START

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

CANADA

MICROFILMED

BY

CENTRAL MICROFILM UNIT

PUBLIC ARCHIVES

OF

CANADA

OTTAWA, 2, ONTARIO.

REDUCTION 15 X 7 EXPOSURE READING.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

Continued from Roll D- 3.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Roll 11-4

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Speeches

List of files

(a) Bound Volumes, 1909-1921

1.	Reprints, 1909-1921	D 1
2.	Speeches for 1910	D 278
3.	Speeches 1911	D 454
4.	Dominion Elections, 1911	D 615
5.	1919 Speeches (Book No. 1)	D 870
6.	1919 Speeches (Book No. 2)	D 985
7.	Speeches, 1919-1920	D 1120
8.	Notes of Speeches, 1919-1921	D 1572
9.	Speeches, 1921	D 1701

(b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921

10.	Lists of Invitations to Speak and Speeches Given, 1907-1910	D 2103
11.	Undated	D 2123
12.	1899-1906	D 2143
13.	1907-1908	D 2385
14.	1909	D 2616
15.	January-April, 1910	D 2810
16.	May-December, 1910	D 2999
17.	1911	D 3204
18.	1912	D 3413
19.	1913	D 3499
20.	1914	D 3661
21.	1915	D 3767
22.	1916	D 3842
23.	1917	D 3953
24.	1919	D 3965
25.	January-February, 1920	D 4082
26.	March-June, 1920	D 4207
27.	August, 1920	D 4378
28.	September, 1920	D 4596
29.	October, 1920	D 4673
30.	November-December, 1920	D 4841
31.	January-June, 1921	D 4918
32.	July, 1921	D 5122
33.	August, 1921	D 5368
34.	September, 1921	D 5434
35.	October, 1921	D 5551
36.	November, 1921	D 5696
37.	December, 1921	D 5842

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Speeches

(b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921 LIST

1899	Speech to workingmen: social settlements and the sweating system.	D 2143
1899?	Boston, Union for Industrial Progress: The sixty-hour law in Massachusetts.	D 2145
14 May 1899	Boston, Union for Industrial Progress: "The value of organization."	D 2153
1900?	The Department of Labour.	D 2159
Dec. 1900	Toronto Canadian Club: "Some aspects of modern labour problems."	D 2177
1901?	The Department of Labour.	D 2180
1901	The government's labour policy.	D 2185
Oct. 1901	Epworth League convention: "The economic world of today: its agitations and prospects, and the relation of the Church thereto."	D 2190
24 Jan. 1901	Ottawa Literary and Scientific Society: "Conciliation and arbitration."	D 2203
10 Feb. 1902	Ottawa Social Science Club: "The Industrial Revolution."	D 2206
26. Oct. 1903	Winnipeg: Carpenter's strike.	D 2209
18 Jan. 1904	Ottawa Canadian Club: Toast to "Canada".	D 2227
26 Feb. 1904	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Prof. Adam Shortt.	D 2238
9 Oct. 1904	Ottawa?: Sermon.	D 2242
18 Oct. 1904	Ottawa Canadian Club: Formation of the Canadian Club.	D 2249
12 Nov. 1904	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Goldwin Smith.	D 2252
Dec. 1904	Ottawa Literary and Scientific Society: "Social settlements."	D 2261
7 Jan. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Prof. Clark.	D 2277
27 Jan. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of W.H. Drummond and Norman Duncan.	D 2280
4 Feb. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Byron E. Walker.	D 2283
25 Feb. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Frank Oliver.	D 2289
18 March 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of J.G. Forster.	D 2293
3 April 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Chancellor Burwash.	D 2298

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

5 May 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Charles R. Crane and Walter L. Fisher.	D 2305
24 Aug. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Introduction of Prince Louis of Battenburg.	D 2309
30. Sept. 1905	Nanaimo, B.C., Mass meeting of miners: The settlement of the labour dispute.	D 2312
17 Oct. 1905	Ottawa Canadian Club: Annual meeting - presidential address.	D 2373
18 Nov. 1905	Ottawa: Harper memorial.	D 2379
24. Feb. 1906	Chicago City Club: The settlement of labour disputes.	D 2382
14. Feb. 1907	House of Commons: Speech written for Mr. Lemieux on the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 2385
4 July 1907	Berlin, Banquet in honour of Lemieux and King: Reply to toast to "Berlin".	D 2499
2 Sept. 1907	Toronto: Industrial disputes and the community.	D 2520
1 Oct. 1907	University of Toronto: Conveying the greetings of Harvard University on the inauguration of Dr. R.A. Falconer as President of U.T.	D 2524
3 Oct. 1907	Springhill, N.S., Pioneer Lodge No. 1: Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 2528
18 Nov. 1907	Vancouver Canadian Club: "Industrial peace."	D 2549
1908?	Ottawa?: Entry into Parliament.	D 2552
19 May 1908	Winnipeg Canadian Club: The Quebec battlefields.	D 2556
22 May 1908	Calgary Canadian Club: "The Quebec battlefields."	D 2558
11 June 1908	Victoria, B.C., Canadian Club: "Canada's past and future."	D 2597
25 July 1908	Boston, Association of Officials of Bureaus of Labour Statistics: The Canadian Department of Labour.	D 2599
28 Sept. 1908	St. John, N.B., Banquet honouring William Pugsley: Eulogy of Mr. Pugsley.	D 2602
23 Oct. 1908	Berlin: Campaign speech.	D 2614
1909?	St. John, N.B.: The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 2616
1909?	House of Commons: "Co-operation."	D 2620
1 May 1909	Victoria, B.C.: Interview given press on return from world trip.	D 2623

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

21 June 1909	Berlin, Nomination meeting: Reply to criticism of "Mail and Empire".	D 2633
30 June 1909	Harvard Commencement Dinner: Tribute to Harvard and Dr. Eliot; The centennial of the Treaty of Ghent.	D 2635
July 1909	Berlin: The Berlin and Waterloo Hospital.	D 2647
10 July 1909	Berlin, Picnic in honour of King: The work of the Dept. of Labour.	D 2649
27 July 1909	Toronto Street Railwaymen's Picnic: Sportsmanship in labour relations.	D 2654
25? Aug. 1909	Eganville: Canada and its destiny in the light of world conditions.	D 2671
15 Sept. 1909	Schomberg, Ont., St. Patrick's Church picnic: The Rebellion of 1837; International Opium Commission; Sir William Mulock.	D 2673
16 Sept. 1909	Hamilton, Canadian Manufacturers' Assoc.: Industrial relations.	D 2675
25 Oct. 1909	Toronto, Canadian Book Stationery and Publishing Assoc.: The national significance of book production and distribution.	D 2702
26 Oct. 1909	Brockville Liberal Club: Industrial relations.	D 2713
3 Nov. 1909	Glencoe, Ont.: "West Middlesex candidate" (D.C. Ross).	D 2726
25 Nov. 1909	Ottawa, All Saints' Church Laymen's Missionary Movement: Trip to the Far East.	D 2734
27 Nov. 1909	Mount Forest, Ont.: Ontario politics.	D 2737
6 Dec. 1909	House of Commons: Technical education.	D 2739
9 Dec. 1909	House of Commons: Eight-hour day.	D 2770
18 Dec. 1909	Montreal Builders' Exchange: The Dept. of Labour and builders.	D 2780
26 Dec. 1909	Toronto, St. Andrew's Institute: Social conditions in India.	D 2786
29 Dec. 1909	Berlin, North Waterloo Reform Assoc. Executive: The accomplishments of the session.	D 2807
6 Jan. 1910	Galt Liberal Assoc.: "Capital and labour."	D 2810
7 Jan. 1910	Chatham Board of Trade: "Canada's opportunities."	D 2819
14 Jan. 1910	Boston City Club: The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 2840

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

26 Jan. 1910	Ottawa: Industrial accidents.	D 2914
27? Jan. 1910	Ottawa?: By-election campaign speech.	D 2916
7 March 1910	House of Commons: Amendments to the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 2918
28 March 1910	Walkerton, Brant Farmers' Club: "Canada's opportunities".	D 2929
31 March 1910	Toronto, Ontario Club: Technical education.	D 2934
1 April 1910	Hamilton Liberal Assoc.: The naval question.	D 2956
12 April 1910	House of Commons: The Combines Investigation Act.	D 2965
19 May 1910	Lake Mohonk Conference on International Arbitration: "The bearing of industrial conciliation and arbitration on international peace".	D 2999
2 June 1910	Berlin, Laurier Club: Tribute to J. Suddaby and A.G. Mackay.	D 3009
13 June 1910	Waterloo Free Library: A trip around the world.	D 3011
23 June 1910	Berlin, St. Andrew's Church: "Social betterment of the slums of large cities".	D 3013
25 June 1910	Dundas, Liberal Picnic: The Grand Trunk Strike.	D 3025
6 July 1910	Ottawa, Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education: The scope of the commission.	D 3042
10 Aug. 1910	Goderich Board of Trade: The resources and possibilities of Goderich and of Canada.	D 3044
21 Oct. 1910	Sault Ste. Marie, Banquet to C.W. Franz: Response to toast to the House of Commons - the place of industries in our future economy.	D 3050
15 Nov. 1910	New York Canadian Club: The century of peace movement.	D 3080
Dec. 1910?	Berlin Women's Canadian Club: "The work of the Department of Labour".	D 3179
8 Dec. 1910	Stratford Board of Trade: Canada and the Empire.	D 3181
9 Dec. 1910	Berlin, Laurier Club: The naval policies of the two parties.	D 3190
10 Dec. 1910	Guelph Canadian Club: "The Dominion government's Department of Labour."	D 3193

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

19 Dec. 1910	Montreal, Dominion Commercial Travellers' Assoc.: Transportation and Canada.	D 3198
27 Dec. 1910	Berlin, North Waterloo Reform Assoc. Executive: Trade relations and the new Canadian navy.	D 3202
1911?	"Capital and labour."	D 3204
1911?	Provincial political issues.	D 3209
1911	Reciprocity.	D 3212
1911	Reciprocity.	D 3220
1911	Newmarket: Provincial politics.	D 3231
6 Jan. 1911	London Women's Canadian Club: The work of the Dept. of Labour.	D 3234
6 Jan. 1911	London Canadian Club: response to toast to "The British Empire."	D 3236
19 Jan. 1911	House of Commons: "Phosphorous bill."	D 3242
26 Jan. 1911	House of Commons: "Prohibition of opium and other drugs."	D 3257
20 Feb. 1911	House of Commons: Industrial accidents.	D 3270
3 March 1911	Woodstock, Oxford Young Liberals Club: The social value of the lower tariff.	D 3273
21 April 1911	House of Commons: The Grand Trunk Strike.	D 3276
21 April 1911	St. Thomas: Reciprocity.	D 3300
29 May 1911	Berlin: The visit of Earl Grey.	D 3302
6 June 1911	Woodstock: Reciprocity.	D 3309
29 June 1911	Waterloo: "The reciprocal trade agreement."	D 3313
3? July 1911	Oshawa: Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Imperial Conference.	D 3315
4 July 1911	Sarnia: Election issues.	D 3319
5 Aug. 1911	Berlin: Reciprocity.	D 3321
12 Aug. 1911	Brampton: Reciprocity - based on business principles.	D 3323
18 Aug. 1911	St. Jacob's, Ont.: Reciprocity.	D 3325
22 Aug. 1911	Berlin: Reciprocity.	D 3327
2 Sept. 1911	Berlin: Reciprocity; Eight-hour day.	D 3336
19 Oct. 1911	Berlin, Banquet to King: Liberalism.	D 3352
14? Nov. 1911	Social and industrial betterment and provincial politics.	D 3366
20 Nov. 1911	Fonthill: Ontario politics.	D 3389

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

21 Nov. 1911	Aurora: Sir James Whitney.	D 3390
28 Nov. 1911	Walkerton: The Whitney administration.	D 3392
29 Nov. 1911	Hanover: The financial administration of Ontario.	D 3394
30 Nov. 1911	Midland: Liberal policy vs. Sir James Whitney.	D 3397
1 Dec. 1911	Clinton: Ontario politics.	D 3399
2 Dec. 1911	Hamilton: The people of Ontario vs. Whitney.	D 3401
6 Dec. 1911	St. Mary's: The Whitney administration.	D 3405
7 Dec. 1911	Peterborough: The Whitney administration.	D 3407
9 Dec. 1911	Kincardine: The Whitney administration.	D 3411
3 Feb. 1912	Queen's University Arts Society Dinner: Reply to toast to "Canada".	D 3413
9 Feb. 1912	McMaster University Literary Society Banquet: Canadians as diplomats.	D 3422
22 Feb. 1912	Buffalo, N.Y. Saturn Club: "A century of peace."	D 3424
23 Feb. 1912	Buffalo, N.Y., Twentieth Century Club: Century of peace.	D 3435
27 March 1912	Lynn, Mass., Twentieth Century Club: "The state in relation to Labour."	D 3437
10 April 1912	Boston Chamber of Commerce: "Canada's method of coping with the labour problem."	D 3441
15 April 1912	Niagara Falls, N.Y., Civic Club: The peace centenary plans.	D 3444
17 April 1912	Belleville, Twentieth Century Club: The record of the Borden administration.	D 3446
2 May 1912	St. John, N.B. Canadian Club: "A trip around the world."	D 3451
3 May 1912	Moncton Canadian Club: "Canada's relation to the British Empire."	D 3462
4 May 1912	St. John, N.B. Women's Canadian Club: "One hundred years of peace."	D 3469
6 May 1912	Amherst, N.S., Canadian Club: "Canada as seen in the light of a trip around the world."	D 3476
8 May 1912?	Truro Canadian Club: The celebration of one hundred years of peace.	D 3480
9 May 1912	Halifax Canadian Club: "Canada's relation to the Empire."	D 3482
7 Dec. 1912	New York Canadian Society: Speech written for Lemieux - the meaning of the British Empire to French Canadians.	D 3487

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

19 Dec. 1912	New York: Railway Business Association: The Canadian plan for preventing strikes.	D 3492
13 Jan. 1913	Hamilton Women's Canadian Club: "One hundred years' peace."	D 3499
24 Jan. 1913	Montreal, McGill University, Public Meeting: The Borden naval policy.	D 3504
3 Feb. 1913	Jersey City Board of Trade: The Canadian method of preventing strikes and lockouts.	D 3506
7 March 1913	Waterloo: The naval issue.	D 3508
13 May 1913	Cincinatti, Immigration Conference: "Present day immigration to North America."	D 3513
15 May 1913	Cincinatti Business Men's Club: The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.	D 3543
19 May 1913	Rochester, N.Y., Chamber of Commerce: "Canadian methods of preventing strikes and lockouts."	D 3546
26 July 1913	Markham, Ont.: Sir Ian Hamilton and Canadian politics.	D 3566
18 Sept. 1913	Cincinatti: No-Strike Assoc.: "Industrial peace."	D 3568
25 Nov. 1913	Cleveland, Ohio, Chamber of Commerce: "Industrial peace."	D 3606
28 Nov. 1913	Toronto: General Reform Assoc.: Presidential address.	D 3608
10 Dec. 1913	New York Canadian Society: Reply to toast to "Canada".	D 3620
18 Dec. 1913	Ottawa, Edinburgh University Club: Colleges and citizenship.	D 3658
1914?	The characteristics of the Borden administration.	D 3661
1914	Tory tendencies in legislation.	D 3665
26 Jan. 1914	Berlin, Laurier Club: Return to prosperity; the naval issue.	D 3697
17 Feb. 1914	Detroit Board of Commerce: "The Canadian Industrial Disputes Investigation Act."	D 3699
18 Feb. 1914	Wheeling, W.Va., Board of Trade: "Industrial peace."	D 3721
19 Feb. 1914	Charleston, W.Va., Chamber of Commerce: Industrial relations.	D 3726
28 Feb. 1914	Newmarket, North York Reform Assoc.: Political issues.	D 3729
7 March 1914	New York Republican Club: "A century of peace between the United States and Great Britain and present world conditions of international unrest."	D 3733
13 June 1914	Newmarket: The temperance question.	D 3748

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

18 June 1914	Barrie: The temperance question.	D 3750
27 Nov. 1914	Toronto, General Reform Association: Presidential address.	D 3752
1915?	"Under what circumstances is war justifiable?"	D 3767
1 July 1915	East Northfield, Mass., Christian Student Movement: The war and the future.	D 3783
12? Aug. 1915	Montreal?: German and British ideals compared.	D 3825
4 Dec. 1915	Newmarket, Patriotic and recruiting meeting: An end to war.	D 3836
8 Jan. 1916	Ottawa Women's Canadian Club: "The work of the Rockefeller Foundation."	D 3842
13 Jan. 1916	Ottawa University Club: Address of thanks to Dr. Klotz.	D 3919
15 July 1916	Kettleby, King Township Reform Assoc.: The outstanding phases of the war.	D 3921
1917	Conscription.	D 3953
1917	Sir Frederick Borden.	D 3958
21 Jan. 1917	Renfrew, Patriotic Fund Committee: "The Patriotic and Red Cross Funds."	D 3963
1919?	Social reconstruction.	D 3965
11 Jan. 1919	Montreal Reform Club: "Reconstruction in Canada."	D 3970
17 Feb. 1919	New York Bankers' Club: Labour and capital as partners in industry.	D 3972
13 March 1919	Toronto, Empire Club of Canada: "The four parties to industry."	D 3974
17 March 1919	Montreal Canadian Club: "The four parties to industry."	D 4050
20 March 1919	Chicago Industrial Club: "The four parties to industry."	D 4054
29 March 1919	Quebec, l'Association de la Jeunesse Liberale: Quebec East - a centre of Canadian Liberalism.	D 4056
29 March 1919	Quebec: National Trades and Labour Council: The Liberal party and Canadian labour.	D 4060
7 April 1919	Toronto and York Liberal Assoc.: Capital and labour.	D 4071
29 Aug. 1919	Ottawa: The Royal Visit of the Prince of Wales.	D 4073
1 Sept. 1919	Summerside, P.E.I.: King's war record.	D 4076
15 Sept. 1919	Ottawa, National Industrial Conference: Introductory message to the conference.	D 4080
6 Jan. 1920	Newmarket: "Liberalism."	D 4082
12 Jan. 1920	Halifax: Liberalism and Canadian unity.	D 4126

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

14 Jan. 1920	Charlottetown: Liberal principles and platform.	D 4141
16 Jan. 1920	St. John, N.B.; Liberalism and Canadian unity.	D 4153
19 Jan. 1920	Montreal Reform Club: Farmers' movements and liberalism.	D 4169
13 Feb. 1920	Ottawa Retail Grocers' Assoc.: The retail grocery trade and the cost of living.	D 4171
26 Feb. 1920	House of Commons: Speech on the opening of Parliament.	D 4194
1 March 1920	House of Commons: Speech on the address in reply	D 4207
16 March 1920	House of Commons: "Status of Canada as a nation (Bulgarian Treaty)."	D 4238
25 March 1920	House of Commons: Franchise bill.	D 4250
16 April 1920	House of Commons: "G.T.R. pensions."	D 4258
20 April 1920	House of Commons: Reply to misrepresentations concerning war service.	D 4294
1 June 1920	House of Commons: The Liberal tariff platform and Mr. Fielding's amendment.	D 4349
10? June 1920	House of Commons: The Liberal tariff policy.	D 4372
11 June 1920	Hamilton, Ontario Women's Liberal Assoc.: Liberalism.	D 4375
7 Aug. 1920	Newmarket: "Autocracy vs. government by the people."	D 4378
9 Aug. 1920	Oak Ridges, Ont.: The U.F.O. candidate (R.W.E. Burnaby).	D 4435
11 Aug. 1920	Stouffville: The government's wasting of public funds and its attitude toward labour.	D 4440
12 Aug. 1920	Paisley: "Restoration of parliamentary institutions."	D 4443
14 Aug. 1920	Toronto: Tariff policy.	D 4524
19 Aug. 1920	Aurora: Liberalism vs. Conservatism.	D 4543
20 Aug. 1920	Milton: "The franchise bill."	D 4547
22 Aug. 1920	Guelph: Tariff policy and Labour-Farmer unity.	D 4573
26 Aug. 1920	Renfrew: The farmers' movement and the Liberal Party.	D 4580
29 Aug. 1920	Brockville: "Some outstanding features of the Liberal platform."	D 4591
27 Sept. 1920	Victoria, B.C.: The restoration of parliamentary government.	D 4596
29 Sept. 1920	Vancouver: Conservatism vs. Liberalism.	D 4649

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

2 Oct. 1920	Prince Rupert, B.C.: "Liberalism and western Canada."	D 4673
6 Oct. 1920	Edmonton: Liberals and Progressives.	D 4681
8 Oct. 1920	Camrose, Alta.: Liberals and Progressives: government extravagance.	D 4697
9 Oct. 1920	Wetaskiwin, Alta.: Government extravagance.	D 4705
11 Oct. 1920	Calgary: General political situation.	D 4709
12 Oct. 1920	Revelstoke, B.C.: Political conditions in Canada.	D 4723
13 Oct. 1920	Kamloops, B.C.: Tariff reform; national railways.	D 4728
14 Oct. 1920	Vernon, B.C.: Business interests and the Conservative government.	D 4738
16 Oct. 1920	Nelson, B.C.: Combines investigations; tariffs.	D 4747
18 Oct. 1920	Cranbrook, B.C.: The financial policy and methods of the Conservative administration.	D 4758
19 Oct. 1920	Lethbridge, Alta.: Tariff and agricultural policy.	D 4765.
20 Oct. 1920	Medicine Hat: The Liberal party and the natural resources of the prairie provinces.	D 4778
22 Oct. 1920	Moose Jaw, Sask.: Government autocracy vs. the Progressives.	D 4789
25 Oct. 1920	Regina: Reunion of the Liberal party with farmers and labour.	D 4807
27 Oct. 1920	Saskatoon: The doctrines of the Liberal party.	D 4814
28 Oct. 1920	Prince Albert: Agricultural policy.	D 4828
2 Nov. 1920	St. Boniface, Man.: The Liberal party and the farmer and labour groups.	D 4841
2 Nov. 1920	Winnipeg: Control of natural resources.	D 4844
3 Nov. 1920	Winnipeg: The place of women in the new Canadian political era.	D 4854
3 Nov. 1920	Dauphin, Man.: Progressive movements vs. the big interests.	D 4860
4 Nov. 1920	Minnedosa, Man.: The need for representative government.	D 4864
5 Nov. 1920	Brandon, Man.: The control of natural resources.	D 4867
8 Nov. 1920	Yorkton, Man.: The Meighen government and the need for an election.	D 4871
18 Nov. 1920	Aylmer, Ont.: The government vs. progressive forces.	D 4877

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

16 Dec. 1920	Montreal, Banquet to Sir Lomer Gouin: "The Liberal party."	D 4881
20 Dec. 1920	Montreal, Dominion Commercial Travellers' Assoc.: The Dominion Commercial Travellers' Association and parliamentary government.	D 4904
22 Jan. 1921	Peterborough: "The rights of the people - not the tariff - the real issue in the Peterborough by-election.	D 4918
3 Feb. 1921	Ennismore, Ont.: The right of the people to govern themselves.	D 4937
15 Feb. 1921	House of Commons: Speech on the address.	D 4939
April 1921	House of Commons: Canadian National Railways.	D 5044
19 May 1921	House of Commons: Budget speech - "Tariff revision and taxation."	D 5060
20 May 1921	House of Commons: The Speaker's chair.	D 5105
3 June 1921	House of Commons: Farewell to the Duke of Devonshire.	D 5110
29 June 1921	Ottawa, Visit of Marshall Fayolle: Appreciation of France's gift to Canada of Rodin's bust "Victoire".	D 5113
1 July 1921	Brome Corners, P.Q.: The present government without a mandate.	D 5122
2 July 1921	Bedford, P.Q.: Meighen as a usurper of authority.	D 5178
27 July 1921	Aurora: The existing political situation.	D 5189
28 July 1921	Brampton: "The financial situation."	D 5228
29 July 1921	Tillsonburg: "The tariff."	D 5250
30 July 1921	Hamilton: "The railway situation."	D 5315
3? Aug. 1921	Picton: Political issues.	D 5368
5 Aug. 1921	Ottawa, Imperial Press Conference: Speech of welcome.	D 5373
25 Aug. 1921	Windsor: "Why in the national interest a change of government is necessary and why it cannot come too soon."	D 5377
27 Aug. 1921	Strathroy: "Outstanding features of the existing political situation."	D 5397
29 Aug. 1921	Parry Sound: The financial situation under the Meighen government.	D 5424
31 Aug. 1921	Seaforth, Ont.: Meighen's usurping power.	D 5426
20 Sept. 1921	Toronto Junction: The need for a new government.	D 5434
22 Sept. 1921	Montreal: The need for an election.	D 5504
23 Sept. 1921	Sherbrooke: "The Liberal policy of progress ...."	D 5524

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

26 Sept. 1921	Sydney, N.S.: The extravagance of the Conservative administration.	D 5528
27 Sept. 1921	New Glasgow, N.S.: "A change to a proper democratic government."	D 5536
28 Sept. 1921	Pictou, N.S.: The need for Canadian unity.	D 5538
29 Sept. 1921	Windsor, N.S.: Campaign speech.	D 5540
1 Oct. 1921	Bridgewater, N.S.: The autocratic acts of Mr. Meighen.	D 5551
3 Oct. 1921	Digby, N.S.: A plea for unity of Liberal and farmer groups.	D 5555
4 Oct. 1921	Kentville, N.S.: Campaign speech.	D 5562
5 Oct. 1921	Amherst, N.S.: Meighen's manifesto.	D 5565
6 Oct. 1921	Charlottetown: Campaign speech.	D 5570
10 Oct. 1921	Kensington, P.E.I.: Campaign speech.	D 5594
11 Oct. 1921	O'Leary, P.E.I.: The need for unity of the opposition forces.	D 5597
11 Oct. 1921	Alberton, P.E.I.: Campaign speech.	D 5599
12 Oct. 1921	Summerside, P.E.I.: The autocracies of Mr. Meighen; the tariff.	D 5603
13 Oct. 1921	Moncton: Campaign speech.	D 5615
14 Oct. 1921	Sussex, N.B.: Tariff policy.	D 5634
15 Oct. 1921	St. John, N.B.: Campaign speech.	D 5638
17 Oct. 1921	St. Stephen, N.B.: No Liberal alliance with the farmers.	D 5654
18 Oct. 1921	Campbellton, N.B.: Campaign speech.	D 5660
25 Oct. 1921	Rockland, Ont.: The civil service and munitions shipments.	D 5667
26 Oct. 1921	Orono, Ont.: Munitions shipments.	D 5669
27 Oct. 1921	Sutton, Ont.: North York and the class ideals of farmers.	D 5674
28 Oct. 1921	Stouffville: Toryism - "Class Rule".	D 5678
28 Oct. 1921	Aurora: The Liberal party and class rule.	D 5680
29 Oct. 1921	Bolton: Premier Meighen's untruths.	D 5686
31 Oct. 1921	Guelph: Liberalism vs. autocracy.	D 5690
1 Nov. 1921	Stratford: Campaign speech.	D 5696
2 Nov. 1921	Sarnia: Campaign speech.	D 5701
3 Nov. 1921	St. Thomas: Campaign speech.	D 5716
4 Nov. 1921	London: The Meighen autocracy.	D 5721

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

7 Nov. 1921	Ottawa: The autocracy of the Meighen government.	D 5732
8 Nov. 1921	Sudbury: Tariff policy.	D 5738
10 Nov. 1921	Port Arthur: Campaign speech.	D 5742
12 Nov. 1921	Melville, Sask.: The Progressives and the Liberal party.	D 5756
14 Nov. 1921	Edmonton: Campaign speech.	D 5761
15 Nov. 1921	Calgary: The Progressives and the Liberal party.	D 5763
16 Nov. 1921	Regina: The usurping of government by the Meighen administration.	D 5772
17 Nov. 1921	Moose Jaw: Campaign speech.	D 5785
18 Nov. 1921	Winnipeg: Campaign speech.	D 5794
19 Nov. 1921	Cobalt, Ont.: The usurping of government by Meighen.	D 5801
22 Nov. 1921	Newmarket: The Meighen autocracy.	D 5805
23 Nov. 1921	Woodstock: Campaign speech.	D 5809
24 Nov. 1921	Brantford: Campaign speech.	D 5813
25 Nov. 1921	Chesley: Campaign speech.	D 5820
26 Nov. 1921	Peterborough: Campaign speech.	D 5822
28 Nov. 1921	Pembroke: The farmer groups and Meighen rule.	D 5825
29 Nov. 1921	Oshawa: Campaign speech.	D 5829
30 Nov. 1921	Gananoque: Tariff issues.	D 5835
30 Nov. 1921	Kingston: The women's vote; senate appointments; railways.	D 5839
1 Dec. 1921	North Bay: Campaign speech.	D 5842
2 Dec. 1921	Holland Landing: Tory autocracy; King's war record.	D 5846
3 Dec. 1921	North York: Campaign speech.	D 5850
11 Dec. 1921	Ottawa: Tribute to Marshall Foch.	D 5853
13 Dec. 1921	Aurora: Expression of thanks to supporters in North York.	D 5867
14 Dec. 1921	Newmarket: Expression of thanks to supporters in North York.	D 5870

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Volume D 7
Speeches (b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921
22. 1916

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3842

8 Jan. 1916

Ottawa Women's Canadian Club

"THE WORK OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3843

Ottawa Women's Canadian Club

Madam,—

THE HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, C.M.G.,

will be the guest of honour at the next meeting of the club, which will be held in the ball room of the Chateau Laurier, on Saturday afternoon, January 8th, 1916, at three o'clock.

Mr. King, who is well known to Ottawa audiences as an easy and delightful speaker, will address the members on with which he has been connected for some time.

THE WORK OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

While special reference will be made to the heroic labours of this organization among the refugees in Belgium and Serbia, Mr. King will also discuss those wider activities in directions which are perhaps not so well known to the general public.

Members will be admitted to this meeting free on presentation of 1915-16 season ticket, and nonresident visitors may attend upon payment of 25 cents, when accompanied by a member.

Yours truly,
ETHEL W. THOMAS,
HONORARY SECRETARY

The Aylmer Apts.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3844

CANADA

POST CARD. - CARTE POSTALE

OTTAWA
JAN 5
1916
CANADA

THE ADDRESS ONLY TO BE WRITTEN ON THIS SIDE.
CÔTÉ RÉSERVÉ À L'ADRESSE.

CANADA POSTAGE 1 CENT 1

Hon. Mr. L. Mackenzie King Esq

~~The Chateau Laurier~~

The Roxborough

Ottawa

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3845

The Work of The Rockefeller Foundation

Introduction

The nature of the Foundation
Trustees and powers of
Amount of gifts received, $100,000,000.
Objects of making scope broad
'A University of human need'
Methods of Policies
Advancement of public health, through medical research and education
To find the man interested in his subject
Demonstrated that it can be made of service to mankind.

The International Health Commission

Dr. Rose's work in hook-worm disease in U.S.
2 million people in U.S. infected
Extension by Foundation to Europe
Visit to England, 1913
Work in Egypt, ($60,000 spent annually, ½ by Govt. (½ by Rockefeller Foundation)
Ceylon, Malay States, Br.West Indies, Central America and Panama
In British Colonies alone, over 100,000 examined
50% infected; 25% cured.
Altogether, Treated more than ½ million people
½ million dollars a year appropriated for this work.

Medical Work in China

China's great need
January 1914, Commission sent to China
Needs re medical education and public health
China Medical Board established
$5,000,000 appropriated.

January 10, 1916.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Promotion of Co-operation in Christian Missions

John R. Mott, April 1914, presented on behalf of leading foreign missionary Boards of the continent, a program of co-operation and co-ordination.
Common headquarters in New York for united foreign missionary interests and comprehensive missionary research library.
$25,000 pledged for providing and equipping offices, and about ½ million, spread over 10 years to aid work.

Belgian Relief

Belgian Relief Committee in U.S. - solicits
Rockefeller Foundation: donations.
Charters ship - 4,000 tons food supplies
Provides steamship pier
charters other ships, transports, etc.
4 cargoes of food sent (see exhibit),
October to December 1914
Page's reference to British Navy
1 million dollars in relief.
Broad policy of relief to suffering non-combatants of Europe
War Relief Commission
Visits Holland
Conditions there - 800,000 refugees
Idleness vs. homelessness
Lack of work for people to do
Lack of clothing to keep them warm.
Distribution of clothing
At first, warehouse 150 to 300 cases a day
Later, 2 warehouses, 300 to 550 cases a day
12,476 cases in less than 2 months
1,386,572 articles of clothing.
Contribution of workshops
for undergarments
extended to 11 provinces of Holland
5,000 women & girls at work by Apr.1,1915
Product supplied free to Belgians, bonus to workers.
Foundation purchased 10,000 undergarments

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Destitution and Disease in Serbia

Primitive conditions and destitution
Spread of epidemic diseases
Threaten extermination of Serbian Population
One-seventh of physicians dea from Typhus
Rockefeller Foundation joins with Am. Red Cross
American Sanitary Commission, Dr. Strong, backed by 2 organizations
Death list several hundred a day in May
100,000 lives lost by Typhus in 3 months
Head of International Health Board
English,French,Serbian & American physician
Allied medical forces
Noguchi's serum
Dr. Alexis Carrel
Anti-meningitis serum
Anti-dysentery serum
Contributions to the Red Cross
to send physicians and nurses
The Professors of Louvain
$20,000 stipend

Bureau of Social Hygiene

A permanent organization to make warfare against forces of evil
A laboratory of Social Hygiene under direction of Miss Catharine Davis, to study physical, mental, social, and moral side of inmates of Reformatory
Flexner: Studies on Social Vice in Europe
Raymond Fosdick: Studies on Police Systems of Europe and America.

Mental Hygiene

Dr.Thos.Salmon of U.S.Public Health Service
To study mental defects and mental diseases to see how best contribution can be made insanity a disease both preventable and curable.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Leprosy

Dr. Victor G. Heiser

Bird Refuge in Louisiana

85,000 acres
$225,000
$400,000,000 damage by insects to fields orchards
gardens

Investigation of Industrial Relations

International strife vs. industrial strife

Miscellaneous

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3849

Appendix VIII. BELGIAN RELIEF SHIPMENTS

Ships	Date of Sailing	Total Cargo Tons	Cargo	Lbs. Net	Cost of Cargo	Ship Expenses	Totals
Massapequa	Nov. 2	3527	Bacon Flour Beans Rice	126,495 5,772,972 593,606 1,407,022	$252,248.15	$68,195.97*	$320,444.12
Agamemnon	Dec. 4	2800	Flour Coffee Rice Beans Milk Salt Lard Bacon	4,224,360 110,000 1,000,000 250,000 63,000 90,000 44,000 55,000	Belgian Relief Committee	$6,911.90	$6,911.90
Neches	Dec. 12	5830	Flour Bacon Salt Lentils Peas Beans Coffee	11,001,230 100,000 80,000 165,649 613,270 277,631 40,458	$397,008.74	$45,767.13	$442,775.87
Massapequa	Dec. 31	3529	Flour Beans Peas Coffee Beef Tongues Condensed Milk Salmon Sugar Sugar and Cocoa New Clothing 425 Cs. Old Clothing 555 Cs. Small quantities of Rice, Canned Beef, Jams and Rolled Oats	6,321,556 145,960 448,000 44,650 19,000 150,000 7,000 17,200 6,000	Belgian Relief Committee Donated and Purchased $84,867.39†	*Expenses two voyages Massapequa not separated	$84,867.39†
Ferrona	Dec. 23	7500	Wheat 280,000 bu. (23,644 bus. on S.S. Industry)		$322,146.29	$31.78	$322,178.07
Hannah		196	Flour	392,000	$9,896.46		$9,896.46
Turned over to Commission		2500
		25882			$1,066,167.03	$120,906.78	$1,187,073.81
Administration Expenses							3,232.09
							$1,190,305.90
Amount refunded by Commission for Relief in Belgium for expenses of ships						$119,399.57
Amount paid by Belgian Relief Fund for cargo forwarded per Massapequa						84,867.39†	204,266.96
Net amount expended by the Rockefeller Foundation							$986,038.94

†Including $5,159.44 in addition to payments recorded in first edition of this report.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3850

Extract from Report of Colorado Committee on Unemployment and Relief:

"In Las Animas County fifty miles of highway were reconstructed and four miles of new highway built. In Huerfano County the reconstructed highways measured sixteen miles and the new road seven. In Boulder County twenty miles of highway were reconstructed and 30,830.7 square feet of cement sidewalk were laid on the Campus of the University of Colorado. In Fremont, Weld, Gunnison, and Garfield Counties, approximately ten miles of road were reconstructed. The outstanding feature of the work in Las Animas County was the construction of the Stonewall automobile road along the banks of the Purgatoire River. This is regarded as one of the most perfect examples of mountain highway in the State. It extends for a distance of thirty-two miles along the river and in many places was practically cut out of the solid mountain walls. In Boulder County a long stretch of the Lincoln Highway was completed to the entire satisfaction of the State Highway Commissioner, and a double track road was built up the side of Flagstaff Mountain in the Boulder City Park, affording one of the most impressive vistas to be enjoyed in the country. Along the banks of St. Vrain Creek in Boulder County another mountain road of grandeur and permanence was constructed. In Gunnison County a road was built connecting the Northern part of the county with Delta County and opening a much-needed avenue of travel into a large agricultural area. In the construction of this road the county commissioners of Gunnison County had the invaluable assistance of a road engineer of the United States Forestry service. The road workers in Fremont County were employed on the Parkdale Cotopaxi cut-off on the Rainbow Route. It was a difficult piece of work blasted out of the solid mountain."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3851

Extract from Report of Colorado Committee on Unemployment and Relief:

"Of more immediate importance, however, was the relief extended. When the work was begun in April, thousands of men, women, and children were face to face with starvation. When the funds were exhausted in June, new opportunities for work in other and normal lines were manifesting themselves, while the destitution and suffering which otherwise would have been disastrous had been reduced to a minimum. In Las Animas County seventeen hundred and eighty men were given employment, extending aid to more than one thousand families. In Huerfano 470 men were employed and 360 families assisted. In Boulder County 1100 men were employed and 634 families assisted. In Weld County 200 men were employed and 141 families assisted. In Fremont County 500 men were employed and 400 families assisted. In Gunnison County 150 men were employed and 100 families assisted. In Garfield County 50 men were employed and 30 families assisted."

Total. Individuals employed. Families assisted 4250 2668

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3852

The Work of The Rockefeller Foundation

Introduction

The nature of the Foundation
Trustees and powers of
Amount of gifts received, $100,000,000.
Objects of making scope broad
'A University of human need'
Methods of Policies
Advancement of public health, through medical research and education
To find the man interested in his subject
Demonstrated that it can be made of service to mankind.

The International Health Commission

Dr. Rose's work in hook-worm disease in U.S.
2 million people in U.S. infected
Extension by Foundation to Europe
Visit to England, 1913
Work in Egypt, ($60,000 spent annually, ½ by Govt. (½ by Rockefeller Foundation)
Ceylon, Malay States, Br.West Indies, Central America and Panama
In British Colonies alone, over 100,000 examined
50% infected; 25% cured.
Altogether, Treated more than ½ million people
½ million dollars a year appropriated for this work.

Medical Work in China

China's great need
January 1914, Commission sent to China
Needs re medical education and public health
China Medical Board established
$5,000,000 appropriated.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Promotion of Co-operation in Christian Missions

John R. Mott, April 1914, presented on behalf of leading foreign missionary Boards of the continent, a program of co-operation and co-ordination.
Common headquarters in New York for united foreign missionary interests and comprehensive missionary research library.
$25,000 pledged for providing and equipping offices, and about ½ million, spread over 10 years to aid work.

Belgian Relief

Belgian Relief Committee in U.S. - solicits donations.
Rockefeller Foundation:
Charters ship - 4,000 tons food supplies
Provides steamship pier
charters other ships, transports, etc.
4 cargoes of food sent (see exhibit),
October to December 1914
Page's reference to British Navy
1 million dollars in relief.
Broad policy of relief to suffering non-combatants of Europe
War Relief Commission
Visits Holland
Conditions there - 800,000 refugees
Distribution of clothing
Lack of work for people to do
Lack of clothing to keep them warm.
Distribution of clothing
At first, warehouse 150 to 300 cases a day
Later, 2 warehouses, 300 to 550 cases a day
12,476 cases in less than 2 months
1,386,572 articles of clothing.
Contribution of workshops
for undergarments
extended to 11 provinces of Holland
5,000 women & girls at work by Apr.1,1914
Product supplied free to Belgians,
bonus to workers.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Destitution and Disease in Serbia

Primitive conditions and destitution
Spread of epidemic diseases
Threaten extermination of Serbian Population
One-seventh of physicians dea from Typhus
Rockefeller Foundation joins with Am. Red Cross
American Sanitary Commission, Dr. Strong,
backed by 2 organizations
Death list several hundred a day in May
100,000 lives lost by Typhus in 3 months
Head of International Health Board
English,French,Serbian & American physicia
Allied medical forces
Noguchi's serum
Dr. Alexis Carrel
Anti-meningitis serum
Anti-dysentery serum
Contributions to the Red Cross
to send physicians and nurses
The Professors of Louvain
$20,000 stipend

Bureau of Social Hygiene

A permanent organization to make war~~fare~~against forces of evil
A laboratory of Social Hygiene under direction of Miss Catharine Davis, to study physical, mental, social, and moral side of inmates of Reformatory
Flexner: Studies on Social Vice in Europe
Raymond Fosdick: Studies on Police Systems of Europe and America.

Mental Hygiene

Dr.Thos.Salmon of U.S.Public Health Service
To study mental defects and mental diseases to see how best contribution can be made insanity a disease both preventable and curable.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Leprosy

Dr. Victor G. Heiser

Bird Refuge in Louisiana

85,000 acres
$225,000
$400,000,000 damage by insects to fields orchards
gardens

Investigation of Industrial Relations

International strife vs. industrial strife

Miscellaneous

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Work of the Rockefeller Foundation.

Summary of address delivered by Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King before Women's Canadian Club of Ottawa, at the Chateau Laurier, Saturday afternoon, January 8th, 1916.

The Rockefeller Foundation is a corporation which was chartered by the legislature of New York State, May 1913, "for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." It is controlled by a Board of Trustees composed of distinguished educationalists, physicians, lawyers, and financiers. Such monies as come into the hands of the Trustees are theirs for use as they think best. They are free to spend income and principal alike in such manner as will best promote the Foundation's object. Already there has passed as gifts into the absolute control of the Trustees no less a sum than one hundred million dollars. The object of its founder in making its scope so broad was that an agency not dependent on the life of any individual might be established to deal with the world's human problems in accordance with principles and methods most approved in each generation, and as the needs from generation to generation might demand.

The Foundation may best be described as 'a University of human need', existing, as the name 'university' suggests, not for work in any one country, but for the sake of the world's need. The Trustees have sought to shape its policies and lines of work

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

so as to follow only those that are likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness. The advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of preventing disease, has been one of the means by which the Foundation has sought to further their end.

The International Health Commission

The first work attempted by the Foundation was the eradication of the hook-worm disease, which, it is estimated, has affected two million people in the Southern States, and which extends in a belt around the world for 30 degrees on either side of the equator, over an area inhabited by more than one thousand million people. For this disease, which causes vast suffering and loss of life, and partially arrests the physical, moral and mental growth, a cure has been found, and the Foundation has sought to extend to the people of all countries affected by it knowledge of the means of eradicating the disease and promoting public sanitation which may prevent its spread or recurrence. In 1913, after conference with the British Government and securing the hearty co-operation of the Hon. Lewis Harcourt, Secretary of State for the Colonies, and Lord Crewe, Secretary of State for India, the Foundation began its work in Egypt, Ceylon, the Malay States, and India. In Egypt, the present Minister of War, Lord Kitchener, then the British High Commissioner in Egypt, welcomed its co-operation and effected an arrangement whereby the British Government and the Rockefeller Foundation have since on an equal financial basis, co-operated to stamp out the disease. Altogether, within British

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

colonies and dependencies and the United States, more than half a million people had been treated and 25 per cent. of that number cured. The Foundation appropriates half a million dollars a year for the work. With what had been effected in the stamping out of the disease and the improved sanitary conditions which have been established in the British possessions mentioned, an element of added strength had been given the British Empire, in both numbers of men and their physical capacity, which is proving an asset to the Empire at this time.

Medical Work in China.

The great need of China to-day is the benefits of modern medicine, including personal and public hygiene and treatment of disease. In January 1914 the Foundation sent three of its members to China to study the needs of medical education and public health. They had visited the medical schools, hospitals and dispensaries /and/other/ of China, and after conference with missionaries, Government officials and other advisers had made recommendations as to the manner in which up-to-date hospitals might be established and medical education work carried on in that country. The Foundation has appropriated five million dollars to carry out these recommendations.

Promotion of Co-operation in Christian Missions.

Upon representations made by Mr. John R. /Mott/ Mott, the head of the Student Volunteer Movement of the Young Men's Christian Association, on behalf of leading foreign missionary boards on this

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

continent as to the need of a program of co-operation and co-ordination and common headquarters for united foreign missionary interests, the Rockefeller Foundation gave $25,000 to provide and equip offices and to provide a comprehensive missionary research library, and has pledged half a million dollars to further missionary work upon which joint boards can agree, the amount to be spread over ten years.

Belgian Relief.

The first organization to take food from America to Europe for the aid of the Belgians, after the war commenced, was the Rockefeller Foundation. In October 1914 it chartered the largest available neutral ship in New York harbor, and fitted out at its own expense a cargo of four thousand tons of food. At the same time, as a means of co-operating with the American Belgian Relief Committee, it secured a steamship pier and warehouses and agreed to charter further steamships and convey free of charge from New York to Belgium all supplies that the public might wish to contribute in the way of food and clothing to the Belgians. When Belgium's need became known, there was more difficulty in securing the transportation and distribution of supplies than the obtaining of them. The Foundation with its available funds was able to guarantee to whoever made a contribution in money, food, or clothing, that the contribution would reach the Belgians in full, without any deduction on account of transportation or distribution or the work of organization in effecting both. Besides carrying out this work of transportation, the Foundation itself provided four additional cargoes of food for

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the Belgians between October and the end of December 1914. The food supplied within this time amounted to a million dollars.

But the Foundation did not confine its assistance to sending supplies of food. It appointed three of the ablest men it could find ~~the United States~~ a Commission to study the needs of relief of the suffering non-combatants in Europe. This War Relief Commission received from the Government of England, the Dutch Government and the Governments of other countries in Europe co-operation and assistance. In Holland they found that 800,000 Belgian refugees were for the most part being supported by the Dutch Government in concentration camps, but that with nothing to do, idleness threatened to be no less a misfortune ~~to the refugees~~ than homelessness. They found that the missing links in the scheme for the relief of Belgians in Holland were lack of work for the people to do and lack of underclothing to keep them warm. When ships of clothing from the United States, England, and Canada intended for the Belgians began to arrive in Rotterdam in January 1915, there were no adequate facilities for its distribution. At the instance of its War Relief Commission, the Rockefeller Foundation undertook this work and gave the Belgian refugees employment in the prosecution of it. As many as 12,476 cases of clothing were sorted, packed and sent to different parts of Belgium and refugees in Holland under the Foundation's direction. These cases included 1,386,572 articles of clothing.

The Rockefeller Foundation also opened workshops and installed machines to give employment to the men and women in the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

concentration camps. There being a great need of under-garments, they were put to work on the manufacture of these articles, the entire product of which was distributed free to Belgians in need. Employment was given in this way to five thousand Belgian women, and the work was extended to refugees in all of the eleven provinces of Holland. In addition to the garments manufactured and distributed in this way, owing to the demands of winter, the Foundation purchased and distributed ten thousand additional suits of underwear in camps where extreme instances of individual need were reported.

Relief of Destitution and Disease in Serbia.

The War Relief Commission found conditions in many parts of Serbia equal to that of the Belgian refugees, but they found the situation most frightfully aggravated by the primitive condition of the country and the terrific inroads of epidemic diseases. Typhus fever, typhoid, and recurrent fever threatened at one time to exterminate the entire Serbian population, and to constitute a menace to all the peoples of Europe. When the War Relief Commission visited Serbia, one-seventh of all its physicians had died from typhus fever in their endeavor to bring relief to the people suffering.

Realizing the international problems to which an endeavor to cope with such a situation might give rise, the Rockefeller Foundation, on receiving the report of its Commission, joined forces with the American Red Cross in establishing an American Sanitary Commission, which immediately got into touch with agencies of other countries operating in Serbia, and went to Europe by invitation of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the Serbian Government, which gave it full powers to institute vigorous measures to cope with the epidemic. Dr. Richard P. Strong, Professor of Tropical Diseases in the Harvard Medical School and probably the foremost plague expert ~~in the United States~~ on their continent, was put at the head of this Commission. He left with a staff of physicians and nurses, and with an equipment in the nature of hospital supplies, starting in with the understanding that he and his forces would be backed to the utmost limit by the Rockefeller Foundation and the American Red Cross in their efforts to conquer the diseases which threatened to exterminate this war- and disease-ridden people.

When Dr. Strong and his associates reached Serbia in May, they found the greater part of the non-combatant population in a most appalling state of destitution and disease, with a death list of several hundred each day and new cases appearing in alarming numbers. It is estimated that fully 100,000 men, women, and children lost their lives from the typhus in the space of three months. On his arrival in Serbia, Dr. Strong was made the head of an International Health Board composed of English, French, Serbian and American physicians, and directed these allied medical forces in their efforts to stamp out disease. In their work of combatting disease, many of the foreign Red Cross doctors and nurses were stricken with it, and four American doctors died from it. But these lives were not sacrificed in vain. In a manner little short of miraculous, through the efficiency of its organization, the disease was not only brought under control, but in the course of the last year was practically wiped out.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Aid in France and Elsewhere.

Besides helping in Belgium and Serbia, the Rockefeller Foundation at the opening of the war fitted out Dr. Alexis Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, who had joined the army medical forces of France, with a complete equipment for hospital use in France, of anti-meningitis serum and anti-dysentery serum, and a staff of physicians and nurses and necessary supplies to care for the wounded.

It has also made handsome contributions from time to time to the American Red Cross, to enable it to send in larger numbers than it otherwise would have been able to do, physicians and nurses of the highest standing.

Last, but not least, it made a significant contribution of $20,000 a year towards paying the stipends of Professors of the University of Louvain who, in the destruction of that University by the Germans, were deprived of their laboratories and facilities for research, the contribution being made by the Rockefeller Foundation that these Scholars might pursue at Oxford and Cambridge the studies which, as one of the fruits of German "Kultur", they had been deprived of carrying on on the continent of Europe.

Bureau of Social Hygiene.

The Rockefeller Foundation has established a permanent organization to make warfare against the forces of evil. Under the direction of Miss Katharine B. Davis, the head of corrections of the New York Department of Correction, it has established a laboratory

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to study the physical, mental, social and moral side of inmates of the State Reformatory. It has had studies made on the continent of Europe of the most effective means of combatting social vice, and has experts at the present time making special studies of the police systems of Europe and America.

Mental Hygiene.

It has enlisted the services of Dr. Thomas Salmon of the United States Public Health Service, to study mental defects and mental diseases, and to see how best, with the funds at the disposal of the Foundation, a contribution can be made towards treating insanity, a disease which modern research is proving is both preventable and curable.

Leprosy.

Dr. Victor G. Heiser, who has been able to prove that a new treatment of leprosy has passed beyond the experimental stage, has been afforded aid by the Foundation to circulate details of the treatment in all countries in which leprosy occurs, and has been accorded ample facilities to make studies in different parts of the world with a view to advancing the cure and finding a true specific for this terrible disease.

Bird Refuges in Louisiana.

As a means of helping to preserve the products of the fields and orchards and gardens from the ravages of insects, the Foundation

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

has purchased 65,000 acres of ~~land~~ forest in the State of Louisiana on the Gulf of Mexico, as a bird refuge to protect migratory birds in the winter season and prevent their destruction. It hopes, by example, to encourage the establishment of other bird refuges, and in this way to assist the agriculturists and horticulturists of the continent. ~~This~~ No part of America is likely to profit more by this experiment than Canada. It is estimated by agricultural bureaus that $400,000,000 of damage to fields orchards and gardens is done by insects which, if birds were sufficiently plentiful, would be wiped out.

Investigation
~~Study~~ of Industrial Relations .

Referring to his own work for the Rockefeller Foundation, Mr. King mentioned that he had been appointed to direct the investigation of Industrial Relations under the Foundation, with a view to the promotion of industrial peace and in the im- assisting in ~~the~~-provement of the condition of the working classes in the different countries of the world. He had accepted the appointment on the condition that it would not involve a change of citizenship or of residence in Canada. It was pointed out by the Foundation that its work was not for any one country, but to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world, and that he was free to pursue his studies, or to retain experts in working out problems, in any country which gave promise of ultimate useful service. Mr. King spoke of his visits to Colorado as having been taken at his own instance, to study industrial conditions in that State, where, at the time of his appointment, there was a condition

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of industrial strife which had cost the lives of some two hundred individuals.

Shortly after reaching Colorado he had found hundreds of men and women face to face with starvation. Upon representations to the Rockefeller Foundation of the need for help, the Foundation had granted $100,000 towards the relief of the unemployed, and had made Mr. King its representative in the administration of this relief in connection with a State Committee appointed for the purpose. The following extracts were read from the report of the State Committee as to the service which had been rendered the State in the relief of families by furnishing work on the roads of the State with the monies supplied by the Rockefeller Foundation:

A plan of relief had been worked out- whereby the unemployed were put to work on road construction, and paid in orders for food and clothing which the Rockefeller Foundation redeemed up to the amount of $100,000

"In Las Animas County fifty miles of highway were reconstructed and four miles of new highway built. In Huerfano County the reconstructed highways measured sixteen miles and the new road seven. In Boulder county twenty miles of highway were reconstructed and 30,830 square feet of cement sidewalk were laid on the Campus of the University of Colorado. In Fremont, Weld, Gunnison, and Garfield Counties, approximately ten miles of road were reconstructed. The outstanding feature of the work in Las Animas County was the construction of the Stonewall automobile road along the banks of the Purgatoire River. This is regarded as one of the most perfect examples of mountain highway in the State. It extends for a distance of thirty-two miles along the river and in many places was practically cut out of the solid mountain walls. In Boulder County a long stretch of the Lincoln Highway was completed to the entire satisfaction of the State Highway Commissioner, and a double track road was built up the side of Flagstaff Mountain in the Boulder City Park, affording one of the most impressive vistas to be enjoyed in the country. Along the banks of St. Vrain Creek in Boulder County another mountain road of grandeur and permanence was reconstructed. In Gunnison County a road was built connecting the Northern part of the county with Delta County and opening a much-needed avenue of travel into a large agricultural area. In the construction of this road the county commissioners had the invaluable assistance of a road engineer of the United States Forestry service. The road workers in Fremont County were employed on the Parkdale Cotopaxi cut-off on the Rainbow Route. It was a difficult piece of work blasted out of the solid mountain.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

As to the individuals and families relieved the State report says:

Of more immediate importance, however, was the relief extended. When the work was begun in April, thousands of men, women and children were face to face with starvation. When the funds were exhausted in June, new opportunities for work in other and normal lines were manifesting themselves, while the destitution and suffering which otherwise would have been disastrous had been reduced to a minimum. In Las Animas County seventeen hundred and eighty men were given employment, extending aid to more than one thousand families. In Huerfano County 470 men were employed and 360 families assisted. In Boulder County 1100 men were employed and 634 families assisted. In Weld County 200 men were employed and 141 families assisted. In Fremont County 500 men were employed and 400 families assisted. In Gunnison County ~~$$~~ 150 men were employed and 100 families assisted. In Garfield County 50 men were employed and 30 families assisted.

In all 4250 men were given employment on work that permanently benefitted the State and 2668 families aided

Mr. King also touched briefly on his second visit to Colorado in the fall of last year, and the Industrial Plan and Agreement respecting employment, working and living conditions which had been made applicable to the mining camps of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, a concern of which Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. was a director. He had been afforded the opportunity of sharing in the conferences of the Company and assisting in the drafting of this Plan which had subsequently been accepted by the miners by a majority vote of 85 per cent. on a secret ballot, and which was now helping to maintain industrial peace and improve industrial conditions in that State. The work in Colorado was only one ~~experiment~~ instance of many which it was hoped association with the Foundation would afford ~~opportunities for carrying out~~ of rendering a practical service to industry and labour alike, in the direction of the larger work of assembling and diffusing information in regard to ascertainable factors in industrial strife and industrial progress in the different countries of the world.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Notes on address
Women's Canadian Club of Ottawa
January 4-1916.

I thank you for the privilege of presenting to the members of a Club that has identified itself so strongly with humanitarian effort in many directions, the work of an organization of kindred sympathies and aims, one that, while quick to recognize the merits of national hopes and national aspirations, yet believes that "over all nations is humanity", and seeks in the fulfillment of its purpose, "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." The words just used may seem expressive of an ideal rather than the actual aim of any existing institution. Nevertheless, they are the words descriptive of its objects in the charter of the Rockefeller Foundation, as that body was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in May 1913.

It is doubtful if in any part of the world today, or at any time hitherto in the world's history, with the single exception of the Carnegie Foundations, there has been incorporated by Act of any popular assembly a body the scope of whose work was as broad, whose aim was as high, or whose resources were as considerable. The Rockefeller Foundation in its articles of incorporation is described as a body corporate 'for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world.'

This corporation is controlled by a Board of Trustees of whom Ex-President Eliot of Harvard University, President Judson of the University of Chicago, Mr. F. T. Gates, Mr. Simon Flexner,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. Starr J. Murphy, Mr. Jerome D. Greene, Mr. Wickliffe Rose, Mr. Hepburn, Mr. C. O. Heydt, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., are members.

Such monies as come into the hands of the Trustees are theirs for use as they think best; they are free to expend income and principal alike in such manner as will best promote the Foundation's object. This, as you have already gathered, is a large one, but so also are the resources of the Foundation. Already there has passed as gifts into the absolute control of the Trustees no less a sum than $100,000,000 to be used, principal as well as interest if they so desire,"to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." The account of the work of the Rockefeller Foundation is the story of how this vast sum of money, and other sums that may be added to it, is being applied in the fulfillment of its object.

The object of its Founder in making its scope so broad was that an agency not dependent on the life of any individual might be established to deal with the problems of philanthropy in accordance with the principles and methods most approved in each generation, and to deal with these problems - which are ever changing - as the need from generation to generation may demand.

In a word, the Foundation may best be described as 'a University of human need', knowing no country as its home, but as the word 'University' suggests, existing for the sake of the world's need, and adopting as a method of meeting it, research, publication, establishment and maintenance of charitable, benevolent,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3870

religious, missionary, public educational activities, agencies and institutions, or aid to any or all such, or any other means and agencies which from time to time shall seem expedient to its members or trustees.

It will be apparent that the heaviest of all obligations upon the Trustees of such a corporation must be that of wisely shaping its policies and lines of work, so as to follow those only that are likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness.

A sure prospect of such usefulness the Trustees believe is to be found in the advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of treating and preventing disease, and it is of this aspect of the Foundation's work that I should like to speak first.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Relief in Belgium - Serbia

When the war broke out in Europe, the whole civilized world was incensed and outraged at the treatment of Belgium. In this country and in the United States, committees were formed to send relief in the form of food and clothing to the Belgians. One of the first organizations in Canada to devote its time to this work and set an example in this particular to other societies, was the Women's Canadian Club of Ottawa. In the United States, a national committee known as The Belgian Relief Committee was formed. It began the work of soliciting donations from all parts of the United States. After the way in which Belgium had been pillaged and the people driven from their homes as refugees to other countries, millions were, with the approach of winter, brought face to face with starvation. The emergency was such that if it were to be effectively met, some government or existing organization would have to undertake the task. The governments of the Allied Powers were too busy with their own problems of financing the war and meeting its other exigencies, to attempt this task. It was under these circumstances that the Rockefeller Foundation came forward and undertook to place a part of its immediately available resources at the service of the Belgians.

Its first step was to charter the largest available neutral ship in New York harbor and fit it out with a cargo of food. Conjointly with this, it arranged, as a means of co-operating with the American Belgian Relief Committee, to provide a steamship pier, to charter further steamships, and to convey free of charge

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

from New York to Belgium such supplies as the public might wish to contribute. The problem at the moment was not so much that of securing supplies as of obtaining the necessary means of transportating and distributing them. It was in this way that the Foundation, through its available funds, was able to render so large a service. It was able to guarantee to whoever made a contribution in money, food, or clothing, that that contribution would reach the Belgians in full, without any deduction on account of cost of transportation or distribution, or the work of organization in effecting both.

The first vessel to sail from this continent to Europe with supplies for the Belgians was the steamer "Massapequa", chartered by the Rockefeller Foundation, and which carried four thousand tons of food supplies, every pound of which had been purchased by the Foundation itself. This was but one of four cargoes of food on vessels chartered by the Foundation which were carried between October and the close of the year 1914.

The following will indicate the total of the Belgian Relief shipments made by the Rockefeller Foundation at this time:

(Take in page 124, Annual Report)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It is interesting, in reading the correspondence which took place by cable between the Rockefeller Foundation and Mr. Walter Page, the American Ambassador in London (who, by the way, is himself a member of the International Health Commission of the Rockefeller Foundation) through whom the extent of the need was first ascertained and the arrangements for ships and distribution made, that in replying to a query from the President of the Foundation as to how its ships would reach Rotterdam in safety, notwithstanding the mines reported to be surrounding the coasts of Europe, that the American Ambassador replied that he could guarantee safe passage as 'the British navy would convoy the ships.'

It will be seen that altogether, in relief in the nature of food supplies alone, the Rockefeller Foundation contributed about a million dollars towards Belgian relief.

But the Foundation did not confine its assistance, to the Belgians or others in Europe, to sending supplies of food. It deliberately availed itself of the scope of its charter "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world", by adopting a broad policy of the relief of suffering non-combatants in Europe, in such manner as was most needed and likely to prove most effective. To this end, it appointed three of the ablest men in the United States a War Relief Commission, and sent this Commission to Europe to study the needs and report as to services which the Foundation could undertake. On this Commission were Dr. Wickliffe Rose, Mr. Ernest P. Bicknell, Director of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

American Red Cross, and Mr. Henry James. The Commission sailed direct for England and their first interviews were with the American Ambassador in London and members of the British Government.

They then sailed for Holland, where they were received by members of the Dutch Government. Subsequently they obtained from all of the warring nations safe conduct and passports to the different countries. In Holland the War Relief Commission found that quite as serious as the problem of relief in Belgium was the necessity of aiding the refugees who had fled from Belgium into Holland in large numbers and had found it impossible to return to their own country. It was estimated that nearly a million - 800,000, as a matter of fact - Belgians were refugees in Holland, in addition to the numbers that were also refugees in England. At first these people had found sanctuary where they could, in private dwellings or in public buildings. In the municipalities of Holland, committees were formed to deal with their relief municipalities. Then the Government of Holland itself began a system of concentration camps where the refugees were grouped by hundreds and provided with food and clothing. With nothing to do, save to accept the charity offered, these camps, as might have been expected, soon became anything other than desirable communities in which to live. Idleness brought with it its inevitable weakening of character, and the War Commission saw that deterioration of physical and moral character was following this means of dealing with the problem. The Commission found that idlness threatened to be no less a misfortune to the refugees than homelessness. The missing links in the scheme for the relief of Belgians in Holland were lack of work for the people to do and lack of underclothing to keep them warm.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Early in December, large shipments of clothing intended for the Belgians began to arrive in Rotterdam. The Commission for Relief in Belgium was not prepared to handle clothing, and these shipments were going into Belgium in an unsystematic way. They were, in fact, accumulating rapidly in a temporary warehouse in Rotterdam. The clothing was coming in from the United States, Canada and England. Much of it was very good quality and absolutely new, and only a small portion of it was packed, classified and marked in such a way as to make possible its distribution without unpacking. Some clothing had been collected by communities which did not understand the work of packing and sent vegetables, fish, toys, etc. in their cases. The Rockefeller Foundation undertook to open a large warehouse, and as far as possible engage the Belgian men and women refugees from Belgium to help in the unpacking, sorting and fumigating of this clothing. At the outset, from 150 to 300 cases of clothing were gotten ready for shipment each working day. A second warehouse was opened early in January, with a capacity of from 300 to 550 cases. Altogether, in not less than two months, 12,476 cases were sorted and packed and sent to various parts of Belgium and Holland, including 1,386,572 articles of clothing.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Under these circumstances, after consultation with the people themselves and the public authorities, the Commission recommended to the Rockefeller Foundation to make a grant towards the construction of workshops in which machines might be installed and men and women put to work for at least six hours of each day in making under-garments to supplement the supplies received. While much clothing had been forwarded, very little of it was under-clothing, and that, apparently, was more needed at the time than anything else. The Rockefeller Foundation undertook to finance the industry, paying the rent of the machines and the cost of materials, including scissors, needles, buttons, cloth, woolen yarn for women and girls who could not sew but could knit stockings, and the wages of the foremen. Later, they also allowed a small bonus to the sewing women who worked six hours a day for six days. The work of the sewing classes was extended to all of the eleven provinces of Holland. Thirty-four classes in as many different places were established within a few months. By April 1st, more than five thousand women and girls were thus working under competent supervision producing clothing needed by themselves and by their countrymen who had sought refuge in Holland. The under-garments thus manufactured were supplied free of cost to those of their number in need of them and to sufferers in other parts of Belgium. In addition, owing to the demands of winter, the Foundation purchased on bids from Dutch manufacturers about ten thousand suits of underwear for distribution in camps were extreme instances of individual need were reported.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

From Holland the War Relief Commission extended its inquiries to Poland and Serbia. The account sent by this Commission to the Foundation in New York, of destitution and disease as found in Serbia is appalling beyond words. Not only did the Commission find in many parts of Serbia a condition of poverty equal to that of the Belgian refugees, but they found the situation most frightfully aggravated by the primitive condition of that country and the terrific inroads of epidemic diseases. Economically and socially, the Serbian seems to be the opposite extreme from the Belgian. Nine-tenths of the clothing worn by the people of the country are still the product of home manufacture. Belgrade, the largest city, was not, at the commencement of the war, any larger than Ottawa. There are hardly more than two or three cities of importance in the whole country. The population is scattered in rural villages. These circumstances made the distribution of aid and the fighting of disease very difficult. With the male population of the country occupied during the last three years in fighting, both in the Balkan and the present war, labor has been withdrawn from industry, little clothing has been manufactured, and the population of Serbia has become a people in rags. It is little wonder that it was a population easily crushed by an advancing army. More serious, however, than the advance of an army or the destitution, was the threatened spread of the epidemic diseases which the Rockefeller War Relief Commission found in its visit at the early part of last year. These diseases were typhus fever, typhoid, and recurrent fever. Frightful they were,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

not only because of the extermination of the entire Serbian population which they threatened, but also because of their nature they constituted a menace to all of the peoples of Europe, if not, indeed, to the entire world. How serious was the outbreak as the Rockefeller Commission found it, may be judged from the circumstance that more than one-seventh of all the physicians in Serbia had died from typhus in their dendeavor to bring relief to the people suffering from that disease.

Realizing the international problems to which an endeavor to cope with such a situation might give rise, the Rockefeller Foundation, on receiving the report of its Commission, joined forces with the American Red Cross in establishing an American Sanitary Commission, which immediately got into touch with agencies of other countries operating in Serbia, and went to Europe by invitation of the Serbian Government, which gave it full powers to institute vigorous measures to cope with the epidemic. Dr. Richard P. Strong, Professor of Tropical Diseases in the Harvard Medical School and probably the foremost plague expert in the United States, was put at the head of this Commission. He left with a staff of physicians and nurses, and with an equipment in the nature of hospital supplies, starting in with the understanding that he and his forces would be backed to the utmost limit by the Rockefeller Foundation and the American Red Cross in their efforts to conquer the diseases which threatened to exterminate this war and disease-ridden people.

When Dr. Strong and his associates reached Serbia in May they found the greater part of the non-combatant population in a most

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

appalling state of destitution and disease, with a death list of several hundred each day and new cases appearing in alarming numbers. It is estimated that fully 100,000 men, women and children lost their lives from the typhus in the space of three months. On his arrival in Serbia, Dr. Strong was made the head of an International Health Board composed of English, French, Serbian and American physicians, and directed these allied medical forces in their efforts to stamp out disease. In their work of combatting disease, many of the foreign Red Cross doctors and nurses were stricken with it, and four American doctors died from it. But these lives were not sacrificed in vain. In a manner little short of miraculous, through the efficiency of its organization, the disease was not only brought under control, but in the course of the last year, was practically wiped out.

In the fighting of this disease, it is reported that one of the most effective weapons was a serum which has been discovered by a Japanese named Noguchi, one of the younger men who has been conducting researches at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. The serums which this young Japanese has discovered promise not only to help to counteract typhus, but to prove a specific for the arrest of infantile paralysis as well.

This is not the only instance in which the Rockefeller Institute has rendered humanity a service in the present war. The first step, in fact, taken by the Rockefeller Foundation was to fit out Dr. Alexis Carrel, who at the opening of the war joined the Army Medical forces of France, with a complete equipment for hospital

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

use in France of anti-meningitis serum and anti-dysentery serum, in each of which the Rockefeller Institute has made discoveries of value to mankind. Ever since the war commenced, Dr. Carrel has been working steadily in the military hospitals of France, with nurses and equipment supplied by the Rockefeller Foundation, in relieving the wounded that are brought under his care.

Other services of the Foundation to humanity in this war might be mentioned, but I shall conclude with a reference to only two. One is the handsome contributions which have been made from time to time to the American Red Cross, to enable it to send, in larger numbers than it otherwise would have been able to do, physicians and nurses of the highest standing in America; and the other, the relatively small though most significant contribution of an appropriation of $20,000 a year towards paying the stipends of the Professors of the University of Louvain who, in the destruction of that University by the Germans, were deprived of their laboratories and facilities for research, the contribution being made by the Rockefeller Foundation that these men might pursue at Oxford and Cambridge in England the studies which, as one of the fruits of German "Kultur", they have been deprived of carrying on on the continent of Europe.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

I thank you for the privilege of presenting to the members of a Club that has identified itself so strongly with humanitarian effort in many directions, the work of an organization of kindred sympathies and aims, one that, while quick to recognize the merits of national hopes and national aspirations, yet believes that "over all nations is humanity", and seeks in the fulfillment of its purpose, "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." The words just used may seem expressive of an ideal rather than the actual aim of any existing institution. Nevertheless, they are the words descriptive of its objects in the charter of the Rockefeller Foundation, as that body was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York in May 1913.

It is doubtful if in any part of the world today, or at any time hitherto in the world's history, with the single exception of the Carnegie Foundations, there has been incorporated by Act of any popular assembly a body the scope of whose work was as broad, whose aim was as high, or whose resources were as considerable. The Rockefeller Foundation in its articles of incorporation is described as a body corporate 'for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world.'

This corporation is controlled by a Board of Trustees of whom Ex-President Eliot of Harvard University, President Judson of the University of Chicago, Mr. F. T. Gates, Mr. Simon Flexner,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. Starr J. Murphy, Mr. Jerome D. Greene, Mr. Wickliffe Rose, Mr. Hepburn, Mr. C. O. Heydt, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., are members.

Such monies as come into the hands of the Trustees are theirs for use as they think best; they are free to expend income and principal alike in such manner as will best promote the Foundation's object. This, as you have already gathered, is a large one, but so also are the resources of the Foundation. Already there has passed as gifts into the absolute control of the Trustees no less a sum than $100,000,000 to be used, principal as well as interest if they so desire, "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world. The account of the work of the Rockefeller Foundation is the story of how this vast sum of money, and other sums that may be added to it, is being applied in the fulfillment of its object.

The object of its Founder in making its scope so broad was that an agency not dependent on the life of any individual might be established to deal with the problems of philanthropy in accordance with the principles and methods most approved in each generation, and to deal with these problems - which are ever changing - as the need from generation to generation may demand.

In a word, the Foundation may best be described as 'a University of human need', knowing no country as its home, but as the word 'University' suggests, existing for the sake of the world's need, and adopting as a method of meeting it, research, publication, establishment and maintenance of charitable, benevolent,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

religious, missionary, public educational activities, agencies and institutions, or aid to any or all such, or any other means and agencies which from time to time shall seem expedient to its members or trustees.

It will be apparent that the heaviest of all obligations upon the Trustees of such a corporation must be that of wisely shaping its policies and lines of work, so as to follow those only that are likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness.

A sure prospect of such usefulness the Trustees believe is to be found in the advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of treating and preventing disease, and it is of this aspect of the Foundation's work that I should like to speak first.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

When the war broke out in Europe, the whole civilized world was incensed and outraged at the treatment of Belgium. In this country and in the United States, committees were formed to send relief in the form of food and clothing to the Belgians. One of the first organizations in Canada to devote its time to this work and set an example in this particular to other societies, was the Women's Canadian Club of Ottawa. In the United States, a national committee known as The Belgian Relief Committee was formed. It began the work of soliciting donations from all parts of the United States. After the way in which Belgium had been pillaged and the people driven from their homes as refugees to other countries, millions were, with the approach of winter, brought face to face with starvation. The emergency was such that if it were to be effectively met, some government or existing organization would have to undertake the task. The governments of the Allied Powers were too busy with their own problems of financing the war and meeting its other exigencies, to attempt this task. It was under these circumstances that the Rockefeller Foundation came forward and undertook to place a part of its immediately available resources at the service of the Belgians.

Its first step was to charter the largest available neutral ship in New York harbor and fit it out with a cargo of food. Conjointly with this, it arranged, as a means of co-operating with the American Belgian Relief Committee, to provide a steamship pier, to charter further steamships, and to convey free of charge

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

from New York to Belgium such supplies as the public might wish to contribute. The problem at the moment was not so much that of securing supplies as of obtaining the necessary means of transportating and distributing them. It was in this way that the Foundation, through its available funds, was able to render so large a service. It was able to guarantee to whoever made a contribution in money, food, or clothing, that that contribution would reach the Belgians in full, without any deduction on account of cost of transportation or distribution, or the work of organizating in effecting both.

The first vessel to sail from this continent to Europe with supplies for the Belgians was the steamer "Massapequa", chartered by the Rockefeller Foundation, and which carried four thousand tons of food supplies, every pound of which had been purchased by the Foundation itself. This was but one of four cargoes of food on vessels chartered by the Foundation which were carried between October and the close of the year 1914.

The following will indicate the total of the Belgian Relief shipments made by the Rockefeller Foundation at this time:

(Take in page 124, Annual Report)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It is interesting, in reading the correspondence which took place by cable between the Rockefeller Foundation and Mr. Walter Page, the American Ambassador in London (who, by the way, is himself a member of the International Health Commission of the Rockefeller Foundation) through whom the extent of the need was first ascertained and the arrangements for ships and distribution made, that in replying to a query from the President of the Foundation as to how its ships would reach Rotterdam in safety, notwithstanding the mines reported to be surrounding the coasts of Europe, that the American Ambassador replied that he could guarantee safe passage as the British navy would convey the ships.

It will be seen that altogether, in relief in the nature of food supplies alone, the Rockefeller Foundation contributed about a million dollars towards Belgian relief.

But the Foundation did not confine its assistance, to the Belgians or others in Europe, to sending supplies of food. It deliberately availed itself of the scope of its charter "to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world", by adopting a broad policy of the relief of suffering non-combatants in Europe, in such manner as was most needed and likely to prove most effective. To this end, it appointed three of the ablest men in the United States a War Relief Commission, and sent this Commission to Europe to study the needs and report as to services which the Foundation could undertake. On this Commission were Dr. Wickliffe Rose, Mr. Ernest P. Bicknell, Director of the American Red

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

American Red Cross, and Mr. Henry James. The Commission sailed direct for England and their first interviews were with the American Ambassador in London and members of the British Government.

They then sailed for Holland, where they were received by members of the Dutch Government. Subsequently they obtained from all of the warring nations safe conduct and passports to the different countries. In Holland the War Relief Commission found that quite as serious as the problem of relief in Belgium was the necessity of aiding the refugees who had fled from Belgium into Holland in large numbers and had found it impossible to return to their own country. It was estimated that nearly a million - 800,000, as a matter of fact - Belgians were refugees in Holland, in addition to the numbers that were also refugees in England. At first these people had found sanctuary where they could, in private dwellings or in public buildings. In the municipalities of Holland, committees were formed to deal with their relief municipalities. Then the Government of Holland itself began a system of concentration camps where the refugees were grouped by hundreds and provided with food and clothing. With nothing to do, save to accept the charity offered, these camps, as might have been expected, soon became anything other than desirable communities in which to live. Idleness brought with it its inevitable weakening of character, and the War Commission saw that deterioration of physical and moral character was following this means of dealing with the problem. The Commission found that idleness threatened to ~~under these circumstances, after consultation with the people~~ be no less a misfortune to the refugees than homelessness. The missing links in the scheme for the relief of Belgians in Holland were lack of work for the people to do and lack of underclothing to keep them warm.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Under these circumstances, after consultation with the people themselves and the public authorities, the Commission recommended to the Rockefeller Foundation to make a grant towards the construction of workshops in which machines might be installed and men and women put to work for at least six hours of each day in making under-garments to supplement the supplies received. While much clothing had been forwarded, very little of it was under-clothing, and that, apparently, was more needed at the time than anything else. The Rockefeller Foundation undertook to finance the industry, paying the rent of the machines and the cost of materials, including scissors, needles, buttons, cloth, woolen yarn for women and girls who could not sew but could knit stockings, and the wages of the foremen. Later, they also allowed a small bonus to the sewing women who worked six hours a day for six days. The work of the sewing classes was extended to all of the eleven provinces of Holland. Thirty-four classes in as many different places were established within a few months. By April 1st, more than five thousand women and girls were thus working under competent supervision producing clothing needed by themselves and by their countrymen who had sought refuge in Holland. The under-garments thus manufactured were supplied free of cost to those of their number in need of them and to sufferers in other parts of Belgium. In addition, owing to the demands of winter, the Foundation purchased on bids from Dutch manufacturers about ten thousand suits of underwear for distribution in camps were extreme instances of individual need were reported.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Early in December, large shipments of clothing intended for the Belgians began to arrive in Rotterdam. The Commission for Relief in Belgium was not prepared to handle clothing, and these shipments were going into Belgium in an unsystematic way. They were, in fact, accumulating rapidly in a temporary warehouse in Rotterdam. The clothing was coming in from the United States, Canada and England. Much of it was very good quality and absolutely new, and only a small portion of it was packed, classified and marked in such a way as to make possible its distribution without unpacking. Some clothing had been collected by communities which did not understand the work of packing and sent vegetables, fish, toys, etc. in their cases. The Rockefeller Foundation undertook to open a large warehouse, and as far as possible engage the Belgian men and women refugees from Belgium to help in the unpacking, sorting and fumigating of this clothing. At the outset, from 150 to 300 cases of clothing were gotten ready for shipment each working day. A second warehouse was opened early in January, with a capacity of from 300 to 550 cases. Altogether, in not less than two months, 12,476 cases were sorted and packed and sent to various parts of Belgium and Holland, including 1,386,572 articles of clothing.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

From Holland the War Relief Commission extended its inquiries to Poland and Serbia. The account sent by this Commission to the Foundation in New York, of destitution and disease as found in Serbia is appalling beyond words. Not only did the Commission find in many parts of Serbia a condition of poverty equal to that of the Belgian refugees, but they found the situation most frightfully aggravated by the primitive condition of that country and the terrific inroads of epidemic diseases. Economically and socially, the Serbian seems to be the opposite extreme from the Belgian. Nine-tenths of the clothing worn by the people of the country are still the product of home manufacture. Belgrade, the largest city, was not, at the commencement of the war, any larger than Ottawa. There are hardly more than two or three cities of importance in the whole country. The population is scattered in rural villages. These circumstances made the distribution of aid and the fighting of disease very difficult. With the male population of the country occupied during the last three years in fighting, both in the Balkan and the present war, labor has been withdrawn from industry, little clothing has been manufactured, and the population of Serbia has become a people in rags. It is little wonder that it was a population easily crushed by an advancing army. More serious, however, than the advance of an army or the destitution, was the threatened spread of the epidemic diseases which the Rockefeller War Relief Commission found in its visit at the early part of last year. These diseases were typhus fever, typhoid, and recurrent fever. Frightful they were,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

not only because of the extermination of the entire Serbian population which they threatened, but also because of their nature they constituted a menace to all of the peoples of Europe, if not, indeed, to the entire world. How serious was the outbreak as the Rockefeller Commission found it, may be judged from the circumstance that more than one-seventh of all the physicians in Serbia had died from typhus in their dendeavor to bring relief to the people suffering from that disease.

Realizing the international problems to which an endeavor to cope with such a situation might give rise, the Rockefeller Foundation, on receiving the report of its Commission, joined forces with the American Red Cross in establishing an American Sanitary Commission, which immediately got into touch with agencies of other countries operating in Serbia, and went to Europe by invitation of the Serbian Government, which gave it full powers to institute vigorous measures to cope with the epidemic. Dr. Richard P. Strong, Professor of Tropical Diseases in the Harvard Medical School and probably the foremost plague expert in the United States, was put at the head of this Commission. He left with a staff of physicians and nurses, and with an equipment in the nature of hospital supplies, starting in with the understanding that he and his forces would be backed to the utmost limit by the Rockefeller Foundation and the American Red Cross in their efforts to conquer the diseases which threatened to exterminate this war and disease ridden people.

When Dr. Strong and his associates reached Serbia in May they found the greater part of the non-combatant population in a most

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

appalling state of destitution and disease, with a death list of several hundred each day and new cases appearing in alarming numbers. It is estimated that fully 100,000 men, women and children lost their lives from the typhus in the space of three months. On his arrival in Serbia, Dr. Strong was made the head of an International Health Board composed of English, French, Serbian and American physicians, and directed these allied medical forces in their efforts to stamp out disease. In their work of combatting disease, many of the foreign Red Cross doctors and nurses were stricken with it, and four American doctors died from it. But these lives were not sacrificed in vain. In a manner little short of miraculous, through the efficiency of its organization, the disease was not only brought under control, but in the course of the last year, was practically wiped out.

In the fighting of this disease, it is reported that one of the most effective weapons was a serum which has been discovered by a Japanese named Noguchi, one of the younger men who has been conducting researches at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. The serums which this young Japanese has discovered promise not only to help to counteract typhus, but to prove a specific for the arrest of infantile paralysis as well.

This is not the only instance in which the Rockefeller Institute has rendered humanity a service in the present war. The first step, in fact, taken by the Rockefeller Foundation was to fit out Dr. Alexis Carrel, who at the opening of the war joined the Army Medical forces of France, with a complete equipment for hospital

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

use in France of anti-meningitis serum and anti-dysentery serum, in each of which the Rockefeller Institute has made discoveries of value to mankind. Ever since the war commenced, Dr. Carrel has been working steadily in the military hospitals of France, with nurses and equipment supplied by the Rockefeller Foundation, in relieving the wounded that are brought under his care.

Other services of the Foundation to humanity in this war might be mentioned, but I shall conclude with a reference to only two. One is the handsome contributions which have been made from time to time to the American Red Cross, to enable it to send, in larger numbers than it otherwise would have been able to do, physicians and nurses of the highest standing in America; and the other, the relatively small though most significant contribution of an appropriation of $20,000 a year towards paying the stipends of the Professors of the University of Louvain who, in the destruction of that University by the Germans, were deprived of their laboratories and facilities for research, the contribution being made by the Rockefeller Foundation that these men might pursue at Oxford and Cambridge in England the studies which, as one of the fruits of German "Kultur", they have been deprived of carrying on on the continent of Europe.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (preceded by work of Sanitary Commission, confined to U.S.)

2 million people in U. S. infected with hookworm disease, in Southern States.
Vast suffering, partial arrest of physical, mental and moral growth, great loss of life, and noticeable decrease in economic efficiency over vast regions.
Treated more than 500,000 persons:
Diagnosis easy and certain
Curable and easily prevented
Public authorities gladly co-operate
Awakens public intelligent interest in hygiene and modern scientific medicine and public sanitation.
Disease extends in belt inhabited by more than 1000 million people
Infection rises some cases to 90% of population.
Spread by emigration - no steps to prevent.
Retards the economic, social, moral, and intellectual progress of mankind.

Foundation extends to other countries and people the work of eradicating the disease and establishing agencies for:
promoting public sanitation
spread of knowledge of scientific medicine

Visit to England, 1913 of Dr. Rose, resulted in cordial invitation from Colonial authorities to visit the tropical colonies and dependencies of Great Britain to inaugurate work under auspices of local governments.
Work begun in:
British West Indies
Egypt
Ceylon
Malay States

In Egypt Lord Kitchener, then the British High Commissioner, was making public health the chief feature of his administration, and was centering attention especially on Egypt's endemic scourges. He cordially welcomed the Commission and eagerly sought its co-operation, and gained for the effective plan for the improvement of health conditions in Egypt the active support of the Government - worked out Plan of one Province as the unit of organization and work - one large and 4 small travelling tent hospitals and groups of house hospitals in towns - patients examined and treated free.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (cont'd.)

Egypt (cont'd.)
Infection and sanitary surveys made -
$60,000 spent annually
½ by British Government
½ by Rockefeller Foundation.
In one year in one province, 12,000 persons examined:
5,500 treated,
nearly 1,000 cured.
War has retarded work, but will be extended from Province to Province and from village to village, as results justify.

Central America
In addition to British Colonies work inaugurated also in Central American countries.

Altogether, outside U.S., up to end of 1914, mostly in British colonies.
Nearly 38,000 persons examined:
56.6 % found infected
90 % treated (19,425 persons)
25.6 % cured
Relations of the numbers will have more than doubled since then.
Co-operation and mutual confidence established between the Commission and the Governments and the physicians of the countries visited, and stimulation to self-help.

United States
In U.S., the work of the Sanitary Commission in Southern States carried on.
Demonstration in every state as to means of treating infected persons and preventing soil pollution.
Half a million dollars a year appropriated by Foundation for this work.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Medical Work in China

The great need of China - the benefits of modern medicine, including public and personal hygiene and treatment of disease.

In January 1914, a Commission sent to China to study the needs re medical education and public health:
President Judson (Chicago)
Rodger Greene (U.S.Consul General, Hankow)
Francis W. Peabody, M.D. (Harvard)

Studied medical schools, hospitals, and dispensaries in China, in conference with missionaries, Government officials and other advisers.

The Report led to establishment of China Medical Board to carry out recommendations.

5 million dollars appropriated towards work of medical education, and establishment of uptodate hospitals, etc. in China.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Relation to other Rockefeller Philanthropic Boards:

Custom of Mr. Rockefeller in dealing with applications or suggestions concerning philanthropic objects.

The General Education Board - 1903

Endowment: $34,000,000.

"The promotion of Education without distinction of race, sex, or creed."

Promotion of practical farming in U.S.
Development of system of public highschools in Southern States.
Promotion of higher education.
Promotion of selected schools for negroes.
Promotion of medical education.

The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research - (Founded 1901) - 1908.

Endowment: $10,000,000.

"Medical research with special reference to the prevention and treatment of disease."

Laboratories
Clinical Hospital

Investigations in Pathology
Bacteriology
Chemistry
Physiology
Experimental surgery
Experimental biology

Discoveries placed freely at disposal of humanity.

The Rockefeller Sanitary Commission for the Eradication of the Hookworm Disease - 1909.

Pledge of $1,000,000.

Eradication of hookworm diseases from Southern States - infection heavy - 30 degrees N. & S. of Equator.

Infection carried by soil pollution - eradication possible by treatment and by sanitary improvements, travelling dispensaries.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Rockefeller Foundation

An agency not dependent on the life of any individual to deal with the problems of philanthropy in accordance with principles and methods most approved in each generation.

'A university of human need'

Scope: Broad as scope of private charity.

Method:
1. Research
2. Publication
3. Establishment and maintenance of charitable benevolent religious missionary public educational activities, agencies & institutions.
4. Aid of same.

Policies and lines of work:
Those likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness.
The advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of treating and preventing disease - the surest prospect of such usefulness.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Work of the Rockefeller Foundation

The Foundation - What it is:

A corporation chartered under Laws of State of New York, May 14, 1913.

Object: "A body corporate for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well being of mankind throughout the world.

Trustees, powers of: To expend income and principal in such manner as will best promote its objects.

Gifts received:- $100,000,000.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Relation to other Rockefeller Philanthropic Boards:

Custom of Mr. Rockefeller in dealing with applications or suggestions concerning philanthropic objects.

The General Education Board - 1903

Endowment: $34,000,000.

"The promotion of Education without distinction of race, sex, or creed."

Promotion of practical farming in U.S.
Development of system of public highschools in Southern States.
Promotion of higher education.
Promotion of selected schools for negroes.
Promotion of medical education.

The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research - (Founded 1901) - 1908.

Endowment: $10,000,000.

"Medical research with special reference to the prevention and treatment of disease."

Laboratories
Clinical Hospital

Investigations in Pathology
Bacteriology
Chemistry
Physiology
Experimental surgery
Experimental biology

Discoveries placed freely at disposal of humanity.

The Rockefeller Sanitary Commission for the Eradication of the Hookworm Disease - 1909.

Pledge of $1,000,000.

Eradication of hookworm diseases from Southern States - infection heavy - 30 degrees N. & S. of Equator.

Infection carried by soil pollution - eradication possible by treatment and by sanitary improvements, travelling dispensaries.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3901

The Rockefeller Foundation

An agency not dependent on the life of any individual to deal with the problems of philanthropy in accordance with principles and methods most approved in each generation.

'A university of human need'

Scope: Broad as scope of private charity.

Method: 1. Research
2. Publication
3. Establishment and maintenance of charitable benevolent
religious missionary public educational activities, agencies & institutions.
4. Aid of same.

Policies and lines of work:
Those likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness.
The advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of treating and preventing disease - the surest prospect of such usefulness.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (preceded by work of Sanitary Commission, confined to U.S.)

2 million people in U. S. infected with hookworm disease, in Southern States.
Vast suffering, partial arrest of physical, mental and moral growth, great loss of life, and noticeable decrease in economic efficiency over vast regions.
Treated more than 500,000 persons
Diagnosis easy and certain
Curable and easily prevented
Public authorities gladly co-operate
Awakens public intelligent interest in hygiene and modern scientific medicine and public sanitation.
Disease extends in belt inhabited by more than 1000 million people
Infection rises some cases to 90% of population.
Spread by emigration - no steps to prevent.
Retards the economic, social, moral, and intellectual progress of mankind.

Foundation extends to other countries and people the work of eradicating the disease and establishing agencies for:
promoting public sanitation
spread of knowledge of scientific medicine

Visit to England, 1913 of Dr. Rose, resulted in cordial invitation from Colonial authorities to visit the tropical colonies and dependencies of Great Britain to inaugurate work under auspices of local governments.
Work begun in:
British West Indies
Egypt
Ceylon
Malay States

In Egypt Lord Kitchener, then the British High Commissioner, was making public health the chief feature of his administration, and was centering attention especially on Egypt's endemic scourges. He cordially welcomed the Commission and eagerly sought its co-operation, and gained for the effective plan for the improvement of health conditions in Egypt the active support of the Government - worked out Plan of one Province as the unit of organization and work - one large and 4 small travelling tent hospitals and groups of house hospitals in towns - patients examined and treated free.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (cont'd.)

Egypt (cont'd.)
- Infection and sanitary surveys made -
- $60,000 spent annually
  - ½ by British Government
  - ½ by Rockefeller Foundation.
- In one year in one province, 12,000 persons examined:
  - 5,500 treated,
  - nearly 1,000 cured.
- War has retarded work, but will be extended from Province to Province and from village to village, as results justify.

Central America
- In addition to British Colonies work inaugurated also in Central American countries.

Altogether, outside U.S., up to end of 1914, mostly in British colonies.
- Nearly 38,000 persons examined:
  - 56.6 % found infected
  - 90 % treated (19,425 persons)
  - 25.6 % cured
- Relations of the numbers will have more than doubled since then.
- Co-operation and mutual confidence established between the Commission and the Governments and the physicians of the countries visited, and stimulation to self-help.

United States
- In U.S., the work of the Sanitary Commission in Southern States carried on.
- Demonstration in every state as to means of treating infected persons and preventing soil pollution.
- Half a million dollars a year appropriated by Foundation for this work.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Medical Work in China

The great need of China - the benefits of modern medicine, including public and personal hygiene and treatment of disease.

In January 1914, a Commission sent to China to study the needs re medical education and public health:
President Judson (Chicago)
Rodger Greene (U.S.Consul General, Hankow)
Francis W. Peabody, M.D. (Harvard)

Studied medical schools, hospitals, and dispensaries in China, in conference with missionaries, Government officials and other advisers.

The Report led to establishment of China Medical Board to carry out recommendations.

5 million dollars appropriated towards work of medical education, and establishment of uptodate hospitals, etc. in China.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3905

Recommendations of Chinese Medical Commission

That Foundation should undertake medical work in China;

That, so far as possible, it should co-operate with existing missionary institutions;

That it should establish free medical instruction on the highest practicable standard;

That model tuberculosis hospitals be established;

That fellowships and scholarships be endowed;

That additional foreign doctors and nurses be sent out;

That the equipment of certain hospitals be increased.

The intention of the Rockefeller Foundation has been to establish a central medical school for the training of native physicians, with numerous branch hospitals and medical supply stations. It has adopted its Commission's report as a working programme.

from The Outlook of October 6, 1915.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3906

Japanese physician, Dr. Noguchi

The remarkable experiments being made in bacteriology by the young Japanese physician, Noguchi, in the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York, said to be the most important since Pasteur and Koch, have been highly useful during the last two years in arresting the ravages of typhus in Serbia, and promise to make important conquests in the paralyzing of infantile paralysis.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3907

Typhus in Mexico

30,000 cases of typhus in Mexico alone, reports American Red Cross. The Rockefeller Foundation, which gave $75,000 towards the campaign against typhus in Serbia, is also reported to be investigating the Mexican epidemic with a view to offering its aid.

from The Outlook of January 5, 1916

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Sanitary Relief Work in Serbia

Dr. Richard P. Strong, head of the Sanitary and Bacteriological Commission sent out to Serbia by the American Red Cross and the Rockefeller Foundation, cabled recently that with an additional $20,000 and his present equipment he would soon be able to complete the work of suppressing the typhus which only a few months ago threatened the people of that country with extermination and was a very real danger to America itself. $10,000 was immediately cabled to him by the Red Cross, and an equal amount by the Rockefeller Foundation.

When this Commission reached Serbia in May it found the greater part of the non-combatant population in a most appalling state of destitution and disease, with a death list of several hundred each day, and new cases appearing in alarming numbers. It is estimated that fully 100,000 men, women, and children lost their lives from the typhus in the space of three months. Many of the foreign Red Cross doctors and nurses were stricken with the disease, and four American doctors died from it. In view of such conditions, the achievements of Dr. Strong - and the International Health Board of English, French, Serbian, and American physicians of which he was made Medical Director - are little short of miraculous in controlling the epidemic and establishing proper sanitary conditions in so short a space of time.

from The Outlook of September 8, 1915.

Foundation gave $75,000 towards campaign against typhus in Serbia.

from The Outlook of January 5, 1916.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ID 3909

The Foundation and the War

(1) The Foundation's first appropriation enabled Dr. Alexis Carrel, a member of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, whose services had been accepted by the Medical Corps of the French Army, to meet the urgent need for anti-meningitis serum and anti-dysentery serum.

(2) Another appropriation greatly contributed towards the cost of sending American Red Cross physicians and nurses to Europe.

(3) Belgian relief. The total cost of the food supplies given by the Foundation was nearly a million dollars.

(4) Sent a Commission to Europe to inquire into the need of relief measures in all countries concerned. Wickliffe Rose, Ernest P. Bicknell, National Director of the American Red Cross, Henry James, Jr. Commission visited Belgium, Poland, and Serbia.

(5) Made provision for stipends to those professors of scientific subjects in the University of Louvain who had been obliged to abandon their own laboratories.

from The Outlook of October 18, 1915

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Leprosy

Recent experiments by Dr. Victor G. Heiser have been so successful that the International Health Commission is making a special inquiry on the subject with regard to the experience that has been obtained in all parts of the world.

A new treatment, begun in 1911, Dr. Heiser asserts is apparently passing out of the experimental stage, and it may be stated with reasonable certainty that it arrests the disease, regardless of its type or duration, in almost every instance, and in many cases has effected permanent cures. Recently the International Health Commission of the Rockefeller Foundation has taken steps to circulate details of this treatment in all countries in which leprosy occurs, with the hope that if a large number of workers in different parts of the world undertake its use the study of the reports may point the way for further advancement in finding a true specific cure for a terrible disease.

from The Outlook of November 3 1915.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Work of the Rockefeller Foundation

The Foundation - What it is:

A corporation chartered under Laws of State of New York, May 14, 1913.

Object: "A body corporate for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well being of mankind throughout the world.

Trustees, powers of: To expend income and principal in such manner as will best promote its objects.

Gifts received:- $100,000,000.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Relation to other Rockefeller Philanthropic Boards:

Custom of Mr. Rockefeller in dealing with applications or suggestions concerning philanthropic objects.

The General Education Board - 1903

Endowment: $34,000,000.

"The promotion of Education without distinction of race, sex, or creed."

Promotion of practical farming in U.S.
Development of system of public highschools in Southern States.
Promotion of higher education.
Promotion of selected schools for negroes.
Promotion of medical education.

The Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research - (Founded 1901) - 1908.

Endowment: $10,000,000.

"Medical research with special reference to the prevention and treatment of disease."

Laboratories
Clinical Hospital

Investigations in Pathology
Bacteriology
Chemistry
Physiology
Experimental surgery
Experimental biology

Discoveries placed freely at disposal of humanity.

The Rockefeller Sanitary Commission for the Eradication of the Hookworm Disease - 1909.

Pledge of $1,000,000.

Eradication of hookworm diseases from Southern States - infection heavy - 30 degrees N, & S. of Equator.

Infection carried by soil pollution - eradication possible by treatment and by sanitary improvements, travelling dispensaries.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Rockefeller Foundation

An agency not dependent on the life of any individual to deal with the problems of philanthropy in accordance with principles and methods most approved in each generation.

'A university of human need'

Scope: Broad as scope of private charity.

Method:
1. Research
2. Publication
3. Establishment and maintenance of charitable benevolent
   religious missionary public educational activities, agencies & institutions.
4. Aid of same.

Policies and lines of work:
Those likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far-reaching usefulness.
The advancement of public health through medical research and education, including demonstration of known methods of treating and preventing disease - the surest prospect of such usefulness.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (preceded by work of Sanitary Commission, confined to U.S.)

2 million people in U. S. infected with hookworm disease, in Southern States.
Vast suffering, partial arrest of physical, mental and moral growth, great loss of life, and noticeable decrease in economic efficiency over vast regions.
Treated more than 500,000 persons
Diagnosis easy and certain
Curable and easily prevented
Public authorities gladly co-operate
Awakens public intelligent interest in hygiene and modern scientific medicine and public sanitation.
Disease extends in belt inhabited by more than 1000 million people
Infection rises some cases to 90% of population.
Spread by emigration - no steps to prevent.
Retards the economic, social, moral, and intellectual progress of mankind.

Foundation extends to other countries and people the work of eradicating the disease and establishing agencies for:
promoting public sanitation
spread of knowledge of scientific medicine

Visit to England, 1913 of Dr. Rose, resulted in cordial invitation from Colonial authorities to visit the tropical colonies and dependencies of Great Britain to inaugurate work under auspices of local governments.
Work begun in:
British West Indies
Egypt
Ceylon
Malay States

In Egypt Lord Kitchener, then the British High Commissioner, was making public health the chief feature of his administration, and was centering attention especially on Egypt's endemic scourgge. He cordially welcomed the Commission and eagerly sought its co-operation, and gained for the effective plan for the improvement of health conditions in Egypt the active support of the Government - worked out Plan of one Province as the unit of organization and work - one large and 4 small travelling tent hospitals and groups of house hospitals in towns - patients examined and treated free.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The International Health Commission (cont'd.)

Egypt (cont'd.)
- Infection and sanitary surveys made -
- $60,000 spent annually
  - ⅓ by British Government
  - ⅔ by Rockefeller Foundation.
- In one year in one province, 12,000 persons examined:
  - 5,500 treated,
  - nearly 1,000 cured.
- War has retarded work, but will be extended from Province to Province and from village to village, as results justify.

Central America
- In addition to British Colonies work inaugurated also in Central American countries.

Altogether, outside U.S., up to end of 1914, mostly in British colonies.
- Nearly 38,000 persons examined:
  - 56.6 % found infected
  - 90 % treated (19,425 persons)
  - 25.6 % cured
- Relations of the numbers will have more than doubled since then.
- Co-operation and mutual confidence established between the Commission and the Governments and the physicians of the countries visited, and stimulation to self-help.

United States
- In U.S., the work of the Sanitary Commission in Southern States carried on.
- Demonstration in every state as to means of treating infected persons and preventing soil pollution.
- Half a million dollars a year appropriated by Foundation for this work.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Medical Work in China

The great need of China - the benefits of modern medicine, including public and personal hygiene and treatment of disease.

In January 1914, a Commission sent to China to study the needs re medical education and public health:
President Judson (Chicago)
Rodger Greene (U.S.Consul General, Hankow)
Francis W. Peabody, M.D. (Harvard)

Studied medical schools, hospitals, and dispensaries in China, in conference with missionaries, Government officials and other advisers.

The Report led to establishment of China Medical Board to carry out recommendations.

5 million dollars appropriated towards work of medical education, and establishment of uptodate hospitals, etc. in China.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Citizen

January 10 1916

D 3917

WORK OF THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King Tells of Great Scope of Institution and Its Activity in Relief.

"Through what has been effected by the Rockefeller Foundation, in the stamping out of disease and the improved sanitary conditions which have been established in certain British possessions, an element of added strength has been given the British Empire, in both numbers of men and their physical capacity, which is proving an asset to the Empire at this time."

In these highly commendatory terms, Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, told the members of the Ottawa Women's Canadian Club, in the Chateau Laurier on Saturday afternoon, of the great work of the Rockefeller Foundation which is doing much to promote the well being of mankind throughout the world. Hon. Mackenzie King was the speaker at the regular weekly meeting of the club. Mrs. J. A. Wilson, acting president, occupied the chair and there was an unusually large attendance.

The members listened to a thoroughly interesting description of the work that is being carried on by the Rockefeller Foundation and heard of the many needs of the millions of people living in foreign countries, ravaged by disease. The creditable part played by the Foundation in bringing relief to the people of war-ridden Belgium and its part in the relief of destruction and disease in Serbia were outlined by Mr. King.

Referring to his own work for the Rockefeller Foundation, Mr. King mentioned that he had been appointed to direct an investigation of industrial relations under the Foundation, with a view to assisting in the improvement of the condition of the working classes in the different countries of the world. He had accepted the appointment on the condition that it would not involve a change of citizenship or of residence in Canada. Mr. King spoke of his visits to Colorado as having been taken at his own instance, to study industrial conditions in that state, where, at the time of his appointment, there was a condition of industrial strife, which had cost the lives of some two hundred individuals.

WORK OF FOUNDATION.

In commencing his address, Mr. King explained that the Rockefeller Foundation is a corporation which was chartered by the legislature of New York state, May, 1913, "for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well being of mankind throughout the world." The foundation, he explained, is controlled by a board of trustees composed of distinguished educationalists, financiers, physicians, and lawyers. Such monies as come into the hands of the trustees are theirs for use as they think best. They are free to spend income and principal alike in such manner as will best promote the Foundation's object. Already there has passed as gifts into the absolute control of the trustees no less a sum than one hundred million dollars.

"The Foundation may best be described as a university of human need," said Mr. King, "existing, as the name university suggests, not for work in any one country, but for the sake of the world's need. The trustees have sought to shape its policies and lines of work, so as to follow only those that are likely to present the largest probability of permanent and far reaching usefulness. The advancement of public health through medical research and eduation, including demonstration of known methods of preventing disease has been one of the means adopted by the Foundation to meet this end.

HEALTH COMMISSION.

"The first work attempted was the eradication of the hook-worm disease," Mr. King said, "which, it is estimated, has affected two million people in the Southern States, and which extends in a belt around the world for 30 degrees on either side of the equator, over an area inhabited by more than one thousand million people. For this disease, which causes vast suffering and loss of life, and partially arrests the physical, moral and mental growth, a cure has been found, and the Foundation has sought to extend to the people of all countries affected by it knowledge of the means of eradicating the disease and promoting public sanitation which may prevent its spread or recurrence.

"In 1913, after conference with the British government and securing the hearty co-operation of the Hon. Lewis Harcourt, secretary of state for the colonies, and Lord Crewe, secretary of state for India, the Foundation began its work in Egypt, Ceylon, the Malay States, and India. In Egypt, the present minister of war, Lord Kitchener, then the British high commissioner in Egypt, welcomed its co-operation and effected an arrangeemnt whereby the British government and the Rockefeller Foundation have since co-operated on an equal financial basis to stamp out the disease in that country. Altogether, within British colonies and dependencies and the United States, more than half a million people had been treated and 25 per cent. of that number cured. The Foundation appropriates half a million dollars a year for the work. Through what has been effected by the Foundation in the stamping out of the disease and the improved sanitary conditions which have been established in the British possessions mentioned, an element of added strength had been given the British Empire, in both numbers of men and their physical capacity, which is proving an asset to the Empire at this time.

"Upon representations from Mr. John R. Mott, the head of the student volunteer movement of the Young Men's Christian Association, on behalf of leading foreign missionary boards on this continent as to the need of a program of co-operation and co-ordination and common headquarters for united foreign missionary interests, the Rockefeller Foundation gave $25,000 to provide and equip offices and to provide a comprehensive missionary research library, and has pledged half a million dollars to further missionary work upon which joint boards can agree, the amount to be spread over ten years.

BELGIAN RELIEF.

"The first organization to take food from America to Europe for the aid of the Belgians, after the war commenced, was the Rockefeller Foundation. In October it chartered the largest available neutral ship in New York harbor, and fitted out at its own expense a cargo of four thousand tons of food. At the same time, as a means of co-operating with the American Belgian Relief Committee, it secured a steamship pier and warehouses and agreed to charter further steamships and convey free of charge from New York to Belgium all supplies that the public might wish to contribute in the way of food and clothing to the Belgians. When Belgium's need became known, there was more difficulty in securing the transportation and distribution of supplies than the obtaining of them. The Foundation

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

with its available funds was able to guarantee to whoever made a contribution in money, food or clothing, that the contribution would reach the Belgians in full, without any deduction on account of transportation or distribution or the work of organization in effecting both.

"But the foundation did not confine its assistance to sending supplies of food. It appointed three of the ablest men it could find a commission to study the needs of relief of the suffering non-combatants in Europe. This War Relief Commission received from the government of England, the Dutch government and the governments of other countries in Europe co-operation and assistance.

RELIEF IN SERBIA.

"The War Relief Commission found conditions in many parts of Serbia equal to that of the Belgian refugees, but they found the situation most frightfully aggravated by the primitive condition of the country and the terrific inroads of epidemic diseases. Typhus fever, typhoid, and recurrent fever threatened at one time to exterminate the entire Serbian population, and to constitute a menace to all the peoples of Europe. When the War Relief Commission visited Serbia, one-seventh of all its physicians had died from typhus fever in their endeavor to bring relief to the people suffering. Realizing the international problems to which an endeavor to cope with such a situation might give rise, the Rockefeller Foundation, on receiving the report of its Commission, joined forces with the American Red Cross in establishing an American Sanitary Commission, which immediately got into touch with agencies of other countries operating in Serbia, and went to Europe by invitation of the Serbian government, which gave it full powers to institute vigorous measures to cope with the epidemic.

IN FRANCE AND ELSEWHERE.

"Besides helping in Belgium and Serbia, the Rockefeller Foundation at the opening of the war fitted out Dr. Alexis Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, who had joined the army medical forces of France, with a complete equipment for hospital use in France, of anti-meningitis serum and anti-dysentery serum, with a staff of physicians and nurses and necessary supplies to care for the wounded. It has also made handsome contributions from time to time to the American Red Cross, to enable that organization to send in larger numbers than it otherwise would have been able to do, physicians and nurses of the highest standing."

In conclusion, Mr. King also touched briefly on his second visit to Colorado in the fall of last year, and the industrial plan and agreement respecting employment, working and living conditions which had been made applicable to the mining camps of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, a concern of which Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., was a director. He had been afforded the opportunity of sharing in the conferences of the company and assisting in the drafting of this plan, which had subsequently been accepted by the miners on a secret ballot, by a majority vote of 85 per cent., and which was now helping to maintain industrial peace and improve industrial conditions in that state. The work in Colorado was only one instance in the assisting in the betterment of the industrial conditions in a practical way, which it was hoped association with the Foundation would afford an opportunity of carrying out. But the work was in no sense confined to any one country. Whilst he intended to remain in Canada in carrying on the direction of this part of the Foundation's work, Mr. King said he expected that it, like all the other activities of the Foundation, would be carried on in a practical way by persons scattered throughout the different countries of the world.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3919

13 Jan. 1916

Ottawa University Club

ADDRESS OF THANKS TO DR. KLOTZ

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(At University Club Dinner,
Thursday, January 13, 1916.)

THE CHAIRMAN: I think we should have a word from another distinguished guest, the Honourable Mr. King, who is with us this evening---a university man.

Mr. KING: I have not had the privilege, like the gentlemen who have preceded me, of being in Russia, and therefore I shall not have the opportunity of giving you an address, or even in part of that character speech. However, it is a pleasure to be here and have the opportunity of listening to the splendid address which we have heard from Dr. Klotz to-night. Although I have no knowledge of Russia first-hand, I have had the pleasure of knowing Dr. Klotz for a great many years, and in fact I think he is one of the very first men that I did know when I was a very little fellow, and I should like just to say,---what I think must be in the minds of all of us who are here to-night---that Dr. Klotz stands for the type of citizen in whom every community has reason to take great pride. (Hear, hear.) He has, as we know, been not only an ornament to the Civil Service, but he has been of very great service to the Dominion of Canada. He has taken the advantages which he has had here; he has made out of them world-wide advantages, not merely for the good of himself, but for the good of the world as well. And to-night's address is but one illustration of what he has done in so many directions. (Applause.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3921

15 July 1916

Kettleby, Ont.:
King Tp. Reform
Assoc.

THE OUTSTANDING PHASES OF
THE WAR

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3922

W. L. MACKENZIE KING
THE ROXBOROUGH
OTTAWA.

Phases of the War

1. Phase of German invasion and offensive
Belgium, France, Poland, Serbia, Low Countries
Silesia - Schleswig-Holstein, - Alsace-Lorraine

2. Phase of deadlock
Paris ~~surrounded~~ stopped, Calais, Ypres, Russian Isle, Verdun

3. Phase of Neutral uncertainty.
~~Official~~ U.S. Belgium, Liberia, Submarine warfare
Congress - Italy - Greece

4. Phase of undisputed Supremacy of Seas.
Southern Pacific Realty, German Base in China.
Australian visit to Emden -
Recent battle in North Sea.

5. Phase of ~~Breaking of deadlock~~ Effective Co-operation
Russian drive - Italian - Western Fronts
Offensives

6. Industrial Phase
Munitions. Kellaways Speech
The Submarine Deutschland
Canadian Nickel - State monopoly.

Net Result.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3923

Complete reversal of position of relative advantage of Allied and the Enemy in all determining factors.

1. Time on Side of allies + germany's preponderance of present handicap in maintaining relative strength

2. Numbers " " " " " - Effective fighting forces.
Germany an Empire at arms
Prussian " " at peace.

3. Organization " " " " - Austrian army partially demoralized

4. Equipment & Resources " " " - factories all over the world

5. Neutral Opinion " " " " - Not formed at outset - Germany responsible for its enmity.

6. Sea ~~on Land~~ " " " , when war started
Germany had her Navy
France smaller
Neutrality of Belgium &c. a Barrier

7. Frederick " " " "

add

Truth & Right " " " "

Her strength was as the strength of 10 because her heart was pure.

Kitchener's prophecy.

1. Period of war may be shorter than 3 years.

D 3924

Why allies must win completely.

1. That Germany and the world may be freed.
The course of armaments
a German democracy will not plot wars

2. Because Prussian ideal is a false one that greatness of nation is one lasting domination that war is a wholesome thing.
dream of world Empire

3. Because fight is for great Principles freedom vs domination
democracy vs autocracy

4. Because Germany provoked the war to Cease from this war to avoid war referred - conference - mediation - or arbitration

5. Injustices of war must be set right
Belgium. Servia. France -

6. Justify the Sacrifices made in Name of Freedom

7. Pave the way of International Tribunal & secure International Conferences & International Police instead of National armies.
Society on Basis of Conduct not Status.

8. That Nations may take up work of Social Reform Co-operate in so doing. ~~International~~ meet industrial Necessities.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

AGC 11 D 3925

Lessons of the war.

Ideas & Ideals greater than material powers

Spiritual force " " physical force

Industrialism " " militarism

the factory not the barracks

Need in Canada for National policy of Industrial Training and Technical Education.

The Real Meaning of Preparedness triumph of Spiritual forces over material

1. In National life honour before Power

2 In Industrial life
Human well-being - before Riches & dividends

3 In Home life
Consideration of weak - before exercise of Selfish strength

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

VOL C 4

D 3926

W. L. MACKENZIE KING
THE ROXBOROUGH
OTTAWA.

Phases of the War:

1. Phase of German intention and aggression
   Belgium, France, Poland, Serbia, Montenegro.
   Silesia - Schleswig-Holstein - Alsace & Lorraine.

2. Phase of Dead-lock
   Paris onrush stopped - Calais, Ypres,
   Russia's tide, Verdun.

3. Phase of Neutral uncertainty
   Official U.S. - Belgium, Lusitania, submarine
   Congress - Italy - Greece. menace

4. Phase of undisputed supremacy of seas
   Southern Pacific Beatty - German base in China
   Australian fleet - Emden
   Recent battle in North Sea

5. Phase of effective co-operation
   Russian drive - Italian - British & French
   offensives

6. Industrial phase
   Ministry of munitions. Kelleway's speech
   The submarine Deutschland
   Canadian Nickel - State monopoly

Net Result

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Complete reversal of position of relative advantage of Allies and the Enemy in all determining factors:

1.	Time on side of Allies -	Germany's preparedness at outset. Present handicap in maintaining relative strength
2.	Numbers " "	Effective fighting forces Germany an Empire in arms - Britain an Empire at peace
3.	Organization " "	Austria's army partially demoralized.
4.	Equipment and Resources	Factories all over the world
5.	Neutral Opinion	Not formed at outset Germany respected by enemies
6.	Sea	When war started, Germany had her navy - France smaller Violation of Belgium brought in Britain
7.	Industry
Add	Truth and Right	His strength was as the strength of ten because his heart was pure.

Kitchener's prophecy

Therefore period of war may be shorter than 3 years

Why Allies Must Win Completely

1. That Germany and the world may be freed
   - The curse of armaments
   - A German democracy will not plot wars
2. Because Prussian ideal is a false one
   - That greatness of nation is military domination
   - That war is a wholesome thing
   - Dream of world empire
3. Because fight is for great principles
   - Freedom vs. domination
   - Democracy vs. autocracy
4. Because Germany provoked the war
   - To learn from this war to avoid war
   - Refused conference - mediation - arbitration
5. Injustices of war must be set right
   - Belgium - Serbia - France -
6. Justify the sacrifices made in name of Freedom
7. Pave the way for International Tribunal
   - to settle international differences. International police instead of national armies. Society on basis of Contract not Status.
8. That Nations may take up work of Social Reform
   - and co-operate in so doing. Meet industrial necessities.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

SEC 1 D 3929

Lessons of the War

Ideas and Ideals greater than material power

Spiritual force " " physical force

Industrialism " " militarism
The Factory not the barracks

Need in Canada for national policy
of Industrial Training and Technical Education

The Real Meaning of Prussianism triumph of spiritual forces over material

1. In national life
Honour before power

2. In industrial life
Human well-being - before machines and dividends

3. In home life
Consideration of weak - before increase of selfish strength

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3930

Big Patriotic Demonstration

(Under auspices of King Township Reform Assoiciaton)

EVERYBODY
WELCOME

Amphitheatre Park, Kettleby

Saturday July 15th, 1916

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 893

Big Patriotic Demonstration

(Under auspices of King Township Reform Assoiciaton)

EVERYBODY
WELCOME

Amphitheatre Park, Kettleby

Saturday July 15th, 1916

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

FOOTBALL TOURNAMENT

Open to all. Entries to be made to J. J. Cull, Kettleby, before 9 p.m., July 14th. Entry fee $1.00.

PRIZES—SENIORS, $22.00; JUNIORS, $11.00.

Play to start at 11 a.m.

ATHLETIC CONTESTS, SPORTS AND AMUSEMENTS.

PRIZES FOR FOLLOWING, FOR MEN AND BOYS.

100 Yds. Dash, open to all, Razor, value	$ 1 50
100 Yds. for farmers' sons under 17, Hat, value	2 50
50 Yds. Fat Men's race	1 00
100 Yds. Partner's race	1 00
50 Yds. Wheelbarrow race	1 00
100 Yds. Smoke race, Whip, value	1 00
50 Yds. for Boys under 15	1 00
50 Yds. Boys under 10 years	50
50 Yds. Boys Boot race	50
50 Yds. Boys Sack race	50
Long Jump	1 00
High Jump	1 00
Hop, Step and Jump	1 00

Many prizes for races for boys and girls.

SPECIAL RACE

440 Yds. for Farmers' Sons of North York, actually farming, International Scuffler, given by John Nesbitt, Newmarket, value 10 00

RACES FOR LADIES AND GIRLS.

50 Yds. for Married Ladies, Set of Smoothing Irons.
50Yds. for Single Ladies, Cabinet of Stationery.
50 Yds. for Girls under 15 years, Cabinet of Perfumes.
50 Yds. for Girls under 10 years, Gold Locket.
Nail-Driving Contest, Cabinet of Stationery.

A RED CROSS PLOW.

donated by J. Fleury's Sons, Aurora will be disposed of by the Red Cross Society of Kettleby, for the Benefit of the 220th Batt. Field Comforts.

TUG OF WAR.

Military vs. Civilians, Box of Cigars.

Special prizes for Oldest Liberal, Oldest Conservative and Youngest Baby on the grounds.

PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES

at 3.30 p.m. by

W. J. Lowe, Benj. Petch, A. D. Bruce,
H. E. Jory, J. H. Widdifield, Fred Hogg,
J. M. Walton, Col. Brown, Capt. Davis,
Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, A. W. Roebuck, of Osgoode Hall,
Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, Oliver Hazzlewood, Esq., Toronto
T. Urquhart, Capt. A. T. Hunter, returned from the trenches, and others.

MUSIC BY THE 48TH HIGHLANDERS' BAND, TORONTO AND HIGHLANDER PIPERS

220TH BATT. BAND OF THE YORK RANGERS DRUM AND BUGLE BAND OF THE 220TH ARE ALSO EXPECTED.

GRAND CONCERT AT NIGHT
PROGRAMME BY THE CONCERT BAND OF THE 48TH HIGHLANDERS

A feast of Music, Song and Dance,—greatest and best variety of talent as given in the largest cities in America.

WONDERFUL COLORED PICTURES OF THE WAR AND THE EMPIRE WILL BE SHOWN AT NIGHT MUSIC ALSO BY OTHER BANDS

CONCERT TICKETS, 25 CENTS

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

SEC 1 D 3933

RAILWAY SERVICES.

THE T. & Y. R. R. AND THE S. & A. R. R.

Special cars will leave Bond Lake Junction for Kettleby at 1.30 & 2.30 p.m. These cars connect with the 12.30 and 1.30 p.m. cars from Toronto and the 1 and 2 p.m. cars from Newmarket. Regular cars leave Junction for Kettleby at 10.30 a.m., 1.30 p.m., 4.30 p.m. and 6.30 p.m.

A special car will leave Toronto terminal at 12.30 p.m. operating direct to Kettleby station taking the band and public.

In addition to regular service cars at 4 and 6 p.m., special cars will leave Kettleby at 10.20 p.m., connecting at the Junction with cars running North and South. Extra car will also leave Kettleby at 10.20 p.m. for Schomberg and intermediate points. (Usual fares.)

Regular cars leave Kettleby station; Jitney Service from Kettleby station to grounds.

A GREAT DAY FOR YOUNG AND OLD

Picnic Grounds, Hot and Cold Water free all day.
Come before noon—Refreshments of all kinds on sale.

PROCEEDS WILL BE DONATED TO THE 220TH BATTALION YORK RANGERS FOR FIELD COMFORTS.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

T. M. BLACKBURN, Chairman of Committee.
J. C. BRODIE, Secretary.
J. L. DOLSON, Finance Com.
JAMES ANNING, Grounds Com.
E. HUTCHINS, Sports Committee.

Banner Press, Aurora.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Speech delivered July 15th - 1916 D 3934 at Patriotic Demonstration. Kleinberg, North York.

The European War & Canadian Problems.

Mr. King in his address reviewed the outstanding phases of the war with a view to showing on what grounds the Allies were justified in basing their hope of ultimate certain victory. The first phase of the war was described as that of German intention and aggression, the outstanding features of which were the over-running of Belgium and Western France at the commencement of the war, and the subsequent devastation of Serbia, Russian Poland and Montenegro, all of which acts of aggression were in keeping with the early policies and methods of Prussia in her endeavor to dominate one principality after another and to bring about the organization of the German Empire on a militarist basis. They were in keeping with the methods of Frederick the Great in wresting Silisia from Austria, an act of most unjustifiable aggression; in keeping with Bismarck's iron and blood policy in the wresting of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark and Alsace and Lorraine from France. If examples in history meant anything, these illustrations were sufficient to show that Germany, unless driven back and defeated in this war, meant to retain as part of her empire the whole of Belgium, of Serbia, Montenegro, Poland, and the parts of Russia and France over which she had forced her armies at the commencement of the war.

The second phase was the phase of dead-lock, which had commenced on the western front with the arresting of the progress of the German army on its march towards Paris, and of which the blocking of the road to Calais by the Canadian troops in the Ypres salient was an outstanding incident; and which had commenced on the eastern front after the first advance of the Russians had been checked and the Russian

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

armies had sustained serious reverses and before the present advance had begun. The phase of dead-lock had been marked by trench warfare in which the opposing armies had maintained their relative positions more or less intact over the greater part of the period of conflict.

A third phase was that of neutral uncertainty. It had been marked by official inaction on the part of the Government of the United States at the time of the violation of Belgium, the destruction of Louvain, the Lusitania disaster, and the sub-marine menace which had cost the lives of many Americans as well as the subjects of other neutral nations. This phase had passed, so far as the United States was concerned, when the President issued what was in the nature of an ultimatum to Germany, obtained from Congress the endorsation of his action, and the two countries were brought to the verge of war. Italy's neutrality for a year or more after her separation from the central powers and before her entry into the war on the side of the Allies was part of the phase of neutral uncertainty, as was also the doubtful attitude of Greece until this had been placed beyond question by the resolute action of the Allied Powers.

A fourth phase of the war was that of British control of the seas. The supremacy of Britain on the seas had never been doubted, but it was not until after the defeat of the German squadron in the southern Pacific, the destruction of the German naval base in the north Pacific by the Japanese, the capture of the Emden by the Australian Naval Service fleet, that fear of sporadic conflicts at sea had been forever swept away and the oceans of the world rendered safe for the transportation of men and munitions to the exclusive aid of the Allies.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The recent naval battle in the North Sea was a part also of the phase of undisputed sea supremacy. While the losses had been great to both nations, to Germany they had been greater absolutely and vastly greater relatively.

A fifth phase, which might be described as the breaking of the dead-lock, was the phase we are witnessing at present. It began early in the year, with the wonderful offensive of the Russians, which had resulted in a demoralization of the Austrian armies, in an advance from the south by the Italian forces, and in the magnificent offensive by the French and British on the western front, and which as an exhibition of military force and splendid organization has been a surprise to the entire world.

A last phase of the war, which was fast coming to be recognized as the most important phase from the point of view of ultimate victory, was what might be termed the industrial phase. It had always been present, but its significance became apparent when a year or two ago the British Government, awakening to the need of larger supplies of arms and ammunition, created a separate department known as the Munitions Branch, and when one factory after the other passed under Government control. When the complete story of the war is told it will come to be seen that this phase has meant vast orders for munitions and military equipment being placed by the Allied Powers in all the available manufacturing countries of the world; that it more than anything else had been responsible for the great industrial prosperity of the United States at the present time; that it was the secret of the co-operation between Japan and Russia which was responsible for the Russian drive; That it lay behind the successful offensive of France and Britain at the present time, is apparent to all the world.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In speaking of this industrial phase, Mr. King pointed out that the arrival of the sub-marine "Deutschland" in an American harbor was a feature in the industrial phase of the war and one to which Canadians had reason to give particular thought. The press had made no secret of the circumstance that the "Deutschland" and other ships like her, if they could effect their end, intended to take back to Germany for the use of the German army supplies of rubber and nickel, both of which articles were greatly needed. It was known to all the world that the one valuable supply of nickèè was a part of Canada's resources, and the only nickel that could go to Germany from the United States at the present time was nickel that had been mined under the British flag by Canadian labor. The country had been apprised of this at the commencement of the war. The step which should have been taken then was the step which the British Government took when it brought the munition factories of England under its own control. It was not too late to take this step in Canada even now. With nickel as valuable a commodity as it is, and as necessary for war purposes as it is, Mr. King thought the Government of Canada might well consider making a state monopoly out of this industry, thereby conserving to the British Empire and its Allies, not for the present only but for all time to come, the first claim on this commodity, and conserving to the Canadian people as a means of offsetting some of the vast taxation of the war a resource which may well prove one of the greatest possible sources of revenue the country has.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Having reviewed the various phases of the war, Mr. King asked what had been their net result. In a word, it was that in every material consideration it had meant a change of relative advantage in the position of the fighting nations, at the present time from what they were at the commencement of the war. It was this change in relative positions which Lord Kitchener had seen was necessary before the war could end, and which made him assert at its commencement that it would be a war of three years' duration. It was known now that before his death Lord Kitchener had expressed the view that the change had come even more quickly than he had expected; and allowing for the operation of the law of acceleration in affairs of war as in all else to which it applies, there were at least reasonable grounds for believing that the war might end with complete success to the Allies before the expiration of three years.

Noting the change in the relative positions as respects practically all the essential features, the speaker pointed out that at present Time was on the side of the Allies. Up to and including the first few weeks of the war, time had all been on the side of the Germans. They had been secretly preparing for a mighty offensive. They had hoped to over-ride Belgium and crush France by capturing Paris before the world could become awake to the situation which had developed. Who can say, had they succeeded in this objective, whether time would not have proven altogether on the side of Germany! There had been no time for France or the allied nations in which to arrest the onslaught or retrieve what had been so suddenly lost; but from the moment the German force had been checked, Germany had continued to get farther and farther away from her position of advantage, which was one of relative advantage, the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

preparedness due to the war being of her own making; and the Allies have been getting nearer and nearer their position of advantage, which is relative advantage in men, munitions and fighting equipment and the means of sustaining and controlling these.

Numbers for some time were on the side of the enemy. When the war commenced the German Empire was an empire in arms. The British Empire was an empire at peace. France was a stunned nation; and Russia was a country of vast population but not one of properly equipped soldiers. Numbers, in war, are of concern only so far as they represent effective fighting strength. To-day a census would show wherein the fighting strength of the allied powers outnumber the enemy;and where his total force has been in the field almost from the start, there are within the nations belonging to the allied forces countless numbers of men who are still ready and who may be drawn upon for service as the war continues.

Organization was at the outset all on the side of the enemy. The allied powers had not even had the opportunity of a preliminary conference. To-day the enemy's organization might be strong in Germany, but its army had become demoralized in Austria, and a weakening in one part meant a weakening in the whole. Meanwhile the allied powers had perfected their scheme of organization, and the world had witnessed this year the central powers of Europe surrounded by one vast circle of flame which was closing in upon them from every side and which threatens to consume their entire armies unless ere very long their inevitable defeat is admitted.

Resources, equipment and munitions were all on the side of the enemy at the commencement of the war. He had been manufacturing and storing vast quantities of arms and munitions, had been hoarding vast

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

quantities of wealth. The allied nations had done little or nothing of this. Since the war commenced, however, Germany's means of supplementing her resources by land and sea had been cut off; whilst the Allies had gained the support of the remaining nations of the earth in augmenting their tremendous stores.

Neutral opinion is unquestionably on the side of the Allies. When the war commenced, the world had not had time to make up its mind as to the nature of it. Germany had held a position of great respect, even in the opinion of the countries who to-day are fighting her. To-day all that respect is gone, not merely among her enemies, but among neutral peoples. They have been amazed at her arrogance, and horrified at her atrocities. They have been shocked at her indifference to public right and public morality. They have come to understand what Prussianism means and the nature of the conflict. This weight of neutral opinion, though it cannot be analyzed, is a force of the first magnitude.

The sea is on the side of the Allies. At the commencement of the war, Germany had a vast navy, was the second naval power in the world. Her commerce upon the high seas was not only her own greatest pride, but the envy of rival nations. To-day her commerce is utterly destroyed and her navy in large measure shattered.

Finally, industry is on the side of the Allies, and industry will ~~give~~ have the last word ~~to~~ in the war. For years before it commenced Germany had been developing her industries in a manner which would make them of service to her in time of war. The Krupp Works, which was an exclusively military establishment, surpassed in size and output that of any other in the world. Since the war has commenced, the industries of the world outside of Germany have undergone a vast trans-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

formation. One industrial establishment after another has been converted into a munition plant or an arsenal. Women by the hundreds of thousands have engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war. There is at the moment practically no limit to what, in the way of necessary war equipment, the industries of the allied powers may not hope to be able to supply. In the numbers of available workers, in necessary material, Germany's position is vastly inferior to what it was, and her power to improve it has been destroyed.

With these outstanding considerations - not theories, but facts - can there be any alternative other than that of ultimate victory for the Allies?

But mere victory of itself will not end this war. It must be complete victory, complete, not in the sense of crushing Germany, destroying her nationally and exterminating her population, but complete in the sense that the circumstances which have made such a war of aggression possible can never arise again and that the cause for which the allied forces have fought, which is a wider measure of freedom for mankind, can be absolutely assured. There are many reasons why the war must be completely won by the Allies, but the following are probably sufficient.

It must be won, in the first place, that Germany, along with the rest of the world, may be freed, freed from Prussianism, which means the domination by one nation over others through military force. The family of nations must cease to have in its midst a member which compels its own people to adopt a militarist ideal and methods, and which compels other nations for this reason to do the same. As Sir Edward Grey has

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

said, there can be no true freedom in Europe or anywhere in the world so long as there is the continual rattle of the sword in the scabbard and the threat of military force usurps the place of peaceful negotiation.

The war must be completely won, because the Prussian ideal is a false one. The idea that military force is the essential of national greatness would become the necessarily accepted view of the world if the German armies should even partially triumph. The war must be so completely won that an end can be put to competitive arming between countries and the foundations of the future peace of the world laid on the basis of contract and not on that of might.

In the third place, the war must be completely won because Germany provoked and sought it; because she refused conferences, mediation of her own selection, and arbitration at the Hague to adjust the alleged differences. Were Germany even partially to succeed, it would mean that these methods of adjusting relations between nations would become less, rather than more, generally accepted in the future. This war must teach all nations that the nation that seeks to live by the sword shall perish by the sword as the common enemy of mankind.

In the fourth place, the war must be completely won in order that the injustice which it has wrought may so far as possible be set right; that Belgium, France, Serbia, Montenegro, and Poland may all be restored in their rightful positions.

The war must be completely won in order to pave the way for the adjustment of all future differences between nations by redress through some international tribunal, the findings of which will be backed by a force to which all the great world powers will be contributors.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The war must be completely won to justify the sacrifices of life and of treasure which have already been made in the cause of freedom. To those who have given their lives that the cause of the Allies may triumph it is owing that this triumph shall be complete.

Finally,the war must be completely won in order that the nations of the world may be able to take up in earnest within their own boundaries and in hearty co-operation with each other the solution of the human problemswhich modern industrial development has occasioned, and that the efforts of government may be devoted towards furthering the well-being of mankind.This will be impossible were taxation required to maintain standing armies and to go on constructing huge and expensive navies. The time has come when the money of the people should be devoted towards securing for the people pensions for the aged, insurance against sickness, and invalidity,insurance against accident, insurance against unemployment, and the payment of maternity and death benefits: all of which important social requirements must become more and more a matter of state legislation, state control, and state administration if great masses of the people are not to suffer through no fault of their own, through the changing conditions which industry and world competition effect. The money of the people must be used for the development of industrial training and technical education, in agriculture, in manufacturing, for vocational training in all directions, and the promotion of domestic science: all of which work, like public school education, must become more and more a matter of state regulation, state control and state administration, if our industries and our trade and commerce are to hold their own in world competition and our industrial population to have the opportunities to which, as those to whom the nation must look as the developers of its wealth, they have the right to enjoy.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

While the war has taught many lessons, it has above all taught that ideas and ideals are greater than material wealth; that spiritual power is greater than physical force; and that industrialism is greater than militarism. The outstanding feature of this war is the industrial, not the military. Before its close, the world will have witnessed that the factories, and not the barracks, will have the last word. As Lloyd George has rightly said, it has become primarily a war of equipment. The success of the Russian drive, while due to the bravery of the Russian soldier, has been due even more to the factories of Britain and of her ally Japan. What has saved Verdun, and what has made possible the success of the recent offensive on the French and British front, has been the fortitude and bravery of the French and British soldiers; but it has also been the workshops and factories of France and Britain and America. Ever since the war began, French and Russian and British soldiers have shown a valor unsurpassed; but while it spelt disaster where offensives were attempted at the outset, it spells success where they are attempted to-day. And the explanation is not, in the greater wisdom of the head-quarters staff, nor in the perfection of military organization, though these doubtless have contributed much, but in the organization of industry and the output of the workers.

And when the war is over, it is to the workers in the fields, on the farms, in the mines, and in the factories, that the nations will have to look for the development of the wealth which is to make possible the caring for the wounded and the disabled, The reduction of the enormous burden of debt the war has occasioned and the furtherance of all policies which may be aimed at the avoidance of industrial depression, the return

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of prosperity and the promotion of measures of social betterment, doubly necessary where homes have lost their breadwinners, and industry and commerce and all that pertains to normal national life has sustained dislocation, serious impairment and change.

With this great truth made apparent at such great cost, should not this country, the governments of the several provinces and the government of the Dominion, be paralleling their efforts at recruiting by efforts at increasing the industrial efficiency of the Dominion and its workers by every resource that the wisdom of the several administrations can devise. What Canada will need tomorrow as much as the allied armies need to-day, is industrial training and technical education carried out by the several provinces, if you will, but fostered in accordance with a wisely devised national plan which will have regard for the country's manufacturing, ^ agricultural, mining, fishing, lumbering, and other resources, and industries as a whole, and which will also have regard for the wise distribution of the country's population once the vast army we have sent across the seas has to be absorbed in the peaceful pursuits of our national life, and with it that other army of homeless and bereft individuals who, when the war is ended, may leave the broken hearths and the devastated homes of Britain and Europe to seek new heart and hope under the British flag in the new world.

The problems of government which will face Canada and the British Empire when the war is over will surpass in magnitude any that have been known in their history, and theydemand even now all the thought and attention that every citizen can bestow. In time they will surpass the problems of the war itself. There will not be to sustain their solution

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the self-evident incentive of a great cause, the appeal that war makes to the heroic in human nature, nor the co-operation of vast effort among all classes actuated by one mighty objective and stirred by great emotion and feelings of patriotism, of affection, and of hate. There will be the dawn of the morrow with its vast waste of human life, its vast expenditure of blood and treasure, the vast destruction, and the weary aching burden of it all. The men and the women who are not in the thick of the fight and who are not to-day giving thought to these mighty problems and ready to give of their best in furthering their solution are unworthy of citizenship in this Dominion. The only justification that a true man can give himself for not crossing the seas in this great struggle for the greater freedom of the human race is that the circumstances of his lot have made this impossible for him without his imposing burdens on others greater than those he can help to relieve, or that his service to his fellowmen in other ways is likely to be greater by pursuing the vocation for which his talents combined with his opportunities peculiarly fit him. But service in some form or other is the only basis of true citizenship within the Dominion to-day, as indeed it should be at all times.

Whoever is fighting materialism and force in any form is fighting the battle of the Allies. Whoever is not so fighting is a Prussian at heart, and helping the Prussian cause. Whoever is allowing the brute to rule ~~in~~ the man is a Prussian at heart. Whoever is overcoming, with love and tenderness, thoughts of home and wife and children, thoughts of God and flowers and birds, is living in the things of the spirit and helping the cause of the Allies. If in our national, our industrial, our home life,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

we allow the spiritual forces to triumph over the material, if in the nation we have learned to put honor before power, if in industry we have learned to put consideration for human well-being before regard for dividends and machines, if in our home life we have learned to put a consideration of the weak before an increase of our own strength, then we may know that Prussianism has indeed been defeated, and that this great crisis in the history of mankind,and all its suffering, will not have been in vain.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PATRIOTISM SUPREME AT KETTLEBY PICNI

Oldest Liberal and Tory Sit Side by Side on Platform

AWAY WITH POLITICS

Many Addresses, Including That of Hon. Mackenzie King, Sound Note of Undivided Service to Canada and Empire—Ladies Raise $150.

(Special Correspondence of The Globe.)

Aurora, July 10.—"Lustre and fame have been spread over our Dominion by the heroism of the Canadian troops who have given up and are giving up their lives on the battlefields of Europe for the cause of civil, righteous and religious freedom and for the suppression of militarism," declared Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King to-day in a stirring speech at the second patriotic celebration held under the auspices of the King Township Reform Association at Amphitheatre Park, Kettleby. Over 5,000 people were in attendance. The celebration, in which Liberals and Conservatives abandoned politics and mingled as one big unit, was undoubtedly the largest of its kind ever held in the banner township of North York. Patriotism reigned supreme.

Peace Essential to Civilization.

"It is peace that is the basis of civilization; it is peace that makes progress throughout an Empire," said Mr. King. "Europe to-day is repeating a tragedy of one hundred years ago, while Canada and the United States, neighboring nations, are celebrating a hundred years of peace. The great struggle in Europe is for religious and civil freedom, such as dominates the principles of Great Britain and the allied forces engaged in suppressing the intolerable militarism of Germany."

Those Who Talk Politics.

"There are men in every country who are inclined to be tyrannical if they succeed in obtaining power," continued Mr. King. "There are men who are selfishly inclined. If we in Canada allow men to become affiliated with our Government and obtain control of affairs to such an extent as not to yield to authority in order to better their own selfish ends, we are helping to put on top those working for destruction and blood. I am not talking in a sense of political sympathy, but in its truest sense. The men who have talked party politics during this war are not as worthy of respect as the sons of Canada who have given up their lives.

A Welcome Trinity of Laws.

"Let the people, irrespective of political leanings," concluded Mr. King, "make sacrifices and fervently advocate the law of health, peace and privilege, a trinity of laws which at the conclusion of this great catastrophe will be welcomed the world over. To be worthy as Canadians of our brothers who have given their lives for the right is the supreme call which our country invites us to do with all force possible."

Eliminate Politics.

Alderman J. G. Ramsden of Toronto, in a short speech, emphasized the importance of politics being eliminated during the present crisis. Party strife should be relegated to where it belongs, while the people should not hesitate to contribute their mite to various patriotic funds, which are helping our soldiers, whose chief ambition lies in crushing the great military machine of Europe. In conclusion, Ald. Ramsden recited a patriotic poem, at the close of which the audience rose and sang the "Maple Leaf Forever."

Will Command Respect of All Nations.

Mr. Louis P. Heyd declared that the great war overshadows all political differences, and that when the people considered how their worthy sons are upholding the name of Canada upon the battlefields it was in keeping with the beautiful sentiment expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "We are joined together, not by chains of iron, not by legislative power, but by bonds of love." (Cheers.)

"We must bear our part of the battles as worthy citizens," said Mr. Heyd, in closing. "We must bear the burdens cast upon us, and when the fight is over Canada will be one of the shining lights, commanding the respect of all nations."

Other Addresses.

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. J. M. Walton of Aurora, who presided over the gathering; Mr. J. H. Widdifield of Uxbridge, Mr. Fred Hogg, Mr. Arthur Roebuck and Mr. Alexander D. Bruce of Gormley. The latter spoke in the interests of the Speakers' Patriotic League. Letters of regret at their inability to be present were read from Sir Allen Aylesworth, Sir William Mulock and several other Liberals.

Honors for the Aged.

Seated on the platform were Mr. Thomas Lloyd, aged eighty-eight, the oldest living Liberal in North York; Mr. Thomas Mooreby, aged eighty-seven, the oldest living Conservative in the riding, and Mrs. Moses W. Bogart, aged eighty-three, of Newmarket, the oldest lady Liberal in the constituency. Each were made the recipients of handsome presents.

Results of the Ladies' Work.

Thirteen young ladies of the district, neatly attired as Red Cross nurses, were given a grand ovation when they appeared on the platform. They were captained by the Misses Watson and Walton, who announced that the total receipts from the sale of Union Jacks amounted to $150, which will be given to the Red Cross Fund. Mr. James Crockard of Aurora purchased the Red Cross plow, which was auctioned by Mr. Fred Smith, the sale price being $30.

The musical part of the day's outing was contributed by Messrs. Will J. White and Jules Brazil of Toronto, the Misses Ruth Hamilton and Ida Blackburne of Kettleby, the Aurora Citizens' Band and two pipers from the 48th Highlanders' pipe band.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Newmarket Era July 21 1916.

Kettleby Picnic a Great Success

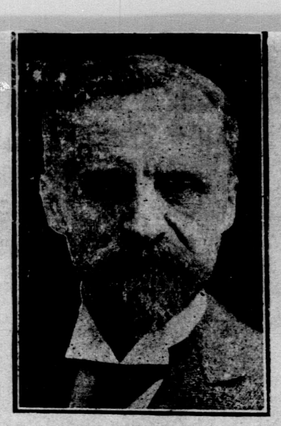
Fine Patriotic Addresses.

The third annual patriotic demonstration of the King Township Reform Association, held in the Amphitheatre Park, Kettleby, on Saturday, brought together a large and representative gathering of Liberals and their families from different parts of York County, including Toronto. The event, which was a huge success, was of a non-political character. Besides several military officers several prominent Conservatives of the riding united with their political opponents in helping to swell the proceeds, which were turned over to the 220th Battalion (York Rangers) for recruiting purposes and field comforts. While the attendance was not as large as last year, owing to the large number of members who have joined the colors and the fact that many farmers were engaged in harvesting the bounteous hay crop, the committee was agreeably surprised at the interest displayed by nearly 4000 who braved the oppressive heat for the purpose of keeping up the high standard of patriotism previously established by the banner township of North York.

One of the many pleasing features of the celebration, which created much interest was the presence on the platform of the oldest Liberal and Conservative in the township. In this connection, Mr. George Teasdale, 85 years, Aurora, came out ahead, being one year the senior of Mr. Daniel O'Brien, 84 years, of Laskay, the oldest Liberal. The latter secured the prize over Mr. John Wilkie, another well-known Liberal, by three months. Mr. Teasdale was presented with a silk umbrella, and Mr. O'Brien with a handsome portrait of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The yonugest child at the picnic was Amos Lapp, three weeks old, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Lapp of Kettleby. The honors in the latter contest were also captured by the Conservatives. Mrs. Lapp received a beautiful landscape picture. The prize being presented by Rev. J. H. Colcough, the Anglican rector of Lloydstown. The judges were Messrs. Luke Gibbons, King City; Milton Terry, Kettleby; and John Cook, Kettleby.

Added interest was shown when edLiberals seventy years and over, and the oldest Conservative, the combined ages of whom totalled 943 years, posed for a group photograph. They were Thomas Davis, 73 King; Daniel O'Brien 84, Laskay; John Traynor 76, King City, John Wilkie 83, Nobleton; Archibald McCallum, 82 Strange; James Wolven 78, East Gwillimbury; Malcolm Mac McCallum, 76, King City; Joseph Palmer, 72, Tottenham; James E. Farr 71, Sharon, Richard Hamilton 71, Newmarket; Aaron Clarke, 79, Aurora and George Teasdale, 85 (Conservative), Aurora. The veterans were loudly cheered as they steppd from the platform.

Three football matches were included in the sports program, and resulted as follows:—Newmarket 6, Kettleby 2, King City 2, Newmarket0, King City 2, Kettleby 0.



Patriotic addresses were delivered by Mr. J. M. Walton, Mr. Oliver Hezzlewood, President of Toronto Citizen's League, Mr. J. H. Widdifield of Uxbridge, Rev. Colcough of Lloydtown, Lt.-Col. Brown of the 220th Bat., Mr. Thos. Urquhart of Aurora, ex-Mayor of Toronto, Hon. Mackenzie King of Ottawa, Mr. Fred Hogg from South Ontario. Mr. Howard Cane of Newmarket discharged the duties of chairman in a very satisfactory manner.

The speeches were listened to with great interest especially that of Hon. Mackenzie King.

Mr. King in his address reviewed the the outstanding phases of the war with a view to showing on what grounds the Allies were justified in basing their hope of ultimate certain victory. The first phase of the war was described as that of German intention and aggression, the outstanding features of which were the over-running of Belgium and Western France at the commencement of war, and the subsequent devastation of Serbia, Russian Poland and Montenegro, all of which acts of aggression were in keeping with the yearly policies and methods of Prussia in her endeavor to dominate one principally after another and to bring about the organization of the German Empire on a militarist basis. They were in keeping with the methods of Frederick the Great in wresting Silisia from Austria, an act of most unjustifiable aggression; in keeping with Bismark's iron and blood policy in the wresting of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark and Alsace and Lorraine from France. If examples in history meant anything, these illustrations were sufficient to show that Germany, unless driven back and defeated in this war, meant to retain as part of her empire the whole of Belgium, of Serbia, Montenegro, Poland, and the parts of Russia and France over which she had fored her armies at the commencement of the war.

The second phase was the phase of dead-lock, which had commenced on the western front with the arresting of the progress of the German army on its march towards Paris, and of which the blocking of the road to Calais by the Canadian troops in the Ypres salient was an outstanding incident; and which has commenced on the eastern front after the first advance of the Russians had been checked and the Russian armies had sustained serious reverses and before the recent advance had begun. The phase of dead-lock had been marked by trench warfare in which the opposing armies had maintained their relative positions -more or less intact over the greater part of the period of conflict.

A third phase was that of neutral uncertainty. It had been marked by official inaction on the part of the Government of the United States at the time of the violation of Belgium, the destruction of Louvain, the Lusitania disaster and the submarine menace which had cost the lives of many Americans as well as the subjects of other neutral nations. This phase had passed, so far as the United States was concerned, when the President issued what was in the nature of an ultimatum to Germany, obtained from Congress the endorsation of his action, and the two countries were brought to the verge of war. Italy's neutrality for a year or more after her separation from the central powers and before her entry into the war on the side of the Allies was part of the phase of neutral uncertainty, as was also the doubtful attitude of Greece until this had been placed beyond question by the resolute action of the Allied powers.

J. M. WALTON, ESQ.
Who Organized the Picnic.

A fourth phase of the war was that of British control of the seas. The supremacy of Britain on the seas had never been doubted, but it was not until after the defeat of the German squadron of the Southern Pacific, the destruction of the German naval base in the north Pacific by the Japanese, the capture of the Emden by the Australian Naval Service fleet, that fear of sporadic conflicts at sea had been forever swept away and the oceans of the world rendered safe for the transportation of men and munitions to the exclusive aid of the Allies. The recent naval battle in the North Sea was a part also of the phase of undisputed sea supremacy. While the losses had been great to both nations, to Germany they had been greater absolutely and vastly greater relatively.

A fifth phase, which might be described as the phase of effective co-operation, was the phase we are witnessing at present. It began early in the year, with the wonderful offensive of the Russians, which had resulted in a demoralization of the Austrian armies, in an advance from the south by the Italian forces, and in the magnificent offensive by the French and British on the western front, and which as an exhibition of military force and splendid organization has been a surprise to the entire world.

A last phase of the war, which was fast coming to be recognized as the most important phase from the point of view of ultimate victory, was what might be termed the industrial phase. It had always been present, but its significance became apparent when a year or two ago the British Government, awakening to the need of larger supplies of arms and ammunition, created a separate department known as the Munitions Branch, and when one factory after the other passed under Government control. When the complete story of the war is told it will come to be seen that this phase has meant vast orders for munitions and military equipment being placed by the Allied Powers in all the available manufacturing countries of the world; that it more than anything else had been responsible for the great industrial prosperity of the United States at the present time; that it was the secret of the co-operation between Japan and Russia which was responsible for the Russian drive. That it lay behind the successful offensive of France and Britain at the present time, is apparent to all the world.

In speaking of this industrial phase, Mr. King pointed out that the arrival of the submarine "Deutschland" in an American harbor was a feature in the industrial phase of the war and one to which Canadians had reason to give particular thought. The press had made no secret of the circumstances that the "Deutschland" and other ships like her, if they could effect their end, intended to take back to Germany for the use of the German army supplies of rubber and nickel, both of which articles were greatly needed. It was known to all the world that the one valuable supply of nickel was a part of Canada's resources, and the only nickel that could go to Germany from the United States at the present time was nickel that had been mined under the British flag by Canadian labor. The country has been apprised of this at commencement of the war. The step which should have been taken then was the step that the British Government took when it brought the munition factories of England under its own control. It was not too late to take this step in Canada even now. With nickel as valuable a commodity as it is, and as necessary for war purposes as it is, Mr. King thought the Government of Canada might well consider making a state monopoly out of this industry, thereby conserving to the British Empire and its Allies, not for the present only, but for all time to come the first claim on this commodity, and conserving to the Canadian people as a means of offsetting some of the vast taxation of the war a resource which may well prove one of the greatest possible sources of revenue the country has.

Having reviewed the various phases of the war, Mr. King asked what had been their net result. In a word, it was that in every material consideration it had meant a change of relative advantage to the position of the fighting nations, at the present time from what they were at the commencement of the war. It was this change in relative positions which Lord Kitchener had seen was necessary before the war could end, and which made him assert at its commencement that it would be a war of three years' duration. It was known now that before his death Lord Kitchener had expressed the view that the change had come even more quickly than he had expected; and allowing for the operation of the law of acceleration in affairs of war as in all else to which it applies, there were at least reasonable grounds for believing that the war might end with complete success to the Allies before the expiration of three years.

Noting the change in the relative positions as respects practically all pointed out that at present Time was on the side of the Allies. Up to and including the first few weeks of the war, time had all been on the side of the Germans. They had been secretly preparing for a mighty offensive. They had hoped to over-ride Belgium and crush France by capturing Paris before the world could become awake to the situation which had developed. Who can say, had they succeeded in this objective, whether time would not have proven altogether on the side of Germany. There had been no time for France or the allied nations in which to arrest the onslaught or retrieve what had been so suddenly lost; but from the moment the German force had been checked, Germany had continued to get farther and farther away from her position of advantage, which was one of relative advantage, the preparedness due to the war being of her own making; and the Allies have been getting nearer and nearer their position of advantage, which is relative advantage in men, munitions and fighting equipment and the means of sustaining and controlling these.

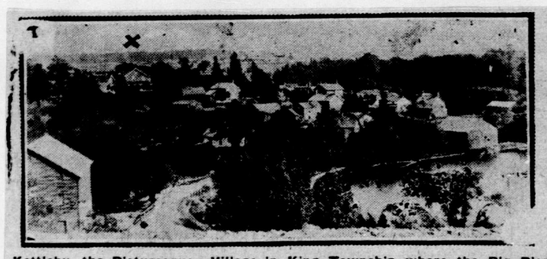
Numbers for some time were on the side of the enemy. When the war commenced the German Empire was an Empire in arms. The British Empire was an Empire at peace. France was a stunned nation; and Russia was a country, a vast population, but not one of properly equipped soldiers. Numbers, in war, are of concern only so far as they represent effective fighting strength. To-day, a census would show wherein the fighting strength of the allied powers outnumber the enemy and where his total force has been in the field almost from the start, there are within the nations belonging to the allied forces countless numbers of men who are still ready and who may be drawn upon for service as the war continues.

Organization was at the outset all on the side of the enemy. The allied powers had not even had the opportunity of a preliminary conference. To-day the enemy's organizations might be strong in Germany, but its army had become demoralized in Austria, and a weakening in one part meant a weaking in the whole. Meanwhile the allied powers had perfected their scheme of organization, and the world had witnessed this year the central powers of Europe surrounded by one vast circle of flame which was closing in upon them from every side and which threatens to consume their entire armies unless ere very long their inevitable defeat is admitted.

Resources, equipment and munitions were all on the side of the enemy at the commencement of the war. He had been manufacturing and storing vast quantities of arms and munitions, had been hoarding vast quantities of wealth. The allied nations had done little or nothing of this. Since the war commenced, however, Germany's means of supplementing her resources by land and sea had been cut off; whilst the Allies had gained the support of the remaining nations of the earth in augmenting their tremendous stores.

Neutral opinion is unquestionably on the side of the Allies. When the war commenced, the world had not had time to make up its mind as to the nature of it. Germany had held a position of great respect, even in the opinion of the countries who to-day are fighting her. To-day all that respect is gone, not merely among her enemies, but among neutral people. They have been amazed at her arrogance, and horified at her atrocities. They have been shocked at her indifference to public right and public morality. They have come to understand what Prussianism means and the nature of the conflict. This weight of neutral opinion, though it cannot be analyzed, is a force of the first magnitude.

The sea is on the side of the Allies. At the commencement of the war, Germany had a vast navy, was the second naval power in the world. Her commerce on the high seas was not only her own greatest pride, but the envy of rival nations. To-day her commerce is utterly destroyed and her navy in large measures shattered.



Finally, industry is on the side of the Allies, and industry will have the last word in the war. For years before it commenced Germany had been developing her industries in a manner which would make them of service to her in time of war. The Krupp Works, which was an exclusively military establishment, surpassed in size and output that of any other in the world. Since the war has commenced, the industries of the world outside of Germany have undergone a vast transformation. One industrial establishment after another has been converted into a munition plant or an arsenal. Women by the hundreds of thousands have engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war. There is at this moment practically no limit to what, in the way of necessary war equipment, the industries of the allied powers may not hope to be able to supply. In numbers of available workers, indeed, is vastly inferior to what it was, and her power to improve it has been destroyed.

With these outstanding considerations—not theories, but facts—can there be any alternative other than that of ultimate victory for the Allies?

(Continued on Page 3.)

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

Kettleby, the Picturesque Village in King Township where the Big Picnic was held.

(Continued from Page 2.)

But mere victory of itself will not end this war. It must be complete victory, complete, not in the sense of crushing Germany, destroying her nationally and exterminating her population, but complete in the sense that the circumstances which have made such a war of aggression possible can never arise again and that the cause for which the allied forces have fought, which is a wider measure of freedom for mankind, can be absolutely assured. There are many reasons why the war must be completely won by the Allies, but the following are probably sufficient.

It must be won, in the first place, that Germany, along with the rest of the world, may be freed, freed from Prussianism, which means the domination by one nation over others through military force. The family of nations must cease to have in its midst a member which compels its own people to adopt a militarist ideal and methods, and which compels other nations for this reason to do the same. As Sir Edward Gray has said, there can be no true freedom in Europe or anywhere in the world so long as there is the continual rattle of the sword in the scabbard and the threat of military force usurps the place of peaceful negotiation.

The war must be completely won, because the Prussian ideal is a false one. The idea that military force is the essential of national greatness would become the necessarily accepted view of the world if the German armies should even partially triumph. The war must be so completely won that an end can be put to competitive arming between countries and the foundations of the future peace of the world laid on the basis of contract and not on that of might.

In the third place, the war must be completely won because Germany provoked and sought it ; because she refused conferences, meditation of her own selection, and arbitration at the Hague to adjust the alleged differences. Were Germany even partially to succeed, it would mean that these methods of adjusting relations between than more, generally accepted in the future. This war must teach all nations that the nation that seeks to live by the sword shall perish by the sword as the common enemy of mankind.

In the fourth place, the war must be completely won in order that the injustice which it has wrought may so far as possible be set right ; that Belgium, France, Serbia, Montenegro, and Poland may all be restored to their rightful positions.

The war must be completely won in order to pave the way for the adjustment of all future differences between nations by redress through some international tribunal, the findings of which will be backed by a force to which all the great world powers will be contributors.

The war must be completely won to justify the sacrifices of life and of treasure which have already been made in the cause of freedom. To those who have given their lives that the cause of the Allies may triumph it is owing that this triumph shall be complete.

Finally, the war must be completely won in order that the nations of the world may be able to take up in earnest within their own boundaries and in hearty co-operation with each other the solution of hte human problems which modern industrial development has ocasioned, and that the efforts of Government may be devoted towards furthering the well-being of mankind. This will be impossible were taxation required to maintain standing armies and to go on constructing huge and expensive navies.

The money of the people must be used amongst other things for the development of industrial training and technical education, in agriculture, in manufacturing, for vocational training in all directions, and the promotion of domestic science ; all of which work, like public school education, must become more and more a matter of state regulation, state control and state administration. If our industries and our trade and commerce are to hold their own in world competition and our industrial population to have the opportunities to which, as those to whom the nation must look as the developers of its wealth, they have the right to enjoy.

While the war has taught many lessons, it has above all taught that ideas and ideals are greater than material wealth ; that spiritual power is greater than physical force ; and that industrialism is greater than militarism. The outstanding feature of this war is the industrial, not the military. Before its close, the world will have witnessed that the factories, and not the barracks, will have the last word. As Lloyd George has rightly said, it has become primarily a war of equipment. The success of the Russian drive, while due to the bravery of the Russian soldier, has been due even more to the factories of Britain and of her Ally Japan. What has saved Verdun, and what has made possible the success of the recent offensive on the French and British front, has been the fortitude and bravery of the French and British soldiers, but it has also been the workshops and factories of France and Britain and America. Ever since the war began, French and Russian and British soldiers have shown a valor unsurpassed ; but while it spelt disaster where offensives at the outset, it spells success where they are attempted today. And the explaination is not, in the greater wisdom of the headquarters staff, nor in the perfection of military organization, though these doubtless, have contributed much, but in the organization of industry and the output of the workers.

And when the war is over, it is to the workers in the fields, on the farms, in the mines, and in the factories, that the nations will have to look for the development of the wealth which is to make possible the caring for the wounded and the disabled. The reduction of the enormous burden of debt the war has occasioned and the furtheranie of all policies which may be aimed at the avoidance of industrial depression, the return of prosperity and the promotion of measures of social betterment, doubly necessary where homes have lost their breadwinners and industry and commerce and all that pertains to normal national life has sustained dislocation, serious impairment and change.

With this great truth made apparent at such great cost, should not this country, the governments of the several provinces and the governments of the Dominion, be paralleling their efforts at recruiting by efforts at increasing the industrial effieiency of the Dominion and its workers by every resoure that the wisdom of the several administrations can devise. What Canada will need to-morrow as much as the allied armies need to-day, is industrial training and technical education carried out by the several provinces, if you will, but fostered in accordance with a wisely devised national plan which will have regard for the country's manufacturing, its agricultural, mining, fishing, lumbering, and other resources and industries as a whole, and which will also have regard for the wise distribution of the country's population once the vast army we have sent across the seas has to be absorbed in the peaceful pursuits of our national life, and with it that other army of homeless and bereft individuals who, when the war is ended, may leave the broken hearths and the devasted homes of Britain and Europe to seek new heart and hope under the British flag in the new world.

The problem of government which will face Canada and the British Empire when the war is over will surpass in magnitude any that have been known in their history, and they demand even now all the thought and attention that every citizen can bestow. In time they will surpass the problems of the war itself. There will not be to sustain their solution the self-evident incentive of a great cause, the appeal that war makes to the heroic in human nature, nor the co-operation of vast effort among all classes actuated by one mighty objective and stirred by tism, of effection and of hate. There will be the dawn of the morrow with its vast waste of human life, its vast expenditure of blood and treasure, the vast destruction, and the weary aching burden of it all. The men and the women who are not in the thick of the fight and who are not to-day giving thought to these mighty problems and ready to give of their best in furthering their solution are unworthy of citizenship in this Dominion. The only justification that a true man can find himself for not crossing the seas in this great struggle for the greater freedom of the human race is that the circumstances of his lot have made this impossible for him without his imposing burdens on others greater than those he can help to relieve, or that his service to his fellowmen in other ways is likely to be greater by pursuing the vocation for which his talents combined with his opportunities peculiarly fit him. But service in some form or other is the only basis of true citizenship within the Dominion today, as indeed it should be at all times.

Whoever is fighting materialism and force in any form is fighting the battle of the Allies. Whoever is not so fighting is a Prussian at heart and helping the Prussian cause. Whoever is allowing the brute to rule the men is a Prussian at heart. If in our national, our industrial, our home life, we allow the spiritual forces to triumph over the material, if in the nation we have learned to put honor before power, if in industry we have learned to put consideration for human well-being before regard for dividends and machines, if in our home life we have learned to put a consideration of the weak before an increase of our own strength, then we may hope that Prussianism has indeed been defeated, and that this great crisis in the history of mankind, and all its suffering, will not have been in vain.

Picnic Notes.

The grounds never looked better than on this occasion. The Band of the 48th Highlanders, (including the pipers), the Bugle and Brass Bands of the 220th under Bandmasters A. Mott and Geo Sainsbury brought in the procession which was headed by the Red Cross Girls who undertook to raise the funds. The Bands rendered an abundance of music in various parts of the grounds during the day.

A large crowd witnessed the athletic contests. The football tournament of eight teams was won by King City. The Juniors will have to continue their play next Saturday. The great program of sports made great amusement for the young and old. Mr. Mahoney, Jr., of Keswick, won the 440 yards race against a strong field.

A group photo was taken of the veterans present which made an imposing picture. In the group were such well-known residents of the riding as Richard Hamilton, Newmarket, James Wilcox, Aurora, John Wilkie, Nobleton, James Wulver, Glenville, John Trainer, Lloydtown, Thos Davis, Schomberg, Daniel O'Brien, Laskey, Jos. Baker, Kettleby, Chas. Stephenson, Aurora, A. J. McCallum, Strange, M. McCallum, Laskay, and J. E. Farr, Sharon.

During the day the Red Cross Girls were divided into two sides, for the sale of tickets for a plow donated by Fleury's Sons, Aurora. Miss Blackburn's side won, the proceeds amounting to $106, for the benefit of the 220th Bat. The plow was then sold by auction by Mr. Fred Smith and knocked down to Mr. George Blackburn for $21.

The refreshment booths did a rushing business all day, owing to the very hot weather.

A recruiting tent was pitched on the ground and a demonstration of musketry, etc., was given.

