Trade that he is in close touch at Washington with the United States Custodian and the United States Treasury and that when the organization of the Custodian's Office at Washington has been completed, this is one of the problems which he thinks should be discussed at a conference between representatives of the Netherlands Government and the Governments of the United Nations or of those allied powers such as the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada, where the amounts of Netherlands property are considerable.

I may also add that this official pointed out that his experience had been that the Netherlands Government presently established in London has really no facilities for detailed investigation of many of the Netherlands holding companies and banking firms. As we are only too painfully aware, many naturalized Netherlands subjects of German birth or German origin were discovered in May 1940 to be leaders in the Fifth Column movement in Holland. A study of many of the individual cases cannot fairly be made until the enemy has been driven from Dutch territory.

My conclusion is that, while we should continue to give most favourable consideration to specific cases brought to our attention by the Netherlands Minister, we should, on the wider issue, reserve our position at least until such time as the situation has been thoroughly canvassed with the United Kingdom, the other Dominions and the United States.

Yours sincerely,

NORMAN McLARTY

1512.

Dear Mr. Coleman,

You are no doubt acquainted with the letter of April 8th sent by the Prime Minister to the Secretary of State in connection with the disposition of Netherlands assets in this country, and with the Honorable Mr. McLarty's reply of May 8th in which a very thorough and careful review was made of the whole situation. The Prime Minister has now asked me to communicate with you in an effort to arrive at some arrangement which might provide a solution to the problem, at least on a temporary basis.

As the Secretary of State showed in his letter, and as I am well aware, the question is one of great difficulty and presents very little probability of being successfully solved by any immediate settlement on a permanent basis. Until the policies which are to be followed in London and Washington have been settled, it would be difficult, and even embarrassing, for the Canadian authorities to make a final decision as to the way in which these assets should be dealt with.

The Secretary of State dealt, in his letter, with the difficulties that arise from the possible beneficial ownership by the enemy of monies and securities which, in point of form, are held by Netherlands companies, banking partnerships and individuals. There can be no disagreement as to the importance of ensuring that in no case should enemy advantage be served by relaxation of the control of the Custodian. It is consequently important that care should be exercised in such cases, while at the same time making adequate allowance for the desire of the Netherlands to assert greater control over the assets involved, and for the desirability of enabling Netherlands companies to carry on if at all possible.

It seems to me that there are two aspects to the general question which are to be recognized as requiring separate treatment. In the first place, there is the situation in which the corporate owner of certain assets is able to transfer its seat of operations from the occupied Netherlands to unoccupied territory. In such a case, if it can be reasonably well assured that the controlling personnel are not in any way associated with enemy interests, or likely to serve them, the most desirable course would seem to be to allow a release of assets. The transfer of the seats of Netherlands trading enterprises to the Netherlands West Indies or East Indies undoubtedly created circumstances in which it became possible for assets of these enterprises to be released. Since the Japanese occupation of the East Indies, new difficulties will have arisen, but I have no doubt that they, in turn, will be rectified by consequential commercial arrangements.

I think it may reasonably be considered that a certificate of transfer given by the Netherlands authorities in the case of any company is adequate evidence on which to assume that no enemy interest would be served by the full and free operation of such a company. Consequently, I am gratified to learn that the Secretary of State has adopted the policy set forth in the 10th paragraph of his letter. In dealing with the cases of trading companies which have transferred their seat from the Netherlands to the Netherlands West or East Indies, he has pointed out that releases will be given on a certificate from the Netherlands Minister that he has been satisfied that an effective change has taken place. He also pointed out that he has taken a similar action in respect of transfers from the East Indies to the West Indies. The adoption of this policy will remove one of the most serious sources of complaint from the Netherlands Government.

The second aspect of the general treatment of Netherlands assets to be considered is the position to be taken with regard to assets the owners of which cannot move or have not moved from enemy-occupied Netherlands territory, or are not eligible for certification in order to have their assets released to them even though they may have moved.

There does not seem to be much prospect of working out any arrangement, at any rate at the present stage, which would involve the transfer of monies and securities to a Netherlands custodian or any general transfer to Netherlands companies, partnerships or individuals, particularly since the Netherlands Government is not in a position to establish an administration which could undertake the custody of Netherlands assets. There would be difficulty in any policy which might lead to the immediate and direct operation of the Netherlands decree. On the other hand, the Netherlands Government would greatly appreciate any action by the Canadian administration which would give some element of recognition to the Netherlands interest in Netherlands property.

It seems to me that it might be possible without prejudicing any of the points dealt with in the Secretary of State's letter, to go so far as to appoint an adviser who would be nominated by the Netherlands Government and paid by the office of the Custodian. Such an adviser or counsellor could, without impropriety, act as an adviser to the Custodian on all questions which concerned Netherlands property. I have no doubt that the Netherlands Government would appoint either a treasury official or a trusted financial expert. I am sure that he would be helpful both in maintaining liaison with the Netherlands authorities and in giving useful advice upon the custody and disposition of Netherlands assets.

In his letter the Secretary of State points out the difficulties which would result from the reluctance of banks and trust companies in Canada to recognize the Netherlands decree. I do not think that this would be an insuperable obstacle to concessions along the lines suggested above. It would not affect the second point in any way. It might affect the wider application of principles which are embodied in the 10th paragraph of the letter, which is dealt with in the first point above. I should think, however, that, in any cases in which the Custodian thought that it would be proper to do so, he could, with justification, release property to the use and enjoyment of Netherlands companies, firms or individuals who are not under enemy control. It would then be left to them, acting under title of the Netherlands decree, to take action to get in the assets. It would then be a matter for the Courts of Canada to determine what recognition should be given to the title of the Netherlands interests concerned.

Yours sincerely,

Ottawa, June 9, 1942

Dear Mr. Robertson,

I have received your letter of the 3rd June (File No. 614-A-40).

I have discussed it with the Secretary of State. F.W. McCombe, the Controller of the Trading with the Enemy Branch of the Treasury and Board of Trade, is at present in Washington and has been attached to the British Embassy, ad interim and pending confirmation by London, as head of the Trading with the Enemy and Allied Division of the War Trade Department. He is coming to Ottawa to spend some days with us during the week beginning Monday, the 22nd. As is pointed out in Mr. McLarty's letter of May 8th, McCombe is familiar with the course of negotiations in England and in the United States and Mr. McLarty and I would like to discuss with him your latest suggestion. I may, however, remark that we have pretty well cleared up most of the trading companies to which references was made in Mr. McLarty's letter of May 8th. I may also state that no substantial change in any particular is made in the form of Netherlands assets and I cannot think of any genuine Netherlands company which has been liquidated.

As you are aware, the expenses of the Custodian's Office are provided from the commissions and not by an appropriation by Parliament. I am a little doubtful, therefore, how far we could, without impropriety, pay a Netherlands adviser, but this is a point of detail which we may consider later.

I shall write you after we have had the opportunity of discussing the matter with McCombe.

Yours sincerely,

Mémorandum de la légation des Pays-Bas
Memorandum by Legation of The Netherlands

Ottawa, July 10, 1942

On May the 8th, 1942, Mr. L.B. Pearson addressed a personal and confidential letter to Mr. Groenman[†] concerning the position of Netherlands companies transferred outside enemy-occupied territory.

In the last paragraph of that letter Mr. Pearson stated that he readily understood that the delay in the matter in question might have been irksome for the Netherlands Government and inconvenient for many Netherlands persons and firms but that he hoped that the measures which were being taken in an effort to secure a more satisfactory solution, might achieve their desired result in the very near future.

Since the writing of the above-mentioned letter a considerable time has elapsed and I therefore venture to inquire whether already any measures as quoted above have been taken or when it can be expected that these measures will be taken.

