"We want to help every settler. A discontented settler sending discouraging news home does more harm than thousands of dollars spent on propaganda can overtake, while a contented settler does more to bring out others than thousands of dollars in advertising. Being a Canadian myself it may be a rosy picture I am presenting to you, but to me it is real, and any man coming to live with us will see the same picture. The progress of the country and the prosperity enjoyed by the bulk of the people is positive proof of my assertions. It is doubtful if anywhere in the whole world the same opportunities exist for the worker to become his own master."

Alluding to the opportance, while a sign statement of the city itself. It is shown that kindergarten and regular grades in he schools of the outlying districts are filled to capacity, and attendance will be even a little more than was expected. At Trafalgar school, just opened his year, practically every seat is already taken up. There is only one room not in use for classes, and that is used as a library.

Inspector Greer said today that few seats would be vacant during the year, and that the enrollment would be well over 8,500 when completed. Parents who have complained of boundaries to which their children were held for school attendance. have been interviewed. It is believed that fair and impartial reasons of the inspectors for boundary lines have been agreed to. though there are many parents who would like to see their children sent to other schools than those assigned. In order to demonstrate the diversity of farming in southwestern Ontario, as well as to provide a general estimate of crop conditions, The Advertiser is making a survey of the ten districts shown on the accompanying map. C. G. Higman, who is conducting the survey for The Advertiser, has O. A. C. training and a thorough practical experience in various types of farming. His first article, covering district No. 1, appears below, and the remaining nine articles will follow daily.

The Advertiser hopes that these articles will serve in some degree as an exchange of information regarding farming methods in different districts and as an indication of the versatility of production in the richest part of Ontario.

what flatter and not se well drained as the land adjacent to Stratford, and on this account some of the corn which was planted on the low ground failed to make a quick start, and the subsequent growth has been slow and spindly. Even in this small area the crop is going to improve and the farmers state that should the present fine weather continue they will have something better than a half crop to winter their stock.

Apple Crop Good. The apple crop throughout the whole district from London to Stratford seems to be quite a good one, with the exception of Northern Spies which are extremely light. The late fall apples and most of the winter varieties are a heavy crop.

All clovers are looking fine, although the second cutting of red clover will answer better for hay than for seed as the cold weather seems to have kept down the bloom. The farmers who can spare the time from threshing, are taking off the second crop of alfalfa, which it is expected will run about a ton and a half to the acre.

One of the most noticeable features in the farming through the Thames Valley, which impresses a visitor, is the small amount of poultry seen on most of the general farms. There are exceptions to this, however, and several of the farmers visited today state that the chickens are gradually coming into the recognition which they deserve. One farmer who was questioned concerning a splendid flock of Barred Rocks, stated that in his opinion, hens pay a bigger dividend than any other branch of farming, considering the small investment needed for poultry as compared to other kinds of livestock.

To the City of London

Shopping Centre of This Wonderful Western Ontario---Where Shopping Is a Profitable Pleasure

O THE woman-be she the mother of a family, a dainty debutante, or a busy professional or business woman-shopping facilities are of utmost importance and interest. The privilege of viewing and making her selections from the newest, the loveliest of the products of the world's markets is a privilege every woman covets-and one of the important privileges offered only in busy centers such as London.

Shopping Means Much To the Life of a City-

SHOPPING keeps the home fires burning-makes home more beautiful-makes fair woman fairer-brings contentment to the aged-and joyous health and happiness to childhood.

To a woman it is an ever-changing recreation—a popular "indoor sport" for which she pays as little or as much as her fancy and needs dictate. It is also her profession, which she has developed to a fine art.

SHOPPING inspires designers, inventors, artists and artisans to exercise their best skill-keeps mammoth factories humming-prompts merchants to search the remotest corners of the world for exquisite handiwork.

Truly shopping is a fine art-and likewise is the collecting of fine merchandise an equally fine art.

Addison was right when he said: "There are no more useful members in a commonwealth than merchants"—those whose business it is to collect fine merchandise, to build fine stores-a city's valued assets.

SHOPPING IN LONDON IS A PROFITABLE PLEASURE. London merchants are indeed most "useful members" of our great Dominion. Their vision and their faith has achieved for London the enviable reputation—a city of well dressed people and beautifully furnished homes. Day in and day out throngs of smartly dressed men and women hurry to and fro in the heart of London's convenient shopping district.

Whether the shopper seeks things ultra, things unusual, things practical, things economical, or merely wishes to "window shop" to learn what "they are wearing"-she finds her needs have been anticipated by some London merchant.

Some one of the scores of skilled, painstaking buyers who go out from London institutions season after season—to make selections from Fashion's favored couturiers, from age-old market places, or from mammoth home factories—has sent to London, by steamer or rail, just the "things" needed to complete the ensemble of her home-her costume-to enhance her personal beauty, or the health and happiness of her family.

Whether the shopper seeks the efficient service of the large modern department store, with every convenience to make shopping a profitable pleasure—or the specialized service of the specialty store-London offers service and merchandise to suit every taste and every purse.

-And Shopping In London Is Convenient

Within a compact district of a few blocks, within easy walking distance of stations, hotels, theatres, restaurants and tea rooms, one may buy rugs from the Orient, paintings from the hands of old masters, a bit of exquisite pottery, rare examples of the cabinetmakers' art, one may find clothes of every type at every price—may furnish a home to suit taste and pocketbook—make it ring with the music of a favorite instrument—may set a table with wares as costly or cheap as "thy purse" permits, and spread it with finest foods from garden's near and afar—and complete the picture with exquisite fragrant flowers to add the joy for which they were created—so complete are the shopping facilities offered all those who come to London.

The most Interesting Painting at London Exhibition,

LIAVE you ever seen a massive life-size portrait so clearly drawn, so realistically painted that the subject seemed to be a living person in your presence?

Such is this original portrait of Franz Listz --- considered by many the world's greatest musical genius of all time.

Liszt posed for this magnificent painting in 1883, at a time when the world marveled at his amazing technique and superb tone coloring, when his demands of a piano were most critical and exacting.

It was then that Liszt paid tribute to the Mason & Risch Piano in most glowing terms. The appreciation of a master of music for a musical masterpiece.

We invite you to see the wonderful painting of this renowned musician at the London exhibition, and to see the Mason & Risch Pianos made with the same expert knowledge and craftsmanship which won his unstinted praise.

Fliers Compelled To Stop in Maine-Thousands Await Arrival at Boston.

Associated Press Despatch.
Boston, Sept. 5.—Fog and thick weather that rolled up along the Maine coast brought about an unexpected landing by the United States world-girdling army aviators at Mere Point, near Brunswick, Maine, today, while a crowd of nearly 40,000 persons awaited them at the Boston air port. Carling street, London, from old carpets and rugs supplied by customers.

"Don't throw your old carpets away" is the slogan of the company, and in that slogan is the secret of the beautiful velvety rugs which are turned out. Carpets which in the ordinary course of events would be thrown into the rubbish heap, cast aside as being of no use whatever, are taken by the Canada Rug Company and converted into pretty, clean, sanitary, long-life rugs.

To witness the process is to compare it to the work of a magician. There are the old carpets, and there, presto! are the new rugs. It is indeed marvelous. Years of study, hour after hour, day is and day out, have been spent in perfecting a process which today is declared to be 100 per cent efficient. Every machine used, every process through which the old carpet goes, has been worked out and developed by the Canada Rug Company. Machines used there will be found nowhere else. FALL and WINTER: 1924-25

There is no color in the world, No lovely tint on hill or plain; The Summer's golden sails are furled, And sadly falls the Autumn rain.

This song is but the poet's art, At best its but a broken tale, If she had seen our Ladies' Mart, She ne'er would utter such a wail.

For fall season is here again, with all its new modes and tints. Soft, deep pile fabrics in plain and various block cut designs; soft suede finished cloths, bolivias and colored plaids in a wealth of most pleasing blended colors; shiny silks and sating in various textures, from sheer georgettes to the rich, closer weaves of smooth and ribbed surface design in crepes, roshanara and failles.

Costume cloths in wool crepes, charmeen and charminettes, twills and ribbed finished surfaces.

Dame Fashion chose for the season most appropriate and pleasing colors in which to deck her votaries

Russet Brown and Penny Browns and teakwood vie with Scottish Blues and Navy. Fairway, a soft and Grayish Green, appeals alongside of antique-lacquer, that dark, subdued color

Fall styles for this season have a decided appeal for harmony and correct outline. Straight, graceful and slender is the object aimed at by the designer. Close double convertible collars and ample shawl rolls, or the soft, billowy, luxuriant make which gives the wearer that comfortable, nestling appearance so warm and seasonable.

Sleeves have many departures from past conventional lines and are appearing in a variety of puffed and closer cuffed

Fur trimmings are in more pronounced favor than for many seasons and popular in the following varieties: Red and Korsuk Fox, Beaver, Mink, Squirrel in various shades: Seal, Thibetine, Mole, Sable, Kolinsky, etc.

An acute situation was created by the action of the Toronto Board of Education authorities today in dismissing in the neighborhood of 1,300 county pupils residing in school section No. 13 who were attending various city schools. The pupils dismissed included between 500 and 600 attending Rawlinson School which, although in the county, is owned by the

In discussing the situation tonight, officials of the Toronto board pointed out it was costing $80 on the average yearly to educate each of these pupils, but that most of this expense was being borne by the city tax-navers.

Toronto school board officials welcome the court proceedings in order to test the validity of the agreement under which the county claims city school privileges. The result will interest other county school sections because thousands of county children are attending city schools located near the city boundaries.

The Serious Consequences of Depending For Your Safety Upon a Single Pair of Braces-The Tragic Adventure of a Young Man on a Downtown Street

By G. W. J.

DON'T know how it is, but I never seem able to get braces that are long enough. It isn't that I'm so tall or so fat. The manufacturers of braces must use models that have their trousers cut half way up their chests, or else have their shoulder blades farther below their ears than mine are. This day I had on a pair of new braces, and they seemed tighter than ever. They seemed to be lifting me off the ground by my trouser buttons. Well, of course, even a bulldog can't hold on for ever, and the two buttons on the back called it a day on Countess street. There was a pop-p, and the back part of my braces flipped me on the collar like a catapult. My trousers went just the other way, and as I wouldn't let the tailor cut them snug, as he called it, they went pretty fast. I caught them just in time.

It's very awkward walking with the right hand pressed firmly into the small of one's back, and every moment I was afraid there'd be a further slip, so I saw with relief a little cleaning and pressing place just before me. I opened the door with my left hand and stepped

There were five or six men in the back, talking away in a lively fashion over a paper. They looked up as I came in, and silence fell on them like a blanket. They stared at me with drooping jaws. One stuck his hands up

"I want the proprietor," I said. "You just want the proprietor?" answered

"That's what I came in for," I said.

At this they began sidling through a door in the rear, and as the men got out I could hear the sound of running footsteps down the

There was one man left. He was quite pale. "Mister," said he, "you don't need no gun." "Gun!" I exclaimed. "What would I need a gun for?"

"Ain't you got your hand back on no gun?" "I've got my hand back trying to hold up my trousers, from which I have lost two but-

"You mean you busted your pants buttons." "Of course," said I. That's why I came in groaned, and let my head sink upon the counter.

"Oy, mister," said the man, sinking into a chair, "such a fright what you give me."