The Picnic was the most enjoyable that has yet been held under the auspices of the King Liberals. This is the third annual picnic held by them. The Committees in charge deserve great credit for the excellent way in which they carried the arrangements.

The Concert at night was also a great success.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7
SERIES

D 3951

Kettleby Picnic a Great Success

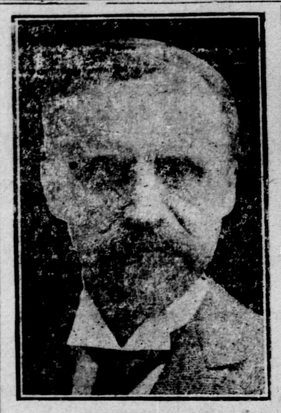
Fine Patriotic Addresses.

The third annual patriotic demonstration of the King Township Reform Association, held in the Amphitheatre Park, Kettleby, on Saturday, brought together a large and representative gathering of Liberals and their families from different parts of York County, including Toronto. The event, which was a huge success, was of a non-political character. Besides several military officers several prominent Conservatives of the riding united with their political opponents in helping to swell the proceeds, which were turned over to the 220th Battalion (York Rangers) for recruiting purposes and field comforts. While the attendance was not as large as last year, owing to the large number of members who have joined the colors and the fact that many farmers were engaged in harvesting the bounteous hay crop, the committee was agreeably surprised at the interest displayed by nearly 4000 who braved the oppressive heat for the purpose of keeping up the high standard of patriotism previously established by the banner township of North York.

One of the many pleasing features of the celebration, which created much interest was the presence on the platform of the oldest Liberal and Conservative in the township. In this connection, Mr. George Teasdale, 85 years, Aurora, came out ahead, being one year the senior of Mr. Daniel O'Brien, 84 years, of Laskay, the oldest Liberal. The latter secured the prize over Mr. John Wilkie, another well-known Liberal, by three months. Mr. Teasdale was presented with a silk umbrella, and Mr. O'Brien with a handsome portrait of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The youngest child at the picnic was Amos Lapp, three weeks old, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Amos Lapp of Kettleby. The honors in the latter contest were also captured by the Conservatives. Mrs. Lapp received a beautiful landscape picture. The prize being presented by Rev. J. H. Colcough, the Anglican rector of Lloydstown. The judges were Messrs. Luke Gibbons, King City; Milton Terry, Kettleby; and John Cook, Kettleby.

Added interest was shown when edLiberals seventy years and over, and the oldest Conservative, the combined ages of whom totalled 943 years, posed for a group photograph. They were Thomas Davis, 73 King; Daniel O'Brien 84, Laskay; John Traynor 76, King City, John Wilkie 83, Nobleton; Archibald McCallum, 82 Strange; James Wolven 78, East Gwillimbury; Malcolm Mac McCallum, 76, King City; Joseph Palmer, 72, Tottenham; James E. Farr 71, Sharon, Richard Hamilton 71, Newmarket; Aaron Clarke, 79, Aurora and George Teasdale, 85 (Conservative), Aurora. The veterans were loudly cheered as they steppd from the platform.

Three football matches were included in the sports program, and resulted as follows:—Newmarket 6, Kettleby 2, King City 2, Newmarket0, King City 2, Kettleby 0.



Patriotic addresses were delivered by Mr. J. M. Walton, Mr. Oliver Hezzlewood, President of Toronto Citizen's League, Mr. J. H. Widdifield of Uxbridge, Rev. Colcough of Lloydtown, Lt.-Col. Brown of the 220th Bat., Mr. Thos. Urquhart of Aurora, ex-Mayor of Toronto, Hon. Mackenzie King of Ottawa, Mr. Fred Hogg from South Ontario. Mr. Howard Cane of Newmarket discharged the duties of chairman in a very satisfactory manner.

The speeches were listened to with great interest especially that of Hon. Mackenzie King.

Mr. King in his address reviewed the the outstanding phases of the war with a view to showing on what grounds the Allies were justified in basing their hope of ultimate certain victory. The first phase of the war was described as that of German intention and aggression, the outstanding features of which were the over-running of Belgium and Western France at the commencement of war, and the subsequent devastation of Serbia, Russian Poland and Montenegro, all of which acts of aggression were in keeping with the yearly policies and methods of Prussia in her endeavor to dominate one principality after another and to bring about the organization of the German Empire on a militarist basis. They were in keeping with the methods of Frederick the Great in wresting Silisia from Austria, an act of most unjustifiable aggression; in keeping with Bismark's iron and blood policy in the wresting of Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark and Alsace and Lorraine from France. If examples in history meant anything, these illustrations were sufficient to show that Germany, unless driven back and defeated in this war, meant to retain as part of her empire the whole of Belgium, of Serbia, Montenegro, Poland, and the parts of Russia and France over which she had forced her armies at the commencement of the war.

The second phase was the phase of dead-lock, which had commenced on the western front with the arresting of the progress of the German army on its march towards Paris, and of which the blocking of the road to Calais by the Canadian troops in the Ypres salient was an outstanding incident; and which has commenced on the eastern front after the first advance of the Russians had been checked and the Russian armies had sustained serious reverses and before the recent advance had begun. The phase of dead-lock had been marked by trench warfare in which the opposing armies had maintained their relative positions more or less intact over the greater part of the period of conflict.

A third phase was that of neutral uncertainty. It had been marked by official inaction on the part of the Government of the United States at the time of the violation of Belgium, the destruction of Louvain, the Lusitania disaster and the submarine menace which had cost the lives of many Americans as well as the subjects of other neutral nations. This phase had passed, so far as the United States was concerned, when the President issued what was in the nature of an ultimatum to Germany, obtained from Congress the endorsation of his action, and the two countries were brought to the verge of war. Italy's neutrality for a year or more after her separation from the central powers and before her entry into the war on the side of the Allies was part of the phase of neutral uncertainty, as was also the doubtful attitude of Greece until this had been placed beyond question by the resolute action of the Allied powers.

J. M. WALTON, ESQ.
Who Organized the Picnic.

A fourth phase of the war was that of British control of the seas. The supremacy of Britain on the seas had never been doubted, but it was not until after the defeat of the German squadron of the Southern Pacific, the destruction of the German naval base in the north Pacific by the Japanese, the capture of the Emden by the Australian Naval Service fleet, that fear of sporadic conflicts at sea had been forever swept away and the ogeans of the world rendered safe for the transportation of men and munitions to the exclusive aid of the Allies. The recent naval battle in the North Sea was a part also of the phase of undisputed sea supremacy. While the losses had been great to both nations, to Germany they had been greater absolutely and vastly greater relatively.

A fifth phase, which might be described as the phase of effective co-operation, was the phase we are witnessing at present. It began early in the year, with the wonderful offensive of the Russians, which had resulted in a demoralization of the Austrian armies, in an advance from the south by the Italian forces, and in the magnificent offensive by the French and British on the western front, and which as an exhibition of military force and splendid organization has been a surprise to the entire world.

A last phase of the war, which was fast coming to be recognized as the most important phase from the point of view of ultimate victory, was what might be termed the industrial phase. It had always been present, but its significance became apparent when a year or two ago the British Government, awakening to the need of larger supplies of arms and ammunition, created a separate department known as the Munitions Branch, and when one factory after the other passed under Government control. When the complete story of the war is told it will come to be seen that this phase has meant vast orders for munitions and military equipment being placed by the Allied Powers in all the available manufacturing countries of the world; that it more than anything else had been responsible for the great industrial prosperity of the United States at the present time; that it was the secret of the co-operation between Japan and Russia which was responsible for the Russian drive. That it lay behind the successful offensive of France and Britain at the present time, is apparent to all the world.

In speaking of this industrial phase, Mr. King pointed out that the arrival of the submarine "Deutschland" in an American harbor was a feature in the industrial phase of the war and one to which Canadians had reason to give particular thought. The press had made no secret of the circumstances that the "Deutschland" and other ships like her, if they could effect their end, intended to take back to Germany for the use of the German army supplies of rubber and nickel, both of which articles were greatly needed. It was known to all the world that the one valuable supply of nickel was a part of Canada's resources, and the only nickel that could go to Germany from the United States at the present time was nickel that had been mined under the British flag by Canadian labor. The country has been surprised of this at commencement of the war. The step which should have been taken then was the step that the British Government took when it brought the munition factories of England under its own control. It was not too late to take this step in Canada even now. With nickel as valuable a commodity as it is, and as necessary for war purposes as it is, Mr. King thought the Government of Canada might well consider making a state monopoly out of this industry, thereby conserving to the British Empire and its Allies, not for the present only, but for all time to come the first claim on this commodity, and conserving to the Canadian people as a means of offsetting some of the vast taxation of the war a resource which may well prove one of the greatest possible sources of revenue the country has.

Having reviewed the various phases of the war, Mr. King asked what had been their net result. In a word, it was that in every material consideration it had meant a change of relative advantage to the position of the fighting nations, at the present time from what they were at the commencement of the war. It was this change in relative positions which Lord Kitchener had seen was necessary before the war could end, and which made him assert at its commencement that it would be a war of three years' duration. It was known now that before his death Lord Kitchener had expressed the view that the change had come even more quickly than he had expected; and allowing for the operation of the law of acceleration in affairs of war as in all else to which it applies, there were at least reasonable grounds for believing that the war might end with complete success to the Allies before the expiration of three years.

Noting the change in the relative positions as respects practically all pointed out that at present Time was on the side of the Allies. Up to and including the first few weeks of the war, time had all been on the side of the Germans. They had been secretly preparing for a mighty offensive. They had hoped to over-ride Belgium and crush France by capturing Paris before the world could become awake to the situation which had developed. Who can say, had they succeeded in this objective, whether time would not have proven altogether on the side of Germany. There had been no time for France or the allied nations in which to arrest the onslaught or retrieve what had been so suddenly lost but from the moment the German force had been checked, Germany has continued to get farther and farther away from her position of advantage which was one of relative advantage the preparedness due to the war being of her own making; and the Allies have been getting nearer and nearer their position of advantage, which is relative advantage in men, munitions and fighting equipment and the means of sustaining and controlling these.

Numbers for some time were on the side of the enemy. When the war commenced the German Empire was an Empire in arms. The British Empire was an Empire at peace. France was a stunned nation; and Russia was a country, a vast population, but not one of properly equipped soldiers. Numbers, in war, are of concern only so far as they represent effective fighting strength. To-day, a census would show wherein the fighting strength of the allied powers outnumber the enemy and where his total force has been in the field almost from the start, there are within the nations belonging to the allied forces countless numbers of men who are still ready and who may be drawn upon for service as the war continues.

Organization was at the outset all on the side of the enemy. The allied powers had not even had the opportunity of a preliminary conference. To-day the enemy's organizations might be strong in Germany, but its army had become demoralized in Austria and a weakening in one part meant a weaking in the whole. Meanwhile the allied powers had perfected their scheme of organization, and the world had witnessed this year the central powers of Europe surrounded by one vast circle of flame which was closing in upon them from every side and which threatens to consume their entire armies unless ere very long their inevitable defeat is admitted.

Resources, equipment and munitions were all on the side of the enemy at the commencement of the war. He had been manufacturing and storing vast quantities of arms and munitions, had been hoarding vast quantities of wealth. The allied nations had done little or nothing of this. Since the war, commenced, however, Germany's means of supplementing her resources by land and sea had been cut off; whilst the Allies had gained the support of the remaining nations of the earth in augmenting their tremendous stores.

Neutral opinion is unquestionably on the side of the Allies. When the war commenced, the world had not had time to make up its mind as to the nature of it. Germany had held a position of great respect, even in the opinion of the countries who to-day are fighting her. To-day all that respect is gone, not merely among her enemies, but among neutral people. They have been amazed at her arrogance, and horified at her atrocities. They have been shocked at her indifference to public right and public morality. They have come to understand what Prussianism means and the nature of the conflict. This weight of neutral opinion, though it cannot be analyzed, is a force of the first magnitude.

The sea is on the side of the Allies. At the commencement of the war, Germany had a vast navy, was the second naval power in the world. Her commerce on the high seas was not only her own greatest pride, but the envy of rival nations. To-day her commerce is utterly destroyed and her navy in large measures shattered.

Finally, industry is on the side of the Allies, and industry will have the last word in the war. For years before it commenced Germany had been developing her industries in a manner which would make them of service to her in time of war. The Krupp Works, which was an exclusively military establishment, surpassed in size and output that of any other in the world. Since the war has commenced, the industries of the world outside of Germany have undergone a vast transformation. One industrial establishment after another has been converted into a munition plant or an arsenal. Women by the hundreds of thousands have engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war. There is at this moment practically no limit to what, in the way of necessary war equipment, the industries of the allied powers may not hope to be able to supply. In numbers of available workers, in ... is vastly inferior to what it was, and her power to improve it has been destroyed.

With these outstanding considerations—not theories, but facts—can there be any alternative other than that of ultimate victory for the Allies?

(Continued on Page 3.)

Kettleby, the Picturesque Village in King Township where the Big Picnic was held.

(Continued from Page 2.)

But mere victory of itself will not end this war. It must be complete victory, complete, not in the sense of crushing Germany, destroying her nationally and exterminating her population, but complete in the sense that the circumstances which have made such a war of aggression possible can never arise again and that the cause for which the allied forces have fought, which is a wider measure of freedom for mankind, can be absolutely assured. There are many reasons why the war must be completely won by the Allies, but the following are probably sufficient.

It must be won, in the first place, that Germany, along with the rest of the world, may be freed, freed from Prussianism, which means the domination by one nation over others through military force. The family of nations must cease to have in its midst a member which compels its own people to adopt a militarist ideal and methods, and which compels other nations for this reason to do the same. As Sir Edward Gray has said, there can be no true freedom in Europe or anywhere in the world so long as there is the continual rattle of the sword in the scabbard and the threat of military force usurps the place of peaceful negotiation.

The war must be completely won, because the Prussian ideal is a false one. The idea that military force is the essential of national greatness would become the necessarily accepted view of the world if the German armies should even partially triumph. The war must be so completely won that an end can be put to competitive arming between countries and the foundations of the future peace of the world laid on the basis of contract and not on that of might.

In the third place, the war must be completely won because Germany provoked and sought it; because she refused conferences, meditation of her own selection, and arbitration at the Hague to adjust the alleged differences. Were Germany even partially to succeed, it would mean that these methods of adjusting relations between than more, generally accepted in the future. This war must teach all nations that the nation that seeks to live by the sword shall perish by the sword as the common enemy of mankind.

In the fourth place, the war must be completely won in order that the injustice which it has wrought may so far as possible be set right; that Belgium, France, Serbia, Montenegro, and Poland may all be restored to their rightful positions.

The war must be completely won in order to pave the way for the adjustment of all future differences between nations by redress through some international tribunal, the findings of which will be backed by a force to which all the great world powers will be contributors.

The war must be completely won to justify the sacrifices of life and of treasure which have already been made in the cause of freedom. To those who have given their lives that the cause of the Allies may triumph it is owing that this triumph shall be complete.

Finally, the war must be completely won in order that the nations of the world may be able to take up in earnest within their own boundaries and in hearty co-operation with each other the solution of hte human problems which modern industrial development has ocasioned, and that the efforts of Government may be devoted towards furthering the well-being of mankind. This will be impossible were taxation required to maintain standing armies and to go on constructing huge and expensive navies.

The money of the people must be used amongst other things for the development of industrial training and technical education, in agriculture, in manufacturing, for vocational training in all directions, and the promotion of domestic science; all of which work, like public school education, must become more and more a matter of state regulation, state control and state administration. If our industries and our trade and commerce are to hold their own in world competition and our industrial population to have the opportunities to which, as those to whom the nation must look as the developers of its wealth, they have the right to enjoy.

While the war has taught many lessons, it has above all taught that ideas and ideals are greater than material wealth; that spiritual power is greater than physical force; and that industrialism is greater than militarism. The outstanding feature of this war is the industrial, not the military. Before its close, the world will have witnessed that the factories, and not the barracks, will have the last word. As Lloyd George has rightly said, it has become primarily a war of equipment. The success of the Russian drive, while due to the bravery of the Russian soldier, has been due even more to the factories of Britain and of her Ally Japan. What has saved Verdun, and what has made possible the success of the recent offensive on the French and British front, has been the fortitude and bravery of the French and British soldiers, but it has also been the workshops and factories of France and Britain and America. Ever since the war began, French and Russian and British soldiers have shown a valor unsurpassed; but while it spelt disaster where offensives at the outset, it spells success where they are attempted to-day. And the explaination is not, in the greater wisdom of the headquarters staff, nor in the perfection of military organization, though these doubtless, have contributed much, but in the organization of industry and the output of the workers.

And when the war is over, it is to the workers in the fields, on the farms, in the mines, and in the factories, that the nations will have to look for the development of the wealth which is to make possible the caring for the wounded and the disabled, the reduction of the enormous burden of debt the war has occasioned and the furtheranie of all policies which may be aimed at the avoidance of industrial depression, the return of prosperity and the promotion of measures of social betterment, doubly necessary where homes have lost their breadwinners and industry and commerce and all that pertains to normal national life has sustained dislocation, serious impairment and change.

With this great truth made apparent at such great cost, should not this country, the governments of the several provinces and the governments of the Dominion, be paralleling their efforts at recruiting by efforts at increasing the industrial efficiency of the Dominion and its workers by every resoure that the wisdom of the several administrations can devise. What Canada will need to-morrow as much as the allied armies need to-day, is industrial training and technical education carried out by the several provinces, if you will, but fostered in accordance with a wisely devised natioo-al plan which will have regard for the country's manufacturing, its agricultural, mining, fishing, lumbering, and other resources and industries as a whole, and which will also have regard for the wise distribution of the country's population once the vast army we have sent across the seas has to be absorbed in the peaceful pursuits of our national life, and with it that other army of homeless and bereft individuals who, when the war is ended, may leave the broken hearths and the devasted homes of Britain and Europe to seek new heart and hope under the British flag in the new world.

The problem of government which will face Canada and the British Empire when the war is over will surpass in magnitude any that have been known in their history, and they demand even now all the thought and attention that every citizen can bestow. In time they will surpass the problems of the war itself. There will not be to sustain their solution the self-evident incentive of a great cause, the appeal that war makes to the heroic in human nature, nor the co-operation of vast effort among all classes actuated by one mighty objective and stirred by tism, of effection and of hate. There will be the dawn of the morrow with its vast waste of human life, its vast expenditure of blood and treasure, the vast destruction, and the weary aching burden of it all. The men and the women who are not in the thick of the fight and who are not to-day giving thought to these mighty problems and ready to give of their best in furthering their solution are unworthy of citizenship in this Dominion. The only justification that a true man can give himself for not crossing the seas in this great struggle for the greater freedom of the human race is that the circumstances of his lot have made this impossible for him without his imposing burdens on others greater than those he can help to relieve, or that his service to his fellowmen in other ways is likely to be greater by pursuing the vocation for which his talents combined with his opportunities peculiarly fit him. But service in some form or other is the only basis of true citizenship within the Dominion today, as indeed it should be at all times.

Whoever is fighting materialism and force in any form is fighting the battle of the Allies. Whoever is not so fighting is a Prussian at heart and helping the Prussian cause. Whoever is allowing the brute to rule the men is a Prussian at heart. If in our national, our industrial, our home life, we allow the spiritual forces to triumph over the material, if in the nation we have learned to put honor before power, if in industry we have learned to put consideration for human well-being before regard for dividends and machines, if in our home life we have learned to put a consideration of the weak before an increase of our own strength, then we may hope that Prussianism has indeed been defeated, and that this great crisis in the history of mankind, and all its suffering, will not have been in vain.

Picnic Notes.

The grounds never looked better than on this occasion. The Band of the 48th Highlanders, (including the pipers), the Bugle and Brass Bands of the 220th under Bandmasters A. Mott and Geo Sainsbury brought in the procession which was headed by the Red Cross Girls who undertook to raise the funds. The Bands rendered an abundance of music in various parts of the grounds during the day.

A large crowd witnessed the athletic contests. The football tournament of eight teams was won by King City. The Juniors will have to continue their play next Saturday. The great program of sports made great amusement for the young and old. Mr. Mahoney, Jr., of Keswick, won the 440 yards race against a strong field.

A group photo was taken of the veterans present which made an imposing picture. In the group were such well-known residents of the riding as Richard Hamilton, Newmarket, James Wilcox, Aurora, John Wilkie, Nobleton, James Wulver, Glenville, John Trainer, Lloydtown, Thos Davis, Schomberg, Daniel O'Brien, Laskey, Jos. Baker, Kettleby, Chas. Stephenson, Aurora, A. J. McCallum, Strange, M. McCallum, Laskay, and J. E. Farr, Sharon.

During the day the Red Cross Girls were divided into two sides, for the sale of tickets for a plow donated by Fleury's Sons, Aurora. Miss Blackburn's side won, the proceeds amounting to $106, for the benefit of the 220th Bat. The plow was then sold by auction by Mr. Fred Smith and knocked down to Mr. George Blackburn for $21.

The refreshment booths did a rushing business all day, owing to the very hot weather.

A recruiting tent was pitched on the ground and a demonstration of musketry, etc., was given.

The Picnic was the most enjoyable that has yet been held under the auspices of the King Liberals. This is the third annual picnic held by them. The Committees in charge deserve great credit for the excellent way in which they carried the arrangements.

The Concert at night was also a great success.

D 3952

OUR LOCAL NEWS.

Deserter Escapes.

One morning last week, a deserter from the 127th Battalion who was confined in the Police Station here, managed to pry off some of the bars across the window and made good his escape.

Christian S. S. Picnic.

The annual Excursion and Picnic of the Christian Sunday School will be held on Wednesday, August 2nd, to Purdy's Grove, Keswick, Lake Simcoe. It will again be a union with Keswick and Union Street Sabbath Schools. This park is an ideal place for a picnic, with a very fine beach for safe bathing. Boats and all other conveniences will be available. Reserve the date. More particulars later.

New Recruits.

The following have enlisted with the Newmarket section of the 220th Bat. within the past few days :

Andrews, W., Pte.
Ashquabe, W., Pte.
Cameron, N. N., Pte.
Hartford, G. A., Pte.
Lukes, B., Pte.
Mortson, H., Pte.
Roberts, A. J., Pte.
Saunders, A., Pte.

Friends Church.

Sunday, July 23.

11 A. M.—Young Peoule of Sabbath School conduct service. Singing, Recitations, etc. Special collection for Young Friend's Mission Work.

7 P. M.—People's Popular Service. Rev. Clarence E. Pickett of Toronto will preach. Everybody welcome. All seats free. A quartette will be rendered during the evening.

Red Cross Society.

The following letter shows that the knitting gets to its proper destination :

Salonica Greece,
June 13th, 1916.

Dear Mrs. Jackson,—

Received a pair of socks which was a gift from the Red Cross, and finding your name and address in one of the socks, I am writing to thank you very much, and hope you will continue the good work. Wishing you and your friends the best of luck. My address is Pte. J. E. Taylor, 521180, c-o. Canadian General Hospital, B. M. E. F., Salonica Forces,

I remain,
Yours truly,
Pte. J. E. Taylor.

Decoration Day.

The observance of Decoration Day at Newmarket Cemetery last Sunday was the most successful for a long time. A much greater interest than usual was apparent. The procession, made up of Odd-Fellows, Orangemen and the Newmarket section of the 220th Battalion, 50 strong, headed by the Odd-Fellows' Band, was very attractive. On leaving the Market Square it proceeded to the Water Works lawn where the monument to our hero of the South African War was draped and decorated with flowers. Flags were also placed there in memory of the late Carl Granger and the late Stuart Quick. The procession then wended its way to the Cemetery, marshalled by Mr. C. A. Thompson, where a large crowd had already gathered. Addresses were then delivered by His Worship Mayor Cane, Rev. A. Young, Lt. Gordon of the 220th and the President, Dr. Scott. Many complimentary remarks were made about the beautiful appearance of the grounds and the value of endowing the lots, but the principal address was given by Rev. Young. He compared life to a long journey in a mountainous region—much is prosaic, routine, rugged cliffs, steep approaches, dark ravines, but by and bye a turn in the road brings into full view a great mountain peak that pierees the clouds and catches the golden glow of sunlight So it is in life's journey, yet the way has been upward and our Guide assures us that we shall emerge into the full blaze of light and beauty eventually. Commemorative days were enlarged upon when achievements wrought are brought to remembrance, likewise when our hearts are saddened, as for instance the 4th of Aug., 1914, when the dread arbitrament of war was decided upon and the war dogs were unlashed. Commemorative days when as a community we gather together to place a flower upon the sod of earth under which lies all that is mortal of those we have known and loved. There are some who never achieved distinction by great and chivalrous deeds, but their high sense of honor, loyalty and devotion to their God, their Queen and Country are worthy of affectionate remembrance,-names of whom, as long as Newmarket has a history, will be handed down to posterity.

At the conclusion of the speaking the various orders decorated the graves of departed brethren and a flag was placed on the grave of every soldier, which embraced a Crimean Veteran, a Fenian Raid Veteran, and Canadian Volunteers.

Just as the Band played "God Save the King," the drops began to fall and everybody made for shelter as soon as possible.

Kettleby, the Picturesque Village in King Township where the Big Picnic was held.

(Continued from Page 2.)

But mere victory of itself will not end this war. It must be complete victory, complete, not in the sense of crushing Germany, destroying her nationally and exterminating her population, but complete in the sense that the circumstances which have made such a war of aggression possible can never arise again and that the cause for which the allied forces have fought, which is a wider measure of freedom for mankind, can be absolutely assured. There are many reasons why the war must be completely won by the Allies, but the following are probably sufficient.

It must be won, in the first place, that Germany, along with the rest of the world, may be freed, freed from Prussianism, which means the domination by one nation over others through military force. The family of nations must cease to have in its midst a member which compels its own people to adopt a militarist ideal and methods, and which compels other nations for this reason to do the same. As Sir Edward Gray has said, there can be no true freedom in Europe or anywhere in the world so long as there is the continual rattle of the sword in the scabbard and the threat of military force usurps the place of peaceful negotiation.

The war must be completely won, because the Prussian ideal is a false one. The idea that military force is the essential of national greatness would become the necessarily accepted view of the world if the German armies should even partially triumph. The war must be so completely won that an end can be put to competitive arming between countries and the foundations of the future peace of the world laid on the basis of contract and not on that of might.

In the third place, the war must in their history, and they demand even great erection and fooling of patrio- be completely won because Germany provoked and sought it ; because she refused conferences, meditation of her own selection, and arbitration at the Hague to adjust the alleged differences. Were Germany even partially to succeed, it would mean that these methods of adjusting relations between than more, generally accepted in the future. This war must teach all nations that the nation that seeks to live by the sword shall perish by the sword as the common enemy of mankind.

In the fourth place, the war must be completely won in order that the injustice which it has wrought may so far as possible be set right ; that Belgium, France, Serbia, Montenegro, and Poland may all be restored to their rightful positions.

The war must be completely won in order to pave the way for the adjustment of all future differences between nations by redress through some international tribunal, the findings of which will be backed by a force to which all the great world powers will be contributors.

The war must be completely won to justify the sacrifices of life and of treasure which have already been made in the cause of freedom. To those who have given their lives that the cause of the Allies may triumph it is owing that this triumph shall be complete.

Finally, the war must be completely won in order that the nations of the world may be able to take up in earnest within their own boundaries and in hearty co-operation with each other the solution of hte human prolems which modern industrial development has ocasioned, and that the efforts of Government may be devoted towards furthering the well-being of mankind. This will be impossible were taxation required to maintain standing armies and to go on constructing huge and expensive navies.

The money of the people must be used amongst other things for the development of industrial training and technical education, in agriculture, in manufacturing, for vocational training in all directions, and the promotion of domestic science ; all of which work, like public school education, must become more and more a matter of state regulation, state control and state administration. If our industries and our trade and commerce are to hold their own in world competition and our industrial population to have the opportunities to which, as those to whom the nation must look as the developers of its wealth, they have the right to enjoy.

While the war has taught many lessons, it has above all taught that ideas and ideals are greater than material wealth ; that spiritual power is greater than physical force ; and that industrialism is greater than militarism. The outstanding feature of this war is the industrial, not the military. Before its close, the world will have witnessed that the factories, and not the barracks, will have the last word. As Lloyd George has rightly said, it has become primarily a war of equipment. The success of the Russian drive, while due to the bravery of the Russian soldier, has been due even more to the factories of Britain and of her Ally Japan. What has saved Verdun, and what has made possible the success of the recent offensive on the French and British front, has been the fortitude and bravery of the French and British soldiers, but it has also been the workshops and factories of France and Britain and America. Ever since the war began, French and Russian and British soldiers have shown a valor unsurpassed ; but while it spelt disaster where offensives at the outset, it spells success where they are attempted today. And the explanation is not, in the greater wisdom of the headquarters staff, nor in the perfection of military organization, though these doubtless, have contributed much, but in the organization of industry and the output of the workers.

And when the war is over, it is to the workers in the fields, on the farms, in the mines, and in the factories, that the nations will have to look for the development of the wealth which is to make possible the caring for the wounded and the disabled, the reduction of the enormous burden of debt the war has occasioned and the furtheranie of all policies which may be aimed at the avoidance of industrial depression, the return of prosperity and the promotion of measures of social betterment, doubly necessary where homes have lost their breadwinners and industry and commerce and all that pertains to normal national life has sustained dislocation, serious impairment and change.

With this great truth made apparent at such great cost, should not this country, the governments of the several provinces and the governments of the Dominion, be paralleling their efforts at recruiting by efforts at increasing the industrial efficiency of the Dominion and its workers by every resoure that the wisdom of the several administrations can devise. What Canada will need to-morrow as much as the allied armies need to-day, is industrial training and technical education carried out by the several provinces, if you will, but fostered in accordance with a wisely devised natioo-al plan which will have regard for the country's manufacturing, its agricultural, mining, fishing, lumbering, and other resources and industries as a whole, and which will also have regard for the wise distribution of the country's population once the vast army we have sent across the seas has to be absorbed in the peaceful pursuits of our national life, and with it that other army of homeless and bereft individuals who, when the war is ended, may leave the broken hearths and the devasted homes of Britain and Europe to seek new heart and hope under the British flag in the new world.

The problem of government which will face Canada and the British Empire when the war is over will surpass in magnitude any that have been known in their history, and they demand even now all the thought and attention that every citizen can bestow. In time they will surpass the problems of the war itself. There will not be to sustain their solution the self-evident incentive of a great cause,the appeal that war makes to the heroic in human nature, nor the co-operation of vast effort among all classes actuated by one mighty objective and stirred by tism, of effection and of hate. There will be the dawn of the morrow with its vast waste of human life, its vast expenditure of blood and treasure, the vast destruction, and the weary aching burden of it all. The men and the women who are not in the thick of the fight and who are not to-day giving thought to these mighty problems and ready to give of their best in furthering their solution are unworthy of citizenship in this Dominion. The only justification that a true man can give himself for not crossing the seas in this great struggle for the greater freedom of the human race is that the circumstances of his lot have made this impossible for him without his imposing burdens on others greater than those he can help to relieve, or that his service to his fellowmen in other ways is likely to be greater by pursuing the vocation for which his talents combined with his opportunities peculiarly fit him. But service in some form or other is the only basis of true citizenship within the Dominion today, as indeed it should be at all times.

Whoever is fighting materialism and force in any form is fighting the battle of the Allies. Whoever is not so fighting is a Prussian at heart and helping the Prussian cause. Whoever is allowing the brute to rule the men is a Prussian at heart. If in our national, our industrial, our home life, we allow the spiritual forces to triumph over the material, if in the nation we have learned to put honor before power, if in industry we have learned to put consideration for human well-being before regard for dividends and machines, if in our home life we have learned to put a consideration of the weak before an increase of our own strength, then we may hope that Prussianism has indeed been defeated, and that this great crisis in the history of mankind, and all its suffering, will not have been in vain.

Picnic Notes.

The grounds never looked better than on this occasion. The Band of the 48th Highlanders, (including the pipers), the Bugle and Brass Bands of the 220th under Bandmasters A. Mott and Geo Sainsbury brought in the procession which was headed by the Red Cross Girls who undertook to raise the funds. The Bands rendered an abundance of music in various parts of the grounds during the day.

A large crowd witnessed the athletic contests. The football tournament of eight teams was won by King City. The Juniors will have to continue their play next Saturday. The great program of sports made great amusement for the young and old. Mr. Mahoney, Jr., of Keswick, won the 440 yards race against a strong field.

A group photo was taken of the veterans present which made an imposing picture. In the group were such well-known residents of the riding as Richard Hamilton, Newmarket, James Wilcox, Aurora, John Wilkie, Nobleton, James Wulver, Glenville, John Trainer, Lloydtown, Thos Davis, Schomberg, Daniel O'Brien, Laskey, Jos. Baker, Kettleby, Chas. Stephenson, Aurora, A. J. McCallum, Strange, M. McCallum, Laskay, and J. E. Farr, Sharon.

During the day the Red Cross Girls were divided into two sides, for the sale of tickets for a plow donated by Fleury's Sons, Aurora. Miss Blackburn's side won, the proceeds amounting to $106, for the benefit of the 220th Bat. The plow was then sold by auction by Mr. Fred Smith and knocked down to Mr. George Blackburn for $21.

The refreshment booths did a rushing business all day, owing to the very hot weather.

A recruiting tent was pitched on the ground, and a demonstration of musketry, etc., was given.

The Picnic was the most enjoyable that has yet been held under the auspices of the King Liberals. This is the third annual picnic held by them. The Committees in charge deserve great credit for the excellent way in which they carried the arrangements.

The Concert at night was also a great success.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Volume D 7
Speeches (b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921
23. 1917

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1917 D 3953

CONSCRIPTION

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

WLMK (1917)

D 3954

A coalition to enforce conscription can only be justified on 2 grounds.
1 Low! - Conscription
2 Coalition Government

(1) conscription necessary — not proven contrary in fact proven as proved basis of coalition premises delay in enforcing measure

2. to avoid an election in war time
~~premiers proposal~~ contemplates an election before enforcing conscription

An election can be avoided by a referendum on the subject of conscription itself.
A referendum for this purpose could be held much more expeditiously than a general election
Once the country has expressed its views all parties should combine to give effect to nations wish.

Consider -
Let Opposition agree to grant an extension of term of parliament if Government concedes a referendum on conscription.
If Government does not agree to referendum on these terms it will prove impossible to enforce conscription if it attempts to do so without a general election.
If the Government dissolves after this proposal is offered it will have to carry a double onus for forcing an election in war time (1) by making an election a necessary preliminary to the policy of conscription as a basis of coalition
(2) by preferring it to an extension conditional on a referendum

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3955

The Conscription measure

(a) goes too far

(b) not far enough

A/ It goes too far

1. In being contrary to this Government's expressed intentions and pledges

Conscription not to be resorted to unless "the only effective method to preserve the existence of the State and the institutions and liberties [myself] we

2 In being unnecessary!

Conscription can only be justified on grounds of

(a) imperative need in matter of time

(b) " " " " " numbers of men

1. 4 more at front

2. 5 feet 8 ins

(c) " " " " " methods of raising men

Re (a) time. - No such need shown

Government's proposal to hold measure in abeyance till after Nat. Parliament shows it does not exist

Re. (b) numbers of men (1) 4 more at front:

When 500,000 men promised, Canada believed it be only part of North America to was. Has raised 400,000 The United States not less interested in ultimate triumph of same principles. If army of same proportions raised would mean an additional 965 millions of men. Has Government sought to ascertain from U.S. how many men it will look to field. This fact important in estimating [number] to be kept in the field.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3956

2. To fill the Ships.

a properly organized campaign for this purpose would receive a patriotic response / Recruiting has fallen off owing to failure of Government

(1) to give facts and figures as to need
(2) to account for the men already enlisted
(3) because of deliberate inaction until Autumn, Shipbuilding Programme etc etc.
(4) because of partizan attitude of Government since commencement of war
(5) direct discouragement by Government (see Hayden's report.)
(6) lack of confidence in Administration as a whole
(7) National service scheme - conveying idea of sufficiency

Re. (2) Methods.

Let Government as a Government commence recruiting for this purpose, and see what results will be!

3. In giving people no opportunity to pronounce upon a policy of vital concern and which without support of public opinion it would be impossible to enforce without providing enormous armies, Government does not go for enough

B/ (1) in stopping short at securing enlistments for overseas service only, must we expect Canada's productive industries upon which in the last analysis depends the supply of available resources to meet existing need, and present and future taxation (see Lloyd George speech in asking for more food & ships)

(2) in taking no account of the effect of this alleged balance for (1) more ships as well as more munitions
(2) more food more men.

essential to the winning of the war

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3957

(3) in taking no account of domestic needs of this dominion, neglect of which may produce grave and critical situations.

4. fuel famine – through present neglect in production harnessing – failure to supply men in sufficient numbers transportation " " " – " " ....

& in consequent closing of plants industries or cost of living " " produce bread supplies of food & arrange for proper distribution

(4) In postponing to conscript men only and taking no account of wealth – profits due to war conditions etc.

may remove as well as man power loss — of wealth - profits, munitions economic income food.

excessive incomes, profit

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1917 D 3958

SIR FREDERICK BORDEN

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The HONOURABLE SIR FREDERICK BORDEN K.C.M.G.

The death of the Hon. Sir Frederick Borden at Canning, N.S. on the 6th of January, recalls the circle of distinguished men with whom Sir Wilfrid Laurier surrounded himself, when as Prime Minister he formed the Liberal Cabinet that administered the Government of Canada from 1896 till 1911. Of the Ministers who took Office with Sir Wilfrid a few remained members of his Government from the beginning of the Administration to its close.

Sir Frederick Borden was one of this group. Sir Frederick's association with Sir Wilfrid in the public life of Canada had yet another intimate bond. Both entered Parliament in the same year, and, excepting the years 1882-87, during which time Sir Frederick was not in Parliament, both sat continuously in the House of Commons from 1874 to 1911. During this associated period of 32 years, Sir Frederick represented King's County, N.S. as Liberal member for that constituency. It is perhaps the highest tribute that can be paid to character and friendship that the confidence of the Liberal Leader in the ability and worth of his colleague remained unbroken over this entire period, and that it was reciprocated by an unswerving loyalty in all the relations of public life, and an unfailing personal devotion.

Sir Frederick Borden was worthy of the high place he held in the regard of Sir Wilfrid who knew him more intimately than anyone else, for he possessed those qualities which endear one man to another and which when combined with large achievement entitle their possessor to the rank of statesman. Sir Frederick had vision and far-sighted judgment, he had plenty of common-sense and ~~plenty of~~ splendid executive ability. He was broad-minded, generous natured,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

genial, and, above all else, staunch and courageous. It will take time for Canadians to appreciate the measure of the service he rendered Canada and the British Empire during the 15 years he held Office as Minister of ~~Militia and Defence.~~ the Crown.

The Department of Militia and Defence was a small affair when Sir Frederick became its political head; he left it a branch of the Canadian administration in which even his political adversaries were eager to take pride.

In no particular has the status of Canada been more clearly marked than in the relations which have existed between the Home andCanadian authorities with respect to matters of defence. When Sir Frederick became Minister, Canada had not emerged from the colonial stage. British regiments were still stationed at Halifax and Esquimalt in accordance with the slowly dying tradition that the Colonies could not be trusted to manage their own affairs, and that to withdraw all military power from ~~the~~ a British possessions was to invite its secession from the British Crown. Sir Frederick Borden had a sounder view of British loyalty and of the British genius for Government, and it was based on his adherence to Liberal principles. Sir Frederick was a thorough-bred Liberal. He saw that the maintenance of this colonial status in military affairs, when, in practically all else, complete self-government had been attained, was an anomaly; he saw further that it ~~is~~ was mischievous, and that it threatened friction instead of close relations between Canada and the Motherland.

He set about to ~~study~~ substitute effective co-operation for this semblance of coercion, and he succeeded in a ~~big~~ large way. Championing with vigor and unanswerable argument the cause of complete autonomy for the self-governing Dominions, he was able as one of Canada's

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

representatives at the Imperial Conference in London in 1907 and ~~again~~ in 1911, and at the Imperial Defence Conference in 1909, and also as a Member of the Imperial Council of Defence, to work out in conjunction with the Home authorities and the representatives of the other British Dominions, ~~a~~ the scheme of co-ordination and co-operation of the British Defence forces, which has been of such vast service to the British Empire and the Allies in the present war. It is not detracting from the achievements of his successors in the Department of Militia and Defence to recall that, when the war commenced, they had at hand ~~a~~ the splendid organization which had been developed by Sir Frederick Borden during and subsequent to theSouth African war; and that as respects the spontaneous response of the Dominions in the call to arms under the voluntary systems of Canada, Australasia, and South Africa, very much is owing to the far-sighted statesmanship which helped to give a wise autonomy in military matters, and ~~much~~ to preserve from a well-meaning but fatal return to a centralized control, the aspirations and the accomplishments of this phase of ~~Canada's~~ Canadian national life.

Sir Frederick had the distinction of raising and despatching in 1899 the first organized expedition of Canadian troops that ever left the Dominion to fight beyond the seas, But like ~~every~~ other statesman of the British Empire who, in the present war, have given of their families, as well as of personal service, he too, ~~entered~~ was drawn into the mystic brotherhood of those who know that it is at the cost of life that hard-won liberties are maintained. In the South African war his only son, ~~Harold~~ who was killed ~~fell~~ in action.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Sir Frederick was in his 70th year, having been born in Cornwallis N.S. May 14th, 1847. He was educated at King's College, Windsor, N.S. and at the Harvard Medical School, from which he obtained the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1868. He practised his profession at Canning during a part of his public life, but, while in the Ministery, practically the whole of his time and thought was given to public affairs. He joined the Militia during the Fenian Raid and was appointed Assistant Surgeon to the 68th regiment in 1869. He was some years later elected to the Federal Parliament In 1893, he was appointed Surgeon Lieutenant-Colonel, and on August 1st, 1901 was appointed Honorary Colonel of the Army ~~Service~~ Medical Corps. In 1911, he was appointed an Honorary Surgeon-General in the British Army. He was created a K.C.M.G. on the occasion of the Coronation of his late Majesty, King Edward, in London in 1902, and at a later date, a Knight of Grace of the Order of St.John and Jerusalem.

In 1896 the Laurier Administration was formed and Sir Frederick entered the Cabinet as Minister of Militia before

These are but the mile-stones, and the ornaments, of a career that was eminently useful and distinguished. It was not by what he received, but by what he gave that Sir Frederick will be remembered, ~~and~~ It is not too much to say that the best of life itself was given in long and honourable service to his country, and in helping to ~~establish~~ shape broad and firm, the foundations of the British Empire, in the hope that its liberties might be maintained, and its power for freedom rendered more potent throughout the world.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3963

21 Jan. 1917

Renfrew: Patriotic Fund Committee

"THE PATRIOTIC AND RED CROSS FUNDS"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3964

RENFREW COUNTY COUNCIL AT BANQUET IN RENFREW

Members, With Others, Listened to Addresses Respecting Needs of Red Cross and Patriotic Funds

The Patriotic Fund Committees of the towns of Pembroke, Arnprior and Renfrew and the village of Cobden, convinced that Renfrew county through its County Council should this year vote a liberal sum to the Patriotic and Red Cross funds, to the end that every section of the county might be equally reached, organized a banquet for Monday evening, January 21st, in Hotel Renfrew, with the County Councillors as guests. Along with the reeves and deputy-reeves of the two ridings, there were present a few other representative citizens of the county, who heard a masterly address by the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King; war stories from the lips of two battle-scarred soldiers, Captain McPherson and Captain Kennedy; and brief speeches from some others. The needs of the Patriotic and Red Cross funds were strongly advocated, without a word of dissent from anybody. The only objection which some had to the proposed grant of $150,000 was that $200,000 had not been the aim. Feasting began at 8.50 and ended at 10 o'clock, when Mr. G. G. McNab of Renfrew, chairman of the local committee, introduced the toast list.

On behalf of the various patriotic associations of this county, under whose auspices this banquet was held, Mr. McNab wished to welcome the members of the County Council and other guests and hoped all would have an enjoyable time. It was something of a unique thing to have members of the County Council assembled here, and we felt honored by their presence and hoped they would have a splendid time.

"The King" was honored by the singing of the national anthem.

Beginning a short address, the chairman observed that when the history of Canada's part in this war came to be written the brightest page would be one that told of the deeds of our gallant army, of the hundreds of thousands of brave men who donned the khaki in defence of our lives and liberties and to prevent the foisting of militarism on a free and democratic people. Coupled with this history would say the Red Cross nurses came next, and then the great efforts put forth by the people of Canada in voluntarily contributing tens of millions of dollars to patriotic purposes. Not only the Patriotic Fund, which looked after dependents of soldiers gone to the front, but the Red Cross Fund, and, above all, the splendid work done in connection with the Red Cross by the devoted women of Canada. Go where we would we found in the households of Canada the women plying their needles. This would constitute a bright chapter in the history of the war. But the end was not yet; we could not rest on past achievements; we must press forward, and so the call was for funds and more funds. The Central Patriotic Association of Ottawa had sent forth a request for 13 or 14 million dollars. How were we to raise our share of this amount? Heretofore we had depended on voluntary subscriptions. A few had met to discuss this matter and it was decided to ask the County Council to raise the money by general tax. Borne by the bulk of the people, the burden would not fall heavily on anyone. Mentioning what the town of Renfrew had done last year, Mr. McNab said that this year, if the County Council relieved the town of giving to the Patriotic Fund by subscription, we intended in addition to paying a tax to go on with a local campaign and raise all we could, and he understood other towns in the county would do the same. If the County Council were to give $150,000 and spread debentures over a period of ten years the county rate on the equalized assessment would be one mill on the dollar, supposing the debentures sold at par at 6 per cent. On an assessment of $1,000 there would be paid one dollar; on $500 fifty cents. The sum in itself—its totality—seemed large, but divided up it seemed insignificant. This was a time to make great sacrifices, to assume great burdens and assume great responsibilities. The payment of money was a small matter. The ones paying the price were those who had left home, kin and loved ones to fight on the shell-scarred fields of Flanders. (Applause). All were pleased indeed to have present such an eminent Canadian as the Hon. Mr. King, who would reply to this toast—(Applause)—"The Patriotic and Red Cross Funds." Mr. King had spent some years in Parliament and was now with the Rockfeller Foundation.

Mr. King, for whom there was a warm reception, began by observing that the chairman in his very eloquent address very wisely gave the first place — the first place in history — to the men who had put on khaki and gone to the front to fight in this great world war. He was happy to see in coming here this evening the first place was given to the men in khaki. It had been his good fortune to discover in Ottawa that his friend, Captain McPherson, was going to be one of the speakers; also that Captain Kennedy, just arrived from the front, had been captured, brought up, and was to speak here tonight. He knew all present would be much interested in listening to men who had been in Europe, under arms there, serving in the trenches, facing an enemy trying to destroy liberty and the foundations of liberty. Captain McPherson was a son of the late Colonel Pennington McPherson, a nephew of the late Sir John Macdonald. His father had had a great deal to do with the building up of the militia system of Canada, and it was a natural thing that among the first young men volunteering to go to the front should be Captain McPherson. Captain Kennedy was the son of a man who for a time was editor of the Montreal Witness and later editor for some years of the weekly edition of the London Times. After a course in Macdonald College Captain Kennedy went farming in Alberta and was there when the war broke out. So it could be seen how stock told in doing a part for the Empire's good. Captain Kennedy was eight times wounded, and what he had done other men were doing at the front, and representatives of Renfrew county were here to say whether they would do their part in helping to keep at ease the minds of Canadian men fighting at the front by assuring them that relatives and friends left behind would be well cared for while they were away fighting. The County Council might be asked to give a grant of $150,000, but what was it compared to a bullet going through the head and taking out an eye? Thousands of others had paid even as great a price as Captain Kennedy that we in Canada who loved this country might hold it with all its precious liberties. Soldiers left behind home, wife, children, parents, friends—everything that went to make life dear—and now it was for us to say how much we thought that worthy. They were making the supreme sacrifice; the most we could do was small compared to what they had already done. This was the third appeal on behalf of the Canadian Patriotic and Red Cross funds. When war broke out the late governor-general, the Duke of Connaught, got together a number of gentlemen and organized the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The fund was raised voluntarily for the purpose of supplementing whatever the Government might do in the matter of carrying on the war. The Government's expenditure went largely upon the militia, training the regiments, sending them across sea. It was a good thing for those left behind to do something, and this was one of the greatest opportunities for service that might come in a lifetime. The fund was not used unless required; was not distributed broadcast. There were scattered throughout Canada local bodies which had to do with the distribution of the funds. The local committees saw what was needed in the different localities. In the two years that the fund had been in existence something like over $18,000,000 had been raised. Most of it had been expended. During the course of the present year the need would be larger than ever. There were more men at the front than ever. Of those who had gone at the beginning a few had returned. Those who had returned were not in a position to maintain their families. At a conservative estimate between 12 and 14 million dollars would be needed during the present year; so that no matter how generous we might appear to be or strive to be in different communities there was going to be difficulty in getting an adequate amount. At the present time between 55 and 60 thousand families in Canada and over 150,000 individuals were dependent on the fund. Undoubtedly during the course of the year the total numbers would be considerably over that figure. At the present time, out of the voluntary givings of the people of Canada and from the Governments, there would be over 150,000 individuals supported during the course of the war from this particular fund. As to the methods of giving assistance, we knew it was not merely the men gone from our Canadian families, but also those belonging to the reserves of different countries. There were Belgian, French and Russian reservists; also the families of those connected with the navy in Canada and Newfoundland. One feature Mr. King thought would appeal to all was the cost of administration. A great many people hesitated to make a gift of money to any organization when thinking that the greater part was going to be used up in expenses. Notwithstanding the large sums of money expended from the Patriotic Fund the total expense of administering that fund had not come to more than two per cent. of the gross expenditure. When we took into account that part of the fund was in the banks, and credited the interest to the account, and set it over against the cost of administration, it reduced it to four cents on every ten dollars. This was a factor that should influence, particularly public bodies, in the matter of giving. Representatives of the county in Council could practically feel that every dollar given by the county was going for the specific purpose for which it was intended. The Red Cross society was another organization which in its way was doing work just as important as the Patriotic Fund. What distinguished our modern fighting from that of earlier times was the great care given to the wounded and the efficient means of saving life through provision being brought to the men in time. After telling of the origin and functions of the R.C.S., Mr. King stated that in certain European countries there were no women left to make comforts for the soldiers; the result was Canadian women realized that the soldiers of those countries were as much in need as our own and had arranged that part of the money going there should assist those countries. Could there be a single purpose or object toward which we could make contributions more deservedly! We were not merely relieving suffering, but saving hundreds of thousands of lives when contributing to the Red Cross. We were not merely increasing the amount of happiness in homes, but increasing the productive efficiency of our own country through bringing the means of solving taxation, which must be out of the resources of labor, in the last analysis. We should look at it as a straight business matter, and if by giving at the critical moment we might stimulate others to do the same. Mr. King congratulated Renfrew county on what it had given in the way of money and men. It was no flattery to say a good many counties in Canada were envious of what the county of Renfrew had done. Now was a chance to make this county more than ever the envy of the different counties of the Dominion. We should not be afraid to cast our bread upon the water; it would come back one hundred-fold; and what was done here would help in other counties. We were to remember that this was not generosity, but one of the best business investments we could make, one of the most humane acts possible to perform. One of the pleasantest features in connection with the invitation extended to him to speak in Renfrew was the fact that it came from Sir Herbert Ames, who was on the other side of politics. They were the best of friends but the strongest of political enemies. Sir Herbert had asked him to come here. Mr. King mentioned it to show that in this work they were far and away above the question of party lines. (Applause). They stood on the highest possible

(Continued on Page Seven)

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

D 3965

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

REQUESTS

THE PEOPLE OF CANADA TO

BEGIN NOW

TO SAVE MONEY FOR THE

NEXT WAR LOAN

JAN. 9, 1917

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE
OTTAWA

PATRIOTIC BANQUET

(Continued from Page One)

grounds for public men to stand upon, namely, the ground of common patriotism and the service of common humanity. So Mr. King asked all present to look at the matter from that point of view. They should not think of what some back township might think, but what the country as a whole needed. This was the 50th anniversary of our Dominion. For fifty years we had watched this young country grow stronger and stronger, extend its lines from ocean to ocean, develop its resources and all we possessed as Canadians. Why had we the opportunity to enjoy the wonderful progress? We had been able to sit back and consider only ourselves. Why? If anyone present had not asked that question let it be asked now and see where the British army and navy came in and see what the British Empire meant. Then in this year of all years we should help to fight the battle for the greater freedom of mankind. If ever there was a call for the people to rise and respond, it was the call from across the seas to the people of Canada. The people of Canada were free and happier, better off in institutions and more advanced in community life than the people of any other country on the face of the earth; we belonged to two stocks fighting together in Europe today to retain the liberties of the world. Let us remember that this was the 50th anniversary, the golden epoch of our country, so far, and in making our gifts let us have that fact in consideration. We all wanted to see this war brought to an end as speedily as possible. What was going to end it? There was no doubt Germany was beginning to feel the pinch on her resources. Her credit was beginning to shrink just as her food and her munitions were shrinking. As we approached the time of settlement what were the factors that were going to make the nations stop? Unfortunately one or the other was to be driven into a position of despair. It was when one opponent saw his last cent going and that the other fellow had plenty that a man was driven to despair. That was the position in Europe today. What would make the German Empire think twice? It was that here in Canada, in Australia, in Africa, anywhere the British flag flew, appeals could be made year after year with what results? That the givings of money increased. That was what would make nations think and that was what we must do at the present time. We must seek to double the amount, treble it if we could, so that reading the writing on the wall, Germany might see that the British Empire had resources and means unlimited, as well as spirit and pluck. Mr. King wondered if any of us, after 2½ years, appreciated the magnitude of this conflict, the magnitude not only in size of armies, but its meaning in the history of the world. It was something so large that it was difficult with us, accustomed to deal in small things, to appreciate it. If we could see it today as men of 100 years hence would see it, we should see it as a conflict between two civilizations—an old civilization in conflict with the new epoch of modern times. We should see these two great periods of time, these two conflicting epochs of civilization, waging war with one another and the whole of history for the next hundred years depending on the outcome of that conflict. This was what our men were giving their lives for. Mr. King quoted lines from "Locksley Hall" in which Tennyson dipped into the future and saw a vision of the world and wonders to be. These he said were lines written in the days of Queen Victoria of the present great conflict in Europe. When Tennyson wrote these lines men thought his imagination was mad, and at the time there wasn't even an airship constructed. As that picture had come true, perhaps another picture by Tennyson would also come true, and we should see the battle flag furled, with the parliament of man and the federation of the world. There was in Locksley Hall something to give us heart, courage and reason to do our utmost in the present struggle. If after this fight was over, war was going to end and we were going to approach nearer to the parliament of man and the federation of the world, then perhaps the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of human lives in the interest of humanity would not have been altogether in vain. Federation of the world was the ultimate aim of the British Empire, but there were two ways of world domination—one the force of arms, the other the force of example. Germany had tried the method of force of arms. On the other hand, take the British Empire. Was there anything in connection with the whole world so remarkable as the sight of people of the Empire, scattered throughout the world, coming forward once the war broke out, regiment after regiment, to join together in the battlefields of Flanders and elsewhere solely at the call of duty, solely because they cherished like ideals of liberty and freedom? That was the most magnificent spectacle in the whole of this vast world struggle. Under the stress of war nations brought together today to fight against Germany had been put in precisely the same position. All of these countries together had formed a common council, united for purposes of defence, carrying out one single program, each retaining its own individual identity, all united for the purpose of fighting a common enemy. Were we to suppose that when the war was over this was going to be lost? Were nations brought together, cherishing one ideal, going to dissolve and disappear? These nations, he thought, would form some kind of compact, with each maintaining its own identity, but united to defeat the common enemy of mankind. Thus the poet's dream might be fulfilled. The present struggle was between two different systems—one military domination, the other the preservation of individual liberty. The whole course of future history would depend on which ultimately triumphed. If was for us, in whatever capacity we could, to throw our weight into the scale and help it one way or the other. All were in a position to do something, and the extent to which a man did what he could to that extent he was helping the great cause for which the Allies were fighting. Gentlemen present had started a campaign for the Patriotic Fund; let them see to it that it did not end without achieving the end set. (Loud and prolonged applause.)

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior proposed "The Allied Forces," calling upon Captain McPherson to respond. Stories were told by this returned warrior of the battlefield—stories interesting and thrilling. He thought that if a man "could go through France with nothing else to do and take a note-book along, he could write volumes on what happened over there." The magnitude of the war was what impressed one more than anything else. The men in the ranks there placed great reliance in the Patriotic Fund. Captain McPherson did not think the Government ought to raise the money by taxation. It was a duty of a grateful people to give to these men. And returned men should benefit from the fund. In connection with an association of returned men at Ottawa, he could see that men should not be struck off the list until they had secured positions. He had seen in the war zone what the Red Cross society meant. Soldiers appreciated the work of women in making helmets and mufflers and socks. There was nothing worse to march on than a pair of socks with a darn in them. Captain McPherson told of the great sacrifices being made in France, where there were today a million widows. He read a letter written by a French officer throwing many vivid side-lights upon the war. In connection with the war there were three things for all to do—fight, work or pay.

Captain Kennedy told one long humorous story of the war; he like Captain McPherson showing himself by his recital to be a man of culture, character and resource. His injuries in the war included the loss of an eye. He had been in front trenches, but considered that no great honor, because the Germans put machine guns and a few men in front trenches, and supposing the British to do the same, throw more shells into supporting trenches. A winter on Salisbury Plains was worse than anything he had ever experienced in France in the way of discomfort. In crossing the Channel he had the honor of being sick next to a Major-General. Pictures he had seen of trenches looked like a garden of Versailles; when he arrived at the trenches he found them somewhat different. Artillery duels were really a pounding of the infantry, the guns usually being hidden somewhere away in the distance and safe from harm. He paid a tribute to the Red Cross system—"the most perfect system in the world today." Nothing could have saved him after his serious wounds except the attention he received all along the line from field to hospital. Captain Kennedy declared that one had to go to France before knowing what sacrifice or hardship meant. Complaints were heard in England and in Canada; never a murmur from the French people. He did not call the raising of $150,000 in Renfrew county sacrifice; rather was it the irreducible minimum.

Mr. J. W. Smith, chairman of the Pembroke committee, was next heard from. It was a great pleasure and a great honor, he said, for him to be present as chairman of the Pembroke Patriotic Committee. There were present as guests the members of the County Council, assembled to deliberate upon the subject of assistance to the Canadian Red Cross and Patriotic funds. Boys and men in great numbers had enlisted in Renfrew county; drilled here and in England, and finally found their way into the front line of trenches. When the call came to go over the trenches and charge the enemy was there any faltering on the part of the men of Renfrew county? No. They went with the courage of lions and all the enthusiasm of men who knew they were fighting in a just and righteous cause. He did not think he could say anything that would impress the County Council more. The members of County Council were not wanting in patriotism and loyalty and they had the price. Mr. Smith then proposed "The County Council," coupling with the toast the names of Reeve Connelly of Cobden and Reeve Davidson of Westmeath.

Mr. Connelly told of the County Council being made up of 34 men—the most intelligent men in the county of Renfrew. (Laughter). If not, that was what they should be. If not the most intelligent men they were the biggest-hearted men in the county. No one was more loyal or patriotic than the members of County Council. Nine of those men came from the towns and villages; 25 from the rural municipalities; so that there was one assembly in Ontario anyway where the farmers were in the majority. Someone had said that in the past the farmers had not done their part in raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds. This was not because of an unwillingness; there was nobody more willing; it was because they were not organized. This was why the farmers had fallen short. He thought that after the Council meeting closed on Thursday or Friday they would have granted a sum this county would not be ashamed of. (Applause). We were not nearly at the close of the war, but we could say there had been at least a foundation laid—a most costly one—laid with blood and tears. The man today not willing to pay one dollar on every thousand of assessment, or $5 on every $5,000 of assessment, should, as Mr. J. Lockie Wilson had said in Cobden, be branded with the mark of Cain. Some people said that women getting money out of the Patriotic Fund were getting more money to spend than when their husbands were at home. Why should they not have more? All others were having more since the war started. And did anyone mean to tell him that women and children left behind should have less than other people? In Renfrew county 152 mothers were now putting their children to bed without a father to kiss them good-night. He believed that every reeve in the County Council, after listening to Mr. King's inspiring address, would be ready to do his part — vote a sum making this county of Renfrew proud of those 34 men.

Reeve Davidson observed that the payment of expenses in connection with the distribution of the Patriotic Fund had been well explained; that it was a mere trifle also the necessity of the Red Cross for the relief and comfort of the soldiers who had gone to the front; so that there was left very little for him, the representative of the highest assessed municipality in the county, to say. The Patriotic Fund he knew to be a success; we could not get along without it. The ladies of the different municipalities deserved great credit for what they were doing for the soldiers. In every corner they were always knitting and sewing and sending away supplies. As representative of Westmeath he believed a liberal grant should be made to the Patriotic Fund. It deserved all that could be given it. Men like Mr. White and himself couldn't go to the front, but if forty years younger there is where they would be.

Mr. Armon Burwash of Arnprior had no fault to find with anything said in the address except that the sum mentioned as Renfrew county's contribution was not big enough. He was sorry the sum was not at least $50,000 more. He had a letter from Mr. Finnie, general manager of the Bank of Ottawa, dealing with the Patriotic Fund, but it was too long to read at this metting and he would give it to his friend, Mr. Brennan, to assist in the deliberations on the following day. Some held that the Government should supply these funds, but the Government could not administer them so efficiently and the cost would be greater. Mr. Burwash took exception to the Eganville Leader's article, declaring that the Government if raising the money would have to raise about $35,000,000, and have to take it from the people, and perhaps have to resort to direct taxation. Renfrew county's share would perhaps be $150,000 or $250,000, with about the same amount for expense of administering it. It was up to the County Council to keep that in mind when coming to deal with the subject. Mr. King had asked Renfrew to show an example as being one of the first to act. The biggest county in Ontario, with big men of big heart, should, Mr. Burwash thought, give a big sum.

The local secretary, Mr. S. T. Chown, read a letter from the Hon. T. W. McGarry saying he was unfortunately obliged to undergo another slight operation, whereby it would be impossible for him to do any public speaking for some time. He trusted the members of County Council would see their way clear to make the grant requested of them. The patriotic needs of Ontario would amount to $6,000,000 this year. Mr. McGarry observed that he would be greatly disappointed if Renfrew county did not vote the money, believing nobody would suffer from it.

Mr. W. R. White, the dean of the legal profession of Pembroke, was the next speaker. He believed himself the oldest or one of the oldest native-born citizers of Renfrew county. No man could take a greater interest in the county than he did, who had seen it rise from earliest beginnings to the present condition of prosperity in towns, villages and farming communities. He had seen men living in the first houses with scooped roofs; now they lived in two-storey brick houses with every convenience. We had now everything except good roads, and were to have them later on. He felt impelled most strongly to urge upon the County Council the propriety and duty of making this grant. When the call came for volunteers there was a tacit agreement made with every man who had wife or children, mother or other dependent relatives that this Patriotic Fund would be raised and dependents looked after. We should fail in our duty if not carrying out that agreement to the letter. We had in the county some people of foreign origin, but Mr. White believed all to be loyal. We had been shown how Britain was right in going into this war, but it was enough for him to know that Britain was in it. If his father were alive today and was attacked by roughs, he as a son would go to the rescue without stopping to question whether the old man had started the row. (Laughter.) County Councillors needed to have no fear that if voting the amount of money proposed their constituents would go back on them. The price of all farm produce had advanced, and in order to pay the tax the farmer's wife needed only to raise one more turkey. The best Government was our own municipal government; therefore the best way to raise this money was by the municipality. Councillors were right on the spot and knew just how far they could go. Mr. White read some pointed excerpts, quite apropos, from a sermon by an American clergyman.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop, M.L.A., thought that all should be ready to fight, work or pay. We could save, because silver bullets might yet play a big part in this war. National Service had been inaugurated to bring more closely to us the fact that we could do one of these things in this struggle. The fellow who made the real and in many cases the supreme sacrifice worked for $1.10 a day that our liberties and privileges might be protected and safeguarded. He was sure the people of Renfrew county would rise to the occasion and do handsomely, and he had yet to hear of one citizen or taxpayer of Pembroke saying the taxation was more than should have been put on.

Reeve Moffatt of Pembroke expressed himself as not at all obliged to his friend of the Eganville Leader. He had on more than one occasion said in connection with the town grant that he thought it was up to the Government to see and look after dependents of soldiers. After more light on the subject and more consideration he had no hesitation in saying that he had changed his mind. (Applause). When convinced that he was wrong he was not ashamed to change his mind, nor not ashamed to acknowledge it. He had no hesitation in saying he was thoroughly in accord with any grant the Council might make, and they couldn't make it too big to please him. The hour was late, and he thought every point well covered by the speakers that had preceded him. He did not think there was anything else for the Council to do; it was up to it to vote the money. They owed the bill and should pay it. All the Council wanted to know was that the bill was correct, and he did not think the County Council would have any hesitation in taking the certificate presented this evening. Mr. Brennan and he had advocated the giving of $150,000 at the last meeting, but did not feel justified in bringing it in in the form of a motion, for the Council was a dying one. He had not changed his mind since then one particle. He was prepared to vote $150,000 on the morrow and make it $200,000 if needed. He did not think any member of the County Council would differ much from him. If there were any who objected to it other members would try to convince them of the error of their ways. He thought the county the proper place for the money to come from. The Patriotic Fund was administered more economically than any other fund had been, and he thought more economically than any Government would do it, whether Grit or Tory.

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior expressed pleasure in being present and listening to the very instructive addresses given; he was also pleased to meet the different reeves. He was not present to speak on the subject of a grant, considering it more his duty to speak to that in Pembroke, but would like to substantiate a statement Mr. Moffatt had just made. Last October different sums had been mentioned, and he was proud of Mr. Moffatt in having the courage of his convictions and saying we should give $150,000 at least. In Arnprior there were sixty cases depending on the Patriotic Fund, and with prices so high those dependents could not exist without it. It was a very necessary thing. Mr. Brennan felt the people of Canada could do more than they had done, and if not doing more there would be a danger of undoing much already done; therefore he thought Renfrew could vote at least $150,000.

Deputy-Reeve Smallfield of Renfrew observed that others had shared in the views of the Eganville Leader as to the methods of raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds, and intimated that he was one of them, though having since changed his mind, after thinking how much better the funds were administered and how much the country was saving. He thought he could say that outside of that one paper the reeves would have all the newspapers of Renfrew county at their back and in their defence if making the grant proposed. Fifteen years ago the County Council had met in regular session in Renfrew for the promotion of the good roads ideal; now the same body was met here on a still more worthy object, and he felt the address delivered by Mr. King would have effect. The speaker who had said there would be no opposition in the County Council to the grant Mr. Smallfield believed was right.

During the evening vocal solos were sung by Mrs. Mansfield and Mr. Stratton, with Mr. H. W. Kearney as accompanist.

For a while a number of ladies listened to the post-prandial oratory, occupying seats in the wing.

The national anthem was sung at 1.45 o'clock.

HAVE YOU ECZEMA?

Would you like to end that terrible itching, that burning pain; to heal those horrid sores?

You have tried all sorts of fatty ointments, lotions and powders. Put them aside now and give Nature a chance as represented by Zam-Buk.

Zam-Buk is made from herbal essences; is a natural healer. Is not something you have to send to the end of the world for, and pay a heavy price! Every druggist will sell you Zam-Buk and for 50c. only. Just give it a fair trial and incidently give yourself ease by the quickest route. See name on box:—

ZAM-BUK

WINTRY WOOLENS

Best Canadian and American Fashions to make from

The largest lot of Woollens in the Ottawa Valley to choose from.

John Mitchell

The Ladies' and Gents' Tailor

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION DOLLARS.

The grant of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for 1917 by the Quebec Legislature is a most cheering indication of the value placed on the work of the Fund by the Government of Sr Lomer Gouin, and may be taken as an evidence also of the growing realization in the province of what demands the war is making on our wealth in money. The Ontario Legislature is making a grant of the same size, and there is a tendency on the part of all the Provincial Governments to aid this meritorious work.

Quebec raised more money in 1916 than was needed to make provision for her own families, and the surplus was devoted to the Western Provinces, where enlistments were above the average. It is probable that a similar condition will arise in 1917.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

D 3965

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

REQUESTS

THE PEOPLE OF CANADA TO

BEGIN NOW

TO SAVE MONEY FOR THE

NEXT WAR LOAN

JAN. 9, 1917

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE
OTTAWA

PATRIOTIC BANQUET

(Continued from Page One)

grounds for public men to stand upon, namely, the ground of common patriotism and the service of common humanity. So Mr. King asked all present to look at the matter from that point of view. They should not think of what some back township might think, but what the country as a whole needed. This was the 50th anniversary of our Dominion. For fifty years we had watched this young country grow stronger and stronger, extend its lines from ocean to ocean, develop its resources and all we possessed as Canadians. Why had we the opportunity to enjoy the wonderful progress? We had been able to sit back and consider only ourselves. Why? If anyone present had not asked that question let it be asked now and see where the British army and navy came in and see what the British Empire meant. Then in this year of all years we should help to fight the battle for the greater freedom of mankind. If ever there was a call for the people to rise and respond, it was the call from across the seas to the people of Canada. The people of Canada were freer and happier, better off in institutions and more advanced in community life than the people of any other country on the face of the earth; we belonged to two stocks fighting together in Europe today to retain the liberties of the world. Let us remember that this was the 50th anniversary the golden epoch of our country, so far, and in making our gifts let us have that fact in consideration. We all wanted to see this war brought to an end as speedily as possible. What was going to end it? There was no doubt Germany was beginning to feel the pinch on her resources. Her credit was beginning to shrink just as her food and her munitions were shrinking. As we approached the time of settlement what were the factors that were going to make the nations stop? Unfortunately one or the other was to be driven into a position of despair. It was when one opponent saw his last cent going and that the other fellow had plenty that a man was driven to despair. That was the position in Europe today. What would make the German Empire think twice? It was that here in Canada, in Australia, in Africa, anywhere the British flag flew, appeals could be made year after year with what results? That the givings of money increased. That was what would make nations think and that was what we must do at the present time. We must seek to double the amount, treble it if we could, so that reading the writing on the wall, Germany might see that the British Empire had resources and means unlimited, as well as spirit and pluck. Mr. King wondered if any of us, after 2½ years, appreciated the magnitude of this conflict, the magnitude not only in size of armies, but its meaning in the history of the world. It was something so large that it was difficult with us, accustomed to deal in small things, to appreciate it. If we could see it today as men of 100 years hence would see it, we should see it as a conflict between two civilizations—an old civilization in conflict with the new epoch of modern times. We should see these two great periods of time, these two conflicting epochs of civilization, waging war with one another and the whole of history for the next hundred years depending on the outcome of that conflict. This was what our men were giving their lives for. Mr. King quoted lines from "Locksley Hall" in which Tennyson dipped into the future and saw a vision of the world and wonders to be. These he said were lines written in the days of Queen Victoria of the present great conflict in Europe. When Tennyson wrote these lines men thought his imagination was mad, and at the time there wasn't even an airship constructed. As that picture had come true, perhaps another picture by Tennyson would also come true, and we should see the battle flag furled, with the parliament of man and the federation of the world. There was in Locksley Hall something to give us heart, courage and reason to do our utmost in the present struggle. If after this fight was over, war was going to end and we were going to approach nearer to the parliament of man and the federation of the world, then perhaps the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of human lives in the interest of humanity would not have been altogether in vain. Federation of the world was the ultimate aim of the British Empire, but there were two ways of world domination—one the force of arms, the other force of example. Germany had tried the method of force of arms. On the other hand, take the British Empire. Was there anything in connection with the whole world so remarkable as the sight of people of the Empire, scattered throughout the world, coming forward once the war broke out, regiment after regiment, to join together in the battlefields of Flanders and elsewhere solely at the call of duty, solely because they cherished like ideals of liberty and freedom? That was the most magnificent spectacle in the whole of this vast world struggle. Under the stress of war nations brought together today to fight against Germany had been put in precisely the same position. All of these countries together had formed a common council, united for purposes of defence, carrying out one single program, each retaining its own individual identity, all united for the purpose of fighting a common enemy. Were we to suppose that when the war was over this was going to be lost? Were nations brought together, cherishing one ideal, going to dissolve and disappear? These nations, he thought, would form some kind of compact, with each maintaining its own identity, but united to defeat the common enemy of mankind. Thus the poet's dream might be fulfilled. The present struggle was between two different systems—one military domination, the other the preservation of individual liberty. The whole course of future history would depend on which ultimately triumphed. It was for us, in whatever capacity we could, to throw our weight into the scale and help it one way or the other. All were in a position to do something, and the extent to which a man did what he could to that extent he was helping the great cause for which the Allies were fighting. Gentlemen present had started a campaign for the Patriotic Fund; let them see to it that it did not end without achieving the end set. (Loud and prolonged applause.)

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior proposed "The Allied Forces," calling upon Captain McPherson to respond. Stories were told by this returned warrior of the battlefield—stories interesting and thrilling. He thought that if a man "could go through France with nothing else to do and take a note-book along, he could write volumes on what happened over there." The magnitude of the war was what impressed one more than anything else. The men in the ranks there placed great reliance in the Patriotic Fund. Captain McPherson did not think the Government ought to raise the money by taxation. It was a duty of a grateful people to give to these men. And returned men should benefit from the fund. In connection with an association of returned men at Ottawa, he could see that men should not be struck off the list until they had secured positions. He had seen in the war zone what the Red Cross society meant. Soldiers appreciated the work of women in making helmets and mufflers and socks. There was nothing worse to march on than a pair of socks with a darn in them. Captain McPherson told of the great sacrifices being made in France, where there were today a million widows. He read a letter written by a French officer throwing many vivid side-lights upon the war. In connection with the war there were three things for all to do—fight, work or pay.

Captain Kennedy told one long humorous story of the war; he like Captain McPherson showing himself by his recital to be a man of culture, character and resource. His injuries in the war included the loss of an eye. He had been in front trenches, but considered that no great honor, because the Germans put machine guns and a few men in front trenches, and supposing the British to do the same, throw more shells into supporting trenches. A winter on Salisbury Plains was worse than anything he had ever experienced in France in the way of discomfort. In crossing the Channel he had the honor of being sick next to a Major-General. Pictures he had seen of trenches looked like a garden of Versailles; when he arrived at the trenches he found them somewhat different. Artillery duels were really a pounding of the infantry, the guns usually being hidden somewhere away in the distance and safe from harm. He paid a tribute to the Red Cross system—"the most perfect system in the world today." Nothing could have saved him after his serious wounds except the attention he received all along the line from field to hospital. Captain Kennedy declared that one had to go to France before knowing what sacrifice or hardship meant. Complaints were heard in England and in Canada; never a murmur from the French people. He did not call the raising of $150,000 in Renfrew county sacrifice; rather was it the irreducible minimum.

Mr. J. W. Smith, chairman of the Pembroke committee, was next heard from. It was a great pleasure and a great honor, he said, for him to be present as chairman of the Pembroke Patriotic Committee. There were present as guests the members of the County Council, assembled to deliberate upon the subject of assistance to the Canadian Red Cross and Patriotic funds. Boys and men in great numbers had enlisted in Renfrew county; drilled here and in England, and finally found their way into the front line of trenches. When the call came to go over the trenches and charge the enemy was there any faltering on the part of the men of Renfrew county? No. They went with the courage of lions and all the enthusiasm of men who knew they were fighting in a just and righteous cause. He did not think he could say anything that would impress the County Council more. The members of County Council were not wanting in patriotism and loyalty and they had the price. Mr. Smith then proposed "The County Council," coupling with the toast the names of Reeve Connelly of Cobden and Reeve Davidson of Westmeath.

Mr. Connelly told of the County Council being made up of 34 men—the most intelligent men in the county of Renfrew. (Laughter). If not, that was what they should be. If not the most intelligent men they were the biggest-hearted men in the county. No one was more loyal or patriotic than the members of County Council. Nine of those men came from the towns and villages; 25 from the rural municipalities; so that there was one assembly in Ontario anyway where the farmers were in the majority. Someone had said that in the past the farmers had not done their part in raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds. This was not because of an unwillingness; there was nobody more willing; it was because they were not organized. This was why the farmers had fallen short. He thought that after the Council meeting closed on Thursday or Friday they would have granted a sum this county would not be ashamed of. (Applause). We were not nearly at the close of the war, but we could say there had been at least a foundation laid—a most costly one—laid with blood and tears. The man today not willing to pay one dollar on every thousand of assessment, or $5 on every $5,000 of assessment, should, as Mr. J. Lockie Wilson had said in Cobden, be branded with the mark of Cain. Some people said that women getting money out of the Patriotic Fund were getting more money to spend than when their husbands were at home. Why should they not have more? All others were having more since the war started. And did anyone mean to tell him that women and children left behind should have less than other people? In Renfrew county 152 mothers were now putting their children to bed without a father to kiss them good-night. He believed that every reeve in the County Council, after listening to Mr. King's inspiring address, would be ready to do his part — vote a sum making this county of Renfrew proud of those 34 men.

Reeve Davidson observed that the payment of expenses in connection with the distribution of the Patriotic Fund had been well explained; that it was a mere trifle: also the necessity of the Red Cross for the relief and comfort of the soldiers who had gone to the front; so that there was left very little for him, the representative of the highest assessed municipality in the county, to say. The Patriotic Fund he knew to be a success; we could not get along without it. The ladies of the different municipalities deserved great credit for what they were doing for the soldiers. In every corner they were always knitting and sewing and sending away supplies. As representative of Westmeath he believed a liberal grant should be made to the Patriotic Fund. It deserved all that could be given it. Men like Mr. White and himself couldn't go to the front, but if forty years younger there is where they would be.

Mr. Armon Burwash of Arnprior had no fault to find with anything said in the address except that the sum mentioned as Renfrew county's contribution was not big enough. He was sorry the sum was not at least $50,000 more. He had a letter from Mr. Finnie, general manager of the Bank of Ottawa, dealing with the Patriotic Fund, but it was too long to read at this metting and he would give it to his friend, Mr. Brennan, to assist in the deliberations on the following day. Some held that the Government should supply these funds, but the Government could not administer them so efficiently and the cost would be greater. Mr. Burwash took exception to the Eganville Leader's article, declaring that the Government if raising the money would have to raise about $35,000,000, and have to take it from the people, and perhaps have to resort to direct taxation. Renfrew county's share would perhaps be $150,000 or $250,000, with about the same amount for expense of administering it. It was up to the County Council to keep that in mind when coming to deal with the subject. Mr. King had asked Renfrew to show an example as being one of the first to act. The biggest county in Ontario, with big men of big heart, should, Mr. Burwash thought, give a big sum.

The local secretary, Mr. S. T. Chown, read a letter from the Hon. T. W. McGarry saying he was unfortunately obliged to undergo another slight operation, whereby it would be impossible for him to do any public speaking for some time. He trusted the members of County Council would see their way clear to make the grant requested of them. The patriotic needs of Ontario would amount to $6,000,000 this year. Mr. McGarry observed that he would be greatly disappointed if Renfrew county did not vote the money, believing nobody would suffer from it.

Mr. W. R. White, the dean of the legal profession of Pembroke, was the next speaker. He believed himself the oldest or one of the oldest native-born citizens of Renfrew county. No man could take a greater interest in the county than he did, who had seen it rise from earliest beginnings to the present condition of prosperity in towns, villages and farming communities. He had seen men living in the first houses with scooped roofs; now they lived in two-storey brick houses with every convenience. We had now everything except good roads, and were to have them later on. He felt impelled most strongly to urge upon the County Council the propriety and duty of making this grant. When the call came for volunteers there was a tacit agreement made with every man who had wife or children, mother or other dependent relatives that this Patriotic Fund would be raised and dependents looked after. We should fail in our duty if not carrying out that agreement to the letter. We had in the county some people of foreign origin, but Mr. White believed all to be loyal. We had been shown how Britain was right in going into this war, but it was enough for him to know that Britain was in it. If his father were alive today and was attacked by roughs, he as a son would go to the rescue without stopping to question whether the old man had started the row. (Laughter.) County Councillors needed to have no fear that if voting the amount of money proposed their constituents would go back on them. The price of all farm produce had advanced, and in order to pay the tax the farmer's wife needed only to raise one more turkey. The best Government was our own municipal government; therefore the best way to raise this money was by the municipality. Councillors were right on the spot and knew just how far they could go. Mr. White read some pointed excerpts, quite apropos, from a sermon by an American clergyman.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop, M.L.A., thought that all should be ready to fight, work or pay. We could save, because silver bullets might yet play a big part in this war. National Service had been inaugurated to bring more closely to us the fact that we could do one of these things in this struggle. The fellow who made the real and in many cases the supreme sacrifice worked for $1.10 a day that our liberties and privileges might be protected and safeguarded. He was sure the people of Renfrew county would rise to the occasion and do handsomely, and he had yet to hear of one citizen or taxpayer of Pembroke saying the taxation was more than should have been put on.

Reeve Moffatt of Pembroke expressed himself as not at all obliged to his friend of the Eganville Leader. He had on more than one occasion said in connection with the town grant that he thought it was up to the Government to see and look after dependents of soldiers. After more light on the subject and more consideration he had no hesitation in saying that he had changed his mind. (Applause). When convinced that he was wrong he was not ashamed to change his mind, nor not ashamed to acknowledge it. He had no hesitation in saying he was thoroughly in accord with any grant the Council might make, and they couldn't make it too big to please him. The hour was late, and he thought every point well covered by the speakers that had preceded him. He did not think there was anything else for the Council to do; it was up to it to vote the money. They owed the bill and should pay it. All the Council wanted to know was that the bill was correct, and he did not think the County Council would have any hesitation in taking the certificate presented this evening. Mr. Brennan and he had advocated the giving of $150,000 at the last meeting, but did not feel justified in bringing it in in the form of a motion, for the Council was a dying one. He had not changed his mind since then one particle. He was prepared to vote $150,000 on the morrow and make it $200,000 if needed. He did not think any member of the County Council would differ much from him. If there were any who objected to it other members would try to convince them of the error of their ways. He thought the county the proper place for the money to come from. The Patriotic Fund was administered more economically than any other fund had been, and he thought more economically than any Government would do it, whether Grit or Tory.

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior expressed pleasure in being present and listening to the very instructive addresses given; he was also pleased to meet the different reeves. He was not present to speak on the subject of a grant, considering it more his duty to speak to that in Pembroke, but would like to substantiate a statement Mr. Moffatt had just made. Last October different sums had been mentioned, and he was proud of Mr. Moffatt in having the courage of his convictions and saying we should give $150,000 at least. In Arnprior there were sixty cases depending on the Patriotic Fund, and with prices so high those dependents could not exist without it. It was a very necessary thing. Mr. Brennan felt the people of Canada could do more than they had done, and if not doing more there would be a danger of undoing much already done; therefore he thought Renfrew could vote at least $150,000.

Deputy-Reeve Smallfield of Renfrew observed that others had shared in the views of the Eganville Leader as to the methods of raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds, and intimated that he was one of them, though having since changed his mind, after thinking how much better the funds were administered and how much the country was saving. He thought he could say that outside of that one paper the reeves would have all the newspapers of Renfrew county at their back and in their defence if making the grant proposed. Fifteen years ago the County Council had met in regular session in Renfrew for the promotion of the good roads ideal; now the same body was met here on a still more worthy object, and he felt the address delivered by Mr. King would have effect. The speaker who had said there would be no opposition in the County Council to the grant Mr. Smallfield believed was right.

During the evening vocal solos were sung by Mrs. Mansfield and Mr. Stratton, with Mr. H. W. Kearney as accompanist.

For a while a number of ladies listened to the post-prandial oratory, occupying seats in the wing.

The national anthem was sung at 1.45 o'clock.

HAVE YOU ECZEMA?

Would you like to end that terrible itching, that burning pain; to heal those horrid sores?

You have tried all sorts of fatty ointments, lotions and powders. Put them aside now and give Nature a chance as represented by Zam-Buk.

Zam-Buk is made from herbal essences; is a natural healer. Is not something you have to send to the end of the world for, and pay a heavy price! Every druggist will sell you Zam-Buk and for 50c. only. Just give it a fair trial and incidently give yourself ease by the quickest route. See name on box:—

ZAM-BUK

WINTRY WOOLENS

Best Canadian and American Fashions to make from

The largest lot of Woollens in the Ottawa Valley to choose from.

John Mitchell

The Ladies' and Gents' Tailor

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION DOLLARS.

The grant of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for 1917 by the Quebec Legislature is a most cheering indication of the value placed on the work of the Fund by the Government of Sr Lomer Gouin, and may be taken as an evidence also of the growing realization in the province of what demands the war is making on our wealth in money. The Ontario Legislature is making a grant of the same size, and there is a tendency on the part of all the Provincial Governments to aid this meritorious work.

Quebec raised more money in 1916 than was needed to make provision for her own families, and the surplus was devoted to the Western Provinces, where enlistments were above the average. It is probable that a similar condition will arise in 1917.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

D 3965

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

REQUESTS

THE PEOPLE OF CANADA TO

BEGIN NOW

TO SAVE MONEY FOR THE

NEXT WAR LOAN

JAN. 9. 1917

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE
OTTAWA

PATRIOTIC BANQUET

(Continued from Page One)

grounds for public men to stand upon, namely, the ground of common patriotism and the service of common humanity. So Mr. King asked all present to look at the matter from that point of view. They should not think of what some back township might think, but what the country as a whole needed. This was the 50th anniversary of our Dominion. For fifty years we had watched this young country grow stronger and stronger, extend its lines from ocean to ocean, develop its resources and all we possessed as Canadians. Why had we the opportunity to enjoy the wonderful progress? We had been able to sit back and consider only ourselves. Why? If anyone present had not asked that question let it be asked now and see where the British army and navy came in and see what the British Empire meant. Then in this year of all years we should help to fight the battle for the greater freedom of mankind. If ever there was a call for the people to rise and respond, it was the call from across the seas to the people of Canada. The people of Canada were freer and happier, better off in institutions and more advanced in community life than the people of any other country on the face of the earth; we belonged to two stocks fighting together in Europe today to retain the liberties of the world. Let us remember that this was the 50th anniversary the golden epoch of our country, so far, and in making our gifts let us have that fact in consideration. We all wanted to see this war brought to an end as speedily as possible. What was going to end it? There was no doubt Germany was beginning to feel the pinch on her resources. Her credit was beginning to shrink just as her food and her munitions were shrinking. As we approached the time of settlement what were the factors that were going to make the nations stop? Unfortunately one or the other was to be driven into a position of despair. It was when one opponent saw his last cent going and that the other fellow had plenty that a man was driven to despair. That was the position in Europe today. What would make the German Empire think twice? It was that here in Canada, in Australia, in Africa, anywhere the British flag flew, appeals could be made year after year with what results? That the givings of money increased. That was what would make nations think and that was what we must do at the present time. We must seek to double the amount, treble it if we could, so that reading the writing on the wall, Germany might see that the British Empire had resources and means unlimited, as well as spirit and pluck. Mr. King wondered if any of us, after 2½ years, appreciated the magnitude of this conflict, the magnitude not only in size of armies, but its meaning in the history of the world. It was something so large that it was difficult with us, accustomed to deal in small things, to appreciate it. If we could see it today as men of 100 years hence would see it, we should see it as a conflict between two civilizations—an old civilization in conflict with the new epoch of modern times. We should see these two great periods of time, these two conflicting epochs of civilization, waging war with one another and the whole of history for the next hundred years depending on the outcome of that conflict. This was what our men were giving their lives for. Mr. King quoted lines from "Locksley Hall" in which Tennyson dipped into the future and saw a vision of the world and wonders to be. These he said were lines written in the days of Queen Victoria of the present great conflict in Europe. When Tennyson wrote these lines men thought his imagination was mad, and at the time there wasn't even an airship constructed. As that picture had come true, perhaps another picture by Tennyson would also come true, and we should see the battle flag furled, with the parliament of man and the federation of the world. There was in Locksley Hall something to give us heart, courage and reason to do our utmost in the present struggle. If after this fight was over, war was going to end and we were going to approach nearer to the parliament of man and the federation of the world, then perhaps the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of human lives in the interest of humanity would not have been altogether in vain. Federation of the world was the ultimate aim of the British Empire, but there were two ways of world domination—one the force of arms, the other the force of example. Germany had tried the method of force of arms. On the other hand, take the British Empire. Was there anything in connection with the whole world so remarkable as the sight of people of the Empire, scattered throughout the world, coming forward once the war broke out, regiment after regiment, to join together in the battlefields of Flanders and elsewhere solely at the call of duty, solely because they cherished like ideals of liberty and freedom? That was the most magnificent spectacle in the whole of this vast world struggle. Under the stress of war nations brought together today to fight against Germany had been put in precisely the same position. All of these countries together had formed a common council, united for purposes of defence, carrying out one single program, each retaining its own individual identity, all united for the purpose of fighting a common enemy. Were we to suppose that when the war was over this was going to be lost? Were nations brought together, cherishing one ideal, going to dissolve and disappear? These nations, he thought, would form some kind of compact, with each maintaining its own identity, but united to defeat the common enemy of mankind. Thus the poet's dream might be fulfilled. The present struggle was between two different systems—one military domination, the other the preservation of individual liberty. The whole course of future history would depend on which ultimately triumphed. It was for us, in whatever capacity we could, to throw our weight into the scale and help it one way or the other. All were in a position to do something, and the extent to which a man did what he could to that extent he was helping the great cause for which the Allies were fighting. Gentlemen present had started a campaign for the Patriotic Fund; let them see to it that it did not end without achieving the end set. (Loud and prolonged applause.)

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior proposed "The Allied Forces," calling upon Captain McPherson to respond. Stories were told by this returned warrior of the battlefield—stories interesting and thrilling. He thought that if a man "could go through France with nothing else to do and take a note-book along, he could write volumes on what happened over there." The magnitude of the war was what impressed one more than anything else. The men in the ranks there placed great reliance in the Patriotic Fund. Captain McPherson did not think the Government ought to raise the money by taxation. It was a duty of a grateful people to give to these men. And returned men should benefit from the fund. In connection with an association of returned men at Ottawa, he could see that men should not be struck off the list until they had secured positions. He had seen in the war zone what the Red Cross society meant. Soldiers appreciated the work of women in making helmets and mufflers and socks. There was nothing worse to march on than a pair of socks with a darn in them. Captain McPherson told of the great sacrifices being made in France, where there were today a million widows. He read a letter written by a French officer throwing many vivid side-lights upon the war. In connection with the war there were three things for all to do—fight, work or pay.

Captain Kennedy told one long humorous story of the war; he like Captain McPherson showing himself by his recital to be a man of culture, character and resource. His injuries in the war included the loss of an eye. He had been in front trenches, but considered that no great honor, because the Germans put machine guns and a few men in front trenches, and supposing the British to do the same, throw more shells into supporting trenches. A winter on Salisbury Plains was worse than anything he had ever experienced in France in the way of discomfort. In crossing the Channel he had the honor of being sick next to a Major-General. Pictures he had seen of trenches looked like a garden of Versailles; when he arrived at the trenches he found them somewhat different. Artillery duels were really a pounding of the infantry, the guns usually being hidden somewhere away in the distance and safe from harm. He paid a tribute to the Red Cross system—"the most perfect system in the world today." Nothing could have saved him after his serious wounds except the attention he received all along the line from field to hospital. Captain Kennedy declared that one had to go to France before knowing what sacrifice or hardship meant. Complaints were heard in England and in Canada; never a murmur from the French people. He did not call the raising of $150,000 in Renfrew county sacrifice; rather was it the irreducible minimum.

Mr. J. W. Smith, chairman of the Pembroke committee, was next heard from. It was a great pleasure and a great honor, he said, for him to be present as chairman of the Pembroke Patriotic Committee. There were present as guests the members of the County Council, assembled to deliberate upon the subject of assistance to the Canadian Red Cross and Patriotic funds. Boys and men in great numbers had enlisted in Renfrew county; drilled here and in England, and finally found their way into the front line of trenches. When the call came to go over the trenches and charge the enemy was there any faltering on the part of the men of Renfrew county? No. They went with the courage of lions and all the enthusiasm of men who knew they were fighting in a just and righteous cause. He did not think he could say anything that would impress the County Council more. The members of County Council were not wanting in patriotism and loyalty and they had the price. Mr. Smith then proposed "The County Council," coupling with the toast the names of Reeve Connelly of Cobden and Reeve Davidson of Westmeath.

Mr. Connelly told of the County Council being made up of 34 men—the most intelligent men in the county of Renfrew. (Laughter). If not, that was what they should be. If not the most intelligent men they were the biggest-hearted men in the county. No one was more loyal or patriotic than the members of County Council. Nine of those men came from the towns and villages; 25 from the rural municipalities; so that there was one assembly in Ontario anyway where the farmers were in the majority. Someone had said that in the past the farmers had not done their part in raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds. This was not because of an unwillingness; there was nobody more willing; it was because they were not organized. This was why the farmers had fallen short. He thought that after the Council meeting closed on Thursday or Friday they would have granted a sum this county would not be ashamed of. (Applause). We were not nearly at the close of the war, but we could say there had been at least a foundation laid—a most costly one—laid with blood and tears. The man today not willing to pay one dollar on every thousand of assessment, or $5 on every $5,000 of assessment, should, as Mr. J. Lockie Wilson had said in Cobden, be branded with the mark of Cain. Some people said that women getting money out of the Patriotic Fund were getting more money to spend than when their husbands were at home. Why should they not have more? All others were having more since the war started. And did anyone mean to tell him that women and children left behind should have less than other people? In Renfrew county 152 mothers were now putting their children to bed without a father to kiss them good-night. He believed that every reeve in the County Council, after listening to Mr. King's inspiring address, would be ready to do his part — vote a sum making this county of Renfrew proud of those 34 men.

Reeve Davidson observed that the payment of expenses in connection with the distribution of the Patriotic Fund had been well explained; that it was a mere trifle also the necessity of the Red Cross for the relief and comfort of the soldiers who had gone to the front; so that there was left very little for him, the representative of the highest assessed municipality in the county, to say. The Patriotic Fund he knew to be a success; we could not get along without it. The ladies of the different municipalities deserved great credit for what they were doing for the soldiers. In every corner they were always knitting and sewing and sending away supplies. As representative of Westmeath he believed a liberal grant should be made to the Patriotic Fund. It deserved all that could be given it. Men like Mr. White and himself couldn't go to the front, but if forty years younger there is where they would be.

Mr. Armon Burwash of Arnprior had no fault to find with anything said in the address except that the sum mentioned as Renfrew county's contribution was not big enough. He was sorry the sum was not at least $50,000 more. He had a letter from Mr. Finnie, general manager of the Bank of Ottawa, dealing with the Patriotic Fund, but it was too long to read at this meeting and he would give it to his friend, Mr. Brennan, to assist in the deliberations on the following day. Some held that the Government should supply these funds, but the Government could not administer them so efficiently and the cost would be greater. Mr. Burwash took exception to the Eganville Leader's article, declaring that the Government if raising the money would have to raise about $35,000,000, and have to take it from the people, and perhaps have to resort to direct taxation. Renfrew county's share would perhaps be $150,000 or $250,000, with about the same amount for expense of administering it. It was up to the County Council to keep that in mind when coming to deal with the subject. Mr. King had asked Renfrew to show an example as being one of the first to act. The biggest county in Ontario, with big men of big heart, should, Mr. Burwash thought, give a big sum.

The local secretary, Mr. S. T. Chown, read a letter from the Hon. T. W. McGarry saying he was unfortunately obliged to undergo another slight operation, whereby it would be impossible for him to do any public speaking for some time. He trusted the members of County Council would see their way clear to make the grant requested of them. The patriotic needs of Ontario would amount to $6,000,000 this year. Mr. McGarry observed that he would be greatly disappointed if Renfrew county did not vote the money, believing nobody would suffer from it.

Mr. W. R. White, the dean of the legal profession of Pembroke, was the next speaker. He believed himself the oldest or one of the oldest native-born citizens of Renfrew county. No man could take a greater interest in the county than he did, who had seen it rise from earliest beginnings to the present condition of prosperity in towns, villages and farming communities. He had seen men living in the first houses with scooped roofs; now they lived in two-storey brick houses with every convenience. We had now everything except good roads, and were to have them later on. He felt impelled most strongly to urge upon the County Council the propriety and duty of making this grant. When the call came for volunteers there was a tacit agreement made with every man who had wife or children, mother or other dependent relatives that this Patriotic Fund would be raised and dependents looked after. We should fail in our duty if not carrying out that agreement to the letter. We had in the county some people of foreign origin, but Mr. White believed all to be loyal. We had been shown how Britain was right in going into this war, but it was enough for him to know that Britain was in it. If his father were alive today and was attacked by roughs, he as a son would go to the rescue without stopping to question whether the old man had started the row. (Laughter.) County Councillors needed to have no fear that if voting the amount of money proposed their constituents would go back on them. The price of all farm produce had advanced, and in order to pay the tax the farmer's wife needed only to raise one more turkey. The best Government was our own municipal government; therefore the best way to raise this money was by the municipality. Councillors were right on the spot and knew just how far they could go. Mr. White read some pointed excerpts, quite apropos, from a sermon by an American clergyman.

Mr. E. A. Dunlop, M.L.A., thought that all should be ready to fight, work or pay. We could save, because silver bullets might yet play a big part in this war. National Service had been inaugurated to bring more closely to us the fact that we could do one of these things in this struggle. The fellow who made the real and in many cases the supreme sacrifice worked for $1.10 a day that our liberties and privileges might be protected and safeguarded. He was sure the people of Renfrew county would rise to the occasion and do handsomely, and he had yet to hear of one citizen or taxpayer of Pembroke saying the taxation was more than should have been put on.

Reeve Moffatt of Pembroke expressed himself as not at all obliged to his friend of the Eganville Leader. He had on more than one occasion said in connection with the town grant that he thought it was up to the Government to see and look after dependents of soldiers. After more light on the subject and more consideration he had no hesitation in saying that he had changed his mind. (Applause). When convinced that he was wrong he was not ashamed to change his mind, nor not ashamed to acknowledge it. He had no hesitation in saying he was thoroughly in accord with any grant the Council might make, and they couldn't make it too big to please him. The hour was late, and he thought every point well covered by the speakers that had preceded him. He did not think there was anything else for the Council to do; it was up to it to vote the money. They owed the bill and should pay it. All the Council wanted to know was that the bill was correct, and he did not think the County Council would have any hesitation in taking the certificate presented this evening. Mr. Brennan and he had advocated the giving of $150,000 at the last meeting, but did not feel justified in bringing it in in the form of a motion, for the Council was a dying one. He had not changed his mind since then one particle. He was prepared to vote $150,000 on the morrow and make it $200,000 if needed. He did not think any member of the County Council would differ much from him. If there were any who objected to it other members would try to convince them of the error of their ways. He thought the county the proper place for the money to come from. The Patriotic Fund was administered more economically than any other fund had been, and he thought more economically than any Government would do it, whether Grit or Tory.

Reeve Brennan of Arnprior expressed pleasure in being present and listening to the very instructive addresses given; he was also pleased to meet the different reeves. He was not present to speak on the subject of a grant, considering it more his duty to speak to that in Pembroke, but would like to substantiate a statement Mr. Moffatt had just made. Last October different sums had been mentioned, and he was proud of Mr. Moffatt in having the courage of his convictions and saying we should give $150,000 at least. In Arnprior there were sixty cases depending on the Patriotic Fund, and with prices so high those dependents could not exist without it. It was a very necessary thing. Mr. Brennan felt the people of Canada could do more than they had done, and if not doing more there would be a danger of undoing much already done; therefore he thought Renfrew could vote at least $150,000.

Deputy-Reeve Smallfield of Renfrew observed that others had shared in the views of the Eganville Leader as to the methods of raising money for the Patriotic and Red Cross funds, and intimated that he was one of them, though having since changed his mind, after thinking how much better the funds were administered and how much the country was saving. He thought he could say that outside of that one paper the reeves would have all the newspapers of Renfrew county at their back and in their defence if making the grant proposed. Fifteen years ago the County Council had met in regular session in Renfrew for the promotion of the good roads ideal; now the same body was met here on a still more worthy object, and he felt the address delivered by Mr. King would have effect. The speaker who had said there would be no opposition in the County Council to the grant Mr. Smallfield believed was right.

During the evening vocal solos were sung by Mrs. Mansfield and Mr. Stratton, with Mr. H. W. Kearney as accompanist.

For a while a number of ladies listened to the post-prandial oratory, occupying seats in the wing.

The national anthem was sung at 1.45 o'clock.

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION DOLLARS.

The grant of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund for 1917 by the Quebec Legislature is a most cheering indication of the value placed on the work of the Fund by the Government of Sr Lomer Gouin, and may be taken as an evidence also of the growing realization in the province of what demands the war is making on our wealth in money. The Ontario Legislature is making a grant of the same size, and there is a tendency on the part of all the Provincial Governments to aid this meritorious work.

Quebec raised more money in 1916 than was needed to make provision for her own families, and the surplus was devoted to the Western Provinces, where enlistments were above the average. It is probable that a similar condition will arise in 1917.

HAVE YOU ECZEMA?

Would you like to end that terrible itching, that burning pain; to heal those horrid sores?

You have tried all sorts of fatty ointments, lotions and powders. Put them aside now and give Nature a chance as represented by Zam-Buk.

Zam-Buk is made from herbal essences; is a natural healer. Is not something you have to send to the end of the world for, and pay a heavy price! Every druggist will sell you Zam-Buk and for 50c. only. Just give it a fair trial and incidently give yourself ease by the quickest route. See name on box:—

ZAM-BUK

WINTRY WOOLENS

Best Canadian and American Fashions to make from

The largest lot of Woollens in the Ottawa Valley to choose from.

John Mitchell

The Ladies' and Gents' ...

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Volume D 7
Speeches (b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921
24. 1919

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1919?

D 3965

SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

WLM KING

Re: Social Reconstruction

✓ Industrial Relations
✓ Mr King's Leadership of the Liberal Party
✓ Social Reform
✓ Govt - Reconstruction &c.
Speech by Hon. King re Germany, Power of National Free. Reconstruction &c

(1919)

At the instance of a ruthless military autocracy, Germany in 1914, set at naught every principle of right and justice upon which alone any civilization worthy the name can be founded. In a lawless and ambitious design, which was little short of world conquest, she hurled her armies in all directions against helpless neighboring states like Serbia and Belgium, and more powerful nations such as France and Russia. She believed she had only to possess dominion over Central Europe to gain that wider influence which in time would enable her to expand her imperial power to the uttermost parts of the earth.

In this, the most unprincipled of aims and unbounded of ambitions, Germany staked her all on a belief in the power of Material Force. In the years immediately preceding the outbreak of war, she had contrived, by every means known to human ingenuity, to make of her vast industrial organization a mighty instrument at the service of Force. She had built up a government within industry, just as she built up government within the state, on the model of autocracy. The destinies of the many lay in the hands of the few. Her political autocrats and her industrial autocrats were united in the aim of making of industry one vast machine for the destruction of humanity.

Her railroads were so conttructed as to serve as highways for the rapid transportation of her marauding armies to the confines of every nation that bordered on German territory; and were so managed as to place their absolute control in the hands of the dominating military caste. Her fleets were designed less with a view of developing peaceful intercourse in trade and commerce than with the object of giving expression on the high seas to her desire for world conquest and world domination. Her mines were thought of as so much fuel for the instruments of death, and so controlled as to leave the workers without a voice in the ends which their labor was intended to serve. Her factories were so constructed as to admit of instantaneous change into munition plants and arsenals. Their control, too, centred around an industrial policy which, while professing to make the State the guardian of the working classes, gave to the political and industrial autocrats absolute control over the lives and well-being of every man, woman, and child within the German Empire.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

To-day, Germany lies prostrate before the world. Her political autocrats and her industrial autocrats are listening to the curses and the hisses, not alone of the peoples they sought to destroy, but of the German people as well. The rolling stock of her railroads already in large part has been handed over to peoples prepared to use this equipment in the service of industry rather than in the service of war, peoples who at this moment are carrying back into the heart of Germany, across those very highways whence Germany's invading armies came, food for the starving remnants of her population. Germany's fleet has passed from the service of lawless ambition into the safe keeping of the Mistress of the Seas, there awaiting the doom which other nations may pronounce. Her armies have been reduced from millions to thousands, and her industries, wherever they have been made to serve the purposes of war, are either being extinguished altogether or being put in a process of transformation which will make them hereafter the agencies for the promotion of Peace.

If this mighty transition has taken place, to what can it be attributed? To one thing, and one thing only: a love of Freedom, and a belief in the power of Truth and Justice as mightier than that of any material force which this world can create. The free peoples of the earth who have been arrayed against German aggression have had a conception of Freedom far beyond that which admits of autocratic control. They have had a conception of industry loftier and nobler than that of industry intended for the destruction of humanity. They have believed that industry was meant to serve, not to destroy, humanity.

We have come now to the days of Reconstruction. If out of the ruins which the War has heaped upon the world there is to be created a civilization worthy of the vast privation, the vast endurance, the vast suffering, and the vast sacrifice of life which have preserved the liberties which we still enjoy, it can only be through our keeping alive the spirit of those who have given their all in the cause of Freedom, and in seeking so to transform relations in human society as to bring them, in all that is fundamental, to a basis of what is right and just.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

I have spoken of Germany viewing industry as a vast enterprise to aid Material Force in the work of human destruction. Let us put that down, if you like, as the Prussian conception of industry. Having fought that view with our blood and treasure, we need not perhaps waste words upon seeking to refute it. Realizing, however, that the world war owed its origin to a belief in Force, combined with a perverted view of the processes of industry, and standing as we do to-day upon the threshold of Reconstruction, we do well to ask ourselves the question, What is our own conception of industry; and how far is it administering to the well-being of human society and the harmony of all classes comprising the nation.

The War, alas, has left one legacy of which the world is far from rid. Until it is swept away, all human society is menaced with a condition hardly different from that of war. When the armistice was signed on November 11th, all over this world men knelt before Almighty God in thanksgiving that Peace had again been restored to the world. But men had hardly risen from their knees, and lifted their eyes in the direction of the new horizon, ere they saw a tide of insurrection arising not less menacing in its possibilities, nor less brutal in its methods, than the vast tyranny which they thanked God had been overthrown. Need I remind you that the Treaty of Peace is not yet even signed; and what have we been witnessing in the few months which have elapsed since our rejoicings over the armistice? Each day, as our papers have mirrored the European situation, we have caught glimpses of this sweep of revolution which we speak so lightly of as the madness of a few unprincipled leaders or the evidence of growing industrial unrest. Even before the War had ended, it appeared in Russia like a cloud in the sky no larger than a man's hand. The cloud darkened; its area expanded; until to-day the whole sky of Europe is overcast. One day it is Russia, the next it is Germany, then it is Hungary, now it is Egypt. Even in the British Isles, the Parliament of Britain itself has stood well-nigh breathless wondering at what moment some fresh terror might be brought to its very doors.

Well, there is the situation, and we might as well look it bravely and squarely in the face. In part, it is the inevitable sequence of war and the legacy which war has left. Fundamentally, however, its cause is infinitely more far-reaching than that. It is a matter of existing industrial organization,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and of deep-rooted and long-seated injustices which an old order has helped to create and perpetuate, but which can have no enduring place in the new order that is to be.

So far as the War is responsible for the revolutionary methods which are being adopted by the undisciplined masses of the Old World, it is in what it has taught of a reliance upon force that the explanation lies. Through the necessity which Germany imposed upon the world of meeting force with force, men have been drilled and trained and disciplined in the use of arms and the application of force, and have come to believe that what has been necessary to serve the ends of nationality may be equally serviceable in serving the interests of class. Alas, that the multitude of men have not yet learned the truth of all.truths which this War has proclaimed: that he who liveth by the sword shall perish by the sword. Self-destruction alone can be the lot of any people, or of any class, who look to Might rather than to the power of Truth and Justice as the means of bringing about a change in the relations of men to each other which a better order of society may demand. To overthrow in the minds of men the false belief in the power of force, which the War has helped to intensify and engender, is as necessary to-day, if humanity is to be spared further slaughter and sorrow, as was the overthrow of the material power of Germany in the salvation of the world from Prussian domination.

How, then, is this belief in Force to be overthrown? One way, and one way only, is possible; and that is to subject our human, our social, and first and foremost our industrial relations to the scrutiny of an unbiassed judgment, and bring them into accord with what Truth and Justice may demand.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

11 Jan. 1919

Montreal Reform Club

D 3970

"RECONSTRUCTION IN CANADA"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[King - speeches]

Ottawa Citizen
January 13, 1919

'IZEN

Reconstruction in Canada

From address by Mr. W. L. MacKenzie King, at Montreal Reform Club, Jan. 11, 1919.

Reconstruction is something more than restoration. It is true that we have been spared the devastation of our lands and homes, the destruction of our factories, our mines, and railways, and all that ministers to community life, and have not, therefore, the problem of material restoration which confronts the war-swept areas of Eurpoe; but a problem of reconstruction we certainly have. The problem of reconstruction is profounder than mere restoration, even in Europe, where all today is ruin and desolation. It is the problem of establishing right relations between man and man in human society, and avoiding for all time to come the worship of those false gods, material wealth and material power, which alone are responsible for the hell into which this world has been plunged by Prussian ambition, Prussian greed, and Prussian barbarity.

Let me give you, not in my own words, but in the words of one of that vast army whose lives have been sacrificed that liberty may be preserved, what is the meaning of reconstruction as I conceive that term as applicable to conditions throughout the world and in our own land. In the London Weekly Times, of February 23, 1917, will be found the following immortal passage from the pen of a British officer who was wounded on the Somme:

We ought to recognize that the real struggle, in which this war is only an episode, is not merely between our own country and anything so unstable and transitory as modern Germany, but between permanent and irreconcilable claimants for the soul of man, and that what makes the German spirit dangerous is not that it is alien, but that it is horribly congenial to almost the whole modern world. For the spirit of German imperialism is too often the spirit of English and American industrialism, with all its cult of power as an end in itself, its coarse material standards, its subordination of personality to mechanism, its worship of an elaborate and soul-destroying organization. And if we feel that the absolute claim of personality, the preservation and development of spiritual freedom are worth any sacrifice in time of war, we ought equally to feel that they are worth any sacrifice in time of peace.

If we are to understand the meaning of the word "reconstruction", we must ask ourselves the question. What is it for which they have fought and died, our heroic dead, the chivalry of our race? Did they leave these shores — many of them never to return—to fight for a civilization to be estimated in tons or calculated in dollars? Or was it for the maintenance of a great ideal, vaguely defined perhaps, as most ideals are, but none the less capable of definite expression in some such language as that which I have just read: the making of this world a place in which happiness is inseparable from freedom; and good-will, not hate, the actuating motive in the relations of men.

* * *

Let us consider, first, our industrial relations. To earn a livelihood is the first of all necessities; and industry, more than any other institution, touches the lives of the mass of men and women. Here, more than anywhere else, we must seek to effect the realization of that dream of good-will between man and man, which is to make of our land a happy and blessed place in which to dwell. If this dream is to be realized, we shall have to begin the work of reconstruction in industry with a wholly new conception of its aim and purpose. What has been—one might still say, what is — the accepted view of industry? Is it not too largely that of a revenue-producing process, whereby some men are enabled to earn a bare livelihood, and others to reap and amass enormous fortunes? Consider for a moment what industry is. It is the means by which the resources of the earth are transformed by human intelligence and human labor into commodities and services available for human use. In that vast process of transformation, multitudes of men and women spend the whole of their lives. Upon the strength and persistence of their efforts depends the satisfaction of the needs and comforts of the whole of human society. This being the case, should our conception of industry not be changed? Instead of regarding it primarily as an institution for the purpose of creating wealth, to be divided as economic necessity and power may determine, should industry not be regarded as in the nature of social service, and the workers in industry as truly regarded the sustainers of life as those who have served in its armies and navies are its noble defenders?

* * *

Is our present organization of industry not an evidence that capital has assumed a monopoly of control? Do not capitalist investors choose the boards of directors; the management and officers, who carry on the business as in the interests of capital investors, with such regard only for the interests of the other parties to industry as economic or other necessity may require them to take?

There are four parties to industry; not one, or two, or three. There is capital, labor, management, and the community. Each one fulfills its necessary function, and each is deserving of recognition in the determination of policy in a matter which is of vital concern to all. Capital receives its right to participation in control because of investment. This right it receives over and above its reward in the form of interest or profits for the service it renders. But if the owners of capital are investors in industry, are not the workers in industry also investors: life and labor investors? And as such they ought to be entitled to some measure of control in fixing the terms of their employment and working and living conditions, as well as to the reward which they receive in the form of wages. If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

* * *

In our reconstruction of industry, we must aim at bringing about a system of joint control which will involve a change in the status of the worker, and give wider recognition to the rights of the community. We must make the worker a partner, admitting him, along with capital and management and representatives of the community, to round table conference in all that pertains to the conditions and circumstances of his employment.

* * *

Revolutionary State Socialism, Bolshevism, I. W. W.ism, Syndicalism, and all like movements are natural reactions against the monopoly of control exercised over industry by capital in the past. Wherein they are all mistaken and doomed to utter failure, is that they fail to recognize that the remedy for one kind of monopoly does not lie in establishing a monopoly of another kind. It lies in destroying monopoly altogether, and introducing, in its stead, a conception of partnership, with round table conference, in which the several parties to industry will be rewarded in accordance with the social service they render. Let there be no mistake: neither America nor Canada will escape these inevitable reactions unless our industrial institutions, like our political, are brought into fuller harmony with the democratic sentiments of the times.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D3971A

D 3971

MONDAY,
JANUARY 13, 1919.

EDITORIAL

Mr. Mackenzie King's Powerful Speech

We are giving a full report in this issue of the speech which Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King delivered at the Reform Club on Saturday. It was a speech of remarkable interest and power upon the greatest problem now before the leading nations of the world—that of providing a solution for the relations between capital and labor. Mr. King has had remarkable experience in dealing with this problem in some notable cases in the United States, and he is therefore able to deal with the subject not only from the theoretical point of view, but from the point of view of practical knowledge. He believes that the problem is capable of solution, and he tells of the methods by which he believes a satisfactory working arrangement can be effected that will safeguard the rights of both employers and employed. The speech is a brilliant contribution to a discussion which is absorbing everybody's thoughts, and we believe our readers will appreciate the lengthy report we give of it.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Speeches, (V.3. 26, J 5).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D3911B

LA RECONSTRUCTION

Dans le magnifique discours qu'il a prononcé au Club de Réforme, l'hon. Mackenzie-King, ancien ministre du Travail, a présenté la reconstruction comme offrant deux aspects, deux conceptions différents, qu'il a définis comme suit :

"Il est déjà apparent que, pour ce qui est de la signification fondamentale du mot "Reconstruction". il y a deux écoles aux pensées tout à fait différentes. Il y a celle qui ne pense à la reconstruction que sous le côté matériel, une suprématie commerciale et industrielle et des boycottages économiques, l'établissement d'un tarif élevé pour la sauvegarde des intérêts investis, de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles pour aider à l'augmentation des fortunes existantes ; et l'autre école, celle qui pense tout d'abord aux ressources humaines,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Speeches, (M.G. 26, J 5).

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3771C

La Patrie - Montreal
January 13, 1919

LA RECONSTRUCTION

Causerie de l'hon. Mac-Kenzie, au club de Réforme.--L'après-guerre.

Grands problèmes

Le jour où le patron comprendra les griefs de la classe ouvière et que les relations entre les deux seront plus courtoises et plus amicales, ce jour-là, on aura presque trouvé la solution du problème économique et social qui semble aller de mal en pis par le monde entier, a déclaré samedi soir à l'issu d'un dîner que le club de Réforme lui offrait, M. Mackenzie King, ancien ministre du Travail, dans le cabinet Laurier.

M. King a traité de la "Reconstruction" d'après-guerre et il a intercallé dans son sujet les grandes questions qui immédiatement s'y annexent.

Tout d'abord ,il a défini les deux mots de rajustement et de reconstruction et a déclaré que le premier n'était qu'un fléchissement du second et qu'on ne pouvait rien attendre de profitable, parce qu'il serait vide de sens pratique et de progrès réel. La reconstruction dit plus que tous ses pseudonymes. Elle veut établir des relations plus étroites entre les hommes et la société. Elle désire détruire les fausses icônes. Enfin,son but est d'anihiler le préjugé qui crie que le bonheur du monde ne repose que sur la richesse matérielle et sur sa puissance aussi matérielle.

Ici, M. King, pour illustrer d'une façon plus claire sa théorie va chercher le soldat dans les tranchées qui a su combattre pour un idéal vrai et, par le fait même, a donné une explication de la reconstruction, en mourant pour le principe de liberté et de démocratie.

Lui seul, a compris ce mot, lui seul a su le débarrasser des définitions multiples dont on l'a trop embarrassé.

Partant de ce point, le conférencier a aussi parlé de l'industrie. — Elle est le moyen par lequel les ressources du sol sont transformées grâce au travail et à l'intelligence humaine, en choses utiles et nécessaires. Dans cet énorme creuset. hommes et femmes y dépensent leur activité et leur vie. De cette cohésion, de cette communion d'efforts, dépendent la réalisation des projets de bien-être de la société humaine. Comme on le voit, remarque M. Mackenzie King, l'industrie parait de prime abord n'être qu'une usine à richesses. Ne devrions-nous lui donner un sens moins étroit ? N'a-t-elle pas d'autre but que celui d'être contrôlée exclusievment par le capital ? L'industrie ne comprend-elle pas quatre facteurs importants : le capital, le travail, la direction et la communauté, qui sont inhérents les uns aux autres et qui dépendent des uns des autres.

La communauté, étant un des rouages nécessaires à cette grosse machine, ne doit-elle pas avoir sa part, puisqu'elle procure la mise en mouvement et le fonctionnement de celle-ci. De tout temps, on a constaté que le capital et le monopole avaient lutté pour se maintenir sans le secours de la communauté et en l'oppressant. De cette friction naquit le Socialisme, dont la mission était de faire contrôler l'industrie par la communauté. A ce système s'agrippa une foule d'autres systèmes connus sous les noms de socialisme révolutionnaire, I.W.W., bolchévisme et syndicalisme. On voulait résoudre le problème d'hier par un autre tout aussi compliqué. Le monopole de l'Etat ne réussira pas et il est voué à la faillite, car il veut détruire un monopole par un autre monopole.

Le vrai remède est simple. Il consiste à détruire se système monopolisateur. En établissant un régime social équilibré et qui puisse comprendre que toutes les classes de la société doivent voir leurs efforts récompensés dans une juste et équitable mesure.

Le jour donc où le monde se reconstruira par cette méthode, il aura solutionné les difficultés dans lesquelles il se débat actuellement.

En face de tout ce que nous voyons aujourd'hui dans notre pays, ne sommes-nous pas en droit de demander à notre gouvernement ce qu'il a accompli pour améliorer la situation ? En Angleterre, aux Etats-Unis, on s'est préoccupé de ces problèmes vitaux. On s'est rendu compte que la communauté devait avoir sa large part de l'industrie. On a mis de côté les fausses définitions de richesse, pour ne capter que celles qui assurent une vie réelle et non artificielle.

L'homme a été considéré comme un être humain et comme quelqu'un qui ne vit pas que de pain. La matière, la brutale matière ne doit pas être le seul apanage de l'homme, il est d'autres idéaux où chacun aspire et veut arriver.

En terminant, M. Mackenzie rend hommage à Sir Wilfrid Laurier et à ses prédécesseurs libéraux et déclare que tous ces problèmes économico-sociaux seront résolus au Canada, si les Canadiens suivent le panage blanc de celui qui fut un progressiste et rien qu'un progressiste logique, raisonné et raisonnable.

LA RECONSTRUCTION

Dans le magnifique discours qu'il a prononcé au Club de Réforme, l'hon. Mackenzie-King, ancien ministre du Travail, a présenté la reconstruction comme offrant deux aspects, deux conceptions différents, qu'il a définis comme suit :

"Il est déjà apparent que, pour ce qui est de la signification fondamentale du mot "Reconstruction". il y a deux écoles aux pensées tout à fait différentes. Il y a celle qui ne pense à la reconstruction que sous le côté matériel, une suprématie commerciale et industrielle et des boycottages économiques, l'établissement d'un tarif élevé pour la sauvegarde des intérêts inyestis, de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles pour aider à l'augmentation des fortunes existantes ; et l'autre école, celle qui pense tout d'abord aux ressources humaines, des nations humaines et de la vie humaine.

"Pour la première école, augmenter dans la production et la richesse matérielle, c'est le principal but du gouvernement. Pour la seconde, le principal but du gouvernement est de s'élever dans le bonheur de l'humanité et d'améliorer le sort des individus. A quelle école allons-nous prêter allégeance à l'avenir ? Voilà la question, maintenant que la guerre est gagnée, que chaque homme devra décider pour lui-même, sans distinction des affiliations de partis ou des nouvelles allégeances et des étranges unions faites durant la guerre. Se ralliera-t-il au parti des rajustements qui est prêt à retourner à l'ancien ordre de choses, celui d'avant la guerre, où il ne semblait y avoir que les droits de propriété et les droits investis ; ou joindra-t-il les forces d'une véritable reconstruction, qui ne voit tout d'abord que les droits humains et le bonheur de l'humanité, qui ne regarde

M. Mackenzie-King déclare que la reconstruction qui s'impose à l'heure actuelle ne devra pas être seulement superficielle, mais elle devra satisfaire les aspirations des classes laborieuses, trop longtemps ignorées dans la direction du mouvement économique national. Ce sera bien de restaurer l'industrie, mais il faudra la restaurer en assurant aux travailleurs non pas seulement un salaire, mais aussi une part dans la direction. Dans l'industrie reconstruite, l'ancien ministre veut voir participer les quatre associés naturels de l'industrie: le capital, le travail, la direction et la communauté.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3971 D

La Patrie - Montreal
January 13, 1919

LA RECONSTRUCTION

Causerie de l'hon. Mac-Kenzie, au club de Réforme.--L'après-guerre.

Grands problèmes

Le jour où le patron comprendra les griefs de la classe ouvière et que les relations entre les deux seront plus courtoises et plus amicales, ce jour-là, on aura presque trouvé la solution du problème économique et social qui semble aller de mal en pis par le monde entier, a déclaré samedi soir à l'issu d'un diner que le club de Réforme lui offrait, M. Mackenzie King, ancien ministre du Travail, dans le cabinet Laurier.

M. King a traité de la "Reconstruction" d'après-guerre et il a intercallé dans son sujet les grandes questions qui immédiatement s'y annexent.

Tout d'abord ,il a défini les deux mots de rajustement et de reconstruction et a déclaré que le premier n'était qu'un fléchissement du second et qu'on ne pouvait rien attendre de profitable, parce qu'il serait vide de sens pratique et de progrès réel. La reconstruction dit plus que tous ses pseudonymes. Elle veut établir des relations plus étroites entre les hommes et la société. Elle désire détruire les fausses icônes. Enfin,son but est d'anihiler le prejugé qui crie que le bonheur du monde ne repose que sur la richesse matérielle et sur sa puissance aussi matérielle.

Ici, M. King pour illustrer d'une façon plus claire sa théorie va chercher le soldat dans les tranchées qui a su combattre pour un idéal vrai et, par le fait même, a donné une explication de la reconstruction, en mourant pour le principe de liberté et de démocratie.

Lui seul, a compris ce mot, lui seul a su le débarrasser des définitions multiples dont on l'a trop embarrassé.

Partant de ce point, le conférencier a aussi parlé de l'industrie. — Elle est le moyen par lequel les ressources du sol sont transformées grâce au travail et à l'intelligence humaine, en choses utiles et nécessaires. Dans cet énorme creuset, hommes et femmes y dépensent leur activité et leur vie. De cette cohésion, de cette communion d'efforts, dépendent la réalisation des projets de bien-être de la société humaine. Comme on le voit, remarque M. Mackenzie King, l'industrie paraît de prime abord n'être qu'une usine à richesses. Ne devrions-nous lui donner un sens moins étroit ? N'a-t-elle pas d'autre but que celui d'être contrôlée exclusievment par le capital ? L'industrie ne comprend-elle pas quatre facteurs importants : le capital, le travail, la direction et la communauté, qui sont inhérents les uns aux autres et qui dépendent des uns des autres.

La communauté, étant un des rouages nécessaires à cette grosse machine, ne doit-elle pas avoir sa part, puisqu'elle procure la mise en mouvement et le fonctionnement de celle-ci. De tout temps, on a constaté que le capital et le monopole avaient lutté pour se maintenir sans le secours de la communauté et en l'oppressant. De cette friction naquit le Socialisme, dont la mission était de faire contrôler l'industrie par la communauté. A ce système s'agrippa une foule d'autres systèmes connus sous les noms de socialisme révolutionnaire, I.W.W., bolchévisme et syndicalisme. On voulait résoudre le problème d'hier par un autre tout aussi compliqué. Le monopole de l'Etat ne réussira pas et il est voué à la faillite, car il veut détruire un monopole par un autre monopole.

Le vrai remède est simple. Il consiste à détruire se système monopolisateur. En établissant un régime social équilibré et qui puisse comprendre que toutes les classes de la société doivent voir leurs efforts récompensés dans une juste et équitable mesure.

Le jour donc où le monde se reconstruira par cette méthode, il aura solutionné les difficultés dans lesquelles il se débat actuellement.

En face de tout ce que nous voyons aujourd'hui dans notre pays, ne sommes-nous pas en droit de demander à notre gouvernement ce qu'il a accompli pour améliorer la situation ? En Angleterre, aux Etats-Unis, on s'est préoccupé de ces problèmes vitaux. On s'est rendu compte que la communauté devait avoir sa large part de l'industrie. On a mis de côté les fausses définitions de richesse, pour ne capter que celles qui assurent une vie réelle et non artificielle.

L'homme a été considéré comme un être humain et comme quelqu'un qui ne vit pas que de pain. La matière, la brutale matière ne doit pas être le seul apanage de l'homme, il est d'autres idéaux où chacun aspire et veut arriver.

En terminant, M. Mackenzie rend hommage à Sir Wilfrid Laurier et à ses prédécesseurs libéraux et déclare que tous ces problèmes économico-sociaux seront résolus au Canada, si les Canadiens suivent le panage blanc de celui qui fut un progressiste et rien qu'un progressiste logique, raisonné et raisonnable.

des nations humaines et de la vie humaine.

"Pour la première école, augmenter dans la production et la richesse matérielle, c'est le principal but du gouvernement. Pour la seconde, le principal but du gouvernement est de s'élever dans le bonheur de l'humanité et d'améliorer le sort des individus. A quelle école allons-nous prêter allégeance à l'avenir ? Voilà la question, maintenant que la guerre est gagnée, que chaque homme devra décider pour lui-même, sans distinction des affiliations de partis ou des nouvelles allégeances et des étranges unions faites durant la guerre. Se ralliera-t-il au parti des rajustements qui est prêt à retourner à l'ancien ordre de choses, celui d'avant la guerre, où il ne semblait y avoir que les droits de propriété et les droits investis ; ou joindra-t-il les forces d'une véritable reconstruction, qui ne voit tout d'abord que les droits humains et le bonheur de l'humanité, qui ne regarde la reconstruction qui s'impose à l'heure actuelle ne devra pas être seulement superficielle, mais elle devra satisfaire les aspirations des classes laborieuses, trop longtemps ignorées dans la direction du mouvement économique national. Ce sera bien de restaurer l'industrie, mais il faudra la restaurer en assurant aux travailleurs non pas seulement un salaire, mais aussi une part dans la direction. Dans l'industrie reconstruite, l'ancien ministre veut voir participer les quatre associés naturels de l'industrie: le capital, le travail, la direction et la communauté.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D3971 E

Le Canada - Montreal
January 13, 1919

Notre part dans la reconstruction

Les problêmes de reconstruction sont de ceux qui sollicitent le plus en ce moment l'attention du public; et on lira avec intérêt la conférence qu'y a consacrée l'hon. McKenzie King, samedi, au Club de Réforme.

Le mot a du reste un caractère générique qui s'applique imparfaitement à la situation canadienne.

Nous n'avons, à vrai dire, rien ou peu à reconstruire au Canada; car nous n'avons pas été, dans notre propriété matérielle, atteints par la guerre.

Mais la reconstruction au Canada s'entend surtout dans le sens de notre réorganisation économique, car nos finances et notre industrie ont été bouleversées, et en quelque sorte transposées, durant la période des hostilités.

Et aussi, dans le sens plus large de notre participation aux travaux de reconstruction qui vont en Europe prendre de si gigantesques proportions.

Nous devons organiser notre labeur économique non seulement pour subvenir à nos propres besoins, ce qui serait facile; mais aussi pour nous mettre en mesure de répondre à la demande d'outre-mer, ce qui est illimité.

C'est dans ce sens plus large que le problême de reconstruction, étendu jusqu'à ces limites élargies, se doit présenter à notre esprit.

Le Canada peut produire en abondance non-seulement les vivres que l'Europe affamée par la guerre appelle à grands cris, mais encore une foule de produits essentiels et qui ont disparu là-bas sous la poussée incessante et destructive du grand conflit.

A-t-on mesuré le bouleversement causé en France par exemple, par une guerre aussi meurtrière ?

Non-seulement on a détruit des villes entières, mais on a encore détruit ou immobilisé les sources de la production, que ce soit l'usine démantelée ou le champ tout ravagé par les tranchées et les débris de la bataille.

La demande de la France, et des autres pays qui sont dans le même cas, aux nations productrices va être incessante et multiple.

C'est aux pays riches, surabondants comme le nôtre, qu'il importe de s'en prévaloir et de jouer tout leur rôle dans la grande période de reconstruction.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Le Canada - Montreal
January 13, 1919

D5777A

Quel est le remède à l'agitation sociale qui balaie actuellement le monde entier?

Parlant de la reconstruction, samedi soir au Club de Réforme, l'honorable MacKenzie-King déclare que ce n'est qu'en accordant au Travail ce qu'il demande et est en droit de demander, que nous mettrons un terme à la révolution sociale.

UNE JUSTE DEFINITION DE L'INDUSTRIE

L'honorable M. MacKenzie-King, ancien Ministre du Travail dans le gouvernement Laurier, était l'hôte d'honneur à un magnifique banquet donné samedi soir, au Club de Réforme sous la présidence de M. Alphonse Décary, C.R. Le brillant économiste canadien avait choisi comme sujet de sa conférence, "La Reconstruction", sujet vaste et profond où il a pu mettre ses innombrables connaissances du travail au service de son auditoire à qui il a exposé tout un programme de politique d'après-guerre.

Le thème principal de l'éloquent discours, dont on trouvera le texte plus bas, consistait dans les relations entre les ouvriers et les patrons, les revendications des premiers et le contrôle absolu des seconds; et il montra tout l'énorme travail qu'il faut faire dans l'industrie si l'on veut s'éviter les malheurs de l'agitation sociale qui désole actuellement une grande proportion des pays d'Europe.

Sur l'invitation du président, M. Chas. W. Taylor, premier vice-président, souhaita la bienvenue à M. MacKenzie King. Il sut rappeler en termes très appropriés les grands services rendus par l'hôte d'honneur pour le Canada et déclara tout le plaisir des convives de l'avoir au milieu d'eux.

Voici la conférence remarquable de M. MacKenzie King :

L'HONORABLE MACKENZIE-KING

Il y a quelque temps, un membre du gouvernement unioniste, parlant des problèmes auxquels le Canada devait faire face, déclara que ces problèmes ne comportaient aucunement la reconstruction mais le rajustement de la vie au Canada. Il paraît qu'en certains milieux on ne veut aucunement entendre parler de reconstruction, c'est pourquoi on a choisi un terme plus doux, le rajustement.

Cela m'amène justement au sujet de ma causerie de ce soir, dit l'orateur.

La guerre ne nous a-t-elle laissé qu'un désir de rajustement ? Ou, ce qu'elle nous a révélé de l'insuffisance de l'économie d'avant la guerre nous a-t-il déterminé de frapper profondément, de considérer les bases et de reconstruire notre foyer national d'une manière digne des sacrifices de nos braves soldats et marins pour le maintenir ?

Il est déjà apparent que, pour ce qui est de la signification fondamentale du mot "Reconstruction", il y a deux écoles aux pensées tout à fait différentes. Il y a celle qui ne pense à la reconstruction que sous le côté matériel, une suprématie commerciale et industrielle et des boycotages économiques, l'établissement d'un tarif élevé pour la sauvegarde des intérêts investis, de l'exploitation des ressources naturelles pour aider à l'augmentation des fortunes existantes ; et l'autre école, celle qui pense tout d'abord aux ressources humaines, des relations humaines et de la vie humaine.

Pour la première école, augmenter dans la production et la richesse matérielle, c'est le principal but du gouvernement. Pour la seconde, le principal but du gouvernement est de s'élever dans le bonheur de l'humanité et d'améliorer le sort des individus. A quelle école allons-nous prêter allégéance à l'avenir ? Voilà la question, maintenant que la guerre est gagnée, que chaque homme devra décider pour lui-même, sans distinction des affiliations de partis ou des nouvelles allégéances et des étranges unions faites durant la guerre. Se ralliera-t-il au parti des rajustements qui est prêt à retourner à l'ancien ordre de choses, celui d'avant la guerre, où il ne semblait y avoir que les droits de propriété et les droits investis ; ou joindra-t-il les forces d'une véritable reconstruction, qui ne voit tout d'abord que les droits humains et le bonheur de l'humanité, qui ne regarde rien de si sacré que le bien-être des individus, et qui aspire à une plus grande liberté pour la multitude des hommes et des femmes dont la vie et la liberté doivent être la première pensée d'une nation.

Le parti qui ne visera que le rajustement nous reculera en arrière, sous le manteau du patriotisme, à un renouveau d'efforts qui jusqu'au moment de la guerre absorbaient notre pensée politique à l'exclusion de la considération des problèmes fondamentaux d'où découle le bien-être de l'humanité et qui ont été trop longtemps ignorés. A de tels efforts, le mot "Reconstruction" n'est aucunement applicable. Ils ne veulent dire rien autre chose que la reconstruction du vieil édifice, sur le même terrain, sur les mêmes fondations, avec les mêmes méthodes et les mêmes matériaux comme ceux qui n'ont pu donner à la société humaine un logement conforme à ses besoins ou obéissant à ses plus hautes nécessités. La reconstruction est quelque chose de plus que la restauration. Il est vrai que nos terres, nos foyers, nos manufactures, nos mines et nos chemins de fer, et tout ce qui est secourable à la vie humaine n'ont pas été dévasté, et nous n'avons eu dès lors qu'à envisager les problèmes de la restauration matérielle auquel doivent faire face les régions dévastées de l'Europe; mans nous avons certainement un problème de reconstruction à résoudre. Le problème de la reconstruction est plus profond que celui de la restauration, même en Europe ou, aujourd'hui, tout est ruine et désolation. C'est le problème d'établir de justes relations entre les hommes de la société, et d'éviter, pour toujours, la vénération de ces faux dieux : la richesse matérielle et la puissance matérielle, qui seuls sont responsables de l'enfer dans lequel le monde a été plongé par l'ambition prussienne, par l'avidité prussienne et par la barbarie prussienne.

Permettez-moi de vous donner, pas dans mes propres mots, mais dans ceux d'un soldat de cette vaste armée dont les vies ont été sacrifiées pour la survivance de la liberté, ce qu'est la signification du mot "reconstruction", comme je conçois ce terme applicable aux conditions de l'univers entier et dans notre propre pays. Dans le "Weekly Times", de Londres, du 23 février 1917, on trouvera le passage immortel suivant de la plume d'un officier anglais qui fut blessé à la bataille de la Somme:

Nous devrions reconnaître que la lutte réelle dont cette guerre n'est qu'un épisode, n'est pas simplement entre notre propre pays une chose aussi instable et transitoire que l'Allemagne moderne, mais entre les systèmes permanents et irréconciliables qui luttent pour l'âme de l'Homme, et ce qui rend l'esprit allemand dangereux n'est pas le seul fait qu'il est ennemi, mais parce qu'il est horriblement analogue à celui de presque tout le monde moderne. Car l'esprit de l'Impérialisme allemand est trop souvent celui de l'industrialisme anglais et américain, avec tout son culte de la puissance comme but suprême, son idéal grossièrement matériel, sa subordination de la personnalité au mécanisme, sa vénération pour une organisation élaborée et destructrice d'âmes. Et si nous sentons que la demande absolue de l'individu, le développement et la conservation de la liberté spirituelle sont dignes de tout sacrifice en temps de guerre, nous devrions également sentir qu'ils sont dignes de tout sacrifice en temps de paix.

L'HON. MACKENZIE-KING qui a prononcé un magistral discours samedi soir, sur la Reconstruction.

Si nous voulons comprendre le véritable sens du mot "Reconstruction", nous devons nous poser la question suivante : Pourquoi ont-ils combattu et sont-ils morts, nos héroïques disparus, la chevalerie de notre race ? Ont-ils quitté ces rives — dont un grand nombre pour ne plus revenir — pour combattre pour une civilisation devant être estimée en tonnes et en dollars ? Ou était-ce pour la survivance d'un grand idéal, vaguement défini peut-être, comme le sont la plupart des idéals, mais qui n'en a pas moins une expression définie dans un langage tel que celui que je viens de vous lire ; rendre ce monde un lieu où le bonheur soit inséparable de la liberté ; et la bonne volonté, non la haine, le motif agissant dans les relations entre les hommes. C'est cette vision que nous ont laissée ceux qui ont souffert, qui sont morts. Sa réalisation est le seul monument digne qui puisse être élevé à leur mémoire. C'est du rêve de ceux qui sont morts héroïquement dans les Flandres que je veux vous parler ce soir.

Et à mes concitoyens je lancerai l'appel de leur clairon — non pour servir des fins politiques de parti — mais pour que l'écho de leur voix, bien que tués, puisse se faire entendre :

"If ye break faith with who die, we shall not sleep, though popies grow in Flanders fields."

Considérons tout d'abord nos relations industrielles. Trouver une subsistance c'est la première de toutes les nécessités ; et l'industrie, plus que tout autre institution, intéresse la masse des hommes et des femmes. Ici, plus que partout ailleurs, nous devons chercher la réalisation de ce rêve de bonne volonté entre les hommes, qui fera de notre pays un lieu de bonheur et un endroit heureux pour y vivre. Si ce rêve doit se réaliser, nous devrons commencer le travail de la reconstruction dans l'industrie en ayant une nouvelle conception en ce qui concerne et ses buts et son objet.

Quelle a été et quelle est — pourrait-on se demander — la définition acceptée de l'industrie? N'est-ce pas trop un moyen de produire des revenus qui permettront à quelques-uns de se faire une existence chétive tandis que d'autres y amasseront des fortunes énormes? Considérez pour un moment ce qu'est l'industrie. C'est le moyen par lequel les ressources du sol sont transformées par l'intelligence humaine et le travail humain, en commodités à l'usage de tous. Dans ce vaste procédé de transformation, des multitude d'hommes et de femmes dépensent toute leur vie. De la force et de la persistence de leurs efforts dépendent la satisfaction des besoins et le bien-être de toute la société humaine. Tel étant le cas, ne devrions-nous pas changer notre conception de l'industrie?

Au lieu de considérer comme une simple institution consacrée à la production de la richesse, à être divisée comme pourront le déterminer la nécessité et la puissance économiques, l'industrie ne devrait-elle pas être considérée comme propriété de la société, et les ouvriers en industrie vraiment désignés comme les soutiens de la vie, tout comme ceux qui ont servi dans ses armées et ses marins sont ses défenseurs?

L'idée étroite et fausse qu'on s'est faite de l'industrie n'est-elle pas due à une appréciation inadéquate de ce que sont les parties de l'industrie? L'industrie n'a-t-elle pas été trop largement considérée comme la chose exclusive du capital, et trop peu à la lumière de ce qu'elle est réellement, c'est-à-dire: une entreprise où il y a quatre parties intéressées, chacune remplissant une fonction absolument essentielle et distincte des autres, et dépendent complètement, pour ses fruits, aussi bien des autres parties que d'elle-même? L'organisation actuelle de notre industrie n'est-elle pas une preuve que le capital a assumé le monopole du contrôle? Les capitalistes ne choisissent-ils pas les bureaux de directeurs; les gérants et autres fonctionnaires, qui conduisent les affaires suivant l'intérêt de ceux qui ont investi le capital, ne considérant les intérêts des autres parties de l'industrie qu'en autant que la nécessité économique ou autre l'exigera.

Il y a quatre partie dans l'industrie; non pas une, ou deux ou trois. Il y a le capital, le travail, la Direction et la Communauté. Chacune remplit sa fonction nécessaire, et chacune a droit à sa voix dans la détermination d'une question qui concerne d'une manière vitale chacune d'elles. Le Capital reçoit ses droits de participation au contrôle à cause du placement. Ce droit est accordé au-delà de sa récompense sous forme d'intérêt ou profits pour le service qu'il rend. Mais si les détenteurs du capital sont ceux qui placent dans l'industrie, les ouvriers en industrie ne placent-ils rien aussi? N'est-ce pas eux qui donnent la vie et le travail? Et comme tels ils ont droit à une certaine mesure du contrôle dans la fixation des termes de leur emploi et des conditions de travail et de vie, aussi bien que dans la rémunération qu'ils reçoivent sous forme de salaire. Si le placement dans l'industrie a quelque signification, elle est également partagée par l'homme qui donne son travail et l'homme qui donne son capital.

Identiquement, la communauté a droit à une représentatian dans le contrôle de l'industrie et dans l'élaboration de la politique industrielle. Sous le placement du grand public, qu'il soit local, national et international, le Capital, le Travail et la Direction ne feraient que de maigres profits dans les conditions actuelles de la concurrence monudiale. La communauté a autant d'intérêt dans l'industrie que le capital ou le travail. Que représentent les 99 pour cent des dépenses du gouvernement en temps ordinaires si non les placements dans l'industrie, dans la propriété ou autres qui seuls rendent possibles la vaste coopération et la coordination de l'effort qui est la vie même de l'industrie?

Plus l'organisation industrielle acquiert de l'ampleur, plus elle dépend, en plusieurs directions, des placements de la communauté. C'est la communauté qui donne les ressources naturelles et les pouvoirs qui permettent toute production. Les individus peuvent acquérir des titres, par un ou plusieurs moyens, mais c'est par la communauté et par le consentement de la communauté que les titres sont détenus. C'est la communauté, organisée de liverses façons,qui maintient le gouvernement et les relations étrangères, fait les lois et établit l'ordre, encourage les arts et les inventions, aide l'éducation, engendre l'opinion, et crée, par concession ou autrement, les agences de transport, de communication, de crédit, les banques ou autres sans lesquelles, toute production, sauf la moindrement difficile, serait impossible. C'est la communauté qui fait la demande de commodités et de fonctions par lesquelles le travail trouve un emploi rémunérateur, et le capital un intérêt sur son placement. Envisagez le sujet sous n'importe quel aspect, c'est la communauté qui rend possible toute l'activité de l'industrie et aide à déterminer sa valeur et son but.

Dans notre reconstruction de l'industrie, nous devrons viser à un système de contrôle conjoint qui entraînera un changement dans le statut du travailleur, et donnera un plus grande reconnaissance des droits de la communauté. Nous devons faire un associé de l'ouvreir, l'admettre, avec le capital et la direction et les représentants de la communauté, autour de la table ronde pour tout ce qui intéresse les conditions et les circonstances de son emploi.

Quel a été l'effet de la longue exclusion de certaines parties de l'industrie par le monopole que le capital, et la direction comprise avec le capital, ont cherché à maintenir ? Les effets étaient apparents en Europe avant la guerre. Ils sont assez visibles aujourd'hui en Europe. Que craignaient les autocrates industriels et politiques en Allemagne quand, par leur tentative de domination mondiale, ils tentèrent d'éviter la révolution sociale qu'ils savaient à leur porte ? Ce fut le développement de l'Etat Socialiste. Qu'est l'Etat Socialiste tel que conçu par ses partisans radicaux, si ce n'est le contrôle de l'industrie par la communauté, l'une des parties de l'industrie qu'on a si longtemps ignorée ? Qu'est le bolshevisme dans toutes ses formes ? Rien autre chose qu'une tentative des extrémistes dans les rangs du Travail por acquérir le contrôle monopolisé de l'industrie, et si possible, de l'Etat aussi. Le socialisme révolutionnaire, le bolshevisme, les I.W.W., le syndicalisme et tous les autres mouvements semblables sont des réactions naturelles contre le monopole du contrôle exercé sur l'industrie par le Capital dans le passé. Et où ils tombent dans l'erreur et nepeuvent éviter la faillite, c'est quand ils ne reconnaissent pas que le remède contre une sorte de monopole ne se trouve pas dans un monopole d'une autre sorte. Le remède se trouve dans la destruction de tout monopole, et l'introduction, à sa place, d'une association bien conçue, avec des conférences conjointes, où les différentes parties de l'industrie seront récompensées selon le service social qu'elles rendeut. Qu'il n'y ait pas

(A suivre à la page 3)

PUBLIC ARCHIVES
ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3972

17 Feb. 1919

New York Bankers' Club

LABOUR AND CAPITAL AS PARTNERS IN INDUSTRY

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

New York 3873 World
Feb " 17 19

King Speeches 1919
New York Feb. 17
Industrial Relations

To Stop Fighting Between Employers and Unions

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING ADVISES

"Make Labor and Capital Partners in Industry"

"Give Labor Equal Representation With Other Partners in Management of Industry and Its Fair Share of Profits," Says Former Minister of Labor of Canada—His Views on "Representation in Industry" Follow.

By Frederick Lawrence

Copyright, 1919, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York Evening World).

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

PARTNERSHIP between capital and labor in industry must be established or disastrous conflicts will continue in the future as in the past. This thought was expressed by Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, C. M. G., M. A., LL. B. (Toronto), Ph. D. (Harvard), Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, former Minister of Labor of Canada, and writer of books. Mr. King sat at luncheon at the Bankers' Club and talked interestingly on the subject of the future relations between capital and labor. He agreed with the steadily increasing number of converts to the theory that labor may no longer be required to figure merely as a number on a time sheet or a payroll, but that its partnership with capital, management and the community must be conceded; that labor must have equal representation with the other partners in the management of industry, and that it must be awarded its fair share of profits.

"Present methods of arrangement between capital and labor are not suited to the enlightened times in which we are living," Mr. King summed up. "Obsolete relations between employers and wage-earners should be scrapped, just as we scrap worn-out machinery, and just as the Paris Peace Conference is scrapping the age old methods of dealing between nations."

A book, "Industry and Humanity," of which Mr. King is the author, and which has recently been issued by the Houghton-Mifflin Company, interprets his views in the light of his years of study of labor problems, principally in the industrial centres of the United States. In a chapter on "Representation in Industry," Mr. King sums up his conclusions as to how future relations between labor and capital may best be regulated on the partnership basis. He writes:

"Mutual trust, born of wholehearted belief in the common interests of industry, must supersede the distrust which arises out of misgivings concerning opposed interests. Fear must give way to faith in the several relations. There must be consciousness of a common aim in a common venture, in which gains and losses alike are shared. • • •

"A partnership, in fact, as well as in name, is what industry must become if its twofold purpose is to be achieved with a maximum of good will and efficiency, and a minimum of waste of effort and materials. Partnership, to be worthy the name, presupposes a willingness to share all along the line, to share in a knowledge and understanding of the enterprise as a whole, and of each other's rights and duties, to share progressively in gains and proportionately in losses, and finally to share in the control and the determination of policy. • • •

"The principle of round table conference underlies partnership. • • • The rights and duties of partnership in the organization and control of industry obviously must be effected through some device of representation. • • • The round table conference should • • • while avoiding their inherent weaknesses, further the aim which municipal and State Socialism and collectivism seek to effect by means of a compulsory change in the ownership of the instruments of production. • • • Whilst contributing to secure to management and to capital a progressive increase in the profits of industry, it should help to insure to labor progressive improvement in wages and hours and in other working conditions."

Mr. King quotes Dr. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University, who is a convert to the partnership theory, and who wrote:

"Any durable method (of industrial representation) will include some form of co-operative management and a complete disclosure of the accounts of the business to representatives of the working force."

Mr. King continues:

"Once the principle of round table conference • • • is made the basis of government in industry, fear will give way to faith; the conflict of opposed interests will vanish before an understanding of common interests; the principles which underlie peace, work and health will find ready application, and industry itself will gain that spirit of hearty co-operation and constructive good will which means its highest efficiency both as an instrument of production and as an agency of social service.

"Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners or equality of either service or rewards; but it does imply equality, as respects the right of representation, in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. Thus far, this principle has largely failed of recognition. The justness of the principle, however, is apparent. • • •

"The difference in the nature of the investments of capital and labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of labor's right to representation. The investment of capital is an investment in the nature of substances and dollars; the investment of labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human, investment. Both, however, are investments; and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious. • • • As a life or labor investor, is the worker's interest in industry not akin to that of the investor of capital? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital. • • •

"For the preferential treatment capital has thus far received there is no defense possible on grounds of democratic theory or fundamental justice, only an explanation. Capital has been able to wait; labor has not. Capital, through its ability to wait, has been in a position to compel a voice. Labor has seldom been in that position, and therefore has remained, for the most part, unrepresented. • • • Denied opportunity to cooperate with capital, labor competes with capital. Industrial life • • • becomes a sort of guerrilla warfare in which capital seeks to increase profits at the expense of labor and labor seeks to increase wages at the expense of capital. • • • Strikes and lockouts are begotten. • • •

"A militant trade unionism claims exclusive right to speak in the name of labor and to enforce its newly acquired control by the weapon of the strike. • • • An autocratic management seeks the maintenance of its accustomed control by exercising arbitrary powers regardless of their social consequences, claiming for itself exclusive right in the employment and dismissal of labor, while denying to labor the right of membership in associations for its self-protection. • • • With neither aim nor method in common, each obtains its hearing in virtue only of the injury it is capable of inflicting, or the power or might it is in a position to command. • • • They look at each other, as one writer has expressed it, 'across no man's land,' an area of ever-present possible conflict which, in their common interest, ought to be the ground of joint approach. • • •

"A new attitude has already been assumed by the several parties to industry, out of which some acceptable form of joint control is certain to develop. • • • The principle of round table conference has been tested and tried out with success in the largest affairs of the Nation (the conduct of the war) and under the most extreme circumstances. The principle of representation has furnished a key wherewith to unlock the door of every difficulty. Leadership alone is now required to give to the whole development its permanent setting; to take industry, through all-round partnership, out of the mire of warring factions, blinded through self-interest and limited vision • • • a consciousness of its might; benecent mission."

13 March 1919

D 3974
Toronto: Empire Club of Canada

"THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3975

UNREST NO MERE WAR AFTERMATH BUT HUMANITY CRYING FOR JUSTICE

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, in Notable Address at Empire Club To-day, Discusses "The Four Parties to Industry"—Labor, Capital, Management, The Community.

CAPITAL ONLY ONE OF FOUR "PARTNERS," BUT HAS THE MONOPOLY OF CONTROL

Bolshevism a Reaction Against This Monopoly — Services of Capital Lost Sight of Through Debauchery of Indolence and Unearned Millions of Profiteers.

A notable address was delivered at the Empire Club to-day by Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, former Minister of Labor. One may say it was such an address as was never before delivered in Toronto by a public man.

The subject was "The Four Parties to Industry." It was a discussion of those industrial and social relations, failure to adjust which, has submerged Russia, threatens Germany, and holds the rest of the world in awe. Mr. King's address, the fruit of deep study and independent thinking, extending over many years, broke new ground in the platform discussion of the subject in Canada, or for that matter in other countries. While dealing with profound principles, it was no mere academic treatise, but was in its illustration and applications to life intensely practical. Brilliant gems of thought scintillated from every passage.

The address in full follows:

THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY.

I have chosen as the subject of my remarks to-day "The Four Parties to Industry," in order to emphasize a truth which seems to be fundamental in any attempt to cope with the industrial unrest which has followed so closely, and, one might add, so inevitably, in the wake of war. If there is to be release from the thraldom of fear in which men's minds are everywhere held, it is the truth that shall set us free, and the enforcement of that social justice which the truth demands.

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest.

In industrial relations especially, we have accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. The shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrialism which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it shall be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who on land and sea have endured all manner of hardships and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy. Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing civilization to its very foundation. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and conference between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What is Industry?

We shall get no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines into commodities and services for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so interrelated and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry.

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of capital and labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of transformation.

Next, there is capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment essential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

Then there is management, or directing ability. So frequently has management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. A moment's reflection is sufficient, however, to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capital's contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do-well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to the infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand, is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary to effect efficient co-operation not only between labor and capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish little or nothing.

The fourth party is the community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Parties to Industry Interdependent.

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without labor. Labor can do nothing without capital. Neither labor nor capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of management; and management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the community affords. If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Existing Organization Inadequate.

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which labor, capital, management, and the community are regarded as interrelated and interdependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection. I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant type of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc., etc. So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the board of directors; the board of directors choose the management and dictate the policies. The management regards itself as responsible solely to capital. Labor and the community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for capital are a first consideration; profits as high as it is possible to make them; wages to labor, prices to the community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, and in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced—not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions.

It is this monopoly on the part of capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as Socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves rightful partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the community, it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the State of municipality.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control by the Community.

What is the Socialistic State, or collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from capital to the community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic State, the Government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation wherever capital was required, and would fix the wages of labor employed, and the prices at which commodities are to be sold.

The war has revealed that the Socialistic State, which workers were led to believe is certain to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object lesson to the world.

The little there has been of State control during the war has also revealed that political managers, as a substitute for industrial managers, is not likely to be the best for either industry or the State. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control by Labor.

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor, but a similar reaction against the monopoly of capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W.-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of capital and management as parties to industry, the community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to suppress reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of capital. Like State Socialist, it would rule out capital's right to control just as effectively as capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominent factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the State. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by capital under capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under national industrial guilds. This is a national reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of the protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would oust capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy.

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by capital, Labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whether Labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both Labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

It is not monopoly in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control, whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control.

And is not joint control by all the parties to industry in every way eminently wise, as well as fundamentally just? Is it not in every way in the long run, to the interests of industry, and to the interests of each of the parties to industry? Continuance of the system of monopoly of control by capital is no longer possible. Once autocracy was doomed in the political world its doom was equally sounded for the industrial. The interest of every one of the parties to industry is being menaced to-day in the reactions to which the monopoly of control by capital has given rise.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital.

No one of the parties stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control by capital as capital itself. As things are to-day, it is at capital and at management, identified with capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War-ridden, hungry and penniless, men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those possessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enables an idle investor to reap a fortune, while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare subsistence. They have lost sight altogether of the services of capital and management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that capital and management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of the community as well. What is needed is not the ruination of capital and management, but each given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Management.

Nor is the monopoly of control by capital wholly fair to management, or in its best interests. It has been my privilege to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing lost, by having the function of capital and the function of management kept separate and distinct, and management given a freer hand in considering the interests of labor and the community.

Some managers there are who obtain their positions, not in virtue of any special skill in managerial ability, but because of personal ownership of large quantities of capital, or intimate association or relationship with some investor. The incompetency of such managers, and their selfish subservience to privilege and position, to the exclusion of a due consideration of the rights of labor and of the community, only serves to rouse the bitter antagonism of both parties, who feel that their rightful interests, as necessary partners in industry, are being thwarted and jeopardized.

Not a little of the militant attitude on the part of labor and impatience on the part of the public with the present order of industry, is due to a feeling that some managers wholly fail to render to industry any service at all commensurate with the enormous salaries they receive, and to a belief that the interests of labor and the community alike are sacrificed to incompetence and extravagance which would not be permitted were all four parties to industry permitted some voice in the shaping of industrial policy.

Management, instead of being regarded as the servant exclusively of capital, ought to be in a position to regard itself, as in fact it is, one of the necessary parties to industry, and as such entitled to a voice in matters which pertain to its administrative functions; responsible in the exercise of its duties, not to one party only, but to all.

In the emancipation of management from the single control of any one of the parties, whether it be capital, labor, or the community, and in the development of its function into that of a responsible executive, concerned equally with all the interests of the necessary parties to industry, lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Labor.

Coming to what is fundamentally right and just may it not be asked: Is labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of industry as capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and management receive representation on this basis. If capital and management are so entitled, why not labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of labor as well as of capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of capital and labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of labor's right to a share in control. The investment of capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; the investment of labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human investment and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The capital investor—the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it—receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor—the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor—receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however the additional right, which capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If capital obtains this right in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is labor not in justice equally entitled in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community.

The community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of labor. But for community investment on a local, national, and international scale, capital, labor and management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the community just as much as on the part of labor, capital, or management. What is 99 per cent. of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry; investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the community.

It is the community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the community, and with the consent of the community, that titles are held. It is the community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which labor is provided with remunerative employment, and capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest capital receives, and to the wages labor receives. But is not the community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy. Without participation by the community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

If industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality of either service or rewards; but it does imply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle that has thus far so largely failed of recognition. The justification of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

The Necessary Transition.

If to secure a just consideration of the rights of all the four parties to industry something in the nature of partnership, involving community of control, is necessary, how, it will be asked, is that transition to be effected. Certainly it will never be brought about by violent upheavals, or revolutionary methods, which have the result to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all the parties. It must be brought about in an evolutionary manner, here a little, there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of the one ideal.

Government In the State a Guide to Government In Industry.

There is much in the Government of the State to give us guidance as well as hope in the evolution of government within industry. The British constitution has had its limitations, but no instrument of government has ever been devised which has so effectively helped to preserve and extend the freedom and liberties of men. What the British constitution stands for in the Government of the State, we should aim at effecting in the working out of a constitution for industry. It will not all be accomplished within a day; neither need it be the work of generations. With free political institutions our one great inheritance, the application to industry of those principles which underlie government within the State should not be either impossible or difficult. A willingness to recognize the justice of them, and to act in the light of knowledge we already have, is all that is necessary.

In government within the State there are three outstanding stages of development. The first stage is that of the autocratic executive, in which there is single control by one only of the parties to the State. King John is an outstanding example of this type of autocratic government. It was not believed, in the time of John, that the pepole had any ability to govern themselves. Even the lords and the nobles were without a voice in the government of the kingdom. They secured the first advance in popular liberties when they wrested the Magna Charta from John and secured his signature to a written statement of their rights as citizens.

Representative Government marks the next important phase in the evolution of Government within the State. That takes us back to 1265, to the famous Parliament of Simon de Montfort, when for the first time in British history there was at least an attempt at representation of all three estates. At the outset, representation was restricted and nominal. All subsequent development has been in the nature of a broadening of the basis of representation, and rendering effective the representation gained.

It is only within the past century that the highest form of Government, namely, responsible Government, had been attained. When the managers of industry become responsible to labor, capital, and the community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the Government of the State. Meanwhile, our duty would appear to be that of putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, no matter by which of the parties to industry it may be attempted or exercised, and to work out a system of joint control based upon representation of all the parties in the determination of industrial policy.

Recognition of the Four Parties the First Essential.

Time forbids more than a suggestion or two as to the manner in which a constitution between the parties to industry might be worked out in a way which will help to allay the industrial unrest of our times, and advance the highest interests of industry and all of its parties. Obviously, what is most needed is recognition of the fact that industry is not a matter which concerns only one party, but that it is of vital concern to all four: to capital, to labor, to management, and to the community, and that no one of the four is entitled to a monopoly of control.

Once recognition is given the four parties to industry, the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which are obviously fair and just.

The Principle of Conference.

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of conference. It is impossible to bring together anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, goodwill, confidence; not aloofness, distrust, and suspicion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the war. It was not until the Government of Britain, representing the community, invited capital, management, and labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of round-table conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions of war. What was necessary to the winning of war is equally necessary to the winning of peace—which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial unrest.

The Principle of Investigation.

The second principle is that of investigation. Investigation is only a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are a class of evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty, and unfair dealings between the parties to industry are of this kind. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness—these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

Investigation, too, has been tried between the four parties to industry, and found to be of the utmost service.

I notice that the Minister of Labor informed the House of Commons a day or two ago that Canada had had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world. If that statement is true, and I believe it is, it is because we have on our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lockouts and strikes.

The principle of that law is the one being acted upon in Great Britain to-day. If England is being saved at the moment from industrial strife, hardly less frightful in its consequences than actual war, it is because capital and management, labor, and the community are represented upon the commission recently appointed by Mr. Lloyd George to investigate the demands of the miners, and the condition of the mining industry throughout Britain.

It is upon the same principle of encouraging investigation prior to the commencement of hostilities that the League of Nations is being founded. If war between nations and between the parties to industry is to end, it can only be by the acceptance of the principle of investigation before the severance of peaceful relations.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a league of the parties to industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle, and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league would lead I believe, even more quickly than a League of Nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial peace. Accustom men to the adoption of fundamental principles in their industrial relations, which are something that immediately concern their every day life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

The Principle of Organization and Collective Action.

A third principle is that of organization and collective action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of capital, under the stress of world competition, if its units were not to coalesce, and large organization of business were rendered impossible? What would become of the community, if its activities were not organized? Deprive managers of the right of membership in an employers' or manufacturers' association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If capital, management and the community have the right to organize, so also should labor have this right.

Without organization of labor—where capital, management, and the community are organized—what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where are the individual units of labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where labor is concerned than in the case of capital or management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; capital and management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that the use of a thing is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuses of power are not confined to any one class.

The Principle of Representation.

A fourth principle is that of Representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the State has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of all the parties in interest, effected through organization, enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in round table conference—in such an obviously just and fair arrangement, we have the beginnings of law and order in industry, just as we have had it in the State, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolutionary, not revolutionary, lines.

Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils.

Once the principle of representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employes, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committees in individual establishments, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry, and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of Government, representing the community and protecting its interests. This, as you know, is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Whitley Committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the cornerstone of its reconstruction policy.

Nor is the formation of such joint committee and industrial councils any longer a matter of experiment. Every day is adding to the number that are being formed, many of them in industries which have hitherto opposed anything in the way of organization among employes, and which have conceded little or nothing in the way of conference.

The trades unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of organized labor. It has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred; but the real purport of labor's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of capital and of labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into cleared day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservative unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W.ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of labor and of capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future. Industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization, and representation, in dealings with their employes, and to concede to labor the right of collective bargaining, and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions.

It may be that labor needs education, that its leaders need more in the way of experience; but whence is that education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?

The Joint Industrial Councils being formed in England show how this new approach between capital and labor is certain, in its highest form, to take account of all existing organizations of labor and capital, and to change the attitude of these powerful bodies from one of militancy, based on a belief in opposed interests, into one of co-operation based on a belief in the larger interests which they have in common.

A New Spirit Necessary.