But besides, having carefully studied Mr. Pearson's letter, I would like, with regard to some views expressed therein, to make the following observations:

From information received from my Government it appears that negotiations are indeed still in progress in London concerning Netherlands assets that are subject to the provisions of the Netherlands Royal Decree of May 24th, 1940. I am not aware, however, of similar negotiations with respect to assets of corporations that have transferred their seats to unoccupied territory. Such corporations are managed by free agents, recognized as such by the Netherlands Government, confirmation of the fact being found in the ratification of the steps taken by them to effect the transfer. As you probably know, it is explicitly provided in the relevant law (Act of April 26th, 1940, Staatsblad No. 200, an act passed by the Netherlands Legislature before the Netherlands were invaded) that the notarial instrument amending the by-laws of a corporation and embodying the transfer of its seat is not valid until it has been ratified by the Governor General or Governor of the territory to which the seat is transferred or by the Minister of Justice of the Netherlands Government. Naturally, such ratification is not given unless the authorities concerned are satisfied that the Managers of the corporation are free from enemy control and will comply with the Netherlands provisions concerning trade with the enemy, etc. Proof of the ratification is to be found in the publication of the transfer in the relevant official publication. It seems to me, therefore, that the customary communication from this Legation to your Department effectively provides the proof of freedom from enemy control to which the first question Mr. Pearson raised in his letter refers.

Nor can I see on what grounds it can be questioned whether the company and its new management (if indeed there is a management not consisting of the original officers) is in fact legally entitled to succeed to the control of whatever assets may be involved. I must confess that I am very surprised to see from Mr. Pearson's letter that the Canadian authorities apparently are still arguing about the legal effects of a law passed in the normal way by the Legislature of a friendly country, two years after our two countries became allied in the common struggle.

I would like in this connection to stress again what has been pointed out repeatedly by Mr. Groenman namely that my Government cannot acquiesce in a state of affairs wherein Netherlands companies properly transferred outside enemy-occupied territory are as it seems still in a certain sense considered "enemy-controlled companies" and the measures taken by the Netherlands Government for the successful prosecution of the war are apparently ignored by officials of an allied Government.

It should be borne in mind that a.o. the above-mentioned Netherlands law of April 26th, 1940, enabled the Netherlands Government to take measures which effectively prevented large Netherlands assets to fall in enemy hands and that this end has been fully attained wherever the consequences of this law have been recognized by other Governments.

Naturally if notwithstanding all precautions taken by the Netherlands authorities the Canadian Government might still entertain any doubts about the activities of Netherlands subjects or about officers of Netherlands corporations the Netherlands authorities concerned will, I am sure, be glad to do all that is in their power to help to dispel or confirm such doubts and in the latter case to have appropriate action taken. On the other hand, it seems the time has long since come when there should no more be talk about the validity of measures legally enacted by the Netherlands Government.

The Netherlands Government being greatly concerned about this matter, it should be highly appreciated if the Canadian Government would clearly indicate its attitude towards Netherlands companies which have transferred their seats outside enemy-occupied territory.

It would seem that this could best be done by giving a definite reply to the questions which Mr. Groenman asked in his various letters and lately in his letter of April 8th, 1942, No. 2688^t, to wit: "are the transferred companies still in certain sense considered enemy-controlled and therefore prevented from disposing of their assets without the Custodian's cooperation?"

Ottawa, August 4, 1942

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your memorandum of July 10, in which you drew attention to Mr. Pearson's letter of May 8 to Mr. Groenman and further correspondence concerning the disposition of Netherlands assets in Canada. I regret very much the delay which has occurred in the disposition of this matter, and which has made necessary the lengthy correspondence that has taken place.

There has, I think, been more misunderstanding than actual disagreement involved in this question. It will, perhaps, aid in dispelling this if I state that the Canadian Government has no intention of questioning in any way the legal effect of the Netherlands Legislation of April 26, 1940, which provided for the transfer of Netherlands companies, under specified conditions, from enemy-occupied to unoccupied territory. It is fully recognized that this was an Act passed in the normal manner by the properly constituted Government of the Netherlands.

It is also recognized by the Canadian Government that the measures taken by the Netherlands authorities with regard to the certification of transfers of corporations are designed to ensure that the companies concerned will, in fact, be free from any possibility of enemy control and will comply with the Netherlands provisions concerning trade with the enemy. This is, of course, not always an easy thing to ensure, due to the possibility that persons in apparent control may in reality be cloaks for interests of a questionable nature, but the Canadian Government is fully satisfied that every effort is made by the Netherlands authorities in this regard.

Perhaps the greatest source of difficulty lies in connection with cases of the type to which you refer in the third paragraph of the third page of your memorandum, namely those in which a suspicion may be entertained that, despite every effort that has been made, there remains a possibility that the bona fides of those in control of specific corporations may not be beyond question. You have stated that, in such instances, the Netherlands authorities will be glad to do all that is in their power to help dispel or confirm such doubts and to take whatever action may be called for by the result of their investigations. I can assure you that the Canadian Government, for its part, will endeavour to do everything possible to expedite by its own efforts the achievement of a final conclusion as to the existence or absence of any suspected enemy interest. I am given to understand by the Custodian that instances of difficulty which have arisen in the past in such matters have now been almost entirely disposed of. As you indicate, the problem is entirely one of cooperation in a satisfactory investigation of doubtful interests in specific cases, and I can assure you that any cases outstanding or which may arise in the future will be given thorough and expeditious treatment. Every effort will be made to eliminate such irksome delays as may have arisen on occasion in the past.

I hope that this statement may serve to reassure you and the Netherlands authorities with respect to the points you have raised. If correspondence in the past has been read to the effect that the validity of the measures legally enacted by the Netherlands Government is in doubt, I very much regret the misunderstanding that has resulted, and I can only hope that none will exist in future. The Canadian Government fully appreciates the difficulties with which the Netherlands authorities, nationals, and commercial interests are faced, and it is sincerely hoped that active cooperation with the Netherlands authorities may serve to reduce those difficulties as much as possible.

SECRET AND PERSONAL

[Ottawa,] October 27, 1942

The Governor General spoke to the Prime Minister the other day about the arrangements that might be made for the birth of Princess Juliana's child, which is expected some time in January. The family and the Netherlands Government would like to have the child (which may be the heir to the Throne) born on Dutch soil, and with this in mind, consideration has been given to having the lying-in take place at the Netherlands Legation. However, all the medical advice is against this course, and for her going to the Ottawa Civic Hospital. The Governor General's query, which seems to be a little fanciful, is whether it would be possible to make the hospital maternity ward or some suitable part of it, Dutch territory for the occasion.

Le ministre des Pays-Bas au Premier ministre Minister of The Netherlands to Prime Minister

No. 140

Ottawa, January 22, 1943

UNOFFICIAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Dear Mr. Prime Minister,

In an official note which is being prepared on the subject of the application of P.C. 3959,³⁷ I confine myself to a few facts which illustrate better than any comment the attitude of the Custodian's Office.

Between few countries relations are more amicable than between Canada and the Netherlands. This is due, in no small part, to a spirit of active goodwill, shown by the Government over which you preside, and shown more than ever since the beginning of the misfortunes which befell the Netherlands.

In these harmonious relations, the attitude of the Custodian's office strikes a discordant note. On several occasions it only enabled the Department of External Affairs to answer my notes after a period of many months. I have found, in the replies I received, a tendency on the part of the Department of External Affairs to dissociate itself from the Custodian's point of view, by simply transmitting his statements, without endorsing them.

I have seldom noticed that anything was done to make things go smoothly. On one occasion, after I had received an assurance from the Department of External Affairs, that the assets of a certain company, whose activities were all-important to the Allied war effort, were to be released as being free from enemy influence, the counsel for the custodian still made difficulties on the ground that there had been a few Italian shareholders. On another occasion the Custodian simply assumed, without consulting me, that a certain Netherlands citizen, living in Mexico, might have resided in enemy-occupied territory after the middle of May 1940 and seized his income derived from investments in Canada. It was not until after repeated representations that I succeeded in having them released. Again it was only with considerable trouble that I obtained an assurance to the effect that U.S.A. dollar assets, administered by the Custodian, were not to be converted into Canadian loans. With the exception of assets belonging to so-called administration offices in Amsterdam, when a detailed report was kindly placed at my disposal, Netherlands interests have not very often been able to obtain information, at least so far as I am aware of. It is true I have been told unofficially that the grand total of the assets I am interested in, amounted to about sixty million dollars, but, apart from the administration offices above referred to, I still do not know even roughly what these assets consist of. Neither are the managers, appointed by the Netherlands Government, of Messrs Lippman Rosenthal & Co., allowed to know how they stand with regard to their bank accounts in Canada, although I concluded from an answer given to a question raised by me, that the Custodian would not object to the managers approaching the Bank for the purpose of persuading them that they are the lawful representatives and consequently that he would not object either to information being given to them with regard to accounts.