"I'm sure I don't know what you're talking about," I said, rather testily. "What I want is to have a couple of buttons sewn on right away." "You get them done better down the street.

mister. I don't keep no buttons." "What," I said, "you're a tailor, and don't keen any buttons.'

"I mean I used them all up. You get better done down the street."

"I can't walk down the street holding up my trousers, and what's more I won't try to. You have a sign that you're a tailor, and I want these buttons put on."

It's not often I speak so sharply, but if there's anything to irritate a man it's standing around arguing with a tailor while his arm is cramped from holding up his buttonless trousers.

'Well, mister, I don't want no fuss," said the man, after giving me a look. "You was maybe no detectiff, and I take your pants down to Lipsky's myself. Come behind here and take them off.'

There was a low counter running half way across the back of the shop. When I sat down behind it, my legs were concealed from passers- the orderlies. by, so I pulled off my trousers.

"Hurry," I said. "I don't like waiting half undressed.

"You bet I hurry," said the proprietor. "Customers like you interfere with my business. Five minutes I be back with your pants."

Never before had I been able to sympathize fully with an oyster on the half shell. I felt more timid than a hermit crab ejected from its shell, more helpless than a turtle robbed of its carapace. A man may steel himself to appear in public without his coat, but the Iron Duke himself wouldn't venture forth minus his trousers. I took what comfort I could from the frail bulwark of the counter, and picked up the paper dropped by one of the men who had been in such a hurry to avoid my company. I thought it would be some trade or fashion publication, a guess which seemed justified by the title, "Last Minute Form," but I found it a sheet closely resembling a railway timetable, all figures and mysterious symbols. I couldn't make head or tail of it, and laid it on the

On looking up I was horrified to see a girl opening the door. Compared with how I felt then, the oyster on the half shell must feel prudishly attired.

"Say," said the girl, "put a few stitches in this for me? Step down to the light, and I'll show you."

"I am sorry-er-madam," I stammered. -but-er-you know, I'm not-

"Stop!" The cry seemed to come from my shins. "Stop! Don't bring that here. Don't come here. Stay away."

"Well, say!" The kindly note was gone from the girl's voice. "What's the matter with you anyway? 'Don't come near me,' " she mimicked. "You'd think I had the smallpox or somefin."

My mind clutched at the word, "Smallpox!" I repeated. "Smallpox!" I There was a shriek and the slam of a door.

I was alone again. Blessed solitude! But it was only for a moment.

Marched in a burly person with a very peaked cap pulled over his eyes. "Slip this to the boss," he said. "Tell him Peter O'Hara, on the snoot."

There was a ten-dollar bill on the counter. "Hit Peter O'Hara on the snout?" I called walked out. I had often read and scoffed at newspaper accounts of bullies being hired in big cities, and yet here I was apparently acting as trustee to a sartorial thug. It was a puzzling situation, but I didn't have long to puzzle over it. I looked up suddenly. A policeman was in the act of seizing my wrist. Two hospital attendants were pressing through the door. The girl was pointing at me through the window. A crowd was collecting around the ambulance from Arrested! And for being without my trousers. I could see the headlines. I could hear faith in human nature. And running around the McTavish's remarks. Why hadn't I called a taxi and gone home? And why, oh why, didn't the tailor come back with my trousers?

"I know it," said the policeman. "If I'm without my trousers

"Begob," said the policeman, looking over the counter, "and he's sitting here without his pants, he is."

"Let me explain-"

"You can explain it in court, you can." In my eagerness I stood up. Then I remembered, and sat down again. It's difficult to be impressive when one's trousers are missing. I don't believe Laurier could have my house, "that's the way the whole thing hapmade much of a speech with nothing between his pened. That's What May Happen If There's a Deadlock in the Electoral College — La Follette Will Then Choose the President Unless the Republican Congressmen Vote For Davis in Preference to Brother Charlie.

OVERNOR CHARLES W. BRYAN of Nebraska will be the next president of the United States.

Hold on a minute. Not quite so fast. Bryan is not even a candidate for the

Nevertheless, Bryan will be president "if" and "if" and "if" and a few more "ifs."

Election sharps in the United States have been having a lot of fun figuring out what's going to happen at the November presidential election, and one of the distinct possibilities, which amounts almost to a probability, is that LaFollette is going to carry enough states to prevent either Davis or Coolidge being chosen president by the electoral college. The constitution provides that the president must have a majority. If no one is elected it will then be up to Congress to choose the nation's rulers. The House of Representatives will select the president from among the three candidates, Coolidge, Davis and LaFollette, while the Senate will ballot for vice-president between Bryan and

The law provides, says David Hunter Miller in the New York Times, that the electoral votes be officially counted at a joint session of both houses of Congress on February 11, 1925, and if no candidate for the presidency receives a automatically the duty of the House of Represenagent, and all the time you've been running a tatives, "immediately," says the constitution, to proceed to the election of a president; and in that case the choice of the House (the present House, not that elected next November) would be limited to the three candidates who would have had electoral votes, namely, Mr. Coolidge, Mr. Davis and Mr. LaFollette

One Vote to Each State

"Silp, my old chum," said McTavish, "I am HE constitutional provision requires in such proud to acknowledge our friendship. Appeara case the votes in the House shall be "taken ances may be against you, but the heart of a by states, the representation from each state having one vote," and that "a majority of all the states shall be necessary to a choice." In other words, there would be forty-eight votes in the "Certainly not. I don't believe he'd have sense House and twenty-five votes "That was the proprietor who looked in at to choose a president.

If the House of Representatives shall choose "Why didn't you say so-were you dumb?" a president in 1925, each state as a state must asked the policeman most unjustly, hot-footing either cast one vote for one of the three candidates before the House or it must cast a blank "And so, McTavish," I concluded, pulling the or no vote at all; and whether every state casts a vote or not, there must still be twenty-five votes for some candidate for a choice.

The state delegations of the present House do not show a majority for either party. Unless some delegations chose to vote against their party's candidate, neither Coolidge, Davis nor Bryan would receive from the House the majority vote required by the twelfth amendment.

Assuming that with the help of LaFollette senators Governor Bryan should be the choice of the Senate, the House Republicans would be

Gov. Charles W. Bryan confronted with a curious dilemma. They could not muster strength enough to re-elect Coolidge, but it would rest in their power to choose between electing Davis, the Democratic nominee, and permitting the Senate to elect Bryan, a man not nominated for the presidency and the brother of a man who thrice failed in running for that

According to party designation, there are fifty Republicans in the Senate, or two above a majority; forty-three Democrats and two Farmer-Labor, There is one vacancy, made by the recent death of Senator Colt, Republican, of Rhode Island. As the state administration is Democratic, probably Senator Colt's place will be filled by a member of that party, and this would bring the number of Democratic senators up to forty-four.

Only a Paper Majority UT the Republicans have only a paper majority in the Senate, Included among majority of the votes of the electoral college it is their number are Senators LaFollette, Frazier and Ladd. Mention might be made of Senators Brookhart and Norris, although these two have not yet indicated whether they will support the LaFollette candidacy. Holding three, and possibly five, votes, it rests within the power of the LaFollette group in the Senate to decide the presidency should both electoral college and House of Representatives be deadlocked. In view of the Republican campaign plans, which appear to involve a strong effort to capture territory in which there is strong LaFollette sentiment, and in view of General Dawes' acceptance speech, in which he stressed "LaFolletteism" as one of the dominant issues of the campaign, there seems to be little prospect that members of the LaFollette group in the Senate could bring themselves to vote for Dawes.

would not be necessary for any of the LaFollette senators to vote for Governor Bryan. If members of this group should absent themselves from the Senate they would achieve the same result. Under the constitution a majority of those present elects a vice-president when his election devolves upon the Senate. If five La-Follette senators should remain away from the balloting, the forty-four Democratic and two Farmer-Labor senators would have a majority over forty-five Republicans left,

The situation in the Senate as it affects the vice-presidency and Bryan's chances is therefore of as much concern to Republican campaign strategists as the capture of doubtful states. In effect they are confronted by two Democratic presidential possibilities. If President Coolidge should be defeated decisively, John W. Davis undoubtedly would be elected. If the president and Mr. Davis should fail of a majority in the eleccollege, Mr. Bryan, another Democrat, #### probably would be chosen. Republicans May Pick Davis

Suppose that Governor Bryan is chosen vicepresident by the Senate on February 11, what would be the political consequence? If the House of Representatives continued deadlocked from February 11 until March 4 in choosing a president, Governor Bryan, under the constitution, would become president

So far as one can now tell, the vote in the House will be as follows, with a total of twentyfive necessary to a choice:

LaFollette ..... 1 State Divided .... 5 States

Now, the assumption is that while these ballots are going on in the House Governor Bryan has been elected vice-president by the Senate. What will the parties in the House do? Certainly the Democrats will go on voting for Mr. Davis, for they are assured of having a Democrat in the White House even if the deadlock continues. But what will the Republicans do? Will they go on voting for Mr. Coolidge and continuing the deadlock and thus making Governor Bryan president, or will they prefer, enough of them (it would take a change in the votes of only five individual representatives), to have Mr.

electing Mr. Davis? Under the curious provisions of the constitution there are certainly various remarkable possibilities in regard to the election of a president of the United States; but the possibility that Republicans in the House of Representatives might virtually have to choose a president as between two Democrats is so fantastic that it is difficult to believe that it is the real possi bility which it is.

Dear Old London Dear Indeed to Live in Prices and Taxes are Terrible in England

HIS last, and but recently concluded, visit to London is separated from my first by exactly four and twenty years. And it is interesting to reflect upon the many differences wrought by this intervening span of almost a quarter of a century. On that first visit, not a wheel of any motor-driven vehicle rolled on London's streets. The airship was still but a fantastic dream. The "movies" were but beginning to gleam and splutter. Wheress telegraphy was a speculation, provoking many an unbelieving smile. Gladstone had barely begun his long and immortal sleep; the Queen he had served so well still sat on England's throne; Kruger was fighting to preserve his ancient solitary reign: Roosevelt was unthought of as president of the United States; Laurier was but well started on his illustrious primacy-and Toronto was waiting with clamorous optimism for the new Union Station, little recking that this coveted glory was to rank with the Egyptian pyramids in the agelong process of their birth.

Yes, great and striking have the changes been. But I have not enumerated the greatest of money. That is, to be plainer, in the terrific rise in the scale of costs. Since I have returned to Canada, and, especially, to this splendid little town, the most beautiful in Canada, from which I now write, it really seems difficult to get rid of money. Everything seems so cheap. Prob-She took a step in my direction. My legs, ably, I think, it is inevitably so in any Scottish deprived of their natural protectors, seemed to Canadian town. As an evidence of this, let me mas I took my Yuletide dinner at the famous Jefferson Hotel in Richmond, Virginia. Nonfestive and alone, I regaled myself on a little cold tongue, a roll or two and coffee. On my return, talking to a Scottish-Canadian merchant here, I incidentally mentioned, a little proud of my Spartan frugality, that my Christmas dinner, though in a splendid hostelry, had "cost me fiftyfive cents." Whereupon, looking intently and perplexedly upon me, my friend returned: "Well, I don't think that was out of the way, considering how the price of everything has gone up!"