One thing, and one thing only, remains to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; and without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by the millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as illmated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their Governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organization and spirit can only work against each other till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead.

A New Conception of Industry.

With the new spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which capital, labor, management, and the community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

A Final Hope.

May I conclude these remarks with words with which I have concluded a volume in which I have sought to enlarge upon the principles outlined to-day. This moment of silence at the close of the Great War, and this Lenten season, seem to give to them appropriateness to this occasion, and to the subject we have been considering.

"Is it too much to believe that, having witnessed humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its Garden of Fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of militarism, labor and capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and brokenhearted world the one hope it is theirs alone to bring; and that, in the acceptance of principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset mankind, they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre to-day, and give to humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life?"

Another Thing the Nurses Do.

Toronto's public health nurses in 1918, made 1,305 inspections of day nurseries, the number of children inspected being 49,026.

Gems from W. L. M. King's Speech At Empire Club Luncheon To-Day

Unrest in industry to-day is no transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion; it is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice.

Four parties are necessary to industry, capital, labor, management, the community; is there anything in their present relations suggestive of a partnership? So far as control goes, it is all monopoly on the part of capital.

Profits for capital are to-day the first consideration, profits as high as it is possible to make them—wages and prices are what they can be kept at.

What are the extreme movements on the part of labor (Bolshevism, etc.) but a similar reaction against the monopoly of capital control?

No one stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of monopoly of control by capital as capital itself.

The services of capital and management are being lost sight of through debauchery of indolence combined with riches and the unearned millions of profiteers.

In industry, capital invests substances and dollars, labor invests skill and life. Of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

Individuals may acquire title to property by one means or another, but it is from the community and with the consent of the community that titles are held.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a League of the Parties to Industry.

The Trade Unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. It has been a long and bitter struggle.

Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand-in-hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics.

BE PRETTY! TURN GREY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay grey! Try it. No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

An Old Recipe to Darken Hair

Sage Tea and Sulphur Turns Gray, Faded Hair Dark and Glossy.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or grey. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, at very little cost. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the grey hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

The "Gentleman's Shoe"

MEN'S Straight Last Shoes

EXCEPTIONAL VALUE

$6.45

$10 to $15 Value

Here is the "Gentlemen's shoe" that sells regularly from $10 to $15 at a priee that is almost ridiculous for this class of shoe. We get an opportunity sometimes—let this be yours.

Almost 200 pairs, just like the Hanan last, straight lace, fine velour calf with dull calf tops—positively a perfect shoe in every respect.

Sizes 5½ to 10. We cannot mention manufacturer as it would cause trouble in the trade. But we have a specimen shoe, taken from the stock, on special show in our window.

See it and invest.

EADY'S

Yonge St. Arcade & Victoria St.

Phone M. 4331

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

Toronto Globe
March 14, 1919

RADICAL REFORM NECESSARY TO REMEDY LABOR TROUBLES

Constructive Reorganization of Social System as it Affects Capital and Labor Essential, Says Hon. Mackenzie King

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.
Who addressed the Empire Club yesterday on "The Four Parties to Industry."

Speaking before the Empire Club yesterday on "The Four Parties to Industry," Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King laid bare the roots of the industrial evil which has assumed such a disquieting aspect in the sphere of world economics since the cessation of hostilities, and proffered in terms of the clearest and sanest logic his theories as to the only adequate means of cutting short its development. He laid stress upon the point that neither violent nor revolutionary measures could be expected to bring relief. The substitution of one extreme for another would be the most dangerous of remedies. The unquestionable injustice of the old industrial regime was the source of the present unrest, and nothing short of a complete readjustment of relationships along equitable and constructive lines could serve as even a palliative.

Lessons From the War.

"In industrial relations especially," said the speaker, "we have accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. The shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrial civilization which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its relative indifference to human worth and human well-being, or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who on land and sea have endured all manner of hardships and perils to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy. Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing civilization to its very foundation. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument and repression not the method to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution."

The Main Factors.

As a primary step toward a true comprehension of the situation, said Mr. King, it would be necessary to cast aside the old, circumscribed point of view which limited the factors involved in commercial production to two—Capital and Labor. In its most elementary stages industry could not exist without two further agencies, each as essential as either of these. These were: first, the organizing genius of management, which, entirely distinct in its function from capital, served to effect co-operation between it and both Labor and the fourth factor—the community—and to co-ordinate the contributions of all three toward the operation of industry. The community, representing organized society, acted as a sustaining force in maintaining law and order, providing transportation facilities, and in defining relationships with other communities.

"Not only are the four parties necessary to industry," he said, "but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without Labor. Labor can do nothing without Capital. Neither Labor nor Capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of management; and management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the community affords. If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Need Better Organization.

"Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which Labor, Capital, management and the community are regarded as interrelated and interdependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection. I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant type of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc., etc. So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of Capital.

"The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the board of directors; the board of directors choose the management and dictate the policies. The management regards itself as responsible solely to capital. Labor and the community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for capital are a first consideration; profits as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to Labor, prices to the community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, and in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced—not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

"It is this monopoly on the part of Capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as Socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves rightful partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of Labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the community, it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the State or municipality."

Basis of Partnership.

But in these reactionary movements, the speaker declared, lay no hope of ultimate reform. Stirred to revolt by the injustice of one autocracy, its victims were striving to established another. There would be no safety in a system which merely wrested industrial control from the hands of one of the parties to industry to place it in those of another. The only equitable reform would lie in the re-establishment of relations on the basis of a partnership wherein each of the members, equally essential, would have equal voice and rights. It was the accomplishment of this change which would constitute the problem to be faced by the industrial reformers of to-day.

Certainly it could not be brought about by sudden or revolutionary methods; it must be consummated by steady and consistent evolution, a gradual growth toward the fulfilment of an ideal.

The prime necessity of this fulfilment would be acknowledgment of the equal rights and interests of the four parties involved. Given that, the development of reform would be merely a question of sane procedure under four guiding principles.

The establishment of confidence between all four parties would be the first essential, and this could only be engendered by the principle of conferenee. Much would have been accomplished when councils were instituted where Capital, Labor and the managerial and community interests connected with an industry might meet on equal terms. This had been found necessary to the winning of the war in England, and it would be just as necessary to the winning of peace.

Investigation Essential.

The second principle to be followed was that of investigation. By turning the searchlight of publicity upon any cases of meanness, injustice or gross selfishness they would be dissolved, and with them the distrust begotten of them. Just as necessary as a League of Nations was a league of the four parties to industry, who would investigate disputes and thus prevent industrial strife.

The right of each party equally, to organize must be recognized, for organization was the proven servant of progress. It was the demonstrated fact that Bolshevism found few recruits among the adherents of organized Labor, and the function of Labor organizations must be appreciated, and co-operation with Labor leaders practised by the other three members of the industrial partnership.

Lastly must the principle of representation be applied. The government of industry was analogous to the government of nations, and in each representative government was essential to the maintenance of just relationships.

Democratic Industry.

"One thing," said Mr. King, "and one thing only, remains to insure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old, and without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by the millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as ill-mated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their Governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organiaztion and spirit can only work against each other till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead."

Tor. News
Mar. 3, 1919

9

...NIZATION

BELIEVES INDUSTRY MUST BE REGARDED AS SOCIAL SERVICE

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie-King Offers Empire Club a Remedy for Unrest

"More than any other factor it is this monopoly of control and direction of industry on the part of capital that lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time and has led to the movements which are described as Socialistic, Ultra-Radical, and even anarchistic," was the sentence pronounced against the existing system of industry by the Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, speaking to the Empire Club at luncheon in the King Edward Hotel to-day.

Taking for his subject "The Four Parties of Industry," the speaker designated industry as consisting, not only of the two generally-accepted elements of labor and capital, but, besides these, the parties of management and the community. Hitherto, the management, he said, has been so closely associated with the ownership of capital that its identity has almost become merged into that of capital; but, he pointed out, this was not to the advantage of the party of management as it tended in many cases to make management subservient to capital when it should be responsible to every part of the system.

Monopoly of Control.

Referring to the drift toward monopoly of control by Labor, Mr. King said: "What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms this reaction has found expressin in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and management as parties to industry, the community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs. Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the State. Industrial unions would select managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices."

He went on: "But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies on the destruction of conopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control. Single control, whether it be by vcapital, labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whhether labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer."

Joint Control as Cure.

The cure for the situation, Mr. King is assured, lies in the growth of the system from monopoly of control to joint control by all. But how is this to be brought about? The speaker drew an example from the existing government of England, which, providing for its limitations, he characterized as "the mst effective instrument of government ever devised for the extension and preservation of the freedom and liberties of men."

Mr. King's idea of securing the transition was to have the aforesaid recognition principle followed closely by conference between the parties. This principle, he stated, has been tried and found true. Without conference between the elements of capital, labor, management and the community, represented by the Government, the winning of the war would have been impossible.

"What was necessary for winning the war is necessary to the winning of peace—which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial unrest," he averred.

The speaker would follow the principle of conference with that of investigation, which in former times had been found of so much service among the parties to industry. This, in turn, must result in organization and collective action. The speaker pointed out that absolutely nothing could be accomplished without organization and elaborate co-operation on the part of every interested element.

"Then," he said, "comes the principle of representation, a necessity above all others in the formation of workable unity—to be followed by joint committees and joint industrial councils."

Trade Unions Blaze Trail.

"These should be permanent and should embrace all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry," he stated, adding: "The trade unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of organized labor."

Concluding, Mr. King said: "With a new spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which capital, labor, management and the community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service."

ILL IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. J. A. Macfadden, 27 Chicora avenue, who went to California a few weeks ago in the hope of improving his health, has been seized with a stroke and is now in the hospital at Passadena. Mr. Macfadden is a well-known business man, being general agent for the New York Life Insurance Company.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3978

TORONTO TELEGRAM
MARCH 13, 1919

for Telegram March 13

AM

Latest Canadian And U.S. News

PRICE TWO CENTS

LABOR'S PART IN INDUSTRY

OUTLINED BY HON. W. L. M. KING

It is Among Unorganized and Undisciplined Workers That the Bolshevist Spirit is Cultivated.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, one-time Dominion Minister of Labor, since with the Rockefeller Foundation in the U.S., addressed the Empire Club this afternoon on "The Four Parties to Industry."

The unrest in the world of industry to-day was no mere aftermath of war, but "the voice of a grief-stricken humanity, crying for justice in the relations of industry. To carry an industry, four parties, discharging separate and distinctive functions, were necessary: Labor, capital, management (or directing ability) and the community, "that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution and exchange are rendered possible."

CAUSE OF UNREST.

When management regarded itself as responsible solely to capital, labor and the community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. It was this monopoly on the part of capital in the control and direction of industry that had led to the developments that are described as socialistic, ultra-radical and even anarchistic. "More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time," he said.

Single control, whether it be by capital, labor or the state, sooner or later was certain to mean autocratic control.

SHOULD BE SEPARATED.

"It has been my privilege," said Mr. King, "to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them, a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing lost, by having the function of capital and the function of management kept separate and distinct, and management given a freer hand in considering the interests of labor and the community. In the emancipation of management from the single control of any one of the other parties lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT.

"When the managers of industry become responsible to labor, capital and the community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the government of the state.

"The solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which are obviously fair and just.

PRINCIPLE OF CONFERENCE.

"The first of these principles is that of conference. It is impossible to hope to get anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence.

"The second principle is that of investigation. Investigation is only a method of getting at the truth. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness —these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

INDUSTRIAL LEAGUE NEEDED.

"What we need quite as much as a league of nations is a league of the parties to industry, to see to the enforcement of this great principle and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league would lead, I believe, more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace.

"A third principle is that of organization and collective action, and a fourth principle is that of representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry.

FORM JOINT COMMITTEE.

"Once the principle of representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employes, the establishment of known, orderly and expeditious procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned. From joint committees in individual establishments, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry, and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of government, representing the community and protecting its interests. This is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Witley committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the corner stone of its reconstruction policy.

CREDIT TO TRADES UNIONS.

"The trade unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements and contracts between the parties to industry. It is coming to be seen that the control of labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservative unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of labor and of capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future.

A WORD OF ADVICE.

"Industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization and representation, in dealings with their employes, and to concede to labor the right of collective bargaining and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions. It may be that labor needs educating, that its leaders need more in the way of experience; but whence is that education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?"

THE NECESSARY SPIRIT.

One thing, and one thing only, remained to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; and without it nothing could be achieved. It was the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit of love of liberty and a hatred of domination.

SELLING GERMAN U-BOATS

ALLIES SHARE IN PROCEEDS.

Fifty-Four Already Sold and More Will Be Disposed of—No Decision Yet About Ships.

London, March 13.—More German submarines will be sold and the money realized distributed among the allies on a scale to be adopted by the Supreme Council, T. J. MacNamara, Parliamentary Secretary to the Admiralty, announced in the House of Commons to-day. Mr. MacNamara stated that already fifty-four German submarines had been sold.

He also said that the Supreme Council had not yet decided what was to be done with the other German ships. The provisional composition of the Mediterranean squadron was six battleships, six light cruisers, a destroyer flotilla and a submarine flotilla.

SIR GEORGE IS PLEASED

Tells London Times What He Thinks of Removal of Restrictions.

Canadian Associated Press Cable.

London, March 13.—Sir George Foster, in the course of an interview published in the Times, expresses the satisfaction of the overseas Dominions at the British Government's removal of the import restrictions, which, he says, was most opportune and reassuring.

"It has set the seal on what has been known for some time to be the policy of the present Government," says the Canadian Minister of Commerce. "That it has been delayed in getting from the stage of resolution to actual embodiment has caused much heart-searching disappointment, which now, happily, and, let us hope, forever, is dispelled. The Empire which has fought together in such close beneficial co-operation to maintain its existence may well extend the experience gained there into the co-operative and sympathetic development of its vast resources."

SIR SAM IS CURIOUS

Has Long List of Questions Affecting Soldiers and Their Comfort.

Ottawa, March 13. — Sir Sam Hughes is moving in the Commons for a return showing: (a) The quantities of coal and other fuel per man per day supplied to the Canadian soldiers during December, January and February, 1918-19; (b) the character of the housing of the soldiers in each case, viz., was it in wooden houses or in tents? Were there floors in these places? Were the cracks in the floors covered? Had the men cots, or were they obliged to lie on the floor? How many blankets were supplied per man? (c) What was the nature of the stove or heating apparatus furnished? (d) What were the sewage and sanitary plans and conditions in these camps? (e) How were complaints on the part of the officers and men treated or disposed of?

Sir Sam also has a long motion on the order paper asking for the production of a copy of a circular, supposedly of German origin, containing ten suggestions, surreptitiously distributed among the Canadian troops about the time of the battle of St. Julien, depreciating the Canadian rifle.

He also asks for the production of evidence as to the finding among Canadian troops armed with the Canadian rifles of thousands of rounds of defective ammunition mixed with the good ammunition long after the order to withdraw the defective ammunition, and the absence of any defective ammunition in the Canadian battalions armed with the Lee-Enfield rifle.

Doctor Wins.

Justice Kelly has dismissed the action of Christopher Hearne, a marine engineer, against Dr. A. J. Flood, claiming $5,000 for alleged malpractice in not having diagnosed his injury as a broken arm.

Judgment Against Trust Co.

James A. Simon, of Etobicoke, was given judgment for $25 with Division Court costs in his suit against the Toronto General Trusts Corporation before Judge Denton for $500 damages for illegal distress.

50,000 a Year for Jewish Country.

New York, March 13.—Restriction of immigration into Palestine to 50,0000 a year during the first period of development of the new Jewish commonwealth set up under British trusteeship, has been decided upon by the Inter-Allied Zionist Conference in London.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3979

THE TOROTON DAILY STAR

THE STAR PRINTING AND PUBLISHING CO., OF TORONTO, LIMITED.

J. E. Atkinson, President, Office, 18 King St. W.

THE DAILY STAR is served to subscribers in Toronto and immediate suburbs at the rate of 12 cents a week or 50 cents a month, payable to carrier or agent. Outside of Toronto and immediate suburbs the rate is 10 cents a week and 40 cents a month. By mail $3.00 a year, in advance.

CIRCULATION DURING FEBRUARY.

The daily average circulation of The Star for the Month of February, 1919, exclusive of returned copies, war extras, or special editions, was

DAILY STAR 85,588

STAR WEEKLY 77,330

The Audit Bureau of Circulation audits the circulation books of The Star.

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 1919.

Keep the Lawyers Out Of It

Complaint has been made that the city is discouraging the employment of lawyers by applicants for soldiers' insurance. It does, and should. A member of the City Solicitor's department, who lost his own son in the war, is charged with the permanent duty of getting insurance for all claimants who are justly entitled to it under the terms of the city's grant. The services of this trained investigator, who is familiar with the conditions requisite to payment of insurance and the information required by the civic committee as no outside lawyer could be, cost the claimant nothing. But outside law firms have been known to charge the widows five per cent., or $50 on a $1,000 claim. One, whose charges were over $50, included a bill for $5 for interviewing the very lawyer who is retained by the city to look after these cases. The interview occupied three minutes and consisted in the outsider asking whether there was any ground for a claim which was being made adverse to his client, the reply being that there was not. He got $5 for the information the city lawyer gave him for nothing.

The handling of soldiers' insurance has been a creditable chapter in civic history. Middlemen, in the shape of outside lawyers, have been largely eliminated, and with excellent results.

Why Not At Elections?

Controller McBride's latest manifestation of hostility towards the Health Department takes the form of commending a doctor who is openly defying it. Just about a year ago the same controller was on a rampage against the department on another pretext. Is it the coming of spring which affects Mr. McBride in this way, or is there some special germ which bites him every March?

Attacks on the Health Department are bad business, because much of its effectiveness depends upon public co-operation; and public co-operation depends, in turn, upon public confidence, which these attacks undermine. Whatever may be the germ which sneaks into the controller's system, it is to be noted that he is singularly immune to it around election time. If Mr. McBride thinks so little of Toronto's Health Department, why doesn't he test public opinion by making his attacks just before New Year's Day?

A League of Industrial Peace

In these times of industrial unrest the Empire Club is to be congratulated upon placing before its members such an address as that of the Hon. Mackenzie King on "The Four Parties to Industry." Mr. King has made the study of this problem his lifework, and he is not only a student, but one who has had practical experience in working out the solution. His book "Industry and Humanity" is upon the same lines as his address.

The four parties to industry, he says, are labor, capital, management, and the community. They are interdependent; in their harmonious co-operation lies the solution of the industrial problem. The existing organization is inadequate. Labor and capital are not regarded as partners. The management regards itself as responsible solely to capital, and profits for capital are the first consideration. "Wages to capital, prices to the community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow." This monopoly of control is the cause of the industrial upheavals of the present time. Labor and the community, unable to obtain what they desire by concession, have felt themselves driven to exact by force what they regard as their rightful dues. "In the case of labor this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the community it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the State or municipality."

The remedy is not the substitution of any other kind of monopoly for that of capital. Single control, whether by capital, labor, or the State, is sure to mean autocratic control. The true system is joint control, which is wise, just, and in the interests of all. The present system is unfair to all the parties. Industry must cease to be the battleground of factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others. There must be partnership, with recognized community of control. This can never be brought about by violent upheavals or revolutionary methods, which serve only to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all its parties. It must be brought about by evolution, "here a little, there a little, line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of one ideal."

Mr. King believes that in working out this idea much is to be learned from the government of the State, and especially from the British constitution. In this government there are three outstanding stages of development. The first is the autocratic executive, the absolute monarch. The next, of which Magna Charta is a landmark, is representative government, at first restricted. The third is responsible government, as realized in the last century. We should follow the same path in dealing with industrial problems, putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, and aiming at the representation of all the parties to which Mr. King refers.

Four principles, says Mr. King, should be recognized and applied. Conference is the first. It has been tried, and with good results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the war. The second is investigation, striving to arrive at the truth. This, too, acts as a solvent of difficulty and conflict. The third principle is organization and collective action. Without organization of labor there can be no equality of relationship, for capital is always organized. And it may be added that the organization of labor, so far from causing strife as is sometimes imagined, facilitates negotiation between capital and labor. The fourth principle is representation. The problems of labor are problems of government. In adequate representation are the beginnings of law and order in industry.

Once the principle of representation is conceded it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employes with known, orderly, and expeditious means of procedure. These committees should eventually be permanent standing councils, such as are recommended in the Whitley Committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the cornerstone of its reconstruction policy.

The League of Nations represents the world's effort to end the horrors of war by introducing the principles of law, order, and co-operation. At the same time the world is threatened with an industrial conflict which may have disastrous results. Mr. King proposes a league of the parties to industry, for the promotion of industrial peace, the establishment of industrial justice, and co-operation in service for the whole community. It is a noble ideal, but it is no mere vision. Mr. King speaks not only as an idealist, but as a logical thinker and a practical man of affairs.

The Born Fighters

A magazine writer in describing a public man says of him that the contour of his head and the shape of his mouth and chin indicate the born fighter.

But is there a particular type of man who can be recognized at a glance as a born fighter?

There is, of course, the kind of man who gives one the impression that he is ready to quarrel on the least provocation, or who has the air of one who is in quest of trouble, and there is the man with the head, mouth, and chin which have always been supposed to indicate the fighter. But have not accepted ideas been rather bowled over in this war?

If one looks at the portraits of the Canadians who in the war have won the Victoria Cross for deeds of the utmost valor, he will find that the faces are not of any one type, but include every sort of face that the ordinary every-day man is using. The same is true of the officers and men whose portraits have appeared in the press as notable winners of other decorations awarded for exceptional fighting services. The man with the face of a born fighter does not seem to have distinguished himself more than other people in the kind of fighting which war has provided. Some returned officers declare that some of the men who did the most heroic things were among those whom nobody would have selected in advance as likely to do what, in some high and wild emergency, they were suddenly inspired to do. It is said that the reverse is also true, and that many a man who looked the stage hero to perfection was found to have no spirit for the life-and-death issues of battle, and had to be eased back to some relatively safe post in the rear.

The great surprise of the war has been the high average courage and self-sacrifice of the every-day man. Taking ordinary men as you find them, they are a wonderful lot, and capable of great things when in desperate straits. The roughest and toughest of men have, with a laugh, given their lives for their friends. Of the Canadians many a story can be told equal to anything in history or fiction.

Note and Comment

The tulips which thought they knew when to come up better than the gardener who tried to keep them covered will be sadder and colder tulips this morning.

President Wilson is not what would be called a silent man, but he does not seem to have talked much so far about what ought to be done with the ex-Kaiser.

The House of Commons was amused by Mr. Archambault's lapse of the tongue when he said he had spent a week in Toronto last Sunday. The sight of so much intoxicating liquor in Toronto cellars may have confused his sense of time. It seemed like a week.

There is to be a tunnel under the English Channel, and another is proposed under Bering Strait, so that some day one may travel by rail from Toronto to London or Paris. Some who have found the ocean very wide and rough will not visit England again until they can make it by Pullman.

Ludendorff, in explaining Germany's defeat, puts part of the blame on Falkenhayn and Moltke. There is enough blame to give them all some. But when will the Germans grasp the fact that Germany was defeated because her character and purpose made it utterly impossible for mankind to permit her to succeed?

The Canadian system of demobilization is better than the American in one important respect—a man here is allowed some choice as to the

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers Volume D 7

D 3980

The Four Parties to Industry

W. L. Mackenzie King

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3981

The Four Parties to Industry

BY

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING

Former Minister of Labor, Canada.
Author of "Industry and Humanity: A Study in the Principles Underlying Industrial Reconstruction."

Address before The Empire Club of Canada
at The King Edward Hotel, Toronto
March 13th, 1919

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3982

The Four Parties to Industry

I HAVE chosen as a subject "The Four Parties to Industry," in order to emphasize a truth which seems to be fundamental in any attempt to cope with the industrial unrest which has followed so closely, and, one might add, so inevitably, in the wake of war. If there is to be release from the thraldom of fear in which men's minds are everywhere held, it is the Truth that shall set us free, and the enforcement of that Social Justice which the Truth demands.

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest

Especially in industrial relations have we accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. The shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrial civilization which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who, on land and sea, have endured all manner of hardship and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy.

Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair; no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing society to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference and co-operation between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What is Industry?

We shall reach no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed, through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so inter-related and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of Capital and Labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is Labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of immediate transformation.

Next, there is Capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment essential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by Labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who, on land and sea, have endured all manner of hardship and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy.

Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair; no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing society to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference and co-operation between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What is Industry?

We shall reach no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed, through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so inter-related and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of Capital and Labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is Labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of immediate transformation.

Next, there is Capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment essential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by Labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Then there is Management, or Directing Ability. So frequently has Management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. However, a moment's reflection is sufficient to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capital's contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do-well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to an infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand, is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary, not only to bring about efficient co-operation between Labor and Capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish little or nothing.

The fourth party is the Community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Parties to Industry Interdependent

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without Labor. Labor can do nothing without Capital. Neither Labor nor Capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of Management; and Management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the Community affords.

If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Existing Organization of Industry Inadequate

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which Labor, Capital, Management, and the Community are regarded as inter-related and interdependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection.—I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant types of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc., etc.—So far as control goes, it is all

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of Capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the Board of Directors; the Board of Directors choose the Management and dictate the policies. The Management regards itself as responsible solely to Capital. Labor and the Community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for Capital are a first consideration; profits usually as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to Labor, prices to the Community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the Community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced, not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions

It is this monopoly on the part of Capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves entitled to be regarded as partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of Labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the Community it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the state or municipality.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control by the Community

What is the Socialistic State, or Collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from Capital to the Community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic State, the Government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation where more Capital was required, and would fix the wages of Labor, and the prices at which commodities are to be sold.

The War has revealed that the Socialistic State, which many workers have been led to believe is certain to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object-lesson to the world.

The little there has been of State control during the War has also revealed that the substitution of political managers for industrial managers is not likely to be the best for either industry or the State. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control by Labor

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W.-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and Management as parties to industry, the Community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant Reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by Capital under Capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under National Industrial Guilds. This is a natural reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by Capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of a protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of Capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would oust Capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by Capital, Labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object-lesson to the world.

The little there has been of State control during the War has also revealed that the substitution of political managers for industrial managers is not likely to be the best for either industry or the State. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control by Labor

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W.-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and Management as parties to industry, the Community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant Reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by Capital under Capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under National Industrial Guilds. This is a natural reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by Capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of a protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of Capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would oust Capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by Capital, Labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to mean autocratic control. Whether Labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both Labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

It is not monopoly of control in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control, whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control

And is not joint control by all the parties to industry in every way eminently wise, as well as fundamentally just? Is it not in every way, in the long run, to the interests of industry, and to the interests of each of the parties to industry? Continuance of the system of monopoly of control by Capital is no longer possible. Once autocracy was doomed in the political world, its doom was equally sounded for the industrial. The interest of every one of the parties to industry is being menaced to-day in the reactions to which the monopoly of control by Capital has given rise.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital

No one of the parties stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control by Capital, as Capital itself. As things are to-day, it is at Capital, and at Management, identified with Capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War ridden, hungry, and penniless, men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those possessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enables an idle investor to reap a fortune while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare subsistence. They have lost sight altogether of the services of Capital and Management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that Capital and Management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight, and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of Labor and the Community as well. What is needed is, not the ruination of Capital and Management, but that each be given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Management

Nor is the monopoly of control by Capital wholly fair to Management, or in its best interests. It has been my privilege to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing lost, by having the function of Capital and the function of Management kept separate and distinct, and Management given a freer hand in considering the interests of Labor and the Community.

Some managers there are who obtain their positions, not in virtue of any special skill in managerial ability, but because of personal ownership of large quantities of capital, or intimate association or relationship with some investor. The incompetence of such managers, and their slavish subservience to privilege and position, to the exclusion of a due consideration of the rights of Labor and of the Community, only serve to rouse the bitter antagonism of both these parties, who feel that their rightful interests, as necessary partners in industry, are being thwarted and jeopardized.

Not a little of the militant attitude on the part of Labor, and impatience on the part of the public with the present order of industry, is due to a feeling that some managers fail to render to industry any service at all commensurate with the enormous salaries they receive, and to a belief that the interests of Labor and of the Community alike are sacrificed to incompetence and extravagance which would not be permitted were all four parties to industry allowed some voice in the shaping of industrial policy.

Management, instead of being regarded as the servant of Capital exclusively, ought to be in a position to regard itself, as in fact it is, one of the necessary parties to industry, and as such entitled to a voice in matters which pertain to its administrative functions; responsible in the exercise of its duties, not to one party only, but to all.

In the emancipation of Management from the single control of any one of the parties, whether it be Capital, Labor, or the Community, and in the development of its function into that of a responsible executive, concerned equally with all the interests of the necessary parties to industry, lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Labor

Referring to what is fundamentally right and just, may it not be asked: Is Labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3995

industry as Capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and Management receive representation on this basis. If Capital and Management are so entitled, why not Labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of Labor as well as of Capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of Capital and Labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of Labor's right to a share in control. The investment of Capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; the investment of Labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human, investment; and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The capital investor—the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it—receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor—the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor—receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which Capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If Capital obtains this right, in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is Labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

D 3996

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community

The Community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of Labor. But for Community investment on a local, national, and international scale, Capital, Labor, and Management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the Community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the Community just as much as on the part of Labor, Capital, or Management. What is 99 per cent of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry: investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 3995

industry as Capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and Management receive representation on this basis. If Capital and Management are so entitled, why not Labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of Labor as well as of Capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of Capital and Labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of Labor's right to a share in control. The investment of Capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; the investment of Labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human, investment; and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The capital investor—the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it—receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor—the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor—receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which Capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If Capital obtains this right, in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is Labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

D 3996

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community

The Community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of Labor. But for Community investment on a local, national, and international scale, Capital, Labor, and Management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the Community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the Community just as much as on the part of Labor, Capital, or Management. What is 99 per cent of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry: investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the Community.

It is the Community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the Community, and with the consent of the Community, that titles are held. It is the Community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the Community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which Labor is provided with remunerative employment, and Capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the Community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the Community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest Capital receives, and to the wages Labor receives. But is not the Community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy? Without participation by the Community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

Single Control Must Give Way to Partnership

If industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the Community.

It is the Community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the Community, and with the consent of the Community, that titles are held. It is the Community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the Community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which Labor is provided with remunerative employment, and Capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the Community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the Community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest Capital receives, and to the wages Labor receives. But is not the Community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy? Without participation by the Community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

Single Control Must Give Way to Partnership

If industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of either service or rewards; but it does imply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle that has thus far so largely failed of recognition. The justice of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

The Necessary Transition

If to secure a just consideration of the rights of all four parties to industry something in the nature of a partnership, involving community of control, is necessary, how, it will be asked, is that transition to be effected. Certainly, it will never be brought about by violent upheavals or revolutionary methods, which serve only to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all its parties. It must be brought about in an evolutionary manner, here a little, there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of one ideal.

Government in the State a Guide to Government in Industry

There is much in the government of the State to give us guidance as well as hope in the evolution of government within industry. The British constitution may have its limitations, but no instrument of government has ever been devised which has so effectively helped to preserve and extend the freedom and liberties of men. What the British constitution stands for in the government of the State, we should aim at effecting in the working out of a constitution for industry. It will not all be accomplished within a day; neither need it be the work of generations. With free political institutions our one great inheritance, the application to industry of those principles which underlie government within the State should be neither impossible nor difficult. A willingness to recognize the justice of them, and to act in the light of knowledge we already have, is all that is necessary.

From Autocratic to Responsible Government

In government within the State, there are three outstanding stages of development. The first stage is that of the autocratic executive, in which there is single control by one only of the parties to the State. King John is an outstanding example of this type of autocratic government. It was not believed, in the time of John, that the people had any ability to govern themselves. Even the lords and the nobles were without a voice in the government of the kingdom. They secured the first advance in popular liberties when they wrested the Magna Charta from John, and secured his signature to a written statement of their rights as citizens.

Representative Government marks the next important phase in the evolution of government within the State. That takes us back to 1265, to the famous Parliament of Simon de

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Montfort, when for the first time in British history there was at least an attempt at representation of all three estates. At the outset, representation was restricted and nominal. All subsequent development has been in the nature of broadening the basis of representation, and of rendering more effective the representation gained.

It is only within the past century that the highest form of government, namely, Responsible Government, has been attained. Under Responsible Government, the executive is responsible to the people as a whole, not to any one class.

When the managers of industry become responsible to Labor, Capital, and the Community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the government of the State. Meanwhile, our duty would appear to be that of putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, no matter by which of the parties to industry it may be attempted or exercised, and to work out a system of joint-control based upon representation of all the parties in the determination of industrial policy.

The Basis of an Industrial Constitution

Time forbids more than a suggestion or two as to the manner in which a constitution for the parties to industry might be worked out in a way which will help to allay the industrial unrest of our times, and advance the highest interests of industry, and of all its parties. Obviously, what is most needed is recognition of the fact that industry is not a matter which concerns only one party, but that it is of vital concern to all four: to Capital, to Labor, to Management, and to the Community, and that no one of the four is entitled to a monopoly of control.

Once recognition is given the four parties to industry, the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which have long been regarded as obviously fair and just.

The Principle of Conference

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of Conference. It is impossible to get anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence; not aloofness, distrust, and suspicion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the War. It was not until the Government of Britain, representing the Community, invited

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Capital, Management, and Labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of Round Table Conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions required to win the War. What was necessary to the winning of the War is equally necessary to the winning of Peace—which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial unrest.

The Principle of Investigation

The second principle is that of Investigation. Investigation is but a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are certain evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty; and unfair dealing between the parties to industry are of this kind. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness—these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

Investigation, too, has been tried between the four parties to industry, and found to be of the utmost service.

I notice that the Minister of Labor informed the House of Commons a day or two ago that Canada had had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world. If that statement is true, and I believe it is, it is because we have on our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lockouts and strikes.

The principle of that law is the one being acted upon in Great Britain to-day. If England is being saved at the moment from industrial strife, hardly less frightful in its horrible conquences than actual war, it is because Capital and Management, Labor and the Community, are represented upon the Commission recently appointed by Mr. Lloyd George to investigate the demands of the miners, and the condition of the coal mining industry throughout Britain.

It is upon the same principle of investigation prior to the commencement of hostilities that the League of Nations is being founded. If war between nations and between the parties to industry is to end, it will only be through the acceptance of the principle of investigation before a severance of relations.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a League of the Parties to Industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle, and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league, I believe, would lead, even more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace. Accustom men to the adoption of fundamental principles in adjusting

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

their industrial relations, something which immediately concerns their everyday life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

The Principle of Organization and Collective Action

A third principle is that of Organization and Collective Action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of Capital, under the stress of world competition, if its units were not permitted to coalesce, and large organization of business thereby rendered impossible? What would become of the Community, if its activities were not organized? Deprive managers of the right of membership in an employers' or manufacturers' association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If Capital, Management, and the Community have the right to organize, so also should Labor have this right.

Without organization of Labor—where Capital, Management, and the Community are organized—what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where, under such a condition, are the individual units of Labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where Labor is concerned than in the case of Capital or Management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; Capital and Management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that the use of a thing is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuses of power are not confined to any one class.

The Principle of Representation

A fourth principle is that of Representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the State has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of the parties, effected through organization, all enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in Round Table Conference—in such an obviously just and fair arrangement, we have the beginnings of law and order in industry, just as we have had it in the State, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolu-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

tionary lines, instead of along lines that are illegal and revolutionary.

Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils

Once the principle of representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employees, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committees in individual establishments, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of Government, representing the Community and protecting its interests. This, as you know, is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Whitley Committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the corner-stone of its reconstruction policy.

Nor is the formation of such joint committees and industrial councils any longer a matter of experiment. Every day is adding to the number that are being formed, many of them in industries which have hitherto opposed anything in the way of organization among employees, and which have conceded little or nothing in the way of conference.

The Service of Organized Labor

The Trade Unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of Organized Labor. It has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred; but the real purport of Labor's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of Capital and of Labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into clearer day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of Labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservatively directed unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of Labor and of Capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future. Industrial concerns which have

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization, and representation, in dealings with their employees, and to concede to Labor the right of collective bargaining, and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions.

It may be that Labor needs educating, that its leaders need more in the way of experience; but, in the absence of other opportunities, whence are education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which Labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?

The Joint Industrial Councils being formed in England show how this new approach between Capital and Labor is certain, in its most highly developed forms, to take account of existing organizations of Labor and Capital, and to change the attitude of these powerful bodies from one of militancy based on a belief in opposed interests into one of co-operation based on a belief in the larger interests which they have in common.

A New Spirit Necessary

One thing, and one thing only, remains to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; but without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if Freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as ill-mated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom, there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organization and spirit can work against each other only till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead.

A New Conception of Industry

With the new spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which Capital, Labor, Management, and the Community meet like so

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, as in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

An Easter Hope

May I conclude these remarks with words with which I have concluded a volume in which I have sought to enlarge upon the principles outlined to-day. This moment of silence at the close of the Great War, and this Lenten season, seem to lend them appropriateness to this occasion, and to the subject we have been considering.

"Is it too much to believe that, having witnessed Humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its Garden of Fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of Militarism, Labor and Capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and broken-hearted world the one hope it is theirs alone to bring; and that, in the acceptance of principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset mankind, they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre to-day, and give to Humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life?"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4012

THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest
What is Industry?
The Parties to Industry
Parties to Industry Interdependent
Existing Organization of Industry Inadequate
Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions
Drift Toward Community Monopoly
Drift Toward Labor Monopoly
Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy
The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control
Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital
Management
Labor
The Community
Individual Control Must Give Way to Partnership
The Necessary Transition
Government within the State a Guide to the Government of Industry:
Autocratic Executive Representative Government
Responsible Government
The Principle of Conference
The Principle of Investigation
The Principle of Organization & Collective Action
The Principle of Representation
Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils
A New Spirit Necessary
A New Conception of Industry
A Final Hope.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

THE FOUR MAIN PARTIES TO INDUSTRY

Labor, Capital, Management And Community Involved in Industrial Reconstruction

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King Outlines His Views as to the Principles and Methods Which Must Be Applied in Finding a Solution to Present Day Problems—The Interests of Humanity Are Far Superior to the Dollar

No one question is occupying the minds of Governments and public men throughout the world today to a greater extent than that of industrial reconstruction, that is, the acute problem of bridging the wide chasm which at present exists between the employing class, as represented by Capital, and those who are employed by them, namely, Labor. In many important respects the two are now as far apart as the poles, and in the interests of both, as well as to safeguard the general welfare of all people, they must be brought closer together, and conditions created whereby they will work together in harmony to their mutual advantage.

No man in Canada has devoted closer study and investigation to this acute problem than Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, former minister of labor, and the recently chosen leader of the Liberal party of Canada. Mr. King has made the study of industrial questions his life work, and he not only has no peer in Canada, but it is doubtful if there is any greater authority living today in any country.

Mr. King's most recent book, "Industry and Humanity," is now accepted as perhaps the best and most comprehensive work on the subject. It is too lengthy a book for publication in a newspaper, but in an address delivered before the Empire Club of Canada, at Toronto, some months ago, Mr. King presented the same views which find fuller expression and a wealth of detail in this book.

In view of the widespread interest now being manifested in this all-important subject, The Leader reprints herewith the full text of that address by Mr. King. It will well repay a close reading. Mr. King spoke as follows:

I have chosen as a subject "The Four Parties to Industry," in order to emphasize a truth which seems to be fundamental in any attempt to cope with the industrial unrest which has followed so closely, and, one might add, so inevitably, in the wake of war. If there is to be release from the thraldom of fear in which men's minds are everywhere held, it is the truth that shall set us free, and the enforcement of that social justice which the truth demands.

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest

Especially in industrial relations have we accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. The shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrial civilization which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who, on land and sea, have endured all manner of hardship and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy.

Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry today is no ephemeral and transitory affair; no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing society to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference and co-operation between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What Is Industry?

We shall reach no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed, through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so inter-related and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of capital and labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of immediate transformation.

Next, there is capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment essential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

Then there is management, or directing ability. So frequently has management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. However, a moment's reflection is sufficient to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capitals' contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do-well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to an infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand, is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary, not only to bring about efficient co-operation between labor and capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish little or nothing.

The fourth party is the community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Parties to Industry Interdependent

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without labor. Labor can do nothing without capital. Neither labor nor capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of management; and management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the community affords.

If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Existing Organizations of Industry Inadequate

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which labor, capital, management, and the community are regarded as inter-related and inter-dependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection.—I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant types of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc., etc.—So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the board of directors; the board of directors choose the management and dictate the policies. The management regards itself as responsible solely to capital. Labor and the community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for capital are a first consideration; profits usually as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to labor, prices to the community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced, not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions

It is this monopoly on the part of capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves entitled to be regarded as partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the community it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the state or municipality.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control By the Community

What is the Socialistic state, or collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from capital to the community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic state, the government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation where more capital was required, and would fix the wages of labor, and the prices at which commodities are to be sold.

The war has revealed that the Socialistic state, which many workers have been led to believe to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object-lesson to the world.

The little there has been of state control during the war has also revealed that the substitution of political managers is not likely to be the best for either industry or the state. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

Drift Toward Monopoly of Control By Labor

What are the extreme movements on the part of labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in revolutionary syndicalism, bolshevism, and certain forms of I. W. W.-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of capital and management as parties to industry, the community is also ignored, and red terror used to supplant reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of labor against monopoly of control on the part of capital. Like state socialism, it would rule out capital's right to joint control just as effectively as capitalism seeks to rule out labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by capital under capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the state under socialism, guild socialism would establish a monopoly of control by labor under national industrial guilds. This is a natural reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant labor unionism against the monopoly of control by capital just as collectivism represents the extreme of a protest of an aggressive state socialism against the monopoly of capitalistic control. Guild socialism and collectivism are alike in that each would oust capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by capital, labor, or the state, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whether labor or the state as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both labor and the state, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

It is not monopoly of control in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control, whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control

And is not joint control by all the parties to industry in every way eminently wise, as well as fundamentally just? Is it not in every way, in the long run, to the interests of industry? Continuance of the system of monopoly of control by capital is no longer possible. Once autocracy was doomed in the political world, its doom was equally sounded for the industrial. The interest of every one of the parties to industry is being menaced today in the reactions to which the monopoly of control by capital has given rise.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital

No one of the parties stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control by capital, as capital itself. As things are today, it is at capital, and at management, identified with capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War ridden, hungry, and penniless, men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those possessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enable an idle investor to reap a fortune while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare subsistence. They have lost sight altogether of the services of capital and management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that capital and management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight, and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of labor and the community as well. What is needed is, not the ruination of capital and management, but that each be given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Management

Nor is the monopoly of control by capital wholly fair to management, or in its best interests. It has been my privilege to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing lost, by having the function of capital and the function of management kept separate and distinct, and management given a freer hand in considering the interests of labor and the community.

Some managers there are who obtain their positions, not in virtue of any special skill in managerial ability, but because of personal ownership of large quantities of capital, or intimate association or relationship with some investor. The incompetence of such managers, and their slavish subservience to privilege and position, to the exclusion of a due consideration of the rights of labor and of the community, only serve to rouse the bitter antagonism of both these parties, who feel that their rightful interests, as necessary partners in industry, are being thwarted and jeopardized.

Not a little of the militant attitude on the part of labor, and impatience on the part of the public with the present order of industry, is due to a feeling that some managers fail to render to industry any service at all commensurate with the enormous salaries they receive, and to a belief that the interests of labor and of the community alike are sacrificed to incompetence and extravagance which would not be permitted were all four parties to industry allowed some voice in the shaping of industrial policy.

Management, instead of being regarded as the servant of capital exclusively, ought to be in a position to regard itself, as in fact it is, one of the necessary parties to industry, and as such entitled to a voice in matters which pertain to its administrative functions; responsible in the exercise of its duties, not to one party only, but to all.

In the emancipation of management from the single control of any one of the parties, whether it be capital, labor, or the community, and in the development of its function into that of a responsible executive, concerned equally with all the interests of the necessary parties to industry, lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Labor

Referring to what is fundamentally right and just, may it not be asked: Is labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of industry as capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and management receive representation on this basis. If capital and management are so entitled, why not labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of labor as well as of capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of capital and labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of labor's right to a share in control. The investment of capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; the investment of labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other a human, investment; and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The capital investor—the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it—receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor—the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor—receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If capital obtains this right, in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested? If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community

The community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of labor. But for community investment on a local, national, and international scale, capital, labor, and management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the community just as much as on the part of labor, capital, or management. What is 99 per cent. of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry: investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the community.

It is the community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the the community, and with the consent of the community, that titles are held. It is the community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which labor is provided with remunerative employment, and capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and the commodities. This is a return akin to the interest capital receives, and to the wages labor receives. But is not the community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy? Without participation by the community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

Single Control Must Give Way to Partnership

If industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality of either service or rewards, but it does imply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle that has thus far so largely failed of recognition. The justice of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

The Necessary Transition

If to secure a just consideration of the rights of all four parties to industry something in the nature of a partnership, involving community of control, is necessary, how, it will be asked, is that transition to be effected. Certainly, it will never be brought about by violent upheavals or revolutionary methods, which serve only to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all its parties. It must be brought about in an evolutionary manner, here a little, there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of one ideal.

Government in the State a Guide to Government in Industry

There is much in the government of the state to give us guidance as well as hope in the evolution of government within industry. The British constitution may have its limitations, but no instrument of government has ever been devised which has so effectively helped to preserve and extend the freedom and liberties of men. What the British constitution stands for in the government of the state, we should aim at effecting in the working out of a constitution for industry. It will not all be accomplished within a day; neither need it be the work of generations. With free political institutions our one great inheritance, the application to industry of those principles which underlie government within the state should be neither impossible nor difficult. A willingness to recognize the justice of them, and to act in the light of knowledge we already have, is all that is necessary.

From Autocratic to Responsible Government

In government within the state, there are three outstanding stages of development. The first stage is that of the autocratic executive, in which there is single control by one only of the parties to the state. King John is an outstanding example of this type of autocratic government. It was not believed, in the time of John, that the people had any ability to govern themselves. Even the lords and the nobles were without a voice in the government of the kingdom. They secured the first advance in popular liberties when they wrested the Magna Charta from John, and secured his signature to a written statement of their rights as citizens.

Representative government marks the next important phase in the evolution of government within the state. That takes us back to 1265, to the famous Parliament of Simon de Montfort, when for the first time in British history there was at least an attempt at representation of all three estates. At the outset, representation was restricted and nominal. All subsequent development has been in the nature of broadening the basis of representation, and of rendering more effective the representation gained.

It is only within the past century that the highest form of government, namely, responsible government, has been attained. Under responsible government, the executive is responsible to the people as a whole, not to any one class.

When the managers of industry become responsible to labor, capital, and the community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible exexcutive in the government of the state. Meanwhile, our duty would appear to be that of putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, no matter by which of the parties to industry it may be attempted or exercised, and to work out a system of joint-control based upon representation of all the parties in the determination of industrial policy.

The Basis of an Industrial Constitution

Time forbids more than a suggestion or two as to the manner in which a constitution for the parties to industry might be worked out in a way which will help to allay the industrial unrest of our times, and advance the highest interests of industry, and of all its parties. Obviously, what is most needed is recognition of the fact that industry is not a matter which concerns only one party, but that it is of vital concern to all four: to capital, to labor, to management, and to the community, and that no one of the four is entitled to a monopoly of control.

Once recognition is given the four parties to industry, the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which have long been regarded as obviously fair and just.

The Principle of Conference

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of conference. It is impossible to get anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence; not aloofness, distrust and suspicion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the war. It was not until the government of Britain, representing the community, invited capital, management, and labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of round table conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions required to win the war. What was necessary to the winning of the war is equally necessary to the winning of peace—which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial unrest.

The Principle of Investigation

The second principle is that of investigation. Investigation is but a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are certain evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty; and unfair dealing between the parties to industry are of this kind. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness—these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

Investigation, too, has been tried between the four parties to industry, and found to be of the utmost service.

I notice that the minister of labor informed the House of Commons a day or two ago that Canada had had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world. If that statement is true, and I believe it is, it is because we have on our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lockouts and strikes.

The principle of that law is the one being acted upon in Great Britain today. If England is being saved at the moment from industrial strife, hardly less frightful in its horrible consequences than actual war, it is because capital and management, labor and the community, are represented upon the commission recently appointed by Mr. Lloyd George to investigate the demands of the miners, and the condition of the coal mining industry throughout Britain.

It is upon the same principle of investigation prior to the commencement of hostilities that the League of Nations is being founded. If war between nations and between the parties to industry is to end, it will only be through the acceptance of the principle of investigation before a severance of relations.

"What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a league of the parties to industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle, and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league, I believe, would lead, even more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace. Accustom men to the adoption of fundamental principles in adjusting their industrial relations, something which immediately concerns their everyday life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

The Principle of Organization and Collective Action

A third principle is that of organization and collective action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of capital, under the stress of world competition if its units were not permitted to coalesce, and large organization of business thereby rendered impossible? What would become of the community, if its activities were not organized? Deprive managers of the right of membership in an employers' or manufacturers' association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If capital, management, and the community have the right to organize, so also should labor have this right.

Without organization of labor—where capital, management, and the community are organized—what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where, under such a condition, are the individual units of labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where labor is concerned than in the case of capital or management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; capital and management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that the use of a thing is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuses of power are not confined to any one class.

The Principle of Representation

A fourth principle is that of representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the state has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of the parties, effected through organization, all enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in round table conference—in such an obviously just and fair arrangement, we have the beginnings of law and order in industry, just as we have had it in the state, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolutionary lines, instead of along lines that are illegal and revolutionary.

Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils

Once the principle of representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employees, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committee in individual establishments, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of government, representing the community and protecting its interests. This, as you know, is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Whitley committee which the government of Great Britain has adopted as the corner-stone of its reconstruction policy.

Nor is the formation of such joint committees and industrial councils any longer a matter of experiment. Every day is adding to the number that are being formed, many of them in industries which have hitherto opposed anything in the way of organization among employees, and which have conceded little or nothing in the way of conference.

The Service of Organized Labor

The trade unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of organized labor. It has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred; but the real purport of labor's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of capital and of labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into clearer day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservatively directed unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of labor and capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future. Industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization, and representation, in dealings with their employees, and to concede to labor the right of collective bargaining, and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions.

It may be that labor needs educating, that its leaders need more in the way of experience; but, in the absence of other opportunities, whence are education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?

The joint industrial councils being formed in England show how this new approach between capital and labor is certain, in its most highly developed forms, to take account of existing organizations of labor and capital, and to change the attitude of these powerful bodies from one of militancy based on a belief in opposed interests into one of co-operation based on a belief in the larger interests which they have in common.

One thing, and one thing only, remains to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; but without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as ill-mated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom, there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organization and spirit can work against each other only till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead.

A New Conception of Industry

With the news spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which capital, labor, management, and the community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, as in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

May I conclude these remarks with words with which I have concluded a volume in which I have sought to enlarge upon the principles outlined today. This moment of silence at the close of the Great War, and this Lenten season, seem to lend them appropriateness to this occasion, and to the subject we have been considering.

"Is it too much to believe that, having witnessed humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its Garden of Fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of militarism, labor and capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and broken-hearted world the one hope it is theirs alone to bring; and that, in the acceptance of principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset mankind, they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre today, and give to humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life?"

PUBLIC ARCHIVES OF CANADA

THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY

I have chosen as the subject of my remarks to-day "The Four Parties to Industry", in order to emphasize a truth which seems to be fundamental in any attempt to cope with the industrial unrest which has followed so closely, and, one might add, so inevitably, in the wake of war. If there is to be release from the thraldom of fear in which men's minds are everywhere held, it is the Truth that shall set us free, and the enforcement of that Social Justice which the Truth demands.

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest

In industrial relations especially, we have accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. The shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrial civilization which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who on land and sea have endured all manner of hardship and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy. Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing civilization to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What is Industry?

We shall get no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4015

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so interrelated and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of Capital and Labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is Labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of transformation.

Next, there is Capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment nesential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by Labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

Then, there is Management, or Directing Ability. So frequently has Management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. A moment's reflection is sufficient, however, to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capital's contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do-well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to an infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand, is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary to effect efficient co-operation, not only between Labor and Capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish little or nothing.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The fourth party is the Community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Parties to Industry Interdependent

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without Labor. Labor can do nothing without Capital. Neither Labor nor Capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of Management; and Management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the Community affords. If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Existing Organization of Industry Inadequate

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which Labor, Capital, Management, and the Community are regarded as interrelated and interdependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection. -- I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant type of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc.,etc. -- So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of Capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the Board of Directors; the Board of Directors choose the Management and dictate the policies. The Management regards itself as responsible solely to Capital. Labor and the Community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for Capital are a first consideration; profits as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to Labor, prices to the Community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the Community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, and in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced - not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions

It is this monopoly on the part of Capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as Socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves rightful partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of Labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the Community, it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the state or municipality.

Drift toward Monopoly of Control by the Community

What is the Socialistic State, or Collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from Capital to the Community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic State, the Government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation wherever capital was required, and would fix the wages of Labor employed, and the prices at which commodities are to be sold.

The War has revealed that the Socialistic State, which workers were led to believe is certain to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object lesson to the world.

The little there has been of state control during the War has also revealed that political managers, as a substitute for industrial managers, is not likely to be the best for either industry or the state. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Drift toward Monopoly of Control by Labor

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and Management as parties to industry, the Community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant Reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by Capital under Capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under National Industrial Guilds. This is a natural reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by Capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of the protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of Capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would oust Capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by Capital, Labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whether Labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both Labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4019

It is not monopoly of control in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control, whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control

And is not joint control by all the parties to industry in every way eminently wise, as well as fundamentally just? Is it not in every way, in the long run, to the interests of industry, and to the interests of each of the parties to industry? Continuance of the system of monopoly of control by Capital is no longer possible. Once Autocracy was doomed in the political world, its doom was equally sounded for the industrial. The interest of every one of the parties to industry is being menaced to-day in the reactions to which the monopoly of control by Capital has given rise.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital

No one of the parties stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control by Capital, as Capital itself. As things are to-day, it is at Capital, and at Management, identified with Capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War ridden, hungry, and penniless, men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those possessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enables an idle investor to reap a fortune while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare subsistence. They have lost sight altogether of the services of Capital and Management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that Capital and Management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight, and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of Labor and the Community as well. What is needed is not the ruination of Capital and Management, but each given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Management

Nor is the monopoly of control by Capital wholly fair to Management, or in its best interests. It has been my privilege to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them, a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing list, by having the function of Capital and the function of Management kept separate and distinct, and Management given a freer hand in considering the interests of Labor and the Community.

Some managers there are who obtain their positions, not in virtue of any special skill in managerial ability, but because of personal ownership of large quantities of capital, or intimate association or relationship with some investor. The incompetency of such managers, and their slavish subservience to privilege and position, to the exclusion of a due consideration of the rights of Labor and of the Community, only serves to rouse the bitter antagonism of both these parties, who feel that their rightful interests, as necessary partners in industry, are being thwarted and jeopardized.

Not a little of the militant attitude on the part of Labor, and impatience on the part of the public with the present order of industry, is due to a feeling that some managers wholly fail to render to industry any service at all commensurate with the enormous salaries they receive, and to a belief that the interests of Labor and the Community alike are sacrificed to incompetence and extravagance, which would not be permitted were all four parties to industry permitted some voice in the shaping of industrial policy.

Management, instead of being regarded as the servant exclusively of Capital, ought to be in a position to regard itself, as in fact it is, one of the necessary parties to industry, and as such entitled to a voice in matters which pertain to its administrative functions; responsible fn the exercise of its duties, not to one party only, but to all.

In the emancipation of Management from the single control of any one of the parties, whether it be Capital, Labor, or the Community, and in the development of its function into that of a responsible executive, concerned equally with all the interests of the necessary parties to industry, lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Labor

Coming to what is fundamentally right and just, may it not be asked: Is Labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of industry as Capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and Management receive representation on this basis. If Capital and Management are so entitled, why not Labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of Labor as well as of Capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of Capital and Labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of Labor's right to a share in control. The investment of Capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; and investment of Labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material, the other, a human investment, and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

THe capital investor - the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it - receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor - the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor - receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which Capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If Capital obtains this right in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is Labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested. If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community

The Community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of Labor. But for Community investment on a local, national, and international scale, Capital, Labor,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and Management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the Community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the Community just as much as on the part of Labor, Capital, or Management. What is 99 per cent of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry: investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the Community.

It is the Community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the Community, and with the consent of the Community, that titles are held. It is the Community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the Community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which Labor is provided with remunerative employment, and Capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the Community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the Community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest Capital receives, and to the wages Labor receives. But is not the Community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy. Without participation by the Community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Individual Control Must Give Way to Partnership

If Industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality of either service or rewards; but it does simply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle that has ~~been~~ thus far so largely failed of recognition. The justice of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

The Necessary Transition

If to secure a just consideration of the rights of all the four parties to industry something in the nature of partnership, involving community of control, is necessary, how, it will be asked, is that transition to be effected. Certainly it will never be brought about by violent upheavals, or revolutionary methods, which serve only to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all its parties. It must be brought about in an evolutionary manner, here a little, there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of the one ideal.

Government in the State a Guide to Government in Industry

There is much in the government of the state to give us guidance as well as hope in the evolution of government within industry. The British constitution may have its limitations, but no instrument of government has ever been devised which has so effectively helped to preserve and extend the freedom and liberties of men. What the British constitution stands for in the government of the state, we should aim at effecting in the working out of a constitution for industry. It will not all be accomplished within a day;neither need it be the work of generations. With free political institutions our one great inheritance, the application to industry of those

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

principles which underlie government within the state should not be either impossible or difficult. A willingness to recognize the justice of them, and to act in the light of knowledge we already have, is all that is necessary.

In government within the state, there are three outstanding stages of development. The first stage is that of the autocratic executive, in which there is single control by one only of the parties to the state. King John is an outstanding example of this type of autocratic government. It was not believed, in the time of John, that the people had any ability to govern themselves. Even the lords and the nobles were without a voice in the government of the kingdom. They secured the first advance in popular liberties when they wrested the Magna Charta from John, and secured his signature to a written statement of their rights as citizens.

Representative Government marks the next important phase in the evolution of government within the state. That takes us back to 1265, to the famous Parliament of Simon de Montfort, when for the first time in British history there was at least an attempt at representation of all three estates. At the outset, representation was restricted and nominal. All subsequent development has been in the nature of a broadening of the basis of representation, and rendering effective the representation gained.

It is only within the past century that the highest form of government: namely, Responsible Government, had been attained. When the managers of industry become responsible to Labor, Capital, and the Community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the government of the state. Meanwhile, our duty would appear to be that of putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, no matter by which of the parties to industry it may be attempted or exercised, and to work out a system of joint-control based upon representation of all the parties in the determination of industrial policy.

Recognition of the Four Parties the First Essential

Time forbids more than a suggestion or two as to the manner in which a constitution between the parties to industry might be worked out in a way which will help to allay the industrial unrest of our times, and advance the highest interests of industry, and all of its parties. Obviously, what is most

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

needed is recognition of the fact that industry is not a matter which concerns only one party, but that it is of vital concern to all four: to Capital, to Labor, to Management, and to the Community, and that no one of the four is entitled to a monopoly of control.

Once recognition is given the four parties to industry, the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which are obviously fair and just.

The Principle of Conference

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of Conference. It is impossible to hope to get anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence; not aloofness, distrust, and suspicion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the War. It was not until the Government of Britain, representing the Community, invited Capital, Management, and Labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of Round Table Conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions of war. What was necessary to the winning of War is equally necessary to the winning of Peace - which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial ~~anarchy~~. unrest.

The Principle of Investigation

The second principle is that of Investigation. Investigation is only a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are a class of evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty; and unfair dealings between the parties to industry are of this kind. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness - these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Investigation, too, has been tried between the four parties to industry, and found to be of the utmost service.

I notice that the Minister of Labor informed the House of Commons a day or two ago that Canada had had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world. If that statement is true, and I believe it is, it is because we have on our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lockouts and strikes.

The principle of that law is the one being acted upon in Great Britain to-day. If England is being saved at the moment from industrial strife, hardly less frightful in its consequences than actual war, it is because Capital and Management, Labor, and the Community, are represented upon the Commission recently appointed by Mr. Lloyd George to investigate the demands of the miners, and the condition of the mining industry throughout Britain.

It is upon the same principle of encouraging investigation prior to the commencement of hostilities that the League of Nations is being founded. If war between nations and between the parties to industry is to end, it can only be by the acceptance of the principle of investigation before the severance of peaceful relations.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a League of the Parties to Industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle, and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league would lead, I believe, even more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace. Accustom men to the adoption of fundamental principles in their industrial relations, which are something that immediately concern their every day life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

The Principle of Organization and Collective Action

A third principle is that of Organization and Collective Action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of Capital, under the stress of world competition, if its units were not to coalesce, and large organization of business were rendered impossible? What would become

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of the Community, if its activities were not organized? Deprive Managers of the right of membership in an employers or manufacturers association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If Capital, Management, and the Community have the right to organize, so also should Labor have this right.

Without organization of Labor - where Capital, Management, and the Community are organized - what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where are the individual units of Labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where Labor is concerned than in the case of Capital or Management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; Capital and Management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that the use of a thing is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuses of power are not confined to any one class.

The Principle of Representation

A fourth principle is that of representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the state has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of all the parties in interest, effected through organization, enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in Round Table Conference - in such an obviously fair and just arrangement, we have the beginnings of Law and Order in industry, just as we have had it in the state, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolutionary, not revolutionary, lines.

Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils

Once the principle of Representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employees, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committees in individual establishments, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry, and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of Government, representing the Community and protecting its interests. This, as you know, is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Whitley Committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the corner-stone of its reconstruction policy.

Nor is the formation of such joint committees and industrial councils any longer a matter of experiment. Every day is adding to the number that are being formed, many of them in industries which have hitherto opposed anything in the way of organization among employees, and which have conceded little or nothing in the way of conference.

The Trade Unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of Organized Labor. It has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred; but the real purport of Labor's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of Capital and of Labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into clearer day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of Labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservative unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of Labor and of Capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future. Industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization, and representation, in dealings with their employees, and to concede to Labor the right of collective bargaining, and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions.

It may be that Labor needs educating, that its leaders need more in the way of experience; but whence is that education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which Labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?

The Joint Industrial Councils being formed in England show how this new approach between Capital and Labor is certain, in its highest form, to take account of all existing organizations of Labor and Capital, and to change the attitude of these powerful bodies from one of militancy based on a belief in opposed interests into one of co-operation based on a belief in the larger interests which they have in common.

A New Spirit Necessary

One thing, and one thing only, remains to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; and without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by the millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian Despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if Freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as ill-mated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom, there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organization and spirit can only work against each other till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

A New Conception of Industry

With the new spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which Capital, Labor, Management, and the Community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

A Final Hope

May I conclude these remarks with words with which I have concluded a volume in which I have sought to enlarge upon the principles outlined to-day. This moment of silence at the close of the Great War, and this Lenten season, seem to give to them appropriateness to this occasion, and to the subject we have been considering.

"Is it too much to believe that, having witnessed Humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its Garden of Fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of Militarism, Labor and Capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and brokenhearted world the one hope it is theirs alone to bring; and that, in the acceptance of principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset Mankind, they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre to-day, and give to Humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life?"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4031

"The Four Parties to Industry"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4032

THE FOUR PARTIES

to

INDUSTRY

By

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King

Former Minister of Labor, Canada.
Author of "Industry and Humanity : A Study in the Principles Underlying Industrial Reconstruction".

Address before The Empire Club of Canada
at The King Edward Hotel, Toronto, Canada,
March 13, 1919

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY

I have chosen as a subject ~~of my remarks to day~~ "The Four Parties to Industry", in order to emphasize a truth which seems to be fundamental in any attempt to cope with the industrial unrest which has followed so closely, and, one might add, so inevitably, in the wake of war. If there is to be release from the thraldom of fear in which men's minds are everywhere held, it is the Truth that shall set us free, and the enforcement of that Social Justice which the Truth demands.

The Meaning of Industrial Unrest

In industrial relations especially we have accepted with complacence an order of things to which we have grown accustomed. THe shock of war, stirring the world's soul to its very depths, has brought before our eyes the shattered image of an industrial civilization which is full of injustice. It has left us to decide whether the new order shall be little more than a return to the old, with all its worship of material wealth and material power, and its relative indifference to human worth and human well-being; or whether it will be an order worthy of the sacrifices of the heroic dead, and the services of those who on land and sea have endured all manner of hardship and peril to preserve the liberties and freedom that we still enjoy. Let us be assured of this: the unrest in the world of industry to-day is no ephemeral and transitory affair; no mere aftermath of the hideous convulsion which has shaken existing ~~civilization~~ society to its very foundations. It is the voice of a grief-stricken humanity crying for justice in the relations of industry. Let us be equally assured that the sword is not the instrument, and repression not the method, to stay this unrest. The truth is mightier than the sword, and in conference and co-operation between all the parties in interest, not in coercion of the others by any one, lies the only hope of an ultimate solution.

What is Industry?

We shall get no understanding of the problems of industry until we adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Industry is the means by which the material resources of the world are transformed, through human intelligence and human energy, with the aid of natural powers, tools, and machines, into commodities and services available for human use. It is a vast process of transformation, itself a series of transforming processes so interrelated and numerous as to unite mankind, in this age of world-wide industrial expansion, in an enterprise that encompasses the globe.

The Parties to Industry

We are accustomed to discuss the problems of industry in terms of Capital and Labor. The inability to find a workable solution to many of these problems arises from a vision thus circumscribed, and an ignoring of other factors equal in significance and importance. To carry on industry in any but the most primitive kind of way, four parties, discharging separate and distinct functions, are necessary.

First of all, there is Labor, which supplies the muscular and mental energy necessary to effect the processes of transformation.

Next, there is Capital, which is necessary to provide the raw materials, the tools, appliances, and equipment essential to industrial processes, and the advances in the way of food, clothing, and shelter required by Labor pending the distribution of the finished product.

Then, there is Management, or Directing Ability. So frequently has Management been associated with the ownership of capital, that the identity of the former has more or less been merged in the latter. A moment's reflection is sufficient however, to disclose the complete dissimilarity of function between the two. Capital's contribution to industry is in the nature of material substance loaned by way of investment. Its possessor may be any kind of person, from a social parasite or ne'er-do-well who is the inheritor of a fortune, to an infant totally incapable of any service to industry, and whose property is necessarily held in trust. Managerial ability, on the other hand, is in the nature of personal service of the very highest order, and is wholly necessary to effect efficient co-operation not only between Labor and Capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, without whose co-operation in all that pertains to industry the other three parties could accomplish little or nothing.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4035

The fourth party is the Community, that entity which we speak of sometimes as organized society, under whose sanction all industry is carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution, and exchange are rendered possible.

Parties to Industry Interdependent

Not only are the four parties necessary to industry, but they are equally necessary to one another. Capital can do nothing without Labor. Labor can do nothing without Capital. Neither Labor nor Capital can co-operate effectively in industry save under the guiding genius of Management; and Management, however great its genius, can do nothing apart from the opportunities and privileges the Community affords. If all four parties are necessary to industry, and equally necessary to one another, then, surely, all four should have some voice in the control of industry, and with regard to the conditions under which their services to industry are rendered.

Existing Organization of Industry Inadequate

Is our present organization of industry in any way suggestive of a partnership, in which Labor, Capital, Management, and the Community are regarded as interrelated and interdependent? Far from it, as everyone knows who has given the organization of industry a moment's reflection. -- I am dealing, of course, only with the dominant type of large industrial organization, for it is mainly from this source that our present problems arise: transportation, manufacturing, mining, etc.,etc. -- So far as control goes, it is all in the nature of monopoly, and that a monopoly of control on the part of Capital.

The owners of capital, the capital investors, choose the Board of Directors; the Board of Directors choose the Management and dictate the policies. The Management regards itself as responsible solely to Capital. Labor and the Community become a consideration only in so far as they are able to make their power felt. Profits for Capital are a first consideration; profits as high as it is possible to make them. Wages to Labor, prices to the Community, are what they can be kept at, what the market will allow. Labor and the Community are not regarded as partners, entitled to share, through common knowledge, in a common venture, ~~and~~ in gains and losses alike. Such control as they exercise is a control that is forced, not a control that is voluntarily shared; a control that in the nature of things begets an attitude of militancy on their part.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Monopoly of Control by Capital Responsible for Reactions

It is this monopoly on the part of Capital in the control and direction of industry that has led to the developments that are described as Socialistic, ultra-radical, and even anarchistic. More than any other factor, it lies at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time. The other parties to industry, though feeling themselves ~~rightful~~ entitled to be regarded as partners, have despaired of gaining any measure of joint control by concession. They have felt themselves driven to exact, by force, what they believe to be their rightful dues. In the case of Labor, this demand for recognition in the control of industry has asserted itself in the form of strikes. In the case of the Community, it has taken the form of arbitrary enactment, leading to an assumption of single control by the state or municipality.

Drift toward Monopoly of Control by the Community

What is the Socialistic State, or Collectivism, which is its industrial expression, other than industry so organized as to transfer industrial control from Capital to the Community, to the exclusion of the other parties? Under the Socialistic State, the Government would choose the managers of industry, would own the instruments of production, levying taxation wher~~ever~~ever ^ more & capital was required, and would fix the wages of Labor, ~~employed;~~ and the prices at which commodities are to be sold.

The War has revealed that the Socialistic State, which many workers ~~were~~ have been led to believe is certain to be beneficent and idealistic, may become the most bureaucratic and autocratic of agencies, holding within its power the lives and freedom of men, as well as the conditions of their employment. Germany has given that object lesson to the world.

The little there has been of state control during the War has also revealed that political managers, as a substitute for industrial managers, is not likely to be the best for either industry or the state. Of that, all countries have had a taste.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Drift toward Monopoly of Control by Labor

What are the extreme movements on the part of Labor but a similar reaction against the monopoly of Capital control? In its most violent forms, this reaction has found expression in Revolutionary Syndicalism, Bolshevism, and certain forms of I.W.W-ism, where, in addition to the ignoring of Capital and Management as parties to industry, the Community is also ignored, and Red Terror used to supplant Reason in all that pertains to the accomplishment of lawless designs.

Guild Socialism is similarly a reaction on the part of Labor against monopoly of control on the part of Capital. Like State Socialism, it would rule out Capital's right to joint control just as effectively as Capitalism seeks to rule out Labor's right to joint control; but as the predominant factor in control it would substitute national guilds for the state. Industrial unions would select the managers, would own the capital, and would determine alike wages and prices.

In protesting against an actual monopoly of control by Capital under Capitalism, and a possible monopoly of control by the State under Socialism, Guild Socialism would establish a monopoly of control by Labor under National Industrial Guilds. This is a natural reaction. It represents the extreme of the protest by a militant Labor Unionism against the monopoly of control by Capital, just as Collectivism represents the extreme of the protest of an aggressive State Socialism against the monopoly of Capitalistic control. Guild Socialism and Collectivism are alike in that each would oust Capitalism by setting up a monopoly of its own.

Abolition of Monopoly Control the Only Remedy

But the cure for monopoly of control by one of the parties to industry is not to be found in the substitution of monopoly of control by one of the other parties; it lies in the destruction of monopoly altogether. It is to be found in the substitution of joint control for single control.

Single control, whether it be by Capital, Labor, or the State, sooner or later is certain to mean autocratic control. Whether Labor or the State as the autocrat is preferable to existing capitalistic control, beholden as it is, in some measure at least, to both Labor and the State, is something to which conditions in Europe at the present time afford an all-sufficient answer.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It is not monopoly of control in any form that we must seek to bring about in this period of transition, but a gradual evolution into a system of joint control, whereby each of the parties to industry will be afforded a voice in the determination of the terms and conditions upon which its services to industry are rendered.

The Wisdom and Justice of Joint Control

And is not joint control by all the parties to industry in every way eminently wise, as well as fundamentally just? Is it not in every way, in the long run, to the interests of industry, and to the interests of each of the parties to industry? Continuance of the system of monopoly of control by Capital is no longer possible. Once autocracy was doomed in the political world, its doom was equally sounded for the industrial. The interest of every one of the parties to industry is being menaced to-day in the reactions to which the monopoly of control by Capital has given rise.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Capital

No one of the parties stands to lose quite so much through a continuance of the struggle arising out of the monopoly of control by Capital, as Capital itself. As things are to-day, it is at Capital, and at Management, identified with Capital, that the stones are being blindly hurled. War ridden, hungry, and penniless, men and women have witnessed the wanton extravagance of many of those possessed of luxury. They have become bewildered with a condition which enables an idle investor to reap a fortune while the masses toil excessive hours for a bare subsistence. They have lost sight altogether of the services of Capital and Management in witnessing the debauchery of indolence combined with riches, and the unearned millions of profiteers.

But let the service that Capital and Management are capable of rendering industry once be lost to sight, and industry itself will be ruined, and with it the well-being of Labor and the Community as well. What is needed is not the ruination of Capital and Management, but each given its rightful place in a system of the government of industry which will make for the good of all the parties to production.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Management

Nor is the monopoly of control by Capital wholly fair to Management, or in its best interests. It has been my privilege to talk pretty freely during the past few years with the managers of many large industries, and I find in the minds of not a few of them a feeling that everything is to be gained, and nothing list, by having the function of Capital and the function of Management kept separate and distinct, and Management given a freer hand in considering the interests of Labor and the Community.

Some managers there are who obtain their positions, not in virtue of any special skill in managerial ability, but because of personal ownership of large quantities of capital, or intimate association or relationship with some investor. The incompetence of such managers, and their slavish subservience to privilege and position, to the exclusion of a due consideration of the rights of Labor and of the Community, only serves to rouse the bitter antagonism of both these parties, who feel that their rightful interests, as necessary partners in industry, are being thwarted and jeopardized.

Not a little of the militant attitude on the part of Labor, and impatience on the part of the public with the present order of industry, is due to a feeling that some managers wholly fail to render to industry any service at all commensurate with the enormous salaries they receive, and to a belief that the interests of Labor and the Community alike are sacrificed to incompetence and extravagance, which would not be permitted were all four parties to industry ~~permitted~~ allowed some voice in the shaping of industrial policy.

Management, instead of being regarded as the servant exclusively of Capital, ought to be in a position to regard itself, as in fact it is, one of the necessary parties to industry, and as such entitled to a voice in matters which pertain to its administrative functions; responsible in the exercise of its duties, not to one party only, but to all.

In the emancipation of Management from the single control of any one of the parties, whether it be Capital, Labor, or the Community, and in the development of its function into that of a responsible executive, concerned equally with all the interests of the necessary parties to industry, lies the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to Labor

Referring ~~Coming~~ to what is fundamentally right and just, may it not be asked: Is Labor not quite as much entitled to a voice in the control of industry as Capital? It is investment in industry which affords the right to share in corporate control. Capital and Management receive representation on this basis. If Capital and Management are so entitled, why not Labor also?

Industry is a joint venture, a venture of Labor as well as of Capital. The difference in the nature of the investment of Capital and Labor only serves to emphasize the fundamental justice of Labor's right to a share in control. The investment of Capital is in the nature of an investment of substances and dollars; and investment of Labor is an investment in the nature of skill and life. The one is a material; the other, a human investment, and of the two, the one involving life is the more precious.

The capital investor - the individual who in industry loans and risks his capital or a part of it - receives for his capital a return in the form of interest; but he receives something more. As an investor, he becomes entitled to a voice in the control of the industry in which his investment is made. The life or labor investor - the worker who in industry loans and risks his life, or gives to industry that part of it described as labor - receives for his labor, which is the use of his life and skill for the time in which labor is given, a return in the form of wages. He lacks, however, the additional right, which Capital receives, of a share in the government of industry. If Capital obtains this right in addition to financial reward for the use of capital for the time for which it is invested, is Labor not in justice equally entitled, in addition to its monetary reward, to a voice in the control of industry in which, for the time being, its life and skill are likewise invested. If investment in industry has any meaning at all, it is surely one equally shared by the man who gives his labor and the man who gives his capital.

Existing Monopoly of Control Unfair to the Community

The Community's right to representation in the control of industry, and in the shaping of industrial policies, is wholly similar to that of Labor. But for Community investment on a local, national, and international scale, Capital, Labor,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and Management would be obliged to make scant shrift under present-day conditions of world competition. But what of the Community's part in industry? Here, too, is joint venture on the part of the Community just as much as on the part of Labor, Capital, or Management. What is 99 per cent of the expenditure of government in normal times but outlays in the nature of investment in industry: investment in property and services of one kind or another, which alone makes possible the vast co-operation and co-ordination of effort which is the very life-blood of industry?

The vaster industrial organization becomes, the more it depends, in a multitude of directions, upon the investments of the Community.

It is the Community which provides the natural resources and powers that underlie all production. Individuals may acquire title by one means or another, but it is from the Community, and with the consent of the Community, that titles are held. It is the Community, organized in various ways, which maintains government and foreign relations, secures law and order, fosters the arts and inventions, aids education, breeds opinion, and promotes, through concession or otherwise, the agencies of transportation, communication, credit, banking, and the like, without which any production, save the most primitive, would be impossible. It is the Community which creates the demand for commodities and services, through which Labor is provided with remunerative employment, and Capital with a return upon its investment. Apart from the Community, inventive genius, organizing capacity, managerial or other ability would be of little value. Turn where one may, it is the Community that makes possible all the activities of industry, and helps to determine their value and scope.

Community investment is supposed to receive its return in enhanced purchasing power to consumers as respects the number and quality of available services and commodities. This is a return akin to the interest Capital receives, and to the wages Labor receives. But is not the Community equally entitled, on grounds of investment, to a voice in the control of industry and in the shaping of industrial policy. Without participation by the Community in the control of industry, there is nothing to prevent the emergence of a joint-profiteering scheme by the other parties, in which high wages and high profits are secured by charges which fall either immediately or ultimately upon consumers.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Single ~~Individual~~ Control Must Give Way to Partnership

If Industry is to cease to be the battleground of rival factions, each selfishly seeking its own interest, regardless of the interests of the others, its government must cease altogether to be a matter of single control by one of the parties, or of contending controls by the several parties. The parties to industry must be brought into a relationship of partnership, with a recognized community of control.

Partnership is essentially a matter of status. It does not involve identity or similarity of function on the part of the partners, or equality of either service or rewards; but it does simply equality as respects the right of representation in the determination of policy on matters of common interest. It is this principle that has ~~been~~ thus far so largely failed of recognition. The justice of the principle, however, cannot be gainsaid.

The Necessary Transition

If to secure a just consideration of the rights of all ~~the~~ four parties to industry something in the nature of partnership, involving community of control, is necessary, how, it will be asked, is that transition to be effected. Certainly, it will never be brought about by violent upheavals, or revolutionary methods, which serve only to disorganize industry and occasion loss to all its parties. It must be brought about in an evolutionary manner, here a little, there a little; line upon line, precept upon precept, all working toward the consummation of the one ideal.

Government in the State a Guide to Government in Industry

There is much in the government of the state to give us guidance as well as hope in the evolution of government within industry. The British constitution may have its limitations, but no instrument of government has ever been devised which has so effectively helped to preserve and extend the freedom and liberties of men. What the British constitution stands for in the government of the state, we should aim at effecting in the working out of a constitution for industry. It will not all be accomplished within a day; neither need it be the work of generations. With free political institutions our one great inheritance, the application to industry of those

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

principles which underlie government within the state should ~~not~~ be neither impossible nor difficult. A willingness to recognize the justice of them, and to act in the light of knowledge we already have, is all that is necessary.

From Autocratic to Responsible Government.

In government within the state, there are three outstanding stages of development. The first stage is that of the autocratic executive, in which there is single control by one only of the parties to the state. King John is an outstanding example of this type of autocratic government. It was not believed, in the time of John, that the people had any ability to govern themselves. Even the lords and the nobles were without a voice in the government of the kingdom. They secured the first advance in popular liberties when they wrested the Magna Charta from John, and secured his signature to a written statement of their rights as citizens.

Representative Government marks the next important phase in the evolution of government within the state. That takes us back to 1265, to the famous Parliament of Simon de Montfort, when for the first time in British history there was at least an attempt at representation of all three estates. At the outset, representation was restricted and nominal. All subsequent development has been in the nature of a broadening of the basis of representation, and rendering more effective the representation gained.

It is only within the past century that the highest form of government: namely, Responsible Government, had been attained. When the managers of industry become responsible to Labor, Capital, and the Community for the manner in which their vast powers and opportunities are exercised, we shall have something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the government of the state. Meanwhile, our duty would appear to be that of putting an end to autocracy and monopoly of control, no matter by which of the parties to industry it may be attempted or exercised, and to work out a system of joint-control based upon representation of all the parties in the determination of industrial policy.

Under Responsible Government, the executive is responsible to the people as a whole, not to any one class.

P.

The Basis of an Industrial Constitution

~~Recognition of the Four Parties the First Essential~~

Time forbids more than a suggestion or two as to the manner in which a constitution ~~between~~ for the parties to industry might be worked out in a way which will help to allay the industrial unrest of our times, and advance the highest interests of industry, and all of its parties. Obviously, what is most

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

needed is recognition of the fact that industry is not a matter which concerns only one party, but that it is of vital concern to all four: to Capital, to Labor, to Management, and to the Community, and that no one of the four is entitled to a monopoly of control.

Once recognition is given the four parties to industry, the solution of the problem of industrial relations is a matter simply of proceeding in accordance with principles which ~~are~~ have long been regarded as obviously fair and just.

The Principle of Conference

The first of these principles I should like to mention is that of Conference. It is impossible ~~to hope~~ to get anywhere with a man with whom you are unwilling to confer. Conference is chiefly a matter of attitude. It implies approach, good-will, confidence; not aloofness, distrust, and suspttion, which too frequently is the attitude between the parties to industry.

Conference between the four parties to industry has been tried, and with the best of results. It was found absolutely necessary to the winning of the War. It was not until the Government of Britain, representing the Community, invited Capital, Management, and Labor to meet in common, and policies were arrived at as the result of Round Table Conference, that the necessary adjustments of industry were so arranged as to make possible the vast production of munitions ~~of War~~. What was necessary to the winning of War is equally necessary to the winning of Peace - which we can hardly say exists so long as international strife gives way only to industrial ~~anarchy~~ unrest.

required to win the

The Principle of Investigation

The second principle is that of Investigation. Investigation is ~~only~~ but a method of getting at the truth; and, as I said at the outset, it is the truth alone that shall set us free. In problems of the magnitude of those which industry presents, any just solution is impossible without a knowledge of the facts. There are a class of evils which publicity is more effective in preventing and remedying than penalty; and unfair dealings between the parties to industry are of this kind. Meanness, injustice, gross selfishness - these cannot endure under the light of an intelligently formed public opinion. Most industrial ills belong to this class.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Investigation, too, has been tried between the four parties to industry, and found to be of the utmost service.

I notice that the Minister of Labor informed the House of Commons a day or two ago that Canada had had fewer strikes in recent years than any other country in the world. If that statement is true, and I believe it is, it is because we have on our statutes a law which makes provision for the investigation of industrial controversies prior to lockouts and strikes.

The principle of that law is the one being acted upon in Great Britain to-day. If England is being saved at the moment from industrial strife, hardly less frightful in its consequences than actual war, it is because Capital and Management, Labor, and the Community, are represented upon the Commission recently appointed by Mr. Lloyd George to investigate the demands of the miners, and the condition of the coal mining industry throughout Britain.

It is upon the same principle of ~~encouraging~~ investigation prior to the commencement of hostilities that the League of Nations is being founded. If war between nations and between the parties to industry is to end, it will only be through the acceptance of the principle of investigation before ~~the~~ a severance of ~~peaceful~~ relations.

What we need quite as much as a League of Nations is a League of the Parties to Industry to see to the enforcement of this great principle, and the moulding of public opinion to that end. Such a league would lead, I believe, even more quickly than a league of nations, to the maintenance of international, as well as of industrial, peace. Accustom men to the adoption of fundamental principles in their industrial relations, which are something that immediately concerns their every day life, and the application of like principles to international affairs will take care of itself.

The Principle of Organization and Collective Action

A third principle is that of Organization and Collective Action. The problems of industry are world problems. To cope with them successfully, organization is absolutely necessary.

What would become of Capital under the stress of world competition, if its units were not permitted to coalesce, and large organization of business ~~were~~ rendered impossible? What would become

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of the Community, if its activities were not organized? Deprive Managers of the right of membership in an employers or manufacturers association, and they would be the first to say that their liberties had been infringed. Where, then, is the justice of denying to one party to industry a right which is conceded as just and necessary to the other three? If Capital, Management, and the Community have the right to organize, so also should Labor have this right.

Without organization of Labor - where Capital, Management, and the Community are organized - what equality of relationship can there possibly be between the four parties to industry? And where are the individual units of Labor likely to find themselves in the teeth of a world competition, more relentless where Labor is concerned than in the case of Capital or Management? Labor left but briefly in a condition of isolation will starve; Capital and Management are usually in a position to wait.

It is not against organization that we ought to protest, but against the possible abuses of organized power. In this connection it is well to remember that the use of a thing is one thing, and its abuse another; and that with human nature what it is, abuses of power are not confined to any one class.

The Principle of Representation

A fourth principle is that of representation. Here we are at the beginning of the real solution of the problems of industry. Government within the state has widened down from autocratic authority to authority broad-based upon a people's will. The expansion of the principle of representation is responsible for that development. It will be equally so in industry. The problems of industry are essentially problems of government. Adequate representation of all the parties, ~~in interest~~, effected through organization, enjoying the right of investigation, and meeting in Round Table Conference - in such an obviously fair and just arrangement, we have the beginnings of law and order in industry, just as we have had it in the state, and the hope of a future development along constitutional and evolutionary ~~, not revolutionary,~~ lines, instead of along lines that are illegal and revolutionary.

Joint Committees and Joint Industrial Councils

Once the principle of Representation is conceded, it is only a step to the formation of joint committees of employers and employees, the establishment of known, orderly, and expeditious

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

procedure in all matters requiring adjustment, and the determination of industrial policies in a manner which will have regard for the interests of all concerned.

From joint committees in individual establishments, meeting at periodical intervals for little more than purposes of conference and consultation, the principle of representation should lead to the establishment of permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and all the employers in a given trade or industry - and concerned with the determination of industrial policies, and the fixation of industrial standards enforceable throughout by the co-operation of Government, representing the Community and protecting its interests. This, as you know, is the objective of the recommendations of the so-called Whitley Committee which the Government of Great Britain has adopted as the corner-stone of its reconstruction policy.

Nor is the formation of such joint committees and industrial councils any longer a matter of experiment. Every day is adding to the number that are being formed, many of them in industries which have hitherto opposed anything in the way of organization among employees, and which have conceded little or nothing in the way of conference.

The Service of Organized Labor.

The Trade Unions are mainly responsible for the development that has thus far been achieved. They have pioneered the path; they have blazed the trail which has led to collective bargaining, joint agreements, and contracts between the parties to industry. It has been a long and bitter struggle, this struggle for recognition on the part of Organized Labor. It has involved any amount of ill-feeling and misunderstanding, and fostered no end of prejudice and hatred; but the real purport of Labor's struggle is coming to be better understood, and the part which the large organizations of Capital and of Labor are capable of playing in reconstructing human society is emerging into clearer day.

It is coming to be seen that the control of Labor by its leaders is wholly dependent upon its organization into conservative unions; that it is among the unorganized and undisciplined workers that Bolshevism and I.W.W.-ism recruit their armies of terror and destruction. In a union of the organized forces of Labor and of Capital, against a common enemy which menaces all human society, lies the hope of the future. Industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against anything in the nature of a democratic organization

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of industry will do well to evidence a disposition to act upon the principles of conference, investigation, organization, and representation, in dealings with their employees, and to concede to Labor the right of collective bargaining, and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and matters pertaining to their working and living conditions.

It may be that Labor needs educating, that its ~~is that~~ are leaders need more in the way of experience; but whence education and qualities of leadership to be gained if not in the industries in which Labor is employed, and through joint dealings with parties more highly favored?

The Joint Industrial Councils being formed in England show how this new approach between Capital and Labor is certain, in its ~~highest~~ most fruitful forms, to take account of ~~all~~ existing organizations of Labor and Capital, and to change the attitude of these powerful bodies from one of militancy based on a belief in opposed interests into one of co-operation based on a belief in the larger interests which they have in common.

A New Spirit Necessary

One thing, and one thing only, remains to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old; ~~and~~ without it nothing can be achieved. It is the acceptance by each of the parties to industry of the spirit which has saved not only Britain, but the world, in the overthrow of Prussian arrogance and ambition. It was through a love of liberty and a hatred of domination that men by the millions sacrificed their lives that freedom might not perish from the earth. The overthrow of Prussian Despotism is only part of the vast undertaking which the free nations of the world have still before them if Freedom worthy of the name is to be maintained. Industrial autocracy and political autocracy may go hand in hand, but not autocracy in industry and democracy in politics. The latter combination is as ill-mated as the former is natural. To the nations that have won political freedom, there remains the task of reorganizing their industries into harmony with their governments. Anything short of harmony means perpetual conflict. Institutions opposed in organization and spirit can only work against each other till one or the other prevails. To democratize industry, so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy, is the task that lies ahead.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

A New Conception of Industry

With the new spirit must come also a wholly new conception of industry. No longer must industry be thought of as a mere revenue-producing process, in which Capital, Labor, Management, and the Community meet like so many rival and contending factions, each to appropriate to itself by force or might the largest possible share of the fruits of industry. Industry must be thought of, as in reality it is, in the nature of social service, and participation in industry, whether in the form of labor or capital investment, as social service of the highest kind, since upon its successful accomplishment rest all other forms of human service.

~~A Final~~ Hope

May I conclude these remarks with words with which I have concluded a volume in which I have sought to enlarge upon the principles outlined to-day. This moment of silence at the close of the Great War, and this Lenten season, seem to ~~give to~~ lend them appropriateness to this occasion, and to the subject we have been considering.

"Is it too much to believe that, having witnessed Humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its Garden of Fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of Militarism, Labor and Capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and brokenhearted world the one hope it is theirs alone to bring; and that, in the acceptance of principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset Mankind, they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre to-day, and give to Humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life?"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4050

17 March 1919

Montreal Canadian Club

"THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4051

1919

THE GAZETTE, MONTREAL, TUESDAY, MARCH 18

MUST PUT END TO WEALTH WORSHIP

Way to Restore Civilization to Peace, Said Hon. Mackenzie King

THE INDUSTRIAL UNREST

Reorganization Recognizing Capital, Labor, Management and the Community, Remedy Suggested

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, C.M.G., ex-Minister of Labor, aroused enthusiasm at the Canadian Club yesterday in a discussion on the labor problems that will face the Dominion now that the after-the-war problems must be faced. He based his address on "The Four Parties to Industry," which he classified as capital, management, labor and the community. His general argument was that so far industry had been almost entirely controlled by capital, with management as a closely allied force.

There was a large attendance at the meeting, which was presided over by Mr. C. F. Sise, while among others at the table of honor were Bishop Farthing, Rev. George Duncan, C. E. Ussher, A. D. Anderson and others.

In opening president Sise announced that next Monday the Canadian Club would be addressed on "Repatriation Problems," by Lt.-Col. (Trooper) Mulloy, and then introduced Hon. Mr. King as a grandson of William Lyon Mackenzie, who had led the rebellion against the family compact. in conjunction with Papineau, which had eventually ended in the Lord Durham report and the growth of constitutional government in Canada.

Hon. Mr. King said that he had seen so much adverse comment in the Montreal press regarding his Toronto speech on the industrial position that he wished to repeat and explain his views.

If the problems of capital and the unrest of labor were to be dealt with, he said, it was necessary to face the truth squarely. The war had revealed a civilization full of injustice, and if it was to be restored to peace the old wealth worship and domination must be ended. The present industrial unrest was not an ephemereal affair, nor could it be put down by the sword of repression.

SETTLEMENT OF UNREST.

The settlement of this unrest was not a matter of capital and labor alone. It concerned the managing forces, generally allied with capital, and the community as such. All were interested in varying degrees, and therefore he argued all should have some control in th direction of industry.

The great industries, transportation mining, manufacturing, etc., were all organized to earn dividends for capital, with their managing element, but there was nothing suggesting joint control by the two other elements, labor and the community. This gave a monopoly of control to capital, which, he believed more than anything else contributed to industrial unrest.

State socialism had been shown by the war to be capable of greater autocracy than capitalism, while the substitution of political managers for business managers was not good for industry. Bolshevism and the I.W.W. propaganda simply suggested red terror for sane control, while industrial unionism was frequently a move to secure control of industry and dictate to capital and the rest of the community. This would simply change the monopoly of capital to a monopoly of unionism, merely changing from one curse to another.

RIGHTS OF FOUR PARTIES.

The only remedy was a reorganization which would recognize the rights of all four parties, capital, labor, management and the community in the control of industry. The rights of the community, he said, had been demonstrated in the work of the Railway Commission. If evolution instead of revolution was wanted it could only be got by mutual concessions, and a recognition of the rights of each of the four parties to a control of industry commensurate with their interests, and he believed that an adoption of such joint control would prevent the development of the present industrial unrest.

As a beginning he suggested a conference between the four interests such as was had in Great Britain during the war, which made possible such a collaboration and solution of difficulties as eventually won the war. The second principle was organization of capital, labor and the community—organization was not wrong, but the abuse of organization. This must be followed by commensurate representation of each of the four parties, with the right of investigation and conference. With joint committees based on these principles he believed that the future of industrial progress would be assured, with a recognition of the basic rights of each of the four parties, which would end the present unrest.

The final thing was a recognition of the spirit of the men who had gone overseas to save the world from autocratic despotism. To do this it was necessary to recognize that industrial autocracy and democracy could never come together.

"Industry," concluded Hon. Mr. King, "should be regarded as social service, without which no other service can be carried on. A full realization of this principle would give their proper place and dignity to capital, management and labor." (Applause.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4052

1919

TREAL HERALD AND THE DAILY TELEGRAPH, MONDAY, MARCH 17.

Industrial League Essential For Trade Stability, Say Hon. Mackenzie King

Industry, Labor, Capital and Management Must Get Together Says Former Labor Minister in Address At the Canadian Club To-Day—Such a League, He Declares, He Panacea For Present Day World Ills.

As its guest of honor to-day the Canadian Club had the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King who was minister of labor in the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. His subject was the "Four Parties to Industry' and he received a great welcome from the large audience that met in the Rose Foom of the Windsor Hotel. As a panacea for the unrest in the world of industry to-day, which he regarded as no ephemeral and transitory affair, no mere aftermath of the convulsion caused by the war, he recommended a league formed of the four parties to industry, labor, capital, management and the community or organized society. With such an industrial league in existence, holding beneficial conferences, he thought that with skilful consideration and operation much of the cause of unrest in the industrial world to-day would disappear.

After outlining the four parties to industry, he said there would be no understanding of the problems of industry until the people adequately appreciate what industry itself is, and who the parties are that are responsible for the carrying on of industry. It was the custom to discuss problems of industry in terms of capital and labor, and the inability to find a workable solution to many industrial problems arose from such circumscribed vision. First, there was labor which supplied the muscular and mental energy. Next there was capital, then management or directing ability, so frequently associated with capital that the two were more or less merged, but which was necessary to effect efficient co-operation not only between labor and capital in the work of production, but also to effect and maintain right relations with the fourth party, the community under whose sanction all industry was carried on, and by whose continuous co-operation with the other parties to industry, production, distribution and exchange were rendered possible.

SINGLE CONTROL AUTOCRATIC.

When management regarded itself as responsible solely to capital, labor and the community became, said Mr. King, a consideration only in so far as they were able to make their power felt, and it was this monopoly on the part of capital in the control and direction of industry which had led to developments described as Socialistic, ultra-radical and even anarchistic. It was the same monopoly which lay at the root of the industrial upheavals of the present time, and single control, whether by capital, labor or the State, sooner or later was certain to mean autocratic control.

He said during recent years he had found many managers of large industries posessed of a feeling that everything was to be gained by having the function of capital and the function of management kept separate and distinct, and management given a freer hand in considering the interests of labor and the community, and in the emancipation of management from the single control of one or other of the parties, Mr. King said, was to be found the hope of any ultimate solution of the industrial problem.

With the managers of industry responsible to labor, capital and the community, there would be something in the government of industry closely resembling the responsible executive in the government of the state.

FOUR PRINCIPALS NECESSARY.

Four principals which were obviously fair and just were necessary to the solution desired, Mr. King declared. The first was that of conference, which implied approach, good-will and confidence. The second was that of investigation, which was not only the method of getting at the truth, but in face of which meanness, injustice, gross selfishness, could not endure.

The third principle was that of organization and collective action, and the fourth representation. The latter conceded it was only a step to the formation of joint committee of employers and employees and the observation of expeditious procedure in all matters requiring adjustment. In addition to joint committees in individual establishments there should be permanent standing joint industrial councils, embracing all the workers and employers in a given trade or industry and concerned with the determination of industrial policies and the fixing of industrial policies and standards, representing the community and protecting its interests.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

After giving credit to trade unions for the development thus far achieved, Mr. King advised industrial concerns which have hitherto stood out against democratic organization of industry to show a disposition to act upon the principles outlined in dealings with their employees and to concede to labor the right of collective bargaining and a voice in the determination of terms of employment and in matters pertaining to working and living conditions.

Concluding, he said a new spirit of love of liberty and a hatred of domination was necessary to ensure a new world rising out of the ashes of the old for, without it, nothing could be achieved. To democratize industry so that along with democracy in government there may be a true industrial democracy was the task that lay ahead.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[LE CANADA, 18 MARS 1919]

D 4053

Page 8

LES QUATRE GRANDS FACTEURS A CONSIDRER DANS L'INDUSTRIE

Très instructive conférence de l'honorable Mackenzie King, ex-ministre du Travail dans le gouvernement Laurier, hier, au Canadian Club. — Les droits qu'il faut absolument reconnaître. — L'autocratie industrielle.

L'honorable Mackenzie King, ancien ministre du Travail, dans le gouvernement Laurier, était, hier, l'hôte du Canadian Club. L'économiste distingué prononça un très éloquent discours sur les quatre facteurs de l'industrie et des moyens à prendre pour éviter le malaise social qui se répand actuellement avec la rapidité de l'éclair. Le problème du capital et du travail est très sérieux et il demande toutes les énergies et toutes les intelligences pour le régler avec justice aux deux parties.

"Dans les relations industrielles spécialement, dit l'orateur, nous nous sommes laissés aller avec complaisance à un état de choses qui s'est compliqué. Le choc de la guerre, qui a secoué les âmes jusqu'au plus profond d'elles-mêmes, nous a révélé une civilisation industrielle en lutte contre les injustices de toutes sortes. Elle nous force à se décider si nous devons retourner à l'ancien régime de la richesse matérielle et la puissance matérielle, et l'indifférence envers la valeur humaine, où si nous devons s'adapter à un ordre de choses nouveau, digne des sacrifices accomplis par nos héroïques morts, dont l'abnégation a assuré nos libertés et notre vie dont nous jouissons encore aujourd'hui.

"L'agitation qui règne aujourd'hui dans l'industrie n'est pas éphémère, qu'on ne l'oublie pas. Ce n'est pas une affaire transitoire, c'est le cri d'une humanité souffrante qui expose ses griefs et qui demande justice dans les relations de l'industrie. Et qu'on soit assuré que l'épée n'est pas l'arme adéquate pour réprimer ce malaise. La vérité est plus forte que l'épée, et le seul espoir d'une solution se trouve dans une conférence de tous les intérêts, plutôt que dans la coercition. Pour bien comprendre la situation, il est nécessaire de mettre de côté le vieux point de vue qui se limite à deux seuls facteurs de l'industrie: le Capital et le Travail. Il y a aussi le génie de la direction qui doit se partager entre les deux premiers facteurs et le quatrième qui est la communauté. La communauté a aussi son rôle à jouer dans la bonne conduite de l'industrie et l'élimination des désordres au sein du travail.

Les quatre facteurs plus haut mentionnés, sont aussi indispensable l'un de l'autre. Le Capital ne peut rien faire sans le Travail, et le Travail ne peut rien faire sans le Capital. Ni le Capital, ni le Travail ne peuvent donner leur maximum de forces sans le génie de la direction qui, à son tour, ne pourrait rien faire sans le bénéfice des occasions que lui donne la communauté. Alors si les quatre facteurs sont indispensables, chacun devrait avoir une voix égale dans le contrôle de l'industrie.

"Notre organisation actuelle de l'industrie constitue-t-elle une association de ces quatre facteursb Loin de là. Dans toutes les grandes industries, c'est le Capital qui contrôle. C'est lui qui choisit ses bureaux de direction et dicte les politiques à suivre. La direction, de son côté, n'est responsable qu'au Capital. Le Travail et la Communauté ne deviennent que de simples considérations en autant qu'elles peuvent faire sentir leur puissance. La première considération du Capital est de faire des profits, aussi élevés que possible. Le Travail et la Communauté ne sont pas considérés comme associés et ils n'ont aucun droit aux profits. Ce contrôle est donc forcé, ce n'est pas un contrôle volontaire.

C'est le capital, plus que tout autre chose, qui est à la base de tous les troubles dont on est témoin aujourd'hui : socialisme, ultra-radicalisme, même l'anarchie. Et les grèves qui se produisent aujourd'hui sont la forme dont se sert le travail pour demander sa part dans le contrôle de l'industrie. Et pour la communauté, elle prend ses droits par les lois qui sont passées par l'Etat ou le municipalités pour prendre le contrôle unique.

Mais ce n'est pas dans ces mouvements réactionnaires qu'on trouvera la réforme nécessaire à un malaise qui se répand aujourd'hui dans le monde entier. Poussées à la révolte par les injustices d'une autocratie, les victimes en sont venues à en établir une autre et il n'y aurait aucun espoir de succès dans le changement de contrôle: le prendre d'un facteur pour le placer entre les mains d'un autre. La seule réforme équitable sera trouvée dans une association proportionnelle ou chaque facteur aura droit de parler. Cela, sans doute, ne peut être établi soudainement, par des méthodes révolutionnaires ; il faut que l'évolution soit graduelle, qu'elle suive normalement son cours vers l'idéal auquel elle aspire.

La première mesure à prendre est de reconnaître à chacun des facteurs ses droits et de créer une confiance entre tous et chacun. Cette confiance ne sera atteinte que par les conférences qui devront être tenues de temps à autre. Beaucoup de choses heureuses seront accomplies quand le capital, le travail, la direction et la communauté seront etroitement liés vers un but commun. C'est ce qui a aidé à gagner la guerre en Angleterre, et c'est ce qui devrait aider à gagner la paix et les fruits de la victoire.

Le deuxième principe à adopter est celui des enquêtes. La ligue des nations n'est pas plus importante pour sauvegarder la paix que ne l'est une ligue des quatre facteurs de l'industrie à qui il incombera de régler toutes les disputes qui autrement se termineraient par des grèves désastreuses.

Il faut également reconnaître le droit à chacun de s'organier : là est le gage du progrès. C'est un fait acquis que le bolshevisme n'a trouvé que peu d'adhérents parmi le travail organisé. C'est pourquoi il faut reconnaître la faction des organisations ouvrières et coopérer avec les chefs ouvriers dans une association industrielle où les quatre facteurs seront également représentés.

Une seule chose, dit en terminant l'hon. MacKenzie King, nous délivrera de l'ancien état de chose : c'est l'amour de la liberté et la haine de la domination, quelle qu'elle soit. C'est ce qui a détruit le militarisme prussien, c'est ce qui a motivé les sacrifices de nos fils sur le champs de bataille. La destruction du despotisme prussien n'est qu'une partie du travail que doivent accomplir toutes les nations libres, vraiment dignes de ce titre. Il leur faudra aussi détruire le despotisme et l'autocratie au sein de l'industrie. L'autocratie industrielle et l'autocratie politique ne le peuvent pas. Aux nations qui ont conquis leur liberté politique, il incombe de baser leur industrie d'accord avec leur gouvernement. Le manque d'harmonie entre les deux, résultera toujours en frictions désastreuses. La tâche qui nous reste à faire à l'avenir est de démocratiser notre industrie.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4054

20 March 1919

Chicago Industrial Club

"THE FOUR PARTIES TO INDUSTRY"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

HERALD EXAMINER
MAR 21, 1919

Herald Examiner Mar 21, 1919

JOINT CONTROL OF INDUSTRY IS DEMANDED

Labor Must Have Just Share, Says Former Canadian Minister of Labor.

Joint control of industry by capital and labor as the only solution of the industrial problem was suggested to members of the Industrial Club by W. L. Mackenzie King, former minister of labor of the Dominion of Canada, at a dinner in the Blackstone Hotel last night.

"Industrial unrest is not a result of the war," said Mr. King. "Neither can it be stayed by the sword or tramped underfoot by the heel of autocracy. It can only be stopped by looking it square in the face.

"The extreme radical movements are a fierce effort on the part of leaders of unorganized labor to gain control of industry, regardless of capital, management or community."

SOLUTIONS OFFERED.

Mr. King outlined these four principles, the adoption of which, he said, would enable capital to continue business on a normal basis.

1. Conferences between representatives of labor and representatives of capital on a footing of equality. Labor to state its grievances and requests and capital to agree to a reply.

2. Investigation of complaints and grievances made by labor to capital. To get at the truth and justice of the requests and by settling them fairly, gain the confidence and loyalty of labor.

3. Organization — Concede the right to labor to organize. If you admit the right of capital to combine and organize, how can you deny that same right to labor? If you do not grant labor the right of decent, clean organization you face the alternative of Bolshevism.

4. Representation — Workers demand the right of representation. Grant them that right.

JOINT CONTROL NEEDED.

"The crux of the industrial problem is the question of control," said Mr. King. "Naturally the worker, through whose physical effort is made possible the actual production of the community's needs, wants some voice in the government of the industry by which he is employed.

"All through history these sam lessons of fair representation ar found. Where they are granted w see peace; when refused, revolutio

"It is this spirit of freedom that to day pervades the world. It is th spirit that took the youth of th country from their homes to battl and to death. This spirit will no tolerate domination.

INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY.

"Autocracy in politics and in government has been abolished. Autocracy in industry and democracy in the state will not go hand in hand."

Mr. King was introduced by Benjamin H. Marshall, chairman of the banquet committee. Among those present were the leaders of the various lines of industry in the city.

CHICAGO POST
MARCH 21, 1919

LET LABOR SHARE IN MANAGEMENT OF INDUSTRY, SAYS KING

Former Canadian Official Tells How Bolshevism Can Be Overthrown.

Give labor an opportunity to assist in the management of industry, of which it is a vital part, and industrial unrest will be allayed and bolshevism will find no foothold, is the advice of W. L. Mackenzie King, former minister of labor of Canada, who is credited with forming the Rockefeller-Colorado Fuel and Iron company agreement in 1914.

Mr. King spoke last night before the Industrial Club of Chicago at the Blackstone hotel.

"Labor and capital are not the only parties in the analysis of industry," he said. "There is a third party—namely, management—and a fourth, the community, which must be considered. As long as capital controls the management and the management answers solely to capital, which represents the investors, we must expect unrest in labor.

"The overthrow of autocracy has been accomplished in Europe. And unless capital prepares itself it will be overthrown in industry. The community must be represented in labor.

"The present condition of industrial and political affairs is the result of hungry, penniless men and women awakening after the horrible shock of the war to find capital in possession of first needs. Their movements are their cry for recognition."

CHICAGO TRIBUNE
MAR 21, 1919

'LABOR MUST BE RECOGNIZED TO END BOLSHEVISM'

King, Canada's Expert on Industry, Gives Cure for Unrest.

Organized labor must be recognized if the present universal discontent is to be met successfully, W. L. Mackenzie King, former minister of labor of Canada, told the Industrial Club of Chicago at a dinner at the Blackstone hotel last night. "The Four Parties to Industry" was his subject. He strove to convey the causes and solution of bolshevism, the I. W. W., and other radical movements.

Mr. King is credited with the formation of the agreement between the Colorado Fuel and Iron company and its employés after the disturbances in 1914.

Parties to Industry.

"Labor and capital are not the only parties in the analysis of industry," he said last night. "There is a third party—namely, management—and a fourth, the community, which must be considered. As long as capital controls the management and the management answers solely to capital, which represents the investors, we must expect unrest in labor.

"By the community I refer to the state, the people, and the government. Without the support of this fourth party industry must cease.

"Bolshevism, the I. W. W., and kindred movements are but the expression of the community seeking to rectify conditions. The leaders in these movements come largely from the labor class, but they come from unorganized labor.

"So long as you grant your capital the right to organize, so long as you permit your managements to organize, so long as the community is organized, you must admit that in the name of justice labor, too, has the right to organize.

"There is no need to become alarmed at the present situation. But there are four cardinal principles that must be admitted before a reconstruction period can begin.

Must Welcome Investigation.

"First, capital must admit to conference the representatives of labor. Capital must welcome investigation, making it clear to labor that capital is interested in grievances and wrongs, fancied or real. Third, organization of your employés as well as of your managers and executives must be countenanced, and fourth, labor must be granted representation in the operation of industry.

"The overthrow of autocracy has been accomplished in Europe. And unless capital prepares itself it will be overthrown in industry. The community must be represented in labor.

"The present condition of industrial and political affairs is the result of hungry, penniless men and women awakening after the horrible shock of the war to find capital in possession of first needs. Their movements are their cry for recognition.

A Word for Capital.

"Unfortunately many labor people do not realize the importance of capital, which furnishes the utensils by which labor lives. They do not appreciate the work of financing, marketing, and see only the production side.

"The capitalist or investor puts his dollars into industry, the laborer puts his life. I believe his investment the greater, therefore he is entitled to as much profit, at least.

"Concessions must be made and round table conferences, representative of all four parties, adopted, if reconstruction in industry is to progress."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4056

29 March 1919

Quebec: l'Association de la jeunesse liberale

QUEBEC EAST - A CENTRE OF CANADIAN LIBERALISM

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[redacted]

Speech by Mr. King at Quebec Reform Club

March 29, 1919

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

M. le President,
Membres de l'Association de la jeuness liberale.

Messieurs -

Prenant pour la premiere fois contact avec les liberaux de cette vieille cite de Quebec, j'en saisis tout d'abord l'occasion pour leur exprimer ma profonde reconnaissance pour l'honneur et le plaisir qu'ils m'ont fait en me conviant ce soir au milieux d'eux.

C'est en francais, dans cette langue admirable qui est la votre, que je voudrais vous dire ce que je ressens a cette minute. Je compte sur votre indulgence pour me pardonner les defauts de la forme, pour n'y voir de ma part, qu'une manifestation de ma forte sympathie et de mon profond respect pour les traditions de cette cite et de cette Province, qui ont donne au Canada sa premiere formation historique et au peuple canadien, le plus distingue, le plus illustre et le plus aime de ses chefs politiques.

En me levant pour vous adresser la parole, je me rappelle que je suis a Quebec-Est, dans ce foyer du liberalisme, ou les luttes memorables du passe ont permis et facilite les victoires de notre parti.

Je ne puis oublier en ce moment ces liens nombreux qui rattachent tout specialement a cette cite et a cette Province, Il suffit de rappeler le passe. Ce furent les patriotes de

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Quebec, qui, sous Louis Joseph Papineau, s'allierent avec les "reformers" d'Ontario, sous William Lyon Mackenzie, pour combattre ensemble en faveur du gouvernement responsable.

Petit fils de Lyon Mackenzie, je n'ai pas oublie et je n'oublierai jamais ce gage d'union entre les deux Provinces et les deux races qui l'habitent.

Ce fut Quebec-Est, qui eut l'honneur d'envoyer au Parlement, Wilfrid Laurier a l'heure ou il etait appele a faire partie du Ministere liberal d'Alexander Mackenzie, comme le plus jeune representant de cette administration. De meme, Wilfrid Laurier, devenu premier ministre, m'appelait a ses cotes comme le plus jeune membre de son administration.

Messieurs, ces relations intimes, cette amitie si solide dont j'eus le privilege et l'honneur de jouir de la part de notre vieux chef, non pas seulement aux jours ensoleilles de la victoire, mais plus specialement, aux heures sombres de la defaite, resteront toujours pour moi comme le plus precieux des tresors et le plus cher de mes souvenirs.

Pour moi, Sir Wilfrid Laurier fut non seulement l'ami fidele et genereux; ce fut le guide toujours sur qui me dirigea dans les luttes ardentes de la politique.

C'est de tout coeur que je vous remercie pour m'avoir invite a porter la parole au coeur meme de sa chere division de Quebec-Est.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4060

29 March 1919

Quebec: National Trades and Labour Council

THE LIBERAL PARTY AND CANADIAN LABOUR

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Speech by Mr. King to Members of National Trades and Labour Council, Quebec.

March 29, 1919

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4862

Messieurs le President et Messieurs

Ma premiere parole sera pour remercier, du fond de mon coeur, les Membres du Conseil central National des metiers et du Travail pour l'adresse qui vient de m'etre lue. Il m'est impossible de vous exprimer combien j'apprecie la confiance que vous me témognez et plus particulierement comme je me sens fier de vous entendre associer mon nom a celui du grand Chef qui vient de desparaitre. Je suis heureux de pouvoir vous dire ces sentimens dans la langue de la majorite de cet auditoire et se sera une manifestation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Monsieur le Président et Messieurs,

Avant de commencer le discours que l'on m'a demandé de faire, je désirerais dire quelques mots en français et ce ne sera qu'une manifestation de ma forte sympathie et de mon profond respect pour les traditions de cette cité et de cette Province, qui ont donné au Canada sa première formation historique, et au peuple canadien, le plus distingué, le plus illustre et le plus aimé de ses chefs politiques.

En m'adressant à cet auditoire de travailleurs, cela me fait plaisir de rappeler que ce fut Québec-~~Est~~ qui eut l'honneur d'envoyer au Parlement, le très Honorable Sir Wilfrid Laurier à l'heure ou il était appelé à faire partie du Ministère libéral d'Alexandre Mackenzie, comme le plus jeune représentant de cette administration. Je ne puis oublier, à mon tour, que ce fut aussi votre représentant, devenu chef de son parti et Premier Ministre de son pays, qui m'appelait à ses côtés, le plus jeune membre de son administration, pour représenter les intérêts du travail dans son cabinet.

Messieurs, Sir Wilfrid Laurier fut un ami fidèle de l'ouvrier. C'est à son Gouvernement que nous devons l'établissement d'un Ministère du Travail dans le Dominion du Canada. La démocratisation de l'industrie, comme devant être le grand travail de l'avenir, fut presque le dernier sujet

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

mentionné par Sir Wilfrid dans le dernier discours qu'il fit en public. C'est son oeuvre que nous devons essayer d'accomplir; c'est son génie que nous devons essayer de tenir en vie, maintenant que lui-même est disparu.

Je dois remercier, du plus profond de mon coeur, le Conseil Central National des Métiers et du Travail du District de Québec pour le privilège qu'il m'a accordé d'adresser la parole à cette réunion d'ouvriers, sur la grande question de notre époque, à l'étude de laquelle j'ai consacré la plus grande partie de ma vie et une qui fut si chère au coeur de celui dont nous déplorons aujourd'hui la perte.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

Before I begin the address I have been asked to deliver, may I say just one word in French, if only qu'une manifestation de ma forte sympathie et de mon profond respect pour les traditions de cette cité et de cette Province, qui ont donné au Canada sa première formation historique et au peuple canadien, le plus distingué, le plus illustre, et le plus aimé de ses chefs politiques.

In addressing this audience of workingmen, it is a pleasure to me to recall that ce fut Québec-Est, qui eut l'honneur d'envoyer au Parlement, le très Honorable Sir Wilfrid Laurier à l'heure ou il était appelé à faire partie du Ministère libéral d'Alexandre Mackenzie, comme le plus jeune représentant de cette administration. Je ne puis oublier, à mon tour, que ce fut aussi votre représentant, devenu chef de son parti et Premier Ministre de son pays, qui m'appelait à ses côtés, le plus jeune membre de son administration, to ~~take charge of the Department of Labor~~.

Gentlemen, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a true friend of the workingman. It is to his Government that we owe the establishment of a Department of Labor in the Dominion of Canada. Almost the last subject Sir Wilfrid referred to, in the last speech he made in public, was the democratization of industry as the great work of the future. It is his work that we must seek to carry on, and his spirit that we must seek to keep alive now that he himself is gone.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

May I, with all my heart, thank le Conseil Central National des Metiers et du Travail du District de Quebec for the privilege accorded me of addressing this gathering of workingmen on the great question of our day, one to the study of which I have devoted most of my life, and one which was very close to the heart of him whose loss we mourn to-day.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Monsieur le President et Messieurs,

Avant de commencer le discours que l'on m'a demande de faire, je desirerais dire quelques mots en francais et ce ne sera qu'une manifestation de ma forte sympathie et de mon profond respect pour les traditions de cette cite et de cette Province, qui ont donne au Canada sa premiere formation historique, et au peuple canadien, le plus distingue, le plus illustre et le plus aime de ses chefs politiques.

En m'adressant a cet auditoire de travailleurs, cela me fait plaisir de rappeler que ce fut Quebec qui eut l'honneur d'envoyer au Parlement, le tres Honorable Sir Wilfrid Laurier a l'heure ou il etait appele a faire partie du Ministere liberal d'Alexandre Mackenzie, comme le plus jeune representant de cette administration. Je ne puis oublier, a mon tour, que ce fut aussi votre representant, devenu chef de son parti et Premier Ministre de son pays, qui m'appelait a ses cotes, le plus jeune membre de son administration, pour representer les interets du travail dans son Cabinet.

Messieurs, Sir Wilfrid Laurier fut un ami fidele de l'ouvrier. C'est a son Gouvernement que nous devons l'etablissement d'un Ministere du Travail dans le Dominion du Canada. La democratisation de l'industrie, comme devant etre le grand travail de l'avenir, fut presque le dernier sujet

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

mentionne par Sir Wilfrid dans le dernier discours qu'il fit en public. C'est son oeuvre que nous devons essayer d'accomplir; c'est son genie que nous devons essayer de tenir en vie, maintenant que lui-meme est disparu.

Je dois remercier, du plus profond de mon coeur, le Conseil Central National des Metiers et du Travail du District de Quebec pour le privilege qu'il m'a accorde d'adresser la parole a cette reunion d'ouvriers, sur la grande question de notre epoque, a l'etude de laquelle j'ai consacre la plus grande partie de ma vie et une qui fut si chere au coeur de celui dont nous deplorons aujourd'hui la perte.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

Before I begin the address I have been asked to deliver, may I say just one word in French, if only qu'une manifestation de ma forte sympathie et de mon profond respect pour les traditions de cette cite et de cette Province, qui ont donne au Canada sa premiere formation historique et au peuple canadien, le plus distingue, le plus illustre, et le plus aime de ses chefs politiques.

In addressing this audience of workingmen, it is a pleasure to me to recall that ce fut Quebec-Est, qui eut l'honneur d'envoyer au Parlement, le tres Honorable Sir Wilfrid Laurier a l'heure ou il etait appele a faire partie du Ministere liberal d'Alexandre Mackenzie, comme le plus jeune representant de cette administration. Je ne puis oublier, a mon tour, que ce fut aussi votre representant, devenu chef de son parti et Premier Ministre de son pays, qui m'appelait a ses cotes, le plus jeune membre de son administration, to represent the interests of Labor in his Cabinet.

Gentlemen, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a true friend of the workingman. It is to his Government that we owe the establishment of a Department of Labor in the Dominion of Canada. Almost the last subject Sir Wilfrid referred to, in the last speech he made in public, was the democratization of industry as the great work of the future. If is his work that we must seek to carry on, and his spirit that we must seek to keep alive now that he himself is gone.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

May I, with all my heart, thank le Conseil Central National des Metiers et du Travail du District de Quebec for the privilege accorded me of addressing this gathering of workingmen on the great question of our day, one to the study of which I have devoted most of my life, and one which was very close to the heart of him whose loss we mourn to-day.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

7 April 1919

D 4071

Toronto and York
Liberal Assoc.

CAPITAL AND LABOUR

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[King - speeches] [INDUSTRIAL REL] D 4072

Toronto World Collected - Labour and Industrial Relations

April 8 - 19

T. AND Y. LIBERALS ELECT OFFICERS

Hartley Dewart Arraigns Government on Every Conceivable Issue.

HON. MACKENZIE KING

Emphasizes the Importance of Co-ordination Between Capital and Labor

That the whole gamut of true Liberalism would be behind the present government if it disclosed its intention of following a policy of real constructive reconstruction, was a statement made last night by Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King at the inaugural meeting of the Toronto and York Liberal Association, held at Foresters' Hall, College Street, near Yonge Following the course of his addresses of recent date, the speaker emphasized the need of co-ordination between the four real parties of all countries, labor, capital, administration and community, each of these four signifying the four most important factors of communal life thruout the world In common with all the speakers of the evening, the Liberal statesman paid his tribute to the sterling qualities of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose widow, Lady Laurier had earlier been elected to the honorary presidency of the new association.

Touching upon the need of co-operation between labor and all the other sections of the community, the speaker pointed out that the war had been waged for the express purpose of proving that the only government worth while was that by consent as against that by autocratic control. No country in the world had organized industry to such a state of perfection as Germany, and none had put its commercial and military powers to such autocratic suses. What was Germany's status today? She had none. But, on the other hand those Allied countries whom she had endeavored to crush were today using her own factories, her own railways, and her own products for her own salvation, a greater example of the principle of administration for the weal of the people than that country had ever before experienced. Such was the principle of real Liberalism.

Arrogate Select Few.

Hartley Dewart, K.C., M.L.A., arraigned the government both at Ottawa and at Queen's Park upon every conceivable issue. There was need, he said, for a campaign of Liberal education, that the women, God bless them, might know how Liberalism held the principle of patronage in contempt and loathing, that they might know the depths of autocratic privilege to which Sir William Hearst and his select cabinet had sunk. Orders-in-council had been so administered by the Tory governments, said the speaker, that the people had almost lost their perspective of responsible government. Continuing, Mr. Dewart referred feelingly to order-in-council No. 3069 as a horrible example of the extent to which this principle of government by orders-in-council had been availed. "Do you, people, intend longer, to arrogate to these select few the power to legislate you almost out of existence by such methods?" asked the irate member for South Toronto. Government by commission also came in for the opprebrium of Mr. Dewart, who criticised the commissions no matter how well administered, as subversive of the best interests of the populace.

Jockeying Officialdom.

James A. Robb, M.P., Liberal whip at Ottawa, and member for the county of Chateauguay, P.Q., urged the need of helping to clear away any misunderstandings which might have arisen as to conditions prevailing in political Quebec. He knew of many constituencies which had elected Protestant members to Ottawa and French-Canadian members to Quebec, a very fair means of distribution of representation. He paid a fine tribute to the memory of the late Liberal chieftain. Continuing, he criticized the plan of the present government to give employment thru the medium of public works as unwarranted. "If public works are made where they are not necessary," he said, "it is simply trying to lift ourselves with our own bootstraps." Touching upon the problem of the returned soldiers, he expressed the opinion that the returned man who was true to himself was fully capable of looking after himself without the aid of jockeying officialdom.

Officers Elected.

Major J. C. Tolmie, M.L.A. for Essex, a returned soldier with three years' experience in France, delivered a stirring address of encouragement to those present, and Mrs. Wesley G. Barker in a fine address gave the well expressed hopes of the women champions of Liberalism. The association elected the following officers for the year:

Hon. lady president, Lady Laurier; hon. president, Sir Allan Aylesworth; hon. vice-presidents, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, H. Hartley Dewart, K.C., M.P.P., P. C. Larkin, John O'Neill, Alex. D. Bruce, Unionville; president, H. D. Ramsden, Mount Albert; vice-presidents, Mrs. Wesley C. Barker, Mrs. P. G. Kiely, Mrs. Greenwood Brown, Mrs. James Bell, Kleinberg; Mrs. A. F. Hall, Thornhill; Frank Denton, K.C., C. W. Kerr, Gordon Waldron, Alex. Macgregor, Ald. J. G. Ramsden, A. J. Young, Harry Winberg, Buy Roach, Russell Reesor, Markham; J. J. Dunbar, John Kennedy, Sergeant J. A. Coffey, Corp. W. A. Gillies; hon. secretary, W. H. Adams; treasurer, J. E. Day, K.C.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

[King - speeches] [INDUSTRIAL REL] D 4072

Toronto World Collected - Privy Council and Industrial Relations

April 8 - 19

T. AND Y. LIBERALS ELECT OFFICERS

Hartley Dewart Arraigns Government on Every Conceivable Issue.

HON. MACKENZIE KING

Emphasizes the Importance of Co-ordination Between Capital and Labor

That the whole gamut of true Liberalism would be behind the present government if it disclosed its intention of following a policy of real constructive reconstruction, was a statement made last night by Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King at the inaugural meeting of the Toronto and York Liberal Association, held at Foresters' Hall, College Street, near Yonge Following the course of his addresses of recent date, the speaker emphasized the need of co-ordination between the four real parties of all countries, labor, capital, administration and community, each of these four signifying the four most important factors of communal life thruout the world In common with all the speakers of the evening, the Liberal statesman paid his tribute to the sterling qualities of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose widow, Lady Laurier had earlier been elected to the honorary presidency of the new association.

Touching upon the need of co-operation between labor and all the other sections of the community, the speaker pointed out that the war had been waged for the express purpose of proving that the only government worth while was that by consent as against that by autocratic control. No country in the world had organized industry to such a state of perfection as Germany, and none had put its commercial and military powers to such autocratic suses. What was Germany's status today? She had none. But, on the other hand those Allied countries whom she had endeavored to crush were today using her own factories, her own railways, and her own products for her own salvation, a greater example of the principle of administration for the weal of the people than that country had ever before experienced. Such was the principle of real Liberalism.

Arrogate Select Few.

Hartley Dewart, K.C., M.L.A., arraigned the government both at Ottawa and at Queen's Park upon every conceivable issue. There was need, he said, for a campaign of Liberal education, that the women, God bless them, might know how Liberalism held the principle of patronage in contempt and loathing, that they might know the depths of autocratic privilege to which Sir William Hearst and his select cabinet had sunk. Orders-in-council had been so administered by the Tory governments, said the speaker, that the people had almost lost their perspective of responsible government. Continuing, Mr. Dewart referred feelingly to order-in-council No. 3069 as a horrible example of the extent to which this principle of government by orders-in-council had been availed. "Do you, people, intend longer, to arrogate to these select few the power to legislate you almost out of existence by such methods?" asked the irate member for South Toronto. Government by commission also came in for the opprebrium of Mr. Dewart, who criticised the commissions no matter how well administered, as subversive of the best interests of the populace.

Jockeying Officialdom.

James A. Robb, M.P., Liberal whip at Ottawa, and member for the county of Chateauguay, P.Q., urged the need of helping to clear away any misunderstandings which might have arisen as to conditions prevailing in political Quebec. He knew of many constituencies which had elected Protestant members to Ottawa and French-Canadian members to Quebec, a very fair means of distribution of representation. He paid a fine tribute to the memory of the late Liberal chieftain. Continuing, he criticized the plan of the present government to give employment thru the medium of public works as unwarranted. "If public works are made where they are not necessary," he said, "it is simply trying to lift ourselves with our own bootstraps." Touching upon the problem of the returned soldiers, he expressed the opinion that the returned man who was true to himself was fully capable of looking after himself without the aid of jockeying officialdom.

Officers Elected.

Major J. C. Tolmie, M.L.A. for Essex, a returned soldier with three years' experience in France, delivered a stirring address of encouragement to those present, and Mrs. Wesley G. Barker in a fine address gave the well expressed hopes of the women champions of Liberalism. The association elected the following officers for the year:

Hon. lady president, Lady Laurier; hon. president, Sir Allan Aylesworth; hon. vice-presidents, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, H. Hartley Dewart, K.C., M.P.P., P. C. Larkin, John O'Neill, Alex. D. Bruce, Unionville; president, H. D. Ramsden, Mount Albert; vice-presidents, Mrs. Wesley C. Barker, Mrs. P. G. Kiely, Mrs. Greenwood Brown, Mrs. James Bell, Kleinberg; Mrs. A. F. Hall, Thornhill; Frank Denton, K.C., C. W. Kerr, Gordon Waldron, Alex. Macgregor, Ald. J. G. Ramsden, A. J. Young, Harry Winberg, Buy Roach, Russell Reesor, Markham; J. J. Dunbar, John Kennedy, Sergeant J. A. Coffey, Corp. W. A. Gillies; hon. secretary, W. H. Adams; treasurer, J. E. Day, K.C.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

29 Aug. 1919

D 4073

Ottawa: Civic luncheon

ROYAL VISIT - PRINCE OF WALES

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"The royal throne which we honour in the presence of Your Royal Highness has its enduring foundations, not in any constitution, but in the hearts of the people.

"In Arthur's court, whence sprang the mythical origin of our kings, the knights were sworn to reverence their king as their conscience, and their conscience as their king, Theirs it was to ride about, redressing human wrong. In that table Round there was one knight beloved of all the rest, Sir Galahad.

"Your Royal Highness will see in the streets of our city, in the approach to our houses of parliament, a symbolical figure of Sir Galahad, and a stone bearing the inscription, 'If I lose myself, I save myself.' These were Sir Galahad's own words as he set forth in the quest of the Holy Grail, words of human service.

"May I say that the Canadian people have recognized in Your Royal Highness the Sir Galahad of the royal household, the young knight, our future King, whose joy is in the service of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

others. And as Sir Galahad, through his pure life and noble deeds, was rewarded by the vision of the Holy Grail, so, too, we pray and believe that in the time appointed yours it will be to win the radiance of a people's love and devotion which makes a lasting glory round the throne."

-- Extract from a speech by W.L.Mackenzie King, at a Luncheon given by the Government of Canada in honour of His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales - Ottawa, August 29, 1919.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1 Sept. 1919

D 4076

Summerside, P.E.I.:
Nomination meeting

KING'S WAR RECORD

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

By-Elections - Pres
D 4077

TRY JONTEL TALCUM TODAY---THE MacKINNON DRUG CO.

EVERYBODY READS THE PATRIOT, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND'S "ONLY" EVENING PAPER

BUY W.S.S. WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

The Island Patriot.

THE WEATHER

Moderate winds, mostly easterly; unsettled to-day and on Saturday, with occasional rain.

$3.00 a year rural and foreign | CHARLOTTETOWN, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1919 | $4.00 delivered in Charlottetown

A GREAT SPEECH BY THE GREAT LEADER OF THE GREAT LIBERAL PARTY IN CANADA

Hon. W. L. McKenzie King, the Brilliant Young Statesman, Destined Soon To Be the Prime Minister of Our Dominion, Enthusiastically Acclaimed by Cheering Thousands in the Crystal Rink, Summerside, As He Formally Accepts the Nomination For Princc. Leading Liberals From All Parts of the Province in Attendance. Mr. King in His Masterly Address Completely Disposes of the Slanderous Charges Made Against Him With Respect to His War Record, and He Declares That He Would Welcome a Contest on That Issue. He Threw Down the Gauntlet For Any One in Canada to Take It Up. The Great Audience Inspired and Thrilled With The Masterly and Memorable Presentation of the Political Situation, Brief Addresses by Mr Hance J. Logan Ex-M. P. and Premier Bell.

The brilliant young leader of the united and reorganized Liberal party of Canada, Hon. William Lyon MacKenzie King, formally accepted the nomination for Prince County at a memorable mass meeting held in the Crystal Rink, Summerside, last night.

Between three and four thousand people crowded the building. Not only leading Liberals from every part of the Island, including Premier Bell and members of the Legislature were in attendance, but quite a number of Conservatives as well.

Mr. Robert Agnew, President of the East Prince Liberal Association, presided.

The cordial welcome extended Mr. King on his arrival in Summerside on Wednesday night, when an informal reception was held, was but a prelude to the tremendous ovation he received when he entered the building last night, the great audience rising as one person, and greeting the leader with cheers and waving of hats and handkerchiefs.

Mr. King, who had attended the Exhibition during the day, had won many friends by his charming personality. Last night he added thousands of admirers to his list by his magnificent oration, which was the first big political speech to be delivered in Canada since becoming leader.

Mr. King's clear, ringing voice carried to every part of the big auditorium and a sounding board proved of considerable assistance.

Mr. King's address was preceded by stirring speeches by Mr. Horace J. Logan, ex-M.P. of Amherst and Premier Bell.

The former, one of the leading orators of Eastern Canada, referred to Mr. King as the leader of the rejuvenated and reunited Liberal party chosen by the great democracy of that party at a convention in Ottawa.

The railways, the great corporations, the famous 18 of 1911 were not behind Mr. King, but the hearts of the people were behind him. Mr. Logan also stated that Sir Wilfrid Laurier, shortly before his death, had spoken of Mr. King to him as one of the most brilliant men in public life in Canada and as ap latform speaker he has scarcely a peer.

Mr. Logan then dealt with some of the outstanding issues of the day including the government's attitude with respect to the high cost of living; their railway policy, etc.

More extended reference to Mr. Logan's address will be given later.

Premier Bell touched briefly on the locals ituation, pointing out that the Conservatives had gone out of power and left not only a deficit of $254,000 for eight months and eight days of this year but they had overdrawn $450,000 from the banks.

He also spoke of Mr. King's great ability and pointed out that in the vote for leadership, he had received strong support from all the provinces

The Liberal leader then rose amid a great outburst of cheers and spoke for over an hour and a half.

Before he began he was presented with an address in French from the Liberal Acadians of the province, read by Mr. F. J. Buote.

The leader first dealt with the nomination offered them, then referred to charges made against him, taking as a typical illustration four mentioned by the Summerside Journal, viz:

1. He was not supported by the better element of the Liberal party.
2. He was a menace to labor.
3. He was not the friend of the farmer.
4. While soldiers fought he dodged

He took up the fourth at first, going fully into his war record, which he fully justified, showing clearly that he had nobly "done his bit" rendering war service in the manner he was best qualified to serve.

He then proceeded to review some of the great issues of the day in Canada.

Appreciation of Welcome.

Mr. King at the outset heartily thanked the Liberals for giving him the nomination and expressed appreciation of the warmth and cordiality of the reception tendered him on his arrival Wednesday night, and the

In coming to Prince Edward Island to accept a nomination he realized one advantage of becoming better acquainted with the Maritime Provinces. He knew Ontario well; he had visited the West several times and in looking forward to assuming the leadership of the great Liberal Party he desired to know Canada from the East to the West; from the first chapter of its history to the last and the East was the place in which to begin. Prince Edward Island cradled on the waves of the Atlantic was also the cradle of Confederation for it was in the capital city of Charlottetown that the first preliminary Confederation conference was held.

Tribute to Capt. Read.

In referring to the vacancy in Prince which necessitated the holding of an election he paid an eloquent tribute to the late Captain Joseph Read, speaking of his business ability and enterprise.

He also made fitting reference to his son, Captain John L. Read, who has won world-wide fame as a navigator in connection with his trip to Russia in command of the ice breaking steamers.

His War Record.

Dealing with the criticism levelled against him for alleged lack of service in the war, Mr. King said that if there should be a contest he would welcome as an issue his war record alone and hoped to have the privilege of addressing the returned soldiers on this issue (cheers).

He had kept silent under the attacks heretofore because he did not wish to traffic in patriotism for political ends, but now that his political enemies were taking advantage of his silence to create a false impression throughout Canada by saying that he had resided in the United States throughout the war and had returned to Canada only to further his own political ends he felt it was necessary to refer to this matter in the interests of the party. In answer to this charge he would say that he had never resided in the United States at any time except when he was at the University of Chicago for a year and at Harvard University for two years. This was 25 years ago. Since 1900 he has resided continuously at Ottawa.

Helped to avert Industrial War.

Such time as I did spend in the United States during the war, said Mr. King was in answer to special calls to assist in bringing about an industrial peace and averting strike in essentially war industries associated with the manufacture of greatly needed war material and supplies.

Mr. King here gave an outline of his work in Colorado at the beginning of the war, where the large mining population of that State was in a state of civil war which very seriously affected the industries so indispensable for the successful prosecution of the war. He helped to change conditions there so that when the United States entered the war, the coal mines, employing 15,000 men produced a greater quantity of coal per man per day than in any other part of America, as there was less loss of working time. (cheers).

He had been called in by several other of the largest industries including those producing turbines, electrical supplies, ships, steel, etc., embracing some of the largest concerns in America. His whole service had been in the nature of aiding the means by which labor conditions were so improved as to lead to continuous production and maximum output of supplies during the war.

WIN-THE-WAR WORK.

He said he was prepared to produce communications from industrial concerns who had invited his services. One of these communications illustrative of the nature of his work he read to the meeting. It was from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation of Bethlehem., Pa., and was as follows:—

HON. W. L. McKENZIE KING.

BETHLEHEM SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION, LTD
J. W. POWELL,
Vice President.

Bethlehem, Pa.,
September 22nd, 1919

Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:—

I am very glad to take this opportunity to tell you in a form that you may use as you may see fit, that we found your advice and counsel at the time we called on you in the Spring of 1918, in connection with the labor situation in our shipyards, of very great benefit in assisting us to arrive at a plan of action that would help us to preserve industrial peace and to improve relations between the Company and its employees.

At the time we asked for your assistance, there was a great deal of unrest among our labor and we believe that the advice that you gave to us was of material assistance in reducing this unrest and in correspondingly increasing the efficiency in the production of ships.

As this Company is far and away the largest shipbuilding concern in the world and as it produced a very large percentage of all the ships actually completed in this country during the period of its participation in the war, i.e., something like 60 per cent of the destroyer and over 20 per cent of the merchant craft, your assistance was evidently of real value from the standpoint of helping to win the war.

Very truly yours,

BETHLEHEM SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION, LTD.
By J. W. Powell,
Vice President.

Mr. King drew attention to the fact that during the war the British Government had appointed to deal with these industrial problems a Ministry of Re-construction, the United States a National War Labor Board, Canada a Labor Sub-Committee of the Re-construction and Development Committee of the Cabinet and the Labor Appeal Board. All these bodies were presumed to have been discharging important war services.

The services which he had been rendering during the war were identical with these rendered by the aforesaid bodies.

INDUSTRY AND HUMANITY

Not only had he done all that was possible in a practical way, but he had given to the country in a permanent form in a volume entitled Industry and Humanity, a feature on the principles underlying industrial re-construction which, published in various countries, and having gone through several editions in this country was contributing materially to the solution of the greatest of all problems,—viz. industrial problems.

A PROPHECY.

Mr. King read from his book referring to the great railway strike now on in Britain drawing a parallel between conditions there and a blockade in time of war.

This strike and the steel strike in the States showed the need of some change in industrial organization whereby the great industrial wars could be averted. In the States it was a fight between Labor and Capital. In Britain it was a fight between Labor and the Government. These two great conflicts were illustrative of the fact that the contending parties were each seeking a single control.

What was needed today was an adjustment of the relations of industry —so that instead of a monopoly of control, by capital labor or the state, there might be a community of control or a joint control which all would share in shaping a policy and reaping the rewards or benefits in connection therewith.

HIS AID TO THE ARMIES AT THE FRONT.

Having been Deputy Minister as well as Minister of Labor, said Mr. King "and a life long student of industrial problems. I feel that the services which I have been able to render industry—and through industry the fighting armies at the front were greater than any other service I could have performed in a military way at my age. (Loud Cheers.)

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION

Mr. King said it had been charged against him that he had gone to the United States and spent his time in the service of Rockefeller. Those who make that statement evidently do not know what the Rockefeller Foundation means. At the time he took up the work he was a candidate for North York and he consulted his constituents before accepting the offer of the foundation. Mr. King quoted from a pamphlet issued by that organization showing that it derived its name from Rockefeller because the latter had given funds to be used for certain philantrophic purposes. It had no connection wit any industry. It was President Elliott of Harvard University, one of the trustees who had specially invited him and he was glad to accept and undertake it. While carrying it on he had resided in Canada except when he was travelling in different countries. He was no more an employee of Rockefeller than a librarian of a Carnegie Library was an employee of Carnegie, or a principal of the McDonald College an employee of Sir William McDonald. Amid great applause, Mr. King showed that the Rockefeller Foundation spent $22,644,875.00 for war work. Part of this went to help in the relief of the Belgians; part went to fit out hospitals where the wounded men received the most modern and advanced surgical treatment and part went towards the Red Cross work in Siberia.

THE LIBERAL UNIONISTS.

May I pause for a moment to say a word concerning the Liberal Unionists in Parliament and in the country.

I touch here upon ground which I know by many is regarded as delicate, and by some as even dangerous. I have never considered it either, and do not know why it should be so considered. Everything depends upon the point of view from which we take our stand: whether we wish to range ourselves with those who are ever ready to impute mean, or sordid, or evil motives to others; or whether we are ready to concede to others the same standards of right and justice by which we ourselves desire to have our motives and actions judged.

First, as to the Liberal Unionists throughout the country —or, rather, those Liberals who supported the Union Government in the last general elections. Are we to believe that these men—men and women of Liberal convictions— numbering themselves by thousands, were not honest, were not conscientious, were not patriotic in the votes they cast, in the light of the knowledge they had at the time, and the circumstances as represented to them? For my part, I decline to entertain any such belief. I would go farther and say that I believe that, breaking thus temporarily, and on a single issue, with the Liberal party, and in particular with the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whom personlaly they loved and respected and had loyally supported throughout long years, many of them suffered for conscience sake as they have seldom suffered in their lives. If you ask me why do I say this, I answer, because I know it to be true, because among the number were many of my own most intimate and lifelong friends, not friends only, but relatives and connections who never cast a Tory vote in all their lives, and who were grieved to the heart to be placed in the position in which they found themselves placed by the action of the Government in making the issue of conscription to appearances the supreme issue of the elections.

It is not surprising that, having acted thus from motives of conscience and the highest patriotism, the issue of conscription being no longer a political issue in this country, these men and women are now but awaiting the opportunity to sweep from power a Government that has become a colorless affair, that is neither Liberal nor Conservative, and is Unionist in nothing save in name and the determination to hold on to office at any cost; and to join with their fellow-Liberals and the forces in this country that are making for progress, in placing in power a government that will be Liberal and progressive and has a policy that it can call its own.

Now, just a word as to the Liberal Unionists in the House and in the Government. Their position has fortunately been defined by themselves, and has been made public by a statement given to the press after a caucus of Liberal Unionist ministers and members held in Ottawa on Tuesday of this week. The press, after mentioning the names of the Liberal-Unionist ministers who were present at the caucus, contains the following quoted statement as having been given out by Messrs Rowell, Calder and Sifton:

"A meeting of the Liberal Unionist members of the House was held in the east block. The meeting expressed unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government, and the Government was congratulated on its success. The consensus of opinion was that as the members were elected to support Union Government, it was their intention to continue to do so, and the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

This statement is very interesting and very suggestive. What it lacks in a sense of humor, it more than makes up in what it reveals of divided opinion. It contains three separate and distinct announcements. The first is, that the Liberal Unionists expressed "unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government," con- gratulated the Government on its success. That was to be expected. They were elected to support the Government's war policy; their congratulations are therefore in the nature of self-congratulation, which is perhaps quite pardonable. The second announcement is to the effect that "the consensus of opinion was that as the members were elected to support Union Government, it was their intention to continue to do so." That would not be so surprising if the purpose for which Union Government had been formed were not fulfilled— one might say over fulfilled—and but for the statement which immediately follows, and which constitutes the third announcement, namely: "the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions." Here is a statement that is truly significant and truly amazing. We are now approaching the anniversary of the armistice which ended the War. Almost a year has passed, and responsible ministers of the Crown tell us of the Government of which they are members that thus far no policy has been evolved to meet the after-the-war conditions. They strongly express the hope that the Government will be able to evolve a progressive policy. They have lost faith, but they still retain hope. Could there be a stronger condemnation of a Government? a stronger reason why the present administration has forfeited all right to further confidence on the part of the people of Canada?

Let me say to my Liberal Unionist friends in the House of Commons, I can sympathize with your desires and with your longings; but unless you wish the country to understand that you desire to become Tories out and out, don't wait too long, for your hopes of a progressive policy will never be realized in the reactionary group of which for the time being you have become members. The Liberal party has already formulated a policy. It is a progressive policy, a policy of which the country is in great need. Don't fear that your constituents will believe that you are betraying any trust in daring to forego an allegiance of which you yourselves are in so grave doubt. Indeed, there can only be offence in continuing to follow where you have ceased to believe.

Mr. King then proceeded to deal with the policy of the Liberal party at the National Convention, dwelling particularly on the resolutions re the Tariff, which had been framed to reduce the high cost of living and increasing agricultural production, also dwelling on the resolution on encouragement to agriculture. He said that under his leadership there would be no playing fast and loose with any policies laid down at the Convention. These policies would find expression in the statutes of Canada. He also touched on the need of greater control of parliament by the people and of the executive by parliament, pointing out that in the eight ridings where byeelections were being held, the government had so arranged the dates that no representative thus elected could sit at this present session, which one member of the government has described as the most important since Confederation.

Mr. King referred to hte telegram from the Minister of the Interior to the Prime Minister re the thousand soldiers' votes to be allotted to particular ridings, illustrative of what there was reason to believe was part of a great conspiracy affecting all of the constituencies of Canada. He could not imagine a colleague of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier sending such a message to him as Prime Minister, nor Sir Wilfrid remaining silent and permitting his colleague to stifle an investigation, while his honor as a minister of the Crown and Prime Minister was being impugned.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

Enthusiastic Ovation to Mackenzie King in the Crystal Rink

Hon W L Mackenzie King arrived in Summerside about six o'clock on Wednesday evening, During the early forenoon Messrs A E McLean, M L A., B W Tanton and Dr J F McNeill crossed over to Sackville, N B via, the Car Ferry met Mr King there and accompanied him to Summerside. The party consisted of Hon Mr King and his private secretary (Mr F A MacGregor) Messrs Hance J Logan of Cumberland Co..N S, Frank Sweeney. of Moncton. and Fred Magee of Port Elgin.

When Borden was reached some six autos from Summerside and other parts of the county were in waiting and the party at once proceeded to Summerside. In the evening about a hundred from Summerside and nearby localities gathered in the capacious and handsome Oddfellows Hall where a reception to Hon Mr King and his party was held. The meeting was a most enthusiatic one and included a sprinkling of the thoughtful and professional element of the conservative party. Evidently they recognized the honor of having the Hon Mackenzie King in our midst with the possibility of his being the representative of this county in the federal parliament. The meeting closed with speeches—but we will not anticipate was said in the Crystal Rink the following evening Short and pithy addresses, however, were made by the following :—Dr J F McNeill, being chairman, Hon Mr King, Mr Sweeney, Mr Magee, Mr Logan, Mr B Gallant, Mr A E McLean and Mr A C Saunders.

The meeting in the Crystal Rink on Thursday evening was an historic one. The great rink was well seated throughout while it was profusely decorated with bunting. The motto "God Save the King" in large letters was stretched across the rear of the large platform. The band was also present and gave some selections. The immense building was completely filled— rink proper, promenades, platform and gallery behind it. Large numbers of ladies were present and a considerable of our conservative friends were among the audience to "look him over" as they were asked, but also to hear what Mr Mackenzie King had to say as well. The platform was filled with those prominent in society circles, and in the political field as well. The committe of arrangements—in fact, all the committees connected with the arrangements deserve the highest praise. There were between 2000 and 3000 people comfortably seated.

Mr Robert Agnew, President of East Prince Liberal Association presided, When Hon W L Mackenzie-King appeared on the platform considerable applause was accorded him but when he rose to address the immense concourse the ovation was loud and prolonged and this was repeated at the close of his splendid, eloquent and stirring address —the hand-clapping being frequent throughout his oratorical effort.

The proceedings began with a band selection, after which Mr Hance J Logan of Nova Scotia and ex-M P for Cumberland, was called on. He made a splendid effort among other things stating a remark made to him by the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the library of the latter only a few months before the death of the late Liberal Chief. Referring to Hon Mr Mackenzie King, Sir Wilfrid said "He is the most brilliant young man in the ranks of Liberal party"—thus forshadowing the position in the party Mr King holds to-day.

This was followed by an address in French by Mr F J Buote, of Tignish.

Premier J H Bell was next called upon and among his remarks he said that the conservative had been saying that the Great Liberal Convention, in choosing Mackenzie King as leader was dominated by Quebec. This the speaker said was untrue, he only got a substantial vote from that province the same as he got from all the other provinces. As he neared the question of the state of local finances cries began for "King, King"—however, undoubtedly the immense audience had come to hear Mackenzie King and their anxiety could not be kept within bonds.

As Mr King came forward the ovation he received was inspiring the assemblage rising to their feet to acclaim him.

His speech was a master effort and is receiving peons of praise on all sides. He began by expressing the gratitude in his heart for the honor done him by the Liberals of Prince County nominating him to contest the bye-election. He also expressed greatful appreciation to those who had so willing stood aside that he might be nominated.

He also paid a just tribute to the late Capt Joseph Read also instancing the feat of Capt John L Read in taking two ice breakers to the White Sea in the North of Russia under adverse Arctic conditions "a worthy son of a worthy sire,' he said.

It is impossible for us on the morning of publication to even mention the different subjects Mr King dwelt upon. Perhaps the most important was that upon the attempt of the conservative press to attack his attitude regarding the war although he was hampered by adverse feelings in talking about himself. But he strongly felt that it was necessary to justify the Liberals of this constituency in backing him up. Upon this point he traced his education through varying colleges and post-graduate courses the bent given to his efforts toward the social questions which are more and more becoming the most prominent questions in Canada, Britain and fhe United States and in fact over the whole earth. He also dwelt upon his connection with the Rockfeller Foundation, stating that he waa not an employee of Mr Rockfeller nimself. When offered that tnat position he consulted his friends in New York and Pres Elliot of Harvard had advised him to accept it. The employment was to study and give advice to the question of the industrial relations of Labor and Capitol. Some said he had went to the United States to live and it was hinted it was to escape army life. In place of that he had done all his work in his own study in the apartment house in which he lived in Ottawa. But that was all before the war.

Amid adverse circumstances connected with his family relatives he had found time to write a book 500 pages as the result of his studies, a volume of which he held in his hand and from which he read an extract showing his anticipation of presents events in Britain. He also instanced his successful efforts in Colorado among miners to allay unrest and stated that as a result these mines produced more coal than others for war purposes. He also read to the audience letters appreciative of his efforts in this respect.

His reference to the conditions of his sick brother, and latterly his death, the death of his sister and father bordered in the pathetic and yet these whom he had greathelped had all been engaged in efforts along war lines—that of his brother—who had developed tubercular knee—being of the utmost service to the leadfng governments engaged in the world war.

The Rockefeller Foundation had spent in war work $22,000,000and even the Canadian wounded men were benefitted thereby. The British government had established a Board to deal with social conditions thus showing the necessity of such work. Was it not a matter of pride to us that a Canadian had been chosen by the R Foundation. What he did, he said, was what was in his heart to do—work for the benefit of his fellowmen. The work regarding the present industrial war is at least of equal importance with the great war and the clash of armies. When he touched upon personal matters he asked the pressmen to suppress that part of his speech so great was his modesty. He also touched upon some of the resolutions passed by the Liberal Convention at Ottawa especially that on the tariff. and others as it affected the Farmers. He also in concluding, spoke of the "Meighan telegram" to Premier Borden and said were he elected to Parliament and became in time the leader of the Federal government as far as his efforts and those of his associates went he would do his utmost to see that in the choice of representatives to parliament the electorate would be free to select the men of their choice.

At the close of his address great cheering took place and the Band closed with the National Anthem many voicing the sentiment in song.

Oromocto Swept by Fierce Fire

The village of Oromocto, shire town of Sunbury County, N B, was practically destroyed by fire which broke out at 11 o'clock last Tuesday morning and raged until late in the afternoon. The fire was the second which has occurred within two years, a large portion of the village being burned in June, 1918. The loss in this fire is conservatively estimated at $500,000, and is the most severe blow Oromocto received, injuring the place even more than the decay of the wooden shipbuilding industry several decades since. The destruction of the saw mill and yard of the River Valley Lumber Company removes the chief industry of the village.

A considerable amount of insurance was carried on the properties which were destroyed. The chief loser is the River Valley Lumber Company which lost sawmill, offices, mill yard and lumber. The loss being estimated at $200,000.

Next Sunday evening the congregations of the Central St Christian Church and the Baptist Church will hold a united service in the Baptist Church, at which Rev W H Harding will preach. Bible school in the Christian Church at 10 15 and sermon at 11 a.m. Bible school at the Baptist Church at 11 a.m. The evening service at the Baptist Church will be at 7 o'clock.

CATARRH DOES HARM

Whether It Is of the Nose, Throat, or Other Organs, Get Rid of It.

Catarrh of the nose or throat when it becomes chronic weakens the delicate lung tissues, deranges the digestive organs, and may lead to consumption. It impairs the taste, smell and hearing, and affects the voice. It is a constitutional disease and requires a constitutional remedy.

Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by purifying the blood removes the cause of the disease and gives permanent relief. This alterative and tonic medicine has proved entirely satisfactory to thousands of families in three generations.

If there is biliousness or constipation, take Hood's Pills,—they are a thorough cathartic, a gentle laxative.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers Volume D 7

D 4079

THE ISLAND PATRIOT

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1919.

McKENZIE KING'S GREAT SPEECH.

The Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, in his magnificent speech before the largest audience ever assembled in Prince County, marks a memorable epoch in political history in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

For nearly two hours, the chosen Leader of the great Liberal party of Canada held spell-bound the vast throng of at least four thousand people.

The ovation Mr. King received upon entering the Rink was a spontaneous tribute to his recognized ability and those other qualities for leadership, with which he is so eminently endowed. And when he rose to address the meeting, the people rose with him, as one person, and cheered again and again, while fluttering handkerchiefs and waving hats bore striking evidence, not only to the Leader's popularity but also to the place that he has already gained in the hearts of his fellow-countrymen.

It has been claimed by some that the day of oratory, like the day of chivalry has passed, but no one after listening to Mackenzie King could any longer be deceived regarding the magic power of the art of public speaking.

Upon the splendid Riding of Prince County is fastened the eyes, not only of the people of this Dominion, but also of the British Empire, for in Mr. King is easily recognized, by those in a position to know, not only on this Continent, but across the seas, that he is the man of the hour and that his whole life work has been but a preparation for the high and honourable position he is undoubtedly destined to fill. Therefore Prince County is exceptionally honoured, and every constituency may well envy it its proud position in having Mr. King as its future representative in parliament. Mr. King is also honoured, for he will have as he said himself a greater knowledge of this most important part of Canada, called the Maritime Provinces. It is but truth to state that ever since he landed upon our shores the Liberal Leader has won admiration from all, irrespective of class, creed or politics, by his charming personality and his eminence as a public man, and as one of the greatest living authorities upon industrial questions. Everywhere and by everybody, during his stay amongst us, he has been encouraged and cheered by the warmth of the greeting and the sincerity of the regard. For his speech last night, on all sides, nothing but the sincerest expressions of confidence and pride were voiced concerning it.

We believe we express the mind of the people in stating that no public man who has ever spoken on Prince Edward Island, has made a greater or a more lasting impression upon our people. In his thanks for the honour bestowed upon him and the generous and courteous manner in which the invitation and nomination to contest Prince County were tendered him, Mr. King paid a matchless tribute to the splendid service rendered by the late Captain Joseph Read, whose unfortunate demise opened this fair constituency.

It was a happy stroke on the Leader's part, in his reference to the uniting of the races and religions of our country, for our country's good, to claim that in Prince Edward Island was symbolized that unity and liberty so much to be desired; for here the two great races and the two religions were living and striving harmoniously along those lines which made for the development of the nation and the welfare of its people. "And no wonder that this be so" said Mr. King, "for in this Island, beautifully situated in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, was cradled the first meeting which ultimately resulted in the federation of Canada." "What better place then," he dramatically declared, "could any man begin his career as chosen leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. King then took up the points upon which any on the other side of politics, as enunciated in the Summerside Journal, perhaps expected, that he should reply to.

In a brief editorial that paper made four charges namely:

1st—The better elements of the Liberal party was against him,

2nd—He was a menace to Labour,

3rd—He was not a friend of the farmer,

4th—While soldiers fought and died, he dodged.

He dealt with each of these in such a masterly manner as to frequently evoke great applause ,while again the vast audience shook with laughter.

No wonder! For if ever a man could stand upon a public platform before gathered thousands, and justify himself, in every important step of his public work and career, surely, that man is Mackenzie King. From the year 1899, when he was appointed Deputy Minister of Labour, in the Laurier Administration, and subsequently Minister of Labor, until his election at the great Liberal Convention, in August last, 1919, Mr. King's work for our country, and his service to mankind for the betterment of all peoples as well as his valuable contributions to industrial problems, have been recognized throughout this Continent and the civilized world. His book "Industry and Humanity" alone, places him amongst the foremost leaders on the vital matter of industrial conditions, and makes him one of, if not the most conspicuous figure on questions relating to labour and capital. Those who listened to him—and they embraced all creeds and classes —were singularly impressed as Mr. King related step by step, the noble, heroic, and self-sacrificing part he had played in the great war. He was willing to contest the pending election on that alone and he threw down the gauntlet to anyone, anywhere, to challenge his war record; asked any of the scores of returned soldiers, undoubtedly present, when he had concluded his statement of his case to rise and condemn him, if they felt he deserved it. For a moment or more the Leader paused; the audience was perfectly silent and no man had the temerity to speak or rise. It was one of the greatest and most impressive incidents that we have ever witnessed at a political gathering. Henceforth, it is to be sincerely hoped, for the sake of decency, for the sake of truth and for the observance of the Golden Rule, newspapers and people, though politically opposed, will hesitate and refuse to besmirch the character and the career of any of our public men until the whole truth and nothing but the truth be known. Mr. King the young and masterly Liberal Leader stands justified today by the people of Prince County and the nations of the world. It was necessary that he should take into his confidence the people of Prince because they had taken him into their confidence. The silence he had maintained for personal and obvious reasons up to the present must now be broken,—not for his own sake but for the sake of the position he occupied and the party he represented.

We venture to assert that no single man did greater work in our country or in the United States, to assist the Allies in winning the war, than did Mackenzie King. Proofs of this statement are abundant and no doubt will be given due publicity as time goes on. He did the very thing that he was best fitted to do and no man could have done more. The sympathy of the great audience was poured out to him as he told in earnest and trembling tones the inner history of his immediate family and from which, were it not for the responsible position he now occupies, the veil should never be drawn. It was a period of anguish and agony the reason for which was now clear to him. Inspired by the occasion, the warmth of the welcome extended to him and the genuine friendliness he had met with since his coming and remembering what had preceded it in his personal affairs. Mr. King pledges himself to those listening thousands that he would dedicate the rest of his life to the service of suffering humanity.

He then dealt with the Tariff, the agricultural conditions of our province and of Canada, the platform adopted by the great Liberal Convention, from which he quoted, and in a brief but masterly exposition of these questions, showed that in the hands of the great Liberal party, these and other matters now vexing our people and making for the unrest and the deplorable conditions which prevail today, here, over the border and across the seas, must be adjusted before our country can be well and truly governed. If our public men are actuated by those higher principles they will ever hold before them that however precious gold may be there is nothing so precious as human life. Where the material interests of industry conflicts with the well-being of human lives, when it comes, if it ever does come,to a conflict between the claims of humanity and the claims of industry, remember that industry exists for the sake of humanity and not humanity for the sake of industry.

In his book "Industry and Humanity" Mr. King foretold exactly what is transpiring in England today. He concluded his speech with an analysis of the Union Government, its creation, its purpose and its principles; a summary of this appears elsewhere in today's Patriot. His criticism of a recent telegram regarding the government's hope to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet after-war conditions—nearly a year since the armistice was signed, was very illuminating to all.

He concluded with an earnest invitation to all Liberal Unionists of the rank and file of the Liberals and whom he believed voted according to the dictates of their conscience at that period, to now return to Liberalism.

"It is not surprising that, having acted thus from motives of conscience and the highest patriotism, the issue of conscription being no longer a political issue in this country, these men and women are now but awaiting the opportunity to sweep from power a Government that has become a colorless affair, that is neither Liberal nor Conservative, and is Unionist in nothing save in name and the determination to hold on to office at any cost; and to join with their fellow-Liberals and the forces in this country that are making for progress, in placing in power a government that will be Liberal and progressive and has a policy that it can call its own."

The ostensible purpose of the Union was to win the war—"well the war is won!" And the reason no longer exists." To quote: "Your hopes of a progressive policy will never be realized in the reactionary group of which for the time being you have become members. The Liberal party has already formulated a policy. It is a progressive policy, a policy of which the country is in great need. It would be a grave mistake for any one to continue allegiance to a Government which has forfeited the confidence of the people and whose record is so strongly denounced from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

D 4080

15 Sept. 1919

Ottawa: National Industrial Conf.

INTRODUCTORY MESSAGE TO THE CONFERENCE

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(WLMK) ✓ National Industrial Conference

D 4081

National Industrial Conference

National

last a party affair

~~new basis of the nation. test of any particular class~~ a recognition of the worker - the public - the community as a party -

- community & orbits - for purpose of to industry - cost: conflict - organized society as problem - wealth & well being as consumers - welfare

Industrial

the nature of industry

the 4 parties - their contributions - interdependence sharing of control interrelated

Conference - what is implied in conference — statement fairly & their attitude - human relations - status, unintelligent information publicity. causes collective action - representatives

aim - an industrial constitution

Explicit constitution essentials - customs, charter, basic principles & policies expressed laws.

Industry in nature of moral service industrial service the moral equivalent of military service

This conference - machinery

Parliament - the forum of national conference all classes represented there the will of the people to be expressed (no referendum of classes)

a representative body. freely chosen

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 7

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Volume D 8
Speeches (b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921
25. January-February, 1920

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4082

6 Jan. 1920 Newmarket

"LIBERALISM"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Newmarket, Ont. Jan 6 - 1940 D 4082-A1

Review of Political Situation

It is my purpose this evening, in so far as the circumstances of the occasion will permit, briefly to review what appears to be the outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canada today; and to suggest what, as respects government, is most required to enable our country to cope with the vast problems which confront it at the beginning of a New Year, and as we enter upon a new decade in our nation's history. In addressing myself to this theme I shall endeavour to present the attitude of ~~aims and objects of~~ Liberalism as I conceive it towards the existing ~~them in Canada at the present time.~~ situation

War and its Consequences.