³⁷Décret en Conseil P.C. 3959 du 21 août 1940.

³⁷ Order in Council P.C. 3959 of August 21, 1940.

I wish to stress in this connection that in England never such like difficulties were experienced on the part of the British authorities.

After all, you will agree with me that the Canadian Order-in-Council No. P.C. 3959 as well as the Netherlands decree A 1, vesting property rights in certain assets in the State of the Netherlands, are both aimed at the same purpose: to keep such assets out of the enemy's hands and away from his influence and control. If the principles of these two measures are difficult to reconcile, their application in practice might at any rate be made subject to one primary consideration: how to attain our object with least inconvenience to the interested parties or their bona fide representatives. On this basis there is much room for cooperation. If in concrete cases it is suggested to me that the Netherlands authorities may be misinformed as to the bona fides of certain persons or the merits of certain claims, I am, as I always have been, quite prepared either to clear the matter up or to convince the Netherlands authorities concerned that it is preferable not to intervene.

I regret however to say that approaches on these lines have been few.

All these incidental difficulties have made me wonder whether it is really necessary to continue acting in an atmosphere of aloofness such as I have tried to describe. If it were possible to bring about fruitful cooperation, it would undoubtedly be of advantage to both parties.

Yours sincerely,

F. E. H. GROENMAN

Le ministre des Pays-Bas au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
Minister of The Netherlands to Secretary of State for External Affairs

No. 127

Ottawa, January 25, 1943

Sir,

To my regret I have to revert to the subject of the application of Order-in-Council P.C. 3959 in regard to the interests vested in the Netherlands Government by the Royal Decree A 1, in respect of which a situation has arisen which causes me some alarm.

In your note of August 4th, 1942, No. 52, you intimated that there is no doubt as to the attitude of the Canadian Government in relation to the validity of the measures legally enacted by the Netherlands Government.

It has however come to my knowledge that the Custodian has written to the Barclays Bank at Montreal, that if he authorized Canadian Banks holding funds for Messrs Lippmann Rosenthal & Co. under his control, to supply statements to the managers appointed by the Netherlands Government, it would be contrary to the general policy and might be construed as a recognition of their rights.

Again you intimated that companies transferred would be recognized and that the difficulties would be examined in cooperation between the Canadian and Netherlands authorities. I refer to the above letter of August 4th, 1942.

It has come to my notice however that the Custodian has left a request for release of assets in Canada from one of these companies, Rembours and Industrie Bank, unanswered for over a year.

No attempt to examine difficulties in cooperation with the Legation has been made.

Again you intimated in your letters respectively of November 4th, 1942, No. 86[†] and November 17th, No.90[†], that the authorities were not averse to the appointed Managers of Lippmann Rosenthal & Co. approaching Barclays Bank for the purpose of persuading that Bank that they are the lawful representatives of said Company.

What I really asked was: "may I take it that it is left to the appointed managers to persuade Barclays Bank that they are the lawful representatives of Lippmann Rosenthal & Co. and that, if they succeed in doing so the Canadian authorities will not prevent the Bank from giving information?"

After some correspondence I received an answer from you, stating that, without prejudice to the Custodian's rights in this matter, he will not object to the Managers approaching Barclays Bank for the purpose of persuading that Bank that they are the lawful representatives of Lippmann Rosenthal and Company. As the second part of my question was left unanswered, I had no reason to believe that the attitude of the Custodian in respect thereof would be different from what he knew was my supposition.

Nevertheless, the Custodian has apparently informed the Bank of Montreal that he declined to authorize them to send to the Managers the statement and details for which they asked.

Apart from the above, which reflects the official attitude in the matter, it is interesting to note that Lippmann Rosenthal & Co. were advised by Barclays Bank as well as by the Royal Bank of Canada that these Banks would be ready to give consideration to the request for information, if the Managers would submit to them a request signed by the authorized officers of Lippmann Rosenthal & Co. as mentioned in the list of signatures on file.

You will no doubt be aware that one of the essential purposes of the Decree A 1 is to prevent business intercourse between Netherlanders abroad and those in occupied territory. These two Banks however formulate requirements, the fulfilment of which would necessitate such intercourse.

I should be grateful to you if through your kind assistance a solution for all these various incidental difficulties could be found on a basis likely to promote harmonious cooperation in future.

I have etc.

Dear Mr. Groenman,

I am hastening to acknowledge your unofficial and confidential letter of January 22nd without waiting for the official Note which you are preparing on the subject of the application of P.C. 3959. I share your pleasure in the fact that relations between Canada and the Netherlands are of the most amicable character and I am happy that you should attribute this, in part at least, to the spirit of active goodwill towards the Netherlands which animates the Canadian Government.

I greatly regret that you should feel that there is anything in the attitude of the Custodian's Office which can be described as striking a discordant note and I am confident that your feeling on this point results from a misunderstanding, or a series of misunderstandings, which can be cleared away. Before any points can be discussed in detail I shall have to await your official Note, and to consult with my Colleague, the Honourable Mr. McLarty, the Secretary of State, under whose direction the Custodian activities lie.

In the meantime, however, I can deal with one of the points which you mention. The practice of the Department of External Affairs in transmitting statements from the Custodian should not be interpreted as implying any dissent from these statements, or any difference in view between the Department of External Affairs and the Custodian. The Department acts as a channel of communication and when questions of major policy are not concerned, it is in point of fact transmitting inquiries from you to the Custodian and in turn transmitting replies.

In conclusion let me repeat that I am confident that a frank discussion can remove the unfortunate misunderstandings which appear to have existed and dissipate what you have described as an atmosphere of aloofness.

Ottawa, February 17, 1943

A conference was held this afternoon with the Netherlands Minister who was given, on an entirely unofficial basis, a memorandum prepared by the Legal Division of the Department of External Affairs, of which I enclose a copy.[†] As a result of the discussion which ensued a tentative agreement was reached that the best results could be obtained by forming a consultative committee of three representing the Netherlands Legation, the Custodian and the Department of External Affairs. This committee would discuss all matters relating to Netherlands assets and would enable the Netherlands Minister to obtain full information concerning them. It would thus give effect to your suggestion that in the Lippman-Rosenthal case information might be supplied through the Netherlands Minister to the interested parties.

The Netherlands Minister welcomed the proposed arrangement which would dispose of his attempts to secure recognition for the Netherlands decrees and which would be preferable from his standpoint to his suggestion that freezing should replace vesting. It is suggested that the proposed committee might begin by meeting once a month, though it might easily happen that after a few meetings the intervals could be increased. It is my understanding that this proposal is in conformity with the suggestions which you made at yesterday's meeting and I should be glad to have your confirmation of it.

The tentative agreement reached with the Netherlands Minister leaves three matters outstanding, of which I hope that it will be possible to dispose fairly quickly. These are:

- (1) The answer to Note 550 of March 24, 1942,[†]
- (2) The answer to Note 2731 of October 17, 1941;³⁹
- (3) A statement of the present position of the Rembours -en Industriebank.

³⁹ Voir le document suivant, troisième paragraphe.

³⁹ See following document, third paragraph.

In the first two cases this Department is awaiting a reply from Mr. Mathieu.⁴⁰ The third case is dealt with in your memorandum[†] but the final act in that case was a letter on September 24th, 1942,[†] stating that a decision had not yet been reached. The Netherlands Minister not unnaturally inquired if a decision had since been reached and if not, if he might be informed of the nature of the difficulties.

I received in due course your letter of the 17th and have discussed it with the officers in the Custodian's Office.

I am quite agreeable to the proposed consultative committee. I think that for the present I myself had better be named as the representative of the Custodian on this committee, with the understanding that G.W. McPherson, Executive Assistant in the Custodian's Office will be my substitute at meetings which I may find it impossible to attend.

I am writing you a separate letter[†] concerning the matter raised in the Netherlands Minister's note 550 of March 24, 1942.[†] We cannot, however, locate a copy of note 2731 of October 17, 1941.⁴¹ I wonder if you can supply a copy of this note. We have wondered whether by any chance it is confused with note 2704 of the 24th October, 1941.