But, resuming my theme, I do seriously affirm that one can live here in Canada for just about half what it would cost to live on the same scale in England. More, if one were to live as people of the same station live in New York, it would cost distinctly more in London than in the American metropolis. To begin with, one is almost impoverished by the process of getting to London at all. A few years before the war I crossed on the Lusitania, two in a room in the best part of the first cabin. In 1921 I crossed on a "two-class" boat, the first being really called second; and, although I was one of four in a stateroom, it cost me almost fifty dollars more than on that moving palace of the seas. Just before the war I recall that four of us had a suite, including private bath, in the resplendent Whitehall Court, abloom with knights and peers. for less than three dollars a day for the party. In 1921, myself and a youth repaired to the Rubens, a modest hotel on Buckingham Palace road, and one night's oblivion there, without food tion that lies behind all this, the whole scale of living affected thereby. When one reflects that, for all above four or five hundred dollars of income, the appalling proportion of a dollar and twenty cents out of every five dollars goes back to the government, that about eight dollars out of a weekly wage of thirty vanishes in income tax, it is not difficult to realize that this must have a drastic bearing on the whole range of the expenses of life. For instance, the license for an ordinary motor-car, in London, is about a hundred and twenty-five dollars a year. A house telephone, after an initial payment greater than here, is permitted only one free call a day, all additional calls costing between three and four cents. I was for some months intimately associated with a Presbyterian church in a suburb of London. It had a roll of about 300, and paid a stipend, I think, of about $2,500. Yet, superior as a class though the people were, only one family of that congregation boasted a motorcar; the number of house telephones, moreover, was exactly the same. This is but one of many evidences to the fact that these old country people simply do not indulge in the same luxuries as are commonplaces in our western world. Further, one cannot help wondering how, with wages distinctly lower than here, the average family can have even the ordinary things of life. After an experience of some months' housekeep-

On returning here, the first night or two I instinctively and grandiosely heaved my shoes (small matters at the worst) outside my chamber door. The dull dawn found them still dull and undone. Which reminds me of a good story, irrelevant though it be to this present economic article. Several years ago there came on a visit to my manse Mr. Ferrier of Edinburgh, member of the publishing house of Oliphant Anderson and Ferrier. En route, and at New York, he had visited Mr. Fleming H. Revell, the well-known publisher of that city. Seeing him to his room the first night of his Canadian visit, he said to me: "It certainly is good to be under the British flag once more. Do you know, no servant in the States will black your boots. When I was at Mr. Revell's house, I put my boots, the first night of my stay, outside my door. A half hour later I had occasion to go to the bathroom—and, would you believe it, I came on my millionaire friend brushing away at my boots with the perspiration running down his face!" Swedish Prince Tells of Tracking Monster Apes Along the Mountainside, and Finally Finding Himself in Centre of a Hidden Flock — A Search for Specimens

Prince William, second son of King Gustaf V. of Sweden and leader of the Swedish zoological expedition into the heart of Central Africa, told last week in the first of the present series of three articles how the members of his party came upon the strange race of pygmies which inhabits the wilderness in the region of the great Birunga volcanoes. In the following instalment, narrating his encounters with gorillas, Prince William is especially careful to point out that his party was licensed by the Belgian government to shoot fourteen specimens. Otherwise these illusive and remarkably interesting creatures are under protection.

All these stories lack, of course, any foundation. The experience of the expedition, which was in the future to be very varied, has proved that the gorilla lives in dense thickets, where it feeds on tender bamboo shoots, the bark of twigs, Umbelliferae and berries. Especially bush, the Zingiberaceae, with red or yellow fruit, seems to constitute its favorite food. They prepare their sleeping places with heaped up twigs and leaves, both on the ground and

HERE are many things about I my youth for which I am grateful. One of them is these summers (to use the old phrase) "at the salt water." the most picturesque, romantic and bracing, I think, of all summer resorts in eastern America.

But the return to the city, especially to what was even then a considerable city, Montreal-the close, narrow, treeless, grassless, dusty, often untidy streets, the bustle, the noises, the smells, especially the Sunday streets crowded with amusement seekers, after the peace and loveliness of the Sundays among the lonely hills or by the clean austere rocks on the shore-the first days of the return, until one gets used again to the city, were days of dreariness and homesickness. One felt as if driven out of Eden and from the presence of the Lord. I used to say to myself and feel exalted and virtuous in saying it

ONLY WOMAN WHO EVER RAN FOR PRESIDENCY

Victoria Woodhull's Career is Series of Dramatic Headlights Which Shocked New York

MADE ALMOST MILLION AS BROKER IN SIX WEEKS

Owned and Edited One of Most Sensational Weeklies-Still Living on English Estate

HAT would happen if a woman ran for the presidency of the United States? Mrs. Victoria Claflin Woodhull, in 1872, as the nominee of the Equal Rights party, mad a spectacular dash for the White House. That she subsequently tripped and landed in jail just about the time the country decided upon Ulysses S. Grant for its chief executive only adds interest to the picturesque story of one of the most daring women who ever shocked New York.

Her career is a series of dramatic high lights. She was the first woman broker in Wall Street, and she made $750,000 in six weeks. She owned and edited one of the most sensational weekly journals of her day, and was jailed eight times for printing details of the Beecher-Tilton scandal. She preached radical free love doctrines throughout the country to thousands who mingled hisses with cheers and applause. She repeatedly defied congress, Tammany Hall and the New York police department. And to-day, after one of the most tempestuous careers in the history of the woman's movement, she lives quietly somewhere in England, the aged mistress of a large country estate.

The history of this remarkable person began in Homer, Ohio, in 1838. Later her family moved to Brooklyn. At fourteen she married a Colonel Woodhull. Soon after the birth of her second child, a daughter, she divorced her husband, and with her younger sister, Tennie C. Claflin, began studying law in her father's office.

Bewitching Brokers Make Fortune

BY the time she was thirty-two she had acquired another hysband named Division ed another husband named Blood and a firm conviction that existing social and political institutions were all wrong. But she was not merely an iconoclast. If she disapproved of the world as it was, she had a pattern of her own for its remodeling.

She announced her intention to become president in 1870. To get money to finance her campaign, she set up a brokerage office at 44 Broad street, in partnership with Tennie. The announcement of the new firm was the sensation of the month. All New York was agog with the news that two novices, and women at that, had had the brazen presumption to imagine that they could survive more than a week in the competitive maelstrom of Wall Street. It was unthinkable, ridiculous, not quite nice,

Contemporary newspaper estimates of the number of visitors at the new brokerage office on the opening day vary from 4,000 to 10,000. Within six weeks the new firm had made $750,000. To the practised speculators this was an unspeakable insult to their masculine vanity. And the newspapers only made things worse by printing cartoons of the triumphant Victoria and Tennie driving a chariot to which were hitched four of the most prominent operators of "Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly" came out in May, 1870, and, like its two proprietors, it was immediately a sensation. Its circulation jumped to 50,000 copies during the first month.

In the spring of 1872 came Victoria Claflin Woodhull's great triumph, the high point in her political career. On the 11th and 12th of May at Apollo Hall in New York she was nominated for the presidency of the United States on the Equal Rights ticket by a convention of 500 delegates representing twenty-six states and four territories. Her acceptance speech was a model of eloquence and brilliancy. The crowd cheered and roared and waved flags, threw hats and handkerchiefs into the air and all but carried the presidential candidate from the platform on

NEW era was about to dawn. Woman had A come into her own. She was going to the White House. It was glorious, inspiring, tre-

And then quite suddenly and strangely this movement launched with such a loud fanfare of cheers and trumpets fell with a dull thud. Victoria Woodhull dropped from the political limelight completely. The enthusiasm which had carried her to the front and had placed her in the race for the presidency was dissipated apparently by internal party strife and dissension.

When election time came the dauntless Victoria and her sister were in the Ludlow street jail pending the raising of $20,000 bail, while infuriated enemies threatened to poison them or burn them alive in their prison. The charge against them was that of using the mails for the circulation of questionable literature.

circulation of questionable literature. they were finally brought to trial the case against them was dismissed when it was proved that they had not written the articles in question.

In the years that followed she went from one end of the country to the other preaching what she conceived as the basis of all social progressfreedom to love without the legal restriction of

The country was shocked and horrified-and interested-very interested. Her ill-timed dash for the White House was forgotten, submerged by the more spectacular, iconoclastic social doctrines which she preached. Crowds thronged her lectures. Police threatened to break them up. Often she was forced to resort to strategy to gain entrance to the halls in which she was to speak. Ministers and social workers reviled her and brought unspeakable accusations against

And through it all she went her bold, adventurous way with her head held high, charming with the force of her brilliancy and eloquence even where she failed to convince. In 1875 she divorced her second husband, Colonel Blood, and with her sister went to England. There both of them married, Tennie becoming Lady Cook and Victoria, Mrs. John Biddulph Martin.

Lady Cook died in the summer of 1923, but the indomitable Victoria still lives. Although more than forty years have passed since she first took the public platform, the world hasn't yet caught up to the ideas with which she scandalized the seventies.-New York World,

An ancient dame asserted that she was the real Victoria and the palaces her property from which she had been evicted.

Frank Yeigh Has Had Unique Experience With a Thousand Audiences and Chairmen or Chairwomen, All Different

There is a Canadian who has probably a unique record in the world of records-that of having given over a thousand lectures! He is Frank Yeigh of Toronto, who, during a respectably long span of years, has delivered ten hundred talks and lectures, mostly of the travelogue type, and in many countries and places - in Canada, the United States, Great Britain and in

The audiences have ranged from a handful of folks who braved a winter storm to a Massey Hall crowd or an open-air throng. The lectures have been given in country, town and city; in the open under summer skies, and in every variety of roof-covered edifice, around camp fires and in convention halls and before all kinds of societies and clubs, at all sorts of hours.

Mr. Yeigh has been a constant advertiser of Canada through the eye, at home and abroad, and never tires of boosting his native land by picture or word of mouth, as well as with the pen. But he has been an inveterate traveler as well, and so brings to people at home the attractions and wonders of other lands.

By FRANK YEIGH TV7HAT about a thousand chairmen?

Well, there are chairmen and chairmen and chairwomen, too, and together they represent an odd assortment of humanity. Chairmen can be sorted into definite classes: for there is the chairman silent (blessed be his memory!) and the chairman loquacious (not so blessed his memory!). There is the chairman tidy and the chairman sloppy; the dignified type and the reverse; the careless and the meticulous.

How one warms to the platform leader who pays the audience the compliment of brushing his coat, and his hair-where he has it; who takes his duties seriously, which may rightly include a joke or two, and who is crisp, alert and apparently interested. Save me from the chairman who gets your name mixed up and your lecture title all mussed up.

Yes, there are assorted sizes and types of chairmen. One, the chairman of the school board, seized opportunity by the throat-if that is the right way of seizing that elusive creature -and roundly scolded the audience for nearly an hour for their lack of interest in local education. One can imagine the ideal atmosphere it produced for the unfortunate one who followed.