First and foremost let us realize that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it is equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions as they exist in other countries.

For many a year to come the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which does not reckon with that fact is certain sooner or later to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4083

This is not a moment to theorize, it is not a moment to rush to extremes, neither is it a moment to stand pat. It is a time, above all others, to be essentially practical; to look facts squarely in the face; to make an accounting of our national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as material; and then, understanding what our problems are, not in a visionary mood, but in a concrete and comprehensive way, resolutely to meet and attempt their solution in a manner that will make not only for material progress, but also for ~~the~~ human freedom in ever-increasing measure ~~of human freedom~~, and for ever-widening possibilities in social well-being and individual achievement.

Effects of the World's Upheaval

Let us remember then that the world has just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization has been torn into shreds. The nations are now busily engaged in patching it together anew. It will be some time yet before the process is complete.

In physical outline the boundaries of countries have changed. But the changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order; an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to its ~~profoundest~~ depths. A truer simile of the world's condition today is that of the ocean seething after storm. For years to come the tide of emotion will continue to surge in human breasts; with seemingly irresistible flow

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4084

Attitude as Liberal Leader

~~That it may be understood, I propose to assert it wherever I go; and that it may not be regarded as any position suddenly assumed in view of the uncertainties of which we have been made only too well aware in recent months, let~~ Let me repeat here what I said in Summerside P.E.I., in the first speech I made at the time of accepting the nomination of the Liberals of Prince to contest that riding in the bye-election of September last . Here are my words as reported in the Charlottetown "Patriot" of October 4th last:

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4085 8

"The Island Patriot"

Charlottetown, Oct.4th 1919

First, as to the Liberal Unionists throughout the country, or, rather those Liberals who supported the Union Government in the last general elections. "Are we to believe that these men - men and women of Liberal convictions - numbering themselves by thousands, were not honest, were not conscientious, were not patriotic in the votes they cast, in the light of the knowledge they had at the time, and the circumstances as represented to them ? Formmy part, I decline to entertain any such belief. I would go farther and say that I believe that, breaking thus temporarily, and on a single issue, with the Liberal party, and in particular with the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whom personally they loved and respected and had loyally supported throughout long years, many of them suffered for conscience sake as they have seldom suffered in their lives. If you ask me why do I say this, I answer because I know it to be true, because among the number were many of my own most intimate and lifelong friends, not friends only, but relatives and connections who never cast a Tory vote in all their lives, and who were grieved to the heart to be placed in the position in which they found themselves placed by the action of the Government in making the issue of Conscription to appearances the supreme issue of the elections."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Good-Will as Between Classes

It is not only those who have differed from us in the past whose views we must respect. We must also respect, and this is much more difficult very often, those who, while sharing with us in large measure the principles and policies we advocate, have aims and aspirations of their own. And here may I refer to ~~[illegible]~~ three large and most important elements in our national society: the Farmers, Labour, and the War Veterans. Here we pass from differences between individuals to consider possible differences between classes.

The Ontario Elections

Of the events of the year just past, one of the most significant has been the results attendant upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of those surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics. Surprising as the outcome of the provincial elections might at first appear, one has not to seek very far for an explanation.

First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the Federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office, and the members in their seats in the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

candidate or the Labour candidate or the Independent candidate. It is a safe and moderate estimate to say that at the very least one-third of the votes noted in the above table as having been cast for the Farmers, Labour and Independent, was Liberal. The total to these three bodies is 429,956 and one-third of this is 143,318. This added to 336,715 makes a total Liberal vote of 480,033, and reduces the combined Farmer, Labour and Independent vote to 286,636, out of a total of 1,153,567, or less than one-fourth of the total vote. This is not without its significance to farmers and liberals alike.

The 111 Conservatives or Government candidates polled 386,796. This is but few over one-third of the grand total vote, so there is no doubt of their defeat. It was a collapse.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

problems is bred of my Liberalism. I can think of the problems of Industry only in terms of Humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms; or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere; or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

That these views also are no part of any new expression of my own Liberalism, let me quote from a speech I made in this very hall on 16th March of last year. This was before the U.F.O. had demonstrated its strength as a political force, and when the Liberal Convention of August last was only being talked of. As I repeat the words, it will not be difficult for this audience, or the country, to grasp why in natural sympathy it is impossible for me not to view with some degree of satisfaction these evidences of a spirit at work in our national society which is shattering the fetters of a past order, and releasing new energies in a number of directions.

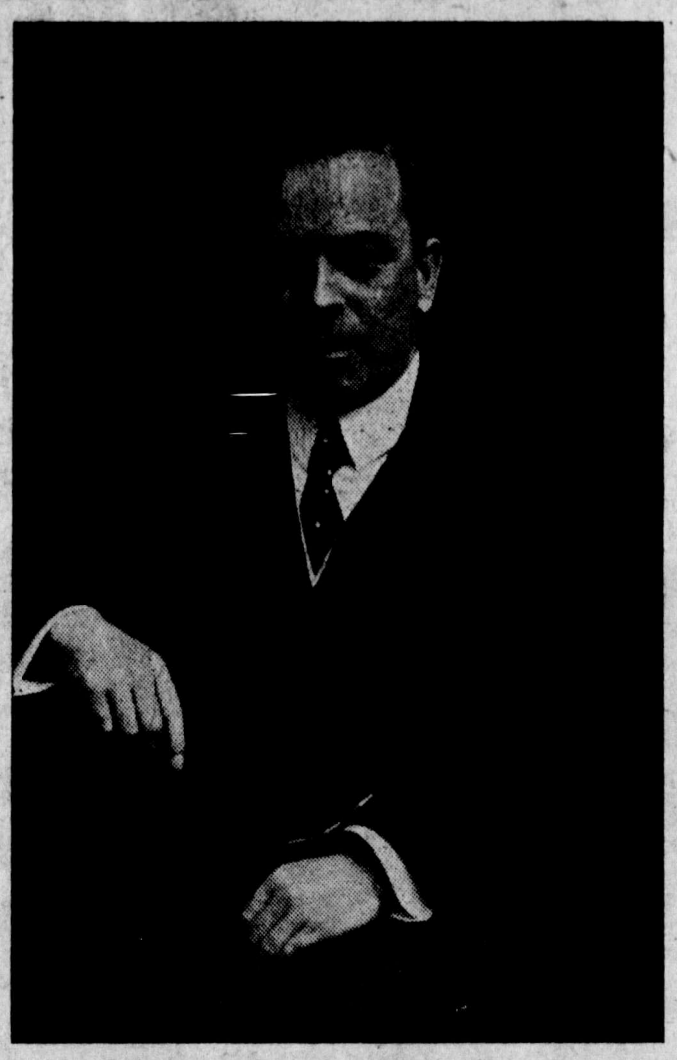
The GLOBE of 17th March in its account of the meeting referred to contains the following paragraphs: (such reference to my speech)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"Parliament", he said, "ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. It is absurd for the Dominion of Canada to have a Parliament that has relatively no farmers in it to speak for the farmers, and no men from the ranks of Labor to speak for Labor. I hope there will be in our next Parliament representatives of both these classes of our people, and also men from our soldier ranks who will speak for those brave men who lie in Flanders' fields and cannot speak for themselves. I think our next Parliament must be truly representative if we are to secure unity and contentment in this country."

LIBERAL ATTITUDE TOWARD WAR VETERANS



This quotation refers to ~~yet~~ a third element in our national life ~~to~~ which I have just alluded ~~spoken~~: the returned soldiers, or, more appropriately, the War Veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and ~~bled~~ sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Newmarket Eva January 9th 16th 20

D 4090

NORTH YORK HONOURS THE NEW LIBERAL LEADER,

Magnificent Banquet in Newmarket,

Hon. Mackenzie King Receives a Cordial Welcome.

Policy of the Opposition Outlined in a Brilliant Oration

The complimentary Banquet tendered to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King by the Liberals of North York, in the Town Hall at Newmarket on Tuesday evening was a magnificent success. The spacious building was crowded from top to bottom with staunch friends and admirers from all parts of the Riding, each anxious to do honor to the distinguished guest.

The Hall was decorated throughout in a most elaborate manner and was ablaze with electric lights. Large and handsomely painted shields bore the mottoes: "Welcome King Our Leader," "King and a United Canada," "North York the Cradle of Freedom."

The excellent and bounteous Menu served so efficiently by the Cole Co. of Toronto and no less than 40 local helpers was fitting to the occasion and the music supplied by Bodley's Double Orchestra of Toronto was greatly applauded. Every detail of the Banquet was carried out systematically and elaborately and it was conceded on all sides to be the finest Banquet ever held in the Banner Riding of the County of York. No less than 550 people partook of the Banquet including over 100 ladies.

After the serving, the tables were removed from the Main Hall and the capacity audience reseated, the speaking taking place from the platform, the President of the North York Liberal Association, Mr. Howard Cane of Newmarket, introducing the several speakers. Other occupying seats on the platform were—Mr. I. E. Pedlow, M. P. for South Renfrew, Mr. W. D. Euler, M. P. for Waterloo, Mr. Andrew Hayden, general secretary of the Liberal Organization Committee for the Dominion of Canada, Ottawa, Mr. P. C. Larkin and Mr. W. D. McGreggor of Toronto, Mayor Bassett of Aurora.

Letters of regret at not being able to be present were received from Duncan C. Ross, Chas. Maguire, F. F. Pardee, Sir Alan Aylesworth, Hon. G. P. Graham and others. The letter was read in full and is as follows:

Allow me to thank you for your kind invitation to be present at the banquet to our Liberal Leader. Hon. Mr. King possesses all the elements of successful leadership. He is able, energetic, clean and worthy the undivided support not only of Liberals but of all those who desire that our country should resume its march toward national greatness.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier left office in 1911, Canada was enjoying the blessings of prosperity and of goodfellowship among the people that comprise her population. Through the incompetence and extravagance of the Borden Government, we were brought face to face with the financial crisis which only the war averted, while the unholy alliance between the Tories of Ontario and the Nationalists of Quebec aroused the demon of discord and revived all the old prejurices and passions that, under Sir Wilfrid, had been well nigh forgotten.

War conditions can no longer be urged as an excuse for overlooking the incompetence and worse of the present administration. Canada is like a man who has lost his way, groping in the dark for some strong guiding hand to lead him back. Only by the application of sound business principles can our financial future be assured, and only by the abolition of prejudices can harmony amongst our people (without which success is impossible) be restored. The Liberalism that restored financial and commercial confidence and that brought harmony out of the discord and distrust that existed in 1896 can perform a like service to the country in 1920.

Trusting that your gathering in the historic riding of North York may be the beginning of a revival of true Liberal sentiment in Canada.

Mayor Eves of Newmarket extended a few words of greeting on behalf of the Town and referred to the guest of the evening as the coming Premier of Canada.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Newmarket Era
January 9th 1920

D 4030

NORTH YORK HONOURS THE NEW LIBERAL LEADER,

Magnificent Banquet in Newmarket,

Hon. Mackenzie King Receives a Cordial Welcome.

Policy of the Opposition Outlined in a Brilliant Oration

The complimentary Banquet tendered to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King by the Liberals of North York, in the Town Hall at Newmarket on Tuesday evening was a magnificent success. The spacious building was crowded from top to bottom with staunch friends and admirers from all parts of the Riding, each anxious to do honor to the distinguished guest.

The Hall was decorated throughout in a most elaborate manner and was ablaze with electric lights. Large and handsomely painted shields bore the mottoes: "Welcome King Our Leader," "King and a United Canada," "North York the Cradle of Freedom."

The excellent and bounteous Menu served so efficiently by the Cole Co. of Toronto and no less than 40 local helpers was fitting to the occasion and the music supplied by Bodley's Double Orchestra of Toronto was greatly applauded. Every detail of the Banquet was carried out systematically and elaborately and it was conceded on all sides to be the finest Banquet ever held in the Banner Riding of the County of York. No less than 550 people partook of the Banquet including over 100 ladies.

After the serving, the tables were removed from the Main Hall and the capacity audience reseated, the speaking taking place from the platform, the President of the North York Liberal Association, Mr. Howard Cane of Newmarket, introducing the several speakers. Other occupying seats on the platform were—Mr. I. E. Pedlow, M. P. for South Renfrew, Mr. W. D. Euler, M. P. for Waterloo, Mr. Andrew Hayden, general secretary of the Liberal Organization Committee for the Dominion of Canada, Ottawa, Mr. P. C. Larkin and Mr. W. D. McGreggor of Toronto, Mayor Bassett of Aurora.

Letters of regret at not being able to be present were received from Duncan C. Ross, Chas. Maguire, F. F. Pardee, Sir Alan Aylesworth, Hon. G. P. Graham and others. The letter was read in full and is as follows:

Allow me to thank you for your kind invitation to be present at the banquet to our Liberal Leader. Hon. Mr. King possesses all the elements of successful leadership. He is able, energetic, clean and worthy the undivided support not only of Liberals but of all those who desire that our country should resume its march toward national greatness.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier left office in 1911, Canada was enjoying the blessings of prosperity and of goodfellowship among the people that comprise her population. Through the incompetence and extravagance of the Borden Government, we were brought face to face with the financial crisis which only the war averted, while the unholy alliance between the Tories of Ontario and the Nationalists of Quebec aroused the demon of discord and revived all the old prejurices and passions that, under Sir Wilfrid, had been well nigh forgotten.

War conditions can no longer be urged as an excuse for overlooking the incompetence and worse of the present administration. Canada is like a man who has lost his way, groping in the dark for some strong guiding hand to lead him back. Only by the application of sound business principles can our financial future be assured, and only by the abolition of prejudices can harmony amongst our people (without which success is impossible) be restored. The Liberalism that restored financial and commercial confidence and that brought harmony out of the discord and distrust that existed in 1896 can perform a like service to the country in 1920.

Trusting that your gathering in the historic riding of North York may be the beginning of a revival of true Liberal sentiment in Canada.

Mayor Eves of Newmarket extended a few words of greeting on behalf of the Town and referred to the guest of the evening as the coming Premier of Canada.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Mr. H. D. Ramsden, President of the Toronto and York Liberal Association, expressed his pleasure at being present and his approval of extending the invition to the ladies. He referred to the great loss Canada had sustained a year ago when it was flashed over the Dominion that that great and good man, the Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, had passed away after giving 40 years of his life to building up a United Canada. Reference was then made to the great democratic Convention held in Ottawa last September to enunciate a Liberal platform and select a new Leader to carry on the work, when, without any wire-pulling, the Hon. Mr. King was eventually selected, and he believed it was because Mr. King had made a study of the great industrial questions that were disturbing the whole world, and was the best authority in the matter not only in Canada but on this whole continent. He deplored the condition of Canada at the present time without a leader and the Government without a policy.

H. H. Horsey, Esq., of Toronto, President of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association, congratulated the various committees on the splendid Banquet which was managed in a most orderly and efficient manner, and expressed the greetings of his Association. The Banquet is a honor to a distinguished man, chosen from all the Liberals of Canada to carry their banner. Mr. King is a trained economist, successful in bringing many distressing disputes to a harmonious conclusion— a man of noble character and talent for expression—a man upon whom we can rely and fight to the very end.

Mr. King, on rising to reply to the introduction of the chairman, received a great oration. He said he had great difficulty to find words to express his gratitude for this splendid Banquet and manifestation of his reception. He prophesied that the organization in getting up this gathering was but an expression of Liberalism throughout the Dominion. There is no incentive like meeting the sons and grandsons of the stalwart Liberals of the past to inspire one to the best endeavors. He referred to his pleasure at seeing some Tory friends present and added that it was only by having respect and regard for difference of opinion that we can discover the truth. Jockularly he remarked that the times are changing and alluding to the defeat of the Hearst Government he said, "My Liberalism leads me to rejoice in that kind of a turnover." Continuing he said :

Review of Political Situation.

It is my purpose this evening, in so far as the circumstances of the occasion will permit, briefly to review what appear to be outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canada to-day; and to suggest what, as respects government, is most required to enable our country to cope with the vast problems which confront it at the beginning of a New Year, and as we enter upon a new decade in our nation's history. In addressing myself to this theme I shall endeavour to present the attitude of Liberalism, as I conceive it towards the existing situation.

War and its Consequences.

First and foremost let us realize that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it is equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions as they exist in other countries.

For many a year to come the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which does not reckon with that fact is certain sooner or later to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us.

This is not a moment to theorize, it is not a moment to rush to extremes, neither is it a moment to stand pat. It is a time, above all others, to be essentially practical; to look facts squarely in the face; to make an accounting of our national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as material; and then, understanding what our problems are, not in a visionary mood, but in a concrete and comprehensive way, resolutely to meet and attempt their solution in a manner that will make not only for material progress, but also for human freedom in ever-increasing measure and for ever-widening possibilities in social well-being and individual achievement.

Effects of the World's Upheaval.

Let us remember then that the world has just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization has been torn into shreds. The nations are now busily engaged in patching it together anew. It will be some time yet before the process is complete.

In physical outline the boundaries of countries have changed. But the changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order; an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to its depths. A truer simile of the world's condition to-day is that of the ocean seething after storm. For years to come the tide of emotion will continue to surge in human breasts; with seemingly irrestistible flow mounting, ever and anon, high with hope, and then, falling away into depths of despondency and despair.

A recognition of this great truth should make us view with great patience the restlessness of our day; it should awaken a sympathy with all those movements which bespeak an aroused conscience, and sound a new note in human aspiration. But, above all else, it should make clear to us what in the affairs of our country is most needed at such a time as this.

A New Attitude Needed.

It is a new attitude and a new spirit that is most needed to solve the problems of the present time; a spirit and an attitude of good-will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which War never fails to breed. It must be remembered that whilst war may serve to bring forth all that is finest in the character of a people, to manifest latent heroisms and noble capacities for sacrifice, war itself is a hateful and devilish thing, and the spirit that war breeds is hateful and devilish.

That spirit unfortunately continues to lurk in all sorts of places, both prominent and obscure. It manifests itself in high places through a distrust of others, in the autocratic use of power, in the continuance and enactment of repressive measures, long after the reason for any such is gone. It manifests itself from below through similar distrust, in an indifference to rights, whether of person or property, in the defiance of law and order, and in efforts of one kind or another to overthrow constituted authority. We shall fail entirely to grasp the significance of the legacy the War has left unless we note carefully every passion the war has served to arouse and every prejudice upon which it has sought to play.

Liberalism to Foster Good-Will.

It is in the creation of this new spirit, of this new attitude, that Liberalism , as I read its obligations to present day problems, will find its most important task. The substitution of good-will for all that has been making for ill-will in the various phases of our national life.

Let me enumerate some of the more obvious and important phases, and in so doing illustrate the work which, as Liberals, whether in or out of office it is ours to perform.

Let me begin with the most immediate, the spirit which as individuals none of us can escape, and go on to those larger concerns where our attitule becomes part of that of a class, of a race or of a nation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Respect for Differences of Opinion.

In the very forefront, I should place the attitude to be assumed towards those who differ from us in opinion. We have come through a period where differences of opinion on many subjects have not been permitted, and where evidenced in any measure have led too often to personal bitterness approaching at moments to public hatred. Our own great Leader in the political battles of 1911 and 1917, did not escape his share of the penalty of greatness, where it looks with eyes beyond its own day, and has the courage to stand or fall by conviction. Pure in life, noble in purpose, patriotic in aim, in all of these respects second to no other political leader of his generation, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, more than any other man was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. Is it not indeed, significant, that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism ? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory.

Attitude Towards Laurier Liberals.

If we are to be a united people, we must try to look at all sides of a question, and to respect the views of others whose opinions differ from our own. This consideration must be shown by others to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid thought and stood as he stood. The ill-will which, at the time, it was sought to engender towards those who were unable to support the Union Government must be replaced by an increase in good-will on the part of all who are now anxious to see the country controlled by a government with a mind of its own, and a policy that it can put into words; a government that is other than a combination for the sake of office.

Attitude towards Unionist Liberals.

But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves.

And here let me speak of a very large class of Liberals, those namely who gave their support to the Union Government in the elections of 1917.

Attitude assumed during Elections, 1917.

It is perhaps unnecessary for me, at this time and in this place to emphasize my own attitude toward Liberal Unionists. During the campaign of 1917. I addressed many public meetings in this riding. There is not a man living who heard me utter one word in condemnation of the motive of a single elector. Some of my best friends failed to give me their political support, but they lost none of my friendship, and I am proud to believe that I lost none of theirs. We differed in opinion, but it was an honest difference of opinion, and as such was respected on the part of each. May I say that the attitude I then assumed as an individual, responsible only to those who had nominated me as their candidate, is the attitude I now assume, in the light of the vast responsibilities with which my fellow-Liberals of the Dominion have honoured me. I am anxious that this attitude should be understood as the attitude of the party in whose name it is my privilege to speak.

Attitude as Liberal Leader.

Let me repeat here what I said in Summerside, P. E. I., in the first speech I made after having been chosen as Leader of the Liberal Party. It was at the time of accepting the nomination of the Liberals of Prince to contest that riding in the by-election of September last. Here are my words as reported in the Charlottetown "Patriot" of October 4th last :

"Are we to believe that these men —men and women of Liberal convictions—numbering themselves by thousands, were not honest, were not conscientious, were not patriotic in the votes they cast, in the light of the knowledge they had at the time, and the circumstances as represented to them ? For my part, I decline to entertain any such belief. I would go farther and say that I believe that, speaking thus temporarily, and on a single issue, with the Liberal party, and in particular with the leadership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whom personally they loved and respected and had loyally supported throughout long years, many of them suffered for conscience sake as they have seldom suffered in their lives. If you ask me why do I say this, I answer because I know it to be true, because among the number were many of my own most intimate and lifelong friends, not others whose opinions differ from our question, and to respect the views of friends only, but relatives and connections who never cast a Tory vote in all their lives, and who were grieved to the heart to be placed in the position in which they found themselves placed by the action of the Government in making the issue of Conscription to appearances the supreme issue of the elections."

THE NEW LIBERAL LEADER NORTH YORK HONOURS

(Continued from Page 3)

Good-Will as Between Classes.

It is not only those who have differed from us in the past whose views we must respect. We must also respect, and this is much more difficult very often, those who, while sharing with us in large measure the principles and policies we advocate, have aims and aspirations of their own. And here may I refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our national society . the Farmers, Labour and the War Veterans. Here we pass from difference between individuals to consider possible differences between classes.

The Ontario Elections.

Of the events of the year just past, one of the most significant has been the results attendant upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of those surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics. Surprising as the outcome of the provincial elections might at first appear, one has not to seek very far for an explanation.

First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the Federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office, and the members in their seats in the Legislature, may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If, however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-government, it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds.

Liberal Attitude towards the Farmers.

Liberals should be the last to deplore any constitutional act on the part of the people to maintain their sovereign rights. It is in this way that governments are taught to respect the people's will. Disgusted with what seemed to them a frame-up by political leaders, whereby those in office, or in the Legislature might be retained in power, the people in the rural districts, who had been doing a lot of thinking on their own account, decided to have candidates of their own. They were assisted in this by the Liberals of the Province, who either withdrew their candidates, or decided not to nominate in 37 ridings. The Liberal Leader of the Province, Mr. Hartley Dewart, who never was a party to the compact of which I have spoken, but who fought it from the outset, tackled some of the difficult Tory strongholds, like Orontos, not with Farmer candi- but with Liberals who like him-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

self were in sympathy with a policy wholly friendly to the Farmers, and he won in a number of these constituencies.

It must never be forgotten that whilst the Farmer candidates were returned in largest number, the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary government, a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined and working in most constituencies in whole-hearted combination. Should there be a doubt of this in the minds of any, let me quote from the Farmers' Sun, the official organ of the United Farmers of Ontario, the figures it has given on the results of the election.

In the issue of December 3rd, 1919, under the heading "How the Votes Divided" is the following table showing the number of candidates elected and the total votes polled by each organization:

	Candidates elected	Votes Polled
Conservatives	25	386,796
Liberals	29	336,715
Farmers	45	256,874
Laborites	11	127,096
Independents	1	46,086
	111	1,153,567

Three Conservatives were elected by acclamation but in the above it is presumed the Sun took past elections into consideration, so in a general way the table is correct.

In an editorial in the Sun of the above date the results are dealt with in a more striking manners as follows :

"Although the Conservatives polled more votes in the last election than either the Liberals or U. F. O., the Conservatives elected fewer candidates than either of the other organizations named. On the other hand the United Farmers polled fewed votes per candidate elected than any other organization in the field. The Conservatives polled over 15,000 per candidate elected, the Liberals nearly 12,000, the Labour party over 11,000, the one Independent upwards of 46,000 and the U. F. O. less than 6,000."

In the above calculations it should be borne in mind that the Liberals withdrew their candidates or decided not to nominate in 37 ridings, three of which went by acclamation to the Conservatives, so that the opposition vote was not divided, and in thirty-four ridings it may be said that the Liberal vote was polled for either the Farmer candidate or the Labour candidate or the Independent candidate. It is a safe and moderate estimate to say that at the very least one-third of the votes noted in the above table as having been cast for the Farmers, Labour and Independent, was Liberal. The total to these three bodies is 429,956 and one-third of this is 143-318. This added to 336.715 makes a total Liberal vote of 480,033, and reduces the combined Farmer, Labour and Independent vote to 286,636, out of a total of 1,153,567, or less than one-fourth of the total vote. This is not without its significance to Farmers and Liberals alike.

The 111 Conservatives or Government candidates polled 386,796. This is but few over one-third of the grand total vote, so there is no doubt of their defeat. It was a collapse.

One further fact helps to explain the success of the Farmers in the election, and it is an all-important factor in all elections, namely, organization. The Farmers, in very large numbers were members of a powerful organization formed originally for social and economic purposes. In the Ontario elections it became an organization for political purposes as well. Whether its plunge into the arena of politics may not bring disruption to the whole organization in its many splendid activities is something which its members cannot weigh too carefully and which time will serve to tell. The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidence of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

Liberal Attitude towards Labour.

And the same is true of the Labour movement. Here again is another large class in our national society, which has become conscious not only of economic injustices in the past, but of the need for united action to gain that fuller expression of personal and economic freedom which is of the very essence of all true Liberalism. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement ? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred of my Liberalism. I can think of the problems of Industry only in terms of Humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere; or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

That these views also are no part of any new expression of my own Liberalism, let me quote from a speech I made in this very hall on 16th March of last year. This was before the U. F. O. had demonstrated its strength as a political force, and when the Liberal Convention of August last was only being talked of. As I repeat the words, it will not be difficult for this audience, or the country, to grasp why in natural sympathy it is impossible for me not to view with some degree of satisfaction these evidences of a spirit at work in our national society which is shattering the fetters of a past order, and releasing new energies in a number of directions.

The Globe of 17th March in its account of the meeting referred to contains the following paragraph with reference to my speech :

"Parliament," he said, "ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. It is absurd for the Dominion of Canada to have a Parliament that has relatively no farmers in it to speak for the farmers, and no men from the ranks of Labor to speak for Labor. I hope there will be in our next Parliament representatives of both these classes of our people, and also men from our soldier ranks who will speak for those brave men who lie in Flanders' fields and cannot speak for themselves. I think our next Parliament must be truly representative if we are to secure unity and contentment in this country."

Liberal Attitude toward War Veterans.

This quotation refers to a third element in our national life to which I have just alluded—the returned soldiers, or more appropriately, the War Veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada to-day one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular system. The War will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

Supreme Task of Liberalism to Reconcile Differences.

It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class . conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if, each separately, intends to aim at domination in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion, and, in the end, retrogression rather than advance.

Monopoly of Government by any Class Objectionable.

Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of government, I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing, or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly enfranchised female voters. I know no finer maxim of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym, enunciated in the reign of Charles I, which is as applicable to our politics to-day, as it was to England in that unsettled period:

"That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the State to the common good."

Certainly, such a form of government is not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by an class. It is only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine good-will.

Good-Will in Matters of Race and Religion.

Let me pass from classes to a still larger consideration, the difference between race and race, and religion and religion. No one who participated in the last general elections in this riding, or any other riding in this province, will say that the spirit which speaks ill of its neighbour was not abroad in the land at that time. Every artifice known in the mould-of opinion was employed to create a prejudice in the minds of English-speaking Protestants of this Province against French-speaking Roman Catholics of the neighbouring province of Quebec.

Just as in a previous election in the province of Quebec, the Nationalists, and those who aided and abetted their methods, spared no means of inflaming the racial passions of men against a great man in his advocacy of a great cuse, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier sought the creation of a Canadian Naval Service as a means of Canada fulfilling her duty in naval defence, as a growing country and as a part of the British Empire.

I shall not seek to stir the smouldering embers of these unfortunate chapters in our history by enlarging in any way upon them. The ill-will that the passions of war have been employed to inflame between persons of different races and different religions in Canada will not be lived down in a day. Let us remember, however, that whatever perpetuates or augments that ill-will adds to the problem of government in Canada to-day; and that whatever of good-will we can engender in its stead will by so much lessen and lighten the magnitude and weight of the problems which confront us. As Liberals we can have but one attitude towards prejudice whenever it raises its vicious head and that is to strike it hard; strike it, if that be possible, to the death.

Good-Will in Inter-Imperial and International Relations.

The spirit of good-will must be carried also into all our inter-imperial and international relations. It is in good-will in international relations that the hope of the future lies. We in Canada have a special opportunity in this regard; for it is to North America the world looks for the supreme realization of that hope. To afford it expression between neighboring countries in of vast significance to mankind. Its realization is the highest destiny of which a continent i capable. In such a destiny it is given to us to share, and in so doing, to foster friendliness in Anglo-American relations, and thereby aid in maintaining the future peace of the world. Whilst, in the old world, the old order of international hatreds is passing away, it is for us in the new to give ampler expression to the new order of international good-will.

National Unity the Great Aim.

It is not only as regards differences between persons and classes, racial and religious differences, national and international difference, that we must seek, in a spirit of good-will, to bind up the wounds, and to bridge the chasms which the roused passions of the War have served to widen and create; we must resolve, as never before, to permit no new cleavages to destroy our national unity.

There was a remote time in our country's history when the inhabitants of Quebec were alone thought of as belonging to Canada. That time ended with the enactment of the Constitutional Act of 1791. Then there came the time when we had an Upper and a Lower Canada. That time was nominally at an end when the Union Act of 1840 was passed. It came pretty effectively to an end with Confederation in 1867. There remained, however, a considerable period, which may be said to have prevailed pretty generally until the end of the last century, and to have continued in some parts up to the very moment of the War, when the Nova Scotian about to visit Quebec or Ontario, talked about his visit to the Canadas, and when the traveller from British Columbia similarly described his journey to our province.

Canadian Unity Established by the War.

The War, we believe, has put an end forever to geographical divisions, even in thought, so far as the unity of our Dominion is concerned. Not only in the eyes of the world, but in our own eyes, that single word "Canada" on the shoulder strap of our soldiers, in the fighting armies overseas, has welded this country into one, as no symbol of nationhood in the past has ever united it. It was for the unity of Canada, the unity of the British Empire of which Canada is a part, the unity of aim and purpose of the free nations associated as allies in the titanic struggle for the world's freedom, that our brave heroes gave their lives in the fields of Flanders and of France, and the word comes back to us from them,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4095 (6)

"If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
On Flanders' fields."

National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platforms must be so drafted, and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

Sectional and Class Policies Imperil Unity.

And this leads me to speak of the East and the West of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful diversified resources, of the Prairie Provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces with their rural as well as urban populations and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests, or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the War was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class, or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with though of naught save the honour of their country and their duty before God?

A Great Political Party Needed to Achieve Reforms.

If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a farmers' part, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide east and west, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The War Veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the Army and the Civil authorities, which take us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, of any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation, and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

Lessons from the War.

A great political party has a significance scarcely dreamed of by many who to-day appreciate too little what continuity of effort in a great cause means in the maintenance of freedom, and in the ultimate achievement of victory for policies with which its names and history have been identified.

Let me make a comparison which will appeal to all. In the great war just ended, did past history and tradition mean nothing to the historic regiments which participated in the fight for freedom? Did the Black Watch and the Gordon Highlanders signify nothing to Scotchmen and men of Scotch descent? Did the Guards and the Middlesex add nothing of fighting quality to the Englishmen and the sons of Englishmen. Were the Dublin Fusiliers and the Inniskillen Dragoons mere names to Irishbent and those who fought at their side in these historic regiments? More than one Canadian soldier will ever regret the loss of identity of his regiment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but is there a Canadian living who would take from the colors of our army the names of the battles displayed upon them?

All through history the liberties of our human society have been preserved, and new liberties won, by great fighting forces. The military and naval forces in the arena of war, and the not less militant forces in the political arena, and the finer the tradition of the fighting forces in either field, the greater has been the measure of their achivement.

Permanent Political Parties Necessary and Inevitable.

It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

The existence of parties, moreover, is inevitable. As a distinguished English Parliamentarian has said, the Conservative temper and the Liberal Temper, the Conservative ideal an the Liberal ideal, Conservativ methods and Liberal methods, diffe fundamentally. A ministry cannot fail to belong to one school or the other. It will attract to its support those of its own views. It will drive into opposition those who disagree with it. Let existing parties be destroyed or cast into confusion, as has been temporarily the case in all the countries of Europe, and to some extent in our country under the stress and strain of war, certain they are to reappear before long, possibly under different names for a time, but with the same predominating ideas as now, and to support the same respective policies.

In the last analysis, there is something in political parties which corresponds to fundamental instincts and tendencies in human nature. There is in man an impulse which makes for onward and progressive thought and action, and there is a counter tendency which makes for delay, which fears new beginnings, which resists change. The former impulse is stronger in youth; the latter gains emphasis with age. An exaggeration of the one tendency leads to extreme courses of action; the exaggeration of the other leads to reactionary behaviour just as extreme. But between the extremes, the cleavage between the reactionary and the reformer is clearly seen in every age and in every class. Those who feel and think alike on great questions will do well, in the endeavor to make their views prevail, to link their efforts and to co-operate as members of one large party, with a policy and platform broad enough in essentials to command the allegiance of those who differ only as respects non-essentials. Parties are necessary, useful and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name, as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

Unity of Command Essential to Victory.

Just here let me make one further observation from the experience of war. No one will question that the Allied countries were one in aim, or that there was other than the strongest of reasons to compel co-operation in their resistance of the Central Powers. Their fighting capacity and their heroism was not for a moment in doubt. It was not, however, till unity of command was established that the tide of battle turned and that victory by the Allied armies became assured.

With the Liberal forces at work in Canada to-day, among the farmers in the rural communities, among Labour in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations, are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to with-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
On Flanders' fields."

National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platforms must be so drafted, and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

Sectional and Class Policies Imperil Unity.

And this leads me to speak of the East and the West of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful diversified resources, of the Prairie Provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces with their rural as well as urban populations and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests, or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the War was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class, or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with though of naught save the honour of their country and their duty before God?

A Great Political Party Needed to Achieve Reforms.

If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a farmers' part, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide east and west, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The War Veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the Army and the Civil authorities, which take us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, of any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation, and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

Lessons from the War.

A great political party has a significance scarcely dreamed of by many who to-day appreciate too little what continuity of effort in a great cause means in the maintenance of freedom, and in the ultimate achievement of victory for policies with which its names and history have been identified.

Let me make a comparison which will appeal to all. In the great war just ended, did past history and tradition mean nothing to the historic regiments which participated in the fight for freedom? Did the Black Watch and the Gordon Highlanders signify nothing to Scotchmen and men of Scotch descent? Did the Guards and the Middlesex add nothing of fighting quality to the Englishmen and the sons of Englishmen. Were the Dublin Fusiliers and the Inniskillen Dragoons mere names to Irishbent and those who fought at their side in these historic regiments? More than one Canadian soldier will ever regret the loss of identity of his regiment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but is there a Canadian living who would take from the colors of our army the names of the battles displayed upon them?

All through history the liberties of our human society have been preserved, and new liberties won, by great fighting forces. The military and naval forces in the arena of war, and the not less militant forces in the political arena, and the finer the tradition of the fighting forces in either field, the greater has been the measure of their achievement.

Permanent Political Parties Necessary and Inevitable.

It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

The existence of parties, moreover, is inevitable. As a distinguished English Parliamentarian has said, the Conservative temper and the Liberal Temper, the Conservative ideal and the Liberal ideal, Conservative methods and Liberal methods, differ fundamentally. A ministry cannot fail to belong to one school or the other. It will attract to its support those of its own views. It will drive into opposition those who disagree with it. Let existing parties be destroyed or cast into confusion, as has been temporarily the case in all the countries of Europe, and to some extent in our country under the stress and strain of war, certain they are to reappear before long, possibly under different names for a time, but with the same predominating ideas as now, and to support the same respective policies.

In the last analysis, there is something in political parties which corresponds to fundamental instincts and tendencies in human nature. There is in man an impulse which makes for onward and progressive thought and action, and there is a counter tendency which makes for delay, which fears new beginnings, which resists change. The former impulse is stronger in youth; the latter gains emphasis with age. An exaggeration of the one tendency leads to extreme courses of action; the exaggeration of the other leads to reactionary behaviour just as extreme. But between the extremes, the cleavage between the reactionary and the reformer is clearly seen in every age and in every class. Those who feel and think alike on great questions will do well, in the endeavor to make their views prevail, to link their efforts and to co-operate as members of one large party, with a policy and platform broad enough in essentials to command the allegiance of those who differ only as respects non-essentials. Parties are necessary, useful and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name, as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

Unity of Command Essential to Victory.

Just here let me make one further observation from the experience of war. No one will question that the Allied countries were one in aim, or that there was other than the strongest of reasons to compel co-operation in their resistance of the Central Powers. Their fighting capacity and their heroism was not for a moment in doubt. It was not, however, till unity of command was established that the tide of battle turned and that victory by the Allied armies became assured.

With the Liberal forces at work in Canada to-day, among the farmers in the rural communities, among Labour in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations, are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to with-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

stay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all.

Stability as Important as Unity.

Whilst the spirit of good-will is the one that must inspire us in all our national, international and inter-imperial relations, something more is required in the government of the state. We must have as a chart and compass, something that will give certainty of direction, as well as ensure increasing calm upon our own course. Stability as well as unity is required, in matters of government at this of all times. It is owing to instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada to-day. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time.

Policy of Drift Reviewed.

A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action. Let us briefly review one or two outstanding circumstances which all present will recall.

It will be remembered that the Union Government was formed for the purposes of the election of 1917. The Union was preceded by the War Measures Act, the Military Voters' Act, the War-Time Election Act, which, were the truth wholly known, could be shown to have been more of a determining factor in bringing about the Union than aught else. While the War was on, the cry "Win the War" was a sufficient rallying cry, sufficient for election purposes, and sufficient for a policy as long as the War lasted. The electors were told that the Union was formed for that purpose and for that only. It was not a government for the purposes of Reconstruction after the War, or for any purpose other than that of helping to "Win the War" according at all events, to the professions of the Prime Minister at the time the administration was formed, and of those who entered his Cabinet.

Prime Minister and Colleagues Absent.

When the War came to an end with the signing of the Armistice in November, 1918, one would have supposed that the Prime Minister would have done one of two things. Either that he would have announced his intention of asking for a dissolution of Parliament, as soon as demobilization of the forces was completed, or that he would have formulated and announced some policy which Parliament and the country would have known was that of the ministry. Did he do either of these things ? No on the contrary, he and two or more of his colleagues found it necessary to be absent in Europe the greater part of a year, and the affairs of state in Canada were permitted to drift along, first under one Acting Prime Minister, then under another; and the work of several of the departments entrusted at one time to one group of colleagues, and at another time to another.

Finally at the end of the regular session of 1919, the Prime Minister returned, to find not only that the policy of drift had rendered the Government helpless in coping with a very serious situation in the city of Winnipeg, and which was not without its ill-effects in all parts of Canada, but that his own following was hopelessly divided on urgent matters of policy; that the Unionist Government itself and its following in Parliament was being held together only by the emoluments of office and the love of power.

Prime Minister Ill during Special Session.

Wearied with the strain of war, and disgusted with these internal wranglings which seemed to offer no promise of solution, the Prime Minister, considerably exhausted in vitality, contracted an illness which prevented him from being in Parliament except for a day or two during the special session held in the fall of last year. Then again, the affairs of state were permitted to drift.

First, the country was told that the session was solely for the purpose of expressing approval of the Peace Treaty, which, as it turned out, was a wholly unnecessary procedure, and occupied but a few days. Then, for weeks Parliament was dragged along, often with nothing at all to do, and seldom with the ministry prepared on any public matter. Then, the Prime Minister became well enough to go away on a trip, to leave the country altogether, and after he was gone, and the Acting Prime Minister had announced that the session would end in another few days, to the amazement of Parliament and the whole country, certain members of the Cabinet brought into Parliament, and rushed through a piece of legislation respecting the railways of the Dominion involving a transaction amounting to over five hundred millions of dollars, or a quarter of the total national debt of the Dominion, vastly augmented as it had become by the tremendous outlays of the War.

Rights of People Ignored.

Wholly indifferent to the rights of even the people's representatives in Parliament, this group controlling in the Cabinet for the time being, refused even to permit the right to Parliament to ratify the agreement to be made between the Government and the Grand Trunk, though this right was expressly reserved, in the legislation brought down, to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway in Great Brittain. Approval has not yet been granted by the shareholders in England, and as Parliament ought to be reassembling in the course of another few weeks, I would like to say publicly again that, it being not yet too late to give ti the Canadian taxpayers, who have to meet these obligations, the same rights as are given to the English shareholders who are to benefit by them, this right of approval of the Grand Trunk agreement should still be reserved to the people of Canada through their representatives in Parliament.

Drift Worse than War.

But let me come at once to the explanation of this policy of drift, and ask whether the causes that account for it are such as are likely to be removed by anything that is likely to happen in the future of an appeal to the electorate. The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship, for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he had said of policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none, and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hopes while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves, so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Lest it might appear that I am placing my own interpretation upon the facts of the case, let me quote from the published statements as given to the Press by the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

No After-the-War Policy.

The spirit of these statements was issued from Ottawa on September 30. It referred to a caucus of the Liberal Unionist supporters of the Government held that day and attended by the Liberal Unionist ministers. After mentioning that the suggested policy of the Unionist party would be further discussed at a special meeting of the Cabinet Council on the day following, and that it would be considered on yet another day at a general Government caucus, before Sir Robert Borden left for the South, the statement continued as follows :

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"A meeting of the Liberal Unionist members of the House was held in the east block. The meeting expressed unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government, and the Government, and the Government was congratulated on its success. The consensus of opinion was that as the members were elected to support Union Government, it was their intention to continue to do so, and the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Note the last of these sentences :

"The hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Here is a clear statement by one portion of the ministry that notwithstanding the War had been brought to an end by the signing of the Armistice on November 11, 1918, after the lapse of nearly a year the Government had not yet been able to evolve a policy to meet the after-the-war conditions.

Hopes for a Policy Frustrated.

But even the hopes expressed by this wing of the Cabinet and of the Government's supporters in Parliament were not realized. The Government caucus was held on October 2, and here is what was said to the press of its proceedings. The statement will be found in all the papers of that date.

"The feature of the conference was a pronouncement by the Premier setting forth his opinions on the question (i. e., the future of union) and giving expression to the hope that his followers would be consolidated into a party to deal with the great problems of peace."

No policy, no unity, no constructive thought or idea, the mere expression of a hope that internal discord might be healed, that te party might hang together a little longer.

This would be ludicrous enough, were it not quite so tragic. When we realize, however, that this was not only the situation in October last, but that it has continued to be the situation ever since, and is the situation at the present time, that it relates to the business of the whole Dominion, the seriousness of the situation becomes apparent.

It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the Premiership. The commotion thus occasioned in the counsels of the Unionist Party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call it to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the Union from an immediate break-up, the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry. I say, the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise.

Let me again avoid any interpretation of my own, but read to this gathering from an official statement. It will be found in all the Canadian papers of December 19, as a statement handed out by the Prime Minister himself, after an interview with members of the Press Gallery. I shall read only the portion of the statement which throws light upon the situation as the Prime Minister has left it with respect to his following and policy. Here is what is set forth :

"Sir Robert Borden is naturally reluctant either to continue duties for which the condition of his health unfits him, or to retain his position as head of the Government while absenting himself for a considerable period from his post. On the other hand, the views of his colleagues have been urged with such force and unanimity that he finds himself unable to disregard them. He has, therefore concluded at their request to take such rest from active work as may prove necessary, during which period effective arrangements will be made for the discharge of the duties which would otherwise be incumbent upon him. The period of his absence from duty will necessarily depend upon his progress toward recovery; and in the end the condition of his health will determine his resumption of official duties or his retirement therefrom.

"Sir Robert Borden desires that the situations here outlined shall be placed before his supporters in Parliament, and he considers it essential that they should approve of the arrangement which his colleagues have urged and which he has accepted.

"It was the purpose of the Prime Minister to have set forth to the country during the recent session the policies for which the Government would stand during the life of the present Parliament. During his illness, and just before his departure, he embodied his proposals in written form, and, on the 2nd of October, the day before he left Ottawa, he submitted them to a gathering of Government supporters. It was his desire that these proposals should be taken into consideration by those present, and that at a further gathering the suggestions of Senators and members should be placed before him, after which he intended to formulate these policies from his place in Parliament as controlling the action of the Government during the period mentioned.

"Some of the proposals thus presented have since been carried out by action taken during the recent session. Sir Robert Borden desires that, after due consideration of the advice and suggestions of the supporters of the Government in Parliament, the policies as finally accepted shall be presented to Parliament and to the people.

Only the Desire for a Policy Left.

This statement is a further confirmation of the absence of any policy on the part of the Government. You will observe that is specifically says that the Prime Minister had intended to set forth the policies for which the Government would stand, during the life of the present Parliament, but that for various reasons this had not been done. It gives no assurance whatever of the certainty of any policy. The only difference in this statement and the earlier one already quoted, is that, whereas the Liberal Unionists in their caucus express the hope that a policy might be reached by the ministry, the Prime Minister in his statement abandons all hope and expresses merely a desire, that after due consideration of the advice and suggestions of the supporters of the Government in Parliament, the policies as finally accepted shall be presented to Parliament and to the people.

The Government without a Head and without a Policy.

This, then, is the actual situation as it exists in Canada at the present time: the Government is without a head and without a policy. It is composed of members differing so completely one from another in attitude on many vital issues that the likelihood of any policy being arrived at is out of the question. Meanwhile, the attitude of drife is to be maintained, in the hope that sup-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

porters of the Government, rather than risk their sessional indemnities by an appeal to the electorate, will continue a support sufficiently strong to enable the members of the administration to hold on to office notwithstanding the absence of a policy of any kind.

This is the logical and natural fruit of unionism, and it should be an object lesson to all citizens of the Dominion, not only for the present, but for years to come. It presents one of the strongest arguments which can be urged against the carrying on a country's business by a government composed of individuals who hold diverse views on matters of national concern. It should cause the advocates of group government to pause in their advocacy of a system which leads only to compromise, subterfuge, and inaction, and give new weight to the arguments of those who, viewing government as it has been carried on for two centuries under the British system, see in a great national party the one effective instrument of government for the formulation of a wise and progressive policy, and also the most effective means of assuring unity and stability in matters of governmental policy and administration.

Without great parties, the House of Commons is likely to become a mere election of discordant and shifting groups. Stability of government will be impossible; either there will be inaction, as in the case of the present union of two parties, or a rapid succession of different ministries supported by different groups directing in turn the departments of administration. If anything is needed still further to unsettle the very unstable condition of government in Canada to-day, it would seem to lie in still further increasing the groups of which the ministry is to be formed, and adding still further to the pressure for compromise in all that pertains to administration.

Portion of Liberal Party a Strinking Contrast.

In splendid and striking contrast to the situation as revealed by the Government and its followers, or to the possible substitution of some group system of government, which would increase rather than lessen the evils so glaringly exhibited, we have the position of the Liberal Party as it stands in Canada to-day. In unity and stability it holds an enviable position. It is a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined; a policy not the outgrowth of a single mind, such as Sir Robert Borden proposes the Unionist Party should accept, nor a group of conflicting policies, as would be the case with an administration composed of special classes and interests; but a broad national policy, wrought out in a convention representative of all classes, of all creeds, of all races, of all parts of our great Dominion, and embodying principles which while not without reference to the special needs of every class, is continued primarily with the well being of all and which all combined are prepared to advocate and support.

The Liberal Platform.

It will be my privilege, in the course of a few public meetings I propose to address in the immediate future, to outlines the main features of the platform adopted at the Liberal Convention. They are known in the main to all present. Suffice it for me at the moment to say that, in thanking my fellow Liberals for the great honor conferred in selecting me as the Party's Leader, I gave my word to the Convention, in the presence of all assembled, that the platform as laid down by that vast assembly would be the chart to which I would adhere in expounding the policy of the Liberal Party, and that, as a compass to hold me true to the course thus mapped out, I should look continuously to the collective wisdom and judgment of the able, distinguished, and experienced men who are the moulders of Liberal thought and opinion in this country.

To the people of Canada, I would say : You will find in the platform of the Liberal Party, as unanimously approved at its great convention in August of last year, that spirit of good-will and that note of certainty which are so much needed to bring unity and stability into our national life. You will find a platform broad and tolerant enough to include the legitimate aims and aspirations of all classes in our society which seek honest, enlightened, and progressive government, yet so harmonized as to afford special privileges to none. In the same spirit in which the platform was framed its various planks will be interpreted, when the Liberal Party is called upon to administer the affairs of this country.

Nomination of North York Liberals.

I have spoken at such length on what seem to me to be matters of supreme national concern, that I have left myself but a few minutes in which to express anew my heartfelt thanks for the honour which the Liberals of North York have conferred upon me in again nominating me to be their standard bearer when the General Elections are held.

Surprise has been expressed n some quarters that, having suffered defeat in 1917, I should have accepted renomination by the Liberals of this riding, at a time when Parliament has just passed an Act, introduced at the last session by one of the Liberal members, by which the election of any candidate for the Federal Parliament is rendered void is the event of his seking election for more than one constituency at a single election.

Had I not been through one political battle with the Liberals of North York, there might be some occasion for suprise; and had our cause not suffered defeat more through a fraudulent franchise than from any other reason, there might be even greater occasion for surprise. The people of Canada mistake my interest in politics if they believe that, gratifying as is the sense of political victory, it weighs with me for one moment in comparison with the vindication of principles of political freedom for which our forefathers sacrificed their all, and which our fathers have taught us to hold in reverend regard.

The Influence of Tradition.

I have no desire to make any special mention of the part played in the past political history of Canada by one whose name I bear, but this I say without fear of contradiction, that in tracing the Liberal Party of Canada to its source, we are brought back to the years of opposition to the arrogance of he Family Compact, to the long and bitter struggle against an autocratic executive, to the demands for representative and responsible government, in which political struggles the Reformers of York played a part second to none in the history of our country. I cannot forget that in those early days, when the foundations of our political liberties were being laid, it was the electors of York who chose my grandfather as their standard bearer, and honoured him with their confidence and esteem as few men in the public life of Canada have been honored. Seven times they returned him as their member; five times after he had been expelled from the Legislative Assembly on pretexts which ignored every right by which the privileges of a free parliament are maintained. On three of these occasions the return was by acclamation, and on one his opponent received but a single vote, which in all probability was his own.

When after a lapse of two generations, the descendants of those very men, and others associated with them, invite me to take up that same standard of political freedom, at a moment when it is being lowered by a gov-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ernment that has availed itself of measures more arbitrary and autocratic than any enacted since those early reforms were obtained, and which in many of its actions has shown itself more indifferent and less responsible to the people's representatives in Parliament than any government we have had in years, all that there is of chivalry in my nature and of power in tradition, compels me to accept the nomination with gratitude and pride, be the consequences what they may.

Pride in Association.

Recalling, too, that it was Sir William Mulock, who while representative of North York invited me to join with him in the organization of the Department of Labor in Canada, and introduced me to the public life of Canada; and that it was Sir Allan Aylesworth, another of North York's stalwart representatives, who placed my name in nomination for the Leadership of the Party at the Liberal Convention held in August last. I have a further reason why I should like to see my name added to the list of those who appear upon the Liberal banner of this historic riding.

The associations with North York being what they are, your confidence being what it is, with the approval of the Party which has honored me with its leadership, I am proud to plant the standard of Liberalism here in the hearts of my native province, and beneath its colors, to stand and fight with you the battle of much needed reforms till the day of victory comes.

When Mr. King concluded the whole audience rose to their feet and gave three rousing cheers and a tiger, which was followed by cheers for the King and the singing of the National Anthem led by the Orchestra.

The Banquet closed about 11 o'clock and was most satisfactory in every respect.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

Ottawa Journal
January 7 20

D 4100

LIBERAL LEADER OPENS CAMPAIGN AT NEWMARKET

King Appeals for National Unity and New Spirit of Good Will.

By Canadian Associated Press.

NEWMARKET, Ont., Jan. 6. — Appealing for national unity and a new spirit of good will throughout Canada, Hon. W. McKenzie King, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, at a banquet tendered him by the North York Liberal Association here tonight, reviewed exhaustively the political situation existing in the Dominion at the present time. Mr. King's speech was preliminary to his forthcoming tour of the Maritime Provinces.

Claiming that the Union Government has no constructive policy, Mr. King scathingly indicted Sir Robert Borden and members of his cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drifting."

After reviewing the war and its consequences, Mr. King emphasized the fact that the hateful and devilish spirit bred by the conflict would have to be combatted by a new attitude and a new spirit if the problems confronting the country were to be solved.

Success of Farmers.

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario, the natural end of a Government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the federal Government administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments."

The Liberal leader made practically no reference to the platform adopted at the Ottawa convention last summer, but stated that in his forthcoming tour he would deal with it in detail.

Hon. Mackenzie King announced at the outset that it was his intention to review briefly what appeared to be the outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canada today. He would make suggestions, he said, which, as respects government, are most required to enable the country to cope with the vast problems confronting it at the beginning of the new year.

Influence of War.

Discussing the war and its consequences, the leader of the Opposition declared that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and for many a year the war would remain a mighty influence in world affairs. Urging practicability, he declared that the present was no time for theorizing but a time to look facts in the face and to make an accounting of national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as practical.

He said that a new attitude and a new spirit was necessary to solve the problems of the present time, "a spirit and an attitude of good will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to breed."

"The hateful and devilish spirit bred by war," he said, "continued to lurk in all sorts of places, both prominent and secure. It was in the creation of this new spirit that Liberalism would find its most important task." Appealing for respect for differences of opinion, Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that towards the end of his career, he, more than any other man, was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. "Is it not indeed significant, that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory," said Mr. King.

Respect Views of Others.

"If we are to be a united people we must try to look at all sides of a question and to respect the views of others, whose opinions differ from our own. This consideration must be shown by others to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid thought and stood as he stood. The ill will which at the time, it was sought to engender towards those who were unable to support the Union Government must be replaced by an increase in good will on the part of all who are now anxious to see the country controlled by a government with a mind of its own and a policy that it can put into words; a government that is other than a combination for the sake of office.

"But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves."

Defeat Hearst Government.

Describing it as one of those surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics, the Liberal leader then made reference to the defeat of the Hearst Government at the recent Ontario elections. Of the events of the past year, one of the most significant, he said, had been the results attendant upon the political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, especially in Ontario. Surprising as the outcome of the Ontario elections might at first appear, he claimed that one had not to search very far for an explanation.

First must be placed the exasperation of the people with a Government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the federal administration in promulgating and maintaing arbitrary enactments.

Claims Liberal Victory.

Dealing further with the election, he maintained that while Farmer candidates were returned in largest number, the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces against a reactionary Government, accomplished in many constituencies by the whole-hearted combination of farmers and Liberals. He then spoke of the organization worked up by the farmers in Ontario, citing this as further explanation of the success which attended their campaign. The organization formed by them originally for social and economic purposes became one for political purposes as well. "Whether its plunge into the arena of politics may not bring disruption to the whole organization in its many splendid achievements," he said, "is something which its members cannot weigh too carefully and which time will serve to tell. The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of the word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Liberals and Labor.

The attitude of Liberals towards the labor movement must be one of appreciation, he cautioned. "Can we, as Liberals, fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it?" he asked. "Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred of my Liberalism. I can think of the problems on industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments, what the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

Speaking of the Liberal attitude to war veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class more entitled to consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle, and who now hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

In the attempt to reconcile differences Mr. King saw Liberalism's supreme task. "Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned," he continued, "resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to ovrecome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake."

would have to be carried also into

The spirit of good will he said, all our inter-imperial and internation, he emphasized the fact that it tional relations and in this connec- is to North America that the world looks for the supreme realization of good will in international relations.

"Whilst in the old world the old order of international hatreds is passing away, it is for us in the new to give ampler expression to the new order of international good-will," he said.

Continuing this phase of his address, Mr. King appealed strongly for the elimination of all differences, with the resolve that no cleavages should be allowed to destroy our national unity, which he said had been established in no uncertain manner by the war. "National unity we must at all cost maintain," he declared. "Our political platforms must be so drafted and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality."

In order to aspire to this ideal he declared that Canada must have in her federal politics some political party "large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, and fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity."

This party, he said, must not be of any class or creed, but a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition the many sided elements of our national life.

Criticizes Government.

Referring particularly to the work of the present Government during recent years he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions," he said. "Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action."

Mr. King entered into an exhaustive review of the work accomplished by the Borden Government during the past two years, claiming that affairs had been allowed to drift.

Party Without Leader.

"But let me come at once to the explanation of this policy of drift, and ask whether the causes that account for it are such as are likely to be removed by anything that is likely to happen in the future short of an appeal to the electorate," continued the Liberal leader. "The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he has said of the policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none, and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hoped while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Retirement of Premier.

"It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind, as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his Cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the Premiership. The commotion thus occasioned in the councils of the Unionist party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the union from an immediate break-up the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry—the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect with any situation which might arise.

In striking contrast to the situation revealed by the Government and its followers was the position of the Liberal party today, he said. In unity and stability it held an enviable position, he said, and he claimed it was a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined.

In conclusion he referred to his coming tour of the maritime provinces and announced his intention of adhering to the platform laid down at the Liberal convention in Ottawa.

"It will be my privilege, in the course of a few public meetings I propose to address in the immediate future, to outline the main features of the platform adopted at the Liberal convention," he said.

D 4101

Halifax Echo
January 7 20

Mackenzie King Got Wonderful Reception At Newmarket, Ont.

The Liberal Leader Made a Strong Appeal for National Unity and a New Spirit of Good Will Throughout Canada—Reviewed the Political Situation in the Dominion.

NEWMARKET, Ont., Jan. 6—Appealing for national unity and a new spirit of good will throughout Canada, Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, at a banquet tendered him by the North York Liberal Association, here tonight, reviewed exhaustively the political situation existing in the Dominion at the present time. Mr. King's speech was preliminary to his forthcoming tour of the Maritime Provinces.

Claiming that the Union Government has no constructive policy, Mr. King's scathingly indicted Sir Robert Borden and members of his Cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drift."

The Farmers' Success.

After reviewing the war and its consequences, Mr. King emphasized the fact that the "hateful and devilish" spirit bred by the conflict would have to be combatted by a new attitude and a new spirit if the problems confronting the country were to be solved.

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario the natural end of a Government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the Federal Government's administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitratory enactments.

The Liberal Leader made practically no reference to the platform adopted at the Ottawa convention last summer but declared that on the forthcoming tour he would deal with it in detail.

Got Wonderful Reception.

The Chairman of the meeting was W. H. Cane, and Major Evers, of Newmarket also spoke. It was appropriate that the opening meeting of his tour should have been held in the riding North York, where the Leader of the Opposition will offer himself at the next general election. His announcement of his prospective candidature was heartily received. The honorable gentleman was given a wonderful reception and at the conclusion of his address the crowd which packed the hall, rose as one man, cheering lustily and singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Toward the end of his speech Mr. King evoked great enthusiasm when announcing his stand in connection with the formation of group government.

"My attitude in matter of government by any class is one of irrevocable opposition to anything in the shape of monopoly," he said.

"I am not willing to deal with the demands of any one class, but will take the best from them all in order to produce legislation serving the Nation as a whole."

He said that not for a moment would he countenance monopoly of government, and not for an instant would any group exercise any influence over him.

Hon. Mr. King announced at the outset that it was his intention to review briefly what appeared to be the outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canada today. He would make suggestions, he said, which as respects government, are most required to enable the country to cope with the vast problems confronting it at the beginning of the new year.

The Problems of Today.

Discussing the war and its consequences, the leader of the opposition declared that it is impossible to separate the present from the past and for many a year the war would remain a mighty influence in the world affairs. Urging practicability, he declared that the present was no time for theorizing but a time to look facts in the face and to make an accounting of national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as practical.

He said that a new attitude, and a new spirit was necessary to solve the problems of the present time "a spirit and an attitude of good will to replace attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to breed."

Appealing for respect for differences of opinion, Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that towards the end of his career he, more than any other man, was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. "Is it not indeed, significant that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory," said Mr. King.

"If we are to be a united people, we must try to look at all sides of a question and to respect the views of others whose opinions differ from our own. This consideration must be shown by others to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid thought, and stood as he stood. The ill-will which, at the time it was sought to engender towards those who were unable to support the Union Government, must be replaced by an increase in good-will on the part of all who are now anxious to see the country changed to control by a Government with a mind of its own, and a policy that it can put into words: a Government that is other than a combination for the sake of office.

Principles of Liberalism.

"But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves."

Dealing with the Ontario election, he maintained that while farmer candidates were returned in larger numbers, the overthrow of the Hearst government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces against a reactionary government, accomplished in many constituencies by the whole-hearted combination of farmers and Liberals. He then spoke of the organization worked up by the farmers in Ontario, citing this as a further explanation of the success which attended their campaign. The organization formed by them originally for social and economic purposes, became one for political purposes as well. "Whether its plunge into the arena of politics may not bring disruption to the whole organization in its many splendid activities," he said, "is something which its members cannot weigh too carefully, and which time will serve to tell. The point I wish to make at the moment is that as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling of the peoples who are advocating and supporting their policies.

Labor and Liberalism.

"The attitude of the Liberals towards the labor movement must be one of appreciation," he continued. "Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred by my Liberalism. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we, as Liberals, have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity."

Our National Unity.

Speaking of the Liberal attitude to war veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class more entitled to consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle, and who now hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

In the attempt to reconcile differences, Mr. King saw Liberalism's supreme task.

The spirit of good will, he said, would have to be carried also into all our inter-Imperial and international relations.

Mr. King appealed strongly for the elimination of all differences, with the resolve that no cleavages should be allowed to destroy our national unity.

Ship of State in Distress.

Referring particularly to the work of the present Government during recent years, he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of the Nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. "Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions," he said. "Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of this Government's action."

Mr. King entered into an exhaustive review of the work accomplished by the Borden Government during the past two years, claiming that affairs had been allowed to drift.

"To save the nation from an immediate break-up, the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the Ministry," Mr. King said. "I say the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situaton which might arise."

Liberal Party's Position.

In striking contrast to the situation revealed by the Government and its followers was the position of the Liberal Party today, he said. In unity and stability it held an enviable position, and he claimed it was a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined.

In conclusion he referred to his coming tour of the Maritime Provinces, and announced his intention of adhering to the platform laid down at the Liberal Convention in Ottawa.

"It will be my privilege in the course of a few public meetings I propose to address in the immediate future, to outline the main features of the platform adopted at the Liberal convention," he said. "They are known in the main to all present. Suffice it for me at the moment to say that, in thanking my fellow Liberals for the great honor conferred in selecting me as the party's leader, I give my word to the convention, in the presence of all assembled, that the platform as laid down by that vast assembly would be the chart to which I would adhere in expounding the policy of the Liberal party."

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

Ottawa Citizen
January 7 20

D 4102

MONOPOLY OF GOVERNMENT BY CLASS IS CONDEMNED BY MR. KING IN OPENING TOUR

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

LIBERAL LEADER CALLS FOR NEW GOOD WILL SPIRIT

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King Speaks in Newmarket on Eve of Trip to Maritime Provinces.

ACCUSES BORDEN OF DRIFT POLICY

Tribute Paid Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Memory and Farmer Movement Dealt With.

(Canadian Press.)

NEWMARKET, Ont., Jan. 6.—Appealing for national unity and a new spirit of good will throughout Canada, Hon. W. Mackenzie King, leader of the opposition in the house of commons, at a banquet tendered him by the North York Liberal Association here tonight, reviewed exhaustively the political situation in the Dominion. Mr. King's speech was preliminary to his tour of the Maritime Provinces.

Asserting that the Union government has no constructive policy, Mr. King scathingly indicted Sir Robert Borden and members of his cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drifting."

After reviewing the war and its consequences, Mr. King emphasized the fact that the hateful and devilish spirit bred by the conflict would have to be combatted by a new attitude and a new spirit if the problems confronting the country were to be solved.

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario the natural end of a government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the federal government administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments."

The Liberal leader made virtually no reference to the platform adopted at the Ottawa convention last summer, but stated that while on his tour he would deal with it in detail.

The chairman of the meeting was W. H. S. Cane, and Major Evers, of Newmarket, also spoke. It was deemed appropriate that the opening meeting of his tour should have been held in the riding of North York, where the leader of the opposition will offer himself at the next general election. His announcement of his prospective candidature was heartily received and at the conclusion of his address the crowd which packed the hall, cheered lustily and sang, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

Toward the end of his speech, Mr. King evoked enthusiasm when announcing his stand in connection with the formation of group government:

"My attitude in matters of government by any class is one of irrevocable opposition to anything in the shape of monopoly," he said. "I am not willing to deal with the demands of any one class but will take the best from them all in order to produce legislation serving the nation as a whole."

He said that not for a moment would he countenance monopoly of government, and not for an instant would any group exercise any influence over him.

Vast Problems Ahead.

Hon. Mr. King said he would make suggestions which, as respects government, were most required to enable the country to cope with the vast problems confronting it at the beginning of the new year. Discussing the war and its consequences, he declared that it was impossible to separate the present from the past, and that for many a year the war would remain a mighty influence in world affairs. Urging practicability, he declared that the present was no time for theorizing but a time to look facts in the face and to make an accounting of national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as practical.

He said that a new attitude and a new spirit was necessary to solve the problems of the present "a spirit and an attitude of good will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to breed."

"The hateful and devilish spirit bred by war," he said, "continued to lurk in all sorts of places both prominent and secure. It was in the creation of this new spirit that Liberalism would find its most important task."

Appealing for respect for differences of opinion, Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that towards the end of his career, he, more than any other man was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises.

"Is it not indeed significant, that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory," said Mr. King.

Pleads for Unity.

"If we are to be a united people we must try to look at all sides of a question and to respect the views of others, whose opinions differ from our own. This consideration must be shown by others to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid thought and stood as he stood. The ill-will which at the time, it was sought to engender towards those who were unable to support the union government must be replaced by an increase in goodwill on the part of all who are now anxious to see the country controlled by a government with a mind of its own and a policy that it can put into words; a government that is other than a combination for the sake of office.

"But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves."

(Continued on Page Ten).

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4103

Ottawa Citizen
January 7 19

LIBERAL LEADER CALLS FOR

(Continued from Page One.)

Describing it as one of those surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics, the Liberal leader then made reference to the defeat of the Hearst government in the recent Ontario elections. Of the events of the past year, one of the most significant, he said, had been the results attendant upon the political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, especially in Ontario. Surprising as the outcome of the Ontario elections might at first appear, he asserted that one had not to search far for an explanation.

People Exasperated, He Says.

First must be placed the exasperation of the people with a government that has usurped their sovereign right to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments.

Dealing further with the election, he maintained that while farmer candidates were returned in largest number, the overthrow of the Hearst government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces against a reactionary government, accomplished in many constituencies by the wholehearted combination of farmers and Liberals. He then spoke of the organization worked up by the farmers in Ontario, citing this as a further explanation of the success that attended their campaign. The organization formed by them originally for social and economic purposes became one for political purposes as well.

"Whether its plunge into the arena of politics may not bring disruption to the whole organization in its many splendid activities," he said, "is something which its members cannot weigh too carefully and which time will serve to tell. The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals—Liberals in the truest meaning of the word—we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Attitude Toward Labor.

The attitude of Liberals towards the labor movement must be one of appreciation, he cautioned.

"Can we, as Liberals, fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are part of it?" he asked. "Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred of my Liberalism. I can think of the problems of industry only in terms of humanity Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

Speaking of the Liberal attitude to war veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class more entitled to consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle and who hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

In the attempt to reconcile differences Mr. King saw Liberalism's supreme task. "Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned," he continued, "resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake."

Calls for Breadth.

The spirit of good will, he said, would have to be carried also into all our inter-imperial and international relations and in this connection, he emphasized the fact that it is to North America that the world looks for the supreme realization of good will in international relations.

"Whilst in the old world the old order of international hatreds is passing away, it is for us in the new to give ampler expression to the new order of international good will," he said.

Continuing this phase of his address, Mr. King appealed strongly for the elimination of all differences, with the resolve that no cleavages should be allowed to destroy our national unity, which he said had been established in no uncertain manner by the war. "National unity we must at all cost maintain," he declared. "Our political platform must be so drafted and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality."

In order to aspire to this ideal he declared that Canada must have in her federal politics some political party "large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough and fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity."

This party, he said, must not be of any class or creed, but a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition the many sided elements of our national life.

Sees "State of Muddle."

Referring particularly to the work of the present government during recent years, he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its action," he said.

"Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the government's action."

Mr. King entered into an exhaustive review of the work accomplished by the Borden government during the past two years, claiming that affairs had been allowed to drift.

"But let me come at once to the explanation of this policy of drift, and ask whether the causes that account for it are such as are likely to be removed by anything that is likely to happen in the future short of an appeal to the electorate," continued the Liberal leader. "The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown and who is to lead parliament in his absence in still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he has said of the policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hoped while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Recent Crisis in Cabinet.

"It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the premiership.

"The commotion thus occasioned in the counsels of the Unionist party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the union from an immediate break-up the prime minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry. I say the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise."

In striking contrast to the situation revealed by the government and its followers was the position of the Liberal party today, he said. In unity and stability it held an enviable position, he said, and he claimed it was a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined.

In conclusion, he referred to his coming tour of the Maritime Provinces and announced his intention of adhering to the platform laid down at the Liberal convention in Ottawa.

To Outline Platform.

"It will be my privilege, in the course of a few public meetings I propose to address in the immediate future, to outline the main features of the platform adopted at the Liberal convetion," he said.

"They are known in the main to all present. Sufficient for me at the moment to say that, in thanking my fellow Liberals for the great honor conferred in selecting me as the party's leader, I gave my word to the convention, in the presence of all assembled, that the platform as laid down by that vast assembly would be the chart to which I would adhere in expounding the policy of the Liberal party."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Charlottetown Guardian
Halifax
January 7 20

D 4104

NEW LIBERAL LEADER

Given a most enthusiastic reception at Newmarket.

Hon. MacKenzie King refers to the ship of state in distress at Ottawa.

NEWMARKET, Ont., Jan. 6.—Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, at a banquet tendered him by the North York Liberal Association, here to-night was given a wonderful reception and at the conclusion of his address the crowd, which packed the hall, rose as one man, cheering lustily and singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow." It was appropriate that the open meeting of his tour should have been held in the riding North York, where the Leader of the Opposition will offer himself at the next general election.

Mr. King scatchingly indicted Sir Robert Borden and members of his Cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drift."

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario the natural end of a government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief allay of the Federal Government's administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitratory enactments.

Appealing for respect for differences of opinion, Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that towards the end of his career he, more than any other man, was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. "Is it not ind ed, significant that their is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his politeial wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory," said Mr. King.

Dealing with the Ontario election, he maintained that while farmer candidates were returned in large numbers, the overthrow of the Hearst government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces against a reactionary government, accomplished in many constituencies by the whole-hearted combination of farmers and Liberals. He said, 'Liberals, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling of the people who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Referring particularly to the work of the present Government during recent years, he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of the Nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada to-day. "Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions," he said. "Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time.

Speaking of the Liberal attitude to war veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class more entitled to consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle, and who now hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

Mr. King appealed strongly for elimination of all differences, with the resolve that no cleavages should be allowed to destroy our national unity.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Regina Leader
January 7 20
D 4105

cialist Federation — Admitted Sending Letters

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—An order for mmitment to jail of Dr. Michael isleg, treasurer of the Russian radal paper, Novy Mir, on which Trotky worked before going to Soviet ussia, was prepared today by eputy-Attorney-General Berger.
Misleg was treasurer of the Rusan Socialist federation, which he stified, was engaged in spreading olshevist propaganda throughout e United States by its 10,000 mems. Bolshevism and Socialism are nonymous, and Socialism is the al government. Misleg told the mmittee. He admitted despatch several thousand dollars in federon cheques to the communist party the United States, but denied the ney was "contributed by the fedtion."

ODESSA NOW IN STATE OF PANIC

LONDON, Jan. 6.—Panic exists ong the bourgoise of Odessa owing the approach of the Bolshevik ny, according to a wireless from Soviet government at Moscow lay. Large numbers are leaving Constantinople and enormous ces are being paid for passage on amers.

ights of the working man to strike. A resolution from the resolutions committee asking for legal advice on the state of the laws, provincial and Dominion, with respect to strikes, and if adverse to labor to ask for new laws, giving better protection to labor, was turned down as being too roundabout a method of protest. The resolution which was finally passed declared labor's unalterable decision to refuse to recognize any law which forbids the right to strike.

NO DECISION IS REACHED AS TO PROFIT ON CLOTHES

Will Examine Figures Submitted by Merchants of Ottawa

TORONTO, Jan. 6.—No decision was reached by the Board of Commerce today in regard to the order fixing profits of clothiers at 26 per cent. on suits costing less than $25 and 33 1-3 per cent. on suits costing over that amount.

The board on the suggestion of their counsel adjourned until tomorrow to permit of the examination of figures submitted by Ottawa merchants.

NEAR AN END

All Striking School Teachers Are to Return to Work at Once

OTTAWA, Jan. 6.—The bilingual trouble, which for seventeen years has practically disrupted the separate school system of the city and which has faced the schools with dangerous bankruptcy, is now to all intents and purposes at an end as far as the English supporters of the schools are concerned.

In future the administration of the English-speaking schools will be entirely in the hands of the English-speaking trustees, who now number five, with Rev. Father Cornell at their head. All the striking separate school teachers are to return to work tomorrow.

TWO AMERICANS KILLED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Earl Bowles and S. J. Rooney, Americans employed by the International Petroleum company, have been murdered by Mexicans within one mile of Palo Blanco, near Port Lobos, according to private advices received here today from Tampico.

held. The note says that non-participation by the United States in the proposed occupation already has decreased the effectives by one fourth and Germany's expenses will be reduced accordingly and that therefore Germany's request for a lessening in the number of troops is unwarranted.

WOMEN SMOKING IS DECLARED NOT TO BE IMMORAL

Husband Failed to Obtain Separation on Ground of Bad Character

NEW YORK, Jan. 6.—Smoking of cigarettes by women was judicially decreed today as not immoral. The decision was made by Supreme Court Justice Mullan in a separation suit in which counsel for the husband tried to show that cigarettes had been found in the wife's dresser drawer and that this constituted evidence of "bad character."

It is not immoral for women to smoke cigarettes, declared the judge. Some of the best women in the country and in the world smoke cigarettes. It would not make any difference if she had a thousand packages of cigarettes there. This is not Hickville, out in the centre of the farm country.

MURDER CHARGE

MOUNT CLEMENS, Jan. 6.—Attorney-General Alex. Groosbeck announced shortly after noon that he had ordered a warrant charging first degree murder, issued against Lloyd Prevost, held as a witness in connection with the slaying of J. Stanley Brown, two weeks ago.

Mackenzie King Makes Appeal For National Unity

LIBERAL LEADER DECLARES THAT ELECTIONS IN ONTARIO REALLY RESULTED IN VICTORY FOR LIBERALS—NEW SPIRIT OF GOODWILL IS NECESSARY

NEWMARKET, Ont., Jan. 6.—(By e Canadian Press, Ltd.).—Appealg for national unity and a new irit of good will throughout Cana, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, ader of the opposition in the house commons, at a banquet tendered n by the North York Liberal asciation here tonight reviewed exustively the political situation exing in the Dominion at the present e. Mr. King's speech was preliminry to his forthcoming tour of the ritime Provinces.
Claiming that the Union governnt has no constructive policy, Mr. g, scathingly indicted Sir Robert den and members of his cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drifting."

New Spirit and Attitude.

After reviewing the war and its consequences, Mr. King emphasized the fact that the hateful devilish spirit, bred by the conflict, would have to be combatted by a new attitude and a new spirit if the problems confronting the country were to be solved.

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario, the natural end of a government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the federal government administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments."

The Liberal leader made practically no reference to the platform adopted at the Ottawa convention last

(Continued On Page Two)

PRINCESS PATS ENTER NEW HOME

LONDON, Ont., Jan. 6.—Three hundred strong, the famous Princess Patricias, led by Col. Willetts, reached the city at 2.30 this afternoon and marched to Wolseley barracks, which will be their permanent home.

The famous regiment was welcomed by thousands of citizens along the line of march. Gen. Paget, D.C.O., and his staff took the salute at one point in the march from the depot to Carling Heights.

FOOD STRIKE IN BERLIN IS POSTPONED

Hotel and Restaurant Keepers Are Forming Organization in Preparation

BERLIN, Jan. 6.—The threatened general food strike throughout Germany, fixed for January 6, has been postponed, but the negotiations with the government have made no progress. The hotel and restaurant keepers in Berlin, therefore, are forming an organization of all the hostelries in Germany to prepare for the general strike, according to the National Zeitung.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4106

ready to accept sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves."

Ontario Election.

Surprising as the outcome of the Ontario elections might at first appear, Mr. King claimed that one had not to search very far for an explanation. First must be placed the exasperation of the people with a government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. He maintained that while the farmer candidates were returned in largest number, the overthrow of the Hearst government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces against a reactionary government, accomplished in the circumstance by the wholehearted combination of farmers and Liberals.

He then spoke of the organization worked up by the farmers in Ontario. "The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of the word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Attitude of Labor

The attitude of Liberals toward the labor movement must be one of appreciation, he continued. "What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we, as Liberals, have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

Speaking of the Liberal attitude toward veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class more entitled to consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle and who now hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

National Unity

"National unity we must all strive for and work for," he declared. "Our political platforms must be so drafted and our policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

In order to aspire to this ideal, he declared that Canada must have in her federal politics, some political party, large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, and fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity.

This party, he said, must not be of any class or creed, but a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition, the many-sided elements of our national life. Referring particularly to the work of the present government during recent years, he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of national affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the government without a head to direct its affairs, it is actually without a policy to guide its actions, he said.

Hopeless Muddle

"Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the government's action."

The Liberal leader continued:

"The prime minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence.

Again at Crisis

"It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the prime minister, once more weary in body and sick at heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the premiership. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the union from an immediate break-up, the prime minister agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry, I say the nominal head because the basis of the understanding reached, was that he should be absent, not only from the business of parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise.

Liberals United

"In striking contrast to the situation revealed by the government and its followers was the position of the Liberal party today," he said. "In unity and stability it held an enviable position," he said, and he claimed it was a party with a policy, clearly and definitely defined.

In conclusion, he referred to his coming tour of the Maritime provinces and announced his intention of adhering to the platform laid down at the Liberal convention at Ottawa.

'ACKENZIE KING MAKES APPEAL FOR NATIONAL UNITY

(Continued from Page One)

nmer, but stated that in his forthning tour he would deal with it in ail.

The hateful and devilish spirit d by war," Mr. King said, "conued to lurk in all sorts of places, h prominent and obscure. It was in creation of this new spirit of good will that Liberalism would find its most important task."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

ppealing for respect for differces of opinion, Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, stating that toward the end of his career he, more than any other man, was misunderstood, or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praise.

"Is it not indeed significant that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done during his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory," said Mr. King.

Continuing, he said: "But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as

Piles Cured in 6 to 14 Days
ggists refund money if PAZO TMENT fails to cure Itching, id, Bleeding or Protruding Piles. os Irritation. Soothes and Heals. can get restful sleep after the application. Price 60c

WILL ELECT ALL THE M.P.'S POSSIBLE TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

(Continued from Page One)

benefit the few at the expense of the many;

"Therefore, be it resolved:

"That we, the members of the Canadian Council of Agriculture in conference with the accredited delegates of the federal electoral districts of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and the representatives of the rural districts of Ontario, here assembled in the city of Winnipeg on this sixth day of January, 1920, do declare our intention of electing as many representatives as possible to the house of commons at the next

Horlick's the Original Malted Milk. Avoid Imitations and Substitutes

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Winnipeg Free Press
January 7 — 20

D 4107

LIBERAL LEADER IS DINED AT NEWMARKET

Mackenzie King Appeals For National Unity and New Spirit in Canada

Newmarket, Ont., Jan. 6. — (By Canadian Press, Limited).—Appealing for national unity and a new spirit of good will throughout Canada, Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, leader of the opposition in the house of commons at a banquet tendered him by the North York Liberal association here tonight, reviewed exhaustively the political situation existing in the Dominion at the present time. Mr. King's speech was preliminary to his forthcoming tour of the Maritime provinces.

Claiming that the Union government has no constructive policy, Mr. King scathingly indicted Sir Robert Borden and members of his cabinet, characterizing their record as "a policy of drifting."

After reviewing the war and its consequences, Mr. King emphasized the fact that hateful devilish spirit bred by the conflict would have to be combatted by a new attitude and a new spirit if the problems confronting the country were to be solved.

He saw in the success of the United Farmers of Ontario, the natural end of a government "that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the federal government administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments."

The Liberal leader made practically no reference to the platform adopted at the Ottawa convention last summer, but stated that in his forthcoming tour he would deal with it in detail.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Toronto Daily Star
January 7 - 20

D 4103

PARTY SYSTEM BEST, W. L. M. KING'S BELIEF

Liberal Leader Tells Newmarket Stalwarts of Aims of the Party.

HE URGES UNITY

Differences of Class, Race, and Religion Should Be Wiped Out.

Special to The Star by a Staff Reporter.

Newmarket, Jan. 7.—All the forces of Hon. W. L. McKenzie King, the newly elected leader of the Liberal party in Canada; King, the orator, King the ex-parliamentarian, King the Scholar, King the political leader, King the aggressive intellect whose natural force of personality carried him to the leadership of his party—all these were combined in the successor to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as he delivered his first political speech to his nominators in the Town Hall at Newmarket last night under the auspices of the North York Reform Association.

North York Liberals, who recently nominated Mr. King to contest the riding for the Dominion seat taxed to capacity the spacious municipal building to hear the leader of their party. A third of those present were women. The meeting was prefaced by a complimentary dinner tendered by the local Liberal Association in honor of their candidate, and during the interval between the banquet and the speech-making Mr. King renewed acquaintances with upwards of five hundred electors in the riding.

Hon. Mr. King was never in finer fettle. Nor could he have received a more hearty and spontaneous reception from North York Liberals, after they had heard him.

Next Premier Says Chairman.

Introduced by Chairman W. S. H. Cane as "the future Prime Minister of Canada," Hon. Mr. King was met by a standing, cheering host. In jocular vein he noted the presence in the audience of "several good stalwart old Tories." He was delighted at that. "The times are changing," he remarked. Referring to the defeat of the Hearst Government Hon. Mr. King drew a sharp round of applause when he said, "My Liberalism leads me to rejoice in that kind of a turnover."

Hon. Mr. King said he would not follow the usual practice of presenting himself as a candidate in two constituencies. "I am pinning all my faith on you," he told the North York Liberals, "because," he added, "you are pinning all your faith on me."

With Hon. Mr. King at the head table were W. H. S. Cane, president of North York Reform Association, who was chairman; H. Herbert Horsey, president Eastern Ontario Liberal Association; I. E. Pedlow, M.P. for South Renfrew; W. D. Euler, of Waterloo; W. D. Gregory, M. J. Kehoe, M. Chapman, S. A. Grose, P. C. Larkin, Mayor Ewes, of Newmarket, J. M. Walton, D. J. Walton, Eugene Rowen, ex-Mayor Thos. Urquhart, of Toronto, T. L. Armstrong, P. W. Pearson, and J. E. Cane.

Opposition Leader's Speech.

The Liberal leader's speech was a review of the outstanding features of the Canadian political situation with suggestions as to what is required, as respects Government, to enable the Dominion to cope with the problems now confronting it. There were several striking statements. Mr. King said that the Laurier Liberals must adopt a friendly attitude toward Unionist Liberals, and "be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves." He maintained that monopoly of government by any class of citizens was objectionable, declaring that "I am relentlessly opposed to Government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing, or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of

HON. W. L. M. KING,
Leader of the Liberal Party, who delivered the first address of a political tour at Newmarket last night.

control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly enfranchised female voters."

Attacks Union Government.

He attacked the Union Government, with "its policy of drift," likening it to "a ship without a pilot," its crew torn by fractions and internal wranglings, and charged that Sir Robert Borden had agreed to remain a while longer as the nominal head of the Ministry "to save the Union from an immediate break-up." He insinuated that the Government hoped that their supporters would stick together "rather than risk their sessional indemnities."

The possible group system of Government he condemned on the ground that it "would increase rather than lessen the evils so glaringly exhibited" under the present Coalition. The remedy for Canada's ills was the policy of the Liberal party.

"A policy not the outgrowth of a single mind, such as Sir Robert Borden proposes the Unionist party should accept, nor a group of conflicting policies, as would be the case with an administration composed of special classes and interests; but a broad national policy, wrought out in a convention representative of all classes, of all creeds, of all races, of all parts of our great Dominion, and embodying principles which, while not without reference to the special needs of every class, is concerned primarily with the well-being of all and which all can join and are prepared to advocate and support."

To Run in North York.

Nor was Mr. King discouraged by the defeat he sustained in North York at the 1917 election. He declared the Liberal forces were beaten "more through a fraudulent franchise than from any other reason" and confidently stated that "I am proud to plant the standard of Liberalism here in the very heart of my native Province, and beneath its colors to stand and fight like you the battle of much needed reforms, till the day of victory comes."

New Attitude Needed.

In his opening remarks the Opposition leader touched on the war and its consequences, observing that it is a new attitude and a new spirit that is most needed to solve the problems of the present time, a spirit and an attitude of good-will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to breed.

"That spirit of ill-will unfortunately continues to lurk in all sorts of places, both prominent and obscure. It manifests itself in high places through a distrust of others, in the autocratic use of power in the continuance and enactment of repressive measures, long after the reason for any such is gone. It manifests itself from below through similar distrust, in an indifference to rights, whether of person or property, in the defiance of law and order, and in efforts to overthrow constituted authority.

"It is in the creation of this new spirit, of this new attitude, that Liberalism, as I read its obligations to present day problems, will find its most important task. The substitution of good-will for all that has been making for ill-will in the various phases of our national life. In the very forefront I should place the attitude to be assumed towards those who differ from us in opinion.

"If we are to be a united people, we must try to look at all sides of a question, and to respect the views of others whose opinions differ from our own. This consideration must be shown by others to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid thought and stood as he stood. The ill-will which, at the time, it was sought to engender towards those who were unable to support the Union Government must be replaced by an increase in good-will on the part of all who are now anxious to see the country controlled by a Government with a mind of its own, and a policy that it can put into words; a Government that is other than a combination for the sake of office.

The Golden Rule.

"But the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves. I am anxious that this attitude should be understood as the attitude of the party in whose name it is my privilege to speak."

Touching briefly on the Ontario elections, Mr. King said the result was one of the most significant events of the year. "The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a Provincial Administration under Mr. Drury was one of those surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics."

The foremost explanation, in his opinion, was "the exasperation of the people with a Government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the Federal Administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office, and the members in their seats in the Legislature may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-Government, it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds."

Liberals Assisted U.F.O.

The speaker said the U.F.O. were assisted by the Liberals of Ontario who withdrew their candidates or did not nominate any in 37 ridings, Mr. Dewart concentrating on some of the Tory strongholds. The overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province accomplished by Farmers and Liberals working in most constituencies in whole-hearted combination." There was a note of warning to the U.F.O. in these words:

"Whether its plunge into the arena of politics may not bring disruption to the whole organization in its many splendid activities is something which its members cannot weigh too carefully, and which time will serve to tell.

"The point I wish to make at the moment," he added, "is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Labor Movement.

The same was true of the Labor movement. His interest in industrial problems was bred of his Liberalism. "I can think of the problems of Industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments."

Speaking of the Liberal attitude towards the veterans of the war, Mr. King said, "If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which, more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom."

Liberalism to Reconcile Differences.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of goodwill is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake."

The Liberal leader said social and religious strife must give way to good-will, with a view to national unity, and that the same spirit must be carried into all our inter-imperial and international relations.

He maintained that sectional and class policies imperil unity, adding that "we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a Farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself, which will serve to divide east and west, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all, is it likely ever to be a War Veterans party. The war veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the army and the civil authorities, which takes us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society, which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, of any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation,

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

Toronto Daily Star Jan 7-20

D 4103

Look at Problems In Practical Way

Newmarket, Jan. 6.—During his speech here last night, Hon. W. L. M. King said: "This is not a moment to theorize, it is not a moment to rush to extremes, neither is it a moment to stand pat. It is a time, above all others, to be essentially practical; to look facts squarely in the face; to make an accounting of our national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as material; and then, understanding what our problems are, not in a visionary mood, but in a concrete and comprehensive way, resolutely to meet and attempt their solution in a manner that will make not only for material progress, but also for human freedom in ever-increasing measure, and for ever-widening possibilities in social well-being and individual achievement."

and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life."

Must Have Permanent Parties.

"It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

"Parties are necessary, useful, and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name, as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

"With the Liberal forces at work in Canada to-day, among the farmers in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliation, or associations, are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day, which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to withstay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies, except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all."

Government Denounced.

The Union Government was denounced in unmeasured terms by the Opposition leader, who declared that never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than at the present time. Not only was the Government without a head to direct its affairs, it was actually without a policy to guide its actions. A policy of drift was the only characterization that could be made of the Government's action. When the war came to an end one would have supposed that the Prime Minister would have dissolved Parliament as soon as demobilization was completed or that he would have formulated and announced some policy. He did neither. As a result the Government was helpless to cope with a serious situation in Winnipeg, which had ill-effects all over Canada. Sir Robert Borden's own following was hopelessly divided and the Unionist members of Parliament were held together only by the emoluments of office and the love of power. Wearied with the strain of war and disgusted with these internal wranglings Premier Borden contracted an illness which prevented him from being in Parliament and although the session was called for the exclusive purpose of approving the peace treaty, legislation to acquire the G. T. R. was rushed through in the dying hours of the session and Parliament was refused the right to ratify the purchase agreement.

Mr. King doubted if anything short of an appeal to the electorate would remove the causes of the policy of drift. "The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship, for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he has said of policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none, and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hopes while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves, so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Borden Disgusted.

"It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his Cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the Premiership. The commotion thus occasioned in the counsels of the Unionist party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call it to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the Union from an immediate break-up, the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry. I say the nominal head because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from his business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise.

Drift Policy Continues.

"Meanwhile, the attitude of drift is to be maintained, in the hope that supporters of the Government, rather than risk their sessional indemnities by an appeal to the electorate, will continue a support sufficiently strong to enable the members of the administration to hold on to office notwithstanding the absence of a policy of any kind.

Instability Natural Consequence of Union Government.

"This is the logical and natural fruit of unionism, and it should be an object lesson to all citizens of the Dominion, not only for the present, but for years to come. It presents one of the strongest arguments which can be urged against the carrying on of a country's business by a Government composed of individuals who hold diverse views on matters of national concern. It should cause the advocates of group government to pause in their advocacy of a system which leads only to compromise, subterfuge and inaction, and give new weight to the arguments of those who, viewing government as it has been carried on for two centuries under the British system, see in a great national party the one effective instrument of government for the formulation of a wise and progressive policy, and also the most effective means of assuring unity and stability in matters of governmental policy and administration.

"Without great parties, the House of Commons is likely to become a mere collection of discordant and shifting groups. Stability of government will be impossible; either there will be inaction, as in the case of the present union of two parties, or a rapid succession of different ministries supported by different groups directing in turn the departments of administration. If anything is needed still further to unsettle the very unstable condition of government in Canada to-day, it would seem to lie in still further increasing the groups of which the Ministry is to be formed, and adding still further to the pressure for compromise in all that pertains to administration.

"In splendid and striking contrast to the situation as revealed by the Government and its followers, or to the possible substitution of some group system of government, which would increase rather than lessen the evils so glaringly exhibited, we have the position of the Liberal party as it stands in Canada to-day. In unity and stability it holds an enviable position.

Better Days Ahead.

"To the people of Canada I would say: You will find in the platform of the Liberal party, as unanimously approved at its great convention in August of last year, that spirit of good-will and that note of certainty which are so much needed to bring unity and stability into our national life. You will find a platform broad and tolerant enough to include the legitimate aims and aspirations of all classes in our society which seek honest, enlightened and progressive government, yet so harmonized as to afford special privileges to none. In the same spirit in which the platform was framed, its various planks will be interpreted when the Liberal party is called upon to administer the affairs of this country."

As in the August convention of the Liberal Party at Ottawa the spirit of Laurier continually hovered over the gathering. Every speaker referred feelingly at least once to the late leader. His successor, said H. D. Ramsden, president of the Toronto and York Liberal Association, had fortunately been chosen by the most democratic convention ever called in Canada. Liberals had not forgotten as they learned in the days of Laurier, how to rally behind a worthy leader, said H. Herbert Horsey, president of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association.

A "high spot" of the evening was the warm tribute of Hon. George P. Graham to Mr. King's ability to lead the Liberal Party successfully, contained in a letter of regret explaining his absence. "Mr. King is able, energetic, and clean," wrote Hon. Mr. Graham, "and is worthy of the support of all those who are anxious to resume the march of progress." Hon. Mr. Graham likened Canada to a man who had lost his way in the wilderness, a man groping in the dark, waiting for someone to lead him. The Liberal Party that restored prosperity in Canada in 1896 could perform a similar duty to the country in 1920, he predicted.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4110

North York Hears New Liberal Leader

HON. MACKENZIE KING,
Liberal Leader, who began his Canadian tour with a speech in Newmarket last night. He made a special plea for fair play and tolerance, saying that a spirit and attitude of good-will was needed to replace the ill-will which war never fails to breathe.

Toronto Globe
January 7 - 20

HON. MR. KING STARTS TOUR WITH SPEECH AT NEWMARKET; DECLARES WAR ON MONOPOLY

Will Contest North York Next Federal Election and Will Not Run in Any Other Riding—Says It Cannot Be a Farmers' Party That is to Run This Country

MAKES A PLEA FOR LIBERALISM AS AGAINST CLASS-CONSCIOUSNESS

Points Out Lesson of Late Conservative Government in Ontario, and Applies Same Lesson to Ottawa, Where Sovereign Rights of People Usurped—Given Great Reception

(Staff Correspondence of The Globe.)

NEWMARKET, Jan. 6.—Hon. W. L. M. King, Dominion Liberal Leader, was given a magnificent welcome here to-night by the Liberal electors of North York. It was the first occasion since he contested the riding in the 1917 election on which Mr. King had spoken in the constituency, and 500 representative guests thronged the Agricultural Hall to hear him.

The Liberal Chieftain devoted much of his time to dealing with the present political situation in Canada, and the significance of the Labor, Farmer and War Veteran movements. Liberals, he declared, could not be anything but sympathetic to any movement which broadened out to help the lot of the people.

OPPOSITION TO ANYTHING LIKE MONOPOLY.

"My attitude in matters of government toward any class is one of irrevocable opposition to anything in the shape of a monopoly," declared Mr. King. He would not countenance a monopoly of government, whether by financial or railway groups, or under the control of Labor, Farmers or War Veterans.

"But I am willing to take the best of them to make legislation to se[illegible] a more united people." He accepted with pleasure the nomination for North York, and pointed out that he was pinning his faith in this riding for success at the next Dominion election. He said that he would not run in two ridings, as has been done in the past.

W. H. S. Cane is Chairman.

Agricultural Hall was gaily bedecked with flags and bunting in honor of the distinguished guest. So large was the attendance that the four hundred men and women guests were accommodated at banquet tables on both the lower and upper floors. The speaking did not get under way until 8.30. Two shields were prominently displayed to either side of the platform: "North York, the Cradle of Freedom," and "King and a United Canada." Mr. W. H. S. Cane, President of the North York Liberal Association, occupied the chair at both the banquet and the subsequent meeting.

Hon. Mr. King was given a most cordial reception when he entered the banquet hall.

The Chairman read several letters of regret from prominent Liberals who were unable to be present. One of these was from Hon. Geo. P. Graham, who, in referring to Mr. King, said he "possesses all the elements of successful leadership."

Mayor Eaves of Newmarket briefly welcomed the Liberal Leader and other outsiders to the town. His aged father was one of those who was on the platform.

Mr. King said that he proposed to review what appeared to be the outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canada today, and to endeavor to present the attitude of Liberalism. It must be realized, he said, that it is impossible to separate the present from that past, and that it was equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from the conditions as they exist in other countries.

Time to be Practical.

"This is not a moment to theorize, it is not a moment to rush to extremes, neither is it a moment to stand pat," said Mr. King. "It is a time, above all others, to be essentially practical, to look facts square in the face, to make an accounting of our national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as material, and then, understanding what our problems are (not in a visionary mood, but in a concrete and comprehensive way), resolutely to meet them and attempt a solution that will make not only for material progress, but also for human freedom and for ever-widening possibilities in social wellbeing and individual achievement."

Mr. King spoke of the effect of the great war upon the world. "The changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order," he said, "an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within." A true simile of the world's condition to-day was that of the ocean seething after a storm.

Stop Ill-will.

"It is a new attitude and a new spirit that are most needed to solve the problems at the present time," he continued. "A spirit and attitude of good-will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to breathe. That spirit," he said, "continues to lurk in all sorts of places, both high and obscure. It manifests itself in high places through a distrust of others in the autocratic use of power, in the continuance and enactment of repressive measures

(Continued on Page 5, Col. 2.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Toronto Globe
January 7 20

D 4111

HON. MR. KING OPENS HIS POLITICAL TOUR

(Continued from Page 1, Col. 7.)

long after the reason for such is gone. It manifests itself from below through similar distrust in an indifference to rights, whether of persons or property, in the defiance of law and order. We shall fail utterly to grasp the significance of the legacy the war has left unless we note carefully every passion the war has roused and every prejudice upon which it has sought to play.

"It is in the creation of this new spirit, of this new attitude, that Liberalism's obligations to the present-day problems will find the most important task." Mr. King enumerated some of the phases of work which Liberals were called upon to perform.

Tribute to Laurier.

In front he placed the attitude to be assumed to those who differ from the Liberals in opinion. Here Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, saying: "Our own great Leader in the political battles of 1911 and 1917 did not escape his share of the penalty of greatness where it looks with eyes beyond its day and has the courage to stand or fall by conviction. Pure in life, noble in purpose, patriotic in aim, in all these respects second to no other political leader of his generation, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, more than any other man, was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. Is it not indeed significant that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory."

Consideration, continued the Liberal Leader, must be shown now to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid did.

"But the Liberals who stood with Sir Wilfrid in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them as they are to demand like attitude toward themselves.

"We must also respect those who, while sharing with us in large measure the principles and policies we advocate, have aims and aspirations of their own. And here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our National Society: the Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans. Here we pass from differences between individuals to consider possible differences between classes."

Usurping Sovereign Rights.

Speaking of the recent Ontario elections, Mr. King said that, surprising as they were, one had not to seek far for an explanation. "First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a Government that has usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the Federal Administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Sir William Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office and the members in their seats in the Legislature may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If, however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-government it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds."

Liberals' Ontario Victory.

Mr. King explained the Farmers' movement on the ground of this compact.

"Disgusted," he said, "with what seemed to them a frame-up by political leaders whereby those in office or in the Legislature might be retained in power, the people in the rural districts, who had been doing a lot of thinking on their own account, decided to have candidates of their own. They were assisted in this by the Liberals of the Province, who either withdrew their candidates or decided not to nominate in thirty-seven ridings. The Liberal Leader of the Province, Hartley Dewart, who never was a party to the compact of which I have spoken, but who fought it from the outset, tackled some of the more difficult Tory strongholds, like the Torontos, not with Farmer candidates, but with Liberals who, like himself, were in sympathy with the policy wholly friendly to the Farmers, and he won in a number of those constituencies. It must never be forgotten that, while the Farmer candidates were returned in largest numbers, the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government; a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in a whole-hearted combination."

Liberal Thought Among Farmers.

Mr. King reviewed the figures of the voting, and analyzed the vote in Ontario.

"The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies," he added.

Speaking of Labor and the Liberal attitude, Mr. King said:

"Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country on the farms or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we, as Liberals, have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality or opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

About the Veterans.

The Liberal Leader also referred to the war veterans, saying: "If there is in Canada to-day one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration it is the men who risked their lives in battle and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the call of the world's freedom. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

Class Legislation.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class-conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them, or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

"War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at domination in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion and in the end retrogression rather than advance.

"Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of Government I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to Government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans or the newly enfranchised female voters."

Mr. King made an appeal for the abolishing of race and religious difference prejudices. "Let us remember, however, that whatever perpetuates or augments that ill-will adds to the problem of Government in Canada to-day, and that whatever of good-will we can engender in its stead will by so much lessen and lighten the magnitude and weight of the problems which confront us. As Liberals we can have but one attitude toward prejudice whenever it raises its vicious head, and that is to strike it hard, strike it, if that be possible, to the death.

"We must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity.

"Each for Self or All for All."

"Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas or particular interests, or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each and willing co-operation on the part of all by which alone the war was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives with thought of naught, save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

"If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a Manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a Farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide East and West, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization sooner or later of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint control by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The war veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the army and civil authorities, which takes us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, of any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

Parties Necessary.

"Parties are necessary, useful and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it through to the highest principles and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

"With the Liberal forces at work in Canada to-day among the Farmers in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations, are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to withstay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all."

Government Without Policy.

Speaking of the present Dominion Administration, Mr. King said: "It is owing to the instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of State is in such distress to-day. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of the country in a more hopeless state or muddle, nor an Administration more disorganized, than is the case of the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action."

Mr. King reviewed the history of the Union Government since its inception. He spoke of the absence of the Premier and the affairs of State being allowed to drift along.

Referring to the Grand Trunk purchase Mr. King said that as approval had not yet been granted by the shareholders in England, and as Parliament would be reassembling in a few weeks, it was not yet too late "to give Canadian taxpayers who have to meet these obligations the same rights as are given to the English shareholders; this right of approval should still be preserved to the people of Canada."

Pilot Leaves Ship.

Referring again to the Government, Mr. King said: "The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The pilot has left the ship for a long time, just as he left in 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence." The Government had no policy, no constructive thought or idea—simply that the party might hang on a little longer. It would be ludicrous if it were not tragic. He referred to the statement recently issued by the Premier as further confirmation of the absence of any policy on the part of the Government.

Fruit of Unionism.

"This," said the Liberal Leader, "is the natural fruit of Unionism, and it should be an object lesson to all citizens for years to come. It should cause the advocates of group government to pause in their advocacy of a system which leads only to compromise, subterfuge and inaction."

Claims Fraudulent Franchise.

Mr. King expressed his thanks to the Liberals of North York for nominating him again as their candidate. "Surprise has been expressed in some quarters," said Mr. King, "that, having suffered defeat in 1917, I should have accepted renomination by the Liberals of this riding at a time when Parliament has just passed an act, introduced at the last session by one of the Liberal members, by which the election of any candidate for the Federal Parliament is rendered void in the event of his seeking election for more than one constituency at a single election.

"Had I not been through one political battle with the Liberals of North York, there might be some occasion for surprise; and had our cause not suffered defeat more through a fraudulent franchise than from any other reason, there might be even greater occasion for surprise. The people of Canada mistake my interest in politics if they believe that, gratifying as is the sense of political victory, it weighs with me for one moment in comparison with the vindication of principles of political freedom for which our forefathers sacrificed their all, and which our fathers taught us to hold in reverent regard.

Fighting Family Compact.

"In tracing the Liberal party of Canada to its source, we are brought back to the years of opposition to the arrogance of the Family Compact, to the long and bitter struggle against an autocratic Executive, to the demands for representative and responsible government, in which political struggles the Reformers of York played a part second to none.

"It was the electors of York who chose my grandfather as their standard-bearer. When, after a lapse of two generations, the descendants of these very men, and others associated with them, invite me to take up that same standard of political freedom, at a moment when it is being lowered by a Government that has availed itself of measures more arbitrary and autocratic than any enacted since those early reforms were obtained, and which in many of its actions has shown itself more indifferent and less responsible to the people's representatives in Parliament than any Government we have had in years, all that there is of chivalry in my nature and of power in tradition compels me to accept the nomination with gratitude and pride, be the consequences what they may."

Mr. King also made pleasant references to Sir Alan Aylesworth and Sir William Mulock.

Liberal President Praises King.

Mr. H. D. Ramsden, President Toronto and North York Liberal Association, also joined in welcoming the visitors. He spoke feelingly of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and referred to the National Convention last August as one of the most democratic ever held. Mr. Ramsden spoke in glowing language of Mr. King.

The Liberal Leader, the speaker said, had made a lifelong study of Labor matters in Canada, and was one of the foremost authorities on the subject, not only in Canada, but in the United States. This country needs leadership, but at the present time there is none in Canada.

Eastern Ont. President Speaks.

Dr. H. H. Horsey, President of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association, also spoke briefly. He, too, paid high tribute to Mr. King's ability. The Liberal Leader was not only trained in the themes of Labor matters, but also in a practical way. "He is a man of sterling character, whom we can all get behind and fight for," he decalred.

Those on the platform, in addition to the speakers, included Messrs. P. C. Larkin; W. D. Euler, M.P., for North Waterloo; Isaac Pedlow, M.P. for Renfrew; Mayor Bassett of Aurora, and Andrew Hayden, General Secretary of the National Liberal Committee, of Ottawa.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Toronto Mail & Empire
January 7 - 20

D 4112

Group System Condemned By New Liberal Leader

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Speaking at the North York Liberal Banquet, Sees Menace to Stable Government in the Farmer-Labor Class Movement.

Special to The Mail and Empire from Staff Reporter.

Newmarket, Jan. 6.—To North York, where, in 1917, he went down to defeat as a Laurier anti-conscriptionist, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King came to-night to prepare the way for a fresh attempt when the people are again called upon for their verdict in a general election. The new leader of Liberalism in Canada was the guest of honor at a banquet given by the North York Liberal Association. The diners were fairly representative of North York Liberals, but there was a noticeable absence of outsiders. Just two Ontario Liberal M.P.'s—Pedley, of South Renfrew, and W. D. Euler, of North Waterloo, were present, and though the new leader was making his first public appearance in Ontario, neither H. Hartley Dewart, K.C., the Provincial leader, nor any of his supporters, put in an appearance.

Following the banquet, Hon. Mr. King spoke to an audience of perhaps three hundred men and women, but the two-hour oratorical effort with which he favored them was intended for far wider consumption. It was an extended survey of the political situation, of the Liberal platform and of the problems and tasks facing Liberalism in the immediate future. The Liberal leader started with the war, and the problems that have come in its train. The solution of these problems was the real task ahead of Liberalism. It was a task that called for tolerance and for understanding—understanding, for instance, of the course taken by Unionist-Liberals in 1917 and appreciation of their sincerity. Mr. King, who was defeated in 1917 by the votes of North York Liberals who could not accept his opposition to the Military Service Act, made it clear that he held no ill-will toward these men—he was willing to let by-gones be by-gones.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING

Love Taps for the U.F.O.

He appealed also for a tolerant attitude toward independent political movements, to that of the farmers, of the Labor forces and the Veterans. He was gentle with the U. F.O., sympathetic toward the labor element and propitiatory in his references to the veterans. Liberalism was on common ground with them all. The defeat of the Hearst Government was really a Liberal victory since the U.F.O. were standing for the same ideals as the Liberal party.

Party System the Best.

But, making all due allowances for the unsatisfactory conditions that had given birth to class political movements in Canada, the Liberal leader was not prepared to admit that they were entitled to be classed with "the grand old Liberal party." The party system was hallowed by tradition and tried by generations of British Governments.

Mr. King urged the need of national unity and the wiping out of the differences between class and class, race and race, religion and religion. The Liberal party was consecrated to that ideal of unity.

The closing half of his address was devoted to a review of the political situation at Ottawa, to a denunciation of the rule of autocracy under the Union Government and of its policy of drift.

Only two other addresses were made, one by H. D. Ramsden, president of the Toronto and York Liberal Association, and the other by H. H. Horsey, president of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association. Both speakers confined themselves to brief laudatory references to Hon. W. L. M. King, who had been chosen as successor to Sir Wilfrid Laurier in "the most democratic convention ever held in Canada."

W. H. S. Cane, president of the North York Liberals, presided, and Mayor Eaves, of Newmarket, welcomed the guest of the evening in a few sentences, in which he hazarded a guess that Hon. Mr. King would be Canada's next Prime Minister.

The Consequences of War.

Hon. Mr. King began his address by referring to the war and its consequences upon the national life of Canada and the life of the world in general. The world had just passed through an upheavel unparalleled in its history. Humanity had been stirred to its depths and would be subject to surging tides of emotion for years to come. This should make men view with patience the restlessness of our day. A new attitude and a new spirit were need-

Concluded on Page 2, Col. Four.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Toronto Mail & Empire
January 7 - 20

D 4113

Group System Condemned By New Liberal Leader

Concluded from First Page.

d to solve the problems of the preent time, and it was in the pres-ion of this new court that Liberal-sm would find its greatest task.

This new spirit and attitude would, at the outset, call for respect or those who differed with Liberals, t called for consideration on the art of Liberals who differed with ir Wilfrid Laurier and equally for ppreciation of the sincerity of Unionist-Liberals who left Sir Wilrid.

The Light in the Window.

"It is perhaps unnecessary for me t this time and in this place to emphasize my own attitude towards Liberal-Unionists. During the campaign of 1917, I addressed many ublic meetings in this riding. There s not a man living who heard me tter one word in condemnation of he motive of a single elector. Some f my best friends failed to give me heir political support, but they lost one of my friendship, and I am proud to believe that I lost none of heirs. We differed in opinion, but t was an honest difference of opinon, and as such was respected on the part of each. May I say that the ttitude then assumed, as an individual responsible only to those who had nominated men as their candidate, is the attitude I now assume in the light of the vast responsibilities with which my fellow Liberals of the Dominion have honored me. I am anxious that this attitude should be understood as the attitude of the party in whose name it is my privilege to speak.

Must Respect the Farmers.

"It is not only those who have differed from us in the past whose views we must respect. We must also respect and this is much more difficult very often, those who, while sharing with us in large measure the principles and policies we advocate have aims ond aspirations of their own, and here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our national society; the farmers, labor, and the war veterans. Here we pass from difference between individuals to consider possible differences between classes.

"Of the events of the year just passed one of the most significant has been the results attending upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a Provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of those surprises which lent so much interest and zest to politics. Surprising as the outcome of the Provincial elections might at first appear, one has not to seek very far for an explanation. First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a Government that had ursurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the Federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office and the members in their seats in the Legislature may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If, however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-government it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds."

A Liberal Victory.

"It must never be forgotten," continued Mr. King, "that whilst the Farmer candidates were returned in largest numbers the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government, a victory accomplished by farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in whole-hearted combination."

"One futher fact helps to explain the success of the farmers in the election, and it is an all important factor in all elections, namely, "Organization." The farmers in very large numbers were members of a powerful organization, formed originally for social and economic purposes. In the Ontario elections it became an organization for political purposes as well. The point I wish to make at the moment is that as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word we must take all together the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

Attitude Towards Labor.

And the same is true of the Labor movement. Here again is another large class in our national society, which has become conscious not only of economic injustices in the past but of the need for united action to gain that fuller expression of personal and economic freedom which is the very essence of all true Liberalism. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement. Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it? Speaking of myself, my interests in industrial problems is bread of my Liberalism, I can think of the problems of industry only in terms of humanity. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of, as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

In speaking of the Liberal attitude towards the War Veterans, the Liberal leader said that if there is in Canada to-day one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration it is the men who risked their lives in battle and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice.

The Supreme Task.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned resulting as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

"Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of Government I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessy opposed to Government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing or financial interest. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly enfranchised female voters.

"Let me pass from classes to a still larger consideration, the difference between race and race and religion and religion. No one who participated in the last general elections in this riding, or any other riding in this Province, will say that the spirit which speaks ill of its neighbor was not abroad in the land at that time. Every artifice known in the moulding of opinion was employed to create a prejudice in the minds of English-speaking Protestants of this Province against French-speaking Roman Catholics of the neighboring Province of Quebec. Just as in a previous election in the Province of Quebec, the Nationalists, and those who aided and abetted their methods, spared no means of inflaming the racial passions of men against a great man in his advocacy of a great cause, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier sought the creation of a Canadian Naval Service as a means of Canada fulfilling her duty in naval defence as a growing country and as a part of the British Empire. I shall not seek to stir the mouldering embers of those unfortunate chapters in our history by enlarging in any way upon them. The ill-will that the passions of war have been employed to inflame between persons of different races, and different religions in Canada will not be lived down in a day. Let us remember, however, that whatever perpetuates or augments that ill-will, adds to the problems of government in Canada to-day, and that whatever of goodwill we can engender in its stead will by so much lessen and lighten the magnitude and weight of the problems which confront us. As Liberals we can have but one attitude towards prejudice whenever it raises its vicious head, and that is to strike it hard, strike it, if that be possible, to the death.

"It is not only as regards differences between persons and classes, racial and religious differences, national and international differences that we must seek in a spirit of good-will to bind up the wounds and to bridge the chasms which the roused passions of the war have served to widen and create; we must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity.

"National unity we must at all cost maintain and our political platform must be so drafted and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

"We must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough, to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers: neither can it be a farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise powerful combination against itself, which will serve to divide East and West; to set cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts, over against the urban. Neither can it be a labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations. Least of all is it likely ever to be a war veterans' party. The war veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind, that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the army and the civil authorities.

"It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting and perseverence in advocating policies and proposals. It assures better than any other means can do a full consideration of difficult problems and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

Unionists Without Policy.

Mr. King then reviewed history of the Unionist Government, which he referred to as a policy of drift.

After referring to Sir Robert Borden's absence, the speaker continued.

"This, then, is the actual situation as it exists in Canada at the present time: the Government is without a head and without a policy. It is composed of members differing so completely one from another in attitude on many vital issues that the liklihood of any policy being arrived at is out of the question. Meanwhile, the attitude of drift is to be maintained, in the hope that supporters of the Government, rather than risk their sessional indemnities by an appeal to the electorate, will continue a support sufficiently strong to enable the members of the administration to hold on to office notwithstanding the absence of a policy of any kind.

"This is the logical and natural fruit of unionism, and it should be an object lesson to all citizens of the Dominion, not only for the present, but for years to come. It presents one of the strongest arguments which can be urged against the carrying on a country's business by a Government composed of individuals who hold diverse views on matters of national concern. It should cause the advocates of group Government to pause in their advocacy of a system which leads only to compromise, subterfuge, and inaction, and give new weight to the arguments of those who, viewing government as it has been carried on for two centuries under the British system, see in a great national party the one effective instrument of government for the formulation of a wise and progressive policy, and also the most effective means of arriving at unity and stability in matters of governmental policy and administration.

"Without great parties, the House of Commons is likely to become a mere collection of discordant and shifting groups. Stability of government will be impossible; either there will be inaction as in the case of the present union of two parties, or a rapid succession of different ministries supported by different groups directing in turn the departments of administration. If anything is needed still further to unsettle very unstable condition of Government in Canada to-day, it would seem to lie in further increasing the groups of which the ministry is to be formed, and adding still further to the pressure for compromise in all that pertains to administration."

In splendid and striking contrast to the situation as revealed by the Government and its followers, said Mr. King, or to possible substitution of some group system of government, which would increase rather than lessen the evils so glaringly exhibited, we have the position of the Liberal party as it stands in Canada to-day. In unity and stability it holds an enviable position. It is a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined; a policy not the outgrowth of a single mind, such as Sir Robert Borden proposes the Unionist party should accept, not a group of conflicting policies, as would be the case with an administration composed of special classes and interests; but a broad national policy, wrought out of a convention representative of all classes, of all creeds, of all races, of all parts of our great Dominion, and embodying principles which, while not without reference to the special needs of every class, is concerned primarily with the well-being of all and which all combined are prepared to advocate and support.

Mr. King then expressed anew his heartfelt thanks for the honors which the Liberals of North York had conferred upon him in again nominating him to be their standard bearer when the general elections are held.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

EDMONTON BULLETIN
JANUARY 7, 1920

D 4114 (2)

didates were returned in largest ber, the overthrow of the Hearst government was essentially a victory for the liberal forces against a reactionary government, accomplished in many constituencies by the wholehearted combination of farmers and liberals. He then spoke of the organization worked up by the farmers in Ontario.

"The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as liberals, liberals in the truest meaning of the word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

The Labor Question

The attitude of liberals towards the labor movement must be one of appreciation, he continued, "what the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of liberalism, then liberalism has ceased to exist."

Speaking of the liberal attitude towards veterans, Hon. Mr. King stated that there was no class entitled to more consideration than those who had risked their lives in battle and who now hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve.

"National unity we must at all costs maintain," he declared, "our political platforms must be so drafted and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality."

In order to aspire to this ideal, he declared that Canada must have in her federal politics some political party "large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, and fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity."

This party, he said, must not be of any class or creed, but a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

With Policy

Referring particularly to the work of the present government during recent years he maintained that it was owing to the instability in the management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the government without a head to direct its affairs: it is certainly without a policy to guide its actions, he said. "Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the government's action."

Premier's Absence

The liberal leader continued:

"The prime minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown and who is to lead parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship for a long time, just as he left it in the fall of 1919 for a short time without venturing to decide between the factions in his cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence.

"It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the prime minister, once more weary in body and sick at heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the premiership. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the union from an immediate break-up the prime minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry, I say the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent not only from the business of parliament but from the country for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise."

Liberals in Unison

"In striking contrast to the situation revealed by the government and its followers was the position of the liberal party today," he said. "In unity and stability it held an enviable position," he said and he claimed it was a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined.

In conclusion he referred to his coming tour of the Maritime provinces and announced his intention of adhering to the platform laid down at the liberal convention in Ottawa.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Journal
Jany 8 20

D 4115

MR. KING AT NEWMARKET.

To the little town of Newmarket, a canal zone not unknown to Liberal annals, Mr. MACKENZIE KING on Monday repaired to preach to the faithful assembled and to the country at large the new Opposition dispensation. Although marking the beginning of a speaking tour, which in the hopes of its authors, is to arouse a lethargic Liberalism to heroic impulse and action, Mr. KING'S speech—and we say this not by way of criticism—is hardly likely to find a permanent place in historic political oratory. For a close perusal of the speech, the text of which we have before us, impresses the truth that if it is worth noting for anything at all, it is for the multitude of things which it left unsaid; and this the more remarkable because of the times through which we are passing and the position of Mr. KING. We are at the close of four years of war and stand upon the threshold of reconstruction. Canada, in common with the rest of the world, stands confronted with issues and problems numerous and grave; everywhere about us old and established customs and political doctrines are being severely tested or swept entirely from their moorings; new and strange forms are coming to the surface; and on all sides the cry of the people is for ideas and policies to bring about the New Jerusalem on earth. Mr. KING, as the chosen leader of the historic Liberal party in Canada, might reasonably have been expected to contribute something of light and leading to such a troubled day. He has the blessing of youth and vigor, he is free from the boredom and botheration of office, he has had ample time and leisure to survey the body politic, to diagnose its many ills and to prescribe accordingly.

But, despite all of this, one looks in vain for a lead from Mr. KING. The tariff stands today, as always, the greatest issue of Canadian politics; Mr. KING passes it over in silence. Nationalization, with which is united the vital problem of transportation, challenges attention; Mr. KING utters no word. The financial problem is of the gravest; Mr. KING has no policy to offer. The re-establishment of soldiers into civil life demands the best of statesmanship; Mr. KING passes it by. And so to the end of the chapter.

Nor is there evidence in the speech of the much-heralded indictment of the Government's sins. For two years Union Government has been grappling with the gravest problems ever encountered by a Canadian administration. In that task it must have made mistakes, and, beyond question, it alienated the support of many of its old adherents. Mr. KING might have been expected to indict the Government for sins of commission and omission, to have catalogued its errors and its crimes. But despite all that has been said of Union, despite all the criticism and political blasphemy that has been hurled at its head, the most that Mr. KING could say against it yesterday was a few vague and harmless platitudes.

How disappointing such a singularly barren address must be to the old adherents of LAURIERISM, one can only hazard a guess. But disappointing, unquestionably, it must have been. Groping in the wilderness, far from the Promised Land of office, the party cried out for political manna, and platitudes, old and decayed, were the only reply.

For Liberalism, once so powerful and militant, it is a doleful prospect. Its King stands without a kingdom; its forces are divided; its moral strength is gone; its rank and fyle has found refuge with the Farmers. The Old Pilot, who steered the party craft so long and well is sadly missed, as Mr. KING steers an uncertain course. Ahead the breakers are angry and ominous, no banner floats proudly from the masthead, and the wind moans dismally through the rigging.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Stouffville Tribune
January 8—20

D 4116

Liberals Banquet W. L. Mackenzie King

—o—

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King was accorded a magnificent reception at Newmarket on Tuesday evening when over five hundred representative guests attended the banquet given in his honor.

Mr. Howard Cane occupied the chair and mayor Eves gave a brief address of welcome. Short speeches were delivered by Mr. H. D. Ramsden and Mr. Horsey, of the Eastern Ontario Liberal convention.

Mr. King in a magnificent address dwelt upon the attitude of the Liberal party. A new attitude and a new spirit were needed, he said, to meet after the war conditions, an attitude of good will and toleration to deal with the tendencies to overturn human society and of disregard of authority. It is the work of Liberalism, he said, to bring a spirit of good will to bear on the national life of Canada.

He reiterated his opinion in regard to the Liberal Unionists which he made a year ago, that they were conscientious in their stand. He severely scored the Union Government for its actions or rather lack of action since the war. He characterized its policy as a policy of drift, and deplored the present condition of the government without a leader and divided against itself.

Mr. King explained that the U. F. O. victory in the Ontario election was due to the Liberals and Farmers working together for a common cause. The farmer, the labor and soldier movements were the result of disgust at the administration of the Hearst-Proudfoot combination.

To these organizations he pointed out that wherever a class movement has gone into politics it has cost the life of the organization. It was the task of Liberalism to reconcile these differences between class conscious groups, between individuals and between race and religion.

Mr. King thanked the Liberals of North York for nominating him to contest the riding in the next Federal election. He still adhered to his intention to accept the nomination, as his acceptance of a seat in Prince Edward was only temporary. The Liberal Chieftain concluded his address amid prolonged applause.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Citizen

January 8 29

D 4117

THE LIBERAL PARTY'S POSITION.

Mr. Mackenzie King's speaking tour is timely. The government would seem to be simply drifting, without any policy other than the opportunism of the day. But many people are of the opinion that the government is enabled to stay on, with the support of privileged interests, partly because of the weakness of the opposition.

The Liberal party is in danger of disappearing, or dwindling away to nothing, in Canada as it would seem to be doing in Great Britain. It has almost lost the confidence of the organized farmers in the West and in Ontario. Independent political action is developing in New Brunswick. Perhaps the Liberal leader's tour in the Maritime Provinces may help to revive the confidence of old Liberal stalwarts. It will largely depend upon the clearness of Mr. King's coming message on the public platform for Liberalism, as against Mr. Rowell's paternalism, and Mr. Calder's opportunism.

The Liberals have taken one step, at least, towards freeing themselves from the influence of corporation interests, by declaring publicly that contributors to Liberal party funds must not henceforth expect any support of their special interests by the party in return for campaign contributions. They will have the opportunity to show that they mean this, next session, by bringing in a resolution to amend the Elections Act, or supporting an independent resolution, to establish the publicity of campaign fund contributions.

Publicity of campaign funds is one of the planks in the new national platform of the organized farmers. It is proposed that the names of contributors, and the amounts contributed, to the parties, or to election candidates, for political expenses, shall be made public before election day. This form of publicity would let the people of Canada see for themselves whether election expenses of the old parties are paid by private corporations, with some of the privilege-seeking interests contributing to both sides, on the basis of sixty per cent. to the favored side, and forty per cent. to keep the opposition quiet.

Before the next general election, it is in every way likely that the Liberal party will have reached the point when it can no longer rely on campaign funds from the protectionist and subsidized interests. Issues are coming up before the people that are fundamental to the continued existence of the Liberal party. The old political game of running with the people and hunting with the hounds is played out. The Liberal party's stand must either be for freedom, against special privilege, or for coalition with the present government forces.

While the government is apparently letting things drift, as far as the public interest is concerned, the entrenched interests neither slumber nor sleep. In the event of Sir Thomas White being chosen again as government leader, at the next Unionist caucus, the Unionist party will possibly be ready for a general election some time this year. Sir Thomas White is perhaps the man to make Unionist government complete by bringing in protectionist Liberals, so-called, from Quebec. Behind a combination of this kind would be the one big union of transportation, finance, and manufacturing interests.

The next general election will probably eclipse anything ever before done in Canada, in the way of an organized political effort by privileged interests to hold their entrenched position. The growing power of the organized farmers, with economic power behind it, especially the upheaval in Ontario, is a sufficiently plain warning to special privilege that changes are due. But fat contributions to the campaign funds of both old parties cannot stave off the changes this time. Coalition, with all the protectionist forces in one camp, under unified command, with unlimited funds for electioneering, is likely to leave Mr. Mackenzie King, and a diminished group of Liberal party stalwarts, faced with the choice of standing definitely on the side of Liberalism, as it is expressed in the new national platform of the organized farmers, or of disappearing as a political factor in parliament.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Citizen
January 8 29

D 4118

MR. KING AT NEWMARKET.

To the little town of Newmarket, a canal zone not unknown to Liberal annals, Mr. MACKENZIE KING on Monday repaired to preach to the faithful assembled and to the country at large the new Opposition dispensation. Although marking the beginning of a speaking tour, which in the hopes of its authors, is to arouse a lethargic Liberalism to heroic impulse and action, Mr. KING'S speech—and we say this not by way of criticism—is hardly likely to find a permanent place in historic political oratory. For a close perusal of the speech, the text of which we have before us, impresses the truth that if it is worth noting for anything at all, it is for the multitude of things which it left unsaid; and this the more remarkable because of the times through which we are passing and the position of Mr. KING. We are at the close of four years of war and stand upon the threshold of reconstruction. Canada, in common with the rest of the world, stands confronted with issues and problems numerous and grave; everywhere about us old and established customs and political doctrines are being severely tested or swept entirely from their moorings; new and strange forms are coming to the surface; and on all sides the cry of the people is for ideas and policies to bring about the New Jerusalem on earth. Mr. KING, as the chosen leader of the historic Liberal party in Canada, might reasonably have been expected to contribute something of light and leading to such a troubled day. He has the blessing of youth and vigor, he is free from the boredom and botheration of office, he has had ample time and leisure to survey the body politic, to diagnose its many ills and to prescribe accordingly.

But, despite all of this, one looks in vain for a lead from Mr. KING. The tariff stands today, as always, the greatest issue of Canadian politics; Mr. KING passes it over in silence. Nationalization, with which is united the vital problem of transportation, challenges attention; Mr. KING utters no word. The financial problem is of the gravest; Mr. KING has no policy to offer. The re-establishment of soldiers into civil life demands the best of statesmanship; Mr. KING passes it by. And so to the end of the chapter.

Nor is there evidence in the speech of the much-heralded indictment of the Government's sins. For two years Union Government has been grappling with the gravest problems ever encountered by a Canadian administration. In that task it must have made mistakes, and, beyond question, it alienated the support of many of its old adherents. Mr. KING might have been expected to indict the Government for sins of commission and omission, to have catalogued its errors and its crimes. But despite all that has been said of Union, despite all the criticism and political blasphemy that has been hurled at its head, the most that Mr. KING could say against it yesterday was a few vague and harmless platitudes.

How disappointing such a singularly barren address must be to the old adherents of LAURIERISM, one can only hazard a guess. But disappointing, unquestionably, it must have been. Groping in the wilderness, far from the Promised Land of office, the party cried out for political manna, and platitudes, old and decayed, were the only reply.

For Liberalism, once so powerful and militant, it is a doleful prospect. Its King stands without a kingdom; its forces are divided; its moral strength is gone; its rank and fyle has found refuge with the Farmers. The Old Pilot, who steered the party craft so long and well is sadly missed, as Mr. KING steers an uncertain course. Ahead the breakers are angry and ominous, no banner floats proudly from the masthead, and the wind moans dismally through the rigging.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Journal
January 9—20

D 4119

MR. KING AT NEWMARKET.

To the little town of Newmarket, a canal zone not unknown to Liberal annals, Mr. MACKENZIE KING on Monday repaired to preach to the faithful assembled and to the country at large the new Opposition dispensation. Although marking the beginning of a speaking tour, which in the hopes of its authors, is to arouse a lethargic Liberalism to heroic impulse and action, Mr. KING's speech—and we say this not by way of criticism—is hardly likely to find a permanent place in historic political oratory. For a close perusal of the speech, the text of which we have before us, impresses the truth that if it is worth noting for anything at all, it is for the multitude of things which it left unsaid; and this the more remarkable because of the times through which we are passing and the position of Mr. KING. We are at the close of four years of war and stand upon the threshold of reconstruction. Canada, in common with the rest of the world, stands confronted with issues and problems numerous and grave; everywhere about us old and established customs and political doctrines are being severely tested or swept entirely from their moorings; new and strange forms are coming to the surface; and on all sides the cry of the people is for ideas and policies to bring about the New Jerusalem on earth. Mr. KING, as the chosen leader of the historic Liberal party in Canada, might reasonably have been expected to contribute something of light and leading to such a troubled day. He has the blessing of youth and vigor, he is free from the boredom and botheration of office, he has had ample time and leisure to survey the body politic, to diagnose its many ills and to prescribe accordingly.

But, despite all of this, one looks in vain for a lead from Mr. KING. The tariff stands today, as always, the greatest issue of Canadian politics; Mr. KING passes it over in silence. Nationalization, with which is united the vital problem of transportation, challenges attention; Mr. KING utters no word. The financial problem is of the gravest; Mr. KING has no policy to offer. The re-establishment of soldiers into civil life demands the best of statesmanship; Mr. KING passes it by. And so to the end of the chapter.

Nor is there evidence in the speech of the much-heralded indictment of the Government's sins. For two years Union Government has been grappling with the gravest problems ever encountered by a Canadian administration. In that task it must have made mistakes, and, beyond question, it alienated the support of many of its old adherents. Mr. KING might have been expected to indict the Government for sins of commission and omission, to have catalogued its errors and its crimes. But despite all that has been said of Union, despite all the criticism and political blasphemy that has been hurled at its head, the most that Mr. KING could say against it yesterday was a few vague and harmless platitudes.

How disappointing such a singularly barren address must be to the old adherents of LAURIERISM, one can only hazard a guess. But disappointing, unquestionably, it must have been. Groping in the wilderness, far from the Promised Land of office, the party cried out for political manna, and platitudes, old and decayed, were the only reply.

For Liberalism, once so powerful and militant, it is a doleful prospect. Its King stands without a kingdom; its forces are divided; its moral strength is gone; its rank and fyle has found refuge with the Farmers. The Old Pilot, who steered the party craft so long and well is sadly missed, as Mr. KING steers an uncertain course. Ahead the breakers are angry and ominous, no banner floats proudly from the masthead, and the wind moans dismally through the rigging.

Anyone who ever heard a Newmarket, Ont., audience sing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow" will understand the severe burden that already has fallen on the shoulders of the young Liberal leader.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4120

St. John Standard
January 9, 1920

WORKING THE ORACLE.

The speech in which the new leader of the Independent Liberals made his bow to the country has caused disappointment, if not disillusionment, among his followers. Liberal organs mournfully complain that vague generalities anent the valiant virtues of Liberal "principles" will not breathe new life into the moribund party, or cut much ice from the cold shoulder of the general public. No doubt they have reason.

Mr. King has a task of some magnitude on his hands. The National Convention that elected him leader gave him only generalities about the beauties and virtues of Liberal principles. Apparently it was content to let him find out what Liberal principles are, and, if possible, to interpret them to the general public. That is a large order for a young man who solved the labor question in America during the war. Liberal principles are rooted in tradition; they are embodied in the achievements of a past that is dead and done with. That is about all the general public knows about Liberal principles. Most of the aspirations of people of the present are inconsistent with Liberal principles.

It may be possible to build a new political philosophy upon Liberal principles; it may be possible to make a practical application of Liberal principles to the specific problems of the present that will impress the popular mind, and enable the Liberal party to command the confidence of the people. But Mr. King's announcement that Liberal principles are the only safe guide for the country in the times, possibly troubled times, that lie ahead of us, is far from satisfactory. That does not answer the questions the people are interested in; that offers no adequate guidance such as the people may want or are likely to accept. And unfortunately there are around Mr King no other Liberal leaders who seem capable of defining Liberal principles in terms most men would be willing to accept, or to illustrate the operation of said principles by showing their application to the national problems as they arise. On the Grand Trunk question, for instance, Mr. King himself boxed the compass, and other Opposition leaders approached it from various angles and bounced off again at various tangents. Many of the abler Liberals are still supporting the Union Government, and, for good or evil, are not much concerned about the treatment of present-day problems from the point of view of Liberal principles. Among the Opposition leaders about the only one who can speak to the nation in tones of authority is Hon. Mr. Fielding, and the ex-Minister has latterly been showing a certain cynicism towards the Liberal party, and is, anyway, too old-fashioned and set in his views to deal with present-day problems in a constructive manner. Such criticism as he has indulged in latterly has been mainly of a negative character; he has given no positive lead as to the principles on which in his opinion the work of reconstruction should be carried forward.

And what other lieutenants has Mr. King capable of giving the Liberal party guidance, and the nation a lead? There is Ernest Lapointe, who appears to be a coming man. A young man who enters Parliament, knowing practically only the French tongue, and in a few years achieves a reputation for eloquence in English, and makes himself master of Quebec after a struggle with so able a political tactician as Premier Gouin, is a force to be reckoned with. But Lapointe is hardly known outside his native province. He has been preoccupied forwarding his personal ambition, and consolidating his position —none too secure as yet. He is not a national figure; he has yet given no sign that he is capable of a national outlook, or even interest in national problems and policies.

Mr. King has no other lieutenants of outstanding abilities, in sight at the moment, who are capable of helping him in the hard task of making Liberal principles understandable to the people, and applying their illumination—if a haze is capable of illumination—to the problems of the day. Lemieux is sulking in his tent. Graham has apparently retired to the rest of old age. The canny Mackenzie is enjoying his hard-earned double indemnity as temporary leader, Martin is still a provincial figure with troubles of his own.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Quebec Telegraph
January 9 20

D 4121

THE LIBERAL POLICY

If ever there was a doubt in any mind as to the present and future policy of the Liberal party in federal politics, that doubt must have been dissipated by the recent speech of its leader, the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, at Newmarket, in the constituency in which he will be a candidate at the next federal elections. In language that admits of no misunderstanding he has declared that that policy is adherence to the platform laid down at the Liberal convention at Ottawa. That policy is one of union and stability in contrast with what the present federal government's own organ are still calling its policy of "drift."

Some of the most significant features of the new leader's address cannot but awake a responsive echo in the minds of its readers, and it is not surprising to know that it aroused considerable enthusiasm among those who heard it. While the success in Ontario of the movement engineered by the farmers and labor men was no surprise to Mr. Mackenzie King, he made it distinctly understood that for his part he was irrevocably opposed to anything in the shape of monopoly in matters of government by any class, and that not for an instant would any group exercise any influence over him. At the same time he felt that they mistook altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if they do not see in them evidences of liberal thought and feeling. Appreciation of any respect for the value of labor was claimed as a duty, and the speaker uttered no uncertain sound as to the responsibility of the country to its returned soldiers, than whom no class was more entitled to consideration. Perhaps no portion of this speech will more strongly appeal to the public at large than the assertion that if we are to be a united people, we must try to look at all sides of a question and to respect the views of others whose opinions differ from our own. And in this connection he urged that the Liberals who stood with Laurier in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them, as they are to demand a like attitude towards themselves. Mr. Mackenzie King's effort was a memorable one and gives promise of a leadership which will be able to unite under it all who are now anxious to see the country governed by a party with a mind of its own, and a policy that it can put into words:—A government that is something else than a combination for the sake of office.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Montreal Herald D 4122
January 10/20

Mackenzie King's First Important Address

THE outstanding feature of the address of the Hon. Mackenzie King at Newmarket, his first important platform utterance since his election to the Liberal leadership, was his claim that the policies of the Farmers' Party and the Labor Party are identical in all essentials with the policy of the Liberal Party, and that the latter supplied the only note of certainty and permanence. Old, responsible and enduring parties appear to him to be the best security for a wise and sane policy embracing all classes, races and creeds. He estimates that in the Ontario elections one-third of the votes cast for Farmer, Labor and Independent candidates was Liberal and that the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces. Liberalism is to him the expression of a wider human freedom whether for those who work in the country or in the city, whether in the workshop or the farm, in the woods or in the home.

The picture Mr. King draws is the work of a master hand, of one who is inspired by love of country and an earnest desire to render service to his fellow men. He spent some time denouncing the present Government, as if there were two opinions on the subject of irresolution, incapacity and drift. The uselessness of flogging a dead horse is proverbial. The Government hasn't a friend in any quarter, unless he holds a "cushy" job, yet on this occasion the new leader could hardly escape, we suppose, entering a few steps into the inviting field of criticism and censure, although not a great deal is to be gained by it.

What the country needs at the present time above all else is a strong man with a constructive policy and a clear vision. There is no other man in sight at this critical period to compare with Mr. King, who has, however, yet to prove himself in the judgment of the people. This address was only the first of a number of speeches to be delivered by him in various parts of the country. He promises to outline and explain the various planks in his platform. No one is better fitted for clear exposition, and he will on occasion address our fellow citizens of French origin in their own language, an advantage possessed by few of our public men outside of this province. Even if he himself does not achieve his high purpose of fostering good-will, uniting the different elements in the Dominion and fulfilling the obligation he freely acknowledges to solve present day problems, if his work succeeds in uncovering a better man then he will have advanced the common interest and the cause of good government and will be entitled to the thanks of the nation. In the meanwhile he is in a fair way to grow to those proportions of a broad statesman at which he earnestly aims.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

St. John Standard

January 10, 1920

THE LOGIC OF EVENTS.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King says: "Is it not significant, indeed, that there is not a political happening of first importance since the death of Sir Wilfrid Laurier which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom" One of the political happenings has been the rise of the Farmers' Party, which according to Mr. King himself is an "evidence of Liberal thought and feeling" operating in the rural districts. If this is so, it would look to the ordinary observer as if the farmers had come to the conclusion that Laurier had led the Liberal Party astray, and that the new leader was not to be trusted to lead it back into the straight and narrow way. Another political event of first importance has been the liquidation of the Grand Trunk, a course imposed upon the Government by the disastrous results of Laurier's Grand Trunk Pacific policy, "the crowning achievement of his career." Another political happening of some interest has been the sowing of seeds of division in the Liberal ranks in Quebec. But perhaps in the estimation of Mr. King the only political happening of first importance since the death of Laurier has been his ascension to the leadership of the distracted Liberal Party, though in that case the political wisdom of Sir Wilfrid and the whole Liberal Party has yet to be proven.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Aurora Banner
January 16 — 20

D 4124 (1)

Successful Banquet to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King

The complimentary banquet tendered to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King by the Liberals of North York, in the Town Hall, Newmarket on Tuesday evening of last week, was a magnificent success. The spacious building was crowded from top to bottom with staunch friends and admirers from all parts of the riding, each anxious to do honor to the distinguished guest.

The hall was decorated throughout in a most elaborate manner and was ablaze with electric lights. Large and handsomely painted shields bore the mottoes: "Welcome King our Leader," "King and a United Canada," "North York the Cradle of Freedom."

The excellent and bounteous menu served so efficiently by the Cole Co. of Toronto and no less than 40 local helpers was fitting to the occasion and the music supplied by Bodley's Double Orchestra of Toronto, was greatly applauded. Every detail of the banquet was carried out systematically and elaborately and it was conceded on all sides to be the finest banquet ever held in the Banner Riding of the County of York. No less than 550 people partook of the banquet including over 100 ladies.

After the serving, the tables were moved from the main hall and the capacity audience reseated, the speaking taking place from the platform, the President of the North York Liberal Association, Mr. Howard Cane of Newmarket, introducing the several speakers. Others occupying seats on the platform were Mr. I. E. Pedlow, M.P., for South Renfrew, Mr. W. D. Euler, M.P., for Waterloo, Mr. Andrew Hayden, general secretary of the Liberal Organization Committee for the Dominion of Canada, Ottawa, Mr. C. Larkin and Mr. W. D. McGregor of Toronto, Mayor Bassett of Aurora.

Letters of regret at not being able to be present were received from Duncan C. Ross, Chas. Maguire, E. F. Pardee, Sir Alan Aylesworth, Hon. G. P. Graham and others.

Hon. Mr. King was given a most cordial reception when he entered the banquet hall.

The Chairman read several letters from prominent Liberals who were unable to be present. One of these was from Hon. Geo. P. Graham, who, in referring to Mr. King, said he "possesses all the elements of successful leadership."

Mayor Eves of Newmarket, briefly welcomed the Liberal Leader and other outsiders to the town. His aged father was one of those who was on the platform.

Mr. King said that he proposed to review what appeared to be the outstanding features of the political situation as it exists in Canaday to-day, and to endeavor to present the attitude of Liberalism. It must be realized, he said, that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it was equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from the conditions as they exist in other countries.

"This is not a moment to theorize, it is not a moment to rush to extremes, neither is it a moment to stand pat," said Mr. King. "It is a time, above all others, to be essentially practical, to look facts square in the face, to make an accounting of our national assets and liabilities in terms that are human as well as material, and then, understanding what our problems are (not in a visionary mood, but in a concrete and comprehensive way), resolutely to meet them and attempt a solution that will make not only for material progress, but also for human freedom and for ever-widening possibilities in social well being and individual achievement."

Mr. King spoke of the effect of the great war upon the world. "The changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order," he said, "an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within." A true simile of the world's condition to-day was that of the ocean seething after a storm.

"It is a new attitude and a new spirit that are most needed to solve the problems at the presen time," he continued. "A spirit and attitude of good-will to replace the attitude and spirit of ill-will which war never fails to brtathe. That spirit," he said, "continues to lurk in all sorts of places, both high and obscure. It manifests itself in high places through a distrust of others in the actual use of power, in the continuance and enactment of repressive measures long after the reason for such is gone. It manifests itself from below through similar distrust in an indifference to rights, whether of persons or property, in the defiance of law and order. We shall fail utterly to grasp the significance of the legacy the war has left unless we note carefully every passion the war has roused and every prejudice upon which it has sought to play.

"It is in the creation of this new spirit, of this new attitude, that Liberalism's obligations to the present day problems will find the most important task." Mr. King enumurated some of the phases of work which Liberals were called upon to perform.

In front he placed the attitude to be assumed to those who differ from the Liberals in opinion. Here Mr. King referred to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, saying: "Our own great Leader in the political battles of 1911 and 1917 did not escape his share of the penalty of greatness where it looks with eyes beyond its day and has the courage to stand or fall by conviction. Pure in life, noble in purpose, patriotic in aim, in all these respects second to no other political leader of his generation, Sir Wilfrid Laurier more than any other man was misunderstood or misrepresented by many of those who in former days found their delight in sounding his praises. Is it not indeed significant that there is not a political happening of first importance since his death which has not afforded unmistakable evidence of his political wisdom and sagacious patriotism? The injustice done his life must be righted in the justice to be done his memory."

Consideration, continued the Liberal Leader, must be shown now to those who thought as Sir Wilfrid did.

"But the Liberals who stood with Sir Wilfrid in 1917, if they are to be true to the first principles of Liberalism, must be as ready to accord sincerity of purpose to those who differed from them as they are to demand like attitude toward themselves.

"We must also respect those who, while sharing with us in large measure the principles and policies we advocate, have aims and aspirations of their own. And here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our National Society; the Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans. Here we pass from differences between individuals to consider possible differences between classes."

Speaking of the recent Ontario elections, Mr. King said that, surprising as they were, one had not to seek far for an explanation. "First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a Government that has usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves, and had become the chief ally of the Federal Administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Sir William Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office and the members in their seats in the Legislature may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If, however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-government it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds.

Mr. King explained the Farmers' movement on the ground of this compact.

"Disgusted," he said, "with what seemed to them a frame up by political leaders whereby those in office or in the Legislature might be retained in power, the people in the rural districts, who had been doing a lot of thinking on their own account, decided to have candidates of their own. They were assisted in this by the Liberals of the province, who either withdrew their candidates or decided not to nominate in thirty-seven ridings. The Liberal Leader of the Province, Hartley Dewart, who never was a party to the compact of which I have spoken but who fought it from the outset, tackled some of the more difficult Tory strongholds, not with Farmer candidates, but with Liberals who, like himself, were in sympathy with the policy wholly friendly to the Farmers, and he won in a number of those constituencies. It must never be forgotten that, while the Farmer candidates were returned in largest numbers the overthrow of the Hearst Government was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government; a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in a whole hearted combination."

Mr. King reviewed the figures of the voting, and analyzed the vote in Ontario.

"The point I wish to make at the moment is that, as Liberals, Liberals in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether these agrarian movements if we do not see is them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

Speaking of Labor and the Liberal attitude, Mr. King said:

"Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider, human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country on the farms or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; wherher it be the well being of women and children that is at stake in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we, as Liberals, have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality or opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

The Liberal Leader also referred to the war veterans, saying: "If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration it is the men who risked their lives in battle and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the call of the world's freedom. The war will be without its meaning to our

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

Aurora Banner
January 16—20
4125

day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order resplendent with the concepaion of liberty for which they gave their lives.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class-conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them, or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

"War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at domination in national affairs then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion and in the end retrogression rather advance.

"Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of Government I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to Government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans or the newly enfranchised female voters."

Mr. King made an appeal for the abolishing of race and religious difference prejudices. "Let us remember, however, that whatever perpetuates or augments that illwill adds to the problem of Government in Canada to-day, and that whatever of goodwill we can engender in its stead will by so much lessen and lighten the magnitude and weight of the problems which confront us. As Liberals we can have but one attiaude toward prejudice whenever it raises its vicious head, and that is to strike it hard, strike it, if that be possible, to the death.

"We must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity.

"Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas or particular interests, or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each and willing co-operation on the part of all by which alone the war was won? shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the sperial interest of a class or the well being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives with thought of naught, save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

"If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a Manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a Farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide East and West, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the the organization sooner or later of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint control by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The war veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the army and civil authorities which takes us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, of any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

"Parties are necessary, useful and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfilment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal traditions to hold it through to the highest principles and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

"With the Liberal forces at work in Canada to-day among the Farmers in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among the great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations, are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to with-stay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all."

Speaking of the present Dominion Administration, Mr. King said: "It is owing to the instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of State is in such distress to-day. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of the country in a more hopeless state or muddle, nor an Administration more disorganized, than is the case of the present time. A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action."

Mr. King reviewed the history of the Union Government since its inception. He spoke of the absence of the Premier and the affairs of State being allowed to drift along.

Referring to the Grand Trunk purchase, Mr. King said that as approval had not yet been granted by the shareholders in England, and as Parliament would be reassembling in a few weeks, it was not yet too late "to give Canadian taxpayers who have to meet these obligations the same rights as are given to the English shareholders; this right of approval should still be preserved to the people of Canada."

Referring again to the Government, Mr. King said: "The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence parts unknown, and who is to left the ship for a long time, just as he left in 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence" The Government had no policy, no constructive thought or idea—simply that the party might hang on a little longer. It would be ludicrous if it were not tragic. He referred to the statement recently issued by the Premier as further confirmation of the absence of any policy on the part of the Government.

"This," said the Liberal Leader, "is the natural fruit of Unionism, and it should be an object lesson to all citizens for years to come. It should cause the advocates of group government to pause in their advocacy of a system which leads only to compromise, subterfuge and inaction."

Mr. King expressed his thanks to the Liberals of North York for nominating him again as their candidate. "Surprise has been expressed in some quarters," said Mr. King, "that, having suffered defeat in 1917, I should have accepted renomination by the Liberals of this riding at a time when Parliament has just passed an act, introduced at the last session by one of the Liberal members by which the election of any candidate for the Federal Parliament is rendered void in the event of his seeking election for more than one constituency at a single election.

"Had I not been through one political battle with the Liberals of North York, there might be some occasion for surprise; and had our cause not suffered defeat more through a fraudulent franchise than from any other reason, there might be even greater occasion for surprise. The people of Canada mistake my interest in politics if they believe that, gratifying as is the sense of political victory, it weighs with me for one moment in comparison with the vindication of principles of political freedom for which our forefathers sacrificed their all, and which our fathers taught us to hold in reverent regard.

"In tracing the Liberal party of Canada to its source, we are brought back to the years of opposition to the arrogance of the Family Compact, to the long and bitter struggle against an autocratic Executive, to the demands for representative and responsible government, in which political struggles the Reformers of York played a part second to none.

"It was the electors of York who chose my grandfather as their standard-bearer. When after a lapse of two generations, the descendants of these very men invite me to take up that same standard of political freedom, at a moment when it is being lowered by a Government that has availed itself of measures more arbitrary and autocratic than any enacted since those early reforms were obtained, and which in many ways has shown itself more indifferent and less responsible to the people's representativts in Parliament than any Governmtnt we have had in years, all that there is of chivalry in my nature and of power ih tradition compels me to accept the nomination with gratitude and pride, be the consequences what they may."

Mr. King also made pleasant referehces to Sir Alan Aylesworth and Sir William Mulock.

Mr. H. D. Ramsden, President of Toronto and North York Liberal Association, also joined in welcoming the visitors. He spoke feelingly of the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and referred to the National Convention last August as one of the most democratic ever held. Mr. Ramsden spoke in glowing language of Mr. King.

The Liberal Leader, the speaker said, had made a life long study of Labor matters in Canada, and was one of the foremost authorities on the subject, not only in Canada, but in the United States. This country needs leadership, but at the present time there is none in Canada.

Dr. H. H. Horsey, President of the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association, also spoke briefly. He, too, paid high tribute to Mr. King's ability. The Liberal Leader was not only trained in the themes of Labor matters, but also in a practical way. "He is a man of sterling character, whom we can all get behind and fight for," he declared.

Those on the platform, in addition to the speakers, included Messrs. P. C. Larkin; W. D. Euler, M.P., for North Waterloo; Isaac Pedlow, M.P. for Renfrew; Mayor Bassett of Aurora, and Andrew Hayden, General Secretary of the National Liberal Committee, of Ottawa.

* * *

12 Jan. 1920 Halifax D 4126

LIBERALISM AND CANADIAN UNITY

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Halifax Chronicle
January 13—26

D 4127

(1)

STABILITY AND THE GREAT NE

Hon. MacKenzie King Proclaims the Message of Liberalism as the Solution of the Problems Which Face the Country—The Clear Call for Welding All the Progressive Forces into One Great Forward Movement—The Liberal Leader and Mr. Lapointe Won Cheers of Two Splendid Meetings.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, successor to Sir Wilfrid Laurier as Leader of the Liberal Party, last night first brought his personal message to the people of Nova Scotia at a mass meeting at the Orpheus Theatre, and made it evident that he was a chieftain of no mean ability. The audience which greeted him, in perhaps a typically Nova Scotian attitude, might have been composed of natives of Missouri, and was patiently waiting to be shown, greeting Mr. King with more or less mechanical applause at the outset. He had not spoken long, however, before he had carried away his audience, even a number of people in the gallery who seemed to have come with the express object of making things unpleasant for him. He was listened to with the deepest of attention, and the most important of his points elicited applause that was spontaneous and fortissimo. When he left the theatre there was a demonstration which lasted for several minutes, and there was little doubt that the personality of the new Liberal Leader had left a profound impression.

More than two thousand citizens heard Mackenzie King at the Orpheus last night, and many more would have been present had Halifax possessed an auditorium with sufficient seating capacity. The doors of the theatre were opened at half-past seven, and thirty minutes earlier there were great crowds at both the Granville and Barrington Street entrances. At a quarter to eight the Orpheus was S.R.O. plus, with people standing in all the aisles and seated on the steps leading to the stage.

A Representative Audience.

The audience was exceedingly catholic in composition, with men and women, young and old, of all ranks of life. College students and returned soldiers were very much in evidence. Most noticeable, however, was the number of citizens of avowedly Conservative belief who listened to the leader of the rival party with the deepest attention, and who did not fail to applaud many of his statements. In the balcony was a small group who endeavored to "rag" Mr. King on his lack of military service, but they were soon silenced.

promptly we will hear far less about Grip or Influenza."
The treatment for colds in the head simple and may be handled at home. Gr Fix, which may be secured at any druggis affords a means whereby relief will be giv in a night and even an attack of grippe ov come in 48 hours. The preparation is o which will be approved by any physician it provides, in capsule form, just the dru he would prescribe. A full list of these printed on each box.
The action of Grip Fix ism to keep th system open, to quickly relieve the clogge up condition of the head reduce the fe

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Ald. John B. Douglas, President of the Provincial Liberal Association, was in the chair, and on the platform were seated D. D. Mackenzie, M.P., Hon. E. H. Armstrong, Professor H. L. Stewart, C. C. Blackadar, R. H. Mackay, Hon. R. M. Macgregor, Col. J. L. Ralston, Rev. H. B. Clarke, Attorney General Daniels, Dr. I. M. Lovitt, A. B. Magillivray, J. H. Sinclair, M.P., William Duff, M.P., Hon. George E. Faulkner, Hon. H. H. Wickwire, C. U. Mader, George W. Kyte, Hon. J. Osman, L. H. Martel, Dr. J. B. Black, Andrew Hayden, and others.

A telegram from Premier Murray was read by Mr. Douglas announcing the former's regret at his absence. Mr. Douglas happily welcomed Hon. Mackenzie King to Nova Scotia and briefly introduced him, saying that he was wearing the mantle of the greatest Canadian ever produced, and calling him a future Prime Minister of Canada.

Appeal For Stability and Unity.

Mr. King's speech was eloquent and inspiring, an appeal for unity and stability to enable Canada to face the great problems which were confronting her. He spoke of the three great groups, the Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans, and said that beneath the aspirations of each was the great underlying prin-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Halifax Chronicle
January 13 20

D 4128 (2)

ciple of Liberalism. He claimed that a true Parliament must be like a mirror and represent all these groups; otherwise there could be no hope of a united Canada. It was the work of Liberalism to include the essentials of demands of all of these groups and prevent them from becoming too class-conscious, welding them into one great forward movement. He expressed his complete opposition to monopily of government by any one class.

In appealing for the formation of a great party with a broad platform, Mr. King dwelt upon the value of the traditions of Liberalism. He also spoke of the lives of public men and said that they were no cowards for they were obliged to endure the sneers and insults of men probably less worthy than they were.

A Ship Without a Chart.

He spoke much of unity of command in an endeavor to show wherein Union Government had utterly failed. He said that it had been formed to win the war, nothing else; and now that the war was ended and won, it was seeking a pretext for holding on. Regarding Sir Robert Borden, he said that the agreement had been that the nominal Prime Minister was to go so far away that no one would be able to communicate with him. His sketches of current happenings in Ottawa and the nebulous policy of the Administration won much laughter and applause. The ship of state, he said, was quite without a chart.

Mr. King devoted much time to an exposition of the platform drawn up at the Liberal Convention, stressing the financial situation, and the suggested tariff changes in an effort to reduce the high cost of living.

Warm Tribute to Mr. Fielding.

Speaking of the defeat of Reciprocity and the bogus cries raised against it, the Liberal Party was prepared to stand and fight for it again. He paid a warm tribute to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, "that noble statesman," who had worked for reciprocity so courageously and brilliantly. "There is no man," he said, "who had devoted himself more generously, completely, unselfishly and honorably to the service of his country and to fighting for the people of Canada than has your own Mr. Fielding. He has sacrificed his health in the country's service, but he will live to see his policy triumphant and his splendid efforts crowned with victory." (Cheers.)

Referring to the demands of the Great War Veterans and a letter from them asking him to declare his attitude, he recited what occurred in the House of Commons and declared that he stood now as he stood then.

MR. ERNEST LAPOINTE, M. P.

The Attitude of Liberals.

He spoke reticently of his own war record, refusing to traffic in his personal patriotism for political ends and branded as untrue the rumor that there was any collusion between parties to stave off an election. The Liberals had only one attitude; they wanted a fair and equitable Franchise Act, then an appeal to the people. In conclusion he said that only as Canada became a united people would she become a great nation. The applause which greeted his final words was deafening and lasted for several minutes.

After Mr. King had left, Mr. D. D. MacKenzie spoke in a happy vein. He said that the Liberal Party was to be congratulated upon the talents displayed by its new chief, and predicted victory at the next election.

Good Cheer from Quebec.

The last speaker of the evening was Mr. Ernest Lapointe, member for Quebec East, who in an address which won much enthusiasm and laughter, pled for complete Canadian unity, described the current administration in no very flattering terms, calling the term "Union" a lie and saying that while Borden was wintering in the South, Canadian Government was hibernating in Ottawa. He declared that Quebec would have neither Mr. Meighen nor Mr. Calder and stigmatized the Government as irresponsible and the Parliament as unrepresentative. He repeated Mr. King's statement that the Liberals were eager for a new election.

Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe also addressed a second meeting at St. Patrick's Hall on similar topics. It was well attended and equally enthusiastic.

In introducing Mr. King at the Orpheus, Alderman Douglas said that a warm welcome was extended to him by all thoughtful Nova Scotians, irrespective of political belief, because they understood the responsibilities of a man charged with the leadership of a great historic party. He was wearing the mantle of the greatest Canadian ever produced, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose memory would remain bright and green for generations, and whose truest monument was the greatness of Canada. Mr. King's ancestors had fought for the cause of freedom, and his mind was richly endowed by years of studying of the critical problems of the state. It was safe to predict that he would be a future Prime Minister of the Dominion.

Message From the Premier.

Mr. Douglas then read the following message from Premier Murray, who was to have presided at the meeting, but was detained in North Sydney by illness:

North Sydney, Jan. 12, 1920.

Hon. Mackenzie King,
Halifax, N. S.:

Owing to the condition of my health, it is a matter of great regret that I will be unable to preside at your meeting in Halifax tonight, but I take this opportunity of extending to you as Leader of the Liberal Party, and also to Mr. Lapointe, a hearty welcome to Nova Scotia. I feel you have behind you the general support of the Party in this Province ,and I am quite sure your meeting in Halifax will furnish evidence of this fact. I exceedingly regret missing seeing you, but you are in the hands of good friends who will do everything possible to make your visit a pleasant one.

(Sgd.) G. H. MURRAY.

Hon. Mr. Kings's Speech.

Having concluded his introductory remarks, Mr. King said that in his opinion the great need in Canada today was stability; stability as regards conditions throughout the country, and stability in matters of government. In this connection, he opened his address by reference to the world unrest as it had followed in the wake of war, and as it was demonstrating itself in the different class movements which were coming into such prominence at the present time. On these matters he spoke as follows:

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"Let us realize that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it is equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions as they exist in other countries.

"For many a year to come the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which does not reckon with that fact, is certain sooner or later to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us.

Effects of World Upheaval.

"Let us remember that the world has just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization has been torn into shreds. The nations are now busily engaged in patching it together anew. It will be some time yet before the process is complete. In physical outline the boundaries of countries have changed. But the changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order, an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to its depths. A truer simile of the world's condition today is that of the ocean seething after storm. For years to come the tide of emotion will continue to surge in human breasts with seemingly irresistible flow, mounting ever and anon high with hope and then falling away into depths of despondency and despair. A recognition of this great truth should make us view with great patience the restlessness of our day; it should awaken a sympathy with all these movements which bespeak an aroused conscience, and sound a new note in human aspirations. Here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our national society—the farmers, labor, and the war veterans.

The Agrarian Movement.

"It is no mere coincidence that we have the rise of the Grain Growers Party in the West and the United Farmers in Ontario at the time they have come. With the defeat of Reciprocity, a Grain Growers Party in the West was inevitable. Sir Wilfrid Laurier saw this clearly, and told the people of Canada so very plainly. It was not Sir Wilfrid's fault, nor the fault of the Liberal Party, and least of all the fault of Hon. Mr. Fielding and his friends in the Maritime Provinces, that Reciprocity did not carry. It was the forces that were opposed to a wise and progressive Liberalism.

"When, on May 14, 1918, the farmers of Ontario and Quebec came in thousands from all parts of these Provinces to the very doors of Parliament to protest against the broken pledges of the administration, and the arbitrary measures being enacted and arbitrary methods being employed by the Government in carrying out many of its measures and the administration declined to permit them to enter the building, and met with blank indifference—one might almost say with contempt—their respectful petitions; it was equally inevitable that they should return to their homes determined upon political action through their existing organizations. In so far as these movements are in the nature of protest against arbitrary behavior on the part of the administration, and are evidence of determination on the part of those engaged in agriculture to secure a wider measure of economic freedom, there can be only one attitude toward them on the part of all true Liberals, and that an attitude of whole-hearted approval and co-operation in an endeavor to obtain reform already too long delayed.

"Of the events of the year just passed, one of the most significant has been the results attending upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a Provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of these surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics.

Liberal Attitude Toward Farmers.

"Liberals should be the last to deplore any constitutional act on the part of the people to maintain their sovereign rights. It is in this way that governments are taught to respect the people's will. It must never be forgotten that, whilst the Farmer candidates were returned in large numbers, the overthrow of the Hearst Government in Ontario was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government, a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in whole-hearted combination.

"As Liberals, then, in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

Liberal Attitude Towards Labor.

"And the same is true of the Labor movement. Here, again, is another large class in our national society, which has become conscious, not only of economic injustices in the past, but of the need for united action to gain that fuller expression of personal and economic freedom which is of the very essence of all true Liberalism. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it? Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred by my Liberalism. I can think of the problems of industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

Liberal Attitude Toward Veterans.

Now, as to the returned soldiers, or, more appropriately, the war veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule, and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

"Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular systems. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Supreme Task of Liberalism.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

"War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at domination in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion, and, in the end, retrogression rather than advance.

"Parliament ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. It is absurd for the Dominion of Canada to have a Parliament that has relatively no farmers in it, to speak for the farmers, and no one from the ranks of Labor to speak for Labor. I hope there will be in our next Parliament representatives of both these classes of our people, and also men from the ranks of the War Veterans, to speak for those who have served their country with such heroism and for those who lie in Flanders' fields and cannot speak for themselves. I think our next Parliament must be truly representative if we are to secure unity and contentment in this country.

"Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of government, I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing, or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly enfranchised female voters. I know of no finer maxim of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym, enunciated in the reign of Charles I, which is as applicable to our politics today as it was to England in that unsettled period:

"'That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the State to the common good.'

"Certainly, such a form of government is not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by any class. It is only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine good-will.

Politics of Imperial Unity.

"And this leads me to speak of the East and the West of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful diversified resources, of the Prairie Provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests; or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the War was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class, or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with thought of naught save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

Great Political Party Needed.

"If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide East and West, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farmer communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The War Veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the Army and the Civil authorities, which take us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, or any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation, and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

Lessons From the War.

"A great political party has a significance scarcely dreamed of by many who today appreciate too little what continuity of effort in a great cause means in the maintenance of freedom, and in the ultimate achievement of victory for politics with which its name and history have been identified.

"Let me make a comparison which will appeal to all. In the great war just ended, did past history and tradition mean nothing to the historic regiments which participated in the fight for freedom? Did the Black Watch and the Gordon Highlanders signify nothing to Scotchmen and men of Scotch descent? Did the Guards and the Middlesex add nothing of fighting quality to Englishmen and sons of Englishmen? Were the Dublin Fusiliers and the Inniskillen Dragoons mere names to Irishmen and those who fought at their side in these historic regiments? More than one Canadian soldier will ever regret the loss of identity of his regiment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but is there a Canadian living who would take from the colors of our army the names of the battles displayed upon them?

"All through history the liberties of our human society have been preserved, and new liberties won by great fighting forces, the military and naval forces in the political arena; and the finer the tradition of the fighting forces in either field, the greater has been the measure of their achievement.

Permanent Parties Necessary.

"It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

"Let me make one further observation from the experience of war. No one will question that the Allied countries were one in aim, or that there was other than the strongest reasons to compel co-operation in their resistance of the Central Powers. Their fighting capacity and their heroism was not for a moment in doubt. It was not, however, till unity of command was established that the tide of battle turned, and that victory by the Allied armies became assured.

"With the Liberal forces at work in Canada today among the farmers, in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to withstay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies, except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to cooperate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all.

"Not only must we have stability and unity of purpose and aim as regards the liberal and progressive forces throughout the country; we must, if we are to have progress and prosperity in the nation, have stability in matters of Government as well. It is not enough to help to calm the restless spirit of the nation; it is also necessary to have its affairs directed in accordance with some policy which is known, and of which the country as a whole has approved. There must be a chart and compass which will give certainty of direction to the ship of state. It is owing to instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time.

Policy of Drift Reviewed.

"A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action. Let me briefly review one or two outstanding circumstances which all present will recall.

"It will be remembered that the Union Government was formed for the purpose of the election of 1917. The Union was preceded by the War Measures Act, the Military Voters Act and the War-time Elections Act, which, were the truth wholly known, could be shown to have been more of a determing factor in bringing about the Union than aught else. While the war was on, the cry "Win the war," was a sufficient rallying cry, sufficient for election purposes, and sufficient for a policy as long as the war lasted. The electors were told that the Union was formed for that purpose and for that only. It was not a Government for the purpose of reconstruction after the war, or for any purpose other than that of helping to "win the war," according, at all events, to the professions of the Prime Minister at the time the administration was formed, and of those who entered his cabinet.

The Liberal Convention.

Twice in its history, the Liberal Party of Canada has held a National Convention. The first time was in the summer of 1893, when the party adopted a platform of policies and principles in which it was returned to power three years later. The second occasion was in August of the last year.

Perhaps it would be best to let the platform of the Liberal Party speak for itself. Here are some of the resolutions that were unanimously adopted at the convention, and which now constitute a part of the policy of the Liberal Party.

First and foremost in the Liberal platform is the demand for economy in the administration of public affairs. If there is one criticism above another to which the present admisistration has laid itself open, it is the vast extravagance and waste there has been of public monies at a time when, of all times, the strictest economy was needed. We all realize that the expenditures of war were necessarily abnormal and necessarily very great; but one would have expected that during the period of war, and especially subsequent to it, the Government would have economized in every possible way. Instead of that, an analysis of the Public Accounts will show that there is not a department of the civil government in which the expenditure has not been vastly greater during and since the period of the war than it has ever hitherto been. In addition to that the Government has been taking on new liabilities on an enormous scale.

It is hardly possible to believe—but it is nevertheless true—that the last act of the administration, the taking over of the Grand Trunk System, wos one involving the country in a transaction amounting to over 500 millions of dollars (a sum greater than the total national debt of Canada at the time the Liberals went out of office in 1911), and this at a time when the public debt of this country had reached the enormous figure of over two and a half billions of dollars.

Of recent years, the country has been living almost entirely upon borrowed money. We have had loan, not only to meet the expenses of the war, but also to help meet current expenditure. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the Liberal Convention declared that national disaster would overtake this country should the present method of financing the country's affairs be continued, and that the Convention resolved that the serious nature of the country's financial situation called for the profoundest consideration of all patriotic citizens, and the exercise of the severest economy by the Government.

High Cost of Living.

But how, it will be asked, are the people to carry the burden of increased taxation along with the ever-increasing cost of living. Here we come to what seems to me the problem of problems in Canlada today. Whilst there are classes, large and small, to which some belong while others do not, there is one class to which all whether men, women, or children, belong irrespective of trade or occupation, of race or creed, of origin or circumstances, irrospective even of politics, and that is the great body of consumers. And there is one element in our national economy which affects every member of this class in greater or less degree, and that is the cost of living. There is not a man or woman, there is not a young person, boy or girl, there is not a father or mother, the head of a family, or any individual having the responsibility of little children, or of others dependent on him, who has not in some measure been affected by the increase in the cost of living which has made itself felt of recent years.

It is here that we are at once brought together face to face with the contrast as it exists between the two political parties in Canada today. The Unionist Party, with its policy of drift, the logical and inevitable fruit of the continuance of a Union which has served the purpose for which it was formed, and has ceased to have any real purpose other than that of holding on to office, and the constructive and progressive policy of the Liberal Party as framed by the National Liberal Convention, which assembled in Ottawa in August of last year.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Tariff.

"If the problem of the cost of living is to be met in a manner which will be of advantage at once to the consumers of the country and to its producers, this can only be effected by carefully considered changes in the tariff, which will have the effect of stimulating and increasing production, and of removing such artificial barriers to legitimate trade as cause prices of the necessaries of life to be unduly enhanced to consumers. The wealth of the country can only be increased by developing our natural resources, and there is no more effective way of developing these resources, whether they be of the land, of the sea, of the mine, or of the forest, than by placing the necessary instruments of production, in all of these industries, within reach of those engaged in them at as low a cost as may be possible. Accordingly, the Liberal Platform has declared that duties on all instruments of production, and the raw materials entering into the same, should be removed.

"Then, there is a large class of articles, those which constitute the necessaries of life, which should be made as reasonable to consumers as legitimate manufacture and trade will permit.

"Before leaving the Tariff, I should add that, at the Convention the Liberals again expressed their faith in Reciprocity in natural products with the United States, and determined that, if opportunity should be afforded to carry out the free interchange of natural products, as provided in the Reciprocity Agreement of 1911, the earliest advantage would be taken of that opportunity.

"Realizing the importance of Agriculture, the Convention considered very carefully and fully means whereby the interests of this great industry could be best promoted in Canada. Nothing could better disclose the intention of the Liberal Party to render every possible assistance to Agriculture than the resolution passed, which pledges the Party's support to policies for which the farmers have long been contending.

"Not only was careful consideration given to the Farmers, but the interests of Labor also have been made a special concern. The National Liberal Convention agreed to accept the terms of the Labor convention and general principles associated with the League of Nations and incorporated in the conditions of peace.

"With respect to the Great War Veterans, the Party's platform is equally specific and emphatic. This part of the platform was drafted by a committee of which Colonel Ralston of Halifax was the Chairman.

A Fair Franchise.

"Another important resolution was one passed by the Convention respecting election frauds. I shall not read the resolution, but shall pass at once to speak of the necessity that there is in this country at the moment for a Franchise Act which will ensure to the electors, in accordance with a right which every citizen and British subject possess a fair and just franchise.

Speaking of the Franchise leads me to say a word with reference to the subject of a general election.

"One sees it repeatedly asserted in the press, for reason best known to those who are responsible for the assertion, that neither of the old political parties desire an election at the present time. Some have even gone so far as to insinuate that there was likely to be collusion between the leaders of the parties in the House of Commons to avoid an election, on the specious plea that there is much unrest and that there is no telling who may come to occupy the Treasury benches. Let me deal with this assumption and deal with it very plainly.

"I am not in the confidence of the Government, and, therefore, am not in a position to know what the views of its members are. I imagine that in this one single instance they are united, they are all doubtless agreed that, be the wishes of the people what they may, they, the members of the administration are there and intend to hold on to office just as long as this can be done with the support of their following in the House.

As most of the following never expect to see the House of Commons again, the Government has only to threaten resignation to bring them into line, as has been done already on three occasions, first, when the Prime Minister threatened to dissolve Parliament if his followers persisted in taking away the right of his friends to receive titles; second, when he threatened the resignation of the Ministry if approval were not forthwith given the Peace Treaty—an approval which, as the debate went to show, was a mere performance and did not affect in any particular the signing of the terms of peace; and third, when the House of Commons was told only a few months ago, that unless its members accepted the report of the Committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment the Government would resign. Be the subject as it may, it would seem that the Ministry has only to threaten resignation either behind closed doors or, when the following gets particularly restive, in the open, for enough of the following to fall into line to see the Ministry through. We may expect, then, so far as the Government and its supporters are concerned, that any pretext will be deemed sufficient to avoid an appeal to the electorate, provided that by keeping vital issues postponed they can successfully continue the policy of drift, regardless of its effect upon the country, either in the present or for the future.

Though unable to speak for the party in power, I am in a position where I can speak for the Liberal Party, and for the Liberal members who comprise the Opposition in the House of Commons. What their wishes as individual members may be, I cannot say. No man would go out of his way to court an election any more than in his own interest or the interest of the country. Too great frequency in elections is not a condition to be desired, but the question is not one of individual desires, or even the desire of a parliamentary group.

As Liberals, believing in self-government as the foundation of all our liberties, and in representative and responsible government as the only form of self-government worthy the name, there can be but one attitude towards a government that never was representative, and that only figuratively speaking could be regarded as responsible, and that is that the sooner it makes way for a government that is founded upon the will of the governed, and is truly representative of the people as a whole, the better for peace, order and good government in our midst.

National Unity.

There are other resolutions passed by the Convention to which I might allude, but having already spoken at too great length, I shall refer only to resolutions which relate to our national life One is a resolution on Canadian Autonomy, the other on National Unity. They express the natural antipathy of all true Liberals to anything in the nature of centralized Imperialism, and the desire for a united Canada which should inspire all citizens of the Dominion.

It is not only as regards differences between persons and classes, racial and religious differences, national and international differences, that we must seek in a spirit of good will to bind up the wounds and to bridge the chasms which the roused passions of the war have served to widen and create; we must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Unity Established by War.

The war, we believe, has put an end forever to geographical divisions even in thought, so far as the unity of our Dominion is concerned. Not only in the eyes of the world, but in our own eyes that single word "Canada" on the shoulder strap of our soldiers in the fighting armies overseas has welded this country into one as no symbol of nationhood in the past has ever united it. It was for the unity of Canada, the unity of the British Empire of which Canada is a part, the unity of aim and purpose of the free nations associated as Allies in the titanic struggle for the world's freedom that our brave heroes gave their lives in the fields of Flanders and of France, and the word comes back to us from them—

"If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep though poppies grow
On Flanders' Fields."

National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platform must be so drafted and our political politics so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

Mr. D. D. Mackenzie, who was greeted with enthusiasm, said that although it might possibly be true that no successor to Laurier could be found, still the Liberal Party was to be congratulated upon the talents displayed by its new chieftan. He had spoken of his opponents with charity, but there was a little twinkle in his eye which said plainly: "Mackenzie'll give it to them." The gathering which greeted him in Nova Scotia was a magnificent one, but every town in Nova Scotia from Yarmouth to Louisburg would have done the same.

Mr. Mackenzie spoke of Premier Murray, saying that he had stood for Liberalism, and as the honored leader of Liberalism in Nova Scotia for twenty-five years and that the party had a proud record here as elsewhere in every Province in Canada. The history of Nova Scotia had only one black spot since Confederation, the Holmes-Thompson Government, which had got in by a fluke, but had been speedily wiped off the slate, the people declaring: "Never again will that mistake be made."

Of the Ontario farmers, Mr. Mackenzie said: "God bless them, they have smashed the machine." He felt that when the people of the country had the opportunity to speak at the ballot boxes, they would pronounce a judgment so conclusive that the office holders at Ottawa would be known "no more for ever!" Introducing Mr. Lapointe, he said that he was one of the most popular men in the Parliament of Canada, on both sides of the House.

Mr. Lapointe at St. Patrick's.

There was a smaller but no less enthusiastic meeting at St. Patrick's Hall where Mr. Ernest Lapointe was the first and chief speaker. After a selection by St. Patrick's Band which rendered appropriate music during the intervals of speaking, Mr. Lapointe was introduced very gracefully by Mr. G. A. Redmond President of the Halifax Liberal Association who said that he was happy to be able to welcome to the City two such distinguished visitors as the speakers of the evening.

Mr. Lapointe after thanking the audience for the reception which was given him, and which, he said, was another proof of the friendly spirit which had always existed between Nova Scotia and Quebec, devoted the greater part of his address to consideration of the principles of Liberalism. These seemed to find favorable ground for expansion in Nova Scotia where the sea breezes swept away the germs of narrowness and the microbes of prejudice and where among all classes the motto seemed to be 'live and let live.'

Need of Strong Government.

There had never been a time in the history of Canada, he said, when the application and guidance of Liberal principles were more needed than at the present day. At no time had the country been in need of a strong Government fairly representative of the majority of the people. The Union Government was not such an one. The Union Government was not representative of the people of Canada. For a time it had been staggering between various parties now inclining toward the privileged interests, now away from them, and it had finally reached that condition of inertia which is produced by equal forces operating on an object in opposite directions. "The Premier is sick; I regret it. He has gone away leaving the ship of state in the hands of the crew" he said. "The Ministers are doing practically nothing. They seem to say 'Sufficient unto the day is the statesmanship thereof.' " (laughter, The motive power of the Government, had broken down.

Mr. Lapointe went on to say that the prestige of the Union Government had fallen a good many degrees below zero and added amid laughter that he who is down, need fear no fall.

Quebec Safe and Sane.

He said that there was general dissatisfaction throughout Canada and general unrest. The descendants of Jeremiah in the Union Government were tearing their garments and beating their breasts and saying that salvation lay only in a great unification of all the "safe and sane" elements in the country. They now thought that Quebec, as one of the strongholds of sanity, should be willing to join such a union. "Will you walk into my parlor, said the spider to the fly," said Mr. Lapointe. "Quebec is safe and sane, so is the great Liberal Party, and so is the Liberal Leader." Quebec could not by any means be brought to the support of the present Government.

Me commended Mr. Mackenzie King to his audience as a man who had all the qualifications for a great leader, as a man who had given long study to the great problems which presented themselves to the country at the present, and than whom there was not a better heart or brain in the Dominion. "He is a Liberal, and so am I," he said, "because the Liberal Party is broad enough to embrace every man who is willing to give every other man every chance that is his right."

Outcome of Political Freedom.

He believed in party politics because parties were the outcome of political freedom. Parties, however, were only a means to an end and should be subordinated in the interests of the country. He ridiculed the so-called independents returned at the last election, than whom no members of the Dominion House had ever more slavishly followed the whip of their political officers.

The first thing to be done in Canada, he thought, was to re-establish responsible government in the country, and to elect a Parliament which should fairly represent the majority of the Canadian people. He had read in the Press that both parties were afraid of an election. This was an endeavor to make the opprobrium attached to the present Government, shared by the Opposition.

He characterized the War Times Election Act as a blot on the fair name of the country. The people were not in mood to tolerate such an injustice. British citizens must have the vote, he said, and a new Parliament would see that they had it.

"I ask the Government to appeal to the country as soon as possible," he said. "It is a war parliament. They have demobilized everyone else. Let them demobilize themselves."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

No Right to Speak For Canada.

He urged that a new Government should be elected before an Imperial Conference was held to decide upon relations of the nations in the British Commonwealth. The present Government had no right to speak at such a council without a mandate from the Canadian people. For himself, he was unalterably opposed to anybody sitting outside the Dominion deciding Canadian policies. "Canadian policies must be decided in Canada by Canadians," he said.

He made a plea against the use of patriotism as a football. "Why should our opponents always wrap themselves in the British flag?" We were beginning to suspect that patrioteering and profiteering were becoming synonymous terms. Every time anyone wrapped himself in the flag one was afraid that he was going to steal something somewhere.

Reverting again to the principles of Liberalism, Mr. Lapointe said that no class or interests should be allowed to disregard the rights of others. What the relations between class and class were, must be found out with regard to justice. Liberalism was coming into its own. It was in favor of reforms which it would accomplish, he said. By reforms he did not mean necessarily the introduction of every innovation. Liberalism held the middle course. It was not the father of Bolshevism which was the son of Czarism, of absolutism and the restriction of personal freedom. Liberalism was the best bulwark against such things.

Plea For Canadian Unity.

He concluded his magnificent address with a fine plea for Canadian unity. A son of Quebec, in every fibre of his being a descendant of those hardy French pioneers who had settled that old Province of New France three hundred years ago, he was proud of his descent and proud of his native Province, but he was also proud of Canada, his country. Nova Scotia he felt was a part of his native land, and he hoped to see the day which would endear every Province of the Dominion, every foot of Canadian soil to all her sons. That spirit must come, he said, or we would never obtain true Canadian nationality. Liberalism must see to it that in our great and grand country there was a great, grand united people. The principles of Liberalism might for a time be in abeyance, they might be hidden for a time, but they were strongly founded in the strength of truth and justice, and truth and justice would ultimately prevail. (Cheers.)

The Safe Road of Liberalism.

Mr. H. J. Logan, K.C., of Amherst, was the next speaker. Mr. Logan said that he thought there had not been enough talk of late about Liberalism. It was no wonder that groups and factions were springing up throughout the country. However, when the people came to a common sense conclusion they would discover that in the middle road of Liberalism lay the way to happiness and prosperity. He read the clause referring to labor questions in the lately draughted platform of the Liberal Party and also that referring to the re-establishment of returned soldiers, and placed them before the audience for approval, which was heartily accorded. He scored the Dominion Government on the heads of their methods at the recent election, their appointment of superfluous and useless commissions, and their C.N.R. and G.T.R. transactions which he said would not have favorable effects on the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. E. M. Macdonald, K.C., of Pictou, followed Mr. Logan briefly. He had heard the Union Government referred to in the Press as a "dead horse" which there was no use in kicking, he said. But he was of the opinion that if the dead horse was blocking the public highway, it should be removed to the morgue. He saw no reason why the misdeeds of the Government should not be discussed. Even if it was dead, it sat in Ottawa and would not let go. It ought to be exposed until it got out. He described the serious financial condition Canada finds herself in today and scored the Government for misrepresentation in its debt reports.

Hon. Mackenzie King, whose arrival had been somewhat delayed, as he explained, on account of the desire of the Orpheus audience that he go over a great portion of the Liberal platform, was introduced by Mr. Redmond amid great cheering. Mr. King's address was similar in matter to that which he made at the Orpheus, although lack of time forced him to curtail it.

Met War Record Challenge.

He was twice interrupted by a heckler in the rear of the hall who called out "Where do you fit in? and," where is your rifle and bayonet?" Mr. King did not deign to hear the first interruption, but the second time he could not permit it to pass and in a very concise statement left the man who called out, not a leg to stand on. He asked why the person who had calld out, had not been at Summerside when he had sought an election on his war-record and had been elected by acclamation. He did not know the person whom he was addressing, but he might ask him, he said, whether he had had a brother who was dying of tuberculosis, whether his father who had been blind, had died during the war leaving his mother and sister alone, and whether his mother had been ill during the progress of the war? Mr. King was visibly affected during this part of his reply. But it was not on these things that he based his war record, he said. He then read three letters from large shipbuilding and munition firms thanking him for his services in allaying labor unrest during the war. He had thirty more of these letters, he said, amid applause. It was up to every man to decide in what capacity he would be the more useful during the late war. He might have obtained some staff or clerical position in England and come back and been a hero. He had preferred to accept a task for which he had special training and was particularly fitted.

At the conclusion of Mr. King's address a returned soldier in the body of the hall called for three cheers and a tiger for Mr. King. These were given with great good will and the meeting was concluded by the singing of the National Anthem.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Halifax Acadian Recorder 4135 (1)
January 13 — 20

NEW LEADER WELCOMED.

Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King is greeted by appreciative audiences

At the monster meetings held last night in Halifax.

Sir Wilfrid's successor proclaims the message of Liberalism.

Messrs. Ernest Lapointe, D. D. MacKenzie, H. J. Logan and E. M. MacDonald also make stirring addresses.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's successor as Leader of the Liberal Party in Canada—Honorable W. L. MacKenzie King—was welcomed to Halifax last night, by two of the largest, most attentive and appreciative audiences ever accorded public men in Halifax.

At the two mass meetings held at the Orpheus Theatre and St. Patrick's Hall, every inch of space was taken, and hundreds were unable to gain admission to the Orpheus Theatre. The doors were announced to be opened at 7.30 o'clock and long before that hour crowds gathered outside, all eager to hear the new leader, whose eloquence is so well known. Within a quarter of an hour every seat was occupied, and several hundreds stood in the aisles and occupied points of various vantage, even to sitting on the edge of the platform.

The Orpheus orchestra provided good music and at sharp 8 o'clock the Honorable Mr. MacKenzie King entered, accompanied by Alderman John B. Douglas, President of the Nova Scotia Liberal Executive Committe, who occupied the chair. As the Leader took his seat on the platform he was greeted by the entire audience with hearty applause which lasted several minutes. Among those on the platform with Hon. MacKenzie King were D. D. MacKenzie, M. P., Hon. E. H. Armstrong, Professor H. L. Stewart, C. C. Blackadar, R. H. Mackay, Hon. R. M. Macgregor, Col. J. L. Ralston, Rev. H. B. Clarke, Attorney General Daniels, Dr. I. M. Lovitt, A. B. Macgillivray, J. H. Sinclair, M. P., William Duff, M. P., Hon. George E. Faulkner, Hon. H. H. Wickwire, C. U. Mader, George W. Kyte, L. H. Martell, Dr. J. B. Black, Andrew Hayden, and others.

The platform had been tastefully decorated with potted palms, etc., and overhead was a large banner containing the words "Welcome to Laurier's successor."

At the conclusion of the applause of greeting to the leader, Ald. Douglas read a telegram from Premier Murray, expressing his great regret at being unable to preside at the meeting, but took the opportunity of extending to Hon. MacKenzie King, and also to Mr. Lapointe, a hearty welcome to Nova Scotia. In his telegram the Premier said :

I feel you have behind you the general support of the party in this Province, and I am quite sure your meeting in Halifax will furnish evidence of this fact. I exceedingly regret missing seeing you, but you are in the hands of good friends who will do everything possible to make your visit a pleasant one.

In introducing Mr. MacKenzie King, Ald. Douglas said that a warm welcome was extended to him by all thoughtful Nova Scotians, irrespective of political belief, because they understood the responsibilities of a man charged with the leadership of a great, historic party. He was wearing the mantle of the greatest Canadian ever produced, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose memory would remain bright and green for generations, and whose truest monument was the greatness of Canada. Mr. King's ancestors had fought for the cause of freedom, and his mind was richly endowed by years of studying of the critical problems of the State. It was safe to predict that he would be a future Prime Minister of the Dominion.

The audience contained people of all ranks of life and many women were present and as previously mentioned, the speaker of the evening was given the closest attention throughout the two hours of his address. There were, however, a few at the rear entrance to the theatre, who had no doubt attended in the endeavor to make things unpleasant, but these received their answer from the Liberal leader in a gentlemanly manner, and after that there was but one other interruption, except the applause, and that came from the gallery. The first group to cast any reflection on the honored leader as to his war record, was answered by him by giving his experiences in Princee Edward Island, where he had been offered a constituency.

He had been given the same treatment by opponents to his party, but when he had concluded his address to the four thousand people present, he had challenged his opponents to contest his seat on his war record, and the same explanations had been given at further meetings in Prince Edward Island, the result being that he was elected by acclamation. He was always willing, he said, to contest a seat on his war record. He, however, did not wish to traffic in his personal patriotism for political ends.

During the course of his remarks about Sir Robert Borden being in Cuba, too far away to be recalled, a gallery man asked "What about your policy." The leader paused for a fraction of a second, and with a broad smile said that the remark was rational. It showed the thirst of the people we have in this country who are anxious to learn of the policy of the party of progress. Any who wished the whole policy could easily obtain the same from his secretary.

Mr. King in eloquent terms made an appeal for unity and stability to enable Canada to face the great problems which were confronting her. He spoke of the three great groups, the Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans, and said that beneath the aspirations of each was the great underlying principle of Liberalism.

He spoke much of unity of command in an endeavor to show wherein Union Government had utterly failed.

His sketches of current happenings in Ottawa brought forth much laughter and he compared the present Administration to a ship without a chart.

He paid a warm tribute to the Hon. W. S. Fielding, that noble statesman, who had worked for reciprocity so courageously and brilliantly. He has sacrificed his health in the country's service, but he will live to see his policy triumphant and his splendid efforts crowned with victory.

Referring to the demands of the Great War Veterans and a letter from them asking him to declare his attitude, he

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Halifax Acadian Recorder
January 13 — 20 D 4136 (2)

recited what occurred in the House of Commons and declared that he stood now as he stood then.

The Liberal leader's address will be found on page four.

Mr. D. D. MacKenzie was the next speaker, and he stated that the Liberal Party should be congratulated upon the talents of its new Chieftain.

In referring to Liberalism in this Province Mr. MacKenzie said the history of Nova Scotia had only one black spot since Confederation—the Holmes-Thompson Government—which had got in by a fluke, but had been speedily wiped off the slate, the people declaring "never again, will that mistake be made."

Of the Ontario farmers, Mr. MacKenzie said: "God bless them; they have smashed the machine"

There had never been a time in the history of Canada when the application and guidance of Liberal principles were more needed than at the present day. The Union Government was not representative of the people of Canada. For a time it had been staggering between various parties now inclining toward the privileged interests, now away from them, and it had finally reached that condition of inertia which is produced by equal forces operating on an object in opposite directions. The prestige of the Union Government had fallen a good many degrees below zero and amid laughter said that he who is down need fear no fall.

He commended Mr. MacKenzie King to his audience as a man than whom there was not a better heart or brain in the Dominion, "He is a Liberal, and so am I," he said, "because the Liberal party is broad enough to embrace every man who is willing to give every other man every chance that is his right."

Mr. Ernest Lapointe was the last speaker, and he held the close attention of his audience throughout his half-hour's address, in which he dealt upon the present Administration at Ottawa. His French accent was pleasing to listen to, and demonstrated that in his own native tongue he was an eloquent speaker. He was frequently interrupted by applause and laughter at the terms he applied to the "Sham Union Government."

SECOND MASS MEETING.

St. Patrick's Hall was well filled by an enthusiastic audience where Mr. Ernest Lapointe was the first speaker. St. Patrick's Band rendered appropriate music.

Mr. G. A. Redmond, President of the Halifax Co. Liberal Association, presided, and in introducing Mr. Ernest Lapointe, M. P., said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

I have the honor of introducing to you to-night two distinguished visitors in our city, and of offering to them on your behalf the heartiest of Halifax welcomes.

We have with us the recently elected leader of Canadian Liberalism. Some five months ago Mr. MacKenzie King was appointed amid scenes of intense enthusiasm to that great office and that great responsibility. He was chosen at a moment when the problems of public life had become very arduous and very difficult. He was chosen to a task which no man could face without much misgiving and much diffidence. I mean the task of sustaining and pursuing the high traditions of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But the new leader has risen to his work with that dauntles courage which Liberals count among the first requisites of success. Though he has not the advantage of being a Nova Scotian, he is making haste to repair his loss by becoming acquainted with us as soon as possible. And for our part we are delighted to have the chance of welcoming the new chieftain of the party of progress, and of assuring him that where we have bestowed our trust, there is no form of dutiful support or loyal effort which we mean to withhold.

It is singularly fitting, I think, that Mr. Mackenzie King should be accompanied here by a brilliant follower from the Province of Quebec. Sir Wilfrid Laurier never wearied of impressing upon us that Canada's future depended on maintaining good will and co-operation between those of British and those of French descent. That spirit of mutual conciliation has been caught up by the brilliant Frenchman, Mr. Earnest Lapointe, who is making so deep an imprint upon parliamentary business. If report speaks truly, Mr. Lapointe has succeeded not only to Sir Wilfrid Laurier's seat in the House, he is rapidly succeeding to the dominant place which Sir Wilfrid held in the trust and affection of his province. This is the sort of man whom all good Liberals, loving unity as the basis of strength, and hating racial bitterness as the source of failure, must wish to hear from always.

ERNEST LAPOINTE, M. P.

Mr. LaPointe was greeted by loud applause, and in thanking those present for their reception, he said it was another proof of the friendly spirit which had always existed between Nova Scotia and Quebec. He devoted the greater part of his address to the consideration of the principles of Liberalism. These seemed to find favorable ground for expansion in Nova Scotia, where the sea breezes swept away the germs of narrowness and the microbes of prejudice and where among all classes the motto seemed to be "Live and let live."

As the Leader concluded his address there was a demonstration which lasted several minutes, and when he had departed the audience renewed their applause which conclusively showed that Sir Wilfrid's successor had made a profound impression on his hearers.

Mr. H. J. Logan, K. C., said that he thought there had not been enough talk of late about Liberalism. It was no wonder that groups and factions were springing up throughout the country. He scored the Dominion government on their methods at the recent election, their appointment of superfluous and useless commissions, and their C. N. R. and G. T. R. transactions, which he said would not have favorable effects on the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. E. M. Macdonald, K. C., followed. He had heard the Union Government referred to in the press as a "dead horse," which there was no use in kicking, he said. But he was of the opinion that if the dead horse was blocking the public highway, it should be removed to the morgue. He saw no reason why the misdeeds of the Government should not be discussed. Even if it was dead, it sat in Ottawa, and would not let go.

Hon. MacKenzie King was greeted amid great cheering, and his address was similar to that delivered at the Orpheus.

He was twice interrupted by some person in the rear of the hall who called out "Where do you fit in?" and "Where is your rifle and bayonet?" Mr. King did not deign to hear the first interruption, but the second time he could not permit it to pass. He asked why the person who had called out had not been at Summerside when he had sought an election on his war-record and had been elected by acclamation. He did not know the person whom he was addressing, but he might ask him whether he had had a brother who was dying of tuberculosis, whether his father who had been blind, had died during the war, leaving his mother and sister alone, and whether his mother had been ill during the progress of the war? Mr. King was visibly affected during this part of his reply. But it was not on these things that he based his war record. He then read three letters from large shipbuilding and munition firms, thanking him for his services in allaying labor unrest during the war. He had 30 more of these letters. It was up to every man to decide in what capacity he would be the more useful during the late war. He might have obtained some staff or clerical position in England and come back and been a hero. He had preferred to accept a task for which he had special training and was particularly fitted.

At the conclusion of Mr. King's address a returned soldier in the body of the hall called for three cheers and a tiger for Mr. King. These were given with great good will and the meeting was concluded.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Halifax Acadian Recorder
January 13-20

LIBERAL LEADER'S MESSAGE

To the People of Nova Scotia

At the meetings at the Orpheus Theatre and St. Patrick's Hall last evening.

An Appeal for Unity and Stability to enable Canada to face the great problems.

The address of Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, the Liberal Leader, at the Orpheus Hall, last evening, was most eloquent and inspiring.

Hon. Mr. Kings's Speech.

Having concluded his introductory remarks, Mr. King said that in his opinion the great need in Canada today was stability; stability as regards conditions throughout the country, and stability in matters of government. In this connection, he opened his address by reference to the world unrest as it had followed in the wake of war, and as it was demonstrating itself in the different class movements which were coming into such prominence at the present time. On these matters he spoke as follows:

"Let us realize that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it is equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions as they exist in other countries.

"For many a year to come the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which does not reckon with that fact, is certain sooner or later to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us.

Effects of World Upheaval.

"Let us remember that the world has just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization has been torn into shreds. The nations are now busily engaged in patching it together anew. It will be some time yet before the process is complete. In physical outline the boundaries of countries have changed. But the changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order, an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to its depths. A truer simile of the world's condition today is that of the ocean seething after storm. For years to come the tide of emotion will continue to surge in human breasts with seemingly irresistible flow, mounting ever and anon high with hope and then falling away into depths of despondency and despair. A recognition of this great truth should make us view with great patience the restlessness of our day; it should awaken a sympathy with all these movements which bespeak an aroused conscience, and sound a new note in human aspirations. Here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our national society—the farmers, labor, and the war veterans.

The Agrarian Movement.

"It is no mere coincidence that we have the rise of the Grain Growers Party in the West and the United Farmers in Ontario at the time they have come. With the defeat of Reciprocity, a Grain Growers Party in the West was inevitable. Sir Wilfrid Laurier saw this clearly, and told the people of Canada so very plainly. It was not Sir Wilfrid's fault, nor the fault of the Liberal Party, and least of all the fault of Hon. Mr. Fielding and his friends in the Maritime Provinces, that Reciprocity did not carry. It was the forces that were opposed to a wise and progressive Liberalism.

"When, on May 14, 1918, the farmers of Ontario and Quebec came in thousands from all parts of these Provinces to the very doors of Parliament to protest against the broken pledges of the administration, and the arbitrary measures being enacted and arbitrary methods being employed by the Government in carrying out many of its measures, and the administration declined to permit them to enter the building, and met with blank indifference—one might almost say with contempt—their respectful petitions; it was equally inevitable that they should return to their homes determined upon political action through their existing organizations. In so far as these movements are in the nature of protest against arbitrary behavior on the part of the administration, and are evidence of determination on the part of those engaged in agriculture to secure a wider measure of economic freedom, there can be only one attitude toward them on the part of all true Liberals, and that an attitude of whole-hearted approval and co-operation in an endeavor to obtain reform already too long delayed.

"Of the events of the year just passed, one of the most significant has been the results attending upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a Provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of these surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics.

Liberal Attitude Toward Farmers.

"Liberals should be the last to deplore any constitutional act on the part of the people to maintain their sovereign rights. It is in this way that governments are taught to respect the people's will. It must never be forgotten that, whilst the Farmer candidates were returned in large numbers, the overthrow of the Hearst Government in Ontario was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government, a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in whole-hearted combination.

"As Liberals, then, in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

Liberal Attitude Towards Labor.

"And the same is true of the Labor movement. Here, again, is another large class in our national society, which has become conscious, not only of economic injustices in the past, but of the need for united action to gain that fuller expression of personal and economic freedom which is of the very essence of all true Liberalism. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it? Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred by my Liberalism. I can think of the problems of industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

Liberal Attitude Toward Veterans.

Now, as to the returned soldiers, or, more appropriately, the war veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule, and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for a realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

"Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world-domination under their particular systems. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

Supreme Task of Liberalism.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

"War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at domination in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion, and, in the end, retrogression rather than advance.

"Parliament ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. It is absurd for the Dominion of Canada to have a Parliament that has relatively no farmers in it, to speak for the farmers, and no one from the ranks of Labor to speak for Labor. I hope there will be in our next Parliament representatives of both these classes of our people, and also men from the ranks of the War Veterans, to speak for those who have served their country with such heroism and for those who lie in Flanders' fields and cannot speak for themselves. I think our next Parliament must be truly representative if we are to secure unity and contentment in this country.

"Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of government, I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing, or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly enfranchised female voters. I know of no finer maxim of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym, enunciated in the reign of Charles I, which is as applicable to our politics today as it was to England in that unsettled period:

"'That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the State to the common good.'

"Certainly, such a form of government is not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by any class. It is only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine good-will.

Politics of Imperial Unity.

"And this leads me to speak of the East and the West of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful diversified resources, of the Prairie Provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests; or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the War was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class, or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with thought of naught save the honor of their country and their [illegible]?

Great Political Party Needed.

"If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide East and West, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farmer communities, and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and added strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The War Veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the Army and the Civil authorities, which take us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiery would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, or any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation, and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

Lessons From the War.

"A great political party has a significance scarcely dreamed of by many who today appreciate too little what continuity of effort in a great cause means in the maintenance of freedom, and in the ultimate achievement of victory for politics with which its name and history have been identified.

"Let me make a comparison which will appeal to all. In the great war just ended, did past history and tradition mean nothing to the historic regiments which participated in the fight for freedom? Did the Black Watch and the Gordon Highlanders signify nothing to Scotchmen and men of Scotch descent? Did the Guards and the Middlesex add nothing of fighting quality to Englishmen and sons of Englishmen? Were the Dublin Fusiliers and the Inniskillen Dragoons mere names to Irishmen and those who fought at their side in these historic regiments? More than one Canadian soldier will ever regret the loss of identity of his regiment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but is there a Canadian living who would take from the colors of our army the names of the battles displayed upon them?

"All through history the liberties of our human society have been preserved, and new liberties won by great fighting forces, the military and naval forces in the political arena; and the finer the tradition of the fighting forces in either field, the greater has been the measure of their achievement.

Permanent Parties Necessary.

"It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in adopting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

"To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

"Let me make one further observation from the experience of war. No one will question that the Allied countries were one in aim, or that there was other than the strongest reasons to compel co-operation in their resistance of the Central Powers. Their fighting capacity and their heroism was not for a moment in doubt. It was not, however, till unity of command was established that the tide of battle turned, and that victory by the Allied armies became assured.

"With the Liberal forces at work in Canada today among the farmers, in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to withstay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies, except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all.

"Not only must we have stability and unity of purpose and aim as regards the liberal and progressive forces throughout the country; we must, if we are to have progress and prosperity in the nation, have stability in matters of Government as well. It is not enough to help to calm the restless spirit of the nation; it is also necessary to have its affairs directed in accordance with some policy which is known, and of which the country as a whole has approved. There must be a chart and compass which will give certainty of direction to the ship of state. It is owing to instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an administration more disorganized than is the case at the present time.

Policy of Drift Reviewed.

"A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action. Let me briefly review one or two outstanding circumstances which all present will recall.

"It will be remembered that the Union Government was formed for the purpose of the election of 1917. The Union was preceded by the War Measures Act, the Military Voters Act and the War-time Elections Act, which, were the truth wholly known, could be shown to have been more of a determing factor in bringing about the Union than aught else. While the war was on, the cry "Win the war," was a sufficient rallying cry, sufficient for election purposes, and sufficient for a policy as long as the war lasted. The electors were told that the Union was formed for that purpose and for that only. It was not a Government for the purpose of reconstruction after the war, or for any purpose other than that of helping to "win the war," according, at all events, to the professions of the Prime Minister at the time the administration was formed, and of those who entered his cabinet.

The Liberal Convention.

Twice in its history, the Liberal Party of Canada has held a National Convention. The first time was in the summer of 1893, when the party adopted a platform of policies and principles in which it was returned to power three years later. The second occasion was in August of the last year.

Perhaps it would be best to let the platform of the Liberal Party speak for itself. Here are some of the resolutions that were unanimously adopted at the convention, and which now constitute a part of the policy of the Liberal Party.

First and foremost in the Liberal platform is the demand for economy in the administration of public affairs. If there is one criticism above another to which the present administration has laid itself open, it is the vast extravagance and waste there has been of public monies at a time when, of all times, the strictest economy was needed. We all realize that the expenditures of war were necessarily abnormal and necessarily very great; but one would have expected that during the period of war, and especially subsequent to it, the Government would have economized in every possible way. Instead of that, an analysis of the Public Accounts will show that there is not a department of the civil government in which the expenditure has not been vastly greater during and since the period of the war than it has ever hitherto been. In addition to that the Government has been taking on new liabilities on an enormous scale.

It is hardly possible to believe—but it is nevertheless true—that the last act of the administration, the taking over of the Grand Trunk System, was one involving the country in a transaction amounting to over 500 millions of dollars (a sum greater than the total national debt of Canada at the time the Liberals went out of office in 1911), and this at a time when the public debt of this country had reached the enormous figure of over two and a half billions of dollars.

Of recent years, the country has been living almost entirely upon borrowed money. We have had loan, not only to meet the expenses of the war, but also to help meet current expenditure. Is it any wonder, therefore, that the Liberal Convention declared that national disaster would overtake this country should the present method of financing the country's affairs be continued, and that the Convention resolved that the serious nature of the country's financial situation called for the profoundest consideration of all patriotic citizens, and the exercise of the severest economy by the Government.

High Cost of Living.

But how, it will be asked, are the people to carry the burden of increased taxation along with the ever-increasing cost of living. Here we come to what seems to me the problem of problems in Canada today. Whilst there are classes, large and small, to which some belong while others do not, there is one class to which all whether men, women, or children, belong irrespective of trade or occupation, of race or creed, of origin or circumstances, irrespective even of politics, and that is the great body of consumers. And there is one element in our national economy which affects every member of this class in greater or less degree, and that is the cost of living. There is not a man or woman, there is not a young person, boy or girl, there is not a father or mother, the head of a family, or any individual having the responsibility of little children, or of others dependent on him, who has not in some measure been affected by the increase in the cost of living which has made itself felt of recent years.

It is here that we are at once brought together face to face with the contrast as it exists between the two political parties in Canada today. The Unionist Party, with its policy of drift, the logical and inevitable fruit of the continuance of a Union which has served the purpose for which it was formed, and has ceased to have any real purpose other than that of holding on to office, and the constructive and progressive policy of the Liberal Party as framed by the National Liberal Convention, which assembled in Ottawa in August of last year.

The Tariff.

"If the problem of the cost of living is to be met in a manner which will be of advantage at once to the consumers of the country and to its producers, this can only be effected by carefully considered changes in the tariff, which will have the effect of stimulating and increasing production, and of removing such artificial barriers to legitimate trade as cause prices of the necessaries of life to be unduly enhanced to consumers. The wealth of the country can only be increased by developing our natural resources, and there is no more effective way of developing these resources, whether they be of the land, of the sea, of the mine, or of the forest, than by placing the necessary instruments of production, in all of these industries, within reach of those engaged in them at as low a cost as may be possible. Accordingly, the Liberal Platform has declared that duties on all instruments of production, and the raw materials entering into the same, should be removed.

"Then, there is a large class of articles, those which constitute the necessaries of life, which should be made as reasonable to consumers as legitimate manufacture and trade will permit.

"Before leaving the Tariff, I should add that, at the Convention the Liberals again expressed their faith in Reciprocity in natural products with the United States, and determined that, if opportunity should be afforded to carry out the free interchange of natural products, as provided in the Reciprocity Agreement of 1911, the earliest advantage would be taken of that opportunity.

"Realizing the importance of Agriculture, the Convention considered very carefully and fully means whereby the interests of this great industry could be best promoted in Canada. Nothing could better disclose the intention of the Liberal Party to render every possible assistance to Agriculture than the resolution passed, which pledges the Party's support to policies for which the farmers have long been contending.

"Not only was careful consideration given to the Farmers, but the interests of Labor also have been made a special concern. The National Liberal Convention agreed to accept the terms of the Labor convention and general principles associated with the League of Nations and incorporated in the conditions of peace.

"With respect to the Great War Veterans, the Party's platform is equally specific and emphatic. This part of the platform was drafted by a committee of which Colonel Ralston of Halifax was the Chairman.

A Fair Franchise.

"Another important resolution was one passed by the Convention respecting election frauds. I shall not read the resolution, but shall pass at once to speak of the necessity that there is in this country at the moment for a Franchise Act which will ensure to the electors, in accordance with a right which every citizen and British subject possess a fair and just franchise.

Speaking of the Franchise leads me to say a word with reference to the subject of a general election.

"One sees it repeatedly asserted in the press, for reason best known to those who are responsible for the assertion, that neither of the old political parties desire an election at the present time. Some have even gone so far as to insinuate that there was likely to be collusion between the leaders of the parties in the House of Commons to avoid an election, on the specious plea that there is much unrest and that there is no telling who may come to occupy the Treasury benches. Let me deal with this assumption and deal with it very plainly.

"I am not in the confidence of the Government, and, therefore, am not in a position to know what the views of its members are. I imagine that in this one single instance they are united, they are all doubtless agreed that, be the wishes of the people what they may, they, the members of the administration are there and intend to hold on to office just as long as this can be done with the support of their following in the House.

As most of the following never expect to see the House of Commons again, the Government has only to threaten resignation to bring them into line, as has been done already on three occasions, first when the Prime Minister threatened to dissolve Parliament if his followers persisted in taking away the right of his friends to receive titles; second, when he threatened the resignation of the Ministry if approval were not forthwith given the Peace Treaty—an approval which, as the debate went to show, was a mere performance and did not affect in any particular the signing of the terms of peace; and third, when the House of Commons was told, only a few months ago, that unless its members accepted the report of the Committee on Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment the Government would resign. Be the subject as it may, it would seem that the Ministry has only to threaten resignation either behind closed doors or, when the following gets particularly restive, in the open, for enough of the following to fall into line to see the Ministry through. We may expect, then, so far as the Government and its supporters are concerned, that any pretext will be deemed sufficient to avoid an appeal to the electorate, provided that by keeping vital issues postponed they can successfully continue the policy of drift, regardless of its effect upon the country, either in the present or for the future.

Though unable to speak for the party in power, I am in a position where I can speak for the Liberal Party, and for the Liberal members who comprise the Opposition in the House of Commons. What their wishes as individual members may be, I cannot say. No man would go out of his way to court an election any more than in his own interest or the interest of the country. Too great frequency in elections is not a condition to be desired, but the question is not one of individual desires, or even the desire of a parliamentary group.

As Liberals, believing in self-government as the foundation of all our liberties, and in representative and responsible government as the only form of self-government worthy the name, there can be but one attitude towards a government that never was representative, and that only figuratively speaking could be regarded as responsible, and that is that the sooner it makes way for a government that is founded upon the will of the governed, and is truly representative of the people as a whole, the better for peace, order and good government in our midst.

National Unity.

There are other resolutions passed by the Convention to which I might allude, but having already spoken at too great length, I shall refer only to resolutions which relate to our national life. One is a resolution on Canadian Autonomy, the other on National Unity. They express the natural antipathy of all true Liberals to anything in the nature of centralized Imperialism, and the desire for a united Canada which should inspire all citizens of the Dominion.

It is not only as regards differences between persons and classes, racial and religious differences, national and international differences, that we must seek in a spirit of good will to bind up the wounds and to bridge the chasms which the roused passions of the war have served to widen and create; we must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity.

Unity Established by War.

The war, we believe, has put an end forever to geographical divisions even in thought, so far as the unity of our Dominion is concerned. Not only in the eyes of the world, but in our own eyes that single word "Canada" on the shoulder strap of our soldiers in the fighting armies overseas has welded this country into one as no symbol or nationhood in the past has ever united it. It was for the unity of Canada, the unity of the British Empire of which Canada is a part, the unity of aim and purpose of the free nations associated as Allies in the titanic struggle for the world's freedom that our brave heroes gave their lives in the fields of Flanders and of France, and the word comes back to us from them—

"If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep though poppies grow
On Flanders' Fields."

National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platform must be so drafted and our political politics so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES CANADA

St. John ~~Standard~~ Telegraph
January 13, 1920

D 4138

UNITY AND STABILITY CANADA'S GREAT NEED

Liberal Leader's Inspiring Speech at Halifax Meeting Last Evening

Beneath Aspirations of Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans, he Says, is the "Great Underlying Principle of Liberalism"—Defends Party System, but Declares There Must be a Great Party "Large Enough, Broad Enough, Fearless Enough to Carry Forward a Policy of National Unity"—Discusses His Platform and Urges Early Election—The Union Government's "Policy of Drift."

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Halifax, Jan. 12—Hon. Mackenzie King, successor to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as leader of the Liberal party tonight first brought his personal message to the people of Nova Scotia at a mass meeting at the Orpheus Theatre and made it evident that he was a chieftain of no mean ability. The audience which greeted him might have been composed of natives of Missouri, and was patiently waiting to be shown, greeting Mr. King with more or less mechanical applause. He had not spoken long, however, before he had carried away his audience, even people in the gallery who seemed to have come with the expressed object of making things unpleasant for him. He was listened to with the deepest of attention and the most important of his points elicited applause that was spontaneous and fortissimo. When he left the theatre there was a demonstration which lasted for several minutes, and there was little doubt that the personality of the new Liberal leader had left a profound impression.

More than two thousand citizens heard Mackenzie King at the Orpheus and many more would have been present had Halifax possessed an aduitorium with sufficient seating capacity. The doors of the theatre were opened at 7.30 o'clock and in half an hour the building was filled to capacity. The audience was exceedingly catholic in composition, with men and women, young and old, of all ranks of life; college students and returned soldiers were very much in evidence. On the balcony was a small group who endeavored to rag Mr. King on his lack of military service, but they were soon silenced.

A telegram from Premier Murray was read by Alderman J. B. Douglas, chairman, announcing the former's regret at his absence through illness and cordially Mr. Douglas welcomed Mr. King to Nova Scotia and briefly introduced him, saying he was wearing the mantle of the greatest Canadian ever produced, and calling him a future prime minister.

Mr. King's speech was eloquent and inspiring, an appeal for unity and stability to enable Canada to face the great problems which were confronting her. He spoke of the three great groups, the Farmers, Labor and the War Veterans, and said that beneath the aspirations of each was the great underlying principle of Liberalism. He declared that a true parliament must be like a mirror and represent all these groups; otherwise there could be no hope of a united Canada. It was the work of Liberalism to include the essentials of demands of all of these groups and prevent them from becoming too class-conscious, welding them into one great forward movement. He expressed his complete opposition to monopoly of government by any one class.

In appealing for the formation of a great party with a broad platform, Mr. King dwelt upon the value of the traditions of Liberalism. He also spoke of the lives of public men, and said they were no cowards because they had to bear insults of men probably less worthy than they were.

Some Failures.

He spoke much of unity of command in an endeavor to show wherein the Union government had utterly failed. He said that it had been formed to win the war, nothing else; and now that the war was ended, it was seeking a pretext for holding on. Regarding Sir Robert Borden, he said that the agreement had been that the nominal prime minister was to go so far away that no one would be able to communicate with him. His sketches of current happenings in Ottawa and the nebulous policy of the administration won laughter and applause. The ship of state, he affirmed, was quite without a chart.

Mr. King devoted much time to an exposition of the platform drawn up at the Liberal convention, stressing the financial situation and the suggested tariff changes in an effort to reduce the high cost of living. With regard to reciprocity, he prophesied that Mrs. Fielding, to whom he paid a glowing tribute, as a noble Canadian statesman, would

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4139 (2)

live to see the victory for which he had fought. He branded as false, the rumor that neither of the old parties desired an election. The Liberals had only one attitude; they wanted a fair and equitable franchise act, then an appeal to the people. In conclusion, he said that only as Canada became a united people would she become a great nation. The applause which greeted his final words were deafening and lasted for several minutes.

Other Speakers.

After Mr. King had left D. D. MacKenzie spoke. He said that the Liberal party was to be congratulated upon the talents displayed by its new chief and predicted victory at the next election.

The last speaker of the evening was Ernest Lapointe, member for Quebec East, who in an address which won much laughter and enthusiasm, pleaded for complete Canadian unity, described the current administration in no very flattering terms, calling the term "union" a lie and saying that while Sir Robert Borden was wintering in the south Canadian politics were hibernating in Ottawa. He declared that Quebec would have neither Mr. Meighen nor Mr. Calder, and stigmatized the government as irresponsible and the parliament as unrepresensentative. He repeated Mr. King's statement that the Liberals were eager for an election.

Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe also addressed a meeting at St. Patrick's hall on similar topics. It was well attended and equally enthusiastic.

At this meeting a soldier heckled Mr. King on his war record. Mr. King told of what he had done in labor matters during the war and also read letters from American firms eulogizing the services he had rendered in connection with the output of ammunition, etc. A returned soldier then called for three cheers for Mr. King which were given with a tiger.

In opening his address Mr. King referred to the world unrest, as it had followed in the wake of war, and as it was demonstrated in the different class movements, and said that in his opinion the great need in Canada today was stability. He said:

"For many a year to come the war and its circumstances will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action or any policy which does not reckon with that fact, is certain, sooner or later, to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us."

Continuing, the speaker dealt with what he described as "three of the largest and most important elements in our national society: the farmers, labor and the war veterans."

In explanation of the rise of the farmers' party, which, he held, was inevitable for the defeat of reciprocity, he said:

The Farmer Movement.

"When, on May 14, 1918, the farmers of Ontario and Quebec came in thousands from all parts of those provinces to the very doors of parilament to protest against the broken pledges of the administration, and the arbitrary measures being enacted and arbitrary methodos being employed by the government in carrying out many of its measures, the administration declined to permit them to enter the building, and met with blank indifference—one might almost say with contempt—their respectful petitions; it was equally inevitable that they return to their homes determined upon political action through their existing organizations. In so far as these movements are in the nature of protest against arbitrary behavior on the part of the administration and are evidence of determination on the part of those engaged in agriculture to secure a wider measure of economic freedom, there can be only one attitude toward them on the part of all true Liberals, and that an attitude of wholehearted approval and co-operation in an endeavor to obtain reforms already too long delayed."

A Liberal Victory.

Continuing he held that the overthrow of the Hearst government in Ontario was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the province and said:

"As Liberals, then, in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agarian measures if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

"And the same is true of the Labor movement. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it? Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred of my liberalism.

"What the workers in one form or another are seeking is that which we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist."

The War Veterans.

Turning to the war veterans, he said: "If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenship which more than any other is entitled to consideration,it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom.

(Continued on page 2, column 2)

"Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular system. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in.

"War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go its own gate, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at domination in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion, and, in the end retrogression rather than advance."

Parliament, he said, ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. He continued: "Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of government, I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans or the newly enfranchised female voters.

"And this leads me to speak of the east and the west of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful, diversified resources, of the prairie provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests; or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the war was won?

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Nobler Ideal.

"If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. 'It cannot be a party of any class, of any creed, or any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests in the nation and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life."

After defending the party system at some length, he said:

"Parties are necessary, useful and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfillment of their desires than to a party that is liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal tradition to hold it true to its highest pitch, and spur it on to yet nobler achievement."

With the Liberal forces at work in Canada today among the farmers, in the rural communities, among labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers and among the great mass of Canadian citizenry who were without class affiliations or associations, the speaker held that there was nothing to withstand ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies, except a failure on the port of those opposed to a common enemy, to co-operate in a spirit that had regard for the good of all.

Continuing, Mr. King embarked upon a discussion of what he termed the "policy of drift" of the present government and retracked much of the ground covered in his Newmarket speech.

The speaker then proceeded to discuss the events leading up to the Liberal convention of last year, saying that in many respects conditions today were the same as those obtaining in 1913 when the first great convention of the party was held. As the convention of 1893 had drawn up a party programme so it had fallen to the lot of the convention of last summer to redraft this programme in the light of changed conditions. He said that he proposed to let this revised platform speak for itself and proceeded to discuss it clause by clause. On the subject of finance and taxation he said:

Finance and Taxation.

"It is hardly possible to believe—but it is nevertheless true—that the last act of the administration, the taking over of the Grand Trunk Railway system, was one involving the country in a transaction amounting to more than five hundred million of dollars, a sum greater than the total national debt of Canada at the time the Liberals went out of office in 1911, and this at a time when the public debt of this country had reached the enormous figure of more than two and a half billions of dollars."

Another Loan.

Turning to the prospect of another loan, Mr. King said:

"I am sure I voice the opinion, not only of Liberals, but of all patriotic citizens when I say that, before assisting the government to obtain any further loans, it will be the duty of his majesty's loyal opposition in parliament to demand from the government a clearer statement than has thus far been given the country of expenditures being made, and a justification of them, as well as some reasonable assurance that a stricter economy than has hitherto prevailed shall be exercised in the expenditure of the people's money."

To raise the necessary money by taxation to carry on the business of government was going to be the great problem for years to come. But how, it would be asked, were the people to carry the burden of increased taxation along with the ever-increasing cost of living.

If the problem of the cost of living was to be met in a manner which would be of advantage at once to the consumers of the country and to its producers, this would only be effected by carefully considered changes in the tariff which would have the effect of stimulating and increasing production and of removing such artificial barriers to legitimate trade as cause prices of the necessaries of life to be unduly enhanced to consumers.

The planks of the party from dealing with agriculture, labor and industry and war veterans were then read with brief introductory remarks. Passing to the subject of the franchise, he said:

The Franchise.

"One sees it repeatedly asserted in the press for reasons best known to those who are responsible for the assertion, that neither of the old political parties needs an election at the present time. Some have gone so far as to say that there would be collusion between the leaders of the parties in the House of Commons to avoid an election, on the plea that there is much unrest and that there is no telling who may come to occupy the treasury benches. Let me deal with this assumption and deal with it very plainly.

"Though unable to speak for the party in power, I am in a position where I can speak for the Liberal party, and for the Liberal members who comprise the opposition in the House of Commons. What their wishes as individual members may be I cannot say. No man would go out of his way to court an election any more in the interest of the country, or in his own interest. Too great frequency in elections is not a condition to be desired. But the question is not one of individual desires or even the desires of a parliamentary group. The question fundamentally is, do we believe in government by consent, the consent of the governed, and if so, as liberals, believing in self-government as the foundation of all our liberties and in responsible government as the only form of self-government worthy the name, there can be but one attitude towards a government that was never representative, and that only figuratively speaking could not be regarded as responsible and that is, the sooner it makes way for a government that is founded upon the will of the governed, and is truly representative of the people as a whole, the better for peace, order and good government in our midst."

There were other resolutions passed by the convention to which he might allude, but he said he would refer only to resolutions which related to the national life. One was a resolution on Canadian autonomy; the other on national unity. They expressed the natural antipathy of all true Liberals to anything in the nature of centralized imperialism, and the desire for a united Canada which should inspire all citizens of the Dominion.

In conclusion he again emphasized the need of unity in the following words: National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platform must be so drafted and our political politics so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4141

14 Jan. 1920 Charlottetown

LIBERAL PRINCIPLES AND PLATFORM

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Charlottetown Island Patriot (1)
January 15 20

D 4142

Masterly Exposition of Liberal Principles and the Liberal Platform by Messrs King and Lapointe

The Liberal Leader, in Two Memorable Speeches in Charlottetown Last Night Delivers An Inspiring Message to Enthusiastic Audiences That Crowded the Market Hall and Opera House to Overflowing. In Liberalism Lies the Solution of the Problems Which Face the Country. Clear Call Sounded For Welding all the Progressive Forces Into One Great Forward Movement. Both Mr. Lapointe and His Leader Carry Their Hearers With Them. The Misnamed Union Government Steadily Drifting to Its Doom. The Voice of Charlottetown Last Night Will be the Voice of Canada at the Next General Election.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Mr. Ernest Lapointe, M. P.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The brilliant young Leader of the Liberal party, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, and his able and eloquent lieutenant, Mr. Ernest Lapointe, M. P., have come to this city and gone, but the influence of their visit will remain to inspire and enthuse Liberals, and also to make a lasting impression on the minds of all our people, who realize that the government of the country can be safely entrusted to statesmen of such calibre.

The remarkable success of their meetings, the enthusiastic demonstrations tendered them foreshadow the triumph of Liberalism at the next general elections, when Hon. Mr. King will be Prime Minister of Canada.

The Liberal leader had a strenuous time since coming to this province. On Tuesday night he proceeded to Summerside, where he heard several delegations and where important matters were brought before him as the representative of the county.

Then he came to Charlottetown, where Mr. Lapointe and himself were the guests of honour at a banquet at which both delivered speeches. This was followed by a reception in the Legislative Assembly chamber, at which a large number of our citizens were introduced to the distinguished visitors.

To crown it all were the magnificent meetings last night.

Both Messrs. King and Lapointe are in the very prime of manhood and the fact that each was able to deliver two great speeches last night of over an hour in length—powerful speeches delivered with wonderful vigor and eloquence, indicate that the leader and his lieutenant possess remarkable physical endurance as well as brilliant mental gifts.

They both dealt with the great issues of these stirring times as only orators of their ability can, and it is safe to say that Charlottetown has seldom heard such masterly speeches on subjects which are engrossing the people's mind at this time. Both buildings were crowded to capacity, and the ladies, who in due time will be exercising the right of franchise, were well represented.

In the Market Hall Premier Bell presided, and in the Opera House Mr. Nelson Rattenbury, President of the Queen's County Liberal Association, was Chairman.

The buildings were attractively decorated with the national colors, while mottoes were displayed "Welcome to our Coming Premier," "Welcome to Lapointe," "Greetings to our Island Representative."

Shortly after the doors were thrown open, the buildings were filled with people. All seats were quickly taken, and at the opening hour, 8 o'clock, there was standing room only.

The platforms of both theatres were filled, as well as the auditoriums. The Liberals were out in force and there was a good representation of Conservatives as well.

At the Market Hall, Mr. King was the first speaker, being introduced in a few words by Premier Bell.

He spoke for an hour and a quarter, giving way to Mr. Lapointe, whose address lasted about an hour. He was followed by Mr. A. B. Warburton in a short speech.

At the Opera House, Mr. Lapointe opened, followed by Messrs. J. E. Sinclair, M. P., Mr. J. J. Hughes, Ex-M. P., and Mr. King.

Every speaker was accorded a splendid hearing. The only interruptions were interruptions of applause, and the ovation at the close proclaimed the profound impression made by the personality and the message of the orators.

Mr. King's exposition of the traditionary principles of Liberalism and of the Liberal platform, his defence of the party system, his denunciation of the Union Government's policy of drift, his appeal for stability and unity in the new Canada which has arisen since the war, his statement that a Liberal committee would be appointed in the House to look after the interests of returned men, were features of a memorable speech.

Mr. Lapointe, whose reputation as an orator had preceded him, more than fulfilled high expectations, being not only eloquent but humorous as well, his epigrammatic comments on the so-called Union Government proving very effective.

The policy of the Government, he said is like the weather recently, it is below zero. Quebec is sane and safe, so is the Liberal Party and so is its leader.

The Government has demobilized every one else. Let them demobilize themselves. These were among some of his characteristic utterances.

THE LIBERAL LEADER'S GREAT SPEECH.

Mr. King spoke as follows:—

Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Assuredly no greater compliment could be paid a speaker than that he should be confronted by such a splendid audience as I am pleased to see here this evening. I take it that this large gathering is an indication of the interest with which the people are following the political situation of Canada at the present time. Indeed, all over the Dominion there are evidences of a revived interest in public life and public questions. There are many reasons why at this time, after the world has rallied from a great convulsion such as it has just experienced, we should all have an added interest in the affairs of the country, an added desire to see it well governed, and an added wish to have a larger freedom secured to the great mass of men than there has been in this country hitherto. And so, from one end of Canada to the other, we are witnessing to-day in political assemblies, just the kind of demonstration one sees this evening.

Before I begin to speak on the public question to which I desire to refer particularly, may I take advantage of this opportunity, on my first visit to the capital of your province, to thank not only the citizens of Charlottetown, but the people of Prince Edward Island generally for the great honour which they have done me in permitting one of their constituencies to elect me as its representative in the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada. I assure you, ladies and gentlemen, that whatever the future may afford in the way of opportunity, this, at least, it will impose in the way of lasting obligation,—that I shall always have a profound feeling of the utmost gratitude to the good people of this Island for having enabled me, with the new responsibilities which have devolved upon me through the goodwill of my fellow-Liberals, to enter the Parliament of this vast Dominion by the door of this province.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

If time permitted, I should gladly speak of the great warmth of the reception which has been accorded Mr. Lapointe and myself since we came over to the Island. To-day at luncheon there was an opportunity to say in public something of what we had been saying in private to each other, and that was, that go where one might, from one end of Canada to the other, it was questionable whether one would find a people whose natures were so universally kind, so universally courteous, and so unreservedly generous as are those of the people of Prince Edward Island. (Applause.) I say this without any intention either to praise or to flatter, but simply as expressing to you what has been a matter of observation on every hand in the brief time I have been privileged to be associated with this province.

I shall not take up the time of the audience by referring to matters of a personal nature upon which I should very much like to touch. The exigencies of our arrangements, however, make it imperative that I should proceed without undue delay to questions of greater moment, and I shall therefore begin at once to deal with what seems to me to be some of the outstanding features of the political situation in Canada at the present time.

Having concluded his introductory remarks, Mr. King said that in his opinion the great need in Canada today was stability; stability as regards conditions throughout the country, and stability in matters of government. In this connection, he opened his address by reference to the world unrest as it had followed in the wake of war, and as it was demonstrating itself in the different class movements which were coming into such prominence at the present time. On these matters he spoke as follows:

THE UNREST OF OUR TIMES.

"Let us realize that it is impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it is equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada from conditions as they exist in other countries."

"For many a year to come the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which does not reckon with that fact, is certain sooner or later to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which have been forced upon us.

EFFECTS OF THE WORLD UPHEAVAL.

"Let us remember that the world has just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization has been torn into shreds. The nations are busily engaged in patching it together anew. It will be some time yet before the process is complete. In physical outline the boundaries of countries have changed. But the changed map of Europe is only one evidence of a changed order an outward and visible sign of an infinitely greater convulsion from within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to its depths. A truer simile of the world's condition today is that of the ocean seething after storm. For years to come this tide of emotion will continue to surge in human breasts with seemingly irresistible flow, mounting ever and anon high with hope and then falling away into depths of despondency and despair. A recognition of this great truth should make us view with great patience the restlessness of our day. It should awaken a sympathy with all these movements which bespeak an aroused conscience, and sound a new note in human aspirations. Here I may refer to some who belong to three of the largest and most important elements in our national society; the farmers, labor, and the war veterans.

THE AGRARIAN MOVEMENT.

It is no more coincidence that we have the rise of the Grain Growers Party in the West and of the United Famers in Ontario at the time they have come. With the defeat of Reciprocity, a Grain Growers Party in the West was inevitable. Sir Wilfrid Laurier saw this clearly, and told the people of Canada so very plainly. It was not Sir Wilfrid's fault, nor the fault of the Liberal Party, and least of all the fault of Hon. Mr. Fielding and his friends in the Maritime Provinces, that Reciprocity did not carry. It was the forces that were opposed to a wise and progressive Liberalism.

Then, on May 14, 1918, the farmers of Ontario and Quebec came in thousands from all parts of these provinces to the very doors of Parliament to protest against the broken pledges of the administration, and the arbitrary measures being enacted and arbitrary methods being employed by the Government in carrying out many of its measures, and the administration declined to permit them to enter the building, and met with blank indifferences— one might almost say with contempt— their respectful petitions; it was equally inevitable they should return to their homes determined upon political action through their existing organizations. In so far as these movements are in the nature of protest against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the administration, and are evidence of determination on the part of those engaged in agriculture to secure a wider measure of economic freedom, there can be only one attitude toward them on the part of all true Liberals, and that an attitude of wholehearted approval and co-operation in an endeavor to obtain reform already too long delayed.

THE ONTARIO ELECTIONS.

Of the events of the year just passed, one of the most significant has been the results attending upon political organization of the farmers in different parts of Canada, and especially in the Province of Ontario. The overwhelming defeat of the Hearst Government and the formation of a Provincial administration under Mr. Drury, was one of these surprises which lend so much interest and zest to politics. Surprising as the outcome of the Provincial elections might at first appear, one has not to seek very far for an explanation. First and foremost must be placed the exasperation of the people with a Government that had usurped the sovereign right of the people to govern themselves and had become the chief ally of the Federal administration in promulgating and maintaining arbitrary enactments. The compact between Mr. Hearst and Mr. Proudfoot to perpetuate the Government in office and the members in their seats in the Legislature may not have been without explanation on grounds of political expediency. If, however, we have not abandoned altogether what is fundamental in the right of the people to self-government, it was wholly without justification on constitutional grounds.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D . 4145

LIBERAL ATTITUDE TOWARD THE FARMERS.

Liberals should be the last to deplore any constitutional act on the part of the people to maintain their sovereign rights. It is in this way that governments are taught to respect the people's will. It must never be forgotten that whilst the Farmer candidates were returnd in largest numbers the overthrow of the Hearst Government in Ontario was essentially a victory for the Liberal forces of the Province against a reactionary Government, a victory accomplished by Farmers and Liberals combined, and working in most constituencies in wholehearted combination.

As Liberals, then, in the truest meaning of that word, we mistake altogether the significance of these agrarian movements if we do not see in them evidences of Liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies.

LIBERAL ATTITUDE TOWARD LABOR.

And the same is true of the Labor movement. Here, again, is another large class in our national society, which has become conscious, not only of economic injustices in the past, but of the need for united action to gain that fuller expression of personal and economic freedom which is of the very essence of all true Liberalism. Can we as Liberals fail to appreciate the aims and aspirations of that movement? Can we fail to share something of the thoughts and feelings of the men and women who are a part of it? Speaking for myself, my interest in industrial problems is bred of my Liberalism. I can think of the problem of industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to us the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farm, or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity. If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist.

LIBERAL ATTITUDE VIOLATED VETERANS.

Now, as to the returned soldiers, or, more appropriately, the war veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule, and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for realization in larger measure of the freedom they fought to prserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular system. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifices of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception for which they gave their lives.

SUPREME TASK OF LIBERALISM TO RECONCILE DIFFERENCES.

It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of sacial progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficietly strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

War has shown what can be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If we can carry the spirit of co-operation and sacrifice into this period of reconstruction, we have nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element in our national life is going to seek to go to its own gait unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and asprations to its own, if each separately intends to aim at dominion in national affairs, then we may look for a prolongation of the period of confusion, and, in the end, retrogression rather than advance.

PARLIAMENT A MIRROR.

Parliament ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that go to make up a nation. It is absurd for the Dominion of Canada to have a Parliament that has relatively no farmers in it, to speak for the farmers, and no one from the ranks of Labor to speak for Labor. I hope there will be in our next parliament representatives of both these classes of our people, and also men from the ranks of the war veterans, to speak for those who have served their country with such heroism and for those who lie in Flanders fields and cannot speak for them. I think our next parliament must be truly representative if we are to secure unity and contentment in this country.

MONOPOLY OF GOVERNMENT BY ANY CLASS OBJECTIONABLE.

Just here let me say quite frankly that when it comes to matters of government, I am unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. I am relentlessly opposed to government being controlled visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing, or financial interests. I am not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of our national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans, or the newly unfranchised female voters. I know no finer max-

(Continued on Page Six)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

im of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym. enunciated in the reign of Charles I., which is as applicable to our politics today as it was to England in that unsettled period.

"That form of government is best which both actuate and dispose every part and member of the State to the common good.'

Certainly, such a form of government is not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by any class. It is only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine goodwill.

SECTIONAL AND CLASS POLICIES IMPERIL UNITY.

And this leads me ta speak of the East and the West of our wide Dominion, and of all the vast intervening space of British Columbia with its wonderful diversified resources, of the Prairie Provinces with their vast agricultural wealth, of Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial developments. Is the splendid unity of our great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas, or particular interests; or are we to carry into the shaping of our national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the war was won? Shall it be each for self, or all for all? Shall it be the special interest of a class or the well-being of the whole community? Shall it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with thought of nought save the honour of their country and their duty before God?

A GREAT POLITICAL PARTY NEEDED TO ACHIEVE REFORM.

If it is this larger, this nobler ideal, we must have in our Federa politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. It cannot be a manufacturers' party, for that will never suit the farmers or consumers; neither can it be a farmers' party, for that, too, in the long run, will raise up powerful combinations against itself which will serve to divide east and west, to set the cities and towns and villages over against the farming communities and the rural districts over against the urban. Neither can it be a Labor party, for that means the organization, sooner or later, of a Capitalist party, and aided strife in industrial relations, rather than the working out of some system of joint-control, by which alone the problems of industry are to be solved. Least of all is it likely ever to be a War Veterans' party. The War Veterans themselves have been the first to repudiate any thought of the kind; that would be introducing into this new world the old-time conflicts between the Army and the Civil authorities, which take us back to the days of Cromwell, and a condition of society which our citizen soldiary would be the first to deplore. No, it cannot be a party of any class,of any creed or any race, or of any special interest. It must be a party representative of all the interests of the nation, and reflecting in its composition the many-sided elements of our national life.

LESSONS FROM THE WAR.

A great political party has a significance scarcely dreamed of by many who today appreciate too little what continuity of effort in a great cause means in the maintenance of freedom, and in the ultimate achievement of victory for policies with which its name and history have been identified.

Let me make a comparison which will appeal to all. In the great war just ended, did past history and tradition mean nothing to the historic regiments which participated in the fight for freedom? Did the Black Watch and the Gordon Highlanders signify nothing to Scotsmen and men of Scotch descent? Did the Guards and the Middlesex add nothing of fighting quality to Englishmen and sons of Englishmen? Were the Dublin Fusiliers and the Inniskillen Dragoons mere names to Irishmen and those who fought at their side in these historic regiments? More than one Canadian soldier will ever regret the loss of identity of his regiment in the Canadian Expeditionary Force; but is there a Canadian living who would take from the colors of our army the names of the battles displayed upon them?

All through history the liberties of our human society have been preserved, and new liberties won by great fighting forces, the military and naval forces in the arena of war, and the not less militant forces in the political arena; and the finer the tradition of the fighting forces in either field, the greater has been the measure of their achievement.

NECESSARY AND INEVITABLE.

It is not a mere accident that the system of party has been established in England for more than two centuries. The existence of permanent parties can alone give a guarantee of caution in accepting, and perseverance in advocating, policies and proposals. It assures, better than any other means can do, a full consideration of difficult problems, and safeguards the country against the hurried adoption by Parliament of ill-digested measures.

The existence of parties, moreover, is inevitable. As a distinguished English Parliamentarian has said, the Conservative temper and the Liberal temper, the Conservative ideal and the Liberal ideal, Conservative methods and Liberal methods, differ fundamentally. A ministry cannot fail to belong to one school or the other It will attract to its support those of its own views. It will drive into opposition those who disagree with it. Let existing parties be destroyed or cast into confusion, as has been temporarily the case in all the countries of Europe, and to some extent in our country under the stress and strain of war, certain they are to reappear before long, possibly under different names for a time, but with the same long, possibly under different names for a time, but with the same predominating ideas as now, and to support the same respective policies.

In the last analysis, there is something in political parties which corresponds to fundamental instincts and tendencies in human nature. There is in man an impulse which makes for onward and progressive thought and action, and there is a counter tendency which makes for delay, which fears no beginnings, which resists change. The former impulse is stronger in youth; the latter gains emphasis with age.An exaggeration of the one tendancy leads to extreme courses of action; the ex-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

aggeration of the other leads to reactionary behaviour just as extreme. But between the extremes, the cleavage between the reactionary and the reformer is clearly seen in every age and in every class. Those who feel and think alike on great questions will do well, in the endeavor to make their views prevail, to link their efforts and to co-operate as members of one large party with a policy and platform broad enough in essentials to command the allegiance of those who differ only as respects non-essentials. Parties are necessary, useful, and likely to endure. To what better party can those of Liberal views look for a fulfilment of their desires than to a party that is Liberal in name as well as in aim, and which has a century of Liberal traditions to hold it true to its highest principles, and to spur it on to yet nobler achievement.

UNITY OF COMMAND ESSENTIAL TO VICTORY.

Let me make onef urther observation from the experience of war. No one will question that the Allied countries were one in aim, or that there was other than the strongest of reasons to compel co-operation in their resistance of the Central Powers. Their fighting capacity and their heroism was not for a moment in doubt. It was not, however, till unity of command was established that the tide of battle turned, and that victory by the Allied armies became assured.

With the Liberal forces at work in Canada today among the farmers, in the rural communities, among Labor in the cities and towns, among the returned soldiers, and among that great body of Canadian citizenry, men and women alike, who, apart from class affiliations or associations are thinking and praying and striving for the dawn of that better day which the sacrifices and privations of war were to usher in, there is nothing to withstay ultimate and speedy victory in the triumph of Liberal ideas and policies, except a failure on the part of those who are opposed to a common enemy to co-operate in a spirit that has regard primarily for the good of all.

Not only must we have stability and unity of purpose and aim as regards the liberal and progressive forces throughout the country; we must if we are to have progress and prosperity in the nation, have stability in matters of government as well. It is not enough to help to calm the restless spirit of the nation; it is also necessary to have its affairs directed in accordance with some policy which is known, and of which the country as a whole has approved. There must be a chart and compass which will give certainty of direction to the ship of state. It is owing to instability in management of the nation's affairs that the ship of state is in such distress in Canada today. Not only is the Government without a head to direct its affairs; it is actually without a policy to guide its actions. Never were the affairs of a country in a more hopeless state of muddle, nor an adminisration more disorganized than is the case at the present time.

POLICY OF DRIFT REVIEWED.

A policy of drift is the only characterization that can be made of the Government's action. Let me briefly review one or two outstanding circumstances which all present will recall.

It will be remembered that the Union Government was formed for the purpose of the election of 1917. The Union was preceded by the War Measures Act, the Military Voters Act, the War-time Elections Act, which, were the truth wholly known, could be shown to have been more of a determining factor in bringing about the Union than ought else. While the war was on, the cry "Win the War," was a sufficient rallying cry, sufficient for election purposes, and sufficient for a policy as long as the war lasted. The electors were told that the union was formed for that purpose and for that only. It was not a government for the purpose other than that of helping to "win the war," according, at all events, to the professions of the Prime Minister at the time the administration was formed, and of those who entered his cabinet.

PRIME MINISTER AND COLLEAGUES ABSENT.

When the war came to an end with the signing of the armistice in November, 1918, one would have supposed that the Prime Minister would have done one of two things. Either that he could have announced his intention of asking for a dissolution of Parliament, as soon as demobilization of the forces was completed, or that we would have formulated and announced some policy which Parliament and the country would have known was that of the ministry. Did he do either of these things? No, on the contrary he and two or more of his colleagues found it necessary to be absent in Europe the greater part of a year, and the affairs of state in Canada were permitted to drift along, first under one acting-Prime Minister, then under another; and the work of several of the departments entrusted at one time to one group of colleagues, and at another came to another group.

Finally, at the end of the regular session of 1919, the Prime Minister returned, to find not only that the policy of drift had rendered the government helpless in coping with a very serious situation in the city of Winnipeg and which was not without its ill-effects in all parts of Canada, but that his own following was hopelessly divided on urgent matters of policy; that the Unionist Government itself and its following in Parliament was being held together only by the emolument of office, and the love of power.

PRIME MINISTER ILL DURING SPECIAL SESSION.

Wearied with the strain of war, and disgusted with these internal wranglings which seemed to offer no promise of solution, the Prime Minister, considerably exhausted in vitality, contracted an illness which prevented him from being in Parliament except for a day or two during the special session held in the fall of last year. Then, again, the affairs of state were permitted to drift.

First, the country was told that the session was solely for the purpose of expressing approval of the Peace Treaty, which, as it turned out, was a wholly unnecessary procedure, and occupied but a few days. Then for weeks Parliament was dragged

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4148

along, often with nothing at all to do and seldom with the ministry prepared on any public matter. Then, the Prime minister became well enough to go away on a trip, to leave the country altogether; and after he was gone and the acting-Prime Minister had announced that the session would end in another few days, to the amazement of Parliament and the whole country, certain members of the Cabinet brought into Parliament, and rushed through, a piece of legislation respecting the railways of the Dominion involving a transaction amounting to over five hundred millions of dollars, or a quarter of the capital national debt of the Dominion, and has augmented as it has become one of the tremendous outlays of the war.

RIGHTS OF PEOPLE IGNORED

Wholly indifferent to the rights of even the peoples representatives in Parliament, this group controlling in the Cabinet, for the time being, refused even to permit the right to Parliament to ratify the agreement to be made between the Government and the Grand Trunk, though this right was expressly reserved in the legislation brought down, to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway in Great Britain. Approval has not yet been granted by the shareholders in England, and as Parliament ought to be reassembling in the course of another few weeks, I would like to say publicly again that, it being not yet too late to give the Canadian taxpayers who have to meet these obligations, the same rights as are given to the English shareholders who are to benefit by them, this right of approval of the Grand Trunk agreement should still be reserved to the people of Canada through their representatives in Parliament.

DRIFT WORSE THAN EVER.

But let me come at once to the explanation of this policy of drift, and ask whether the causes that account for it are such as are likely to be removed by anything that is likely to happen in the future of an appeal to the electorate. The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship, for a long time, just as he left in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he has said of policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none, and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hopes while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves, so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Lest it might appear that I am placing my own interpretation upon the facts of the case, let me quote from the published statements as given to the Press by the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

NO AFTER THE WAR POLICY

The first of these statements was issued from Ottawa on September 30. It referred to a caucus of the Liberal Unionist supporters of the Government held that day, and attended by the Liberal Unionist Ministers. After mentioning that the suggested policy of the Unionist party would be further discussed at a special meeting of the Cabinet Council on the day following, and that it would be considered on yet another day at a general Government caucus, before Sir Robert Borden left for the south, the statement continued as follows:—

"A meeting of the Liberal Unionist members of the House was held in the east block. The meeting expressed unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government, and the Government was congratulated on its success. The concensus of opinion was that as the members were elected to support Union Government, it was their intention to continue to do so, and the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Note the last of these sentences:—"The hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Here is a clear statement by one portion of the ministry that, notwithstanding the war had been brought to an end by the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, after a lapse of nearly a year the Government had not yet been able to evolve a policy to meet the after-the-war conditions.

HOPES OF A POLICY FRUSTRATED

But even the hopes expressed by this wing of the Cabinet and of the Government's supporters in Parliament were not realized. The Government caucus was held on October 2, and here is what was said to the press of its proceedings. The statement will be found in all the papers of that date:—"The feature of the conference was a pronouncement by the Premier setting forth his opinions on the question (i. e., the future of the union) and giving expression to the hope that his followers would be consolidated into a party to deal with the great problems of peace."

No policy, no unity, no constructive thought or idea, the mere expression of a hope that internal discord might be healed, that the party might hang together a little longer!

This would be ludicrous enough were it not quite so tragic. When we realize, however, that this was not only the situation in October last, but that it has continued to be the situation ever since, and is the situation at the present time, that it related to the business of the whole Dominion, the seriousness of the situation becomes apparent.

PRIME MINISTER GIVES UP THE AFFAIRS OF STATE A SECOND TIME.

It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his Cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the Premiership. The commotion thus occasioned in the counsels of the Unionist party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call it to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the Union from an immediate break-up, the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry. I say the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise.

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY—A STRIKING CONTRAST.

In splendid and striking contrast to the situation as revealed by the Government and its followers, or to the possible substitution of some group system of government, which would increase rather than lessen the evils

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

along, often with nothing at all to do and seldom with the ministry prepared on any public matter. Then, the Prime minister became well enough to go away on a trip, to leave the country altogether; and after he was gone and the acting-Prime Minister had announced that the session would end in another few days, to the amazement of Parliament and the whole country, certain members of the Cabinet brought into Parliament, and rushed through, a piece of legislation respecting the railways of the Dominion involving a transaction amounting to over five hundred millions of dollars, or a quarter of the capital national debt of the Dominion, and has augmented as it has become one of the tremendous outlays of the war.

RIGHTS OF PEOPLE IGNORED

Wholly indifferent to the rights of even the peoples representatives in Parliament, this group controlling in the Cabinet, for the time being,, refused even to permit the right to Parliament to ratify the agreement to be made between the Government and the Grand Trunk, though this right was expressly reserved in the legislation brought down, to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway in Great Britain. Approval has not yet been granted by the shareholders in England, and as Parliament ought to be reassembling in the course of another few weeks, I would like to say publicly again that, it being not yet too late to give the Canadian taxpayers who have to meet these obligations, the same rights as are given to the English shareholders who are to benefit by them, this right of approval of the Grand Trunk agreement should still be reserved to the people of Canada through their representatives in Parliament.

DRIFT WORSE THAN EVER.

But let me come at once to the explanation of this policy of drift, and ask whether the causes that account for it are such as are likely to be removed by anything that is likely to happen in the future of an appeal to the electorate. The Prime Minister has just left for parts unknown, for a period of time unknown, and who is to lead Parliament in his absence is still unknown. The situation in this particular, instead of being improved, has gone from bad to worse. The pilot has left the ship, for a long time, just as he left in the fall of 1919 for a short time, without venturing to decide between the factions in his Cabinet which of the two is to assume his role during his absence. All he has said of policy that is to govern in his absence is that there is none, and all that he has ventured to say concerning a future policy is to repeat what he said before he left the time before, that he hopes while he is away the quarrelling factions may come to some agreement among themselves, so as to be able, somehow, to hold together just as long as the law will permit.

Lest it might appear that I am placing my own interpretation upon the facts of the case, let me quote from the published statements as given to the Press by the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

NO AFTER THE WAR POLICY

The first of these statements was issued from Ottawa on September 30. It referred to a caucus of the Liberal Unionist supporters of the Government held that day, and attended by the Liberal Unionist Ministers. After mentioning that the suggested policy of the Unionist party would be further discussed at a special meeting of the Cabinet Council on the day following, and that it would be considered on yet another day at a general Government caucus, before Sir Robert Borden left for the south, the statement continued as follows:—

"A meeting of the Liberal Unionist members of the House was held in the east block. The meeting expressed unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government, and the Government was congratulated on its success. The concensus of opinion was that as the members were elected to support Union Government, it was their intention to continue to do so, and the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Note the last of these sentences:—"The hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after-the-war conditions."

Here is a clear statement by one portion of the ministry that, notwithstanding the war had been brought to an end by the signing of the armistice on November 11, 1918, after a lapse of nearly a year the Government had not yet been able to evolve a policy to meet the after-the-war conditions.

HOPES OF A POLICY FRUSTRATED

But even the hopes expressed by this wing of the Cabinet and of the Government's supporters in Parliament were not realized. The Government caucus was held on October 2, and here is what was said to the press of its proceedings. The statement will be found in all the papers of that date:—"The feature of the conference was a pronouncement by the Premier setting forth his opinions on the question (i. e., the future of the union) and giving expression to the hope that his followers would be consolidated into a party to deal with the great problems of peace."

No policy, no unity, no constructive thought or idea, the mere expression of a hope that internal discord might be healed, that the party might hang together a little longer!

This would be ludicrous enough were it not quite so tragic. When we realize, however, that this was not only the situation in October last, but that it has continued to be the situation ever since, and is the situation at the present time, that it related to the business of the whole Dominion, the seriousness of the situation becomes apparent.

PRIME MINISTER GIVES UP THE AFFAIRS OF STATE A SECOND TIME.

It is no longer ago than Christmas week that the Prime Minister, once more weary in body and sick in heart and mind as well, disgusted with the internal wranglings of his Cabinet and its inability to unite upon any policy, caused it to be generally known that it was his intention to retire forthwith from the Premiership. The commotion thus occasioned in the counsels of the Unionist party and throughout the country is so recent that nothing is required to call it to mind. Matters again had reached a crisis. To save the Union from an immediate break-up, the Prime Minister once again agreed to continue a while longer as the nominal head of the ministry. I say the nominal head, because the basis of the understanding reached was that he should be absent, not only from the business of Parliament, but from the country, for an indefinite time, and to be so far away that he would be beyond the possibility of conference with respect to any situation which might arise.

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY—A STRIKING CONTRAST.

In splendid and striking contrast to the situation as revealed by the Government and its followers, or to the possible substitution of some group system of government, which would increase rather than lessen the evils

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

so glaringly exhibited, we have the position of the Liberal party as it stands in Canada to-day. In unity and stability it holds an enviable position. It is a party with a policy clearly and definitely defined; a policy not the outgrowth of a single mind such as Sir Robert Borden proposes the Unionist party should accept, not a group of conflicting policies, as would be the case with an administration composed of special classes and interests; but a broad national policy, wrought out of a convention representative of all classes, of all creeds, of all races, of all parts of our great Dominion, and embodying principles which while not without reference to the special needs of every class, is concerned primarily with the well-being of all and which all combined are prepared to advocate and support.

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM.

Perhaps it would be best to let the Platform of the Liberal Party speak for itself. Here are some of the resolutions that were unanimously adopted at the Convention, and which now constitute a part of the policy of the Liberal Party.

FINANCIAL CONDITION AND TAXATION.

First and foremost in the Liberal platform is the demand for economy in the administration of public affairs. If there is one criticism above another to which the present administration has laid itself open, it is the vast extravagance and waste there has been of public monies at a time when, of all times, the strictest economy was needed. We all realize that the expenditures of war were necessarily abnormal and necessarily very great; but one would have expected that during the period of war, and especially subsequent to it, the Government would have economized in every possible way. Instead of that, an analysis of the Public Accounts will show that there is not a department of the civil government in which the expenditure has not been vastly greater during and since the period of the war than it has ever hitherto been. In addition to that, the Government has been taking on new liabilities on an enormous scale.

It is hardly possible to believe—but it is nevertheless true—that the last act of the administration, the taking over of the Grand Trunk Railway System, was one involving the country in a transaction amounting to over 200 millions of dollars (a sum greater than the total national debt of Canada at the time the Liberals went out of office in 1911), and this at a time when the public debt of this country had reached the enormous figure of over two and a half billions of dollars.

Let us pause for a moment to look at the figures with regard to Canada's public debt; for all that is possible in the matter of reform and of assistance in one direction and another is necessarily circumscribed by the condition of the country's finances. Taking the public accounts of Canada for 1919, the following figures appear:

THE TOTAL DEBT OF CANADA

In 1911, Canada's total debt was.....	$ 474,941,497.12
In 1919, Canada's total debt was	$2,676,635,724.77
An increase of	$2,201,694,237.65

In 1911 the total debt amounted to $63.32 per person in Canada.

In 1919 the total debt amounted to $358.88 per person in Canada.

An increase of $295.56 per person in Canada.

To raise the necessary money by taxation to carry on the business of government is going to be the great problem for years to come in this country. It means more and more in the way of taxation, for we cannot go on borrowing indefinitely; sooner or later we must face the situation in all its ugliness and begin to meet current expenditures out of current revenues, and to pay off some of the outstanding liabilities. In considering the form taxation should take to meet the country's increasing obligations, the Liberal Party in its platform has laid down the principle that the burden of taxation should be placed on those who are best able to bear it, and to this end has declared that, instead of resorting to further indirect taxation as a means of raising revenue, the increase of revenue must be sought from an equitable and effective imposition and collection of graduated taxes on business profits and income, applicable to all incomes above reasonable exemptions, and also in taxes upon luxuries.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

But how, it will be asked, are the people to carry the burden of increased taxation along with the ever-increasing cost of living. Here we come to what seems to me the problem of problems in Canada to-day. Whilst there are classes, large and small, to which some belong while others do not, there is one class to which all, whether men, women or children, belong irrespective of trade or occupation, of race or creed, of origin or circumstances, irrespective even of politics, and that is the great body of consumers.

That leads me to ask at once what have the respective parties in Canada to offer in the way of policy to meet what is legitimate in the demands of the farmers and of labor, and at the same time certain to be of benefit to that one class in our national society which embraces all classes, namely, consumers, who are all vitally affected by everything that affects the cost of living. A policy that is going to serve to still further enhance the cost of living is not one which in the end is going to effect much that is good for anyone. What is needed is a policy that will bear directly on this cost of living problem in a way that will aid in its solution, and at the same time further the legitimate demands of those classes in our society upon which all society is dependent for the production and distributing of these commodities which are essential to its very existence.

It is here that we are at once brought face to face with the contrast as it exists between the two political parties in Canada to-day. The Unionist Party, with its policy of drift, the logical and inevitable fruit of the continuance of a Union which has served the purpose for which it was formed, and has ceased to have any real purpose other than that of holding on to office, and the constructive and progressive policy of the Liberal Party as framed by the National Liberal Convention, which assembled in Ottawa in August of last year.

THE TARIFF

If the problem of the cost of living is to be set in a manner which will be of advantage at once to the consumers of the country and to its producers, this can only be effected by carefully considered changes in the tariff, which will have the effect of stimulating and increasing production, and of removing such artificial barriers to legitimate trade as cause prices of the necessaries of life to be unduly enhanced to consumers. The wealth of the country can only be increased by developing our natural resources, and there is no more effective way of developing those resources, whether they be of the land, of the sea, of the mines or of the forest, than by placing the necessary instruments of production, in all of these industries, within reach of those engaged in them at as low a cost as may be possible. Accordingly, the Liberal Platform has declared that duties on all instruments of production, and the raw materials entering into the same, should be removed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Then, there is a large class of articles, those which constitute the necessaries of life, which should be made as reasonable to consumers at legitimate manufacture and trade will permit. As the tariff revision is an all-important part of the platform of the Liberal Party, perhaps this plank cannot be too specifically stated. It is as follows:

That the best interests of Canada demand that substantial reductions of the burdens of Customs taxation be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance: First: diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; Second: reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country.

That, to these ends, wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils; nets, net-twines and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers, should be free from Customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.

That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel and footwear, and on other articles of general consumption (other than luxuries), as well as on the raw material entering into the manufacture of the same.

That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent. of the general tariff.

And the Liberal Party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provisions of this resolution when returned to power.

Before leaving the Tariff, I should add that, at the Convention the Liberals again expressed their faith in Reciprocity in natural products with the United States, and determined that, if opportunity should be afforded to carry out the free interchange of natural products, as provided in the Reciprocity Agreement of 1911, the earliest advantage would be taken of that opportunity.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO AGRICULTURE.

Realizing the importance of Agriculture, the Convention considered very carefully and fully means whereby the interests of this great industry could be best promoted in Canada. Nothing could better disclose the intention of the Liberal Party to render every possible assistance to Agriculture than the following resolution, which pledges the Party's support to policies for which the farmers have long been contending:

In the interest of agricultural production and development it is expedient to encourage co-operation and induce greater investment in farming; therefore, it is deemed expedient to utilize the national credit to assist co-operative Agricultural Credit Associations to provide capital for agriculture at the lowest possible rates.

With the object of reducing the high cost of living by eliminating as far as possible the waste and expense in handling food products between the producer and consumer, it is expedient to extend the principle and system of Canadian Government Elevators and to provide interior and terminal cold storage warehouses equipped for the assembling, assorting ,preparing, storing and grading of food products in order that co-operative organizations and others may have available to them reliable, modern equipment, for the distribution of farm products in superior condition and at lessened cost either for domestic consumption or for export. And that cold storage transportation facilities should be provided, at the cost of operation, for the shipment of food products throughout Canada and for the carrying to the markets of the world the surplus farm products of this country and delivering them in such condition that will make Canadian foodstuffs a standard of quality for the world's market.

That in the interests of agriculture, in aid of greater production on the land, and for the conservation of the soil in Canada, it is expedient for the Government to arrange for the distribution of fertilizers at the lowest possible cost.

Your Committee on Agriculture begs to recommend that a Special Committee be appointed to prepare a resolution upon the banking system of Canada and the adapting of said system to satisfactory loans in connection with land and live stock, and to present such resolution to your Committee.

One sees it repeatedly asserted in the press, for reasons best known to those who are responsible for the assertion, that neither of the old political parties desire an election at the present time. Some have even gone so far as to insinuate that there was likely to be collusion between the leaders of the parties in the House of Commons to avoid an election, on the specious plea that there is much unrest and that there is no telling who may come to occupy the Treasury benches. Let me deal with this assumption and deal with it very plainly.

I am not in the confidence of the government, and therefore, am not in a position to know what the views of its members are. I imagine that in this one single instance they are united, they are all doubtless agreed that, be the wishes of the people what they may, they, the members of the administration, are there and intend to hold on to office just as long as this can be done with the support of their following in the House.

Though unable to speak for the party in power, I am in a position where I can speak for the Liberal party, and for the Liberal members who comprise the Opposition in the House of Commons. What their wishes as individual members may be, I cannot say. No man would go out of his way to court an election any more in the interest of the country than in his own interest. Too great frequency in elections is not a condition to be desired. But the question is not one of individual desires, or even the desire of a parliamentary group. The question fundamentally is, do we believe in government by consent, the consent of the governed, and if so as Liberals, believing in self-government as the foundation of all our liberties, and in representative and responsible government as the only form of self-government worthy the name, there can be but one attitude towards a government that never was representative, and that only figuratively speaking could be regarded as responsible, and that is that the sooner it makes way for a government that is founded upon the will of the governed, and is truly representative of the people as a whole, the better for peace, order and good government in our midst.

GOODWILL IN INTER-IMPERIAL AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

It is a new attitude and a new spirit that is needed to develop unity. Whilst war may serve to bring forth what is finest and best in a people, it also helps to develop much that is worst. It breeds a spirit of ill-will which continues to lurk in countries long after the last has been heard of war. The substitution of goodwill for all that war has made of ill-will in the various phases of our national life must be the work of a progressive Liberalism; a spirit of goodwill between individuals who have differed in the past in politics or differ at the present time; a spirit of goodwill toward classes that have their own special aims, ambitions, and aspirations, whether similar to or different

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

from our own; a spirit of goodwill in matters of race and religion; in inter-imperial and international relations.

NATIONAL UNITY THE GREAT AIM

It is not only as regards differences between persons and classes, racial and religious differences, national and international differences, that we must seek in a spirit of goodwill to bind up the wounds and to bridge the chasms which the roused passions of the war have served to widen and create. We must resolve as never before to permit no new cleavage to destroy our national unity. There was a remote time in our country's history when the inhabitants of Quebec were alone thought of as belonging to Canada. That time ended with the enactment of the Constitutional Act of 1791. Then there came the time when we had an upper and a lower Canada. That time was nominally at an end when the Union Act of 1840 was passed. It came pretty effectively to an end with Confederation in 1867. There remained, however, a considerable period which may be said to have prevailed pretty generally until the end of the last century and to have continued in some parts up to the very moment of the war, when the Nova Scotian about to visit Quebec or Ontario talked about his visit to Canada, and when the traveller from British Columbia similarly described his journey to Ontario or Quebec.

CANADIAN UNITY ESTABLISHED BY THE WAR

The war, we believe, has put an end forever to geographical divisions even in thought, so far as the unity of our Dominion is concerned . Not only in the eyes of the world, but in our own eyes, that single word "Canada" on the shoulder strap of our soldiers in the fighting armies overseas has welded this country into one as no symbol of nationhood in the past has ever united it. It was for the unity of Canada, the unity of the British Empire, of which Canada is a part, the unity of aim and purpose of the free nations associated as Allies in the titanic struggle for the world's freedom that our brave heroes gave their lives in the fields of Flanders and of France.

National unity we must at all cost maintain, and our political platform must be so drafted and our political policies so conceived and carried out as to make that unity at all times a great reality.

G. W. V. A. DELEGATION

Mr. King said that he had met a delegation of the Great War Veterans' Association, who had pointed out to him that all over Canada there was a feeling among soldiers that great injustice is being done them in the way the legislation respecting themselves and their dependents is being administered. He had a letter from a friend in Montreal suggesting that he appoint a Committee of Liberals from the House, including returned men, to take up questions specially relating to soldiers and see that they are brought to the attention of the different departments of the Government. "I will publicly make this announcement," said Mr. King, "that I will have this committee appointed and will see to it that the War Veterans' interests are looked after."

Mr. King also spoke of the resolution passed by the Liberal Convention that the western provinces should be granted the ownership and control of natural resources within their own boundaries, on terms that are fair and equitable with reference to the other provinces.

He said that when this question came up, he would see to it that when the claims of the west were being considered, the claims of the eastern provinces, including Prince Edward Island, would be considered at the same time.

A report of Mr. Lapointe's speech will appear to-morrow.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Charlottetown Island Patriot
January 15 — 20

D 41.52

The Prince Edward Island Patriot

THURSDAY, JANUARY 15, 1920.

MacKenzie King and His Message

Much was expected and more was realized from the visit of the Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, M.P., to this the Captial of the Province. Every function,beginning with the luncheon at noon, the reception in the afternoon and the two magnificent and crowded meetings in the evening, tell in unmistakeable numbers that our people are Liberal to the core and that all Liberals and Conservatives, Catholics and Protestants, French and Anglo Saxons were eager to hear the message that the great Leader of the Liberal party had to give them. Even at this inclement season of the year, farmers and others flocked from the centres and from the countryside, and filled our two largest halls to their utmost capacity,—scores being unable to gain an entrance. It is estimated that at least between three and four thousand people must have heard Messrs King and Lapointe in their great political deliverances which had been looked forward to with such unusual interest. Certainly following so closely upon the auspicious opening in Halifax of the Chieftain's tour and before the opening of Parliament next month it evidences that the spirit of Liberalism is undoubtedly the one held between the two oceans bounding Eastern and Western Canada.

During the war, politics was to a great extent, dropped and almost all thought and effort were directed to the great conflict, while all eyes were turned across the seas. But now, as has been the case for centuries past, politics, which after all is the government of the state—for there are only two things really worth while in our lives,—namely Church and State—is again taking a great hold upon the people. Responsible government and representative institutions have been won by the fearlessness and boldness of the statesmen of the past,and the good government of our country and the preservation of our liberties and free institutions depend upon "government of the people, for the people and by the people," and to accomplish this the peoples' voice must prevail. This is the very essence of Liberalism!

Messrs King and Lapointe stand first, last and all the time for unity in Canada, unity of the two great races, in our government, and then a Liberal platform based upon a reasoned policy, broad enough, and wide enough and Liberal enough to embrace all conditions, all races, religions, and activities of mankind—and this was the message delivered to our people by Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe.

Mr. King's reference to returned soldiers thrilled the hearts of every man and woman in the vast audiences,for all had been touched, either directly or indirectly by the war.

"The boys," he said "had responded to our call, let us respond to theirs. He had been waited upon in the afternoon by representatives of the Great War Veterans' Association and from the platform last night he declared that the soldiers were not only deserving of all consideration, but their wives, mothers and dependents were in an equal measure deserving of the deepest consideration of the Liberal party.

There are three great movements in the world, to be accounted with today:—

FIRST—The agrarian movement.

SECOND—The Labor movement.

THIRD—The Returned Soldiers movement.

"We mistake," said Mr. King, "the significance of the farmers' movements, if we do not see in them evidences of liberal thought and feeling on the part of those who are advocating and supporting their policies."

With respect to the industrial problem, he told the people that his interest in this was bred in liberalism."I can think of the problems of industry only in terms of humanity. Liberalism is to me the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it be for those who work in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns in the shops and factories; whether it be the well-being of women and children that is at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another are seeking is what we as Liberals have all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality of opportunity.If that is not part of Liberalism, then Liberalism has ceased to exist,and so far as returned soldiers, the third great movement is concerned Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocratic government.

Now, as to the returned soldiers, or, more appropriately, the war veterans, who are not without ideals and aspirations as a class. If there is in Canada today one portion of its citizenry which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it is the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule, and the tyranny of material power, it is not surprising that these men and women hope for a realization in larger measure of thefreedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals, we have special reason to share their hopes and aspirations.

"Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against autocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression upon a world scale of two diametrically opposite systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular systems. The war will be without its meaning to our day and generation unless we seek to make out of the sacrifice of the heroic dead a new social order, resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they gave their lives.

"It is here that the supreme task of Liberalism comes in. Either we shall have an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups I have mentioned, resulting, as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later are certain to oppose them; or we shall have a great progressive movement which will lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It will all depend upon whether the spirit of good-will is sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

This in brief was the message of Mackenzie King to our people. Of course a great many other matters were touched upon such as the permanency of parties which is such an essential necessity in our form of government—or indeed any government.

The tariff and the reducing thereof, in some instances its abolition, a fairer franchise, and the reducing of the high cost of living were some of the most important planks in the liberal platform; also the encouragement of agriculture and a free interchange of natural products as provided in the Reciprocity Agreement of 1911.

Mr. King's criticism of the present so-called Union Government was both searching and condemnatory. The ship of state is without a pilot who may be at one time in Cuba and another in South Africa, she is captained by the cook anl crew whose only desire is to let her drift and keep her off the rocks of retribution until they find a safe place to beach her.

An enormous debt has been fastened upon our country—the sum of $2,676,000,000—that means $358.00 for every person in our country. He then showed the only possible way of providing means to carry on the affairs of the country, was by the strictest economy and the taxing of what could and should bear it.

Mr. King declared that self-government is the only true form of government for this or any country.

'As Liberals, believing in self-government as the foundation of all our liberties, and in representative and responsible government as the only form of self-government worthy the name, there can be but one attitude towards a government that never was representative, and that only figuratively speaking could be regarded as responsible, and that is that the sooner it makes way for a government that is founded upon the will of the governed, and is truly representative of the people as a whole, the better for peace, or order and good government in our midst."

Mr. Lapointe's reputation as a brilliant speaker was ably sustained and his declaration that the essential of sound Canadianism which knows neither sectionalism or national combintions; which knows no East or West, but only the building up of a larger Canada and a united people, free from prejudice and sectionalism appealed to every individual who heard him.

It was a happy thought on the part of Mr. King to bring to Prince Edward Island the eloquent and magnetic Leader of the French-Canadian race in the Province of Quebec. Upon Mr. Lapointe's shoulders has fallen the mantle of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and he surely is the rising son of this the pivotal province of this broad Dominion.

Thus Messrs King and Lapointe have not only given a great message to our people, but at the same time they have shown that responsible and representative government has ceased to exist in Canada; they have also placed before the country the fact that no one group or plurality of groups can ever successfully or permanently administer public affairs or govern a country, the people of which are in all the various activities of life.

Mr. King by his polished eloquence, his profound philosophy and his masterly grasp of facts has evidenced beyond all question his eminent fitness for the great task that lies before him. The greatest of Canadians and the most eloquent of public speakers on this Continent have at times been seen and heard in our city and we unhesitatingly state that Mr. King ranks with the very best of them.

Both Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe stated that owing to the magnificent welcome they received at the hands of our people and the unreserved generosity and hospitality extended to them, they would if such lie within their power, in the future, see to it that the interests of Prince Edward Island would not be neglected but would be carefully guarded. They are now familiar with the needs and possibilities of the province and what is required in order to fully develop our resources and expand our trade.

Not only have our people been stirred by their utterances but they have been encouraged and hope that when the Liberals again obtain power in this Dominion Prince Edward Island will be accorded a more generous recognition than she has ever enjoyed even in the halcyon days of Liberal rule.

ECHOES OF THE BIG MEETING

The few interruptions last night were good natured and encouraging.

Now do your best one enthusiastic Liberal shouted as Mr. King began.

Who couldn't be inspired to do his best with such a meeting? said the Liberal Leader.

* * * * *

"The Union Government is no more a representative Government than a smuggler is a free trader" said Mr. Lapointe.

* * * * *

The Market Hall fairly rocked with the applause when the brilliant French-Canadian orator paid these tributes to his chief."There is no greater brain in Canada,or bigger heart than Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King's."

* * * * * *

"The Unionists have been goose-stepping at the crack of the whip of the Prime Minister. We have no room in Canada for boodlers, schemers or Bolshevists, but men with brains, vision, honesty and pluck," said Lapointe.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

D 4153

16 Jan. 1920 St. John, N.B.

LIBERALISM AND CANADIAN UNITY

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4154 (1)

St. John Telegraph
January 17, 1920

St John NB

LIBERAL LEADER'S STIRRING MESSAGE TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe, M. P., Address Great Meeting in Imperial Theatre.

Spirited Appeal for Unity in Canada and for Stability of Government—Would Wipe Out Tariff on Instruments of Production in Industries Based on Natural Resources of Country—Other Tariff Pronouncements—Hon. Mr. King Declares he Will do All in His Power to Aid Port of St. John—Splendid Reception by Great Audience.

Looking down into a sea of faces in the Imperial Theatre last evening, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King delivered a stirring message to the people of this city and this province on the political conditions in Canada, the imperative need for a great, united party with a broad, progressive policy, and the obvious necessity for an early election so that the business of the Dominion might be carried on by a government truly representative of the people. The audience, which included a large number of women and a strong representation from every county in the province, taxed the capacity of the theatre after the doors had been closed upon hundreds of eager citizens who went away keenly disappointed when they found that they could not gain admittance; and it was roused to a high pitch of enthusiasm by the eloquent and inspiring appeal of both the leader of the Liberal party in Canada, and Ernest Lapointe the Liberal leader for Quebec in the House of Commons, for national unity and stability of government, without which, they explained amidst cheers and prolonged applause, the people of this country could not hope to give effect to the principles of freedom for which so many of its sons sacrificed their lives on the battlefields overseas.

THE LIBERAL LEADER

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, M.P.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4155

A Great Meeting.

It was one of the greatest political meetings ever held in St. John, and the speakers were frequently interrupted by enthusiastic applause. Every seat in the theatre—in the body of the house and on the stage—was filled, the available standing room was occupied, and a crowd, rapidly increasing in number, was patiently waiting outside for some sign that more could be accommodated within when Hon. Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe, accompanied by Premier Foster, the chairman of the evening, arrived. Their appearance upon the platform was the signal for flattering applause which must have been highly pleasing to the distinguished visitors. The premier's introductory remarks were warmly received and when Hon. Mr. King arose to speak he was given a magnificent reception,as was his colleague, Mr. Lapointe, when the Quebec representative began his speech two hours later. Neither speech was marked by narrowness or petty criticism. In appealing not only for national unity, but for Liberal unity, so that the progressive political classes might be brought together under the mantle of a broad Liberalism, Hon. Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe made it very clear that they had not the slightest criticism to offer with respect to those Liberals who felt it necessary to support a Union government for the period of the war; on the other hand, they declared that they could have had no respect for any man who failed to follow the dictates of his conscience at such a time. Now, however, Canada had a government without a leader, without a policy, without unity of purpose, and drifting hopelessly along while the vital interests of the country were being neglected. The audience was quick to show its appreciation of the danger of the situation by applauding long and vigorously when Hon. Mr. King declared that the ship of State was drifting rudderless on a troubled and stormy sea, deserted by its captain and manned only by a crew the members of which could not agree among themselves.

Many times during the evening as Mr. King or Mr. Lapointe spoke in a jocular vein of the lack of cohesion in the Unionist cabinet and its apparent determination to hold on to office no matter what its effect might be upon the public weal, the audience was moved to laughter. Turning to the matter of St. John harbor development,—and here his comment on the fact that there was no Minister from New Brunswick to whom the people of this city and this province could look for support, caused laughter—Hon. Mr. King declared that he would do everything in his power to promote the interests of this port. That those present were impressed by his sincerity and his recognition of the importance of the national winterport was clear enough. They greeted his statement with great enthusiasm.

The Tariff.

Those who attended last night's meeting in the hope that the Liberal leader would make a clear and concise statement as to his policy with respect to the tariff, were not disappointed. He pledged himself, if called upon to form a government, to strive to diminish the high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people, to wipe out the tariff on instruments of production in the industries based on the national resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of the country, to increase the British preference to fifty per cent. of the general tariff, and to work for reciprocity in natural products for the purpose of relieving the heavy burden now being carried by those least able to bear it. He paid a high tribute to the Great War Veterans, to the farmers and the labor men, and in spirited fashion he explained that he would not stand for monopoly of government in any form. His eloquent peroration was followed by wildly enthusiastic applause.

A banner ove rthe stage, accompanying which was a large Union Jack, bore the words: "New Brunswick welcomes Laurier's sucessor."

Premier Foster.

Premier Foster was given a very hearty greeting by the great audience when he rose to introduce Hon. Mr. King. The premier said he considered it a great honor to have the privilege of presiding over the meeting. He extended to all a most hearty welcome. He was glad to see the ladies taking such interest in political affairs, remarking, humorously, that he would have to appeal to the people some time. It was their duty, he added, addressing the ladies, to take interest in public affairs. It was their duty to join with the men in exercising the franchise. The ladies were now not only wives and daughters, but citizens, and for that reason he was glad to welcome them.

He desired to extend to those Liberals who had come long distances to take part in the meeting a hearty welcome. To their distinguished leader, Hon. Mr. King, he extended greeting and Mr. Lapointe, a true Canadian from the province of Quebec, he was also glad to welcome. Their appearance here was the natural sequence to that great Liberal convention held in the city of Ottawa in August last. At that convention the hundreds of Liberals present did not deal with past events, but turned confidently with their faces toward the future. At that convention the mantle of the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier fell on Hon. Mr. King. In comparing the Liberal party of today with the party in power they would find that the Liberal party in its prepared platform had something to place before the people, while the party in power was not there by the will of the people. There was not even a cabinet minister to represent New Brunswick, something not seen since Confederation. Thousands of Liberals helped to put the present government in power for the duration of the war, with the understatnding that at the end of the war the people of Canada would have the opportunity of pronounciing on the issues of the day.

Premier Foster spoke of the promise of the Union government to announce a policy and the failure of the ministers to make their promised tour of the country. The war had been over more than a year and no policy of reconstruction had been placed before the people. In fact, they had no policy.

The premier said he felt embarrassed when he was obliged to go before the federal government on business of the province as he had to deal with a federal minister who was a representative of some other province. The reason there was no representative in the government from New Brunswick was because they had no one who could pass the censorship. Some had been called but few were chosen. The rights of the people were being over-ridden from time to time. They were over-ridden by the federal franchise act, which forced on them a system by which they must choose their representatives. Premier Foster declared that he would be found doing whatever he could to relegate a government of that kind to the background. When he realized the responsibility which had been placed on Mr. King, he realized the opportunity which had come to Mr. King for service. He believed the policy Mr. King would announce from time to time would re-

(Continued on page 2, column 1.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

(Continued from page 1.)

dound to the advantage of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. King.

When the premier presented Hon. Mr. King, the Liberal leader was given a magnificent reception by all parts of the house.

The Liberal leader said his first words would be those of grateful acknowledgment for the reception he had received, and he felt grateful to the premier of the province for presiding ove the meeting. He thanked him for bring ing his cabinet and his supporters in the legislature as well. He was glad to see present some of his colleagues in the house of commons and several senators. He was especially pleased to see the large representation from all parts of the province. The government, he began, should not be controlled by a few men who were in office, but by that power that comes from the people, for they were the only ones to rule. He told of the government's opposition to an election, observing that people did not exist for the sake of governments, but that governments existed for the sake of the people. He would say without fear of contradiction that the government considered it was there for itself, but the time had come when the people should be given a chance to express their choice.

They should realize, he continued, that it was impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it was equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions that exist in other countries. For many a year to come the war and its consequences would remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which did not reckon with that fact is certain, sooner or later, to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which had been forced upon us.

We should remember that the world had just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization had been torn into shreds. The nations were now engaged in patching it together anew. It would be some time yet before the process was complete. In physical outline, the boundaries of countries have changed, but the changed map of Europe was only one evidence of a changed order, an outward and visible sign of an infinitively greater convulsion within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity had been stirred to the depths. A truer picture of the condition of the world today was that of the ocean seething after a storm.

Mr. King spoke of the general unrest in Canada, and of the farmers' and labor movement and of the returned soldiers' organizations. He also spoke of the need of united action to gain that fuller expression of personal an economic freedom which was the very essence of all true Liberalism.

He could think of the problems of industry, he said, only in the terms of humanity. Liberalism was to him the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it were for those who worked in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, or in the shops and factories; whether it were the well being of women and children that was at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another were seeking was what Liberals had all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality or opportunity. If that was not part of Liberalism then Liberalism had ceased to exist.

Labor and Farmers.

Mr. King told of the Union government's refusal to hear the larger delegation of Ontario and Quebec farmers when they went to Ottawa, when it had just permitted Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, to appear before it. He was not surprised that the farmers had held an indigation meeting and had resented the treatment they received. Neither was he surprised at the entry of farmers into politics. He then told of how the Liberals in Ontario had aided the farmers to overthrow the Hearst government, which had been guilty of duplicity. The Liberals had left thirty-seven constituencies open in the general elections. He rejoiced at the result in Ontario and thought the farmers and Liberals in Ontario had common cause. He felt that in the course of time the Liberals had everything to gain in that province.

Mr. King said it was a question whether organizations of classes should plunge into politics. Any group which sought to control the government would find itself opposed by other groups and in the end become disrupted.

It was inevitable that labor and the farmers should feel a reaction after Liberal rule when they came under a Conservative administration. Now they had a government which sought to maintain privilege. The opposition in parliament was weakened when the Union government was formed and, when the government assumed an arbitrary attitude, the various classes formed groups.

As to the returned soldiers, continued Mr. King, or more appropriately the war veterans who were not without ideals and aspirations as a class, if there was in Canada today one portion of its citizens which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it was the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule and the tyranny of material power, it was not surprising that these men and women hoped for a realization in large measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals there were special reasons for sharing their hopes and aspirations.

Aims of Liberalism.

Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against plutocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression on a world scale of two diametrically opposed systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular systems. The war would be without its meaning in this day and generation unless people sought to make out of the sacrifice of the heroic dead a new social order resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they had given their lives.

It was here that the supreme task of Liberalism came in. Either there would be an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups he had referred to, resulting as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later were certain to oppose them; or there would be a great progressive movement which would lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It would all depend on whether the spirit of good will was sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

War had shown what could be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If they could carry the spirit of co-operation into this period of reconstruction, there would be nothing to fear.

D 4156
(3)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4156

(3)

(Continued from page 1.)

dound to the advantage of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. King.

When the premier presented Hon. Mr. King, the Liberal leader was given a magnificent reception by all parts of the house.

The Liberal leader said his first words would be those of grateful acknowledgment for the reception he had received, and he felt grateful to the premier of the province for presiding ove the meeting. He thanked him for bring ing his cabinet and his supporters in the legislature as well. He was glad to see present some of his colleagues in the house of commons and several senators. He was especially pleased to see the large representation from all parts of the province. The government, he began, should not be controlled by a few men who were in office, but by that power that comes from the people, for they were the only ones to rule. He told of the government's opposition to an election, observing that people did not exist for the sake of governments, but that governments existed for the sake of the people. He would say without fear of contradiction that the government considered it was there for itself, but the time had come when the people should be given a chance to express their choice.

They should realize, he continued, that it was impossible to separate the present from the past, and that it was equally impossible to understand conditions in Canada apart from conditions that exist in other countries. For many a year to come the war and its consequences would remain a mighty influence in world affairs, and any course of action, or any policy which did not reckon with that fact is certain, sooner or later, to prove of no avail, and to increase rather than lessen the evils which had been forced upon us.

We should remember that the world had just passed through an upheaval unparalleled in all its history. The garment of civilization had been torn into shreds. The nations were now engaged in patching it together anew. It would be some time yet before the process was complete. In physical outline, the boundaries of countries have changed, but the changed map of Europe was only one evidence of a changed order, an outward and visible sign of an infinitively greater convulsion within. All that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity had been stirred to the depths. A truer picture of the condition of the world today was that of the ocean seething after a storm.

Mr. King spoke of the general unrest in Canada, and of the farmers' and labor movement and of the returned soldiers' organizations. He also spoke of the need of united action to gain that fuller expression of personal an economic freedom which was the very essence of all true Liberalism.

He could think of the problems of industry, he said, only in the terms of humanity. Liberalism was to him the expression of a wider human freedom, whether it were for those who worked in the country, on the farms, or in the cities and towns, or in the shops and factories; whether it were the well being of women and children that was at stake, in the home or elsewhere, or the lot of men in the struggle with their several environments. What the workers in one form or another were seeking was what Liberals had all along been speaking of as more in the way of equality or opportunity. If that was not part of Liberalism then Liberalism had ceased to exist.

Labor and Farmers.

Mr. King told of the Union government's refusal to hear the larger delegation of Ontario and Quebec farmers when they went to Ottawa, when it had just permitted Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, to appear before it. He was not surprised that the farmers had held an indigation meeting and had resented the treatment they received. Neither was he surprised at the entry of farmers into politics. He then told of how the Liberals in Ontario had aided the farmers to overthrow the Hearst government, which had been guilty of duplicity. The Liberals had left thirty-seven constituencies open in the general elections. He rejoiced at the result in Ontario and thought the farmers and Liberals in Ontario had common cause. He felt that in the course of time the Liberals had everything to gain in that province.

Mr. King said it was a question whether organizations as classes should plunge into politics. Any group which sought to control the government would find itself opposed by other groups and in the end become disrupted.

It was inevitable that labor and the farmers should feel a reaction after Liberal rule when they came under a Conservative administration. Now they had a government which sought to maintain privilege. The opposition in parliament was weakened when the Union government was formed and, when the government assumed an arbitrary attitude, the various classes formed groups.

As to the returned soldiers, continued Mr. King, or more appropriately the war veterans who were not without ideals and aspirations as a class, if there was in Canada today one portion of its citizens which more than any other is entitled to consideration, it was the men who risked their lives in battle, and those who shared with them the dangers and privations of war, especially the families of those whose sons made the supreme sacrifice in the cause of the world's freedom. Having fought and suffered and sacrificed to save the world from autocratic rule and the tyranny of material power, it was not surprising that these men and women hoped for a realization in large measure of the freedom they fought to preserve. As Liberals there were special reasons for sharing their hopes and aspirations.

Aims of Liberalism.

Liberalism in Canada had its birth in the struggle against plutocracy in government. The war in Europe was an expression on a world scale of two diametrically opposed systems of government brought into conflict, and provoked by those who sought world domination under their particular systems. The war would be without its meaning in this day and generation unless people sought to make out of the sacrifice of the heroic dead a new social order resplendent with the conception of liberty for which they had given their lives.

It was here that the supreme task of Liberalism came in. Either there would be an increasing growth of class consciousness on the part of each of the great groups he had referred to, resulting as all class conscious growths are destined to result, in conflict with each other and with forces that sooner or later were certain to oppose them; or there would be a great progressive movement which would lead to a new era of social progress and social justice. It would all depend on whether the spirit of good will was sufficiently strong to overcome the spirit that war breeds and that continues to lurk in its wake.

War had shown what could be accomplished by co-operation and sacrifice. If they could carry the spirit of co-operation into this period of reconstruction, there would be nothing to fear. If on the other hand each element in the national life was going to seek to go its own gait, unwilling to join hands with other groups that share like aims and aspirations to its own, if each separately intended to aim at domination in national affairs, then there would be a prolongation of the period of confusion, and in the end retrogression rather than advance. Parliament ought to be a mirror reflecting the different elements that went to make a nation.

Mr. King said that the soldiers, farmers and labor men should be repre-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

sented in parliament as should other classes.

Opposed to Monopoly.

Mr. King said frankly that when it came to matters of government he was unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. He was relentlessly opposed to government being controlled, visibly or invisibly, by railway, manufacturing or financial interests. He was not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans or the newly enfranchised female voters.

He knew of no finer maxim of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym, enunciated in the days of Charles I., which was as applicable to politics today as it was to England in that unsettled period: "That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the state to the common good."

Certainly such a form of government was not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by any class. It was only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine good will. It was necessary that all should aim at unity in the country and stability in government. One great progressive party should include all that was best in all these progressive groups. Co-operation of the progressive forces was the only means of certain victory.

National Ideals.

This led him to speak of the east and the west of the wide dominion, and all the vast intervening space, of British Columbia with its diversified resources; of the prairie provinces, with their vast agricultural wealth; of Ontario and Quebec, and the maritime provinces, with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial development. Was the splendid unity of this great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas or particular interests, or were Canadians to carry into the shaping of their national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the war was won? Should it be each for self or all for all? Should it be the special interest of a class or the well being of the whole community? Should it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with thought of naught save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

If it was this large, this nobler ideal Canadians must have in their federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity.

Hon. Mr. King went on to tell of the objections to a governing party composed solely of farmers, or one of labor men or of soldiers. He pointed out that such a party would lead to the formation of a manufacturers' party, merchants' party, etc., leading to endless confusion.

The speaker thought that no one could tell what policy the Union government had, for it had none. He thought that Premier Borden should have left a statement of policy.

A Strange Condition.

It would be easy to find in the records, he said, an account of what the Union government had done. First, the government congratualted itself upon the winning of the war, (laughter) then asked itself to support that government, (laughter) and then, in a resolution, expressed the hope that it might arrive at some policy which would successfully meet the after-war conditions.

Think of such a condition, said the speaker, one part of the government, a year after the war had ceased, expressing the hope that the government of which it was a part, might be able to relieve the prevailing conditions! (Laughter and applause).

Sir Robert Borden had gone south for an indefinite absence, he continued, and had left at Ottawa a condition of affairs which formed a pleasing drama, though it had its serious aspects.

He referred to the condition of Sir Robert's health, expressing the sympathy which all men in public life held for him, but said it was a mistaken kindness on the part of Sir Robert and his friends when he retained his office against his own will and in so nominal a way, being forced to be absent from the conferences at times most critical to the country. No business concern would follow such a policy. It was a mistake, said the speaker, and one that should be laid upon the shoulders of Sir Robert Borden's friends. If Borden did not hold out, the whole structure would fall to pieces; there was no reason for continuing the comedy-drama. (Cries of: Hear, hear.)

There was a government without a head or a policy, said the speaker, and at a time when steady direction and calm judgment was needed more than it had been at any time. Sir George E. Foster, Mr. King understood, was to be the acting prime minister, and as his advanced years would not allow him to officiate at night sessions of the house, there would have to be appointed a deputy acting prime minister. Imagine the conditions that would obtain if the question of the St. John harbor were to come up! The deputy prime minister would refer the matter to the acting prime minister and he in turn would leave it until whatever time Sir Robert would return from the south. It was that way last session—they passed the buck, to use a slang term. (Laughter and applause).

The Grand Trunk.

Before the Grand Trunk railway measure came up, it was announced by Sir George Foster that the house would prorogue on a certain date. On that date many returned to their homes; many took the opportunity of crossing to Great Britain; and while they were away, with a small attendance, a select cabinet group introduced the measure which meant an expenditure of $500,000,000 to $700,000,000, and they put it through on the ground that it was urgent and of vital public importance.

The method was bad—(cries of "Hear, hear")—and gave no possible chance for fair criticism.

As the railway people reserved the right of placing their part of the bargain before their shareholders in Great Britain, many persons were of the opinion that the same right should be given the Canadian people, whose money was being expended, and the speaker himself asked that the agreement be ratified before parliament, but was told that the government would not consider anything of the kind, though the arrangement made with the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific was offered as contributory evidence.

Was that responsible government? asked the speaker.

Nevertheless, he continued, the agreement had not been signed yet. It was still before the English shareholders and, though the government has signified the intention of making any changes which the shareholders might deem necessary, he was of the opinion that the people and the press of Canada should demand that the agreement should hold over until the house meets again.

The expenditure of this measure would last for years and embraced taxation on future generations.

Not Responsible.

Then, the federal government, as it stood now, was not a responsible and representative government, as the average man understood it. There were no representatives of this province in the government at the present time. He had been in Charlottetown recently and in the legislative chambers there had seen the original engraving of the fathers of confederation, among whom three names stood out prominently—Sir Leonard Tilley, of this province (applause); Sir Charles Tupper and Sir George E. Cartier—all opposed to the Liberal government but held in veneration for the valuable work that they had done. Since that time there had been other representatives of the maritime provinces in the government of Canada—Sir Louis Davis, of Prince Edward Island, Sir Robert Borden and Hon. W. S. Fielding, of Nova Scotia, and the Hon. Andrew G. Blair, of New Brunswick. (Applause).

These were great names in the history of the country; men who had moulded the thought of the younger men throughout the country and models for the guidance of other men of public affairs. The representatives of the Maritime Provinces had done much to help form his opinions and judgments in his early political career—how could the men of Ontario or other parts of the Dominion be helped by the political genius of the Maritime Provinces today when there were no representatives of the three provinces in the government? Through all the three provinces there was not a single man holding a portfolio. To have such representation of the provinces was

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

sented in parliament as should other classes.

Opposed to Monopoly.

Mr. King said frankly that when it came to matters of government he was unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form, or by any class. He was relentlessly opposed to government being controlled, visibly or invisibly, by railway, manufacturing or financial interests. He was not less opposed to a monopoly of control on the part of any other of the essential elements of national economy, be they farmers, labor, war veterans or the newly enfranchised female voters.

He knew of no finer maxim of government than that of the illustrious statesman Pym, enunciated in the days of Charles I., which was as applicable to politics today as it was to England in that unsettled period: "That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the state to the common good."

Certainly such a form of government was not to be found in any attempt at monopoly by any class. It was only to be found in co-operation between the different classes, made effective by a spirit of genuine good will. It was necessary that all should aim at unity in the country and stability in government. One great progressive party should include all that was best in all these progressive groups. Co-operation of the progressive forces was the only means of certain victory.

National Ideals.

This led him to speak of the east and the west of the wide dominion, and all the vast intervening space, of British Columbia with its diversified resources; of the prairie provinces, with their vast agricultural wealth; of Ontario and Quebec, and the maritime provinces, with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial development. Was the splendid unity of this great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas or particular interests, or were Canadians to carry into the shaping of their national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the war was won? Should it be each for self or all for all? Should it be the special interest of a class or the well being of the whole community? Should it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives, with thought of naught save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

If it was this large, this nobler ideal Canadians must have in their federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity.

Hon. Mr. King went on to tell of the objections to a governing party composed solely of farmers, or one of labor men or of soldiers. He pointed out that such a party would lead to the formation of a manufacturers' party, merchants' party, etc., leading to endless confusion.

The speaker thought that no one could tell what policy the Union government had, for it had none. He thought that Premier Borden should have left a statement of policy.

A Strange Condition.

It would be easy to find in the records, he said, an account of what the Union government had done. First, the government congratualted itself upon the winning of the war, (laughter) then asked itself to support that government, (laughter) and then, in a resolution, expressed the hope that it might arrive at some policy which would successfully meet the after-war conditions.

Think of such a condition, said the speaker, one part of the government, a year after the war had ceased, expressing the hope that the government of which it was a part, might be able to relieve the prevailing conditions! (Laughter and applause).

Sir Robert Borden had gone south for an indefinite absence, he continued, and had left at Ottawa a condition of affairs which formed a pleasing drama, though it had its serious aspects.

He referred to the condition of Sir Robert's health, expressing the sympathy which all men in public life held for him, but said it was a mistaken kindness on the part of Sir Robert and his friends when he retained his office against his own will and in so nominal a way, being forced to be absent from the conferences at times most critical to the country. No business concern would follow such a policy. It was a mistake, said the speaker, and one that should be laid upon the shoulders of Sir Robert Borden's friends. If Borden did not hold out, the whole structure would fall to pieces; there was no reason for continuing the comedy-drama. (Cries of: Hear, hear.)

There was a government without a head or a policy, said the speaker, and at a time when steady direction and calm judgment was needed more than it had been at any time. Sir George E. Foster, Mr. King understood, was to be the acting prime minister, and as his advanced years would not allow him to officiate at night sessions of the house, there would have to be appointed a deputy acting prime minister. Imagine the conditions that would obtain if the question of the St. John harbor were to come up! The deputy prime minister would refer the matter to the acting prime minister and he in turn would leave it until whatever time Sir Robert would return from the south. It was that way last session—they passed the buck, to use a slang term. (Laughter and applause).

The Grand Trunk.

Before the Grand Trunk railway measure came up, it was announced by Sir George Foster that the house would prorogue on a certain date. On that date many returned to their homes; many took the opportunity of crossing to Great Britain; and while they were away, with a small attendance, a select cabinet group introduced the measure which meant an expenditure of $500,000,000 to $700,000,000, and they put it through on the ground that it was urgent and of vital public importance.

The method was bad—(cries of "Hear, hear")—and gave no possible chance for fair criticism.

As the railway people reserved the right of placing their part of the bargain before their shareholders in Great Britain, many persons were of the opinion that the same right should be given the Canadian people, whose money was being expended, and the speaker himself asked that the agreement be ratified before parliament, but was told that the government would not consider anything of the kind, though the arrangement made with the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Pacific was offered as contributory evidence.

Was that responsible government? asked the speaker.

Nevertheless, he continued, the agreement had not been signed yet. It was still before the English shareholders and, though the government has signified the intention of making any changes which the shareholders might deem necessary, he was of the opinion that the people and the press of Canada should demand that the agreement should hold over until the house meets again.

The expenditure of this measure would last for years and embraced taxation on future generations.

Not Responsible.

Then, the federal government, as it stood now, was not a responsible and representative government, as the average man understood it. There were no representatives of this province in the government at the present time. He had been in Charlottetown recently and in the legislative chambers there had seen the original engraving of the fathers of confederation, among whom three names stood out prominently—Sir Leonard Tilley, of this province (applause); Sir Charles Tupper and Sir George E. Cartier—all opposed to the Liberal government but held in veneration for the valuable work that they had done. Since that time there had been other representatives of the maritime provinces in the government of Canada—Sir Louis Davis, of Prince Edward Island, Sir Robert Borden and Hon. W. S. Fielding, of Nova Scotia, and the Hon. Andrew G. Blair, of New Brunswick. (Applause).

These were great names in the history of the country; men who had moulded the thought of the younger men throughout the country and models for the guidance of other men of public affairs. The representatives of the Maritime Provinces had done much to help form his opinions and judgments in his early political career—how could the men of Ontario or other parts of the Dominion be helped by the political genius of the Maritime Provinces today when there were no representatives of the three provinces in the government? Through all the three provinces there was not a single man holding a portfolio. To have such representation of the provinces was

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the logical policy of a Union government and would be the policy now if men were not holding public office merely for the sake of power. (Applause.)

The present government knew that it had lost the confidence of the people, and did not dare to open a constituency for it knew that it would be lost to them. (Applause.)

It was rumored that one man, though, had been offered a portfolio, but it was probable that he might favor the port of Halifax more than that of St. John. (Laughter.)

The Harbor Delegation.

Referring to a delegation from the St. John Commercial Club, which waited upon him yesterday morning with regard to the congestion of the harbor and the freight yards here, with American railways carrying Canadian freight and boosting the level of exchange, the speaker said that it semed peculiar to him at first that such a delegation should come to the leader of the opposition to get consideration.

Here he was interrupted with a bedlam of cheering and applause with frequent cries of "That's the stuff."

But on the other hand, who was there else to go to? (Laughter and applause.) They did not know where the Prime Minister was; in fact, the prime minister himself did not know where he was nor wither he was going. There was no cabinet minister to represent them, and so it was evident that they had decided to back a sure thing and put their faith in a man whom they thought would be the people's choice as a representative. (Applause.)

Personally, he pledged himself to do everything in his power in this matter which was so greatly affecting the port and terminus business.

Praise for Lieutenant-Governor.

It was some years since he had sat in the Laurier cabinet with a minister who represented a New Brunswick constituency, and every day that gentleman had something to say about St. John. (Laughter and applause.) He was a man persuasive beyond words, untiring, aggressive. For some time it had been the custom, after the business of the day had been finished, for the ministers to repair to Sir Wilfrid's room and there the usual question of the leader was. "Is there anything else to discuss?" Quite frequently the other members were at a loss for a subject, but Dr. Pugsley would always ask for a few moments to discuss matters in regard to Courtenay Bay. (Applause and laughter.)

This was the spirt, this was the thing that was needed if they wanted anything done, declared the speaker. They could not have things done for the province if they had no representative in the cabinet.

The Liberal Platform.

There were representatives of all classes and all parts of the Dominion at the Liberal convention last August; people who were alive to the best interests of the country, including representatives of the War Veterans, labor farmers and all other classes. In the three days' deliberations was laid down the policy of the Liberal party, not as it had been some twenty years before, but a newer and more progressive policy, coping with all situations which confronted the country at the present time.

The first thing that was considered was the financial condition of the country. Few appreciated the condition of the country at the present time, the enormous public debt, which required an immense sum in payment for the interest alone. A demand for economy was not pleasant to some, but it was the only safeguard against calamity.

On the 31st of March last, according to the statement of the minister of finance, the net public debt was $1,584,000,000, or, roughly, $220 for every man, woman and child in the dominion, involving an annual interest charge of about $115,000,000, and thus imposing an annual burden for interest on debt alone of $15 per head of the population.

The estimated expenditure of the dominion government for the present fiscal year is over $800,000,000, or roughly, $100 per head of the population.

The estimated revenue is only $280,000,000, thus creating an estimated deficit of over $500,000,000—a sum equivalent to $62.50 per head of the population—which sum the finance minister proposes to obtain by borrowing.

Both Great Britain and the United States at present raise more than eighty per cent of their revenue by direct taxation, while Canada raises not more than twenty per cent, and it was the opinion of the convention that increase of revenue shall be sought from an equitable and effective imposition and collection of graduated taxes, on business profits and income.

On Borrowed Money.

Subscribers to the recent Victory loan were all actuated with the ambition to help do all that was possible for the country, but not everyone was aware that every cent of that loan went to pay for current expenditure by the government and that every cent represented by the loan had been borrowed from the banks by the government before the people had subscribed one cent. There would be another loan, he said, for the government needed another $500,000,000 to tide it over its liabilities.

Considering the finances of the country, he thought there should be some accounting of the nation's liabilities, so that there could be more economy. War conditions meant spending money in large amounts rapidly, and so long as the people who had been in that custom were kept in office there would be no relief from debt.

The money which must be raised to meet the country's liabilities must come from taxation, and the Liberal party was convinced that there are many wealthy men in the country who are patriotic enough to shoulder the burden from those who have paid such a sacrifice in the war and make good the payment of a revenue once the debt has gone beyond a certain figure. There would be a great battle over this, he thought, but the party would stand by that decision to a finish. (Applause.)

Taxation of Wealth.

In the last analysis all taxation must come from wealth, and greater wealth would come from a greater development of natural resources. Products of the sea, of the mine, of the land, must be increased, and it must be made so that the worker could carry on his labor at the least cost possible. To this end he would favor the abolition of all import duties on instruments of production in industries based upon the natural resources of the country, such as mines, fishing, lumbering and agriculture, the development of which was essential to the progress and prosperity of the country.

The cost of living was measured by the cost of clothing, food and footwear; if the tariff caused these high prices, then the tariff should be modified. (Applause).

Luxuries, he said, should bear a larger measure of the taxation, but wheat, wheat flour and all products of wheat; the principal articles of food; farm implements and machinery; farm tractors, mining, flour and saw-mill machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and partly dressed lumber; gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils; nets, net-twines and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers, should be free from customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.

In respect to commerce with Great Britain, he thought the present preference, which varied from 25 per cent to 33 1-3 per cent, should be increased to 50 per cent on the general tariff, in the interests of closer relationship with the mother country.

Reciprocity.

Reciprocity, though not in favor with the Conservatives, was one of the greatest factors in favor of lower prices, (applause) and it was the opinion of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the convention "that while, for these reasons, this convention can take no exception to the proposal so made at Washington, we as Liberals again place on record our appreciation of the object of the said agreement and our faith in the principles of friendly international relations underlying it, and we express our earnest hope that in both countries such principles, will be upheld, and that a favorable moment may come when there will be a renewed manifestation by the two governments of a desire to make some similar arrangement."

As the movement was now too great from the farms to the towns and cities, it was thought by the convention that encouragement should be given towards a greater investment in farming, and it seemed expedient to utilize the national credit to assist co-operative agricultural credit associations to provide capital for agriculture at the lowest possible rates.

With the object of reducing the high cost of living by eliminating as far as possible the waste and expense in handling food products between the producer and consumer, it is expedient to extend the principle and system of Canadian government elevators and to provide interior and terminal cold storage warehouses equipped for the assembling, assorting, preparing, storing and grading of food products in order that co-operative organizations and others may have available to them reliable, modern equipment, for the distribution of farm products in superior condition and at lessened cost either for domestic consumption or for export. And that cold storage transportation facilities should be provided, at the cost of operation, for the shipment of food products throughout Canada and for the carrying to the markets of the world the surplus farm products of this country and delivering them in such condition that will make Canadian foodstuffs a standard of quality for the world's market.

That in the interests of agriculture, in aid of greater production on the land, and for the conservation of the soil in Canada it is expedient for the government to arrange for the distribution of fertilizers at the lowest possible cost.

The Labor Plank.

Another plank in the party platform was in regard to labor. He did not believe in a class government. Any successful enterprise was made successful only through the co-operation of four factors: capital, management, service of the state and labor. With regard to labor, he would seek to raise the status of industry so that its voice would be more effective and better heard than ever before. There were industrial boards and railways boards, but few working men acting on those boards. Among the workmen on the railway systems, he said, there were men just as competent to sit on a board of directors as could be found in any other group. If the Liberal party were returned to power he would give the working men the right to place on boards which control their activities a couple of representatives, and he thought that the result would be a better administration and a surer safeguarding of the public. The Liberal party did not stand for monopoly, but for joint control.

With respect to the war veterans, the Liberal party was not in favor of granting a couple of thousands to the men, indiscriminately; the plan was not favorable to the men, either. The veterans, as a class, did not like interference from people who did not understand their needs, and in this regard the party platform was drafted by a committee headed by Colonel Ralston, of Halifax. The plan was complete and covers the matter of education of the war veteran, insurance, pensions, trade training for those disabled by war, employment funds to serve until training is completed, disability pensions for soldiers and their dependents, medical examination, employment agencies, and that those eligible for services under this resolution would include sailors, aviators, soldiers, nurses and Canadian soldiers who served with the Imperial or allied armies.

The soldiers should be met in the same spirit in which they met their responsibilities, he said amid prolonged applause.

A fair and honest franchise was also advocated. In it would lie the security of the rights of the people and the privilege of a self-control of their own affairs.

The Liberal party desired not only to have a stable government, but a country united in all matters and spirit.

He recognized the great responsibility which rested upon him as leader of the Liberal party in this country, but found a greater responsibility in living to the traditions of that departed leader, whose spirit and ambition in life had been for Canadian unity, first, last and always. (Applause.)

In closing, the speaker asked his hearers to forget the differences of the past, to look to the great future which is before the country, and in a very graceful tribute to the manner in which the English-speaking Canadians and French-Canadians had helped at home and overseas in winning the war, introduced his confrere, Ernest Lapointe, M.P.

Mr. Lapointe.

Mr. Lapointe, in his opening remarks, said that in the sixteen years of his public life he had seldom addressed such a magnificent audience, and he thanked them from the bottom of his heart for coupling his name with that of his leader. He said that Mr. King coming from Ontario, and he, representing Quebec, were on that platform animated by the same spirit that animated Cartier and Macdonald and, if those men came fifty years ago to unite Canada, "our ambition and aim is to re-unite Canada," he said. To this, Liberalism and the Liberal party must devote their energies and enthusiasm. He thought there were no germs of narrowness in New Brunswick, but that the atmosphere was free from all microbes of intolerance and prejudice, so that all breathed in perfect harmony—Liberalism. He was not surprised that the Foster government was so strong with the people of this province. (Sustained applause.)

At no time was there a greater need of a strong government at Ottawa, than at the present day when it was necessary to have a parliament representing the Canadian people, and at no time since Confederation had there been a more impotent one than the one now ruling. He had no fault to find with, and he respected, the men who supported the government in 1917, from conscientious motives, but he said the people had now to face the conditions of 1919 and not of 1917. The present government was the offspring of abnormal times, and it had succeeded in breaking pledges, dividing elements against elements and classes against classes and splitting what, under Laurier, was a united people. Any man who supported the Union government, he thought, was maintaining a sham and supporting a hypocrisy.

Condemned by Unionists.

He who was down need fear no fall, said the statesman from Quebec. Perhaps some might think he was a little strong in his remarks about the government, but he thought that the newspapers supporting the government were even stronger than he was, and he quoted an extract from the Montreal Gazette, which brought forth much applause. He would judge from the organs of the government that treachery and cowardice were the cardinal virtues of the Union government. (Laughter.)

The prodigal descendants of Jeremiah maintained that the only salvation for the country was the union of the sane elements of both parties. They said that Quebec was sane and safe, good and kind, and could not help but be attracted by the truth of this principle. "'Will you walk into my parlor,' said the spider to the fly," quoted Mr. Lapointe, amidst loud laughter and cheers.

The Leader's Qualifications.

The various elements that were scattered and divided needed a new leader to give them the impetus back to unity and that leader was Mr. Mackenzie King. He likened Mr. King to his grandfather who fought years ago for liberty, and so Mr. King was fighting today against autocratic domination over the people. He had made a life study of all economic problems and was bringing to the leadership of the Canadian people the brains and intellect of a great scholar as well as the force and energy of a man of action. "Laurier was the greatest Canadian that ever lived," said Mr. Lapointe and he had heard him once say that those who assailed him would render him justice after his death, and they had done so. His memory would remain so long as Canada had a heart. Mr. King was a pupil of Sir Wilfrid's and he would maintain the traditions of his country. Mr. King was a Liberal, so was he, because it was broad enough to invite all Canadians to fight shoulder to shoulder for liberty, explained the speaker. Liberalism embraced all creeds, French and English, capital and labor, giving to each individual the chance he claimed for himself.

He thought that no man supported the government more lavishly than the independents of 1917. On several questions of moment before the house they had swallowed their opinions at the command of the premier and goose-stepped to the crack of his whip. He insisted

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

that the government should represent the majority of the people of Canada and the government did not do this, but the ministers were afraid to show their faces to the people and allowed their bye-elections to go by default.

Challenges Government.

In eloquent terms, he challenged the government to make an appeal to the country and elect a parliament representative of the people. He referred to the war-time elections act as a blot on the fair name of Canada, and because of the way the government had manipulated the franchise he thought they had no more right to call themselves a representative governing body of men than a smuggler had to call himself a free trader. The country must be governed on scientific principles and liberalism must hold the middle course between those who like violent changes and those who absolutely refuse to progress or reform.

The policy of Liberalism was justice to all classes, both rich and poor, but to the poor equally as to the rich, imbued with the spirit of tolerance, moderation and justice. He emphatically announced that Canada must have a representative parliament before she took her seat at the Imperial Conference which was to be held at an early date to discuss the relations of Canada and the other dominions as a part of the whole united British Empire. Canadians must not allow this impotent, worn-out government to speak for Canada and pledge the future destinies of the country.

The use of patriotism as a political football, he termed as disrespectful and sacriligious. Canadians all loved Canada and were proud to belong to the British empire. He thought "patrioteering" and profiteering synonomous in this case.

The achievement of national unity in Canada was the great aim of the Liberal party. Canada must have it or she would never become the great nation she was destined to be. The different races and creeds in the country could not be changed and they must be met with the spirit of tolerance, moderation, and charity. He insitsed that Canadians must love every section of their vast inheritance and not only the one small portion where they had been born and bred. He was a son of the province of Quebec; in every drop of his blood he was a descendant of the hardy pioneers who settled New France and he was proud of his race and origin, but he was proud above all of being a Canadian, and loyalty knew no sectional division. He longed for the day when the spirit of patriotism would endear to all Canadians, every foot of soil and until that day the Canadian people could not hope to achieve real Canadian nationality.

Liberalism, he said, was pledged to secure this end, for the party was rocked in the cradle of liberty, the principles of which were eternal and, although they might be borne down at times, they were strongly imbued with the spirit of truth and justice, and ultimately truth and justice would prevail.

Mr. Lapointe sat down amidst such an outburst of cheering as was only equalled by that which had greeted his leader. When the house had subsided, three hearty cheers and a tiger were led by the chairman and then those on the platform who had not already met the Liberal chieftain, were introduced.

Among Those Present.

Among those on the platform were: A. B. Copp, M.P., of Sackville; O. Turgeon, M.P., Bathurst; Hon. P. J. Veniot, Bathurst; Hon. Dr. E. A. Smith, Shediac; Hon. Clifford W. Robinson, Moncton; Hon. J. P. Byrne, Bathurst; Hon. Robert Murray, Chatham; Hon. F. J. Sweney, Moncton; Hon. L. A. Dougal, Edmundston; J. E. Michaud, M.P., Edmundston; Fred Magee, M.P., Port Elgin; G. H. King, M.P.P., Chipman; R. B. Smith, M.P.P., Oromocto; James McQueen, Shediac; Alphonse S. LeBlanc, Shediac; R. A. McQueen, Shediac; A. LeBlanc, M.P.P., Campbellton; Nelson W. Brown Southampton; Wilfred Oulette, J. E. Michaud, A. C. Leveque, A. Violet, J. Garrotte, Arsene Dube, Alex. Arsenault, Joseph Suert, Restigouche county; Hon. C. H. Labillois, Dalhousie; P. A. Richard, Richibucto; L. Colpitt and G. Hopper, Coverdale; John Thompson and J. P. Beatteay, Hillsboro; P. R. Bedell and N. J. Wootten, Andover; H. H. McNeill, Dalhousie; P. J. Veniot, Jr., Bathurst; F. J. Hunter, St. Stephen; Arthur Keith, F. J. Fenwick and H. W. Wallace, Sussex; R. R. McLellan, Chatham; George Miller, Hardwick; D. W. Mersereau. M.P.P., Fredericton Junction; Byron Brewer, Elwood Burtt, R. P. Allen, A. R. Murray, J. J. McCaffrey, J. B. Dickson, P. J. Hughes and J. R. Patten, Fredericton; H. W. Gaskin, Moncton; Wilson Cassidy, Chatham; A. F. Bentley, St. Martins; Senator G. G. King, Chipman; Hon. L. P. Farris, White's Cove; W. J. Mahoney, D. J. Brown, St. John; R. C. McQuin, Albert Sear, H. F. Morton and Hiram Secord, Penobsquis; Dr. W. W. White, W. J. Ambrose, A. W. Adams, G. W. Merritt, George Cushing, E. W. McCready, R. A. Sinclair, Alex. Corbet, Lane Colpitts, S. L. T. Wiggin, Captain J. A. Reed, York county; Geo. Halpin, S. S. Ryan, Coverdale; Fred Colpitts, Louis Cavicchi, J. F. O'Neil, Hon. R. J. Ritchie, A. O. Skinner, H. C. Grout, P. E. McLaughlin, St. Stephen; Joseph L. O'Brien, Martin Dolan, J. A. V. Mahoney, E. A. Mahoney, Irwin Thompson, Cody's; Louis McDonald, Martin McGuire, F. J. McDonald, Alfred Burley, George F. Brannen, F. W. Tapley, G. R. Cragie, William T. Morris, Joseph Harrington, Alfred McCormick, C. A. Conlon, P. J. Gorman, P. C. Johnson, Dr. E. J. Ryan, Thomas McCarthy, Glendon Allan, Arthur Carleton, C. J. Kane, J. M. D. Hay, George Legere, Moncton; J. F. Cassidy, Laurence McDonald, Moncton; M. Bohan, Captain LeP. O. Picard, Frederick Driscoll, Thomas J. Sweeney, John M. Driscoll, J. P. Holland, J. A. Mahoney, G. Oland, Dr. J. D. Maher, R. D. Harrington, Joseph F. Dwyer, Thomas Foley, John E. Wilson, M. J. Connell, C. A. Owens, George C. Partlow, Oromocto; Dr. E. H. S. Clark, Patrick Ryan, Ernest Clark, J. Fred Belyea, F. M. Thompson, Hillsboro; Dr. C. M. Kelly, J. P. Quinn, L. A. Conlon, C. B. Clark, F. C. Fenwick, Arthur Campbell, J. H. McFadden, T. M. Burns, W. M. Baxter, James E. McMurray, James Quinn, Edward Hogan, W. S. McDonald, Martin Dolan, C. S. Clark, Anglin Gorman, G. W. Stegman, W. W. McAllister, H. McCarthy, S. A. Smith, C. M. Merritt, Rev. A. D. Allan, Rev. F. Walker, E. J. Henneberry, Joseph Ritchie, George Cushing, Alexander Wilson, Joseph Page, Rev. D. McManus, Dr. Simard, Edmundston; Dr. E. J. Broderick, G. P. McIntyre, A. E. Frame, D. J. Barrett, Dr. Joseph Donnelly, R. H. Carleton, W. P. McDonald, jr., Sgt. K. R. Jack, J. F. Owens, Thomas McKenna, J. G. Dryden, A. P. Jennings, F. J. Rafferty, Donald Morrison, Frank Watson, R. A. Cormier E. P. Scully, E. P. O'Toole, M. T. Morris, F. M. McEvoy (Dalhousie), P. Mahoney, E. Ferris, Milton A. Smith (Hoyt Junction), E. C. Alexander, A. Barberry Dalhousie.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4161 (1)

St. John Standard
January 17, 1920

ATTITUDE IS MORE IMPORTANT IN POLITICS THAN PRACTICAL POLICIES, SAYS NEW LEADER

Hon. Mr. King Gives Definition of a Liberal Which Exclues Premier Foster from Party Until Carleton Vacancy is Filled—Otherwise His Attitude Embraces All Canadian Voters—New Political Star is Brilliantly Nebulous in Two Hours' Harangue—Mr. Lapointe, Quebec's Able Son, Causes Wearied Audience to Sit up and Roar With Laughter.

Important as policies and concrete measures may be attitude is all important, said Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King at the meeting in the Imperial last evening, and attitude was the keynote of a two hour's address in which he remained on an altitude where he could indulge his penchant for platitudes to his heart's content. The new leader traversed the same ground he covered at Halifax. Declared the Union Government was not representative or capable of dealing with the problems of the day and went on to read some extracts from the Liberal platform which intimated that the Liberal party was ready to do a number of things the Union Government has already done or has made provision to do. One statement he made which caused the old line Liberals to sit up, was that the Liberals who supported the Union Government were as sincere in aim and purpose as those who supported Laurier, and that anybody who honored the memory of Laurier must accept that view.

Ernest laPointe, the Quebec leader, described Union Government as a sham and hypocrisy, and thereby ruled Mr. King's declaration of faith in the sincerity of the Liberal Unionist out of court.

Both leaders were given a good requence, and Mr. laPointe the amusequence, and Mr. laPaointe the amusement. Both talked a great deal about Canadian unity and British liberty, but the net result of their efforts was to leave the audience in doubt as to how they proposed to deal with the practical questions of the day.

On the platform were the provincial ministers, and a goodly array of prominent Liberals from all parts of the Province. The theatre was crowded and there was a large number of ladies in the gathering.

Premier Foster presided, with Chairman Belyea of the old line Liberals on his left.

In introducing the new Leader Mr. Foster declared that the Union Government had been elected by the aid of the Liberals on the understanding that when the war was over it would go to the people, and that by holding on to power it was denying the people their rights of representation. He added that he was humiliated when he had to go to Ottawa to transact public business, because he could not deal with a cabinet representative from New Brunswick.

The Leader

Mr. King was loudly applauded on rising. He said he was grateful to the Premier for introducing him and bringing so many members of The Legislature to adorn the platform. He also was pleased to meet so many citizens who did not belong to any particular group. We have come to the time when there was confusion in the mind of government as to the relation which should exist between the governing power and people.

Some said we did not want an election—farmers or a lot of workingmen might get in. So it was claimed those in power should hold on—which was not the Liberal idea of representative government..

hat A Liberal Is

Some friends of the press were saying they hoped Mr. King would tell them what a Liberal was. Well, the men in power at Ottawa said the people exist for the sake of the government. The Liberal idea was that the government existed for the sake of the people. That was the difference.

It was said the Liberal party should be more concrete in the measures they proposed to adopt, but in his opinion it was more important what the attitude of mind was to the policies and movements of the day. The world had passed through a great commotion; the stirring and striving were the outward and visible sign of the change that had gone on in the minds and hearts of the people. Out of the commotion there had appeared in Canada three great movements—the farmers who felt they had suffered from the restraint of trade—the workers in the city, who had suffered from chronic injustice and were determined to achieve a larger industrial freedom, and the veterans whose aspirations deserved the greatest consideration, and who were determined to realize in this country the greater measure of justice and higher civilization they had fought for abroad. These movements were the expression of the new freedom and were in accord with the larger Liberalism.

Some people could not understand the result of the Ontario elections. A large delegation of farmers went to Ottawa. Sam Gompers was invited to address parliament by the speaker. The farmers asked the same privilege, but, it was denied them. There and then they determined to show their resentment of this arbitrary attitude Their first opportunity to do so was when the Hearst Government went to the polls.

HON. MACKENZIE KING.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4162 (2)

Class Organization.

Mr. King said that while class organization for economic purposes might be good, when any group entered politics for class purposes it would stir up other class movement. It was inevitable that the farmers and Labor should come into field; they represented a reaction from an attitude of mind on the part of the Government which was not the free-loving attitude of the Liberals. When a Government becomes arbitrary it is natural for Groups to form in protest. The real critical problem in Canada as he sees it was the danger of the groups not being united in the face of the common enemy. If we are to have different groups each striving for a monopoly of Government, we will have disunion of the people: sooner or later you will have the east arrayed against the west, the towns against the country. What we should strive for is unity in the nation and stability in the Government. He was unalterably opposed to class government. What was needed was a party broad enough and liberal enough to include in its platform the aims of all these great progressive groups.

Union Government.

Continuing, Mr. King said the Union party did not have a policy. The present Government was chosen for one purpose only—the winning of the war. The Government should have dissolved when it arrived at peace times or given the country some justification for its continuance. But Premier Borden went to Europe without announcing a policy; when he returned he found disunion and wrangling in the Government. Oe part of the Government was expressing the hope that the whole would develop a reconstruction policy; but the Liberal Unionists felt that having been elected to support Union Government they should go on doing so.

Mr. King sympathized with the Premier and the illness that was the result of his many troubles. But he thought it was a mistake for Sir Robert to hold on to office. The only reason he did so was that if he left the whole combination would fall to pieces.

Next session Sir Geo. Foster would be acting Premier, but as he would not be able to attend evening sessions, there would have to be another acting leader. If a question was asked about the harbor of St. John you would never get anywhere; the Ministers would pass the buck.

Continued on Page 7

Speaking of the Grand Trunk Act, Mr King said it involved a matter of between $500,000,000 and $700,000,000. He had asked that the people have the same right as the shareholders—to see the agreement before it was signed. But the Government forced through the bill in an arbitrary manner, and were now showing the agreement to the Grand Trunk shareholders in England—perhaps were amending it to satisfy the shareholders.

St. John's Need.

Mr. King said we did not have representative government, but a group of men holding office for the sake of power. Laurier found great men in the Maritime Provinces, but in the present Cabinet there was not a Maritime man with a portfolio. A. K. McLean was mentioned for a portfolio. That might help Halifax.

Continuing, Mr. King said he thought it strange that the Commercial Club should come to the leader of the opposition. But then it was not so strange after all. They couldn't go to the Prime Minister. They did not know where he was, and he did not know where he was going. They couldn't go to a Maritime Minister, for there wasn't any. So they put their faith in the man whom they thought the people of Canada would put their faith in.

Continuing Mr. King said he did not know what he could do for St. John, but he would do his best, and went on to say that Hon. Mr. Pugsley reminded him of the Californian who at a funeral said: "If nobody has anything more to say about the deceased, I will have a few words to say about California." There was hardly a cabinet meeting when Mr. Pugsley did not have a few words to say about Courtenay Bay.

The Liberal convention laid down the guiding policy of the party, provided it got a chance to put it into effect. The Liberals felt the first thing they should put in their platform was economy.

At the close of the fiscal year Canada's net debt was $1,584,000,000, or $220 per capita. The interest would be $115,000,000, or $15 per capita.

For the current year estimated expenditure was $800,000,000, and the revenue was $280,000,000.

Did they realize that every cent of the Victory loan went to current expenses? The government would have to make another loan or they could not carry on the affairs of the country. An accounting was necessary, and for this new men were needed. The Liberal party wanted a graduated tax on business profits and incomes.

Mr. King said the cost of living could only be brought down by increased production, and that increased production of natural resources could only be promoted by taking away the tariff on natural products altogether. Luxuries should bear a greater share of the burden; tariff modification must take place on other commodities, and the British preference be increased to 50 per cent.

The party still believes in reciprocity in natural products; it would give greater assistance to agriculture—by providing credits, extending the elevator system, cold storage, etc.

If elected Mr. King would give labor two representatives on the Board of directors of the National Railways, and in general would support the principle of giving labor a voice in the government of the country, and the management of industry.

Mr. King said the needs of returned men should be met in the spirit the men met the call of the soldiers, and in as effective a way as possible.

Before an election they must have an honest franchise. Important as policies and concrete measures might be attitude was all important, and the Liberal attitude was that they must have sable government and stable conditions.

Liberal Unionists Sincere.

Continuing Mr. King spoke of Laurier's influence on his life, and declared his aim, like Laurier's was national unity.

Those Liberals, he added, who supported Union Government, were just as sincere in aim and purpose as those who stood by Laurier, and none are true to Laurier's memory who do not take that charitable view.

In conclusion he said there was nothing in laPointe's point that was not echoed in his—they were both pledged to fight for Canadian unity and British Liberty.

Mr. Foster said the Government was already passing the bucks to Fredericton—one was prohibition and the other Labor Legislation. He then introduced the Quebec leader.

The King Maker

Ernest laPointe, M. P., said Mr. King and himself, were animated by the same spirit as Macdonald and Cartier. He thought New Brunswick was a fertile ground for Liberalism; there were no germs of narrowness; all classes and creeds lived in harmony. Union Government has been lingering for two years, reeling between two parties, and has at last reached a condition of inertia. Being offspring of an abnormal condition the Government had lived an abnormal life; it had divided race against race and element against element and created disunion where under Laurier these had had a great united people. It maintained a sham united supported hypocrisy; the Government's prestige was like the recent cold spell—several degrees below zero.

Some people were afraid of the radicalism prevailing in some parts. The political descendants of Jeremiah were advocating a union of the safe and sane in both parties. Quebec was being flattered, and it was not used to it. At the next election it would be on the side of the safe and sane Liberal party.

Mr. laPointe said the new Leader had studied Liberalism under Laurier, the illustrious son of Quebec and the greatest of Canadians, and under the new leader the Liberal party invited all who believed in freedom to come into the fold.

Mr. laPointe challenged the Government to appeal to the country, as soon as they passed a franchise act—not a war time act which was a disgrace to Canada.

The world is moving; the world is changing; Governments must go forward or they will stumble forward.

Liberalism must hold the middle course between those who would employ violence which would be disastrous to our institutions, and those who obstinately oppose all progress and reform.

Canada is a nation today and will never be reduced to the position of a province. We were proud to belong to the great commonwealth of British Nations, but it was a cheap patriotism that wrapped itself in the British flag. No party or group should be allowed to use the great sentiment of patriotism to promote their own interests—not even the ignoble band of profiteers.

"I am proud of my race and origin but above all I am proud of being a Canadian and my loyalty knows no sectional differences," said Mr. laPointe.

After the meeting the new leader showed a Liberal "attitude" towards the leaders among the faithful. He did not send them empty away, but took them to the Royal and gave them a supper.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

St John Globe
January 17 20

LIBERAL LEADER WAS GREETED BY CHEERING THOUSANDS

Hundreds Unable to Gain Admission to Great Meeting at the Imperial.

APPEAL FOR UNITY KEYNOTE OF THE ADDRESSES.