I suggested in my memorandum[†] that I should like to mention the Rembours-en Industriebank case to the Netherlands Minister. If, however, the Minister will forward an official note that the seat of this company was transferred from occupied territory and that the Netherlands Government is satisfied that there is no enemy interest, we shall be disposed to release the funds.

As I mentioned in the conversation which I had with you in your office, we have on the file a report from Price Waterhouse & Co. in London which was of an unfavourable nature concerning some of the individuals who purported to control the company and it appeared to be a case where we should proceed cautiously. The amount involved, however, is not large and if the Netherlands Government is prepared to take responsibility along the lines I have suggested, I see no reason why we cannot release.

I attended the first meeting of the Advisory Committee on Netherlands assets in the Custodian's Office at 3:00 p.m. on March 30.

The Custodian furnished the Secretary of the Netherlands Legation with a statement of the Lippmann Rosenthal position, which had been obtained from the bank. The Custodian also furnished a statement of funds in his possession held on account of Netherlands owners.

The matter of the Oranje Linie was mentioned as on the way to settlement.

There was friendly discussion of the general question of the payment of dividends by Canadian companies to Netherlands corporations transferred to free territory. The difficulties were explained and it was suggested that particular cases should be brought forward for discussion.

Mr. Falter, who was in Ottawa last year as a special representative of the Polish Ministry of Finance and now has his headquarters in New York, called at the Department this morning, accompanied by Mr. Michalski of the Polish Legation. Mr. Towers was with me to receive them.

Mr. Falter explained that the Polish Government had decided not to proceed with their rather ambitious plans for training centres in Owen Sound and Windsor.⁴² The enlistment of Poles on this continent had been much lower than they had expected, and had been practically stopped altogether by the terms of the United States Draft Law, which applied conscription not only to declarant aliens but to nationals of Allied countries resident in the United States. At the same time, though the recruiting here had fallen off, the Poles had been able to form quite a substantial army in Russia, and another large force was mobilizing in Syria. The officer cadres they expected to send to this continent to train troops would therefore be needed in the Middle East. In the circumstances, the Poles had closed down the training centre at Owen Sound and were reducing the Windsor office to a small assembly station where volunteers could be brought together before being despatched in small parties to the United Kingdom.

When the Poles had received permission to go ahead with their original training programme in Canada, they had agreed to deposit a substantial quantity of gold (five or six million dollars) in the bank of Canada as security for their military expenditures in this country. Now that this programme is to be abandoned, they would like to feel free to transfer their gold from the Bank of Canada if it were needed elsewhere. I told him that in the circumstances there would be no difficulty at all about their doing this.

Mr. Falter said that in addition to the Lend-Lease assistance they were receiving from the United States, which covered the provision of military supplies and equipment, they were also securing under Lend-Lease foodstuffs and clothes for the Polish refugees in Russia and for the Polish troops who are being reassembled in Syria. They are also on the point of completing with the United States arrangements for a Government loan which will cover Polish Governmental non-military expenditures on this continent.

TELEGRAM 934

London, May 4, 1943

IMMEDIATE. MOST SECRET. With reference to Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 262, May 3rd^f, regarding protection of Polish interests in Soviet Union.

You will have seen from this telegram the approach made by Polish Government to the United Kingdom Government and the United Kingdom reply declining Polish request.

You will also have noted that Polish Government has approached United States Government and Lord Halifax was instructed to see Mr. Cordell Hull and support most strongly Polish appeal. The United States Government, however, have now definitely refused Polish request on following grounds.

(1) That for either the United Kingdom or the United States to assume responsibility would inevitably prejudice relations with the Soviet, and

(2) That if either Government accepted this task, the result would be damaging to the appearance and reality of Anglo-American solidarity and likely to cause prejudice to the larger issues. (See today's Dominions Office telegram[†] on this subject reporting more fully considerations advanced by Mr. Cordell Hull in conversation with Lord Halifax.)

Apart from the difficulties referred to above and in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 262, May 3rd, United Kingdom Government are particularly influenced by following considerations:

(a) Relations between United Kingdom and Soviet Government have appreciably improved in recent months and if United Kingdom were now to approach Soviet Government constantly with the many and very real Polish grievances, a very heavy strain would be placed on these relations.

(b) Owing to the fact that Russia claims as Soviet citizens all former inhabitants of the Eastern Provinces of Poland which are now claimed as Soviet territory by the Soviet Government, while the Poles regard as Polish citizens all who enjoyed Polish citizenship in pre-war Poland, United Kingdom would, in protecting Polish interests, be forced into taking up a definite attitude on the Polish-Soviet frontier dispute.

As regards alternative Protecting Powers, as indicated in paragraph 2 of Circular D. 262, United Kingdom Government feels that to go outside of ranks of United Nations and to appeal to a neutral would give a further handle to German propaganda to detriment of United Nations. In any case no doubt German propaganda would make the most of unwillingness of United Kingdom in particular to accept this duty.

As regards neutrals, there are very few represented at Moscow, the only possible candidates being Sweden and Turkey, who in view of their delicate relations with the Soviet Government would be most unlikely to undertake the task.

In the circumstances, the United Kingdom Government after careful consideration feel the best course would be to make utmost effort to find some other member of United Nations willing and able to undertake the task. I have been approached by the United Kingdom Government to ascertain whether the Canadian Government would be willing to undertake protection of Polish interests in the Soviet Union if approached by Polish Government. This approach of the United Kingdom Government should not be construed as request but only to ascertain views of Canadian Government. As matter is pressing, I should be grateful for an early reply.

SOVIET-POLISH RELATIONS

13. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS reported that the U.K. government had enquired informally whether Canada would be prepared to act as the Protecting Power for Polish interests in the U.S.S.R. if officially requested so to do by Poland.

The role of Protecting Power would admittedly be very delicate. The United Kingdom did not wish to assume the role for fear of impeding its efforts as an intermediary in the existing difficulties. The United States, likewise, felt that assumption of this position might react unfavourably upon the attitude of the U.S.S.R. to the United States. To employ a neutral would offer further propaganda opportunity to the Axis; moreover, the only two neutrals available, Sweden and Turkey, would not be suitable in view of their own position vis-à-vis the U.S.S.R.

14. THE PRIME MINISTER expressed the opinion that it would be unwise for Canada, a small nation, with but a newly established Legation in Russia, to involve herself in the most difficult political situation in Europe. Further, our own relations with the Soviet would suffer; yet we would have little prospect of success.

15. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE, while agreeing as to the difficulties, felt that it would be unfortunate and capable of dangerous exploitation by the Axis if no one among the United Nations could be found to represent the interests of Poland.

16. THE WAR COMMITTEE, after further discussion, agreed that the U.K. government be informed that, while fully appreciating the importance of finding a suitable Protecting Power, if possible among the United Nations, the Canadian government did not find it possible to undertake the task.

Ottawa, May 18, 1943

Following for Prime Minister and Robertson from Wrong, Begins: Polish Minister has just presented a note in which, after referring to his discussion with the Under-Secretary on May 16 and mentioning his informal suggestion that the Canadian Government might share jointly with Australia the representation of Polish interests in the U.S.S.R., he continues as follows:

Quote. I have now received instructions from my Government officially to approach the Government of Canada with an analogous request, which is being made after consultation with the United Kingdom Government.

It is earnestly hoped that the Government of Canada will see their way clear favourably to consider this request, the purpose of which is mainly of a humanitarian character. Unquote.

He has also left with me a personal letter to the Prime Minister which continues as follows, after referring to his formal note: Quote.

I have further been instructed by my Prime Minister, General Sikorski, to approach you personally in his name with an appeal for your favourable decision, as a tried and true friend of Poland, at the time of her greatest trial.

A sizeable portion of relief administered to the utterly destitute Poles in the U.S.S.R. came from Canadian welfare organizations, and the continuance of this humanitarian work under the supervision of the Canadian Legation would also for this reason be a desirable solution.

The sympathetic consideration by the Canadian Government of this earnest request to take charge of Polish interests in the U.S.S.R. jointly with the Government of Australia — until such time as the diplomatic relations between the Polish Government and the Government of the Soviet Union are resumed — would earn the profound gratitude of the entire Polish Nation. Unquote.