There's the Sunday school superintendent who has not yet learned how to take boys; who opens his remarks from the platform with an admonition to the youngsters that if any misbehave they will be forcibly assisted to leave. No self-respecting lads will disappoint a man in failing to live up to his expectations. Small wonder, then, if one night they took advantage of the darkened room to pelt the head of the innocent lecturer with whatever weapons could be commandeered on the spot. Talk about the power of suggestion, auto or any other kind! Expect a boy to betray boy cussedness by telling him of it, and it will sometimes be produced on

WHICH brings one to the contemplation of yet another type of presider, always of the male sex, who offends by a fulsome introduction and makes the speaker of the evening feel and look like an obscure atom. When one hears with his own ears that he is well-known on five continents, that he has played a part in the building of the nation, that his eloquence exceeds that of a Laurier or a Lloyd George, with Premier King thrown in for good measure, and when he gasps as he hears other fairy tales of like tenor-it is only the fear of the law that prevents a mussy massacre right there and then. And the sufferer has a lurking idea that he hears derisive

When the ideal chairman sits in the seat of the mighty, right behind the water jug and the flowering plant, transacts his chairing business in clear tones and a "few well-chosen words" (rare as hen's teeth or legislators who refuse an indemnity), the orator for the occasion would fain bring down heaven's choicest blessings on his semi-bald head.

gigglings from the back benches, and no wonder!

Some fools lack either a sense of reserve or of

What about a thousand audiences? They resolve themselves into half-a-thousand classes or types, which is another way of making the tabloid remark that folks differ. The speaker experiences all degrees of atmosphere, from the frigid to the tropical, literally and metaphorically. In a certain small town in Ontario, the town hall is perched on the only hill in the main street. It is a below-zero night, very much below. Two broken windows, facing north, admit the frozen air of the Arctic to the back of the paid talker. First he slips into his overcoat, without dropping so much as a syllable in his flow of eloquence; then his fur gauntlets, next cap and muffler. Thus attired, he looks in the half light like Stefansson on Coronation Gulf, and feels like an iceberg, with limited reasoning powers, who is slowly being frozen to the planks beneath his iceberg feet.

What of the poor audience? They-it does not take many to warrant a "they"-gradually huddle closer and closer to the one stove, doing its darnedest to radiate warmth. The flow of English is arrested ever and anon by the redheaded caretaker firing up, his auburn hair contributing to the heat element. So the exciting evening progresses as the congealed auditors are swept along with entrancing oratory and doubled up with irresistible humor. One's best stories go the best in a zero room.

The show ends. The audience depart to their homes, which they were blithering idiots to leave. The gloomy hall is left to the redheaded caretaker and the saddened and chastened entertainer. Not a soul had spoken a word of praise or blame. It was quieter than any funeral ever held in the vicinity, and sadder than any local tragedy. It was the lecturer's turn to hug the stove, for the lack of anything else to embrace. The poor devil of a sexton, passing rich on ten dollars a year, said the one kind word as a Christian and a brother and with a hand-grip that made him wince, he was accepted as a blood brother.

Cold-and heat. Lord, what a lot of hot air a small hall can hold and not burst into flame! I mean the physical hot air that emanates from an overworked furnace and an extravagant combustion of coal. The air is stifling, the reserved seat sitters are slowly being drugged into subconsciousness and the gods at the rear-on the last four benches without backs-only manage to keep alive by starting on a fresh bag of peanuts. Some speakers do their best to the sound

Sufferings of Audiences

UMANS suffer more from ill-ventilation or the lack of it than from strabismus or mental aberrations or digestive entanglements. Fresh air becomes a meaningless term, stuffiness that leads to chokings usually prevails, and passing wonderful is the sight of dear mothers and girls, sitting through two hours of a program, clad in fur coats or wraps, with the temperature at high and one's vitality at low.

Yes, audiences differ. That intangible element called atmosphere—not the physical kind can never be anticipated or explained. But it exists. At one time it will settle like a heavy cloud on speaker and hearers, at another time it will act as a tonic. Folks applaud on the slightest provocation, the oldest Garden of Eden jokes go, and rounds of applause greet the conclusion of the great effort, although the man on the platform is never quite sure whether the handclapping may not be a jubilation over the end of the whole sad affair rather than a tribute of esteem or an expression of favor.

There are audiences blase and audiences responsive. The bored listener is the most awful sight a speaker can face; he prefers the whispered confidences of a love-making couple or the gossip of two cronies who have not met for a month. The unexpected laugh, strident and arresting-often a solitary expression of soundcomes as an electric shock to the droning orator. He who on the other hand succeeds in gaining the attention of a single pair of eyes and a face turned full to him, full of sympathy and responsiveness, may consider himself fortunate and happy. Let him talk to that face and those eyes and let the others go to either Jerusalem or Jericho, whichever they prefer.

One must needs pay a tribute to the United States audience. Suppose Canada is the subject. The whole-hearted and good-natured reception of the story and the films makes life worth living to the speaker. Applause is more than generous, in fact, one's criticism would be that our American cousins are so good-natured as listeners to the tale of their national neighbor as to be undiscriminating. Everything goes with them. Kind words are showered upon the lecturer in public and private. Praise, no matter how undeserved, sounds sweet, for the moment, until one's second sense comes to the rescue and tells you plainly what a dub you really are.

This brings one to a consideration of votes of thanks. They are not to be despised or lightly thrown into the discard. Some of them are real gems of comments on the country or the subject treated; others throw valuable light on the topic; still others-had better have been left unspoken. But where it gives two local celebrities an opportunity of speech, as a welcome relief from the sing-song of the visitor, it, or they, rather, have their place. But where the show is brought to a quick end by singing the national anthem-rarely well-the tired talker thanks heaven for the finis as he dreams of a snack of supper and a bed, and shuts out the spectre of an early train of the morrow.

Give me a hall full of youngsters, in a school, for real stimulation. Quick as a trigger, restless as a horde of young animals, chock full of mischief as a Tom Sawyer, utterly unimpressed by the highly-colored bills announcing the speaker, then and there is when the man on the platform liking. must make good-or leave town. Once in a while he dares to ask questions, and then is sorry he dared. Disconcerting answers may come from the tow-headed miniature of a man on your right, or a derisive comment from the saucy youth on your left. Kiddies are no respecters of persons, but gain their good will and attention, and they are the most generous of mortals, giving volumes of applause that threaten to loosen the plaster

The work is known as the "Stone Mountain Commemorative Memorial," and it is located in the State of Georgia, 16 miles from Atlanta. Before describing this unique work in any of its details, let us answer the question: What is Stone Mountain?; and, what is this vast work which for endless ages to come? Stone Mountain is a vast block of cliff of pure granite, one and one-half miles in length, which rises from the valley to a height, throughout its central portion, of 867 feet above the ground. For several hundred feet this imposing and absolutely solid wall rises perpendicularly. and then for the few hundred feet remaining, curves over backward gradually to its highest point. For the reason that the memorial is intended not merely for a present but for a future tribute to the men who fought in the southern confederacy, the first step was to determine the quality of the granite and whether it possessed sufficient durability to make certain that it would stand in all its clear-cut outline for centuries to come. The Stone Mountain Commemorative Memorial has grown to its present magnificent proportions from a comparatively modest beginning. If you ask Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, he will tell you that a momentary flash of inspiration was responsible for a work which will take eight years to complete. It seems that several years ago, the United Daughters of the Confederacy inaugurated a movement for a memorial to Robert Lee as the representative of the South. Their plan was for a bas-relief head of Lee to be cut in the base of Stone Mountain. Rorglum pointed out that such a work would be without distinction or dignity, since it would be utterly dwarfed by the mountain. He likened the plan to pasting a postage stamp on a barn door. He said that they should grave something of heroic size deeply across the face of the mountain.

"As I stood there in the sunset, I could almost see Lee and his army moving, as if alive, across the face of the mountain." The design was at once adopted and the southern women threw themselves into the work of securing the necessary funds.

Cost Will Be $4,000,000

B RGLUM'S design shows the Confederate army on the march, with a central group consisting of Lee, Davis, Jackson, Johnston, Forrest and Stewart. All branches of the service are in that long line, which stretches 200 feet in depth and between 1,200 and 1,300 feet in length across the vertical face of the mountain at a little above its mid-height. There will be a full quarter of a mile of marching figures.

The original estimate for the cost of the as made in 1916, was $2,000,000, but due to the increased cost of labor and materials it will probably reach $4,000,000. The expensa is to be borne by private subscriptions; by the city of Atlanta, Fulton County, and a contribution from the State of Georgia. The best way to sense the immensity of this memorial is by comparison with other large sculptural and structural works of ancient and modern times. Thus the great sphinx of Gizah would sink out of sight behind General Lee's head; the far-famed Colossi of Memnon at Thebes would scarcely reach to his stirrup: and if the base of a 16-story skyscraper stood at the level of the hoofs of General Lee's horse, its top-most cornice would just reach the top of his hat; for Lee and his horse occupy over 200 feet of the vertical face of the mountain. The marching host will stretch across the mountain's face from southwest to northeast, and in the whole group there will be about 1000 figures whose average height will be 140 feet. The work will be cut in half relief on the average, but there are places where it will be in full relief. The most important part of the frieze will, of course, be the central group of General Lee and his

Painting in the Outlines

HE first step was to send workmen down over the curved upper face of the rock in slings; from which they drilled holes and fixed iron bars firmly in place. Upon these a wooden stairway was constructed over the outcurving upper face of the mountain, and from this point downward the making of the drawing upon the rock and the subsequent sculpturing were done by men who were lowered in specially constructed steel chairs (bosun chairs they would be called aboard ship) suspended from above by

In carrying out the work, problems came quick and fast, and the first of these was to get the outline of these huge figures correctly drawn upon the face of the mountain. For this purpose a large projector was built and housed in an operating shed. Then Mr. Borglum made a slide of the central group of generals and on the first dark clear night projected the slide upon the mountain. As viewed from the valley below, it stood out with wonderful clarity of definition, and men were sent down in their chairs to paint in the picture thus represented.

The cutting out of the rock will be no small task; for it will be understood that blasting is out of the question, because of the danger of shattering the rock and breaking away needed material. The work is being done by drilling holes in rows which are about six inches apart; the holes being four inches from centre to centre in each line. After drilling, the holes are connected with a cutting tool and the stone is wedged out. The quantity of excavation runs to great figures. Thus in the main central group which is 330 feet long it will be necessary to take out some 300,000 cubic feet of rock. The sculpturing is done from the top, down .-- Scientific American.

TAVE the finest hunting and fishing grounds of Canada fallen into the hands of foreign

There is, in Lake Erie, a piece of Canadian territory nearly eighteen miles long, consisting of hundreds of thousands of acres, upon which, at certain seasons of the year, a Canadian dare not set foot, but which is controlled and dwelt upon freely by its owners, a group of American

This piece of ground, known as Long Point, is the finest wildfowl preserve north of the Gulf of Mexico. There is nothing else like it in northern America. It should be a great government sanctuary for wildfowl. But twenty-five years ago, it was sold, outright, to have and to hold forever, by the Ontario government to a group of American millionaires, amongst whom were three Canadians. They got it for fifty cents. an acre, payable over a period of years.

It is a vast marsh, cut up into myriad ponds and channels and pools, amid wild rice, reeds and willows, where the wild ducks and geese, in countless flocks, congregate, as from time immemorial, every autumn during the migration

In the midst of this marsh the members of the Long Point Company, which is the name of paid, the old feeling has died out, and there is the shooting club, have built a village of cot- very little feeling about the matter to be distages, small, unpretentious wooden shanties.