Premier Foster, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe, M. P., Discuss Political Issues Before One of the Largest Audiences Ever Gathered in St. John.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Liberal party in Canada, and Ernest LaPointe, leader of the same party in the province of Quebec, spoke before a St. John audience on Friday evening, and were given a cordial greeting by an immense audience which filled to capacity the Imperial Theatre, the city's largest playhouse.

The doors were thrown open an hour before the scheduled hour of the opening of the meeting, 8.15, and was quickly filled by lines of citizens who had congregated at King square. Provincial M. P.'s and others had flocked to the city during the day and occupied seats on the stage. Special reservations had been made for ladies and many city leaders in patriotic associations during the war period occupied box and front or orchestra seats, and followed the speakers with interest. The Imperial orchestra rendered a fine programme, while the audience awaited the appearance of the speakers of the evening.

Premier Foster presided and in his introductory remarks urged the female electorate to take an interest in public affairs and to exercise to the full their right of franchise.

Mr. King was given a cordial reception on arising, and during his two hours' discourse was rendered an attentive hearing throughout, with occasional laughter following a humorous reference or story, and enthusiastic applause when a graceful reference of sympathy was made to Sir Robert Borden's illness, and an eloquent tribute in glowinug periods made to Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. King proved to be a public speaker of ability, and his discourse was marked by an evident deep grasp of economic principles and a broadness of viewpoint that commended itself to his audience.

He made a plea of national unity, dwelt on the principles of Liberalism and offered these as a solution of the country's troubles. He spoke against class government of any sort, criticized the Union government for holding onto power after the war period, referred to the immense debt of the country, urged the necessity of governmental economy and criticized the government's railroad policy.

Mr. King read from the platform of his party planks advocating greater tax on wealth, improvement in the storage and distribution of farm products, dealing with the fitting for civilian life of the war veteran, the right of labor to be represented on the railway commission and the securing of a just franchise.

Mr. LaPointe was given a great reception as he was introduced by Premier Foster and by his ready wit as he criticized the Ottawa government soon had the audience in fine good humor. Mr. LaPointe spoke for national unity, and, although laboring under the handicap of not speaking in his native tongue, made a good impression.

Premier Foster, in rising to introduce Mr. King, extended to all in the House a hearty welcome, and gave greetings to the Hon. Mr. King and Mr. LaPointe. He said the present Union government did not represent the people and drew attention to the Liberal platform recently laid down.

The Liberal leader as an introductory expressed his appreciation for the splendid reception given him and was glad to see so many of his old colleagues present, and so many people from all parts of the province. He said the government should not be controlled by only a few men, but it should be representative of the people. He told of the present government's opposition to an election, and considered that it was there for itself. For many a year to come, said Mr. King, the war and its consequences will remain a mighty influence on the world affairs and any policy that did not take this into consideration must fail. Not only have the maps of countries been changed, but all that is living and breathing in the soul of humanity has been stirred to the depths. He spoke of the unrest in this country and the need of united action to have personal and economic freedom. Liberalism to him was the expression of a wider human freedom, which meant freedom and better conditions for factory workers, men on the farms or in the shops.

He then told how the Liberals in Ontario had helped the farmers to overthrow Hearst's government, and thought that in the course of time the Liberals had everything to gain in that province. He questioned whether organizations of classes should plunge into politics. He felt it natural that there should be a reaction of labor and the farmers after Liberal rule when they came under the administration of the Conservatives. He felt that the war veterans and their rights and claims should have every consideration, and as Liberals there were special reasons for sharing their hopes and aspirations. The war in Europe had been a conflict of two diametrically opposed systems of government: the war would have been useless unless out of it comes a new social order resplendent with the conception of liberty.

The war had shown what could be done by co-operation and sacrifice, and if this co-operation could be carried into the reconstruction period there would be nothing to fear. If, on the other hand, each element souldght its own gait and refused to join hands and aimed at its own domination then there would be the period of confusion. He thought that all classes, soldiers, farmers and labor men should be represented in Parliament. When it came to matters of government he was unalterably opposed to monopoly in any form. He was opposed to government being controlled, visibly or invisibly by railway, manufacturing or financial interests, and he was none the less opposed to control by farmers, veterans or labor. The best maxim he knew for government was of Pym: "That form of government is best which doth actuate and dispose every part and member of the state to the common good." Such a form of government was to be found only in co-operation between the different classes; co-operation of the progressive forces was the only means of certain victory.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

This led him to speak of the east and the west of the wide dominion, and all the vast intervening space, of British Columbia with its diversified resources; of the prairie provinces, with their vast agricultural wealth; of Ontario and Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, with their rural as well as urban populations, and their enterprising manufacturing and commercial development. Was the splendid unity of this great country to be imperilled by a conflict of policies related primarily to geographical areas or particular interests, or were Canadians to carry into the shaping of their national policies the same noble spirit of some sacrifice on the part of each, and willing co-operation on the part of all, by which alone the war was won? Should it be each for self or all for all? Should it be the special interest of a class or the well-being of the whole community? Should it be Canada first, as it was with the men who gave their lives with thought of naught save the honor of their country and their duty before God?

If it was this large, this nobler ideal Canadians must have in their federal politics some political party large enough, broad enough, tolerant enough, fearless enough to carry forward such a policy of national unity. No one at present could tell what was the policy of the Union government, and he felt that Premier Borden should have left a statement of his policy. The Premier had gone south for an indefinite time, and he had left a condition of affairs at Ottawa that formed a pleasing drama yet with its serious aspects. He felt it was a mistaken kindness on the part of Sir Robert Borden and his friends when he retained the office against his own will. No business concern would have followed such a policy. Sir George Foster, whom he understood is to be acting premier, he felt was too old to carry out the duties. There would be delays and it would affect the question of St. John harbor development. The Grand Trunk measure, involving an expenditure of between $500,000,000 and $700,000,000, had been put through parliament when there was a small attendance. The agreement, however, had not yet been signed and he felt that the press and the people of Canada would demand that it should be held over until the House meets.

The federal government, he contended, was not a responsible government. There was no representative of this province in the cabinet. The Maritime Provinces had contributed great men to Canada and her government. He recalled such men as Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir George Cartier, Sir Louis Davies, Sir Robert Borden, Hon. W. S. Fielding and the Hon. Andrew G. Blair. The representatives of the Maritime Provinces had done much to form his opinions and judgments in his early political career. In all the three Maritime Provinces there was not a man holding a portfolio. It was rumored that one man, though, had been offered a portfolio, but it was probable that he might favor the port of Halifax more than St. John.

Referring to a delegation from the St. John Commercial Club, which waited upon him yesterday morning with regard to the congestion of the harbor and the freight yards here, with American railways carrying Canadian freight and boosting the level of exchange, the speaker said that it seemed peculiar to him at first that such a delegation should come to the leader of the opposition to get consideration.

Here he was interrupted with a bedlam of cheering and applause with frequent cries of "That's the stuff."

But, on the other hand, who was there else to go to? (Laughter and applause.) They did not know where the Prime Minister was; in fact, the Prime Minister himself did not know where he was nor whither he was going. There was no cabinet minister to represent them, and so it was evident that they had decided to back a sure thing and put their faith in a man whom they thought would be the people's choice as a representative. (Applause.)

Personally, he pledged himself to do everything in his power in this matter which was so greatly affecting the port and terminus business.

He remembered the day when he had sat in the Laurier Cabinet with Dr. Pugsley and when they would gather in Sir Wilfred's room and when others were at a loss for a subject, Dr. Pugsley would talk Courtenay Bay. This was the spirit that was needed if they wanted anything done.

Referring to the Liberal platform he said it had been drawn up at the convention last August, a convention which represented all classes from all parts of Canada, including, war veterans, labor, farmers and other classes It was a new and progressive policy coping with all situations of the present day. It demanded national and government ecomony realizing as it did the enormous public debt of the country. On March 31st last the net public debt was $1,584,000,000 involving an annual interest of $115,000,000 or $15 per head of population.

The estimated expenditure of the Dominion government for the present fiscal year is over $800,000,000, or roughly, $100 per head of the population.

The estimated revenue is only $280,000,000, thus creating an estimated deficit of over $500,000,000—a sum equivalent to $62.50 per head of the population—which sum the finance minister proposes to obtain by borrowing.

The Victory Loan this year he said went to meet the current expenditure of the government. Considering the finances of the country there should be some accounting of the nation's liabilities. The money to meet these liabilities must be raised by taxation, he said.

In the last analysis all taxation must come from wealth and greater wealth could come from a greater development of natural resources. Products of the sea, of the mine, of the land, must be increased, and it must be made so that the worker could carry on his labor at the least cost possible. To this end he would favor the abolition of all import duties on instruments of production in industries based upon the natural resources of the country, such as mines, fishing, lumbering and agriculture, the development of which was essential to the progress and prosperity of the country.

St John Globe
January 17/20

D 41642

The cost of living was measured by the cost of clothing, food and footwear; if the tariff caused these high prices, then the tariff should be modified.

Luxuries, he felt, should bear a larger measure of taxation but flour, foodstuffs and machinery should be free of duty. He thought the preference with Great Britain should be increased from 25 and 33 1-3 per cent. to 50 on the general tariff in the interests of closer relationship. Reciprocity was one of the greatest factors in favor of lower prices. The Liberal convention, he said, had gone on record in favor of a mutual trade agreement between this country and the United States. It had also decided that in the interests of agriculture, in aid of greater production on the land, and for the conservation of the soil in Canada it is expedient for the government to arrange for the distribution of fertilizers at the lowest possible cost.

He then discussed the labor plank in the party platform. With regard to labor he said he would strive to raise the status of industry so that its voice would be more effective. If the Liberal party were returned to power he would give to labor the right to place representatives on boards which control their activities. His party was not in favor of granting $2,000 indiscriminately to war veterans but the policy of the party covered matters of education, insurance, pensions, trade training, etc.

A fair and honest franchise was also advocated. In it would lie the security of the rights of the people and the privilege of a self-control of their own affairs. In closing the speaker asked his hearers to forget the differences of the past, to look to the great future which is before the country, and in a very graceful tribute to the manner in which the English-speaking Canadians and French-Canadians had helped at home and overseas in winning the war introduced his confrere, Ernest Lapointe, M. P.

Ernest LaPointe, who was given a great reception, said he thought there was no germ of narrowness in the Maritime Provinces. This was evidenced by the reception given Mr. King, leader of the Liberal party and from Ontario, and himself, a representative of Quebec. He emphasized the need of a strong government at Ottawa to-day. He showed the weakness of the Union government and its failure to represent the people. The various elements that were scattered needed a new leader to give them impetus back to unity, and that leader was Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King. He made a study of all economic problems and he was bringing to the party and the country the brains and intellect of a great scholar. He challenged the government to make an appeal to the country at the polls. The policy of Liberalism was justice to all classes, both rich and poor, but to the poor equally as to the rich, imbued with the spirit of tolerance, moderation and justice. He contended that Canada must have a representative government before she took her place at the Imperial Conference. Canadians must not allow this impotent and worn out government to speak for her at that conference.

He longed for the day when the spirit of patriotism would endear to all Canadians every foot of soil, and until that day the Canadian people could not hope to achieve real Canadian nationality.

Liberalism, he said, was pledged to secure that end, for the party was rocked in the cradle of liberty, the principles of which were eternal and, although they might be borne down at times, they were strongly imbued with the spirit of truth and justice, and ultimately truth and justice would prevail.

When the house had subsided its cheering three hearty cheers and a tiger were led by the chairman and then those on the platform who had not already met the Liberal chieftain, were introduced.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4165

St. John Telegraph
January 17, 1920

COMMERCIAL CLUB'S STRONG ARGUMENT FOR HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS

Memorial Presented to Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe, M. P.

History of Port Development and Present Transportation Situation Given as Reasons for Support by Members of Parliament for Demand for Better Facilities.

A delegation from the Commercial Club waited upon Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe, M. P., yesterday afternoon and presented the following address to them as members of the parliament of Canada:

January 16, 1920.

Messrs. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M. P., and Ernest Lapointe, M. P.:

Gentlemen,—The officers and members of the St. John Commercial Club greet and welcome you to our city as fellow citizens of Canada.

Our club is non-political, and has as its aim the advancement of our city and province along such lines as will be of benefit to all our people, thereby not only benefitting our own province but, as must necessarily follow, our nation and our empire.

We say this that you may the better understand our motive in addressing you; and with the knowledge that we are striving to bring about such transportation, terminal and docking improvements as are needed, and that the improvements are not only of local but of national need and importance, we feel that you will be in harmony with us in our efforts and agree with us that the need of these improvements is of such national importance that their construction should be no longer delayed.

From the birth of Confederation, when the four original provinces made a partnership agreement to work together to develop our great Canadian nation, this province has done her share—and perhaps more than her share—without complaint, whether it was in paying our share to buy the northwest territories from the Hudson Bay Company, the construction of our railway systems, our canals, or any public work that would be of benefit and help make Canada what she is today. Our people from the earliest days of Confederation have willingly done their part; we have given of our ablest men and money in carrying out our part of the agreement we made in 1867, feeling that if we builded well and the day should ever come when we would have to call on the people of all Canada for assistance, we would have developed with the people of Canada such an asset as would justify and warrant our asking for assistance and expecting that it would be given to us.

In so far as the development of this port is concerned that day has arrived. In the past our people have done splendidly in supplying shipping facilities here, and with very little outside assistance we have constructed wharves and other facilities that have fairly well taken care of the traffic, but it has grown to such an extent that the supplying of facilities to handle it is beyond our financial ability. Moreover, this is a national port, and we have the right to seek from the people of Canada such financial aid as is necessary to provide facilities to handle the ever increasing traffic.

You have seen, gentlemen, in addition to the steamers that are receiving and discharging cargoes, fourteen large ocean steamers lying at anchor here awaiting a berth. In addition to this, many steamers have come here and been turned away—some of them along with their cargoes which were routed here, have been diverted to foreign ports. You have also seen all the available railway sidings full of loaded cars, and can appreciate what a financial loss this condition is causing, not only to the carriers but to this port and to all of Canada, and we trust you will agree with us that immediate action should be taken to have this condition remedied.

The great war has made our people generally realize many things as they did not realize them before, and perhaps not least among them is the importance to the British Empire of the port of St. John, which is second only to Montreal in the volume of its export and import trade.

Canada today in recognizing her position as the centre of the British Empire should see the necessity of developing her Atlantic ports in the maritime provinces that are accessible at all seasons, and make such arrangements as are necessary for this protection in case of war, and not allow herself to remain as she now is, dependent on our neighbor's bonding privileges.

There is no port that is so easy of access as St. John:

By land—As the terminus of three transcontinental railways and situated 160 miles nearer the heart of the country than any other Canadian port in the winter season.

And by water—With its harbor without ice or tides to prevent steamers entering or leaving it at any time, and no other port in Canada is of such vital importance, or the need of naval protection so apparent, for should the Bay of Fundy be in control of a foreign navy all Nova Scotia ports as well as St. John could easily be cut off.

A structure is no stronger than its weakest point, and it is apparent that in the building up of Canada the maritime provinces have been neglected—not only by the people of other parts of Canada, but by our own people as well in their desire to make Canada great. We have built up a great nation, with a vast and rapidly increasing trade extending all over the world, and have neglected to supply facilities for the handling of that trade, and are now in a position where we are obliged to rely on the generosity of a foreign nation for the transportation of our goods. Canada as a nation, and as the centre of the British Empire, should not be in that position.

There is a feeling of dissatisfaction extending all over Canada on account of the present rate of exchange between the United States and ourselves, and probably no single item of commerce is contributing more to the adverse balance of trade than is the amount of transportation we are buying from the United States—the amount we Canadians are paying the people of the United States to transport our goods through their territory. This condition should not exist, and would not exist if the transportation facilities of the maritime provinces had been built up in conformity with the building up of other parts of Canada.

We ask you as parliamentary representative of the Canadian people to give the national needs of Canada in regard to transportation your most earnest consideration, and we are assured that a study of the subject will convince you of the justice of the claims of St. John.

Respectfully yours,
THE COMMERCIAL CLUB OF ST. JOHN.

The Reply.

The facts presented need no arguments to support them. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King and Ernest Lapointe replied to the delegation from the Commercial Club which, as citizens of St. John, presented to the members of parliament the condition and needs of the port of St. John, at the Royal Hotel this afternoon. Hon. Mr. King said he was glad the delegation had come and had presented facts about conditions here.

H. P. Robinson was spokesman of the delegation, and the other members were D. W. Ledingham, L. J. Seidensticker, R. H. Sime, R. H. Bruce, H. W. Rising, Ronald A. McAvity and T. Drummie.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

St John Globe
January 17/20

D 4166

NATIONALIZATION OF PORT FAVORED

Significant Remark by Liberal Leader After Harbor Trip.

HE SAW THE CONGESTION

Trip as Guest of Board of Trade and Commercial Club Gave Hon. Mr. King First Hand Information,

Voicing surprise and edification at the extent and variety of the water-front activities of the port of St. John, and expressing astonishment at the diversity and importance of the steamship business. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, stated this morning during a tour of the harbor and Courtenay Bay, that he was convinced that the port of St. John was equally deserving of nationalization as were railways.

He was deeply impressed with the fact that the citizens of St. John had spent their own money to provide facilities for the shipping of the nation and of the Empire.

Ernest Lapointe, M. P., who accompanied Mr. King, also stated that he had greatly enjoyed and was deeply impressed with the extent and variety of the shipping at this port. The Liberal leader, at the end of the harbor trip, requested that he be furnished with facts, figures and photographs concerning the harbor and the railway facilities, in order that he might consider and give proper place to the port of St. John in his treatment of questions arising in the reconstruction period.

The harbor trip was under the joint auspices of the Board of Trade and the Commercial Club, and despite the inclemency of the weather, in the form of a blizzard, the inspection was said by those who participated in the tour to have been a pronounced success.

Accompanying the distinguished visitors were H. C. Schofield, A. P. Paterson, H. B. Robinson, W. S. Allison, W. E. Golding, Ronald A. McAvity, Walter H. Golding, D. W. Ledingham and A. R. Dufresne, chief engineer of the St. John Drydock and Shipbuilding Company.

Hon. Mr. King and Mr. LaPointe, at 11 a. m., left the meeting of provincial Liberals, assembled in Moose Hall, Charlotte street, and accompanied by Premier Foster, W. J. Mahoney and E. J. Henneberry, went to the Eastern S. S. Company's pier, where the visitors were welcomed by the representatives of the Board of Trade and the Commercial Club and escorted to the steamer Sissiboo. Premier Foster then returned to the meeting on Charlotte street.

The inspection trip began with a tour of the harbor, thence the route led to Courtenay Bay, where the visitors were shown the immense coffer dam, the largest in the world, and the excavation work being done on the site of the great dry dock. The party did not land.

The steamer proceeded to the outer harbor, and during this portion of the trip D. W. Ledingham named and explained the many trans-Atlantic connections St. John enjoyed. The Sissiboo travelled slowly, enabling the visitors to read the names and home ports of the freighters which were at anchor awaiting berths. Mr. Ledingham told that the vessels carried grain, general cargo, construction material and other goods to ports in England, Ireland, Scotland, Norway, Sweden, France, Italy, Greece, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, South America and the West Indies. He advised Hon. Mr. King that some of the craft had been at anchor for ten days, waiting for berthing accommodation. An interesting point was noted in regard to one of the steamers. Her home port was Trieste, formerly the principal shipping port of Austria-Hungary, but to-day it is a port of Italy, according to the flag of the vessel.

Sand Point slip was next visited and here Hon. Mr. King and Mr. LaPointe were afforded an excellent instance of how greatly the port is congested, in that they saw cases of two steamers tied up at the same berth.

At the Long Wharf it was pointed out that the berth on the western side had been rendered useless for steamers drawing more than a certain draft by reason of deposit of silt which had accumulated at the berth. Shipping experts stated that there was imperative need of having the berth dredged out.

The distinguished visitors were deeply impressed with the many scenes of marked activity they witnessed and frequently exclaimed in tones of surprise and pleasure at the diversity and volume of the traffic and business at the Port of St. John. Further, they were deeply impressed with the fact that the citizens here had spent their own money to provide facilities for the benefit of the nation and the Empire. They said that they could appreciate to some extent at least what an immense benefit the port must have been during the war.

Here, Hon. Mr. King remarked certainly facilities of this kind were as well worthy of nationalization as were railways. He added that during his trips across the bay in other years, during summer, he had always been impressed, especially at night, with the commodiousness of St. John harbor! now, seeing it for the first time in winter, and during a snow storm, he was all the more convinced of its wonderful possibilities.

As the Sissiboo neared the journey's end, Hon. Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe dwelt at considerable length on the present business of Canada and on the greater future which awaited the young nation. The trade possibilities of St. John were especially commented on.

It was evident that the members of parliament were greatly taken with the port. The Liberal leader requested that he be furnished with memoranda containing facts and figures such as had been told about during the trip and that he be given photographs of port and railway congestion.

Both the Liberal leader and Mr. Lapointe returned hearty thanks to the Board of Trade and the Commercial Club for the opportunity afforded to get first hand knowledge of the immense volume of Canadian trade which was being carried on here. Hon. Mr. King said he would not have missed the trip for a great deal.

Motion pictures of the trip were taken under the direction of Walter H. Golding of the Commercial Club, for the Canadian Pictorial of Toronto.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

St John Evening Times & Star
January 17 20

D 4167

A GREAT MEETING.

The leader of the Liberal party can have no fault to find with his reception in the maritime provinces. Last night's great meeting in this city was the climax of a remarkably successful tour. The Imperial was far too small to accommodate those who sought to enter, and the packed house listened with the keenest interest until the last word had fallen from the lips of the closing speaker.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King sustained his reputation as a brilliant speaker, and the frequent applause proved the sympathy and appreciation of the audience. Not less appreciative were the people of the wit, the earnestness and force of Mr. Lapointe.

It was not difficult to probe the weakness of the present government at Ottawa, but it was done with rare skill by both speakers, and the arguments in favor of an appeal to the people set forth with striking clearness and force.

Canadian unity was the chief theme of both addresses, and as essential to that unity they urged that the people be given without delay the opportunity to set up at Ottawa a truly representative government. The present one, Mr. King pointed out, was chosen for the duration of the war, and there is no longer any reason for its existence, especially since it is practically leaderless, and its members are not in harmony with regard to matters of public policy.

Mr. King holds that the aspirations of the farmers, the labor party and the veterans arise from the same source as those of the great Liberal party, and that if there be any danger at all from any of these sources it could only develop through an effort to legislate for a class. Against any class domination true Liberalism must protest, since in such protest it had its own birth.

There can be no quarrel with the definition of Liberalism given by Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe, or with the emphasis placed by the former upon the vital relation of social, industrial and economic justice to the well-being of the state. Judged by the standards set up by the Liberal leaders the government now clinging to power at Ottawa must stand condemned before the people.

His hearers were especially interested in Mr. King's exposition of the tariff policy of the Liberal party. He made it clear that the party stands for the abolition of many duties now exacted, the modification of others, and an increase in the British preference. He would remove the duties on instruments of production in the development of the great natural resources of the country, since only by greatly increased production can the country progress and obtain relief from the staggering burdens improved by the war. The Liberal party proposes to raise the additional needed revenue by a system of direct taxation which will make the wealth of the country contribute more largely, while a higher tariff on luxuries will offset to some extent the reduction in other directions. Such a policy might be regarded as likely to align the great vested interests against the Liberal party, "but there we stand," said Mr. King, "and there we will fight."

The Liberal leader had no unkind word to say of those who made union government possible in 1917. He recognized that they acted on conviction and in the belief that this course would best aid in winning the war. Now that the war is over, the reason for the existence of a government formed for a specific purpose and a stated period no longer exists, and he appealed for a reunion of all the Liberals to meet the new conditions and very grave problems now confronting Canada.

The farmer movement does not dismay the Liberal leader. He recalls the fact that Sir Wilfrid Laurier warned the government that if the voice of the farmers of the west were unheeded they would unite and take political action. That prediction has been fulfilled. The farmers have organized, and so long as they do not attempt to introduce class rule their entrance into the political arena is not a matter to be deplored. Mr. King points out, moreover, that as soon as one group attempts class domination other groups rise, unite their forces, and drive it from power.

The tone of last night's speeches by Mr. King and Mr. Lapointe was distinctly high, and marked by a broad Canadianism which appealed to every listener. The introductory address of Premier Foster gave the citizens an opportunity to note how greatly he has progressed as a clear and able speaker in the brief period during which he has been in public life. He and the colleagues who were there with him last evening have been giving the people of New Brunswick an excellent illustration of what it means to have a progressive Liberal government administering public affairs.

Last night's audience contained many citizens who have never been Liberals, and who may perhaps be arrayed against the Liberals in the federal elections; for party allegiance is strong, and all men and women cannot see alike in regard to political policies; but all who listened to the speakers of the evening will agree that they heard a very able presentation of the case for Liberalism, and even if they do not agree with the views of the speakers they can nevertheless share with Liberals a feeling of pride that Canada produces men of the high character and intellectual force which mark the Liberal leader and his very able lieutenant from Quebec.

Mr. Lapointe captured the audience at the very outset. His ready wit pierces the armor of an opponent, and he has a ready knack of illustration that is delightful; and when he spoke as a Canadian of the French race, proud of his ancestry, proud to be a Canadian and a loyal citizen of the Empire, eager to see a united Canada moving forward to the realization of a great destiny, the spell of his eloquence charmed and moved the vast audience.

The reception given both speakers must have been intensely gratifying. The presence of a large body of women voters made the occasion the more interesting. There was not a single interruption except in bursts of applause. Liberalism in St. John has given its leader a heartening reception, and he in turn has made a deep impression upon the minds of the people.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

January 17/20

D 4163

Saint John Globe

ST. JOHN, N. B., JANUARY 17, 1920.

FRIDAY'S GREAT MEETING.

St. John and New Brunswick gave a welcome to the Liberal leader and his brilliant Quebec colleague which both must remember with pleasure and satisfaction, no matter what the sequel. The Imperial never held a larger audience. A house of double the capacity would not have accommodated all who sought admission. The very large number of women in the audience was an indication of the interest women are taking in the issues and problems of the day. Hon. Mr. King had spoken in St. John before, but he was not then the Liberal leader and war had not split old party lines and created new issues. Interest, therefore, centred both in the man and his message. A ready and forceful speaker, Mr. King held the attention of the gathering for practically two hours, and while applause was never demonstrative, it was frequent and hearty. The address was a distinct departure from the stereotyped politican speech, and dealt rather with principles than with policies. Perhaps too much time was given to the academic consideration of great principles and too little to the discussion of specific problems, entirely to satisfy the great bulk of the audience. Liberals, however, found satisfaction in his promises of lower tariff duties on the necessities of life, in the promise that a Liberal government would enlarge the British preference, increase the duties on luxuries, make wealth pay a large share of the tax burden, and seek a reciprocal pact with the United States. Mr. King made it clear that the next political fight in Canada will be a fight between the interests and the people, between the protectionists and those who favor tariff revision, between those who always resist change and those who have won for mankind all or nearly all the reforms which are now sacred rights. Pitched to a high plane, the address of the leader gave unmistakable proof of his oratorical ability, of his skill in the handling of words — whole torrents of words, without too closely committing himself on particular issues. Characterizing the Union government as a party without a policy, Mr. King spent less than one-fourth of the time at his disposal dealing with his own party policy. Putting himself clearly against legislation by classes, he welcomed the class movements — Farmers, Labor, Veteran — which make difficulties for the government of the day and promise to aid in its overthrow. In these and other ways he showed himself the practical politician, while his lofty appeal for unity and for consideration of those great principles which true Liberalism has ever championed spoke broad study and a clear understanding of economic questions. Mr. LaPointe's epigrammatic phrases and earnest, eloquent words won the audience and gave weight to his argument. It was one of the greatest and most successful political meetings St. John has ever known, and the Liberal leader undoubtedly made a favorable impression on an audience, not hostile, but naturally disposed to be critical.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

19 Jan. 1920

D 4169

Montreal Reform Club

FARMERS' MOVEMENTS AND LIBERALISM

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

Montreal Gazette
January 20/20

D 4170

LIBERAL LEADER AT REFORM CLUB

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King Paid First Official Visit to Montreal

DEFERS WESTERN TOUR

Says Farmers' Movement Will Ultimately Harmonize With Liberal Doctrines of Lower Tariff

Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King yesterday paid his first official visit to Montreal as leader of the Liberal party, when he was given a cordial reception at a special luncheon at the Montreal Reform Club on Sherbrooke street. Although Hon. Mr. King paid something of a surprise visit, there was a fair sized attendance, with many of the regular members of the club present.

In his address Hon. Mr. King devoted much of his time to an account of his recent visit to the Maritime Provinces, and more time to an argument that the farmers' movement was really a species of Liberalism. He declared that there was no danger of a farmers' political movement in the Maritime Provinces, considering that the farmers there were quite content with the political programme of the Liberal party. As to Ontario and the west, he was more hopeful than explicit, considering that the farmers' political movement would in the end harmonize with the Liberal doctrines of lower tariff and reciprocity with the United States.

The Liberal leader stated that, owing to the multiplicity of work that had engaged his attention since last session, and the near approach of another session of Parliament, he had been compelled to drop his original idea of making a tour of the west until after the conclusion of next session. He said he then hoped to make a tour of the west, at a time when it would be possible to hold outdoor meetings, so as to meet the farmers, instead of the city people in their large halls.

In opening the meeting the president, Mr. C. W. Taylor, assured Mr. King that in Montreal he was among his best friends, who were prepared to work all along the line with him, until eventually they made him leader of a Liberal Government.

In a general sketch of his recent eastern tour, Hon. Mr. King said that the idea he had brought back was that while the Union Government was rapidly disintegrating, the Liberal party was uniting as it had not done for years past. He returned convinced that in the three Maritime Provinces, the Liberals were becoming a strong united force.

NO FARMERS' MOVEMENT.

"Everywhere we went we were met by enthusiastic crowds, which included many farmers," he said. "Therefore I do not think we need have any concern as to the farmer movement in Eastern Canada, since this is being more and more recognized as an expression of Liberalism. The reason this farmers' political movement has taken its present form in Ontario and the West is that they had special problems which caused them to undertake political action for themselves."

This, said Hon. Mr. King, had been foreseen by Laurier, when he had introduced the reciprocity measure, and he considered that the farmers' movement had dated from the refusal of the Union Government to admit to Parliament a large deputation of farmers. "The whole movement, I hope," he said, "is the beginning of a new Liberalism which will be stronger and more progressive than anything we have had for a long time past."

"Of course," he said, "Sir Robert Borden is a Minister, but he has gone none knows where, and he himself apparently does not know where he is going, and the Government is left without an executive head, while the Maritime Provinces have no cabinet representation."

DELAYED WESTERN TOUR.

As to his projected western tour Hon. Mr. King said he had considered it better to delay it until after next session of Parliament, since there was not a community in the west that had not demanded a meeting. If the tour were to be made in winter, he and his colleagues would necessarily have to visit only the cities where they would not reach the farming population. He did not think the session would last long, although the Opposition would insist on a new Franchise Act.

He argued that the Union Government had been made for the period of the war. Now the war was over it had outlived its usefulness, and it was time for the two historic parties to reunite, and lay their policies before the people, and to give the people opportunity to elect their representatives, he holding that at present the Government was usurping office without authority. Unless the people were given opportunity to express their opinions by electing a representative government, he argued that conditions instead of becoming more orderly, would become more and more restless.

A vote of thanks was moved by President Taylor, and later in the afternoon Hon. Mr. King met the Women's Liberal Club, and in the evening the Young Men's Liberal Club, leaving by the 10 o'clock train for Ottawa.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4171

13 Feb. 1920

Ottawa:Retail
Grocers' Assoc.

THE RETAIL GROCERY TRADE
AND THE COST OF LIVING

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The High Cost of Living

The largest and most important economic issue of our times is the high cost of living. There is not a class nor an individual in the community which is not affected by it. It is of special interest to members of this Association, because retail grocers, more than members of any other branch of the retail trade, come into touch with the entire community in respect to the most essential of those commodities which we speak of as the "necessaries of life".

GROCERY TRADE A COST OF LIVING BAROMETER

In the olden days, the necessaries of life were purchased more or less direct from the producers at local markets, or, if of a kind obtainable only through international trade, were procured at the great fairs held at intervals in different cities and towns to which merchant traders came long distances to sell, and others equally long distances to buy.

To-day, it is not to fairs that men go at special seasons of the year to purchase the spices of the Orient, dried fruits of the tropics, the foods of other lands and climes, but to the grocery stores in their city or town. To the doors of the retail grocers in our modern communities come the city dwellers, one large army of consumers, seeking some of the necessaries of life. The articles in demand are in large part among the most perishable produced, as well as among the most necessary for the sustenance of life. Taking the grocery business as it is carried on, ~~in fact,~~ bread and meat, butter and eggs, are to be included as well as fruits and vegetables, sugars and cereals. These commodities men, women, and children must have day by day; otherwise they will lack sufficient nourishment and ultimately starve. The commodities themselves must be disposed of without delay; otherwise they too deteriorate or perish.

The articles in which the trade deals are required, not by the few, nor by the many, but by all. In these respects they fall into the same category as clothing, boots and shoes, fuel, and houses; but they differ from most of the other necessaries in that they are just as needful at

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

one season of the year as another, and do not lend themselves to continuous use or to a series of uses to anything like the same degree. These circumstances give the retail grocery trade a very significant position in relation to the problem of the high cost of living. It is at the shops of the retail grocers that consumers make their acquaintance in a very real way with the prices of food. Food price lists become a barometer of the cost of living.

GROCERS ON THE FIRING LINE

One further consequence of the position in which the trade is placed is that the members, the grocers themselves, are placed in a quite exceptional, and I must say a somewhat unenviable position. As regards advancing prices, they stand, so to speak, on the firing line. It is across their counters that the first actual contact takes place between the vast army of consumers seeking to purchase food, and the smaller but nevertheless powerful army of producers with food to sell. The average consumer sees only the man directly in front of him, and the price he is demanding. He sees nothing, and very often knows nothing, of the forces which are pressing from behind, and which not infrequently leave to the retail grocer, in the matter of the price he is demanding, no avenue of escape or retreat. The consequence of all this is that the retail grocery trade is put very often in a wholly false position in the eyes of the public. Its members are looked upon, by those who do not understand the situation, as peculiarly selfish, as persons seeking to profit in virtue of the necessities of others. Were the truth actually known, it could readily be shewn that high prices, where they are the result of either a limited production or an inflated currency, are the despair, rather than the joy, of members of the trade, and make for lesser rather than greater returns on the total volume of transactions.

an ~~unnecessary~~ tariff, or other ~~avoidable~~ like cause

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

POSITION OF OTHER TRADES

What is true in this respect, in a very noticeable way, of the retail grocery trade, is true of the retail trade in general. It is also true of the wholesale trade in most lines of business that have to do with providing the public with the commodities which supply its daily needs. Assuming that artificial restrictions upon trade in the nature of secret trade agreements and combines are not operative, it is a fact, well known to all engaged in trading, that the total volume of business is the all-important factor in determining at what rate it is possible to sell goods at a legitimate profit, and that a lesser rate will, speaking generally, yield a larger total return, where the volume of trade is large, than a high rate of profit will yield on a limited turnover.

ADVERSE INFLUENCES AFFECT GROCERS AND CONSUMERS ALIKE

High prices of themselves do not make for an increase in the volume of trade. They make, as a matter of fact, in the opposite direction. Trading, as an art, consists in finding the price, consonant with a legitimate profit, which will attract most strongly; or in other words, which will permit of the largest number of sales. Once this truth is grasped, the consumer and the merchant will recognize in each other, not individuals who should stand opposed, in the great economic issue which the problem of the high cost of living has forced to the fore, but persons whose interests are alike prejudiced by a common cause which it is to their mutual benefit to discover, and to have remedied if that be possible at all.

VOLUME OF PRODUCTION AND TRADE THE IMPORTANT CONSIDERATION

I might go a step farther and say that what is true as regards the volume of transactions in trading as applicable to the retail and wholesale trades is also true as respects trade, commerce, and finance generally. It is

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

true of the business of the many agencies of transportation and communication, the railways, the merchant marine, the express companies, of the telegraphs and the telephones, and the newspaper press. It is true of the business of banks and the stock exchange - it is the volume of business that counts. It will thus be seen that, as respects the High Cost of Living, any light that can be thrown upon the problem in relation to the retail grocery trade will penetrate far beyond; it should disclose in essential outline much that is fundamental from a national point of view, and that affects the country's business in all its many and varied branches.

GROCERY TRADE THE STORM CENTRE

The fact that in the retail grocery trade the articles that are dealt in are, as already mentioned, among the most essential of the necessaries of life, and at the same time, in large part, the most perishable of commodities, makes it inevitable that things should focus up to a point in this particular trade, and that when a windsow is smashed in hunger riots, it is more likely to be that of a retail grocer than of a hardware merchant, or of a bookseller and stationer.

The retail grocery trade is the storm centre, so to speak, of forces being brought into conflict through the operation of far-reaching underlying economic laws. What is to be seen through the windows of your trade is the battle at its highest pitch. To those immediately concerned, little is visible or understood of the conditions and forces which, operating many miles away and emerging from out the distant past, account for the struggle that is going on to-day.

FUNDAMENTAL CAUSES OF HIGH COST OF LIVING

I should like this evening to look through the window of ~~your~~ trade out over the heads of the immediate participants in this great economic struggle, and beyond to the wide world which is seeking recovery from the ravages

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and desolation of war; and with the aid of the imagination discern, if possible, the causes of the intensity of the issue at the moment, and wherein a change of conditions is to be sought if we are to find a solution of the problem of the high cost of living in a manner that will be helpful alike to consumers generally and to those engaged in commerce and trade in its many forms.

THE LOSS AND WASTE OF WAR IN WEALTH AND HUMAN LIFE

The first thing one observes in any sweep of vision is the enormous loss and waste which war has occasioned. Loss and waste of material wealth, and what is infinitely worse, even from a purely economic point of view, loss and waste of human life. It defies the imagination to estimate, with any degree of accuracy, what all this loss means to the total production of the world; and yet there is not a fraction of it which is without its direct bearing upon the present problem of the high cost of living.

The loss in material wealth is in reality a double loss, for alongside of the actual loss occasioned by war must be reckoned the normal production, wholly different in character, which would otherwise have gone on, steadily replenishing the world's store of supplies. Not only has most of the wealth created for war purposes been totally destroyed or wasted, but the producing energies of the different countries have been devoted so largely to the manufacture of the instruments of destruction and providing the supplies of war, that production for a period of over four and a quarter years has been diverted to that extent from fields which minister in large part primarily to the ordinary needs of human society. Till this loss has been restored, as in time it will be, prices are not likely to find their former level, and time it will certainly take to make good such colossal waste and loss.

What is infinitely more serious, in its effect upon the cost of living throughout the world, than any loss of material wealth, is the loss of the millions of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

human lives sacrificed outright in war, and the other millions that through disease, bodily injury, or other impairment, have lost their industrial efficiency in greater or less degree. Here is a loss to the world and to actual and potential power in production which will never be made up in our day or generation. Our need is vastly greater, and the numbers required to make good that need are vastly less than they were before it was created. ~~Let us, therefore, not expect prices to find their former levels anew.~~

THE DESTRUCTION OF CAPITAL

Then, there is the destruction of capital in industry which the war has occasioned, and which will have to be replaced before many of the normal producing and distributing operations can be recommenced. The mines and factories that have been ruined, the machinery and the railroads that have been destroyed, the loss in part of the merchant marine, all these and countless other losses that the war has occasioned will have to be made good before production can once more assume its normal development. Meanwhile, much capital that would otherwise be investing in the production of commodities that minister immediately to human need will be diverted to these secondary purposes.

PUBLIC DEBT AND TAXATION

Then, there is the vast public debt and the many new obligations which war occasioned to the several countries and the payment of which in the form of interest and pensions must be met as a first charge upon the wealth of the country. Contrive as its administrators may, there is something here which will impose a burden on all classes of industry - which will be reflected in a higher level of prices for years to come, unless some policy is adopted in the interests of consumers which will help to offset these adverse circumstances.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

INFLATED CURRENCY AND INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGES

Akin to this increase in public debt is what is termed "inflation of the currency". Prices are the resultant of two factors considered in relation to each other: commodities on the one hand and currency on the other. The quantity of the precious metals remaining the same, an increase in the quantity of commodities means a decrease in prices; a decrease in the quantity of commodities, an increase in prices. If, in addition to gold, which is the basis of currency, the government of a country issues paper money redeemable in gold, in quantities which raise a doubt in the minds of any appreciable number of people as to the ability of the Government to redeem its paper in gold at the face value, then currency comes to have a less value than before; in other words, it becomes "inflated", and prices, being the resultant of the relation of commodities to currency, increase as the value of the currency falls. There are many who believe that this explains in considerable measure the fall in value of the English sterling, which is the same thing as a rise in prices with regard to those articles which a pound sterling will buy. This is a matter which affects each country in relation to its own currency. Inasmuch as it has a direct bearing on international exchanges, and through this medium on the volume of international trade, it must be noticed in any survey of causes affecting prices throughout the world to-day. It is a factor that needs to be reckoned with, ~~but as regards our own currency is not one which need cause us concern.~~

CUMULATIVE EFFECT OF WORLD INFLUENCES
IN RESTRICTING PRODUCTION AND TRADE

Remembering, however, all these factors; the waste and loss of material wealth and human life in the war, the diversion during the four and a quarter years of war of production into abnormal channels, the capital that must be replaced and restored before production can resume its normal channels, the charge upon industry and trade which public debt and pensions will continue to impose, the inflation of currency and the vagaries of international exchange; and remembering also that the world's markets have become more and more one - let us realize at once that it will be a considerable time, no matter how rapid the recovery of the nations may be, before we may expect a return to the days when commodities were plentiful, and as a consequence obtainable at a moderate cost.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There is one feature to which I should like to draw attention, with respect to the several factors mentioned, and that is that one and all, with the exception of the last mentioned circumstance of the world's markets being increasingly one, have this in common that they operate as restrictions upon production, and reduction in the total volume of trade.

CONDITIONS IN CANADA

Such is the view as one gets it at wide range of world conditions, which help to account for the prevailing high level of prices and consequent high cost of living. There is little in the conditions described that we can change. As respects these conditions, for the most part we can only wait for the improvement which comes with time. This makes it the more imperative that we should look more closely at conditions as they are within the borders of our own country, and see if they are such as tend to lend emphasis to the high cost of living, or will admit of change to the benefit of all concerned.

SUPPLY OF FOOD ALL-IMPORTANT TO ALL CLASSES

This causes me for the moment to direct attention again to the significance of the class of commodities with which the retail grocery trade is concerned. They are, as already pointed out, in the nature of food, and, as such, the most necessary of the so-called necessaries of life. Two consequences of great importance flow from this. The first is, that if retail groceries are to be made available to consumers at prices which will serve to reduce the high cost of living, they must be available to retail dealers in plenty. The quantity of available supplies, more than anything else, will affect the barometer of the high cost of living. The food price lists will go up as the quantity of available food production lessens. They will come down as the quantity of available food increases. The other consequence is that only as the prices of foodstuffs come down from the present high level can we hope for an appreciable reduction in the cost of living as respects other commodities and services. The artisan cannot work for less than is

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

necessary to supply himself and his family with food. High wages can mean nothing to him if every cent of increase in pay is offset or more than offset by an increase in the price of food. The salaried official is in the same position. To enable all branches of construction, manufacture, and trade, to find a level where a fair wage to Labor and a reasonable rate of return on invested capital may be paid, and prices and charges at the same time reduced, there must come some reduction in the cost of food which will be the outcome of a larger production of production at a lessened cost.

KIND OF PRODUCTION AS IMPORTANT AS QUANTITY

Now note this point, which is all important. Food, in one way or another, is always related to the land. Something has to be grown or raised before there can be any increase in the quantity of food. It may be grain for flour or cereals or bread; it may be hogs for bacon, or lard or ham; it may be cattle for milk or cheese or beef; it may be fruit or vegetables, fresh, ~~fish~~ dried, preserved, or canned - whatever it is, so long as it partakes of the nature of food, it goes back to some form of agricultural or horticultural development. Now what does this mean? It means that only as agriculture in all its branches flourishes can we hope to find any real solution of the problem of the high cost of living. It is not enough to say that there must be increase in the quantity of production. The kind of production is just as important as the quantity, and the kind of production which, above all others, the world is calling out for to-day is food. During the War, it was first more men, then it was more munitions, then it was more ships, then more food. More food it has remained and is likely to remain for many years to come. It was starvation that, in the last analysis, helped to bring ~~brought~~ the Germans and Austrians to their knees, and starvation means the absence of food.

If this be true, is it not time to ask ourselves, how promises it, with our supplies of food? Canada is a great agricultural country. We have land available for cultivation and use, on a scale relative to our population, unequalled by any other country in the world. How have we proceeded?

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

URBAN POPULATION GROWING AT EXPENSE OF RURAL

Let us, looking out again through the window of your trade, attempt to make something of a national survey of Canadian conditions as they affect the high cost of living. Once we do this, we are immediately confronted with one of the most amazing situations, and at the same time one of the most serious tendencies to be imagined. Instead of rural development being what we would hope and expect it ought to be, that is to say, considerably ahead of, or even keeping pace with, the growth of population in urban centres, we find that at present, and for many years past, the tendency would appear to be entirely the other way. The population of our cities and towns relatively has been forging away ahead of the population in the rural areas. The number of consumers demanding food in urban centres has steadily increased, whilst the number of persons producing food has relatively steadily declined.

Unfortunately, the only national statistics we have are those of the Dominion Census of 1911 for Ontario and the Eastern Provinces, and a somewhat later census for the prairie provinces; but it is safe to say that the tendencies they represent have been emphasized rather than diminished in the years that have since intervened.

SOME REMARKABLE STATISTICS

Going back to the beginning of this century and starting with the Eastern Provinces, making our survey from East to West, what do we find? First of all, that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, from 1901 to 1911, the urban population showed comparatively large increases, whilst in these provinces and in Prince Edward Island the rural population decreased materially. In the Province of Quebec, the urban population increased by 314,383 from 1901 to 1911, and the rural population increased by only 39,951. In the old Province of Ontario, the urban population increased by 392,511 in the ten years from 1901 to 1911, and totalled in actual figures 1,328,489, while in the same period of time the rural population decreased by 52,184, and numbered the lesser total of 1,194,785.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In the Western Provinces, where the statistics are somewhat more recent, we find, notwithstanding the vast agricultural areas, the same alarming tendencies. In 1901, slightly over seventy-five per cent. of the population was rural and slightly less than twenty-five per cent. was urban. In 1916, instead of the rural population holding its own with the urban, something over only sixty-four per cent. of the population was rural and something slightly over thirty-five per cent. was urban. By the census of 1911 the urban population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta is shown to have increased ninety-two per cent. in ten years; whereas in the same period of time the rural population increased by only fifty-two per cent. The census of 1916 reveals a furtherance of this tendency toward the expansion of the cities and towns at the expense of the country or rural areas. In the one Province of Saskatchewan, where rural population had been the largest relatively, the rural population decreased from something over eighty-four per cent. of the total to something over seventy-two per cent. in the five years from 1911 to 1916.

NECESSITY TO FOSTER AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

When we stop to consider these figures, and what they signify in their bearing upon such a problem as the high cost of living, it will be seen that it is impossible to exaggerate their significance. In the light of evidence of the kind, the endeavor to regulate prices in a manner which will benefit consumers generally, by such expedients as Boards of Commerce, however useful investigating bodies of the kind may prove in helping to check individual abuses here and there, is the merest pretence. It is, as one humorist has said, like shooting woodpeckers as the most effective means of conserving the forests, like attempting to remedy some serious disease by examining its surface indications. The trouble is not on the surface; it is an internal disorder of the gravest character, one which, if permitted to go on, will sooner or later bring the city-dwellers and the whole country into desperate plights.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There is only one cure, and that is the one which ordinary common sense, in such obvious circumstances, dictates. If rural areas are being depleted, if agricultural development is not keeping pace with industrial development in other directions, it is for us, not less in the interests of the rural populations than of the urban, to find out the cause, and so shape our national policies as to foster a wise and wide agricultural development.

FOOD PRODUCTION THE MOST NECESSARY OF ALL FORMS OF PRODUCTION

People living and working on the land is Canada's greatest need to-day. Not only Canada's, but the world's, faced with starvation as it has been at so many times of late. This need is all the greater when we recall, as already mentioned, that the markets of the world are increasingly one. A famished world bears the same sort of relation to Canada, with its vast agricultural areas, as do our cities and towns to their rural environments. We are differently situated than most other countries. They have not the agricultural possibilities that we have, either in extent of area, or fertility of soils; they, too, have been building up great industrial centres, that must continue to look beyond their own confines for food. The demand, therefore, for our produce from abroad is a factor of which we must not lose account in considering the supply that at any given time may be available to meet our own need.

But, you say, granting all that has been said to be true, there still remains the problem of how to get the people to live and work on the land. Like all problems of production, it presents three factors, each of which demands careful consideration. They are the three essentials: Land, Labor and Capital. If there were not land available, this would be a problem indeed. Fortunately, we have a condition in this respect which surpasses that of any other country in the world. Canada is still in large part a pioneer's country; agricultural land is its richest

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

TIME REQUIRED FOR ANY NEW POLICY
TO BEAR FRUIT

Any policy such as the one described, which seeks ~~to~~ a return of the people to the land, will take time to accomplish its aims. It is not going to be possible, under any conditions, to have people settle upon the land in appreciable numbers except over a period of time. Especially will this be seen to be true when we recall that, in former years we have relied upon immigration from abroad to people our unoccupied areas. We must still look, in large part, to immigration to help us to an ultimate solution. But we do well to recognize what the drain of war has meant to the nations of Europe and in particular to the British Isles in this respect. There are not the numbers of people there were from which to recruit immigrants, nor are the countries of Europe likely to be willing to part too readily with those they have. The necessity, therefore, of some immediate action to help reduce the very high cost of living is all the more apparent.

~~NEED OF IMMEDIATE ACTION.~~

Since an increase in the supply of food is the one obvious necessity, it is scarcely less obvious that anything artificial at present restricting the food supply should be immediately removed. This brings us inevitably to a consideration of the tariff. Were I to pursue this theme farther, I should of course get into the realm of political controversy, and this is a non-partisan organization, and therefore not the time or the place to provoke a discussion. At the same time, I would feel I had not fully stated the case, and might be accused of having sought to dodge the issue, were I to omit to express my own conviction that it is possible so to reform the tariff as not only to diminish the high cost of living in a manner which would immediately benefit consumers, but also to reduce the cost of the instruments of production, and so help agriculture and all the other industries based upon the natural resources of Canada. As these basic industries

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

NEED OF IMMEDIATE ACTION

Since an increase in the supply of food is the one obvious necessity, it is scarcely less obvious that anything artificial at present restricting the supply of the principal articles of food should be immediately removed. This brings us inevitably to a consideration of the tariff. Were I to pursue this theme farther, I should of course get into the realm of political controversy, and this is not the time nor the place to provoke a discussion. At the same time, I would feel I had not fully stated the case were I to omit to express my own conviction that it is possible so to reform the tariff as not only to diminish the high cost of living in a manner which would immediately benefit consumers, but also to reduce the cost of the instruments of production generally, and so help agriculture and all the other industries based upon the natural resources of Canada. As these basic industries thrive, all our other industries will thrive, all our interests, whether of agriculture, manufactures, commerce, or transportation. Any revision of the tariff which failed to keep all these interests steadily in view would not be in the national interests. It is obvious, however, that much can be done through tariff revision by way of reducing the high cost of living, which will prove to the benefit of one and all; and foremost in this connection is any well-considered step which will help to increase the supply of food to dwellers in town and country alike.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Journal
Feb" 13—20

D 4186

GROCER WRONGLY BLAMED FOR HIGH COST OF LIVING, SAYS LIBERAL LEADER

At Retailers' Annual Banquet—Talks of Causes and Solution for Problem.

RETAILER ON FIRING LINE

Revision of Tariff and Policy of Back to the Land Are Advocated.

Looking out of a grocer's window at that vital question, the high cost of living, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King laid stress on the peculiar significance and special importance of the retail grocers, who bear the brunt of the consumers' protests when prices rise, in an address before members of Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association, at its annual banquet in Masonic Temple last night. The retail grocery trade, he said, was the barometer of the cost of living. The grocer was often put in a false light. He was on the firing line between the army of producers and the army of consumers. But his policy was that it was better to have small profits and large sales, rather than large profits and small turnover.

Causes of H. C. of L.

The causes of the high cost of living, he showed, in a succinct, comprehensive analysis of the problem, were fundamental, and the public should see clearly the position in which the retail grocers are placed in regard to it. The retail merchant was helpless in dealing with the question until nature worked out its healing. The loss of material and life, due to the war, the burden of taxation and pensions, the inflation of the currency, all tended to raise prices, and the world's markets were more and more one now. Cheaper food was necessary before there could be reductions in other lines. Until more food was produced the speaker could not see reductions in prices of the necessities of life.

Advocated Tariff Revision.

The remedy he advocated was a downward revision of the tariff on foodstuffs and on agricultural implements, so as to bring about a material decrease in the cost of living, and an energetic policy in rural development. Regard must be had for all existing industries, however, in considering any adjustments to the tariff. Mr. King received a tremendous ovation when he arose to speak and when he sat down. It was a most representative gathering, not only of the Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association, but of the Ottawa Pure Food exhibitors, the mayor, controllers and aldermen, the directors of Central Canada Exhibition, and officers of sister associations. About 300 guests sat down to a dinner the cuisine and service of which left nothing to be desired.

At Head Table.

Mr. B. G. Crabtree, president of Ottawa Retail Grocers' Association, made an excellent toastmaster. Beside him at the head table were Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Mayor Harold Fisher, A. J. Freiman, president Ottawa Retail Merchants' Association, Lieut.-Col. R. F. Parkinson, T. Sydney Kirby, J. F. Taylor, H. W. Chamberlain, Henry Watters, Controller J. Kent, Ald. J. A. Pinard, Ald. D. Macdonald, Ald. J. P. Balharrie, Controller F. Plant, Controller J. Cameron, W. Macdonald, Ald. W. Y. Denison, Ald. J. Denny, A. Provost, A. Phillips, T. Bowman, T. Collius, Ald. E. D. Lowe, A. W. Huband, E. M. Trowern, Dominion secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.

The toast to the King was honored by singing the national anthem. Then followed the toast to the guest of honor, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King.

"The largest and most important economic issue of our times is the hight cost of living," said Mr. King. "There is not a class nor an individual in the community not affected by it. It is of special interest to members of this association, because retail grocers, more than members of any other branch of the retail trade, come into touch with the entire community in respect to the most essenial of those commodities which we speak of as the 'necessaries of life.'

Grocery Trade Barometer.

"In the olden days, the necessaries of life were purcahsed more or less direct from the producers at local markets, or, if of a kind obtainable only through international trade, were procured at the great fairs held at intervals in different cities and towns to which merchant traders came long distances to sell, and others equally long distances to buy.

"Today, it is not to fairs that men go at special seasons of the year to purchase the spices of the Orient, dried fruits of the tropics, the foods of other lands and climes, but to the grocery stores in their city or town. To the doors of the retail grocers in our modern communities come the city dwellers, one large army of consumers, seeking some of the necessaries of life. The articles in demand are in large part among the most perishable produced, as well as among the most necessary for the sustenance of life. Taking the grocery business as it is carried on today, bread and meat, butter and eggs, are to be included as well as fruits and vegetables, sugars and cereals. These commodities men, women and children must have day by day; otherwise they will lack sufficient nourishment and ultimately starve. The commodities themselves must be disposed of without delay; otherwise they deteriorate or perish.

"The articles in which the trade deals are required not by the few, nor by the many, but by all. In these respects they fall into the same category as clothing, boots and shoes, fuel, and houses; but they differ from most of the other necessaries in that they are just as needful at one season of the year as another, and do not lend themselves to continuous use or to a series of uses to anything like the same degree. These circumstances give the retail grocery trade a very significant position in relation to the problem of the high cost of living. It is at the shops of the retail grocers that consumers make their acquaintance in a very real way

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

with the prices of food. Food price lists become a barometer of the cost of living.

Grocers On Firing Line.

One further consequence of the position in which the trade is placed is that the members, the grocers themselves, are placed in a quite exceptional and, I must say, a somewhat unenviable position. As regards advancing prices, they stand, so to speak, on the firing line. It is across their counters that the first actual contact takes place between the vast army of consumers seeking to purchase food, and the smaller, but nevertheless powerful army of producers with food to sell. The average consumer sees only the man directly in front of him, and the price he is demanding. He sees nothing, and very often knows nothing, of the forces which are pressing from behind, and which not infrequently leave to the retail grocer, in the matter of the price he is demanding, no avenue of escape or retreat. The consequence of all this is that the retail grocery trade is put very often in a wholly false position in the eyes of the public. Its members are looked upon, by those who do not understand the situation, as peculiarly selfish, as persons seeking to profit in virtue of the necessities of others. Were the truth actually known, it could readily be shown that high prices, where they are the result of either a limited production or an inflated currency, an unwise tariff, or other like cause, are the despair, rather than the joy, of members of the trade, and make for lesser rather than greater returns on the total volume of transactions.

Other Trades.

"What is true in this respect, in a very noticeable way, of the retail grocery trade, is true of the retail trade in general. It is also true of the wholesale trade in most lines of business that have to do with providing the public with the commodities which supply its daily needs. Assuming that artificial restrictions upon trade in the nature of secret trade agreements and combines are not operative, it is a fact, well known to all engaged in trading, that the total volume of business is the all-important factor in determining at what price it is possible to sell goods at a legitimate profit, and that lower prices will, speaking generally, yield a larger total return, where the volume of trade is large, than high prices will yield on a limited turnover.

"I might go a step further and say that what is true as regards the volume of transactions in trading as applicable to the retail and wholesale trades is also true as respects trade, commerce, and finance generally. It is true of the business of the many agencies of transportation and communication—the railways, the merchant marine, the express companies, of the telegraphs and the telephones, and the newspaper press. It is true of the busines of banks and the stock exchange—it is the volume of busines sthat counts. It will thus be seen that, as respects the high cost of living, any light that can be thrown upon the problem in relation to the retail grocery trade will penetrate far beyond; it should disclose in essential outline much that is fundamental from a national point of view, and that affects the country's business in all its many and various branches.

The Storm Centre.

"The fact that in the retail grocery trade the articles that are dealt in are, as already mentioned, among the most essential of the necessaries of life, and at the same time ,in large part, the most perishable of commodities, makes it inevitable that things should focus up to a point in this particular trade, and that when a window is smashed in hunger riots it is more likely to be that of a retail grocer than of a hardware merchant, or of a bookseller and stationer.

"The retail grocer trade is the storm centre, so to speak, of forces being brought into conflict through the operation of far-reaching underlying economic laws. What is to be seen through the windows of your trade is the battle at its highest pitch. To those immediately concerned little is visible or understood of the conditions and forces which, operating many miles away and emerging from out the distant past, account for the struggle that is going on today.

"There is the destruction of capital in industry which the war has occasioned, capital which will have to be replaced before many of the normal producing and distributing operations can be recommenced. The mines and factories that have been ruined, the machinery and the railroads that have been destroyed, the loss in part of the merchant marine, all these and countless other losses that the war has occasioned will have to be made good before production can once more assume its normal development. Meanwhile much capital that would otherwise be invested in the production of commodities that minister immediately to human need will be diverted to those secondary purposes.

"Then there is the vast public debt and the many new obligations which war occasioned to the several countries, and the payment of which in the form of interest and pensions must be met as a first charge upon the wealth of the country. Contrive as its administrators may, there is something here which will impose a burden on all classes of industry—which will be reflected in a higher level of prices for years to come, unless some policy is adopted in the interests of consumers which will help to offset these adverse circumstances.

Inflated Currency.

"Akin to this increase in public debt is what is termed inflation of the currency. Prices are the resultant of two factors considered in relation to each other: Commodities on the one hand and currency on the other. The quantity of the precious metals remaining the same, an increase in the quantity of commodities means a decrease in prices ; a decrease in the quantity of commodities means an increase in prices. If, in addition to gold, which is the basis of currency, the Government of a country issues paper money redeemable in gold, in quantities which raise a doubt in the minds of any appreciable number of people as to the ability of the Government to redeem its paper in gold at the face value, then currency comes to have a less value than before; in other words, it becomes inflated, and prices, being the resultant of the relation of commodities to currency, increase as the value of the currency falls. There are many who believe that this explains in considerable measure the fall in value of the English sterling, which is the same thing as a rise in prices with regard to those articles which a pound sterling will buy. This is a matter which affects each country in relation to its own currency. In such as it has a direct bearing on international exchanges, and through this medium on the volume of international trade, it must be noticed in any survey of causes affecting prices throughout the world today.

"There is one feature to which I would like to draw attention with respect to the several factors mentioned; and that is that one and all have this in common, that they operate as restrictions upon production, and reduction in the total volume of trade.

Conditions In Canada.

"Such is the view as one gets it at wide range of world conditions, which help to account for the prevailing high level of prices and consequent high cost of living. There is little in the conditions described that we can change. As respects these conditions, for the most part we can only wait for the improvement which comes with time. This makes it the more imperative that we should look more closely at conditions as they are within the borders of our own country, and see if they are such as tend to lend emphasis to the high cost of living, or will admit of change to the benefit of all concerned.

"This causes me for the moment to direct attention again to the significance of the class of commodities with which the retail grocery trade is concerned. They are, as already pointed out, in the nature of food, and, as such, the most necessary of the so-called necessaries of life. Two consequences of great importance flow from this. The first is, that if retail groceries are to be made available to consumers at prices which will serve to reduce the high cost of living, they must be available to retail dealers in plenty. The quantity of available supplies, more than anything else, will affect the barometer of the high cost of living. The food price lists will go up as the quantity of available food production lessens. They will come down as the quantity of available food increases. The other consequence is that as the prices of foodstuffs come down from the present high level can we hope for an appreciable reduction in the cost of living as respects other commodities and services. The artisan cannot work for less than is necessary to supply himself and his family with food. High wages can mean nothing to him if every cent of increase in pay is offset or more than offset by an increase in the price of food. The salaried official is in the same position. To enable all branches of construction, manufacture and trade, to find a level where a fair wage to labor and a reasonable rate of return on invested capital may be paid, and prices and charges at the same time reduce, there must come some reduction in the cost of food which will be the outcome of a larger production or supply or of production at a lessened cost.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"Now, note this point, which is all important. Food, in one way or another, is always related to the land. Something has to be grown or raised before there can be any increase in the quantity of food. It may be grain or flour, or cereals or bread; it may be hogs for bacon, or lard, or ham; it may be cattle for milk, or cheese or beef; it may be fruit or vegetables, fresh, dried, preserved, or canned—whatever it is, so long as it partakes of the nature of food, it goes back to some form of agricultural or horticultural development. Now what does this mean? It means that only as agriculture in all its branches flourishes, can we hope to find any real solution of the problem of the high cost of living. It is not enough to say that there must be increase in the quantity of production. The kind of production is just as important as the quantity and the kind of production which, above all others, the world is calling out for today is food. During the war, it was first men, then it was more munitions, then it was more ships, then more food. More food it has remained and is likely to remain for many years to come. It was starvation that, in the last analysis, helped to bring the Germans and Austrians to their knees, and starvation means the absence of food.

"If this be true, is it not time to ask ourselves, how promises it with our supplies of food? Canada is a great agricultural country. We have land available for cultivation and use, on a scale relative to our population, unequalled by any other country in the world. How have we proceeded?

How Cities Grow.

"Let us, looking out again through the window of your trade, attempt to make something of a national survey of Canadian agricultural conditions as they affect the high cost of living. Once we do this, we are immediately confronted with one of the most amazing situations and at the same time one of the most serious tendencies to be imagined. Instead of rural development being what we would hope and expect it ought to be, that is to say, considerably ahead of, or even keeping pace with, the growth of population in urban centres, we find that at present, and for many years past, the tendency would appear to be entirely the other way. The population of our cities and towns relatively has been forging away ahead of the population of the rural areas. The number of consumers demanding food in urban centres has steadily increased, whilst the number of persons producing food has relatively steadily declined.

"Unfortunately, the only national statistics we have are those of the Dominion census of 1911 for Ontario and the Eastern Provinces and a somewhat later census in addition for the prairie provinces; but it is safe to say that the tendencies they represent have been emphasized rather than diminished in the years since.

"Going back to the beginning of this century and starting with the eastern provinces, making our survey from east to west, what do we find? First of all, that in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, from 1901 to 1911, the urban population showed comparatively large increases, whilst in these provinces and in Prince Edward Island the rural population decreased materially. In the Province of Quebec, the urban population increased by 314,383 from 1901 to 1911, and the rural population increased by only 39,951. In the old Province of Ontario, the urban population increased by 392,511 in the 10 years from 1901 to 1911, and totalled in actual figures 1,328,489, while in the same period of time the rural population decreased by 52,184, and numbered the lesser total of 1,194,785.

"In the Western Provinces, where the statistics are somewhat more recent, we find, notwithstanding the vast agricultural areas, the same alarming tendencies. In 1901, slightly over 75 per cent of the population was rural and slightly less than 24 per cent was urban. In 1916, instead of the rural population holding its own with the urban, something over only 64 per cent of the population was rural and something slightly over 35 per cent was urban. By the census of 1911 the urban population of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta is shown to have increased by only 52 per cent. The census of 1916 reveals a furtherance of this tendency toward the expansion of the cities and towns at the expense of the country or rural areas. In Saskatchewan, where rural population had been the largest relatively, the rural population decreased from something over 84 per cent in the five years from 1911 to 1916.

Foster Agricultural Development.

"When we stop to consider these figures, and what they signify in their bearing upon such a problem as the high cost of living, it will be seen that it is impossible to exaggerate their significance. In the light of evidence of the kind the endeavor to regulate prices in a manner which will benefit consumers by such expedients as Boards of Commerce, is, the merest pretence, however useful investigating bodies of the kind may prove in helping to check individual abuses here and there. It is, as one humorist has said, like shooting woodpeckers as the most effective means of conserving the forests, or like attempting to remedy some serious disease by examining its surface conditions. The trouble is not on the surface. It is an internal disorder of the gravest character, one which, if permitted to go on, will sooner or later bring the city-dwellers and the whole country into desperate plights.

"There is only one cure, and that is the one which ordinary common sense, in such obvious circumstances, dictates. If rural areas are being depleted, if agricultural development is not keeping pace with industrial development in other directions, it is for us, not less in the interests of the rural populations than of the urban, to find out the cause, and to shape our national policies as to foster a wise and wide agricultural development.

"People living and working on the land is Canada's greatest need today. Not only Canada's, but the world's, faced with starvation as it has been at so many times of late. This need is all the greater when we recall, as already mentioned, that the markets of the world are increasingly one. A famished world bears the same sort of relation to Canada, with its vast agricultural areas, as do our cities and towns to their rural environments. We are differently situated than most other countries. They have not the argricultural possibilities that we have, either in extent of area, or fertility of soils; they, too, have been building up great industrial centres, that must continue to look beyond their own confines for food. The demand, therefore, for our produce from abroad, is a factor of which we must not lose account in considering the supply that at any given time may be available to meet out own need.

New Policy.

"Any policy such as the one described, which seeks a return of the people to the land, will take time to accomplish its aims. It is not going to be possible, under any conditions, to have people settle upon the land in appreciable numbers except over a period of time. Especially will this be seen to be true when we recall that, in former years we have relied upon immigration from abroad to people our unoccupied areas. We must still look, in large part, to immigration to help us to an ultimate solution. But we do well to recognize what the drain of war has meant to the nations of Europe and in particular to the British Isles in this respect. There are not the numbers of people there were from which to recruit immigrants, nor are the countries of Europe likely to be willing to part too readily with those they have. The necessity, therefore, of some immediate action to help reduce the very high cost of living is all the more apparent.

Need of Immediate Action.

"Since an increase in the supply of food is the one obvious necessity, it is scarcely less obvious that anything artificial at present restricting the food supply should be immediately removed. This brings us inevitably to a consideration of the tariff. Were I to pursue this theme further, I should of course get into the realm of political controversy, and this is not the time nor the place to provoke a discussion. At the same time, I would feel I had not fully stated the case were I to omit to express my own conviction that it is possible so to reform the tariff as not only to diminish the high cost of living in a manner which would immediately benefit consumers, but also to reduce the cost of the instruments of production generally, and so help agriculture and all the other industries based upon the natural resources of Canada. As these basic industries thrive, all our other industries will thrive, all our interests whether of agriculture, manufactures, commerce, or transportation. Any revision of the tariff which failed to keep all these interests steadily in view would not be in the national interest. It is obvious, however, that much can be done through tariff revision by way of reducing the high cost of living, which will prove to the benefit of one and all; and foremost in this connection is any well-considered step which will help to increase the supply of food to dwellers in town and country alike."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Toast To the Press.

The response to the toast to the Press was made by Lieut.-Col. R. F. Parkinson and Mr. W. Macdonald, representing The Journal and The Citizen, respectively. Colonel Parkinson referred to the fact that among the many existing organizations of a semi-commercial semi-public character, few entered into a more intimate and direct relationship with all classes in the community than the Retail Merchants' Association, the members of which catered daily to every man, woman and child in Ottawa. He pointed out their contribution to raising the standard of living by providing pure food. He paid a compliment to the promoters of the Pure Food Show, which was an outstanding feature of that great civic asset, Central Canada Exhibition. The newspapers and the retail merchants, he said, had much in common. He was glad of the cordial relations between the merchants and the newspapers in promoting those enterprises which gave the maximum degree of service and satisfaction to the general public. Advertising made selling easier on the grocer's part. It was good business to push the sale of advertised goods.

To Allay Unrest.

He drew the attention of Hon. Mackenzie King that the press might be utilized as a medium of carrying on a propaganda to educate the people as to the causes of the high cost of living, such as he explained, and play its part in allaying the prevailing unrest. The press of Ottawa was proud of the retail stores and he hoped the retail merchants were proud of the papers here.

"As a whole," the speaker concluded, "I consider the people of Ottawa are more thrifty and progressive, and live more comfortably, than the residents of any other city in Canada. Ottawa is a discriminating city. Its people demand the very best, whether their needs be a daily paper or food products from a grocery store, and I conscientiously believe that the two enterprises — the Retail Grocers' Association and the press of Ottawa—are doing their utmost, individually and collectively, to measure up to the standards of living demanded by the people of our own city."

High Standard Here.

Mr. W. Macdonald, in a short, pithy speech, made felicitous reference to the cordial way in which the toast to the press had been received.

"The fact that you business men are so successful shows that you appreciate advertising," he said. "But some merchants do not appreciate the high standard of the papers here. No city of its size is superior in its news, editorials or advertising. Nor is the retail trade here excelled in any other city. The Ottawa papers try to keep their news and advertising columns clean.

He drew attention to the numerous campaigns conducted for the benefit of the city by the press, and concluded his speech by asserting that the press of Ottawa stood equal to any on the continent.

Mayor In Happy Mood.

Mayor Harold Fisher said that the idea of getting a meal at the expense of the grocers tickled his fancy, and his prediction that a meal served by the grocers would tickle his palate had been justified.

"No matter what they send the rest of us, we can rest assured that they will not put up any tricks on themselves," he said.

"Speaking of grocers, I have to meet at least one each month," said the Mayor, "and once a month is just about enough for me. A gentleman beside me remarks that my experience is limited. I may say that it is more extended than that of Hon. Mackenzie King. The chairman promises Mr. King a successful career as a grocer in the event of his failure in politics. Another gentleman who is not a grocer says that the failures find their way into the grocery business. A grocer then remarks that they 'don't stay there.'

Grocers Acquitted.

"But there is little chance of Hon. Mackenzie King getting into the grocery business. He has proven himself tonight not only a statesman, but a politician as well; he has shown himself to be not only distinguished but even heroic. He not only tackles the high cost of living, but he gets away with it as well. He has arraigned it at the bar, has acted as both judge and jury, and has acquitted the Retail Grocers' Association of any blame whatsoever.

"He took a fling at the hunters of woodpeckers, and there didn't seem to be even one dissenting voice. A man of less experience might have got into serious trouble. He might have told about the 'Cost of High-Living? He might have dwelt upon the crowds attending the moving picture palaces and the dance halls; notwithstanding the fact that the Jazz band produces nothing—I was going to add, not even music. But 'Chu Chin Chow' is playing to crowded houses notwithstanding the H. C. of L. and everything seems to be going on swimmingly.

"Not long ago Sir George Foster was credited with remarking that abolition of importation of tobacco would tend to solve part of our problems of costs. We are all very tolerant where it does not affect ourselves. Everyone says that the dollar is worth only about fifty cents. Many of us would like to pay our landlords with a fifty cent dollar.

"I used to boast that Ottawa had the lowest tax rate in the Dominion. I do not know if I shall do so any more. We are now busy with estimates. Apparently everyone who has anything to do for the city wants more money. But no one wishes to pay any more taxes. The 'High Cost of Governing' is a subject upon which I could talk lengthily. We cannot carry on at the same rate as we did five years ago. If we in Ottawa are to compete with the increased cost of labor and material, there's nothing for it but to put up the taxes and then retire from the public eye.

"Colonel Parkinson referred to the bottom of the programme as the 'cellar'. There's not much advantage in being in the cellar these days. I am in the 'cellar' though, and I have not much to offer you I make speeches every day about Ottawa. In this I have an advantage with strangers. Most of them do not know but that they are probably listening to the first speech I ever made. But with the Retail Grocers my position is different. With you I am known.

Corroborated the Compliment.

"Colonel Parkinson struck a happy note when he referred to the emphatic interest being taken in the city of Ottawa by business men today. I have been struck by the readiness with which the best available men in the Capital come forward to serve the public interest when they are afforded a chance. When men were wanted for the Hospital Board, for the Housing Commission, and for the Fuel Commission, an admirable class of citizens generously offered themselves. We have today on the Hospital Board men who would be a credit upon the directorate of any of the great financial institutions.

"People who throw stones at the City Council are doing so wrongly. It would be impossible to get men who have the interests of the city more at heart than the 23 men who are now on the council. I remember the time when the disposition was to criticize. That time is happily past. Now there is a new spirit being evidenced. We have the making of a very great city. Nature has done much for us, and it is up to all of us to do what we can to make Ottawa the finest city in Canada.

Ottawa's Future.

"If Canada is to be a great nation then the capital city of Canada must have the support of every citizen of the Dominion. Many people who come here believe that Ottawas are beneficiaries of the Government. While we may benefit to a degree, we also have burdens to bear on account of our being the seat of Government."

The Mayor congratulated the association upon the success of the dinner, and extended to the members a cordial wish for every success in the future. If the applause following his remarks was indicative of his popularity, His Worship had a supporter in the person of every retail grocer in the city.

"Our Manufacturers."

Responding to the toast "Our Manufacturers," Alderman J. P. Taylor, secretary-treasurer of the E. B. Eddy Company, paid a tribute to the success of the gathering, and to the distinguished speeches made. Briefly he outlined the conditions with which the manufacturers were confronted since the outbreak of the war. Alderman Taylor said that he had been associated for 39 years with the E. B. Eddy Company, which he termed "the largest and most unique establishment under the British flag."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

4190

Illustrating the phenomenal rise in prices of material, he said that lumber which commanded a price of $30 a thousand in pre-war days was now sold at $85. Chlorate of potash, of which the Eddy Co. uses from two to three thousand pounds daily, costs 50 cents now, as against 7 1-2 cents in pre-war time. Glue, of which the company utilizes in the neighborhood of 150 tons a year, had advanced greatly in price, as had wax, inks, and raw materials of all descriptions. Notwithstanding this, he was glad to say that no increase had been made in the price of matches since August, 1918.

$200,000 a Month.

War excise tax had been responsible for increases in several brands of matches, and the Eddy Company paid over $200,000 a month to the Government in the matter of this tax.

"This has to come from the consumer," said Alderman Taylor.

Speaking of the increased price of wrapping paper, Alderman Taylor pointed out that before the war the men in the paper mills worked two shifts of 12 and 13 hours a day. Now they worked eight hour shifts. Large increases in wages had been given workers, and ground wood pulp, which had prior to the war cost from $15 to $18 a ton delivered, now cost $60 a ton at the mill where it is turned out. Unbleached sulphide pulp had also advanced greatly, and abnormal increases in freight rates had resulted in raising the cost of paper products. Where the former freight rate was 16 cents, it was now 30 cents a hundredweight.

Want More Wages.

Last week the paper makers in convention at Buffalo had decided upon making a demand for a 25 to 30 per cent wage increase in the near future. They had not decided upon a shorter day, as had been rumored they would, however. This increase, if it becomes effective, would mean that machine tenders in charge of a paper machine would receive from $1.15 to $1.30 per hour.

Alderman Taylor stated that he was pleased to know that labor conditions in the province of Quebec were infinitely better than in other provinces. The I.W.W. and the O.B.U. had not succeeded in obtaining a foothold in Quebec. He was confident that within the next few years many new industries would spring into being in Quebec. He concluded with hearty congratulations upon the great work being done by the Retail Grocers' Association, and eulogized the Pure Food Show, which he characterized as a boon to the community.

To Past Presidents.

Mr. Henry Watters precluded the presentation of tokens of regard to the past presidents of the association with a happy speech. He traced the growth of the organization from its inception, and laid stress upon the magnitude of the good work accomplished, and the unselfish efforts of the men who had headed the movement.

Handsome wrist watches were presented to three past presidents, Messrs. A. Phillips, T. W. Collins and Thomas Bowman, all of whom made suitable speeches of acceptance of the evidences of the esteem in which they are held by their fellow merchants.

New Avenue of Thought.

In response to the toast, "Our Wholesale Grocers," Mr. H. W. Chamberlain, of the F. J. Castle Co., Ltd., stated that in his opinion the speech of Hon. Mackenzie King should be circulated broadcast throughout Canada. It opened up a new avenue of though and brought home forcibly a new text—that of justice to the wholesaler.

For four years it had been preached that the jobber should be beheaded, and that immediately, said Mr. Chamberlain. He cited instances of difficulties presented the wholesalers of which the public were unaware. As an instance of this he told of a cargo of molasses which had been "on the way" for eight months, and he had just heard it had arrived in Florida.

Mr. Chamberlain stated that he thought the public was largely responsible for any shortage of sugar. He told of one man who had two bags in his home, and who was looking for more. He advocated the getting together of the wholesaler, the manufacturer and the retailer, for the purpose of discussing their problems, and was of the opinion that misunderstandings which frequently occur would thus be eliminated.

Prosperity Coming.

Mr. A. Provost emphasized the necessity for work, and still more work as the solution of the problem of reconstruction with which Canada was faced today.

"We have passed through the critical warring period with high honor," he said, "and we should enter now into a period of prosperity unheard of before. Canada has the raw material, and the world is crying for the finished product. Everyone seems to desire play in preference to work. We should endeavor to evangelize Canada through the gospel of work."

Mr. A. W. Huband, in responding to the toast, "Our Travellers," ponited out the fact that the travelling salesman was the connecting link between the wholesaler and the consumer. The mission of the salesman was a vital one to the trade, he said.

At the close of the meeting a cordial vote of thanks was moved by Mr. N. Hurteau, and at his suggestion, was seconded by the audience rising. Three hearty cheers and a tiger were given for the guest of honor, and the evening's proceedings were closed when Hon. Mackenzie King's proposal of three cheers for the chairman, Mr. B. G. Crabtree was responded to with great enthusiasm.

During the evening there was community singing, which went with a fine swing. Ottawa male quartette —Messrs. W. J. Nixon, W. R. Burrill, H. M. Hands, N. T. Allan—was heard to good advantage in "The Jolly Blacksmiths' Lay." The number was enthusiastically received, and for an encore the singers gave "She Was but Seven." Messrs. Nixon and Burrill gave that popular duet, "Tenor and Baritone," and for an encore "Annie Laurie." Mr. Stafford Green and Mr. H. Hands also added to the enjoyment of the evening with solos, the former singing "To Canada" and "Dear Old Pal of Mine," and the latter "The Barber of Turin."

The committee in charge of the successful banquet was composed of Messrs. B. G. Crabtree, T. A. C. Kennedy, C. Cummings, Duncan Bell and A. G. Johnson, secretary.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Citizen
Feb" 13— 20

D 4131 (1)

DOWNWARD TARIFF REVISION WOULD LOWER LIVING COST

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King Delivers Interesting Address to Retail Grocers On Inflated Prices.

ANNUAL BANQUET IS DECIDED SUCCESS

Presentation of Souvenirs to Past Presidents a Unique Feature of Event.

That a downward revision of the tariff, particularly on the implements of production, would have the beneficial effect of lowering the cost of living, was the interesting statement of Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, Liberal leader, who was the principal speaker and guest of honor at the annual banquet of the Retail Grocers last night. He, in addition, urged that if the high cost of living question was to be solved, it would be necessary for the government to introduce a policy which would make for a curtailment of the trend of the rural population citywards, and thus ensure more production.

Progress of Retailing.

The banquet, which was attended by upwards of two hundred and fifty retail grocers, wholesalers, manufacturers, commercial travellers and others from all parts of Eastern Canada, was one of the most successful in the history of the association. Coupled with a delightful musical program, and a well-appointed table, was a toast list, with speakers, who apart from the guest of the evening, gave some interesting details of the progress which has been made in merchandizing, particularly with reference to the retail grocers during recent years.

Humorous Address By Mayor.

Mayor Fisher, humorous as usual, made an effective speech and paid a tribute to Hon. Mackenzie King, whom he stated had shown himself to be not only a statesman but a politician. Someone had said he was illustrious, etc. He was not only that but heroic, for he had tackled the high cost of living problem and had got away with it. He stated that the cost of government was not what it was five years ago, with labor demanding higher wages, and the cost of material always going up, and said that while he had been in the habit of boosting Ottawa as having the lowest tax rate of any city, he feared he would not be able to do so any more.

Better Spirit Now.

"In view of present circumstances," said the mayor, "it looks to me as though we would have to boost the tax rate and retire from civic life." (Laughter). He stated he had been struck with one thing, which he thought was a sign of a better future for the city, and that was the readiness which had been displayed by the bigger men of the Capital to get behind progressive measures. There had formerly been a disposition to carp and criticize, but now everyone seemed to be ready to help nature, which had equipped Ottawa with great natural resources, to be what it should be, a worthy Capital of the great Dominion.

Interesting Facts.

Ald. J. F. Taylor, representing the manufacturers, supplied facts and figures in connection with the E. B. Eddy industry, by means of which he showed the reason why the prices of the products of the big Chaudiere concern had increased to such an extent since the war. He issued a warning that in the near future the paper makers were going to demand increased wages, which would mean that, if they were granted, machine tenders would be getting from $1.15 to $1.30 per hour. Would this help to lower prices? He paid a tribute to the province of Quebec, which he stated had barred the I.W.W. and the O. B.U. and where labor conditions had been better than in any other part of the Dominion. He concluded with an eulogy of the Pure Food Show, which he stated was a credit to the city and an asset to the Capital's annual Fair.

Spoke for Wholesalers.

Mr. H. W. Chamberlain, for the Wholesale Grocers, expressed thanks to the speaker of the evening for the excellence of his address which he stated had been a splendid justification of the retail and wholesale merchants, and an offset to the cry which had been raised from time to time, "cut off the head of the jobber and do it immediately." He referred humorously to some of the trials and tribulations which beset the wholesalers and said that the time had arrived when the manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers should stand on common ground, and should evince a more get-together spirit. He stated that the investment in the capital of the wholesale grocers represented over $10,000,000, and said that with regard to the sugar question, his confreres had endeavored always to provide an equitable distribution of this commodity, but that it was largely a matter for the consumers, whom he believed were often well stocked, and endeavored to become more so.

More Production Needed.

Mr. A. E. Prevost of Prevost and Allard, urged more production, less thought of play, and more work, while he favored shorter working conditions for labor in a certain sense, everyone should be prepared to work long hours in the face of an emergency. He felt that if every man and woman adopted this view now, Canada would not face a wave of depression, but would enter on an era of prosperity never known before. More production was needed, this could not be accomplished without more work.

Mr. A. W. Huband responded to the toast of the "Drummers" and Mr. W. Macdonald and Lt.-Col. R. F. Parkinson to that of The Press.

Made Presentations.

Mr. Henry Watters, in a few choice words, in which he paid tribute to what they had accomplished for the Retail Grocers' Association, during their term of office; presented to Messrs. T. W. Collins, Alex. Phillips and T. Bowman, past presidents of the association, handsome gold wrist watches, the gift of the members of the association. The recipients responded in a fitting manner.

Mr. Nap Hurteau, secretary of the association, moved the vote of thanks to the speakers of the evening, and the gathering was brought to a close by Hon. MacKenzie King, who while expressing his appreciation of the hearty manner in which he had been received, eulogized Mr. B. G. Crabtree, president of the association, and chairman of the banquet, for the most excellent manner in which he had presided.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Opposition, was received with hearty applause. His theme was the "High Cost of Living." Mr. King said, in part:—

"The largest and most important economic issue of our times is the high cost of living. There is not a class nor an individual in the community not affected by it. It is of special interest to members of this association, because retail grocers, more than members of any other branch of the retail trade, come in touch with the entire community in respect to the most essential of those commodities which we speak of as the 'necessaries of life.'

Groceries a Barometer.

"In the olden days, the necessaries of life were purchased more or less direct from the producers at local markets, or, if of a kind obtainable only through international trade, were procured at the great fairs held at intervals in different cities and towns, to which merchant traders came long distances to sell, and others equally long distances to buy.

"Today it is to the doors of the retail grocers in our modern communities come the city and town dwellers, one large army of consumers, seeking some of the necessaries of life. The articles in demand are in large part among the most perishable produced, as well as among the most necessary for the sustenance of life.

"Taking the grocery business as it is carried on today bread and meat, butter and eggs, are to be included, as well as fruits and vegetables, sugars and cereals. These commodities men, women and children must have day by day; otherwise they will lack sufficient nourishment and ultimately starve. The commodities themselves must be disposed of without delay; otherwise they too deteriorate or perish.

Required by All.

"The articles in which the trade deals are required not by the few, nor by the many, but by all. In these respects they fall into the same category as clothing, boots, and shoes, fuel and houses; but they differ from most of the other necessaries in that they are just as needful at one season of the year as another, and do not lend themselves to continuous use or to a series of uses to anything like the same degree.

"These circumstances give the retail grocery trade a significant position in relation to the problem of the high cost of living.

"It is at the shops of the retail grocers that consumers make their acquaintance in a very real way with the prices of food. Food price lists become a barometer of the cost of living.

Grocers on Firing Line.

"One further consequence," said Mr. King, "of the position in which the trade is placed, is that the members, the grocers themselves, are placed in a quite exceptional, and I must say, a somewhat unenviable position. As regards advancing prices, they stand, so to speak, on the firing line. It is across their counters that the first actual contact takes place between the vast army of consumers seeking to purchase food, and the smaller, but nevertheless powerful army of producers with food to sell.

"The average consumer sees only the man directly in front of him, and the price he is demanding. He sees nothing, and very often knows nothing, of the forces which are pressing from behind, and which not infrequently leave to the retail grocer, in the matter of the price he is demanding, no avenue of escape or retreat. The consequence of all this is that the retail grocery trade is put very often in a wholly false position in the eyes of the public.

"Its members are looked upon, by those who do not understand the situation, as peculiarly selfish, as persons seeking to profit in virtue of the necessities of others. Were the truth actually known, it could readily be shown that high prices, where they are the result of either a limited production or an inflated currency an unwise tariff, or other like cause, are the despair, rather than the joy, of members of the trade, and made for lesser rather than greater returns on the total volume of transactions.

As to Other Trades.

"What is true in this respect, in a very noticeable way, of the retail grocery trade, is true of the retail trade in general. It is also true of the wholesale trade in most lines of business that have to do with providing the public with the commodities which supply its daily needs.

"Assuming that artificial restrictions upon trade in the nature of secret trade agreements and combines are not operative, it is a fact, well known to all engaged in trading, that the total volume of business is the all-important factor in determining at what price it is possible to sell goods at a legitimate profit, and that a lower price will, speaking generally, yield a larger total return, where the volume of trade is large, than a high price will yield in a limited turnover.

"High prices of themselves do not make for an increase in the volume of trade. They make, as a matter of fact, in the opposite direction. Trading, as an art, consists in finding the price, consonant with a legitimate profit, which will attack most strongly; or in other words, which will permit of the largest number of sales.

"Once this truth is grasped, the consumer and the merchant will recognize in each other, not individuals who should stand opposed, in the great economic issue which the problem of the high cost of living has forced to the fore, but persons whose interests are alike prejudiced by a common cause which it is to their mutual benefit to discover and to have remedied if that be possible at all.

The Important Consideration.

"I might go a step further and say that what is true as regards the value of transactions in trading as applicable to the retail and wholesale trades is also also true as respects trade, commerce and finance generally. It is true of the business of the many agencies of transportation and communication, the railways, the merchant marine, the express companies, of the telegraphs, and telephones, and the newspaper press. It is true of the business of banks and the stock exchange—it is the volume of business that counts.

"It will thus be seen that as respects the high cost of living, any light that can be thrown upon the problem in relation to the retail grocery trade will penetrate far beyond; it should disclose in essential outline much that is fundamental from a national point of view, and that affects the country's business in all its many and various branches.

The Storm Centre.

"The fact that in the retail grocery trade the articles that are dealt in are, as already mentioned, among the most essential of the necessaries of life, and at the same time, in large part, the most perishable of commodities, makes it inevitable that things should focus up to a point in this particular trade, and that when a window is smashed in hunger riots, it is more likely to be that of a retail grocer than of a hardware merchant, or of a bookseller and stationer.

"The retail grocery trade is the storm centre, so to speak, of forces being brought into conflict through the operation of far-reaching underlying economic laws. What is to be seen through the windows of your trade is the battle at its highest pitch. To those immediately concerned, little is visible or understood of the conditions and forces which, operating many miles away and emerging from out the distant past, account for the struggle that is going on today.

Causes of High Cost.

"I should like this evening to look with you through the window of the retail grocery trade, out over the heads of the immediate participants in this great economic struggle, and beyond to the wide world which is seeking recovery from the ravages and desolation of war; and with the aid of the imagination discern, if possible, the causes of the intensity of the issue at the moment, and wherein a change of conditions is to be sought if we are to find a solution of the problem of the high cost of living in a manner that will be helpful alike to consumers generally and to those engaged in commerce and trade in its many forms.

The Losses of War.

"The first thing one observes in any sweep of vision is the enormous loss and waste which was has occasioned. The loss a double loss, for alongside of the actual loss occasioned by war must be reckoned the normal production, wholy different in character, which would otherwise have gone on, steadily replenishing the world's store of supplies.

"What is indefinitely more serious in its effect upon the cost of living throughout the world, than any loss of material wealth, is the loss of the millions of human lives sacrificed outright in war, and the other millions that through disease, bodily injury, or other impairment, have lost their industrial efficiency in greater or less degree.

"Then, there is the destruction of capital in industry which the war has occasioned, capital which will have to be replaced before many of the normal producing and distributing operations can be re-commenced.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4193

"Then, there is the vast public debt and the many new obligations which war occasioned to the several countries and the payment of which in the form of interest and pensions must be met as a first charge upon the wealth of the country. Contrive as its administrators may, there is something here which will impose a burden on all classes of industry which will be reflected in a higher level of prices for years to come, unless some policy is adopted in the interests of consumers which will help to offset these adverse circumstances.

As to Exchange.

"Akin to this increase in public debt is what is termed 'Inflation of the currency.' Prices are the resultant of two factors considered in relation to each other: commodities on the one hand and currency on the other. The quantity of the precious metals remaining the same, an increase in the quantity of commodities means a decrease in prices; a decrease in the quantity of commodities, an increase in prices.

"If, in addition to gold, which is the basis of currency, the government of a country issues paper money redeemable in gold, in quantities which raise a doubt in the minds of any appreciable number of people as to the ability of the government to redeem its paper in gold at the face value, then currency comes to have a less value than before; in other words, it becomes 'inflated,' and prices, being the resultant of the relation of commodities to currency, increase as the value of the currency falls.

There are many who believe that this explains in considerable measure the fall in value of the English sterling, which is the same thing as a rise in prices with regard to those articles which a pound sterling will buy. This is a matter which affects each country in relation to its own currency. In such as it has a direct bearing on international exchanges, and through this medium on the volume of international trade, it must be noticed in any survey of causes affecting prices throughout the world today. It is a factor that needs also to be reckoned with.

The Cumulative Effect.

"Remembering, however, all these factors, let us realize at once that it will be a considerable time, no matter how rapid the recovery of the nations may be, before we may expect a return to the days when commodities were plentiful, and as a consequence obtainable at a moderate cost.

"Such is the view as one gets it at wide range of world conditions, which help to account for the prevailing high level of prices and consequent high cost of living. There is little in the conditions described that we can change. As respects these conditions, for the most part we can only wait for the improvement which comes with time.

"This makes it more imperative that we should look more closely at conditions as they are within the borders of our own country, and see if they are such as tend to lend emphasis to the high cost of living, or will admit of change to the benefit of all concerned.

Food Supply All-Important.

"This causes me for the moment to direct attention again to the significance of the class of commodities with which the retail grocery trade is concerned. They are, as already pointed out, in the nature of food, and, as such, the most necessary of the so-called necessaries of life. Two consequences of great importance flow from this.

"The first is, that if retail groceries are to be made available to consumers at prices which will serve to reduce the high cost of living, they must be available to retail dealers in plenty. The quantity of available supplies, more than anything else, will affect the barometer of the high cost of living. The food price lists will go up as the quantity of available food production lessens. They will come down as the quantity of available food increases.

"The other consequence is that only as the prices of foodstuffs come down from the present high level can we hope for an appreciable reduction in the cost of living as affects other commodities and services. The artisan cannot work for less than is necessary to supply himself and his family with food. High wages can mean nothing to him if every cent of increase in pay is offset or more than offset by an increase in the price of food.

"The salaried official is in the same position. To enable all branches of construction, manufacture and trade, to find a level where a fair wage to labor and a reasonable rate of return on invested capital may be paid, and prices and charges at the same time reduced, there must come some reduction in the cost of food which will be the outcome of a larger production or supply or of production at a lessened cost.

Kind and Quantity.

"Now note this point which is all important. Food in one way or another is always related to the land. Something has to be grown or raised before there can be any increase in the quantity of food."

"If this be true, is it not time to ask ourselves, how promises it, with our supplies of food? Canada is a great agricultural country. We have land available for cultivation and use, on a scale relative to our population, unequalled by any other country in the world. How have we proceeded?"

Urban vs. Rural.

"Let us, looking out again through the window of your trade, attempt to make something of a national survey of Canadian agricultural conditions as they affect the high cost of living. Once we do this, we are immediately confronted with one of the most serious tendencies to be imagined. Instead of rural development being what we would hope and expect it ought to be, that is to say, considerably ahead of, or even keeping pace with, the growth of population in urban centers, we find that at present, and for many years past, the tendency would appear to be entirely the other way.

"Unfortunately, the only national statistics we have are those of the Dominion census of 1911 for Ontario and the Eastern provinces, and a somewhat later census in addition for the prairie provinces; but it is safe to say that the tendencies they represent have been emphasized rather than diminished in the years that have since intervened.

"In the light of evidence of figures of urban vs. rural population, the endeavor to regulate prices in a manner which will benefit consumers generally by such expedients as Boards of Commerce, is the merest pretence, however, useful investigating bodies of the kind may prove in helping to check individual abuses of the kind mayulc'i.us"fr abuses here and there.

"It is, as one humorist has said, like shooting woodpeckers as the most effective means of conserving the forests, or like attempting to remedy some serious disease by examining its surface conditions. The trouble is not on the surface. It is an internal disorder of the gravest character, one which, if permitted to go on, will sooner or later bring the city-dwellers and the whole country into desperate plights.

"There is only one cure, and that is the one which ordinary common sense, in such obvious circumstances, dictates. If rural areas are being depleted, if agricultural development is not keeping pace with industrial development in other directions, it is for us, not less in the interests of the rural populations than of the urban, to find out the cause, and to shape our national policies as to foster a wise and wide agricultural development.

"Any policy such as the one described, which seeks a return of the people to the land, will take time to accomplish its aims. It is not going to be possible, under any conditions, to have people settle upon the land in appreciable numbers except over a period of time.

Immediate Action Needed.

"Since an increase in the supply of food is the one obvious necessity, it is scarcely less obvious that anything artificial at present restricting the food supply should be immediately removed.

"This brings us inevitably to a consideration of the tariff. Were I to pursue this theme further, I should of course get into the realm of political controversy, and this is not the time nor the place to provoke a discussion.

"At the same time, I would feel I had not fully stated the case were I to omit to express my own conviction that it is possible so to reform the tariff as not only to diminish the high cost of living in a manner which would immediately benefit consumers, but also to reduce the cost of the instruments of production generally, and so help agriculture and all the other industries based upon the natural resources of Canada. As these basic industries thrive, all our other industries will thrive, all our interests, whether of agriculture, manufactures, commerce, or transportation.

"Any revision of the tariff which failed to keep all these interests steadily in view would not be in the national interest. It is obvious, however, that much can be done through tariff revision by way of reducing the high cost of living, which will prove to the benefit of one and all; and foremost in this connection is any well-considered step which will help to increase the supply of food to dwellers in town and country alike."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4194

26 Feb. 1920 House of Commons

SPEECH ON THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

SPEECH

On the opening of

THE 4TH SESSION OF 13TH PARLIAMENT

February 26th, 1920

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I have the privilege, on behalf of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition, of seconding the motion which has just been moved by the right hon. the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster).

The cable of greeting which has been read by you, Mr. Speaker, from His Majesty reminds us not only of the sovereignty which we share in common with all parts of the British Empire, but of the constant concern of members of the Royal Family for the well-being and prosperity of this Dominion, and of the many intimate associations of its Royal members with these Halls of Parliament.

My hon. friend has spoken so feelingly and effectively of the attachment between His Majesty the King and the people of this Dominion that I shall refrain from attempting to add to what he has so elequently said in this connection, beyond mentioning that hon. members on this side of the House share in equal measure the sentiments of loyalty and devotion to the person and office of His Majesty.

If more were needed to reveal the heart of the Canadian people, and, for that matter, the heart of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Royal Family, it would be found in the expression of mutual affection everywhere evoked during the recent visit of His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, and the memory of that vist at this time.

Sir, may I join my right hon. friend in giving expression to other sentiments which we experience in common on this historic occasion? It is not more a source of regret to supporters of the Government than it is to hon. members of the Opposition, that the right hon. the Prime Minister, (Sir Robert Borden) is prevented, because of the impaired condition of his health, from being present at and participating in these opening ceremonies, certain, as they are, to live in the memories of all who are privileged to witness them. It is gratifying to us, as it will be to the people of Canada, to know that the change of scene and thought, and most of all, the freedom, for a time, from vast responsibility, which the Prime Minister is at present enjoying, have not been without their beneficient effects; and that restoration of health, which we all hope may be speedy and complete, appears now to await him. Still, we regret his absence, and we miss his presence.

There is another presence which will also be missed by this House and by the country on this memorable

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

occasion. I am sure every hon. member will deeply regret that the Right Honourable Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who for fifteen years preceded the Prime Minister in that high and important office, and who for forty-four years was an honoured and greatly beloved member of this House, was not spared to witness the restoration of these Halls of Parliament in which his long life was given with such fidelity to his country's service. Especially on occasions of ceremony, such as this, do we miss his distinguished appearance, his chivalrous and courteous manner, and, most of all, his charm of utterance and ability to portray the significance of transpiring events toward which many of us stand as mute spectators.

But, Sir, whilst we miss these leaders of our political parties through the recent past - the one taken from us and the other spared to us - we are all glad, I am sure, that, circumstances being what they are, the honour of being the first to welcome the Commons to their new home, and to speak the word which gives its appropriate setting to this occasion, should have fallen to one who is not only so eminently gifted in the art of expression, but who is also the oldest member of the King's Privy Council for Canada. May I extend to my right hon. friend the congratulations of hon. members of this side of the House,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in which I know hon. members on his own side will very cordially join, that, despite the many vicissitudes of a long and strenuous public career, he has been spared to attain this distinction, and to enjoy it in the capacity in which he meets Parliament to-day.

With all that my right hon. friend has so elequently and appropriately said, we of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition are in full accord. Did time permit and were it fitting so to do, one might dwell at great length upon the thoughts which this occasion inspires and which the dignified and noble proportions of this imposing edifice cause to be uppermost in one's mind. Great as the temptation is to speak of much that is suggested here, with the permission of the House I shall content myself with but an added reflection or two, upon the notes that are sounded as one contemplates the impressive loveliness and vast architectural beauty of these Halls of Parliament in their finished state.

It is not always easy to interpret the mind of genius; but genius lies in the ability to interpret to others the mystery of the greatness that lies everywhere about them. This, in a word, through the medium of these buildings, is what the Chief Architect, Mr. John Pearson, and Mr. J. O. Marchand, his associate, and others with them have succeeded in doing, with such admirable skill

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in which I know hon. members on his own side will very cordially join, that, despite the many vicissitudes of a long and strenuous public career, he has been spared to attain this distinction, and to enjoy it in the capacity in which he meets Parliament to-day.

With all that my right hon. friend has so elequently and appropriately said, we of His Majesty's Loyal Opposition are in full accord. Did time permit and were it fitting so to do, one might dwell at great length upon the thoughts which this occasion inspires and which the dignified and noble proportions of this imposing edifice cause to be uppermost in one's mind. Great as the temptation is to speak of much that is suggested here, with the permission of the House I shall content myself with but an added reflection or two, upon the notes that are sounded as one contemplates the impressive loveliness and vast architectural beauty of these Halls of Parliament in their finished state.

It is not always easy to interpret the mind of genius; but genius lies in the ability to interpret to others the mystery of the greatness that lies everywhere about them. This, in a word, through the medium of these buildings, is what the Chief Architect, Mr. John Pearson, and Mr. J. O. Marchand, his associate, and others with them have succeeded in doing, with such admirable skill

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and such perfect taste, as respects our vast Dominion. The Committee of both Houses in charge of the work of reconstruction, the departmental officers and officials of Parliament, and all who have assisted in thought or execution of design, are to be congratulated upon what we behold to-day. They are not less to be commended for permitting the architects great freedom in the working out of their ideas. If it is appropriate, as I believe it is, to single out the chief architect for special mention on this occasion, I would remind the House of the tablet which appears in St. Paul's in honour of Sir Christopher Wren, the architect of that great Cathedral: "Lector, si monumentum requiris, circumspice" - "Reader, if it is a monument you seek, look around you." If it be praise of Mr. Pearson and his associate that is demanded, let it be uttered by the visible embodiment of their conceptions.

The first note sounded through a contemplation of these buildings in their unfinished state is that of our Canadian nationality. First and foremost, comes the thought that this is a national edifice, that it symbolizes Canada. More and more, as the years go by, we shall come to feel towards these buildings as the Englishman feels towards the Houses of Parliament at Westminster. How strange that they too should have been destroyed by fire some eighty years ago! These Halls of Parliament, like those yonder,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

represent our nation's story; they are the centre of our national life. With consummate skill, expression is everywhere given to this conception.

The stone of which the walls of the interior are constructed bears upon its surface the marks of the sea, though it comes all the way from the Middle West. It is Canadian stone. Like the Laurentians which we see as we look towards the setting sun, it reminds us that, recent as our country's written history may be, its material foundations belong to the oldest known geological formations to be found anywhere on the surface of the globe.

Francis Parkman has told, in one of his great works descriptive of Canada's past, of how, while New England was still a wilderness, and the settlers of Virginia scarcely dared venture inland beyond the sound of a cannon shot, Champlain, in the near vicinity of the Rideau and the Chaudiere, where these very buildings stand, was planting on shores and islands the emblems of his faith. The daring exploits of these early intrepid explorers and Christian missionaries, that form the romantic and heroic background of our early history, are depicted here and there in sculpture and painting throughout these Halls, reminding us of the great race that first brought the arts of civilization to this part of the North American continent.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In the main entrance, the central column, commemorative of Confederation, washed at its base by a mythical sea, stands symbolical of the British Isles, whence sprang our political insitutions. It serves to remind us, as well, of what a noted historian has referred to as "The expansion of England", and the other races that have combined to make our Canadian nationality what it is. When completed, the fan-shaped projections of this central column will unite with like expansions from the columns that take their rise from the outer edges of this central court, thereby forming a series of arches symbolical of the several provinces of the Dominion. In this splendid way will be commemorated our Confederation, the unity of the British peoples, and what the Parliament of Canada and the Legislatures of the several provinces owe to the mother of Parliaments in the old land.

The tower which is to be the crowning feature of this structure will be a national memorial to Canada's sons who gave their lives for the world's freedom in the recent war. All Canada will rejoice at this recognition of our heroic dead, the chivalry of our young land. Beneath the stone at its base, laid by His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, in September last, will be found the names of the workmen who have carved the stone, and wrought the iron finishings which are part of this structure.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In the tower itself, I believe it is contemplated to record the name of every man and woman who served with the military and naval forces of Canada during the War. What finer symbolism could there be of the forces that combined to win the War:- the armies in the field, the navy and the merchant marine upon the sea, and the workmen in essential industry wherever found?

In this Chamber and in the Senate, as also in the Reading Room and the Railway Committee Room, the design and artistic detail will be such that, not only will great dignity and impressiveness be lent to the surroundings, but each room will speak of its own purpose.

The Hall of Fame which connects the central court with the Library will be our Canadian pantheon, the prophecy of a Canadian Westminster or St. Paul's of the Canada that is yet to be.

In this unique and inspiring manner, those of us who are privileged to assemble here, will be reminded daily of our country's vastness in extent and resources, its variety and picturesqueness in natural scenery, and ever-changing customs, its strength and virility in all that relates to the development of its industries, its progress in art and letters, as well as in material wealth, and of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the true greatness of the Canadian people in character and heroic achievement.

A second note sounded in this wonderful environment is that of harmony - harmony of color and design, harmony of aim and purpose, harmony of the several parts that unite to comprise the whole. Surely here is something that will not be without its influence upon the amenities of our parliamentary life, and its bearing upon the great problems that confront our nation. We have too often mistaken the significance of our differences of origin, of temperament, of interest, forgetting that variety may lend a richness to life which uniformity tends wholly to destroy. What is needed in the upbuilding of our nation is not the obliterating of differences, but the reconciling of them. We should seek to make this noble structure a temple of reconciliation in all that pertains to our national life. To what loftier purpose could we dedicate the new privilege that is ours to-day?

There is another note that is sounded, and which at the moment seems to ring out beyond all the rest. It is the spirit of our people. To some it has seemed a misfortune that we should have entered these buildings before they had reached completion. They, surely, have never heard of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"the glory of the imperfect". What we witnessed in the destruction of these buildings was a symbol of the desecration and the desolation of recent years. What we are witnessing to-day is the spirit of the people rising out of the ashes and ruins of the world, and building anew a civilization of a higher and saner order than any the world has hitherto known. Who would separate himself from this work of reconstruction, standing aside lest his garments may be stained? Why, Sir, we have here a foretaste of the industrial commonwealth that is to be, where, in the affairs of State, the workers in industry are the builders in common with the framers of a nation's laws.

And this note brings out another; it is the greatness that is yet to be. It was on the 56th anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the old Parliament Buildings by King Edward VII, at that time the young Prince of Wales, that his brother, His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, officiated at the relaying of the same stone as the new foundation of these buildings as restored. Speaking of that earlier occasion, His Royal Highness remarked that, looking at that stone, and all that it represented of the changes that had taken place when it was first laid, we recognized how little those who has assisted at the ceremony of those days could foresee the great progress and advancement that

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

has been made by this Dominion. If that remark was true when we were still in the midst of war, how much more true it is to-day when Victory has been won and Peace restored. When Edward Prince of Wales visited the Capital of Canada that was to be, he and his party made their journey to Ottawa in canoes, they were escorted by Indians and couriers des bois, they landed at a wharf on the banks of the Ottawa, and climed its slopes. To-day, our transportation terminals rival our legislative halls. What will Canada be in another fifty-six years; who will dare to say? Great as was the faith of the Fathers of Confederation in the future they foresaw their anticipations have been eclipsed even within the lives of some who have been spared until our day.

Sir, this nation's greatness can be limited only by its aspirations. We have been given by Providence a firm and enduring foundation. All that we wish for in material environment is symbolized in what we see to-day. The form, the semblance of loveliness, the outer strength and beauty, are all here. It remains only to cherish and ennoble the nation's ideals and to seek their realization in the justice of our laws.

Words of my own fail to express what I wish for my country in this connection. But the words of another come to me as I speak, and I apply them to the soul of our nation in the spirit of the resurrected form and beauty we

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

behold to-day. It is a note clearer, purer, more ethereal, than all the rest.
Through the deep caves of thought I hear the voice that sings:
"Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
As the swift seasons roll!
Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, Volume D 8
Speeches (b) Chronological Files, 1899-1921
26. March-June, 1920

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

1 March 1920

D 4207

House of Commons

SPEECH ON THE ADDRESS IN REPLY ....

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

On Speech from the Throne.
March 1, 1920.

D 4208

Restoration of Parliamentary Government

Appropriateness of opening paragraph of Address, and of speeches.

Congratulations on speeches.

Impression of speeches -
made most of occasion and opportunity.
inadequacy due to meagreness of Government's programme.
recognizing themselves as props under a crumbling edifice.

Impression of Speech from Throne -

His Excellency's advisers more concerned with external affairs than immediate needs of Dominion.

Ex. features of address -
Treaty with Bulgaria vs. G.T.R.

Another feature of Government's position reflected in Address.

Absence of any policy on social, economic, or political problems demanding solution.

Advisers absorbed in past, or ambitious for future.

Very little of Canada by comparison -
True status of Canada - self-governing Dominion concerned with her own affairs.-

Cost of Living/- more interested in food than drugs.

Amendments to Tariff -
Relief of consumers and producers.

Restoration of essential features of representative and responsible government.

Get out of confusion, uncertainty, and dislocation - needful to begin work of reconstruction in earnest.

Halls of Parliament shew ability and determination to reconstruct material environment.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

RECONSTRUCTION:

Reconstruction of Halls of Parliament -

Determination to reconstruct material environment
of our national life.

Destruction of human life deplored.

Destruction of institutions - religious, political, self.

Restore faith in overruling providence.
" " " our political institutions.
" " " ourselves.

-- the real work of healing and reconstruction.

REAL POINT -

Not restoration of our Parliament Buildings;
But " " " parliamentary government.

British parliamentary institutions, real inheritance.

Laurier's reverence for ancient origins
spirit of freedom

The spirit of institutions, the vital thing
Citadel of freedom vs. stronghold of arbitrary power
abode of indecision

Tendency of Government away -
Relief to producers and consumers in economic field.
Return to representative & responsible govt. in political.

Shew wherein -

Parliament and Government ceased to be representative of will of the people.

Demand for a new Parliament and a new Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT

I. House of Commons should be a representative assembly.

Implies a fair franchise -
a policy known and defined.

Neither condition fulfilled.

A - THE FRANCHISE

Examination of methods by which representation effected:

Deemed expedient in time of war.
Violation of letter and spirit of constitution.

The War-Time Elections Act:

Passed during period of extension.
Conditions governing - unanimous agreement - deception -
Words expressive of understanding: closure.
Laurier - A
Maclean - B
To "blot", Administration owes return to power,
as beneficiaries of arbitrary and unscrupulous enactment.

Any wonder administration lost confidence?

The Military Voters Act:

What say of system of manipulation of votes.
approved in principle and practice.
defiance of constitution.
piece of election machinery - not for will
of people - but power.

Effect of these measures:

1. In House - ceased to be representative.
2. In Country - whole system of parliamentary govt.in question.
ceased to be People's Forum.

Announcement in address re Franchise Act:

Removal uncertainty none too soon.
Ministry uncertain - "Star" interview - C
Defer criticism; first question - Why any departure old Act?
Opposition will expedite if fair - otherwise unrelenting.
Particularly objectionable - attempt to defeat federal spirit
of constitution.

B - APPLICATION OF FRANCHISE

Its use in effecting representation of constituencies.
13 by-elections.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4211

Here again indifference of Government to Party Referendum

D 3 1/2

BY-ELECTIONS

Vacancies since December, 1917 - 13

Pretext: War - till Armistice, Nov. 11, 1918.

Pretext: By-Election Act - assented to July 7, 1919 - fall (3rd) session known. began Sept. 1

Date of elections so arranged:

	Vacated	By-election	Time Vacant	Represented in House
LANARK -	Feb. 27,1918	May 9,1918	71 days
GLENGARRY - STORMONT -	Apr. 13,1918	Oct.27,1919	562 "	2 or 3 days
NO. ONTARIO -	May 25,1918	Dec. 9,1919	563 "	Not at all
ASSINIBOIA -	Sept.23,1918	Oct.27,1919	399 "	Not at all
QUEBEC EAST -	Feb. 17,1919	Oct.27,1919	242 "	" " "
PRINCE,P.E.I.	Apr. 6,1919	Oct.20,1919	177 "	A fortnight
KINGSTON -	July 7,1919	Oct.20,1919	105 "	A fortnight
VICTORIA CITY	Aug. 2,1919	Oct.27,1919	86 "
VICTORIA-CARLETON -	Aug. 2,1919	Oct.27,1919	86 "	1 or 2 days

3 Sessions unrepresented

2 Sessions -

Greater part of one session

New Vacancies:

all of one session

x TEMISKAMING - September 22, 1919 April 2.
Death of Hon. Frank Cochrane.

x KAMOURASKA, - October 14, 1919
Resignation of hon. member for Quebec East.
Laurier - 41 yrs.

ST.JAMES EAST- February 9, 1920
Death of sitting member, L. A. Lapointe.

EAST ELGIN - February 14, 1920
Death of sitting member, David Marshall.

Tribute of respect to their memory.

---

x - Should be represented in this Parliament at this time, but for neglect or deliberate intent of Government. Government waited till moment of opening to authorize issuance of writs - Elections to be held on in April. Effect, to deny people of these constituencies the right of representation

In considering essential conditions of parliamentary government -
By-elections: (1) complete & hold intact representation in Parliament.
(2) inform public on questions, and keep ministry in touch with popular sentiment.
An important element in representative government - cf. English govt.

II 1176 - Deloraine assembly

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4212

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

II. House of Commons should be a deliberative assembly.

Ministry, through H.of C., in touch with will of the people.
Obvious essentials ignored by Government.

(1) Speech from Throne:

Should acquaint Parliament and country with important business.
G. T. R. Bill last session.
Amendments to B.N.A. Act - E

Inform House of all measures.

A word about Supply - essential to control.
need deliberation re appropriations.

(2) Settlements on questions of national importance should be only after consultation with House of Commons.

An end to government by Order-in-Council -
Effect of war.
Secret diplomacy of Cabinet Council vs. public debates -
questionings of ministry.
Ministers in rooms: e.g., G.T.R. agreement
excuse of delay; time for approval.

(3) Ministry should be where it can be questioned:

1. Prime Minister should be in House of Commons,
not like President of the United States.
Demoralizing effect of War - out of House
out of country
Re Health of Prime Minister - sympathy - doubtful kindness
What are consequences?
Rumour resignation tendered.
" Acting Leader.

2. Equally unfortunate re Ministers in retention of portfolios.
Chinese puzzle vs. considered acts.
Shifting - December, 1896 F
Resembles 1896. Edifice crumbling, instead of blown up.

3. Withdrawal of Ministers to Senate - P.O. - S.C.R. - Labor

4. Transference of work of Government to irresponsible commissions, boards, and delegates:
Extra-governmental service.
Conferences - indirect commitments to policies.
Drift away from parliamentary control to extra-parliamentary intrigue.

[illegible] Each Cabinet must be responsible

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

III. Federal Cabinet should be representative.

Canada - geographical areas, scattered provinces ;
right of provinces to representation - spirit of constitution federal.

Amazing situation:

No French-speaking minister from Province of Quebec.
P.M.G. not representative - even in Senate -
lives in Ontario.
Defeated in 1917, Laurier-Outremont - 1247
Champlain 6623
From Montreal to Atlantic, not a single cabinet minister -
none in N.S., N.B., P.E.I.
3 million people.
How longer talk of representative government?
Explanation:
Govt. and people lost confidence in each other.

IV. Root Principle, Collective Cabinet Responsibility - based on known and definite policy - representative & responsible government.

Without a leader - without a policy.
As many opinions as ministers.
Explanation:
A war ministry only.
Course Prime Minister should have taken:
dissolution for post-war reconstruction policy.
Ministry sought not to find, but to avoid policy,
only to keep factions together for sake of office.

Efforts of ministry to hold together:

1. Spring session, 1919 - promised fall session.
2. Situation in October last - to get through session. G
3. Situation in December - to hold on till Parliament met H
4. Situation to-day - to get through session. I
Prime Minister's political last will & testament.

Situation impossible - and intolerable.
People exist for Govt. - not Govt. for people.

Only remedy, one which constitution provides - will of people.
Place of beginning - reconstruction.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Speech Opening 8th Parl. — on address

Appropriateness of opening paragraph of Address, and of speeches.

Congratulations on speeches.

Impression of speeches -
made most of occasion and opportunity.
inadequacy due to meagreness of Government's programme.
recognizing themselves as props under a crumbling edifice.

Impression of Speech from Throne -

His Excellency's advisers more concerned with external affairs than immediate needs of Dominion.

Ex. features of address -
Treaty with Bulgaria vs. C.T.R.

Another feature of Government's position reflected in Address.

Absence of any policy on any social, economic, or political problems demanding solution.

Advisers absorbed in past or ambitious for future.

Very little of Canada by comparison -
True status of Canada - self-governing Dominion concerned with her own affairs.

Cost of Living - more interested in food than drugs.

Amendments to Tariff -

Relief of consumers and producers.

Restoration of essential features of representative and responsible government.

Get out of confusion, uncertainty, and dislocation - needful to begin work of reconstruction in earnest.

Halls of Parliament shew ability and determination to reconstruct material environment.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

RECONSTRUCTION:

Reconstruction of Halls of Parliament -

Determination to reconstruct material environment of our national life.

Destruction of human life deplored.

Destruction of institutions - religious, political, self.

Restore faith in overruling providence.
" " " our political institutions.
" " " ourselves.

— the real work of healing and reconstruction.

REAL POINT -

Not restoration of our Parliament Buildings;
But " " " parliamentary government.

British parliamentary institutions, real inheritance.

Laurier's reverence for ancient origins
spirit of freedom

The spirit of institutions, the vital thing
Citadel of freedom vs. stronghold of arbitrary power
abode of indecision

Tendency of Government away -
Relief to producers and consumers in economic field.
Return to representative & responsible govt. in political.

Show wherein -

Parliament and Government ceased to be representative of will of the people.

Demand for a new Parliament and a new Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT

I. House of Commons should be a representative assembly.

Implies a fair franchise -
a policy known and defined.

Neither condition fulfilled.

A - THE FRANCHISE

Examination of methods by which representation effected:

Deemed expedient in time of war.
Violation of letter and spirit of constitution.

The War-Time Elections Act:

Passed during period of extension.
Conditions governing - unanimous agreement - deception -
Words expressive of understanding: closure.
Laurier - A
Maclean - B

To "blot". Administration owes return to power, as beneficiaries of arbitrary and unscrupulous enactment.

Any wonder administration lost confidence?

The Military Voters Act:

What say of system of manipulation of votes.
approved in principle and practice.
defiance of constitution.
piece of election machinery - not for will
of people - but power.

Effect of these measures:

1. In House - ceased to be representative.
2. In Country - whole system of parliamentary govt. in question.
ceased to be People's Forum.

Announcement in address re Franchise Act:

Removal uncertainty none too soon.
Ministry uncertain - "Star" interview - C
Defer criticism; first question - Why any departure old Act?
Opposition will expedite if fair - otherwise unrelenting.
Particularly objectionable - attempt to defeat federal spirit
of constitution.

B - APPLICATION OF FRANCHISE

Its use in effecting representation of constituencies.
13 by-elections.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

II. House of Commons should be a deliberative assembly.

Ministry, through H.of C., in touch with will of the people.
Obvious essentials ignored by Government.

(1) Speech from Throne:

Should acquaint Parliament and country with important business.
G. T. R. Bill last session.
Amendments to B.N.A. Act - E

Inform House of all measures.

A word about Supply - essential to control.
need deliberation re appropriations.

(2) Settlements on questions of national importance should be only after consultation with House of Commons.

An end to government by Order-in-Council -
Effect of war.
Secret diplomacy of Cabinet Council vs. public debates -
questionings of ministry.
Ministers in rooms: e.g., G.T.R. agreement
excuse of delay; time for approval.

(3) Ministry should be where it can be questioned:

Pri Prime Minister should be in House of Commons,
not like President of the United States.
Demoralizing effect of War - out of House
out of country
Re Health of Prime Minister - sympathy - doubtful kindness
What are consequences?
Rumour resignation tendered.
" Acting Leader.

2. Equally unfortunate re Ministers in retention of portfolios.
Chinese puzzle vs. considered acts.
Shifting - ~~December~~/1896/ F
Resembles 1896. Edifice crumbling, instead of blown up.

3. Withdrawal of Ministers to Senate - P.O. - S.C.R. - Labor

4. Transference of work of Government to irresponsible commissions, boards, and delegates:
Extra-governmental service.
Conferences - indirect commitments to policies.
Drift away from parliamentary control to extra-parliamentary intrigue.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

III. Federal Cabinet should be representative.

Canada - geographical areas, scattered provinces ;
right of provinces to representation - spirit of constitution federal.

Amazing situation:

No French-speaking minister from Province of Quebec.
P.M.G. not representative - even in Senate -
lives in Ontario.
Defeated in 1917, Laurier-Outremont - 1247
Champlain 6623
From Montreal to Atlantic, not a single cabinet minister -
none in N.S., N.B., P.E.I.
3 million people.
How longer talk of representative government?
Explanation:
Govt. and people lost confidence in each other.

IV. Root Principle, Cabinet Responsibility - based on known and definite policy - representative & responsible government.

Without a leader - without a policy.
As many opinions as members.
Explanation:
A war ministry only.
Course Prime Minister should have taken:
dissolution for post-war reconstruction policy.
Ministry sought not to find, but to avoid policy,
only to keep factions together for sake of office.

Efforts of ministry to hold together:

1. Spring session, 1919 - promised fall session.
2. Situation in October last - to get through session. G
3. Situation in December - to hold on till Parliament met H
4. Situation to-day - to get through session. I
Prime Minister's political last will & testament.

Situation impossible - and intolerable.
People exist for Govt. - not Govt. for people.

Only remedy, one which constitution provides - will of people
Place of beginning - reconstruction.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4219

Appropriateness of opening paragraph of Address, and of speeches.

Congratulations on speeches.

Impression of speeches -
made most of occasion and opportunity.
inadequacy due to meagreness of Government's programme.
recognizing themselves as props under a crumbling edifice.

Impression of Speech from Throne -

His Excellency's advisers more concerned with external affairs than immediate needs of Dominion.

Ex. features of address -
Treaty with Bulgaria vs. G.T.R.

Another feature of Government's position reflected in Address.

Absence of any policy on any social, economic, or political problems demanding solution.

Advisers absorbed in past or ambitious for future.

Very little of Canada by comparison -
True status of Canada - self-governing Dominion concerned with her own affairs.

Cost of Living - more interested in food than drugs.

Amendments to Tariff -

Relief of consumers and producers.

Restoration of essential features of representative and responsible government.

Get out of confusion, uncertainty, and dislocation - needful to begin work of reconstruction in earnest.

Halls of Parliament show ability and determination to reconstruct material environment.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

RECONSTRUCTION:

Reconstruction of Halls of Parliament -

Determination to reconstruct material environment
of our national life.

Destruction of human life deplored.

Destruction of institutions - religious, political, self.

Restore faith in overruling providence.
" " " our political institutions.
" " " ourselves.

— the real work of healing and reconstruction.

REAL POINT -

Not restoration of our Parliament Buildings;
But " " " parliamentary government.

British parliamentary institutions, real inheritance.

Laurier's reverence for ancient origins
spirit of freedom

The spirit of institutions, the vital thing
Citadel of freedom vs. stronghold of arbitrary power
abode of indecision

Tendency of Government away -
Relief to producers and consumers in economic field.
Return to representative & responsible govt. in political.

Shew wherein -

Parliament and Government ceased to be representative of will
of the people.

Demand for a new Parliament and a new Government.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT

I. House of Commons should be a representative assembly.

Implies a fair franchise -
a policy known and defined.

Neither condition fulfilled.

A - THE FRANCHISE

Examination of methods by which representation effected:

Deemed expedient in time of war.
Violation of letter and spirit of constitution.

The War-Time Elections Act:

Passed during period of extension.
Conditions governing - unanimous agreement - deception -
Words expressive of understanding: closure.
Laurier - A
Maclean - B

To "blot", Administration owes return to power,
as beneficiaries of arbitrary and unscrupulous enactment.

Any wonder administration lost confidence?

The Military Voters Act:

What say of system of manipulation of votes.
approved in principle and practice.
defiance of constitution.
piece of election machinery - not for will
of people - but power.

Effect of these measures:

1. In House - ceased to be representative.
2. In Country - whole system of parliamentary govt.in question.
ceased to be People's Forum.

Announcement in address re Franchise Act:

Removal uncertainty none too soon.
Ministry uncertain - "Star" interview - C
Defer criticism; first question - Why any departure old Act?
Opposition will expedite if fair - otherwise unrelenting.
Particularly objectionable - attempt to defeat federal spirit
of constitution.

B - APPLICATION OF FRANCHISE

Its use in effecting representation of constituencies.
13 by-elections.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

II. House of Commons should be a deliberative assembly.

Ministry, through H.of C., in touch with will of the people.
Obvious essentials ignored by Government.

(1) Speech from Throne:

Should acquaint Parliament and country with important business.
G. T. R. Bill last session.
Amendments to B.N.A. Act - E

Inform House of all measures.

A word about Supply - essential to control.
need deliberation re appropriations.

(2) Settlements on questions of national importance should be only after consultation with House of Commons.

An end to government by Order-in-Council -
Effect of war.
Secret diplomacy of Cabinet Council vs. public debates -
questionings of ministry.
Ministers in rooms: e.g., G.T.R. agreement
excuse of delay; time for approval.

(3) Ministry should be where it can be questioned:

1. Prime Minister should be in House of Commons,
not like President of the United States.
Demoralizing effect of War - out of House
out of country
Re Health of Prime Minister - sympathy - doubtful kindness
What are consequences?
Rumour resignation tendered.
" Acting Leader.

2. Equally unfortunate re Ministers in retention of portfolios.
Chinese puzzle vs. considered acts.
Shifting - [illegible] F
Resembles 1896. Edifice crumbling, instead of blown up.

3. Withdrawal of Ministers to Senate - P.C. - S.C.R. - Labor

4. Transference of work of Government to irresponsible commissions, boards, and delegates:
Extra-governmental service.
Conferences - indirect commitments to policies.
Drift away from parliamentary control to extra-parliamentary intrigue.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ESSENTIAL CONDITIONS OF PARLIAMENTARY GOVERNMENT (Cont'd.)

III. Federal Cabinet should be representative.

Canada - geographical areas, scattered provinces ;
right of provinces to representation - spirit of constitution federal.

Amazing situation:

No French-speaking minister from Province of Quebec.
P.M.G. not representative - even in Senate -
lives in Ontario.
Defeated in 1917, Laurier-Outremont - 1247
Champlain 6623
From Montreal to Atlantic, not a single cabinet minister -
none in N.S., N.B., P.E.I.
3 million people.
How longer talk of representative government?
Explanation:
Govt. and people lost confidence in each other.

IV. Root Principle, Cabinet Responsibility - based on known and definite policy - representative & responsible government.

Without a leader - without a policy.
As many opinions as members.
Explanation:
A war ministry only.
Course Prime Minister should have taken:
dissolution for post-war reconstruction policy.
Ministry sought not to find, but to avoid policy,
only to keep factions together for sake of office.

Efforts of ministry to hold together:

1. Spring session, 1919 - promised fall session.
2. Situation in October last - to get through session. G
3. Situation in December - to hold on till Parliament met H
4. Situation to-day - to get through session. I
Prime Minister's political last will & testament.

Situation impossible - and intolerable.
People exist for Govt. - not Govt. for people.

Only remedy, one which constitution provides - will of people
Place of beginning - reconstruction.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4224

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

SPEECH

OF

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, Esq.,

MEMBER FOR PRINCE, P.E.I.

ON

THE ADDRESS

IN REPLY TO GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

In the House of Commons, Ottawa, on Monday, March 1, 1920.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that the opening paragraph of the speech from the Throne, as well as the burden of the remarks of the hon. members who have just spoken, should have reference in large part to the assembling of this Parliament in its new home. It would be strange, indeed, if, under the spell of the noble and dignified proportions of this chamber, we were not all impressed with the spirit of the Canadian people in rising out of the difficulties of the past and impressed with the future greatness of our country, if we are but willing to put our hands to the task and make the future all that it lies within the possibilities of our people to make it.

It is no mere formality, Sir, to have the privilege at this time of congratulating the mover and the seconder of the Address on the excellence of their speeches. I am sure that all of us who have heard them believe they have made the most of the occasion and of the opportunity afforded to them. If there has been any limitation in the nature of their remarks, that has been due, one must say, to the meagreness of the legislative programme which the Government has presented in the words which it has put into the lips of His Excellency in the Speech from the Throne. Listening to the hon. gentlemen, I could not help remarking how each of them seemed to regard himself as a prop beneath a crumbling edifice. They made a reference or two to some features of the Speech from the Throne, but for the most part they took care to "get out from under" it altogether. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McGregor) went entirely into the past; he confined his remarks to giving the House very interesting and valuable statistics on matters of trade, on matters of manufacture, on assistance to the returned soldiers, on munition output, on trade with the United States and trade with the Mother country. He took care, as I have said, to confine his remarks almost

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

exclusively to the past and to give the House a mass of statistics for which I am sure we shall all be very grateful.

On the other hand, the hon. member for London (Mr. Cronyn), who moved the Address in such eloquent, witty and poetic language, went to the other extreme, confining his remarks for the most part to the future, in a constructive and helpful way telling the Government wherein he thought they had been remiss in excluding from the Address practically everything in the nature of constructive legislation. I am sure we on this side of the House will all congratulate my hon. friend that he has been the first to draw the attention of the Government to this omission which will be noticed throughout the country and though doubt was not so intended, the remarks of both hon. gentlemen on the Address are a reflection upon the Government in what they have put into the speech of His Excellency to present to this Parliament at this time.

If one examines the speech from the Throne, one cannot help being struck at the outset with the fact that His Excellency's advisers appear to be infinitely more concerned with external affairs than with the business of this country. Omitting the opening section to which I have just referred, let us take the other paragraphs in the speech from the Throne and see what they include. First, there is a reference to the League of Nations, to commissions and mandatories. Then there are references to the Treaty with Bulgaria and to other possible treaties with Hungary and Turkey. The next is a reference to a conference in Washington, and next a reference to the confusion and uncertainty arising out of conditions affecting the League of Nations. There is a passing reference to Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and then comes another reference to the European economic field. The next section deals with confusion and dislocation again, and then we come to the International Opium Convention, and finally we are reduced to two tiny concluding paragraphs which contain all in the way of constructive legislation which the Government has to offer to the country at this time.

I could not but be struck the other day, with the President of the Council (Mr. Rowell), being the first to present a document to this Parliament, and at his laying upon the table of the House a copy of the Treaty between the Allied and Associated Governments and Bulgaria. We are all interested in Bulgaria, but I could not help thinking that it would have been more in accord with the wishes of the Canadian people if the first document to be presented to this Parliament had been for the purpose of ratifying and approving the agreement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Government of this country, instead of one of ratification and approval of this particular treaty.

The Government thought well to give to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in England the right to approve an agreement of the terms of which the members of this House, with the exception of the ministry, have no knowledge even at this time. Sir, I submit that the people of Canada are concerned primarily with their own affairs and are entitled to have placed before their representatives in Parliament at the earliest possible moment documents of so vast importance as the one to which I have just referred.

But, Sir, there is a further limitation in the speech from the Throne which serves to reflect the mind of the Government in another particular. The speech discloses an entire absence of any policy on the part of the Administration in regard to the economic, social and political questions which are uppermost in this country at the present time. The hon. gentlemen who have just spoken on the Address drew the attention of the Government to the unrest in Canada, and spoke of "agitators" and so on. By so doing they helped to bring to the attention of the Government that it is high time we had in office in this country an Administration capable of propounding some policy which would help to bring that unrest to a speedy end.

Having referred to the first part of the speech from the Throne, I now come to the legislative programme which it outlines. What does it amount to? It says:

> The ratification of The International Opium Convention renders it necessary to obtain legislation to carry into effect its provisions relating to the sale of opium, cocaine and other deleterious drugs.

No doubt that is important, perhaps important enough to be included in a speech from the Throne, but I submit that the people of this country are much more concerned at this time with the question of food than with the question of drugs, and that it would have been much better if the ministry, in advising His Excellency what should be brought before this Parliament for discussion, had propounded some policy which would help to relieve the high cost of living, instead of skirting about that great issue and dragging in small affairs such as legislation for regulating the sale of drugs.

The reference to the Dominion franchise is the most important in the speech. As my hon. friend from London (Mr. Cronyn) has said, it will raise in this House the whole question of representative and responsible government. My hon. friend in that remark touched upon what I conceive to be the most important of all matters which we have to consider in Canada at this time. During the war we got far away, in procedure and parliamentary methods, from the ideas of representative and responsible government as they have been held in the past, and we shall not find a solution for the unrest of our time until we have in some very considerable degree restored those safeguards of liberty, freedom and popular rights which have been so much neglected by the present Administration.

Take the only other reference in the speech from the Throne to anything in the nature of constructive legislation:

> Other Bills will be presented for your consideration, including a Bill respecting Copyrights and Bills providing for the amendment of the Patent Act, of the Loan and Trust Companies Acts, the Indian Act, and the Exchequer Court Act.

That is the whole programme. While these Bills may be important enough, I submit that what is needed in the interests of this Dominion at the present time, more needed than any amendment to the Patent Act, is such an amendment of the tariff as will bring relief to producers and consumers. But the Government has not thought well to mention these questions which bear upon the needs of the country and are of vital importance. They have simply skirted around the vital questions and have dealt only with external matters or matters of petty concern, with which the attention of this House should not be taken up to any extent at this time.

The two refer nces to "confusion" and "dislocation" which the speech from the Throne contains suggest that what we must consider above everything else is how we can make our way out of this confusion and dislocation into something that will better represent the ordered system of affairs which we ought to have. In this Chamber to-day we have before us a visible embodiment of what can be done, when the minds of men are put to it, in the way of reconstruction. We have here something which symbolizes the resurrection to a finer life, out of the ruins and ashes of the past, which is possible in connection with our material environments. There is nothing in the way of material environment which we dare not hope to improve in this country.

Sir, unfortunately it is not only our material environments which have suffered during the war. There has been another loss, the greatest of all—the loss of human life, and the impairment of mind and body to many thousands of men who have suffered during this war. That is a loss which can never be made up. It is part of the infinite mystery. It belongs to the sacrifice which has been the price of freedom through all the ages. But the loss that we have suffered in material things and the losses we have suffered in human life do not make up the sum of destruction in this war. The war has also destroyed, as my hon. friend from London has said, much that is sacred and venerable in all our institutions, religious, political, and of every other nature. That indeed has been one of the most serious of all the effects of the war and to a very large extent accounts for the great unrest that exists in the world to-day. In faith, men "have faltered where they firmly stood" This is true alike in State and Church. Men's faith in government is shaken, and in religion, and even in themselves. What we speak of to-day as Bolshevism had its origin in a country where they have had least in the way of free religious and governmental institutions to cling to. Wherever such has been the case, there the world has suffered most. What is needed to-day to bring about a change in conditions is a restoration of the faith that has been weakened, faith in an over-ruling Providence, faith in our political institutions, faith on the part of men and women in themselves.

That brings me to the point which I should like to make in answer to the hon. gentlemen who have spoken so eloquently of the restoration of these halls of Parliament. It is not the restoration of the Parliament buildings that is needed so much as the restoration of our parliamentary system of government. Mr. Speaker, of all that we have inherited through our British connection there is no possession so highly to be prized as the British system of government. The British constitution has been the model for our own. All members of Parliament from the day of Confederation down to the present have spoken of the greatness of that constitution. Its ancient

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4227

origins is something that we reverence. We reverence even more the spirit of freedom which is conserved through that constitution. To the Fathers of Confederation and to this Parliament, it has been, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said on a memorable occasion, as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to lead this nation towards greater unity and nationhood.

But, Sir, the greatness of an institution, as of an individual, lies in its spirit; and an institution, no matter whether it be a material structure such as this or whether it be a constitution, which has lost the vital spirit that has lent it greatness, may become the very opposite of what it was intended to be. Instead of being a citadel of freedom it may become the home of autocracy or, what is perhaps worse, the abode of indecision and inaction in all things. We have suffered in this country, it is true, as a result of the war, but I regret to say, in part also, as a result of the inadequacy of the Administration to meet the needs of the country. That our political institutions, in common with all the other phases of our national life, should suffer through the action of war was inevitable. What is most unfortunate is that the loss is greater than it should have been, and this by reason of the failure of the administration to deal with the affairs of the country as they should have been dealt with.

I should like to point out wherein it seems to me this Parliament and the Government have ceased in large measure to be representative of the will of the people. That, after all, is the supreme, the fundamental fact which confronts us. If I do not deal with other matters that have been touched upon by the mover and seconder of the Address, it is because I feel that the restoration of our political life, and also in large measure of our social and economic life, is dependent on Parliament and the Government being in the truest sense representative of the will of the people. And it is because, throughout this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, people believe that the Government does not represent their will, that we hear the demand which we on this side of the House desire to voice for a new Parliament and a new Administration.

Mr. Speaker, let me draw the attention of the House to some of the essential conditions of parliamentary government, and show wherein during recent years we have wandered far from a compliance with these conditions. First of all, under any system of parliamentary government, the House of Commons, the elective chamber, should be a representative assembly. To say that an assembly is representative implies that its members have been returned under a fair franchise and on a policy which is known and defined and which has been placed before the people.

Now, Sir, will any one pretend that this Parliament to-day is representative in that sense? Let us go back to the franchise under which hon. members seated in this House to-day secured their return to Parliament. Let us examine the methods by which the representation of the people has been effected and ask ourselves the question whether that franchise was in accordance with the spirit of the constitution or was not in fact in direct violation of it. Take the War-time Elections Act—for it was under that Act that Parliament was elected. Consider the circumstances under which that measure was passed in this House.

Hon. gentlemen who were in the last Parliament will remember that Parliament had exhausted the period allotted to it by the constitution. The constitution of Canada lays it down that five years shall be the period of time for which a parliament shall sit, and the time of Parliament could not have been extended for a single day or a single hour beyond that period except by the consent of hon. members on this side of the House. Except by the unanimous resolution of both Houses of Parliament there would have been no amendment of the British North America Act extending the period of parliament for another year. If any hon. gentleman doubts that statement let him read the language of the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) himself, at the time the matter was under discussion. The Prime Minister took care to point out that it would be impossible—and that he would not suggest it—to have an extension of the period of parliament except by the unanimous agreement of both Houses. What were the conditions under which unanimous agreement was arrived at? What was the condition on which the Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was leading the Liberal party in this House, consented to an extension? It was that Parliament in meeting another year would avoid controversial issues during the progress of the war. That consent was given on the highest grounds of patriotism and on the unequivocal understanding that in no way was Parliament parting with the right of the people to control, but rather that Parliament might take a position which throughout the country it was felt at the time was obviously desirable, namely that there should be as little in the way of party strife as was possible during the period of the war. Let me read to the House the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in giving consent to the extension and ask hon. members whether, hearing his words, they believe that the spirit of the Constitution was violated in the action that was subsequently taken by the administration. The words to which I refer may be found in Hansard in 1916, February 8, page 634. The matter had been fully discussed between the Rt. Hon. the leader of the Opposition and the Rt. Hon. the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister had given repeated assurances that the Government had no intention to do anything but simply "carry on" for the next year, as was necessary in the circumstances. Sir Wilfrid, having in mind the interests of the people, whose servant he was, and whose servant every hon. member of this House at that time was, said:

D 4228

> I would observe, first of all, that it is not proposed here to alter the principle of the constitution. It is not proposed to override the control which the people have over parliament. It is simply proposed to suspend for the time being the operation of the constitution. If it were proposed to make away altogether with that principle which is embodied in the constitution, certainly I would oppose such an attempt with all my might. But no such thing is proposed. This measure simply proposes that the constitution shall be suspended for twelve months, at the expiration of which time it will resume its full force.

Mr. Speaker, mark these words and ask yourself the question: Was the spirit of the constitution lived up to or not?

> It is not proposed to override the control which the people have over parliament.

Sir, do you wonder that the leader of the Opposition of those days felt that he had been grossly deceived; felt that the House had been grossly deceived; felt that the people of the country had been grossly deceived, when, after an understanding of this nature, hon. gentlemen who occupied the treasury benches of that day undertook to change the whole franchise which was the means of entry of the people's representatives, at the people's will, into this House of Commons, and to place upon the statute books one of the most infernal pieces of legislation that have been enacted in this country? I have used a strong term but I do not think it a bit too strong. But I will not trust to my own language to express my conception of that legislation. Let me quote the language of one who until almost yesterday was a member of the present administration. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. A. K. Maclean) spoke during the debate upon that measure, and several other gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches to-day also recorded their views upon that occasion. I might quote the language of one and all to show what their impression of that legislation was, but I think the words of my hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean) meet the case so completely that further quotations are unnecessary. What were the hon. gentleman's words? They will be found on page 5596 of Hansard of 10th September, 1917:

> The Bill before the House proposes to disfranchise arbitrarily a portion of the people of the country. . . . This legislation is objectionable in principle, and I deny that there is anything in the world to justify its introduction or its enactment. . . . A proper regard for the future of this country and for our good name among the nations and peoples of the world compel one to oppose the measure. It is not founded upon any principle of a substantial character. . . . I maintain that history will adjudge the act contemplated by this Bill as a blot upon our National career. And, unfortunately, it comes at a time when we are writing glorious and imperishable pages of our history which will be the future epics of this young nation.

Mark these words, Mr. Speaker.

> A proper regard for the future of this country and for our good name among the nations and peoples of the world compel one to oppose the measure. History will adjudge the act contemplated by this Bill as a blot upon our National career.

And yet, Sir, it is to this "blot upon our National career" that the Administration owes its return to power, and it is as beneficiaries of this "blot upon our National career" that hon. gentlemen opposite continue to occupy the Treasury benches and to draw the emoluments and enjoy the dignities, privileges and power attaching thereto. Is it any wonder, Sir, that the people of Canada have lost confidence in this Administration? They never had any confidence. How could they, when the Administration was returned to power through a violation of the most sacred right which belongs to a free people—the right to a just and honest franchise?

But, Sir, if that legislation is to be spoken of as a blot upon our country, what is to be said of that other piece of legislation, the Military Voters' Act, whereby the ballots of soldiers across the seas were so manipulated as to aid in the return of hon. gentlemen opposite? What is to be said of a piece of legislation which, if not so designed—though it would even appear that such was the intention—was at least used as a mean

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

not of furthering the will of the people of Canada but of preventing their will being accorded expression. It has been openly stated in this House, and it will not be denied by hon. gentlemen opposite, that as a consequence of that legislation whole bundles of votes of soldiers overseas—votes by bundles—were taken and put into this riding, and into that riding, and into another riding, at the instance of some committee that was in the confidence of the Administration. That was not done at the will of the brave men who were fighting overseas; they did not know, many of them, where their votes were to be recorded.

Mr. ROBERT H. BUTTS (Cape Breton South and Richmond): Oh you!

Hon. Mr. KING: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I did not gather the purport of his observation. If the hon. gentleman desires to ask a question I shall be very glad to answer it.

Mr. BUTTS: Y-o-u.

Mr. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Kamouraska): Prohibition would be a good thing here.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: His case is a bad one. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is a little dry.

Hon. Mr. KING: The hon. member evidently feels that he is not in a position to make a statement that he would care to have the House listen to. If he wishes to resort to other methods of showing his disapproval of my statements I will not have the slightest objection. I would ask him, however, to show due regard for the dignity and decorum of Parliament.

An hon. MEMBER: Take your medicine.

Hon. Mr. KING: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that both the principle and the practice under the Act in question to which I have just referred have been defended by one of the members of the Administration openly in this House, and, by their silence, other members have acquiesced in both the principle and practice of taking votes from men overseas and assigning them to different constituencies without the knowledge or consent of voters abroad or electors at home. And what has been the effect of these Acts and these methods of dealing with the people's franchise? The effect is that Parliament has lost altogether its representative character, and in the country the people have ceased to have the faith they should have in our whole system of parliamentary government. Instead of regarding Parliament as the forum in which a nation's rights are to be maintained and its freedom preserved, forums have sprung up all over the country which the people themselves are using as pulpits from which to pour their contempt upon Parliament, when in times such as these every arm in the land should be sympathetically outstretched towards Parliament in an effort to promote the great work of reconstruction which is so much needed.

Speaking on the subject of the franchise perhaps I might at this moment say a word in reference to the Government's promise in the speech from the Throne to bring in a new Franchise Bill. It is unfortunate for the country that the Bill referred to will owe its origin in part to some whose names have been associated with the kind of legislation I have just described. But let me assure the Government that if it will bring in a Bill which will help to restore public confidence in our political institutions; if it will bring in a Bill which will be honest and fair and true to the rights of the people, it will find the Opposition ready to assist and to expedite the passage of that measure. But, Sir, if a Franchise Bill is to be introduced in a form which will constitute another blot on our country's name and fame, whatever means the Government adopts to pass it, they must expect to find hon. gentlemen on this side prepared to resist to the utmost of their power legislation prejudicial to the fundamental rights of the people.

The first question we would like to ask the Administration is why should there be a new Franchise Act at all? The old Dominion Elections Act has been on the Statutes for twenty-five years. Administrations representing both political parties have been returned under its provisions. Why then do we need another Act? Why should anything more be necessary than to amend the provisions of the present statute and bring them into conformity with the needs of the country? The Government may have reasons for its proposal and we will await those reasons. But I point out to the Government now so that they may take due notice of it, that if there is any endeavour to substitute a system of Dominion enumeration for the provincial lists which have been followed in accordance with the spirit of our constitution, the Government will have to give a pretty clear and satisfactory explanation before a measure of that kind will meet with the approval of the House and of the country.

After the experience the country has had with Dominion enumerators, care will be taken before the franchise of our people is again placed in the hands of the Administration for manipulation as it may see best by its own creatures. So much, Sir, in reference to the franchise and what it stands for.

Let me now say just a word in regard to the application of the franchise in making good representation in Parliament, for which purpose it is intended. How, under the franchise in relation to the different vacancies that have occurred, has the Government "carried on," so far as representation in this Parliament is concerned? Since the present Administration was returned to power thirteen vacancies have occurred, but hardly any were filled until in December, 1917, the advent of this session. First, the war was made a pretext for not allowing the people representation in constituencies that had been vacated, and to a certain extent the country acquiesced in this. One would have thought that the moment the war was over the Government would immediately have sought to make good the lack of representation by bringing on by-elections in the several constituencies. Did the Government do that? No. One pretext gave way to another. When the war was out of the way the next excuse offered was the necessity of passing a new by-elections Act. When the by-elections Act was passed did the Government attempt to put it into force so as to secure representation in this House for the people of those various constituencies? No. They waited almost until the very day before the opening of the last session before they issued writs, and the Act was so drafted that the vacant constituencies were without representation for almost the period of that entire session.

I think my hon. friend from Kingston (Sir Henry Drayton) and myself were in this Parliament last session for about two weeks. Why did our constituencies not have the privilege of being represented through the whole of last session? Had the Government's plans not miscarried there would have been no representation of those two constiutencies. At the very last moment the Government brought in a measure that was not referred to in the speech from the Throne, the Grand Trunk Railway Bill, consideration of which prolonged the sitting to such an extent that these two constituencies were represented for that short period of time.

But how about the constituencies of Assiniboia, North Ontario, Glengarry and Quebec East? They were all without representation in the last session. Not only that, Sir, but the constituencies of Glengarry and Stormont, North Ontario and Assiniboia were without representation for three entire sessions. I have here the dates at which several vacancies occurred and the by-elections took place. Glengarry and Stormont was vacated on April 13, 1918, and the by-election announced on October 27, 1919. In other words, five hundred and sixty-two days elapsed before the writ was issued, and then a further period elapsed before the return of the member. I think my hon. friend who is in the House to-day (Mr. John W. Kennedy) had the privilege of sitting for two or three days—that was the whole length of time that the people of his constituency were represented in this Parliament from the time the Government assumed office.

Then take the constituency of North Ontario, which became vacant on May 25, 1918. It was December 9, 1919, before the by-election was held, making a period of five hundred and sixty-three days during which the people of that constituency had no representation in this Parliament. In other words, they were without any representation during the last three sessions.

Similarly Assiniboia, one of the largest of the western constituencies, was vacant almost from the moment at which the Government took office, and yet until the day of the opening of this session, three days ago, not a soul was here to speak on behalf of the people of Assiniboia. Three hundred and ninety-nine days elapsed before any writ was issued for that particular vacancy.

Then take the constituency of Quebec East, which was vacated through the death of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Through that entire session and the next until my hon. friend, formerly the member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) was elected to represent the constituency held by his leader for the previous period of forty-three years, it was without representation.

Similarly the constituency of Victoria-Carleton was represented in this House for only one or two days last session, when it should have been represented for the entire session.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, Glengarry and Stormont, North Ontario and Assiniboia were not represented at all for three sessions; Quebec East was not represented

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4231

for two sessions; Prince County, Prince Edward Island, Kingston, Victoria City and Victoria-Carleton were not represented for the greater part of one session.

Then coming down to the present time, since our last meeting of Parliament four vacancies have occurred, those in Timiskaming, Kamouraska, St. James (Montreal) and East Elgin. The constituencies of Timiskaming and Kamouraska were vacated respectively on September 22, 1919, and October 14, 1919. Why are not these constituencies represented in this Parliament at this time? There is only one reason—that the Government by deliberate intent put off the possibility of representation of these ridings as long as it possibly could. It waited until almost the very day before this Parliament was called for the present session to issue writs for the filling of those vacancies. In the case of Timiskaming the electors were a long time without representation through the protracted illness of the former Minister of Railways and Canals, the late Hon. Mr. Cochrane. One would have thought that had the Government cared at all for the representation of the electors they would have been eager and anxious to give them their right to be represented here at the earliest possible date.

During the last two weeks we have had the two vacancies that were referred to this afternoon by the right hon. the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster)—St. James and East Elgin. Why is it that a writ has been issued in the case of one and not in the case of the other vacancy? I asked my right hon. friend at the opening of the session to-day if he would tell this House and, through this House, the people of the latter constituency, when they would have the right to be represented, and he gave me a reply as evasive as it could possibly be, saying nothing and making no promises one way or the other. I would ask my right hon. friend when he does reply to my speech, as no doubt he will, to tell the people of East Elgin when they may expect to have the right of representation in this Parliament which it is their privilege to demand.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, that having regard for Parliamentary Government in the matter of representation, if you look at the laws under which this Parliament has been returned, or if you look at the way in which those laws have been administered, you will find that there has been a complete demoralization of the whole business of parliamentary representation as contrasted with what it should have been were we anxious to preserve intact our political institutions.

There is this to be remembered at all times, Sir, in regard to by-elections: They are a means of keeping the Administration in touch with the country and of giving it the views of the people on great public issues. Have we not all observed how jealously England guards the rights pertaining to the representation of her people in Parliament? We watch our newspapers to see the results of by-elections in the old land as they occur from week to week or from month to month; and in the meantime no attention whatever is paid to the necessity for holding by-elections in our own country. If we are to preserve the spirit of the constitution, which stands for the right of representation of the people in Parliament, we must seek to give to the people the right of representation as soon as possible after a vacancy in an electoral district occurs.

There is one other point that is of importance in considering the essential conditions of parliamentary Government. Parliament should be not only a representative assembly, but also a deliberative assembly. It should be a means of keeping the people informed of the public business and of having all matters of concern to them freely and openly discussed. I shall not attempt to present in detail a statement of the extent to which there has been demoralization in this connection during and since the period of the war. I shall point out, however, three very obvious particulars which are of importance if we are to have a restoration of our political institutions.

Take first the Speech from the Throne, to which we have just listened. If that time-honoured custom has any purpose whatever, it is that of acquainting Parliament, and, through Parliament, the people, with the questions that are to come up for discussion and consideration here. Well, Sir, I have only to mention the last session of Parliament and what took place then to direct the attention of the House and the country to how far we have departed from that important safeguard of a people's rights and liberties. The most important measure that was put through this Parliament last session—the most important financially in the history of Canada—was the Bill for the acquisition of the Grand Trunk Railway System; yet in the speech from the Throne of last session no mention whatever was made of the Government's intention to bring down legislation of that kind. How were the people of the country to be expected to anticipate the bringing down of such an important measure? Had reference been made to it in the speech from the Throne, we should have had an opportunity to hear from different parts of Canada an expression of opinion in regard to its merits and the legislation itself might have been vastly improved as a conse. quence. I say at once to the Acting Prime Minister that if the Government has other legislation in contemplation at this session of which no mention has been made in the speech from the Throne, we hope that the Government will announce to the House at the earliest possible moment what that legislation is to be. That is owing to the House; it is owing to the country.

D 4232

Why, Sir, what an occasion of surprise it is to us when almost the day after His Excellency delivers the Speech from the Throne an announcement—it appears on the Order Paper—is made that the Government intends to introduce two amendments to the British North America Act. I shall not now discuss the proposed amendments; I shall not question what they are or what is the necessity for them. But I should like to point out that on only six occasions since the days of Confederation has the British North America Act been amended. If when the Speech from the Throne was delivered it was the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to bring down an amendment to the British North America Act, they might at least have had the courtesy to tell His Excellency of it and to have had His Excellency so inform this House and the people. The amending of the Constitution is no small matter; it is a much more important matter than the amending of any drug Act, any copyright or patent law, or any of the things that are spoken of in the speech from the Throne. It is in one sense the most important matter which this Parliament can be called upon to consider. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that in these matters we have been departing altogether from the principles of parliamentary government. If you seek the cause of the unrest which prevails throughout the country, you will find it in these departures from a system of representative and responsible Government.

In this connection I may, perhaps, appropriately say a word in regard to Supply. The voting of Supply is the only way in which the people can exercise their control over Parliament and Parliament its control over the Government. We have all observed that in previous sessions, while items of supply might be brought down early or late, at the very end of the session just when members were leaving, further large appropriations were asked for. Well, Sir, under such conditions it is impossible for the people to exercise the control which they should have over public expenditure; and we on this side of the House hope that the Government will this session, so far as they can possibly do so, bring down their Estimates on the earliest possible day; that they will not in the dying days of the session, when the House will have practically no opportunity of considering them, bring down appropriations of further millions of the people's money.

Final decisions upon matters of national import should not be made by ministers in their private rooms; should not be made without opportunity being afforded to the House of Commons to consider them in the first instance. After all, it is the public business that we are discussing here, and the country has the right to have submitted to it all that is essential in regard to large transactions, before those transactions are finally put beyond the power of this Parliament. I refer again to the Grand Trunk railway agreement. That is one of the largest transactions that this country has ever undertaken. What position are we in to-day? We who sit here in the House of Commons as the representatives of the people have been put in the humiliating position during the last fortnight of reading from cable despatches of approval being given by English shareholders to an agreement with the Government of Canada —an agreement concerning the terms of which we as members of Parliament have not the slightest knowledge. I ask if that is what is owing to the House of Commons; if that is what is owing to the people of Canada? I hope that it is not too late for the ministry to consider the advisability—notwithstanding the fact that at the last session of Parliament they said that they would not accord that right to the Canadian people—of laying on the table of the House that agreement and of asking for its approval, just as they are asking the House to approve of the Treaty of Peace between the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria.

Mr. Speaker, there should be an end to Government by Order in Council. Because of the extent to which the Administration carried on Government by Order in Council during the period of the war, it may be difficult for them to realize that this method of Government—the method followed in the old days, 80 years ago—is not the method of Government which we have come

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to regard as free and representative Government. During the war, Government by Order in Council may have been necessary and may have been tolerated to a large extent by the people; but the time has now come when, if we are to have Government in the true sense of the word, that Government must be by Parliament and through Parliament; it must not be by the substitution of the diplomacy of Cabinet councils, carried on by Cabinet ministers in their secret chambers, for the free discussions and questionings of the ministry in this House in regard to public affairs.

If we are to restore the deliberative aspect of this assembly, ministers should be in their seats in the House where they can answer the questions put to them in regard to public business. The Prime Minister should be in his seat to answer questions with regard to matters of policy. I hasten to express the sympathy which all of us have with the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) in that, through the impairment of his health, he is prevented from being here at this time. I hope that no hon. member will endeavour to misconstrue my reference at this moment as being in any way inconsiderate. Indeed, I think a lack of consideration was shown by his colleagues in virtually compelling the Prime Minister to remain at the head of the Government, in spite of his protests over and over again that he was not in a position to attend to public affairs and that he wished to be relieved from that duty altogether. It was a mistaken kindness to him and to the country to ask him to assume a nominal leadership when it was impossible for him to assume any leadership at all. I might remind the House that during the period of the war and since the war the Prime Minister as well as two or three of his colleagues have been not merely out of this House but in large part out of the country. That is the system which has grown up, and it shows the indifference of the Government to the method of carrying on Parliamentary representation here. What is happening at this very moment? If what we read in the newspapers to-day is correct, two of my right hon. friend's colleagues are down in New York discussing the business of this country with the Prime Minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No truck or trade with the Yankee.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should we have to go to New York to deal with questions that affect this country? The ministers should be here so that they can answer questions. It is astounding, when we see on the other side an endeavour to revive the old cry "No further truck or trade with the Yankees," that our ministers rush off to New York to discuss what is to be the policy, if there is to be any policy of the Government for the next few months to come.

What are the consequences of the frequent absences of the Prime Minister? One is the rumor that the Prime Minister has either conditionally or absolutely tendered his resignation; that he has no intention whatever of returning to Parliament or of occupying a seat in this House. That rumour may be wholly false, and I hope my right hon. friend will give the House some definite statement on this all important matter. But the circumstance that it is so persistently stated that the Prime Minister has no intention of coming back; that he is merely holding the bridge, so to speak, until his colleagues can find someone to take his place, is having an unsettling effect throughout the whole of this country. What is another effect arising out of the same cause? We are told that not only are we to have the Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Foster), who is present in the House to-day, as the leader, but during the evenings or during other periods we are to have an acting leader of the House in addition.

Sir GEORGE FOSTER: Is that a rumour or a fact?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That we hope to find out during the course of the next few days, but the fact is that we do not know whether we are facing a Government without a head or facing a Government with three heads.

Unfortunate as we are with regard to the Prime Minister, we are almost equally unfortunate with respect to the personnel of the Cabinet. Conditions at the present time remind one of the conditions as they were prior to 1896 when the Government of that day went to pieces. The only difference is that at that time there were seven bolters who went all at once, and to-day there are seven of them who have disappeared, one by one. At that time the political edifice was dynamited from within; to-day it is crumbling to pieces. That is the only difference. Let me read the names of the resignations there have been of ministers: first, Hon. T. W. Crothers, on November 7, 1918; then, Hon. T. A. Crerar, June 16, 1919; Sir Thomas White, July 9, 1919; Hon. F. B. Carvell, August 1, 1919; Hon. S. C. Mewburn, January 15, 1920, and Hon. A. K. Maclean, February 23, 1920. Now it is rumoured that the Prime Minister himself is to go. Why, Sir, that is a small ministry all in itself, a ministry of very considerable proportions, and with the Government beginning to split up as it is in that way, the public mind is kept in a restless condition to see who is to be the next one to come out. In that way, we are never sure exactly where we are.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Providence may choose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: While the Government has been indifferent in the regard mentioned, it has been equally indifferent so far as the deliberative nature of this assembly is concerned, in withdrawing ministers to the other Chamber where they are beyond questioning altogether. We have at the present time in the Senate no less than three ministers holding portfolios, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, and the Postmaster General. In times like this, of all times, the minister who holds the portfolio of Soldiers' Civil Re-establisment should be in this House where he can be questioned, and so should the Minister of Labour; but these gentlemen, along with the Postmaster General, are taken over to the other Chamber, so that the people's representatives here are put in the position, where they ask questions on many matters, of being unable to obtain authoritative replies at the time information is so necessary in connection with public discussion.

Then there has been the further tendency of the gradual shifting over to irresponsible commissions, boards and delegates of one kind or another, of a great deal of the business that should be carried on by the Government itself. I heard a gentleman say the other day that he thought the time had come when we should have government by the Government, instead of government by commissions, delegates and boards of different kinds. The effect of all this is that, in one way or another, instead of the business of Parliament being discussed here in a deliberative fashion, the country is being committed directly and indirectly to policies of which it has no knowledge, by persons who in no way owe responsibility to the people through their representatives in this House.

There are just two further matters to which I will refer, and I think I can promise the House that I shall be through by six o'clock. I have spoken of the representative nature of this deliberative assembly. Let me say a word in regard to what I think the spirit of the Constitution demands with respect to the representative character of the Cabinet. Canada is a country of wide geographical areas. Up to the time of Confederation it was a country of scattered provinces and territories. The work of nation-building ever since has consisted in welding into one Dominion the various provinces and territories, and cementing between the parts, bonds of friendship, mutual understanding, and common interest. The representative character of the Cabinet has been one of the most effective means to this highly important end, so that it is essential we should have a Cabinet that will represent in a general way the various important considerations of race, religion, economic interest and provincial right and concern. I shall not speak of more than one of these, but every Cabinet that there has been from the time of Confederation up to the present has had regard for the different elements that go to make up the nation in a way that will tend to unite and cement together the different portions of the Dominion.

We have representing the province of Quebec in this House two hon. gentlemen whom I see opposite to me at the moment, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Ballantyne). Both these hon. gentlemen are English-speaking. There is not in the Cabinet a single representative of the French-Canadians in this country.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the Postmaster General?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hear someone say "What about the Postmaster General?" Well, Sir, we cannot say that the Postmaster General represents the French-Canadians.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He could not get ten votes in any riding in Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Postmaster General has removed his residence from the province of Quebec altogether, and has come to reside permanently in the province of Ontario; but more than that, the Postmaster General ran in two constituencies in the last election when the voice of the people was heard in the matter of representation. He ran in the constituency of Laurier-Outremont and was defeated there by a majority of 1,247. He ran in the constituency of Champlain and was defeated there by a majority of 6,623. In the face of that, can it

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4235

be said that the Postmaster General represents the French-speaking element of the province of Quebec?