Mr. Podoski stated that he had not proposed to his Government that Canada might be asked to share this duty with Australia; the idea had occurred independently to the Polish Government in London. No further communication has been received from the United Kingdom Government but you will observe that Mr. Podoski states that the suggestion has been put forward after consultation with them.

He asked me to refer the matter urgently to you in Washington. I told him that you might not be able to give it consideration for a day or two. Ends.

Mr. Robertson told me on the telephone this morning that the Prime Minister had considered our message EX-1855 and had decided to refuse the Polish request. The matter had not been raised with him by Mr. Churchill or the President. In addition to the reasons previously advanced, Mr. King felt that a sort of condominium with Australia in the protection of Polish interests would give rise to difficult problems.

I said to Mr. Robertson that I thought the reply to Mr. Podoski's note and personal letter should not be despatched until the Prime Minister had returned to Ottawa on Monday. It would, in particular, be necessary for an answer to go to General Sikorski's message in the name of the Prime Minister. Would you take a shot at preparing a note to the Polish Minister and also a letter in response to General Sikorski's message?

If Mr. Podoski raises the question with me before the Prime Minister's return, I think that I should tell him that the Canadian Government is not prepared to accept this duty, but that a formal reply must await Mr. King's return.

My dear Victor [Podoski],

We have been remiss in not replying sooner to your note of May 18th[†] on the representation of Polish interests in the U.S.S.R. I enclose a formal reply[†] explaining that the Government does not feel able to accept the suggestion of joint representation by Canada and Australia. In my view it would be very difficult to operate such an arrangement and I think it is doubtful whether the joint representation of Polish interests would be as effective as the representation by Australia alone.

The Prime Minister appreciated the message from General Sikorski which was transmitted in your personal letter to him of May 18th.[†] Would you inform General Sikorski in answer to this message that Mr. King welcomes this expression of his confidence and is sorry that compelling reasons prevent the Canadian Government from accepting these responsibilities? He hopes that diplomatic relations between the Polish Government and the Government of the Soviet Union will soon be resumed and that in the meantime the humanitarian work for the relief of destitute Poles in the U.S.S.R. can be continued under the supervision of the Australian Legation.

SECRET. Following for the Prime Minister, Begins: Question has been raised informally as to whether Dominion Governments would wish to enter into treaty relations with the Soviet Government along lines of proposed Anglo-Russian treaties, the text of which you have received in Dominions Office telegram Circular D. 213 of April 20th.[†] This might be effected either (a) by inclusion of Dominions in preamble and as separate signatories of treaties, or (b) by subsequent exchange of notes between Dominions and Soviet Government providing for Dominion Governments accession to treaties. Under either of the above procedures the understanding would be that action would not be taken by any one Dominion unless all four Dominion Governments were in agreement so to act.

It would be helpful if I might have your views for my guidance. Matter will not come to a formal proposal from here unless United Kingdom Government is assured that all four Dominion Governments would welcome opportunity to enter into such treaty relations with the Soviet Government as are suggested above.

Stalin asked Eden in Moscow whether the Dominions would be signatories to these treaties and Maisky raised the question again recently in London without, however, pressing the point. Ends.

PROPOSED ANGLO-RUSSIAN TREATIES

2. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that the question had now been raised, informally, as to whether the Dominions should become parties to the proposed military and political treaties. However, no formal request had yet been made, and it was thought that no one Dominion should participate unless all four were agreed that it was desirable so to do.

(Telegram No. 1104, Canadian High Commissioner, London, to External Affairs, April 22, 1942[†]; Secretary's note, April 28, 1942 — C.W.C. document 153[†]).

3. MR. KING expressed the opinion that Canada should not participate in a treaty with the U.S.S.R. which involved any settlement or guarantee of the pre-war Russian frontiers. The United States were not prepared to do so, though they would not oppose the negotiations, or take exception to the treaties.

The United Kingdom, feeling that arrangements of this kind with Russia were of vital importance, had decided to go ahead, in any event.

4. THE UNDER-SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS described the effect of the draft treaties with respect to the 1940 frontiers, the restoration of which, with the specific exception of Poland, would constitute a common principle of Anglo-Russian policy in the reconstruction of Europe. This would involve the absorption of the Baltic States and the reacquisition of Bessarabia. A factor in relation to Canadian policy was the number of immigrants in this country from the boundary lands affected.

5. THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES feared that the announcement of these provisions, in essence opposed to the principles of the Atlantic Charter⁴⁴, would create apprehension in democratic countries.

6. The War Committee, after further discussion, agreed that Canada should not participate in treaty relations with the Soviet government along the lines of the proposed Anglo-Russian treaties.

[Ottawa,] June [n.d.], 1942

Attached is a useful memorandum by Glazebrook on the new treaty between the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R., signed last week in London. The text of the treaty as finally established is a great deal more satisfactory from every point of view than seemed possible some weeks ago. It seems to me to be difficult to take exception to its present provisions, given the special relationship which the war has created between the U.S.S.R. and the other nations fighting against Hitlerism.

Mr. Glazebrook's memorandum examines (on pages 5 and 6) the possibility of Canada adhering to the treaty, or, alternatively, supporting it without adhering to it. I do not think we should consider adhering to the treaty. We were not parties to its negotiation. There is no provision in the treaty as it stands for adherence by third countries, and there is no suggestion that countries which are not members of the British Commonwealth should adhere to it. Apart from such diplomatic objections to our adherence, I do not think that Canada should, at this stage, assume post-war obligations in other parts of the world which would be different from or go further than those that the United States is prepared to assume.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND THE U.S.S.R.

PART I — THE TREATY

Negotiations over a period of six months have now resulted in the signature on May 26 of a treaty entitled "Treaty between the U.S.S.R. and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland of alliance in the war against Hitlerite Germany and her associates in Europe and of collaboration and mutual assistance thereafter".

TEXT

“Desiring to confirm the stipulations of the Agreement between His Majesty’s Government in the United Kingdom and the Government of the U.S.S.R. for joint action in the war against Germany, signed at Moscow on the 12th of July, 1941, and to replace them by a formal treaty;

Desiring to contribute after the war to the maintenance of peace and to the prevention of further aggression by Germany or the States associated with her in her acts of aggression in Europe;

Desiring, moreover, to give expression to their intention to collaborate closely with one another as well as with the other United Nations at the Peace Settlement and during the ensuing period of reconstruction on the basis of the principles enunciated in the Declaration made on the 14th of August, 1941, by the President of the United States of America and the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland⁴⁵ to which the Government of the U.S.S.R. has adhered;

Desiring finally to provide for mutual assistance in the event of an attack upon either High Contracting Party by Germany or any of the States associated with her in acts of aggression in Europe.

PART I

Article 1. In virtue of the alliance established between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the High Contracting Parties mutually undertake to afford one another military and other assistance and support of all kinds in the war against Germany and all those States which are associated with her in acts of aggression in Europe.

Article 2. The High Contracting Parties undertake not to enter into any negotiations with the Hitlerite Government or any other Government in Germany that does not clearly renounce all aggressive intentions, and not to negotiate or conclude except by mutual consent any armistice or peace treaty with Germany or any other State associated with her in acts of aggression in Europe.

PART 2

Article 3. (i) The High Contracting Parties declare their desire to unite with other like-minded States in adopting proposals for common action to preserve peace and resist aggression in the post-war period.

(ii) Pending the adoption of any such proposals they will, after termination of hostilities, take all the measures in their power to render impossible a repetition of aggression and violation of the peace by Germany or any of the States associated with her in acts of aggression in Europe.

Article 4. Should one of the High Contracting Parties during the post-war period become involved in hostilities with Germany or any of the States mentioned in Article 3 (ii) in consequence of an attack by that State against that party, the other High Contracting Party will at once give to the High Contracting Party so involved in hostilities all the military and other support and assistance in his power. This Article shall remain in force until the High Contracting Parties, by mutual agreement, shall recognize that it is superseded by the adoption of the proposals contemplated in Article 3(i). In default of the adoption of such proposals, it shall remain in force for a period of twenty years, and thereafter until terminated by either High Contracting Party, as provided in Article 8.

Article 5. The High Contracting Parties, having regard to the interests of the security of each of them, agree to work together in close and friendly collaboration after the re-establishment of peace for the organization of security and economic prosperity in Europe. They will take into account the interest of the United Nations in these objects, and they will act in accordance with the two principles of not seeking territorial aggrandisement for themselves and of non-interference in the internal affairs of other states.