During the summer, the bay behind Long Point, which is one of the most famous breeding grounds for black bass on the continent, is visited daily by dozens of motor launches with Canadian and American fishing parties. A hotel sists of three or four hundred acres of marsh is run, located near the cottages, by the manager and sand, and provides some shooting for a small of the company, for the accommodation of fishermen

The Lid Goes on Tight

D UT when the first of September draws nigh b the lid goes on Long Point. Wardens and guardians are stationed at various places along the marshy shore. The wardens are Canadians, mostly drawn from the village of Port Rowan and adjacent places. And from that date on, for the duration of the duck and geese season, no man can set foot on Long Point.

Nor can he haul his boat or canoe into the reeds which run out, in many places, into small points from the main marsh, for whether they can rightly claim it or not, the company assumes control over many acres of reedy water which are assumed to be land.

There is duck hunting to be had in the bay behind Long Point. But not anywhere on the thousands of acres belonging to the company.

There the members of the company, practicin their cottages, are taken out by the guide and paddled amongst the lagoons and channels. to lie in rush hides beside the many ponds within the borders of the great marsh, to shoot at the flights of wild ducks as they come winging endlessly in from the north.

TOWING A WEALTHY CLUB MEMBER UP STREAM

FROM POOL TO POOL. THE CANOE IN THE DISTANCE CONTAINS AN ANGLER AND

The membership of the club is believed by the residents of Port Rowan to be not more than twenty-five or so. Because, including the guests public is barred for the benefit of a membership brought in by the members, there are rarely more than twenty people shooting on the point at any one time. One of the most prominent of the American members is Harry Payne Whitney.

To secure the legal limit of ducks per day is, on the private marshes of the company, no trick at all. Twenty-five ducks per day and two hundred in any one season is the limit per hunter, and by no means a difficult bag to make

No Trouble Over Trespass

C OR the past fifteen years, the company has had no trouble with the natives of the district over trespass. After the sale of the point by the government there was a good deal of trouble, because for years the Erie marshes had been the haunt of hundreds of duck hunters who came from all over western Ontario to shoot in September and October. To have this hunting ground barred was too much for some of them, who trespassed defiantly. But as the wardens and guardians are local men, and well covered at Port Rowan.

The Drury government took a piece of marsh, right at the base of the point, which the company did not buy, and turned it two years ago into a public park and shooting ground. It connumber of hunters. It is no way comparable with the great miles of marsh privately owned which run out from it. The commissioners of this park charge a license of five dollars a season to shoot on the park marsl.. Long Point, being sold outright to the company, they holding the title deeds to the property, cannot be recovered by the Ontario government for sanctuary purposes. From the base of Long Point, where the public park is situated. another great marsh, known as the Big Creek marsh, runs westward a number of miles. This is also owned outright by a shooting club, largely American in membership. It lacks some of the advantages of Long Point as a sanctuary, since the farmers' lands run down into the marsh along the back, whereas Long Point sticks out, a great bog with a few sandy ridges holding it together against the lake, and has no habitation course. Those are for you. If you pushed your other than lighthouse keepers and guardians on boat into the reeds near the company's stakes, it. Yet the Big Creek property is a private pre- you would be ordered off in plain terms. No of half a hundred.

Would They Be Sanctuaries

F these marshes were not possessed by small companies of wealthy men, would they now be sanctuaries?

It is possible that, in the twenty-five to thirty years since these marshes came under control of a few wealthy sportsmen, the wild life of the marshes might have been destroyed. The number of hunters has increased enormously since 1900. Conservation was not a popular and powerful movement until quite recent years. And if the Erie marshes had been left to the tender mercies of hunters ever since 1900, it is more than likely that there would now be little to which to offer sanctuary.

As it is, the members of these shooting clubs spend considerable money employing a staff of wardens all the year round to prevent any shooting on their property except by members. The members and their guests, few in number, shoot with the knowledge that they need not hog the sport-there is plenty. Unless the membership of these companies is exploited for commercial purposes, there is very little difference between these preserves and a sanctuary—the difference between a few thousand ducks and many thousand ducks.

One instance is related by a Port Rowan man who is employed during the season to keep his fellow townsmen off the preserve.

"This New York millionaire," said he, "has been coming up here for twenty years. He brings two, sometimes three or four, guests. They shoot a few hours a day, if the weather is right. They take away, except what they have eaten-all the ducks they shoot. I figure they take out about forty or fifty ducks apiece.

"That's their sport. They work hard at it, they are clean killers, and they think the world of this marsh. They don't figure they are hogging any game. They see it that they are. preserving game. And their little shooting trips are by way of reward for keeping a great sanctuary safe from the mob of hogs and pot hunters who would certainly swarm in here if it were

"And I'm not the only resident of these parts that agrees with them.' "What if I came up here in October and wanted to hunt?'

"Well, the ducks are here, because of the marsh," said the warden. "Some slop over, of ve of thousands of acres, from which the favors are granted anybody. You can get fair

Salmon Fishing Almost Gone

HE salmon fishing of the Atlantic rivers. except in Nova Scotia, is completely in the possession of wealthy Americans-and a few Canadians. Except at certain remote and on certain unwanted stretches of water in the salmon rivers, hardly accessible points on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, there is no place a Canadian can go and fish for that greatest of all sporting fish, the sea salmon, except as a poacher or as a guest of some member of the clubs which own the rivers.

In the salmon fishing instance, the governments of New Brunswick and Quebec have leased, on a renewable basis, and for long periods of years, exclusive angling rights. To bar these great rivers, such as the Restigouche, Matapedia, Miramichi, Cascapedia, to trespassers is, of course, out of the question, for they are highways. And any person is free to travel by canoe or boat up or down even so guarded a stream as the Restigouche. A peculiar fact is that, while paddling down these rivers, while in motion, you are free to fish and to take salmon, but you must not stop, anchor or fish from the bank. You may stop and fish for trout--which abound in these rivers—but you must hook no

A member of this newspaper's staff visited the Restigouche and observed the remarkable jealousy with which the choice salmon pools of this swift cold river are guarded.

"A salmon pool," he says, "is not what we Ontario folks usually think of as a pool at all, but a swift, racing piece of water where the salmon take joy in passing, and in which they will take the fly. In still, deep placid stretches of water, such as are usually designated pools, salmon wont rise at all. The salmon is said not to feed when going up a river to breed. They are therefore not hungry, and it is only in the swift water when they are forced to exert themselves that a passing fly will attract

"Throughout the length of the great Restigouche, these pools abound. The river cannot be ascended by ordinary paddling, but only by poling or towing. Every five miles up the river are fine lodges or clubhouses to accommodate four anglers and their guides. A resident cookcaretaker is in charge. The millionaire members of the Restigouche Salmon Club are towed up the river, from pool to pool, by a guide mounted on a horse, who rides along the river bank and in the shallow water towing the canoe behind him. The horses cross from side to side of the river wherever the footing is good. House-horses. Supplies are sent up the same way. "On arriving at a pool, so called, in reality a swift rapids of some depth, the anglers are anchored at the top of the pool, or, if it lends itself to shore fishing, they are landed on the rocks, and with their long salmon fly rods they boats are also towed up the river by teams of

Poaching the Only Method

UR party went up the Restigouche, under the express intention of poaching, since there was no other means of getting a salmon. The outfit of our guides being known to the guardians, we were followed and watched throughout our journey. The stretch of the river known as the Devil's Half Acre, from the great pool of that name being in it, was guarded by Tom Dwyer, the most picturesquely profane man in the world. Like all the other guardians, he was a native of the great salmon river country. "The moment we came on his water, he fell in behind us, in an extraordinary long, dug-out canoe, not more than a foot and a half beam, which he handled with consummate skill. As we drifted downstream Dwyer accompanied us, making it impossible to cast a fly into any of the many splendid pools which he guarded, and though we took our time, in the hope of his leaving us, he stuck coolly with us until we reached our destination which was one of the Red Bank club lodges. There we asked shelter in the guides' quarters, which was courteously afforded us. Tom Dwyer bunked in with us, and the next morning, when we rose at dawn, he rose with us, and saw us safely off his beat. "Thereby hangs a tale. Some years before, our guide 'Cam' Adams, now in the great beyond, coming down with a party had produced a very official looking document purporting to give him permission to fish The Devil's Half Acre. Tom, who cannot read, was impressed by the red seal and reluctantly consented to let the party kill a few salmon. When he learned a few days later that the document was a fake he swore a round oath that 'Cam' Adams would never get a chance to hook another salmon on his stretch of river. And 'Cam' never did.

Poachers Heavily Fined

66 T HESE rivers are not grimly guarded. While all the best pools are owned by the Restigouche Salmon Club and by smaller clubs, a few of the fairly good pools of the river are owned by natives, and there are pools, lower down, owned by nobody in particular, where puty minister of game and fisheries for Ontario, anyone can fish. But those pools where there is a likelihood of a salmon being hooked are possessed and guarded in perfect proportion to that likelihood. Heavy fines are imposed upon poachers who defy the guardians.

"There is poaching going on all the time. The natives poach. Guardians cannot be several places at once, and it can be so arranged that Hudson's bay, a party can be broken up in such a way as to allow fishing in good pools while the guardian

"The twenty-four millionaire club members are only on the river in any numbers during the height of the season, which is for a few weeks from mid-June on. After the height of the season the members come few and far between. This is the poacher's best chance.

While a little fishing may be had, either by poaching in the good pools or fishing for luck in the poor and less guarded pools, it may be said, in perfect fairness, that the salmon fishing of eastern Canada is owned, controlled and jealously guarded by at most a couple of hundred wealthy men, almost exclusively Americans.

"One pool on the Restigouche, that at the junction of the Patapedia and Restigouche rivers, is reported to be so highly esteemed by the club that it could not be bought for a million

So that, unless a man is willing to poach or accept the privilege of another, a Canadian cannot fish for salmon unless he goes, at great expense, by infrequent steamer and primitive fish ing boat, to some of the distant rivers emptying out of Quebec, far up the St. Lawrence shore, on the way to Labrador, or to Nova Scotia, where the salmon fishing is not so good as it used to be and where the fish is smaller.

In the opinion of the owners of these specia rights and privileges, both in the great marshes of Lake Erie and the salmon rivers of Quebe and New Brunswick, the guardianship of these fish and game paradises makes for conservation.

Only a small membership hunts and fishes in very large territories. The total bag, out of mi lions of wild ducks which pass through the Eric marshes, of one hundred members of a private shooting club, would be only 20,000-200 ducks per man per season. There is no doubt tha large bags are taken by the members, because shooting is under ideal conditions which ordin ary hunters never meet. But whether all mem bers take their full count is very doubtful. Their total would be infinitely smaller however than if the marshes were thrown open to the public and hundreds of gunners were loose every day of the long season. And since the investment these wealthy men make in the preserves—the cost of maintaining a staff of wardens mounts up in a year-is worth safeguarding, conservation is practised by the owners themselves, lest the fish or game be de

Salmon used to abound in all the rivers run ning into Lake Ontario. Civilization drove them away-civilization and pollution of the rivers by mills and factories. The salmon rivers of th east are guarded against more than poachers There will be no pollution of the Restigouche the Restigouche Salmon Club knows it.

In this sense the ownership of these exclusive paradises for the sportsmen by a few of th wealthiest men of America means conservation, Very few men can afford to make long and expensive trips in search of fish or game. The bulk of the fishing on these rivers and the greater part of the hunting on the marshes would be by natives and people living in the vicinity. And the history of the forests and streams of America proves that conservation is, if not the last thing certainly not the first thing in the minds of native population.