But that is not the most serious feature. From the confines of the city of Montreal right through to the Atlantic ocean there is not a single Cabinet minister, with or without a portfolio, in the Government. The province of Nova Scotia has no representative in the Cabinet; the province of New Brunswick has no representative in the Cabinet; the province of Prince Edward Island has no representative in the Cabinet. That is to say, something like 3,000,000 of the people of this country are without any representation in the Government, so far as their province is concerned. How in the face of a situation like that, can we longer talk about representative government in this country? Why is there no representation? The answer is plain. The people have lost faith in the Government, and the Government has lost faith in the people; neither has any longer any faith in the other, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite would have us believe they are carrying on representative government in this country. No, Sir, if we wish to remedy the unrest in this country let us have a government that is representative of all classes and of all provinces in Canada.

Just this word in conclusion, for it helps to explain all the rest. What is the most fundamental of all principles underlying responsible Government? It is that of collective cabinet responsibility—that there should be a cabinet with a known policy; that its policy should be known and defined as well as its members. Will any one pretend that hon. gentlemen opposite have a defined policy? Why, there are as many policies as there are members in the Cabinet. There are as many opinions as there are members in the Cabinet. When the Prime Minister talks of resigning, one aspirant for the leadership will make a speech in which he will announce a policy regarding trade or some other question, but the other members of the Cabinet do not necessarily follow him. Other aspirants announce other policies. We have no voice of the ministry as a whole, on any great question of national policy. Not only that, but among the Government's own followers in the Senate and in this House, there are those who are framing up new policies for the Administration, showing that they have no faith in the Government any longer. The Government press, which has been behind the Government all along, comes forward with suggestions for a new alignment of parties, so that somehow, in some fashion, we can get back to some system of Government where we will have a Cabinet with a known policy able to carry on the business of the country in accordance with the country's wishes.

What lies at the back of everything else is the absence of any collective cabinet responsibility. How is that to be remedied? Why is there no Government policy to-day? Hon. gentlemen know the reason very well. The Government is composed of two factions, two groups of men of different attitudes of mind, and their job for the last year or two has been, not to find a policy, but to see how they can get along without a policy so they can hold together. If there is any doubt on that question let the ministry answer.

When the war was over one would have supposed that the Prime Minister would have made some statement to the House as to what his post-war policy was to be. The ministry was elected as a war ministry, and when the war was over its purpose was gone. It had no policy at any time other than to carry on the war. If it had I should like any member of the ministry to state what it was. I say it had no policy except to "win the war," and when the war was won it had nothing further to say as to what it represented in the country. One would have supposed that under these conditions the Prime Minister would have stated to the people of this country that the Government would carry on a little longer until demobilization had been completed and that he would then issue a statement of the Government's policies for post-war conditions and would appeal to the people and give them an opportunity of approving those policies. That would have been the proper constitutional method, but was that done? No, that chance was lost, and from the moment that chance went by, the Government began to lose the confidence of the people; it began to lose its ministers one by one, it began to lose by-elections one by one. It became a crumbling edifice until to-day there is only left a remnant of what one could call a united cabinet.

What is the position as stated by the Government itself? The people of this country were prepared to allow the ministry to carry on for a session or two for the purpose of demobilization. That would have brought the situation up to the beginning of last session. Then the job for the Government would have been limited to getting through that session.

D 4236

My hon. friend the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Rowell) will recall that he and some of those who came into the Government as Unionist Liberals held a meeting and discussed how they could stay longer in touch with those who represented the other element of which the Cabinet was composed. When that meeting was over, my hon. friend gave out a statement as to its result, which appeared in the press throughout the country on October 1. I shall read only one paragraph of that statement:

> The meeting expressed unqualified approval of the war policy of the Union Government, and the Government is congratulated on its success.

That was self-congratulation.

> The concensus of opinion was, as the members were elected to support Union Government, it is their intention to continue to do so, and the hope was strongly expressed that the Government would be able at an early date to evolve a progressive policy satisfactory to the country to meet the after the war conditions.

Note that. Here is one section of the ministry saying to the other section of the ministry and to the country that they strongly hope that in some way or another the ministry will be able to frame a policy to deal with post-war conditions. Was there ever such an exhibition of cabinet incompetency as is expressed in those words? Well, that was sufficient to keep the Government together through last session. Then we came to the Christmas recess, when the job was to hang on until another session came. That became pretty difficult. Matters grew more and more tense in the Cabinet, as my hon. friends know, and finally there was pretty nearly an explosion. The papers came out on December 15 with headlines such as these: "Sir R. L. Borden to retire from public life—Will make announcement to gathering of supporters—Heeds Medical advice—Parliament will meet in February with new Premier and leader of Unionists." We all remember what consternation there was when it was said that the Prime Minister was to resign. Why did he not resign? The answer is to be found in the newspaper headlines of the following day "Couldn't find successor, so Premier sticks." They have been looking for a successor ever since, but have not found one. Then came the statement which the Prime Minister issued himself before he went away on leave. It appeared in all the papers and is well known to every hon. member of this House. I shall read only one paragraph. It is a sort of political last will and testament by the Prime Minister. To quote:

> Sir Robert Borden desires that the situation as here outlined—

He had been outlining what took place in the Cabinet.

> —shall be placed before his supporters in Parliament, and he considers it essential that they should approve of the arrangement which his colleagues have urged and which he has accepted.
>
> It was the purpose of the Prime Minister to have set forth to the country during the recent session the policies for which the Government would stand during the life of the present parliament. During his illness, and just before his departure, he embodied his proposals in written form, and, on the second of October, the day before he left Ottawa, he submitted them to a gathering of Government supporters. It was his desire that these proposals should be taken into consideration by those present and that at a further gathering, the suggestions of senators and members should be placed before him, after which he intended to formulate these policies from his place in parliament as controlling the action of the Government during the period mentioned.
>
> Some of the proposals thus presented have since been carried out by action taken during the recent session. Sir Robert Borden desires that after due consideration of the advice and suggestions of the supporters of the Government in parliament the policies as finally accepted shall be presented to Parliament and to the people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the present situation. The Prime Minister has gone away. He has left some document which is to be discussed by his followers in Parliament. He has set out what he thinks should be the policy of the party, and if all cannot agree on that policy as outlined by him, then he and they must part company. That, Mr. Speaker, is what it amounts to. In other words, instead of the policy being decided by the party's followers, or by a convention representative of the people belonging to the party, the Prime Minister, as an individual, lays down what is to be adopted, and if it is possible to secure agreement on his policy they will carry on. But what does this document say? "During the life of the present Parliament,"—another couple of years. That is the proposal that is put before the country at this time. This Government and this House, as unrepresentative as it is, is to be continued for another couple of years through some policy that is yet to be framed and that is still unknown. Why, Sir, a position of that kind is impossible, and, in the opinion of the people, will prove intolerable.

There is no remedy for such a situation except the remedy which the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4237 (1

constitution provides; that is to say, at the earliest possible moment there should be an appeal to the people of the country so that the will of the people shall be known and voiced by a parliament and government that is truly representative. Sir, we have passed the time when people exist for the sake of governments. People do not exist to-day for the sake of governments. On the contrary, governments exist to give expression to the will of the people. Having this fundamental principle in mind, therefore, I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, (Mr. D. D. McKenzie), that the following be added to the Address to His Excellency:

We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that the conditions under which the Government was formed and the present House of Commons was elected have now passed away, and that new conditions have arisen which are not being adequately met. The regrettable protracted absence of the Prime Minister, the widely accepted belief that it is not his intention to return to the duties of his office, the makeshift arrangements for the direction of important departments to which no minister has been regularly appointed, the attempt to carry on the public business when the three eastern Maritime Provinces are entirely unrepresented in the Cabinet—these and other things operate to produce a condition of uncertainty and instability from which a vigourous and efficient administration of the Dominion's affairs cannot be expected.

We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that in the interest of the peace, order, and good government of this Dominion such a condition of our public affairs should be brought to a speedy termination, and that the only effective remedy is to be found in an appeal to the electors at a general election.

We, therefore, respectfully represent that Your Excellency's advisers should forthwith bring forward the promised Franchise Bill for the enrollment of the electors and give it precedence over all other business, and that upon the enactment of such a measure as may be necessary, and the making of temporary provisions for the urgent public service, they should take the proper constitutional steps to obtain Your Excellency's approval of an appeal to the people at the polls.

I submit this resolution, Sir, as being fundamental in the way of what is necessary in the reconstruction of our political institutions.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

16 March 1920

D 4238
House of Commons

"STATUS OF CANADA AS A NATION
(BULGARIAN TREATY)"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4239

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

SPEECH

OF

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, ESQ.,

MEMBER FOR PRINCE, P.E.I.,

ON

STATUS OF CANADA AS A NATION

(BULGARIAN TREATY)

In the House of Commons, Ottawa, on Tuesday, March 16, 1920.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before speaking to the resolution I should like to ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Rowell) whether in the resolution itself the word "plenipotentiaries" is correct, or whether the word "plenipotentiary" should be used. I notice the resolution states that the Treaty has been signed "on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiaries therein named." But on referring to the Treaty itself I find there is only one plenipotentiary mentioned for the Dominion of Canada, the Hon. Sir George Perley—unless it is to be understood that the other British representatives named are also signing on behalf of the Dominion.

Hon. N. W. ROWELL: It should be "plenipotentiary." In this case only one representative signed on behalf of Canada; in the other case there were two Canadian ministers.

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, while listening to my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in introducing this resolution I could not help feeling that he himself in asking Parliament for the approval of this Treaty was doing so simply as a matter of form. There was really nothing in his argument in the way of a substantial reason why this Parliament should approve of the Treaty so far as the relations between Canada and Bulgaria are concerned. This is a Treaty between the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria, and we as a Canadian Parliament are being asked to give our approval to it. One would assume that, the Canadian Parliament being asked to approve the Treaty, we would find in it somewhere something relating to the Dominion of Canada. One would also have expected that there would be a possibility of an opinion of this Parliament influencing the judgment of those who have to do with the final ratification of the Treaty. But looking at the Treaty, one sees that it was signed by the different powers at Neuilly-sur-Seine on November 27, 1919, and I am very sure my hon. friend will agree that anything that this Parliament

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

may do in the nature of approving or disapproving the Treaty will not affect the dotting of a single "i" or the crossing of a single "t" in a single clause of the Treaty from beginning to end. It is for that reason I say, it seems to me, that the approval of this Parliament is being asked for simply as a matter of form.

But while the hon. member has given us no substantial reasons why this Parliament should approve the Treaty, he has given reasons why it would be unwise for us not to approve the Treaty. In drawing attention to its different clauses, he pointed out that practically everything that we are asked to approve here was approved last year when we had before us the Treaty between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany. Therefore, not to approve this Treaty at this time would be to have it appear that in the interval something had arisen which had caused this Parliament to take a different attitude towards the Treaties of Peace which are being signed in Europe from that which was taken at the last session. I am not aware that anything of the kind has arisen, and for that reason, I think it would be unwise for Parliament not to take, in the matter of approving the Treaty, the same action as it took in the matter of approving the Treaty between the Allied and Associated Powers and Germany.

But I want to point out just what are the grounds upon which my hon. friend has asked this Parliament to approve the Treaty. The grounds are broadly comprised under two headings. My hon. friend has mentioned one particular in which the Treaty has "special interest" to Canada, and it is the only particular in which he has specified any special interest to Canada as regards this Treaty. My hon. friend says that the provisions relating to debts and financial matters are of special interest to Canada in view of the fact that there are a number of Bulgarian Nationals living in Canada, and that there is a certain amount of enemy property in this country. It sounds very serious that there should be Bulgarian Nationals living in Canada, and that there should be a certain amount of enemy property in this country; but would any one consider for a moment that that was a reason serious enough to present to this Parliament for approving a particular Treaty? Yet, as I said, that was the only mention my hon. friend made in his speech of the particular interest this Treaty has with respect to Canadian affairs. In the same connection he pointed out that the provisions the Treaty contains respecting debts and financial matters are on all fours with similar provisions in the German Treaty which was approved last session.

My hon. friend went on to give another ground which he said made the matter of "most immediate concern" to Canada. It may be summed up in his own words as follows:

> To go back to the two groups of clauses in the Treaty which are of most immediate concern to Canada, should like for a few minutes to speak in reference to the League of Nations and to the labour clauses of the Treaty.

In other words, we are being asked to approve this Treaty at the present time because of what it contains in reference to the League of Nations and the labour clauses of the Treaty. This Parliament has already approved the League of Nations' Covenant; it has already approved the labour clauses of the Treaty. Why should the time of Parliament be taken up in approving a second or a third time these particular matters? There has been no difference of view between us as to these clauses. I am not aware, when they were being debated in connection with the German Treaty, that a single exception was taken by any member of the House to the clauses relating to the League of Nations, and, in particular, to the labour clauses. Therefore, the reasons which my hon. friend has urged, are more in the nature of excuses for bringing this particular Treaty before the House, than they are good and substantial reasons for asking the approval of Parliament of this Treaty. I have said that they are excuses. I think, if my hon. friend would tell the House exactly what was in his thoughts, he would admit that his reason for asking the House to approve the Treaty was 4 p.m. largely that he might repeat at this session what he said in Parliament at the last session and what he has since been saying on a good many platforms in regard to the League of Nations' Covenant and the labour clauses of the Treaty. I think that is the main reason for the introduction of this measure at this time.

My hon. friend, however, in addition to the two statements which I have quoted, has said that the adoption of the resolution involves the acceptance of certain principles which he has set forth. It is important that we should consider what my hon. friend has said in that connection. It affords the reason why, it seems to me, it would be inadvisable for this House not to approve the Treaty. These statements of principle might be made as separate substantial motions in this House; they might be made in reference to almost any other Treaty as well as this particular one. But should this House, in view of the statement which my hon. friend has made, refuse to approve the Treaty, then it would be immediately said, or the impression would be conveyed, that in some way or another this House was unwilling to accept the statements of principle which my hon. friend set forth.

Let me take up these statements of principle, one by one, and see whether there is any difference of opinion between members on both sides of the House in reference to them. They are all in the nature either of recognitions of something which is already conceded, or of reaffirmations of something which has already been affirmed. The first is the recognition of democratic control of foreign policy, and that Canada should not, without the consent of its Parliament, be finally committed to important international engagements such as are embodied in this Treaty. I venture to say there is not an hon. member who for one moment will take exception to the desirability of democratic control of foreign affairs. If we are to have an increased measure of foreign policy as a part of the business of this Parliament, it becomes increasingly important that we should have some effective democratic control of it; but the first example my hon. friend has given of democratic control by Parliament of foreign affairs is a somewhat unfortunate one inasmuch as he brings here for our approval a Treaty that was signed several months ago, the contents of which were not made known to a single member of this House until within the last two or three days, and a document which, I am sure my hon. friend himself will say, cannot be altered one way or another by anything which this House may do at the present time. But that is not the only example which my hon. friend has given to the House of his view of democratic control in regard to these matters of foreign policy.

On the first of March my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Rowell) laid upon the Table of the House copies of other treaties:

> The Czecho-Slovak Minorities Treaty, a treaty between the Principal Allied and Associated Powers and Czecho-Slavia, signed at Saint Germain-en-Laye, September 10, 1919. Ratification on behalf of Canada authorized by Order in Council of December 1, 1919.

Note those words "ratification on behalf of Canada authorized by Order in Council of December 1, 1919." Mr. Chairman, is ratification of a treaty by Order in Council an evidence of democratic control on the part of the Parliament of Canada? That is exactly the line of action which hon. gentlemen opposite have been taking in so many matters of all-important concern during recent years—and that we have been protesting against. Instead of submitting these matters to Parliament for consideration, they have taken action upon them by Order in Council.

Copy of another treaty was also laid on the Table by my hon. friend on March 1:

> The Serb-Croat-Slovent Minorities Treaty, a Treaty between the Principal Allied and Associated Powers and the Serb-Croat-Slovene State, signed at Saint Germain-en-Laye, September 10, 1919. Ratification on behalf of Canada authorized by Order in Council of December 1, 1919.

Here again is more ratification by Order in Council instead of by Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, let me repeat, we on this side of the House are strongly in favour of democratic control of all these matters of foreign policy. I think we would be willing to go so far as to say that we would like to have an expression of opinion of this House to the effect that Canada should not be bound by any treaty or agreement in matters of external relations, of which Parliament has not been fully informed in a way of which all of us could take cognizance. That would be helping along the democratic control of foreign relations, and when we have that principle carried out we shall have a sense of security which at present we do not feel in the matter of our external and inter-imperial relations.

The next reason that my hon. friend has given is that the adoption of the resolution will involve:

> A recognition that in any war in which the British Empire is engaged and in which Canada has taken part is a matter of concern to the people of Canada; that the terms of the Treaty of Peace bringing such a war to an end are also a matter of concern to the people of Canada, and that such a Treaty should not be ratified by His Majesty until it has been approved by Canada as of the five nations of the British Commonwealth.

There can be no difference of opinion on that matter. Every one in this country will admit that any war in which the British Empire is engaged and in which Canada has taken part is a matter of the greatest possible concern to Canada. Every one will be fully prepared to admit also that the terms of the treaty of peace bringing such

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

a war to an end are also a matter of concern to the people of Canada, and that such a treaty should not be ratified—I think the word "not" has been left out of Hansard by mistake—until it has been approved by Canada as one of the five nations of the British Commonwealth. I am not sure that my hon. friend would not have been more consistent if he had inserted after the word "treaty" in the phrase "such a treaty" the words "in so far as Canada is concerned." I just interject that point for his consideration.

Those are two recognitions or declarations of policy, or whatever one may choose to call them, upon which I think all hon. members of this House are thoroughly agreed. The remaining three are not recognitions of accepted policy, but are reaffirmations of positions this House has already accepted. First there is

A reaffirmation by Parliament of its approval of the creation and maintenance of a League of Nations, for the promotion of international co-operation and the achievements of international peace and security by the methods set forth in the Covenant of the League.

As I mentioned a moment ago, this Parliament has approved of the creation and maintenance of a League of Nations for the promotion of international co-operation and the achievement of international peace and security by the methods set forth in the Covenant of the League. We have approved that over and over again, and why should our approval of it be asked for again in this connection? Is that a reason why this particular treaty with Bulgaria should be brought before the House for its approval at this time?

The fourth reason given by my hon. friend is that the approval of the treaty will mean:

A reaffirmation by Parliament of its approval of the Labour Clauses; and of the creation and maintenance of the International Labour Organization under its provisions.

How often have we to be asked, Mr. Speaker, to state what we have already stated time and time again in this House as to our views upon the Labour Clauses of the Covenant of the League of Nations? It may be that my hon. friend has some doubt as to the position some of his supporters may take towards those Labour Clauses, but let me tell him, speaking for those of us who are members of the Liberal party on this side of the House, that before the House took action one way or the other in regard to the Labour Clauses of the Covenant of the League of Nations, the National Liberal Convention, composed of representatives of the Liberal party from the Atlantic to the Pacific, made as one of the planks of its platform a full acceptance of the Labour Clauses in the spirit in which they were framed as part of the Covenant of the League of Nations. So that there may be no doubt as to the position which we on this side of the House have taken as to the Labour Clauses of the League of Nations, let me read the following from a resolution which was adopted in August last year by the National Liberal Convention:

Resolved that the Committee recommends that the National Liberal Convention accept in their entirety as a part of the Liberal platform, in the spirit in which they have been framed and in so far as the special circumstances of the country will permit, the terms of the Labour Convention and general principles associated with the League of Nations and incorporated in the conditions of peace.

Unless hon. gentlemen opposite entertain a different view of the significance of these Labour Clauses, I cannot see why this Parliament should again be asked to approve them under the guise of expressing its approval of a treaty between Bulgaria and the Allied Powers. So far as the League of Nations is concerned, I believe there is only one opinion in this House and in this country. We all recognize that the League of Nations is in a formative stage, that its constitution is more or less nebulous at the present time, but that it has in it promise of great good for humanity and for mankind. We all desire to see the League of Nations made a success, and we cannot by approval after approval in this House make our position better known than it is.

Now I come to the last reason which my hon. friend gave as to why we should approve this Treaty. He says its adoption involves:

A reaffirmation by Parliament of its approval of the position and status accorded to Canada in the League of Nations and in the International Labour Organization and of its determination to maintain that status.

Well, Mr. Speaker, who has questioned the status which Canada has attained in the League of Nations in any way that calls for a further approval by this Parliament of the status which we already have? Some question has been raised in the House and outside of the House as to whether the status is in any way the new thing which my hon. friend would lead us to believe it is; whether it is not a recognition of something that was achieved long before the Administration, of which he is a member, had anything to do with the matter one way or another. I think we are all agreed, Sir, that whatever status we have we desire to maintain. There is not a man in Canada who would cede one inch of ground on the question of the status which Canada has as a nation, and I do not think there is any difference of view between any of us on that point. Yet my hon. friend seizes this opportunity to bring up this question of Canada's status as a nation. As I have listened to his remarks in this Chamber and read his speeches delivered outside of the House, it has seemed to me that whether he intends to do so or not, he is seeking to convey the impression that we have a new status which we have never had before, and that it has in some mysterious way come about through some action of the Administration with which he is connected. I would be the last one to deny the Administration any credit to which I think it is entitled in regard to the service which it has rendered Canada in helping to maintain and clearly define a status which we have and which has long been admitted. But I think we are allowing full credit to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) and those associated with him, my right hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Doherty) and my right hon. friend the Secretary of State (Hon. A. L. Sifton) for their service to this Dominion in standing firm on the question of its status, when we give them credit for having done their duty in a manner satisfactory to the people of the country.

Let me say at once that this whole question of Canada's position as a nation, when it comes to debating the matter, turns very largely on the meaning that we attach to the use of words. Hon. gentlemen opposite, on one or two occasions, have sought to make it appear that gentlemen on this side of the House, were, in some way or other, little Canadians who were endeavouring to minimize the status of their country, because they were unwilling to admit that, from certain points of view, strictly legal, or technical if you will, Canada was a nation with sovereign powers. Now, Mr. Speaker, no good purpose can be served by a contention of that kind. What is needed above everything else is clear and precise thinking on questions of this nature. Let me direct my hon. friend's attention to his own language in order to illustrate my meaning. My hon. friend says that in approving this resolution we are endorsing the following principle:

The recognition that in any war in which the British Empire is engaged and in which Canada has taken part is a matter of concern to the people of Canada; that the terms of the Treaty of Peace bringing such a war to an end are also a matter of concern to the people of Canada and that such a treaty should not be ratified by His Majesty until it has been approved by Canada as of the five nations of the British Commonwealth.

My hon. friend will observe that in the first part of the paragraph he speaks of any war in which the British "Empire" is engaged and in which Canada takes part, while in the last part of the clause he speaks of the five nations of the British "Commonwealth." In other words, we go into war as part of the British Empire and emerge from it as part of the British Commonwealth. My hon. friend knows as well as any one here that, according to one meaning of the term, you cannot say that an empire is a commonwealth; although, according to another meaning, the two terms are more or less identical. It is exactly the same in regard to the use of the word, "nation." If you wish to emphasize and lay particular stress on a certain legal technical point, then it cannot be said that Canada has all the rights, the privileges, and the attributes of a sovereign nation. But if, instead of looking merely at the letter of the word you look at the spirit of it, I think that everyone will be prepared to concede that, with the self-governing status which we have, we are to all intents and purposes a nation. Now that is the point I would direct to the attention of my hon. friend. There is in Holy Writ a familiar passage which says: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life;" and that is as true in reference to the interpretation of constitutional documents as it is in reference to the Scriptures. If you rigidly follow the letter you kill what is real in the relationship between the different nations that comprise the Empire. If, on the other hand, you take the spirit of that relationship, then we distinctly have five nations forming a part of the British Empire or Commonwealth, by whichever name you choose to designate it. I should like to have that point made perfectly clear, and I trust I have done so in a way which will satisfy my hon. friend.

What, then, is the difference which exists between us and my hon. friend, or any of those associated with him, in regard to this question of the status of Canada? So far as I can see, we have no difference on what is fundamental as respects our status. Our difference is that hon. gentlemen opposite, and in particular my hon. friend,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4244

would have it appear, as I have already said, that our status is something newly acquired; that in some way or other which is inexplicable to us there has been a change within the last few years, and that we stand in a position now, from the legal and constitutional viewpoint, which we did not have before. We on this side of the House maintain that while there has been a clearer defining of the status of Canada, and while there has been unquestionably, and above all else, in the eyes of the world and from the international point of view, a recognition of the status of Canada through the splendid services of her armies overseas, and by reason of the valiant part they played in the great war, all these circumstances have served to emphasize and strengthen and make permanent a status which we already had and which we intend to maintain. If my hon. friend has any doubt at all on this point, I hope his mind will be disabused of any misgivings before I conclude.

By way of illustration of the point which I have been seeking to make clear, let me draw the attention of the House to the first Government notice of motion which appears on the Order Paper. In the name of my right hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, there appears the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that a humble address be presented to His Most Excellent Majesty, the King, in the following words:

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that you may graciously be pleased to give your consent to submit a measure to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, to amend the British North America Act 1867, in the manner following, or to the following effect—etc., etc.,

Note the words in that resolution. The prayer from this Parliament is not to the King to assent to an amendment of the British North America Act. It is to His Majesty to submit a measure to the Parliament of the United Kingdom to amend the British North America Act. If you take the letter of the Constitution alone will any one for one moment contend that this country is a sovereign nation to the degree of having all the rights and privileges which the British Parliament has when we have to go to the British Parliament to ask for an amendment to our Constitution? If you construe the Constitution according to the letter, you kill the spirit immediately because we know, as my hon. friend pointed out the other day, that if we ask the British Parliament to amend the Constitution according to the constitutional practice, it is almost certain to do so and, since it is almost certain to do so, we have to all intents and purposes the full rights and privileges of a sovereign people in reference to our own Constitution. But I would like to submit to my hon. friends opposite that perhaps it would be more in accord with the status which Canada has as a self-governing dominion or nation within the British Empire if, instead of presenting an address to His Majesty to ask His Majesty's consent to the Parliament of the United Kingdom amending the British North America Act in the two particulars mentioned, the Government should consider the advisability of an address being presented to His Majesty to have powers given to the Parliament of Canada, subject to the concurrence of the several provinces of the Dominion, to amend the Constitution of Canada in such particulars as may be agreed upon as a result of conference between the provincial and federal authorities and approved by this Parliament and the legislatures of the different provinces.

I have here a copy of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Australia and of the Dominion of New Zealand. Both Australia and New Zealand have the right to amend their own constitutions in the particulars mentioned therein. Why should this Parliament not have the same powers to amend its own Constitution, subject to the safeguards that are necessary to comply with the spirit of the Act of Confederation, as have these other nations within the British Empire?

As I have said, our difference with hon. members opposite is not at all upon the question of Canada's being a nation but upon the inference which they would convey that national status, or to put it in the phraseology of the minister, equality of status with the other nations of the British Empire, is something newly acquired, something to be credited to the present Administration. What we say is that Canada's status as a nation from the constitutional point of view was established long before the present Administration was formed and in spite of the opposition of some of its own members and their associates in the past. If any one doubts this I will quote my hon. friend an authority which he will not question. Indeed, I am prepared to leave the question of Canada's status as between hon. gentlemen opposite and gentlemen on this side of the House to the testimony of my hon. friend himself.

D 4245

I have in my hand a copy of a splendid address—one of the many splendid addresses which my hon. friend has delivered. It was not delivered since the war, or since the present Administration of which he is a member was formed, but it was delivered in Montreal on November 11, 1912—nearly eight years ago. The address is entitled:

A Short History of the Beginning and Growth of Constitutional Government in Canada.

In it my hon. friend has set forth the constitutional development of this country and to whom the credit should be given in that connection. Let me, without quoting too many extracts, just read a few that are significant as showing the position which we on this side of the House are prepared not only to maintain but which we are glad to have the opportunity of advocating and of furthering to the extent of our ability. My hon. friend started in by saying:

In all discussions of the relations of Canada to Great Britain and the other parts of the Empire, three questions appear to be uppermost in the public mind: Our political relations, our trade arrangements, and the defence of the Empire.

I am glad we have with us this evening a descendant of Papineau, a man, who, in the early history of our country, struggled to secure for the people of this province what William Lyon Mackenzie was struggling to secure for the people of Upper Canada—the right to manage their own affairs; and while we may not agree with the methods either pursued, we must agree that they were fighting against grave abuses and were struggling to redress serious injustice to the mass of the people of the two provinces.

The Rebellion of 1837, and the exceedingly able report of Lord Durham on the political conditions in Canada which followed the Rebellion constitute a convenient starting point for our discussion. Permit me to recall to your minds the records of the two political parties in this country from the Rebellion of 1837 down to the year 1911 on the three questions I have mentioned.

I am not going to quote at any great length, but just let me give one or two sentences.

Mr. McMASTER: Whose speech is that?

Mr. KING: It is the speech of my hon. friend the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Rowell): He says:

The four main events in the development of our political relations during this period were: (1) the struggle for and securing of responsible government; (2) Canadian Confederation, including the purchase of the Northwest Territories; (3) the evolution of Canada from the position of a colony of Great Britain to that of one of the free self-governing nations of the Empire; (4) the creation of a truly Imperial organization under the name of "The Imperial Conference."

I wish to remind hon. members that this is an address which was delivered on the 11th of November, 1912. The Armistice was signed on November 11, 1918. It was in 1912 that my hon. friend was speaking. After mentioning the great fight for responsible government, he says:

Around this issue the battle waged for years, Baldwin and Lafontaine leading the Liberal forces.

What further does my hon. friend say? He says:

The Conservative party in Great Britain clung just as tenaciously to government by Downing Street as did the Conservatives in this country.

Then he goes on:

The only party that believed in responsible government as being essential to the progress and prosperity of Canada, and that the granting of this right of self-government would not only not weaken but strengthen our loyalty to the Crown and the Mother Country, was the Liberal party in Canada.

My hon. friend makes the position clearer when he declares:

The result of the Conservative policy was the Family Compact, the Rebellion of 1837, and the long and bitter struggle which retarded the progress and development of Canada, and divided the people of Canada into two hostile camps. The result of the Liberal policy was the securing for Canada—

Listen to this:

—and ultimately not only for Canada but the other colonies of the Empire—of the right to manage their own affairs, and with that right the peace and progress of the country and a great increase in affection for and the desire to maintain British connections.

Then my hon. friend says:

This great discovery of colonial self-government, which, according to Sir Herbert Samuel, is one of the two great contributions in the sphere of Government which the British people have given to the world, was made, was wrought out and secured by the Liberal party in Canada.

My hon. friend goes on to say:

Their labour has made the Empire as it exists to-day possible.

I shall pass over what my hon. friend has had to say about the question of Confederation and the part played by the two parties in this country in that connection, and what he has said about the acquirement of the Northwest territory. He concluded, however, that part of his address by saying:

Here again it was the policy of the Liberal leader and the Liberal party which forced this great question to the front, and was so largely instrumental in securing these territories for Canada.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Now, Mr. Speaker, lest it might appear that we were getting away from this all important question of the status of Canada, and Canada's status as a nation within the British Empire, I am pleased to see that my hon. friend has devoted a considerable part of his address to that one particular subject. "The changed status of Canada," he calls it. Now let me read what he says in that connection:

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier went to England to attend the Diamond Jubilee of Queen Victoria—

That was in 1897, 23 years ago—

In one of his very first public utterances he took the position that Canada was no longer a colony but a nation. He said: "The authority of the Queen does not rest on military force, but from the Pacific to the Atlantic rests on the cheerful allegiance of five million people who feel themselves a nation. The feeling dominating Canada is one of pride in her local autonomy and legislative liberty connected with Imperial unity."

That is the end of the quotation from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech and my hon. friend goes on:

Throughout his stay in Great Britain Sir Wilfrid consistently maintained the position that Canada had reached the status of a nation. When he returned to the city of Montreal, and the citizens extended such a memorable welcome to him he again emphasized that position. He said: He had longed to live to see the day when Canada would no longer be a colony, but would be a free nation within the Empire, and he was glad to be able to say he had lived to see that day.

Mr. Speaker, whatever doubt there may be on the other side of the House, as to Canada's status, there can be no doubt as to the position which we of the Liberal party of Canada have had in regard thereto. My hon. friend has stated it accurately, he has stated it truly, and as he has stated it here every one of us is prepared to see that it is maintained along those lines. But what was the position—and here I should like to point out there are times and seasons for all things—of hon. gentlemen opposite? To-day they are saying a great deal about Canada being a nation. They are able to do so, why? Because the struggle which the Liberal party maintained for a quarter of a century in this country has at last, through the great service of our men overseas, come before the world in its true and bold form. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said: "Let us have the attributes of a nation and when the time of stress comes Canada will respond and do her duty by the Empire." Was not his prophesy fully fulfilled? Was it not because we had the status of a nation, because we believed we had the status of a nation, that Canada played the part which she played in this great war? I think one of the most significant things in the history not only of Canada but of the world is the fact that when this war came on, so far as I am aware, the British Government asked nothing of this Dominion; that everything that was done was done voluntarily and freely by the people of Canada through their Government. How did that come about? It came about as a consequence of Canada recognizing that she had the status of a nation, that she had said: "Recognize our status as a nation and we will do our part." Had she been held in a colonial position is it possible to believe that she would have responded as she did at that time?

But, as I have said, it is one thing to proclaim Canada a nation to-day; it was another thing to proclaim Canada a nation twenty-five years ago in the heart of the British Empire across the seas, and that is what Sir Wilfrid Laurier did. He did not wait, he spoke, he blazed the way. There at the Queen's Jubilee when all the nations were looking on he took that position and from that time he fought steadily to see that it was maintained in every particular. I might quote not only the address my hon. friend has referred to, but also a speech which Sir Wilfrid Laurier made at the constitutional club in London, England, on July 7, 1902. I have in my hand a report which appeared in the London Times on the day following and what is the expression used there? Every member of the House will recall the expression and the occasion of its use. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

You may search the annals of history so far as the human eye can pierce into them, and you shall not find a parallel to the spectacle of which you are to-day the witness. The Empire of Rome in the heyday of her splendid power never reached that level of moral attitude. And the reason is obvious. The Empire of Rome was composed of slave states; the British Empire is a galaxy of free nations.

That is where we get for the first time the expression of the British Empire as a group of free nations. Sir Wilfrid Laurier used the striking, the poetic phrase "a galaxy of free nations." Hon. gentlemen opposite to-day use the expression "A community of free nations," or "A cluster of free nations," or "A family of free nations." Call it by any name you like the essence of the whole relationship is in the phrase Sir Wilfrid Laurier used, "A galaxy of free nations," and from that moment up to the present time we have sought to maintain that position—that is, all of us who have fought for Liberal tradition and sought to maintain it.

Now, what was the attitude of the Conservative press towards Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he took that stand? What was the attitude of some of those who belong to the party opposite? My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Rowell) has told the country. He says in this address:

What was the attitude of the Conservative press in regard to this? They charged Sir Wilfrid with being a separatist.

He goes on to quote from the Mail and Empire and he mentions that other Conservative journals and leaders of the Conservative party took the same position and indulged in the same criticism. He adds:

They failed to perceive that which Sir Wilfrid Laurier and those who shared his views saw, that there can be no permanent basis of union and no permanent plan for co-operation between the peoples of the Empire with a dominant race living in one country to which those living in a self-governing Dominion would be more or less subject; that the future of the Empire as well as its strength, and stability depended upon a frank recognition of equality in the status of the people in the self-governing Dominions with those of the Mother Country.

Note those words. I imagine my hon. friend might be tempted to say that while we had sought to maintain a certain status, we had not equality of status as we have it to-day. But here are his own words: either he spoke what was true then, or he did not speak what was true then. I think my hon. friend will say that he believes he was speaking the truth then as he believes he is speaking the truth to-day and at that time (1912) he said: Sir Wilfrid Laurier took the position that the strength of the British Empire and its stability depended upon a frank recognition of equality in the status of the people in the self-governing Dominions with those of the Mother Country. My hon. friend says further:

This assertion of our national status was necessary for the people of Canada to develop our own national self-consciousness and our own self-respect. It was necessary for the people of Great Britain in order that they might realize that they were dealing not with subjects but with fellow citizens. That this is our position, and that we are now a nation, is not only recognized by the statesmen of Canada but by the statesmen of the Mother Country.

The other day my hon. friend asked permission of the House to place on record certain excerpts from speeches delivered by the Right Hon. Arthur Balfour, the Right Hon. Lord Milner and by General Smuts. He told the House that the reason he wished to place these particular extracts on Hansard was to make it perfectly plain that not only was the status of Canada recognized here among Canadians, but that it was also recognized by the great leaders of thought and opinion overseas. Well, my hon. friend adopted exactly the same method in 1912, and he placed on record then in the course of his address before the Montreal Reform Club quotations from British statesmen to precisely the same effect. I shall not take the time of the House to read them, but instead of quoting General Smuts he quoted Sir Frederick Pollock. He also quoted Mr. Balfour and Mr. Asquith. He quoted all these gentlemen, for what purpose? To show that our position as a nation was not only recognized by the statesmen of Canada, but was equally recognized by the statesmen of the Mother Country. He said:

Nowhere have I seen this changed relationship more clearly stated than in an article on the Imperial Conference written by the editor of the Round Table. Referring to the resolution passed by the Colonial Conference in 1907, establishing the Imperial Conference, this writer says:

"This resolution"— —that is, a resolution passed in 1907, when, I think, my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) was present—

—"established the status of the Dominions as national entities, entirely distinct from that which inhabited the British Isles. It recognized that the basis of Imperial organization was the co-operation of five nations, not the centralization of power in the hands of the British Government as an Imperial Parliament. It finally destroyed the older conception of Imperial development, as a gradual re-union of the colonies with the Mother Country through representatives in either of the British Houses of Parliament."

But, Mr. Speaker, there are two or three more clauses that I wish to read. These are, I think, perhaps the most conclusive of any of the utterances of my hon. friend—and I again remind the House that these statements were made in the city of Montreal on November 11, 1912:

Some of the most important changes in our British constitutional system were not brought about by any Act of Parliament or legislature, but by the demand on the one hand for new or enlarged rights and powers, and the recognition of these rights and powers on the other. This momentous change from a colony of Great Britain to that of one of the free nations of the Empire did not require any Act of Parliament —British or Canadian—for its consummation It simply required a demand on our part for a new status and the acceptance and recognition of that new status on the part of Great Britain I venture to suggest—

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It gives me, Mr. Speaker, particular pleasure to read these words at this time and in this place—

I venture to suggest that when the history of our constitutional development is written among the great things that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has done none will appear greater than his perception of the fact that the status of Canada must be changed and that this change must be brought about, not by legislative enactment, but by the demand on our part for a new status, persisted in until the people of Canada were convinced of its necessity; persisted in until the statesmen of Great Britain were convinced that it was right. By this great achievement Sir Wilfrid has enlarged the liberties and improved the status of every Canadian citizen, and what he has done for Canada he has done for all the self-governing Dominions.

My hon. friend uttered those words while Sir Wilfrid Laurier was alive. I ask him: Will he not be the first to say that they are equally true now that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is no longer here?

Mr. ROWELL: Does my hon. friend want an answer?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should be pleased to receive an answer.

Mr. ROWELL: I say undoubtedly they are true. And what is true of Sir Wilfrid Laurier is equally true of Sir Robert Borden in connection with the work of the Peace Conference and the League of Nations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend's statement just made in such a straightforward and honourable way is interesting not only in regard to the meed of praise which he is prepared to concede to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but also because of his reference to Sir Robert Borden.

Let me repeat here, Mr. Speaker, that my purpose in quoting my hon. friend is not in any way to belittle the work of Sir Robert Borden or of the hon. gentlemen who were associated with him. I would say frankly that Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues stood firm for the maintenance of Canada's status—they did their duty by Canada in that regard. If they had done less they would have been derelict in their duty and would have been liable to the censure of this Parliament. Having done their duty, and done it well, they are entitled to the thanks of this Parliament and of this country.

But, Sir, let me add this from the words of my hon. friend in regard to what Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues have been able to achieve. They are the very next words that appear in the speech from which I have been quoting:

The welcome which Mr. Borden and his colleagues received last June was only made possible because of the work Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues had done for Canada.

I will ask my hon. friend if those words are not equally true?

Mr. ROWELL: If my hon. friend wishes an answer I am quite prepared to give it. I believe those words are equally true. I am prepared to give credit to whom it is due, and I think the other side should be just as ready to give credit to Sir Robert Borden and his colleagues too.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope we are. I should like to make it perfectly clear that in this matter we are not seeking for honours; all we wish is to have the position made clear and plainly stated. As between us, if you will, honours may be evenly divided. What I wish to make perfectly plain is what my hon. friend himself has emphasized, namely that the welcome which Sir Robert Borden subsequently received was only made possible because of the work that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues had done for Canada.

This is the next paragraph:

To-day—this was 1912—we stand in our relationships and in our negotiations, both in the mind of the people of the mother country and in the mind of the people of the other self-governing dominions, as one of the five free nations that go to make up the Empire. It is again the work of Liberal leaders and the triumph of the Liberal policy which has laid the broad foundation upon which alone the future strength and security of the Empire can rest.

Just one word in regard to the development of an Imperial organization. My hon. friend went on to say:

Some of our Conservative friends are very fond of talking about Imperial organization, they are fond of talking about representation in some Imperial body, they are talking about Canada having some voice in Imperial affairs.

I think this will interest particularly my hon. friend for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding):

While they have been talking and dreaming the Liberal leaders of Canada and the Liberal leaders of Great Britain and of the other Dominions, have been creating a truly Imperial organization for dealing with Imperial affairs.

We have in the Imperial Conference a truly representative body which, up to the present time, has proved itself capable of dealing with all important matters of Imperial concern . . . .

It is important for us to bear in mind some of the characteristics of this Conference. It recognizes the national status of the Dominions, as distinct from the mother country; it is truly representative in its character, being composed of the Prime Ministers of the mother country and self-governing Dominions; it is responsible in that each Prime Minister has back of him a parliamentary majority, and therefore has the power to implement the resolutions to which he gives assent; it recognizes the autonomy of all the governments and no resolution affecting any particular government can become effective unless assented to by it.

And this further word:

But Sir Wilfrid's contribution towards securing for us a safe and effective Imperial organization is not limited to a suggestion as to the form and work of the Imperial Conference. He has also done good work for Canada and the Empire in assisting to defeat proposals for Imperial organization which would have seriously impaired our rights of self-government. In so doing, he was not only fighting for Canada, but he was fighting for the whole British Empire.

That leads me to conclude by referring to the concluding remarks of my hon. friend the other day. After he had spoken at considerable length of the status of Canada, he said something to the effect that the choice to-day was between remaining part of the group of free nations comprising the British Empire and, on the one hand, either reverting to the old Colonial status, or, on the other, going in for complete independence. All of us will agree that it is unthinkable to speak about any return to the old colonial status; but my hon. friend did not put his hand on the real danger when he spoke about the alternative being complete independence. The thing about which we on this side of the House are alarmed is not independence or the maintenance of the status which we have as one of the nations comprising the British Empire. The thing we are concerned about and what we fear is the danger of swinging to the other extreme and developing a form of centralised Imperialism which we think would be thoroughly objectionable so far as the interests of this country are concerned. It is not to any status of Canada as one of the nations within the British Empire that we take exception. We wish to see that position maintained and strengthened; but we do not wish to see, through any insidious or other method, a condition of affairs brought about whereby the full autonomy of this country and of this Parliament will in any way be lessened or impaired by any scheme of Imperialism which will lead to a centralisation of the control of the British Empire in one centre, instead of the maintenance of the free self-governing position which we are privileged to enjoy at the present time.

We believe that position can be maintained by holding to the attitude of conference and consultation which was developed under the old Liberal administration; that it is possible for the British Empire to become, as regards the League of Nations, a league within a league, if you like, for the preservation of freedom amongst the different nations of the world. That position will be maintained by the attitude of conference and co-operation; it will not be maintained by a development which will lead to the loss of either of those features through any centralising tend-
5 p.m. ency one way or another. So, to make plain the position that we on this side take in regard to the question of status and what has happened in the last few years, we would say that the change that has taken place in Canada's status as a result of the war—and there has been in the last few years an emphasis which there had not been for many years previously—has not been any change in the nature of our status, but has been, as regards the British Empire and relations within the British Empire, a clearer defining of a status already existing. As regards the world, there has been an international recognition of that status such as never existed hitherto in the history of the British Empire, and for that international recognition we are first and last, and shall always be most indebted to the services of Canada's armies across the seas. That is where the credit belongs for the international recognition which has come; and as I have already said, as regards the clearer definition of the status, we are prepared and are glad to concede to the Prime Minister (Sir Robert Borden) and his colleagues that they have done their duty well in maintaining that status firmly.

So long as, in the last analysis, all matters pertaining to Canada in her external or inter-Imperial relations are made subject to the approval of this Parliament, so long as no action can be taken of which the Parliament of Canada does not have ample opportunity to approve, we shall feel that to all intents and purposes, we are a nation in the true sense of the word. But let the sovereignty of this Parliament be impaired as respects anything that concerns Canada in either her inter-Imperial or international relations, and we shall feel that the position of Canada as a nation has been menaced to that extent.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4250

25 March 1920 Houseof Commons

FRANCHISE BILL

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Franchise
Question
Second Resolution
Abstract D

Requirements in franchise:

D 4251

It should be above question.
It should be effective.
It should satisfy the public conscience.
It should secure that acquiescence in a verdict which should be the last word on all questions submitted to the people.
It should appeal to sense of right and justice, honesty and fair play.

The sanctity of the franchise is a fundamental principle of the institutions of a free people.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

use for assembly
Hansard
please return

The Bill before the House, the most important this session -

The most important before Parliament at any time.
Pertains to what is fundamental in citizenship.
At the foundation of all that pertains to self-government.

The questions, therefore, involved in a discussion on this subject, transcend all considerations of party; they are matters primarily of concern to the whole people.

In referring to War and its effects, pointed out -

Not merely material wealth destroyed;
Nor human life;
But faith in our political institutions.

The institution of government itself is on trial. Whether it is to survive the test of the times will depend on degree to which we are able to restore confidence in what has been lost of faith in the ability of a people to govern themselves, and particularly of a democracy to be true to its ideals of government.

Not faith in Government;
Nor faith in Opposition;
Nor faith in any party group or faction;
But faith in government and the machinery of government adequately to express the will of the people - the whole people - and not to frustrate that will by electoral or other devices.

Confidence has been shaken in the legislation Government has enacted - and doubt and uncertainty it has produced.

Mass of legislation re franchise - not in mind of people only;
but in mind of Govt. itself - "Minister of Justice:
"somewhat of a conundrum".

Congratulations on repeal of all this legislation.

Begin with a clean slate - so far as possible, efface from records "this stain upon our national career".

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Symbolical of the intention of the Government, not only to wipe out its own iniquities, but to forget and to forgive as well.

If that is the spirit in which the Government is approaching Parliament with this legislation; if the desire is to reunite the people of Canada, in sentiments of good-will and good works as respects the future, we on this side are prepared to meet them in that spirit.

That brings me to the attitude we intend to adopt towards 2nd reading.

Only one principle involved in this measure - the desirability for a franchise Act the terms of which shall be known and definite, and the provisions of which shall be fair and just. Heaven knows we want an Act; that legislation has been too long delayed; that its provisions, if fair, cannot be too speedily adopted; and that, once enacted, advantage cannot be taken of them too soon to secure the return of a Parliament which will be representative of the will of the people.

To the principle of the Act, therefore, we have no objection to take. As to certain of its provisions, however, there are modifications which we should like to suggest, and which, in the public interest we believe to be imperative.

Perhaps I might add just a word in this connection as to outstanding features of the Bill - and in doing so follow the broad outlines as set forth by the Solicitor General at the time of its introduction.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The purpose threefold. Perhaps I might take these up in the order presented.

1. Fix a uniform franchise throughout the Dominion.

The franchise is to be established upon broad principles. British citizenship one requirement.

Nothing could be fairer than that. If the Government adheres to this principle in spirit as well as in letter, they will have the hearty support of every hon. member of this side of the House. All we would ask - Should not profess one thing, and do another; should not give with one hand, and withhold with the other. Such a course, if adopted, could only make the last state worse than the first, so far as attaining the supreme national object of Canadian unity is concerned. Unity of heart and feeling, as well as uniformity of rights, that is needed; and the Government has a great opportunity to render a great national service, and I for one hope they may rise to it.

It was this thought which caused me to inquire of the Acting Prime Minister regarding any disfranchising Act. Reference in the Bill itself to such an Act - I take it that it is to a statute on the books, not to any Act that is contemplated.

The Solicitor General made mention of one exception - disqualification by reason of race.

I am sure there are many in this House who will feel that British citizenship is something which, in the matter of rights, is something which should admit of no exceptions. No doubt there are grounds of public policy for this exception, which the Minister will explain to the House.

As I read the sections of the Act, it appears to me that the exception is not so much an exception on the ground of race as it is a recognition of the peculiar problems with which one or more individual provinces may be faced; and that to this extent the Bill recognizes the spirit of the Canadian constitution, which is federal in its nature, and which seeks to preserve to the Provinces a voice in all matters of special concern.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

2. Provide a uniform method for the preparation of voters' lists.

A question whether Government, in its desire for uniformity, has not sacrificed considerations of even greater importance, viz: security - efficiency - economy.

On face of it, this looks like the use of provincial lists - which would be very satisfactory when such lists are based upon existing municipal lists, and not on a system of enumeration, which may or may not be far from satisfactory.

Let me illustrate what I mean:
Province of Ontario -
Provincial Election held last November.
If Federal Election held before November this year, these provincial lists would not be the basis.
What are the facts concerning these lists:
City of Ottawa - some 8,000 names left off;
City of Toronto - " 25,000 " " "
But for the referendum on the Temperance issue, the numbers left off would have been vastly greater.

Municipal lists are prepared by city assessors. Why should these not be made in all cases a basis, a basis for the Provincial as well as the Federal lists? They are prepared every year, and revised every year.

If Federal Election held after November, these provincial lists, as matters now stand, would be of no use. Mr. Drury indicates he intends to hold on till the last hour - till August 1923.

No lists whatever, everything, both in cities and rural districts, would have to be by enumeration.

In extending the system of enumeration in the preparation of lists, the Government is moving in the wrong direction. The effort should be to restrict it just as much as possible. It is certain to invite distrust, in however limited a measure it may be resorted to. The effort should be to confine it just as much as possible. Let the provincial lists be a basis where they are based on municipal lists and are adequate and uptodate; and let the municipal lists continue to be a basis wherever in any particular the provincial lists are inadequate or incomplete.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Come to principle where no provincial lists exist:

(1) as to urban centres.
(2) as to rural centres.

(1) As to urban centres:

Stages of procedure:
(1) registration.
(2) revision.

This follows largely practice to which we have become accustomed in urban centres.

The first point to notice is time within which registration and revision is to be completed.

All this work has to be carried out after the writ for an election has been issued. Just at a time when excitement is at its highest pitch, and errors most likely to occur, the army of enumerators to begin their work - without any lists as a basis.

Municipal lists should be a basis. The lists, if possible, should be complete at least a month before the elections are held.

This to be noted about urban lists - there is the possibility of revision before a judicial authority, and there is an element of finality.

(2) As to rural municipalities:

If these features necessary in case of urban centres, they are equally necessary in rural municipalities.

Here the Government proposes a departure from its own principles. There is no revision - no judicial authority to whom to appeal, no finality in the lists themselves. Everything is left wide open in a manner which invites fraud and crime.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Let me examine what is proposed:

Government appoints the returning officers - in district

Returning officers appoint the deputy returning officers.

~~Deputy~~ returning officers appoint the enumerators.

Enumerators prepare the lists and give them to

Deputy returning officers, who do what they please as to admitting voters on election day.

Here we find re-enacted all the worst features of the War-Time Elections Act - that blot upon our national career.

Recognized municipal lists should be a basis.

There should be time for a careful revision.

There should be revision before properly constituted authorities - judicial or quasi-judicial.

There should be finality in the lists.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers

Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES

CANADA

D 4258

16 April 1920 House of Commons

"G.T.R. PENSIONS"

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4259

April 16, 1920.

G. T. R. PENSIONS

An amendment necessary, if justice is to be done in a situation which involves the honour of the Government and Parliament, not less than the honour of the Corporation to which the Bill refers.

I bring it up now because it is absolutely the last chance in which it is possible for Parliament to right a great wrong which has been done a very large section of workers in this country, namely the conductors and trainmen involved in the strike of the G.T.R. in July, 1910.

Ever since the termination of that strike, there has been an effort upon the part of the Government to have the G. T. R. Company fulfill an honourable obligation ~~it's employees~~ entered into with its employees, and vouched for by Ministers of the Crown, and which it is the duty of this Parliament, as representing the people of Canada, to see is fulfilled if through any action on the part of Parliament that is possible at all. The question has become one entirely other than that merely of the rights and liabilities of two parties to a dispute. It is a question of whether, as between the Government of this country and a great corporation, in which in the eyes of the industrial classes of the country the honour of both is involved, the Government is to have the last word in upholding the cause of justice or the corporation the last word in defeating it.

Briefly review the situation:

When strike was settled, it was agreed:
-- in their former positions.

What was meaning of former positions?
It meant status and all rights pertaining thereto.

If the Company did not intend it to have that meaning, it was the Company's business to make that clear at time of settlement negotiations.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

My purpose in reading the lengthy communication to Sir Wilfrid was to disclose the negotiations in detail. Not once during the whole of them was the question of pensions mentioned as between the parties. In private, by the strike leaders, their point of view was given to me with respect to pensions. Moreover, it was publicly stated, but it was never raised in the negotiations, nor is it mentioned in the terms of settlement of the strike. It was not publicly referred to by the President of the Company till the strike was declared at an end and the men had returned to work, on the understanding that they were to be put back in their former positions. Then, for the first time, the then President of the G.T.R. intimated that the Company was going to penalize the men for having struck by depriving them, through a legal technicality, of their pension rights, and began a course of behaviour which was vindictive in the extreme. This course compelled the Government of Canada, under both administrations, to take a very firm stand with the Company. Both the Governments of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Government of Sir Robert Borden had to take a drastic course of action to compel the Company to fulfill even a part of its obligations. Laurier Government refused legislation till men reinstated. The Borden Government refused legislation. /[illegible]/ If both were justified in that course, they would have been equally justified in maintaining that attitude until the pension rights were also admitted.

Why at the time - legislation such as I am about to propose was not enacted. The strike took place in July, 1910. The question first was: reinstatement. Judge Barron appointed to inquire. Report long delayed. Enabling legislation was put through while Barron investigating. The vital legislation - the financial aid amounting to several millions - was refused. Then came the elections of 1911.

Other Government and its efforts.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Why not last session? I was in the House only two or three weeks. G.T.R. Acquisition Bill far advanced. Efforts were wholly in this direction, first protesting against undue haste; but, secondly, amendment to Act by refusing to ratify till agreement was brought down and submitted to Parliament. Government refused. Drew up agreement after session was over. Put in a clause re pensions - this very pension fund. Had before them at time following representations from men involved in strike. No heed paid. In committee, I moved to amend agreement, that amendment defeated. Now Minister states Government will not allow any amendments to agreement. Therefore, no alternative but to propose the addition of another section to the Act, independent altogether of the agreement, but which has an important bearing on matters of public policy and social justice involved in the acquisition of the G. T. R. system.

In the interest of public honour and social justice, Parliament, with the information it has before it, cannot afford to leave in any doubt the rights of the employees of the G. T. R. system with respect to their pensions and for the sake of public honour and social justice, I propose moving the following amendment:

What is it the G. T. R. Company is seeking to do? Thus far, it has been said they are seeking to avoid meeting a financial liability, or to pass on that liability to the people of this country oxes the railroad becomes their property. This is bad enough; but what the Company is seeking in reality to do, and what Parliament will be assisting them to do if they leave this matter in doubt, is something much worse. They are seeking to take for the shareholders (most of whom are in England) a sum of money which belongs to workingmen and their families in this country, which was set apart under an Act of this Parliament as a pension fund and for no other purpose. This money thus set aside, if the G. T. R. is permitted to carry out its purpose, becomes

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4262

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

SPEECHES

OF

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, M.P.,

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ON

THE RESTORATION OF PENSIONS TO GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

House of Commons Ottawa, Friday, April 16 and Thursday, April 22, 1920.

Speech on amendment moved in Committee, Friday, April 16, 1920.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In introducing this Bill the minister mentioned that he had two purposes in view: first, the correcting of these errors—this the minister said was the really substantial purpose of the Bill—and, second, that of ratifying the entire agreement. In the amendment which has just been voted down we on this side expressed our willingness to meet the Government in the matter of correcting the errors and of giving what was necessary in the way of ratification in that connection. The fact that the Government is not satisfied with what it proposes as the main purpose of this Bill leaves but one impression, and that is that in asking for ratification of the agreement as a whole there is some ulterior object which thus far has not appeared. When we are asked to ratify the entire agreement it is only proper that we on this side, before expressing our views one way or another upon it, should express our opinions in regard to any features of the agreement which we think should be made the subject of review before the final vote is taken.

In this House a day or two ago we had an important discussion on the manner in which certain of the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company have been treated by the company in regard to pensions to which they believed themselves to be entitled. As hon. members will recall, in the strike of 1910, which involved all the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway system, a settlement was effected whereby the employees were to be reinstated in their former positions. After the agreement had been adopted and the employees had returned to their duties, they found, much to their amazement, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company was unwilling to give them their rights in the matter of pensions.

In the agreement which we are being called upon to ratify I find the following under the caption "Superannuation and Pension Funds," which is section 17 of the agreement:

> The Grand Trunk Superannuation Fund shall continue in existence and shall continue to be administered as at present, and in accordance with the rules and regulations governing the same. The rules and regulations of the Grand

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Trunk pension system shall continue to be applicable to employees of the Grand Trunk system until a general pension scheme applicable to all employees of Canadian Government owned or controlled railways shall be adopted and become effective. The rules and regulations of the Grand Trunk Insurance and Provident Society shall continue to be applicable unless and until the Government shall adopt and make effective a general insurance scheme applicable to all employees of Canadian Government owned or controlled railways. In no case shall any acquired rights or vested interests in either the pension system or the Insurance and Provident Society be affected.

It will be perfectly apparent from this section of the agreement that the pension scheme of the Grand Trunk Railway Company is an important feature of it. But the two sentences to which I wish to direct particular attention are the following:

The rules and regulations of the Grand Trunk pension system shall continue to be applicable to the employees of the Grand Trunk system until a general pension scheme applicable to all employees of Canadian Government owned or controlled railways shall be adopted and become effective. . . . In no case shall any acquired rights or vested interests in either the pension system or the Insurance and Provident Society be affected.

The employees of the Grand Trunk who were involved in that strike have been deprived of their rights in the matter of pensions. The company claim that that is in consequence of the employees having gone on strike. As was stated in the House the other day, there is no doubt from a reading of the agreement in settlement of the strike that the company was obliged to reinstate the employees in their former positions and that their status was to be what it formerly had been. Any one interpreting the language as the ordinary man would interpret it—certainly as the employees involved in the strike interpreted it—would be led to feel and would have good reason to believe that the employees should have all the rights which they would have had if they had not gone out on strike.

But, Sir, the discussion the other day brought forth a statement from the Minister of Justice which really has caused me to intervene at this stage of the discussion and to ask that before we ratify this agreement this Parliament take such action as will make it absolutely certain that employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company receive what is their due from the company. When this matter came up the other day it was pointed out that some legal technicality might prevent the employees from receiving their rights, and the attention of the Government was directed to the distinction between what might be a legal right and what might be a moral obligation. I think I am correct in saying that the Minister of Justice said that the Government would impress upon the Board of Arbitrators just as strongly as they could the desirability of taking into account any claims which the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company might feel that they had in respect of their claims to pensions. I understood him to say that if the Board of Arbitrators found there were legal reasons which would make it impossible for the board to regard the liability of the Grand Trunk these claims in respect to pensions, then there would be a moral obligation upon the Government when it became sole owner of the road to make good these pensions. What does that amount to? It means that the Government is prepared to say to the Board of Arbitrators: If you cannot find that the employees are legally entitled to these pensions and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company should be held liable for them, we will shift that liability over to the people of Canada. I say that that is a course which should not be permitted. The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada owes the workingmen who were formerly in its employ every cent they should have received in accordance with the terms of the pension fund as it would have existed had there been no strike, and no technicality should be sanctioned by this Government or this Parliament which will permit the Grand Trunk Railway Company to escape their responsibility and the people of Canada to be mulcted in an additional payment of money which rightfully is a liability of the company. My hon. friend, as a distinguished member of his profession, knows very well that the moment the Board of Arbitrators are asked to consider the question they will say at once that this is a matter of contract which must be dealt with in accordance with principles of law; and that there are in the provinces statutes of limitation which make it impossible to take cognizance of matters of contract after a certain number of years have elapsed. It was ten years ago that the strike took place, and I think that, in Ontario at any rate, after six years have elapsed no court can take cognizance of any matter of this kind. Now, Sir, there is one court above all others in the land, and that is this court of Parliament, and I say that we at this time have it within our power to do justice to men who have had a great injustice done them for a period of ten years. A great wrong has been done a large working class in this country, and I for one purpose to exert every bit of my power as a member of Parliament to see that the wrong is righted.

I have different reasons for feeling strongly on this matter. In the first place, my name has been introduced into the discussion in a manner which would lead the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to believe that, because while a member of the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, I intervened to help in bringing about a settlement of the strike, therefore in some way I was responsible, or at any rate the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was responsible, for the employees not receiving their pensions under the Grand Trunk Railway scheme. In the House the other afternoon a communication was read, which I shall read again in a moment, and which carries with it its own implication. It is a copy of a letter which I sent to the leaders of the strike. The letter is dated, Ottawa, August 2, 1910, and reads:

Dear Sir:—Re dispute between Grand Trunk Railway Company and its employees in train and yard service.

I beg to confirm over my own signature the following wire sent you at a quarter past five this afternoon:—

"Confidential—Mr. Hays has given Sir Frederick Borden and myself an undertaking that the men will within three months from this date, be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions. We understand by the men all the men referred to in the agreement signed by both parties. In accordance with our understanding I shall expect to hear by wire immediately that the strike has been declared at an end. I will confirm this wire by letter over my own signature."

Yours faithfully,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
Minister of Labour.

S. N. BERRY, Vice-Pres., O.R.C.

JAMES MURDOCK, Vice-Pres., B. of R. T.,
Representative of the General Committee,
Grand Trunk and Central Vermont,
Grand Union Hotel, Montreal.

Reference to the calendar of that time will show that the communication was sent on a Monday, and reference to the agreement as to the settlement of strike differences discloses that the agreement was dated 31st of July, 1910, which was a Saturday. Now, what was the agreement? I shall read it:

Agreement for settlement of differences dated 31st July, 1910.

Re dispute between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and its employees in train and yard service.

1044—1½

By way of settlement of existing difficulties:

1. The company will put back as soon as possible the men other than those who have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation towards the new men.

2. The company will put into effect from May 1, 1910, the rates named in schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910, those rates to be embodied in the present schedule now in effect on this line, it being understood that those rates in no instance are a reduction in any existing rates.

3. The company will, on January 1, 1912, make effective in train and yard service on the Grand Trunk Railway, the rates of pay and the rules contained in the schedule or agreement on that date in effect on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway east of Fort William.

The three above propositions shall apply also to the Central Vermont Railroad Company, the said railroad to be substituted for the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Rutland Railroad to be substituted for the Canadian Pacific Railway wherever the same are used or understood in the above. (In the case of the Central Vermont by the "schedule of rates dated July 18, 1910" is meant the schedule issued by the management of that company since July 1.)

CHAS. M. HAYS,
President, Grand Trunk Railway System.

For the O.R.C.:
ROBERT KELLY,
N. FOY,
ED. L. SINCLAIR,
J. E. MUNN.

For the B. of R.T.:
JOHN MALONEY,
J. A. CONNOR,
W. C. BERRY,
P. A. HEBERT.
A. B. GARRETSON,
President, O.R.C.
W. G. LEE,
President, B. of R.T.

Approved: S. N. BERRY, V.P.
Approved: JAMES MURDOCK, V.P.

Members of the committee will see that the agreement was drafted and signed on Saturday, the 31st of July; that my telegram stating that the men would be reinstated was sent on Monday, August 2nd; that the first clause of the agreement said that the men would be back "as soon as possible," while in my wire I stated that the undertaking was that they would be back "within three months" from that date.

As I explained to the House the other day when we were discussing this question in another connection, we had succeeded, in the course of the adjustment of the difference, in getting all questions in dispute settled except the question of the time at which the men were to be taken back. The President of the Grand Trunk Railway Company desired to use in the agreement the words which appear there, "as soon as possible." He was unwilling to give any definite period of time; and Sir Frederick Borden, who was at the time Minister of Militia, and myself were in Montreal together and intervened between the company and the employees, helping to bring about

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4265

the agreement between the parties. But what we did in particular that was of significance in the matter was that we insisted on Mr. Hays fixing a definite period instead of the term "as soon as possible," and the reason why the strike could not be settled on the Saturday was our inability to get any definite assurance from him as to precisely what he meant by these words.

Let me recall the circumstances that existed at that time so that the Government and the country will see the significance of the request I am making at the present time. The Grand Trunk Railway system was tied up from Chicago to Portland. The whole of the system in Canada was in such condition that practically not a train was running. I think that some of the passenger trains were kept up, but so far as freight service was concerned traffic was absolutely tied up. There were towns throughout the province of Ontario in which the people were in circumstances almost equal to those that might exist in a state of siege. They could get no food or commodities from other parts, and the whole country was suffering from the effect of the strike. Every day, almost every hour, meant millions of dollars of loss in different directions, and it was all-important that the strike should be brought to a conclusion as quickly as possible. As I have said, everything was settled on the Saturday except the meaning to be attached to the words "as soon as possible," and it was not until Monday that we were able to secure a definition of them, fixing the limitation of three months. It so happened that at the time the strike was on Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister, was in the West. He had with him two or three of his colleagues, and at the moment the strike occurred I happened to be the only Minister of the Government in the city.

That being the case, and having had as Minister of Labour, some extra responsibility thrown on my shoulders in connection with industrial disputes, I took particular care to keep a record from day to day and, as I have mentioned, Sir Wilfrid Laurier being in the West, I took occasion to write him very fully that he might know exactly what had transpired in connection with the negotiations in so far as the Government was concerned. This evening I looked up some former files and I have here a copy of the letter which I sent to Sir Wilfrid Laurier at that time. It details the whole matter of the strike settlement, and I propose, with the permission of the committee, to place the contents of the letter on record, inasmuch as they disclose exactly what took place in the meetings between the employees and the company, exactly what was the attitude of both parties, and exactly what is or should be expected as a result of the settlement. It bears strictly on this question of pensions, because this is a vital feature of the settlement. In the interest of the men, I am desirous of having laid before the Board of Arbitrators the fullest information it can possibly have. I am still more desirous that Parliament shall deal with this matter firmly before it reaches the Board of Arbitrators, and that it shall deal with it so definitely in connection with this agreement that, so far as the Grand Trunk Railway Company is concerned, there shall be no escape from its doing what it is in duty bound to do.

There is the reason I have mentioned why we should take this position, there is also the shameful attitude which the Grand Trunk railway has assumed towards its employees ever since that dispute took place. In order that I may bring this particular matter to the attention of the public, let me read this one communication to illustrate how arbitrarily, how unfairly, that company has dealt with its employees. Here is a communication, which speaks for itself, from a conductor of the Grand Trunk railway:

Mr. C. FORRESTER,
Superintendent.

Dear Sir,—I was notified yesterday that I was to be taken out of service on account of not being able to pass eye examination before Inspector Kloyhill, and take the opportunity of making application for pension, as I notice by clause No. 8 and 10 in Book of Rules and Regulations of Pension Fund that I am entitled to it, that is if I understand the rules. I have been in continuous service for the company for nearly forty years, and during that time have been in charge of some of the heavy way freight trains, and have been very successful so far as I know in handling same; also think I should have a consideration for length of service, as I am getting well up in years and do not feel able to go out and battle the world over again. Am sixty years of age, and if you can possibly do anything for me along this line would look upon it as a favour.

Hoping to hear from you in respect to this matter, I am

Yours truly,
A. PENNINGTON.

This is the reply which he received:

STRATFORD, Ont., March 19, 1914

Mr. A. PENNINGTON,
Palmerston, Ont.

Dear Sir,—Referring to your letter of March 14 in regard to putting you on Pension Fund. Did you participate in the Trainmen's strike of 1910? If so, I regret to say that you cannot participate in the benefits of the pension. The fact that you voluntarily left the service at that time and was out of service for two weeks debars you from that privilege, from the fact that any one participating in the pension must claim continuous service, while those who left the service on account of that strike have a broken service.

D 4266

Yours truly,
C. FORRESTER,
Superintendent.

I need not go any further to give the reply made by Mr. Pennington to Mr. Forrester, but what I wish to point out is that the company deliberately construed the circumstance that the men had taken part in the strike as a ground for not permitting them to have the benefits of the pension fund, even though, as in this case, some had suffered bodily injury while working on behalf of the company and had served for forty years. The whole understanding on which the men returned to work, and returned to work in the public interest, as members of this House will appreciate when they hear the correspondence, was that they should be put back in the positions which they had held before. I say that that sort of treatment is unjust and unfair, that it is affecting thousands of men and their families in this country, and that it is the duty of Parliament to act where it sees so great an injustice affecting not only this class of employees but also having a direct bearing upon all the relations between employers and employees as well as a bearing upon the attitude of the Government towards labour, and when it is of such wide and far-reaching significance in relation to the whole industrial problem of our times. to intervene and see that justice is done.

There is a further reason. Not only do the Grand Trunk Company take shelter behind the language of the statute governing the pension fund but they would have the employees of the Grand Trunk believe that because this Parliament gave them that charter they cannot do anything for the employees on the ground that it would be contrary to an Act of Parliament. I want to make it perfectly clear to the Grand Trunk Railway Company that this Parliament is prepared to give them every right and to see that the statute is construed in a broad and generous way and in accordance with the spirit of the settlement. If the Grand Trunk is taking refuge behind any subterfuge and, as hon. gentleman must know, from what I have just read here, they are, we must take care to see that before this matter is disposed of all doubt shall be removed. My hon. friend says that the Government would be ready to assume this obligation if the Arbitration Board were to pass it on to the Government and not make the Grand Trunk liable. How can my hon. friend say this Government will have anything to do with the Grand Trunk railway at any time from now on? The Government has not such a strong hold upon life that it can hope to live very much longer, and before the arbitration is concluded we may see the Government out of office. The Government has not the support of the people of the country.

Mr. DOHERTY: Surely they will be safe in the hands of my hon. friend?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think they would be much safer than they are at the present time, but my hon. friend cannot speak even for his successors. He can only speak for himself. I want to put this matter beyond any peradventure, and to insist that this question shall be settled and settled satisfactorily. There is a time and a place for everything. We have come now to the last moment in which justice can be done to these men. It can be done by the action of this Parliament while we are dealing with this agreement. To put it off is to open the door to doubt to keep these men in a condition of uncertainty and to keep open this great grievance. Now is the time to close it up as speedily as we can.

Here is a communication which the Grand Trunk has sent to two or three members of the railroad brotherhood:

MONTREAL, April 8, 1914.

Mr. SAM'L PUGH,
Chairman O.R.C.,
Montreal, Que.

Mr. JOHN MALONEY,
Chairman B. of R.T.,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dears Sir:—Replying to your communication of February 2nd.

Under the Rules and Regulations for the establishment and administration of the Grand Trunk Pension Fund in accordance with the powers conferred upon the company by the Act of the Dominion Parliament passed in the year 1907, continuous service for a sufficient period is necessary to entitle an employee to ask that his application for pension be given favourable consideration.

The Rules and Regulations have been formally approved by the directors of this company in accordance with the requirements of the Act, and the committee is not at liberty to depart from or vary them.

Therefore the employees to whom you refer must again qualify by continuous service for a sufficient period from the date when they returned to the service of the company to again become eligible to participate in the privileges under the Pension Fund.

Yours truly,
HOWARD G. KELLEY,
Vice-President.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There, Mr. Chairman, is a distinct statement—

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Montreal, April the 8th, 1914. There is a distinct statement to the effect that the Parliament of Canada has in some way bound the Grand Trunk Railway Company so that it cannot fulfil the obligations which it is morally—and, I believe, in any true meaning of the word legal, legally bound as well to carry out. I say there is a technicality which they have thus far taken advantage of; and we have no right, in the interest of the working people of this country, in the interest of industrial peace in this country, and in the interest of justice, fair play, and decent treatment, to let this agreement go through and have this thing remain unsettled.

Now, Sir, there is a further reason, and that is that the working men belonging to the different brotherhoods have themselves appealed to the Government to see that justice be done to them in this matter. I share the surprise of an hon. member of this House who, when we were discussing the matter the other day, said he wondered how the Government, when they were drafting this agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or when they were bringing forward a Bill to give them power to make the agreement, gave no consideration whatever to the representations which had been made by labour. In this connection let me read the representations which the Government had before them at the time the Bill was brought into Parliament at a previous session. There was a meeting of the railroad conductors of America and Canada, held in May, 1919, and a resolution of the Canadian delegates was adopted and forwarded to the Government. Let me read the resolution in full, because it gives the strongest reasons why, at this time, we should see that this matter is finally and equitably settled:

Moved by N. Roy, No. 75, seconded by P. Hill, No. 624.

That we, the accredited delegates, representing all railway points in the Dominion, to the 36th session of the Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors of America and Canada, resolve as follows, that:—

Whereas in 1907, the Canadian Parliament enacted 6-7 Edward VII, Chap. 89, An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, empowering the Grand Trunk Railway Company to establish the Pension Fund from its earnings for the benefit of employees retired from the service on account of old age; and,

Whereas we believe Parliament, though it did not so provide in the Act, surely intended that the said Pension Fund would be administered by the Pension Department of the Railways fairly and without discrimination; and,

Whereas the said company, through its Pension Department has debarred its employees from the benefits of the said Pension Fund because they participated in a strike of the Conductors, Brakemen, and Yardmen, on the road in 1910, and,

Whereas, it is well known that the said strike was the result of the unreasonable attitude assumed by its then management, in refusing to grant the employees increased wages and improved working conditions based on the standard wage and conditions on other Canadian railways, and,

Whereas, it is well known that the transportation brotherhoods, including the Order of Railway Conductors, do not strike until all other means of settlement have been exhausted, and,

Whereas, the employees who participated in the strike of 1910 had the sympathy of the citizens generally and especially those citizens located along the said railway, and,

Whereas, the Government then in power affected a settlement, and it was agreed among other things that the employees would return to work and resume their standing in the service and their seniority rights held by them prior to the strike, as though they had been continuously in the service, and,

Whereas, the company has since the said agreement deprived the said employees who have retired from the service on account of the age limit from the benefits of the Pension Fund, alleging that their participation in the strike in 1910, broke their continuity of service with the company, and,

Whereas, many conductors and other train men that had served the company and the public faithfully and continuously up to fifty-three (53) years, and having reached the age limit have been retired from the service, and for the reason above stated debarred from the pension which they so sorely need on account of the low wages in effect on this road prior to the strike of 1910, and,

Whereas, the accredited representatives of the Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen having appealed to the management of the Grand Trunk Railway, and also to its Board of Directors domiciled in England, and its Chairman, Mr. Smithers, for the restoration of the said pensions without success, and in pursuance of the policy of these organizations to exhaust all legitimate efforts to reach a peaceful adjustment of all matters affecting the interests of their membership, therefore be it

Resolved; that we respectfully petition the Government and Parliament of Canada—

Notice those words. I am reading at the moment a petition from a large body of the workingmen of this country, not only to the Government but to the Parliament of Canada, and I am asking Parliament to hear that peititon.

to use their good offices to the end that the Grand Trunk Railway Company's Pension Department shall recede from its unjust attitude, and that in future it shall administer the Pension Fund of that company fairly and without discrimination, and that it shall pay to its employees all arrears of pension due them, and,

Whereas, we are advised that our Government is desirous of acquiring the Grand Trunk railway and incorporating it as part of our National Railway system, and is negotiating to that end, therefore, be it further,

Resolved, that we respectfully petition our Government not to conclude said negotiations for the purchase of the said Grand Trunk railway without providing for the protection of the pension interests of the employees concerned, and be it further,

Resolved, that we furnish a copy of these resolutions to the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, and to the following ministers of departments, and members of Parliament, namely:—The Honourable Minister of Railways, J. D. Reid; the Hon. Minister of Labour, G. D. Robertson, and J. E. Armstrong, Esq., M.P., Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons.

A. D. FIDLER,
Division No. 463, Calgary, Alta.,
Chairman, Caucus,
Canadian Delegates.

A. S. EMMS,
Division No. 611, Kamloops, B.C.,
Secretary.

W. V. HURDON,
Division No. 286, Fort William, Ont.

Mr. Chairman, there is a request from the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway system to the Government and to this Parliament that before this matter is concluded, justice be done to them. I repeat again, this is the only time, as far as I can see, when there is still an opportunity to heed that request. The Government thus far have ignored it altogether; they have paid no attention whatever to the demands of the Grand Trunk Railway employees in regard to this pension fund. They have talked fair to them in one way; they have done nothing in the way of action. They have repeated again the other day in the House what they have said to different deputations: "We will urge this;" "we will urge that,"—knowing full well all the time that all their urging does not amount to a snap of the finger. I say, Mr. Chairman, that is no way for a government to deal with railway employees. That is the kind of treatment that these men have had to put up with from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and if the Government themselves have ignored their express wishes in this regard, I, for one, demand that this Parliament hear them. Let me make my position as emphatic as it is possible to make it on this subject. We can now settle this question in a satisfactory way. All we have to do is to add to this agreement an amendment, which I shall propose as soon as I have concluded what I have to say, and the full rights of these employees will be finally determined and justice done.

Now, Sir, I must ask the committee to pardon me if the communication which I am about to read is a somewhat lengthy one but I think hon. gentlemen will find it extremely interesting. I am sure it will be a revelation, not only to the employees of the company—some of whom have been led to believe that others than those who were really blameable were responsible for their not receiving the pension—and I think it will prove a little enlightening to the people of this country. What I want to have the committee keep in mind as I read this communication is, that when these matters were under negotiation the whole of this country was tied up as a consequence of that strike, and that the attitude of the men and the attitude of the company was every hour affecting the interests of every citizen of this Dominion. The attitude of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was arbitrary and inconsiderate—I cannot use words too strong to express the feelings that I had toward the company in their behaviour at that time.

The action of the men was manly, considerate, with due regard for the interests of the people of this country. Had the action of the men been otherwise, with the action of the company what it was, Heaven alone knows what might have happened in Canada at that time. Our people as a whole are indebted to the working men on the Grand Trunk Railway system for the attitude which they then maintained, and they are indebted to an extent which they will never be able to repay. Now the chance comes to see that these thousands of men and their families who have been deprived of pensions shall have justice done to them. It is up to this Parliament to see that justice is done.

Well, Mr. Chairman, as I said Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in the West and I was part of the time alone in Ottawa—it was in the summer. Mr. Smithers, the president of the company, was, I think, about to go to the West, and as I was anxious that Sir Wilfrid should have full knowledge of the facts so that they could be placed before the president, I wrote very fully, well realizing that a strike of such great proportions would in all probability be of significance for some years to come, and knowing the men I had been dealing with, that out of it there might develop just what has since happened. My letter is dated August 4, 1910. I shall not read the first few pages, which deal with conditions that existed prior to and led up to the strike, but I shall read from the point at which I refer to the intervention of the Gov-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There, Mr. Chairman, is a distinct statement—

Mr. McKENZIE: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Montreal, April the 8th, 1914. There is a distinct statement to the effect that the Parliament of Canada has in some way bound the Grand Trunk Railway Company so that it cannot fulfil the obligations which it is morally—and, I believe, in any true meaning of the word legal, legally bound as well to carry out. I say there is a technicality which they have thus far taken advantage of; and we have no right, in the interest of the working people of this country, in the interest of industrial peace in this country, and in the interest of justice, fair play, and decent treatment, to let this agreement go through and have this thing remain unsettled.

Now, Sir, there is a further reason, and that is that the working men belonging to the different brotherhoods have themselves appealed to the Government to see that justice be done to them in this matter. I share the surprise of an hon. member of this House who, when we were discussing the matter the other day, said he wondered how the Government, when they were drafting this agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or when they were bringing forward a Bill to give them power to make the agreement, gave no consideration whatever to the representations which had been made by labour. In this connection let me read the representations which the Government had before them at the time the Bill was brought into Parliament at a previous session. There was a meeting of the railroad conductors of America and Canada, held in May, 1919, and a resolution of the Canadian delegates was adopted and forwarded to the Government. Let me read the resolution in full, because it gives the strongest reasons why, at this time, we should see that this matter is finally and equitably settled:

Moved by N. Roy, No. 75, seconded by P. Hill, No. 624.

That we, the accredited delegates, representing all railway points in the Dominion, to the 36th session of the Grand Division of the Order of Railway Conductors of America and Canada, resolve as follows, that:—

Whereas in 1907, the Canadian Parliament enacted 6-7 Edward VII, Chap. 89, An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, empowering the Grand Trunk Railway Company to establish the Pension Fund from its earnings for the benefit of employees retired from the service on account of old age; and,

Whereas we believe Parliament, though it did not so provide in the Act, surely intended that the said Pension Fund would be administered by the Pension Department of the Railways fairly and without discrimination; and,

Whereas the said company, through its Pension Department has debarred its employees from the benefits of the said Pension Fund because they participated in a strike of the Conductors, Brakemen, and Yardmen, on the road in 1910, and,

Whereas, it is well known that the said strike was the result of the unreasonable attitude assumed by its then management, in refusing to grant the employees increased wages and improved working conditions based on the standard wage and conditions on other Canadian railways, and,

Whereas, it is well known that the transportation brotherhoods, including the Order of Railway Conductors, do not strike until all other means of settlement have been exhausted, and,

Whereas, the employees who participated in the strike of 1910 had the sympathy of the citizens generally and especially those citizens located along the said railway, and,

Whereas, the Government then in power affected a settlement, and it was agreed among other things that the employees would return to work and resume their standing in the service and their seniority rights held by them prior to the strike, as though they had been continuously in the service, and,

Whereas, the company has since the said agreement deprived the said employees who have retired from the service on account of the age limit from the benefits of the Pension Fund, alleging that their participation in the strike in 1910, broke their continuity of service with the company, and,

Whereas, many conductors and other train men that had served the company and the public faithfully and continuously up to fifty-three (53) years, and having reached the age limit have been retired from the service, and for the reason above stated debarred from the pension which they so sorely need on account of the low wages in effect on this road prior to the strike of 1910, and,

Whereas, the accredited representatives of the Order of Railway Conductors and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen having appealed to the management of the Grand Trunk Railway, and also to its Board of Directors domiciled in England, and its Chairman, Mr. Smithers, for the restoration of the said pensions without success, and in pursuance of the policy of these organizations to exhaust all legitimate efforts to reach a peaceful adjustment of all matters affecting the interests of their membership, therefore be it

Resolved; that we respectfully petition the Government and Parliament of Canada—

Notice those words. I am reading at the moment a petition from a large body of the workingmen of this country, not only to the Government but to the Parliament of Canada, and I am asking Parliament to hear that peititon.

to use their good offices to the end that the Grand Trunk Railway Company's Pension Department shall recede from its unjust attitude, and that in future it shall administer the Pension Fund of that company fairly and without discrimination, and that it shall pay to its employees all arrears of pension due them, and,

Whereas, we are advised that our Government is desirous of acquiring the Grand Trunk railway and incorporating it as part of our National Railway system, and is negotiating to that end, therefore, be it further,

Resolved, that we respectfully petition our Government not to conclude said negotiations for the purchase of the said Grand Trunk railway without providing for the protection of the pension interests of the employees concerned, and be it further,

Resolved, that we furnish a copy of these resolutions to the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, and to the following ministers of departments, and members of Parliament, namely:—The Honourable Minister of Railways, J. D. Reid; the Hon. Minister of Labour, G. D. Robertson, and J. E. Armstrong, Esq., M.P., Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons.

A. D. FIDLER,
Division No. 463, Calgary, Alta.,
Chairman, Caucus,
Canadian Delegates.

A. S. EMMS,
Division No. 611, Kamloops, B.C.,
Secretary.

W. V. HURDON,
Division No. 286, Fort William, Ont.

Mr. Chairman, there is a request from the employees of the Grand Trunk Railway system to the Government and to this Parliament that before this matter is concluded, justice be done to them. I repeat again, this is the only time, as far as I can see, when there is still an opportunity to heed that request. The Government thus far have ignored it altogether; they have paid no attention whatever to the demands of the Grand Trunk Railway employees in regard to this pension fund. They have talked fair to them in one way; they have done nothing in the way of action. They have repeated again the other day in the House what they have said to different deputations: "We will urge this;" "we will urge that,"—knowing full well all the time that all their urging does not amount to a snap of the finger. I say, Mr. Chairman, that is no way for a government to deal with railway employees. That is the kind of treatment that these men have had to put up with from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and if the Government themselves have ignored their express wishes in this regard, I, for one, demand that this Parliament hear them. Let me make my position as emphatic as it is possible to make it on this subject. We can now settle this question in a satisfactory way. All we have to do is to add to this agreement an amendment, which I shall propose as soon as I have concluded what I have to say, and the full rights of these employees will be finally determined and justice done.

Now, Sir, I must ask the committee to pardon me if the communication which I am about to read is a somewhat lengthy one but I think hon. gentlemen will find it extremely interesting. I am sure it will be a revelation, not only to the employees of the company—some of whom have been led to believe that others than those who were really blameable were responsible for their not receiving the pension—and I think it will prove a little enlightening to the people of this country. What I want to have the committee keep in mind as I read this communication is, that when these matters were under negotiation the whole of this country was tied up as a consequence of that strike, and that the attitude of the men and the attitude of the company was every hour affecting the interests of every citizen of this Dominion. The attitude of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was arbitrary and inconsiderate—I cannot use words too strong to express the feelings that I had toward the company in their behaviour at that time.

The action of the men was manly, considerate, with due regard for the interests of the people of this country. Had the action of the men been otherwise, with the action of the company what it was, Heaven alone knows what might have happened in Canada at that time. Our people as a whole are indebted to the working men on the Grand Trunk Railway system for the attitude which they then maintained, and they are indebted to an extent which they will never be able to repay. Now the chance comes to see that these thousands of men and their families who have been deprived of pensions shall have justice done to them. It is up to this Parliament to see that justice is done.

Well, Mr. Chairman, as I said Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in the West and I was part of the time alone in Ottawa—it was in the summer. Mr. Smithers, the president of the company, was, I think, about to go to the West, and as I was anxious that Sir Wilfrid should have full knowledge of the facts so that they could be placed before the president, I wrote very fully, well realizing that a strike of such great proportions would in all probability be of significance for some years to come, and knowing the men I had been dealing with, that out of it there might develop just what has since happened. My letter is dated August 4, 1910. I shall not read the first few pages, which deal with conditions that existed prior to and led up to the strike, but I shall read from the point at which I refer to the intervention of the Gov-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

erament in the matter of settlement of the strike, and that naturally begins with what I cannot avoid as a reference to myself in my duties as Minister of Labour at the time. I wrote:

I was the only minister in the city during one or two days after the strike commenced, and the Immigration Department referred its messages respecting procedure as to strike-breakers, etc., and the Justice Department a telegram as to troops, to me. I took the ground that the law and regulations as laid down should be carried out with strict impartiality, and that no exception to any provision should be made in favour of one side or the other, that neither as to train service or military protection was any department of the Government to take any course other than that which it could justify on the basis of existing legislation. If requests came for troops through civic authorities in accordance with the provisions of the Militia Act well and good, the provisions of the Act should then be followed, otherwise the Dominion was to give no military protection. As to immigration, no exceptions were to be made to meet an emergency one way or other. This course Mr. Blake Robertson, of the Immigration Department, in the absence of Mr. Scott, carried out to my mind in a most efficient manner, so much so, that with the possible exception of the company, the public and all others interested are, I think, prepared to commend his action. Had he wavered, it is difficult to say what serious trouble might not have resulted.

My course in the department was to carefully size up the situation on the first day, see the extent to which the public were being embarrassed and then to bring about arbitration through force of public opinion, if that were possible. To this end, as you know, I addressed an open communication to each of the parties, and received evasive answers from each. I addressed second communications, insisting on a direct reply, and received an answer no less evasive from the company and one partially evasive from the men. The last named communication indicated a restricted authority, so I communicated again, with a view of getting an answer from a final source. This answer came on Saturday, the 24th, accepting arbitration as offered by the Government, and was immediately communicated to Mr. Hays. Mr. Hays gave no reply until ten o'clock Sunday night, at which hour he answered that the time for arbitration was passed. On Monday I wrote him, expressing the hope that as the one side were agreeable to arbitration, he might come later to express a willingness to do the same, provided this should appear to be in the public interest. All of these communications you have. Their effect, as a consequence of the attitude of the parties which they helped to reveal, was to draw public sympathy away from the company, with which it was pretty strongly at the outset, and to swing it with the men; so much so, that in almost every city and town of the province the boards of trade and the mayors of the several municipalities began passing resolutions and deluging the company with demands to refer the differences to arbitration. The voice of practically the whole press, Liberal and Conservative alike, became one in the same demand, while business concerns whose interests were suffering, and such organizations as wholesale grocers, the retail grocers, Canners' Association and the like, addressed resolutions in unmistakable terms to the company. Not only was the demand the same, but the position also,—the Government of the country had called upon the two parties to arbitrate, the Government represented the people,—one of the parties had responded and it was the business of the other to do the same.

Had Mr. Hays really desired arbitration he had reason enough, if ever man had reason, to grant it at that time. The value of the company's securities were daily depreciating in England and abroad; the company's system was paralyzed; its losses occasioned through the crippling of its business was mounting up to the million dollar mark and over; whilst its additional expenses in seeking to man the trains with strike-breakers and re-commence operaions in the midst of a struggle were only adding to the burden. From the financial point of view it was to the company's interests to settle; the people of the country wanted the strike ended, and the Government wanted it ended, but to all this pressure, and to public opinion in general, Mr. Hays remained wholly indifferent. This was the situation on Monday and Tuesday, a condition which intensified during the whole week.

On Tuesday we had a meeting of Council, at which I outlined what had taken place, and suggested that Sir Richard, as Acting Premier, should send some communication to Mr. Hays from the Government as a whole, this communication to be confidential. As the company was issuing statements from time to time to the effect that it was rapidly resuming operations on its lines, Sir Richard thought it would be well before taking a further step to get definite information on this source. Accordingly, we arranged with McDougald, of the Customs Department, to send a wire to the Collector of Customs in each town and city in the province, requested a wired reply, stating briefly the extent to which the strike was affecting business. Practically without exception the answers came in on the following morning from all parts of the province to the effect that on the whole of the Grand Trunk system not a freight car had moved in or out of the several towns from the time the strike had commenced up to the time of wiring. But what was worse than that, factories and mills were closing down in many places because raw materials could not be brought in or finished products sent out. It was also mentioned that shippers were being advised that the Grand Trunk could do nothing for some time. The C.P.R. and the other railways, where they were paralleling the Grand Trunk, had their facilities overtaxed and were not proving equal to the extra work put upon them. Customs receipts had fallen off considerably.

With this information before Council, on the following morning it was decided that a letter should be sent to Mr. Hays, and as Sir Frederick Borden was leaving the same evening for Nova Scotia, it was agreed that Sir Frederick would take the communication with him and see Mr. Hays personally, impressing upon him the seriousness of the situation from the point of view of both the Government and the country. I attach a copy of the letter, signed by Sir Richard, which, with some 40 enclosures, was the one taken by Sir Frederick to Mr. Hays.

Whilst we did what we could to bring pressure to bear on Mr. Hays in this direction, I had a feeling that a first-hand contact with the situation would prove ultimately the only means of dealing with it effectively. I did not like, on top of the communications I had been sending to the parties to rush in without a request, though I felt that if Mr. Hays did not yield to arbitration on the strength of the letter from the Cabinet, the public were strongly enough at my back to permit of my going down to Montreal and sizing up the situation with a view of giving the public a clear-cut statement as to who was in the right and who was in the wrong. To strengthen my position as much as possible I arranged by letting them know of my willingness to do so, to have a communication sent me by the men asking my personal intervention. Sir Frederick left on the six o'clock train on Wednesday. At midnight on the same day a message came from the leader of the men in the following words:

"May I be permitted on behalf of the men on strike to request that as a minister of the Crown and representative of the people you come to Montreal and by further effort try and arrange an honourable settlement either by arbitration or negotiation."

As Sir Frederick Borden had taken a communication to Mr. Hays I requested the men over the long distance telephone to keep their communication to me confidential. I was fearful lest knowing I had been requested to come by the men, it might embarrass Sir Frederick in his endeavours with Mr. Hays. I promised I would go down but asked that nothing should be said as to why I was going or at whose instance. I got into communication with Sir Frederick and asked him to wait over a day with me, hoping that Sir Frederick with Mr. Hays and I with the men, we might together assist negotiations to the extent of getting a settlement.

I left Ottawa on Thursday afternoon. Sir Frederick met me at the Windsor station, and we dined quietly together. Sir Frederick said he had found Mr. Hays very pleasant, and that we would have little difficulty in arranging a settlement. He had arranged for our meeting Mr. Hays together at his house later in the evening, and at ten o'clock we drove to Mr. Hay's residence and had a talk with him and Mr. Fitzhugh on his verandah from ten until after midnight. In the course of this conversation the whole situation was carefully reviewed, the respective positions of the parties fully gone into and explained, and we left on the understanding that Mr. Hays was quite ready for a settlement to be negotiated, if Sir Frederick Borden and I could succeed in bringing it about. I left Sir Frederick at the Windsor shortly after half past twelve and myself drove on to the Grand Union Hotel, the headquarters of the Canadian leaders. I had had my secretary inform them earlier in the evening that I was having a talk with Mr. Hays and would be along and see them when it was concluded. I found them waiting and we had a conversation of an hour or two. It was agreed that they were to come to my room at the hotel on the following morning and we would consider what propositions it would be possible to submit to Mr. Hays. In the meantime, as Mr. Hays had expressed the opinion that no final settlement could be made without the presidents of the two orders, who happened to be in Toronto, it was arranged that they should be sent for, so that they could be on hand for final negotiations. This was the point we had reached by three o'clock Friday morning.

Friday, July 29: At ten o'clock on Friday morning the full committee of the men assembled in my room at the hotel. The whole situation was carefully gone over, and I was given authority to say to Mr. Hays that in the event of his agreeing to reinstate all the men, excepting those who had been guilty of violations of law or destruction of the company's property, the men were prepared to accept any of the following alternatives:—

(a) To leave all matters in dispute to arbitration, or (b) to accept the award of the Board of Conciliation and Investigation in toto, and where there might be any doubt as to the meaning of a particular clause to leave it to the chairman of the board to say what the meaning was.

Since the board's award had not been fixed the date at which the standardization of rates was to become effective, the men were prepared to either:—

(a) leave the question of the fixing of the date open for future negotiation; or (b) leave this question to arbitration and abide by the result; or (c) to consider arranging some satisfactory basis of settlement of this date by negotiation.

I was authorized to say that on the acceptance of any of these alternatives, with the understanding that what was accepted in the case of the Grand Trunk would also be accepted in the case of the Central Vermont, which is considered a part of the company's system, the men were prepared to return to work immediately; or if Mr. Hays preferred to have the difficulties settled by negotiation in the first instance and before the strike was declared at an end they were ready to commence negotiations at once.

During the afternoon I called on Mr. Hays at his office and had a long talk with himself, Mr. Fitzhugh and Mr. Biggar. Mr. Hays did not express either approval or disapproval of any of the alternatives, but asked me if I would leave him a copy of them. I did so on the understanding that it was not to be considered an offer from the men to him, but rather a proposal from myself to each of the parties as being the basis on which I believed a settlement could be immediately effected. His unwillingness to give any immediate decision was put down to the circumstance that Mr. Garretson, the President of the Order of Railroad Conductors, and Mr. Lee, President of the Order of Railroad Trainmen, would have to pass on any decision which was ultimately come to, and he thought it would therefore be better that proposals should come with their sanction before he gave them final consideration. I told him that Messrs. Garretson and Lee had been sent for, and asked if I might arrange for a meeting between himself and them to consider the several propositions. He agreed to this, it being understood that I would meet with Mr. Garretson and Lee and the committee again on the following Saturday morning, see him later, let him know what they were prepared to do and that a joint conference would then take place in the Board Rooms of the Grand Trunk Railway on Saturday afternoon. This concluded the first day's negotiations, and Sir Frederick, at my request, very generously remained over to be present on Saturday along with myself during the course of negotiations.

Saturday, July 30: On Saturday morning Messrs. Garretson and Lee, who had come in the interval from Toronto, together with other members of the committee, called at my room at 9.30. They endorsed the stand taken by the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Canadian members of the committee and authorized me to lay before Mr. Hays as from the men the several alternatives suggested on the day previous and to say that the acceptance of any one of them would be agreeable as a basis of settlement. After this interview, I asked Sir Frederick to come with me to Mr. Hays' office. We were met by Mr. Hays, Mr. Fitzhugh, Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright. Mr. Hays began discussing with me the alternative proposals of the men, raising many objections. His endeavour during this interview was to have me commit myself on the different points but I was careful not to do so, though I did not hesitate to give him frankly my opinion as to the merits of any points he might raise.

As to the reinstatement of the men, he professed from the outset to be willing to take them all back, with the exception of a few who might have been disorderly. Sir Frederick and I both took the stand as we were working now for a settlement in the public interest, that it was just as well that bygones should be bygones, and no discrimination made, except in the cases mentioned, because of men having gone out on strike. We had not been discussing very long before it became quite apparent that it was not a way out, but objections, that the company was seeking to raise. I took the position that I was not there to argue for one side or the other, but to assist the two to come together, and failing that to let the public know the reason why they were unable to do so. Mr. Hays seemed anxious that I should return with a counter-proposition to the men, and keep on going back and forth between them. I felt instinctively that his motive in this was not genuine, but that it was, if possible, to draw me into a position where he would find some means of escape by claiming that I had failed in making clear some understanding, or had misrepresented some situation, and I therefore demurred a little to this request, pointing out that I had already told the men that in accordance with the arrangement reached the day previous that they would be asked to come to a joint conference in the afternoon, and had got them to make the offer of the alternatives which I was presenting on that understanding.

We got our first true light on the situation when the question of the Central Vermont was raised. I pointed out that as all was considered part of the one system and the men had gone out simultaneously on both roads, they were standing together for a settlement of both at the same time. Mr. Fitzhugh thereupon broke into the conversation and said that when the Grand Trunk dispute had been before the Board of Conciliation in Toronto, the Chairman, Mr. Atkinson, had refused to consider the Central Vermont in connection with it. I said if this were so I would take the position that we, as members of the Government, were not concerned with the Central Vermont. I then turned to Mr. Fitzhugh and asked if he would be willing to leave it to Mr. Atkinson to say just whether the Central Vermont had been included or not. Mr. Fitzhugh replied: "No, I would not." After this reply of Mr. Fitzhugh I appealed to Mr. Hays, Mr. Biggar, Mr. Wainwright and Sir Frederick as to whether they believed it was possible for any progress to be made with negotiations if we were to deal with each other in that fashion. I felt considerably annoyed, and could not help showing it, whereupon Mr. Biggar began to apologize for Mr. Fitzhugh, and say I could not have understood his meaning. Mr. Fitzhugh added that he had not intended to say anything offensive, that I must have misunderstood him. I replied that I hoped this was so, and to prevent any misunderstanding I would repeat the questions. I then asked him if I were right in understanding that he had said that at the time the Grand Trunk dispute was before the Board in Toronto, Mr. Atkinson, the Chairman, had refused to consider the Central Vermont in connection with it. To this he replied, yes, that I was quite right. I then said that in the event of that being so, Sir Frederick and I would take the position that the attitude taken by Mr. Atkinson should bind us also. (I did not know at the time of speaking what attitude Mr. Atkinson had taken). I then said: "Assuming that this point should be controverted, would you, Mr. Fitzhugh, after having said that Mr. Atkinson ruled out the Central Vermont, be willing to leave it to Mr. Atkinson to say what he had done provided that we agree to follow his course and abide by his decision?" To this Mr. Fitzhugh replied that he did not think he should be asked to answer this question. I mention this instance because it is only one of a very large number, of which both Sir Frederick and I could tell you, of a not disimilar kind. From this on through the whole negotiations it seemed absolutely impossible to hold either Mr. Fitzhugh or Mr. Hays to any statements that they made. After Mr. Fitzhugh had taken the position he did, I said to Mr. Hays that it did not seem to me any good purpose could be served by our attempting negotiations, and was about to withdraw when Mr. Hays suggested we should all go to lunch. He invited Sir Frederick and myself, but we explained that it would hardly do for us to accept his invitation, and we went to the Windsor together. Mr. Biggar followed us to the elevator trying to apologize for Mr. Fitzhugh. I told Mr. Biggar he might tell Mr. Fitzhugh that he should remember he was speaking to responsible ministers of the Crown, that he must be responsible for the words he used, that I had hardly expected to see him put his company in the position he had, and that if the Central Vermont were to be the stumbling block in the settlement negotiations because of the stand he had taken, I for my part, would take good care to see that the public were fully informed of the cause.

When Sir Frederick and I returned after lunch, Mr. Hays and the other gentlemen were in the Board Room. I had Sir Frederick see Mr. Hays before I went up an explained to him that there was no use to try any bluff on me one way or the other, that I was there to do a piece of work and meant to see that it was done to the satisfaction of the public, that I would go any length in assisting him to get a settlemen which would be satisfactory to him, and be as considerate of his position in the eyes of the public as possible, but that in this matter there was a big public duty to be discharged and it would have to be regarded in that light. When I came to the Board Room, Mr. Hays took the position that I should go and see the men and take counter-propositions from him, that we should carry the negotiations over Sunday and perhaps reach a settlement during the coming week. I took the position that this strike was seriously affecting the public and that every hour was important, that it was not my business or purpose to act as an intermediary except in a way that was likely to secure results, that as the two parties would have to come face to face at some time in the proceedings they might as well do so at once. Sir Frederick also intimated that he was desirous of leaving on the following morning, and that it would be quite impossible for him to stay over longer. By holding firm to this position Mr. Hays finally agreed that we should send for the men. The committee was on hand within half an hour. Negotiations then commenced between Mr. Hays and Messrs. Garretson and Lee, and we were favoured with about as interesting an afternoon's discussion as I think either of us has ever been privileged to listen to. Sir Frederick had gone down to Montreal with feelings very strong against the men. He told me that he had seldom been more impressed by the closeness and fairness in reasoning than he had been in listening to Messrs. Garretson and Lee. In every argument, he said, the men had the better of the company.

At the joint conference Mr. Hays submitted amendments in reply to the proposals which the men had made. They were base, so far as the rates of pay were concerned, on the award of the board, but left out altogether the question of rules, and the men made it apparent that any settlement would have to include rules at some time, though they were prepared to consider what time this part of the award should go into effect. To make a long story short, we had, by half-past seven on Saturday night, reduced all the points at difference down to three simple propositions, the first relating to the putting back of the men "as soon as possible"; the second to the conditions to become effective at the present time and the third as to the date at which the standardization of rules as well as rates was to go into effect. In consideration of Mr. Hays moving the standardization of rates from January 1, 1913, the date he gave out at the time of the strike as that at which he would put into effect the standardization of rates, to January 1, 1912, the men agreed to forego the standardization of rules, (the main point in which was the payment on a mileage instead of on a per diem or monthly basis) from the present time, as awarded in the board's report, until the date at which the rates of pay were also to be standardized. Then, instead of accepting the rates of pay as set forth in the award of the board at present the men agreed to accept the rates as given out by Mr. Hays since the strike commenced, provided that in no case these rates were to be made lower than the rates existing prior to the strike. Everything, in other words, was settled, except the meaning of the words "as soon as possible." The men held out for an immediate reinstatement. Mr. Hays held out for reinstatement "as soon as possible" without giving any definitness to these words, though professing openly that he meant by them to take all men back, and practically all almost immediately. Mr. Hays refused to yield an inch on this ground, and told the men they might do as they pleased, that was as far as he would go. He then left the room with the other officers of the company. I asked the men to remain with Sir Frederick and myself. When we were alone I said to them that I would like to speak very plainly, that I thought they had made a mistake in not agreeing to arbitration at the very outset, that in this they had not been true to the principles which their brotherhoods had always professed, that I was willing to grant that there might have been grounds for doubt as to the bona fides of any offer, but it was their business to have accepted it and to have looked to the Government to see that it was made good; that as they had struck without arbitrating Mr. Hays had been forced to take on some men to fill their places, it was only reasonable that they should allow him some time to get rid of strike-breakers he had employed, and to maintain the position which the business community generally would expect him to maintain; that the words "as soon as possible" saved him in the eyes of the public, on the other hand, it was only reasonable that he should give these words some definiteness of meaning to all of us present. Having anticipated this very difficulty at the start, I had taken care when with the Canadian Committee at the first interview, to thresh out this point with them, and I got from one of the leaders in his own handwriting a statement which he thought would cover the ground, the men having met me at that time by agreeing to the use of the words "as soon as possible" provided it could be understood that they did not mean a time longer than thirty days.

Mr. CROTHERS: Was it not ninety days?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Thirty days in this case. This was the preliminary statement handed to me by one of the leaders. They were agreeable to thirty days; afterwards we had to change it to ninety days.

This statement I took out of my pocket and showed to Messrs. Garretson and Lee. I mentioned that in speaking to Mr. Hays I had felt justified in virtue of it, in saying that I thought thirty days should be allowed him to get rid of men who had been taken on as strike-breakers, that he knew I was committed to this extent and that under the circumstances I thought they could waive immediate reinstatement and allow thirty days. At once they said they would be wholly agreeable to this, that if Mr. Hays would give his word to Sir Frederick and myself that by "as soon as possible" he meant not longer than thirty days, the strike might be declared at an end on the basis of settlement which had been reached up to that time.

When we got back to the company's offices at nine o'clock I saw Mr. Hays personally and tried to persuade him in the interests of all concerned, to allow the first clause to go on the thirty days understanding, pointing out that as president of a company where such vast interests were concerned it would not do for him to let the wish of subordinate officials govern in a matter of this kind. It was perfectly clear in my own mind that a longer period was desired by some men only for the purpose of carrying out threats they had made that if the men once went out some of them would never get back again. He asked me to come in and talk over this phase with Mr. Fitzhugh, Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright. This Sir Frederick and I did, each of us strongly taking the position that a settlement should be reached on this understanding. We left him for a short time and he then came up to the Board Room with his other officers. The different points were gone over pro and con. We were agreed on everything except the words "as soon as possible," Mr. Hays repeating this over again, that we had got down now to a point where only three words "soon as possible" were keeping us apart. The men conceded the thirty days to meet him on this. He went over each statement carefully, saying that he wanted to make sure that he had them quite correct, and then left the room, as we all supposed, to draft a final agreement. He came back with a let-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4273 (1)

ter addressed to Messrs. Garretson and Lee containing three propositions, at the end of which he had written, "We understand that the foregoing propositions are practically what you have accepted, with the exception of No. 1, which you think should be in the following form." He then set out the clause the men had suggested as to reinstatement and added that if they insisted upon their form of dealing with that portion of the difficulty he would agree to arbitrate as to which form of No. 1 should be adopted, his or theirs, the Board of Arbitration to consist of one arbitrator named by each of the parties and the third nominated by the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec.

When we examined the letter Mr. Hays had written it turned out that not a single one of the propositions was what we had all understood had been the position reached. Instead of May 1 being mentioned as the date at which new rates of wages were to come into effect, July 18 was fixed as the date. It had been agreed that C.P.R. rules as well as rates were to go into effect from January 1912, but his new draft did not mention C.P.R. rules, but made reference to rules in the award, with a clause that they might be subject to modifications to be mutually agreed on between the company and committees representing the men. These changes which completely altered the whole agreement as it had been come to tentatively were pointed out to Mr. Hays. He admitted one mistake after the other, saying that clearly there was an error. Notwithstanding that every one felt more or less shocked or exasperated, we got over this difficulty and back again to where we were before he took the proposals down-stairs. There was left then only the first clause and the three words.

Sir Frederick by this time had become pretty well tired of Mr. Hays' methods of negotiating and began himself to put one or two questions to Mr. Hays, asking him to name some time—any time—a year or more, as long as it was definite, within which he would agree to take back the men, but he could get no answer from him one way or the other. The men said as to arbitrating between the two propositions they were willing to leave them to either Sir Frederick or myself to say what was a reasonable time, that they would not bind us to thirty days, but leave us to name any period we thought suitable, but this Mr. Hays would not agree to. Finally, after some pretty sharp words between Mr. Hays and the men and some very pointed questions from Sir Frederick, Mr. Hays got up in a very excited condition and went away, telling us we could do what we liked. Before he left, the men turned to him and said, "Mr. Hays if you are unwilling to complete a settlement with us at the present time, here is out last proposition: It is to leave this whole matter to a board of Arbitration, the arbitrators to be named, not by ourselves or by you, but by either Sir Frederick Borden, Mackenzie King, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy or Sir Wilfrid Laurier. We will take any board named by any one of these gentlemen, and we will leave it to you to say which one you wish to name the board, or we will agree to a Board of Arbitrators chosen in any other way that is fair."

You may know what a pass matters had come to when both Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright came to Sir Frederick and myself, and begged of us not to judge him too hastily. I then got hold of the men and asked them not to declare negotiations at an end; the following day was Sunday and to let us have one more try on the next day. Their reply was "Mr. King, we were through, but as you have asked us, we wish to close no door, we will wait just as long as you say." It was now after midnight, and Mr. Biggar, Sir Frederick, Mr. Wainwright and myself drove up to the Mount Royal Club where we talked the situation over for another hour and a half. Both Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Biggar offered to help us all they could. It was agreed before we left that they should see Mr. Hays in the morning and we should see him in the afternoon and see if we could not come a little closer together.

Sunday, July 31.—It was nearly three when Sir Frederick and I turned in Sunday morning. We breakfasted together after a sort of night's rest and after breakfast I drew up in the form of an agreement what he and I, listening to the negotiations, believed and knew to be the several propositions tenatively agreed to. We decided that we would lay this proposed agreement before each of the parties and give them each a chance to sign. In this way we could test the bona fides of each beyond question. Moreover, in order that Mr. Hays should be afforded no reasonable excuse for hesitating to make an immediate settlement, we decided that we would place as interpretation of the words "as soon as possible" a period not exceeding three months, instead of thirty days, as giving ample time to reinstate all the men, and also affording some measure of punishment to those who may have been offenders in mild ways. Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Biggar came to our rooms about noon, and we read over to them the terms of this proposed agreement. They agreed with us that the several propositions it contained were those tenatively agreed to by the parties on the night previous, and they thought they should prove acceptable to Mr. Hays. It was then arranged that they would see him before three and that we would meet him about half past three.

In accordance with this arrangement we arrived at Mr. Hay's house at half past three. He invited us into his billiard room with Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright. They had arranged to keep Mr. Fitzhugh away, so as not to embarrass the situation. We opened out by mentioning that we had all been tired the night before and that in this state of mind things had become a little confused, and that to clear matters up we had written out what we thought had been the points reached by the two parties. I had had about ten of these statements prepared, it being my intention to have copies ready to hand around should there be several of us considering them at the same time. I went over each proposition and each was agreed to in turn by Mr. Hays. When we had concluded the document we were all agreed that it contained the tenative arrangement, and that if we could find a satisfactory solution of the words "as soon as possible" the strike would be ended. Sir Frederick and I then said that we thought instead of thirty days, if three months were named, that ought to meet the situation. It would give ample time to find places for men at present employed. Mr. Wainwright and even Mr. Hays also agreed that there would probably be only a very few that the company would wish to keep. When we thought Mr. Hays was about to sign he suddenly turned to us and said, "Well gentlemen, where do you come in on this? I give my note for three months, it falls due and the obligation is wholly upon me; where do you come in?" Sir Frederick replied that we became the endorsers. We had a little laugh over this and thought Mr. Hays was only joking, but he went on to speak of different things, what hard luck the road had had in different directions, of the need of reduction of coal duties, of increased allowance for carriage of mails, etc., etc. We told him that of course we could not speak for the Cabinet, that we were only two members, but that we would certainly be only too pleased to represent to our colleagues anything he might do to help out the present situation. We thought they would not be lacking in good-will toward him for anything he might do. He then said he thought if we wanted him to take back any of the men we should agree to take any men who had been taken on since the strike and whom he might not be able to find positions for or get rid of at the end of the three months. He said he supposed work could be found for them on the I.C.R. or if not on the I.C.R. provision might be made in some other way.

D 4274 (1)

I happened to know that all of the men who have been taken on have been engaged by the month, and that he is under no real obligation to them, and I felt that he was only bluffing for some reason of his own, and when Sir Frederick asked me what I thought of it, I said that it seemed to me very reasonable that Mr. Hays should make such a request, that in fact it showed his good faith in the promise he was giving to reinstate all of the men. We were asking him to take back every one; he said he had obligations to some whom he had taken on since the strike commenced; we therefore, I thought, should be prepared to meet him at this point, provided the obligation were not likely to be serious, as he himself had stated. Sir Frederick said he held the same view, and then used words to this effect: "Now let us see what is the extent of the obligation we are assuming; we agree that if there are any men who have been taken on since the strike and whom Mr. Hays may have still in his employ at the end of three months and is unable to find positions for, the Government should relieve him to the extent of undertaking to find some suitable employment, either on some of the railways in the Dominion or in some other way." After Sir Frederick and I had each carefully stated our obligation and asked if this were right, and it was so admitted by Mr. Hays, he said, very well, that he would sign the agreement on that understanding. He then took the nine or ten copies of the agreement which I had drawn up, went to another room and returned with all of them duly signed.

He had said before leaving that I could, perhaps, when I got back to the hotel or later on, send him a little memo of the obligation on each side. I had felt instinctively that there was something to be watched in this, and therefore decided to write out the memo on the spot, and while Mr. Hays was away signing I drafted out what we had understood was the nature of the obligation. The draft which I then prepared and which I read over in an unfinished form to all present was as follows: (Of course it was understood that any arrangement made in this connection was to be entirely confidential, as was also the interpretation to be put on the words "as soon as possible" so far as the public was concerned. Sir Frederick and I were only to give our word to the men that Mr. Hays had given this assurance to us):

By the way, may I say here in parenthesis, lest it should appear that I am communicating any matter which it was decided at the time should be confidential, that I repeated over and over again to Mr. Hays, during the negotiations, that one of the reasons why I desired him to settle was that there would be no necessity for making public the extraordinary record which I am giving to this House at the present moment. I told him that if, when a settlement was made, he did not carry it out he might expect the whole transaction from beginning to end to be made public.

"Re settlement of dispute between G.T.R. Company and employees in train and yard service.
"Confidential.

"Dear Mr. Hays:

As hon. members will remember there were none of these men in the employ of the company at the end of three months because the strike breakers were employed only for a month, and we knew at the time we were negotiating that there would be no obligation towards any of them because the strike would be over. We were not taking on any liability for the Government but we simply included this in the draft.

"With regard to the agreement signed by yourself to-day as a means of settling existing differences and our conversation in reference thereto, we understand that you undertake to reinstate within three months in their former positions in the company's service, all of the men involved in the present strike. We have your statement that since the strike commenced you have taken on a number of new men, any of whom still in your employ three months hence you will be under obligation to provide for. It is apparent to us that the present strike cannot be terminated unless you give the above undertaking. We realise that its continuance even for a day, to say nothing of an indefinite period, will mean heavy financial, not to speak of other forms of loss to individuals in all parts of the Dominion, as well as serious injury to industrial and commercial conditions in Canada and without his knowledge we feel we would fail in our obligation to the people of Canada, whose trustees we are in this matter if we allowed the possibility of your being unable to provide for all such employees to prevent a settlement. We therefore undertake, in order to prevent such a contingency, that the Government of Canada at the end of three months will relieve you of such obligation as you may still have in this respect, by providing in a fair and equitable manner for any men who have joined the Company's service since the strike commenced and who may be still in your employ and for whom you are unable to make further provision, etc., etc."

When I had read over this draft Mr. Hays said he did not like the word "reinstate" and I asked him what he would suggest instead, and he said "take back." I said very well, it would read then, "undertake to take back in their former positions in the Company's service."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4275

Thereupon without a moment's notice, Mr. Hays said: "This is not my undertaking at all; you are to look after the men out on strike; I am to take back as many of them as I can, and any whom I do not take back you are to provide for." Sir Frederick and I were dumbfounded. We went carefully over the whole conversation that had taken place and pointed out wherein there had been no room for misunderstanding. Sir Frederick drew attention to the way in which he had stated the obligation of the Government. I pointed out that in virtue of his suggesting the words "take back" for "reinstate" it was clear that up to that moment there could be no doubt in his own mind as to the nature of his undertaking. There was no moving Mr. Hays. He seemed to get into a sort of rage and said that if that was the interpretation we had put upon his words he would like the agreements containing his signature back. I said to him: "No, Mr. Hays, we cannot give these documents back to you. We said we intended to submit the same document to both parties and to give each a chance of signing. We thought it was due to you to have the first opportunity, now we must give the men the same opportunity as we have given you. We must present the same document to them and ask them if they are prepared to sign on the same understanding as to the meaning of the words "as soon as possible," namely, three months, which was what Sir Frederick and I stated to you was the limit we thought should be placed upon them. The question of all of the men being taken back has been clear from the start, seeing that according to your own words it was only on the meaning of the three words "soon as possible" that there was any hitch at all."

Sir Frederick by this time had begun to see that Mr. Hays had made up his mind that he would not have a settlement. He went over to him as he was standing beside the table and drawing up squarely in front of him and looking him straight in the eye, said in a cold deliberate way: "Mr. Hays, a situation has arisen in this country which is very critical indeed. We have done all as members of the Government, that it is in our power to do to relieve this situation. We have gone down on our knees "or words to that effect" to you in our endeavour to make it easy for you in every particular to do what is in your own interest as well as what the public are demanding. You have blocked proceedings at every turn. For this strike and all that has grown out of it and may grow out of it, the responsibility must rest with you; yes, with you." This took Mr. Hays a little by surprise, and he said, "Sir Frederick, you should not speak that way." I said: "Mr. Hays, I happen to be another member of the Government, and as another member of the Government of this country, I repeat to you every word that Sir Frederick has uttered." Sir Frederick and I then withdrew.

On reaching the hotel we had the full committee of the men come to my rooms. We laid the agreement on the table before them and asked if they were prepared to sign this agreement on the understanding that the words "put back as soon as possible" meant taken back in their former positions within three months. They said they were, and we asked them to sign on this understanding which they did immediately. This was between five and six o'clock on Sunday afternoon. We then said, "It remains for us to say to you that Mr. Hays has given us his undertaking that this was the meaning which he attaches to these words. As soon as we are in a position to give you our word that this is his undertaking will we be in a position to say that the strike is at an end"? To this they replied yes. We then mentioned that we had not as yet secured this undertaking in a form that was entirely satisfactory, but hoped to be able to and that as soon as it was obtained we would communicate with them at once.

When we had thus arrived at this point—we had in our possession a document the meaning of which was absolutely clear and the contents of which covered all the points of difference between the parties, and it was signed by each in their own handwriting, but the strike was not at an end. An agreement but not the settlement had been effected. There were two alternatives left to Sir Frederick and myself, one to draw up a brief statement which would make clear to the public the point to which negotiations had brought us and the reason why they did not result in settlement. This meant disclosing everything, with all of possibility it carried with it to Mr. Hays and his company, to say nothing of other possible consequences. The other alternative was to make still another attempt to save Mr. Hays from himself. I prepared a brief statement in accordance with the first alternative, and which was as follows:—

"The attached is a copy of a document in our possession, bearing the signatures of the parties to the present dispute and arrived at after days of a close and careful negotiating. As soon as we are in a position to give to the men at present on strike an assurance that it will be carried out according to the context as understood by us at the time the signature of each of the parties was obtained, the strike will be declared at an end. Until such time the responsibility for the continuance of the strike and all that may grow out of its continuance, in our opinion, rests with Mr. Hays. The words "as soon as possible" are understood by us to mean within three months; and by "put back" we understand, taken back to their former positions. This was the meaning as we understood it at the time the document was signed by Mr. Hays. This understanding Mr. Hays has since repudiated. We have the assurance of the committee of the men that the instant it is made good the strike will be declared at an end."

As the second alternative, I drafted the following letter to Mr. Hays to be signed by Sir Frederick and myself:—

MONTREAL, July 31, 1910.

"Re dispute between Grand Trunk Railway Company and employees in train and yard service.

Dear Mr. Hays:—

"The enclosed document, bearing your own signature and the signatures of the other parties to the present dispute on the Grand Trunk railway, contains the terms of an agreement on the acceptance of which the present strike will be ended. We think that the meaning of all the clauses is sufficiently clear. As, however, some misunderstanding as to the meaning of the words "put back as soon as possible" in section one, we would say that by "put back" we think should be meant, taken back to their former positions; and by "as soon as possible" a period not longer than three months. If you will give us an undertaking that your company will carry out the terms of this agreement on this understanding we are in a position to give you and the public an assurance that the strike will be immediately terminated.

D 4276

"It is apparent to us that the strike will continue unless you give this undertaking and realizing how all-important to the interests of the Dominion it is that a speedy settlement should be reached, we feel it is our duty to say and we are prepared to say, that if at the end of three months' time there should be still in your employ any men whom you may have engaged since the strike commenced and retained in virtue of the terms of an engagement at present existing, the Government of Canada will relieve you of such responsibility as you may be under in view of contractual relations by undertaking to find suitable employment for such men.

Yours faithfully,

F. W. BORDEN,

W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

CHAS. M. HAYS, Esq.,
President, Grand Trunk Railway,
Montreal, Que.

I had completed the first statement which Sir Frederick agreed accurately represented the situation, when Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright arrived at our rooms. I read the statement over to them and they immediately became quite alarmed. Mr. Biggar said that the giving out of such a statement might produce civil war. He could not say that it did not represent accurately the position of affairs, and we pointed out that the people of the country had been looking to us for four days to know who was responsible for the continuance of the dispute, and it was now nigh time that they should know. Sir Frederick, while I had been out of the room, had spoken of our intention to write Mr. Hays an official letter, whereupon after hearing this statement read, Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright asked if we did not intend to write Mr. Hays first. I told them we did, and it was then understood between the four of us that a final letter should be sent to Mr. Hays, that I should return to Ottawa and lay all the facts before such members of the Government as might be present, giving to our colleagues the above statement as the views of Sir Frederick Borden and myself, and our recommendation that failing a satisfactory answer from Mr. Hays the whole correspondence should be made public. Sir Frederick had cancelled his stateroom three times in succession, and felt that he could not longer delay his return to the East. I went with him to the station at 6.30 and saw him off. As we were so rushed during the end my secretary had not time to typewrite the draft of the proposed letter from Sir Frederick and myself to Mr. Hays. I had him read over to Sir Frederick what I had proposed we should say, and Sir Frederick agreed that would be satisfactory. He then signed a sheet in blank, with the understanding that I was to add my signature to the letter to be written on his sheet and send it as soon as typewritten. When I returned to the hotel from the station I saw that the letter was properly written, and then considered what steps should next be taken. I felt that to mail it to Mr. Hays would mean only further correspondence and that after all what the country needed at almost any cost was a settlement of the strike. The extreme danger of its continuance in the light of circumstances as they were it would be impossible to forecast. Accordingly I decided not to return to Ottawa that night, but to make another try with Mr. Hays. I rang up Wainwright and saw him at his house just as he was retiring for the night. I took over the letter we had prepared and explained to him our intended procedure. I asked if he thought it would help matters if I took the letter personally to Mr. Hays, and on his advice I did so. When I reached Mr. Hays' house it was a little after ten. Mr. Hays was retiring and sent down word that unless it was important he would be glad to leave matters over until the morning, but that if I really wished to see him and did not mind coming upstairs he would see me in his dressing gown. I sent back word that before coming over I had seen Mr. Wainwright and discussed with him the advisability of calling at so late an hour, but that as I was about to leave for Ottawa and had a communication which was to be left with Mr. Hays, Mr. Wainwright had thought it would be well were I to see him personally before going; that under the circumstances if it were agreeable to him I would certainly go to his room. Having received a favourable answer I went upstairs.

I got back to the hotel about eleven, and met Mr. Fitzhugh in the corridor. I asked him if he would come and have a little supper with me. He came in and we talked together until they turned out the lights in the dining room. Before we separated I told him what had transpired during the day as to the signing of the agreement by each of the parties and pointed out that the whole question had now shifted altogether from one of a dispute between the parties and terms of settlement to the personal honour of Mr. Hays in the eyes of the public and the country, and that I hoped he would co-operate with Mr. Biggar, Mr. Wainwright and myself in finding some way to avoid a disclosure of the unfortunate impasse reached.

I rang up Mr. Wainwright next morning at about seven o'clock, told him of my talk with Hays and Fitzhugh, and said I hoped he would with Mr. Biggar be able, on the opening we had left, to get matters successfully concluded, above all to seek to avoid a continuance of correspondence as it only meant a more serious situation for Mr. Hays later on. About 9.30 Mr. Wainwright rang me up and said that he and Biggar had seen Mr. Hays and that he thought we had now reached a point where I would be able to say "Amen" to the whole situation. Would I come then to his office and see him and Mr. Biggar before keeping the appointment with Mr. Hays which had been fixed for eleven. When I reached Mr. Wainwright's office he handed me the following letter from Mr. Hays:

"August 1st, 1910.

"Sir FREDERICK W. BORDEN,
"Minister of Militia and Defence,
"Ottawa, Ont.

"Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
"Minister of Labour,
"Ottawa, Ont.

"Gentlemen,—I have your favour of date July 31st in re dispute between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and employees in train and yard service, with memo of terms of proposed settlement of existing difficulties. I think we are all actuated by the same motives,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4277

viz- the restoration of full service on the Grand Trunk Railway with every consideration possible to the men who went out on strike, and while we are not entirely in accord with you in the meaning you attach to the clauses quoted, where room exists for a different opinion, there should be no difficulty in arriving at some mutually satisfactory settlement, should occasion make necessary, and with this understanding your proposition is accepted.

"Yours truly,

"CHAS. M. HAYS,
"President."

When shown this letter, I gave the one obvious reply, that it meant nothing, and if accepted by Sir Frederick Borden and myself as giving the assurance required would only lay us open to having taken as an assurance what was not such in fact. Thereupon Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright explained that Mr. Hays had nothing of the kind in mind, that as a matter of fact he had arranged that if this letter were not satisfactory and left any room for doubt, Biggar, Wainwright and myself were to come to some understanding as to the interpretation to be put upon its words,—the understanding to be embodied in the memorandum to be attached to the letter, this memorandum to be signed by Mr, Hays and myself. I said immediately a satisfactory memorandum could be drawn up that would be wholly agreeable and we began to discuss its terms. Mr. Biggar presented me with a typewritten memorandum which he thought would meet the case. The memorandum as presented was anything but satisfactory. The first clause read as follows:

"The men shall within three months from this date, be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions. This, however, is not to require the removal from any of such positions, of men who were in the company's service prior to the strike; the intention being that those formerly occupying such positions shall get them back from time to time as vacancies occur."

I pointed out that the second sentence of this paragraph nullified the first; that unless all of the positions spoken of in the second sentence became vacant before end of three months it would become impossible to carry out the undertaking in the first sentence, which was the essence of the whole situation. Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright admitted this and struck out the second sentence. They then asked me whether I thought the Government would undertake to look after the men who had been taken on the company's lines west of Detroit, between Detroit and Chicago, and east of Montreal, between Montreal and Portland. I replied that we could hardly be expected to do that, that I thought that by undertaking to look after such men as might be left in the Company's employ in Canada, we were going about as far as it would be possible for the Government to go. They were also of that opinion, and having drafted a memorandum on these lines, they took what was acceptable to me, and what I think they believed to be fair and in accordance with Sir Frederick's undertaking and my own, to Mr. Hays. They were absent about an hour, and then came back with a memorandum, the first sentence of which, instead of reading—

"The men will, within three months from this date, be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions—" read—

"The men formerly in the company's train and yard service in Canada will within three months from this date be taken back into service and within that time be placed in their former positions."

I saw at once that here again was a new device to enable Mr. Hays to carry out one of only two possible intentions in his mind, either to have no settlement at all, or to settle only on the basis of not taking back all the men, which he knew very well was the only basis on which a settlement could be reached, except by a strike which might last for several months. I pointed this out to Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright. They replied that they did not think such was in Mr. Hays' mind, that he had said, if we were limiting our obligation to Canada, he should limit his obligation to Canada also, and that for this reason he felt the memorandum was absolutely fair. Besides he did not see why as Canadian Ministers, we were concerned with the Yankee end of the situation.

Knowing that Mr. Hays had been unwilling to negotiate a settlement until Messrs. Garretson and Lee as presidents of the organizations were on hand, in order that whatever was come to might be binding on all; knowing too, that the question of who were included in the word "men" or "all men" had never once been raised in the whole discussion, either with me privately or in negotiations with the men or in anything that occurred during the time that Sir Frederick was present; knowing that the one and only pretext up to that time had been the difficulty of finding an interpretation to the words "as soon as possible" which related to time and not to nationality; knowing further that by a deliberately false manœuvre this ground had been shifted by Mr. Hays away from the question of time to the class of men to be cared for by the Government (i.e. those of the strikers who might fail of reinstatement instead of those of the men engaged since the strike who might still be in the Company's employ at the end of three months); knowing that in the letter sent to Sir Frederick Borden and myself in reply, another evasion of the whole question had been sought, with the deliberate intention to have the Government shoulder responsibilities which might place it before the whole labour world as having intrigued with a corporation to gain a certain and,—I could not help feeling how fraught with truth were the words that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

I left Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright and returned to the hotel. They thought I had gone to see how this proposition would appeal to the men, they had said Mr. Hays wished me to put it to the men, and if they would not accept it, that would be their own lookout. Sir Frederick and I as Ministers would have done our duty, and the Canadian public would be well satisfied at our having taken the stand which we had taken, and that public opinion would strongly back Mr. Hays in his patriotic endeavours.

When I reached my room I drafted two letters, one to Messrs. Murdock and Berry the Canadian leaders. It was a draft based on the assumption that I could get from Mr. Hays all that had been asked in reference to Canada, and concluded with the request that they would advise me whether or not this would be acceptable to the men whom they represented. The other letter was a letter to Mr. Hays in reply to his letter to Sir Frederick and myself, briefly mentioning that there should be little difficulty in our arriving at an understanding as to what was meant by the words on which he placed a different interpretation than our own and ending with a request that he inform me wherein his interpretation differed from ours. I called the committee to my room and read over to them the draft letter which I had addressed to Messrs. Berry and Murdock. I said that I was not submitting that letter to them, that I had not received from Mr. Hays the undertaking therein expressed, but that I would like to know whether if such an undertaking could be received and were such a letter sent by me to them, would the strike be ended. They replied that I knew as well as they did that it would not, that for them as Canadians to agree for themselves alone to what had been gained for them through their fellow workers all over the system would be to play the part of traitors to their fellowmen. My answer to them was that as Canadians I would be mistaken in them if I thought they would take any other stand, and that as men I would be ashamed of them. I asked them, however, if they saw into what position the whole strike would be brought if such a communication should be sent and an answer demanded from them. I pointed out that they could not blame Sir Frederick and myself if Mr. Hays put this proposition up to us, as I was afraid he might do, and demanded of us to pass it along; that we should then be obliged to write a communication such as I had written to them. They admitted this was so. I told them that was all I wanted; it was not my intention to allow them to be put in this position before the public of Canada. On the other hand, I was anxious that they should know just how far the Government of Canada was standing by them in an endeavour to see fair play and to get justice in the present situation. They replied to me: "Mr. King, whatever you do, whatever you ask, or whatever you say, we will approve of your course."

I then returned to Mr. Wainwright's office. When he got hold of Mr. Biggar they asked me how the men had taken the proposition. I replied to them that I had made no proposition to the men, that so far as the men were concerned I was through with them; I had their signatures to a document on a certain understanding which they were prepared to stand by; that I had no reason to doubt their faith in the obligation they had assumed, and that the only thing which was now preventing a settlement and which had prevented a settlement from Saturday night up to that time, was to my mind the mala fides of Mr. Hays; that I was prepared to be still undeceived as to this, but I hoped they remembered, and as advisers of Mr. Hays would see that he thoroughly understood, that every step in the endeavour to find the light in this situation might some day be publicly disclosed. I then asked if I was right in understanding the letter given me in the morning over Mr. Hays' signature as replying to Sir Frederick's and my own, and was informed, "yes." I then drew from my pocket the following letter, and said, "Give this to Mr. Hays as my further reply to him:

"MONTREAL, August 1, 1910.

"Dear Sir: —I have your letter of to-day acknowledging the receipt of the letter of July 31 from Sir Frederick Borden and myself, and note that you say that you are not entirely in accord with Sir Frederick and myself as to the meaning we attached to the clauses quoted. We have given you the meaning and the only meaning it has seemed possible for us to place upon the clause in question. However, if room exists for a different opinion, I agree that there should be no difficulty in arriving at some mutually satisfactory settlement. Perhaps you will kindly inform me wherein the meaning you attach to the clause quoted is not in accord with Sir Frederick's and mine, or what is the meaning you attach to this clause.

"Yours faithfully,

"W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
"Minister of Labour."

"Chas. M. Hays, Esq.,
"President, Grand Trunk Railway System,
"Montreal."

When Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright received this letter they were in a state of consternation. They each admitted frankly to me that Mr. Hays was a man that nothing could be done with, and they saw no possibility of a termination of the strike. We spent an hour talking over the position, trying, the three of us together, to find some means that could end the difficulty. Before leaving I turned to Mr. Biggar and Mr. Wainwright, and said: "I see only one faint glimmer of hope which can save all. It means more in the way of responsibility than I can take on my own shoulders, but perhaps my colleagues, knowing the situation, will help to carry it with me, to save this country and to save Mr. Hays." They asked me what it was. I asked Mr. Biggar if the reason Mr. Hays had given for refusing to include all men in his undertaking was because I had limited the Government's obligation to the men in Canada. He replied: "Yes." I said: "Do you think that if the Government were to extend its obligation to include all, Mr. Hays would extend his also." Mr. Biggar replied that if he did not there would be no ground left for him to stand upon. Then I said: "Very well, Mr. Biggar, you can give this letter to Mr. Hays, and you can say to him at the same time that if that is his reason, if he is prepared to sign the understanding we have reached on the ground that 'the men' means exactly what it says in the one paragraph as well as the other, I will be prepared to ask my colleagues to give me authority to sign the memorandum on the basis of this understanding, but before I ask them to do this Mr. Hays must have expressed his readiness to sign without reservation, mental or otherwise. I will then know, as you will know, that that alone, knowing the man we are dealing with, can terminate this strike and save all the direful consequences which must follow from either its continuance or a disclosure of what has transpired is an effort to negotiate a settlement." Biggar and Wainwright looked more than relieved. They agreed that the obligation could mean little or nothing, and virtually admitted that it was simply a pretext; after it was understood that Mr. Biggar would spend the morning with Mr. Hays and secure, if possible, his signature, and that Mr. Wainwright would come to Ottawa and be present to sign there on behalf of Mr. Hays with his authority, after Mr. Hays had signed in Montreal himself, and take back the document with my signature if it could be obtained. I left them and returned by the 10.30 train to Ottawa, getting in at 1.30 a.m.

Tuesday, August 2—This was the position when I was again at my office on Tuesday morning. I inquired what ministers were in the city, and found that Mr. Brodeur and Dr.

D 4278

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Pugsley were the only ones present. Mr. Wainwright arrived at noon. He had not yet heard from Mr. Biggar, but said he expected to do so any moment. We agreed that we should meet at the club. Mr. Brodeur joined me at luncheon, and when we came out of the dining room we met Mr. Wainwright, and I asked him if he had received word from Biggar. He said he had; that all was now satisfactorily arranged, if the Government could see its way to enlarge its part of the undertaking. Mr. Biggar had, while we were talking together, suggested the words "men on the Grand Trunk system," as the best words to include in the document, it being understood that the Central Vermont might have to be considered as part of the system if Mr. Hays so suggested. Mr. Biggar, however, did not intend to raise the point with him. Wainwright said: "In the phone message which I have received Biggar tells me that Fitzhugh has insisted with Mr. Hays on having the clause read 'The Grand Trunk Railway or Central Vermont.'" "The Central Vermont," he said, "is Fitzhugh." I then told Mr. Wainwright that Dr. Pugsley and Mr. Brodeur were the only other ministers in the city. I had expected from a wire Sir Richard had sent me from Kingston that we would be having a meeting of the Cabinet (but Sir Richard had been unable to come). On hearing this Wainwright said that Mr. Hays had signed the undertaking as submitted to him by Mr. Biggar, and that he (Wainwright) had been authorized to say that on my signing, either alone or with the consent of other ministers, that would be enough, and that he was authorized to sign at this end on Mr. Hays' behalf the similar document we had here. I then asked Mr. Wainwright if he would meet Dr. Pugsley, Mr. Brodeur and myself at three o'clock. Mr. Brodeur and I talked over the whole situation, and we all met in Dr. Pugsley's office at three o'clock. I then went over the whole story with Dr. Pugsley and Mr. Brodeur in Mr. Wainwright's presence, very much as I have narrated it in this letter, so that they were familiar with all that had taken place. I asked Mr. Wainwright in their presence if he were quite certain that they were agreed to sign this undertaking in the form in which we had finally drafted it; this would end the strike. He said: "Yes." I asked him if we did not, did he know of anything else that would save the situation. He was still more emphatic in saying that he did not; that he felt this was absolutely the only thing that could be done to, on the one hand, terminate the strike, and on the other avoid an open rupture between the Government and Mr. Hays and the disclosure of all that had taken place. Wainwright said that he doubted if all of the men that would be left on the system, including the Central Vermont, would amount to more than a few dozen at the outside, if, as a matter of fact, there were any at all. All the men who had been engaged had been hired only by the month, and there were few of them who were really any good. Besides, the company would be opening up new parts of lines, and would be needing extra men before the next three months were completed. He did not think the whole thing would really amount to anything. I asked him if he were quite positive there could be no further hitch. He said: "Quite." Also, he said to Dr. Pugsley and Mr. Brodeur: "I am ready to sign on the authorization of Mr. Hays, who has already signed, and if my authority to do so should be ever questioned by him, I am prepared to hand in my resignation as vice-president of the company."

It was perfectly evident to my mind that there could be no estimating the seriousness of the situation that might arise were the public on the morrow to be informed that despite all that had taken place in the way of negotiation there was only a prolonged dispute to be expected on the road. I had been given to understand by the men that the engineers and firemen were going to quit unless a settlement were reached,—not out of sympathy, but on the ground that the trains not being properly manned they felt it too hazardous to continue their runs. With this prospect before us, and knowing the man with whom we were dealing, I felt it was our duty to sign, and so expressed myself. Dr. Pugsley and Mr. Brodeur were of the same opinion, and we three then signed the memorandum, and Mr. Wainwright signed as follows: "Authority of President, by William Wainwright, second vice-president, Grand Trunk Railway system."

I then returned to my office and sent a confidential wire to Messrs. Murdock and Berry, the Canadian leaders, stating that Mr. Hays had given to Sir Frederick Borden and myself an undertaking that the men would within three months be taken back into the service and within that time placed in their former positions, and that in accordance with our understanding I would expect to hear from them by wire immediately that the strike had been declared at an end. Within half an hour I received this word. About this time Mr. Biggar phoned me from Montreal to know how negotiations were proceeding. I told him what had transpired and that the strike was off. I then wrote Mr. Hays, saying that having received from him the undertaking asked for in our letter of July 31, Sir Frederick and I were able to assure him, not only that the strike would be immediately terminated, but that it had been declared at an end. I then mailed to each of the parties under registered cover, copies of the agreement by which each were bound. I wired you, mentioning that the strike had been concluded through Government intervention, and after wiring Sir Frederick gave out to the press copies of the agreement without comment, other than that the agreement spoke for itself. Before the night was over, I am informed, every man from Chicago to Portland over the whole system had reported himself as ready for duty.

This letter, I fear, is already much too long, but it has seemed to me owing to yourself and the Government that all of the important circumstances should be fully narrated and carefully recorded before there is possibility of any future misunderstanding.

And then there is one paragraph—I am omitting some others here—which shows our position on this matter and which shows to what extent the interests of the men were really protected and safeguarded at that time.

There is one other thing:

This is still part of my letter to Sir Wilfrid.

I see by the press that Mr. Hays is proposing to consider as cancelled all obligation which his company may be under in the way of pensions, partially or all but fully earned by any of the men who may have gone out on strike. A pension has always been considered a reward of service,—not a manacle to fetter personal liberty. Some of the men who have been out on this strike have, I understand given thirty-four years of their life to the company's service. They, according to Mr. Hays, are to lose every cent of their pensions, and start in as new men. Unless Mr. Hays or those who control his company, are prepared to recede from this position, my own individual view is that the Parliament of Canada would be justified in refusing to grant any company with which Mr. Hays is concerned any further consideration of any kind, and that the Government should lead Parliament in this view. If, as Mr. Hays will probably say, he cannot legally grant the pension, Parliament might help to rid him of this limitation by enacting legislation which will give him the legal power he requires. It is to be hoped for the sake of the interests of the company, to say nothing of the rights of others, that his directors will not allow him to persist in a stand of this kind.

Mr. BEST: Is there a postscript?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know my hon. friends opposite are anxious to get through with this matter in a hurry; but this has been standing for ten years, and if it is going to take all night to-night and all day to-morrow to obtain justice for these men, I am prepared to stand here in order to obtain it. For ten years I have stood in this country under fire of hon. gentlemen opposite as one who betrayed the workingmen in this particular situation, When I was not in this Parliament where I could raise my voice, some hon. gentlemen opposite were out on platform after platform throughout this country pointing to me as the cause why these men had not received their pensions. I have waited until to-day to tell the whole story; I am going to tell it all, and I am not through yet.

Mr. McMASTER: It will be best to be patient.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is something eternal about justice, and if it is going to be possible to prove the truth in this case on behalf of the workingmen of this country, that is going to be done. In that letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier I stated all the facts at the time and it will be apparent to any hon. member that such a letter could only have been written immediately after a situation of that kind. I went into the matter in great detail, because I was fully conscious of the tremendous responsibility I had to assume as a single individual at that time when the Prime Minister and other ministers were out in the West. The Minister of Railways was also away, and I was, therefore, careful promptly to put in every detail. Had the Grand Trunk Railway Company carried out its obligations, not a line of this would have been made public. Had the Grand Trunk Railway Company reinstated the men, not a line of this would have been made public. Had the Grand Trunk Railway Company, within the past ten years, been willing to do what was honest and fair and straight and just with these men as regards pensions, not a line of this would have been made public. But making this public ought to be the means of compelling this Parliament, before it proceeds further with this agreement, to see that this opportunity does not pass without full justice being done to the men in this matter. I think I have made it perfectly clear to the House that if it had not been for the patience and loyalty of these employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company; if it had not been for their willingness to do all in their power to bring this situation to an end, no one can tell into what disastrous condition this country would have come, because the situation was a most critical one. The men having acted in that way, it is up to Parliament to see that no further jockeying is done with regard to their rights.

I concluded my letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier by stating that until the Grand Trunk Railway Company came to their senses in the matter, until their president acted in an honourable way, no further assistance should be given by the Government to that company. There is seated beside me this evening the hon. member for Shelburne and Queen's (Mr. Fielding) who was Minister of Finance in Sir Wilfrid's Government at that time. He can bear out the truth of what I say, when I tell the committee, as I do, that at the time this matter was under negotiation, Mr. Hays had been coming to the Government for assistance in connection with some of his lines in the West; he had asked for a very liberal amount, as is the custom, and the Government was favourably disposed to help him. What was the answer that Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave him? Put back those men into their positions and carry out your agreement, and I will go before Parliament and get you your money. Mr. Hays said that he would, but he never did. Another week passed and then another, and we dissolved Parliament without Mr. Hays getting a five-cent piece, although it was millions of dollars that he was after at that time. What was our reason for taking that position? We took the position that until the company was honourable in regard to its obligations and carried them out, the company would not get another five-cent piece from Parliament if we could avoid giving it to them. That statement has

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

never before been made public; but the former Minister of Finance will recall that that was the position taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in dealing with this company, and the reason that the Grand Trunk Railway Company did not receive any assistance from the Government of Canada, until another Government took office, was because the company did not carry out those obligations. The Minister of Labour knows well enough the trouble he had of bringing Mr. Hays later on into line in getting anything done. What I want to make clear is this. If we are to have a contest between any corporation and the Government of Canada, are we going to let the corporation have the last word, or are we going to insist upon the Government of Canada having the final say in a matter of justice? I want to say to the Government that that is the situation to-day. This has been a long battle; it has been a fight as between a great railway corporation and the Government of Canada as to who is to have the last word in a matter of justice and honour, and my hon. friends opposite cannot afford to allow this opportunity to pass without seeing that this matter is put once and for all where there will be no chance of escape on the part of the Grand Railway Company from meeting its liabilities to the fullest possible extent.

I have taken up a great deal of the time of the committee, but I feel that this is a matter than which there is nothing of greater importance to this country at the present time. What is the greatest question that we have before us? It is the question of industrial relations. What is the proper solution of it? It is straight and honest dealing and nothing more. If you have not confidence you get nowhere in the industrial world or in the improvement of industrial relations. Parliament is the custodian of public honour. The Minister of Railways, if he examines the reports of the debates which took place at the time this matter was under discussion, will see where he himself, pointing to me, said over and over again: The Government intervened in this matter; they should get justice for the men. Now my hon. friend has the chance. He can put in this little agreement an amendment which I am about to move, and that will adjust the matter for all time.

Mr. J. D. REID: You should have put that in the Bills that you passed that session.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What Bills?

Mr. J. D. REID: The Grand Trunk Bills.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We did not pass any. That is exactly what we refused to do. We had the Bills ready to bring down but we refused to introduce them, and it cost the Grand Trunk Railway Company several millions of dollars.

Mr. J. D. REID: The statutes show that you did.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will you cite them?

Mr. J. D. REID: A little later.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I repeat that to the extent of millions of dollars the Grand Trunk was refused assistance which it asked for at that time. I recall very clearly that they came for this assistance within a couple of weeks of the dissolution of Parliament. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in England attending the coronation. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) was Acting Prime Minister at the time, I think; I know that he had in hand the legislation that the Grand Trunk was asking for. It was held up during all the time that Sir Wilfrid was in England. It would have been introduced while he was abroad if the men had been put back to work. The Government notified Mr. Hays that as soon as the men were reinstated the legislation would be introduced. Sir Wilfrid returned, and I think he had been back only about two weeks when Parliament dissolved. I myself heard Sir Wilfrid say to Mr. Hays: "I will keep Parliament in session two weeks longer to give you a chance to put these men back and to have full justice done to them. I will then bring in the legislation that you want. But I will not ask Parliament to vote a cent to the Grand Trunk Railway Company until these men are reinstated." That course was never taken. Parliament dissolved, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company never got their money.

Mr. J. D. REID: If the hon. gentlman had taken the position that no further legislation would go through in the interests of the Grand Trunk until they had settled with these men, that would have been all right. But I make the statement that the then Minister of Labour at that session assisted in putting through legislation for the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I take issue with my hon. friend; the record will speak for itself. The strike took place in July, 1910. The matter of the three months' reinstatement came to be a question at issue while the session was on. I think it was the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) who pointed out the other day that the question whether any of the men had been guilty of the violation of law had been referred by mutual consent to Judge Barron. It was well on in 1910 or in the beginning of 1911 before it was known what men were to be reinstated, but once it became apparent that the Grand Trunk was refusing to reinstate, certain of the men, we refused to introduce a single bit of legislation on behalf of the company. Every hon. member on this side who was in the House at that time knows that very well. The records will bear out literally every word that I have said.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that section 2 of the Bill be amended by adding as subsection 2 thereof the following words:

> The said agreement is hereby amended by adding thereto under the caption "Superannuation and Pension Funds" the following:
>
> "Any right or interest of any employee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company existing in either the pension system or the Insurance or Provident Society prior to the strike of the company's employees which occurred in July, 1910, is hereby declared not to have been affected by the said strike or any circumstance or condition arising out of or in connection therewith."

Let me just say a word in conclusion. There is not a line in that amendment which is not in full accord with what was understood at that time by Sir Frederick Borden and myself, who represented the Government of Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite have said that as members of the Government it was up to us to see that that obligation was fully discharged. I have pointed out to-night, in language which, I think, is unmistakeable, how difficult it was at the time the strike was on to get justice done. I have also shown wherein every effort was made while the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was in office to have that wrong righted. The member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) who was my successor as Minister of Labour, worked hard—every one on his side knows how hard he worked—to get justice done in the matter of the reinstatement of the men. He tried also to effect adjustment in the matter of pensions, but was unsuccessful, and that matter has not yet been settled. If this chance goes by there may be no possibility of settlement for a long time to come. All that the Government have promised is that they will urge upon the board of arbitration the consideration of the moral or legal obligation. But the Government know that so far as the legal obligation is concerned the board will probably take issue with them upon the ground of the bearing of the statute of limitations upon matters of contract.

The Government have intimated that if the board makes a finding along another line the Government will be under a moral obligation to make good these pensions. That is shifting the liability from the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the Government, and that should not be permitted. This is a debt owing by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to certain of its employees. It is a liability, if there ever was a liability upon a company, which ought to be met by the Grand Trunk Railway Company itself and not transferred to the people of Canada . So I ask that we take advantage of this opportunity to put the matter beyond peradventure and to save the honour of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the honour of the Government and the honour of this Parliament by seeing that justice is done where justice has been long overdue.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

SPEECH ON

AMENDMENT MOVED ON THIRD READING OF BILL

Thursday, April 22, 1920.

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING: Before the Bill is read a third time, I should like to make one more appeal to the Government and to Parliament on behalf of those employees of the Grand Trunk Railway Company who have been deprived of their pensions in consequence of the strike which took place in July, 1910. My reason, Mr. Speaker, for doing this is that I believe a great wrong has been done a large section of the working people of this country and that this is the last opportunity to remove altogether any doubt as to the rights which many of us believe, and Parliament as a whole admits, they are legitimately entitled to. It is not my purpose to go over the ground which has already been covered in committee, but I wish to outline one or two salient facts, and I might mention that when I have concluded my remarks I intend to move an amendment, which I hope the members of the House will support in view of the reasons which may be urged on its behalf.

When the strike of July, 1910, took place, as the House is aware, the Grand Trunk Railway system was tied up from Chicago to Portland. The greater part of this Dominion was very seriously affected. The strike was settled as the result of an agreement entered into between the employees and the company. In connection with the negotiations that had to do with that settlement the late Sir Frederick Borden and myself, at that time ministers of the Crown, were present in Montreal, and heard and witnessed everything that took place between the parties. When the settlement was finally entered into we undertook as ministers of the Crown that should any dispute arise in the future as to the meaning of certain terms in the agreement we would be prepared to give our word as to the understanding of those terms as agreed upon at the time.

The men were reinstated on the understanding that they were to be put back in their former positions, or, to use the exact terms of the agreement:

> The company will put back as soon as possible the men, other than those who may have been or may be found guilty of acts of violence or disorderly conduct, the understanding being that there is to be no coercion or intimidation towards the new men.

Mr. MORPHY: If my hon. friend will allow me a question at this point it may save some discussion. I was under the impression that although the words "put back as soon as possible" are in the agreement, there was a private understanding that the expression meant ninety days. If so, I would like to ask another question after the hon. member has answered this.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I explained that position fully when we were in committee, but I will explain it again. The company agreed, as stated here, to put the men back as soon as possible. The men tried to get from the company an understanding of what the words "as soon as possible" meant. We spent nearly two days trying to get the Grand Trunk general manager and president to give a definite meaning to those words, and finally he gave to them the meaning of ninety days. It was understood that as soon as he attached to those words a definite period, if that period were acceptable to the men, the strike would be at an end. Ninety days was acceptable to the men. It was not a private understanding, beyond this—that the terms of the agreement were to go to the public as drawn.

Mr. MORPHY: That is where I want to ask my next question. Why was not the "ninety days" put in the agreement? You had the power to get those words inserted; why did you not put them in?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend uses the expression: You had the power to get those words inserted, why did you not put them in?

Mr. MORPHY: Well, you are assuming all the credit for the settlement, and the omission of those words caused all the trouble.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not assuming any credit whatever; I am merely endeavouring to state to the House the facts. The parties responsible for the agreement were the company and those who were acting on behalf of the employees. The agreement was entered into between the employees and the company, and the language used in the agreement was come to between them, and was not suggested either by Sir Frederick Borden or by myself. But we were present during the negotiations, and the company insisted on retaining the expression "as soon as possible." The men said, "We have no objection to your using that expression, but we would like to have some definite meaning attached to it. Do you interpret "as soon as possible"to mean one month, two months, three months, or a longer period?" If my hon. friend will take the trouble to peruse the somewhat lengthy communication I read to the House a few nights ago he will find the whole course of the negotiations described explicitly and in detail, and he will discover there that after very considerable difficulty Sir Frederick Borden and I succeeded in getting Mr. Hays to agree that "as soon as possible" would mean three months. We had previously ascertained from the men that if Mr. Hays would give that interpretation it would be satisfactory to them, and that it would also be satisfactory to them to accept the agreement as drawn. We had not any say in the wording one way or the other; the agreement was drawn between the parties, and it was perfectly agreeable to both sides that the words "as soon as possible" should remain in the agreement so long as Sir Frederick Borden and myself, as ministers of the Crown, were prepared publicly to state, should the question ever be raised, that those words meant a period of ninety days. And that is what I am stating now.

As I say, it was with the greatest difficulty that we succeeded in getting the company to declare that definite limitation of time. It was made finally by the vice-president of the company, Mr. Wainwright, coming to Ottawa and stating that he had the authority of the president to give the words that definite meaning. As soon as Mr. Wainwright gave other ministers of the Government and myself that assurance, I sent a confirmatory wire to the men, in accordance with an understanding that we had prior to Mr. Wainwright's coming to Ottawa. But before I read that telegram, let me explain further to my hon. friend (Mr. Morphy), so that he will not be in any doubt as to what actually transpired. The strike was on, and every hour counted. I had told Mr. Hays before I left Montreal that unless he gave to those words "as soon as possible" a definite meaning, and was prepared to settle the strike on the basis of the agreement, I would return to Ottawa, lay the matter before my colleagues and get their permission to make a public statement to the effect, that the parties had arrived at an agreement, all the terms of which were satisfactory to them, but that the strike was not ended for the sole reason that he was unwilling to give to the phrase "as soon as possible" any definite meaning; and that therefore responsibility for continuance of the strike must rest entirely on him. When the company knew that was the position, that the responsibility for the continuance of the strike was about to be put on the president and general manager for his arbitrary action, Mr. Hays sent his vice-president, Mr. Wainwright, to Ottawa with authority to give those words the meaning of ninety days. As soon as that was done I sent to the men the following telegram:

Mr. MORPHY: Before you read the telegram, will you please let me put another question: Was the authority given in writing or by word of mouth?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The authority was given as set forth in the communication which I read to the House, and which is on Hansard.

Mr. MORPHY: The hon. gentleman might answer me. I was away when he delivered his speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Wainwright came to a meeting at which Mr. Brodeur, Mr. Pugsley and myself, then ministers of the Crown, were present, and at that meeting he stated that he had the authority of the president of the company to give the words "as soon as possible" the meaning of ninety days; that he had been given that authority before he left Montreal; and that if that interpretation was ever questioned, he would resign his position as vice-president.

Mr. MORPHY: So it was purely verbal?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As far as I remember at the moment, it was. At any rate, it was whatever is contained in the document. At the time, I wrote out all the details of the strike, believing that possibly

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

something might arise in regard thereto. But the matter is not in any way pertinent to the strike issue as no one has ever raised a question as to whether the understanding was or was not put in writing.

Mr. MORPHY: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. Considerable dispute arose because the term of ninety days was not inserted in the agreement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At any rate the telegram I sent to the leaders of the men was as follows:

> Mr. Hays has given Sir Frederick Borden and myself an undertaking that the men will within three months from this date be taken back into the service and within that time be placed in their former positions. We understand by the men all the men referred to in the agreement signed by both parties. In accordance with our understanding I shall expect to hear by wire immediately that the strike has been declared at an end. I will confirm this wire by letter over my own signature.
>
> Yours faithfully,
> W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
> Minister of Labour.

As soon as that wire was received by the leaders the strike was declared at an end. Now, the important point in that connection is that the strike was declared at an end in virtue of the circumstance that the president of the company had agreed to reinstate these men within a period of ninety days in the positions which they formerly held, and that ministers of the Crown were prepared to vouch for that being the undertaking. That being the case, the only point that is of importance at the present time is: Were those men put back in the positions which they formerly held, and what was meant by putting them back in their positions? Two difficulties arose. One was whether certain men had been guilty of acts of violence. If they had been guilty of acts of violence they were not entitled to be reinstated, but if they had not been guilty of acts of violence they were to be put back in their former positions. When a number of men were not reinstated it was asserted that they were not being put back in their positions because they had been guilty of acts of violence. To settle that question Mr. Justice Barron was appointed to investigate the cases of all the men who were alleged to have been guilty of acts of violence, and the president of the company agreed to reinstate every man whom Mr. Justice Barron said should be reinstated Mr. Justice Barron's inquiry lasted several months, and I believe that even when it was concluded the president of the company still hesitated to put back some men whom Mr. Justice Barron recommended should be put back.

However, the question of reinstatement was only a part, as it subsequently turned out, of what affected the real position of the men. Those who were taken back found a little later on to their utter amazement, that the president of the company was taking the position that because the men had been out on strike they should lose all rights to a pension fund to which they were entitled. Now, the point I wish to make clear to members of the House is that in the whole of the negotiations between the parties, the question of pensions was never discussed one way or the other. The right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) mentioned the other evening that I had said that the strike leaders themselves had said that they did not care anything about pensions. I wish to repeat that statement now. The strike leaders did say to me that they cared nothing one way or the other about pensions. But they did not make that statement in connection with the settlement; they were describing to me the position that organized labour generally takes in that regard. If pensions are to be used as a means of shackling freedom; if they are to be used as a means of keeping men in employment and preventing them from going on strike no matter what conditions may arise, then they do not afford to men the real service they ought to render. It was in that connection that the strike leaders said to me, and stated publicly in the press, as can be found by reference to the papers of that time, that the matter of pensions was a secondary feaure. But when it comes to the terms of the agreement, under which the men were to be put back in their former positions, or to be returned to the service in full standing—if the Grand Trunk Railway Company intended not to allow the men their pensions, they should have said so. But they did not bring that question forward, nor was it discussed from the beginning to the end of the negotiations. When the settlement was made I was under the impression—I know the strike leaders were under the impression, and I am positive that all the men on the Grand Trunk Railway system were under the impression —that when the men were put back in their positions they would be reinstated in full standing and would be entitled to the pensions which they would ordinarily have received. But the company has never given them the pensions, and what I ask Parliament to do now is to express the view that these pensions should be regarded as owing to the men and that the rights of the men in that respect shall in no way be affected by the strike.

The reason why I bring this matter up in connection with this Bill is that the primary object of the Bill, as stated by the Minister of Railways (Hon. J. D. Reid) is to correct certain errors and to remove certain doubts. Well, I think there has ben an error in this particular. The Government have had before them the representations of employees as to this matter of pensions never having been properly settled. The agreement between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Government refers to the subject of pensions. Therefore, there should have been inserted in the agreement something which would remove all possible doubt as to the rights of the employees in the matter of their pensions. If this Parliament has reason to believe that it was the intention of that settlement that the men should be entitled to their pensions, they should express themselves accordingly at this time, and see to it that the pensions if possible are secured.

Some question was raised the other night as to why this matter had not been brought up before. One minister asked why, if the facts are as I have stated, I did not introduce a measure along this line at the time I was a member of the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. As I explained the other evening, the strike took place in July, 1910. It was well on in the spring of 1911 before Mr. Justice Barron reported the results of his investigation into the cases of the men who, it was alleged, had been guilty of acts of violence. As long as Mr. Justice Barron had those cases under review the Government assumed, and Parliament assumed, that it was the intention of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to carry out it word and see that the men were put back in their positions and that they received the pensions to which they were entitled.

Mr. BURNHAM: May I ask the hon. gentleman how he assumes that that was the intention when he himself thought it must be by implication and had made no note of it whatever?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say I thought it was by implication. I said specifically to-night that if the Grand Trunk Railway Company had not intended to give the men the pensions they ought to have said so when the matter was the subject of negotiation. They said that the men were to be put back in their former positions; the whole discussion in the matter of settlement related to conditions after the strike being exactly what they were before the strike. That was the basis of settlement, and if the terms meant anything they meant that the men who had been serving the company for a number of years and were entitled to pensions should not be prejudiced in their positions when the strike was over. The understanding was that bygones were to be bygones and that a settlement should be made as though nothing whatever had happened. That was the nature of the agreement; that was the distinct understanding. The only men who were to be penalized were those who had been guilty of acts of violence; all others were to be reinstated, they were to be put back in their former positions.

When I was interrupted I was referring to the reason why this step had not been taken sooner. As long as the cases of the men were being investigated the company professed that they intended to carry out the agreement. No one thought at that time that there was going to be any dispute over the matter of pensions one way or the other. The moment it became apparent that the company were not going to reinstate the men; the moment it became apparent that certain men were not being reinstated notwithstanding Judge Barron's recommendation to that effect, that moment the Government refused to have any further dealings with Mr. Hays and his company. As I have said, the Government thereupon refused to bring down a Bill recommending financial assistance to the company to the extent of several million dollars in connection with some Western lines. The Grand Trunk Railway Company was refused that aid, for the simple reason that they were not living up to the agreement arrived at in the presence of Sir Frederick Borden and myself. Then, when the Government which succeeded Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government came into power, the ex-Minister of Labour, the member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) took up further with the Grand Trunk Company the question of the reinstatement of the men. He had the same difficulties with the company that we had. He intimated the other evening that he was more successful; that he got the men back into their positions. I am very glad to give my hon. friend every credit for getting them back; I congratulate him upon doing so. But I say this: if he

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

got them back into their former positions, according to his own understanding of the agreement did that not carry with it their right to restoration to pension benefits? Did he understand that the men were simply being reinstated in positions which they had forfeited, but that they were to be deprived of pensions? I ask my hon. friend that question now.

Mr. CROTHERS: When the matter came before me, that question was not raised at all by the men. If they had said anything about the question of pensions, I could have had that fixed for them at the same time as I got the other matter adjusted, because we took the position that we would not let any legislation favourable to the Grand Trunk pass until they would carry out that agreement. The men made no claim respecting pensions, and I am corroborated in that by a speech delivered by my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie King) himself, and read from Hansard by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty) last Friday, in which speech the hon. member stated that the men did not regard the question of pensions as being of any importance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not the men, but the leaders.