Article 6. The High Contracting Parties agree to render one another all possible economic assistance after the war.

Article 7. Each High Contracting Party undertakes not to conclude any alliance and not to take part in any coalition directed against the other High Contracting Party.

Article 8. The present treaty is subject to ratification in the shortest possible time and the Instruments of Ratification shall be exchanged in (. . .) as soon as possible.⁴⁶

It comes into force immediately on the exchange of the Instruments of Ratification and shall thereupon replace the Agreement between the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, signed at Moscow on the 12th of July, 1941.

Part 1 of the present treaty shall remain in force until the re-establishment of peace between the High Contracting Parties and Germany and the Powers associated with her acts of aggression in Europe.

Part 2 of the present treaty shall remain in force for a period of twenty years. Thereafter, unless twelve months' notice has been given by either party to terminate the treaty at the end of the said period of twenty years, it shall continue in force until twelve months after either High Contracting Party shall give notice to the other in writing of his intention to terminate it."

Announcement of Treaty. It was agreed that the matter should be kept secret until the return of the Soviet delegation to the U.S.S.R.

PART 2 — ANALYSIS

The treaty as a whole is a compromise between United Kingdom and Russian policies, but is much closer to the former than seemed possible from reports of the negotiations.

Frontiers — The argument consistently put forward by Stalin was that, in default of direct military assistance, the United Kingdom should commit herself to defined post-war frontiers for the U.S.S.R. Poland, it was agreed, was to be omitted from mention, but the Baltic States, parts of Finland, and Bessarabia were to be included within Russia.

⁴⁶ Les instruments de ratification furent échangés à Moscou le 14 juillet 1942.

⁴⁶ The Instruments of Ratification were exchanged in Moscow on July 14, 1942.

Such a course would have violated the Atlantic Charter in spirit if not in letter; would have been at best unsupported by the United States; and would have aroused the antagonism or suspicion of small states and national groups.

The omission of all direct reference to territorial commitments must be regarded not only as a success for United Kingdom diplomacy but as promising a greater degree of agreement amongst the United Nations.

Security — Both the United Kingdom and the United States have long accepted in principle the need of the U.S.S.R. for security against aggression after the war. The proper means to that end were, however, in dispute. On the one hand, the Russians asked for strategic frontiers; and, on the other, the United States proposed only to support — after the war — Russian efforts to achieve security. It was the aim of the United Kingdom Government to find a settlement that would satisfy the first without antagonising the second.

In the United Kingdom draft of late April, territorial aggrandisement and interference in the Internal affairs of European peoples were abjured, but “full regard” was to be had to “the desire of the U.S.S.R. for the restoration of its frontiers violated by the Hitlerite aggression.”

Mutual Assistance — In the treaty as signed a course different from any of those previously proposed is adopted. Two lines are laid down:

(1) A bilateral guarantee of assistance in case of attack. This guarantee is to remain in force for twenty years, or longer if not terminated by either party, unless the following alternative comes into effect:

(2) A system of collective security. No machinery is suggested, but it is to be multilateral, and to be “for common action to preserve peace and resist aggression.”

General Comment — The present treaty is the alternative proposed by the United Kingdom after failure to agree with the U.S.S.R. on the details of a treaty embodying territorial terms. While it creates a defensive alliance of a type not originally envisaged by the United Kingdom, it does not otherwise conflict with United Kingdom policy.

Moreover, it can hardly be asserted that it is directed against the interests of others of the United Nations, or of neutral States.

PART III — CANADIAN POLICY

The treaty is in no sense binding on the Dominions, nor has any suggestion recently been made that the Dominions should adhere to it. It may be presumed, however, that the position remains as described by the Canadian High Commissioner on April 22, viz., that a formal proposal might be made if it were clear that the Dominions would welcome the opportunity to enter into such treaty relations.

The following objections were pointed out (in a memorandum of April 14)[†] to the treaty as earlier drafted:

- (1) That closer association with the U.S.S.R. would be criticized in Canada.
- (2) That it would destroy some small nations and threaten others.
- (3) That it was contrary to the Atlantic Charter.

(4) That it would drive a wedge between the United Kingdom and the United States.

Of these only the first objection would still apply. It is one that is based more on prejudice than reason, and could, to some degree, be reduced by planned publicity.

One of the following courses might be followed by the Canadian Government:

(1) To adhere to the Treaty

The decision no longer involves adopting a policy conflicting with that of the United States; nor one actively opposed by certain racial minorities in Canada. It is probable that any rapprochement with the U.S.S.R. would be unwelcome to the majority of the Ukrainians, Poles, Lithuanians, Latvians, and Estonians. There would, be, however, no valid grounds for criticism of the terms of the treaty.

The real issue is whether the Canadian Government wishes to be a party to a defensive alliance which may or may not be absorbed in a wider framework of collective security. The principle of mutual assistance against aggression after the war will undoubtedly be considered by the United Nations at some stage. That consideration may be delayed; and it can be held that the present case does not demand a decision on the wider question of post-war international relations.

It is not, however, an academic question even at this time. The treaty may lead to close collaboration between the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. during and after the war. It may develop into an alliance of the Great Powers, so strong as to dominate world affairs. A present commitment might be justified by membership in a bloc so influential.

If adherence were decided on, or even considered, the other Dominions might be consulted.

(2) To support the Treaty without adhering to it

To have supported the treaty as earlier drafted would no doubt have been considered necessary, but could not have been done without difficulty.

The circumstances have now entirely changed, and the Canadian Government can, without embarrassment, express its unqualified approval. It is the more important that a member of the British Commonwealth and one of the United Nations should so express itself since a treaty has from the first been regarded as recognition of the part played in the common cause by the U.S.S.R. A strong lead by Canada might not be without influence on the other American nations.

To secure a favourable public opinion toward the treaty (both in Canada and the United States) the following steps are suggested:

- (a) A full explanation by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons.
- (b) The above explanation would form the basis of newspaper comment, but there might also be releases prepared by the Bureau of Public Information.

ANGLO-RUSSIAN TREATY

8. THE PRIME MINISTER reported that word had been received of the successful conclusion of negotiations between the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. A treaty had been signed on May the 26th, and announcement of this event was being made today in London.

The Russians had withdrawn from their earlier demand that, in default of direct military assistance, the United Kingdom should commit herself to a guarantee of defined post-war frontiers for the U.S.S.R. They had accepted the alternative of a bilateral guarantee of assistance, to remain in force for twenty years, unless replaced by a system of collective security for the preservation of peace. The treaty, as signed, involved, therefore, no conflict with the U.S. policy.

The U.K. government had suggested that it would be helpful if the Dominions could make it clear that they approved of the Treaty, to which, however, no actual adherence on their part was now proposed. The line to be taken, as regards publicity for the Treaty, was contained in telegrams from the Dominions Office. The text of the Treaty and information concerning the negotiations had been communicated fully by the U.K. government. —

(Circular telegrams D. 289, 290, 291, and 292, June 1942, Dominions Office to External Affairs).[†]

9. MR. KING said that it was proposed to accede to the U.K. request and express the Canadian government's general approval of the Treaty in a communication to Mr. Churchill, which would be made public in the House of Commons. A draft telegram[†] was submitted for consideration.

10. The War Committee, after discussion, approved, with certain amendments, the draft telegram submitted, and agreed that it be made public in the House of Commons, and tabled with the text of the Anglo-Russian Treaty.⁴⁷ procedure we had in mind, and said I did not think the separate adherence of Canada to the Protocol would materially change the arrangements for supplying materials and munitions to the Soviet Union. The most important feature of the new arrangement would probably be its political and psychological aspect, under which Canadian aid to the Soviet Union and to others of the United Nations would be furnished direct instead of through the United Kingdom or the United States as intermediaries.⁴⁸

He asked if there had been any developments with regard to the establishment of the International Relief Organization. His latest information was that the Soviet Government had informed Litvinov that they welcomed the arrangement under which Canada would become Chairman of the Suppliers Committee. In due course this would be communicated by Litvinov to the other members of the Ambassadors Committee in Washington.