Not for ten or fifteen years has any of the public domain been sold to private individual for private shooting or fishing rights.

"Anything that is worth having as a private preserve," said Mr. Donald MacDonald, the de "is worth having as a public sanctuary. A pub lic sanctuary means, of course, public shooting grounds all around it The policy of the govern ment is now, and has been, for several years conservation by means of provincially controlled sanctuaries, and when these can be afforded they will be secured from the great lakes t

Journalist's Boots Not Needed That Day

N connection with the murder of King Alexander and Queen Draga of Serbia in 1903, Mr. Wickham Steed, who, as editor of the Lon-Times, traveled through Canada with Lord Northcliffe, tells a remarkable story in the Review of Reviews. Here are his words:

The revolting details of the crime, the strange apathy of the Russian minister at Belgrade who heard the explosion as the door of the palace was blown in, but did nothing until he saw the bodies of the King and Queen thrown from the window, and the reign of terror afterwards established by the regicide officers, are matters of history. But one tragi-comic incident remains in my memory.

The day before the assassinations, a wellknown Danish journalist had "interviewed" King Alexander, who had wished him also to "interview" Queen Draga on the morrow. Though he had intended to leave Belgrade that night, the journalist decided to stay on at his hotel for twenty-four hours and, after writing out his interview with the King, went to bed, leaving a pair of patent leather boots outside the door of his room so that they might be cleaned in readiness for his audience with the Queen in the morning. He woke late, dressed hurriedly, and opened the door to get his boots. They had disappeared. He rang for the valet, but in vain. Then he went to the head of the stairs and shouted for a maid or a waiter. At length a

"Where are my patent leather boots?" asked the journalist angrily.

"You need no patent leather boots," the boy "You impudent young rascal, I must have my boots," roared the journalist. "Bring them im-

Explained the Incident

Ar one of the many complimentary dinners given to Sir Harry Lauder during his recent world tour, he created roars of laughter by telling in his own inimitiable way a story concerning an old Scottish woman who was bitterly opposed to the introduction of an organ into the kirk.

One day she particularly and loudly expressed her dislike of the singing of an anthem, remarking that she "didna hold wi' these new fangled notions." "Why, granny," remarked the minister soothingly, "that anthem is a very ancient one. It is from the Psalms, and may be the very one that David sang to Saul."

"I shouldna wonder," drily remarked the old lady. "I shouldna wonder at a'. That wad explain why Saul threw his javelin at David when the laddie sang before him?"

Husband Who Was Deposed As Governor of Texas— But Asserts She, Not Her Husband, Will Be Governor -Predicted They Would Occupy Executive Mansion

T was a blustery, fateful day in January, nearly eight years ago, when James E. Ferguson and his wife, Miriam A. Ferguson, took their departure from the executive mansion in Austin and boarded the train for Charley, their old home at Temple. By a verdict of the state senate, Mr. Ferguson had just been deposed from the office of the governor of Texas.

A touch of prophecy made the scene rather this error the player loses one point. If he is dramatic. As Mrs. Ferguson came out of the stately home and stood on the broad verandah she was silent for a moment, then turned to her husband, and in the presence of a little group

And now it seems that "Ma" Ferguson's prophecy is about to be fulfilled; that for the first time in the history of the United States a woman will be governor of a state. For she has been nominated by the Texas democrats, an honor virtually tantamount to election in the lone star state.

And it will be Mrs. Ferguson, not her husband, the former governor, who will run the state. She is quite frank about that, and has said so in public statements. "Jim did many things while he was governor that I told him not to do," she says, "and he failed to do many things that I told him to do."

Originally a young farmer of her community, he had just come back from the Pacific coast where he had been a laborer and boss on a railway line. She was well educated. She had been to college and was a good musician. Her quiet inspiration acted as a spur to the untutored young farmer. She induced him to read for law while he was making a success of his farming and ranching, and soon he was one of the most successful men of his state. All through his political rise, she stood behind him. She sold the property she had inherited from her father, in order that Ferguson might run for governor

R. HARRY CHARLTON, manager advertising bureau, Canadian National Railways, some time ago was accompanying a party of Britishers on a tour of Canada, and the party stopped off overnight at the Clifton, Niagara Falls.

Shortly after the special train left Niagara Falls, one member of the party informed Mr. Charlton that he had left one of his bedroom slippers in his room at the hotel; that he valued the slipper very highly on account of their having been a gift from his grandmother, and he wondered if it would be possible for Mr. Charlton to recover it.

Mr. Charlton assured him there would be no difficulty in recovering the slipper and that he would arrange to get it and have it delivered to

A wire was despatched from the next station at which the train stopped to the agent at Niagara Falls, requesting him to obtain the slipper at the hotel and forward it to Detroit, the next stopping place.

The following morning the slipper reached Detroit and Mr. Charlton delivered it personally to the owner. The owner was greatly surprised that the slipper was recovered and expressed himself in the following manner: "Aw, I say, old top, this is more than I ex-

FAILS TO MAKE HISTORY COLLAPSES ON LINKS

One More Record Golf Story Shattered When Lord Riddell Needs the Ambulance

Suez Canal and cross the Indian and Pacific GREAT consternation reigned at Walton Heath Golf Club a little while back when it became known that Lord Riddell, the English newspaper magnate, had been in a motor smash at Tadworth nearby, on his way from town for a round of his favorite game. It was discovered that a motor bus had shattered the side of his car in a crossroads collision, but that both the noble lord and his chauffeur had escaped with a good shaking.

On arrival at the club his lordship went straight to the first tee and played 18 holes before lunch. Everyone thought he looked fairly poorly during the mid-day meal, but he insisted on playing his afternoon round and started off in great style. At the ninth hole, however, he collapsed and a car had to bump its way across the links to fetch him back. Which proves that a good shaking may have a worse effect upon the system than a severe bruising.

MME. POINCARE HATES VERY WORD "POLITICS"

C TEPHEN LOUZANNE, editor of the Paris Matin, asks in the August World's Work. "Will French Women Ever Vote?" M. Lauzanne is of the opinion that they will not until they themselves show a desire for the suffrage. At present French women have no political status; they cannot even vote in municipal elections. "There is but one answer," says M. Lauzanne. "It is so because the women of France want it to be so. And it will continue to be so as long as the women of France desire

M. Lauzanne quotes as typical the views expressed by three French women of high station. One was the late Empress Eugenie. M. Lauzanne once asked her:

"Does your Majesty consider it the duty of all women to participate in politics?" 'No," she exclaimed, and the reply was sharp and cutting. "Politics are cruel, bringing nothing to woman but tears and pain.' He asked Mme. Poincare what she would say if her husband were re-elected president.

"I would immediately demand a divorce," was the quick reply. "I simply hate politics." "But," I insisted. "I thought that the occupants of this mansion stood for feminism and woman suffrage." "No!" Mme. Poincare retorted. There is but one feminist in this house. It is the president,

Can "Good But Lonely" Get a Husband Without Travelling With a Fast Crowd?—Should a Widower Remarry for His Children's Sake?-Does a Boy of 20 Know His Own Mind About Love?

Dear Dorothy Dix-I was raised very carefully, and I thought that all I had to do was to be modest, ladylike, jolly and friendly, and Mr. Right betrothed to Rosamund Godolphin, come into my life, but when there were no kisses and midnight parties they didn't linger, but would say, "Wake up, little girl." I have watched silly, irresponsible, little seventeen-year-old kids go out and make a sensible man look and act foolish so. I have a good little girl. Men have a mund's brother, Peter. By repeated insults Peter finally provokes Oliver to threaten murder, and when Olishie man look and act foolish so. I have a good little girl. Men have a mund's brother, Peter. By repeated insults Peter finally provokes Oliver to threaten murder, and when Olishie man look and act foolish so. I have watched silly irresponsible, little seventeen-year-old kids go out and make a sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched silly irresponsible and look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so. I have watched sensible man look and act foolish so watched sensible man look and watch silly, irresponsible, little seventeen-year-old kids go out and make a sensible man look and act foolish, so I have come to the conclusion that that is sible man look and act foolish, so I have come to the conclusion that that is Peter in an unwitnessed quarrel over

This is the year 1924. Shall I continue to be a real nice girl or shall I get into the game and, through paint, lipsticks and foolish talk, give the debs a run? When the men ask what shout a little name about a little name and ask what shout a little name about a little name ask what shout a little name ask what should not not not name ask what should not debs a run? When the men ask what about a little party, shall I go and dance and flirt as all the other girls do? My instinct tells me that is the wrong way to go after a husband. But I long for a domestic life. I have his doorway. Feeling bound to proay to go after a husband. But I long for a domestic life. I have an domestic life. I have a doorway. Feeling both a good, little, stay-at-home way and I am twenty-five, and if I tect Lionel, Oliver can do nothing then went off at a gallop.

This way I will always be GOOD BUT LONELY.

SIT Onver's near almost then went off at a gallop.

"Be thou blessed for these good tidings!" he answered on a note of goes to the justices and asks them continue this way I will always be

Perhaps, my dear, it is better to be twenty-five and good but lonely, and have your own self-respect, than it is to be married to the kind of a man who picks out his wife at wild parties and who mistakes the effects of bootleg liquor on his system for love. Drink makes many men amorous, and any woman can inveigle a gentleman who is pleasantly lit up to the altar. But the trouble is that when the effects of the liquor die out the man's affection also dies out, and the poor wife is left regretting her bargain.

Of course, if you just want to have a good time for a little while there is no doubt that you can have more fun travelling with the fast crowd than the slow one. Theoretically, men admire the good, little, modest girl. That is the kind of a girl they want their sisters to be and the kind they try to marry. But they prefer to play around with the girls who are not particular about what they do and who have no scruples with which to "wet-blanket" a party.

But my long observation has been that worth-while men seldom marry the wild, wild women. They have had enough of the female rounders, and when they pick out a wife they want some girl who hasn't been kissed and pawed over by dozens of other men and whose main accomplishments are not cigarette smoking and booze

Of course, the girl who belongs to the midnight frolic crowd does marry-usually a man of her own kind, and we see the results of these unions in the divorce scandals in the paper.

It may be, Good But Lonely, that you are in the wrong environment and that you need to go away from home and meet strange men. Often a girl gets sort of pocketed in her own little circle and she has to break away and go where people are not accustomed to her to make them realize how attractive she is. I don't believe any girl is passed over just because she is good. God help the world if the time ever comes when men cease to admire modesty and purity in women! DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix-I am a widower with two children. I lost my wife some years ago and have never remarried, though I am now only thirtyeight years of age. Did I do wrong by staying unmarried all these years. or should I have got married again to give the children a mother? I felt that I had no right to burden any woman with some one else's children Was this the right view to take?

I imagine, T. J. L., that you have never come across a woman who appealed strongly to you, or else you would have let her decide the question about whether she were willing to raise another woman's children or not. This being the case, you were wise to stay single, for marriage for anything but love is a losing game.

Generally speaking, it is a good thing for a widower to remarry, provided—and mark well the word PROVIDED—he makes a suitable choice of a wife, for the widower must consider the interests of his children as well as his own in the woman he puts at the head of his house.