Mr. CROTHERS: The leaders represented the men.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon. friend has said bears out my position. The hon. member says that he could have had the matter of pensions adjusted if it had been raised at all. That is the position we are in at the moment, the only difference being this, that the question has come to the fore now while is was not to the fore then, for the reason my hon. friend mentioned. The question of pensions was not likely to rise in any extensive way until the company began to deprive their employees of their pensions. When the men found that they were being deprived of their pensions, the question of pensions came very much to the fore. Let me make very clear the fact that while the strike leaders have said, in public and in private, that the question of pensions was a secondary matter as regards this particular strike, they have never said to me, and I am sure they have never said to my hon. friend, nor in public, that according to the terms of the settlement of the strike, the matter of pensions does not enter into the question one way or another. They said that the question of pensions was not discussed in the negotiations; but I am sure not one of them would intimate that when the agreement was reached, they had assumed anything other than that all the men would be reinstated in their formed positions and that they would also be entitled to their pensions.

Let me point this out in further reference to the question why this point was not raised last session. One minister mentioned that I was in the House last year and should have brought forward the question at that time. As hon. members will recall, I was a member of this House only two or three weeks last session. At that time the Grand Trunk Railway legislation had already been very far advanced; it was near completion. The minute I came into the House, I urged that the undue haste with which that legislation was being put through was unwarranted, and I asked the Government to go more slowly in order that all matters that were pertinent should be carefully considered. But we were told that there could be no delay; that the Bill must go through that session. Then, I asked that the agreement should be submitted to Parliament so that we might have an opportunity to examine it, and that Parliament should be called upon to ratify it. But that right was denied. Had the agreement been submitted to Parliament, we could have dealt with this question under the heading in the agreement relating to pensions and superannuation. There is in the agreement, clause 17, "Superannuation and Pension Fund," and that shows that the Government had the subject under consideration at the time the agreement was being drawn up. What representations did the Government have before them from the men at that time? The other evening I read a resolution that the Canadian delegates of the Railway Conductors of America and Canada adopted and signed in May 1919. I will read only two or three clauses of that resolution, but they are pertinent to this matter:

> Whereas, the Government then in power effected a settlement, and it was agreed among other things that the employees would return to work and resume their standing in the service and their seniority rights held by them prior to the strike, as though they had been continuously in the service, and,
>
> Whereas, the company has since the said agreement deprived the said employees who have retired from the service on account of the age limit from the benefits of the Pension Fund, alleging that their participation in the strike in 1910 broke their continuity of service with the company, and,
>
> Whereas, many conductors and other train men that had served the company and the public faithfully and continuously up to fifty-three (53) years, and having reached the age limit, have been retired from the service, and for the reason above stated debarred from the pension which they so sorely need on account of the low wages in effect on this road prior to the strike of 1910, ...
>
> Whereas, we are advised that our Government is desirous of acquiring the Grand Trunk railway and incorporating it as part of our National Railway system, and is negotiating to that end, therefore, be it further,
>
> Resolved, that we respectfully petition our Government not to conclude said negotiations for the purchase of the said Grand Trunk railway without providing for the protection of the pension interests of the employees concerned, and be it further,
>
> Resolved, that we furnish a copy of these resolutions to the Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden, and to the following ministers of departments, and members of Parliament, namely:—The Honourable Minister of Railways, J. D. Reid; the Hon. Minister of Labour, G. D. Robertson, and J. E. Armstrong, Esq., M.P., chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons.

This is signed by the representatives of the different organizations. Before this Grand Trunk agreement was drafted, the employees affected made a request to the Government drawing the Government's attention specifically to the fact that they had not received their pensions. My Hon. friend (Mr. Crothers), who succeeded me in the office of Minister of Labour, said that had the matter been drawn to his attention he could have had the question of pensions adjusted at that time.

Mr. J. D. REID: According to the discussion the other evening, the question of pensions was brought to the attention of the leader of the Opposition when the negotiations were going on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question of pensions was never brought up in the negotiations between the parties, and I cannot make that statement any more positive than I have made it. I said that, speaking to me privately, the strike leaders had talked about pensions, pointing out, as all leaders of labour organizations do, that pensions are a mistake from the point of view of organized labour, because the companies that use them take advantage of the pensions to compel a form of continuous service, and if that is to be the use of the pension of course they think it would be better to have the question of pensions out of the way altogether.

Mr. DOHERTY: Did not the hon. gentleman, in the letter which he read to us the other evening, as having been written by him to Sir Wilfrid at the time, point out that Mr. Hays was taking refuge behind a provision of the charter or by-laws of the Provident Association—which provision required continuous employment in order to entitle a man to a pension—and because of that refusing the pension to the men who had struck, on the ground that their employment was not continuous? And did not the hon. gentleman, in that same letter and at that same time, point out to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, his chief, that the proper remedy was legislation to amend the charter of the Provident Association and to confer on that association power to grant the pensions notwithstanding the non-continuous employment, the interruption by the strike?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad my right hon. friend has asked that question, because I think the letter which I wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier will, perhaps, show, in words clearer than any that I can now use, what the position was. There is on Hansard a copy of the letter which I wrote to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. After that letter had been completed—and it was written after the strike was over altogether—a postscript was added, the postscript being written a day or two afterwards. The hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Best) asked the other night if there was a postscript, and I think I said that he was somewhat in a hurry to get through. Let me read what the postscript says:

> I see by the press that Mr. Hays is proposing to consider as cancelled all obligation which his company may be under in the way of pensions, partially or all but fully earned by any of the men who may have gone out on strike.

If the question of pensions had been mentioned during the negotiations which I have outlined in the letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, would I in a postscript have directed Sir Wilfrid's attention to the fact that I saw by the press that Mr. Hays was proposing to consider as cancelled the obligations which his company was under in respect of pensions to the men who had gone out on strike? The reason for my postscript was that the first I saw of the intention of the company not to live up to its obligations was in the press, and the minute I saw it, I took the position that I take now, namely, that Parliament should see to it that such an attitude on the part of the Grand Trunk towards its employees was made impossible. Let me read the rest of the postscript:

> A pension has always been considered a reward of service—not a manacle to fetter personal liberty. Some of the men who have been out on this strike have, I understand, given thirty-four years of their life to the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

company's service. They, according to Mr. Hays, are to lose every cent of their pensions and start in as new men.

Mark those words, "according to Mr. Hays." Not according to the terms of any agreement or understanding made at the time, but according to what Mr. Hays said after the strike was over.

Unless Mr. Hays, or those who control his company, are prepared to recede from this position, my own individual view is that the Parliament of Canada would be justified in refusing to grant any company with which Mr. Hays is concerned any further consideration of any kind, and that the Government should lead Parliament in this view.

It was exactly that which Sir Wilfrid Laurier's Government did. It refused to give Mr. Hays several millions of dollars because he had not reinstated the men.

If, as Mr. Hays will probably say, he cannot legally grant the pension, Parliament might help to rid him of this limitation by enacting legislation which will give him the legal power he requires. It is to be hoped for the sake of the interests of the company, to say nothing of the rights of others, that his directors will not allow him to persist in a stand of this kind.

That is the position I took then; that is the position I have taken all along; that is the position I take now. The only difference is this: that whereas, as my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) has said, we did not know at that time, and he did not know at the time he was in office, that the question of pensions was going to be raised in this important way, we all know to-day that these men, every one of them, have been deprived of their pensions for a period of ten years, and we know further that this is the last opportunity which Parliament will have to state definitely that the men are entitled to their pensions, and to remove all doubts as to their rights in that matter. That is why I bring this matter up on the third reading of this Bill, which relates to the Grand Trunk Railway company and its acquisition by the Government. Before the railway passes into the hands of the Government I want its just debts to be paid. I do not wish to see these men defrauded of their pensions or the country saddled with a liability which belongs to the Grand Trunk. I want the Grand Trunk to carry out its obligations, and in my opinion it is up to every member of Parliament to see to it that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is compelled to do so, if any voice of this Parliament can help to bring that about.

Let me read the terms of the Grand Trunk Railway Company Act which gives the Grand Trunk the right to establish this pension fund. "An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada," assented to 12th April, 1907; Chapter 89, 6-7 Edward VII, has certain sections regarding the pension fund. Secion 5 is as follow:

The company may, for the purpose of making provision for the payment of allowances to employees after leaving the service, establish a fund to be known as "Grand Trunk Pension Fund," and may from time to time contribute thereto out of the gross earnings of the company such amounts as the directors determine.

Section 6 provides:

Any sum contributed to the said fund by the company shall be considered as, and form part of, the working expenses of the company as defined by the agreement set out in the schedule to the Grand Trunk Act, 1893.

There is the law on the question of this pension fund. It gave to the Grand Trunk Railway Company power to set aside certain funds for a specific purpose, namely, that pensions might be given to the men when they retired from the service. That money was to be regarded as part of the working expenses of the railway. What does the Grand Trunk Railway Company propose? It proposes to take that money, which ought to be charged up to the working expenses of the road and ought to be given to the employees who are entitled to it, and, instead of carrying out its obligations in that regard, to distribute that money among its shareholders. I say that is a step we should not permit. I say that the Grand Trunk Railway Company should be compelled to regard as part of its working expenses all the money which was set aside in that pension fund up to that date, and to see it applied as it was intended to be applied, to pensions for the men when they retired from the service. I have here a copy of the Rules and Regulations as to the Pension Fund of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, Pensions Department, and I notice in these Rules and Regulations this clause:

It is intended that in future all officers and employees shall be compulsorily retired on reaching the age of 65 years.

In other words, the Grand Trunk Railway Company adopted that pension fund so that they could retire their employees at the age of 65. They were to retire them after they had served a number of years, but were to give them the benefit of a pension. That was the only justifiable purpose of the pension fund, but that purpose is altogether defeated unless we make it perfectly plain that so far as the pension fund is concerned the terms of the settlement must be lived up to. All advantages that should accrue to the men through long and continued faithful service, they are being deprived of on a mere pretext.

What is said in the Rules and Regulations concerning service?

"Service" means up to and immediately preceding date of retirement.

I say that the only interpretation that can properly be placed upon the rules and regulations of that pension fund is that men who were in the service of the company become entitled to pensions at the time of their retirement unless there is some specific statement or specific term in some agreement to the effect that they are to lose their pensions. There was no such clause in the agreement that was reached. In a letter I placed on record the other evening I made that clear from a communication sent by Mr. Hays to me during the course of negotiations. This letter contains a somewhat significant statement, and I shall read it to the committee in order that hon. members may see that even Mr. Hays himself at that time did not contemplate pensions as in question. The letter was addressed to Sir Frederick Borden and myself, and is dated August 1, 1910:

Gentlemen: I have your favour of date July 31st in re dispute between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and employees in train and yard service, with memo of terms of proposed settlement of existing difficulties. I think we are all actuated by the same motives, viz, the restoration of full service on the Grand Trunk railway with every possible consideration to the men who went out on strike.

Then follows something which is irrelevant to this discussion The letter is signed, "Yours truly, Chas. M. Hays, President." Note those words:

I think we are all animated by the same motives, namely, the restoration of full service on the Grand Trunk railway, with every consideration possible to the men who went out on strike.

Can any one in this House for a moment say that depriving the men of their pensions is "restoration of full service?" Can any one say that depriving the men of their pensions is showing "every possible consideration to the men who went out on strike?" The whole action of the Grand Trunk Railway president in this matter is as dishonourable as any act can possibly be, and being dishonourable, it is placing this Parliament and the Government of this country in a false position before all the working classes of this country, for the simple reason that the Government of the country undertook to vouch for the terms of that agreement. If it comes to a question between an endeavour on the part of the Government to carry out justice, and an endeavour on the part of a private corporation to defeat justice, there can in such case be only one decision to reach in the interest of social justice and public honour, and that is to see that right and the supremacy of the Government in the matter of carrying out justice are maintained at all costs. That is the real question at issue at the present moment.

Just a word as to the consequences of any failure on the part of Parliament to take the step which I am proposing Parliament should take to-night. In the first place, if Parliament should refrain from stating in specific language that nothing so far as that strike of 1910 is concerned shall effect the pension rights of these workingmen, a large number of workingmen throughout the whole of this Dominion and their families as well, may be deprived of pension benefits. Is that a course which this Parliament wishes to take? Do hon. gentlemen opposite desire to be a party to any omission which may have the effect of depriving thousands of working men and their families of pensions to which they are justly entitled? I say that unless Parliament goes on record in this matter we have no guarantee that the men will get those pensions. The question of the Grand Trunk's liabilities and assets is about to be referred to arbitration. This is a matter upon which Parliament should express itself independently of arbitration altogether, and it should not be for the arbitrators to decide whether there is a just case here or not, when the honour of ministers of the Crown and of Parliament is at stake. It is for Parliament to protect the rights of the workers in this matter, and we should leave no door open by which those rights can by any possible chance be ignored.

Now let us assume that this matter goes before the Board of Arbitration through any failure on the part of this Parliament to express its opinion, and that the board has nothing to guide it other than such rep esentations as may be made to it. And let us suppose that the board finds there is some legal technicality that prevents it from regarding as a liability this whole matter of pensions. Then what happens? Why, of course, this money which was put into a pension fund for the good of the employees becomes at once an asset of the company, to be counted as part of the property of the shareholders. That, I think,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

was never intended in the law which was framed for the purpose of establishing the pension fund. There is no justice in such a situation. Then there is the other alternative that possibly the board may find that there is no legal obligation, but that there is one from a moral standpoint. What happens in that event? One of two things may occur: Either the whole matter may drop there, or else the Government, coming into possession of the railways, may be called upon to assume this moral obligation; and then we shall have the question as to who should pay the pensions put up to the Government as the sole owner of the road. Should the Government, as the owner of the road, undertake to make good the pensions, it could only do so at the expense of the taxpayers, and I say emphatically that such a step would under existing circumstances be unfair to the people of the country. These pensions are a liability that belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and that liability should be met by the company.

My right hon. friend (Mr. Doherty) the other evening was somewhat annoyed, I think—at any rate, his manner seemed to me to imply that he was—because I intimated to the House that I had gathered from his words that what I have said was the course the Government would pursue. I said I had gathered that my right hon. friend had said, when the subject was up for discussion in connection with the resolution urging that the Government should do all in its power to have the board of arbitration consider the merits of the case, that he would have them consider the matter from the legal and the moral standpoints, and that if the legal point of view were found to be such that the men could not get the pensions, then of course the Government, being sole owners of the railroad, would have to consider the moral obligation. And I gathered from his words that by that he meant and intended to convey this meaning to the mover of the resolution, that there was no necessity to press the resolution because sooner or later the men would get their pensions anyway. My right hon. friend took exception to that statement, and said that I had misinterpreted him or was wilfully trying to do so. Let me read his words and ask the House to judge whether or not I was right in the inference I drew.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does the hon. gentleman say that I referred to the observation which he has just made as a ground of annoyance? If he will be good enough to look at what I did say he will see that I did resent most strongly the statement he made, that when members of this Government made statements, either to the men or in this House, in reference to the subject, they knew that those statetments did not and could not amount to anything. That allegation I did resent, but I do not think the hon. gentleman will find in my speech that I resented in any way the interpretation which he says he put upon my statements.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend construes my words as intending to imply that the Government itself was wilfully deceiving the men, I at once retract any statement that may be open to such a construction. I should be most unhappy to have the minister think that I imputed any motives to the Government. I am not imputing any motives one way or the other. All I ask is that my hon. friend be indulgent enough to listen to his own words and gather from them what the workingmen, who are interested in the question of pensions, would be inclined to consider them to mean. I shall read the hon. gentleman's words, and ask him to say whether they would not mean, to those who are interested in the matter, just what I have suggested, namely, that unless the pensions were granted by the board of arbitration, in all probability the Government itself would assume the responsibility for them. The minister's remarks will be found in Hansard of April 12, at page 1179 of the unrevised edition. He said:

> I am quite prepared to say on behalf of the Government that before that board of arbitrators we shall see to it that the claim that this is an existing liability is put forward with every facility for establishing it, assuming it to be susceptible of establishment, and that every opportunity will be given to establish it and to press it on the consideration of the board.
>
> I would be willing to go further and to say that I think it will be quite justifiable that it should be pressed not only in so far as it can be sustained as being an absolutely legal claim, but that it should be pressed upon the consideration of the arbitrators from the point of view even of a moral or equitable claim, and that they should be asked—of course we cannot give that instruction—that it be given every possible weight in order to assure justice being done to these men. What would be the situation if that procedure proved ineffective to obtain the recognition of the claim, it is perhaps unnecessary that we should go into it now? What the position will be when the stock has passed absolutely to this Government, and this Government is in the position of being the sole stockholder, and what will perhaps be the position in view of the provisions of section 17 of the agreement, I think we need not stop now to consider. For the present, the proceeding now to take place affords an opportunity of having this matter gone into and having the justice of the claim that is put forward established. That is the one effective method that is open to us and on behalf of the Government I am quite prepared to undertake that it shall be adopted.

The foregoing were his words in one place. Here are his words, even more emphatic, in another, and I ask hon. gentlemen to draw their own inference as to their meaning. At page 1180 of the same issue of Hansard:

> Now in reference to what I said with regard to urging this matter as a moral claim, I am not prepared to lay this down as an absolutely legal position; but I myself would feel justified in urging upon the Board of Arbitration that they should consider if, in their opinion, this was a claim so strong in equity that the Government, coming into control of the railway, could not do otherwise than do what it would be a perfectly fair thing to do—estimate and determine the value of the claim. I am not laying that down as an absolute legal position to be followed, but I would feel like urging that upon the board. In that situation, if the Board of Arbitration find that they cannot take into consideration anything but an absolutely legal claim I do not want to undertake to say now what will be done. What I am at present pointing out is, that the Government is in the position of being the sole shareholder of the company with regard to which company it has been found that there did not exist this strong moral claim. I fancy that the Government in that situation would find itself in the position where it would not necessarily have to consider a claim of that kind.

Any one reading that language can see how involved it is. I confess that rereading it at the moment I gather only one impression from it—that if the board of arbitration do not find that the men are legally entitled to pension and do find that there is a moral obligation somewhere, then in all probability the Government that has to do with the question will find that that moral obligation should be met by paying the men the pensions. Now to come down to the concrete thing, assume that this means anything at all, what happens? This matter is referred to the board. The board finds there is neither a legal obligation nor a moral obligation. Then the men lose their pensions altogether, and the Grand Trunk is exempted from that liability. Or, assume that the board finds that there is a moral obligation but not a legal one, and that the Government, becoming the sole owner of the road, assumes that moral obligations. In that case you have this situation: The men will be paid their pensions but paid out of the public treasury and at the expense of the taxpayers of this country, not at the expense of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I say that either of these positions is unjust. One is unjust to the workingmen, the other is unjust to the taxpayers. There is only one just position, that is that the company which promised to take back these men without prejudice after the strike should make good that undertaking; and that Parliament, here and now, should take the action that will remove this particular obligation altogether from the arena of doubt. It is unfair and unnecessary that the board of arbitrators should be called upon to consider it. The facts are known, there is no doubt about them, there is no question in dispute one way or the other; it is a matter of simple and honest justice.

Now let me say just this one word in conclusion. My right hon. friend may argue, perhaps, that in suggesting a step of this kind I am taking a somewhat radical position, that I am trying to interfere in some way or other with the sanctity of contract. It is the sanctity of contract that I am seeking to preserve. I saw that contract drafted, I was present at all the negotiations, I know what was said between the parties; and the whole intention and meaning of that contract was that the men were to be put back into their former positions which meant they remained entitled to their pensions.

I wish to say this further: This question, after a period of ten years, has now come into a very different position in the public mind from that which it occupied at the time of that particular strike. Then it was a matter between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and its employees, as to which was going to prove more powerful. Now, thte question is whether, as between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Government of Canada, the company is to have the last word in helping to defeat justice or the Government is to have the last word in helping to maintain it. If there is one thing above another which is responsible for movements in the present day such as those described as direct action or Bolshevist it is attributable to the lack of faith which some people are coming to have in parliamentary institutions as standing for the rights of the people as a whole. Nothing will held to lend color to such an impression more than for the government or for a parliament—with all the facts and all the knowledge before them in regard to a concrete case such as this—to stand back with complete indifference. I say this

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4293

amendment is necessary on grounds of public honour and social justice. There is only one course for this Parliament to take. We have had this question before us for ten years. This is the last moment at which we can settle it in a way that is honourable to the men, honourable to the company, and honourable to the country and its representatives in Parliament, and we should take the necessary step. I hope that hon. gentlemen opposite will support us in this attitude. I beg to move the following resolution:

That this Bill be not now read a third time but that it be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same by adding the following section:

"Any right or interest of any employee of the Grand Trunk Railway Company existing in the pensions fund prior to the strike of the company's employees which occurred in July, 1910, is hereby declared not to have been affected by such strike or any circumstance or condition arising out of or in connection therewith."

Let me point this out. This amendment does not involve the re-opening of the agreement. We have been told by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Reid) that the agreement is signed, sealed, and delivered, and that nothing that this Parliament says, one way or the other, will cause the Government to re-open it. That being the case it is impossible to insert in the agreement itself any provision which will convey what is the unanimous view of this Parliament as to the rights of the parties concerned. For that reason I have framed the amendment so that it may be added, just as was the amendment of the Minister of Justice a few moments ago, as an extra clause to this particular Bill. It expresses the view which, I think, was unanimously expressed by Parliament when a resolution on this subject was discussed a day or two since; it is necessary to maintain justice in this particular situation and to give effect to what is essential to public honour and a sense of public obligation.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

20 April 1920

D 4294

House of Commons

REPLY TO MISREPRESENTATIONS
CONCERNING WAR SERVICE

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4235

[20] April, 1926

At a public gathering in the city of Montreal on the 5th instant, certain statements and representations were made, and subsequently reported in the press of that city, which not only reflect upon me in my representative capacity as a member of this House, but are also calculated greatly to prejudice the position of honourable members of the political party to which I have the honour to belong, who have entrusted me with its leadership. The statements in question are wholly false and shamefully misleading in the inferences they are intended to convey. As uttered, they constitute a slander, and their publication constitutes a criminal libel. If I have not already instituted proceedings against the parties responsible, it is because I am prepared to believe that their words were spoken in complete ignorance of the facts, and would not have been uttered had they known the truth.

The statements and representations to which I refer were made at a luncheon of a so-called Progressive Club in Montreal on the date mentioned. Their publication appears in the Montreal GAZETTE of April 6, under the heading: "SCORED LIBERAL PARTY ON POLICY - Progressive Club speaker claimed Opposition not in harmony on question - Criticized Party Leader - Said indications pointed to continuing relationship between Hon. Mackenzie King and Rockefeller."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The speakers on the occasion were Mr. John MacNaughton and Dr. F. W. Gilday, the former, I am informed, a member of the legal profession, and the latter, a member of the medical profession, of Montreal. The circumstance that the addresses were delivered on Monday, April 5, and published on April 6, the day before the polling in the then pending federal by-election in the St. James Division of Montreal, when it was too late to permit of any denial or retraction, gives grounds for believing that the statements and representations they contain were made deliberately with the purpose of influencing the result of that election. This inference is further borne out by the fact that one of the speakers, after alleging that the Liberal Party had done nothing for Labour, is reported also to have said: "To-day it was opposing a Labor candidate in the constituency of St. James."

The particular statements and representations to which I desire to call the attention of the House are, first, those contained in the utterance of Mr. MacNaughton, reported as follows:

> "So far as the returned man was concerned, he declared, how could he expect to receive any concessions from a Liberal Leader who had deserted Canada in her hour of crisis in search of Standard Oil millions. Indications pointed to a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests, which at no distant date might prove a menace to Canada";

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and those contained in the utterances of Dr. Gilday, reported as follows:

> "In moving a vote of thanks to the speakers of the day, Dr. F. W. Gilday referred to the first Liberal leader as one whose connections with American capitalists might soon prove inimical to Canada's best interests. He saw in Mr. King the representative of certain American commercial men charged with the mission of making Canada a free trade country, and commercially subservient to the United States. Mr. King had left Canada at the time of war crisis, although a bachelor capable of bearing arms, and only a young man. He preferred, however, to work for Rockefeller, and indications pointed to the fact that he had returned to Canada not for the purpose of the country's best welfare and advancement, but still apparently entangled in the octopus of Standard Oil interests and Rockefeller millions. The future, he said, would bear out the truth of his remarks."

It is apparent that these and all like utterances are calculated to arouse the bitterest kind of prejudice, not only against me personally in my position as a member of this House, but, because of my present position, also against honourable members and others giving me their political support. Not only are they designed to arouse prejudice in one direction; they seek to create a prejudice in every direction, prejudice on the part of Labour, prejudice on the part of returned soldiers, prejudice on the part of industrial and commercial communities, and prejudice on the part of patriotic citizens of all classes.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Had the statements been made by irresponsible persons, or been given publicity by an irresponsible or discredited journal, I should have been glad wholly to ignore them, and to treat them with that indifference which I have thus far endeavoured to shew toward this kind of contemptible utterance. The circumstance that Mr. MacNaughton and Dr. Gilday are known to be members of learned and honourable professions, which affords their utterances a credence they otherwise would lack, and that the newspaper from which I have quoted prides itself upon its position in Canadian journalism, makes it difficult for me to allow these slanders to pass unnoticed without my silence being thereby misconstrued. Moreover, the circumstance that representations of like character are reported to have been made in the recent by-election in the electoral district of Temiskaming affords grounds for believing that they are a part of a false propaganda deliberately organized for the purpose of working a political injury.

When, in September of last year, I was nominated a candidate to contest the constituency of Prince, Prince Edward Island, in the federal by-election then pending, rumors and allegations very similar to those I have just read were speedily and busily circulated. I realized they owed their origin to a desire and effort to prejudice my

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

candidature in the election, and that if permitted to pass unchallenged, some credence might be given to them not only in the constituency of Prince, but in other parts of the Dominion as well. I then and there took the course which, as a candidate seeking an expression of public confidence, it seemed, in the circumstances, prudent and proper to take. I asked that my record of service during the period of the War be made the issue of the by-election. I gave to the electors, at largely attended public meetings, an outline of certain material facts, and on each occasion publicly challenged opposition from any source. The answer of the electorate was my return to Parliament by acclamation. I thought at the time, and have since thought, that this course would have sufficed once and for all to silence representations which are as untrue as they are reprehensible; but apparently such is not the case, and it would now appear that from one source or another attempts will be made to repeat and revive like slanders wherever it seems probable that a party political end may be served by so doing.

Such being the case, honourable members of this House, who are not less interested than I am in safeguarding its privileges, and the rights of members of Parliament in the matter of their personal reputations, will perhaps permit

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

me to place on record a few relevant material facts, not by way of any defence of my record during the period of the War - I seek no defence of that in which I have reason to cherish a justifiable pride - but in order that hereafter, current rumour, or ignorance of the truth, may no longer be claimed as a defence by others, should it become necessary to commence criminal proceedings against journals or individuals who persist in this kind of political warfare.

First, let me make an explicit denial of the statements and representations taken collectively, and of the natural inferences to be drawn therefrom. In fact, or in the implication it carries, each significant utterance is wholly false and wilfully misleading; each, as spoken, constitutes a slander, and as published, a libel. The truth is just the reverse of what would be gathered from a reading of them.

I never, at any time during the period of the War, or since, left Canada to reside, even temporarily, in the United States. I was never, at any time during the period of the War, in the employ of any of the Standard Oil companies or interests. My association with the Rockefeller Foundation, which was formed prior to the commencement of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the War, and which continued throughout the greater part of it, was an association altogether apart from any Rockefeller or Standard Oil interest, and involved no obligation of residence outside of Canada, and occasioned none. It had solely to do with a study of industrial problems, the results of which have since been published in book form. Such service as I was privileged to render certain large industries in the United States during the period of the War was solely and wholly in the nature of advising as to methods of improving the conditions of Labour, preserving industrial peace, and promoting a maximum of efficiency and production in materials and supplies essential to the successful prosecution of the War. It was a service, if anything, more in the interest of Labour and of the Public than of Capital, and was, in fact, in the nature of a direct contribution to the armies and navies of the allied and associated powers during the War, and to consumers in the period of reconstruction which has followed.

I have not at the present time any business or professional connection with any American or Canadian financial, commercial, industrial, or other interest, nor have I had any such, directly or indirectly, from the time

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

at which, in August of last year, I was honoured with the Leadership of the Liberal Party. At that time, I declined further to consider two business offers, previously made to me, the acceptance of either of which would have involved an annual salary more than three times the allowance provided by statute for the Leader of the Opposition. I have since refused to accept retainers or fees from any source, in order that my time and energies might be given wholly, and in a manner above shadow of suspicion, to public duties.

Let me now deal a little more in detail with the several statements. I do this, not only that my exposure of their falsity may be the more explicit, but because I believe that in Canada there are many persons who do not wish to lend themselves to any kind of injustice, either personal or political, but who have been grossly deceived by rumours and representations of the kind, and are unable to understand how they could have gained the currency they have wholly without foundation. Moreover, so far as the men who served overseas are concerned, in the absence of explicit statement, there is nothing to guide them in arriving at a just opinion. What I have to say, if it accomplishes naught else, may help to illustrate the injustice

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

sometimes done the services and reputation of men in public life, where, through perversion of the truth, use is made of appearances to work a personal injury and a public wrong.

First, let me deal with the representations that relate to the period of the War, and which are contained in the statements that I "deserted Canada in the hour of crisis"; that I "had left Canada at the time of war crisis, although a bachelor capable of bearing arms, and only a young man"; that I "preferred to work for Rockefeller".

I have only to refer honourable members to The Imperial Realty Company of this city, the owners of The Roxborough apartments, where I have resided for more than ten years past, to establish the fact that I have been continuously one of their tenants, and never at any time, during the War or since, cancelled or even temporarily sub-let the apartment of which I hold the lease. The records of the City Hall will shew that, during that period there never was a year in which I was not assessed as a citizen of Ottawa and did not pay my taxes accordingly. As already mentioned, my association during part of the time with the Rockefeller Foundation neither contemplated nor involved residence anywhere other than in Ottawa, except

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to the extent that I myself found it necessary and desirable to travel in connection with the studies upon which I was engaged.

Let me explain the precise nature of that association, and of the work on which I was engaged. Once its significance is appreciated, it will be perfectly apparent that in no way is it capable of being construed as, in any sense, "work for Rockefeller", for for any Standard Oil interest.

The Rockefeller Foundation is a philanthropic organization, chartered under the laws of the State of New York on May 14, 1913. As described in the Act of incorporation, it is a body corporate "for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the income and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." As a means to that end, the corporation is entitled to aid research, to establish and maintain benevolent, religious, missionary, and public educational activities, agencies, and institutions. No officer, member, or employee of the Foundation is entitled to receive any pecuniary profit from the operations thereof, except reasonable compensation for services in effecting

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

one or more of its purposes. The Foundation is in no way connected with any commercial or industrial organization. Its affairs are administered by a Board of Trustees. Dr. George E. Vincent, formerly President of the University of Minnesota, is its present President. The fact that it is called the Rockefeller Foundation, after the name of its founder, is no more ground for regarding as being employed, by the Standard Oil or any so-called Rockefeller interests, those who are privileged to assist in carrying out its noble and beneficent purposes, than the acceptance of a librarianship in a Carnegie Library, or a teacher's pension under the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, is reason for regarding the holder of such a position, or the recipient of such a pension, as an employee of the late Andrew Carnegie, or of any existing steel trust or corporation.

As a matter of fact, throughout the period of the War, the activities of the Rockefeller Foundation were more largely in the nature of war-work co-operation than aught else. The Foundation was the first organization in the United States to come to the relief of the Belgians when the War commenced. Its funds, to the extent of millions of dollars, were utilized to bring relief to the starving populations in portions of France as well as Belgium, and

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

to the peoples of Poland, Serbia, and Armenia. It contributed over eight millions to the American Red Cross, over ten millions to the Y.M.C.A. and kindred organizations, for use in their work in army and navy camps and communities, and over half a million to provide for the welfare of prisoners of war. It equipped and maintained a war demonstration hospital which gave invaluable aid in the application of advanced methods of war surgery and in the training of hundreds of officers and nurses for special medical war service. It provided the services of Dr. Alexis Carrel and his staff, hospital, and surgical laboratory at Compiegne, in France. This agency of itself, through Dr. Carrel's discovery of a method of sterilizing wounds through their irrigation and the continued application of an antiseptic which has become known as the Carrel-Dakin solution, was the means not only of preventing a very large percentage of amputations, but of saving the lives of thousands of French and British soldiers, including the lives of many of our own Canadian soldiers. The total expenditures of the Foundation on war service work during the period of the War, all of which were of immediate practical value to the allied and associated powers, approximated twenty-five millions of dollars.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In other directions, the Foundation's activities have been concerned mainly with medical education and public health demonstration, not in the United States alone, but in almost every country throughout the world. In all parts of the world, it is engaged in fighting the hook-worm disease, yellow fever, and malaria. In France, it has conducted a survey of the tuberculosis situation, and instituted a nation-wide campaign against tuberculosis. In China, it is expending many millions upon the construction of hospitals, and the teaching of sanitation. It is promoting in different countries studies in mental and social hygiene, public health nursing, and is aiding in the prevention of a variety of the most baffling diseases.

It is to me a source of pride, and not in any way a matter of regret, that I was thought worthy to be selected by the officers and trustees of this organization for co-operation in any part of its world-wide humanitarian activities, and, more particularly, to have been chosen, at a time like the present, for service in the all-important field of industrial relations.

Within the last few months, as an expression of international good-will, and to aid in the work of medical research and education in Canada, the Rockefeller Foundation

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

made to the medical faculties of our Canadian universities a gift of five millions of dollars. The Prime Minister thought well ~~to make public acknowledgment of this gift~~ on behalf of the people of Canada to make public acknowledgment of this gift. It is some satisfaction to me to know, as I have reason to know, that my association with the Rockefeller Foundation, which has been the occasion of the false representations with which I am now dealing, was not without its influence in securing this aid to the work of medical research in Canada. The income from this source will be available to Canadian students and professors. It may be used to send them abroad, for purposes of study, to foreign countries, or to afford them the necessary freedom to pursue scientific investigation in our own laboratories and hospitals. Persons enjoying opportunities of study under this gift, in so far as employment or relationship to any of the so-called Rockefeller interests is concerned, will be in precisely the same position as I was while associated with the Rockefeller Foundation in the study of industrial relations. The parallel, indeed, is much closer than might at first appear. In the statement issued by the Foundation at the time the investigation of industrial relations was announced, it was indicated

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

that the work in spirit and method would be akin to that of the Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research, and that in so far as my inquiries had to do with industrial controversies, my attitude would be that of a physician who investigated the nature and causes of the pathological conditions with which he has to deal, with a view, if possible, to the discovery of effective remedies. It was with this aim and understanding that I accepted the opportunity accorded me by the Foundation "to conduct an investigation of the great problem of industrial relations with a special view to the discovery of some mutual relationship of labor and capital which would afford to labor the protection it needs against oppression and exploitation, while at the same time promoting its efficiency as an instrument of economic production."

My agreement with the Rockefeller Foundation to conduct this investigation was made in the spring of 1914, before the War was thought of. It was made with the condition expressly set forth that it would not involve a change, so far as I was personally concerned, either of citizenship or of residence, or a discontinuance of active participation in Canadian public affairs. Some time before the agreement with the Foundation was entered into, I had been nominated

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

as a candidate for this Parliament by the Liberals of North York, and, in the circumstances, I was careful to explain to the officers of the Foundation that it would be impossible for me to undertake the study should it involve any change in my place of residence, or absence from Canada other than such as I ~~might~~ myself might deem necessary for purposes of conference and investigation. I was told by the officers of the Foundation that I could pursue the studies anywhere I wished, and might go anywhere in the world I desired to gain information; that all the Foundation asked was that I should make the scope of the study as broad and comprehensive as possible, for only as the result of such an investigation could helpful suggestions, looking toward the improvement of industrial relations, be expected.

This was the situation when the War came on. I had then to decide whether I should give up completely the study I had undertaken for the Foundation, or pursue it with special reference to problems arising in connection with the War. I shall mention, before I conclude, certain personal considerations of which I was obliged to take account in coming to a decision. I desire at the moment to refer only to those considerations of a public nature which governed my actions at the time.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Almost from the moment the War commenced, it was apparent that the winning of the War would depend as much upon the successful co-operation of Labour and Capital in industry as upon the heroic efforts of those enlisted in the Army and the Navy. It was not less apparent that the post-war problems would be, in the main, industrial. I had been selected by the Rockefeller Foundation to make the study of industrial relations to which I have referred, amongst other reasons, because, for the period of eight years during which I had held the position of Deputy Minister of Labour, and the years subsequently during which I held the position of Minister of Labour in the Government of this country, I was supposed to have gained some special knowledge of the relations of Labour and Capital in industry, and problems incidental thereto, and was known to have had a fairly wide experience in matters pertaining to the prevention and settlement of industrial disputes. Here was a certain special knowledge and training, combined with a quite exceptional opportunity of public service, in regard to an all-important phase of war service of which, not less on public than on personal grounds, I was obliged to take account. Like every patriotic citizen, I asked myself the question wherein, with the experience and opportunity that

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

was mine, my service to my country and to the cause of the Allies in the War could count for most. I concluded that it lay along the path of exceptional opportunity I have indicated, and I have never had reason to feel that I was other than right in the judgment I then exercised.

Let me just here point out that during the War the Government of Great Britain, as a part of the war administration, appointed a Reconstruction Committee, which subsequently became the Ministry of Reconstruction, of which there was a special sub-committee on Relations between Employers and Employed. The Government of the United States appointed a National War Labor Board, specially charged with the duty of dealing with possible or existing controversies arising between employers and employed in fields of production necessary for the effective conduct of the War. The Government of Canada, the present Government, appointed a Reconstruction and Development Committee of the Cabinet, of which there was a Labor Sub-committee whose duties, amongst other things, were to study in advance "the probable course of readjustment which necessarily will be incident to the latter stages of the War and to the conditions arising upon the conclusion of peace and the effect of such readjustment upon labour and upon the industrial activities of the country." The Order-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

in-Council, dated October 23, 1917, constituting the Committee, contains the following further clause: "The conditions of labour, the relations between employer and employed, the effect of the War thereon and all questions incidental thereto, should be attentively studied and considered."

All these national ministries and boards were regarded as performing an essential war service, and all of them were supposed to have upon them persons of special training and experience in labour and kindred problems. The time of members of these boards, when it was given to the objects for which they were created, was devoted to precisely the same kind of study and practical effort as my time and thought were given to in the work I had undertaken for the Rockefeller Foundation and subsequently performed for certain of the large war industries. Indeed, apart from this latter service, it is only necessary to compare some of the recommendations on Joint Standing Industrial Councils contained in the reports of the Whitley Committee of the British Ministry of Reconstruction with what was actually accomplished in a practical way a year or two earlier in Colorado, to see how closely the work that I was engaged upon paralleled the most important of the recommendations of the British Committee.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It was through no lack of willingness on my part that I had not the privilege of serving on the Committee named by the Government of Canada, though I did have the opportunity, from time to time, of supplying certain of its members with data which I have reason to know they found of service. Early in the War, in personal conversation with the Prime Minister, I mentioned the nature of the work on which I was engaged and intimated my readiness to render any like service within my power either in Canada or in Great Britain, should he find occasion therefor. From its inception, I served as a member of the National Executive of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, and I think the records will shew that during practically the whole period of the War, I was as faithful in attendance upon the meetings of that Committee as any of its members.

Honourable members will recognize the extremely embarrassing position in which I am placed through being obliged to make any reference to work of my own. If, however, the facts are to be known, some mention has to be made of them. To omit specific reference, or reference from sources to which appeal can be made, is to lay oneself open to the charge of having met general statements by a denial only less general, and of expressing one's own opinion,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

instead of that of other and disinterested parties. I may perhaps be pardoned if, under the circumstances, instead of asking honourable gentlemen to accept any statement of mine, I make mention of one or two publications and place on record one or two communications which speak for themselves. I shall refer only to sources from which I am at liberty to quote, and which may readily be appealed to, should any reference I may make be called in question in any particular.

The results of my study for the Rockefeller Foundation will be found in a book entitled INDUSTRY AND HUMANITY : A Study in the Principles Underlying Industrial Reconstruction, published in Canada by Thomas Allen, Toronto; in the United States by the Houghton Mifflin Company, of Boston and New York; and in Great Britain by Constable & Company, of London, England. It is a volume of over 550 pages, exclusive of index, diagrams, and charts. Every line of that book was written at my place of residence in this city of Ottawa, every page of the proof was read here, practically all of the work of research was carried on in my own library. This work was completed, and the book published, before the signing of the Armistice. It has already passed through several editions.

It is not for me to express an opinion on the merits of this book as a contribution towards an appreciation of the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

industrial problems of our day. Perhaps the following editorial comment from the May, 1919, number of THE KHAKI CALL, the official organ of the Army and Navy Veterans Association of Canada, may not be out of place as an expression, from a source which will commend itself to those who have served at the front, of the bearing of its contents upon problems in industry as affected by the War:

> "One of the most timely and thoughtful books ever produced by a Canadian is the volume entitled 'Industry and Humanity', by Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, in which the inter-relation of war and industrial unrest are set forth in terms which cannot but bring conviction to all who read its pages. . . . . .
> . . . . . .
> . . "Mr. King's book is much more than a treatise - rather it is a very positive contribution towards the solution of international problems. It is already being used in various universities throughout the English-speaking world as sound doctrine for our present economic ills. THE KHAKI CALL does not often urge the reading of certain books, but in this case the way we should go during the critical years which lie before us is so clearly pointed out that we welcome the volume entitled 'Industry and Humanity' as a helpful influence in a time of much strife and confusion."

The impression that I had left Canada to reside in the United States, and in some way or another was connected with certain of the Rockefeller interests, while doubtless due to my association with the Rockefeller Foundation, may also have arisen from or been emphasized by the circumstance

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

that, shortly after I entered upon these studies for the Foundation, I visited the State of Colorado to investigate the causes and circumstances surrounding one of the most serious industrial conflicts which has ever arisen on this continent, and subsequently accompanied Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., through the coal mining camps of that State when, at a later period, Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., visited Colorado with the sole purpose of lending his powerful influence towards bringing about a change in industrial conditions more or less along lines which, while in Colorado, I had ventured to recommend to officers and employees of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. I was no more in the employ of any Rockefeller interest when, of my own free will and without suggestion or instruction from any source, I undertook and carried out that service, than I was in the employ of any of the coal companies of British Columbia or the Steel Company at Sydney, Nova Scotia, when, many years ago, I intervened as a Government conciliator to aid in the settlement of strikes in those coal and steel areas. I was simply voluntarily undertaking to carry out the vast opportunity I saw in the chance afforded through my connection with the Rockefeller Foundation to assist in relieving from starvation and suffering thousands of miners and their

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

families, to aid in the restoration of relations between Capital and Labour in an essential war industry, and the substitution of industrial peace and good-will for industrial strife and will under conditions that had not been very far from those of civil war; and, above all, to demonstrate, for industry generally, in a far-reaching and constructive way, and at a time when it was very greatly needed, the wisdom of the application to industrial relations of certain fundamental principles regard for which can never fail to be fruitful of good results to all concerned. For this service, I received no payment of any kind from any of the interests, or from any persons directly or indirectly concerned. I regarded the service rendered as solely and wholly in accord with the spirit of my relationship to the Foundation, and a part of my work in that connection.

Perhaps I may be permitted to refer honourable members to an article entitled "Solving Colorado's Civil War", which appeared in the Toronto "Globe" of October 13, 1915. It is dated Denver, Colorado, Oct. 9, and bears the initials "J.A.M." This article is from the pen of Dr.J.A.Macdonald,who at the time of its writing was Editor-in-Chief of the Toronto "Globe". It should help to clear up any misconception there may be arising out of the nature of my relations with Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in our joint endeavour to better conditions for Labour and permanently to improve relations between employers and employees in the State of Colorado.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

In this article, Dr. Macdonald says:

"I had spent the whole day interviewing all sorts and conditions of men, and gathering all sorts of views about the one question of universal interest these days in all these mountain mining regions - Mr. Rockefeller's plan for the complete reorganization of the mining industry in the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, in which he holds 40 per cent of the stock, and to whose conditions he has been giving a direct and personal interest during the past fortnight wholly without precedent in the history of capital and labor.

"Last week in Toronto we had Associated Press despatches to The Globe describing this unusual trip by Mr. Rockefeller, his meeting with men of all grades in all the camps and in the pits, his conference with them face to face, and his proposals to them for a fresh pack and a new deal. The despatches mentioned Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King as being the magnate's guide, philosopher, and friend.

"Almost the first man I met after reaching Denver, two days ago, in the rotunda of The Brown, was Mackenzie King. He has been in Colorado a great deal of his time since joining the Rockefeller Foundation. At the very beginning of his work as Chief Executive for the study at firsthand of industrial relations, Mr. King stipulated that the mining camps of Colorado, where long industrial strife issued in actual civil war, and where the Foundation itself is a large holder of corporate securities, provided an immense laboratory for a comprehensive study of the essential facts, the root causes of industrial disturbances and the lines of policy to be adopted if industrial war is to make way for co-operation, prosperity and peace.

"The root idea of the old policy on both sides, both capital and labor, was competition. In the new policy the root idea is co-operation. If the seed of co-operation is nourished and comes to full fruitage it may yield co-partnership. I did not find that Mr. Rockefeller balked at the idea of capital and labor coming to be partners in the industrial world."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"It was both interesting and significant to observe the effect of the young man's personal touch on men whose hostility was deep-seated and fierce. The great body of the miners voting by secret ballot, after hearing him expound the plan and studying it in its fully-printed form for several days, voted almost unanimously for its approval. A newspaper man who went the rounds of the camps, and whose sympathies were socialistic and anti-capitalist, confessed to me that Rockefeller is absolutely sincere, resolved to meet the men far ~~fffff~~ more than half-way, and has accepted the principles of industrial co-operation with an honest mind and a serious purpose. This view I found to prevail among the Denver newspaper men. A Chicago journalist who came to Colorado to curse returned to Chicago to bless.

"This indeed was the impression made on my own mind by frank conversation and close observations. I did not find this young capitalist other than very straightforward and humanely sympathetic. He accepted the obligations of great wealth and stupendous industrial responsibility as a man "who must give an account."

"It was not difficult to observe the reflex influence of Mackenzie King's personality and teaching on the life and program of John D. Rockefeller, jun. I confess that I had real misgivings about King's decision last year to undertake work with the Rockefeller Foundation. I feared its reaction on his own outlook and life work. After observing the situation in Colorado, the change of front, not by King, but by Rockefeller, and studying the testimony of newspapermen and others, who assured me that all this that Rockefeller has done is in reality the result of King's careful study of industrial problems in the mines, and of his competent exposition of it to Mr. Rockefeller and his associates, I am entirely reassured. Nor was Mr. Rockefeller at all reluctant to give Mr. King full credit.

"The terms of the new policy have already been sent to The Globe by the Associated Press, but Canadians who have watched Mr. King's steady progress as a student of industrial problems and a leader in industrial reform will be gratified to know that, in dealing with this most gigantic problem of capital and labor at the time and place when strikes, murders,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

civil war and two hundred indictments were the chief features, he has made abundantly good, justified his own decision of last year, brought honor to Canada's Department of Labor, which he established on sound economic foundations, and gives promise of even larger services in industry and politics, in which Canada will share just as beneficially as the United States.

"Mackenzie King will always be a Canadian, makes his headquarters in Ottawa, gives only a part of his time to the Foundation's work outside of Canada, and holds his added study and wider experience for the loyal service of his native country. Certain if this new experiment in Colorado achieves what its initial prospect promises, not Canada alone but the whole industrial world will have cause for gratitude that the misfortunes of politics in 1911 left Mackenzie King's hand free for a while to tackle a big man's job."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

That was the view of the then Editor-in-Chief of The Toronto "Globe" of the situation as he saw it at the time. I have a letter from the President of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, dated as recently as December 20, 1919, which brings the situation up to date, and helps to reveal, in its direct bearing upon the War, the significance of what was accomplished. It should perhaps be mentioned that the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company operates coal mines in twenty or more Colorado communities, iron mines in the State of Wyoming, and an extensive steel plant at Pueblo, Colorado. It employs between ten and twelve thousand men, pretty evenly divided between the mines and the steel mills. The mining camps being largely in districts unorganized municipally, not only the workers themselves, but their families, are dependent in large measure for their opportunities in many directions upon the Company's policies. It is estimated that at least 50,000 persons are more or less immediately dependent upon the Company for their means of livelihood and their working and living conditions.

The following is the letter from the President of the Company to which I have just referred:

Exhibit A

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The Colorado situation having been what it was at the time of the strike of 1913-14, the significance of the changed relations soon became apparent. Many, though not all, of the important and essential features of the Plan of Representation and the agreement between the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company and its employees were copied, practically literatim et verbatim, by other large industrial concerns, including the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey in the United States and, later on, the Imperial Oil Company here in Canada. I began to receive from the heads of one large industry after another engaged in the manufacture of war munitions and other essential supplies and materials, communications soliciting my advice on methods of improving the relations between Capital, Management, and Labor, in a manner which, during the War and the ensuing period of reconstruction, would serve to end and help to avoid industrial controversies. Overtures of the kind afforded very special opportunities for the very highest kind of public service, and I sought to make the most of the opportunities thus afforded, not only to improve industrial conditions for the war period, but, wherever possible, to gain for Labor an improved status and permanently improved conditions of employment. This work was undertaken wholly apart from any relationship with the

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Rockefeller Foundation. How far-reaching the possible war service rendered in this way may have been, I shall leave the House to judge from communications since received from some of the companies concerned.

I might explain that when, in September last, it became apparent to me that efforts were being made to misrepresent the nature of my work in the United States at intervals during the period of the War, I wrote to the several companies by whom I had been consulted and by whom my services had been retained, inquiring if I might feel at liberty to make reference in public to the services rendered. For obvious reasons, regarding the work performed as in the nature of services professionally rendered, I had theretofore refrained from making any public reference to them. The communications which I am about to quote are from among the number received in reply.

The following communication is from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, which at the time referred to had over ~~100,000~~ about 70,000 workers in its employ:

Exhibit B

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The following is from the Bethlehem Steel Company, which at the time referred to was employing ~~about 45,000~~ over 50,000 workers:

Exhibit C

The following is from the General Electric Company, which at the particular works referred to was employing at the time botween twelve and thirteen thousand workers:

Exhibit D

This communication from Mr. Richard H. Rice, Acting Manager of the Lynn Works, was accompanied by one from Mr. E. W. Rice, Jr., the President of the General Electric Company, in which the President states that he has read the letter from the Acting Manager and that it meets with his "hearty approval". The President adds:

> "Mr. R. H. Rice confined his statements very largely to the benefits which resulted at our Lynn Works upon the adoption of the plan of representation that is based, to a great extent, upon your inspiration and advice.
>
> "I take pleasure in adding that we have adopted a similar plan at a number of our works which has met with equal success wherever it has been intelligently and sympathetically administered by both parties.
>
> "I think you have no reason to regret the time and effort which you have spent with us, at a critical period, in the effort that we were making to give the best possible support to our country and to our Allies, in the great struggle for civilization and human rights."

The total number of workers of the General Electric Company was, at the time, over 50,000.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

The following communication is from the Great Western Sugar Company. The factories of this Company are in the States of Colorado, Nebraska, Montana, and Wyoming. At the time to which the letter refers, these factories employed in the vicinity of 7000 workers.

Exhibit E

The following communication is from the President of the International Harvester Company, an industrial corporation employing, at its different plants in the United States and Canada, in the vicinity of 35,000 workers:

Exhibit F

As to sources of further information, I might refer honourable members to the Consolidation Coal Company, which operates mines in the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, and Kentucky, and which employs between eight and nine thousand workers; to the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company, of Youngstown, Ohio, which employs in the vicinity of ten thousand workers; and to industrial concerns of lesser size and significance; but the foregoing will be sufficient to indicate something of the scope, as well as of the nature, of the services rendered in the period mentioned.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Perhaps I should add that on more than one occasion my services bore a direct relation to the work of the National War Labor Board and of the United States Fuel Administration, and, where such was the case, were wholly in the nature of co-operative effort in the adjustment of threatened or actual controversies, in the public interest, as well as in the interest of the parties concerned.

I have gone to the trouble of preparing a tabulated statement of my absences from Canada on business in the United States during the period of the War. Including the time spent in Colorado, and in connection with the several industries to which I have referred, these absences amount in all to 308 days in the four years and three months of the War, or, by actual count, an average per year during the period of the War, of less than two months.

I trust this will suffice to make clear, not only the nature and extent of my relations with the Rockefeller Foundation, and services rendered to certain of the essential war industries in the United States during the period of the War, but also the nature and extent of any absences from Canada during that period.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There remains to consider the further insinuations and allegations in the libellous statements published, which relate to the period subsequent to the War, and which bear directly upon the present. They are, to quote the utterances of Mr. MacNaughton, to the effect that indications point to "a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests, which at no distant date might prove a menace to Canada"; or, to quote the words of Dr. Gilday, that I "had returned to Canada, not for the purpose of the country's best welfare and advancement, but still apparently entangled in the octopus of Standard Oil interests and Rockefeller millions;" that I am "one whose connection with American capitalists might soon prove inimical to Canada's best interests"; that I am "the representative of certain American commercial men, charged with the mission of making Canada a free trade country and commercially subservient to the United States."

I should be utterly at a loss to discover any grounds for such base misrepresentation and vicious attempts to distort the truth, were it not for the fact that despatches which have recently appeared in the Canadian Press contain references to certain changes in wages and hours of employees of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, reported in the American Press, in

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

which I am credited with having had to do with the drafting of the Plan of joint relations between that Company and its employees, under which these changes were brought about. Let me point out that, in the statements to which I have referred, care has been taken to make no reference to the time or nature of my services in the connection indicated, but simply to have it appear that in some way they point to "a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests."

Perhaps I should read to the House the despatch which appeared in the American Press, and from which there were exserpts in our own press. I quote from the Chicago Tribune of February 19 of the present year. The article is headed: "11,000 STANDARD OIL AIDS FIX OWN PAY RAISE - GET 11.11 % BOOST AND SIX DAY WEEK". The article reads:

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

This is the indication that points to "a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests which at no distant day might prove a menace to Canada". These are the grounds for asserting that I am "still apparently entangled in the octopus of Standard Oil interests and Rockefeller millions"!

May I point out that there is nothing in this despatch, nor is there, in fact, anything, to indicate any "continuing relationship", nor, indeed, any relationship, existing at any time, between the Company referred to and myself, other than that of my having been retained on one occasion, since the War, in the capacity of adviser or industrial counseller on methods of improving relations between a Company's management and its employees, to render services similar to those which during the War I rendered in some of the essential war industries. All that this despatch indicates, and all that can be said of any work done by me in this connection, is that, in this period of reconstruction, I sought, as opportunity offered, to continue to render to industry on this continent precisely the same kind of service, by way of improvement of human relations within industry, as the Governments of Great Britain, the United States, and Canada have intimated to be the most necessary of all possible service at this time. The fact that, by assisting in the adoption of a

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

plan of self-government in industry, I have been privileged to demonstrate, through one of the largest industries in the world, that, by the adoption of industrial councils in industry in which the workers are given a voice in all matters pertaining to their employment, it is possible for 11,000 employees not only to have their wages increased by 11.11 %, but their hours of labour so adjusted as to permit, for one and all, one day of rest in seven where formerly service was continuous, and this with direct advantage not only to Labor, but to Management, Capital, and the Public, through the avoidance of industrial controversy in the nature of lockouts or strikes, constitutes, I should say, not a menace, but an object lesson of highest value and of importance to industry everywhere.

That there may be no possible ground for further misrepresentation on this score, may I read to the House a letter I received from the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Standard Oil Company of Chicago, in reply to the communication sent by me in September last asking, as in the case of the other concerns already mentioned, for permission, should the occasion demand, to refer in public to the services rendered as an adviser to the Company and its employees. This communication states the nature and extent of any work I have ever undertaken for any of the Standard Oil Companies. As

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

with the services rendered to American industry during the period of the War, I am only too happy to leave my fellow-countrymen to judge whether, the opportunity being what it was, the need being what it is to further in every possible way improvement in the relations of Capital and Labour, the service is one I should be other than proud of having had the privilege to render.

Exhibit G

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Ottawa Journal
April 21/20

D 4333-1000

KING DEFENDS WAR RECORD IN HOUSE COMMONS

Liberal Leader Denies He "Deserted Canada in Her Hour of Need."

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Leader of the Opposition, today answered critics of his war record.

Mr. King's statement came in the House on a motion to go into supply. He spoke to a full House and to crowded galleries, dealing primarily with the criticism that he had "deserted Canada in her hour of crisis and served Standard Oil Millions."

Such statements, Mr. King declared to be absolutely false in fact and misleading in inference. "My purpose" Mr. King added, "is solely that of placing on record a few relative facts so that ignorance of the truth or any pleading of current rumor will not hereafter be any defence should I find it necessary and desirable to proceed criminally against parties, individuals or publications that persist in this kind of political warfare."

Always Ottawa Resident.

His connection with the Rockefeller Foundation had not required his absence from Canada, and, for the last twenty years, he had resided in Ottawa. The Rockefeller Foundation was a philanthropic organization which has co-operated in war work.

His duty had been merely to make a study of industrial relations. He read a series of letters from such corporations as the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation and the Bethlehem Steel Company acknowledging his assistance in settling labor disputes which were interfering with the execution of war contracts.

Personal Responsibilities.

In concluding, Mr. King told the House of some of his personal responsibilities. Shortly before the war his father was stricken with blindness and obliged to give up his practice of law and lecturing at the law school in Toronto. His brother was stricken with tuberculosis and "there was no one left to share the responsibilities of our home under these sad and trying circumstances but my married sister and myself," and the married sister had her own family to consider. In August, 1916, the father died, and in December, 1917, the mother too died. "I have only to add," said Mr. King, "as I look back upon those years of the war, so full of poignant suffering for the whole of mankind I cannot but experience a sense of gratitude, that in that world ordeal it was given me to share in so intimate a way the sufferings of others and, with it all, so large a measure of opportunity to do my duty as God gave it to me to see my duty, at that time."

Objects to Statements.

He referred first to statements made at a meeting of the Progressive Club, Montreal, on April 5, as reported in the Montreal Gazette of the day following. One statement cited by Mr. King was reported as having been made before the club by Mr. McNaughton, another by Dr. F. W. Gilday. Mr. McNaughton was reported as having said that Mr. King deserted Canada in her hour of crisis and served Standard Oil millions. Mr. McNaughton, according to the report, also spoke of relationship between Mr. King and Rockefeller interests which "at no distant date might prove a menace to Canada." Dr. Gilday was cited as having made similar statements.

It would be perfectly apparent, Mr. King proceeded, that such statements were intended to arouse prejudice of the most bitter and cruel kind, prejudicing the minds of labor, of returned soldiers, and of all patriotic citizens.

Statements False.

The statements were absolutely false in fact and misleading in inference. They constituted an utter slander and amounted to a criminal libel. If he had taken steps to proceed against the parties guilty of them, it was because he felt the ignorance of facts. But ignorance statements were made in complete would not in future be any defence should he desire to proceed criminally against any parties making similar statements.

Dealing in the first place with the statement made that he had resided in the United States, Mr King said this was not a fact. His relation with the Rockefeller Foundation had not required his absence from Canada, nor did it cause him to be away from this country, but to a slight extent. He had never had commercial relations, nor accepted a retainer or fee since becoming leader of the Liberal party, preferring to devote all his time to the work for which he had been chosen.

The Rockefeller Foundation, said Mr. King, was a philanthropic organization. During the war it had co-operated to a great extent in war work. It came to the relief of the Belgian, French, Poles, and Armenians, who were in want. It gave millions to Red Cross work, and to the maintenance of the hospitals. Its work extended to all parts of the world.

Studied Labor.

His duty in connection with the foundation, said Mr. King, was to make a study of industrial relations. He was not in the employ of the Standard Oil or Rockefeller interests any more than the librarian of a Carnegie public library could be in the employ of the Carnegie interests. He was told that he could pursue his investigations in any part of the world.

Mr. King stated that the offer of this work was made to him in the spring before the opening of the war. When the war began, it became necessary for him to decide whether to go on with this work or abandon it.

The decision yes he had made at that time, was, he thought a wise and right decision, and he had never changed his mind with regard to it. It had been recognized early in the war that the success of the Allies depended largely upon the relations prevailing between capital and Labor. Production of munitions and supplies was as important as were the efforts of the soldiers at the front. This was borne out by the fact that a number of the allied countries had formed committees for the express purpose of studying Labor problems and finding solutions to them. The work he had been doing for the Rockefeller Foundation, was directly along these lines.

His Colorado Visit.

He was chosen by the Rockefeller Foundation for his experience with Labor problems, and the results of his work, said Mr. King, were open to any who cared to read. He had written in Ottawa a book embodying the researches he had made and this was published in Canada during the war. The only possible reason for the erroneous idea which had been conceived of his connection with the Rockefeller or any other industrial interests, lay in his visit to Colorado in the early part of the war when he inspected the mines there during the Labor troubles, in the company of J. D. Rockefeller, Jr.

He received no remuneration then or at any other time for this work from any individual or firm connected with the interests involved in the Colorado disputes.

Mr. King said that he had taken part in the conciliation work at that time simply as a part of his general work with the Foundation. The results of the work of the committee of which he was a member had been published.

Mr. King apologised for the necessity he was under to refer to his accomplishments at that time, but he believed that it was necessary to show the nature and extent of his work in Colorado.

He read to the House letters from officials of the mines stating that as a result of the agreement arrived at with the striking miners more work per man per day was being performed at the mines after the settlement of the dispute than was being performed in any other mines on the continent.

Mr. King also read letters from representative corporations acknowledging the value of advice and assistance which Mr. King had given them in their industrial troubles. The Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Company, The General Electric Company and other firms acknowledged assistance in settling disputes which interfered with war contracts in the last few years. This work was all a part of his labors as a member of the Rockefeller Foundation, Mr. King pointed out.

After reference to his work in establishing industrial councils to maintain peaceful relations between the Standard Oil Company of Indiana and its employes and reading letters of appreciation for his efforts along this line, Hon. Mr. King concluded by a personal reference. It had been said that he was still young and a bachelor when the war broke out. He was then 40 years of age and within a few months his father was stricken with blindness, while a brother had to go to Colorado suffering from tubercular trouble. The support of the home fell practically in its entirety upon him. But apart from that he felt his conscience was indeed clear, that he had performed a service for his country for which he was best fitted and of much more value to his country than he could have done in other directions.

"I feel that in such a world ordeal it was given to me to share in the suffering of others and to help the cause of humanity. I am grateful that I was spared in so large a measure to do my duty as God gave me to see my duty at that time," he concluded amid applause from all sides of the House.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4334

Quebec Telegraph
June 30, 1920

WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES

Speech of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M.P., Leader of the Opposition in Reply to Misrepresentations Concerning His Services in Adjustment of Relations Between Two Factors During Period of the War

Speaking in the House of Commons in reply to misrepresentations concerning his services in the adjustment of relations between workers and employers in war industries during the period of the war, Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, M.P., Leader of the Opposition, fully explained his attitude in a very eloquent and comprehensive speech, of which the first portion is here published verbatim. As the speech is a long one it will appear in these columns in three instalments.

Following is the text of the discourse:

(Instalment No. 1.)

Mr. Speaker, I must thank my right hon. friend for his courtesy in moving the House into supply in order to give me an opportunity to make a statement which I have desired for some time past to make, but which, owing to the rules of the House, I have found it impossible to make at an earlier date. The subject I desire to discuss is one which I would have raised as a question of privilege had it not been that the rules of the House limit a speaker in such case to a simple denial of statements complained of, and the matters to which I wish to refer are of such a nature that the House, I think, will permit from me something more than a formal denial.

I desire to bring to the attention of hon. members a report of a meeting which was held in the city of Montreal on the 5th day of this month, which appears in the Montreal Gazette of the day following. It is the account of a meeting of the regular weekly luncheon of the so-called "Progressive Club" in that city. The report contains addresses by Mr. John MacNaughton, an advocate, of Montreal, and by a Dr. Gilday, a medical practitioner, also of that city. The report will be found on page 5 of the Montreal Gazette, under the following heading: "Scored Liberal Party on Policy." "Progressive Club Speaker claims Opposition not in harmony on question." "Criticised Party Leader." "Said indications pointed to continuing relationship between Hon. Mackenzie King and Rockefeller." The particular statements to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, and which I regard as being defamatory, appear in the addresses of both Mr. MacNaughton and Dr. Gilday. First, under the sub-heading, "Menace to Canada" is the following as a part of the address delivered by Mr. MacNaughton. Referring to myself, Mr. MacNaughton is thus reported:

"So far as the returned man was concerned, he declared, who could he expect to receive any concessions from a Liberal leader hwo had deserted Canada in her hour of crisis in search of Standard Oil millions. Indications pointed to a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests, which at no distant date might prove a menace to Canada."

Then appears the following reference to utterances by Dr. Gilday:

"In moving a vote of thanks to the speakers of the day, Dr. F. W. Gilday referred to the first Liberal leader as one whose connections with American capitalists might soon prove inimical to Canada's best interests.

"He saw in Mr. King the representative of certain American commercial men charged with the mission of making Canada a free trade country, and commercially subservient to the United States. Mr. King had left Canada at the time of war crisis, although a bachelor and capable of bearing arms, and only a young man. He preferred, however, to work for Rockefeller, and indications pointed to the fact that he had returned to Canada not for the purpose of the country's best welfare and advancement, but still apparently entangled in the octopus of Standard Oil interests and Rockefeller millions. The future, he said, would bear out the truth of his remarks."

Mr. Speaker, it will be perfectly apparent to hon. members of this House that statements of this kind are intended to arouse prejudice not in one direction only, but in many directions, and prejudice of the most bitter and cruel kind—prejudice in the minds of labour, prejudice in the minds of returned soldiers, prejudice in the minds of the business community, prejudice in the minds of patriotic citizens. The statements are absolutely false in fact and misleading in inference. They constitute as utter a slander, and as undoubted a criminal libel as any statement could possibly be. If I have not taken steps to proceed against the guilty parties, it is because I am willing to believe that they were made in complete ignorance of the facts, and that they would not have been uttered had the truth been known to those who made them, or to the journal which has given them publicity.

I do not at this moment rise to make any defence in regard to any statement which is contained in these utterances. My purpose is solely to place on record a few relevant facts, so that ignorance of the truth, or any pleading of current rumor, will not hereafter be any defence should I find it necessary and desirable to take criminal proceedings against individuals, or publications that persist in this kind of political warfare.

Were the gentlemen who have made these statements not members of learned and honorable professions, and were the paper that has given publicity to them not one which prides itself on its high place in journalism in this country, I could well afford to treat them with that contempt and indifference with which I have treated like slanderous statements in the past. I feel, however, that if I continue to allow statements of this kind to go unchallenged, in view of the publicity that has been given them, I shall be laying myself open to being misunderstood throughout the country in a manner which will not only prejudice me personally as a member of this House, but also prejudice hon. gentlemen who have honored me with the position I hold and those who accord to us political support. I have a further reason for desiring to give to the House a few relevant facts, and that is my belief that there are many persons in this country who have no desire for further either a personal injury or a public wrong, but who, owing to the currency which has been given to certain false statements and rumours, find it difficult to understand how so much publicity could be given to anything that is so absolutely without foundation.

And I have yet another reason for desiring to make this statement at this time. I see no other way in which many of my fellow countrymen who have served this country overseas can find it possible to become acquainted with the truth, in view of statements that have been made to them concerning matters which were supposed to have taken place during the time they were absent from this country.

Sir, as I have said, these statements are utterly false and completely misleading.

First of all, there is the statement that I have resided in the United States. Permit me to say that I have lived for the last twenty years in the city of Ottawa, and have never during that time had my place of residence anywhere else. During the last ten years I have resided in the Roxborough Apartments in this city, and any member of this House who inquires of the Imperial Realty Company, the proprietors of the Roxborough, will find that at no time during the war or since have I cancelled my lease or even temporarily sublet the apartment which I occupy. The relationship which I had with the Rockefeller Foundation, and to which I shall allude in a moment, did not require or necessitate in any way my absence from Canada; nor did it as a matter of fact occasion any absence except in the most transient way. More than that, at present I have not, and for some considerable time past have not had any business connection with any commercial, financial or business interest either in the United States or in Canada. I have had none such since I was honored with the position of the leadership of my party in August last. I have refused consistently since that time even to entertain the acceptance of a retainer or fee for any work and I have done so in order that I might devote to the public duties which devolve upon me, my entire time and attention.

Now sir, let me explain the nautre of my relationship to the Rockefeller Foundation. First of all, the Foundation is not in any sense of the word a business or commercial enterprise. It is a philanthropic organization chartered under the laws of the State of New York in the year 1913. As described in the Act of Incorporation, it is a body corporate "for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the interest and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." During the war its activities were for the most part in the nature of war work co-operation. It was the first organization in the United States to come to the relief of the Belgians in the matter of food and clothing. It not only assisted the Belgians, but its funds were utilized to bring relief to the starving populaitons in portions of France as well as Belgium and to the peoples of Poland, Serbia and Armenia at the hour of their greatest need. It gave millions of dollars in assistance to Red Cross and Y.M.C.A. work in army and navy camps and communities. It equipped and maintained war demonstration hospitals, provided the services of Dr. Alexis Carrel and his staff, hospital and surgical laboratory at Compiegne, France. It carried out many other forms of war work thorughout the whole of that terrible period. Apart from the war, its activities relate mainly to medical education and public health demonstration in different parts of the world. It is carrying on its beneficent operations in China, in France, in India, in Egypt, and indeed in all parts of the world, and all its work is, as I have indicated, exclusively that of promoting the well-being of mankind.

(To be Continued)

NUXATED IRON

HELPS MAKE STRONG, STURDY MEN and HEALTHY BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

"Iron is red blood food and in my experience I have found no better means of building up the red blood corpuscles and helping to give increased power to the blood than organic iron-like Nuxated Iron." Dr. H. B. Vali, formerly physician in the Baltimore Hospital and a Medical Examiner.

DO NOT ACCEPT SUBSTITUTES

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4335

Quebec Telegraph
July 2, 1920

WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES

Speech of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M.P., Leader of the Opposition in Reply to Misrepresentations Concerning His Services in Adjustment of Relations Between Two Factors During Period of the War

(INSTALLMENT NO. 2)

My duties in connection with the Rockefeller Foundation were to make a study of the problem of industrial relations with a view to ascertaining if it were possible to contribute in any way toward the solution of that intricate and world-wide problem.

I was no more in the employ of the Rockefeller interests, or of any Standard Oil interest, in my association with the Rockefeller Foundation than any librarian of a Carnegie library can be said to have been in the employ of the late Andrew Carnegie, or than teachers and professors who are the recipients of pensions from the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching can be said to be related to any steel or trust corporation.

Within the last few months, as an expression of internaitional good will, the Rockefeller Foundation made to the universities of the Dominion a gift of $5,000,000, to be used for research work in connection with their medical departments. The young men or professors who study under the benefits of this particular gift will occupy a position precisely similar in its relation to any Rockefeller interest to that which I did when I was appointed by the Foundation to make a study of this question of industrial relations.

May I point out that my connection with the Rockefeller Foundation was formed before the war commenced. My acceptance was given in the spring of the year before the war was thought of. At the time it was made, I had been nominated and was in the position of candidate of the Liberal party in the constituency of North York. When I was asked if I would undertake that study for the Foundation, I pointed out that if it meant any change of residence from Canada, it would be impossible for me to consider it. It was told that I could pursue my researches anywhere I wished. that there was no obligation to live at one place rather than another, that I could go to any part of the world, and have a staff of men to assist me if I so desired, in carrying out the researches which I had been asked to undertake, the sole object being to conduct a study that might be helpful as a contribution towards the solution of industrial problems.

That was the situation when the war came on. I had then to decide just as every other man in this country had, what, under existing circumstances, it was best to do. I had to decide in relation to the Rockefeller Foundation and the work which I had undertaken, whether I should abandon those studies altogether, or wnether I should undertake them in relation to the problems which were growing out of the war. I shall mention in a moment or two certain private considerations of which I was obliged to take account in reaching a decision but for the present I wish to confine what I have to say to the public reasons which I felt were strong enough to cause me to make the decision I did, a decision which I believed at the time and have ever since believed, was entirely in the right direction.

As hon. gentlemen know, the war had not proceeded very far before it became perfectly apparent that the winning of the war depended upon the successful co-operation of capital and labour in the industries that were engaged in the production of munitions, and the furnishing of war supplies and materials, as well as upon the heroic efforts of the men who were fighting at the front. The Governments of the different countries recognized that to be the situation. The Government of Great Britain established shortly after the beginning of the war, a reconstruction committee which subsequently became the ministry of Reconstruction in England with a sub-committee on relations between employers and employee, to deal with the problems of industry as they arose during the war, and were likely to arise during the period of reconstruction. The Government of the United States appointed a National War Labour Board, and the Government of Canada—the present Government—appointed the Reconstruction and Development Committee of the Cabinet, with a labor subcommittee. The work of all these bodies was to study the problems arising out of the relations between capital and labour with a view, if possible, to avoiding industrial controversy in essential industries during the war and finding means for the rapid development of peaceful and helpful relations in the period after the war.

The work I was doing for the Rockefeller Foundation, both in its purpose, as research, and in its practical effort was identical with the kind of work which was being done by persons associated with these bodies. Every man associated with any of these organizations was regarded by his fellow countrymen as rendering a much needed war service, a service for which he was specially qualified, and for which he had been chosen because of special qualifications.

My selection by the Rockefeller Foundation had been made, amongst other reasons, because of the circumstances that during a number of years I had held a position in the Department of Labour of this country as deputy minister of the department, and subsequently as minister, and during that time had had considerable to do, at first hand, and in a practical way, with industrial problems. It was believed that with that experience, and with the opportunity the Foundation afforded, a useful service might be rendered.

The results of my work for the Rockefeller Foundation are published in book form. I think some hon. gentlemen may have heard of the book; and here let me say that I am sure the House will realize how extremely embarrassing it is to any one to be obliged to make a reference to his own work. But, hon. gentlemen will also realize, I am sure, that if I simply make a general statement such may not prove sufficient under the circumstances. I am, therefore, obliged to make specific reference to some portion of the work accomplished in this connection. That is my apology and my reason of necessity for referring to one or two things which I wish to place before the House for consideration. Whether the results of my study bear at all helpfully upon the problem of reconstruction or not, hon. members will be able to see for themselves by referring to the book. It is entitled "Industry and Humanity: A Study in the Problems Underlying Industrial Reconstruction." The book consists of some 550 pages, exclusive of charts and diagrams. Every line of it was written in the city of Ottawa; every page of proof was read in this city; all of the research work was done in Canada. It was done during the war, and the book itself was published before the Armistice had been concluded. The Canadian editions have been published by Thomas Allen, of Toronto, the American by Houghton Mifflin, of Boston and New York, and the English by Constable and Co.

I presume the impression that in some way or another I was connected with the so-called Rockefeller interests grew first of all out of this association with the Foundation to which I have referred. It may also have grown out of the fact that in the early years of the war I spent quite a little time in the state of Colorado, and later, accompanied Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., through the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. May I say to hon. members that the reason I went to Colorado at the time I did was because there had been a situation there very much in the nature of an industrial situation on this continent. I went of my own volition, under direction or suggestion from no one. I had been given a perfectly free hand by the Rockefeller Foundation to do what I thought best in the way of carrying out the work which the trustees of the Foundation had given me the opportunity to perform. I felt that if it were possible to demonstrate in the state of Colorado, under conditions such as existed there, that the application of certain principles to the relations of employers and employees could not do other than operate in a manner that would be helpful alike to labour, capital and the public, it would be rendering a service to industry in a place where, and at a time when it was very greatly needed. The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company was one of the companies which had been affected by the strike. It is the largest concern in that state. It employs somewhere in the neighbourhood of 12,000 workers in coal mines, iron mines and steel works. Like other steel and coal companies, its help was required to provide essential war supplies, and it had orders from the Allies to be carried out. Because of the Rockefeller interest in that company I believed that my association with the Foundation might gain for me an exceptional opportunity, which it did. I am not going to refer to my work done in that connection. It was work done in public, and hon. members can find out its scope and significance for themselves if they are sufficiently interested in so doing. All I wish to state at the moment is that for that service—or whatever measure of service it may have been possible to render in the State of Colorado—I received no payment from any individual directly or indirectly concerned with any of the companies with which I had to deal. I undertook the work as a part of the opportunity afforded me by the Rockefeller Foundation, and I carried it out wholly in that spirit.

(To be Continued)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Quebec Telegraph
July 3, 1920

D 4336

WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES

Speech of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M.P., Leader of the Opposition in Reply to Misrepresentations Concerning His Services in Adjustment of Relations Between Two Factors During Period of the War

INSTALMENT NO. 3

If the House will permit it, I should feel deeply obliged if, at the conclusion of my remarks, I might be allowed by general consent to place on Hansard one statement which I think will accurately reveal the nature of the work done in Colorado. It is from an authority which no one in this House will question, and is an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe of October 13, 1915, entitled "Solving Colorado's Civil War, by J. A. M." The article is by Dr. J. A. Macdonald, who at the time was editor-in-Chief of the Globe, and who visited Colorado while I was there engaged upon the work to which I have just been referring. It was written by Dr. Macdonald at the time, was published in the Globe, and is of record there. If the House denies me the privilege of placing the article on Hansard, hon. gentlemen who may be interested at all in discovering the significance of that work or the truth concerning it will be able to do so by a reference to the files of that paper.

Solving Colorado's Civil War
By J.A.M.

I had spent the whole day interviewing all sorts and conditions of men, and gathering all sorts of views about the one question of universal interests these days in all these mountain mining regions—Mr. Rockefeller's plan for the complete reorganization of the mining industry in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, in which he holds 40 per cent. of the stock, and to whose conditions he has been giving a direct and personal interest during the past fortnight wholly without precedent in the history of capital and labour.

"Last week in Toronto we had Associated Press despatches to the globe describing this unusual trip by Mr. Rockefeller, his meeting with men of all grades in all the camps and in the pits, his conference with them face to face, and his proposals to them for a fresh pack and a new deal. The despatches mentioned Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King as being the magnate's guide, philosopher and friend.

Mackenzie King's Work

"Almost the first man I met after reaching Denver, two days ago, in the rotunda of the Brown, was Mackenzie King. He has been in colorado a great deal of his time since joining the Rockefeller Foundation. At the very beginning of his work as Chief Executive for the study at first hand of industrial relations, Mr. King stipulated that the mining camps of Colorado where long industrial strife issued in actual civil war, and where the Foundation itself is a large holder of corporate securities, provided an immense laboratory for a comprehensive study of the essential facts, the root causes of industrial disturbances and the lines of policy to be adopted if industrial war is to make way for co-operation, prosperity and peace.

"The root idea of the old policy on both sides, both capital and labor, was competition. In the new policy the root idea is co-operation. If the seed of co-operation is nourished and comes to full fruitage it may yield co-partnership. I did not find that Mr. Rockefeller baulked at the idea of capital and labor coming to be partners in the industrial world.

"It was both interesting and significant to observe the effect of the young man's personal touch on men whose hostility was deep-seated and fierce. The great body of the miners voting by secret ballot, after hearing him expound the plan and studying it in its fully-printed form for several days, voted almost unanimously for its approval. A newspaperman who went the rounds of the camps, and whose sympathies were socialistic and anti-capitalistic, confessed to me that what he saw at close range convinced him that Rockefeller is absolutely sincere, resolved to meet the men far more than half way, and has accepted the principles of industrial co-operation with an honest mind and a serious purpose. This view I found to prevail among the Denver newspapermen. A chicago journalist who came to Colorado to curse returned to Chicago to bless.

A Straightforward Man

"This, indeed, was the impression made on my own mind by frank conversation and close observations. I did not find this young capitalist other than very straightforward and humanely sympathetic. He accepted the obligations of great wealth and stupendous industrial responsibility as a man "who must give an account."

"It was not difficult to observe the reflex influence of Mackenzie King's personality and teaching on the life and programme of John D. Rockefeller, jr., I confess that I had real misgivings about King's decision last year to undertake work with the Rockefeller Foundation. I feared its reaction on his own outlook and life work. After observing the situation in Colorado the change of front not by King, but by Rockefeller, and studying the testimony of newspapermen and others, who assured me that all this that Rockefeller had done is in reality the result of King's careful study of industrial problems in the mines. and of his competent exposition of it to Mr. Rockefeller and his associates. I am entirely reassured. Nor was Mr. Rockefeller at all reluctant to give Mr. King full credit.

King Has Made Good

"The terms of the new policy have already been sent to the Globe by the Associated Press, but Canadians who have watched Mr. King's steady progress as a student of industrial problems and a leader in industrial reform will be gratified to know that, in dealing with this most gigantic problem of capital and labor at the time and place when strikes, murders, civil war and two hundred indictments were the chief features, he has made abundantly good, justified his own decision of last year, brought honour to Canada's Department of Labour, which he established on sound economic foundations, and gives promise of even larger services in industry and politics in which Canada will share just as beneficially as the United Srates.

"Mackenzie King will always be a Canadian, makes his headquarters in Ottawa, gives only a part of his time to the Foundation's work outside of Canada, and holds his added study and wider experience for the loyal service of his native country. Certain if this new experiment in Colorado achieves what its initial prospect promises, not Canada alone but the whole industrial world will have cause for gratitude that the misfortune of politics in 1911 left Mackenzie King's hand free for a while to tackle a big man's job."

I have here, also, a letter from Mr. J. F. Welborn, President of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of Denver, Colorado, which gives a statement from the company's point of view; and presents the significance of the work as it has grown with time. I do not wish to read this letter to the House, though if it were not taking up time unduly I should feel it a privilege to do so. I should be pleased if it might be permitted to appear on Hansard along with the other communication. There is one point in this letter to which I should like to direct attention. Mr. Welborn shows that as a result of the Industrial Councils formed that when the United States came into the war, the coal production in the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company exceeded per man per day that of any of the other coal mines in the United States; and he attributes that success to the joint relations of capital and labour under the plan of industrial representation as drawn up.

There remains the statement that I was young, and a bachelor. I am now in my forty-sixth year. When the war commenced, I was in my fortieth year. Shortly before that time, my father, a barrister and solicitor, and one of the lecturers at the Law School in Toronto, was stricken with blindness, and obliged to give up the practice of law and lecturing at the Law School. He and my mother and unmarried sister lived together at our home in Toronto. My brother, who for a number of years was a practising physician in this city, some little time prior to the war, after an attack of influeza complicated by double pheumonia, developed tuberculosis, and was obliged to give up the practice of his profession and for the greater part of two years to spend his time in a sanatorium. Later, he and his wife and little children took up permanent residence in Colorado. There was no one left to share the responsibilities of our home under these sad and trying circumstances, but my married sister and myself. My married sister had, as well, her own family to consider.

On April, 4, 1915, within the first few months of the war, my unmarried sister died. That left my father and mother alone. On August 30, 1916, my father died. After spending a few weeks with my invalid brother in Denver, and two or three months with my married sister, my mother came to reside with me at the Roxborough, here, in Ottawa. My mother was critically ill most of the year she was with me, and on December 18, 1917, she, too died. My brother, I rejoice to say, though still an invalid,, has fought his disease so successfully as to be able to publish a book, entitled "The Battle With Tuberculosis and How to Win It," which has found a place in our military hospitals. The inscription of this volume, "Gratefully and affectionately dedicated to my wife and to my brother, speaks for itself.

As I look back upon those years of the war, so full of poignant suffering for the whole of mankind, I cannot but experience a sense of gratitude, that in that world ordeal it was given to me to share in so intimate a way the sufferings of others, and with it all, so large a measure of opportunity to do my duty, as God gave it to me to see my duty, at that time.

(Concluded.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Quebec Telegraph
July 3, 1920

D 4336

WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES

Speech of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, M.P., Leader of the Opposition in Reply to Misrepresentations Concerning His Services in Adjustment of Relations Between Two Factors During Period of the War

INSTALMENT NO. 3

If the House will permit it, I should feel deeply obliged if, at the conclusion of my remarks, I might be allowed by general consent to place on Hansard one statement which I think will accurately reveal the nature of the work done in Colorado. It is from an authority which no one in this House will question, and is an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe of October 13, 1915, entitled "Solving Colorado's Civil War, by J. A. M." The article is by Dr. J. A. Macdonald, who at the time was editor-in-Chief of the Globe, and who visited Colorado while I was there engaged upon the work to which I have just been referring. It was written by Dr. Macdonald at the time, was published in the Globe, and is of record there. If the House denies me the privilege of placing the article on Hansard, hon. gentlemen who may be interested at all in discovering the significance of that work or the truth concerning it will be able to do so by a reference to the files of that paper.

Solving Colorado's Civil War
By J.A.M.

I had spent the whole day interviewing all sorts and conditions of men, and gathering all sorts of views about the one question of universal interests these days in all these mountain mining regions—Mr. Rockefeller's plan for the complete reorganization of the mining industry in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, in which he holds 40 per cent. of the stock, and to whose conditions he has been giving a direct and personal interest during the past fortnight wholly without precedent in the history of capital and labour.

"Last week in Toronto we had Associated Press despatches to the globe describing this unusual trip by Mr. Rockefeller, his meeting with men of all grades in all the camps and in the pits, his conference with them face to face, and his proposals to them for a fresh pack and a new deal. The despatches mentioned Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King as being the magnate's guide, philosopher and friend.

Mackenzie King's Work

"Almost the first man I met after reaching Denver, two days ago, in the rotunda of the Brown, was Mackenzie King. He has been in colorado a great deal of his time since joining the Rockefeller Foundation. At the very beginning of his work as Chief Executive for the study at first hand of industrial relations, Mr. King stipulated that the mining camps of Colorado where long industrial strife issued in actual civil war, and where the Foundation itself is a large holder of corporate securities, provided an immense laboratory for a comprehensive study of the essential facts, the root causes of industrial disturbances and the lines of policy to be adopted if industrial war is to make way for co-operation, prosperity and peace.

"The root idea of the old policy on both sides, both capital and labor, was competition. In the new policy the root idea is co-operation. If the seed of co-operation is nourished and comes to full fruitage it may yield co-partnership. I did not find that Mr. Rockefeller baulked at the idea of capital and labor coming to be partners in the industrial world.

"It was both interesting and significant to observe the effect of the young man's personal touch on men whose hostility was deep-seated and fierce. The great body of the miners voting by secret ballot, after hearing him expound the plan and studying it in its fully-printed form for several days, voted almost unanimously for its approval. A newspaperman who went the rounds of the camps, and whose sympathies were socialistic and anti-capitalistic, confessed to me that what he saw at close range convinced him that Rockefeller is absolutely sincere, resolved to meet the men far more than half way, and has accepted the principles of industrial co-operation with an honest mind and a serious purpose. This view I found to prevail among the Denver newspapermen. A chicago journalist who came to Colorado to curse returned to Chicago to bless.

A Straightforward Man

"This, indeed, was the impression made on my own mind by frank conversation and close observations. I did not find this young capitalist other than very straightforward and humanely sympathetic. He accepted the obligations of great wealth and stupendous industrial responsibility as a man "who must give an account."

"It was not difficult to observe the reflex influence of Mackenzie King's personality and teaching on the life and programme of John D. Rockefeller, jr., I confess that I had real misgivings about King's decision last year to undertake work with the Rockefeller Foundation. I feared its reaction on his own outlook and life work. After observing the situation in Colorado the change of front not by King, but by Rockefeller, and studying the testimony of newspapermen and others, who assured me that all this that Rockefeller had done is in reality the result of King's careful study of industrial problems in the mines. and of his competent exposition of it to Mr. Rockefeller and his associates. I am entirely reassured. Nor was Mr. Rockefeller at all reluctant to give Mr. King full credit.

King Has Made Good

"The terms of the new policy have already been sent to the Globe by the Associated Press, but Canadians who have watched Mr. King's steady progress as a student of industrial problems and a leader in industrial reform will be gratified to know that, in dealing with this most gigantic problem of capital and labor at the time and place when strikes, murders, civil war and two hundred indictments were the chief features, he has made abundantly good, justified his own decision of last year, brought honour to Canada's Department of Labour, which he established on sound economic foundations, and gives promise of even larger services in industry and politics in which Canada will share just as beneficially as the United Srates.

"Mackenzie King will always be a Canadian, makes his headquarters in Ottawa, gives only a part of his time to the Foundation's work outside of Canada, and holds his added study and wider experience for the loyal service of his native country. Certain if this new experiment in Colorado achieves what its initial prospect promises, not Canada alone but the whole industrial world will have cause for gratitude that the misfortune of politics in 1911 left Mackenzie King's hand free for a while to tackle a big man's job."

I have here, also, a letter from Mr. J. F. Welborn, President of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of Denver, Colorado, which gives a statement from the company's point of view; and presents the significance of the work as it has grown with time. I do not wish to read this letter to the House, though if it were not taking up time unduly I should feel it a privilege to do so. I should be pleased if it might be permitted to appear on Hansard along with the other communication. There is one point in this letter to which I should like to direct attention. Mr. Welborn shows that as a result of the Industrial Councils formed that when the United States came into the war, the coal production in the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company exceeded per man per day that of any of the other coal mines in the United States; and he attributes that success to the joint relations of capital and labour under the plan of industrial representation as drawn up.

There remains the statement that I was young, and a bachelor. I am now in my forty-sixth year. When the war commenced, I was in my fortieth year. Shortly before that time, my father, a barrister and solicitor, and one of the lecturers at the Law School in Toronto, was stricken with blindness, and obliged to give up the practice of law and lecturing at the Law School. He and my mother and unmarried sister lived together at our home in Toronto. My brother, who for a number of years was a practising physician in this city, some little time prior to the war, after an attack of influeza complicated by double pheumonia, developed tuberculosis, and was obliged to give up the practice of his profession and for the greater part of two years to spend his time in a sanatorium. Later, he and his wife and little children took up permanent residence in Colorado. There was no one left to share the responsibilities of our home under these sad and trying circumstances, but my married sister and myself. My married sister had, as well, her own family to consider.

On April, 4, 1915, within the first few months of the war, my unmarried sister died. That left my father and mother alone. On August 30, 1916, my father died. After spending a few weeks with my invalid brother in Denver, and two or three months with my married sister, my mother came to reside with me at the Roxborough, here, in Ottawa. My mother was critically ill most of the year she was with me, and on December 18, 1917, she, too died. My brother, I rejoice to say, though still an invalid,, has fought his disease so successfully as to be able to publish a book, entitled "The Battle With Tuberculosis and How to Win It," which has found a place in our military hospitals. The inscription of this volume, "Gratefully and affectionately dedicated to my wife and to my brother, speaks for itself.

As I look back upon those years of the war, so full of poignant suffering for the whole of mankind, I cannot but experience a sense of gratitude, that in that world ordeal it was given to me to share in so intimate a way the sufferings of others, and with it all, so large a measure of opportunity to do my duty, as God gave it to me to see my duty, at that time.

(Concluded.)

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D' 4337

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

SPEECH

OF

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING, M.P.
LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

IN REPLY TO MISREPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING HIS SERVICES IN

THE ADJUSTMENT OF RELATIONS

BETWEEN

WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES

During the Period of the War.

(House of Commons, Ottawa, Tuesday, April 20, 1920.)

Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I must thank my right hon. friend for his courtesy in moving the House into supply in order to give me an opportunity to make a statement which I have desired for some time past to make, but which, owing to the rules of the House, I have found it impossible to make at an earlier date. The subject I desire to discuss is one which I would have raised as a question of privilege had it not been that the rules of the House limit a speaker in such case to a simple denial of statements complained of, and the matters to which I wish to refer are of such a nature that the House I think will permit from me something more than a formal denial.

I desire to bring to the attention of hon. members a report of a meeting which was held in the city of Montreal on the 5th day of this month, which appears in the Montreal Gazette of the day following. It is the account of a meeting of the regular weekly luncheon of the so-called "Progressive Club" in that city. The report contains addresses by Mr. John MacNaughton, an advocate of Montreal, and by a Dr. Gilday, a medical practitioner, also of that city. The report will be found on page 5 of the Montreal Gazette, under the following heading: "Scored Liberal Party on Policy." "Progressive Club speaker claims Opposition not in harmony on question." "Criticised Party Leader." "Said indications pointed to continuing relationship between Hon. Mackenzie King and Rockefeller." The particular statements to which I wish to draw the attention of the House, and which I regard as being defamatory, appear in the addresses of both Mr. MacNaughton and Dr. Gilday. First, under the sub-heading, "Menace to Canada" is the following as a part of the address delivered by Mr. MacNaughton. Referring to myself Mr. MacNaughton is thus reported:

> So far as the returned man was concerned, he declared, how could he expect to receive any concessions from a Liberal leader who had de-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

serted Canada in her hour of crisis in search of Standard Oil millions. Indications pointed to a still continuing relationship between Mr. King and the Rockefeller interests, which at no distant date might prove a menace to Canada.

Then appears the following reference to utterances by Dr. Gilday:

In moving a vote of thanks to the speakers of the day, Dr. F. W. Gilday referred to the first Liberal leader as one whose connections with American capitalists might soon prove inimical to Canada's best interests.

He saw in Mr. King the representative of certain American commercial men charged with the mission of making Canada a free trade country, and commercially subservient to the United States. Mr. King had left Canada at the time of war crisis, although a bachelor and capable of bearing arms, and only a young man. He preferred, however, to work for Rockefeller, and indications pointed to the fact that he had returned to Canada not for the purpose of the country's best welfare and advancement, but still apparently entangled in the octopus of Standard Oil interests and Rockefeller millions. The future, he said, would bear out the truth of his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, it will be perfectly apparent to hon. members of this House that statements of this kind are intended to arouse prejudice not in one direction only, but in many directions, and prejudice of the most bitter and cruel kind—prejudice in the minds of labour, prejudice in the minds of the returned soldiers, prejudice in the minds of the business community, prejudice in the minds of all patriotic citizens. The statements are absolutely false in fact and misleading in inference. They constitute as utter a slander, and as undoubted a criminal libel as any statement could possibly be. If I have not taken steps to proceed against the guilty parties, it is because I am willing to believe that they were made in complete ignorance of the facts, and that they would not have been uttered had the truth been known to those who made them, or to the journal which has given them publicity.

I do not at this moment rise to make any defence in regard to any statement which is contained in these utterances. My purpose is solely to place on record a few relevant facts, so that ignorance of the truth, or any pleading of current rumour, will not hereafter be any defence should I find it necessary and desirable to take criminal proceedings against individuals, or publications that persist in this kind of political warfare.

Were the gentlemen who have made these statements not members of learned and honourable professions, and were the paper that has given publicity to them not one which prides itself on its high place in journalism in this country, I could well afford to treat them with that contempt and indifference with which I have treated like slanderous statements in the past. I feel, however, that if I continue to allow statements of this kind to go unchallenged, in view of the publicity that has been given them, I shall be laying myself open to being misunderstood throughout the country in a manner which will not only prejudice me personally as a member of this House but also prejudice hon. gentlemen who have honoured me with the position I hold and those who accord to us political support. I have a further reason for desiring to give to the House a few relevant facts, and that is my belief that there are many persons in this country who have no desire to further either a personal injury or a public wrong, but who, owing to the currency which has been given to certain false statements and rumours, find it difficult to understand how so much publicity could be given to anything that is so absolutely without foundation.

And I have yet another reason for desiring to make this statement at this time. I see no other way in which many of my fellow-countrymen who have served this country overseas can find it possible to become acquainted with the truth, in view of statements that have been made to them concerning matters which were supposed to have taken place during the time they were absent from this country.

Sir, as I have said, these statements are utterly false and completely misleading.

First of all, there is the statement that I have resided in the United States. Permit me to say that I have lived for the last twenty years in this city of Ottawa, and have never during that time had my place of residence anywhere else. During the last ten years I have resided in the Roxborough Apartments in this city, and any member of this House who inquires of the Imperial Realty Company, the proprietors of the Roxborough, will find that at no time during the war or since have I cancelled my lease or even temporarily sublet the apartment which I occupy. The relationship which I had with the Rockefeller Foundation, and to which I shall allude in a moment, did not require or necessitate in any way my absence from Canada; nor did it as a matter of fact occasion any absence except in the most transient way. More than that, at present I have not, and for some considerable time past have not had any business connection with any commercial, financial or business interest either in the United States or in Canada. I have had none such since I was honoured with the position of the leadership of my party in August last. I have refused consistently since that time even to entertain the acceptance of a retainer or fee for any work and I have done so in order that I might devote to the public duties which devolve upon me, my entire time and attention.

Now, Sir, let me explain the nature of my relationship to the Rockefeller Foundation. First of all, the Foundation is not in any sense of the word a business or commercial enterprise. It is a philanthropic organization chartered under the laws of the State of New York in the year 1913. As described in the Act of Incorporation, it is a body corporate "for the purpose of receiving and maintaining a fund or funds and applying the interest and principal thereof to promote the well-being of mankind throughout the world." During the war its activities were for the most part in the nature of war work co-operation. It was the first organization in the United States to come to the relief of the Belgians in the matter of food and clothing. It not only assisted the Belgians but its funds were utilized to bring relief to the starving populations in portions of France as well as Belgium and to the peoples of Poland, Serbia and Armenia at the hour of their greatest need. It gave millions of dollars in assistance to Red Cross and Y.M.C.A. work in army and navy camps and communities. It equipped and maintained war demonstration hospitals, provided the services of Dr. Alexis Carrel and his staff, hospital and surgical laboratory at Compiegne, France. It carried out many other forms of war work throughout the whole of that terrible period. Apart from the war, its activities relate mainly to medical education and public health demonstration in different parts of the world. It is carrying on its beneficent operations in China, in France, in India, in Egypt and indeed in all parts of the world, and all its work is, as I have indicated, exclusively that of promoting the well-being of mankind.

My duties in connection with the Rockefeller Foundation were to make a study of the problem of industrial relations with a view to ascertaining if it were possible to contribute in any way toward the solution of that intricate and world wide problem.

I was no more in the employ of the Rockefeller interests, or of any Standard Oil interest, in my association with the Rockefeller Foundation than any librarian of a Carnegie library can be said to have been in the employ of the late Andrew Carnegie, or than teachers and professors who are the recipients of pensions from the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching can be said to be related to any steel trust or corporation.

Within the last few months, as an expression of international good-will, the Rockefeller Foundation made to the universities of this Dominion a gift of $5,000,000 to be used for research work in connection with their medical departments. The young men or professors who study under the benefits of this particular gift will occupy a position precisely similar in its relation to any Rockefeller interest to that which I did when I was appointed by the Foundation to make a study of this question of industrial relations.

May I point out that my connection with the Rockefeller Foundation was formed before the war commenced. My acceptance was given in the spring of the year before the war was thought of. At the time it was made, I had been nominated and was in the position of candidate of the Liberal party in the constituency of North York. When I was asked if I would undertake that study for the Foundation, I pointed out that if it meant any change of residence from Canada, it would be impossible for me to consider it. I was told that I could pursue my researches anywhere I wished, that there was no obligation to live at one place rather than another, that I could go to any part of the world, and have a staff of men to assist me if I so desired, in carrying out the researches which I had been asked to undertake, the sole object being to conduct a study that might be helpful as a contribution towards the solution of industrial problems.

That was the situation when the war came on. I had then to decide, just as every other man in this country had, what, under existing circumstances, it was best to do. I had to decide in relation to the Rockefeller Foundation, and the work which I had undertaken, whether I should abandon those studies altogether, or whether I should undertake them in relation to the problems which were growing out of the war. I shall mention in a moment or two certain private considerations of which I was obliged to take account in reaching a decision; but for the present I wish to confine what I have to say to the public reasons which I felt were strong enough to

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4340

cause me to make the decision I did, a decision which I believed at the time and have ever since believed, was entirely in the right direction.

As hon. gentlemen know, the war had not proceeded very far before it became perfectly apparent that the winning of the war depended upon the successful co-operation of capital and labour in the industries that were engaged in the production of munitions, and the furnishing of war supplies and materials, as well as upon the heroic efforts of the men who were fighting at the front. The governments of the different countries recognized that to be the situation. The Government of Great Britain established, shortly after the beginning of the war, a reconstruction committee, which subsequently became the Ministry of Reconstruction in England, with a subcommittee on relations between employers and employed, to deal with the problems of industry as they arose during the war, and were likely to arise during the period of reconstruction. The Government of the United States appointed a National War Labour Board, and the Government of Canada—the present Government—appointed the Reconstruction and Development Committee of the Cabinet, with a labour subcommittee. The work of all these bodies was to study the problems arising out of the relations between capital and labour with a view, if possible, to avoiding industrial controversy in essential industries during the war and finding means for the rapid development of peaceful and helpful relations in the period after the war.

The work I was doing for the Rockefeller Foundation, both in its purpose, as research, and in its practical effort, was identical with the kind of work which was being done by persons associated with these bodies. Every man associated with any of these organizations was regarded by his fellow countrymen as rendering a much needed war service, a service for which he was specially qualified, and for which he had been chosen because of special qualifications.

My selection by the Rockefeller Foundation had been made, amongst other reasons, because of the circumstances that during a number of years I had held a position in the Department of Labour of this country as deputy minister of the department, and subsequently as minister, and during that time had had considerable to do, at first hand, and in a practical way with industrial problems. It was believed that with that experience, and with the opportunity the Foundation afforded, a useful service might be rendered.

The results of my work for the Rockefeller Foundation are published in book form. I think some hon. gentlemen may have heard of the book; and here let me say that I am sure the House will realize how extremely embarrassing it is to any one to be obliged to make a reference to his own work. But hon. gentlemen will also realize, I am sure, that if I simply make a general statement such may not prove sufficient under the circumstances. I am therefore obliged to make specific reference to some portion of the work accomplished in this connection. That is my apology and my reason of necessity for referring to one or two things which I wish to place before the House for consideration. Whether the results of my study bear at all helpfully upon the problem of reconstruction or not, hon. members will be able to see for themselves by referring to the book. It is entitled "Industry and Humanity: A Study in the Problems Underlying Industrial Reconstruction." The book consists of some 550 pages, exclusive of charts and diagrams. Every line of it was written in the city of Ottawa; every page of proof was read in this city; all of the research work was done in Canada. It was done during the war, and the book itself was published before the Armistice had been concluded. The Canadian editions have been published by Thomas Allen, of Toronto, the American by Houghton Mifflin, of Boston and New York, and the English by Constable and Co.

I presume the impression that in some way or another I was connected with the so-called Rockefeller interests grew first of all out of this association with the Foundation to which I have referred. It may also have grown out of the fact that in the early years of the war I spent quite a little time in the state of Colorado, and later, accompanied Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., through the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company. May I say to hon. members that the reason I went to Colorado at the time I did was because there had been a situation there very much in the nature of an industrial civil war—it was the most serious industrial situation on this continent. I went of my own volition, under direction or suggestion from no one. I had been given a perfectly free hand by the Rockefeller Foundation to do what I thought best in the way of carrying out the work which the trustees of the Foundation had given me the opportunity to perform. I felt that if it were possible to demonstrate in the state of Colorado, under conditions such as existed there, that the application of certain principles to the relations of employers and employees could not do other than operate in a manner that would be helpful alike to labour, capital and the public, it would be rendering a service to industry in a place where, and at a time when it was very greatly needed. The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company was one of the companies which had been affected by the strike. It is the largest concern in that state. It employs somewhere in the neighbourhood of 12,000 workers in coal mines, iron mines, and steel works. Like other steel and coal companies, its help was required to provide essential war supplies, and it had orders from the Allies to be carried out. Because of the Rockefeller interest in that company I believed that my association with the Foundation might gain for me an exceptional opportunity, which it did. I am not going to refer to my work done in that connection. It was work done in public, and hon. members can find out its scope and significance for themselves if they are sufficiently interested in so doing. All I wish to state at the moment is that for that service—or whatever measure of service it may have been possible to render in the State of Colorado—I received no payment from any interest or from any individual directly or indirectly concerned with any of the companies with which I had to deal. I undertook the work as a part of the opportunity afforded me by the Rockefeller Foundation, and I carried it out wholly in that spirit.

D 4341

If the House will permit it, I should feel deeply obliged if, at the conclusion of my remarks, I might be allowed by general consent to place on Hansard one statement which I think will accurately reveal the nature of the work done in Colorado. It is from an authority which no one in this House will question, and is an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe of October 13, 1915, entitled "Solving Colorado's Civil War by J.A.M." The article is by Dr. J. A. Macdonald, who at the time was editor-in-chief of the Globe, and who visited Colorado while I was there engaged upon the work to which I have just been referring. It was written by Dr. Macdonald at the time, was published in the Globe, and is of record there. If the House denies me the privilege of placing the article on Hansard, hon. gentlemen who may be interested at all in discovering the significance of that work or the truth concerning it will be able to do so by a reference to the files of that paper.

Solving Colorado's Civil War.
by J. A. M.

I had spent the whole day interviewing all sorts and conditions of men, and gathering all sorts of views about the one question of universal interests these days in all these mountain mining regions—Mr. Rockefeller's plan for the complete reorganization of the mining industry in the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, in which he holds 40 per cent of the stock, and to whose conditions he has been giving a direct and personal interest during the past fortnight wholly without precedent in the history of capital and labour.

"Last week in Toronto we had Associated Press despatches to the Globe describing this unusual trip by Mr. Rockefeller, his meeting with men of all grades in all the camps and in the pits, his conference with them face to face, and his proposals to them for a fresh pack and a new deal. The despatches mentioned Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King as being the magnate's guide, philosopher and friend.

Mackenzie King's Work.

"Almost the first man I met after reaching Denver, two days ago, in the rotunda of the Brown, was Mackenzie King. He has been in Colorado a great deal of his time since joining the Rockefeller Foundation. At the very beginning of his work as Chief Executive for the study at first hand of industrial relations, Mr. King stipulated that the mining camps of Colorado where long industrial strife issued in actual civil war, and where the Foundation itself is a large holder of corporate securities, provided an immense laboratory for a comprehensive study of the essential facts, the root causes of industrial disturbances and the lines of policy to be adopted if industrial war is to make way for co-operation, prosperity and peace.

"The root idea of the old policy on both sides, both capital and labour, was competition. In the new policy the root idea is co-operation. If the seed of co-operation is nourished and comes to full fruitage it may yield co-partnership. I did not find that Mr. Rockefeller baulked at the idea of capital and labour coming to be partners in the industrial world.

"It was both interesting and significant to observe the effect of the young man's personal touch on men whose hostility was deep-seated and fierce. The great body of the miners voting by secret ballot, after hearing him expound the plan and studying it in its fully-printed form for several days, voted almost unanimously for its approval. A newspaperman who went the rounds of the camps, and whose sympathies were socialistic and anti-capitalistic, confessed to me that what he saw at close range convinced him that Rockefeller is absolutely sincere, resolved to meet the men far more than half-way, and has accepted the principles of industrial co-operation with an honest mind and a serious purpose. This view I found to prevail among the Denver newspapermen. A Chicago journalist who came to Colorado to curse returned to Chicago to bless.

A Straightforward Man.

"This indeed was the impression made on my own mind by frank conversation and close observations. I did not find this young capital-

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

ist other than very straightforward and humanely sympathetic. He accepted the obligations of great wealth and stupendous industrial responsibility as a man "who must give an account."

"It was not difficult to observe the reflex influence of Mackenzie King's personality and teaching on the life and programme of John D. Rockefeller, jr. I confess that I had real misgivings about King's decision last year to undertake work with the Rockefeller Foundation. I feared its reaction on his own outlook and life work. After observing the situation in Colorado, the change of front not by King, but by Rockefeller, and studying the testimony of newspapermen and others, who assured me that all this that Rockefeller has done is in reality the result of King's careful study of industrial problems in the mines, and of his competent exposition of it to Mr. Rockefeller and his associates, I am entirely reassured. Nor was Mr. Rockefeller at all reluctant to give Mr. King full credit.

King Has Made Good.

"The terms of the new policy have already been sent to the Globe by the Associated Press, but Canadians who have watched Mr. King's steady progress as a student of industrial problems and a leader in industrial reform will be gratified to know that, in dealing with this most gigantic problem of capital and labour at the time and place when strikes, murders, civil war and two hundred indictments were the chief features, he has made abundantly good, justified his own decision of last year, brought honour to Canada's Department of Labour, which he established on sound economic foundations, and gives promise of even larger services in industry and politics in which Canada will share just as beneficially as the United States.

"Mackenzie King will always be a Canadian, makes his headquarters in Ottawa, gives only a part of his time to the Foundation's work outside of Canada, and holds his added study and wider experience for the loyal service of his native country. Certain if this new experiment in Colorado achieves what its initial prospect promises, not Canada alone but the whole industrial world will have cause for gratitude that the misfortune of politics in 1911 left Mackenzie King's hand free for a while to tackle a big man's job."

I have here, also, a letter from Mr. J. F. Welborn, President of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of Denver, Colorado, which gives a statement from the company's point of view; and presents the significance of the work as it has grown with time. I do not wish to read this letter to the House, though if it were not taking up time unduly I should feel it a privilege to do so. I should be pleased if it might be permitted to appear on Hansard along with the other communication. There is one point in this letter to which I should like to direct attention. Mr. Welborn shows that as a result of the Industrial Councils formed that when the United States came into the war, the coal production in the mines of the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company exceeded per man per day that of any of the other coal mines in the United States; and he attributes that success to the joint relations of capital and labour under the plan of industrial representation as drawn up.

LETTER FROM MR. J. F. WELBORN.

The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company,
Denver, Colorado.

J. F. WELBORN,
President.

December 20, 1919.

My dear Mr. KING—

In the hope that it will be of interest to you and possibly to your friends, I will set forth briefly the work done by our company under new policies inaugurated at your suggestion and operated in accordance with your advice. In doing so I have thought it proper to review the method of adoption of those policies.

You will recall that the coal strike of 1913-14 in Colorado was called off in December, 1914. Immediately thereafter, following out your suggestion, we asked employees at each of the coal mines to select one or more of their number to represent them at joint meetings with company officials for the purpose of discussing matters of mutual concern and of considering means of more effective co-operation in maintaining fair and friendly relations. In response representatives were chosen by secret ballot, the initial meeting between them and company officials being held early in January, 1915.

Frequent conferences between the different company officials and the employees' representatives, both individually and collectively, followed, and at a joint meeting of these representatives and company officials held in October, 1915, the plan of representation of employees and memorandum of agreement between them and the company (of which you made the first draft and rendered valuable assistance in perfecting) were approved, subject to adoption by the coal mine employees and the board of directors of the company. Both of these actions were taken soon thereafter, the vote of the employees being by secret ballot and showing a majority of over 84 per cent in favour of the adoption of the plan. The total number voting approximated 75 per cent of the regular working force.

It is, perhaps, only fair to say that some of the officials of the company, as well as some of the mine workmen, entertained the feeling that it would be impossible or impracticable to make the principles laid down in the industrial plan effective. However, almost without exception, both wage earners and management officials accepted the new régime established with the determination to do their utmost to make it a success. That we have succeeded there is no doubt in the minds of either the wage earners, company officials or the public which our industry serves.

Under the provisions of the plan, employees have not only actively participated in the work of preventing and adjusting differences, but have taken a very active part in establishing a community spirit in the several camps and in improving working and living conditions, including a consideration of character of dwelling houses to be built, the management of club houses, improvement in educational facilities, the adoption of means of recreation suitable to the entire population of the camp and the introduction of ideas tending to reduce accidents and make the work of coal mining more safe.

Hardly a month passes without the adoption by the management of recommendations made by the Safety and Accidents Committees, which are composed of an equal number of miners and company officials.

No differences with the employees have arisen that were not readily and satisfactorily adjusted through the machinery provided in the industrial plan. The nation-wide strike of November 1 was opposed by a large majority of our employees, as was evidenced by their expressions through secret ballot and the fact that it did not materially affect our production.

The improved living conditions at our mines and the assurance of fair treatment under the operation of the industrial plan are responsible, we believe, for a lack of shortage of miners at our properties, when a general shortage exists in other mining districts. It may be of interest to you to know that when a committee representing the National Fuel Association, in a survey of coal mining conditions in the country, visited our properties it expressed surprise that we were working with a full force of men and employed no labour agents to secure mine workmen from other sections.

A recent report of the Committee of Recreation and Education in Huerfano county, where we operate seven mines, contained a statement, significant of the influence of that committee on school questions, which read as follows:

"Mrs. Martha M. Thorne, County Superintendent of Schools of Huerfano county, called at Ideal, relative to school there. During the course of our interview she said that the school problem in Huerfano county, from the standpoint of her office, was no difficult problem, as the schools located in the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company camps were kept in an up-to-date condition in every respect, and that other schools in the country tried, as far as possible, to imitate them."

The various changes in wage rates that have taken place during the last four years have been made by unanimous action of employees' representatives and company officials in conference.

During the winter of 1916-17, prior to the time the United States entered the world war, the employees' representatives and company officials entered on a campaign for increased coal production at our mines to help meet the abnormal calls on this country's mines from our own factories and for export to the allies. In January, 1917, our average output per day per miner was 5.83 tons. This was gradually increased until 6.33 tons per day average was reached in May, 1917. Interest in this movement was kept alive and further stimulated by a campaign for increased production inaugurated by the National Fuel Administration in the summer of 1918, with the result that monthly increases in daily production per man were made, the high mark of 7.26 tons being recorded in October, 1918, which latter figure represented an increase of approximately 25% over the average daily production at the beginning of 1917. During this campaign for greater efficiency the employees at each mine selected Production Committees of their own, in whose hands the management placed the power to grant leaves of absence to workmen, and as a result unnecessary lost time was reduced from 10% in June, 1918, to slightly over 4% in October of that year.

The increased efficiency shown by greater production and less idle time made a record that, so far as we are able to learn, was not equalled elsewhere. The best figures obtainable indicate that in other important coal fields the workmen "lay off" from 15% to 20% of the time that the mines work.

The plan of representation of employees was adopted at the steel works, in the same manner as at the coal mines, early in 1916, and, without going into detail, its operation there has been along the same lines and with the same success as at the mining properties.

In a series of conferences between employees' representatives and company officials an actual eight-hour working day was adopted at the steel works in 1918 in the place of the former twelve-hour day, which had always prevailed in the steel industry, and which, generally speaking, is still in effect in other steel manufacturing plants in this country.

In the purchase of Liberty Bonds and contributions to the various war funds our employees at the steel plant and mining properties participated to the extent of practically 100%. Campaigns for these funds were conducted by committees composed principally, and in many instances entirely, of wage earners, and developed a friendly rivalry between the various properties in the mining department, as well as between that department and the steel department.

We are confident that the spirit and effectiveness with which our employees responded to the Government's call for increased efficiency and financial help in the war are at least equal to what was done along similar lines in any other industry in this country, and we are very sure that too much credit for this accomplishment cannot be given to the machinery, controlling the relationships between the company management and its wage earners, which was proposed by you, and in the operation of which, since its installation, we have had the benefit of your frequent advice. Indeed, I feel that the part you have had in the establishment of the new and better relationships in our industry represents a contribution to the late war of inestimable value. I can consistently so express myself, because I had some misgivings as to the wisdom of the course you laid out for us, and am now convinced it has exceeded the most sanguine expectations expressed at its beginning.

With kind regards,
Yours sincerely,
(signed) J. F. WELBORN.

Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Canada.

After the Colorado work had received some public attention, I began to receive from the heads of several of the large industries in the United States communications asking if I would come and make a study of their industrial conditions with a view to advising them as to methods of forming joint boards of employers and employees and aiding in the prevention and settlement of industrial differences. I have a number of such letters—I do not intend to read them, nor shall I ask that they be placed on Hansard—but I shall be very pleased to show the communications to any hon. gentleman who may be interested in seeing

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4344

them. I shall give to the House the names of some of the industrial concerns by which I was asked to come and lend assistance in matters of industrial controversy. It will then be open to any member of this House, or to any individual in the country, to write to the heads of these concerns or to the employees connected with them, and ascertain for himself exactly the nature of the service rendered.

When in September of last year, at the time I was about to contest the riding of Prince, I saw that statements of the kind I have been dealing with this afternoon were being busily circulated, I wrote to several of the different industrial concerns by whom my services had been retained and asked if there were any objection to making reference in public to the nature of the work which I had been asked to perform. I had felt that having been retained as an industrial adviser there was a certain obligation upon me to regard any service that I might have been able to render as confidential, and for that reason, as well as having no desire to traffic in patriotism for political ends, I had sought up to that time carefully to avoid any reference at all to work done during the period of the war.

I should like to place on Hansard two or three of the letters which were sent in reply, and which will speak for themselves. Hon. gentlemen will see in a moment that they are from some of the largest and most important industries in the United States, industrial concerns that had very much to do with the production of war materials and the furnishing of war supplies. These communications have been received by me in answer, as I have said, to my inquiry of these companies as to whether I might feel at liberty to make public reference to certain services rendered during the war.

The letter I have in my hand is from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, Limited, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and is written by Mr. J. W. Powell, Vice-President of the company. At the time my services were requested by this particular industry, in the connection I have mentioned, it was employing 70,000 men. Mr. Powell writes:

Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation Limited.
Bethlehem, Pa., September 22, 1919.

Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir:—I am very glad to take this opportunity to tell you in a form that you may use as you may see fit, that we found your advice and counsel at the time we called on you in the spring of 1918, in connection with the labour situation in our shipyards, of very great benefit in assisting us to arrive at a plan of action that would help us to preserve industrial peace and to improve relations between the company and its employees.

At the time we asked for assistance, there was a great deal of unrest among our labour and we believe that the advice you gave us was of material assistance in reducing this unrest and in correspondingly increasing the efficiency in the production of ships.

As this company is far and away the largest shipbuilding concern in the world and as it produced a very large percentage of all the ships actually completed in this country during the period of its participation in the war, i.e., something like 60 per cent of the destroyers and over 20 per cent of the merchant craft, your assistance was evidently of real value from the standpoint of helping to win the war.

Yours very truly,
Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, Ltd.
By (signed) J. W. POWELL,
Vice-President.

The next communication is from the Bethlehem Steel Company of South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, and is written by Mr. E. G. Grace, the President of that company. At the time I visited Bethlehem, this concern was employing about 50,000 workers. Mr. Grace writes:

Bethlehem Steel Company.
South Bethlehem, Pennsylvania,
September 26, 1919.

Dear Mr. King:—My attention has just been called to an article which appeared recently in the London Telegraph relating to the accomplishment of the Ministry of Munitions of the British Government in the late war.

Naturally I was interested in reading a statement, referred to therein, made by the Deputy Minister of Munitions and in which he said:

"Reference was made by Mr. Asquith to the fact that large orders for shells were placed in the United States of America and Canada before the Ministry of Munitions was started. Such orders were placed. They were orders for complete rounds, but when the time came for delivery the components were not forthcoming, and the shell bodies had to be brought over and completed in this country with components produced by the Ministry of Munitions. An exception to this statement must be made in regard to the Bethlehem supplies, which were well delivered and proved of immense service to the armies."

I think it is now well recognized that if it had not been for the assistance our plants were privileged to give to the Allies previous to the entry of this government in this war the result might have been different.

In reflecting the credit for the achievements of this country, which is shared by every one of our employees who contributed to the result of the outcome, I cannot in this connection refrain from calling to mind with much appreciation the great work to which you gave your time and talent during the world's crisis.

At a crucial time when we were contending with an unprecedented industrial unrest, your counsel and advice in the construction and development of a plan which when installed proved most conducive to promoting cordial relations with our employees during the emergency, resulting in the obtaining of the maximum efficiency in the production of war munitions, constituted I feel a real service not only to this country but to the Allies during the war.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) E. G. GRACE,
President.

Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Canada.

I have here a letter from the General Electric Company, which is another of the largest and most important industrial concerns on this continent. During the war it was employing over 50,000 workers, 12,000 or 13,000 of whom were engaged in the particular branch of which Mr. Richard H. Rice, the acting manager and writer of this letter, was then in charge. His letter is as follows:

General Electric Company.
WEST LYNN, MASS, September 29, 1919.

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Ontario.

DEAR SIR,—During the great war it was the privilege of the General Electric Company to do effective work in the creation and production of devices of direct assistance in the winning of that war.

Of these devices perhaps the most directly useful ones were those which enabled the submarine warfare to be effectively combatted.

These devices were in the nature of detectors and they are so effective that they enabled submarines in motion to be located 30 miles away; their course of motion plotted and intercepted; and even submarines quiescent on the bottom of the ocean were located and destroyed. These devices were largely used by the British and American navies both in the waters directly about the United Kingdom and also in Italian waters and off the American coast.

Other apparatus produced by our company is too numerous to mention; shells, shell cases, fuses, airplane compasses, portable army searchlights, wireless telephone apparatus, and a thousand and one other devices were actively produced in large quantities for the use of the United States Government and for the Allied forces.

I mention these matters not for the purpose of glorifying the work of the General Electric Company in the war, but to indicate that our industry was considered as an absolutely essential one. This is perhaps also shown by the fact that the United States Government sent a large body of troops to our Lynn works without any knowledge of the management, for the purpose of protecting it against destruction by bombs or otherwise.

If it is admitted that our industry was an essential one, it must also be admitted that contentment of the labouring forces, continuity of operations and freedom from labour disturbances was an essential feature. In connection with this matter, and particularly at the time of greatest stress, when the production of the works was temporarily interrupted by a general strike, and for the period since that time, we have been greatly indebted to your sound, intelligent, progressive and humanitarian advice; and profiting by this advice we have established at our Lynn works a system of industrial relations which gives our employees a large voice in the determination of working conditions and conditions of employment. This, in my opinion, puts us in the forefront among organizations of industry in dealing with the human problem.

I was intimately associated with you for some time in the discussions which preceded the adoption of this method of dealing and have had direct charge of the workings of it since that time, and I know the value of your advice and the inspiration which it has given me in carrying out the work.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) RICHARD H. RICE,
Acting Manager.

I may say that the letter from Mr. Rice was accompanied by one from Mr. E. W. Rice, junior, the president of the company, mentioning the extension of the plan adopted by the Lynn works to the other factories of the company, and endorsing what Mr. Richard Rice had written.

One other communication to which I would ask hon. gentlemen kindly to listen is from the Great Western Sugar Company which has its factories in Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, and Montana—some fourteen in all—and which during the war was employing some 7,000 workers. This letter from the president of that company reads:

The Great Western Sugar Company.
General Offices,
Sugar Building.
DENVER, COLORADO, U.S.A.,
November 4, 1919.

Mr. W. L. MACKENZIE KING,
The Roxborough,
Ottawa, Canada.

My dear Mr. King:—Upon my return to this city after an absence of about three months, I find your valued communication of September 17, and hasten to acknowledge it.

Let me say at the outset that in my opinion the service which you rendered American industry during the war was not only a distinct contribution to the Allied cause during that period, but has been of great value during the trying times since the signing of the Armistice.

I am able to speak more specifically concerning our own industry. The matter of furnishing an adequate supply of sugar for the military forces as well as for the civilian population was generally recognized as one of the serious problems of the war. The beet sugar industry is one composed not alone of manufacturing plants which can be speeded up at will; it comprises, in addition to the factories, thousands of farms and farmers, and thousands of field and factory workers. To function most effectively there must be the utmost co-operation and understanding between these various groups. Realizing this, and realizing also that

D 4345

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

an unbiased outsider would probably be able to analyze and view the problems of the industry more clearly than any one within it, we invited you to make a general survey of our operations, with the particular purpose in view of obtaining suggestions and plans which would insure a harmonious relationship between two various groups in the business.

All of us who were in contact with you during your vigorous and thorough examination of our situation appreciate the value of your contribution. It was a contribution the effects of which did not cease with the ending of the war. During the present troublous period it is very gratifying, and must be particularly so to you, to know that our operations are proceeding so smoothly. In our own case, our production this season will be from 20 to 25 per cent greater than for the previous season. The production of an extra 40,000 or 50,000 tons of such a concentrated foodstuff as sugar at a time like this is, in my humble opinion, of considerable value to everybody.

I assure you that it is a privilege to be able to express myself to you in this sense. With assurances of my high respect and regard,

Believe me,

Sincerely yours,

(signed) W. L. PETRIKIN,
President.

I might quote also from other equally important concerns. I have here a letter from Mr. Harold F. McCormick, the President of the International Harvester Company, which has some 35,000 employees in the United States and Canada, one from Mr. J. H. Wheelwright, the late President of the Consolidation Coal Company, which operates mines in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia and Kentucky, and employs from 8,000 to 9,000 workers; one from Mr. C. S. Robinson, Vice-president of the Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company of Youngstown, Ohio, which has about 10,000 employees; and letters from the officers or directors of other less important concerns. All go to show that these gentlemen at least regarded that I had been able to render a substantial service to the industries with which they are connected and which were essential in time of war, and are essential industries at the present time.

I have referred to these matters to illustrate why, recognizing the opportunity which was mine when the war came on, having had to take into account, as I had, certain personal obligations as well as previous training and equipment, I took then what I believed to be the course that would enable me to take the most useful part that I could possibly take in the service of my country and the cause of the allies at that time; and why I continue to believe I was not wrong in the judgment I then formed.

Mr. Speaker, I should be at a loss to understand how it is conceivable that two such gentlemen as those I have mentioned, members of honourable and learned professions could stoop to the deliverances they have and go on then to imply that there was some kind of continuing relationship on my part with industries in the United States calculated to prove inimical to Canada, were it not that recently there has appeared in the Canadian press a despatch which refers to a survey made for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana in January of last year. Let me point this out to my hon. friends, so that there will be no misunderstanding: I have said that during the period of the war I had no connection of any kind with any industry that was associated with Standard Oil interests. That is true. Since the war, and after all the work to which I have to-day alluded had been completed, I received from the chairman of the board of directors of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana a communication asking if I would make a survey of the company's plants and assist the company in drawing up some plan of joint councils between the company and its employees which would be of service in helping to maintain good relations. I accepted that opportunity and spent a few weeks making a study of the working conditions of the men employed in that industry, with results that are apparent in the despatch to which I have made reference.

Let me say, so that there can be no misunderstanding as to the nature of any of the work done, at any time, that all of it was in the nature of assisting in the formation of joint industrial councils much along the line recommended in the report of the Whitley Committee, and which at a conference held in the city of Ottawa last summer between employers and employees, was endorsed as a method of procedure highly in the interests of both capital and labour. It consisted in setting out known and orderly methods of procedure for the adjustment of industrial differences, in the providing of machinery for conciliation and arbitration for the prevention and settlement of industrial controversies; in giving to labour a voice in the determination of its own working and living conditions, and in the framing of joint agreements as to terms of employment, working and living conditions by which rights were specifically defined and to which reference could be made in case of dispute between employer and employees. In every instance there was a provision that nothing in the arrangements come to, or in the agreements made should deprive any man of the right to belong to any legitimate union. I mention that lest by any chance there might be an endeavour from any quarter to misconstrue anything in that connection.

I have taken the trouble to find the despatch which appeared in the Chicago papers and to which reference was made in our own papers, and which I take to be the ground upon which the gentlemen in Montreal had based their reference to a continuing relationship on my part with some American companies. The following is the despatch as it appears in the Chicago Tribune of February 19, 1920. It is headed "11,000 Standard Oil Aids Fix Own Pay Rate—Get 11.11 per cent Boost and Six-Day Week," and is as follows:

11,000 Standard Oil Aids Fix Own Pay Raise.

Get 11.11 % Boost and Six-Day Week.

A wage increase of 11.11 per cent for 11,000 refinery workers was announced yesterday by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. Coincidentally, all shift men go from a seven-day week to a six-day week, a radical change in the company's manufacturing policy. The new schedule becomes effective on March 1, and it applies in refineries at Whiting, Ind., Wood River, Ill., Sugar Creek, Mo., and Caspar and Greybull, Wyo.

What is most significant is the fact that the new wage and hour schedule was worked out by the employees themselves, through the agency of their industrial councils.

Last June, as a step in "democracy in industry," the Standard Oil Company established an employees' council system, drawn up by W. L. Mackenzie King, leader of the Liberal party in Canada. Through joint committees, on which the men and management have equal representation, the workers were given a direct voice in the adjustment of wages and hours.

Work Out Six-Day System.

The process of gasoline manufacture is such that refineries must be operated every hour of the day, every day of the week. Up to 1915, shift workers worked twelve-hour shifts seven days a week. The company in that year put in an eight-hour shift with an increase, giving the men as much pay for eight hours' work as they had been getting for twelve. But the seven-day week was continued.

After the industrial council system was adopted, Col. R. W. Stewart, head of the board of directors, asked the employees' councils to work out a scheme that would make a six-day week practicable.

The result is a new schedule, which gives all shift workers thirty-two consecutive hours off each week. Under the old plan the men worked fifty-six hours a week; under the new they work 50.4, or a net reduction of 5.6 hours a week. The 11.11 per cent increase in wages makes the pay for six days equal to that received under the old seven-day week.

Others also Boosted.

A similar increase of 11.11 per cent in hourly wages is also declared for refinery workers other than shift men. Hours are not to be changed, except that men working forty-four hours a week may increase it to forty-eight hours, if they wish. This affects common labourers, machinists, blacksmiths, boiler makers and others.

I have here a letter from Mr. R. W. Stewart, the chairman of the board of directors of that company, and from which I shall read only one paragraph. It was received in reply to the circular communication I sent out last fall. The paragraph I am about to read explains the nature and circumstances of the request made of me by the company. The letter is dated Chicago, October 7, 1919, in it Mr. Stewart says:

When I was selected as chief executive of this company, I became convinced that there was lack of contact between the employees and the management of the company, and that the situation was one which, if not cared for, would possibly result in great harm by reason of misunderstandings, suspicion and ignorance of the conditions. I looked over the field of advisers on questions of this kind very carefully, and, after the most painstaking search, selected you as the best equipped, ablest and most conscientious adviser in the field. The board of directors of this company agreed with me, and you were invited to examine our plants and look into the conditions under which our twenty-two thousand employees were working, and to formulate a plan which would insure the fullest contact, and, once established, would be maintained to the satisfaction and betterment of all of us. You undertook the work, spent many weeks in personally examining our plants and workmen, and finally reported to the management a plan which has met the approval of the employees and the management of this company, and is actually working out to the satisfaction of the entire organization. We all consider it the best plan of industrial relations in existence, and believe that it comprehends and includes the strength of all plans of this kind ever suggested and the weakness of none of them. It is daily strengthening the bonds of good-will, confidence and understanding in our entire organization.

Let me point out a feature mentioned in the paragraph just quoted as true also of the other concerns of which I have spoken that as regards all of these joint councils, they were worked out and adopted only after approval by the employees as well as by the management.

I have nothing further to say in regard to the public reasons which actuated me in taking the course I did during the period of the war and which I believe enabled me to perform a kind and measure of service greater than any I could have performed in any other way, had there been like opportunity to take any other course. I would ask the House to permit me to refrain from the spoken word, and to read in conclusion just a few words in reference to the personal reasons which were also a controlling factor in guiding me in my actions during the period of the war.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There remains the statement that I was young, and a bachelor. I am now in my forty-sixth year. When the war commenced, I was in my fortieth year. Shortly before that time, my father, a barrister and solicitor, and one of the lecturers at the Law School in Toronto, was stricken with blindness, and obliged to give up the practice of law and lecturing at the Law School. He and my mother and unmarried sister lived together at our home in Toronto. My brother, who for a number of years was a practising physician in this city, some little time prior to the war, after an attack of influenza complicated by double pneumonia, developed tuberculosis, and was obliged to give up the practice of his profession and for the greater part of two years to spend his time in a sanatorium. Later, he and his wife and little children took up permanent residence in Colorado. There was no one left to share the responsibilities of our home under these sad and trying circumstances, but my married sister and myself. My married sister had, as well, her own family to consider.

On April 4, 1915, within the first few months of the war, my unmarried sister died. That left my father and mother alone. On August 30, 1916, my father died. After spending a few weeks with my invalid brother in Denver, and two or three months with my married sister, my mother came to reside with me at the Roxborough, here in Ottawa. My mother was critically ill most of the year she was with me, and on December 18, 1917, she, too, died. My brother, I rejoice to say, though still an invalid, has fought his disease so successfully as to be able to publish a book, entitled "The Battle With Tuberculosis and How to Win It," which has found a place in our military hospitals. The inscription of this volume, "Gratefully and affectionately dedicated to my wife and to my brother," speaks for itself.

As I look back upon those years of the war, so full of poignant suffering for the whole of mankind, I cannot but experience a sense of gratitude, that in that world ordeal it was given to me to share in so intimate a way the sufferings of others, and, with it all, so large a measure of opportunity to do my duty, as God gave it to me to see my duty, at that time.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

D 4349

1 June 1920 House of Commons

THE LIBERAL TARIFF PLATFORM
AND MR. FIELDING'S AMENDMENT

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

File Tariffs

Coll - Tariff | 4350 cy.

TARIFF COMMISSION

Urged it would lend stability to business.

It is wrong in principle - impracticable in operation.

Only people's representatives should have power to impose taxes.

And proposal to vest the control of the tariff in an independent commission is equivalent to delegating the taxing power to a body not directly responsible to the people.

Tariff Commission in United States acts only in an advisory capacity.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Honourable gentlemen have found satisfaction in the circumstances that, in the views to which expression has been given on this side of the House on the subject of the Tariff, there has been a variety of opinion as to what, in special circumstances and under exceptional conditions, or as to what, regardless altogether of circumstances or conditions, should be the attitude of government towards certain or all of the industries of the country. They, and the press which is supporting them, seem to regard it as a sign of weakness that an honourable member should speak his whole mind in regard to a great question which necessarily admits of an almost infinite variety of opinion, because perchance it may reveal a narrower or broader outlook than that of his neighbour.

Let me assure my honourable friends that weakness lies, not in a free and untrammelled expression of opinion on any subject, but in the surrender of opinion against conviction, or its advocacy, in matters of public concern, because of private rather than of public interest. Strong men will always have strong convictions, and will never hesitate to give them full expression in public. The weak, the narrow man, is the one whose horizon is so restricted that he is unable to admit into the regions of his thought

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

bodies of opinion differing from his own, or who, frankly recognizing and admitting differences in many particulars, is unwilling, in an endeavour to reach some good that is in the public interest, to give way in extremes or non-essentials to join hands with those of his neighbours who think and feel as he thinks and feels on fundamentals and essentials.

Let me assure my honourable friends, and the press that is so interested in seeking to have it appear that men of liberal thought and feeling in this House are at sixes and sevens, that if it is an exhibition of united action they desire to see, they will not have long to wait. The amendment of my honourable friend, the member for Queens and Shelburne, may not express all that every honourable member on this side of the House might like it to express; it may not express all that every Liberal or every farmer or workingman throughout the country might like it to express; but it does express, I believe, what every person of limited means in Canada to-day, every man and woman baffled and distraught by the problems to which the high cost of living is giving rise, believes to be right and necessary at this time. As such, it will receive in this House the united support of those who are more concerned with the promotion

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

of human well-being than with the safeguarding of material wealth in the hands of a privileged few who seek to reap where they sow not, and gather where they have not strawed.

Let us look at the amendment moved by my honourable friend, which I have had the privilege to second. What is it that it seeks to express? As I interpret its meaning, as I read its purpose, it is to voice in this Parliament the demand of the people of all classes and of all shades of opinion for a relief from burdens and restrictions which had become heavy before the commencement of the War, and which have become intolerable when coupled with the added burdens the War has imposed. The people had a right to expect this relief at the present session of Parliament. They had that right on two grounds to both of which expression has is given in the amendment. The first was that it had been promised, if not directly, at least indirectly by the Government over a year ago.

How has that promise been met. Let me read the words of the amendment:

> "The Minister of Finance, in the Budget Speech, in the session of 1919, gave assurance to the House that during the ensuing parliamentary recess there would be a public inquiry by the minister and one or more of his colleagues into the operation of the customs tariff, with a view to a general revision of the tariff at the following session."

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

There was the promissory note of one Minister of Finance. How has it been met? By another promissory note of another Finance Minister. Different ministers, it is true, but the same government and the same method of proceeding. As I said, if the undertaking of ministers has any meaning at all, the people had a right to expect a general revision of the tariff at this session, in view of the pledge given over a year ago. But of what value are the pledges of this Ministry?

The other ground on which the people had a right to expect relief from existing burdens of customs taxation is that given in the substantive portion of the resolution. It is independent altogether of any promise, conditional or absolute, by this or any other government. It expresses an imperative need; it is based on grounds of the wisest and most obvious public policy, whether considered in relation to the demands of consumers, the requirements of producers, or the unrest existing throughout the Dominion. Let me read this part of the amendment:

> "That in view of the continued increase in the high cost of living, of the greatly increased burden of taxation, of the hardship which many of the people suffer from these causes, and the unrest naturally arising therefrom; and in view of the desirability of adopting measures to increase production and effect such relief to consumers and producers as may be within the power of Parliament,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the House is of opinion that, pending a wider revision of the tariff, substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation should be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance: first, diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; second, reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion, the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress and prosperity of our country."

Note, Mr. Speaker, the threefold purpose aimed at in what is proposed by the amendment:

1. Relief to consumers - by the diminishing of the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people.

2. Increase of production - by the reducing of the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the Dominion.

3. Allaying of unrest - as a natural consequence of affording relief in the directions indicated.

Could anything be more apparent than the need for such course of action at the present time? That need, as I said, was great before the War. It has become infinitely greater with the burdens and obligations the War has imposed. May I add that if it has become greater since the War, it has become greater still since the introduction of his budget by

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

my honourable friend, with the added burdens and restrictions on living and trade which it has imposed.

Let me examine the need a little in detail.

The need, first, of some reduction, where that is possible, in the very high cost of living, as it bears upon the masses of the people. And here, Mr. Speaker, let us forget if we can the circumstances and associations which circumscribe our individual lives, and seek for a moment to get a mental picture of the home life and home struggles of the great majority of people in this Dominion. Begin, if you will, with the young - not the infants or the children, I shall speak of them later on when I come to the home and its obligations - but the young man and woman seeking to make his or her own way in the world, and hoping for the day when it may be possible to have that most sacred and blessed of human association, a home of one's own. Is it not, from the economic point of view, in the national interest, as well as in the interest of social and moral well-being, that this opportunity, this joy, this right, should not be denied or postponed because of burdens and restrictions which are wholly artificial, and which, by an act of this Parliament might in large measure be entirely removed.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Let us advance a step farther. Let us look at the homes that are already established, the homes that are crowded, one beside the other, one on top of the other, in the congested areas of our cities; or scattered in solitary and lonely isolation, in mountainous recesses or over the wide stretches of the plains; or the more fortunate homes in our urban and rural communities which know nothing of overcrowding on the one hand or isolation on the other. Take them where you will, go into any you please: and there, in nine cases out of ten, whether there be no family at all or a family small or large, or three generations beneath the same roof, you will find in that home joys somewhat diminished, the home anxieties and trials somewhat increased, by the problem of what to-day it is costing for the simple necessities of life, for food in sufficiency to eat, clothing in sufficiency to wear, and shelter in sufficiency comfortably to house.

Nor is this condition confined to any one class or to any one calling in our human society. If we exempt only those individuals who are fortunate in their large incomes or large savings, it is a condition which affects every home in the land, and affects it in a manner which is prejudicial to much that is best in family life.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

It is the high cost of living which is the real problem in Canada to-day, as it is in other countries throughout the world. It is not that the Government has failed to solve the problem that we criticize and condemn it, but that in the budget just brought down it has failed to keep its pledge to revise the tariff at this session and, instead of taking some of the burdens off consumers, and some of the restrictions off producers, it has added further burdens and restrictions by some of the taxes it has imposed, and the method of their imposition.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

I have spoken of the satisfaction which honourable gentlemen opposite, and the press which have been giving them support, have found in the free expression of opinion which has given from this side of the House to views entertained by individual members on the subject of the Tariff. In seeking to emphasize differences, they have discovered in the extremes of opinion, they have overlooked altogether the ground that is held in common, the unanimity with which all are prepared to support the amendment, demanding as it does an immediate reduction of customs duties on articles of food, clothing, and shelter, with a view to a reduction in the high cost of living, and on instruments of production, in industries based on the natural resources of the country, with a view to an increase in production.

What is true as respects their attitude on this amendment is equally true as respects their attitude towards the platform of the Liberal Party on the subject of the tariff as laid down at the National Liberal Convention in August last. It has been said that there were differences of opinion among the delegates who attended that Convention, that some were free trade in their sympathies and others protectionist in their sympathies. The press reports of

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the Convention have been scanned to prove that such was the case, and where the reports were inadequate, reference has been made to current rumours of what transpired, so to speak, behind the scenes. Well, Sir., what did transpire; what was actually said, and what did actually happen? The Convention, to begin with, was the largest representative political gathering ever held in this country. It was attended by delegates from every constituency from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The delegates were not selected from above, the choice of any one individual or of any class; they were chosen in a democratic way by men and women of liberal thought and feeling in the several constituencies; they came from all parts and were representative of all classes and interests. They were there in numbers from the prairie provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. They were there from the towns and cities and rural districts of Ontario and Quebec. They were there from the Maritime Provinces by the Atlantic, and from British Columbia by the Pacific. The call for the Convention had gone out months before it was held, and for months before that it was known that the Convention would meet in the summer of 1919, and that its main duty would be that of laying down a policy for the party on the vital issues of the day, and in particular upon the all-important question of the tariff. For three

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

dggs, the Convention was in session, morning, afternoon, and night. Were there differences of opinion expressed during that time? Certainly there were. Differences of opinion on the tariff? Certainly there were differences expressed then just as they have been in the course of this debate. The assemblage was not one of Egyptian mummies; ~~if~~ nèither was it a gathering of men cast in a common mould, or men whose identities or individualities were shrivelled or lost under the glance of a Prime Minister or the edict of an autocratic government. It was a gathering of free men, expressing freely the will of a free people. In that vast throng, there were many and wide divergences of view. For days together there was argument and debate. Then came the conclusion of the whole matter. Did the men of extreme view win the day? Did the Free Traders gain acceptance in entirety of their views? Did those of protection sympathy gain a like acceptance of theirs? Or was it the great body of solid opinion which seeks to avoid extremes and looks for the ground that can be held in common, that ultimately won? Let the resolutions speak for themselves.

The fact which for the moment I desire to make clear is not ~~that~~ the one my honourable friends opposite are seeking to emphasize, namely: that differences of opinion were expressed

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

at the Convention - they are welcome to all the comfort they can get out of that circumstance - but the fact, which is the really vital one and which was the outstanding feature of the Convention, that men of extreme views were ready, in the interest of the masses of the people of this country, to forego insistence upon an acceptance of them, and to unite with their fellow Liberals of all shades of opinion in the unanimous acceptance of a resolution which embodied the common ground for which all were prepared to contend.

Let me read the resolution on the tariff adopted at the National Liberal Convention, which, as I have stated, was adopted unanimously. It will be apparent the moment it is read that, in drafting his amendment my honourable friend for Queens and Shelburne has had ~~this~~ this resolution before him. His amendment not only embodies what is fundamental in the resolution of the Liberal Convention; but it follows the very wording. True, the resolution of the Convention goes farther than the amendment of my honourable friend, it is more in detail; but the resolution of the Convention is a part of a political platform in its entirety, and is related to a course to be pursued by a party once it is in office. The amendment of my honourable friend refers to what should be done here and now, pending the wider revision which, as he states, must necessarily be made later on.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

Let me read the resolution of the National Liberal Convention:

Where, Mr. Speaker, is there departure from that resolution in spirit or, for that matter, in letter, in the amendment of my honourable friend? As I have already said, the amendment relates to a course of action to be taken here and now, in the light of circumstances as they exist at the moment. The resolution of the Liberal Convention goes farther and indicates in detail the course to be followed by the Liberal Party, and for the following of which it will be accountable to the people should it in the near future be entrusted by the people of Canada with the government of this country.

Sir, there is nothing in the platform of the Liberal Party, as laid down at the National Liberal Convention, which has not been contended for by Liberals and the Liberal Party as a whole for many years, both in this House and throughout the country. Of the resolution I have read, there is, one

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

might say, not a line which had not been moved in this House and voted upon in the name of the Liberal Party before the Convention was held; there is not a sentence of the whole which had not, before his death, both the pronounced approval and the powerful advocacy of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Indeed, the very last speech made by Sir Wilfrid was devoted in most part to the great need for the Convention's resolution. He was taken, just at the moment he was about to give battle to honourable gentlemen opposite on this very issue; but the standard he carried was not allowed to drop, nor shall it ever be furled till it crown the day of ultimate victory.

Repeated revisions of the tariff downward, and the adoption and increase of the British Preference - these were features of a policy which helped to make the fifteen years of Sir Wilfrid's administration the golden era of peace and plenty for Canada by which it will ever be recalled. Free food and freer trade - these were the features of the policy for which he fought and suffered political defeat in the Reciprocity campaign of 1911. These principles are not alone a part of present Liberal policy; they are inseparable from Liberal tradition. If their application in the past, where effected, helped to bring prosperity to our country, if their

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

defeat, where accomplished, served only to make heavier the burdens and restrictions of the present, there is surely not less of wisdom than of necessity in their extended application through the years to come.

My honourable friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in the course of the present debate, read to the House from an Eastern paper an account of a political meeting which I addressed while in the city of St. John. He seemed impatient to have the House and the country believe that I had one policy for the East, and another for Ontario, and might possibly have another for the West. It was natural, perhaps, that such a thought should enter the mind of my honourable friend. He and some of his associates in the present Government, in seeking to have the public believe that they can be Liberals, and at the same time members of a Tory administration, just because it bears the name of Unionist, may think it is possible to be all.things to all men. But let me assure my honourable friend that it was a very different sort of thing that St. Paul had in mind, and that it would require a greater than Paul to play that role in the present Cabinet. They are deceiving none but themselves.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

I have no desire to imitate that kind of performance. The policy I outlined in the East was, as my honourable friend from Quebec East who accompanied me knows, and as other honourable members of this House who were present at the several meetings addressed also know, the policy that I have outlined in the course of my remarks this afternoon. It is the policy entrusted to me by the Liberals of Canada, which I accepted and pledged myself to advocate, when honoured by the Convention with the position which at the moment I am privileged to fill. It is the policy which I am looking forward to presenting to the electors of the West at the first favourable opportunity; it is the policy upon which we on thise side of the House are prepared to give battle to honourable gentlemen opposite at any moment, and upon which the people of Canada are entitled to have an opportunity to pronounce without further usurpation of their right, to a parliament that is truly representative and to a Government whose policies accord with the people's will.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

And this leads me, Mr. Speaker, to say just a word to those men and women of Liberal thought and feeling, by whatever name they care to call themselves, be it Liberal, or Reformer, or Grit, or Liberal Unionist; be it Grain Grower, or United Farmer; be it Labor or Progressive; be it anything you will like - if what you are really concerned about is the building up of a new political order in which, in matters of government, considerations of human well-being shall outweigh all considerations of material wealth, in which thought shall be first for human lives and human needs, not forgetting all that may be legitimately owing to trade and industry in their many ramifications, and to all classes in our organized society: Is it not time that you pause and observe for the moment the tactics of your common enemy? Already the plan of campaign is as plain as day. The method of it, I have already disclosed, in referring to the zeal with which, in both the spoken and the written word, he seeks to emphasize differences in extremes and non-essentials, and with those barbed-wire entanglements to spread confusion over ground that is held in common by all who really feel and think alike. Keep the hosts opposite divided - that is the word that has issued from the headquarters command. Behind a barrage of propaganda, which conceals your manoeuvres, keep

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

the war chest filled with gold - that is the other order.

I have in my hand copies of three political platforms. The platform of the Liberal Party, the platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture, and the platform of the Labour Party. They present differences and contrasts in a number of particulars, enlarged upon by honourable gentlemen opposite, in this House and by their press throughout the country. The extreme views, where there are such, have been over-emphasized. Little or nothing has been said about what they have in common. And yet their common utterances are the voice of our Canadian democracy. All are as one in the demand for the elimination of customs duties on the necessaries of life, and freeing from customs taxation the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the country. These are the very things asked for in the amendment of my honourable friend.

The House is aware of the terms of the tariff resolution adopted by the National Liberal Convention, and of their relation to the amendment under consideration. Here is what appears in the Farmers' platform on the same subject:

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

"An immediate and substantial all-round reduction of the customs tariff."

The securing in five years of free trade between Great Britain and Canada.

"Placing all foodstuffs on the free list".

"That agricultural implements, farm and household machinery, vehicles, fertilizers, coal, lumber, cement, gasoline, illuminating, fuel and lubrication oils be placed on the firee list, and that all raw materials and machinery used in their manufacture also be placed on the free list."

~~There is this to be observed~~

Then, taking the voice of Labour as expressed at its recent Convention. Here is what it has to say of the necessaries of life and the instruments of production:

"The gradual elimination of import duties on all necessaries of life, such as food, clothing (including boots and shoes), and the tools and machinery used in production, the revenue derived from these sources to be raised by a taxation of land values and luxuries."

There is this to be observed about each of these three platforms: The Liberal platform, the Farmers' platform, and the Labour platform - not one of them is what you would call a free trade platform. Much less can any one of them be called a protectionist platform. Those who have had to do with the framing of these platforms have recognized,

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

and their exponents have frankly admitted, that in a country like Canada, which has had a tariff for nearly half a century, which is driven at the moment and is likely to be driven for some years to come to resort to almost every expedient for the purpose of raising revenue, a free trade policy is not for the time being a practical consideration. But because we cannot have free trade, that is no reason why we should be denied freer trade where the need and the demand for freer trade comes from consumers and producers alike. Because we cannot have free trade is no reason why we cannot have cheaper food, cheaper clothes, cheaper shelter, cheaper instruments of production, if such be possible, as it is, without loss and with positive gain to the nation as a whole. A policy of downward tariff revision plus a free list, a tariff in the interests primarily of consumers and producers, is quite a different thing than free trade. It is also quite different from a tariff primarily in the interests of privilege and profiteers. It is the former which men of Liberal thought and feeling are demanding in Canada to-day, irrespective of the political party to which they belong. It is that which is being denied them by honourable gentlemen opposite, and which will be permanently denied if the tactics of the enemy are not taken into account, and common ground held and common objectives ~~taken~~ fought for by those who on these matters think and feel alike.

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

Prince Edward Island Patriot
June 9 20

D 4371

Able And Convincing Speech on the Budget by Hon W. L. McKenzie King the Liberal Leader

Mr. King Clearly and Eloquently Reviews the Various Phases of the Financial Situation, and His Statesmanlike Speech Makes a Splendid Impression. He Criticizes the Fiscal Policy of the Government and the New Taxation Scheme Which Has Been Formulated

(From Hansard, Tuesday, June 1st.)

The House resumed, from Monday, May 31, the debate on the motion of Sir Henry Drayton (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Hon. W. S. Fielding.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at this late stage of the debate it will hardly be expected that much can be added by way of argument either for or against the proposals which my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) has given to the House in the resolution, which accompanied his speech, or indeed either for or against the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's, (Mr. Fielding.)

In the remarks I am about to address to the House I shall endeavor, therefore, not to go into particulars to any great extent in regard to the resolutions which are before the House, but rather to seek to emphasize in a little bolder outline than has been possible in the course of the discussion which has taken place, the differences in attitude and point of view which seem to separate hon. gentlemen opposite who are supporting the Budget from hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who are supporting the amendment of my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding.)

But, before directing attention to the differences which exist between us and which have been so manifest in this debate, may I say just one word, with many others who have spoken, in regard to an opinion which we all hold in common and that is a word of congratulation to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton) on the manner in which he has presented the Budget to this Parliament, on the arrangement of the Budget itself, the information it contains, and the purposes which he has at heart in presenting it to the House. I think we all realize that upon the shoulders of the Minister of Finance at this session of Parliament there has fallen a burden heavier indeed than that which has fallen on the shoulders of any previous Minister of Finance. He has not only had to take account of the vast expenditures which have been incurred in the ordinary course of the increasing obligations of this country, but he has also had to take into account all the extraordinary expenditures which have to be met in consequence of the war. As my hon. friend from Shelburne and Queen's mentioned, in presenting previous Budgets during the period of the war, the Minister of Finance of the day has been able to count upon the sentiment of patriotism and enthusiasm throughout the nation to back up any suggestions he might propose to this Parliament. But now the war is past, and instead of the urge of patriotic endeavor the present Minister of Finance has the aftermath of the war to contend with and he has to present to the House in their stern reality conditions consequent upon the enormous expenditures which have taken place in the last few years the liabilities which they have involved, and the herculean efforts in the matter of sacrifice which will be necessary before these obligations can be met. I think that in presenting the Budget in the manner in which he did, going fearlessly and fully into the liabilities of the country, not seeking to conceal in any particular our obligations or to make them appear lighter than they are, but presenting to us the facts in their true light and significance he has enabled us to comprehend the situation with which we are now confronted. For that reason, as well as for the splendid manner in which he presented the Budget itself, we owe him our hearty congratulations.

I think, too, that that the hon. Minister of Finance is to be congratulated on having at least professed a desire to accomplish certain things. He has said that he hopes that it will be possible in future to raise the revenue that is required without resorting to any further loans. Every hon. member, and every citizen of this country, will believe that that is a right, a proper, a necessary and a good policy. We may have little consciousness of the full extent of our liabilities, but we all do know that with these liabilities what they are, unless it is going to be possible to meet obligations out of current revenue we are heading toward an abyss of bankruptcy in this country from which it will be impossible to recede. So it is wholly to the public interest, it is wholly to the good of the nation, that the Government have determined—and indeed they would be culpably negligent if they did not so determine—not to have further public loans for the purpose of meeting our obligations.

The Minister of Finance, I think, has also been wise in intimating that he hopes to raise the necessary revenue by taxation upon luxuries rather than upon the necessaries of life. Whether or not his proposals will accomplish that end I shall deal with in a moment, but in so far as he is endeavoring to place the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of those who are best able to bear it, he is following the sound and proper line of Finance.

I think he has been wise also in urging that so far as possible taxation should be in a direct rather than an indirect form. Though it is not so pleasant a form of taxation, in the long run it is going to result in greater good to the country. It is right that we should know exactly what we are paying out so that we may take the course that is wisest both from a personal and from a public point of view.

So that in these particulars—in giving us a true statement of the facts, in promising that there should be no further loans, in seeking to make taxation direct rather than indirect, in promising to place a tax upon luxuries, and also in recognizing that taxation upon incomes is a form of taxation that is preferable to that of indirect taxation—the Finance Minister's professions have been in the right direction, and I believe his purpose has been in accord with his professions.

But, Sir, if he has failed to accomplish his purpose, and if he has failed to carry out his intentions it is because he has found himself a member of a government which has a particular policy of its own for the raising of taxation, and he has been prevented from going as far as he would have liked in the direction he has professed. The fault and the criticism which we on this side have to find is not with the good professions and the good intentions of my hon. friend, but, rather, that at this time in the history of Canada, at this time in the history of the world, the Government has as respects the Budget, done some things it ought not to have done, and have left undone other things which it ought to have done. Sir, let me speak for a moment about the things which it has left undone and which it ought to have done.

(TO BE CONTINUED)

D 4372

10? June 1920 House of Commons

THE LIBERAL TARIFF POLICY

W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA

PUBLIC ARCHIVES PUBLIQUES
CANADA
W.L. Mackenzie King Papers
Volume D 8

The Newmarket Era
Jan 11 20

D 4373

Speech of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King On The New Tariff

Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, new leader of the Liberal party, brought his followers to their feet cheering in the House of Commons when he announced his absolute and complete adherence to the policies laid down by the national convention which elected him leader in August, and stated that the plaform made up by these policies was wide enough to accommodate all the various progressive groups in the country.

The leader of the Opposition devoted almost three hours to a comprehensive digest of the existing conditions in the country; to an effective criticism of the Government's fiscal policy, which burdened the poor and let the rich go free; to an exposition of Liberal principles, and to an appeal to all men and women bent upon reform not to permit themselves to be divided into warring groups by the traditional tactics of the Government and of the big interests.

There was nothing equivocal in the speech of the new leader of the Opposition. He preached straight Liberalism—such Liberalism as he had learned at the feet of his late leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. His peroration was a remarkable piece of work.

There is Common Ground.

After a brief introduction he said:

"Well, sir, there are differences to which the gentlemen can point, but I can tell my honorable friends opposite this, which is a fact of far greater significance, that there is a common ground of unity upon which the members of those parties can stand. You will find in the Farmers' platform, in the Labor platform and in the Liberal platform the common demand for a reduction of the duties on the necessities of life. You will find in all three platforms a demand that the duties should be taken off the instruments of production, so that greater production may be possible. And these two demands, Mr. Speaker, represent the outstanding needs of the country to-day, and on these great fundamental needs we are united.

"Let me address a word to my honorable friends of the Farmers' party and my honorable friends of the working men's party, and let me address the same word to the people throughout this country:

A Word to People.

"Take note of the things that you have in common, and observe the tactics of the enemy, which are apparent. We have seen privilege protected in every speech that has been uttered from the other side in the course of this debate. We have seen honorable gentlemen opposite seek to point to the differences that exist between men of common thought and common feeling in other respects. What do these tactics signify? They are just an endeavor to keep the host in opposition divided. Honorable gentlemen opposite argue among themselves: 'We keep the privileged interests protected so long as men of thought and feeling who are united on certain common ground can be kept apart from one another and prevented from uniting in a common effort to gain a common end.'"

Barbed Wire Entanglements.

"These are the barbed wire entanglements by which the party of privilege would seek to keep separated men of liberal thought and feeling in this country, and to keep them from uniting on the ground which they have in common. The honorable minister of the Interior (Mr. Meighen) said that the purpose of the Liberal resolution was to unite these different groups. Let me tell my honorable friend that if that was its purpose there could not have been a worthier one than to seek to give expression, in one voice, to what are the sentiments of three great elements. What is the object of the honorable gentlemen opposite? It is to keep the progressive hosts who oppose them disunited.

"Word has gone out from their headquarters urging the necessity for this action, and also the need for filling the war chest with gold. There are announcements already of a fund for propaganda purposes that is to be run up into millions of dollars. Mention has been made in the press of such a fund for such purposes, and the government in power purposes to hold on for a couple of years in order to give this insidious propaganda ample opportunity to do its work.

Think and Feel Alike.

"I say, therefore, to all men who think and feel alike on the great questions which affect the well-being of the Canadian people, and who reprobate the conditions for which the Government are responsible, to take note of the tactics of honorable gentlemen opposite. No matter what the honorable gentlemen may call themselves, whether it be Liberal, Grit, Reformer, Liberal-Unionist, Farmer or Labor representatives, if they think and feel alike as men who are interested in the welfare of the great mass of men and women in this country they should stand together where it is possible for them to do so and fight the great issue that faces them to a conclusive victory.

There is no Deception.

"My honorable friend (Mr. Meighen)—I refer to him again because he was the chief exponent of the views of the Government in the debate—gives his interpretation of the attitude of gentlemen on this side of the House as one of deception.

"May I say to my honorable friend that there is no deception in the attitude of honorable gentlemen on this side. We or the Liberal party have our program, we have it right with us and we are prepared to work with the men and women who feel and think as we do. But we are prepared to carry on the work and we will carry it on regardless of the attitude of any others, because this is a party which has a tradition of 100 years behind it—a tradition of 100 years of advance and progress to greater liberty and freedom. We will strive and seek to make that policy prevail. But I say to my honorable friend in all kindness: Be careful, judge not that ye be not judged. Let me repeat my honorable friend's reference to the Government of which he is a member with regard to the action of that Government prior to the last election, when he and his party came together with their two flags.

Unwilling to Listen.

"All I shall say," said Mr. King, "is this. There is another view in this country, and that is that if the people intrusted these two different wings with power, which they did for the purpose of winning the war, they to-day find them united into one solid body, which is unwilling to listen to the voice of the people as expressed at the poll. They will not listen to the verdict of the people as expressed in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan or the different centres in which there have been elections, and we have a ministry which is unwilling to have a representative of labor or of the returned soldiers in this House and a ministry which has taken from the start a most autocratic stand in dealing with the matters which are before the country at the present time.

"We have come to the moment when in the great work of reconstruction a ministry that ignores the people and has no policy to propose other than safeguarding and protecting privileges should at least give the people an opportunity to say whether or not they wish to have the affairs of this country any longer conducted by men who have lost the public confidence, and to say whether or not they should be conducted by those who seek to express in legislation the wishes of the public in regard to the needs of the hour and the problems of the day."

"So, Mr. Speaker," said Mr. King "while we can compliment the minister on his fair professions and good intentions, we cannot do other than condemn the Government on its record in the matter of economy and retrenchment as having moved entirely in the wrong direction. Just to summarize what I have said, the Government has vastly increased the ordinary expenditure—increased it by over a million dollars a day, according to the last statement brought down. It has vastly increased the appointments, both temporary and permanent, to the civil service—increased them at the rate of 50 civil servants a day. It has left $121,000,000 or more unaccounted for of public moneys which have been paid out. It has spent money for purposes for which it was not appropriated. It has spent public money on contracts without calling for tenders in accordance with the law of the country. It has given money in loans and credits, to foreign countries on very doubtful security, and in a manner which will help its own friends rather than further the best interests of this country. And instead of decreasing the public expenditure for the current year it has shown in many particulars a tendency to increase the expenditure and to be indifferent to the necessity for retrenchment. That is one count which we have against the honorable gentlemen opposite.

Protects Profiteers.

"But, sir, looking further at the budget; looking at the resolutions which my hon. friend had brought down, may I say, perfectly frankly to him that what we most object to in his budget is that it protects privilege and profiteers instead of protecting the consumers of this country? We had expected at this time of all times a people's budget; we have instead a profiteer's budget; that is apparent when we come to analyze it. I say that for this reason—when we study this taxation we find that in practically everything that the minister has proposed there is increased burden upon the consumers, not of the higher or upper classes but of the middle or poorer classes; and there is on the other hand a careful protection and safeguarding of those who are in a position of privilege in this country. We had a right to expect, having regard to the professed desire of hon. gentlemen opposite for economy, some statement from the minister of finance to the effect that the Government had devised machinery, whereby the people throughout the country who have failed to pay the income tax in the last year or two would be obliged to make good their failures of the past. We all know that the income tax has not been collected as fully and as carefully as it should have been. Last summer at the convention which the Liberal party held in this city, a resolution was passed which was brought to the attention of the Government—a resolution condemning the Government for the non-enforcement of the income tax law."

Proposes to Hang On.

The Government proposed to hang on, but in the opinion of Mr. King they should be prevented from doing so if it was possible to stop them. One reason why this Government should resign and go to the country was that it had acquired the "war habit of mind." What did he mean by the war habit of mind? asked Mr. King. He meant the habit of mind which encouraged autocratic rule and lavish expenditures. So long as the present administration was in power, just so long would the war habit of mind persist.