We had some conversation about the Soviet-Polish difficulties. He did not regard the frontier question or the position of Polish nationals in the Soviet Union as insoluble or even very formidable questions. Given goodwill and mutual loyalty, he thought acceptable agreements could be reached on both these points. What was really serious and disturbing was the general attitude of the Polish Government. Their hostility to the Soviet Union had led them into playing the enemy's game by their appeal to the International Red Cross, which could only have been calculated to hopelessly embitter a difficult situation. He complained of the Polish press in the United Kingdom protesting all the time against Russian actions and passing over the behaviour of the Germans and taking the line that Poland's interest was to see Germany and Russia exhaust each other without participating too actively on either side of the struggle. He felt there were pro-Fascist elements in the Polish Government and the Polish press which were actively disloyal to the cause of the United Nations, and until they were purged he did not see how a real reconciliation could be effected between the Polish and Soviet Governments.

Mr. Gousev went on to talk about resolutions he had noticed in Canadian-Ukrainian newspapers, passed by Ukrainian Nationalist organizations, advocating an independent Ukraine and consequentially the dismemberment of the U.S.S.R. He said that this attitude of Ukrainian organizations was pro-fascist, and did not understand why, if we had a censorship in force, we allowed newspapers in Canada to publish articles advocating the breaking up of the territories of our ally, the Soviet Union.

I replied that, though the Ukrainians were a very large bloc in Canada, more numerous really than either the Poles or the Russians, they were not a factor in influencing Canadian Government policy, and too much importance should not be attached to speeches and resolutions of the Ukrainian Nationalists. Ukrainian nationalism, like Irish nationalism, was a pretty sturdy growth. Ukrainian immigrants in Canada were mostly from the Western Ukraine, territories that had formerly been part of Austria-Hungary and latterly had been under Polish rule. Their nationalism had, in the years between the wars, been primarily aimed at separation from Poland though, like all national movements, they aspired to union as well as to independence. He objected to the Canadian Ukrainian Nationalists undertaking to speak on behalf of 50,000,000 Ukrainians, at least 30,000,000 of whom must be citizens of the U.S.S.R., who had fought very bravely in resisting the Nazi invasion and who were completely loyal Soviet citizens. He pressed his point about the anti-Soviet articles in Canadian-Ukrainian papers, stigmatizing them as pro-Fascist. I said that undoubtedly there were some elements in the Ukrainian Nationalist Movement which could be so described, but the great bulk of the Canadian Ukrainians were not in any sense pro-Fascist. We would be much happier if they would look at the world through Canadian eyes and think of themselves solely as Canadian citizens, but the process of assimilation took time. There was no doubt that many Ukrainian Canadians had cherished hopes for the formation of a separate Ukrainian state.

I explained that we were very reluctant as a democracy to use the censorship powers taken under the Defence of Canada Regulations unless the successful conduct of the war required it. As a matter of policy, the Government did not invoke the censorship to suppress editorial opinion however critical it was, even of the Canadian Government. It would be difficult to apply a different censorship rule to criticisms of Allied Governments. Such criticisms, though often irritating, were not really important and the use of the censorship to suppress them might well do much more damage to the general interest than could the offending articles themselves.

There has been of course a great deal of press comment on the dissolution of the Communist International, but as far as I can see no responsible political leader has himself made a direct comment on this development.⁴⁹

If you feel you have to say something, you might say that it appears to be a sensible move which has been welcomed everywhere except in the Axis countries.

It is I think important not to refer to the decision as one taken by Stalin or by the Soviet Government. The latter has endeavoured for years, and without much success, to convince the rest of the world that the Comintern was entirely separate from the Soviet Government. Out of deference to Russian susceptibilities this fiction might well be preserved in any references to its dissolution.

You may be interested in looking through the attached despatch to our Minister at Kuibyshev.[†] It gives a full and useful account of the Ukrainian political organizations in Canada and their press affiliates. The position of the Ukrainian Nationalist organizations in Canada is becoming more delicate and more difficult as the war develops. Their historic feud with the Poles is in danger of becoming a row with the Russians, which is a more serious question.

The Ukrainian-Canadian Committee is arranging a national convention in Winnipeg towards the end of June, to which it has invited you and two or three members of the Cabinet. Under present conditions I doubt whether any Minister should accept such an invitation. However careful and correct his remarks, his presence at such a meeting would be construed as some kind of Canadian endorsement of Ukrainian nationalism, which has among its objectives the separation of the Ukraine from the U.S.S.R.

If you have read my letter to Grierson⁵⁰ of May 16th[†], you will see that the Government's contacts with the foreign language press and foreign language groups generally are pretty confused and unsatisfactory. I hope to get the War-time Information Board to straighten out the press side of the picture, but I am more worried about the possible mischief which may develop from the activities of the Foreign Groups Division of the Department of National War Services. Thorson⁵¹ and Judge Davis took a personal and informed interest in this work and were able to give it closer supervision than it has received recently. The work this section is trying to do is, I think, important for Canada, but I do not think they have quite the right men for the job; it is a difficult job in which the wrong men can do a good deal of mischief.

MOST SECRET

[Ottawa,] September 11, 1943

You may remember that when the Spanish Government approached us rather more than a year ago with a view to their appointing a career consular officer in Vancouver, to carry out their work as Protecting Power in Canada for Japanese interests, we made confidential enquiries in London and Washington about the bona fides of the officer they proposed to appoint. We made special enquiries on this point because we had had general warning that Spanish diplomatic and consular officers, particularly in South American and Latin American countries, were believed to be acting as agents for the Axis. On receipt of information from United Kingdom sources that they believed Señor Kobbe to be a friendly and reliable person, we issued his exequatur in the usual way. Subsequently, very secret advice was received [. . .] that Kobbe would bear watching. We had, however, no grounds on which we could reasonably object to the establishment by Spain of a consular office in Vancouver and no evidence which we could adduce that Señor Kobbe was an unacceptable officer. We have, however, been taking special precautions ever since his installation in Vancouver to see if he was up to any mischief. [. . .] There was nothing in his correspondence or contacts to suggest that Kobbe was an Axis agent. However, some ten days ago, [. . .] a letter [. . .] to the Spanish Consul General in Montreal [. . .] was found to contain an enclosed letter for Kobbe in which there were two special codes, by which he could transmit special secret information to a cover in the Spanish Foreign Office in Madrid for forwarding to Japan. The codes consist of lists of Japanese proper names, each of which is given a value, which the secret agent might find it convenient to use in reporting ship and troop movements, defence installations, etc. Enclosed with the letter were $1,000 in United States notes, covering special expenses, and formulae for manufacturing secret ink for his own use and for developing communications in secret ink in letters addressed to him.

This is a very important matter, raising serious questions of policy, both for us and the United States and United Kingdom Governments. The evidence of Kobbe's complicity is complete, and, what rarely happens in espionage cases, the evidence against him is of a character that could be produced in court if it were thought in the public interest to prosecute him.

The case confirms what a good many people have suspected — that Spanish diplomatic and consular facilities are being used in the interests of the Axis powers. [. . .] It is pretty clear [. . .] that the sender is an official of the Spanish Foreign Office. I am inclined to think the best thing to do is to inform the United Kingdom Government of the facts [. . .] and allow them to use this information to put the screws on Franco. In the present phase of the European political situation, the threat of exposure of Spanish collusion with the Axis may be a very useful lever in securing further concessions from Spain, or, if this course seems more desirable, could be used to discredit the present dictatorial regime completely.⁵²

DESPATCH A. 370

London, November 13, 1943

MOST SECRET

Sir,

With regard to your despatch No. 945 of September 20th[†], which was the subject of your telegram No. 3029 of the 12th November[†], concerning the activities of Fernando de Kobbe Chinchilla, the Spanish Consul in Vancouver, I passed on this information to Mr. Eden for any action which he might see fit to take in the matter.

2. I have now heard from Sir Alexander Cadogan to the effect that the United Kingdom Government have long been seeking quotable evidence that the Spanish Government were giving assistance to the Japanese in intelligence matters, a fact which they have for a long time suspected. They are therefore very glad to have this evidence of the guilt of the Spanish Consul at Vancouver, which provides a peg on which they propose to hang very strong representations to the Spanish Government that an end shall be put to all illegal assistance to our enemies by Spanish Consular and diplomatic officials abroad.