Many men don't do this. I have seen plenty of widowers marry young, frivolous girls no older than their own daughters, and I have seen men marry cold, selfish women, who had no pity or sympathy for children in their hearts. Such marriages as these are bound to bring misery on all there are plenty mother's love and a mother's tenderness to their stepchildren and who make for them a home where they can grow up under their father's influence. Such women never consider their stepchildren

Also you have to consider yourself. Children grow up quickly and go about their business of life, and you will find yourself a very forlorn and lonely old man unless you have provided for yourself with a companion for your old age. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix-Do you think a boy twenty years old is old enough t know his own mind about love?

No, indeed, Jane, I don't. A boy of twenty has not come to himself. He is just a kid, with a kid's changeable tastes. He is crazy about one thing today and wild for another thing tomorrow, and tired of them both and wants something else the next day. And it is the same way about love.

A girl attracts him because she has got such a cute way with her, and the next week another girl has got him going because she talks baby talk to him, and the next month he is sure he will die if he doesn't get the girl whose step matches his in the dance,

The boy of twenty is honest in thinking that he is experiencing an undying passion, but he is just mistaken, and don't you put any path in him. Wait until he is older and has seen more of the world and his tastes are settled before you give him your little beart for keeps.

DOROTHY DIX.

SYNOPSIS.

Sir Oliver Tressilian, renowned for rugged face. his exploits on the Spanish Main, is to draw up a document attesting to the fact that he bears on his body no mark of recent wound; that therefore the trail of blood, obviously that of the murderer, injured in the en-counter, was not his. This document he takes away to hold in readiness until needed. able advocate.

A few weeks later Lionel learns from Jasper Leigh, a pirate sea cap-tain whose ship is lying in the haror, that the queen has been peti-ioned to command the justices to oring Oliver to trial—which they had the proof of his innocence before her, but she refuses to see him. Lionel tells him of the petition to the queen. Half-crazed with fear that should Oliver clear himself his own implication will follow, he formulates a scheme to get Oliver out of the way, and goes to Jasper Leigh for assistance. Leigh suggests abducting Oliver and carrying him overseas to toil on the plantations.

He lowered his voice and spoke with some slight hesitation, fearing that he proposed perhaps more than his prospective employer might de-

"He might return." was the answer that dispelled all doubts on that score.

"Ah!" said the skipper. "What o' the Barbary rovers, then? They lack slaves and are ever ready to trade, though they be niggardly payers. I never heard of none that returned once they had him safe aboard their nce they had him safe aboard their alleys. I ha' done some trading ith them, bartering human freights or spices and eastern carpets and Master Lionel breathed hard.

"'Tis a horrible fate is't not?"
The captain stroked his beard.
"Yet 'tis the only really safe bestowal, and when all is said 'tis not so horrible as hanging, and certainly less dishonoring to a man's kin.
Ye'd be serving Sir Oliver and your-

"'Tis so, 'tis so," cried Master Lionel almost fiercely. "And the The seaman shifted on his short, sturdy legs, and his face grew pensive.

"A hundred pound?" he suggested "Done with you for a hundred bounds," was the prompt answer—so prompt that Captain Leigh realized he had driven a fool's bargain which it was incumbent upon him "That is, a hundred pounds for yself," he corrected slowly. "Then here be the crew to reckon for-to twill mean another hundred at the Master Lionel considered a me-

"It is more than I can lay my hands on a short notice. But, look you, you shall have a hundred and fifty pounds in coin and the balance in jewels. You shall not be the loser in that, I promise you. And when you come again and bring me word that all is done as you now undertake there shall be the like

Upon that the bargain was set tled. And when Lionel came to talk of ways and means he found that he had allied himself to a man who understood his business thor-oughly. All the assistance that the kipper asked was that Master Lionel should lure his gentleman to some concerted spot conveniently near the water side. There Leigh would have a boat and his men in readiness, and the rest might very safely be left to

In a flash Lionel bethought him of the proper place for this. He swung round and pointed across the water to Trefusis Point and the gray pile of Godolphin Court all

"When you have him safely aboard come to me at Penarrow," e replied, which showed that after all he did not trust Master Leigh will any further than he was compelled. On that they parted. Lionel mounted and rode away, whilst Master Leigh made a trumpet of his hands and hallooed to the ship. As he stood waiting for the boat

He found the table set for supper as on that other night when he had staggered in with a wound in his side to be cared for and sheltered by Sir Oliver. He did not approach the table; he crossed to the fire and sat down there holding out his hands to the blaze. He was very cold and could not still his trembling. His very teeth chattered.

Nicholas came in to know if he would sup. He answered unsteadily that despite the lateness of the hour ne would await Sir Oliver's return

"Is Sir Oliver abroad?" quoth the servant in surprise.
"He went out a moment since, I know not whither," replied Lionel.
"But since he has not supped he is not like to be long absent."

want and sat huddled there, a prey to mental tortues which were not to be repressed. His mind would to be repressed. His mind would turn upon naught but the steadfast, unwavering affection of which Sir Oliver ever had been prodigal toward him. In this very matter of Peter Godolphin's death, what sacrifices had not Sir Oliver made to shield him? From so much love and self-sacrifice in the past he inclined to argue now that not even in extreme peril would his brother betray him. And then that bad streak of fear peril would his brother betray him. And then that bad streak of fear which made a villain of him reminded him that to argue thus was to argue upon supposition that it would be perilous to trust such an assumption: that if, after all Sir Oliver shouli fail him in the crucial test, then was ne_lost indeed.

Then came doubt, and, finally assurance of another sort, assurance that this was not so and that he knew it; assurance that he lied to himself, seeking to condone the thing he did. He took his head in his hands and groaned aloud. He was a villain. a black-hearted, soulless villain! He reviled himself when he rose shuddering, resolved even in this eleventh hour to go after his brother and save him from the doom that awaited him out to go after his brother and save him from the doom that awaited him out yonder in the night.

But again that resolve was withered by the breath of selfish fear.

Limply he resumed his seat, and his thoughts took a fresh turn.

Sale of Fur and Cloth Coats

Enter the new modes. The Paris accepted modes for fall and winter; but not at the high prices which usually signal their appearance. Rather, at a price lower than, in all probability, will be possible until after Christmas clearances. Because, now, in midseason, manufacturers offer to retailers rare concessions, 20 per cent. to 50 per cent. less than later season prices.

We have selected hundreds of the most luxurious fur and cloth coats, the most exquisitely styled and fashioned of these coats from America's foremost makers. We have priced them at an even greater concession than the manufacturers quoted us.

Arnprior, Ontario. - "I must write and tell you my experience with your medicine. I was working at the fac-tory for three years and became so run-down that I used to take weak spells and would be at home at least one day each week. I was treated by the doctors for anemia, but it didn't seem to do me any good. I was told to take a rest, but was unable to, and kept on getting worse. I was troubled mostly with my periods. I would sometimes pass three months, and when it came it would last around two weeks, and I would have such pains at times in my right side that I could hardly walk. I am only 19 years of age and weigh 118 pounds now, and before taking the Vegetable Compound I was only 108 pounds. I my friends told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and when I had taken a bottle of it I felt a change. My mother has been taking it for a different ailment and has found it very satisfactory. Canadian Press Despatch.

Toronto, Sept. 5. — As a result of negotiations which culminated in a meeting of representatives of the Dominion of Canada Football Association yesterday and today an armistice has been declared in the soccer war, and in all probability the official peace treaty will be ratified by both parties early next week. The following statement, signed by Secretary Davidson of the D. F. A. and Secretary Adamson of the C. F. A., was handed out with the promise that full particulars will be given to the public next week.

"A complete settlement was arrived at and an agreement signed by the representatives of both parties. All suspensions passed on all clubs, players, officials and grounds in connection with the past trouble have been raised."

also. With Hamilton and London out, there would of course be no excuse for the coined cognomen of "Mint."

The London team will be paid off in Hamilton, and most of the players will scatter for their homes from there. Joe Delman left the team yesterday for home upon receipt of news that his mother was seriously ill. What will happen during the winter months is highly speculative There is at the present time little basis for the idea that there will be no Mint League next year, and there isn't a whit more for believing there will.

negro heavyweight, made a simple SUFFERS BROKFN FG. third and home. Turning quickly to avoid being put out, he broke his right leg above the ankle. Batteries — Palmerston: Everett, Lawrence and Daum; Teeswater: Robinson, O'Hagan and Cassidy. Thornes—Thompson, and There Looking forward to the five years of active ring work which he considers still remain for him regardless of the outcome of the Firpo fight

sey for the goal of all pugilists, the Rube Horning Turns Quickly heavyweight championship of the To Avoid Being Tagged

Of his 95 battles, Wills won 44 by knockouts and 30 by decisions. He was knocked out once, lost four times decisions, fought two draws.

thirteen no-decision engagements and one exhibition, record books show.

The only knockout he suffered in his career was administered by Sam Langford, negro heavyweight, considered by many observers as the hardest hitting man of his weight who ever fought. It came in 1916 in the nineteenth round. Wills more than evened the score by knocking out Langford in five rounds in 1918.

Sam McVey, Bill Tate, Tut Jackson, Kid Norfolk and Jeff Clarke, all negro boxers, were also bowled over by Wills as he fought his way to challenge the white heavyweights. The first of these to take a chance, Fred Fulton, was knocked out in 1920 in one round; since that time no white man of prominence has risked his ring prestige with "the Brown Panther." Wills and his manager, Paddy Mullins, have been consistently challeng ing Jack Dempsey for the heavy-weight championship. The match, tentatively arranged many times, was finally lost in the brilliant rise of Firpo. It is understood, however, that the winner of the Wills-Firpo struggle will be matched with Dempsey in 1925.

Two years ago Wills was considered a real menace to white supremacy; since that time, however, he has fought only four times. The ability of his "brittle" hands to stand the test of a championship bout has been doubted; his failure to knock out Bartley Madden in fifteen rounds in his most recent fight has been added food for skeptics, who declare that he has "gone back."

Meanwhile Wills is carefully, methodically preparing for the moment when the first gong rings, as he has conscientiously trained for each of his 95 fights. To his critics he answers calmly:
"I am not holding my opponent cheaply and am working into my best condition. My hands are ready and I am confident. I like to fight.

"I Like To Fight," Sums Up and for all that is definitely known yet, mayhap, the end of the Mint League

Probably somebody will get a safe and sane idea during the early period of hibernation and a new league or a couple of new circuits will result. Who knows? or maybe it's: Who cares?

Hamilton. Sept. 5.—"Sad" Sam Wernke pitched a real game against the London Tecumsehs here this afternoon, winning 5 to 0. Fields, who opposed him, was also good, but the Clippers got to him for two homers by Froman and Neitzke, and several extrabase hits. Both teams played sparkling ball, only one error being chalked up.

The visitors secured only six hits off Wernke, and the latter's only dangerous pinch was in the fifth, when he had the bases loaded with only one out. He worked out of it nicely, however. He fanned six and walked two.

Beatty's sensational catch of a line drive from McGee's bat featured the contest.

LYON RELINQUISHES SENIOR GOLF TITLE

Failure To Sink Long Putt Gives F. A. Parker Championship.

Canadian Press Despatch Toronto, Sept. 5 .- After holding the championship for six years, since the formation of the association, George S. Lyon of the Lambton Club, relinquished the title in the seventh annual tournament of the Canadian Seniors' Association, to his clubmate. F. Parker, but it was not until both men had staged a great struggle for the honors that the veteran was forced to acknowledge defeat. In the thirty-six holes, played on Wednesday and Thursday, the two were tied for first place with cards of 162, and in the eighteenhole play-off on Thursday afternoon, Mr. Lyon sank a twelve-foot putt to square the score at 73, and the two were forced to play off again this afternoon, and once again the former champion was faced with the task of sinking a long putt, a twenty-five footer, to square the match, but he was short and the title changed hands amidst a deep silence. No one wanted to applaud the winner, much as they appreciated his good game and his fighting qualities, because they sympathized with the loser, who had made a game struggle to retain his laurels.

SMOOTH PERFORMANCE

A marked smoothness characterizes the performance of Dodge Brothers Motor Car.

In keeping with the policy of constant improvement, effective measures have been taken to minimize vibration. Applied to the body, engine, clutch, brakes, and other vital units, these refinements add immeasurably to the comfort of travel over boulevards and country roads.

The effect is so pronounced, in fact, that it is entirely fitting to classify smooth performance as one of the outstanding attributes of Dodge Brothers Motor Car.

British Participation Therein Roundly Scored by London Daily Mail.

Canadian Press Despatch. London, Sept. 5.—Ratification by Germany of the London agreement produced no marked effect either way on the stock market here. No definite steps seemingly have yet taken recording the stock market here. the stock market here. No definite steps seemingly have yet taken regarding the raising of Great Britain's £40,000,000 portion of the international loan.

From Lord Rothermer's Daily Mail there issues every morning a mighty flood of protest against Britain lending money to a former enemy. The Daily Mail indeed asserts that it is its intention to publish the names and descriptions of the banks and stock exchange houses which receive subscriptions for the loan to Germany and furnish information concerning the underwriters of the same.

Dominion Bank Shares Make Further Advance of Four Points.

Canadian Press Despatch, Canadian Press Despatch,
Toronto, Sept. 5. — Toronto Rails reached par for the second time this year on the Toronto exchange today, due to buying which appeared to be orisker on the Montreal market than was the case locally. The action of Rail shares was the most interesting feature of a moderately quiet market. The reactionary trend of prices in New York gave little encouragement to Canadian stock raiders. C. P. R. shares were slightly easier on account closing price was ½ point down for the day at 146½.

Bell Telephone was inactive and stronger at 136¾ to 137, closing at the former price. Bread common was in demand at $2, and closed at $1¾ bid.

Bread preferred was stronger at Bread preferred was stronger at 100½, which equals the high point established earlier in the week. City Dairy common was firm at 60. Canadian Carpreferred scored the largest advance on a small lot sold at 87, a net gain of 2%. Steel of Canada common was another strong stock at 76½.

A 4-point advance in Dominion Bank shares was the outstanding performance among the investment stocks. All the day's transactions were put through at 184. Commerce was steady the day's transactions were put through at 184. Commerce was steady at 186. Three of the bank stocks

ONTARIO CREAMERY BUSINESS INCREASING

Butter Output Exceeds That of Last Year by 100,000

Visitors to the Western Fair next week will find in the Manufacturers' Building an exhibit of more than passing interest in that of the On-tario Creamery of 129 King street, one of London's most progressive indus-tries, and one of Western Ontario's leading creameries.

Ample evidence that this concern' business is growing by leaps and bounds is found in the fact that since the first month of the current year it has manufactured a total of 100,-000 pounds more butter than in the same period during 1923.

The Ontario Creamery first started in business in London some eight years ago, and since that time Meadow Gold products have attained reputation for consistent that has made the demand for them greater year by year,
"Meadow Gold Brand" is becoming household synonym for thoroughly good and always dependable creamery products, and justly so, for the Ontario Creamery, which manufac-tures this line of butter, ice cream and similar products, maintains rigid standard of using nothing bu the highest grade ingredients an perating a manufacturing system of

BELLEVILLE THIEVES GIVEN EIGHT YEARS

Sentences Break Court Record of Twenty Years Standing.

Canadian Press Despatch. Belleville, Sept. 5 .- Two of the four young men arrested following thousand-dollar theft of clothes and suitcase in Belleville departmental stores, three weeks ago, were sentenced today by Magistrate Stewart Mason to the longest terms given in a Belleville court in twenty years. The men, Arthur Babcock and Frank Wilson, Jun., were each given eight years on charges of breaking into and entering two stores and theft.

Wilson is a ticket-of-leave man and must do the remaining part of former term, a matter of four months, in addition to his new term of eight years. A week ago both men, who were arrested within 24 hours of the theft, on the waterfront here, had pleaded guilty. Most of the

DISASTROUS FIRE

Present Structure Result of Efforts of East London Residents.

St. George's Presbyterian Church, East London, is one of several city ongregations which received an early baptism of fire. Disaster materialized in March of 1896, when the little mission house, erected by great labor and perseverance on the part of an untiring few, was totally destroyed by fire. The early history of the congregation is replete with the earnest en-deavor which characterized all piondeavor which characterized all pioneer Presbyterianism in Canada.

In June of 1888, the Rev. W. M. Roger, then pastor of King Street Presbyterian Church, took steps to organize a prayer meeting in the vicinity of Pottersburg. A room in the dwelling house of Mr. William Goforth was secured, and here the Sabbath School was opened on July 15 of the same year.

Means Health To Women Chiropractors Claim

Certain ailments of women have become almost universal among civilized races. Many think that most of these disorders are unavoidable and they are looked upon as a "matter of Instances like the following are of common occurrence in cases where Chiropractic analy sis is made from the spine.

Nerve pressure is found to indicate lack of nourishment for the skin; poor surface circulation, and as a result of this condition, defective elimination through the skin and accumulation of waste matter and systematic poisons in the system. Impingement found on nerves leading to the stomach indicate signs of catarrhal affections and membranous linings and want of nutrition in the glandular structures. This, of course, means such effects as indigestion, fermentation of foods, gas formations, constipation and a multitude of resulting disturb-

There will be found, upon examination of the spine, certain deviations of the vertebrae which creates the nerve interference that accounts for the fallen or prolapsed conditions of stomach, bowels and other abdominal organs, from which there is likely to be a sagging of the pelvic organs, relaxation of the bands and ligaments attaching them, and from this relaxation, the chief misplacement that accounts for so many distresses of mind and body.

Causes and Effects.

Many have been informed that surgery offers the only hope of restoring order in the parts involved sufficient to afford all the relief that can be given the patient.

From this opinion the Chiropractors dissent, and explain that the relaxed and prolapsed conditions, as well as the chief misplacement, are not causes of disease, but only the effects of the compressed or irritated nerves supplying the organs and parts affected, and that the only possible way to restore natural order and harmony of action is to clear the way for the normal passage of nerve impulse from the brain to the body. This is done by locating the displaced portions of the spine and adjusting them to liberate the nerve lines from impingement and tension.

The Result of Adjustment.

Women who will make careful investigation of chiropractic and take spinal adjustments will be proven fully sufficient to overcome all the symptoms or effects of their disorders. Removing the cause at the spine will dissipate such effects as constipation, pains in the head, breasts, pelvis and lower limbs and disturbances of the gastro intestinal tract.

A great deal of unnecessary suffering can be avoided if women will investigate and accept chiropractic.

The Chiropractors identified with this educational campaign bear the stamp of reliability, educational qualifications and indorsement of the Chiropractic profession.

wall. Where fell the moonlight dim.

Modest, and simple and prim. He gave an old-fashioned kiss to her, And she gave her heart to him.

Grandfather's grandson calls at the door. Waits with a chauffeur prim,

And grandmother's grand-daughter appears, Tailored and modern and trim. He gives her the same old-fashioned

And she gives her heart to him. (But he also give her a dozen roses. seven pounds of chocolates and glaced fruits, theatre tickets, twelve books, a quart of perfume, an engagement ring set in platinum, a pearl necklace, a jeweled wrist watch, a house in the country, and a car.)

No, Gertrude; just because you used to make such wonderful mud pies, it doesn't follow that cooking his meals will come naturally.

Then Why Hide Them? Six-year-old Ada was watching her grandmother dress.

"Why grandma." she asked. "what are you putting on two petticoats

"So that people can't see my legs," primly replied her grandmother.

The modern little miss looked pain-The modern little files looked yained and lowering her voice, she inquired anxiously, "Grandma, what's the matter with your legs?"

Corn Pome.

I like the tender, juicy corn, It hits the spot, my dears; But can't someone contrive it so That spot won't be my ears?

The Frozen Horror.

He gazed at his wife in horror. For long time he had been searching for her-only to find her like this! "Gloria!" he cried, "Gloria! Can't you answer me?"

Her face was like marble, and was of an unearthly color. Mutely she shook her head. Her face seemed frozen—paralyzed—only her eyes frozen—paralyzed—only ner eyes seemed alive.

Her husband shuddered and buried his face in his hands. His fingers closed over a hammer. He raised it and eyed it in horror, yet it seemed to be the only thing to do. It was only after a dozen heavy, sickening blows with the hammer that he could emove the beauty clay from his wife's face.

'Top Dat!

Little Mary was five years old. One evening her tummy ached and put her in misery. She slapped it vigorously, saying at the same time: "Be still, tummy. You've had your dinner."

The man who says that he has never deceived his wife is telling the truth-but he thinks he is lying.

An Achievement

I think I'm quite a poet, And often, just for fun,

I sit and rhyme such words as this: "Parallelopipedon."

When father pays his income tax Hoping a dollar to save, He finds the crimp in his pocket-

Is really a permanent wave

His Desire.

"Old Riley Rippey got to saying tuther day," related Gap Johnson, of Rumpus Ridge, "that he was eighty-three years old and hadn't never seed.

three years old and hadn't never seed a moving picture yet, but had just about made up his mind that he'd like to sorter see how they look.

"So he rid into town with me last Friday and attended the Oriental Grotto Picture Palace. He set right through three performances and was starting in on the fourth when the manager of the show asked him if he didn't think he was acting kinda funny, seeing the same thing over and over.

"That mought be, and then ag'in it moughtn't," says the old man. "Such cuttin's-up as have been going on yur may be an old story to you town folks, but they hain't to me, and I want to see the outcome of 'em. That there lady's husband hain't That there lady's husband hain't ketched that there infernal dude fooling around her yet, but I figger that the dude'll be a little slow the next time, and the husband will show up in time to nail him. And if he does I want to be right yur when it happens."

RECKLESS DRIVING

Special to The Advertiser.
St. Thomas, Sept. 5. — Magistrate

Maxwell has corrected the impression which has gone abroad regarding the conviction of John S. Ashplant, London, on a charge of speeding between St. Thomas and Port Stanley early in the week. According to the evidence given by Mr. Ashplant's driver, Kenneth Braithwaite the car was travelling at a greed which in the gays of the law is speed which in the eyes of the law is a violation of the Ontario motor rehicles' act.
At the regular meeting the Yarmouth council complimented the au-thorities on the stand they had taken in regards to reckless driving. Miscellaneous Shower.

A tea was given this evening at o'clock for brides-elect, the Misses Olive and Gladys Lawrence, at the nome of Mrs. M. C. Moore, 52 Flora street. A miscellaneous shower was also given at the Purple Iris Tea Rooms for Miss Olive Lawrence. The shower was given by Miss Lucille Kilmer, while many of Miss Law-rence's friends from the Central Methodist Church attended.