3. I am enclosing a copy of the proposed instructions to be sent to the British Ambassador at Madrid. As you will see it is suggested that the Spanish Government shall be asked for a categorical assurance that the Spanish bags will only be used for correspondence of direct interest to the Spanish Government, and that Señor Kobbe shall be withdrawn immediately.

4. In view of the fact that the Canadian Government are associated with these requests, the Foreign Office have asked whether the terms of these proposed instructions would meet with the approval of the Canadian Government. The United Kingdom Government are anxious that this démarche should be made at Madrid in the very near future and they therefore would much appreciate an early expression of the views of the Canadian Government in this matter.

Projet de dépêche du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères de Grande-Bretagne à l'ambassadeur de Grande-Bretagne en Espagne

Draft Despatch from Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain to Ambassador of Great Britain in Spain

MOST SECRET

Sir,

I transmit to Y.E. herewith a copy of a letter from the High Commissioner for Canada in the U.K.[†] covering a copy of a despatch from the Canadian Department of External Affairs[†] regarding the Spanish Consul at Vancouver who is apparently acting as a Japanese agent.

You will see that the Canadian Government have decided for the present to take no action against the Spanish Consul at Vancouver since they feel that it may be possible for H.M.G. in the U.K. to make better use of this material in our general relations with the Spanish Government. In the meantime, Señor de Kobbe is being closely watched without being interfered with. The evidence obtained by the Canadian Government implicates not only the Spanish Consul at Vancouver but also one of the Japanese agents in Spain and shows that Japanese espionage material has been passed through the Spanish bag presumably with the knowledge of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The discovery of this evidence therefore provides an excellent opportunity for a general attack upon the assistance given to the Japanese Government by Spanish officials with or without the knowledge of the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs himself, and I shall be glad if you will now take this matter up with the Spanish Government.

3. If, therefore, Y.E. sees no objection, I request that you will address representations to the Spanish Government on the following lines. You should inform them that H.M.G. in Canada have obtained evidence from correspondence passing through the open mail which provides indisputable evidence that the Spanish Consul at Vancouver is indulging in espionage on behalf of the Japanese Government, and you should hand to the Spanish Government the enclosed photostat copies of the correspondence[†] seized by the Canadian censorship. In view of this evidence there can be no question of the Canadian Government agreeing to the continued stay of this person as Spanish Consul at Vancouver and they expect the Spanish Government to withdraw him forthwith and to conduct a most searching investigation into his case. The Spanish Government will realise that the Canadian Government in merely asking that this man shall be withdrawn are acting with extreme moderation since they would be fully justified in removing this man's diplomatic immunity and prosecuting him in the courts on charges of espionage which would have done the gravest harm to the international reputation of the Spanish Diplomatic Service and to that of the Spanish Government as a whole.

4. In these circumstances H.M.G. in Canada and H.M.G. in the U.K. expect that the Spanish Government will make the most searching investigation into the circumstances of this case with a view to ascertaining how it came about that Señor de Kobbe was recruited into the Japanese Intelligence Service and permitted to receive instructions from the Japanese Government through the Spanish Foreign Office. It is obvious that Señor de Kobbe could not have received his instructions without the connivance of officials in the Spanish Foreign Ministry. This raises in the minds of H.M.G.s in the U.K. and in Canada the question whether activities such as those which have been so fortunately discovered in respect of the Spanish Consul at Vancouver may not be repeated in the case of other Spanish representatives abroad whose correspondence has not so far passed through the censorship controls of the United Nations.

5. In taking action on these instructions you should leave the Spanish Foreign Minister in no doubt as to the extremely disagreeable impression which the discovery of this evidence has made upon H.M.G. H.M.G. cannot believe that this is an isolated case, and its discovery goes far to remove the excellent impression which has been made by certain outward signs that the Spanish Government apparently intend to pursue a policy of stricter neutrality in future, such as the internment of German U-boats and the first although still inadequate steps to control unneutral German activities in Morocco and the area around Gibraltar. If you see no objection you should also inform the Spanish Government that you have received many reports showing that Alcazer de Velasco⁵³ and the Marques de Rialp⁵⁴ are collaborating closely with the Japanese and that in view of the opportunities these two persons may have officially or unofficially of obtaining information from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs you hope that the Spanish Government will investigate their behaviour very closely. As regards the investigation to be conducted by the Spanish Government H.M.G. hope that they will be prompt and exhaustive and that they may be provided at an early date with an assurance that all the correspondence passing in Spanish diplomatic bags is guaranteed by the Spanish Government and by the Spanish Minister for Foreign Affairs personally to contain only correspondence of interest to the Spanish Government. H.M.G. will also be glad to be informed of the results of the enquiry into the de Kobbe case and of the action taken against this person.

Ottawa, November 23, 1943

MOST SECRET

Sir,

With regard to your despatch No. A. 370 of November 13th, 1943, concerning the activities of Fernando de Kobbe Chinchilla, I should be grateful if you would inform the Foreign Office that the Canadian Government appreciate reference to them of the proposed instructions to His Majesty's Ambassador in Madrid.

The proposed instructions meet with our approval, but I should like to suggest the following minor changes:

(1) Paragraphs 3. Delete the second sentence and substitute the following: "You should inform them that His Majesty's Government in Canada have obtained indisputable evidence that the Spanish Consul at Vancouver is indulging in espionage on behalf of the Japanese Government, and you should hand to the Spanish Government the enclosed photostats. In view of this evidence"

This change is suggested because we consider that it would be preferable at this stage to exclude all references to censorship and to the manner in which the evidence was obtained. In view of the seriousness of the matter the Spanish Government could scarcely raise the question whether the evidence was obtained legitimately. Should they do so we would be glad if His Majesty's Ambassador in Madrid could be instructed to say that the evidence was obtained by the Canadian authorities in the course of certain security measures taken for particular purposes arising out of the fact that Canada is a country at war. You will notice that I have added a paragraph 6 to the proposed instructions to Sir Samuel Hoare to this effect.

In view of the deletions of all mention of censorship from the representations which His Majesty's Ambassador will make to the Spanish Government, I should be grateful if no photostats of any of the envelopes are sent to Madrid. The photostats now in the possession of the Foreign Office include pictures of the envelopes contained in the large cover from the External Affairs Department, Madrid, (see item 2 of paragraph 4 of despatch No. 945)[†] but they do not include pictures of that large envelope itself nor pictures of the covering envelope from the Spanish Consul General in Montreal to the Consul in Vancouver (see item 1 of paragraph 4 of despatch No. 945). This last envelope, as a matter of fact, is now in our possession and if it ever became necessary so to do we could produce a photostat copy of it with or without, as circumstances might require, a censorship label attached. No label was attached, of course, when it was delivered in the ordinary mails to Mr. Kobbe.

(2) Paragraph 3, last sentence. Delete “removing this man’s diplomatic immunity and” and substitute “Spanish Foreign Service” for “Spanish Diplomatic Service”, so that the sentence reads:

“ . . . since they would be fully justified in prosecuting him in the courts on charges of espionage which would have done the gravest harm to the international reputation of the Spanish Foreign Service and to that of the Spanish Government as a whole.”

The Canadian government does not recognize that foreign Consuls have diplomatic immunity. We simply grant them certain privileges as a matter of grace.

(3) Paragraph 4, first sentence. Delete “the circumstances of” so that the sentence reads: “ . . . searching investigation into this case . . . ”

(4) Paragraph 4, last sentence. Delete “whose correspondence has not so far passed through the censorship controls of the United Nations”, so that the paragraph ends with the words “Spanish representatives abroad”. This deletion is suggested for the reason given in (1) above.

(5) Paragraph 5. Delete last two sentences, from “As regards the investigation . . . ” to the end of the paragraph, and substitute:

“As regards the investigation to be conducted by the Spanish Government, His Majesty’s Governments in the United Kingdom and in Canada hope that they will be prompt and exhaustive. They confidently expect an immediate assurance that all the correspondence contained in Spanish diplomatic bags will relate only to the official business of the Spanish Government and matters with which it is properly concerned as Protecting Power. His Majesty’s Governments will also be informed of the results of the enquiry into the de Kobbe case and of the action taken against this person.”

It would be appreciated if we could be informed at once of the Spanish Government’s reply to these representations and of Sir Samuel Hoare’s comments thereon.

I have etc.
